

Yearbook of the United Nations 1998

United Nations

YEARBOOK OF THE
UNITED NATIONS
1998

Volume 52

Yearbook of the United Nations, 1998

Volume 52

Sales No. E.01.I.1

Prepared by the Yearbook Section of the Department of Public Information, United Nations, New York. Although the Yearbook is based on official sources, it is not an official record.

Chief Editor: Kathryn Gordon

Senior Editors: Susanna Johnston, Melody C. Pfeiffer

Editors/Writers: Elizabeth Baldwin-Penn, Federigo Magherini, Isolda Oca

Contributing Editors/Writers: Peter Jackson, Nancy Seufert-Barr, Juanita B. Phelan, Luisa Balacco, Franklin Fisher, Igor Khvorostiany

Senior Copy Editor: Alison M. Koppelman

Copy Editor: Peter Homans

Production Coordinator: Leonard M. Simon

Editorial Assistants: Lawri M. Moore, Margaret O'Donnell, Rodney Pascual

Senior Typesetter: Sunita Chabra

Indexer: Elliot Linzer

YEARBOOK OF THE UNITED NATIONS 1998

Volume 52

Department of Public Information
United Nations, New York

COPYRIGHT © 2001 UNITED NATIONS

Yearbook of the United Nations, 1998

Vol. 52

ISBN: 92-1-100840-9

ISSN: 0082-8521

UNITED NATIONS PUBLICATIONS
SALES NO. E.01.I.1

Printed in the United States of America

Foreword

THE YEAR 1998 was a singularly eventful one in the history of our Organization. The world lived through a period of high tension in February when Iraq seemed set on refusing to comply with its disarmament obligations. As some Member States prepared for military action to enforce compliance with Security Council resolutions, I signed a Memorandum of Understanding on 23 February with the Government of Iraq, which defused the immediate crisis. If fully implemented it would have set a valuable precedent, proving that by united action the United Nations can indeed prevent conflict while furthering its goals, as the founders of the Organization intended. However, renewed non-compliance later in the year led to military action by some Council members in December, and the year ended with the situation in Iraq still far from resolution.

The year also marked the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, bringing into special focus the role of the United Nations in defining and protecting human rights everywhere. It was therefore fitting that 1998 saw the adoption of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, a permanent court to judge crimes of the gravest concern to the international community—genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and the crime of aggression.

Events during 1998 served to reaffirm that our work on human rights can never be seen as separate from the Organization's other activities. Rather, it is the common thread running through all of them. Indeed, the reforms of the United Nations which I introduced in 1997 designated human rights as a cross-cutting issue among the other four core areas of our work—peace and security, development cooperation, international economic and social affairs, and humanitarian affairs. In 1998, we saw new challenges emerge in our work to protect and promote human rights worldwide. We witnessed the growing impact of the forces of globalization—both positive and negative. Globalization had generated an unprecedented surge in prosperity, particularly in a number of Asian economies; but the consequences of the 1997 crisis that began in Asia, in which those same forces played a role, included declining gross domestic product, increased poverty, hunger, human rights abuses and violent social unrest.

The pages of the 1998 Yearbook of the United Nations reflect the efforts of the Organization to harness the positive potential of globalization while managing its adverse effects and to formulate the principles, norms and rules that are essential if globalization is to benefit people everywhere.

KOFI A. ANNAN

Secretary-General of the United Nations
New York, January 2001

Contents

FOREWORD by SECRETARY-GENERAL KOFI A. ANNAN	v
ABOUT THE 1998 EDITION OF THE YEARBOOK	xvi
ABBREVIATIONS COMMONLY USED IN THE YEARBOOK	xvii
EXPLANATORY NOTE ON DOCUMENTS	xviii
REPORT OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL ON THE WORK OF THE ORGANIZATION	3

Part One: Political and security questions

I. INTERNATIONAL PEACE AND SECURITY	33
-------------------------------------	----

AGENDA FOR PEACE, 33. PEACEKEEPING OPERATIONS, 38: Fiftieth anniversary of UN peacekeeping, 38; General aspects, 39; Comprehensive review of peacekeeping, 42; Operations in 1998, 44; Roster of 1998 operations, 46; Financial and administrative aspects of peacekeeping operations, 47. OTHER PEACEKEEPING MATTERS, 61: Demining, 61; Dag Hammarskjöld Medal, 63.

II. AFRICA	64
------------	----

PROMOTION OF PEACE IN AFRICA, 65. GREAT LAKES REGION, 79: Democratic Republic of the Congo, 79; Rwanda, 88; Burundi, 95. ANGOLA, 100: Implementation of Lusaka Protocol, 100; Other matters, 120. CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC, 127: Implementation of Bangui Agreements, 127. ERITREA-ETHIOPIA, 144: Border dispute, 145; Human rights situation, 150. GUINEA-BISSAU, 150: Internal conflict, 151; Mediation efforts, 151; Ceasefire and political agreements, 152. LIBERIA, 155. LIBYAN ARAB JAMAHIRIYA, 156: Sanctions regime, 157; Initiative for trial of Pan Am 103 bombing suspects, 161; 1986 attack against Libya, 163. SIERRA LEONE, 163: Implementation of Conakry Agreement, 164; Termination of sanctions, 169; Further developments, 170; UNOMSIL, 173; Intensification of hostilities, 180; Security Council Committee, 181. SOMALIA, 182: Regional peace initiatives, 182; Arms embargo, 184; UNOSOM II financing, 184. SUDAN, 184: Sudan-United States, 185; Sudan-Eritrea, 186; Sudan-Uganda, 186. WESTERN SAHARA, 186: UN Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara, 200. OTHER QUESTIONS, 204: Mozambique, 204; Cameroon-Nigeria, 206; Comoros, 206; Algeria, 207; Cooperation between OAU and the UN system, 207.

III. AMERICAS	210
---------------	-----

CENTRAL AMERICA, 210: Guatemala, 214; El Salvador, 222; Nicaragua, 222. HAITI, 224: Civilian Police Mission, 224; International Civilian Mission to Haiti, 230; Financing of missions, 233. OTHER QUESTIONS, 236: Cuba-United States, 236; Cooperation with OAS, 237; Cooperation with CARICOM, 238; Peru-Ecuador, 239.

IV. ASIA AND THE PACIFIC 240

IRAQ, 241: UN Special Commission, 241; Limitations on UNSCOM, 251; IAEA activities, 263; Arms and related sanctions, 267; Oil-for-food programme, 269; UN Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission, 281; UN Compensation Commission and Fund, 284; Other matters, 286. AFGHANISTAN, 287: Situation in Afghanistan, 288; UN activities, 295. TAJIKISTAN, 302. KOREA QUESTION, 313. CAMBODIA, 316. PAPUA NEW GUINEA, 319. OTHER MATTERS, 321.

V. EUROPE AND THE MEDITERRANEAN 324

THE FORMER YUGOSLAVIA, 325: UN operations, 325; State succession issues, 325. BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA, 326: Implementation of Peace Agreement, 327. CROATIA, 347: End of UNTAES mission in Croatia, 347; Post-UNTAES situation, 350; UN Mission of Observers in Prevlaka (UN-MOP), 356. THE FORMER YUGOSLAV REPUBLIC OF MACEDONIA (FYROM), 360: UN Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP), 360. FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF YUGOSLAVIA (FRY), 365: Situation in Kosovo, 366. GEORGIA, 389: UN Observer Mission in Georgia, 390. ARMENIA-AZERBAIJAN, 403. CYPRUS, 405: Good offices mission, 409; UNFICYP, 411. OTHER ISSUES, 418: Cooperation with OSCE, 418; Strengthening of security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region, 421.

VI. MIDDLE EAST 423

PEACE PROCESS, 424: Overall situation, 424; Occupied territories, 424; Jerusalem, 434. ISSUES RELATED TO PALESTINE, 445: General aspects, 445; Assistance to Palestinians, 454; UNRWA, 456. PEACEKEEPING OPERATIONS, 472: Lebanon, 472; Syrian Arab Republic, 480.

VII. DISARMAMENT 486

UN ROLE IN DISARMAMENT, 487: UN machinery, 487. NUCLEAR DISARMAMENT, 492: Conference on Disarmament, 492; START and other bilateral agreements and unilateral measures, 495; Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty, 503; Non-Proliferation Treaty, 509; IAEA safeguards, 509; Nuclear safety and radioactive waste, 511; Prohibition of use of nuclear weapons, 512; Advisory opinion of International Court of Justice, 513; Nuclear-weapon-free zones, 514. BACTERIOLOGICAL (BIOLOGICAL) AND CHEMICAL WEAPONS, 519: Bacteriological (biological) weapons, 519; Chemical weapons, 522. CONVENTIONAL WEAPONS, 524: Small arms, 524; Convention on excessively injurious conventional weapons and Protocols, 530; Practical disarmament, 531; Transparency, 532; Anti-personnel mines, 536. REGIONAL AND OTHER APPROACHES TO DISARMAMENT, 537: Africa, 537; Asia and the Pacific, 539; Europe, 540; Latin America, 541. OTHER DISARMAMENT ISSUES, 543: Prevention of an arms race in outer space, 543; Seabed treaty, 544; Disarmament and development, 544; Science and technology, 545; Arms limitation and disarmament agreements, 546. STUDIES, INFORMATION AND TRAINING, 547.

VIII. OTHER POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS 553

GENERAL ASPECTS OF INTERNATIONAL SECURITY, 553: Maintenance of international security—prevention of the violent disintegration of States, 553; Support for democracies, 555. REGIONAL ASPECTS OF INTERNATIONAL PEACE AND SECURITY, 556: South Atlantic, 556. DECOLONIZATION, 558: Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism, 559; Puerto Rico, 570; Territories under review, 570; New concept of trusteeship, 582. INFORMATION, 582: UN public information, 582. PEACEFUL USES OF OUTER SPACE, 589: Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, 589; Legal Subcommittee, 593. EFFECTS OF ATOMIC RADIATION, 596. MILLENNIUM ASSEMBLY, 597.

Part Two: Human Rights

I. PROMOTION OF HUMAN RIGHTS 601

UN MACHINERY, 601: Commission on Human Rights, 601; Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, 602; Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights, 603; Strengthening UN action, 606. HUMAN RIGHTS INSTRUMENTS, 611: General aspects, 611; Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and Optional Protocols, 616; Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, 617; Convention against racial discrimination, 617; Convention against torture, 620; Convention on elimination of discrimination against women, 622; Convention on the Rights of the Child, 623; Convention on migrant workers, 624; Convention on genocide, 625; Convention against apartheid, 626. OTHER ACTIVITIES, 626: Follow-up to 1993 World Conference, 626; Advisory services and technical cooperation, 628; Public information, 635; Human rights education, 635; Culture of peace, 638; National institutions and regional arrangements, 639; Cooperation with UN human rights bodies, 642.

II. PROTECTION OF HUMAN RIGHTS 643

RACISM AND RACIAL DISCRIMINATION, 643: Third Decade against racism, 643. OTHER FORMS OF INTOLERANCE, 653: Follow-up to UN Year for Tolerance, 653; Discrimination against minorities, 654; Religious intolerance, 655. CIVIL AND POLITICAL RIGHTS, 658: Right to self-determination, 658; Administration of justice, 662; Other issues, 669; Peace and security, 682. ECONOMIC, SOCIAL AND CULTURAL RIGHTS, 683: Right to development, 683; Extreme poverty, 691; Right to adequate housing, 693; Right to food, 693; Right to education, 694; Scientific concerns, 695; Slavery and related issues, 697; Vulnerable groups, 698.

III. HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS	726
GENERAL ASPECTS, 726. AFRICA, 726: Algeria, 726; Burundi, 726; Democratic Republic of the Congo, 727; Equatorial Guinea, 731; Nigeria, 732; Rwanda, 735; Sudan, 738. AMERICAS, 739: Colombia, 739; Mexico, 741. ASIA AND THE PACIFIC, 741: Afghanistan, 741; Bhutan, 744; Cambodia, 744; Democratic People's Republic of Korea, 744; East Timor, 744; Iran, 745; Iraq, 747; Myanmar, 751. EUROPE AND THE MEDITERRANEAN, 754: Belarus, 754; Cyprus, 754; The former Yugoslavia, 754. MIDDLE EAST, 767: Lebanon, 767; Territories occupied by Israel, 767.

Part Three: Economic and social questions

I. DEVELOPMENT POLICY AND INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC COOPERATION	771
INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC RELATIONS, 771: Development and international economic cooperation, 771; Sustainable development, 779; Follow-up to UNCED and to nineteenth special session, 781; Eradication of poverty, 782; Science and technology for development, 786. ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL TRENDS AND POLICY, 787. DEVELOPMENT PLANNING AND PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION, 790: Development planning, 790; Public administration, 791. DEVELOPING COUNTRIES, 792: Least developed countries, 792; Island developing countries, 794; Landlocked developing countries, 797.
II. OPERATIONAL ACTIVITIES FOR DEVELOPMENT	798
SYSTEM-WIDE ACTIVITIES, 798: Financing of operational activities, 808. TECHNICAL COOPERATION THROUGH UNDP, 809: UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, 810; UNDP operational activities, 811; Programme planning and management, 819; Financing, 827. OTHER TECHNICAL COOPERATION, 830: UN activities, 830; UN Office for Project Services, 830; UN Volunteers, 834; Economic and technical cooperation among developing countries, 835; UN Capital Development Fund, 837; UN fellowships, 837.
III. HUMANITARIAN AND SPECIAL ECONOMIC ASSISTANCE	840
HUMANITARIAN ASSISTANCE, 840: Coordination, 840; Resource mobilization, 843; Mine clearance, 843; New international humanitarian order, 846; Humanitarian activities, 846. SPECIAL ECONOMIC ASSISTANCE, 862: African economic recovery and development, 862; Other economic assistance, 868. DISASTER RELIEF, 870: International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, 870; Disaster assistance, 874.
IV. INTERNATIONAL TRADE, FINANCE AND TRANSPORT	879
INTERNATIONAL TRADE, 879: Trade policy, 884; Trade promotion and facilitation, 886; Commodities, 890; Consumer protection, 893. FINANCE, 893: Financial policy, 893; Financing for development, 905; Investment, technology and related financial issues, 906. TRANSPORT, 909: Maritime transport, 909; Transport of dangerous goods, 909. UNCTAD INSTITUTIONAL AND ORGANIZATIONAL QUESTIONS, 909: UNCTAD programme, 909.

V. REGIONAL ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL ACTIVITIES 916

REGIONAL COOPERATION, 916. AFRICA, 918: Economic and social trends, 918; Activities in 1998, 921; Programme, administrative and organizational questions, 926. ASIA AND THE PACIFIC, 928: Economic trends, 929; Activities in 1998, 930; Programme and organizational questions, 945; Subregional activities, 946. EUROPE, 948: Economic trends, 949; Activities in 1998, 950. LATIN AMERICA AND THE CARIBBEAN, 954: Economic trends, 955; Activities in 1998, 956; Cooperation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System, 965; Programme and organizational questions, 966. WESTERN ASIA, 967: Economic and social trends, 967; Activities in 1998, 969; Programme and organizational questions, 971.

VI. NATURAL RESOURCES, ENERGY AND CARTOGRAPHY 972

INSTITUTIONAL REFORM, 972. NATURAL RESOURCES, 972: Freshwater resources, 972; Exploration, 975. ENERGY, 975: New and renewable sources of energy, 975; Nuclear energy, 976. CARTOGRAPHY, 978.

VII. ENVIRONMENT 980

UNEP GOVERNING COUNCIL, 980: Regional offices, 986. INTERNATIONAL CONVENTIONS AND MECHANISMS, 986: Implementation of conventions related to sustainable development, 986; Climate change convention, 987; Conventions related to ozone layer, 988; Convention on air pollution, 989; Convention on Biological Diversity, 989; Convention to combat desertification, 991. ENVIRONMENTAL ACTIVITIES, 993: The atmosphere, 993; Terrestrial ecosystems, 993; Marine ecosystems, 995; Conservation of wildlife, 997; Protection against harmful products and wastes, 997; Environmental emergencies, 999; Other matters, 999.

VIII. POPULATION AND HUMAN SETTLEMENTS 1001

POPULATION, 1001: Follow-up to the 1994 Conference on Population and Development, 1001; UN Population Fund, 1006; Other population activities, 1018. HUMAN SETTLEMENTS, 1020: Follow-up to the 1996 UN Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), 1020; UN Centre for Human Settlements, 1022; UN Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation, 1023.

IX. SOCIAL POLICY, CRIME PREVENTION AND HUMAN RESOURCE DEVELOPMENT 1024

SOCIAL POLICY AND CULTURAL ISSUES, 1024: Social aspects of development, 1024; Persons with disabilities, 1029; Cultural development, 1030. CRIME PREVENTION AND CRIMINAL JUSTICE, 1031: Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, 1031; UN Programme on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, 1033; Transnational crime, 1038; Corruption and bribery, 1045; UN standards and norms, 1046; Other crime prevention and criminal justice issues, 1050. HUMAN RESOURCES, 1055: UN research and training institutes, 1055.

X. WOMEN	1060
FOLLOW-UP TO THE FOURTH WORLD CONFERENCE ON WOMEN, 1060: Implementation of Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, 1060. UN MACHINERY, 1085: Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, 1085; Commission on the Status of Women, 1087; UN Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM), 1088; International Research and Training Institute (INSTRAW), 1088.
XI. CHILDREN, YOUTH AND AGEING PERSONS	1091
CHILDREN, 1091: United Nations Children's Fund, 1091. YOUTH, 1102. AGEING PERSONS, 1104.
XII. REFUGEES AND DISPLACED PERSONS	1107
OFFICE OF THE UNITED NATIONS HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR REFUGEES, 1107: Programme policy, 1107; Financial and administrative questions, 1111. REFUGEE PROTECTION AND ASSISTANCE, 1113: Protection issues, 1113; Assistance measures, 1114; Regional activities, 1118.
XIII. HEALTH, FOOD AND NUTRITION	1127
HEALTH, 1127. FOOD AND AGRICULTURE, 1130: Food aid, 1130; Food security, 1133. NUTRITION, 1133.
XIV. INTERNATIONAL DRUG CONTROL	1135
TWENTIETH SPECIAL SESSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, 1135. CONVENTIONS, 1150: International Narcotics Control Board, 1151. WORLD DRUG SITUATION, 1153. UN ACTION TO COMBAT DRUG ABUSE, 1163: UN International Drug Control Programme, 1163; Commission on Narcotic Drugs, 1168; System-wide Action Plan, 1168; Global Programme of Action, 1169; Strengthening UN mechanisms, 1170.
XV. STATISTICS	1174
UN statistical bodies, 1174; Economic statistics, 1174; Social and demographic statistics, 1177; Technical cooperation, 1178; Other statistical activities, 1179.

Part Four: Legal questions

I. INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE	1183
Judicial work of the Court, 1183.

II. INTERNATIONAL TRIBUNALS	1192
INTERNATIONAL TRIBUNAL FOR THE FORMER YUGOSLAVIA, 1192: The Chambers, 1192; Office of the Prosecutor, 1198; The Registry, 1199; Financing ICTY, 1199. INTERNATIONAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA, 1201: The Chambers, 1201; Office of the Prosecutor, 1205; The Registry, 1205; Financing ICTR, 1205; OIOS review, 1208.
III. LEGAL ASPECTS OF INTERNATIONAL POLITICAL RELATIONS	1209
ESTABLISHMENT OF THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL COURT, 1209. INTERNATIONAL LAW COMMISSION, 1211: State succession, 1213; State responsibility, 1213; International liability, 1214; Unilateral acts of States, 1214. INTERNATIONAL STATE RELATIONS AND INTERNATIONAL LAW, 1214: Principles for international negotiations, 1214; Jurisdictional immunities of States and their property, 1215; Measures to eliminate terrorism, 1216; Additional Protocols I and II to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, 1220. DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS, 1221: Protection of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, 1221. TREATIES AND AGREEMENTS, 1223.
IV. LAW OF THE SEA	1225
UNCONVENTION ON THE LAW OF THE SEA, 1225: Institutions created by the Convention, 1226; Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea, 1232.
V. OTHER LEGAL QUESTIONS	1233
INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS AND INTERNATIONAL LAW, 1233: Strengthening the role of the United Nations, 1233; UN Decade of International Law, 1238; Cooperation with the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee, 1241; Host country relations, 1242. INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC LAW, 1244: International trade law, 1244.

Part Five: Institutional, administrative and budgetary questions

I. UNITED NATIONS REFORM	1249
PROGRAMME OF REFORM, 1249: General aspects, 1249; Follow-up to specific measures, 1250; Managerial reform and oversight, 1253. INTERGOVERNMENTAL MACHINERY, 1260: Strengthening of the UN system, 1260; Review of Security Council membership and related matters, 1261; Revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields, 1262.
II. UNITED NATIONS FINANCING AND PROGRAMMING	1270
FINANCIAL SITUATION, 1270. UN BUDGET, 1272: Results-based budgeting, 1272; Budget for 1996-1997, 1274; Budget for 1998-1999, 1274; Programme budget outline for 2000-2001, 1283. CONTRIBUTIONS, 1285: Assessments, 1285. ACCOUNTS AND AUDITING, 1288: Common accounting standards, 1290. PROGRAMME PLANNING AND MANAGEMENT, 1291: Medium-term plan, 1291; Programme performance 1996-1997, 1292. UN INTERNATIONAL PARTNERSHIP TRUST FUND, 1297.

III. UNITED NATIONS STAFF 1299

CONDITIONS OF SERVICE, 1299: International Civil Service Commission, 1299; Remuneration issues, 1300. OTHER STAFF MATTERS, 1307: Personnel policies, 1307; UN Joint Staff Pension Fund, 1322; Travel-related matters, 1328; Administration of justice, 1328.

IV. INSTITUTIONAL AND ADMINISTRATIVE MATTERS 1330

INSTITUTIONAL MACHINERY, 1330: General Assembly, 1330; Security Council, 1333; Economic and Social Council, 1334. COORDINATION AND MONITORING, 1335: Institutional mechanisms, 1335; Other coordination matters, 1337. THE UN AND OTHER ORGANIZATIONS, 1339: Cooperation with organizations, 1339; Observer status, 1343; Participation of organizations in UN work, 1344. CONFERENCES AND MEETINGS, 1346. UN INFORMATION SYSTEMS, 1355. OTHER MATTERS, 1363: Common services, 1363; Outsourcing practices, 1364; Staff security, 1365; UN premises and property, 1365; International years, 1366.

Part Six: Intergovernmental organizations related to the United Nations

I. INTERNATIONAL ATOMIC ENERGY AGENCY (IAEA)	1371
II. INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANIZATION (ILO)	1375
III. FOOD AND AGRICULTURE ORGANIZATION OF THE UNITED NATIONS (FAO)	1377
IV. UNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL, SCIENTIFIC AND CULTURAL ORGANIZATION (UNESCO)	1380
V. WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION (WHO)	1383
VI. WORLD BANK (IBRD AND IDA)	1386
VII. INTERNATIONAL FINANCE CORPORATION (IFC)	1390
VIII. INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND (IMF)	1392
IX. INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION ORGANIZATION (ICAO)	1395
X. UNIVERSAL POSTAL UNION (UPU)	1398
XL. INTERNATIONAL TELECOMMUNICATION UNION (ITU)	1400

XII. WORLD METEOROLOGICAL ORGANIZATION (WMO)	1402
XIII. INTERNATIONAL MARITIME ORGANIZATION (IMO)	1405
XIV. WORLD INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY ORGANIZATION (WIPO)	1407
XV. INTERNATIONAL FUND FOR AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT (IFAD)	1409
XVI. UNITED NATIONS INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT ORGANIZATION (UNIDO)	1411
XVII. WORLD TRADE ORGANIZATION (WTO)	1414

Appendices

I. ROSTER OF THE UNITED NATIONS	1419
II. CHARTER OF THE UNITED NATIONS AND STATUTE OF THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE	1421
III. STRUCTURE OF THE UNITED NATIONS	1436
IV. AGENDAS OF UNITED NATIONS PRINCIPAL ORGANS IN 1998	1449
V. UNITED NATIONS INFORMATION CENTRES AND SERVICES	1461

Indexes

I. USING THE SUBJECT INDEX	1466
II. SUBJECT INDEX	1467
III. INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS	1495
IV. INDEX OF 1998 SECURITY COUNCIL PRESIDENTIAL STATEMENTS	1499
V. HOW TO OBTAIN VOLUMES OF THE YEARBOOK	1500

About the 1998 edition of the Yearbook

This volume of the YEARBOOK OF THE UNITED NATIONS continues the tradition of providing the most comprehensive coverage of the activities of the United Nations. It is an indispensable reference tool for the research community, diplomats, government officials and the general public seeking readily available information on the UN system and its related organizations.

Efforts by the Department of Public Information to achieve a more timely publication have resulted in having to rely on provisional documentation and other materials to prepare the relevant articles. Largely, Security Council resolutions and presidential statements, Economic and Social Council resolutions and some other texts in the present volume are provisional.

Structure and scope of articles

The Yearbook is subject-oriented and divided into six parts covering political and security questions; human rights issues; economic and social questions; legal questions; institutional, administrative and budgetary questions; and intergovernmental organizations related to the United Nations. Chapters and topical headings present summaries of pertinent UN activities, including those of intergovernmental and expert bodies, major reports, Secretariat activities and, in selected cases, the views of States in written communications.

Activities of United Nations bodies. All resolutions, decisions and other major activities of the principal organs and, on a selective basis, those of subsidiary bodies are either reproduced or summarized in the appropriate chapter. The texts of all resolutions and decisions of substantive nature adopted in 1998 by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council are reproduced or summarized under the relevant topic. These texts are preceded by procedural details giving date of adoption, meeting number and vote totals (in favour-against-abstaining) if any; and information on their approval by a sessional or subsidiary body prior to final adoption. The texts are followed by details of any recorded or roll-call vote on the resolution/decision as a whole.

Major reports. Most reports of the Secretary-General, in 1998, along with selected reports from other UN sources, such as seminars and working groups, are summarized briefly.

Secretariat activities. The operational activities of the United Nations for development and humanitarian assistance are described under the relevant topics. For major activities financed outside the UN regular budget, selected information is given on contributions and expenditures.

Views of States. Written communications sent to the United Nations by Member States and circulated as documents of the principal organs have been summarized in selected cases, under the relevant topics. Substantive actions by the Security Council have been analysed and brief reviews of the Council's deliberations given, particularly in cases where an issue was taken up but no resolution was adopted.

Related organizations. The Yearbook also briefly describes the 1998 activities of the specialized agencies and other related organizations of the UN system.

Multilateral treaties. Information on signatories and parties to multilateral treaties and conventions is taken from Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General: Status as at 30 April 1999 (ST/LEG/SER.E/17), Sales No. E.99.V.5.

Terminology

Formal titles of bodies, organizational units, conventions, declarations and officials are given in full on first mention in an article or sequence of articles. They are also used in resolution/decision texts, and in the SUBJECT INDEX under the key word of the title. Short titles may be used in subsequent references.

How to find information in the Yearbook

The user may locate information on the United Nations activities contained in this volume by the use of the Table of Contents, the Subject Index, the Index of Resolutions and Decisions and the Index of Security Council Presidential Statements. The volume also has five appendices: Appendix I comprises a roster of Member States; Appendix II reproduces the Charter of the United Nations, including the Statute of the International Court of Justice; Appendix III gives the structure of the principal organs of the United Nations; Appendix IV provides the agenda for each session of the principal organs in 1998; and Appendix V gives the addresses of the United Nations information centres and services worldwide.

Far more information on the United Nations and its activities, visit our Internet site at:

<http://www.un.org>

ABBREVIATIONS COMMONLY USED IN THE YEARBOOK

ACABQ	Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions	ODA	official development assistance
ACC	Administrative Committee on Coordination	OECD	Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development
CEDAW	Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women	OHCHR	Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights
CERD	Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination	OIOS	Office of Internal Oversight Services
DPRK	Democratic People's Republic of Korea	OPEC	Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries
DRC	Democratic Republic of the Congo	OSCE	Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe
EC	European Community	PLO	Palestine Liberation Organization
ECA	Economic Commission for Africa	SC	Security Council
ECE	Economic Commission for Europe	SDR	special drawing right
ECLAC	Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean	TNC	transnational corporation
ECOWAS	Economic Community of West African States	UN	United Nations
ESC	Economic and Social Council	UNCTAD	United Nations Conference on Trade and Development
ESCAP	Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific	UNDCP	United Nations International Drug Control Programme
ESCWA	Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia	UNDOF	United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (Golan Heights)
EU	European Union	UNDP	United Nations Development Programme
FAO	Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations	UNEP	United Nations Environment Programme
FRY	Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)	UNESCO	United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization
FYROM	The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia	UNFICYP	United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus
GA	General Assembly	UNFPA	United Nations Population Fund
GDP	gross domestic product	UNHCR	Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees
GNP	gross national product	UNIC	United Nations Information Centre
IAEA	International Atomic Energy Agency	UNICEF	United Nations Children's Fund
ICAO	International Civil Aviation Organization	UNIDO	United Nations Industrial Development Organization
ICJ	International Court of Justice	UNIFIL	United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon
ICRC	International Committee of the Red Cross	UNIKOM	United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission
ICTR	International Tribunal for Rwanda	UNMIBH	United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina
ICTY	International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia	UNMOGIP	United Nations Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan
IDA	International Development Association	UNMOP	United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka
IFAD	International Fund for Agricultural Development	UNMOT	United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan
ILO	International Labour Organization	UNOMIG	United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia
IMF	International Monetary Fund	UNOMSIL	United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone
IMO	International Maritime Organization	UNOPS	United Nations Office for Project Services
INCB	International Narcotics Control Board	UNPREDEP	United Nations Preventive Deployment Force
INSTRAW	International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women	UNPSG	United Nations Police Support Group
ITC	International Trade Centre (UNCTAD/WTO)	UNRWA	United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East
ITU	International Telecommunication Union	UNTAES	United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium
JIU	Joint Inspection Unit	UNTSO	United Nations Truce Supervision Organization
LDC	least developed country	UPU	Universal Postal Union
MINURCA	United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic	WFP	World Food Programme
MINURSO	United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara	WHO	World Health Organization
MIPONUH	United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti	WIPO	World Intellectual Property Organization
MONUA	United Nations Observer Mission in Angola	WMO	World Meteorological Organization
NATO	North Atlantic Treaty Organization	WTO	World Trade Organization
NGO	non-governmental organization	YUN	Yearbook of the United Nations
NSGT	Non-Self-Governing Territory
OAS	Organization of American States
OAU	Organization of African Unity

EXPLANATORY NOTE ON DOCUMENTS

References in square brackets in each chapter of Parts One to Five of this volume give the symbols of the main documents issued in 1998 on the topic. The following is a guide to the principal document symbols:

A/- refers to documents of the General Assembly, numbered in separate series by session. Thus, A/53/- refers to documents issued for consideration at the fifty-third session, beginning with A/53/1. Documents of special and emergency special sessions are identified as A/S- and A/ES-, followed by the session number.

A/C.-refers to documents of the Assembly's Main Committees, e.g. A/C.1/- is a document of the First Committee, A/C.6/-, a document of the Sixth Committee. A/BUR/- refers to documents of the General Committee. A/AC.- documents are those of the Assembly's ad hoc bodies and A/CN.-, of its commissions; e.g. A/AC.105/- identifies documents of the Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, A/CN.4/-, of its International Law Commission. Assembly resolutions and decisions since the thirty-first (1976) session have been identified by two arabic numerals; the first indicates the session of adoption; the second, the sequential number in the series. Resolutions are numbered consecutively from 1 at each session. Decisions of regular sessions are numbered consecutively, from 301 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 401 for all other decisions. Decisions of special and emergency special sessions are numbered consecutively, from 11 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 21 for all other decisions.

E/- refers to documents of the Economic and Social Council, numbered in separate series by year. Thus, E/1998/- refers to documents issued for consideration by the Council at its 1998 sessions, beginning with E/1998/1. E/AC.-, E/C.- and E/CN.-, followed by identifying numbers, refer to documents of the Council's subsidiary ad hoc bodies, committees and commissions. For example, E/CN.5/- refers to documents of the Council's Commission for Social Development, E/C.2/-, to documents of its Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations. E/ICEF/- documents are those of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). Symbols for the Council's resolutions and decisions, since 1978, consist of two arabic numerals: the first indicates the year of adoption and the second, the sequential number in the series. There are two series: one for resolutions, beginning with 1 (resolution 1998/1); and one for decisions, beginning with 201 (decision 1998/201).

S/- refers to documents of the Security Council. Its resolutions are identified by consecutive numbers followed by the year of adoption in parentheses, beginning with resolution 1(1946).

ST/-, followed by symbols representing the issuing department or office, refers to documents of the United Nations Secretariat.

Documents of certain bodies bear special symbols, including the following:

ACC/-	Administrative Committee on Coordination
CD/-	Conference on Disarmament
CERD/-	Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination
DC/-	Disarmament Commission
DP/-	United Nations Development Programme
HS/-	Commission on Human Settlements
ITC/-	International Trade Centre
TD/-	United Nations Conference on Trade and Development
UNEP/-	United Nations Environment Programme

Many documents of the regional commissions bear special symbols. These are sometimes preceded by the following:

E/ECA/-	Economic Commission for Africa
E/ECE/-	Economic Commission for Europe
E/ECLAC/-	Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean
E/ESCAP/-	Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific
E/ESCWA/-	Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia

"L" in a symbol refers to documents of limited distribution, such as draft resolutions; "CONF." to documents of a conference; "INF." to those of general information. Summary records are designated by "SR.", verbatim records by "PV.", each followed by the meeting number.

United Nations sales publications each carry a sales number with the following components separated by periods: a capital letter indicating the language(s) of the publication; two arabic numerals indicating the year; a Roman numeral indicating the subject category; a capital letter indicating a subdivision of the category, if any; and an arabic numeral indicating the number of the publication within the category. Examples: E.98.II.A.2; E/F/R.98.II.E.7; E.98.X.1.

Report of the Secretary-General

Report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization

Following is the Secretary-General's report on the work of the Organization, submitted to the General Assembly and dated 27 August 1998. The Assembly took note of it on 5 October (decision 53/404).

Introduction

1. Nearly a decade has passed since the end of the cold war, but the contours of the new era remain poorly understood. Nations large and small are grappling with new responsibilities and new constraints. Unpredictability and surprise have become almost commonplace. Uncertainty exists, in some cases even anxiety, about new roles that may be required of multilateral organizations, and more broadly about their place in the international community. Indeed, the peoples of the United Nations, in whose name the Charter is written, are searching for new ways to define how they are united in community though divided by custom and conviction, power and interests.

2. Notwithstanding the extraordinary achievements of multilateralism during the past half century, too many voices remain unheard, too much pain persists and too many additional opportunities for human betterment are forgone for us to rest satisfied with the way things work today. These still unmet challenges must remain uppermost on the United Nations agenda. The Millennium Assembly to be held in September 2000 affords a unique opportunity for the world's leaders to look beyond their pressing daily concerns and consider what kind of United Nations they can envision and will support in the new century.

3. To facilitate those deliberations, I propose to submit a report to the Millennium Assembly, suggesting to Member States a set of workable objectives and institutional means for the United Nations to meet the challenges of human solidarity in the years ahead. The report will draw on several reviews of recent United Nations conferences scheduled between now and then. It will also benefit from the diverse views and aspirations expressed at a series of global and regional hearings and seminars that I propose to convene—global town meetings, in effect—and which many individual Governments, civil society actors and other groups are also holding.

4. The "quiet revolution" of institutional reforms that I initiated last year was intended to revitalize an organizational machinery that in some respects had been made sluggish and creaky by the effects of the cold war and the North-South confrontation, and to better position it for the highly complex, increasingly interconnected and far more fluid context of the new era. I can say with some satisfaction that the United Nations family today acts with greater unity of purpose and coherence of effort than it did a year ago. The new teamwork is most pronounced within the Secretariat and in its relations with the programmes and funds.

5. The work programme has been organized in four core areas: peace and security, development cooperation, international economic and social affairs, and humanitarian affairs; a fifth, human rights, is designated a cross-cutting issue. In each cluster, an Executive Committee now manages common, cross-cutting and overlapping policy concerns.

6. To integrate the work of the Executive Committees and address matters affecting the Organization as a whole, a cabinet-style Senior Management Group, comprising the leadership from the various United Nations headquarters, has been established. It meets weekly, with members in Geneva, Vienna, Nairobi and Rome participating through teleconferencing. A Strategic Planning Unit has been established to enable the Group to consider individual questions on its agenda within broader and longer-term frames of reference. Member States approved my recommendation to create the post of Deputy Secretary-General; in the few short months that Louise Frechette of Canada has occupied this office, it has been demonstrated conclusively how critical it is in augmenting the leadership and management capacity of the Secretariat.

7. The Secretariat itself has been streamlined, through the merging and elimination of units; nearly a thousand posts have been cut, to fewer than 9,000; and the budget has been reduced to less than that of the previous biennium. A task force on human resources management that I convened earlier this year has just submitted its report to me; I will act expeditiously and decisively on its recommendations.

8. Productive working relations within the United Nations system as a whole, including the Bretton Woods institutions, have been expanded and deepened through the Administrative Committee on Coordination. Several concrete instances are documented in this report.

9. In my reform programme, I also recommended that Member States refine or revise a number of institutional practices under their jurisdiction. In the main, the General Assembly decided to defer its consideration of such questions or continue them at the fifty-third session. Still to be approved is the proposal that specific time limits be adopted for all new mandates, a relatively simple procedure that would significantly enhance the effectiveness of programme activities and the General Assembly's own oversight role. The proposal to adopt a results-based budget system also remains under review. This initiative is of the utmost importance, because no single measure would do more to increase accountability and efficiency in the work of the Organization. Member States are also still studying details of the proposed Development Account, an instrument by which savings from administrative efficiencies would be invested in innovative development projects.

10. Lastly, as part of the endeavour to reinvigorate the United Nations I have made a particular effort to establish a mutually beneficial dialogue with the international business community. Business has a stake in the soft infrastructure that the United Nations system produces—the norms, standards and best practices on which the smooth flow of international transactions depends. Moreover, business is increasingly coming to appreciate that the work of the United Nations on behalf of peace, human rights and development helps lay the stable foundations that the expansion of its own opportunities requires. In turn, the United Nations appreciates that business has the capital, technology and expertise necessary to fuel economic growth, and that its attitude and readiness to cooperate can critically affect the prospects of a wide variety of other objectives. The dialogue is accordingly premised on my conviction that expanding markets and human security can and should go hand in hand.

11. Engagement with the business community parallels the long-standing and increasingly close working relationships the United Nations has with non-governmental organizations. Whether in human rights or the environment, in development, humanitarian assistance or arms limitation, non-governmental organizations are indispensable partners for United Nations efforts at the country level and, in some cases, at policy levels as well. In short, the United Nations is both witness to and participant in the birth of a global civil society.

12. Not long after I proposed my reform agenda to the General Assembly in the summer of 1997, Mr. Ted Turner, Co-Chairman of Time Warner Inc., announced his extraordinary gift of $1 billion to support United Nations programmes. Never before in the history of philanthropy had a single gift of such magnitude been given for this or any other cause. The necessary institutional arrangements to administer the gift are now in place, and the first set of grants, totalling some $22 million, have been allocated. The majority of projects funded in this first round were in the areas of children's health, family planning and reproductive health, as well as environmental and climate change. The United Nations Fund for International Partnerships has been established within the Secretariat to manage the process of grant allocation and ensure that it remains fully consistent with the Organization's priorities.

13. This unprecedented act of generosity not only makes available new and additional resources for United Nations work on behalf of the world's most vulnerable people and its fragile planetary life support systems. It is also an expression of an entirely new phenomenon: an incipient sense of global citizenship and responsibility.

14. Another sign of change in the global arena this past year was the conclusion of negotiations on the Convention banning anti-personnel landmines and the Statute of the International Criminal Court. Governments conducted the actual negotiations in both cases, and groups of so-called like-minded States provided the core support that led to their adoption; but in both instances a new expression of global people power was manifest: individuals and groups animated by humanitarian and human rights concerns, united by the Internet and supported by world public opinion.

15. One of the most profound challenges that we face as a community of nations is to understand better the emerging socio-economic forces and forms of globalization, to shape them to serve our needs and to respond effectively to their deleterious consequences. There is a great deal of talk today about life in the global village. If that village is to be a truly desirable place for all of us on this planet, it must be embedded in and guided by broadly shared values and principles; its policing functions and the provision of other public goods must be strengthened and made more predictable; and a bridge must be constructed between, in effect, the Dow Jones index and the human development index.

16. No organization in the world is better suited to contribute to these ends than the United Nations, because no other enjoys its scope and legitimacy; but to move forward we need to shed baggage, create new visions and devise new ways to achieve them. We have taken the first vital steps towards transformation, but we have some way to go before we become a truly effective twenty-first-century organization. Over the next two years, leading up to the Millennium Assembly, I shall solicit the views of Member States, civil society actors and other interested groups and individuals on the best way to get from here to there.

I. Achieving peace and security

17. The world has been mercifully free from large-scale regional conflict over the past 12 months. Many local wars have continued, however, and new ones have broken out, including, for the first time in this decade, a war over territory between two neighbouring States, Eritrea and Ethiopia. While there have been some important successes for the international community, including the restoration of the democratically elected Government in Sierra Leone, peace in many parts of the world remains precarious. Moreover peace processes in several regions, including some to which the United Nations has devoted extensive resources over a long period, show a distressing tendency to unravel.

18. Of particular concern is the lack of progress in the Middle East peace process; the turmoil in Afghanistan; the escalation of violence in Kosovo (Federal Republic of Yugoslavia); the ongoing civil war in the Sudan; the continuing instability and violence in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the rest of the Great Lakes region; and the return to civil war in Angola. Our efforts in Angola were dealt a severe blow when my Special Representative, Alioune Blondin Beye, was tragically killed in a plane crash on 26 June, together with seven others. The rising tensions between India and Pakistan over Kashmir and other issues is also a major cause of concern, as is the stalemated peace process in Cyprus.

19. The adoption, late in 1997, of the Ottawa Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction was an unprecedented achievement. By 31 July 1998, the Convention had been signed by 128 countries and ratified by 30. It is expected to enter into force early next year. Several important States still feel unable to sign it, however, and combatants in several wars continue to use these barbaric weapons. Even where they have ceased doing so, millions of mines planted in earlier years remain in place. They will continue to kill and maim innocent men, women and children for decades.

20. Similarly, the adoption of the Statute of the International Criminal Court at Rome in July, an historic development in the age-long struggle to punish and deter war crimes, has yet to win universal acceptance. Even on the most optimistic assumption it will be some years before the Court begins to discharge its functions. Meanwhile, deplorable acts of brutality continue to be reported from many parts of the world, and all too often the culprits go unpunished.

21. Nor is the human race yet delivered from the threat of nuclear annihilation. In fact we are at a critical moment in the history of efforts to reduce this danger. The successes of previous years, the indefinite extension of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and the signing of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty, have been called into question this year by the decision of two non-signatories, India and Pakistan, to conduct underground nuclear tests. This has increased the tensions between those two countries and given the world a sombre reminder that non-proliferation cannot be taken for granted.

22. Hardly less alarming is the threat posed by chemical and biological weapons. Here, I am glad to report that in the past year more States have renounced the development and use of the former, while the Convention banning the latter is being gradually strengthened through efforts to elaborate a verification protocol. The fact that some States may be stocking or developing such weapons clandestinely remains a serious threat to world peace, however.

23. The world lived through a period of high tension in February when Iraq seemed set on refusing to comply with its disarmament obligations, and some Member States prepared for military action to enforce compliance. War was averted only by the timely collective action of the international community.

24. The Memorandum of Understanding, which I and Deputy Prime Minister Tariq Aziz signed on 23 February, was an effective demonstration of preventive diplomacy. If fully implemented it would set a valuable precedent, proving that by united action the world can indeed prevent conflict, as the founders of the Organization intended. Unfortunately, the situation in Iraq still appears to be far from resolution.

Prevention

25. Article 1 of the Charter of the United Nations calls for effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace. Conflict prevention, therefore, should be one of the Organization's deepest commitments, yet there is still too little emphasis on preventive action. Instead, vast resources are spent on efforts to "cure" conflicts, when for many of the victims it is already too late.

26. Preventing potential conflicts from crossing the threshold of violence requires early warning of situations with the potential for crisis, proper analysis, an integrated preventive strategy, and the political will and resources to implement such a strategy.

27. In some cases effective prevention is actually impeded by the traditional focus on external threats to a State's security. Today we recognize that many other threats to human security, such as natural disasters, ethnic tension and human rights violations, may also be sources of conflict. The intimate relationship between social justice, material well-being and peace must also be taken into account if action is to be pursued far enough to prevent local conflicts from escalating and spilling over into the international arena.

28. In its work at the field level, the United Nations has already started to embrace a new holistic concept of security. Its efforts to reduce poverty and promote development and democratization—including electoral assistance and civic education—have gradually become more comprehensive and more integrated. All of these efforts may be described as preventive peace-building, since they attack the root causes of many conflicts.

29. If then the determinants of human security include the economic, social and humanitarian prerequisites of human well-being and stability, should not the role of the Security Council also be broadened? Can the Council seriously aspire to making prevention the norm rather than the exception unless it engages with the economic and social developments that influence peace and security with the same energy and seriousness with which it tackles the political ones? Such an approach would imply new forms of cooperation between the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, as well as between all the organs of the United Nations and the Member States.

30. Under the Charter, there is a dormant provision that the Economic and Social Council may furnish information and assistance to the Security Council upon a request from the latter (Article 65). As the Security Council is increasingly required to address economic, social and humanitarian crises that threaten global security, it may wish to consider invoking this mechanism. This could help to achieve better communication and coordination between organs of the United Nations whose primary focus is on economic, social and humanitarian affairs.

Diplomacy

31. The role of diplomacy is so central to virtually all United Nations activities that its specific contribution is sometimes overlooked. That is especially true of successful preventive diplomacy. A former Under-Secretary-General once remarked to a television producer who asked where he could make a film about conflict prevention, "If you can film it, it probably is not working!" Indeed, the light of publicity is often turned on only when conflict has become entrenched; and that in itself it often makes compromise more difficult, since leaders fear that concessions made in public will be interpreted as weakness by opponents, or as betrayal by supporters. One does not always have the choice, however. My journey to Baghdad in February was undoubtedly an exercise in preventive diplomacy, but I could not possibly have accomplished it unnoticed.

32. During the past year, often in difficult and sometimes dangerous conditions, the United Nations has been engaged in the sensitive diplomacy of peacemaking, where success in preventing conflict often goes unremarked. I have appointed prominent and skilled diplomats, from the international community as well as the United Nations, to serve as my personal representatives in situations of actual or potential conflict. Their tasks have ranged from information-gathering to mediation.

33. While United Nations missions have achieved notable successes, there are some conflicts where hostility is so intense and distrust so pervasive that no amount of skilful diplomacy will achieve a breakthrough. That has been the case in Afghanistan during the past year. Despite the meetings held in New York by the group of eight concerned countries, and the best efforts of the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan, the warring Afghan parties have continued to pursue the military option at great humanitarian cost. They have also refused to participate in any meaningful dialogue. In this, they have been regrettably aided and encouraged by outside Powers.

34. Many of the most sensitive and difficult diplomatic initiatives of the United Nations during the year have been undertaken in Africa's trouble spots. In May, in view of continuing violence in the Great Lakes region of Central Africa, I urged the leaders of Burundi and Rwanda to redouble their efforts to build stable peace, national unity and respect for human rights.

35. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, I was compelled to withdraw the United Nations investigative team earlier this year because of persistent non-cooperation and harassment from the authorities. I subsequently called on regional Governments to acknowledge the team's findings, which, among other things, raised the possibility that some of the reported violations of human rights could have constituted genocide. I also drew attention to the need for substantial international assistance to help achieve stability in the region.

36. Throughout the year, the United Nations has been assisting the mediator for Burundi, Mwalimu Julius Nyerere, while the establishment of the Office of my Representative in Nairobi will enhance the Organization's capacity for preventive action in the subregion as a whole.

37. On the contentious issue of East Timor real progress has been made during the year: an important breakthrough was achieved at the meeting I convened in New York in August between the Foreign Ministers of Indonesia and Portugal. For the first time since 1975 the prospects for an agreed resolution of the conflict between the East Timorese and Indonesia are hopeful.

38. Earlier this year a new United Nations Political Office was established in Bougainville, the first United Nations political mission to the South Pacific. The quiet diplomacy of peace-making has also been pursued during the past year in the Middle East, South Asia, Angola, Cambodia, Cyprus, Somalia and Western Sahara.

39. Perhaps the most delicate kind of preventive diplomacy is that which seeks to bring about reconciliation between antagonistic political forces within a country, in the hope of preventing or resolving conflicts which, if left to escalate, might in time become a direct threat to international peace and security. This was the purpose of my mission to Nigeria at the end of June. In such cases, an invitation from the Government of the Member State concerned is an essential prerequisite for involvement.

40. Another sensitive mission was the information-gathering panel of eminent personalities that visited Algeria at my request in July and August. It was made possible by an invitation from the Government of Algeria.

41. Since the causes of conflict are usually regional or local, I believe that regional organizations are particularly well suited to play an important role in early warning and preventive diplomacy. Therefore I am seeking, in the spirit of Chapter VIII of the Charter, to create a real partnership, with a more rational and cost-effective division of labour, between those organizations and the United Nations. This year I established a United Nations liaison office at the headquarters of the Organization of African Unity in Addis Ababa. We also continued to consolidate our links with the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe. In July I invited the heads of regional organizations to a meeting in New York to discuss concrete steps we can take to improve our cooperation in preventing conflict.

42. The collaboration of the United Nations with regional and subregional organizations also illustrates the close relationship between peace-building, development and disarmament. The Organization has helped members of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa in their efforts to build peace and security in that subregion. The United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific has provided a valuable forum for meetings on regional confidence- and security-building measures. I trust that the recent decision to strengthen the regional centres in Lome and Lima will lead to similar activity throughout Africa and Latin America.

Preventive deployment

43. Peacekeeping can be a valuable tool for conflict prevention. Peacekeeping forces are generally deployed only after, or during, a conflict, usually under the terms of a ceasefire agreement, their main task being to prevent violence from flaring up again. From there, intellectually, it is only a small step to the deployment of forces to prevent violence from breaking out in the first place, in situations where there is an obvious danger of that happening. Unfortunately, preventive deployment confronts many political obstacles. In general, only the spectacle of actual violence, with all its tragic consequences, convinces the parties to the conflict, potential troop-contributing countries and the Security Council of the utility or necessity of deploying a peacekeeping force.

44. Late in 1992, the Security Council did, however, take the unprecedented decision to establish a presence of the United Nations Protection Force in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, as a preventive measure. The force deployed, the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP), remains the sole example of a purely preventive United Nations force. The experiment must be counted as a success, inasmuch as war has so far been avoided in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia despite considerable tensions both between it and its neighbours and between different ethnic groups within the Republic. While no one can guarantee that this relatively favourable state of affairs will continue, the presence of UNPREDEP has undoubtedly had a positive effect, helping to defuse tensions both within the country and in the wider region. This year's crisis in Kosovo underlined the vital role of UNPREDEP in preserving stability. I am consequently glad to report that on 21 July 1998 the Security Council decided, on my recommendation, to authorize an increase in the troop strength of UNPREDEP and to extend its current mandate for a period of six months, until 28 February 1999.

Disarmament

45. My vision of the Organization places disarmament near the centre of its mission of peace and development. I am therefore delighted that the General Assembly supported my decision to re-establish the Department for Disarmament Affairs with an Under-Secretary-General as its head. The Assembly also acted on my recommendation that it review the work of the Disarmament Commission and the First Committee with a view to updating, revitalizing and streamlining their work. Once that task is completed, the reform proposals for the disarmament sector of the Organization will have been fully implemented.

46. The essential role of the United Nations in this area is one of norm-setting and of strengthening and consolidating multilateral principles for disarmament. When we consider how such principles, norms and procedures have fared over the past year, we see a mixed picture, however.

47. We are at a critical moment in the history of efforts to reduce the danger posed by nuclear weapons. Any increase in the number of nuclear-weapon States will have serious implications for peace and security. It is therefore of the utmost importance that the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty, together with the objectives agreed to at the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, become universally accepted. Positive developments this year include the issuance of the eight-nation joint declaration on creating a nuclear-weapon-free world, and the establishment of two ad hoc committees in the Conference on Disarmament. One committee will negotiate with a view to reaching agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons; the other will negotiate a treaty banning the production of fissile material for nuclear explosive devices.

48. The new review process of the Non-Proliferation Treaty is now in place, and two nuclear-weapon States have ratified the Test-Ban Treaty. In the past year, efforts were also made to consolidate existing nuclear-weapon-free zones, notably those in Africa and in South-East Asia, and to move towards the establishment of another such zone in Central Asia.

49. In the light of the expectation that the international community would take concrete steps towards the further reduction of nuclear weapons, the underground nuclear tests conducted by India and Pakistan were a highly disturbing development. I have urged those States to refrain from any further nuclear testing, to adhere immediately to the Test-Ban Treaty, to refrain from deploying nuclear weapons, and to freeze their weapons development programmes, as well as the development of missiles capable of delivering nuclear weapons.

50. In the struggle for sustainable peace and development, especially in subregions where state structures are fragile, steps need to be taken to curb the flow of small arms circulating in civil society. It is estimated that 90 per cent of those killed or wounded by light military weapons are civilians and, most shockingly, that 80 per cent of those are women and children.

51. One approach to this problem would be to seek to build a global consensus on monitoring and controlling illicit arms transfers and their links with trafficking in other contraband goods. The holding of a United Nations conference on all aspects of the illicit arms trade in the near future would be an important step in that direction. In 1997, the Inter-American Convention against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Ammunition, Explosives and Other Related Materials was signed, establishing an essential mechanism in the area of arms regulation. I also welcome the initiative taken by the Economic Community of West African States in preparing for a moratorium on the import, export and manufacture of small arms.

52. In pursuing our goal of disarmament, efforts to reduce the supply of weapons are not enough; reduction in the demand for them is equally, if not more, important.

53. The amended Protocol II to the Convention on Certain Conventional Weapons—a partial ban on landmines—will enter into force in December 1998, and the Ottawa Convention—a comprehensive ban—is expected to enter into force early in 1999. It is crucial to ensure adherence to one or both of these instruments by as many States as possible, and to support the negotiation of a ban on exports in the Conference on Disarmament.

54. The Department for Disarmament Affairs also plays a critical role in post-conflict peace-building, notably in the collection, disposal and destruction of weapons and in the reintegration of former combatants into civil society. Our efforts must always be set in the context of the broader work of the Organization aimed at preventing and resolving conflicts, and at building cultures which reject violence.

55. Finally, wider commitment to greater openness and transparency in military matters would make a valuable contribution to confidence-building and creating security at lower levels of armaments. There are already two instruments for this purpose: the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms and the system for standardized reporting of military expenditures. I look to Member States to increase and improve their participation in both of these, and I am committed to giving them whatever assistance I can.

Peacekeeping

56. Over the past year, I am pleased to note that the international community has begun to overcome its reluctance to make use of the Organization's peacekeeping capacity. The Security Council has authorized two new operations: the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic (MINURCA) and the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone (UNOMSIL).

57. United Nations peacekeeping clearly offers certain unique advantages not to be found elsewhere, including the universality of its mandate and the breadth of its experience. If the Security Council is known to be ready to authorize new peacekeeping operations whenever, and for as long as, they may be needed, this will not only strengthen the United Nations conflict-prevention efforts but also assist its wider peace-making and post-conflict peace-building endeavours.

58. Fifty years after the establishment of the first United Nations peacekeeping operation, there are today some 14,500 military and police personnel deployed in missions around the globe under the United Nations flag. Peacekeeping continues to be adapted to changing needs and cooperation with regional organizations is now an important aspect. Although caution and judgement are required before deciding on joint operations, such cooperation can bring together the motivation and knowledge of local actors with the legitimacy, expertise and resources of the world Organization.

59. At Headquarters, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations has continued its efforts to strengthen the Organization's capacity to respond swiftly. This past year has seen some progress in the development of the United Nations standby arrangements system, which now includes 74 Member States, with over 100,000 personnel pledged in the framework of the system. I welcome in particular the increased interest in these developments shown by African States. The Department continues to work with Member States on the enhancement of Africa's peacekeeping capacity.

60. Within the context of the standby arrangements system, I was pleased to attend the inauguration of the headquarters of the United Nations Standby Forces High Readiness Brigade in Copenhagen in September 1997. I have also requested, but not yet received, funding for posts necessary to create a rapidly deployable mission headquarters.

61. The total number of peacekeepers in the field has declined since the early 1990s, as a consequence of the winding down of several major United Nations operations, but the actual number of United Nations peacekeeping operations has in fact risen from 15 to 17 in the past year. Six of these are in Europe, four in the Middle East, four in Africa, two in Asia and one in the Americas. Under the auspices of the Department of Political Affairs, the United Nations also maintains a human rights and judicial reform mission in Guatemala.

Sanctions

62. I have in the past underlined the need for a mechanism that renders sanctions a less blunt and more effective instrument. Therefore, I welcome the fact that the concept of "smart sanctions", which seek to pressure regimes rather than peoples and thus reduce humanitarian costs, has been gaining support among Member States. The increasing interest in more targeted sanctions was evident in the recent measures applied by the Security Council against the military junta in Sierra Leone and against UNITA in Angola.

63. Resolutions covering mandatory measures should also address humanitarian exemptions and third-State issues. Although sanctions regimes established by the Security Council normally do include humanitarian exemptions, some human rights treaty-monitoring bodies have stressed the need for such regimes to include specific measures protecting the human rights of vulnerable groups. The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights has argued that such considerations must be fully taken into account when a sanctions regime is being designed; that effective monitoring must be undertaken throughout the period when sanctions are in force; and that the party or parties responsible for the imposition, maintenance or implementation of sanctions should take steps to prevent any disproportionate suffering being experienced by vulnerable groups within the targeted country. The Committee on the Rights of the Child took a similar approach, pointing out that, in certain conditions, sanctions can act as an obstacle to the implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

64. The international community should be under no illusion: these humanitarian and human rights policy goals cannot easily be reconciled with those of a sanctions regime. It cannot be too strongly emphasized that sanctions are a tool of enforcement and, like other methods of enforcement, they will do harm. This should be borne in mind when the decision to impose them is taken, and when the results are subsequently evaluated.

Post-conflict peace-building

65. Post-conflict peace-building involves integrated and coordinated actions aimed at addressing the root causes of violence, whether political, legal, institutional, military, humanitarian, human rights-related, environmental, economic and social, cultural or demographic, and laying the foundations for a durable peace. Post-conflict peace-building may be seen as a long-term conflict prevention strategy. Because the causes of conflicts differ, United Nations actions must be tailored to specific situations to strengthen the peace process and make it irreversible. There is no standard post-conflict peace-building model.

66. The largest and arguably most important United Nations peace-building operation is in Guatemala, but the Organization is also involved in peace-building activities in other countries, notably Sierra Leone, where it is monitoring human rights violations and helping the Government to implement its disarmament and demobilization tasks, and Liberia, where the United Nations has established its first peace-building support office.

67. To ensure that the complex challenges of post-conflict peace-building are effectively addressed by the United Nations system and its partners, I designated the Department of Political Affairs, as convener of the Executive Committee on Peace and Security, to act as the United Nations focal point for this vital activity. I hope that the First Committee will soon rationalize its work along similar lines.

68. A significant development over the past year has been the increase in civilian police operations, following the withdrawal of military personnel. Such operations have been conducted in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and Haiti and could prove very useful in other post-conflict situations, such as that in Angola. This development reflects a growing interest in the role that peacekeeping operations can play in helping to build human rights, law-enforcement and other institutions, and thus to strengthen the foundations of lasting peace.

69. There has been growing recognition of the need to link all aspects of external support for countries afflicted by conflict, whether political, humanitarian, developmental or human rights. The participation of donor Governments, host Governments and non-governmental organizations to meet this need is essential. The Administrative Committee on Coordination has been developing more coherent strategies for peace-building through the development of the new strategic framework concept. The framework defines the principles, goals and institutional arrangements needed to create a coherent, effective and integrated political strategy and assistance programme. It provides a common tool for identifying, analysing and prioritizing key issues and activities on the basis of shared principles and objectives. The framework embraces the entire range of core United Nations activities—political, human rights, humanitarian and development—in a given country.

Complementary strategies

70. While the categories of prevention, peace-making, peacekeeping and post-conflict peace-building remain useful, it is now widely recognized that most operations combine activities in more than one category. In some operations, for example, in Cyprus and Georgia, the United Nations is actively involved in both peacekeeping and peacemaking. In others, for example, in Sierra Leone and Tajikistan, planning for peace-building started during peacekeeping operations. These varied combinations are to be welcomed. They reflect an understanding of the complexities of particular situations and the need to coordinate a diverse range of security-enhancing activities.

71. In the context of conflict prevention, the Department of Political Affairs plays a key role in early warning, preventive diplomacy and peace-making. Both peacekeeping and disarmament can contribute to conflict prevention. For organizational purposes, the work of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations is primarily logistical and operational, while that of the Department for Disarmament Affairs focuses on the diplomatic, legal and technical aspects of weapons and arms limitation. For example, the Department for Disarmament Affairs provides support for negotiations on international instruments to restrict or prohibit landmines; the Department of Peacekeeping Operations is in charge of action to deal with landmines in actual theatres of conflict. Both, however, have to operate within the framework of an overarching political strategy.

72. We now recognize more clearly than ever the crucial linkages between poverty, bad governance and abuse of human rights, on the one hand, and violent conflict on the other. To reduce threats to human security we must not only focus more on their underlying causes than we have in the past; we must also intensify cooperation among the various United Nations agencies and with the Member States.

II. Cooperating for development

73. The challenge of development remains paramount in a world where one fifth of humanity is forced to fend for itself on a meagre dollar a day, one third of all Africans are not expected to survive past the age of 40, nearly 40 per cent of women in developing countries are illiterate, and more than half of South Asia's children remain underweight at age five, while the ongoing Asian economic crisis may thrust some 50 million people in Indonesia alone back into poverty. These stark realities persist despite the fact that the past half-century has witnessed one of the longest periods of economic expansion in history.

74. Yet the volume of external aid to developing countries has declined steadily throughout this decade, and now stands at 0.22 per cent of the GDP of the industrialized countries—only 0.19 per cent for the group of seven major industrialized countries, which includes the richest among them. Moreover, donor countries are increasingly earmarking aid, with no guarantee that their aid-giving preferences match the needs of recipients. Foreign direct investment has not compensated for the decline in aid; in 1997 all of sub-Saharan Africa received a mere $3 billion, and South Asia $4 billion. Meanwhile, many developing countries, including some of the poorest, remain subject to the crushing burdens of external debt.

75. The total development assistance made available by the United Nations is a relatively modest $5.5 billion per year. Despite its limited resources, however, the United Nations has unique advantages as a development institution. Its comprehensive mandate, spanning economic, social and political domains, enables it to devise and enact intersectoral approaches to development cooperation; to link emergency assistance with longer-term development concerns; and to ensure that peace processes and efforts to achieve domestic political reconciliation are supported by and, in turn, complement progress towards development. In addition, the Organization's diverse institutional roles permit it to speak coherently across the entire spectrum of development cooperation, from normative to analytical, policy and operational activities.

76. My programme of reform begun over the course of the past year builds on this institutional capacity, and has already yielded practical results in the development area. The Executive Committee on Economic and Social Affairs was established early in 1997 to promote policy coherence in all economic, social and related activities of its member entities. Chaired by the Department of Economic and Social Affairs, it includes the relevant Secretariat units, the regional commissions, the United Nations University and the appropriate United Nations research institutes.

77. The Executive Committee has addressed a number of cross-cutting challenges. For example, it has drafted a proposal for utilizing the Development Account for consideration by Member States. It has initiated a long-term project to streamline the development indicators that are produced and used by the United Nations as well as by non-United Nations entities worldwide, and to ensure the consistency of their meaning and interpretation. The Committee also commissioned a review of all flagship reports in the social and economic sectors and has begun to work with the United Nations Development Group on the linkages between normative and operational activities in the field of development. Cooperation is also under way with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and other United Nations entities to provide substantive content to the concept of the right to development.

78. The United Nations Development Group, comprising the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), the World Food Programme (WFP) and other relevant operational entities, facilitates joint policy formulation and decision-making on development cooperation issues. New management tools are enhancing collaboration and the harmonization of procedures.

79. Perhaps the most significant innovation at the country level has been the creation of the United Nations Development Assistance Frameworks. Developed jointly by United Nations country teams under the leadership of the United Nations Resident Coordinator and in close collaboration with Governments, they permit a new strategic approach to the implementation of goals agreed to at United Nations global conferences and of national development priorities, and make it possible to address in an integrated manner the many dimensions of poverty eradication. A year ago, the United Nations Development Group initiated a pilot phase to test the process in 18 countries; in two pilot countries the interface between the Development Assistance Framework and the World Bank's Country Assistance Strategy is being explored with the aim of fostering a strategic partnership between the two institutions. The pilot projects are now being evaluated and the lessons learned will inform future Development Assistance Framework processes.

80. The Development Group has strengthened the Resident Coordinator system, which UNDP funds and manages. New selection procedures have been established that are intended to increase the number of resident coordinators appointed from the wider United Nations system as well as the number of women serving in that capacity.

81. The designation of United Nations Houses at the country level—combining all United Nations programmes, funds and information centres in common premises—will contribute to a greater sense of community and common purpose among United Nations staff while also yielding increased efficiencies and, in many cases, reduction of costs. In 1997, United Nations Houses were officially designated in Lebanon, Lesotho, Malaysia and South Africa. It is expected that some 30 additional common premises will be designated as United Nations Houses in the near future.

82. Greater cooperation now exists between the Executive Committees on Peace and Security, Economic and Social Affairs and Humanitarian Affairs on issues including sustainable development, post-conflict peace-building, emergency relief operations, linkages between humanitarian assistance and development cooperation and the advancement of human rights.

83. These institutional innovations better serve the needs of Governments that count on the United Nations as a development partner.

Eradication of poverty

84. Guided by the outcomes of its major world conferences of the 1990s, especially the 1995 World Summit for Social Development, the United Nations has made the eradication of poverty a central cross-cutting goal of its activities. In May 1998, the Administrative Committee on Coordination, comprising the executive heads of all United Nations entities, adopted a statement of commitment for action to eradicate poverty for the system as a whole. Its main purpose is to seek better coordination and greater cooperation between the various elements of the United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, and to agree on a shared strategy addressing all of the key dimensions of action against poverty.

85. During the past year, the United Nations assisted some 100 countries with the preparation, formulation or implementation of national anti-poverty programmes. Reviews of existing strategies point to some key areas for improvement; there is, for example, the need to broaden the scope of action against poverty beyond the traditional social-sector and welfare approaches; to address such critical issues as access to productive assets; to encourage a more inclusive dialogue between the State, civil society and the private sector; and to target resource-poor communities and asset-poor households.

86. A substantial share of UNDP resources—some 26 per cent of the total—is now devoted directly to poverty reduction. UNDP assistance includes support for poverty mapping, assessments of national capacity for poverty reduction, setting national goals and targets, public expenditure reviews, reviews of policies, administrative structures and procedures, and resource mobilization.

87. In the belief that the eradication of poverty requires specifically targeting the social sector, the United Nations has given high priority to the implementation of the so-called 20/20 initiative, launched jointly in 1994 by UNDP, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), UNFPA, UNICEF and the World Health Organization (WHO). It was proposed under that initiative that Governments and external donors each allocate 20 per cent of their budgets to basic social services. UNICEF and UNDP are providing increased support to reviews of country-level social sector expenditures.

88. Achieving the eradication of poverty also requires that the feminization of poverty be reversed. Accordingly, the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) has supported pilot projects designed to strengthen women's economic performance. Efforts to increase women's access to credit, training and technologies so as to enhance their income-generating activities are also being supported. UNIFEM has played a pioneering promotional role in ensuring that the policies and programmes of microcredit institutions take gender issues into account. UNICEF programmes address the challenges of women's empowerment by enhancing the capacity of women's organizations and business associations to negotiate on economic issues, and by providing economic literacy materials to women.

89. Poverty is a major cause of hunger, but hunger also causes and perpetuates inter-generational cycles of poverty. Relieving hunger is the first step in breaking those cycles. In 1997, WFP devoted 93 per cent of its development food assistance to the poorest communities and households in low-income food-deficit countries, more than half of which was deployed in least developed countries. WFP projects seek to enable the hungry poor to reach a level of subsistence at which they can sustain themselves and thus participate effectively in mainstream development programmes.

90. The World Food Programme has also carried out "vulnerability assessment mapping" in 22 African, 8 Asian and 2 Latin American countries. This exercise identifies the geographic distribution of poverty and food insecurity, and helps ascertain their underlying causes together with the appropriate programmatic responses. To ensure that the poor have sustained access to food, WFP targets some 60 per cent of its development resources directly to women and involves them in the management of food distribution and in decision-making.

91. Major steps have been taken to include respect for human rights and dignity as a core element in anti-poverty strategies, and to ensure participation by the poorest in their communities' decision-making processes. At its most recent session, the Commission on Human Rights appointed an independent expert to evaluate the relationship between the promotion and protection of human rights and extreme poverty. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights strongly supports mandates that increase understanding within the United Nations system of the intrinsic linkage between development, democracy and human rights.

Social development

92. In the area of social development, a broad array of normative and policy-level activities are under way. Preparations have begun for a review conference in the year 2000 to assess the implementation of the accords reached at the 1995 World Summit. UNDP has finalized a World Poverty Report, which documents progress towards the implementation of the Summit's goals, as well as the remaining obstacles.

93. The General Assembly has designated 1999 the International Year of Older Persons; by this means, the Organization hopes to enhance the participation of older persons in their communities. In August 1998, at the other end of the generational spectrum, the third session of the World Youth Forum was convened by the United Nations in partnership with the Portuguese National Youth Council at Braga, Portugal, and the World Conference of Ministers Responsible for Youth was hosted at Lisbon by the Government of Portugal in cooperation with the United Nations. The United Nations has also worked to promote the participation of disabled persons in society. Some 70 countries have now adopted legislation or established programmes to advance that end.

94. Health and mortality, and their relations to development, were the special theme of the thirty-first session of the Commission on Population and Development. The Commission called for more reliable and improved data on mortality, for action at national and international levels to determine the causes of the increased mortality noted among adults in some countries, and for increased efforts to lower mortality and improve health. Preparation is also under way for a special session of the General Assembly to follow up on the International Conference on Population and Development, which will be held from 30 June to 2 July 1999.

95. The lack of equality for women and violations of their human rights remain major impediments to development, democracy and peace. Preparations have begun for the high-level review to be conducted by the General Assembly in June 2000 of progress made in the implementation of the decisions of the Nairobi and Beijing World Conferences on Women. Concerted efforts are needed to attain the goal of universal ratification of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women by the year 2000 and to strengthen its enforcement mechanisms.

96. At the operational level, UNICEF and its partners help to focus worldwide attention on issues affecting children: the many millions who suffer from malaria and malnutrition; the plight of those who serve in armies or work at hazardous or exploitative jobs; discrimination and violence against girls and young women; the nearly 600,000 adolescent girls and women who die needlessly each year from causes related to pregnancy and childbirth; the terrible toll that HIV/AIDS takes on young people; the many unmet needs of adolescents; and the widening gap between rich and poor.

97. During the past year, UNICEF devoted increased attention to strengthening community involvement in matters concerning children and families. This has been the key to success in raising the number of girls enrolling and staying in school. UNICEF programmes have been expanded to reach not only infants and young children but also adolescents and youth.

98. When reliable information is put in the hands of decision makers, supportive action on behalf of children and women becomes more likely and more effective. Accordingly, UNICEF has developed, in collaboration with several other United Nations agencies, a low-cost, fast and reliable household survey method, the multiple indicator cluster survey, a technique for building national capacity to track progress for children. These surveys have been carried out in 60 countries to date.

99. In 1997, UNFPA devoted approximately 85 per cent of its total resources to basic social services, mostly aimed at the poorest and most vulnerable segments of the population. Essential activities included sexual and reproductive health education; improving adolescent reproductive health practices and tailoring them to specific country and subregional situations; providing assistance to reduce maternal mortality; providing emergency assistance in refugee situations; and supporting HIV/AIDS-prevention activities in some 132 countries. UNFPA funding also supported population and development strategies and advocacy work. A set of indicators has been developed to help measure the progress, performance and impact of programmes in the Fund's core programme areas. This represents a significant first step in measuring the effectiveness of its activities.

100. Gender issues remained a cross-cutting concern of all UNFPA-supported programmes. Gender equality is also of concern to the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), which is promoting equitable access to housing, land and credit, and more broadly to the decision-making process in human settlements management. Through education and advocacy, UNIFEM contributes to strengthening the leadership skills of women in governmental and non-governmental arenas, and it trains women's organizations to monitor and promote the implementation of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.

101. Within the United Nations Secretariat, the Organization is responding vigorously to its mandate to achieve gender equality. Progress has been made in increasing women's representation in the Professional ranks; at the senior levels (D-2), the proportion of women increased from 16 to 22 per cent. A more stringent system has been introduced to ensure that senior managers are held accountable for achieving the 50/50 gender distribution in the Professional categories mandated by the General Assembly.

102. The Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) seeks to build worldwide commitment and political support for the prevention and treatment of HIV/AIDS through advocacy based on technically sound and up-to-date analyses. UNAIDS issued its latest Report on the Global HIV/AIDS Epidemic this past June, just prior to the twelfth World AIDS Conference. UNAIDS also supports improved access to, and use of, the best and most effective practices at the national and community levels. The Programme has made great strides in joint planning and programme coordination with other agencies and in forming partnerships with host countries as well as civil society actors. At the same time, paradoxically, explosive HIV growth continues in most regions of the world, and the prevention gap is widening between rich and poor countries. As a result, life expectancy rates at birth are declining in some developing countries to levels not seen since before the onset of industrialization, and gains in child survival rates are evaporating.

103. Fully two thirds of the people infected by HIV/AIDS worldwide are in sub-Saharan Africa. In addition to the tragic costs in human terms, the burden on already overstretched health and social facilities has been immense. The disproportionate impact on the young and on people still in their most productive years of employment adds to the direct economic costs and further diminishes the pool of talent available to societies.

104. In 1997, it was estimated that some 12 million people worldwide had already died of HIV-related causes; 30 million were living with HIV/AIDS; and 5.8 million were newly infected—some 16,000 new infections every day. These statistics were rendered all the more alarming by the fact that in many industrialized countries the perception prevailed that the "AIDS crisis" was over. Combination antiretrovirals have come into widespread use in the developed world over the past two years, but because they are so costly and difficult to administer they remain inaccessible to most people living with HIV in the developing world and in countries with economies in transition.

105. The examples of Thailand and Uganda show that HIV rates can be reduced significantly by strong prevention programmes. Uganda has cut its HIV infection rate by more than a quarter, and Thailand by almost 15 per cent—reductions that compare favourably with those in industrialized countries. Stopping new infections is ultimately the best way of averting the devastating impact of HIV and success hinges on using a careful mix of tried-and-tested prevention methods. Some of these methods are extremely costly in terms of political capital, but they are essential if anti-poverty gains are not to be overwhelmed by this savage virus.

Sustainable development

106. The mutually supportive link between environmental protection and regeneration, on the one hand, and development and poverty eradication, on the other, has been stressed at least since the adoption of Agenda 21 at the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development. It was reaffirmed by the General Assembly in June 1997 at its special session devoted to appraising progress achieved since 1992. The Administrative Committee on Coordination is taking steps to translate agreed policy measures into activities of the United Nations system, especially at the country level.

107. Following up on the 1997 Kyoto Conference (third session of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change), UNDP and the Global Environment Facility are supporting some 100 developing countries in the preparation of national situation reports. This $2.2 million project has already attracted $1.2 million in donor financing. It seeks to encourage the formulation of enabling legislation to respond to this major global challenge. It will also promote exchanges of information and knowledge among developing countries through South-South linkages. The initiative is the most recent in the UNDP $30-million-plus portfolio of climate change enabling activity projects. UNDP has published Energy after Rio: Prospects and Challenges, a report on the relationship between energy and development, which presents an analysis of the sustainable energy strategies that will be needed to meet Agenda 21 objectives.

108. Because half the world's population now lives in cities and towns—and an estimated two thirds will be urban in 2025—the sustainable development of our planet will more than ever depend on our understanding of urban problems and on the ability to craft and implement effective responses to them. The Habitat Agenda, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) in 1996, provides the strategic guidance for this effort. As recognized in the Agenda, success in meeting global environmental challenges depends on the effective management of urban problems.

109. The Sustainable Cities Programme, a joint effort of Habitat and the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), supports urban management at city and national levels through capacity-building and networking. The Programme is active in more than 20 cities and has produced a series of policy guidelines that are used in many countries. Habitat also provides the secretariat of the Urban Environment Forum, a global network of cities and international programmes committed to improving the urban environment.

Fostering investment and growth

110. A key challenge for the international community is to help the poorest developing countries, especially the least developed, to build the capacities that enable them to become more effectively and beneficially integrated into the global economy. Debt relief, additional aid, better trade opportunities and more favourable terms of trade are required to facilitate this process.

111. The development of Africa remains a matter of the highest priority. I addressed the challenges of promoting durable peace and sustainable development in Africa in a major report to the Security Council in April. I urged the leaders of African countries that have been afflicted by cycles of conflict and lack of development to create a positive environment for investment by, among other measures, adopting the practices of good governance and instituting economic reforms. I urged the international community to do its part by converting into grants all remaining bilateral official debts for the poorest countries and to ease the conditions of access to multilateral facilities for the heavily indebted poor countries.

112. The growing marginalization of some countries in the world economy has been a major concern for the United Nations. Such countries typically exhibit high dependence on commodities. The declining importance of primary commodities in world trade appears to foreshadow a continuation of the long-term erosion in the prices of primary commodities relative to those of manufactured goods. Without success in diversifying their economies, therefore, these countries are likely to find their relative position continuing to worsen. The policy analyses conducted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on such issues as commodity diversification, risk management and electronic commerce suggest new ways for small and medium-sized enterprises in developing countries to diversify their participation in international markets.

113. UNIFEM has been promoting women's participation in the trade and investment sectors. Studies on the impact of trade liberalization on women workers were undertaken this year in Africa, Asia and Latin America. In addition, support was provided to women cash crop producers to assist them in forming cooperatives to increase their incomes and their bargaining position in the international economy.

Supporting good governance

114. Good governance is perhaps the single most important factor in eradicating poverty and promoting development. By good governance is meant creating well-functioning and accountable institutions—political, judicial and administrative—that citizens regard as legitimate, through which they participate in decisions that affect their lives, and by which they are empowered. Good governance also entails a respect for human rights and the rule of law generally. Support for good governance has become an increasingly important element in the development-related work of the United Nations.

115. The support of UNDP for good governance focuses on strengthening parliaments, electoral bodies and judiciaries. UNICEF provides support for the revision of national laws in accordance with the Convention on the Rights of the Child, training parliamentarians and law enforcement officials, and generally integrating children's rights into the political and legal fabric of States.

116. Good governance is integral to the work of the United Nations Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention. A world free of drugs and drug lords cannot be created without strengthening national judicial and law enforcement systems. At the field level, the Office assists efforts to reduce demand for and production of illicit drugs, and provides technical assistance to law enforcement agencies in the fight against drug-trafficking. For example, the Caribbean Coordination Mechanism convened by the Office in Bridgetown, Barbados, explored ways to strengthen drug control cooperation in the Caribbean region, including maritime cooperation, harmonizing legislation and creating effective measures to counter money-laundering.

117. Supporting good governance, especially through strengthening national judicial systems and policy frameworks, is also essential to the promotion of reproductive health and gender equality. This past year, UNFPA provided assistance to Governments and sponsored workshops and advocacy efforts to further these aims.

118. The contribution of WFP to good governance focuses on capacity-building at the community level, aimed at enhancing the access of poor and crisis-affected households to food. The main means to this end is advocacy that the right to food be treated as a fundamental human right, the achievement of which is closely linked to women's empowerment.

119. The Department of Economic and Social Affairs has given priority to collecting and disseminating basic data on governance and public administration, so as to assist policy formulation and the development of long-term strategies in Member States. The Department has also fostered the exchange of information on practices and policies in the area of public sector reform.

120. Credible elections are a core ingredient of good governance and the process of democratization. Over the course of the past year, the United Nations continued to provide electoral assistance and to assist in strengthening national institutions for better management of the electoral process. Since August 1997, the United Nations has received long- and short-term electoral assistance requests from Armenia, Cameroon, the Central African Republic, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Guinea, Guyana, Honduras, Lesotho, Mauritius, Nicaragua, Swaziland, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Togo. The United Nations also helped to coordinate and support international observation of the National Assembly elections held in Cambodia on 26 July 1998.

121. Meeting our commitment to enhancing economic and social development, particularly in countries in the greatest need, is an increasingly challenging task. Our agenda is expanding, yet our resources are declining. Effective cooperation among the various elements within the broad United Nations family of organizations is an imperative that we will pursue with determination. Achieving our goals will also require the strong support of Member States.

III. Meeting humanitarian commitments

122. During the past year, tangible results have been recorded in the humanitarian field despite serious funding constraints. Not only has the United Nations continued to provide humanitarian relief as well and as quickly as it could; it has also been the principal catalyst in finding more sophisticated ways of dealing with the plight of civilians in complex emergencies and in mobilizing the resources of the world community for this purpose as expeditiously as possible.

123. Unfortunately, there has been more evidence this past year of a further erosion in the respect for humanitarian principles in several countries. The right of civilians in need, particularly children and women, to receive humanitarian assistance is enshrined in international humanitarian law. Yet humanitarian organizations have been denied access to people in need and deliberate attacks on civilian populations have continued. Warring parties have terrorized populations into leaving specific areas. Hatred and suspicion between members of different ethnic or religious groups have been incited by media under the control of faction leaders. Increasingly, violence has been perpetrated against aid workers whose help to innocent victims of conflict is seen as threatening the political objectives of armed groups. The toll has been heavy: this year, for the first time, more United Nations civilian personnel have been killed than military personnel. I have asked for a report on what can be done to improve the security of our colleagues in the field, while still enabling them to carry on their vital missions.

124. The year has also been notable for life-threatening ecological disasters. The El Niño phenomenon, the forest fires in Brazil and Indonesia, a new drought in the Sudan, the tsunami in Papua New Guinea and other disasters have devastated thousands of lives. They have reminded the international community of the vulnerability of many parts of the world to both natural and human-created environmental disasters. The humanitarian consequences of such catastrophes are often so great that national Governments, acting on their own, cannot hope to cope with them.

125. In July 1998, the Economic and Social Council for the first time included a special humanitarian segment in its regular session, in which it reaffirmed the importance of respect for international humanitarian law and principles, endorsed the work of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and set out specific goals for future priority areas.

Coordinating humanitarian action

126. The new Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, headed by the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator, focuses on three core functions: policy development and coordination; humanitarian advocacy; and coordination of humanitarian action. Operational functions have been transferred from the former Department of Humanitarian Affairs to other parts of the United Nations system. The newly established Executive Committee on Humanitarian Affairs, chaired by the Emergency Relief Coordinator, brings together relevant departments of the Secretariat (the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, the Departments of Political Affairs and Peacekeeping Operations and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights) and representatives of the United Nations humanitarian agencies on a monthly basis to address the humanitarian policy concerns of the United Nations.

127. The Inter-Agency Standing Committee, composed of all the key humanitarian agencies, has further strengthened its role as the primary mechanism for the coordination of humanitarian assistance activities. The Committee has established policy guidelines on issues such as the link between human rights and humanitarian action and the humanitarian consequences of economic sanctions. It also played an active role coordinating the initiatives of United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations in support of internally displaced persons, including the establishment of a global database.

128. Policy development is one of the three core functions of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs. Humanitarian action can have important political, socio-economic and environmental repercussions. The Office has contributed to ongoing efforts to ensure a more coherent and integrated response to complex crises, for example through the "strategic framework" approach in Afghanistan. It has also elaborated clearly defined principles, based on the Charter, human rights and international humanitarian law, which would be applicable to all United Nations activities in crisis countries.

129. There are many opportunities for cooperation between humanitarian assistance and human rights programmes. For example, the wealth of information at the disposal of both humanitarian and human rights organizations can help to enhance the early-warning capacity of the United Nations, thus ensuring better identification of needs for humanitarian and other assistance and allowing human rights programmes to be more responsive to country developments.

130. There is a widespread desire in the international community to counteract the harm economic sanctions impose on vulnerable segments of the civilian population in targeted countries. In a statement transmitted to the Security Council in February, the Inter-Agency Standing Committee expressed concern about the adverse hu-humanitarian consequences of sanctions on civilian populations and urged that measures be taken to minimize them. The recent embargoes on Sierra Leone, and particularly the regional embargo imposed on Burundi by its neighbours, have curtailed the supply of foodstuffs and other matériel needed to alleviate the humanitarian consequences of those sanctions. Field evaluations of the potential and actual humanitarian impact of sanctions on Sierra Leone and the Sudan were undertaken in response to requests from the Security Council. In a study on more humane and effective sanctions management commissioned by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, specific steps were recommended to address the humanitarian impact of sanctions and to facilitate the processing of humanitarian exemptions. The Inter-Agency Standing Committee has now set up a group of experts to develop the methodology further, and to increase the capacity of the United Nations to conduct impact assessment missions at short notice.

131. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs has continued to strengthen and integrate the collection, analysis and dissemination of information. The Humanitarian Early Warning System collects and analyses information from varied sources to identify potential crises, and it prepares briefs and reports on these. The Integrated Regional Information Network, based in the field, provides information and analyses from a regional perspective to a variety of audiences in the international humanitarian community. The Reliefweb Web site (www.reliefweb.int) consolidates and disseminates humanitarian information from over 170 sources, including United Nations agencies, international organizations, Governments, non-governmental organizations and other public sources. By the end of 1997, an average of 200,000 documents were being retrieved each month from Reliefweb by users in more than 140 countries.

132. While progress was made in improving the United Nations inter-agency consolidated appeals process, of the total $2.05 billion sought as at mid-July 1998, only $472 million was pledged, received, or carried over from 1997. Between September 1997 and August 1998, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs organized consolidated appeals for 10 complex emergency situations (Afghanistan, Angola, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, former Yugoslavia, Guinea-Bissau, Liberia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sudan and Tajikistan), as well as an appeal for the Great Lakes region and Central Africa covering Burundi, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Republic of the Congo, Rwanda, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania.

133. The number and scale of environmental emergencies have grown at an alarming speed. In South-East Asia, six countries were seriously affected by dense haze stemming primarily from large-scale forest fires in Indonesia. Fires also destroyed several thousands of square kilometres of forest in the Roraima State in Brazil, in March 1998. They were deliberately started for the purpose of land clearance, their spread being aggravated by El Niño-induced drought conditions.

134. In coordinating responses to 54 natural disasters and environmental emergencies from September 1997 to August 1998, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs issued 151 situation reports and launched 26 appeals for international assistance, towards which contributions worth over $129 million in cash, kind and services were provided by the international community. Ten missions were dispatched to disaster sites to assist with needs assessment and relief co-ordination.

135. New international and national arrangements must be put in place to ensure effective and ongoing coordinated support for disaster-reduction efforts in the next century. An action plan for 1998-1999 has been initiated by the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction secretariat under the auspices of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs to evaluate progress in disaster-reduction policies over the past 10 years, identify trends for the twenty-first century and shape future directions for international cooperation in disaster prevention.

Delivering humanitarian services

136. UNICEF has traditionally been dedicated to the provision of health, nutrition and education services to children and women in conflict. In 1998, efforts were stepped up to apply humanitarian principles to the impartial delivery of assistance to all children in need and to protect their basic rights. UNICEF worked with its partners to apply these principles in countries where access to humanitarian assistance is problematic, among them Afghanistan, eastern Congo, southern Sudan and Sierra Leone. UNICEF is also developing a training package in collaboration with the Department of Peacekeeping Operations regarding the responsibilities of peacekeepers towards civilian communities in general and the rights of children and women in particular.

137. Many of the World Food Programme's operations also come under the rubric of humanitarian assistance. The Programme's emergency work in 1997 focused on operations in conflict situations and reached a total of 19.1 million refugees or returnees and internally displaced persons, most of them women and children. WFP delivered food aid assistance both in life-threatening situations and for rehabilitation activities. Food aid assistance was provided to an additional 10 million people suffering the consequences of drought and floods in 1997. The Democratic People's Republic of Korea, a recipient of food aid during the year, has structural agricultural problems compounded by both floods and drought.

138. Natural disaster operations of a more traditional character were organized in 1997 in more than a dozen countries. Standby arrangements made in previous years with several non-governmental organizations and Governments were put to the test in 1997 in responding to the increased demand created by an abnormal number of natural disasters. Major contingency planning exercises were undertaken in 1997 for the Sahel region and southern Africa to prepare for possible droughts caused by El Niño.

139. Another source of serious concern during the year was the danger to the personal safety of WFP staff members, many of whom served in war-affected situations. Seven staff members lost their lives in the course of duty in 1997; seven more have died in 1998.

140. In addition to its mainstream development activities and resources, UNDP engages in special development activities designed to bridge humanitarian assistance with rehabilitation and recovery. These activities are funded by 5 per cent of UNDP core resources set aside for countries in special development situations. Since September 1997, UNDP has also participated in inter-agency efforts for United Nations mine action reform and policy development and has taken on the responsibility for addressing the socio-economic consequences of mines and unexploded ordnance.

141. In October 1997, I established the Office of the Iraq Programme to consolidate all Secretariat activities relating to the "oil-for-food" programme established pursuant to Security Council resolution 986(1995). This is a temporary measure to provide for the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi people until fulfilment by Iraq of the relevant resolutions imposing sanctions. The Security Council authorized Iraq to export oil and utilize two thirds of the proceeds for the purchase of humanitarian supplies. The programme has made possible the purchase of foodstuffs, medical supplies and essential inputs for agriculture, water and sanitation, electricity and, recently, spare parts for the oil industry. In February 1998, I recommended a significant expansion of the programme and the Security Council subsequently authorized Iraq to increase oil sales up to $5.256 billion over six months, compared to $2 billion in each of the previous three phases. Because of a substantial drop in oil prices and limited export capacity, it is unlikely that sales will generate more than $3 billion during the current phase. There is therefore a need to ensure that food, medicine and spare parts essential to maintaining oil production receive the necessary resources.

Assisting refugees

142. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) estimates that the total number of refugees, displaced and other war-affected persons fell by some 300,000 during 1997, to reach 22.3 million at the end of the year. This figure included 12 million refugees, 950,000 asylum-seekers, 3.5 million repatriated refugees in the early stages of their reintegration, and 5.9 million internally displaced persons and others, mostly from war-affected communities. A total of some 900,000 refugees were repatriated during 1997 either through UNHCR programmes or by their own means. Often, however, refugees returned to fragile or unstable situations emerging from conflict or still embroiled in it. In the former Yugoslavia, UNHCR remains preoccupied with the continued displacement of some 1.8 million persons, both within and outside the region. The conflict in Kosovo and the persistent tension in the Danube region of Croatia have necessitated a renewed UNHCR presence in the region to provide assistance to people fleeing those areas.

143. In western Africa, insecurity in Guinea-Bissau and Sierra Leone prompted outflows of refugees to neighbouring countries; Guinea now hosts one of the largest refugee populations in Africa. Post-conflict peace-building activities are being conducted in the region as Liberia begins the process of rehabilitation; between July 1997 and July 1998 UNHCR assisted almost 53,000 refugees to return to that country. In an effort to address the causes of refugee movements in the Great Lakes region and advance solutions, UNHCR and the Organization of African Unity convened a conference at Kampala in May, which focused on how refugees might be protected while taking into consideration the security concerns of particular Member States. The conference also addressed the complex and difficult relationship between humanitarian assistance and longer-term reconstruction and development.

144. In addressing the reintegration and rehabilitation needs of refugees and returnees, UNHCR faces an enormous task. Yet there is growing concern that its vital operations will have to be scaled down and, in some instances, suspended, because of lack of funding. This is especially so in the case of its operations in Angola, Rwanda and Liberia.

145. Combining both humanitarian and development work, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East continues to provide relief and social services to 3.5 million Palestine refugees in Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic and the West Bank and Gaza Strip. With a deficit of $62 million in the 1998 budget of $314 million, which follows chronic budget shortfalls since 1993, the Agency's level and standard of service has however continued to decline.

146. The United Nations and its various relief agencies lead the international humanitarian efforts, often in the face of nearly insurmountable political and physical difficulties, as well as severe resource constraints. The key to alleviating the miseries stemming from man-made and natural disasters lies in linking those humanitarian efforts to the efforts being made in the political, economic and development spheres. Effective coordination between United Nations bodies and those outside the United Nations system is at the heart of this effort.

IV. Engaging with globalization

147. Defined in purely geographic terms, little is new about globalization. Interconnected human activity on a worldwide scale has existed for centuries. The form of contemporary globalization is new, however. The production of a single automobile model, for example, or global trading in a financial instrument, may be physically dispersed across many countries. Yet those dispersed activities function as if they were all in one place, they are connected in real time and they follow their own holistic logic—whether it is determined by a single corporate structure or by thousands of individual buy and sell orders on computer screens and telephones. Moreover, demographic momentum, together with patterns of land use and energy consumption, has always affected local and subregional ecosystems. Today these and other human factors increasingly affect the planet's ecology as a whole, be it through ozone depletion, global warming or diminishing biodiversity. Lastly, the technological advances and open borders that enable commercial firms to organize the production of goods and services transnationally also enable terrorist networks, criminal syndicates, drug traffickers and money launderers to project their reach across the globe.

148. These new dimensions of globalization can only be addressed multilaterally, by the United Nations and by other international institutions.

The economic dimension

149. In cooperation with other multilateral organizations, the United Nations has sought to strengthen normative, legal and institutional frameworks that will allow the global economy to operate more effectively and equitably. These frameworks are essential to ensuring stability and predictability and allowing all regions of the world, in particular the least developed countries, to benefit from the expansion of the global economy. The international economic policy agenda today is beset with complex problems that were unimaginable when the rules for managing the post-war economic order were written in the late 1940s.

150. During the past year the Asian financial crisis has intensified and now affects countries on every continent. It has exacted steep and possibly long-lasting social costs in East Asia, and raised serious concerns about the operations of unregulated financial markets. Those hardest hit by the crisis are the most vulnerable; and there is a real risk that many of the successes built up over the years in reducing poverty in the region will be reversed.

151. As far back as 1993, the United Nations World Economic Survey expressed concern that a number of developing countries had become hosts to large stocks of volatile funds. The Trade and Development Report, 1997 sounded a clear warning about the emerging situation in East Asia. Well before the onset of the crisis, the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) commissioned country studies to identify the strengths, weaknesses and remedial actions required to improve financial sector management. Possible responses to the crisis have been discussed at meetings organized by ESCAP in cooperation with the Asian Development Bank, the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank; and by the Department of Economic and Social Affairs in cooperation with the regional commissions.

152. At a special high-level meeting on 18 April 1998 the Economic and Social Council addressed means of preventing or, if preventive strategies failed, of containing the impact of such crises, and of achieving "international economic security" more broadly. Questions addressed at the meeting included the overall health and viability of the international financial sector, the relationship between borrowers and lenders, and how to achieve the key objectives of poverty eradication and development. The positive atmosphere of the debate reflected the interest of the participants in moving towards a more comprehensive approach to crisis avoidance than currently exists, and in strengthening the cooperation between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions.

153. Looking beyond the immediate crisis, the Economic and Social Council devoted its 1998 high-level segment to market access in the context of globalization, and debated how developments since the Uruguay Round are affecting developing and least developed countries. In a ministerial communiqué—a first for the Council—it stressed the need for further efforts for trade liberalization through the World Trade Organization, coupled with the need to provide enhanced technical assistance to developing countries. In September 1998, the General Assembly will, for the first time, hold a high-level dialogue on the social and economic impact of globalization and interdependence and their policy implications.

The environmental dimension

154. International cooperation has a vital role to play in arresting and reversing the potentially harmful effects of human activities on the environment. The Commission on Sustainable Development and the newly strengthened United Nations Environment Programme are central to this effort.

155. The role of industry in creating sustainable development strategies has been of particular interest to the Commission this year. For the first time in a United Nations intergovernmental setting, the Commission convened a policy dialogue among Governments, the private sector, unions and civil society organizations on an equal footing. This led to an agreement to undertake a multi-stakeholder review of voluntary initiatives aimed at promoting environmentally and socially responsible business practices and investments. Such meetings will become a regular feature of the sessions of the Commission.

156. In June 1997, at its "Rio + 5" special session, the General Assembly had considered a study warning that, without preventive measures, two thirds of the world's population could face freshwater scarcity and water quality problems by the year 2025; in 1998, a series of international meetings sought to identify appropriate policy responses. On another front, the Commission's Intergovernmental Forum on Forests, at its first session in September 1997, adopted a three-year work programme, including consideration of a possible binding instrument for the sustainable development of forests and their resources.

157. A protocol to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change was negotiated this past year. It specifies legally binding targets for greenhouse gas reduction by industrialized countries, and is a step towards managing major environmental problems attending globalization.

158. The United Nations also made significant headway in creating two new international legal instruments designed to ensure the safe management of hazardous chemicals that move across borders. The first involves persistent organic pollutants that bioaccumulate, possibly causing cancer, reproductive disorders, damage to central and peripheral nervous systems and diseases of the immune system, and interfering with infant and child development. UNEP initiated negotiations to prepare an international legally binding instrument to reduce the risks arising from the release of 12 such pollutants. The first session of the negotiating committee was held in June-July 1998.

159. The second instrument concerns trade in hazardous chemicals and pesticides. After two years of negotiations, the draft text of a legally binding instrument prescribing prior informed consent of such trading was concluded in March 1998. This will provide a means to acquire and disseminate information on this risk-prone form of trade and promote shared responsibility between exporting and importing countries. A diplomatic conference is to be held at Rotterdam, the Netherlands, in September 1998 to adopt the convention.

160. In collaboration with more than 200 scientists and an international team of reviewers, the World Meteorological Organization and UNEP jointly prepared an updated scientific assessment of ozone depletion. That assessment notes that, with full implementation of the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer, the complete recovery of the Earth's protective ozone layer could occur by the middle of the next century. It also indicates that the combined total of all ozone-depleting compounds in the troposphere peaked in 1994, and is now slowly declining. Like its predecessor survey in 1994, this assessment provides the scientific consensus needed to guide international cooperation for the purpose of phasing out the use of substances that deplete the ozone layer.

161. In the area of biodiversity, the Open-ended Ad Hoc Working Group on Biosafety held three sessions during the past year to continue preparing the groundwork for negotiations on a biosafety protocol to the Convention on Biological Diversity. The Global Environment Facility has agreed to fund a major pilot project to be implemented by UNEP that will provide assistance on biosafety to developing and transitional countries.

162. Regional multilateral organizations continue to play an important environmental role. For example, the negotiating committee on persistent organic pollutants agreed to use protocols established by the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) as a basis for worldwide action. Similarly, within the framework of ECE, an international agreement has just been adopted to develop global technical standards for motor vehicles, which should lead to the production of vehicles meeting high safety and environmental standards.

"Uncivil" society

163. The globalization of electronic communication is helping to create an embryonic global civil society, represented most obviously by the ever-increasing number of non-governmental organizations focusing on issues related to the environment, development, human rights and peace. The forces that made possible the emergence of a global civil society also, unfortunately, facilitate the transnationalization of "uncivil" elements.

164. In many countries, criminal organizations and drug-trafficking syndicates with transnational links represent a major threat to both Governments and peoples. In June 1998, the General Assembly held a special session to examine the global drug problem and related threats. It reached consensus that the most appropriate policy was a balanced approach to drug control, giving equal priority to reducing demand and reducing supply, and providing alternative crop opportunities to farmers growing drug-producing crops.

165. The operational follow-up to the special session will involve the key international financial institutions. It will also equip the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to assist countries in combating organized crime more effectively and in reducing the supply of illicit drugs. The Programme monitors and analyses changing drug traffic patterns, liaises with enforcement experts from other agencies and helps Governments to reinforce their border control and drug detection capacities. It has also developed a worldwide programme of training and technical assistance to increase awareness of money-laundering, encourage the adoption and enforcement of effective national laws and upgrade the skills of the police, prosecutors, judges and financial regulators and their ability to respond to the rapidly changing modalities of financial crime.

166. The Programme also maintains an Anti-Money-Laundering International Database; a world compendium of anti-money-laundering legislation and procedures, which is part of the International Money-Laundering Information Network; as well as a library and forum for information exchange among international organizations and other interested parties. UNDCP has also established a global system for sharing data with other international organizations involved in the fight against international crime. For example, its database is linked with Interpol and the World Customs Organization. At the regional level, the Programme brings together law enforcement authorities from neighbouring countries to discuss region-specific problems and ways to address them. In drug-producing countries, it works with Governments and rural communities to facilitate a transition to legal alternative crops and promotes sustainable agro-industrial sectors.

167. The General Assembly took important action this past year to strike at the threat of terrorism. In December 1997, it adopted the International Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombings. The Sixth Committee will next take up consideration of an international convention for the suppression of acts of nuclear terrorism.

168. In this increasingly interconnected world, the forces for good and evil travel with equal speed and ease. Globalization has an immense potential to improve people's lives, but it can disrupt—and destroy—them as well. Those who do not accept its pervasive, all-encompassing ways are often left behind. It is our task to prevent this; to ensure that globalization leads to progress, prosperity and security for all. I intend that the United Nations shall lead this effort.

V. Strengthening the international legal order

169. The idea that the international order should be based on legal norms and rules is fragile and fragmentary, but it is steadily gaining ground. A growing body of trade law, and other rule-based frameworks, allows global markets to expand. Multilateral treaties address problems related to the global commons as well as to arms limitation and disarmament. The United Nations plays a unique role in the definition and protection of human rights. Indeed, in 1998, the year which witnesses the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, we are more than ever conscious of our responsibilities in this field.

170. It is fitting, therefore, that 1998 also saw the adoption of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court. The Rome Conference succeeded in creating what had long been described as the missing link in the international legal system: a permanent court to judge the crimes of gravest concern to the international community as a whole—genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and the crime of aggression.

The human rights regime

171. While gross violations of human rights remain an issue of concern, the notion that the interests of the many can be advanced by violating the rights of a few is an illusion which, happily, is far less widespread at the close of this century than it was in earlier periods. If individual rights are not protected, the whole of society suffers. Personal freedoms are however rendered largely meaningless by civil wars, or by economic, social or cultural deprivation—often, indeed, by a combination of all these.

172. It is for these reasons that I have repeatedly stressed that the promotion of human rights must not be treated as something separate from the Organization's other activities. Rather, it is the common thread running through all of them, particularly through every stage of our work in peace and security, from conflict prevention to post-conflict peace-building and beyond. Human rights bodies are involved in early-warning and preventive activities, and human rights considerations are increasingly embodied in our response to crises. We aim to provide human rights training for all participants in peacekeeping and humanitarian operations, and to put complementary human rights field operations on a firmer financial basis. Building, or rebuilding, a national infrastructure for the protection of human rights is central to the whole concept of post-conflict peace-building. Finally, we aim to continue providing support for human rights institutions even after a country moves beyond the peace-building stage. The crucial connection between human rights and international peace and security is becoming more widely understood. Large-scale human rights violations are not merely the product of civil and ethnic conflict, they are also a major cause of such conflicts.

173. The year has also seen the United Nations begin to implement the rights-based approach to development, which is intended to help States and international agencies redirect their development thinking. The United Nations Development Programme has designated the right to development as a fundamental objective, and promotion of respect for human rights as central to development assistance. UNICEF has similarly employed the Convention on the Rights of the Child to guide its work.

174. The rights-based approach to development describes situations not simply in terms of human needs, or of developmental requirements, but in terms of society's obligation to respond to the inalienable rights of individuals. It empowers people to demand justice as a right, not as charity, and gives communities a moral basis from which to claim international assistance where needed.

175. On 26 June 1998 the international community observed the first United Nations International Day in Support of Victims of Torture. The United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture channels humanitarian assistance to an increasing number of organizations that help victims of torture every year. Thanks to a substantial increase in the contributions received from Governments, the Fund will disburse more than $4 million in 1998-1999 for medical, psychological, social, financial and legal assistance to about 100 organizations that assist some 60,000 victims of torture worldwide. To further this vital work, I call upon those Member States that have not yet done so to ratify the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

The international tribunals

176. The two ad hoc international tribunals, the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia in The Hague and the International Tribunal for Rwanda, have demonstrated that the institutions of international justice can have teeth.

177. Indeed, these judicial proceedings are of immense historical significance. The Tribunal for Rwanda is the first international tribunal to deal specifically with the crime of genocide. Its judgement in the trial of Jean-Paul Akayesu and the sentencing of a former Prime Minister of Rwanda, Jean Kambanda, who had pleaded guilty, mark the first time ever that such decisions have been rendered for the crime of genocide by any international court. Without this Tribunal and the international cooperation it has been able to command, these and other individuals still awaiting trial—who all fled Rwanda—would almost certainly have escaped justice.

178. As at August 1998, public indictments had been issued by the two Tribunals against almost 100 people—60 by the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and 36 by the International Tribunal for Rwanda. In the case of the former Yugoslavia, 28 of the accused were in custody, five trials were under way and two defendants had been sentenced. In the case of Rwanda, 31 were in custody, including many of the alleged ringleaders of the Rwandan genocide, in addition to former Prime Minister Kambanda, five former ministers and other senior political and military figures.

179. To cope with the substantial increase in the workload of the Tribunals, and to prevent undue delay in the trial process, the capacity of both has been expanded, and elections will soon add new judges.

The International Criminal Court

180. On 17 July, after more than 50 years of hope interspersed with despair, and following five weeks of deliberations among representatives from 159 States, the Rome Statute was adopted by the United Nations Conference on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court. Its aim is to put an end to the global culture of impunity—the culture in which it has been easier to bring someone to justice for killing one person than for killing 100,000. More than 200 non-governmental organizations took part in the process—an unprecedented level of participation by civil society in a law-making conference.

181. Although many would have preferred the Court to have been vested with more far-reaching powers, one should not minimize the breakthrough that was achieved. The Statute provides that States parties to the Statute accept the jurisdiction of the Court with respect to genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and the crime of aggression.

182. We have before us an opportunity to take a monumental step in the name of human rights and the rule of law. The main challenge now is to encourage States to ratify and implement the Statute. The Statute will stay open for signature until 31 December 2000. It is my fervent hope that by then a large majority of Member States will have signed and ratified it, so that the Court will have unquestioned authority and the widest possible jurisdiction.

183. The United Nations is an association of sovereign States, but the rights that it exists to protect and promote are people's rights. It follows that individuals everywhere have a responsibility to help defend the ideals of human rights. The role of civil society in the establishment of the International Criminal Court was an inspiring example of what can be achieved by people driven by faith in those ideals. The voice of the people brought us to Rome; the voice of the people gives this gift of hope to succeeding generations.

VI. Managing change

184. The United Nations is a large, heterogeneous and highly complex organization. Managing its many activities and communicating its message are vital tasks. It is also in these areas that many of the most difficult reform efforts are being pursued. Success is absolutely essential if we are to meet our mission goals in the new millennium.

Creating a culture of communication

185. Placing communications at the heart of the strategic management of the Organization is central to the ongoing revitalization of the United Nations. If the goals of this revitalization are to be clearly understood, a culture of communication must pervade the entire Organization. Such a culture, supported by corresponding institutional arrangements, will enable the Organization to communicate with its global audience with greater coherence and forcefulness.

186. The Department of Public Information is leading the implementation of the new communications strategy proposed by a high-level task force that I appointed last year. The strategy focuses on enhancing the links between the United Nations, the media and broad sectors of civil society. Implementing this strategy will require us to seek out new ways to tell the United Nations story and highlight its successes. Towards that end, the Department and other Secretariat units are working together to identify and implement information campaigns, focused on news-making aspects of the Organization's activities. A strategic communications planning group has been created within the Department to assist the Under-Secretary-General in setting goals and strategies, and reaching out to the media, non-governmental organizations, academic institutions, the business community and youth.

187. The Internet has become a vital tool in strengthening United Nations partnerships around the world, given the primacy of speed in all media-related activity, and given also the access the Internet provides to vast new audiences. In future, the United Nations Web site will carry more audio and video material, including regular radio news updates; it will host on-line discussions with United Nations experts and promote the sales and marketing of United Nations publications and materials.

188. The United Nations Web site (www.un.org), winner of a number of specialist awards for its contents and ease of use, is being expanded to include all six official languages. During 1997, users accessed the Web site more than 40 million times; this number will more than double in 1998. A Web site created for the recent United Nations Conference on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, held in Rome, provided instant news and visual material to the media and others closely following the issue. In its first two weeks, that Web site was accessed more than 380,000 times.

189. As part of the effort to deploy advanced communications and electronic publishing technology in all aspects of the Organization's work, United Nations Information Centres and services are now electronically linked both to Headquarters and to each other, providing instant, low-cost access to United Nations news, documents and reference resources. Several Centres have established their own Web sites for local audiences. On another front, the Centres are being integrated with UNDP field offices.

190. The print and audio-visual products of the Department of Public Information are increasingly tailored to meet the changing needs of media disseminators in terms of content, style and timeliness. This, too, has been helped by the introduction of radio and television programming on the United Nations Web site, as well as the rapid posting of digital photographs and print outputs of the Organization's activities worldwide. We are studying the possible creation of an international radio broadcasting service, which would put cost-effective information delivery at the disposal of the entire United Nations system, particularly in support of peacekeeping and humanitarian emergency operations.

191. Notwithstanding the vast opportunities offered by the Internet, the print medium is still the most influential in disseminating ideas and opinions. Department of Public Information publications are constantly reviewed and improved through readership surveys. Innovations include a more reader-friendly edition of Basic Facts about the United Nations and the transformation of the UN Chronicle into a lively forum of opinion and debate as well as of essential news. Development Business has launched Development Business Online in collaboration with the World Bank. Sales of United Nations publications continue to increase and are the leading revenue-producing activity of the Organization.

192. Outreach to young people is vital to the ongoing relevance of the United Nations. The Department of Public Information has placed special emphasis on education and youth, organizing guided tours, publications and workshops for teachers and students, plus special events such as Students Day at the United Nations and a youth-oriented programme on Human Rights Day. The CyberSchoolBus, the Department's on-line education project, reaches thousands of students in more than 60 countries, and is the most popular site on the United Nations Web site.

193. In the drive to build greater global public support for the Organization, the Department is working closely with non-governmental organizations. The Department is also expanding its contacts with research and academic institutions, the private sector, youth groups and global communication leaders. In September 1997, the annual Department of Public Information/NGO Conference, celebrating 50 years of partnership between the United Nations and non-governmental organizations, drew more than 1,800 participants from 61 countries to United Nations Headquarters. The second United Nations World Television Forum, held in November 1997, included a number of renowned television figures and provided a venue for a fruitful professional dialogue.

Administration and management

194. The Department of Management continues to focus on creating a mission-driven and results-oriented organization, which calls for better management of human resources and the Organization's programme.

195. The Department carried out a wide variety of initiatives last year. Programme managers conducted management reviews designed to enhance the delivery of mandated programmes, strengthen services to Member States and identify ways to implement their programmes within budgetary constraints.

196. In the future, greater emphasis will be given to what the Organization intends to accomplish in terms of results, as opposed to focusing on inputs and instrumental measures. With results-based budgeting it is envisaged that the weak links of the programme planning, budgeting, monitoring and evaluation cycle will be strengthened. Evaluation studies will address the extent to which results have been achieved, thereby helping Member States to decide on the relevance and continuing value of programmes and subprogrammes.

197. The reduction of administrative costs and redeployment of resources will free financial resources for the Development Account, financing innovative activities in the economic and social fields. To this end, the administrative bureaucracy of the United Nations is being critically reviewed with particular attention to simplifying and streamlining procedures; reducing administrative redundancies by delegating more responsibility to programme managers; creating a fully electronic United Nations; modernizing Secretariat functions; and discontinuing activities that have outlived their usefulness.

198. Close to 1,000 posts were eliminated in the 1998-1999 programme budget. Three departments were consolidated into one, while one department was re-established as an independent entity. In addition, I set up a human resources task force, which conducted an intensive review of the critical human resources issues facing the Organization. Its recommendations will improve the Organization's ability to evaluate its human resources needs more effectively, greatly accelerate the recruitment process, introduce better career planning and establish ongoing staff training programmes to ensure that staff skills respond to changing demands. Creating a results-oriented, high-performance Organization requires increased investment in human resources. Targeted learning and development programmes are being made available to staff at all levels throughout the Secretariat. Changes in the Performance Appraisal System and other initiatives are indispensable elements in our efforts to introduce a results-based work culture.

199. Every permanent mission to the United Nations in New York is now connected to the United Nations via the Internet, and is thus able to access the United Nations Web site and all documents on the optical disk system. On-line virtual meetings are supplementing video conferencing, thereby reducing the need for travel and providing greater flexibility for meeting arrangements. Beginning-to-end electronic document management systems and other software are facilitating the transition towards a paperless office environment. These moves towards an electronic United Nations will be expanded in the future.

200. In solidifying and further advancing management reforms, the Department of Management will have to address a number of concerns. First and foremost is the need to ensure the full support and participation of all staff members in the reform initiatives. During the period of transition, the Department's primary challenge will be to guarantee that sufficient time and resources are invested in maintaining staff capacity, productivity and morale. Accordingly, adequate staff development opportunities and attractive conditions of service must be ensured. Continuing support by Member States for my management initiatives will greatly facilitate the Secretariat's efforts in this respect, as their support for flexibility, managerial initiative and responsive adjustments in the implementation of programmes will speed up the implementation of managerial reform and the delivery of mandated programmes.

201. The financial situation and outlook for the Organization during the past year have remained at best unchanged. As in previous years, projections for 1998 indicate that the Organization's combined cash reserves will drop further, to about $577 million, from $669 million at the end of 1997, the regular budget portion again showing a sizeable deficit. While the level of unpaid assessments has remained relatively constant, a further deterioration in the pattern of payments has occurred because previously prompt payers are delaying their payments more and more. As a result, less cash is available and obligations exceed cash balances. With a decreasing level of peacekeeping activity, the future availability of peacekeeping cash to bail out the regular budget cash deficit is in increasing doubt. Thus, the Organization's cash position is weak and getting weaker.

Legal affairs

202. The Office of Legal Affairs continues to provide a unified central legal service to the Secretary-General, the Secretariat and the other principal organs of the United Nations and the Member States. Legal research services were provided to a number of bodies involved in the legislative process, in particular the two Commissions for which the Office serves as secretariat: the International Law Commission and the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law. Legal assistance was also provided for meetings of a large number of law-making bodies and conferences.

203. The Office of Legal Affairs participated in the drafting of a number of legal instruments, including the directive for the development of United Nations rules of engagement for military personnel and codes of conduct for staff members and other United Nations personnel. Advice was also provided on drafting a number of conventions and international instruments, including the Ottawa Convention on Anti-Personnel Mines and the Kyoto Protocol to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change.

204. The Office also advised States at the post-legislative stage, assisting them in implementing the provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, and in the negotiating of additional international legal instruments compatible with that Convention.

205. Assistance was provided in the preparation and drafting of international agreements between the United Nations and other international organizations and institutions—for example, a relationship agreement with the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons and a draft cooperation agreement with the provisional secretariat of the Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization. The Office also assisted in the conclusion of status-of-forces agreements between the United Nations and host States.

206. Another key activity of the Office of Legal Affairs was the negotiation of contracts, leases and other legal transactions of a private law nature which involve the Organization. The Office also played an essential role in devising major reforms in United Nations procurement procedures and developed a regime of limited liability in respect of third-party claims arising out of peacekeeping activities. The Office acted for the Organization in the settlement of claims brought either by the United Nations or against it, in particular commercial claims arising out of peacekeeping activities.

207. The Office of Legal Affairs represented the Organization before the two international tribunals. One case concerned the appearance of the former Force Commander of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda before the International Tribunal for Rwanda. Another involved requests made in the course of proceedings before the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia for access to United Nations documentation.

208. Advice was provided to United Nations organs and bodies to assist them in discharging their roles in the resolution of international disputes. For example, legal assistance was given to the group of experts whom I asked to investigate the Scottish legal system in order to devise a solution to the continuing problems arising out of the Lockerbie tragedy. Non-United Nations bodies, such as the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, were also assisted.

209. Legal instruments were prepared to ensure that the activities of the Organization were carried out within their proper legal limits, an example being the elaboration of a draft Secretary-General's bulletin on fundamental principles and rules of international humanitarian law applicable to United Nations forces in situations of armed conflict.

210. The Office began implementing its redesigned information programme aimed at promoting understanding of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea and thereby ensuring its consistent and effective application. Significant improvements were also made in the Office's publication programme. The production backlog of several regularly produced publications was eliminated, and new publications include an analytical guide to the work of the International Law Commission, a summary of the judgments and advisory opinions of the International Court of Justice and a complete index to the legal opinions appearing in the United Nations Juridical Yearbook. An audio-visual library in international law was established for lending to Governments and educational institutions.

211. In the year ahead, the Office of Legal Affairs intends to take advantage of the substantial recent increase in activity around the world aimed at reforming and modernizing commercial law by helping guide that activity in the direction of coordination, harmonization and unification of the laws of international trade. Yet another challenge of immediate concern to the Office will be to refine procedures and practices for coping, fairly and efficiently, with the increased number of requests for documents and other evidence expected to flow from the fast-growing workload of the two international tribunals.

Project services

212. The United Nations Office for Project Services provides implementation and management services to projects funded by United Nations organizations and programmes. Designed as an entirely self-financed and demand-driven organization, the Office functions like a business, yet in its operations it fully respects the values embodied in the Charter of the United Nations. It is now an important means for outsourcing inside the United Nations system. Demand for its services has been steadily increasing.

213. In 1997, the Office for Project Services delivered $463 million in services and goods worldwide and administered the disbursement of $151 million of loans by the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) to 63 countries. The Office has executed, or assisted in the national execution of, UNDP projects in all its focus areas. Contracted services span governance and poverty-alleviation programmes, environment programmes, and social rehabilitation and post-conflict reconstruction initiatives in 19 countries, including Afghanistan, Angola, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cambodia, Haiti and Somalia.

214. In the framework of a 15-year-long partnership with the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, the Office for Project Services continues to participate in the implementation of a large portion of drug control programmes. New partnerships are being forged between the Office and other United Nations bodies, such as the Department of Political Affairs, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. On behalf of the Department of Political Affairs, the Office set up mobile investigation teams and offices throughout Guatemala to enable the Clarification Commission to prepare a database on human rights violations, as agreed in the Guatemala Peace Agreements. The Office's Mine Action Unit is assisting in the design and management of mine-clearance programmes, notably in Croatia and Iraq.

215. For three consecutive years, the United Nations Office for Project Services has been able to operate successfully in accordance with the self-financing principle, generating enough income in implementation and supervision fees to cover all administrative expenses and to maintain a financial reserve at the prescribed level.

216. This performance is the result of the Office's own reform efforts. In addition to introducing value-for-money contracting, it has striven to lower costs and to improve the quality of its services by means of decentralization. Offices have been opened in Kuala Lumpur, Geneva and Copenhagen, as well as sub-offices in Nairobi and San Salvador. A new office was established in 1997 in Abidjan, initially devoted to servicing rural development projects financed or co-financed under IFAD loans in western and central Africa.

Accountability and oversight

217. In its fourth year of existence, the Office of Internal Oversight Services has significantly contributed to my reform programme. Its activities have covered all offices, from New York and Geneva to Nairobi and Vienna, the regional commissions, and many separately administered funds and programmes.

218. Special emphasis was placed this past year on ways in which the United Nations monitors improvements in its operations and reform initiatives. In addition to auditing all peacekeeping operations, the Office of Internal Oversight Services reviewed the programme administration of the headquarters of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and its field activities in 14 countries. The lessons learned from the liquidation and closure of peacekeeping missions in Haiti, Liberia and the former Yugoslavia have now been institutionalized, and UNHCR procedures for the selection and supervision of implementing partners—the Governments and non-governmental organizations that are responsible for roughly 40 per cent of UNHCR annual programme expenditures—have been made more effective.

219. Management audits have become a highly effective oversight mechanism. For example, a management audit of the personnel recruitment process of the Office of Human Resources Management showed that it was expensive and time-consuming (with the average recruitment taking an incredible 460 days to complete), but that the Office was moving towards streamlining its practices. Similarly, a management audit of security at United Nations Headquarters found that this essential function was accorded a relatively low priority, and was neither adequately staffed nor funded. The Office of Internal Oversight Services recommended the allocation of additional capital funds to enhance the physical security of the United Nations premises, as well as a number of other security measures.

220. Guidelines on programme monitoring and evaluation were issued by the Office of Internal Oversight Services in November 1997, setting out the managerial elements of programme monitoring and evaluation that should be in place in each department and office. Training workshops and other services to help implement the guidelines are being established; the first workshop was held by ESCAP in December.

221. In-depth evaluations of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division were completed. Reviews of the implementation of recommendations adopted by the General Assembly three years ago on the start-up phase of peacekeeping operations and on UNEP were also undertaken. The Committee for Programme and Coordination reviewed those reports, as well as a report on strengthening the role of evaluation in departments and offices of the United Nations, endorsing all their recommendations. The programme management evaluation of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division was also conducted. It was found that the programme has become less focused and priorities are not given sufficient attention. The Division immediately accepted the findings of the Office of Internal Oversight Services and its recommendations.

222. The Office also prepared my recent report on programme performance of the United Nations for the biennium 1996-1997, which reflects the extent of implementation of outputs identified in the programme budget. It indicates which programmed activities were modified during the biennium and which new activities were introduced, while highlighting the reasons for the non-implementation of programmed activities. Despite the financial constraints and the consequently high average personnel vacancy rate of 13 per cent, the balance sheet of the Organization in terms of output was largely positive: 80 per cent of mandated activities are implemented.

223. A follow-up review of the actions taken by the Department of Peacekeeping Operations in response to the recommendations made by the Office of Internal Oversight Services in a report to the General Assembly of August 1995 revealed that the Field Administration and Logistics Division had taken appropriate and corrective action to address the concerns raised by the Office.

224. In its drive to increase accountability, the Office has also played a valuable role in helping to bring to justice a number of cases of fraud perpetrated against the Organization. One case involved a senior staff member and a sum of some $600,000; others have involved outside contractors.

225. In the coming year, the Office will continue to support my efforts to reform and restructure the Secretariat in New York and major offices and programmes around the world. The focus will be on the restructuring of United Nations offices at Nairobi, as well as the reform of personnel recruitment and management, and the delivery of common services. A comprehensive review of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia will also be conducted.

226. In short, the critical institutional infrastructure that makes it possible for the United Nations to serve its clientele has undergone considerable change and innovation. Vital reforms in personnel policy must still be undertaken, but the Organization is more responsive, more efficient and more accountable than it was only a few short years ago.

VII. Conclusion

227. One of the founding missions of the United Nations was to prevent the scourge of war between States. As we move towards the new century, the international community has largely realized that goal. However, while inter-State war has become a relatively rare aberration, threats to human security have by no means been eradicated. Savage civil wars persist, terrorism strikes at innocent victims and the AIDS epidemic provides daily proof that not only armies move across borders and kill people. In some parts of the developing world poverty seems endemic.

228. Recent experience has shown that the quest for international peace and security requires complementary action on two fronts: on the security front, where victory spells freedom from fear; and on the economic and social front, where victory spells freedom from want. Human security and equitable and sustainable development turn out to be two sides of the same coin.

229. This past year we learned more clearly than ever before that the forces of globalization profoundly shape our ability to pursue these objectives: that they pose extraordinary opportunities as well as enormous challenges. Globalization has generated an unprecedented surge in prosperity. The market-friendly development strategies that created the so-called Asian economic miracle, for example, delivered hundreds of millions of people from poverty in less than three decades. Those same market forces last year substantially overshot any needed market "correction". The consequences have been sobering—absolute declines in GDP, increased poverty, hunger, human rights abuses and violent social unrest.

230. Globalization puts a premium on good governance, and it can help devolve economic power from repressive regimes while creating the social space for the emergence of a thriving middle class and a robust civil society. On the other hand, it reduces the ability of Governments to deploy policy instruments free of external constraint and can thereby limit their capacity to help those most in need at home and abroad.

231. Global markets trade not only in economic goods but also in social ills—the illicit arms trade, for example, including components of weapons of mass destruction; the means to evade sanctions; the rapidly increasing traffic in human beings for sexual exploitation; the multitude of environmental challenges.

232. Globalization not only expands economic and social ties that unite; by corroding existing cultural identities it can also reinforce differences that divide.

233. The fact that globalization has these complex and potentially volatile consequences should occasion no surprise. Markets are purely instrumental means for the efficient allocation of resources. Maximizing the beneficial effects of market forces while minimizing their negative consequences has always required that they be coupled with the effective exercise of public authority: instituting the political and legal frameworks that markets require, and providing the safeguards against the deleterious effects they can produce. Whereas markets have become global, Governments remain local, however, and in key respects the capability gap between them is widening. Multilateral institutions have a critical role to play in bridging this gap. Only universal organizations like the United Nations have the scope and legitimacy to generate the principles, norms and rules that are essential if globalization is to benefit everyone.

234. The task ahead, therefore, is not to try to reverse globalization—an effort which, in any case, would be futile. The task is to harness its positive potential while managing its adverse effects. Strengthening multilateral institutions can help accomplish that task.

235. If globalization involves costs as well as benefits, being on the periphery of the global economy is even more problematic. Nowhere is this fundamental reality more starkly confirmed than in the case of Africa. Vicious circles of unsound policies, predatory politics, natural disasters, violent conflict and the neglect of the developed countries have isolated large parts of the continent from the mainstream of global development. In my report to the Security Council in April, I addressed the sources of conflict and how to achieve peace and sustainable development in Africa, laying out a programme of action for Africa and the international community alike. In the past six months the situation, especially in central Africa, has visibly worsened. There have been too many false starts, too many pledges of uncorrupt rule routinely violated, too many broken promises of transitions to democracy. All of Africa's leaders must honour their mandates and serve their people, and the international community must do its part so that Africa can, at long last, succeed in the quest for peace and greater prosperity.

236. In the countdown to the new century, we must carry forward the reform programme I initiated last year, and Member States must engage those reforms that lie within their purview with greater determination and vigour. Reforming the United Nations institutional machinery is but a first step towards refashioning its roles for the new era. It is my hope that the Millennium Assembly will make this challenge its agenda. We all need a vital and effective United Nations—this indispensable instrument for achieving our common goals, this unique expression of our common humanity.

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read 'K. Annan', with a stylized, flowing script.

Kofi A. ANNAN
Secretary-General

PART ONE

Political and security questions

Chapter I

International peace and security

The year 1998 marked the fiftieth anniversary of United Nations peacekeeping. The General Assembly, at a special commemorative meeting on 6 October, adopted a Declaration in which it paid tribute to the hundreds of thousands of men and women who had served in more than 40 peacekeeping operations around the world and honoured the memory of more than 1,500 of them who had died in the cause of peace. During the year, the Organization continued to pursue its Charter objective of maintaining and promoting international peace and security. The Security Council, in a 29 December statement of its President, encouraged the Secretary-General to explore the possibility of establishing post-conflict peace-building structures as part of the Organization's efforts to achieve a lasting peaceful solution to conflicts. Efforts also continued towards the prevention and early resolution of conflicts. In July, the Secretary-General invited heads of regional organizations to a meeting in New York to discuss improving cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations in promoting peace. In November, the Security Council set out its views on the role of regional arrangements in the maintenance of peace.

Over the course of the year, UN peacekeeping operations were deployed worldwide—in Europe, Africa, the Americas, Asia and the Middle East—with 14,570 military personnel and civilian police serving under UN command at mid-year. The year began with 15 operations in place; two missions in Europe completed their mandates and two new missions were launched in Africa and one in Europe. The total number of missions deployed during the year was 18; those in place at the end of the year stood at 16.

In addition to its peacekeeping operations, the United Nations used other means to address conflict situations, including the deployment of diplomatic representatives to such areas of conflict as Afghanistan, Algeria and Angola—where the Secretary-General's Special Representative was killed in a plane crash on 26 June, along with seven others—as well as to Bougainville, Papua New Guinea.

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations made recommendations on, among other matters, field administration and management, procurement, reimbursement arrangements, planning, training, standby arrangements, demining, logistics and communications, asset management and personnel issues related to the Department of Peacekeeping Operations.

The cost of UN peacekeeping operations amounted to $879.3 million for the 12-month period ending 30 June 1998, compared with $1,166.4 million in the previous 12-month period, while unpaid assessed contributions from Member States to peacekeeping budgets amounted to $1,739.9 million as at 30 June 1998, compared with $2,180.7 million as at 30 June 1997.

The General Assembly considered various aspects of peacekeeping financing in 1998, including the funding mechanism for the support account for peacekeeping operations, the phasing out of the use of gratis personnel and the financing of the Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, and adopted criteria and guidelines for third-party claims against the United Nations.

Agenda for Peace

Working Group

In an August note [A/52/1015], the President of the General Assembly, pursuant to Assembly resolution 51/242 [YUN 1997, p. 32], reported on consultations he had conducted on the possibility of continuing the activities of the Informal Open-ended Working Group on an Agenda for Peace in the areas of post-conflict peace-building and preventive diplomacy and peacemaking. The President said that he had been informed of the progress made in those areas by the Working Group and advised of the important differences that existed, especially with regard to efforts to reconcile respect for sovereignty with situations where it was not always feasible to obtain the consent of the Government concerned to undertake preventive measures. That was one of the major obstacles preventing the Working Group from concluding its work on preventive diplomacy and peacemaking, while its failure to conclude its work on post-conflict peace-building was due mainly to disagreement over the issue of assigning to the Assembly the key role in that area. His consultations revealed a unanimous assessment that although, at the current stage, no preconditions existed for a breakthrough in reconciling those differences, the Assembly should not lose sight of the matter and no efforts should be spared to reach a consensus. The President recommended that consultations continue during the fifty-third (1998) session of the Assembly.

Preventive diplomacy and peacemaking

In his report on the work of the Organization [A/53/1] (see p. 3), the Secretary-General noted that, while conflict prevention should be one of the Organization's deepest commitments, there was still too little emphasis on preventive action. Instead, vast resources were spent on efforts to "cure" conflicts, when for many of the victims it was already too late.

Preventing potential conflicts from crossing the threshold of violence required early warning of situations with the potential for crisis, proper analysis, an integrated preventive strategy, and the political will and resources to implement such a strategy. Effective prevention was in some cases impeded by the traditional focus on external threats to a State's security. Yet other threats to human security, such as natural disasters, ethnic tension and human rights violations, might also be sources of conflict, the Secretary-General said. The relationship between social justice, material well-being and peace had to be taken into account if action was to be pursued far enough to prevent local conflicts from escalating and spilling over into the international arena.

The United Nations had already started to embrace a new holistic concept of security in its work at the field level. Its efforts to reduce poverty and promote development and democratization—including electoral assistance and civic education—had become more comprehensive and integrated and might be described as preventive peace-building, since they attacked the root causes of many conflicts.

The role of diplomacy was so central to virtually all UN activities that its specific contribution was sometimes overlooked. That was especially true of successful preventive diplomacy. While UN missions had achieved notable successes, there were some conflicts where hostility was so intense and distrust so pervasive that no amount of skilful diplomacy would achieve a breakthrough. The most delicate kind of preventive diplomacy was that which sought to bring about reconciliation between antagonistic political forces within a country, in the hope of preventing or resolving conflicts that, if left to escalate, might in time become a direct threat to international peace and security.

Regional organizations were particularly well suited to play an important role in early warning and preventive diplomacy because the causes of conflict were usually regional or local. The Secretary-General was therefore seeking to create a real partnership, with a more rational and cost-effective division of labour, between those organizations and the United Nations. In that regard, he had established in 1998 a UN liaison office at the headquarters of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, and continued to consolidate links to the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE). In July, he invited the heads of regional organizations to a meeting in New York to discuss improving cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations in preventing conflict (see below).

Conflict prevention

The third meeting between the United Nations and regional organizations (New York, 28-29 July) [A/52/1021-S/1998/785] examined the potential for greater interaction and cooperation between them in the field of conflict prevention within the framework of the Charter of the United Nations and the mandates of regional organizations. In particular, it discussed the challenge of conflict prevention, reviewed how the United Nations and regional organizations were responding to that challenge, and identified areas of possible interaction and collaboration. The first two meetings, held in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 88] and 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 43], had focused on general principles and modalities to guide cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations in international peace and security.

The summary statement of the third meeting said that in an era when the principal threat to human security was increasingly coming from new and more diverse forms of conflict, the challenge of conflict prevention went to the very heart of the shared mission of the United Nations and regional organizations. To meet that challenge, the critical need to develop a culture of prevention and specific forms of action and interaction was recognized. To that end, two distinct categories of cooperation were noted: "structural prevention", namely, the need to promote greater respect for human rights, maintenance of the rule of law and strengthening of democratic institutions; and "operational prevention", which took in the traditional forms of conflict prevention and "early warning". In that context, prevention was a continuum that ranged from early warning, through preventive diplomacy, preventive disarmament (in particular of small arms), preventive deployment and on to peace-building, both before and after conflicts.

It was further recognized that the United Nations and the regional organizations possessed various strengths and capabilities in conflict prevention and that the focus should be placed on how they could work together to achieve greater complementarity as mutually reinforcing institutions, making use of their comparative advantages.

The key to conflict prevention lay with Member States and their support for early external involvement to defuse disputes and crises. In that regard, the value of a "rule based" approach to prevention was underscored, as it made efforts to avoid conflicts more effective and acceptable to the international community.

The United Nations and regional organizations affirmed their common commitment to develop specific modalities that were practical and implementable for more effective cooperation in conflict prevention. Various modalities for cooperation were considered: measures for more regular consultation at the headquarters level, including in the context of early warning; more systematic coordination of preventive activities in the field, including joint missions; development of common indicators for early warning; establishment of a database of the conflict prevention capabilities of the United Nations and regional organizations; better flow of information; exchange of liaison officers; visits of staff at the working level between the different headquarters; joint training of staff in the field of prevention; building specific links to civil society (including the media and professional groups) to increase awareness of the value of prevention; and similar measures to be determined on a case-by-case basis. In that context, the need for mobilizing effective resources for early warning and preventive activities was stressed.

As a means of follow-up, the United Nations would convene in 1998 working-level meetings between its staff and that of regional organizations to develop further the modalities for interaction and collaboration. It was also agreed that periodic high-level meetings between the United Nations and regional organizations should be convened in the future.

Post-conflict peace-building

The Secretary-General, in his August 1998 report on the work of the Organization [A/53/1], characterized post-conflict peace-building as integrated and coordinated actions to address the causes of violence and to lay the foundations for a durable peace. Post-conflict peace-building could be seen as a long-term conflict prevention strategy. UN action had to be tailored to specific situations to strengthen the peace process and make it irreversible since there was no standard post-conflict peace-building model.

Over the past year, there had been an increase in civilian police operations following the withdrawal of military personnel, reflecting a growing interest in the role of peacekeeping operations in helping to build human rights, law-enforcement and other institutions, and thus strengthen the foundations of lasting peace.

There was also a growing recognition of the need to link all aspects of external support for countries afflicted by conflict, whether political, humanitarian, developmental or human rights. Crucial to meeting that need was the participation of donor Governments, host Governments and non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

ACC report. At its first regular session of 1998 (Geneva, 27-28 March) [ACC/1998/4], the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) discussed peace-building: a draft strategic framework on/for Afghanistan. The Secretary-General told ACC that the strategic framework process, launched as a follow-up to ACC's April 1997 discussion on peace-building [YUN 1997, p. 38], had potentially far-reaching implications for the system and should be regarded as an integral part of the ongoing UN reform effort. Translating the process into practical action at the country level required not only the full commitment of the UN system but also the active engagement of a whole range of actors, including donors, NGOs and other civil society actors. The testing of the strategic framework process in Afghanistan (see PART ONE, Chapter IV) was yielding valuable lessons and was elucidating the problems that needed to be addressed by the system in acting in a concerted manner in crisis situations.

ACC agreed that, in developing the process further, account should be taken of existing mechanisms and structures. Documentation on the process should be revised, simplified and consolidated and gender issues fully integrated therein and more generally in the strategic framework process. ACC recognized that although the strategic framework exercise was a system-wide endeavour, different organizations became involved at different times and under different circumstances. It underlined the importance of ensuring optimal linkages between relief and development, including taking advantage of pockets of stability where development work could be initiated at an early stage, thereby showing the benefit of peace. ACC welcomed the Secretary-General's decision to entrust the Deputy Secretary-General with responsibility for steering the further development of the strategic framework initiative; she would consult with ACC in determining the criteria for and the selection of other test-case countries.

By a 3 August note [A/52/430/Add.1], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the comments of ACC on the 1997 report of the Joint Inspection Unit [YUN 1997, p. 39] on coordination among organizations of the UN system involved in peace-building. ACC, while expressing its appreciation to the inspectors for highlighting the importance of effective coordination among UN organizations involved in post-conflict peace-building and the need for clear and strong leadership, concluded that the report should have taken fuller account of the new orientations in policies and programmes, as well as the structural and organizational changes being introduced within the system. It should also have been based on a more current definition of the issues as generally understood at the inter-agency level. ACC reiterated the conclusion of its 1997 session [YUN 1997, p. 38] on arrangements at the headquarters and field levels for the Secretary-General to provide guidance to the system and to ensure that UN programmes, funds and agencies active in the countries concerned worked in concert to achieve the same goal. Those arrangements, if properly understood and accepted, would provide a solid basis for building and refining effective coordination practices, within the context of the strategic framework exercise.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in an April report [A/52/871-S/1998/318] on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa, defined post-conflict peace-building as actions undertaken at the end of a conflict to consolidate peace and prevent a recurrence of armed confrontation. That required diplomatic and military action and an integrated peace-building effort to address the various factors that had caused or were threatening a conflict. Peace-building might involve the creation or strengthening of national institutions, monitoring elections, promoting human rights, providing for reintegration and rehabilitation programmes, and creating conditions for resumed development. It aimed to build on, add to or reorient ongoing humanitarian and development activities to reduce the risk of a resumption of conflict and contribute to creating the conditions most conducive to reconciliation, reconstruction and recovery. In pursuing those peace-building objectives, time was of the essence; a multifaceted approach covering diplomatic, political and economic factors should be adopted and adequately financed, and there should be high-level strategic and administrative coordination among the many actors.

The Secretary-General urged the Security Council to look favourably on the establishment of post-conflict peace-building support structures similar to the one in Liberia (see next chapter). Prior to the end of a conflict, there should be a clear assessment of key post-conflict peace-building needs and of ways to meet them. Peace-building elements should be explicitly and clearly identified and integrated into the mandates of the peacekeeping operation. When a peacekeeping operation ended, the concluding mandate should include specific recommendations for the transitional period to the post-conflict phase. To avoid a return to conflict while laying a solid foundation for development, emphasis should be placed on critical priorities such as encouraging reconciliation and demonstrating respect for human rights; fostering political inclusiveness and promoting national unity; ensuring the safe, smooth and early repatriation and resettlement of refugees and displaced persons; reintegrating ex-combatants and others into productive society; curtailing the availability of small arms; and mobilizing domestic and international resources for reconstruction and economic recovery.

Where a country's capacity to develop and implement a comprehensive economic programme had been disrupted by conflict, the strict financial conditions imposed by international lending institutions should be relaxed. An urgent infusion of funds to support a fragile State during a delicate political transition might be required. Where economic reform was needed, it was necessary to consider how best to provide for a "peace-friendly" structural adjustment programme while easing the normal conditionality for loans from the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund). Where conflict had recently ended, bilateral and multilateral development agencies could direct their assistance to areas that would facilitate the rapid re-establishment of income-earning activities. Special attention should also be paid to quick-impact micro-projects, including training and other capacity-building activities to facilitate the reintegration of ex-combatants, refugees and displaced persons into their communities.

In some conflict or post-conflict peace-building situations, a "strategic framework" approach might also be appropriate, providing the basis for a coherent effort by the UN system in countries in crisis. The strategic framework would embrace political, human rights, humanitarian and development activities aimed at promoting a durable peace and sustainable development, and encompassing all partners in the UN system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, as well as national authorities, donor organizations and NGOs.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 and 23 December [meeting 3954 & resumption], the Security Council discussed the maintenance of peace and security and post-conflict peace-building.

On 29 December [meeting 3961], the Council, following consultations among members, authorized its President to make the following statement on its behalf [S/PRST/1998/38]:

The Security Council recalls the open debate held at its 3954th meeting on 16 December 1998 and on 23 December 1998 on the maintenance of peace and security and post-conflict peace-building. It recalls also the report of the Secretary-General of 13 April 1998 on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa, which was submitted to the Security Council and to the General Assembly, as well as the report of the Secretary-General of 27 August 1998 on the work of the Organization submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session. In this context, it welcomes the recommendations of the Secretary-General concerning the role of the Security Council in the aftermath of conflict, in particular in ensuring a smooth transition from peacekeeping to post-conflict peace-building. The Council recalls further the statement of its President of 30 April 1993 on the Secretary-General's report entitled "An Agenda for Peace", including the subject of post-conflict peace-building.

The Council reaffirms its primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security. It stresses the need to prevent the resurgence or escalation of conflict. The Council recognizes the importance of the post-conflict peace-building efforts of the United Nations to this end in all regions of the world and with due involvement of all United Nations bodies. In particular, it welcomes the role played by the Secretary-General in this field. It recognizes the timeliness of exploring further means to prevent and settle conflicts based on the Charter of the United Nations and generally recognized principles of peacekeeping, and which would incorporate post-conflict peace-building as an important component.

The Council recalls the statement of its President of 24 September 1998, which affirmed that the quest for peace in Africa requires a comprehensive, concerted and determined approach, encompassing the eradication of poverty, the promotion of democracy, sustainable development and respect for human rights, as well as conflict prevention and resolution, including peacekeeping, and humanitarian assistance. The Council underlines that efforts to ensure lasting solutions to conflicts require sustained political will and a long-term approach in the decision-making of the United Nations, including by the Council itself. It affirms its commitment to the principles of the political independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States in conducting peace-building activities, and the need for States to comply with their obligations under the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law.

The Council underlines that economic rehabilitation and reconstruction often constitute the major tasks facing societies emerging from conflict and that significant international assistance becomes indispensable to promote sustainable development in such cases. In that context, it recalls that Article 65 of the Charter of the United Nations provides that the Economic and Social Council may furnish information to the Security Council and shall assist the Security Council upon its request.

The Council, conscious of the emphasis placed by the Secretary-General on the issue of post-conflict peace-building, in particular in the context of the reform of the United Nations, encourages him to explore the possibility of establishing post-conflict peace-building structures as part of efforts by the United Nations system to achieve a lasting peaceful solution to conflicts, including in order to ensure a smooth transition from peacekeeping to peace-building and lasting peace.

The Council recognizes the value of including, as appropriate, peace-building elements in the mandates of peacekeeping operations. It agrees with the Secretary-General that relevant post-conflict peace-building elements should be explicitly and clearly identified and could be integrated into the mandates of peacekeeping operations. It notes that peacekeeping operations may include military, police, humanitarian and other civilian components. It requests the Secretary-General to make recommendations to the Council to this effect whenever appropriate.

The Council also requests the Secretary-General to make recommendations to the appropriate United Nations bodies concerning the transitional period to the post-conflict peace-building phase when recommending the final drawdown of a peacekeeping operation.

The Council recognizes the need for close cooperation and dialogue between the bodies of the United Nations system, in particular those directly concerned in the field of post-conflict peace-building, in accordance with their respective responsibilities, and expresses its willingness to consider ways to improve such cooperation. It also emphasizes the need to improve the exchange of information between all relevant actors in the field of post-conflict peace-building, including United Nations agencies and bodies, international financial institutions, regional and subregional organizations, troop contributors and the donor community. In this context, it notes with appreciation the Secretary-General's plans for strategic frameworks to ensure increased coherence and effectiveness in the entire range of United Nations activities in States in and recovering from crisis.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Information and telecommunications in the context of international security

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 79], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First (Disarmament and International Security) Committee [A/53/576], adopted resolution 53/70 without vote [agenda item 63].

Developments in the field of information and telecommunications in the context of international security

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions on the role of science and technology in the context of international security, in which, inter alia, it recognized that scientific and technological developments could have both civilian and military applications and that progress in science and technology for civilian applications needed to be maintained and encouraged,

Noting that considerable progress has been achieved in developing and applying the latest information technologies and means of telecommunication,

Affirming that it sees in this process the broadest positive opportunities for the further development of civilization, the expansion of opportunities for cooperation for the common good of all States, the enhancement of the creative potential of mankind, and additional improvements in the circulation of information in the global community,

Recalling in this connection the approaches and principles outlined at the Information Society and Development Conference, held at Midrand, South Africa, from 13 to 15 May 1996,

Taking note of the results of the Ministerial Conference on Terrorism, held in Paris on 30 July 1996, and of the recommendations it made,

Noting that the dissemination and use of information technologies and means affect the interests of the entire international community and that optimum effectiveness is enhanced by broad international cooperation,

Expressing concern that these technologies and means can potentially be used for purposes that are inconsistent with the objectives of maintaining international stability and security and may adversely affect the security of States,

Considering that it is necessary to prevent the misuse or exploitation of information resources or technologies for criminal or terrorist purposes,

1. Calls upon Member States to promote at multilateral levels the consideration of existing and potential threats in the field of information security;

2. Invites all Member States to inform the Secretary-General of their views and assessments on the following questions:

(a) General appreciation of the issues of information security;

(b) Definition of basic notions related to information security, including unauthorized interference with or misuse of information and telecommunications systems and information resources;

(c) Advisability of developing international principles that would enhance the security of global information and telecommunications systems and help to combat information terrorism and criminality;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session an item entitled "Developments in the field of information and telecommunications in the context of international security".

Peacekeeping operations

Fiftieth anniversary of UN peacekeeping

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/53/127], recognizing that 1998 marked the fiftieth anniversary of UN peacekeeping, reiterated its recommendation, endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 52/69 [YUN 1997, p. 43], that part of the first day of the fifty-third session of the Assembly be dedicated to a commemorative meeting to pay tribute to all who had served in peacekeeping operations, especially those who had lost their lives during the past 50 years. The Special Committee welcomed the intention of its Chairman to convey to the Assembly President a draft declaration on the matter for its adoption.

Commemorative activities. In March [A/AC.121/42 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General reported that, to mark the commemoration of 50 years of peacekeeping, a programme of activities had been developed in cooperation with the Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) and the Department of Public Information. That involved activities around certain specific dates marking historic events in UN peacekeeping, including the special commemorative session of the General Assembly, the awarding of the Dag Hammarskjöld Peacekeeping Medal, the release of special commemorative stamps and other public and media events. The Secretariat had also been in contact with Member States that had expressed an interest in organizing special events throughout the year.

Commemorative meeting of General Assembly

On 6 October, the General Assembly held a commemorative meeting to mark the fiftieth anniversary of UN peacekeeping.

In his address to the Assembly, the Secretary-General said that since 1948 there had been 49 UN peacekeeping operations, 36 of which had been created since 1988, the year in which UN peacekeeping was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize. Over 750,000 military and civilian police personnel, and thousands of other civilians, from 118 countries had served in those operations and 14,000 were serving that very day. No figures, he said, could do justice to the ultimate sacrifice that more than 1,500 peacekeepers had made over the half century. The evolution of UN peacekeeping—from patrolling clearly marked buffer zones and ceasefire lines to the far more complex, multidimensional operations of the 1990s—had been neither smooth nor simple. Often the expectations placed on peacekeepers had outstripped the resources given to them and the demands made of them had cruelly ignored the realities on the ground. The Secretary-General said that the United Nations could not claim that peacekeeping was the answer to every conflict; still less that it had prevented genocide. What it could and did proudly claim was that, in the first half century of their existence, United Nations Blue Helmets had saved tens of thousands of lives. In recent times, the pendulum might appear to have swung away from the support of UN peacekeeping. However, the Secretary-General stated he had no doubt that history would see it as one of the Organization's most important and lasting contributions to international peace and security.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 October [meeting 29], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/2 [draft: A/53/L.5] without vote [agenda item 85].

Fiftieth anniversary of United Nations peacekeeping

The General Assembly

Adopts the Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of United Nations Peacekeeping, as set forth in the annex to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of United Nations Peacekeeping

We, the States Members of the United Nations, have gathered at this commemorative meeting of the fifty-third session of the General Assembly to mark the fiftieth anniversary of United Nations peacekeeping. It has been fifty years since the establishment of the first United Nations observer mission, the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization. We pay tribute to the hundreds of thousands of men and women who have, in the past fifty years, served under the United Nations flag in more than forty peacekeeping operations around the world, and we honour the memory of more than 1,500 United Nations peacekeepers who have laid down their lives in the cause of peace.

We reiterate our support for all efforts effectively to promote the safety and security of United Nations peacekeeping personnel. We recall with pride the awarding of the 1988 Nobel Peace Prize to the peacekeeping forces of the United Nations, and we welcome the establishment by the Security Council of the Dag Hammarskjöld Medal as a tribute to the sacrifice of those who have lost their lives while serving in peacekeeping operations under the operational control and authority of the United Nations. We, the Member States of the United Nations, affirm our commitment and willingness to provide full support to United Nations peacekeepers to ensure that they are able successfully to fulfil the tasks entrusted to them.

General aspects

In his August 1998 report on the work of the Organization [A/53/1], the Secretary-General stated that over the past year the international community had begun to overcome its reluctance to make use of the United Nations peacekeeping capacity. UN peacekeeping clearly offered certain unique advantages not to be found elsewhere, including the universality of the Organization's mandate and the breadth of its experience. If the Security Council authorized new peacekeeping operations whenever, and for as long as, they might be needed, that would not only strengthen the United Nations conflict-prevention efforts, but would also aid its wider peacemaking and post-conflict peace-building efforts. UN peacekeeping continued to be adapted to changing needs, and cooperation with regional organizations had become an important aspect. Such cooperation could bring together the motivation and knowledge of local actors with the legitimacy, expertise and resources of the Organization.

Rapid deployment and standby arrangements

In 1998, the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/53/127] noted the Secretary-General's 1997 progress report [YUN 1997, p. 40] on the standby arrangements system and the lack of certain key specialized resources in those arrangements. It encouraged Member States to make available resources such as airlift and sealift services, logistical support, communications, civilian police, medical staff and engineers. The Special Committee recommended that the system should be further developed to enhance UN rapid deployment capabilities, including broadening the base of the Member States making resources available. The Committee took note of the Secretariat's affirmation that the system was based on contributions from Member States and that there was no UN peacekeeping brigade.

The Special Committee reiterated its belief that the United Nations should be able rapidly to deploy a peacekeeping operation upon the adoption by the Security Council of an authorizing mandate. It commended the Secretariat in its efforts to address the issue and hoped that reform of DPKO would contribute to more rapid deployment of peacekeeping operations. The Special Committee urged the Secretariat to clarify the headquarters element's organizational relationship within DPKO, particularly the differences in its functional responsibilities from those of the Mission Planning Service, and further to develop the concept for its employment during the initial phase of a new peacekeeping operation.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in March [S/1999/361], reported on the status of progress in standby arrangements for peacekeeping. As of 30 March, 81 Member States, 14 more than in 1997, had made pledges to provide standby resources totalling some 104,000 personnel, up from 88,000 the year before. Sixty-one of those States had provided information on the specific capabilities they were prepared to offer. Eight States (Finland, Germany, Ireland, Kyrgyzstan, Lithuania, Nigeria, Netherlands, Romania) had formalized their standby contributions through a Memorandum of Understanding, bringing the total number to 21. Some 43 per cent of the confirmed standby resources had a deployment time of 30 days or less, 16 per cent had a response time of between 30 and 60 days, 5 per cent had a response time of 60 to 90 days and the remaining 36 per cent more than 90 days or had not stated a response time. The Secretary-General encouraged the last group to determine a realistic response time for their resources. To streamline the process for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment (see below), the Secretary-General suggested that Member States exchange, in advance, the data required to complete the Memorandum of Understanding, which could be used in the early stages of the support planning process and adjusted during finalization of the Memorandum. Implementation of the new planning data sheet had resulted in a simplification of the Memorandum of Understanding on standby arrangements. To accelerate the process of planning and deployment of units, the Secretary-General suggested that the database should be expanded by incorporating additional detailed information from the planning data sheet, making it easier for units to arrive in mission areas fully equipped and with sufficient provisions to sustain themselves for up to 60 days. The information contained in the planning data sheet might also help in addressing the problem of units lacking the full range of equipment for participation in a peacekeeping operation.

The Secretary-General observed that the system had begun to demonstrate its usefulness as a tool in shortening the time required for the finalization of the Memorandum of Understanding for the provision of personnel, equipment and services in support of peacekeeping operations through the exchange of information provided in the planning data sheet. The Secretariat continued to explore arrangements for the establishment of Rapidly Deployable Mission Headquarters. The Secretary-General invited Member States to continue to join the system regardless of the size of their contribution and encouraged them to provide more civilian police personnel and support capacities, mostly in the areas of strategic sealift/airlift, communications, multi-role logistics, health services, engineering, mine clearance, road transport and transport utility aircraft.

In his report [A/AC.121/42 & Corr.1] on implementation of the recommendations of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, the Secretary-General stated that the Medical Support Unit had undertaken a project to classify medical units contributed to UN standby arrangements. The objective was to ensure that appropriate medical standards were reached and to broaden the geographical distribution of Member States contributing medical units.

Consultations with troop contributors

At its 1998 session [A/53/127], the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations reaffirmed the continuing need for consultation between troop contributors and the Security Council. It underlined the importance of Council members, contributors and the Secretariat making full use of the arrangements for consultation established in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 18] and encouraged active participation in such meetings. It also encouraged the Council to ensure implementation of those arrangements and the Secretary-General to ensure that his reports were available in a timely fashion prior to any consultations with troop contributors. The Special Committee recognized that, in exceptional circumstances, such meetings could be held at the request of any troop-contributing country and stressed the need, in the case of upcoming missions or the expansion of missions, to invite prospective troop contributors to consultations at the earliest possible stage, in order to provide them with access to the information required and to enable them to make an informed decision on participation. The Committee noted that the arrangements for consultations with troop contributors were not exhaustive and did not preclude a variety of forms of consultation, including between the Security Council President or its members and contributors, countries especially affected and other countries from the region concerned.

Civilian police

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/53/127] took note of the increasing participation of civilian police in UN peacekeeping operations and their key role in monitoring and advising local police forces and in institution-building through training in professional policing methods. The Committee also took note of the 1997 statement by the Security Council President [YUN 1997, p. 42] on civilian police and of the seminar (New York, 20-21 March) convened by DPKO on the role of police in peacekeeping, and requested a report on the deliberations at that seminar.

The Special Committee stated that, in conducting a peacekeeping operation, care should be taken to ensure that police and military tasks were clearly differentiated. It emphasized the need for full integration of civilian police elements in the planning phase of new peacekeeping operations and for clear guidelines for their activities in peacekeeping. It requested the Secretariat to compile for its consideration draft guidelines on general principles regarding the role of civilian police. In that regard, the Committee was informed of Secretariat plans to develop a detailed concept of operations for civilian police components of peacekeeping operations. The Committee expressed its intention to examine the subject before the end of 1999.

The Special Committee stressed that Member States should ensure deployment of the highest quality personnel and commended the Civilian Police Unit in DPKO for the assistance provided to contributing States through the selection assistance teams. It emphasized that the Training Unit's activities should take into account the increased requirements of civilian police in peacekeeping operations and called for enhanced cooperation between Member States in training civilian police personnel for UN peacekeeping operations. The Special Committee recognized the need to strengthen the Civilian Police Unit and to have a broad geographical base for selecting civilian police commissioners in peacekeeping operations. The appointment of other senior police personnel should take into account the size of police contributions.

The Committee reaffirmed that the code of conduct for UN peacekeepers should also apply to UN civilian police personnel and requested the Secretariat to examine the extent to which modification of the code might be required. It suggested that its findings be reflected in the Secretary-General's next progress report.

Safety and security

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/53/127] expressed grave concern at the continued attacks and acts of violence against UN and associated personnel and again urged all Member States that had not done so to consider becoming parties to the 1994 Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 49/59 [YUN 1994, p. 1289], in order to bring about its entry into force as soon as possible. It reaffirmed that safety and security constituted integral elements of the planning and conduct of peacekeeping operations, and recognized that elaboration of a comprehensive security plan at the commencement of a peacekeeping operation was essential. It commended the Secretariat for developing practical options for minimizing security risks faced by those personnel, particularly when unarmed, and encouraged it to continue work in that area as a matter of priority.

On 22 May [S/PRST/1998/14], the Security Council, in a statement of its President, strongly condemned the armed attack in Angola on 19 May against UN personnel (see next chapter). On 25 November [S/PRST/1998/34], the Council condemned the deliberate acts of violence against UN personnel in Georgia and approved the Secretary-General's proposal to provide internal security to the United Nations Observer Mission there (see PART ONE, Chapter V).

Status-of-forces agreements

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/53/127] drew attention to the important contribution that status-of-forces agreements made to the effectiveness of peacekeeping operations. It reiterated the need for the Secretary-General to fulfil the 1996 request of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) [YUN 1996, p. 36] to provide a compendium of instances in which the Organization was due restitution as a result of non-compliance with status-of-forces or other agreements. It also reiterated its request that the Secretary-General withhold claims submitted by the Member States concerned until the matter of expenditures was resolved. The Special Committee welcomed the Secretariat's intention to update the 1990 model status-of-forces agreement [YUN 1990, p. 28] and requested that it be contained in the next progress report by the Secretary-General.

Training

In his March report [A/AC.121/42 & Corr.1] on implementation of the recommendations of the Special Committee, the Secretary-General stated that the United Nations training assistance team (UNTAT) provided expertise to Member States in conducting multinational, multidimensional exercises. Three UNTAT training seminars were conducted over the past 12 months in Ghana (June 1997), Singapore (January 1998) and Zambia (February 1998). The seminars would enhance the capacity of participating Member States and regions to support future peacekeeping training.

With the added emphasis on the development of an African capacity for peacekeeping, the Training Unit established a focal point for African peacekeeping training to assist in the development of training, coordinate the training activities among donor and African nations and maintain a database of training activities in Africa that could be shared by the United Nations, Member States and OAU. The Training Unit also aimed to sponsor a logistics course for African nations that would focus on developing a better understanding of UN logistics in support of African peacekeeping forces. "Train the trainers" courses would continue and additional training support material, including selection and training standards for civilian police and military observers, staff college modules and support materials, was to be printed in the near future.

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, at its 1998 session [A/53/127], noted the efforts of Member States to enhance the readiness of their contingents by coordinating joint training. It emphasized that the United Nations had a role to play in developing and maintaining training standards and rosters of peacekeeping trainers, in advising on and participating in training activities and simulations, in producing training resource materials and in maintaining a training course database. The Committee emphasized that full use should be made of those training facilities. It welcomed the decision of the DPKO Training Unit to establish a focal point for African peacekeeping training within the Unit. The Committee stressed the importance of training materials being made available in all the official languages and, where practicable, in other languages used by peacekeeping personnel. It stressed the importance of participants in peacekeeping operations being given specific training, including gender-sensitive training, in managing contacts with the local populations during peacekeeping operations, and encouraged the Secretariat and Member States to include and develop that aspect in their efforts to promote training norms for UN peacekeeping personnel.

In June, the Security Council, in a statement of its President [S/PRST/1998/18], recognized the importance of special training of personnel involved in peacemaking, peacekeeping and peace-building activities on the needs, interests and rights of children, as well as on their treatment and protection (see PART THREE, Chapter XI).

Comprehensive review of peacekeeping

Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations

As requested by General Assembly resolution 52/69 [YUN 1997, p. 43], the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations continued its comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects. The Committee, which held six meetings between 30 March and 2 April, had before it the report [A/AC.121/42 & Corr.1] of the Secretary-General on the implementation of its recommendations. The deliberations of the Committee were summarized in a May report [A/53/127].

The Special Committee stressed that peacekeeping operations should strictly observe the principles and purposes of the United Nations Charter and emphasized that respect for the principles of sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of States, as well as non-intervention, were crucial to efforts, including peacekeeping operations, to promote international peace and security. Respect for the basic principles of peacekeeping, such as the consent of the parties, impartiality and the non-use of force except in self-defence, was essential to its success. The Committee believed that peacekeeping operations should not be used as a substitute for addressing the root causes of conflict, which should be addressed in a coherent, well-planned, coordinated and comprehensive manner with political, social and developmental instruments. Consideration should be given to ways in which those efforts could continue without interruption after the departure of a peacekeeping operation to ensure a smooth transition to lasting peace and security.

The Special Committee stressed the importance of providing peacekeeping operations with clearly defined mandates, objectives and command structures, and secure financing. It also stressed the need to ensure, in the formulation and implementation of mandates, congruity between mandates, resources and objectives. Changes in mandates should be accompanied by commensurate changes in the resources available to the peacekeeping operation to carry out its new mandate and should be based on a thorough and timely reassessment for the Security Council, including military advice, of the implications on the ground for components and after full discussion between contributing countries and the Council.

The Special Committee noted the development by the Secretariat of model rules of engagement, which would be modified to meet the requirements of specific peacekeeping operations. It encouraged the Secretariat to formulate uniform rules of engagement for each specific peacekeeping operation, in consultation with prospective troop contributors. It requested a further update on rules of engagement at its 1999 session. It stressed the need to ensure unity of command of UN peacekeeping operations, and recalled that the overall political direction and control of UN-mandated peacekeeping operations devolved upon the Council.

The Special Committee called on the Secretary-General to undertake a more fundamental review of the proposed organizational structure and staffing of DPKO, taking into account lessons learned and the need to develop appropriate structures at Headquarters for periods of both low and high intensity in UN peacekeeping. The review should include the identification of functions and positions necessary, both civilian and military, for the efficient management of peacekeeping operations during those periods.

DPKO should coordinate its efforts, from the start of mission planning, with other departments within the Secretariat as well as with specialized agencies and other relevant actors. The Committee believed that the appointment of a Special Representative of the Secretary-General in areas where peacekeeping operations were mandated contributed to the unity of UN efforts in the field. The Committee welcomed the Secretary-General's initiatives to give Special Representatives authority over resident representatives and humanitarian coordinators, as well as over peacekeeping operations, and encouraged him to provide the Special Representative with sufficient funds to ensure the efficiency and effectiveness of the peacekeeping operation. It reaffirmed that all opportunities for participation in all phases of peacekeeping operations should be expeditiously brought to the attention of Member States that had indicated a willingness to contribute to UN peacekeeping operations through, among other things, the standby arrangements system. The Special Committee encouraged the Security Council and the Secretariat to further their efforts to improve coordination of military and civilian components, both in the field and in the Secretariat.

Concerning the development of a coherent and comprehensive concept for logistical support of peacekeeping operations, the Special Committee expressed concern that little progress had been made since its last report on the matter. It reiterated that such a concept would provide a coherent framework within which other logistics initiatives would be developed, which in turn would ensure the efficient utilization of resources. In that regard, the Committee noted the Secretariat's intention to include a logistics strategy in a consolidated Field Administration and Operational Support Manual, and requested that an update on the manual's development be included in the next progress report.

In another logistics-related matter, the Committee noted the recommendations of the Phase IV Working Group on Reimbursement of Contingent-owned Equipment (see below) and underlined the importance of their timely implementation. It also encouraged the Secretariat to continue training personnel, including field mission personnel, in the new procedures. The Special Committee stressed that the norms of international humanitarian law should be strictly observed by all personnel associated with UN-mandated peacekeeping operations and urged the Secretary-General to finalize guidelines for their adherence. It called for early consideration of UN liability and procedures for settlement of claims for any injury, damage or violation by personnel participating in UN peacekeeping operations (see below, under "Third-party claims").

The Special Committee reaffirmed the importance of an effective public information capacity as an integral part of peacekeeping operations, planned and deployed as early as possible. It welcomed the establishment of the trust fund to support public information and related efforts in UN peacekeeping operations and encouraged Member States to contribute to it.

The Special Committee emphasized the need to differentiate between peacekeeping operations and humanitarian assistance. It noted the activities undertaken by the Lessons Learned Unit and of the intention of the Secretary-General to integrate the Unit with the Policy and Analysis Unit to facilitate the incorporation of lessons learned into analysis and policy formulation. The Special Committee encouraged the Lessons Learned Unit to continue to benefit from the experience of troop-contributing countries and to use in its work conclusions resulting from their national experiences. It urged the Secretary-General to ensure the resources required for the continuation and full dissemination of the Unit's work.

The Committee also discussed issues related to the observance of the fiftieth anniversary of UN peacekeeping operations (see above), demining, cooperation with regional arrangements and proposals for enhancing its own effectiveness (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December [meeting 78], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee [A/53/599], adopted resolution 53/58 without vote [agenda item 85].

Comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2006(XIX) of 18 February 1965 and all other relevant resolutions,

Recalling in particular its resolutions 52/69 of 10 December 1997 and 53/2 of 6 October 1998,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization,

Affirming, on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of United Nations peacekeeping operations, that the efforts of the United Nations in the peaceful settlement of disputes, including through its peacekeeping operations, are indispensable,

Convinced of the need for the United Nations to continue to improve its capabilities in the field of peacekeeping and to enhance the effective and efficient deployment of its peacekeeping operations,

Considering the contribution that all States Members of the Organization make to peacekeeping,

Taking note of the widespread interest in contributing to the work of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations expressed by many Member States, in particular troop-contributing countries,

Bearing in mind the continuous necessity of preserving the efficiency and strengthening the effectiveness of the work of the Special Committee,

1. Welcomes the report of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations;

2. Endorses the proposals, recommendations and conclusions of the Special Committee, contained in paragraphs 44 to 115 of its report;

3. Urges Member States, the Secretariat and relevant organs of the United Nations to take all necessary steps to implement the proposals, recommendations and conclusions of the Special Committee;

4. Reiterates that those Member States that become personnel contributors to United Nations peacekeeping operations in years to come or that participate in the future in the Special Committee for three consecutive years as observers shall, upon request in writing to the Chairman of the Special Committee, become members at the following session of the Special Committee;

5. Decides that the Special Committee, in accordance with its mandate, shall continue its efforts for a comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects and shall review the implementation of its previous proposals and consider any new proposals so as to enhance the ca-capacity of the United Nations to fulfil its responsibilities in this field;

6. Requests the Special Committee to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects".

Operations in 1998

On 1 January 1998, 15 UN peacekeeping operations were in place—6 in Europe, 2 in Africa, 1 in the Americas, 3 in Asia and 3 in the Middle East. During the year, two operations were terminated and three were launched. The total number of UN peacekeeping operations in 1998 was 18; the number in place at the end of the year was 16.

Europe

In Europe, the mandate of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES) ended on 15 January 1998. Established in 1996 to assist in the implementation of the 1995 Basic Agreement for the region [YUN 1995, p. 587], UNTAES was replaced as of 16 January by the United Nations Civilian Police Support Group (UNPSG), whose mandate was to continue monitoring the Croatian police in the Danube region, particularly with respect to the return of displaced persons, for a single nine-month period. A separate mission, the United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka (UNMOP), continued to monitor the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula. The Security Council extended the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH), which included the International Police Task Force (IPTF), for an additional period terminating on 21 June 1999 and increased the strength of the civilian police by 30 to 2,057. The troop strength of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP) in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia was increased to 1,050 and its mandate extended until 28 February 1999. Elsewhere in Europe, the Council extended the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG) until 31 January 1999. In the Mediterranean, the mandate of the 34-year-old United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) was extended to 30 June 1999.

Africa

In Africa, two new peacekeeping operations became active in 1998. In March, the Security Council established the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic (MINURCA) as of 15 April to, among other things, assist in maintaining and enhancing security and stability, including freedom of movement, in Bangui and the immediate vicinity of the city. In October, the Council extended the Mission's mandate to include support for the conduct of elections and decided to extend the Mission until 28 February 1999 and to terminate it as of that date. In July, the Council established the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone (UNOMSIL) until 13 January 1999 to, among other things, monitor the military and security situation in the country. The United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) continued to monitor the ceasefire and otherwise conduct peacekeeping tasks. In January, the Council authorized the deployment of a MINURSO engineering unit for demining activities. In March, the Council decided to downsize the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola (MONUA) by July. However, due to the deterioration of security conditions, the Council extended MONUA's mandate until 26 February 1999 and authorized the Secretary-General to adjust the deployment of the force as needed. (See next chapter.)

Americas

In the Americas, the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti (MIPONUH) continued its task of helping to professionalize the Haitian police force. In November, the Security Council extended MIPONUH's mandate until 30 November 1999. (See PART ONE, Chapter III.)

Asia

In Asia, the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM) pursued its task of monitoring the demilitarized zone along the border between the two countries. In November, the Security Council extended the mandate of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan (UNMOT) until 15 May 1999. Elsewhere in Asia, the United Nations Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan (UNMOGIP), established in 1949, remained in place to monitor the ceasefire in Jammu and Kashmir. (See PART ONE, Chapter IV.)

Middle East

Three long-standing operations continued in the Middle East—the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO), the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) (see PART ONE, Chapter VI).

Other matters

In other related action during the year, the Security Council terminated its authorization to the Inter-African Mission to Monitor the Implementation of the Bangui Agreements (MISAB) in the Central African Republic as of 15 April, giving way to the newly established MINURCA (see above). The Council supported the mission and effort of OAU to achieve a peaceful settlement of the dispute between Ethiopia and Eritrea and established a trust fund to provide technical support to the parties in the eventual demarcation of a common border between them. It approved the implementation by the Military Observer Group (ECOMOG) of the Economic Community of West African States to restore peace and security throughout Guinea-Bissau. It requested the Secretary-General to consider the composition and financial modalities of a UN political office in Bougainville, Papua New Guinea.

The United Nations continued to maintain the United Nations Special Commission (UNSCOM), which monitored Iraq's compliance with relevant Security Council resolutions. However, on 31 October, Iraq decided to cease cooperation with UNSCOM. The Council endorsed steps to establish effective international monitoring of the situation in Kosovo, Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), and endorsed and supported the establishment of an air verification mission over Kosovo, complementing the OSCE Verification Mission.

The United Nations continued in 1998 to support a number of human rights missions. The General Assembly, on 7 December, renewed the mandate of the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala (MINUGUA) to 31 December 1999 and, on 8 December, it renewed the mandate of the UN component of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti (MICIVIH), conducted jointly with the Organization of American States, until 31 December 1999. It continued to support the United Nations Peace-building Office in Liberia, established in 1997.

In December, the Assembly endorsed the proposal of the Secretary-General to establish a separate civil affairs unit by adding a new monitoring function to the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan, with the primary objective of deterring grave violations of human rights. The United Nations followed developments in Cambodia through the Secretary-General's Special Representative for human rights.

In the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the United Nations Command continued to implement the maintenance of the 1953 Armistice Agreement.

Roster of 1998 operations

UNTSO

United Nations Truce Supervision Organization

Established: June 1948.

Mandate: To assist in supervising the observance of the truce in Palestine.

Strength as at November 1998: 157 military observers.

UNMOGIP

United Nations Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan

Established: January 1949.

Mandate: To supervise the ceasefire between India and Pakistan in Jammu and Kashmir.

Strength as at November 1998: 45 military observers.

UNFICYP

United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus

Established: March 1964.

Mandate: To prevent the recurrence of fighting between the two Cypriot communities.

Strength as at November 1998: 1,238 troops, 35 civilian police.

UNDOF

United Nations Disengagement Observer Force

Established: June 1974.

Mandate: To supervise the ceasefire between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic and the disengagement of Israeli and Syrian forces in the Golan Heights.

Strength as at November 1998: 1,053 troops.

UNIFIL

United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon

Established: March 1978.

Mandate: To confirm the withdrawal of Israeli forces from southern Lebanon, restore peace and security, and assist the Lebanese Government in ensuring the return of its effective authority in the area.

Strength as at November 1998: 4,528 troops.

UNIKOM

United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission

Established: April 1991.

Mandate: To monitor the demilitarized zone along the border between Iraq and Kuwait.

Strength as at November 1998: 905 troops, 194 military observers.

MINURSO

United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara

Established: April 1991.

Mandate: To monitor and verify the implementation of a settlement plan for Western Sahara and assist in the holding of a referendum in the Territory.

Strength as at November 1998: 183 troops, 202 military observers, 26 civilian police.

UNOMIG

United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia

Established: August 1993.

Mandate: To verify compliance with a ceasefire agreement between the parties to the conflict in Georgia and investigate ceasefire violations; expanded in 1994 to include monitoring the implementation of an agreement on a ceasefire and separation of forces and observing the operation of a multinational peacekeeping force.

Strength as at November 1998: 100 military observers.

UNMOT

United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan

Established: December 1994.

Mandate: To assist in monitoring a temporary ceasefire agreement between the parties to the conflict in Tajikistan.

Strength as at November 1998: 31 military observers, 2 civilian police.

UNPREDEP

United Nations Preventive Deployment Force

Established: March 1995.

Mandate: To monitor border areas in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia.

Strength as at November 1998: 846 troops, 35 military observers, 25 civilian police.

UNMIBH

United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (including the International Police Task Force (IPTF))

Established: December 1995.

Mandate: To monitor and facilitate law enforcement activities in Bosnia and Herzegovina, train and assist law enforcement personnel in carrying out their responsibilities, advise government authorities on the organization of civilian law enforcement agencies, and assess threats to public order and the agencies' capability to deal with such threats.

Strength as at November 1998: 3 troops, 1,982 civilian police.

UNTAES

United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium

Established: January 1996.

Terminated: January 1998.

Mandate: To supervise and facilitate the demilitarization of the region; monitor the return of refugees and displaced persons; establish and train a temporary police force; monitor the treatment of offenders and the prison system; organize elections for local government bodies; monitor and facilitate the free movement of persons across existing borders; restore the normal functioning of public services; monitor the parties' commitment to respect human rights; cooperate with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia; and promote the realization of the parties' commitment to the overall maintenance of peace and security.

Strength as at January 1998: 726 troops, 99 military observers, 388 civilian police.

UNMOP

United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka

Established: January 1996.

Mandate: To monitor the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula.

Strength as at November 1998: 26 military observers.

MONUA

United Nations Observer Mission in Angola

Established: July 1997.

Mandate: To assist the Angolan parties in consolidating peace and national reconciliation, enhancing confidence-building and creating an environment conducive to long-term stability, democratic development and rehabilitation of the country.

Strength as at November 1998: 590 troops, 90 military observers, 337 civilian police.

MIPONUH

United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti

Established: November 1997.

Mandate: To continue to assist the Government of Haiti by supporting and contributing to the professionalization of the Haitian National Police, including monitoring Haitian National Police field performance.

Strength as at November 1998: 284 civilian police.

UNPSG

United Nations Civilian Police Support Group

Established: January 1998

Terminated: October 1998

Mandate: To continue to monitor the performance of the Croatian police in the Danube region.

Authorized strength: 180 civilian police monitors.

MINURCA

United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic

Established: March 1998.

Mandate: To assist in maintaining and enhancing security and stability in Bangui and the immediate vicinity of the city; to supervise, control storage and monitor the final disposition of all weapons retrieved in the course of the disarmament exercise; to assist in a short-term police trainers programme and in other capacity-building efforts of the national police, and to provide advice on the restructuring of the national police and special police forces; and to provide support for the conduct of the legislative elections schedule for August/September 1998.

Strength as at November 1998: 1,347 troops, 22 civilian police.

UNOMSIL

United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone

Established: July 1998.

Mandate: To monitor the military and security situation in the country and the disarmament and demobilization of former combatants; to assist in monitoring respect for international humanitarian law, including at disarmament and demobilization sites; and to monitor the voluntary disarmament and demobilization of members of the Civil Defence Forces.

Strength as at November 1998: 15 troops, 41 military observers, 5 civilian police.

Financial and administrative aspects of peacekeeping operations

General aspects

Expenditures for peacekeeping activities amounted to $879.3 million for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, compared to $1,166.4 million during the previous 12-month period.

The financial situation of UN peacekeeping operations from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 was affected by serious cash shortages, necessitating borrowing from and among peacekeeping funds, while substantial amounts of obligations for reimbursement to Member States for troop cost and contingent-owned equipment remained unpaid.

As at 30 June 1998, the total unpaid assessed contributions for peacekeeping operations amounted to $1,739.9 million, compared with $2,180.7 million in 1997. Available cash for all operations totalled $647.6 million, while total obligations were almost three times as high, at $1,783.2 million.

During the year, the General Assembly considered various aspects of peacekeeping financing. In June, it decided to maintain for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 the funding mechanism for the support account, as provisionally approved in resolution 50/221 B [YUN 1996, p. 31]. It also decided that gratis personnel should not be considered staff members of the United Nations and requested the Secretary-General to complete, as a matter of priority, the process of recruitment of staff to replace type II gratis personnel by the end of February 1999. Also in June, the Assembly set forth rules governing compensation of third-party claims against the Organization for personal injury, illness or death, or for loss or damage to personal property.

Notes of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 49/233 A [YUN 1994, p. 1338], the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee a March note [A/C.5/52/44 & Corr.1] updating the budgetary information on requirements for all peacekeeping operations from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 and reflecting the appropriations provided to date by the Assembly for those operations for that period, inclusive of support account requirements. Initial estimated budgetary requirements amounted to $875,567,400, while initial appropriations approved by the Assembly amounted to $1,002.2 million. The updated level of requirements of $958 million reflected a reduction of $44.2 million.

In May [A/C.5/52/52], the Secretary-General submitted proposed budgetary requirements for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999. The estimates totalled $825,957,500, including $227,736,000 for military personnel costs and $322,760,400 for civilian personnel costs.

On 26 June, the Assembly, by decision 52/488, took note of the two notes by the Secretary-General.

In decision 53/458 of 18 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the sub-item on the financing of the United Nations peacekeeping operations at its resumed fifty-third session in 1999.

Review exercise

In its May report [A/53/127], the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations stressed that all Member States should pay their assessed contributions in full, on time and without conditions, and reaffirmed the obligation of Member States under Article 17 of the Charter to bear the expenses of the Organization as apportioned by the General Assembly, bearing in mind the special responsibility of States permanent members of the Security Council.

The Special Committee welcomed the adoption by the Assembly in section II of resolution 51/218 E [YUN 1997, p. 60] of a system of self-insurance establishing uniform and standardized rates for payment of awards in cases of death or disability sustained by troops in the service of UN operations. The Committee noted the progress made in clearing claims during the past year and encouraged the Secretariat to continue to expedite the processing of all claims submitted under the previous arrangements.

The Special Committee again encouraged the Secretary-General to address as a matter of priority the operational and financial liquidation of completed operations, particularly as regards finding satisfactory arrangements with contributing Member States. It expressed its concern at the continued delays in the reimbursement of troop costs and contingent-owned equipment leases. The Special Committee urged the Secretariat to address the processing of the backlog of contingent-owned equipment claims and in particular urgently to address the processing of claims for contingent-owned equipment write-offs that were beyond the authority of the local property survey boards.

In an April report [A/52/879], the Secretary-General, pursuant to Assembly resolution 48/216 B [YUN 1993, p. 1207], reported on measures taken to implement the recommendations of the Board of Auditors made in its report [A/52/5, vol. II] on the accounts of UN peacekeeping operations for the 18-month period ended 30 June 1997.

Apportionment of costs

In 1998, the General Assembly again considered the question of the placement of Member States into groups for the apportionment of peacekeeping expenses. First specified in resolution 3101 (XXVIII) [YUN 1973, p. 222], the groups were subsequently adjusted several times, most recently in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 314] and 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 27]. The original four groups were: (A) permanent members of the Security Council; (B) specifically named economically developed Member States not permanent members of the Council; (C) economically less developed Member States; and (D) economically less developed Member States that were specifically named.

Report of Secretary-General. In a February report [A/C.5/52/38], the Secretary-General outlined changes bearing on the calculation of peacekeeping assessments as they related to Belarus and Portugal. He said that in 1998 the new scale of assessments for the regular budget had resulted in a significant increase for Portugal (from 0.28 per cent in 1997 to 0.368 per cent in 1998) and a significant reduction for Belarus (from 0.28 per cent to 0.164 per cent). The dollar amount of the increase of Portugal's peacekeeping assessments exceeded that needed to bring the peacekeeping assessment rate for Belarus fully into line with the Member States in group C (20 per cent of the regular budget assessment rate), and exceeded the full amount of Belarus' contribution. It was the Secretariat's view that it was the intent of the Assembly to reduce the assessments of Belarus and Ukraine to their levels as members of group C, only as such reductions were offset by increases in the assessments of Portugal and Greece, and that it was not the intention of the Assembly that assessments of Belarus and Ukraine be below those applicable to them as members of group C. On that basis, the peacekeeping assessments for Belarus in 1998 were calculated at the full rate normal for group C, with the balance of Portugal's increase being reflected in the overall share of group A. The Secretary-General intended to apply the same approach to Greece and Ukraine in future should the same situation arise.

On 31 March, the General Assembly, by decision 52/473, took note of the Secretary-General's February report. By decision 53/458 of 18 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the sub-item "Relocation of Ukraine to the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (c) of General Assembly resolution 43/232" at its resumed fifty-third session in 1999.

Slovakia

On 31 March [meeting 82], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/453/Add.2], adopted resolution 52/230 without vote [agenda item 142 (a)].

Administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of the United Nations peacekeeping operations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, 3101 (XXVIII) of 11 December 1973, 43/232 of 1 March 1989, 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995 and 51/218 A and B of 18 December 1996 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, concerning the composition of groups for the apportionment of peacekeeping appropriations, Recalling also its resolution 51/218 C of 18 December 1996 concerning the placement of Slovakia in a group for the apportionment of peacekeeping appropriations for the period ending 31 December 1996,

1. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, in respect of the apportionment of peacekeeping expenses, that, from 1 April 1998, Slovakia shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (c) of resolution 43/232 and that its contributions to the financing of peacekeeping operations shall be calculated in accordance with the scale of assessments approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 and subsequent resolutions to be adopted by the Assembly concerning future scales of assessments;

2. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, in respect of the apportionment of peacekeeping expenses, that, for the period from 1 January 1997 to 31 March 1998, Slovakia shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (c) of resolution 43/232 and that its contributions to the financing of peacekeeping operations for this period shall be calculated in accordance with the scales of assessments approved by the General Assembly in its resolutions 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and 52/215 A and its decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995;

3. Decides further that the contributions of Slovakia for the financing of peacekeeping operations in respect of assessments issued during the period from 1 January 1997 to 31 March 1998 shall be credited to Member States in proportion to their effective rates of assessment for the financing of peacekeeping operations during the period, subject to the following:

(a) Member States included in the groups set out in paragraphs 3 (c) and (d) of resolution 43/232, as adjusted by subsequent resolutions, shall be credited with the full amount by which their aggregate contributions for the financing of peacekeeping operations during the period in question exceeded the aggregate level that would have applied had Slovakia been included in one of the groups of Member States set out in paragraph 3 of resolution 43/232, as adjusted by subsequent resolutions;

(b) The full balance of the contributions of Slovakia for the financing of peacekeeping operations for the period in question, after provision for crediting Member States pursuant to paragraph 3 (a) above, shall be credited to Member States included in the group set out in paragraph 3 (b) of resolution 43/232, as adjusted by subsequent resolutions.

Report of ACABQ. In February/March 1998 [A/52/860], ACABQ, in accordance with the budget cycle established by the General Assembly in resolution 49/233 A [YUN 1994, p. 1338], considered the financial performance reports for the period 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 and the proposed budgets for the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 of: UNPREDEP, UNOMIG, UNMIBH, UNFICYP, UNDOF, UNIFIL and UNIKOM. It also considered the financial performance of the United Nations Peace Forces (UNPF) for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 and the final disposition of UNPF assets [A/52/792]; the financial performance of UNTAES, including the liaison offices in Zagreb and Belgrade, for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 [A/52/722]; and the revised budget of UNTAES, including the offices in Zagreb and Belgrade, for the period from 1 July 1997 to 15 January 1998 and its liquidation thereafter, as well as for the maintenance of the Civilian Police Support Group from 16 January to 15 October 1998 and its liquidation thereafter [A/52/801].

ACABQ expressed concern that the new financial cycle for peacekeeping operations—1 July to 30 June—was in danger of being compromised and stressed the need to restore the discipline of budget formulation review and approval, and that revised budget submissions for less stable missions should be focused more on the identification and justification of changes in requirements rather than on the resubmission of the entire budget.

ACABQ believed that the current system for the formulation of financial performance reports and budget proposals needed to be streamlined, with greater authority and record-keeping responsibility delegated to the field, with established internal deadlines for reporting. Performance reports should be more analytical and explain operational reasons for shortcomings and slippage during implementation of the approved budgets. Information should also be provided on the steps taken to correct the problems identified.

The Committee's review of performance reports revealed that a number of the initial budgets to which they were related were inflated. While efforts to achieve savings should certainly be encouraged, the presentation of inflated estimates indicated the need for improvement in a number of aspects of budget formulation. The Committee believed that standard costs for budgeting purposes should be tempered with actual performance results and the Standard Ratios and Standard Cost Manual should be reviewed periodically to determine the standards' relevance. ACABQ recommended that, pending improvement in the computation and use of performance data, there should be a further reduction of 5 per cent for all peacekeeping operations, with the exception of UNDOF, UNIFIL and UNFICYP. Budget reports should explain deviations from standard costs and reasons for the application of mission-specific costs rather than standard costs. The information included in future budget reports and the basis of the percentages should be explained and annexes and tables standardized.

Concerning the issue of unliquidated obligations, ACABQ recommended that the Secretary-General pay greater attention to the procedures for raising obligations so as to ensure their timely review for verification of their continued validity. ACABQ had noted in the past many instances of troop-contributing countries not claiming reimbursement for a number of items and requested the Secretariat to ascertain whether or not a claim would be submitted with the countries concerned and take the results into account when preparing future budgets of the missions. ACABQ also made a number of recommendations regarding arrangements for the reimbursement of contingent-owned equipment and the disposal of assets (see below). The Committee believed that there was room for improvement in sharing common administrative and management services such as procurement, air support management and travel services, and recommended that attempts be made to recover all identifiable costs, taking care not to establish elaborate cost-measurement mechanisms. Measures should also be taken to control the sharp increases in vehicle insurance. For the purpose of transparency, the Committee recommended that all peacekeeping budgets in the future disclose the estimated "other income" from staff assessment and other sources.

ACABQ stated that there were too many instances of unplanned travel not related directly to the political or peacekeeping process, but more to administration, monitoring, procurement and training. It requested that more planning be introduced into those aspects of travel. Travel between Headquarters and the field could be minimized through the use of such facilities as videoconferencing, fax and e-mail.

Peacekeeping support account

Reports of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 51/239 A [YUN 1997, p. 50], submitted a March report [A/52/837 & Corr.1] on the support account for peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, as well as information on support account expenditures for the first six months (1 July-31 December 1997) of the current period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998.

Proposed requirements for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 totalled $39,409,400, reflecting an increase of $6,982,900 over the $32,426,500 approved for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, and provided for a staffing establishment of 469 temporary posts, a net increase of 123 posts over the current authorized level of 346 posts.

The requirements took account of the outcome of the in-depth evaluation and comprehensive review to substantiate the post and non-post requirements proposed, and included, among other things, proposals related to implementation of General Assembly resolution 51/243 [YUN 1997, p. 1469] on gratis personnel and implementation of the Rapidly Deployable Mission Headquarters.

In another March report [A/52/838], the Secretary-General, pursuant to Assembly resolution 51/239 A, outlined the performance of the support account for peacekeeping operations for the periods from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 and from 1 July to 31 December 1997. Expenditures for the period 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 amounted to $28,066,000, against an approved amount of $30,534,400, resulting in an unutilized balance of $2,468,400, which was due in large part to staff cost savings. The Secretary-General proposed applying that unencumbered balance to the support account requirements for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999. Expenditure for the six-month period from 1 July to 31 December 1997 amounted to $13,373,300, against an authorized amount of $32,426,500 for the 12 months from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998.

ACABQ report. In May [A/52/892], ACABQ noted that the unutilized balance of $2,468,400 for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 was attributable to a higher than anticipated vacancy rate and to variances between the actual composition of support account posts and the average used in standard salary costs for the purpose of cost estimation. ACABQ recommended that in future the vacancy factor for support account posts be increased from 5 per cent to 8 per cent to offset the effects of such variance. It agreed to the proposal to apply the unencumbered balance of $2,468,400 for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 to the support account requirements for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999.

Concerning support account requirements for 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, ACABQ said it was unable to complete its consideration of the Secretary-General's request for new and converted posts, owing to the unavailability of reliable statistics and explanatory information. Under the circumstances, it recommended four new posts for assets management and the conversion of 34 gratis positions to temporary posts, without prejudice to the recommendations to be made in September for conversions and for new posts. ACABQ also recommended that the amount to be prorated to the various peacekeeping operations for their contribution to the support account be based on the 1997/98 level ($32.4 million), with an additional $2 million for posts recommended by the Committee (see above), resulting in a total requirement of $34.4 million. Additional requirements would be reflected in the relevant performance reports after the Assembly's decision on an appropriation for the support account for 1998/99.

The Committee held the view that the performance report was too focused on providing statistical information rather than information on management issues. It should have been more analytical and explained important administrative issues that had an impact on the implementation of the approved budget under the support account.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 June [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/453/Add.4], adopted resolution 52/248 without vote [agenda item 142 (a)].

Support account for peacekeeping operations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/258 of 3 May 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 48/226 A of 23 December 1993, 48/226 B of 5 April 1994, 48/226 C of 29 July 1994, 49/250 of 20 July 1995, 50/11 of 2 November 1995, 50/221 A of 11 April 1996, 50/221 B of 7 June 1996, 51/226 of 3 April 1997, 51/239 A of 17 June 1997 and 51/239 B of 15 September 1997 and its decisions 48/489 of 8 July 1994, 49/469 of 23 December 1994 and 50/473 of 23 December 1995,

Reaffirming its resolutions 51/243 of 15 September 1997 and 52/220 of 22 December 1997,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the support account for peacekeeping operations, the performance report on the use of support account resources for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Reaffirming the need to continue to improve the administrative and financial management of peacekeeping operations,

Recognizing the need for adequate support during all phases of peacekeeping operations, including the liquidation and termination phases,

Recalling its resolution 52/12 B of 19 December 1997, in which it stressed that enhancing the rapid deployment capacity of the United Nations in peacekeeping operations could play a valuable role in the effectiveness of its response to a conflict, and, in this context, requested the appropriate organs to consider, as a matter of priority, specific measures to that effect, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/69 of 10 December 1997 and taking into account the proposals to be submitted by the Secretary-General and the views of Member States,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the support account for peacekeeping operations and the separate performance report on the use of support account resources for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997;

2. Also takes note of the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

3. Concurs with the recommendation of the Advisory Committee contained in paragraph 4 of its report that future performance reports on the use of support account resources should be analytical and explain important administrative issues that impact on the implementation of the approved budget under the support account;

4. Regrets the contradictory and inconsistent information provided to the Fifth Committee by representatives of the Secretary-General on this issue, which affected adversely the deliberations of the Committee and impeded informed and timely decision-making, and takes note that, for the same reasons, the Advisory Committee was unable to complete its consideration of this item, as reflected in paragraph 13 of its report;

5. Also regrets the delay in submission by the Secretary-General of his report on the support account, which resulted in the delay of the related report of the Advisory Committee, and decides that his next report on the support account for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 should be issued to Member States no later than 28 February 1999;

6. Notes the improvement in the presentation of the report of the Secretary-General on the support account and requests him to make further improvements in accordance with its resolution 51/239 A and the present resolution;

7. Recalls its request in paragraph 7 of resolution 51/239 A for an in-depth evaluation of the structures and staffing of those divisions and units involved in the support for peacekeeping operations and regrets the lack of detail provided about the evaluation and that the useful information subsequently provided was not included in the original submission of the Secretary-General on the support account;

8. Stresses that the Secretary-General should submit annually comprehensive proposals on the total requirement for human and financial resources from all sources of funding for all departments involved in the backstopping of peacekeeping operations;

9. Affirms the need for adequate funding for the backstopping of peacekeeping operations;

10. Reaffirms that the expenses of the Organization, including backstopping of peacekeeping operations, shall be borne by Member States, and, to that effect, the Secretary-General should request adequate funding to maintain the capacity of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the Secretariat;

11. Decides to maintain for the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 the funding mechanism for the support account used in the current period, from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, as provisionally approved in paragraph 3 of its resolution 50/221 B;

12. Expresses its concern over the continuing acceptance of gratis personnel in the Department of Peacekeeping Operations;

13. Notes the commitment of the Secretary-General to phase out gratis personnel and to replace them with United Nations-funded personnel by the end of February 1999, as presented to the Fifth Committee at its resumed 68th meeting on 26 June 1998;

14. Reiterates its request in paragraph 26 of its resolution 51/239 A;

15. Requests the Secretary-General expeditiously to fill vacant support account posts in a transparent manner consistent with the Charter of the United Nations, in particular Articles 100 and 101, relevant resolutions and the Staff Regulations and Rules of the United Nations, including the requirement regarding the use of official or working languages;

16. Approves four hundred support account-funded temporary posts for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999;

17. Also approves the proposal for conversion of the posts mentioned in paragraph 19 of the report of the Secretary-General, subject to paragraph 16 above, and requests the Secretary-General to undertake functions currently carried out by type II gratis personnel within the level of approved posts, as reflected in paragraph 16, through recruitment, redeployment and changes in work distribution, bearing in mind the recommendations of the Advisory Committee with respect to the recruitment process, to ensure the required expertise of serving military officers and civilian police, in accordance with Articles 97, 100 and 101 of the Charter of the United Nations;

18. Further approves the support account post and non-post requirements for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 in the amount of 34.4 million United States dollars;

19. Notes that the Advisory Committee intends to report in September 1998, having completed its detailed post-by-post justification on the basis of the information provided, on the workload of all posts, in accordance with resolutions 51/243 and 51/239 A, and would welcome its advice, as well as that of the Secretary-General, on the structure of those departments dealing with backstopping of peacekeeping operations, including issues of coordination and overlap;

20. Decides to consider that report as a basis for making a decision on the support account posts and funding by 15 October 1998 and that any changed requirements would be reflected in the relevant performance reports of each peacekeeping operation;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to initiate immediately and complete the recruitment as required in the present resolution and in its resolution 52/234 of 26 June 1998;

22. Decides to apply the unencumbered balance of 2,468,400 dollars for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 to the resources required for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 and to appropriate the balance of 31,931,600 dollars, to be prorated among the individual active peacekeeping operation budgets, to meet the financing requirements of the support account for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999.

In September [A/53/418], ACABQ decided not to approve 48 of the 123 posts requested by the Secretary-General for 1998/99 under the support account, including 2 of the 20 additional posts requested.

On 26 October [meeting 43], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee

[A/53/522], adopted resolution 53/12 A without vote [agenda item 143 (a)].

Support account for peacekeeping operations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/258 of 3 May 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 48/226 A of 23 December 1993, 48/226 B of 5 April 1994, 48/226 C of 29 July 1994, 49/250 of 20 July 1995, 50/11 of 2 November 1995, 50/221 A of 11 April 1996, 50/221 B of 7 June 1996, 51/226 of 3 April 1997, 51/239 A of 17 June 1997, 51/239 B of 15 September 1997, 51/243 of 15 September 1997 and 52/220 of 22 December 1997 and its decisions 48/489 of 8 July 1994, 49/469 of 23 December 1994 and 50/473 of 23 December 1995,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the support account for peacekeeping operations and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Reaffirming the need to continue to improve the administrative and financial management of peacekeeping operations,

Recognizing the need for adequate support during all phases of peacekeeping operations, including the liquidation and termination phases,

1. Reaffirms its resolutions 52/234 and 52/248 of 26 June 1998;

2. Takes note with deep concern of the observations contained in paragraphs 5 and 6 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions to the effect that little had been done to meet the explicit concerns of the Advisory Committee concerning the quality of information provided by the Secretary-General and that the lack of a reply to requests for clarification or additional information in particular areas had affected a specific recommendation of the Committee;

3. Notes with concern that the extension of the deadline for the submission of applications for the replacement of type II gratis personnel has resulted in cases of differential treatment among Member States;

4. Takes note of the commitment and assurances of the Secretary-General that the recruitment process for the replacement of type II gratis personnel, including those in the two international tribunals, will be completed by 28 February 1999, in accordance with its resolutions 52/234 and 52/248;

5. Reaffirms its decision contained in paragraph 16 of its resolution 52/248 to approve four hundred support account-funded temporary posts for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, when determining the allocation of the four hundred support account-funded temporary posts, including the six additional posts, to take into account the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in his support account submission for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 a comprehensive review of a rapidly deployable mission headquarters, addressing particularly the differences between its functional responsibilities and those of the Mission Planning Service of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the Secretariat, and further to develop the concept for its employment during the initial phase of a new peacekeeping operation, as mentioned by the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations in paragraph 101 of its report, referred to by the Advisory Committee in its report, and address the issues raised and comments and observations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee;

8. Decides to establish, within the level of the four hundred support account-funded temporary posts approved for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, two civilian posts at the P-4 level (one Humanitarian Affairs Officer and one Civilian Police Officer) for a rapidly deployable mission headquarters, and to revert to the issue of the other proposed positions in the context of its consideration of the information requested in paragraph 7 above;

9. Takes note of the observations contained in paragraph 21 of the report of the Advisory Committee, and decides to establish one post at the P-4 level for the Office of Internal Oversight Services of the Secretariat;

10. Regrets that a comprehensive review of the issues raised in its resolutions 50/221 B, 51/239 A and B and 52/248 has not been carried out, and requests the Secretary-General, in the context of his support account submission for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, to give a detailed account of the implementation of these and the current resolutions, including the revised structures of those departments involved in backstopping peacekeeping operations, redeployment, duplication, overlap, fragmentation, the evolution in peacekeeping trends, changes in workload and other issues raised by the Advisory Committee in paragraphs 8, 15, 27, 34, 35 and 41 of its report, and to report to the General Assembly thereon.

Voluntary contributions

In a May report [A/52/860], ACABQ, responding to a General Assembly request contained in section VII of resolution 51/218 E [YUN 1997, p. 53], reported on the administration of voluntary contributions to peacekeeping operations. The Committee recalled that the Assembly, in resolution 44/192 A [YUN 1989, p. 881], had noted the observations and proposals of the Secretary-General on technical guidelines relating to the treatment and valuation of voluntary contributions in the form of supplies and services and endorsed the comments of ACABQ thereupon.

ACABQ believed that little could be added by way of policy guidelines on the subject. Rather, what remained was the effective application of what had been approved and its reflection in the various performance reports and budgets of the Secretary-General. Concerning its call for a more transparent treatment of voluntary contributions, consistent with the principle of full budgeting, ACABQ intended to follow up on improvements in that area when it examined further reports of the Secretary-General on peacekeeping operations. The Committee emphasized that assets given under a status-of-mission agreement should not be treated as voluntary contributions, but should be disclosed under the status-of-forces agreement section of the report on the relevant peacekeeping operation.

Reimbursement issues

Equipment

Report of Working Group. The Chairman of the Phase IV Working Group on Reimbursement of Contingent-owned Equipment transmitted to the Chairman of the Fifth Committee a report [A/C.5/52/39] of the Working Group on its meetings held from 9 to 13 February. The Group examined issues related to the implementation of the reformed procedures for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment, approved by the General Assembly in resolution 50/222 [YUN 1996, p.35].

The Working Group recommended that, in cases of loss or damage resulting from hostile action or forced abandonment, the United Nations should assume liability for every item of major equipment when the fair market value equalled or exceeded the threshold value of $250,000. No upper limits should be placed on justified claims; the Secretariat should recommend measures for handling large claims and procedures should be developed for the settlement of disputes. Loss or damage issues should be clarified and implemented to ensure that troop contributors were reimbursed where significant damage occurred to contingent-owned equipment during transportation. All troop-contributing countries should be entitled to claim the same mission factor rates, regardless of their location in the mission area. A review of mission factors should be completed in the third month of a newly established mission and a mission drawdown plan developed to coordinate the departure of troops and equipment following the termination of a mission. Troop reimbursements should continue at full rates until departure and reimbursement for major equipment leases paid at 50 per cent of the former level until the equipment departure date. Reimbursement for self-sustainment rates would be reduced by 50 per cent and calculated upon remaining deployed troop strengths until all contingent personnel had departed from the mission area. A transitional plan to the new system of reimbursement should be elaborated by the Secretariat for approval by the General Assembly by the end of 1998, and should include a recommended cut-off date by which all missions should be operating under the new system. The Working Group also recommended no change to the practice of applying the new procedures retroactively and that the Secretariat prepare a detailed report for the Assembly on the financial implications of retroactive application.

The Secretariat should also develop a clear, measurable standard of support for the logistics goods and services provided to field missions. When a carrier exceeded the 14-day grace period after the expected arrival date of a contract for the repatriation of equipment, the troop-contributing country would be reimbursed by the United Nations at the dry-lease rate from the expected arrival date until the actual arrival date.

The Working Group recommended that the Secretariat develop a proposed list of additional performance standards and ranges for major equipment and that they be reviewed by national functional staffs. Issues of whether or not an upgrade to commercial equipment entitled a particular troop-contributing country to standard military pattern equipment reimbursement should be dealt with during the bilateral contingent-owned equipment negotiation process. Performance standards should be stated in terms of required operational capability and the troop contributor should be entitled to major equipment reimbursement only when such capability was fulfilled. Where a contingent was employing major equipment in providing sustainment support, the applicable troop-contributing country was not entitled to major equipment reimbursement, but only to the applicable self-sustainment reimbursement. The Secretariat should develop an indicative, mission-specific, standardized personal equipment listing, which should be discussed with each contingent before starting each mission and included in the guidelines to troop-contributing countries. Two additional self-sustainment categories, "main camp catering" and "main camp electricity generation", should be added to the current concept and assigned an interim reimbursement rate of $25.25 and $25, respectively, pending the development of more appropriate rates. The revised performance standards for communications self-sustainment proposed by the Secretariat and annexed to the Working Group's report should replace the existing standards.

The Working Group recommended new office performance standards and that the reimbursement rate should remain at $21.25. The explosive ordnance disposal (EOD) self-sustainment category should be retained and, where a troop-contributing country providing force-level engineering support also provided EOD sustainment support to another troop-contributing country's accommodation areas, the country performing the EOD support should receive EOD sustainment reimbursement. The basis for EOD sustainment reimbursement should be reviewed. Dry-cleaning of operationally required specialist clothing should be included in the laundry and cleaning self-sustainment category, with no increase in rates. Payment of dual tentage and accommodation rate should be retained and a mechanism developed for a temporary waiver of the dual payment principle for short-duration missions where the provision of hard accommodation was impractical and not cost-effective. There should be no change to the identification self-sustainment category or to the field defence stores self-sustainment rate. However, the rate should be reviewed at the next scheduled rate review, with the possibility of creating two rates: one for the establishment of defences and another for their maintenance. The concept of the three levels of medical support should be approved. The equipment listing proposed by the Medical Unit of DPKO should be reviewed by Member States and their recommendations provided to the Secretariat.

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations noted the recommendations of the Working Group and underlined the importance of their timely implementation. It encouraged the Secretariat to continue training personnel, including field mission personnel, in the new equipment reimbursement procedures. The Committee expressed concern at the continued delays in the reimbursement of troop costs and contingent-owned equipment leases. Such delays caused hardships to all troop- and equipment-contributing countries, especially developing countries, and adversely affected the capacity and possibly the will of Member States to participate in peacekeeping operations. The Committee urged the Secretariat to address the processing of the backlog of contingent-owned equipment claims and in particular the processing of claims for write-offs that were beyond the authority of the local property survey boards.

Report of ACABQ. ACABQ, in its May report [A/52/860] on the financing of peacekeeping operations, stated that it believed that the capacity of the United Nations to implement the new contingent-owned equipment arrangements was inadequate. It also questioned whether the new procedures for reimbursement should apply to missions whose mandates had terminated before the procedure came into force. It noted that implementation of the new arrangements was also giving rise to difficulties for retroactive application in ongoing missions, which was recognized by the Phase IV Working Group on Reimbursement of Contingent-owned Equipment (see above), and raised the risk that the United Nations might reimburse for items for which it had already paid. ACABQ was of the opinion that it was important for the Secretary-General to clarify and confirm in the future that reimbursement under the wet-lease arrangements did not include provisions for support and other services already provided by the United Nations to military personnel. Furthermore, as reimbursement had resulted in reduced requirements on other budget lines, ACABQ recommended that that information, together with an indication of the related savings, be included in budget performance reports on all peacekeeping operations where the new wet-lease arrangements were in place. It also recommended that the Secretary-General review projected requirements for reimbursement under the wet-lease arrangements and requested an immediate special audit by the UN Board of Auditors of the arrangements in place for application of the new contingent-owned equipment procedures. The Advisory Committee further recommended that future budget proposals clarify which factors, such as terrain, climatic conditions, perception of threat and environmental impact, were being taken into account and their impact on the allocations for contingent-owned equipment.

Report of Secretary-General. In October [A/53/465], the Secretary-General, pursuant to the General Assembly's request in resolution 50/222 [YUN 1996, p. 35], reported on the first full year of implementation of the reformed procedures for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment.

The Secretary-General stated that, following the first full year of implementation, the major issues of concern to the Secretariat included: the unlimited financial liability of the United Nations in cases of loss of contingent-owned equipment due to hostile action or forced abandonment; the overall financial impact of the retroactive implementation of the new procedures; revised levels of medical support and related medical equipment requirements, as well as associated reimbursement rates; and other issues related to changes in both reimbursement rates and performance standards for specific categories of major equipment and self-sustainment.

The Phase IV Working Group on the Reimbursement of Contingent-owned Equipment (see above) had endorsed the Secretariat's proposals regarding changes to performance standards in several self-sustainment categories. However, it was not in agreement with the proposal to set financial limits on the Organization's exposure in respect of losses attributable to hostile action. It also recommended that the Secretariat prepare a detailed report on the financial implications of the retroactive implementation of the new procedures and postpone consideration of revised reimbursement rates for major equipment, pending a review to be conducted in 2001.

The Secretariat believed that the first full year of implementing the revised procedures had, to a large extent, accomplished the goals of simplifying the reimbursement process and providing the Organization with an essential planning and budgetary tool. The only two issues that required clarification were: the unlimited liability of the United Nations for losses resulting from the loss or damage of contingent-owned equipment in cases of hostile action or forced abandonment; and the policy that the United Nations should assume the costs related to "no fault" losses in the event it was not making payments for contingent-owned equipment in a timely manner. The cost of the retroactive implementation of the new reimbursement procedures also needed to be further reviewed and studied.

Third-party claims

In June, the General Assembly, at its resumed fifty-second session, continued consideration of the Secretary-General's report and the recommendations of ACABQ [YUN 1997, p. 55] on criteria and guidelines for implementing the principles of financial and temporal limitations on the liability of the United Nations and modalities for establishing those limitations in a legally binding instrument.

On 26 June [meeting 88], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/453/Add.3], adopted resolution 52/247 without vote [agenda item 142 (a)].

Third-party liability: temporal and financial limitations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 51/13 of 4 November 1996 on third-party liability against the United Nations resulting or arising from peacekeeping operations conducted by the Organization, in which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to develop specific measures, including criteria and guidelines for implementing the principles of temporal and financial limitations on the liability of the United Nations,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on third-party liability and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on third-party liability;
2. Also takes note of the observations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;
3. Endorses the proposals of the Secretary-General for implementing the principles of temporal and financial limitations on the liability of the Organization;

4. Also endorses the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

5. Decides that the temporal and financial limitations set out in paragraphs 8 to 11 below shall apply to third-party claims against the Organization for personal injury, illness or death, and for property loss or damage (including non-consensual use of premises) resulting from or attributable to the activities of members of peacekeeping operations in the performance of their official duties, as described in paragraph 13 of the report of the Secretary-General;

6. Endorses the view of the Secretary-General that liability is not engaged in relation to third-party claims resulting from or attributable to the activities of members of peacekeeping operations arising from "operational necessity", as described in paragraph 14 of the first report of the Secretary-General on third-party liability;

7. Also endorses the views of the Secretary-General, reflected in paragraph 14 of his report, with regard to third-party claims resulting from gross negligence or wilful misconduct of the personnel provided by troop-contributing States for peacekeeping operations, and requests him to report on their implementation in the relevant performance reports;

8. Decides that, where the liability of the Organization is engaged in relation to third-party claims against the Organization resulting from peacekeeping operations, the Organization will not pay compensation in regard to such claims submitted after six months from the time the damage, injury or loss was sustained, or from the time it was discovered by the claimant, and in any event after one year from the termination of the mandate of the peacekeeping operation, provided that in exceptional circumstances, such as described in paragraph 20 of the report of the Secretary-General, the Secretary-General may accept for consideration a claim made at a later date;

9. Decides also, in respect of third-party claims against the Organization for personal injury, illness or death resulting from peacekeeping operations, that:

(a) Compensable types of injury or loss shall be limited to economic loss, such as medical and rehabilitation expenses, loss of earnings, loss of financial support, transportation expenses associated with the injury, illness or medical care, legal and burial expenses;

(b) No compensation shall be payable by the United Nations for non-economic loss, such as pain and suffering or moral anguish, as well as punitive or moral damages;

(c) No compensation shall be payable by the United Nations for homemaker services and other such damages that, in the sole opinion of the Secretary-General, are impossible to verify or are not directly related to the injury or loss itself;

(d) The amount of compensation payable for injury, illness or death of any individual, including for the types of loss and expenses described in subparagraph (a) above, shall not exceed a maximum of 50,000 United States dollars, provided, however, that within such limitation the actual amount is to be determined by reference to local compensation standards;

(e) In exceptional circumstances, the Secretary-General may recommend to the General Assembly, for its approval, that the limitation of 50,000 dollars provided for in subparagraph (d) above be exceeded in a particular case if the Secretary-General, after carrying out the required investigation, finds that there are compelling reasons for exceeding the limitation;

10. Decides further in respect of third-party claims against the Organization for property loss or damage resulting from peacekeeping operations that:

(a) Compensation for non-consensual use of premises shall either: (i) be calculated on the basis of the fair rental value, determined on the basis of the local rental market prices that prevailed prior to the deployment of the peacekeeping operation as established by the United Nations pre-mission technical survey team; or (ii) not exceed a maximum ceiling amount payable per square metre or per hectare as established by the United Nations pre-mission technical survey team on the basis of available relevant information; the Secretary-General will decide on the appropriate method for calculating compensation payable for non-consensual use of premises at the conclusion of the pre-mission technical survey;

(b) Compensation for loss or damage to premises shall either: (i) be calculated on the basis of the equivalent of a number of months of the rental value, or a fixed percentage of the rental amount payable for the period of United Nations occupancy; or (ii) be set at a fixed percentage of the cost of repair; the Secretary-General will decide on the appropriate method for calculating compensation payable for loss or damage to premises at the conclusion of the pre-mission technical survey;

(c) No compensation shall be payable by the United Nations for loss or damages that, in the sole opinion of the Secretary-General, are impossible to verify or are not directly related to the loss of or damage to the premises;

11. Decides that:

(a) Compensation for loss or damage to personal property of third parties arising from the activities of the operation or in connection with the performance of official duties by its members shall cover the reasonable costs of repair or replacement;

(b) No compensation shall be payable by the United Nations for loss or damages that, in the sole opinion of the Secretary-General, are impossible to verify or are not directly related to the loss of or damage to the personal property;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to implement the present resolution in respect of the status-of-forces agreements in accordance with paragraph 40 of his report;

13. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the terms of reference of the local review boards include the temporal and financial limitations on the liability of the Organization, as set out in paragraphs 8 to 11 above, and that those boards rely on those temporal and financial limitations as a basis for their jurisdiction and recommendations for compensation for third-party claims against the Organization resulting from its peacekeeping operations.

Management of peacekeeping assets

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations expressed concern that little progress had been made in developing a coherent and comprehensive concept for logistical support of peacekeeping operations. It reiterated that such a concept would provide a framework within which other logistics initiatives would be developed, which in turn would ensure the efficient utilization of resources. The Committee noted the Secretariat's intention to include a logistics strategy in a consolidated Field Administration and Operational Support Manual and requested an update on the manual's development in the next progress report. It commended the Secretariat for its efforts in developing the new Field Assets Control System within the context of the emerging field mission logistics system. The Committee recognized the system's potential for decreasing staff and for enhancing matériel management, reducing costs and improving logistical support to peacekeeping operations. It noted that the system was being deployed along with vehicles, communications equipment and other assets from start-up kits for use by the recently established mission in the Central African Republic. The Special Committee requested that assessments of the performance of the Field Assets Control System and of the start-up kit equipment be included in the next progress report of the Secretary-General.

ACABQ report. ACABQ, in May [A/52/860], noted that peacekeeping operations continued to have serious management weaknesses in disposing of non-expendable property. It requested the Secretary-General to increase the effectiveness of auctioning UN assets in peacekeeping operations and to provide information on reasons for write-offs and losses of property in future reports on the final disposition of assets of peacekeeping operations.

ACABQ was of the view that inventory management and control remained weak. Large under-expenditures were reported in several missions for items such as vehicles, spare parts and various types of equipment, mainly as a result of overestimating their requirements, without taking into account the available stock and a reasonable forecast of actual needs. That had led in some cases to overstocking of items. ACABQ noted the view of the Board of Auditors that the extent of losses recommended for write-off in several missions could have been avoided with tighter inventory management. The Committee also noted the standardization of vehicles under systems procurement contracts for 1998-1999 for all peacekeeping missions.

UN Logistics Base

Reports of Secretary-General. In a March report [A/52/810], the Secretary-General detailed the financial performance of the United Nations Logistics Base in Brindisi, Italy, for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997. Expenditures for the period totalled $5,349,000, against resources amounting to $7,374,800, which were provided on an ad hoc basis from the appropriations approved by the General Assembly for current peacekeeping operations for the same period. The unencumbered balance of $2,025,800 resulted primarily from premises, transport operations and miscellaneous supplies and services, and was partially offset by additional requirements for other equipment. The Secretary-General proposed that the Assembly apply the unencumbered balance to the resources required for the Base for period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999.

In another March report [A/527858], the Secretary-General presented the budget of the Logistics Base for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 amounting to $7,141,800, of which $6,311,900 was for maintenance of the Base and $829,900 was for non-recurrent requirements for equipment to complete two start-up kits. That represented a decrease of $2,602,700 compared with the operating cost estimates for the prior 12 months of $9,744,500. The budget provided for a civilian establishment of 20 international staff (10 Professional and 10 Field Service) and 28 locally recruited staff. The estimates also provided for general temporary assistance, alterations and maintenance of premises, transport operations, communications, other equipment and spare parts, contractual services, miscellaneous supplies and freight.

ACABQ report. In a May report [A/52/897], ACABQ recommended acceptance of the Secretary-General's proposal to apply the unencumbered balance to the resources required for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999. It also recommended approval of the cost estimates proposed by the Secretary-General and, after applying the unencumbered balance to the proposed estimates, that the resulting balance of $5,116,000 be prorated among individual active peacekeeping operations. However, ACABQ did not recommend that the appropriations for budgets of individual peacekeeping operations be increased at that time, but that requirements for their contributions to the Base should be reflected in the relevant performance reports. It had no objection to the Secretary-General's funding proposal [YUN 1997, p. 58] for the continued economic operation of the Base, which called for the adoption of the principle of self-funding replenishment by charging field missions for services performed by the Base on their behalf.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 June [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/453/Add.3], adopted resolution 52/1 B without vote [agenda item 142 (a)].

Financing of the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy

The General Assembly,

Recalling section XIV of its resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994,

Recalling also its decision 50/500 of 17 September 1996 on the financing of the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 52/1 A of 15 October 1997,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the Logistics Base and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services and the views expressed by Member States in the Fifth Committee,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy;

2. Also takes note of the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

3. Regrets that the observations and recommendations of the Advisory Committee on the cost-benefit analysis were not available for consideration in conjunction with the report of the Secretary-General which deals, inter alia, with the cost-benefit analysis;

4. Notes that the report of the Secretary-General contains, inter alia, a cost-benefit analysis of the operation of the Logistics Base and information on progress in the clearance of the backlog inventory, on the use of the Logistics Base by United Nations agencies and programmes and on the Logistics Base communications relay system and its functions, as requested by the General Assembly in its resolution 52/1 A;

5. Approves the proposal of the Secretary-General with regard to the funding mechanism set out in paragraph 33 of his report;

6. Also approves the cost estimates for the Logistics Base amounting to 7,141,800 United States dollars for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, including the amount of 829,900 dollars for the completion of two start-up kits;

7. Decides to apply the unencumbered balance of 2,025,800 dollars for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 to the resources required for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, and to prorate the balance of 5,116,000 dollars among the approved appropriations of the individual active peacekeeping operation budgets to meet the financing requirements of the Logistics Base for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999;

8. Authorizes the Secretary-General to provide for a civilian establishment consisting of ten Professional, ten Field Service and twenty-eight locally recruited staff;

9. Approves the resourcing policy proposed in section VIII of the previous report of the Secretary-General regarding the inclusion in future liquidation budgets of provision for the cost of repair, refurbishment and preservation, equal to 30 per cent of the total depreciated value of the equipment to be transferred to the Logistics Base;

10. Decides to continue consideration of this question upon submission by the Advisory Committee of its observations and recommendations on the cost-benefit analysis contained in the report of the Secretary-General.

In December, the Secretary-General presented the financial performance report [A/53/776] of the Logistics Base for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998. The General Assembly, section VIII of resolution 51/218 E [YUN 1997, p. 58] and section I of resolution 52/1 A [ibid., p. 59] had authorized commitments totalling $13,110,350 for financing the Base for that period, of which $10,835,051 was provided on an ad hoc basis from the appropriations approved by the Assembly for current peacekeeping operations for the same period. Expenditures for the period totalled $9,461,500, resulting in an unencumbered balance of $1,373,600, consisting of $817,400 for the maintenance budget and $556,200 for the backlog clearance budget. The unencumbered balance resulted primarily from civilian vacancies and reduced requirements for maintenance and contractual services. The Secretary-General proposed that the balance be applied to the resources required for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000.

Procurement

Report of Secretary-General. In his March report on the implementation of the recommendations of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/AC.121/42 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General, referring to his proposals for UN procurement reform (see PART FIVE, Chapter I), said that DPKO had provided extensive comments on the proposed reformulation of the Secretariat's procurement manual, which was also being considered by the Task Force on Common Services. However, more work needed to be done to make procurement procedures more flexible. Changes in the delegation of authority and the absence of geographical limitation on sourcing had brought about significant improvements in the efficiency and response time of procurement in peacekeeping missions. Consideration could be given to missions being permitted authority to obtain military supplies on a letter-of-assist basis. There were currently 2,500 registered vendors and 1,820 on a provisional list, from a total of 102 countries. In the past year, the Procurement Division had intensified efforts to expand the supplier roster and, through the Internet, it was providing information to suppliers around the world, as well as supplier applications. The principle of competitive bidding continued to be reinforced and improved. In 1997, it accounted for 76.3 per cent of procurement, and for exceptions 23.7 per cent, most of which involved purchases below $25,000.

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/53/127] noted the procurement update contained in the Secretary-General's report and was of the view that reporting on peacekeeping procurement should include details of categories of goods and services, value, source of supply and other relevant aspects of procurement at Headquarters and field mission levels.

The Special Committee emphasized the critical importance of timely, efficient, transparent and cost-effective procurement of goods and services in support of peacekeeping operations. It noted the delegation of increased procurement authority to the field during the past year and encouraged the Secretary-General to implement other reforms to further streamline and improve the efficiency of procurement procedures. The Special Committee requested the Secretariat to intensify and focus its efforts on increasing the number of qualified suppliers on the procurement roster, to broaden its geographical base and to accelerate dissemination of procurement information in a timely manner through various media, including the Internet. It requested the Secretary-General fully and expeditiously to implement General Assembly resolution 51/231 on procurement reform [YUN 1997, p. 1395].

ACABQ report. In its May report [A/52/860] on the financing of UN peacekeeping operations, ACABQ stated that the efficiency of the procurement process was still of great concern. It noted numerous procurement delays for administrative reasons that were not explained. ACABQ was of the opinion that the Secretariat should examine whether to delegate an increased level of authority to the missions, taking into account the experience with the current delegated authority.

OIOS report. In August [A/52/1010], the Secretary-General, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 51/231 [YUN 1997, p. 1395], transmitted to the Assembly a report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the inquiry into allegations of insufficient use of expertise in procurement planning of aviation services in peacekeeping missions. The Assembly had requested the investigation after a Board of Auditors report noted that UN funds had been expended on services not rendered by aviation vendors in several peacekeeping missions during the 1994-1995 biennium. OIOS examined procurement planning of aviation services in eight peacekeeping missions, including the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations Operation in Somalia, the United Nations Angola Verification Mission and the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia. OIOS found that during 1991-1995, including the 1994-1995 biennium, there was an unprecedented growth in peacekeeping operations, creating significant difficulties for an under-resourced and inexperienced Secretariat, which had not conducted commercial aviation procurement of the magnitude required by the newly established missions and could not obtain the requisite management experience overnight. The overestimation of aviation services was also due to a lack of coordination on aviation planning matters between the missions and Headquarters, uncertain mission mandates (and budgets) and inadequate oversight of aviation operations prior to the establishment of the Field Administration and Logistics Division of DPKO and the Air Operations and Air Safety Units within the Division in 1994. Since 1994, significant corrective actions had been taken to protect the United Nations from similar over-expenditures, which dramatically improved the manner in which the Organization procured and managed its aviation operations. Aviation procurement planning by DPKO had also reduced the unused block hours from 40 per cent of all contracted hours in 1993 to 2 per cent in 1997.

OIOS recommended that DPKO review the aviation planning processes to ensure attunement to the policy and operational requirements of the mission on an ongoing basis, and that such planning decisions be ratified by the Department prior to implementation. The Field Administration and Logistics Division should review all personnel involved in UN aviation activities to ensure that only suitably qualified and experienced staff were recruited and employed in the missions and at Headquarters in the requisite numbers and trained in standard UN aviation practices. OIOS should review aviation operations to ensure compliance with accepted UN rules, policies and practice, including an assessment of the staffing, planning, operation and management of aviation contracts. An aviation oversight committee should be formed at Headquarters to review semi-annually the overall operation of UN-related aviation activity and to recommend improvements.

The Secretary-General stated that he concurred with the OIOS recommendations.

ACABQ comments. ACABQ noted that owing to budgetary constraints it would not be realistic to have an air operations specialist and an aviation safety specialist at each mission that had aviation activity. It agreed with the Secretariat's interim plan for a regional approach, whereby each mission would have an air operations specialist and each region would have at least one individual who would be both an air operations and an aviation safety specialist. Such a dual-role specialist would travel to various missions in the region to conduct initial and recurring aircraft inspections for long- and short-term aircraft charters and for long-term arrangements under letters-of-assist. Visits by Headquarters aviation staff to field missions would include one aviation and one safety specialist to assess the mission's aviation programmes and to complete a carrier inspection as well. Recurrent training would be conducted with all mission aviation personnel.

Personnel matters

Death and disability benefits

The General Assembly, in section II of resolution 51/218 E [YUN 1997, p. 60], had adopted a system of self-insurance and established uniform and standardized rates for the payment of awards in cases of death or disability sustained in the service of UN peacekeeping operations. It had also requested, in resolution 51/239 A [YUN 1997, p. 50], quarterly reports on progress in clearing the backlog of claims. In February and May, the Secretary-General submitted his second [A/C.5/52/37] and third [A/C.5/52/50] quarterly reports indicating the total number of claims relating to death and disability benefits received from troop-contributing countries. As at 31 December 1997, 400 claims had been processed and 285 remained to be processed. By 31 March 1998, those numbers stood at 897 and 90, respectively.

The Assembly, by decision 52/489 of 26 June, took note of the second and third quarterly reports.

In August and November, the Secretary-General presented his fourth [A/C.5/53/16] and fifth [A/C.5/53/17 & Corr.1] quarterly reports. As at 30 June, the number of claims processed had risen to 977, with only 90 claims remaining to be processed. By 30 September, the number of claims processed had reached 1,224. The number of claims awaiting processing had risen to 147, of which 73 constituted part of the backlog. A total of 213 claims were received during September, which greatly contributed to the increase in the number of unprocessed claims.

The Assembly, by decision 53/461 A of 18 December, took note of the Secretary-General's fourth report.

Gratis personnel

In a follow-up to General Assembly resolution 51/243 [YUN 1997, p. 1469] on the phasing out of gratis personnel in the Secretariat, the Secretary-General, in his March report [A/52/837 & Corr.1] on the support account for peacekeeping operations, said that, following the in-depth evaluation and comprehensive review of DPKO, 106 posts were requested under the support account in replacement of gratis personnel. Should the Assembly authorize those posts, the Secretary-General would advertise externally those positions that required expertise not available in the Secretariat. In the case of approximately 36 such externally advertised positions, the operations requirements of DPKO would further necessitate the recruitment of officers in active military or police service.

In June [A/C.5/52/54/Rev.1], the Secretary-General reported that accelerated procedures had been initiated to ensure the speedy recruitment of staff to replace gratis personnel under the support account. Based on those procedures, it was anticipated that qualified candidates would be identified and offers of appointment made by December against posts that would be approved by the Assembly. The recruitment and placement process would be completed by 28 February 1999, thereby enabling the phasing out of all gratis personnel.

The Assembly, in resolution 52/234 of 26 June, noted the Secretary-General's commitment that the replacement process would be completed by 28 February 1999. In resolution 53/11 of 26 October, the Assembly noted with concern that the Secretary-General had failed to demonstrate the extent to which all gratis personnel accepted in DPKO provided very specialized expertise not available within the Organization. (See PART FIVE, Chapter III, for details.)

Other peacekeeping matters

Demining

The Secretary-General, in his report [A/AC.121/42 & Corr.1] on the implementation of the recommendations of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, said that DPKO's Mine Action Service had become, as of 31 October 1997, the focal point within the UN system for coordinating demining activities. The Service had already developed close cooperation with the other departments and agencies involved in different aspects of mine action. DPKO, with concerned UN agencies and other major actors, had developed and agreed upon a common policy that clearly defined responsibilities, lines of reporting, tasks and goals.

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/53/127] welcomed those developments and encouraged contributions to its Voluntary Trust Fund. It reiterated the relevance of the Security Council presidential statement [YUN 1996, p. 42] stressing that provisions for operational demining should be an integral part of peacekeeping mandates and requesting the Secretary-General to keep the Committee informed of UN experiences in demining in peacekeeping operations, taking into account inputs from those involved in such activities.

Cooperation with regional arrangements

The Secretary-General, in his March report [A/AC.121/42 & Corr.1] on the implementation of the recommendations of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, stated that to enhance collaboration on strengthening African capacity for peacekeeping, DPKO and OAU had each appointed focal points to act as liaisons with the other. The Department was ready to provide OAU with assistance in strengthening its Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution and had sent two missions of experts to OAU for consultations on specific measures that might be taken in that regard. Close coordination was established and maintained with regional organizations that deployed alongside UN peacekeeping operations and consultations were held with them on a regular basis. The Lessons Learned Unit of DPKO was undertaking a six-part study on cooperation with regional organizations in the context of peacekeeping and peace support in order to develop guidelines and doctrine for future cooperation.

In his April report [A/52/871-S/1998/318] on the causes of conflict and the promotion of peace and sustainable development in Africa, the Secretary-General stated that, where significant force was required, the Security Council had in recent years frequently chosen to authorize action by willing Member States or coalitions of States. The obligation to obtain Council authorization prior to the use of force was clear; but authorizing forceful action by Member States or coalitions of States sometimes raised many questions, particularly the need to enhance the Council's ability to monitor activities that had been authorized. One means of monitoring such activities while also contributing to the broader aspects of a peace process was demonstrated in Liberia, where a small unarmed force of UN military observers was co-deployed alongside the Economic Community of West African States

Monitoring Group. That collaboration succeeded in helping to restore peace in Liberia and might be applicable to other situations. However, it should not be concluded that such responsibilities could henceforth be delegated solely to regional organizations, either in Africa or elsewhere. Delegation was not a panacea for the difficult problems facing peacekeeping, as regional organizations could face political, structural, financial or planning limitations. Judgement and caution had to be exercised in associating the United Nations with regional, subregional or multinational efforts, but the potential for positive cooperation should continue to be explored.

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/53/127] reaffirmed the important contribution that regional arrangements and agencies could make to peacekeeping. It emphasized that, in accordance with Article 53 of the Charter, no enforcement action should be taken under regional arrangements or by regional agencies without the authorization of the Security Council, which should be kept fully informed of activities undertaken or contemplated by regional arrangements or regional agencies for the maintenance of international peace and security. It urged the strengthening of cooperation between the United Nations and relevant regional arrangements and agencies to enhance the capability of the international community in the maintenance of peace and security, and encouraged the Secretary-General to take steps to realize such cooperation. The Committee stressed that cooperation had to abide by the letter and spirit of the Charter, taking into account instruments and mechanisms in each regional arrangement or agency concerned. The Committee reaffirmed its recommendation that the United Nations, in consultation with OAU and with the cooperation of Member States, give particular attention to strengthening the institutional capacity of OAU. That would include coordinating training programmes for military and civilian police personnel of African countries and mobilizing assistance, in particular logistical and financial support, to African peacekeeping capacity and to related activities of OAU. The Special Committee noted the efforts of those countries that had implemented joint training exercises and other training activities in cooperation with African countries. It welcomed the Secretary-General's intention to resume in the near future the practice of holding meetings on cooperation between the United Nations and regional arrangements and agencies and requested him to inform it of the results of such discussions.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 30 November [meeting 3950] to consider regional arrangements in the maintenance of peace and, following consultations among its members, authorized its President to make the following statement [S/PRST/1998/35] on its behalf:

The Security Council recalls the report of the Secretary-General of 13 April 1998 on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa. While reaffirming its primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security, it underlines the increasingly important role of regional arrangements and agencies and of coalitions of Member States in the conduct of activity in this field. The Council reaffirms that all such activity taken under regional arrangements or by regional agencies, including enforcement action, shall be carried out in accordance with Articles 52, 53 and 54 of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations. It also underlines the importance of all such activity being guided by the principles of sovereignty, political independence and territorial integrity of all States, and by the operational principles for United Nations peacekeeping operations set out in the statement of its President of 28 May 1993.

The Council welcomes the views expressed by the Secretary-General in paragraphs 42 to 44 of his report, in particular as they relate to Africa. It recognizes that the authorization by the Council of action by regional or subregional organizations, or by Member States or coalitions of States, can be one type of effective response to conflict situations, and commends Member States and regional and subregional organizations which have undertaken efforts and initiatives towards the maintenance of peace and security. In order to enhance its ability to monitor any activities that it has authorized, the Council expresses its readiness to examine appropriate measures whenever such an authorization is being considered.

In this regard, the Council notes that there is a wide variety of arrangements and relationships which have developed in different instances of cooperation between the United Nations, Member States and regional and subregional organizations in the maintenance of peace and security, and that monitoring requirements will vary and should be tailored according to the specifics of the operations in question, including in relation to ongoing peace efforts. But in general, operations should have a clear mandate, including a statement of objectives, rules of engagement, a well-developed plan of action, a timeframe for disengagement, and arrangements for regular reporting to the Council. The Council affirms that a high standard of conduct is essential for successful operations, and recalls the role of the United Nations in setting general standards of peacekeeping. The Council stresses that missions and operations must ensure that their personnel respect and observe international law, including humanitarian, human rights and refugee law.

The Council is also of the view that, where necessary or desirable, monitoring of such activities could also be enhanced by the inclusion of certain civilian elements, for instance dealing with political and human rights issues, within missions and operations. In this context, the Security Council also recognizes that the attachment of a United Nations liaison officer or team could improve the flow of information between the Council and those engaged in the conduct of an operation authorized by it but carried out by a coalition of Member States or a regional or subregional organization. It expresses its readiness to consider, in consultation with the Member States and regional or subregional organization concerned, the deployment of liaison officers to such operations, on the basis of recommendations by the Secretary-General and as proposed in paragraph 8 of its resolution 1197(1998) of 18 September 1998. In the case of operations conducted by regional or subregional organizations, the Council also expresses its readiness to consider, in consultation with the regional or subregional organization concerned, whether the deployment of liaison officers at the headquarters of the organization would be valuable.

The Council also underlines that the monitoring of such operations could be enhanced by the improved flow and exchange of information, inter alia, through regular submission of reports, as in the case of the Inter-African Mission to Monitor the Implementation of the Bangui Agreements in the Central African Republic, and through the holding of regular briefing meetings between its members and regional and subregional organizations and Member States conducting such operations, and troop contributors and other participating Member States.

The Council shares the view of the Secretary-General that one possible means of monitoring activities of forces authorized by it, while also contributing to the broader aspects of a peace process, is through co-deployment of United Nations observers and other personnel together with an operation carried out by a regional or subregional organization or by a coalition of Member States. The Council agrees with the Secretary-General that, while such collaboration is not applicable in all cases, co-deployment can make an important contribution to peacekeeping efforts, as in the cases of Liberia and Sierra Leone where United Nations observer missions have been deployed alongside the Monitoring Group of the Economic Community of West African States.

The Council underlines the importance, whenever the United Nations deploys forces alongside forces of regional or subregional organizations or Member States, of establishing a clear framework for cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and the regional or subregional organization or coalition of Member States concerned. Such a framework should include specifying objectives, the careful delineation of the respective roles and responsibilities of the United Nations and the regional or subregional organization or coalition concerned and of the areas of interaction of forces, and clear provisions regarding the safety and security of personnel. The Council also stresses the importance of ensuring that United Nations missions maintain their identity and autonomy with regard to operational command and control and logistics.

The Council urges Member States and regional and subregional organizations to ensure the Council is kept fully informed of their activities for the maintenance of peace and security. The Council undertakes to consult regularly with Member States and regional and subregional organizations involved in such activities to facilitate this.

On 18 September, the Council, in resolution 1197(1998), encouraged the establishment of partnerships between States and regional and subregional organizations involved in peacekeeping operations. It encouraged the Secretary-General to facilitate those efforts, and requested him to develop a framework to coordinate such partnerships. It also endorsed the establishment of a United Nations Preventive Action Liaison Office in OAU.

In February, Poland and Ukraine [A/53/68] transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of an agreement between them signed on 26 November 1997 to create a joint military unit to participate in international peace and humanitarian operations under the auspices of international organizations.

Dag Hammarskjöld Medal

On 6 October, following a commemorative meeting of the General Assembly to mark the fiftieth anniversary of UN peacekeeping (see above), the Dag Hammarskjöld Medal was presented to the families of Dag Hammarskjöld, the second Secretary-General, after whom the medal was named and who died in a plane crash on 18 September 1961 while on a mission in the Congo; Commandant Rene de Labarriere, the first peacekeeper to lose his life in a peacekeeping operation on 6 July 1948; and Count Folke Bernadotte, the United Nations Mediator in Palestine, who was assassinated on 17 September 1948 in Jerusalem.

The Medal was established by Security Council resolution 1121(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 63] as a tribute to the sacrifice of those who had lost their lives as a result of service in UN peacekeeping operations.

Chapter II

Africa

The perennial problems of ethnic conflict and political instability continued to afflict a number of countries in Africa in 1998. Although the situation in some countries, including those of the Great Lakes region, seemed to improve slightly compared with 1997, in others new or renewed incidents of fighting were reported, as in Angola and Sierra Leone and along the border between Eritrea and Ethiopia. During the year, the Security Council adopted a series of resolutions and statements on ways to promote durable peace and sustainable development in the region. Action taken by the Council included the establishment of a working group to review the Secretary-General's April recommendations on the causes of conflict and the promotion of peace and development in Africa; improving the effectiveness of arms embargoes; strengthening regional peacekeeping mechanisms; halting illicit arms flows to and within Africa; and protecting refugee camps. The Council President made statements on the causes of conflict and the promotion of peace, a ministerial meeting on Africa, regional arrangements in the maintenance of peace, and the possible establishment of post-conflict peace-building structures. In December, the General Assembly adopted a resolution encompassing all of those subjects.

In the Great Lakes region, the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) remained volatile in 1998. The DRC Government established by President Laurent-Désiré Kabila in May 1997 was faced with renewed fighting by opposition forces in the eastern part of the country beginning in August 1998. The Security Council's International Commission of Inquiry, which had the mandate to collect information on the sale or supply of arms to former Rwandan government forces in the Great Lakes region, stated in a November report that elements of former Rwandan forces scattered throughout the region had converged in the DRC during the conflict that began in August and were involved in the fighting. The DRC accused Rwanda and Uganda of sending to it troops that were also reportedly involved in ethnic violence. Other countries of the region—Angola, Namibia and Zimbabwe—provided assistance in the form of military forces to the DRC. Twice during the year, the Council expressed concern about the continuing conflict in the DRC and the threat to regional security. It also expressed support for regional mediation efforts and readiness to consider UN involvement to assist in implementing a ceasefire agreement.

In Rwanda, the presence of elements of the former Rwandan Armed Forces and militias in neighbouring countries was a contributing factor to the deteriorating security situation and the continuation of armed conflict in the country leading to the displacement of thousands of civilians, according to the International Commission of Inquiry. The UN presence in Rwanda was reduced in July when the Human Rights Field Operation was withdrawn following the failure of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) and the Government to reach agreement on the terms of an OHCHR presence.

The situation in Burundi, despite some outbreaks of violence between ethnic groups, improved in 1998 through mediation efforts to find a negotiated solution. The Arusha Peace Process, begun in 1996, gained momentum at three sessions of inclusive talks under the guidance of the Facilitator of the peace process appointed by the Organization of African Unity (OAU). At those talks, attended by the Government, the National Assembly and 15 political parties, participants agreed on a ceasefire and a schedule for further work on future governmental bodies.

In Angola, the civil war resumed in many areas in 1998, largely due to the failure by the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA) to comply with its obligations under the 1994 Lusaka Protocol. The security situation deteriorated further as UNITA again launched armed attacks, new minelaying activities and banditry, compelling the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola (MONUA) to withdraw from some of its team sites.

The military regime that had ruled Sierra Leone since a 1997 coup d'état was overthrown in February 1998, and in March the constitutionally elected President returned to Freetown. However, resistance by the ousted military junta, composed of the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council and the Revolutionary United Front, continued throughout the year, creating a serious humanitarian crisis as thousands of Sierra Leoneans fled to other parts of the country and into neighbouring States. In March, the Council terminated the sanctions and arms embargo it had imposed against Sierra Leone in 1997, and in July it established the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone (UNOMSIL) to monitor the security situation and report on human rights violations.

In March, the Council established a peace-keeping mission, the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic (MINURCA), which assumed the responsibilities of an inter-African force sent to that country in 1997. The mandate of the inter-African force was to monitor the implementation of the Bangui Agreements, by which the warring factions agreed to end the crisis and to hold legislative and presidential elections; the legislative elections were held in November and December under international monitoring.

The United Nations continued its efforts to find a political solution to the situation in Somalia, which remained a divided country without a national Government. Despite the 1997 signing by a number of Somali political leaders of the Cairo Declaration on a national reconciliation process, progress remained elusive. In other peacemaking efforts, OAU and the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD) mandated Ethiopia to take the lead mediating role. In December, the General Assembly, noting the fragile humanitarian and security situation and the absence of central authority and effective civil institutions, called for international humanitarian assistance and the economic and social rehabilitation of the country.

A border dispute between Eritrea and Ethiopia led to armed conflict in May. In letters to the Security Council, both sides expressed their views as to the origin and nature of the conflict and accused each other of aggression, as well as involvement in ethnic violence and human rights violations. The Council condemned the use of force and demanded that they immediately cease hostilities. OAU, together with a facilitator team composed of Rwanda and the United States, played a pivotal role in the mediation efforts, which led in November to the adoption of a framework agreement for the peaceful settlement of the dispute.

The United Nations continued to work towards holding a referendum for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara, as agreed in 1990 by Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (POLISARIO). Progress was made in the identification of voters, but by the end of the year the process stalled over identification of members of three tribal groupings.

In Guinea-Bissau, a conflict broke out in mid-year between government forces and the self-proclaimed military junta. Following mediation efforts by the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries and the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), the two sides agreed on a truce in July and a ceasefire in August. In November, they signed the Abuja Agreement, by which they agreed to the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Guinea-Bissau, the interposition of an ECOWAS force, the establishment of a new Government of national unity and the holding of elections. The Security Council welcomed the Agreement and approved the ECOWAS force's mandate.

In 1998, the Sudan was involved in disputes with Eritrea and Uganda and it continued to suffer the effects of the civil war in the south. Although the two parties to the conflict agreed to a ceasefire under the auspices of IGAD, the humanitarian situation deteriorated and international emergency relief efforts were needed. In August, the United States bombed a pharmaceutical plant in Khartoum, about which the Security Council received a number of communications.

The sanctions imposed against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya in 1992 in order to obtain Libya's cooperation in turning over the two individuals suspected of involvement in a 1988 aircraft bombing over Lockerbie, Scotland, were upheld once again by the Council in 1998. However, the Council welcomed the initiative taken by the United Kingdom and the United States to hold a trial of the two Libyan suspects before a Scottish court in a neutral country (the Netherlands). The Council decided that the sanctions regime against Libya would be suspended upon the arrival of the two suspects in the Netherlands.

The reconciliation and reconstruction of Liberia that had begun in 1997 after seven years of civil war progressed in 1998. The United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Liberia played a leading role in that process.

Promotion of peace in Africa

In April, the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa. The issue of regional security and promotion of development was the subject of a number of Council resolutions and of statements issued by the President during the year. In May, the Council decided to establish for a six-month period an ad hoc Working Group to review the Secretary-General's recommendations on maintenance of international peace and security. Meeting at the ministerial level in September, the Council adopted a statement in which it indicated that, based on the Working Group's recommendations, it had taken concrete steps as part of a wider, comprehensive response to the recommendations put forward by the Secretary-General, including strengthening both support for regional and subregional initiatives and arms embargoes. It recognized the need to stem illicit arms flows to and in Africa, to assist host Governments in Africa in maintaining the security and neutrality of refugee camps and to support the strengthening of the African peacekeeping capacity. In late 1998, the Council issued statements on the related issues of regional arrangements in the maintenance of peace [S/PRST/1998/35] and the possible establishment of post-conflict peace-building structures [S/PRST/1998/38] (see preceding chapter). The Secretary-General's recommendations were also considered by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council. In December, the Assembly adopted resolution 53/92, covering many aspects of conflict prevention in Africa through the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in response to a 1997 Security Council request [YUN 1997, p. 68], reported in April 1998 on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa [A/52/871-S/1998/318]. The report was also submitted to the General Assembly and was made available to the Economic and Social Council and other components of the UN system that had responsibilities in Africa, including the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund (IMF)).

The Secretary-General stated that although Africa as a whole had begun to make significant economic and political progress, progress in many countries remained threatened or impeded by conflict. Lasting prevention of conflict was the means to achieve human security and development, the cardinal mission of the United Nations. Conflict in Africa posed a major challenge to the United Nations. Although the Organization was intended to deal with inter-State warfare, it was being required more and more to respond to intra-State instability and conflict. In those conflicts the main aim, increasingly, was the destruction not only of armies but of civilians and entire ethnic groups. Preventing such wars had become a matter of defending humanity.

Since 1970, more than 30 wars had been fought in Africa, the vast majority of them intra-State in origin, the report stated. In 1996 alone, 14 of the 53 countries of Africa were afflicted by armed conflict, accounting for more than half of all war-related deaths worldwide and resulting in more than 8 million refugees, returnees and displaced persons. By not averting those tragedies, African leaders had failed the peoples of Africa; the international community had failed them; the United Nations had failed them. The Secretary-General hoped to add momentum to Africa's quest for peace and prosperity by proposing realistic and achievable recommendations that might reduce those conflicts.

Although the sources of conflict in Africa were diverse, the Secretary-General said, the common themes were historical legacies; internal factors (seizure of power, ethnic or regional rivalry); external factors (super-Power competition during the cold war, African Governments supporting conflicts in neighbouring countries); economic motives; and particular situations (competition for scarce land and water resources).

With regard to the response to conflict situations, the Secretary-General stated that the United Nations had improved its early warning capabilities. However, without early action, early warning was of little use. Whether the response involved diplomatic efforts, a peacekeeping deployment or a humanitarian intervention, the sooner action was taken the more effective it was likely to be. The Secretary-General urged Governments in situations of possible or actual conflict to consider the appointment of special mediators or commissions to investigate causes and recommend practical solutions. Noting that the deployment of peacemaking resources was an essential part of any effort, whether national or international, to prevent, contain and resolve conflicts, the Secretary-General stressed that those efforts needed to be well coordinated and well prepared. In that context, he discussed harmonizing the policies and actions of external actors; avoiding a proliferation of mediation efforts; mobilizing international support for peace efforts; improving the effectiveness of sanctions; and stopping the proliferation of arms.

As to peacekeeping, the Secretary-General noted that, historically, the United Nations had deployed more of its peacekeeping operations in Africa than in any other region. The deployment in 1989 of operations in Angola and Namibia began a new era of complex, post-cold-war peacekeeping. Of the 32 operations launched since then, 13 were in Africa. In recent years, following difficulties in Somalia and the former Yugoslavia, the international community had been reluctant to assume the political and financial exposure associated with peacekeeping operations, as could be seen by the price paid in Rwanda. In reaction, some African Governments, especially in the Great Lakes region, had marginalized the United Nations from further political involvement in the region's affairs. Stressing the importance of re-examining the UN experience in Africa in order to extract guidance for the future, the Secretary-General discussed lessons learned from Angola, Mozambique, Rwanda and Somalia; roles for UN peacekeeping in Africa; supporting regional and subregional initiatives; and ensuring a consistent approach.

Addressing the issue of humanitarian assistance, the Secretary-General noted that Governments, international organizations, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and anti-government forces all had an important impact on humanitarian situations, and humanitarian action could have important political, social, economic and environmental repercussions as well. A principled and coordinated approach to humanitarian assistance could facilitate the preparation of a coherent and effective strategy for recovery and reconstruction. Discussing humanitarian imperatives, the Secretary-General made recommendations with regard to protecting civilians in conflict situations, refugee security, mitigating the social and environmental impact of refugees on host countries and coordinating humanitarian assistance. As to the special challenges of humanitarian assistance, the Secretary-General questioned whether assistance facilitated political inaction, whether it helped to fuel conflict, whether resources were being diverted from other critical priorities and whether the multiplicity of actors and mandates impeded the provision of effective assistance. He stressed that unless there was reconstruction and development in the aftermath of conflict, there could be little expectation of progress or durable peace.

Post-conflict peace-building efforts—actions undertaken at the end of a conflict to consolidate peace and prevent a recurrence of armed confrontation—required more than diplomatic and military input. Peace-building might involve the creation or strengthening of national institutions, monitoring elections, promoting human rights, providing for reintegration and rehabilitation programmes, and creating conditions for resumed development. The crucial underlying need in post-conflict situations was the security of ordinary people in the form of real peace and access to social facilities.

In pursuing those objectives, four requirements were clear: time was of the essence; a multifaceted approach covering diplomatic, political and economic factors had to be adopted; the effort should be adequately financed; and there had to be high-level strategic and administrative coordination among the many actors. The Secretary-General went on to discuss the transition to and the priorities of post-conflict peace-building; the financing of recovery; and working towards a coordinated international response.

With regard to building a durable peace and promoting economic growth, the Secretary-General stressed the need to work towards good governance (securing respect for human rights and the rule of law; promoting transparency and accountability in public administration; enhancing administrative capacity; strengthening democratic governance) and sustainable development (creating a positive environment for investment and economic growth; emphasizing social development; restructuring international aid; reducing debt burdens; opening international markets; support for regional cooperation and integration; harmonizing current international and bilateral initiatives).

The Secretary-General stressed that peace and development in Africa could be given a new momentum with sufficient political will on the part of Africa and of the international community. He highlighted three areas to which Africa should devote particular attention: it should demonstrate the will to rely on political rather than military responses to problems; it should take good governance seriously, ensuring respect for human rights and the rule of law, strengthening democratization, and promoting transparency and capability in public administration; and it had to enact and adhere to the various reforms needed to promote economic growth. Likewise, the international community should summon the political will to intervene where it could have an impact and invest where resources were needed. New sources of funding were required, but so too was better use of existing resources and the enactment of trade and debt measures that would enable Africa to generate and better reinvest its own resources. To maintain the momentum for action in support of Africa, the Secretary-General called on the Security Council to reconvene at ministerial level on a biennial basis so as to assess efforts made and actions needed. He also urged that consideration be given to convening the Council at summit level within five years for that purpose.

The Secretary-General concluded by saying that the time was long past when anyone could claim ignorance about what was happening in Africa or what was needed to achieve progress. All should face the responsibility for producing change. The United Nations remained ready to play its part; so should the world and Africa.

The Secretary-General's report was considered by the Security Council at meetings on 16 April [meeting 3871], 24 April [meeting 3875] and 28 May [meeting 3886].

Zimbabwe, addressing the Council on behalf of President Robert Mugabe, the current OAU Chairman, on 24 April, said that at the special ministerial meeting of the Council in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 66] a new partnership was launched between OAU and the United Nations, between Africa and the international community. As the world's poorest region, Africa had been disproportionately afflicted by intra-State conflicts, and therefore merited the special attention of the United Nations in particular and the international community in general. While Africa was determined to take greater responsibility for the resolution of African crises, it recognized that there could never be an exclusively African agenda for peace; it would always be a UN agenda to which the entire international community had to subscribe and lend its support.

Calling on the international community to assess and buttress OAU's capacity in the prevention, management and resolution of conflicts in Africa, OAU requested the Secretary-General to send a team to OAU headquarters to speed up the establishment of an early warning system there; provide technical assistance and training of personnel; institutionalize the exchange of information between the early warning systems of OAU and the United Nations; provide logistical support; and mobilize financial support for the OAU Peace Fund.

Besides early detection of incipient conflicts, African countries were keen to address the issue of building capacities for early responses to conflict on the political and diplomatic front, as well as rapid deployment of peacekeepers. As to the structural adjustment programmes prescribed for many African countries by the Bretton Woods institutions, although some economic reforms had been achieved, the structural adjustment had had an adverse impact on African societies in terms of curtailed social spending, particularly for health and education. Africa therefore supported the Secretary-General's perception that economic development must manifest itself in the quality of life and the standard of living of the African people.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 28 May [meeting 3886], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1170(1998). The draft [S/1998/433] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling the statement of its President of 25 September 1997,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 13 April 1998 submitted to the General Assembly and to the Security Council in accordance with the above-mentioned statement,

Fully supporting the engagement of the United Nations in Africa through its diplomatic, peacekeeping, humanitarian, economic development and other activities,

Reaffirming the principles of political independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States,

Reaffirming also the obligation of all Member States to settle their disputes by peaceful means, and stressing its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter on regional arrangements,

Mindful of the Cairo Declaration of 1993, which stipulated that the Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution of the Organization of African Unity would have as a primary objective the anticipation and prevention of conflicts,

Recognizing that the adoption of the African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty, declaring Africa a nuclear-weapon-free zone, is an important contribution to the promotion of regional peace and security and to global efforts towards nuclear non-proliferation and nuclear disarmament,

Gravely concerned that the continuation of armed conflicts in the continent threatens regional peace, causes massive human displacement, suffering and poverty, perpetuates instability and diverts scarce resources from long-term development,

Recognizing the importance of the commitment of the United Nations through its Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other United Nations agencies, and of humanitarian organizations to assist the efforts of African States to address humanitarian and refugee crises in accordance with international law, including international humanitarian law,

Stressing the close linkage between international peace and security and sustainable development,

Noting that African States have made significant strides towards democratization, economic reform, and respect for and protection of human rights, and stressing the importance of promoting political stability, peace and sustainable development,

Stressing the importance of promoting good governance, the rule of law and sustainable development as essential factors in the prevention of conflicts in Africa,

Expressing concern that the use of mercenaries and the presence of armed militias continue to contribute to instability in Africa,

Emphasizing the destabilizing effects of the illicit transfer of arms, especially small arms, and urging Governments concerned to combat the trafficking of such weapons,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 13 April 1998 and the comprehensive recommendations contained therein, and commends the Secretary-General for his efforts to address the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa, and for the steps he is taking to reinforce the role of the United Nations system towards these ends;

2. Stresses that the challenges in Africa demand a comprehensive response, and in this context expresses the hope that the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, other relevant bodies of the United Nations, regional and subregional organizations, international financial institutions and other relevant organizations, as well as Member States will consider the report and its recommendations and take action as they deem appropriate within their respective areas of competence;

3. Notes the important role of the Secretary-General in coordinating the work of the United Nations agencies concerned in the implementation of the recommendations in his report, and requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council regularly informed of the efforts being undertaken by the agencies and other bodies of the United Nations system in this regard;

4. Decides to establish an ad hoc Working Group, comprising all members of the Council, for a period of six months, to review all recommendations in the report related to the maintenance of international peace and security, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, and in that context, to prepare a framework for the implementation of recommendations, as appropriate, and to submit specific proposals for concrete action for consideration by the Council by September 1998;

5. Expresses its intention to convene at the ministerial level on a biennial basis, beginning in September 1998 and subsequently as needed in order to assess progress in promoting peace and security in Africa;

6. Stresses the importance of appropriate consultations and cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity on the follow-up to the report;

7. Welcomes the important contributions of the Organization of African Unity to conflict prevention and resolution in Africa, including its Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution, as well as those of subregional arrangements;

8. Welcomes also the efforts made by Member States, regional organizations and the United Nations to enhance the capacity of African States to contribute to peacekeeping operations in accordance with the Charter;

9. Invites Member States and regional organizations to provide assistance to the Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution of the Organization of African Unity to enhance its capacity in the anticipation and prevention of conflicts;

10. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take concrete actions aimed at enhancing the capacity of the Organization of African Unity to anticipate and prevent conflicts in Africa, on the basis of the United Nations-Organization of African Unity Cooperation Agreement of 15 November 1965;

11. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By a 10 July note [E/1998/88], the Secretary-General drew the attention of the Economic and Social Council to paragraph 2 of Security Council resolution 1170(1998).

By decision 1998/283 of 30 July, the Council welcomed the Secretary-General's report, commended him for his comprehensive and in-depth review of development challenges in Africa and took note of his recommendations. The Council decided, subsequent to General Assembly consideration of the report, to undertake in 1999 substantive discussions on the implementation of the report's recommendations.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 16 September [meeting 3927], the Security Council resumed its consideration of the situation in Africa, with particular reference to the observance of arms embargoes established by the Council and to peacekeeping operations. On the same date, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1196(1998), the draft of which [S/1998/852] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 1170(1998) of 28 May 1998,

Recalling the statement made by its President on 25 September 1997 at the meeting of the Council at the level of Ministers for Foreign Affairs on the situation in Africa,

Having considered the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General of 13 April 1998 entitled "The causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa", which was submitted to the General Assembly and to the Security Council in accordance with the above-mentioned statement, regarding the importance of strengthening the effectiveness of arms embargoes as a means to diminish the availability of arms with which to pursue armed conflicts,

Stressing the principles of the political independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States,

Mindful of the Cairo Declaration of 1993, which stipulated that the Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution of the Organization of African Unity would have as a primary objective the anticipation and prevention of conflicts,

Reaffirming the obligations of all Member States to settle their international disputes by peaceful means, and stressing the primary responsibility of the Security Council for the maintenance of international peace and security in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing that the International Commission of Inquiry established by its resolution 1013(1995) of 7 September 1995 and reactivated in accordance with its resolution 1161 (1998) of 9 April 1998 is an example of a useful means for strengthening the effectiveness of an arms embargo established by the Council,

1. Reiterates the obligation of all Member States to carry out decisions of the Security Council on arms embargoes;

2. Encourages each Member State, as appropriate, to consider as a means of implementing the obligations referred to in paragraph 1 above the adoption of legislation or other legal measures making the violation of arms embargoes established by the Council a criminal offence;

3. Requests the Security Council committees established by resolutions imposing arms embargoes in Africa to include in their annual reports a substantive section on the implementation of the arms embargoes, on possible violations of the measures reported to the committees and with recommendations as appropriate for strengthening the effectiveness of the arms embargoes;

4. Encourages the chairmen of the committees referred to in paragraph 3 above to seek to establish channels of communication with regional and subregional organizations and bodies, including in Africa the Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution of the Organization of African Unity, the Economic Community of West African States, the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa, the Southern African Development Community and the Intergovernmental Authority on Development, in addition to other sources of information, including Member States, already mentioned in the guidelines of the committees, in order to improve the monitoring of arms embargoes through wider and regular exchange of information with relevant parties in the region concerned;

5. Reiterates its request that all States, relevant United Nations bodies and, as appropriate, other organizations and interested parties report information on possible violations of arms embargoes established by the Council to the relevant committees referred to in paragraph 3 above;

6. Requests the committees referred to in paragraph 3 above to make relevant information publicly available through appropriate media, including through the improved use of information technology;

7. Welcomes the initiative of the chairmen of the committees established pursuant to resolution 864(1993) of 15 September 1993 and resolution 1132(1997) of 8 October 1997 concerning the situation in Angola and Sierra Leone, respectively, to visit countries in the region, and invites other committees to consider this approach, where and when appropriate, in order to enhance the full and effective implementation of the measures specified in their respective mandates with a view to urging the parties to comply with relevant Council resolutions;

8. Expresses its willingness to consider, whenever it establishes arms embargoes, all appropriate measures to assist their effective implementation, and notes, in this context, that measures such as inquiries into arms-trafficking routes, the follow-up of possible specific violations and the deployment of border or point-of-entry monitors may be relevant, in consultation with the countries concerned;

9. Urges Member States, relevant United Nations bodies and agencies and other international agencies to consider the provision of technical and other assistance, in consultation with the States concerned, to facilitate the implementation of arms embargoes;

10. Stresses that arms embargoes established by the Council should have clearly established objectives and provisions for regular review of the measures with a view to lifting them when the objectives are met, in accordance with the terms of the applicable Council resolutions;

11. Requests all Security Council committees established pursuant to resolutions imposing arms embargoes to consider, as appropriate, the application of the measures contained in the present resolution;

12. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

At the same meeting, the President of the Council issued the following statement [S/PRST/1998/28] on behalf of the members:

The Security Council welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 13 April 1998 entitled "The causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa", which was submitted to the General Assembly and the Security Council.

It agrees with the Secretary-General that the credibility of the United Nations in Africa to a great extent depends upon the willingness of the international community to act and to explore new means of advancing the objectives of peace and security in the African continent.

The Council, which has the primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for international peace and security, expresses its commitment to exercising this responsibility in relation to Africa, and affirms that strengthening Africa's capacity to participate in all aspects of peacekeeping operations, including their military, police, humanitarian and other civilian components, is a key priority.

The Council encourages increased bilateral and multilateral cooperation in the field of peacekeeping, especially capacity-building, between Member States, the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, as well as subregional organizations in Africa. It welcomes the efforts already undertaken by the United Nations and Member States to promote greater transparency and coordination in multilateral efforts to enhance Africa's capacity for peacekeeping. In particular, it welcomes efforts to implement the recommendations in the report of the Secretary-General of 1 November 1995 entitled "Improving preparedness for conflict prevention and peacekeeping in Africa" and to follow up the outcome of the meetings organized by the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the Secretariat in December 1997 and May 1998. It encourages all States and organizations concerned to work with African States in particular on the basis of African initiatives and proposals.

The Council encourages contributions, financial and in kind, aimed at enhancing Africa's peacekeeping capacity. In particular, it urges Member States to contribute to the trust funds established by the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity to improve preparedness for conflict prevention and peacekeeping in Africa.

The Council affirms the role of the United Nations in setting general standards for peacekeeping, and urges compliance with existing United Nations guidelines, including through the use of the "Ten Rules: Code of Personal Conduct for Blue Helmets", which were elaborated following a request by the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations. It encourages all those involved in enhancing Africa's peacekeeping capacity to ensure that training for and the conduct of peacekeeping give due emphasis to international humanitarian law and human rights, including the rights of the child, as well as to gender issues. It requests all those conducting peacekeeping operations in Africa to pay particular attention to the situation of children in armed conflict, as appropriate, both in mandates for and reports about such operations.

The Council supports the efforts of the United Nations, regional and subregional organizations as well as Member States in the field of training for peacekeeping.

The Council welcomes the readiness of the United Nations to act as a clearing house for information on available training initiatives. It particularly welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to establish a United Nations database on training. With the aim of strengthening Africa's peacekeeping capacity, the Council requests the Secretary-General to pursue these plans and to include in the database information about African needs in this field, possible regional and extra-regional contributions to assist in achieving this goal, and available expertise on training. It encourages Member States and regional and subregional organizations to contribute information to the database. It encourages the Secretary-General to consider possible further uses and broadening of United Nations databases, for instance in humanitarian crises.

The Council also welcomes the proposal of the Secretary-General to establish an informal working group composed of African and non-African States directly involved or interested in the provision of training assistance.

The Council emphasizes the value of training aimed at improving coordination and cooperation among military, police, humanitarian and other civilian components of peacekeeping operations. It encourages the Secretary-General and Member States to engage international and non-governmental humanitarian organizations, as appropriate, in peacekeeping training activities.

The Council underlines the importance of the availability of appropriately trained personnel and relevant equipment for all components of peacekeeping operations. In this context, it encourages increased participation by Member States, in particular from Africa, in the United Nations standby arrangements. The Council further encourages the use of United Nations Training Assistance Teams as a useful tool in support of national peacekeeping training. It recognizes the value of joint training exercises, as well as the establishment of partnerships between States whose contingents require equipment and States and organizations that are able to assist them. It also encourages the exchange of lessons learned from previous operations.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to study ways to improve the availability of logistics for peacekeeping efforts in Africa.

The Council stresses the need for it to be fully informed of peacekeeping activities carried out or planned by regional or subregional organizations and underlines that the improved flow of information and the holding of regular briefing meetings between members of the Council, African regional and subregional organizations involved in peacekeeping operations and troop contributors and other participating Member States have an important role to play in helping to enhance African peacekeeping capacity. In that context, the Council encourages the Secretary-General to establish appropriate United Nations liaison with regional and subregional organizations and invites those organizations and Member States to provide the Council and the Secretary-General with information on their activities in the field of peacekeeping.

On 18 September [meeting 3928], the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1197(1998). The draft [S/1998/855] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Having considered the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General of 13 April 1998 entitled "The causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa", which was submitted to the General Assembly and to the Security Council, regarding the need for the United Nations to provide support for regional and subregional initiatives and the strengthening of coordination between the United Nations and regional and subregional organizations in the area of conflict prevention and the maintenance of peace,

Recalling the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter on regional arrangements or agencies, which set out the basic principles governing their activities and establish the legal framework for cooperation with the United Nations, in the area of the maintenance of international peace and security,

Recalling also the agreement of 15 November 1965 on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity as updated and signed on 9 October 1990 by the Secretaries-General of the two organizations,

Recalling further the resolutions of the General Assembly on the enhancement of cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, in particular resolutions 43/12 of 25 October 1988, 43/27 of 18 November 1988, 44/17 of 1 November 1989, 47/148 of 18 December 1992, 48/25 of 29 November 1993, 49/64 of 15 December 1994, and 50/158 of 21 December 1995,

Mindful of the need for continued cooperation between the United Nations and its relevant bodies and specialized agencies on the one hand, and the Organization of African Unity and subregional organizations in Africa on the other,

Welcoming the high-level meeting between the United Nations and regional organizations held in New York on 28 July 1998, and encouraging the holding of such meetings at regular intervals,

Noting that subregional arrangements in Africa, as well as the Organization of African Unity through its Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution, are developing their capacities in preventive diplomacy, and encouraging African States to make use of these arrangements and mechanisms in the prevention of conflict and maintenance of peace in Africa,

I

1. Urges the Secretary-General, through the use of the United Nations Trust Fund for Improving Preparedness for Conflict Prevention and Peacekeeping in Africa, to assist in the establishment within the Organization of African Unity of an early warning system based on the model currently being used by the United Nations, and to assist in strengthening and making operational the conflict management centre of the Organization of African Unity and its situation room;

2. Encourages contributions to the Trust Fund and to the Peace Fund of the Organization of African Unity, and also encourages the Secretary-General to develop a strategy for the purpose of enhancing contributions to the Trust Fund;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to assist Member States in the further development of commonly accepted peacekeeping doctrine and to share existing peacekeeping doctrine and concepts of operations with the Organization of African Unity and subregional organizations in Africa;

4. Invites the Secretary-General to assist the Organization of African Unity and subregional organizations in Africa to establish logistics assessment teams through the sharing of information on the establishment, composition, methods and functioning of United Nations logistics assessment teams, and also invites the Secretary-General to assist the Organization of African Unity and subregional organizations, as appropriate, to determine the logistical and financial requirements of regional or subregional peacekeeping operations authorized by the Council;

5. Encourages the establishment of partnerships between States and regional and subregional organizations involved in peacekeeping operations, in which one or more States or organizations contribute troops and others contribute equipment, encourages the Secretary-General to facilitate efforts to that end, and requests him to consider developing a framework to coordinate such partnerships;

6. Commends the various initiatives taken by several States to enhance African preparedness to participate in the military, police, humanitarian and other civilian components of peacekeeping operations, and in this context encourages joint training and simulation exercises and seminars with African peacekeepers;

7. Welcomes the proposal by the Economic Community of West African States to establish a Council of Elders within its Mechanism for the Prevention, Management, Resolution of Conflicts, Peacekeeping and Security for the purpose of facilitating mediation efforts, and urges the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Executive Secretary of the Economic Community of West African States, to assist in facilitating its establishment and to help to ensure its effectiveness;

II

8. Endorses the establishment of a United Nations Preventive Action Liaison Office in the Organization of African Unity, and urges the Secretary-General to consider ways of making this office more effective and also the possibility of appointing liaison officers to peacekeeping operations of the Organization of African Unity and of subregional organizations in Africa, which are authorized by the Council;

9. Encourages the enhancement of consultation and coordination between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity and between the United Nations and subregional organizations in Africa, both at the field and headquarters level, and recognizes that the nomination of joint special representatives may be useful to further these aims;

10. Welcomes the fact that both the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity have agreed to strengthen and broaden their cooperation on measures to prevent and resolve conflicts in Africa, and in this regard invites the Secretary-General:

(a) To adopt measures for an improved flow of information through systematic mechanisms between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity and between the United Nations and subregional organizations in Africa;

(b) To develop, in collaboration with the Organization of African Unity and with subregional organizations in Africa, common indicators for early warning, and share, as appropriate, early warning information both with their field representatives on the ground and with their headquarters;

(c) To arrange, in collaboration with the Organization of African Unity and with subregional organizations in Africa, occasional visits of staff at working level between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity and between the United Nations and subregional organizations in Africa;

(d) To arrange, in collaboration with the Organization of African Unity and with subregional organizations in Africa, joint expert meetings on certain specific areas of early warning and prevention, including joint reviews of potential and existing conflicts with a view to coordinating initiatives and actions;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to implement the present resolution in the course of his ongoing efforts to develop cooperation with the Organization of African Unity and subregional organizations in Africa and, where necessary, drawing on the Trust Fund, and to keep the Council informed periodically, as necessary, on the implementation of the present resolution;

12. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Ministerial-level meeting. As it had decided in May (see above), the Council met on 24 September [meeting 3931] at the level of Foreign Ministers to assess the security situation in Africa since its meeting at that level in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 66].

In addition to the Secretary-General's April report [A/52/871-S/1998/318], the Council had before it an 18 September letter [S/1998/876] from the Vice-Chancellor and Federal Minister for Foreign Affairs of Austria, in his capacity as President of the Council of Ministers of the European Union (EU). He said that the EU valued the holistic approach taken in the Secretary-General's report, with the central focus on human security and human development. It was fully committed to a proactive policy on conflict prevention and resolution, focusing on preventing the outbreak of violent conflicts at an early stage as well as on post-conflict peace-building and using the full range of policy instruments available. The EU fully endorsed the Secretary-General's call for greater coordination in providing humanitarian assistance and reiterated its strong concern for the safety and security of UN and related personnel. The Secretary-General's ideas on establishing an international mechanism to assist host Governments to maintain the security and neutrality of refugee camps and settlements were welcomed, as were efforts to introduce a moratorium on the production and transfer of small arms in West Africa. The EU was of the view that sanctions should be better targeted at decision makers and should be more rigorously enforced by the international community. It supported the need to ensure strict implementation of arms embargoes and, in that context, welcomed the provisions of Council resolution 1196(1998).

Addressing the Council, President Blaise Compaoré of Burkina Faso, in his capacity as the current OAU Chairman, mentioned areas of crisis in Africa that persisted, such as Angola and Somalia, and new conflicts such as those between Ethiopia and Eritrea and in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC). The solution to the two latter conflicts would require the further assistance and support of the international community, and most particularly of the United Nations, for the efforts of OAU. President Compaoré called on the United Nations to persevere in its mission of persuasion and mediation and become even more involved in the conflicts of the Great Lakes region and in Guinea-Bissau. Noting that economic development was another dimension of peace, he said he had proposed the convening of a summit conference to address questions related to economics and development in Africa. He concluded by stressing the need for further cooperation between OAU and the United Nations, describing it as more vital than ever.

The Secretary-General informed the Council that the UN Secretariat was working vigorously on follow-up activities to his April report. The implementation of those activities was being monitored by the Deputy Secretary-General. The United Nations, in partnership with OAU, was actively involved in seeking an end to crises in Angola, the DRC, Guinea-Bissau, Sierra Leone, Somalia and the Sudan and between Ethiopia and Eritrea. However, without the determination of the parties themselves to reach political accommodation, there was little that the United Nations and OAU could do but offer the band-aid of humanitarian assistance, often with great difficulty and at great risk.

The President of the Council issued the following statement [S/PRST/1998/29] on behalf of the Council members:

The Security Council met on 24 September 1998, at the level of Ministers for Foreign Affairs, in accordance with its resolution 1170(1998) of 28 May 1998, to assess progress in achieving peace and security in Africa since the last ministerial meeting on 25 September 1997. It recalls the statement by its President of 25 September 1997 and reiterates its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report of 13 April 1998.

The Council reaffirms its commitment to Africa in the areas of conflict prevention and the maintenance of international peace and security, in accordance with its responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations. It also reaffirms the principles of the political independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States.

The Council underlines that peaceful societies rest upon respect for fundamental human rights and the dignity and worth of the human person. It recognizes the close linkage between the promotion of economic and social development and the prevention of conflict. It stresses that the quest for peace in Africa requires a comprehensive, concerted and determined approach, encompassing the eradication of poverty, the promotion of democracy, sustainable development and respect for human rights, as well as conflict prevention and resolution, including peacekeeping, and humanitarian assistance. It underlines the fact that genuine political will is necessary, in Africa and beyond, to achieve durable results towards these ends, and stresses the urgent need for Member States, the United Nations system, including the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, the international financial institutions and other relevant organizations to continue to consider appropriate action in response to the comprehensive recommendations set out by the Secretary-General in his report.

The Council recognizes the positive developments in Africa in the past year and welcomes progress achieved by African States in promoting democratization, economic reform, the protection of human rights and sustainable development. It commends efforts by African States and regional and subregional organizations, in particular the Organization of African Unity, to resolve conflicts by peaceful means. It welcomes progress made in Sierra Leone and the Central African Republic, and in the peace process in Burundi. It urges all States and relevant bodies to provide financial and technical support to strengthen African regional and subregional arrangements for conflict prevention, the maintenance of peace and security and dispute settlement. It calls for an enhanced partnership between the United Nations and African regional and subregional organizations in support of these efforts.

The Council expresses its continuing concern over the number and intensity of, and the interrelationship among, conflicts in Africa, and especially at the emergence of new conflicts during the past year. The border conflict between Ethiopia and Eritrea, the resurgence of the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the impasse in the peace process in Angola, the continued violence in Sierra Leone, and the complex emergencies in Somalia and the Sudan, among others, cause grave concern. These situations, which in some cases threaten the stability of large parts of the continent, call for concerted action by African States, the international community and the United Nations system to prevent further tragedy.

The Council urgently calls upon African States and all parties concerned to demonstrate the political will to settle their disputes by peaceful rather than military means, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, and to respect international humanitarian law and the sovereignty, political independence and territorial integrity of States in the region. It also encourages States in the region to continue to improve the implementation of good governance and undertake the various reforms needed to promote economic growth. It calls upon the international community to assist those efforts initiated by African States and regional and subregional organizations aimed at such goals.

For its part, the Council expresses its renewed commitment to contributing to conflict resolution in Africa. In this context, it recalls its decisions during the past year to authorize two new United Nations peacekeeping operations, in the Central African Republic and Sierra Leone, to assist efforts towards peace and national reconciliation. It also expresses its determination to improve further its ability to prevent conflicts, and to make its responses to conflicts more efficient and effective, and underlines its support for measures taken within the United Nations system to strengthen post-conflict peace-building efforts.

The Council, based on the recommendations of its ad hoc Working Group established pursuant to its resolution 1170(1998), has already begun to take concrete steps as part of a wider, comprehensive response to the recommendations put forward by the Secretary-General. It has taken action to help to strengthen support for regional and subregional initiatives as well as to enhance coordination between the United Nations and regional and subregional organizations in the areas of conflict prevention and the maintenance of peace. It has also taken action in order to strengthen the effectiveness of arms embargoes imposed by the Council and addressed the need to support the strengthening of African peacekeeping capacity.

The Council encourages the ad hoc Working Group to continue its work, in accordance with its mandate, and to elaborate further concrete recommendations to the Council, in particular on the need to stem illicit arms flows to and in Africa and with regard to measures to assist host Governments in Africa in maintaining the security and neutrality of refugee camps and to enhance the ability of the Council to monitor activities authorized by it but carried out by Member States or coalitions of Member States.

The Council, recognizing that the challenge of achieving peace and security in Africa is a continuous process, will continue to assess progress in promoting peace and security in Africa at the level of Ministers for Foreign Affairs, on a biennial basis, in accordance with its resolution 1170(1998).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

In November, the Security Council continued its consideration of the situation in Africa, addressing specifically the status and treatment of refugees and illicit arms flows. With regard to the former subject, the Council had before it the Secretary-General's report on protection for humanitarian assistance to refugees and others in conflict situations (see PARTTHREE, Chapter XII).

On 19 November [meeting 3945], the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1208(1998), the draft of which [S/1998/1090] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 1170(1998) of 28 May 1998, Reaffirming also the statements of its President of 19 June 1997, 16 September 1998 and 29 September 1998,

Emphasizing that the provision of security to refugees and the maintenance of the civilian and humanitarian character of refugee camps and settlements is an integral part of the national, regional and international response to refugee situations and can contribute to the maintenance of international peace and security,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 13 April 1998 entitled "The causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa", which was submitted to the General Assembly and to the Security Council in accordance with the statement by its President of 25 September 1997,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 22 September 1998 on protection for humanitarian assistance to refugees and others in conflict situations,

Recognizing the extensive experience of African States in hosting refugees and in dealing with the effects of refugee camps and settlements,

Affirming the civilian and humanitarian character of refugee camps and settlements, and in this regard underlining the unacceptability of using refugees and other persons in refugee camps and settlements to achieve military purposes in the country of asylum or in the country of origin,

Noting the diverse causes of insecurity of refugee camps and settlements in Africa, including the presence of armed or military elements and other persons who do not qualify for international protection afforded refugees or otherwise do not require international protection, differences within the refugee population, conflicts between refugees and the local population, common crime and banditry and the flow of arms,

Recognizing the need to take steps to assist African States to improve the security of refugees and to maintain the civilian and humanitarian character of refugee camps and settlements in accordance with international refugee, human rights and humanitarian law,

Stressing the particular security needs of women, children and the elderly, who are the most vulnerable groups in refugee camps and settlements,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 52/103 and 52/132 of 12 December 1997 regarding, respectively, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and human rights and mass exoduses,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the principles relating to the status of refugees and the common standards for their treatment contained in the Convention relating to the Status of Refugees of 28 July 1951, as modified by the Protocol of 31 January 1967;

2. Underlines the particular relevance of the provisions contained in the Organization of African Unity Convention governing the specific aspects of refugee problems in Africa of 10 September 1969;

3. Affirms the primary responsibility of States hosting refugees to ensure the security and civilian and humanitarian character of refugee camps and settlements in accordance with international refugee, human rights and humanitarian law;

4. Calls upon African States further to develop institutions and procedures to implement the provisions of international law relating to the status and treatment of refugees and the provisions of the Organization of African Unity Convention, especially those relating to the location of refugees at a reasonable distance from the frontier of their country of origin and the separation of refugees from other persons who do not qualify for international protection afforded refugees or otherwise do not require international protection, and in this regard urges African States to seek international assistance, as appropriate;

5. Recognizes the primary responsibility of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, with the assistance of other relevant international bodies and organizations, to support African States in their actions directed towards the full respect and implementation of the provisions of international law relating to the status and treatment of refugees, and requests the Office of the High Commissioner, as needed, to keep in close touch with the Secretary-General, the Organization of African Unity, subregional organizations and the States concerned in this regard;

6. Notes that a range of measures by the international community is needed to share the burden borne by African States hosting refugees and to support their efforts to ensure the security and civilian and humanitarian character of refugee camps and settlements, including in the areas of law enforcement, disarmament of armed elements, curtailment of the flow of arms in refugee camps and settlements, separation of refugees from other persons who do not qualify for international protection afforded refugees or otherwise do not require international protection, and demobilization and reintegration of former combatants;

7. Notes also that the range of measures referred to in paragraph 6 above could include training, logistical and technical advice and assistance, financial support, the enhancement of national law enforcement mechanisms, the provision or supervision of security guards and the deployment in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations of international police and military forces;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to respond, as appropriate, to requests from African States, the Organization of African Unity and subregional organizations for advice and technical assistance in the implementation of international refugee, human rights and humanitarian law relevant to the present resolution, including through appropriate training programmes and seminars;

9. Urges the Office of the High Commissioner, other relevant United Nations bodies and organizations, Member States, the Organization of African Unity and subregional organizations to initiate coordinated programmes to provide advice, training and technical or other assistance, as appropriate, to African States which host refugee populations, with a view to strengthening their capacity to implement the obligations referred to in paragraph 4 above, and encourages relevant non-governmental organizations to participate in such coordinated programmes when appropriate;

10. Encourages the Secretary-General and Member States involved in efforts to enhance Africa's peacekeeping capacity to continue to ensure that training gives due emphasis to international refugee, human rights and humanitarian law and in particular to the security of refugees and the maintenance of the civilian and humanitarian character of refugee camps and settlements;

11. Expresses its support for the inclusion in the United Nations stand-by arrangements of military and police units and personnel trained for humanitarian operations, as well as related equipment, which relevant United Nations bodies and organizations could draw on in providing advice, supervision, training and technical or other assistance related to the maintenance of the security and civilian and humanitarian character of refugee camps and settlements, in coordination as appropriate with the African States hosting refugees;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to consider the establishment of a new category within the United Nations Trust Fund for Improving Preparedness for Conflict Prevention and Peacekeeping in Africa to support, as needed, and in addition to existing sources of funding, the provision of advice, supervision, training and technical or other assistance related to the maintenance of the security and civilian and humanitarian character of refugee camps and settlements, including those activities referred to in paragraph 11 above, and urges Member States to contribute to the Fund;

13. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue his consultations with Member States, regional and subregional organizations and other relevant international bodies and organizations and to keep it informed about developments in Africa related to the security and civilian and humanitarian character of refugee camps and settlements which affect the maintenance of international peace and security in the region, and to recommend concrete measures, such as those mentioned in paragraph 7 above, as needed, in this regard;

14. Expresses its readiness to consider the recommendations referred to in paragraph 13 above in accordance with its responsibilities under the Charter;

15. Requests all Member States, relevant international bodies and organizations and all regional and subregional organizations to consider, as appropriate, the application of the measures contained in the present resolution to regions other than Africa;

16. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

At the same meeting, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1209(1998), the draft of which [S/1998/1091] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 1170(1998) of 28 May 1998, 1196(1998) of 16 September 1998 and 1197(1998) of 17 September 1998,

Recalling the statements of its President of 25 September 1997, 16 September 1998 and 24 September 1998,

Having considered the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General of 13 April 1998 entitled "The causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa" regarding the importance of stemming the illicit arms flows to and in Africa,

Recognizing the close relationship of the problem of illicit arms flows to and in Africa with international peace and security,

Recognizing with concern that commercial and political motives play an unduly important role in the illicit transfer and accumulation of small arms in Africa,

Stressing the close linkage between international peace and security and sustainable development and the need for the international community to respond to the challenge of illicit arms flows to and in Africa in a comprehensive manner, encompassing not only the field of security but that of social and economic development,

Reaffirming the right of African States to procure or produce necessary weapons to meet their legitimate national security and public order needs in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and other rules and principles of international law,

Welcoming the offer of the Government of Switzerland to host in Geneva, not later than 2001, an international conference on the illicit arms trade in all its aspects,

Welcoming also the negotiation process in Vienna on the elaboration of an international convention against transnational organized crime, including a protocol to combat illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms,

Welcoming further the ongoing work of the Secretary-General on small arms and light weapons pursuant to General Assembly resolutions 50/70 B of 12 December 1995 and 52/38 J of 9 December 1997, including the work of the group of governmental experts nominated by him, and noting the findings pertaining to illicit arms flows to and in Africa in the report on small arms submitted by the Secretary-General on 27 August 1997,

Welcoming the decision of the Secretary-General to coordinate all action on small arms within the United Nations system through the Coordinating Action on Small Arms, for which the Department of Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat is designated as the focal point,

Commending the national, bilateral and subregional initiatives being taken in Africa in combating illicit arms flows, such as those that have been taken in Mali and Mozambique, by the Economic Community of West African States and the Southern African Development Community,

Welcoming the decision by the Organization of African Unity to prepare a situation report on Africa containing detailed information on the magnitude of the problem of small arms proliferation as well as appropriate policy recommendations,

1. Expresses its grave concern at the destabilizing effect of illicit arms flows, in particular of small arms, to and in Africa and at their excessive accumulation and circulation, which threaten national, regional and international security and have serious consequences for development and for the humanitarian situation in the continent;

2. Encourages African States to enact legislation on the domestic possession and use of arms, including the establishment of national legal and judicial mechanisms for the effective implementation of such laws, and to implement effective import, export and re-export controls, and encourages also the international community, in consultation with African States, to assist in these efforts;

3. Stresses the importance of all Member States, in particular States involved in manufacturing or marketing of weapons, restricting arms transfers which could provoke or prolong armed conflicts or aggravate existing tensions or conflicts in Africa, such as through voluntary moratoria;

4. Encourages African States to participate in the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms, encourages also the establishment of appropriate regional or subregional registers of conventional arms on the basis of agreement reached by African States concerned, and encourages Member States to explore other appropriate ways to enhance transparency of arms transfers to and in Africa;

5. Urges Member States with relevant expertise to cooperate with African States to strengthen their capacity to combat illicit arms flows, including through the tracking and interdiction of illicit arms transfers;

6. Welcomes the declaration of a moratorium adopted by the Heads of State and Government of the Economic Community of West African States, adopted in Abuja on 31 October 1998, and urges other subregional organizations in Africa to consider taking similar measures;

7. Encourages African States to examine the efforts undertaken in other regions such as by the Organization of American States and the European Union in preventing and combating illicit arms flows, and to consider adopting similar measures as appropriate;

8. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to accord high priority to the role of the United Nations in promoting better understanding of the direct and indirect consequences of illicit arms flows, and stresses the importance of bringing the negative impact of illicit arms flows to and in Africa to the widest possible public attention;

9. Encourages the Secretary-General to explore means of identifying international arms dealers acting in contravention of national legislation or embargoes established by the United Nations on arms transfers to and in Africa;

10. Also encourages the Secretary-General to promote cooperation among Member States, the United Nations, regional and subregional organizations and other relevant organizations to collect, review and share information on combating illicit arms flows, especially regarding small arms, and to make available, as appropriate, information about the nature and general scope of the international illicit arms trade with and in Africa;

11. Reiterates the obligation of all Member States to carry out decisions of the Council on arms embargoes, and in this context notes the broader implications of the findings and experience of the International Commission of Inquiry established by its resolution 1013(1995) of 7 September 1995 and reactivated in accordance with its resolution 1161 (1998) of 9 April 1998, and requests the Secretary-General to consider the possible application of such a measure to other conflict zones in Africa with specific emphasis on the sources of such arms and, if appropriate, make recommendations to the Council;

12. Encourages the Secretary-General, in consultation with Member States, to explore means for collecting, sharing and disseminating information, including technical information, on illicit small arms flows and their destabilizing effects, in order to improve the ability of the international community to prevent the exacerbation of armed conflicts and humanitarian crisis, as well as means for the rapid exchange of data on possible violations of arms embargoes;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to consider practical ways to work with African States in implementing national, regional or subregional programmes for voluntary weapons collection, disposal and destruction, including the possibility of the establishment of a fund to support such programmes;

14. Recognizes the important contribution of programmes for voluntary weapons collection, disposal and destruction in specific post-conflict situations in Africa, and expresses its intention to consider including, as appropriate, means to facilitate the successful conduct of such programmes in the mandates of future peacekeeping operations it authorizes in Africa on the basis of recommendations by the Secretary-General;

15. Calls upon regional and subregional organizations in Africa to strengthen efforts to establish mechanisms and regional networks among relevant authorities of their member States for information sharing to combat the illicit circulation of and trafficking in small arms;

16. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In accordance with an 11 August request from Namibia [A/53/231], in its capacity as Chairman of the Group of African States, a new item, "Causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa", was included in the agenda of the fifty-third session of the General Assembly and considered directly in plenary meetings. On 7 December [meeting 81], the Assembly adopted resolution 53/92 [draft: A/53/L.40/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 164].

The causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa, which was submitted to the Security Council and the General Assembly,

Noting with appreciation the steps taken by the Security Council for an urgent and concerted effort to follow up the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General in the areas of conflict prevention and the maintenance of international peace and security, in accordance with its responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations as a means of promoting durable peace and sustainable development in Africa,

Taking note of the decision of the Economic and Social Council to undertake substantive discussions on the implementation of the relevant recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General at its substantive session of 1999, and to coordinate and harmonize, as appropriate, the work of the organs of the United Nations system in the implementation of the initiatives on African development,

Recalling the agreement of 15 November 1965 on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, as updated and signed on 9 October 1990 by the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity, as well as subsequent resolutions,

Recognizing that many African countries have made significant progress towards the creation of an enabling environment for achieving sustained economic growth and sustainable development, in accordance with the relevant General Assembly resolutions and outcomes of United Nations conferences,

Noting with interest the Treaty establishing the African Economic Community, which entered into force in May 1994, by which African countries have committed themselves to the promotion of regional economic cooperation and integration to accelerate the process of economic growth and development,

Stressing the close linkage between peace, security and sustainable development,

Noting with deep concern the conflicts in Africa and the increasing incidence of atrocities involving civilian populations, in particular those that target women, children and relief workers, and the use of children as combatants,

Also noting the need to adhere to international humanitarian law and human rights instruments and the fact that all parties involved in the conflict are accountable for their actions,

Expressing concern about the serious impact of such socio-economic problems and challenges as increasing poverty, the human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immune deficiency syndrome pandemic, and barriers that perpetuate discrimination against women and girls,

Noting with appreciation all international, regional and bilateral initiatives for the development of Africa, including the Tokyo Agenda for Action, adopted by the Second Tokyo International Conference on African Development, held at Tokyo from 19 to 21 October 1998, which calls upon the international community to reaffirm its commitment to support Africa's development,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa for its holistic approach to the problems of peace and development in Africa and the concrete recommendations contained therein;

2. Commends the Secretary-General for his strong and global advocacy for African development and his efforts to mobilize the international community further in support of the continent, and, in particular, to bring the United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, to support African development within a coordinated framework;

3. Notes that the effective implementation of the recommendations of the Secretary-General on building durable peace and promoting sustainable development in Africa will require increased and sustained political will by African States and the international community;

4. Calls upon African countries to continue their efforts to create an enabling domestic environment for sustainable development;

5. Calls upon the international community to provide African countries with a substantial increase in the flow of financial resources required to implement the recommendations of the Secretary-General effectively, and in that context also calls upon all parties concerned to cooperate in improving the quality and effectiveness of development assistance from all sources;

6. Stresses the importance of improved coordination among relevant bodies and agencies of the United Nations system in assisting with post-conflict peace-building, reconciliation, reconstruction and development in Africa, and requests the Secretary-General to seek further measures in this regard;

7. Urges the United Nations and other relevant international institutions, upon request from Governments, to provide adequate assistance for the strengthening of the institutions for the promotion of transparency and accountability in public administration and good governance and, in this regard, urges all Governments to promote and respect all human rights and the rule of law and to strengthen democratic institutions;

8. Urges all States, as well as other relevant actors, to rely upon peaceful means instead of military solutions to their problems and, to that end, to promote preventive diplomacy and confidence-building measures, as appropriate, and strengthen Africa's capacity to participate in all aspects of peacekeeping operations, in particular through increased cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity and between the United Nations and subregional organizations;

9. Calls upon the international community to supplement national efforts by providing African countries with sufficient concessional resources for capacity-building and the attainment of a substantial and sustained pace of economic growth and development;

10. Strongly underlines the importance of an enabling environment for investment, in particular, foreign direct investment, market access, good governance, increase in the volume and effectiveness of official development assistance, tackling unsustainable debt burdens, including through debt conversion measures, flexibility in the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative and support for regional co-operation and integration as priority areas that need to be addressed in order to achieve sustainable development in all African countries and to encourage the participation of all African countries in the global economy, as recommended in the report of the Secretary-General;

11. Encourages African countries to continue to promote regional economic cooperation and integration in the framework of the Treaty establishing the African Economic Community and other complementary subregional organizations and arrangements, and calls upon the international community to support these efforts;

12. Requests all Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to pay particular attention to meeting the special needs of refugee women and children, including those with special protection needs, as well as internally displaced persons;

13. Supports the recommendation to harmonize current international and bilateral initiatives on Africa contained in the report of the Secretary-General, and invites African countries and their partners during the coordination segment of the 1999 substantive session of the Economic and Social Council to identify and rank priorities in partnership, to define respective responsibilities and to agree on realistic and measurable targets in priority areas;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a progress report on the implementation of the recommendations contained in his report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session;

15. Requests the President of the General Assembly, in preparation for the discussion at the fifty-fourth session of the General Assembly, to establish an open-ended ad hoc working group of the General Assembly to monitor the implementation of the present resolution and, in particular, the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General to the Security Council and the General Assembly on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa; in this regard, the Working Group shall determine its mandate and modalities, taking into account the outcome of the deliberations of the Economic and Social Council on this matter.

In related action, the Assembly, in resolution 53/78 A, reaffirmed its support for the programme of work of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa (see preceding chapter).

Great Lakes region

The Great Lakes region remained an area of turmoil in 1998, particularly due to the conflict in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), which had been a battleground of ethnic groups for several years. Opposition to the DRC Government was considered by some regional Governments to be a contributing factor in the renewed fighting that erupted in August 1998, as was the presence of foreign troops inside the DRC. The DRC accused Rwanda and Uganda, in particular, of involvement in the ethnic violence. Other regional Governments provided military assistance in the form of armed forces to the DRC Government in an attempt to halt the continuing conflict.

Another factor in the instability in the Great Lakes region was the presence in a number of countries of armed members of the former Rwandan Armed Forces (ex-FAR) and of militias who had participated in the 1994 genocide in Rwanda and who were reported to be involved in various insurgency movements in other countries. When ethnic fighting again erupted in the DRC in August, thousands of those exiled forces converged on that country. They were also reportedly involved in launching attacks against Rwandan targets from bases in the DRC. Rwanda continued to suffer from insurgency activities in 1998, especially in the north-west of the country.

Despite sporadic outbreaks of violence by tribal groups, the situation in Burundi improved in 1998 through regional mediation efforts to find a negotiated settlement that would include the participation of opposition political parties in the Government. The current Government, the multi-party National Assembly and 15 political parties participated in talks on democracy, good governance and peace and security and agreed on a schedule for further talks in 1999.

Concern over the continuing conflict in the region was expressed by the Security Council on several occasions. In resolution 1161(1998) of 9 April, the Council, condemning the continued violence in the Great Lakes region and expressing grave concern about the sale and supply of arms to former Rwandan government forces and militias in violation of the Council's arms embargo, called on all States in the region to ensure that their territory was not used as a base for armed groups to launch incursions against other States. The Council requested the Secretary-General to reactivate the International Commission of Inquiry established in 1995 to investigate the illegal flow of weapons to former Rwandan forces. That Commission, in its final report issued in November, stated that former Rwandan forces were located in 10 countries in the region and had been receiving increased support and weapons from some Governments.

The Council, in statements issued by its President on 31 August and 11 December, reaffirmed the importance of holding an international conference on peace, security and development in the Great Lakes region under the auspices of the United Nations and OAU.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

In August 1998, the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, established in May 1997 under President Laurent-Désiré Kabila [YUN 1997, p. 78], encountered new difficulties in the eastern part of the country, which had been the centre of ethnic conflict for years. In June, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council the report of an investigative team, which he had dispatched to the DRC to assess allegations of serious violations of human rights and international humanitarian law committed there between March 1993 and December 1997. In his letter of transmittal, the Secretary-General said that the report drew attention to one of the root causes of recent conflicts in the Great Lakes region: a vicious cycle of violations of human rights and revenge, fuelled by impunity.

The situation in the DRC deteriorated precipitously in August when there were reports of renewed torture, executions and detention of civilians, as well as hate propaganda, sexual violence and human rights abuses against the civilian population. The DRC accused Rwanda and Uganda of involvement in the ethnic violence, charges that were refuted by Rwanda. Uganda defended its decision to send troops to the DRC to deflect efforts to destabilize Uganda. Assistance in the form of armed forces was provided to the DRC Government by Angola, Namibia and Zimbabwe. Efforts were made at the regional level to find a peaceful solution to the conflict. In August and again in December, the Security Council expressed concern about the continuing conflict and its grave humanitarian consequences. The Council supported regional mediation efforts and stated that it was prepared to consider the active involvement of the United Nations to assist in implementing a ceasefire agreement.

The General Assembly, in resolution 53/1 L, also called for a peaceful settlement of the situation, supported regional diplomatic initiatives and invited the DRC to cooperate with the United Nations and other organizations in addressing the need for rehabilitation and reconstruction (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

Investigative Team

Report of Investigative Team. By a 29 June letter [S/1998/581], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council the report of his Investigative Team in the DRC, which was established in July 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 79] to help break a deadlock between the Government of the DRC and the joint investigative mission mandated by the Commission on Human Rights to investigate allegations of massacres and other violations of human rights, which arose from the situation that had prevailed in eastern Zaire since September 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 55]. In response to a DRC government request, the Secretary-General extended the period under investigation back to 1 March 1993 to include ethnic violence dating from that time. Chief Justice Atsu-Koffi Amega (Togo) was appointed leader of the Team, with a mandate to investigate serious violations of human rights and international humanitarian law alleged to have been committed in the DRC up to 31 December 1997. The situation of human rights in the DRC was also the subject of a report prepared for the Commission on Human Rights by its Special Rapporteur (see PART TWO, Chapter III).

In his letter of transmittal, the Secretary-General stated that the background to the events described in the report was the 1994 genocide in Rwanda, which led directly to the violence of the 1994-1996 period in eastern Zaire. That same violence resulted in the creation, in September 1996, of the Alliance of Democratic Forces for the Liberation of the Congo (AFDL) and its successful military campaign against the regime of President Mobutu Sese Seko, which ended in Kinshasa on 17 May 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 78] with the establishment of the Government of President Kabila.

Between its first deployment in August 1997 and its withdrawal in April 1998, the Investigative Team was not allowed to carry out its mission fully and without hindrance. In spite of such difficulties, the Team was able to reach a number of conclusions supported by strong evidence. Two of those conclusions stood out: first, that all the parties to the violence that racked Zaire, especially its eastern provinces, during the period under consideration had committed serious violations of human rights or international humanitarian law; and second, that the killings by AFDL and its allies, including elements of the Rwandan Patriotic Army (RPA), constituted crimes against humanity, as did the denial of humanitarian assistance to Rwandan Hutu refugees. The Team believed that some of the killings might constitute genocide, depending on their intent, and called for further investigation. The Secretary-General pointed out that the report drew attention to one of the root causes of the recent conflicts in the Great Lakes region: a vicious cycle of violations of human rights and revenge, fuelled by impunity. That cycle had to be brought to an end. At the same time, a great deal of international assistance was needed to consolidate the fragile stability of the region. In the Secretary-General's view, what was needed was a consistent policy of critical engagement. Ultimately, however, stability lay with the Governments of the region. They had an obligation to respect the human rights and security of their own citizens.

The Team stated that, having encountered obstacles deliberately created to prevent it from fulfilling its mandate, it concluded that the DRC Government had no intention of accepting the Team and had merely made a show of willingness to cooperate. Those obstacles made it impossible to confirm or disprove most of the allegations that had been made concerning serious violations of human rights and humanitarian law during the period covered by the mandate. Nevertheless, the Team was able to confirm that certain types of violations occurred, and that they occurred in certain regions and during certain periods. In most cases, it was possible to arrive at general conclusions as to which forces participated directly in those incidents.

The Team's conclusions included that, from mid-October to mid-November 1996, AFDL and elements of RPA attacked camps in North and South Kivu containing refugees and, in most cases, military elements hostile to the Government of Rwanda, causing many civilian casualties. Hundreds of unarmed persons were captured and executed as a result of the attack on Mugunga camp in November 1996, and many unarmed civilians were hunted down and executed after fleeing from that and other camps, including those in South Kivu, Tingi-Tingi, Kasese and Obiro. Those massacres were committed by AFDL, in some cases with the participation of Mai-Mai militia, but the extent of RPA involvement was unclear. AFDL also carried out a number of massacres of civilians in Zairian Hutu villages in North Kivu at that time, apparently because of suspected support for the fleeing Rwandan Hutus. Zairian soldiers (FAZ), ex-FAR soldiers and Interahamwe militia fleeing the AFDL offensive looted and killed unarmed civilians. In May 1997, hundreds of unarmed Rwandan Hutus were massacred in Mbandaka and Wendji by AFDL troops apparently under RPA command; forensic evidence indicated that bodies were removed from a mass grave in Mbandaka and an effort was made to "clean up" such sites prior to the Team's visit. AFDL forced large numbers of civilians to flee into scarcely populated areas in life-threatening conditions and denied relief organizations access to ill non-combatants. The attacks on camps in North Kivu in 1996 were intended, in part, to force the residents to return to Rwanda, but the circumstances surrounding 1997 attacks on camps revealed the intent to eliminate Rwandan Hutus who had remained in Zaire. A possible interpretation of those AFDL operations, carried out with Rwandan support, was that a decision was taken to eliminate that part of the Hutu ethnic group. If proved, that would constitute genocide.

As the DRC had shown no interest in fulfilling its obligation under international law to investigate responsibility for the serious violations of human rights and grave breaches of humanitarian law that had occurred in its territory, the Team believed that the interests of justice could be served only by endowing an international tribunal with competence over those crimes. Failure to do so would encourage the perception of partiality on the part of the international community and nurture feelings of denial of justice, contributing to the cycle of reprisals and the culture of impunity.

The Team's recommendations included that the investigation should be continued by an appropriate judicial body or, if unrestricted access was granted, by an investigative commission. Such an investigation should focus on five areas: massacres in North and South Kivu beginning in March 1993; serious violations of human rights committed within the camps in eastern Zaire between July 1994 and October 1996; the extent of RPA participation in the military operations carried out by the insurgent forces beginning in October 1996; the extent of participation by Rwandan and other foreign troops, including mercenaries, in the serious violations of human rights and humanitarian law; and the intent underlying the massacre of Rwandan and Zairian Hutus in Zaire beginning in October 1996. The Team proposed that the international community should help the DRC to establish a judicial institution staffed by competent and independent people who would apply internationally recognized rules of procedure.

The Team further recommended that the international community should support programmes for the rehabilitation of victims of the war and human rights violations, and programmes to reduce ethnic tension and promote equal rights of all persons and support the creation of an independent system of justice.

(For information on humanitarian assistance to the DRC, see PART THREE, Chapter III.)

Communications. In a 25 June letter to the Secretary-General [S/1998/5821], the DRC responded to the Investigative Team's report. The DRC Government protested against what it viewed as the failure of the mission to respect the agreed space and time period of the investigation; interference in the country's internal political affairs; failure to respect the cultural values of the region being investigated; and a deliberate attempt to instigate incidents inimical to the Government.

In its detailed response, the DRC said the Team's report was a copy of the 1997 report [YUN 1997, p. 704] of the joint mission to investigate allegations of human rights violations since 1996 and it questioned the impartiality of the leader of that mission, Roberto Garretón (Chile). With regard to the Team's report, the DRC stated that it exacerbated the ethnic hatred between Hutu and Tutsi by oversimplifying the complex problems that plagued the Great Lakes region. Furthermore, it was politically motivated, its objective being to camouflage the responsibilities of the Powers implicated in the genocide in Rwanda, specifically France, and to upset the political stability of the Great Lakes region. The DRC refuted the report's conclusions and described them as unfounded. It also denied that the Government had deliberately created obstacles to prevent the Team from fulfilling its mandate.

Rwanda, also on 25 June [S/1998/583], described the report as incomplete and thus inconclusive. It noted that the report itself stated that it was not possible to confirm or disprove most of the allegations. In Rwanda's view, the report lacked credible testimonies and was significantly biased. Furthermore, publication of such a misleading report did not serve the human rights cause and would compromise the possibility of getting to the truth. Rwanda categorically denied that Rwandan government soldiers committed human rights violations against a section of its own people or anyone else in the then Zaire. Rwandan refugees there had been held hostage by the ex-FAR, Interahamwe militia and FAZ, and Rwanda had rescued its people.

The EU, in a 17 July statement [A/52/988-S/1998/670] on the investigative report, strongly condemned all massacres and other atrocities committed before, during and after the military campaign that led to the overthrow of the former Zairian regime. The EU called on both the DRC and Rwanda to allow a thorough and independent inquiry without delay. It welcomed the Secretary-General's decision to convey the report to the international Panel of Eminent Personalities to investigate the 1994 genocide and surrounding events, established by OAU. The EU stressed the importance of putting an end to impunity if reconciliation was to be achieved. The Central and Eastern European countries associated with the EU, Cyprus and the countries of the European Free Trade Association and, members of the European Economic Area, aligned themselves with the EU statement, as they did with later EU statements on the DRC (see below).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 13 July [meeting 3903], the Security Council President issued the following statement [S/PRST/1998/20] on behalf of the Council members:

The Security Council condemns the massacres, other atrocities and violations of international humanitarian law committed in Zaire/Democratic Republic of the Congo, and especially its eastern provinces, including crimes against humanity and those other violations described in the report of the Secretary-General's Investigative Team. It notes the responses to the report provided by the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda. It recognizes the work of the Investigative Team in documenting some of these violations, in spite of the fact that the Team was not allowed to carry out its mission fully and without hindrance.

The Council reaffirms its commitment to the unity, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the States of the Great Lakes region.

The Council recognizes the necessity to investigate further the massacres, other atrocities and violations of international humanitarian law and to prosecute those responsible. It deplores the delay in the administration of justice. The Council calls upon the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda to investigate without delay, in their respective countries, the allegations contained in the report of the Investigative Team and to bring to justice any persons found to have been involved in these or other massacres, atrocities and violations of international humanitarian law. The Council takes note of the stated willingness of the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to try any of its nationals who are guilty of or were implicated in the alleged massacres. Such action is of great importance in helping to bring an end to impunity and to foster lasting peace and stability in the region. It urges Member States to cooperate with the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda in the investigation and prosecution of these persons.

The Council encourages the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda to seek international assistance, such as technical assistance, as needed, in this process. It also invites the Governments concerned to consider the inclusion of international observers, as appropriate. It requests the Governments concerned to provide an initial progress report to the Secretary-General by 15 October 1998 on the steps being taken to investigate and prosecute those responsible.

The Council expresses its readiness to consider, as necessary in the light of actions by the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda, additional steps to ensure that the perpetrators of the massacres, other atrocities and violations of international humanitarian law are brought to justice.

The Council urges Member States, relevant United Nations bodies and agencies and other international agencies to provide the necessary technical and other assistance, as requested, to the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda in the development of independent and impartial judicial systems.

The Council expresses support for United Nations and other international activities to reduce ethnic tensions and promote national reconciliation in the region, and encourages the Governments concerned to continue to cooperate in these activities to bring about a real improvement in the situation.

The Council attaches great importance to the role of the Organization of African Unity and welcomes its decision to establish the International Panel of Eminent Personalities to Investigate the Genocide in Rwanda and the Surrounding Events. It appeals to Member States to contribute to the special trust fund established to support the work of the Panel.

The Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Developments in 1998

The situation in the DRC deteriorated during 1998, particularly in the latter part of the year. Beginning in August, the Security Council received a series of letters from countries of the region concerning the renewed violence, with the DRC accusing both Rwanda and Uganda of involvement in the conflict in the eastern part of its territory. In August and December, the Council issued statements expressing concern about the situation and calling for a peaceful solution.

Communications (August). Rwanda, in a 6 August letter [S/1998/725], informed the Security Council President that it had been the subject of misleading allegations about its involvement in the army rebellion in the DRC, and it asserted that it had nothing to do with the internal rebellion. In particular, it denied the allegation by DRC authorities that Rwandan troops had hijacked a civilian aircraft from Goma airport in eastern DRC and had flown it to the south-western part of the country. As a point of clarification, Rwanda said that, indeed, there were Kinyarwanda-speaking Congolese citizens in the eastern part of the DRC; they were Congolese citizens even if they spoke the language spoken in Rwanda.

On 10 August [S/1998/735], the DRC transmitted to the Council a note that it had addressed to the OAU mission to investigate the armed conflict between the DRC and what it described as the Rwandan-Ugandan coalition. Explaining the background to the situation, the DRC said that 15 months after AFDL came to power, it decided to end the Rwandan military presence within the Congolese armed forces. That presence had come about when AFDL had accepted Rwandan and Ugandan military assistance during its struggle against Mobutu Sese Seko's dictatorship. The repatriation of Rwandan soldiers had barely been completed when the DRC became the victim of aggression by Rwanda and its allies. Rwandan military convoys surrounded the towns of Goma and Bukavu on 2 and 3 August and another group of Rwandan soldiers, who were awaiting repatriation, opened fire on the Kisan-gani garrison. On the next day, aircraft landed with 600 to 800 Rwandans who intended to seize a port and power plants. The DRC requested the United Nations and OAU to demand that Rwanda and Uganda withdraw their troops immediately. President Kabila and the Government of National Security were determined to bring the current democratization process to fruition. The DRC expected OAU to open an investigation, to condemn Rwanda and Uganda and to join the United Nations in demanding the withdrawal of Ugandan-Rwandan troops from Congolese territory.

In an 11 August statement [S/1998/753], the Presidency of the EU expressed concern at the deteriorating situation in the DRC. It particularly condemned the acts of violence against civilians and called on all parties to respect human rights and humanitarian law. Furthermore, the EU was greatly preoccupied by the possibility of foreign interference in the country's internal affairs. It supported UN and OAU efforts to find a peaceful solution.

On 13 August [S/1998/755], Uganda responded to the allegations made against it by the DRC. Rejecting the claims as baseless, Uganda said they were attempts by the DRC authorities to divert the attention of the international community away from the real problem of the internal conflict. Uganda reiterated its readiness to work closely with States in the region, the United Nations, OAU and all other parties interested in finding a peaceful solution. To that end, Uganda endorsed the decision adopted at the Zimbabwe Regional Summit on 8 August to set up a four-nation committee composed of Namibia, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe to work out modalities for a ceasefire in the DRC.

The DRC, in a 14 August letter to the Council President [S/1998/758], said that a massive gathering of heavily armed forces of the regular army of Uganda had occurred in the Congolese town of Bunia. In addition, the DRC alleged that the armed forces of the Rwandan-Ugandan coalition had cut off water and electric power to Kinshasa, which could cause a major humanitarian disaster in that capital of more than 6 million people. Furthermore, Congolese civilians in the Kivu provinces were being deported to Rwanda and summarily executed. The DRC called on the Council to demand that Rwanda and Uganda withdraw their troops immediately from Congolese territory and that those two countries stop all acts of extortion against the Congolese population. Those charges were repeated by the DRC in a letter of 18 August [S/1998/770]. The water and electricity supply to Kinshasa and to part of Bandundu province had been cut off, it affirmed. Reiterating its earlier requests to the Council, the DRC also called on it to demand that the Rwandan-Ugandan coalition restore the water and electricity supply to Kinshasa and its surroundings. On 19 August [S/1998/778], the DRC described the initial consequences of the interruption of water and electricity to Kinshasa—the death of more than 700 newborn babies and shortages of food and fuel. Those actions, it said, were proof of the genocidal purposes of the Rwandan and Ugandan aggressors.

The crisis in the DRC was the subject of a communiqué [S/1998/774] issued by the Central Organ of the OAU Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution, which met in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, on 17 August. The Central Organ condemned the recourse to armed rebellion in the settlement of grievances and called on the rebels in the DRC to lay down their arms. It condemned all external interventions in the internal affairs of that country under any pretext. It endorsed the initiatives launched by the Regional Summit held at Victoria Falls, Zimbabwe, aimed at establishing a framework for defusing the crisis, as well as the follow-up initiatives taken by the Foreign and Defence Ministers of Angola, Namibia, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe. The OAU Secretary-General was requested to coordinate efforts with those of the regional countries and the UN Secretary-General, with a view to seeking a speedy end to the conflict.

The Presidency of the EU issued a 19 August declaration on the humanitarian situation in the DRC [S/1998/788]. Expressing alarm at reports of human rights abuses in the country, including detention, beating, torture, ethnic propaganda and summary execution of Tutsis, and possibly civilians of other ethnic groups, by the DRC authorities on the one hand, as well as severe human rights abuses being committed by rebel and possibly other forces on the other, the EU urged all parties to prevent such violations by security forces under their command. It also urged them to abstain from inciting ethnic hatred and not to persecute civilians on the grounds of nationality or ethnicity. The EU called on the DRC Government and other parties to protect those at risk and to provide the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) with information on the location of detention sites, to allow access to those sites and to provide security for detainees.

On 21 August [S/1998/784], Rwanda stated its position on the deteriorating situation in the DRC. Since 2 August, it said, the DRC had experienced instability characterized by a generalized rebellion pitting AFDL forces against the leadership of President Kabila. Mr. Kabila had been accused by AFDL of promoting divisions within the Congolese National Army by forming private and tribally based militias, following repressive policies characterized by collective massacres and assassinations, and inciting violence and promoting ethnic hatred. The accusation that Rwanda and other countries had invaded the DRC was untrue. Rwanda urged all Congolese to work towards a political solution through the establishment of all-inclusive transitional institutions. According to Rwanda, certain States members of the Southern African Development Community (SADC) had decided to support Mr. Kabila and not the Congolese people by sending military forces to his rescue. For its own security reasons, Rwanda had a specific interest in the stability of the DRC. Its concerns stemmed from the presence of ex-Rwandan soldiers and Interahamwe militia and their continued use of Congolese territory to launch attacks against the people of Rwanda. Rwanda stated that the problems of the DRC were not a preserve of SADC. Other countries, immediate neighbours of the DRC, such as Burundi, the Central African Republic, the Republic of the Congo, Rwanda and Uganda, which were not necessarily SADC members, had a bigger stake in the stability of the DRC than most SADC countries. The military involvement of certain SADC countries only served the narrow interests of the leaders spearheading the intervention. Rwanda therefore reserved the right to get involved and to assist the Congolese people in their search for a lasting solution in whatever manner it deemed appropriate.

On 28 August [S/1998/824], the EU Presidency issued another statement expressing its concern about the escalating crisis and the wider dangers for the region. The EU welcomed African initiatives to find a peaceful solution, in particular the recent mediation efforts by South African President Nelson Mandela in his capacity as Chairman of SADC. In that context, the EU joined the call of the SADC summit of 23 August for an immediate ceasefire. The EU called for a cessation of external interference in the DRC and condemned acts of violence against civilians.

The DRC, on 31 August [S/1998/827], transmitted a memorandum on the armed aggression by the Rwandan-Ugandan coalition against Congolese territory, which included a description of the origin of the conflict, recent developments, external reactions to the situation and its own conclusions.

Despite its diplomatic efforts, the DRC said, reactions of the international community had been insufficient. The Security Council had merely called for a ceasefire without taking any action, and OAU had belatedly dispatched a fact-finding mission to the region. In view of the laxity displayed by the international community, the DRC would use all means at its disposal to put an end to the aggression. With the help of some members of SADC, the DRC was carrying out military operations in certain areas to repel the Rwandan-Ugandan aggression. Following the withdrawal of all foreign occupying troops from its territory, the DRC would be open to dialogue. The integration of Tutsi populations of Rwandan origin into the DRC must be resolved within an appropriate legal framework and one defined by the Congo's new Constitution. In addition to their aggression against the DRC, Rwanda and Uganda were engaging in massive human rights violations in the areas of conflict. The aggression against the DRC constituted a threat to peace and security in Central Africa and the Great Lakes region. For those reasons, the DRC called on the Council to condemn the Ugandan and Rwandan aggression and to take measures with a view to achieving: the withdrawal of the foreign occupying troops; respect for the territorial integrity of the DRC; an end to human rights violations; and compensation to Congolese victims of murder and looting. The DRC Government, which, in co-operation with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), organized a summit of heads of State and Government on peace, stability and development of the Great Lakes subregion in May 1998, would support an international conference on peace, security and development in the Great Lakes region on the condition that certain prerequisites, including withdrawal of the foreign occupying troops and respect for borders and for Congolese institutions, were met.

Burundi, in a press release of its Government of 28 August [A/52/1029], warned that, should the conflict in the DRC persist, the adverse consequences would affect all countries bordering that country.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

The Security Council President made the following statement [S/PRST/1998/26] on 31 August [meeting 3922], on behalf of the Council members:

The Security Council expresses its deep concern about the current conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, which poses a serious threat to regional peace and security. The Council expresses alarm at the plight of the civilian population throughout the country.

The Council reaffirms the obligation to respect the territorial integrity and national sovereignty of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and other States in the region and the need for all States to refrain from any interference in each other's internal affairs. In this context, the Council calls for a peaceful solution to the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, including an immediate ceasefire, the withdrawal of all foreign forces, and the initiation of a peaceful process of political dialogue with a view to national reconciliation. The Council expresses support for all the regional diplomatic initiatives aimed at a peaceful settlement of the conflict. The problems of the Democratic Republic of the Congo must be solved on the basis of a process of all-inclusive national reconciliation which fully respects the equality and harmony of all ethnic groups and which leads to the holding of democratic, free and fair elections as soon as possible.

The Council urges all parties to respect and protect human rights and respect humanitarian law, in particular the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, as applicable to them. It condemns reported summary executions, torture, harassment and detention of civilians based on their ethnic origin, the recruitment and use of child soldiers, the killing or wounding of combatants who have laid down their weapons, hate propaganda, sexual violence and other abuses by any side. In particular, the Council calls for the protection of the civilian population. It recalls the unacceptability of the destruction or rendering useless of objects indispensable to the survival of the civilian population, and in particular of using cuts in the electricity and water supply as a weapon against the population. The Council reaffirms that all persons who commit or order the commission of grave breaches of the above-mentioned instruments are individually responsible in respect of such breaches.

The Council calls for safe and unhindered access for humanitarian agencies to all those in need in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. It calls for unrestricted access by the International Committee of the Red Cross to all detainees in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. It urges all parties to guarantee the safety and security of United Nations and humanitarian personnel.

The Council encourages the Secretary-General to continue to consult, as a matter of urgency, with regional leaders in coordination with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity about ways to bring about a peaceful and durable solution to the conflict, and to keep it informed about developments and his own efforts. It reaffirms the importance of holding an international conference on peace, security and development in the Great Lakes region under the auspices of the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity.

The Council will follow the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo closely. It will remain actively seized of the matter.

Communications (September-early December). On 14 September [A/53/232], the DRC requested the General Assembly to include in the agenda of its fifty-third session an additional item entitled "The armed aggression against the Democratic Republic of the Congo". In an attached explanatory memorandum, the DRC said that the forces of Rwanda and Uganda, which had invaded the DRC on 2 August, continued to commit acts of terrorism, violations of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of a UN Member State, violations of international humanitarian law, and mass violations of fundamental human rights. The DRC called on the international community, particularly the United Nations as the guarantor of international peace and security, to take all measures to restore peace and security, which were seriously threatened in the Central African region.

Zimbabwe presented its views on the situation in the DRC in a 23 September letter to the Council President [S/1998/891]. Describing it as a war between the allied forces of four SADC member States (the DRC, Angola, Namibia, Zimbabwe) on the one hand and Rwanda and Uganda on the other, Zimbabwe said the situation was disturbing the peace and security of the whole region. President Robert Mugabe of Zimbabwe had called a summit meeting of Angola, the DRC, Namibia, Rwanda, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe at Victoria Falls on 7 and 8 August. The participants disagreed on the nature of the conflict, that is, whether it was an internal rebellion against President Kabila, as claimed by Rwanda and Uganda, or a foreign invasion, prompting the meeting to form a special committee comprising Namibia, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe, which had a dual mandate, to ascertain the nature of the conflict and to recommend a way forward. The Foreign Ministers of Namibia, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe visited the DRC, Rwanda and Uganda from 11 to 18 August; they concluded that while there was a rebellion in the DRC, there was clear evidence of a foreign invasion, including eyewitness reports of Rwandan troops passing through to the war front. President Museveni of Uganda had since admitted to having about 50 officers in the DRC in addition to the two battalions in the eastern part of the country, which, he said, were there within the terms of the agreement with President Kabila's Government.

Zimbabwe stated that, in response to an appeal from President Kabila, Angola, Namibia and Zimbabwe had provided troops to assist in containing the foreign invaders. The SADC Summit (Mauritius, 13-14 September) commended those three Governments for providing assistance.

On 13 October [S/1998/945], the DRC informed the Council that three days earlier a civil aircraft belonging to Congo Airlines was shot down after take-off from Kindu airport by a missile launched by armed elements of the Rwanda-Uganda coalition, killing 41 people, all civilians. The DRC urged the Council to condemn the aggression, demand that enemy troops be withdrawn from Congolese territory and call for reparations for damage.

The heads of State of Kenya, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania, having met in Nairobi, Kenya, on 18 October to discuss the security situation in the DRC, issued a communiqué [S/1998/970] expressing grave concern at the escalation of the conflict. They stated that the situation had taken a wider dimension, threatening to engulf the whole region, including the East Africa subregion, and had precipitated an influx of refugees into neighbouring countries and the displacement of populations. The Summit called for a cessation of hostilities, a negotiated ceasefire, security for marginalized groups, withdrawal of all foreign troops, initiation of an all-inclusive political dialogue and emplacement of an international peacekeeping force under the auspices of OAU and the United Nations.

Another regional meeting on the DRC situation was held on 26 and 27 October in Lusaka, Zambia [S/1998/1039], attended by Foreign and Defence Ministers from Angola, Burundi, the DRC, Gabon, Kenya, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mozambique, Namibia, Rwanda, South Africa, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe. The participants adopted a draft ceasefire agreement and a mechanism for implementing and monitoring a ceasefire, pending further consultations. In that regard, Angola, Namibia, Uganda and Zimbabwe acknowledged the presence of their troops in the DRC; Rwanda did not acknowledge the presence of its troops. Proximity talks with the rebels were scheduled.

The DRC, on 6 November [S/1998/1042], transmitted to the Council President a list of massacres, atrocities and human rights violations that it said were perpetrated by the forces of Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda inside the DRC. The DRC called on the Council to condemn the invasion of Congolese territory by Rwandan and Ugandan troops, to urge those countries to withdraw from Congolese territory and to halt all acts of violence against the Congolese population, and to call for those aggressors who were found to have participated in such acts to be brought before the courts.

Uganda, on 9 November [S/1998/1057], transmitted to the Council the statement made by its Foreign Minister at the Lusaka regional meeting. It said that its involvement in the DRC was in response to impending genocide. Uganda believed that all foreign troops should leave the DRC after a ceasefire and when neutral multinational forces had taken up positions in the DRC to observe the ceasefire and ensure the security of the neighbouring countries. Uganda had experienced attacks under the current DRC Government and was compelled to react when the current rebellion broke out on 2 August lest the Sudan take advantage of the situation and intensify its support activities to Ugandan rebels on DRC territory. Earlier, the Sudan had launched military incursions into Uganda, including aerial bombardments, frequently from DRC territory. Uganda was also concerned about the threat posed by the Interahamwe and ex-FAR, which were training with Ugandan rebels to destabilize Uganda. Uganda remained ready to pull out of the DRC as soon as security guarantees were put in place.

On 13 November [S/1998/1076], the DRC informed the Council President of recent massacres of the civilian population in two towns during the advance of Rwandan-Ugandan troops. It also noted that the announcement by the Rwandan-Ugandan coalition of a unified command headed by the Ugandan Chief of Staff was further evidence of the determination of the coalition forces to destroy the DRC. The Council was requested to condemn by name those countries whose armed forces were committing violations of human rights and humanitarian law against the Congolese civilian population.

On 3 December [S/1998/1146], the DRC again reported massacres by the Rwandan-Ugandan coalition and reiterated its appeals to the Council to condemn the invasion, require those two countries to withdraw their troops from Congolese territory, call on them to halt all acts of violence against the Congolese population and bring to justice those guilty of violations of human rights and humanitarian law. The Rwandan-Ugandan coalition had attempted to modify the ethnic balance of the provinces under their control, the DRC said, by strengthening the Tutsi presence in South Kivu during October and November.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 11 December [meeting 3953], the Security Council President made the following statement [S/PRST/1998/36] on behalf of the Council members:

The Security Council recalls the statement of its President of 31 August 1998 on the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. It remains deeply concerned about the continuing conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, which threatens peace, security and stability in the region, and about its grave humanitarian consequences.

The Council reaffirms the obligation to respect the territorial integrity, political independence and national sovereignty of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and other States in the region, including the obligation to refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations. It also reaffirms the need for all States to refrain from any interference in each other's internal affairs, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations.

The Council, in this context, calls for a peaceful solution to the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, including an immediate ceasefire, the orderly withdrawal of all foreign forces, arrangements for security along the international borders of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the re-establishment of the authority of the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo over the whole territory of the country, and the initiation of an all-inclusive national reconciliation process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo which fully respects the equality and rights of all, irrespective of ethnic origin, and of a political process which leads to the early holding of democratic, free and fair elections.

The Council expresses its support for the regional mediation process begun by the Organization of African Unity and the Southern African Development Community, and currently led by the President of Zambia, takes note of the steps, including the establishment of the ad hoc liaison committee, that have been taken towards a peaceful settlement of the conflict and encourages the President of Zambia to continue his efforts.

The Council welcomes in particular the initiative taken by the Secretary-General at the Twentieth Conference of Heads of State of Africa and France, held in Paris from 26 to 28 November 1998, to bring about an end to the conflict and reach an immediate, unconditional ceasefire. The Council welcomes the public commitments made in Paris in this regard by the President of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Presidents of Uganda and Rwanda and the Presidents and heads of delegation of Namibia, Zimbabwe, Angola and Chad. It strongly urges them to give effect to these commitments. To that end, the Council calls upon all the parties concerned to participate at the highest level possible in the upcoming summit to be held in Lusaka on 14 and 15 December 1998, and urges them to work in a constructive and flexible spirit with a view to the signing of a ceasefire agreement as a matter of urgency. The Council also encourages participants at the meeting of the central organ of the Organization of African Unity, to be held in Ouagadougou on 17 and 18 December 1998, to use that opportunity to take urgent steps towards a peaceful settlement of the conflict.

The Council is prepared to consider, in the light of efforts towards peaceful resolution of the conflict, the active involvement of the United Nations, in co-ordination with the Organization of African Unity, including through concrete, sustainable and effective measures, to assist in the implementation of an effective ceasefire agreement and in an agreed process for a political settlement of the conflict.

The Council condemns any violations of human rights and humanitarian law, including acts of and incitement to ethnic hatred and violence by all parties. It urges all parties to respect and protect human rights and respect humanitarian law, in particular the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, as applicable to them, and the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide of 1948.

The Council notes with particular concern that the worsening of tension is resulting in a deterioration of the food situation for the civilian population and an increase in the flow of refugees and displaced persons. In this context, the Council reiterates its call for safe and unhindered access for humanitarian agencies to all those in need in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and once again urges all parties to guarantee the safety and security of United Nations and humanitarian personnel.

The Council also reaffirms the importance of holding, at the appropriate time, an international conference on peace, security and development in the Great Lakes region under the auspices of the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity.

The Council strongly encourages the Secretary-General to continue to work actively with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity and with all the parties concerned to help find a peaceful and lasting solution to the conflict. It requests him to keep it informed about efforts to achieve a peaceful solution and to make recommendations on a possible role of the United Nations to this end.

The Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Further communications. On 14 December [S/1998/1164], the DRC forwarded to the Security Council President a list of alleged crimes against humanity and gross human rights violations perpetrated by troops of the Rwandan-Ugandan coalition in and around the town of Goma between the onset of the aggression against the DRC (2 August) and 21 September. Those allegations included murders, massacres, indecent assault, rape, torture, kidnappings, deportations, arrests and arbitrary detention, expropriation of property and police harassment. The DRC repeated its request that the Council condemn the invasion by Rwandan and Ugandan troops; demand that those troops withdraw from Congolese territory; demand that they cease all extortion against the Congolese population; and initiate legal proceedings against perpetrators of violations of human rights and humanitarian law committed in Congolese territory.

Uganda replied to allegations made by the DRC in a letter to the Council of 15 December [S/1998/1180], stating that it was the authorities in the DRC who had committed grave human rights violations against their own people and that Uganda was not responsible for human rights abuses in that country. The conflict in the DRC was an internal crisis that had spun out of control because of the absence of an effective democratic government. Since the conflict began in the towns of Goma and Bukavu in August, the DRC government forces were reported by Amnesty International to have made arbitrary arrests and killed hundreds of Congolese because of their ethnic origins. The media and government officials had repeatedly incited the populace to attack the Tutsi. Unarmed civilian opponents, journalists and human rights activists had been detained, tortured and even executed. Uganda was not responsible for the woes of the DRC; it was the DRC's support of rebel groups based on its soil that had forced its neighbours to defend themselves. Uganda desired to ensure maximum stability in the Great Lakes region since instability in any neighbouring country impinged on its own security.

Rwanda

During 1998, Rwanda was afflicted by increasingly deteriorating security conditions and the continuation of armed conflict in the north-west of the country, with insurgency and counter-insurgency activities spreading to central Rwanda. The situation was complicated by the dispersion throughout the Great Lakes region of elements of the former Rwandan Armed Forces (ex-FAR) and militias who had participated in the 1994 genocide [YUN 1994, p. 282], the availability of arms to those forces and their reported involvement in various insurgency movements in other countries.

The Security Council sought to strengthen the monitoring of its 1994 arms embargo against the former Rwandan forces by reactivating in April its International Commission of Inquiry, which had a mandate to collect information on the sale or supply of arms to former Rwandan government forces in the Great Lakes region. The Commission, in its final report in November, stated that organized groups of ex-FAR and Intera-hamwe had scattered over the region and were located in 10 countries. When the rebellion in the DRC began in August 1998 (see above), most of the ex-FAR and Interahamwe apparently converged on the DRC from the neighbouring countries. The Commission believed that since the outbreak of the insurgency in the DRC, the former Rwandan and militia forces had been receiving increased support from some of the Governments of the region. They were also reportedly involved in launching attacks against Rwandan targets from bases in the DRC.

The UN presence in Rwanda was reduced in July when the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda was withdrawn as a result of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) and Rwanda being unable to agree on a new OHCHR presence to succeed the Field Operation. In 1998, the Field Operation focused its monitoring activities on alleged violations perpetrated chiefly in north-west Rwanda, on the extremely harsh conditions of detention and on national genocide trials. On the basis of its observations, the Field Operation made recommendations to the Government on legal reform, the administration of justice and the situation of prisoners, estimated at nearly 125,000 persons.

The human rights situation in Rwanda remained linked to the deteriorating security conditions and the armed conflict. Elements of the ex-FAR and Interahamwe continued to attack both civilian and military targets, and the Rwandan Patriotic Army (RPA) responded by carrying out counter-insurgency operations, at times resulting in mass arrests, arbitrary detentions and involuntary disappearances (see also PART TWO, Chapter III). The conflict led to the displacement of several thousand civilians and to food shortages (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

The International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994 continued its work (see PART FOUR, Chapter II).

Arms embargo

In 1998, the arms embargo against Rwanda was monitored by the Sanctions Committee, established in 1994 for that purpose, and the International Commission of Inquiry, established the following year to investigate reports relating to the sale or supply of arms and military equipment to former Rwandan government forces in the Great Lakes region.

International Commission of Inquiry

The Secretary-General, in a 22 January letter to the Security Council President [S/1998/63], issued an addendum to the third report [YUN 1996, p. 72] of the International Commission of Inquiry mandated to collect information on the sale or supply of arms and related matériel to former Rwandan government forces in the Great Lakes region in violation of Council resolutions 918(1994) [YUN 1994, p. 285], 997(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 386] and 1011(1995) [ibid., p. 380]. In 1994, the Council had imposed mandatory arms sanctions against Rwanda and established a Sanctions Committee to monitor their implementation [YUN 1994, p. 285]. The International Commission of Inquiry was established under resolution 1013(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 382] to investigate reports of the sale or supply of arms to former Rwandan government forces in violation of the arms embargo.

In the third report, the Commission indicated that it had endeavoured to obtain information from certain Governments in order to bring its investigations to a conclusion. At the time of the preparation of the report in October 1996, several of the Governments concerned had not replied. Since then, 10 Governments and the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) had furnished additional information, which was contained in the January 1998 addendum. In its conclusions, the Commission stated that some of the information provided could open up fresh lines of inquiry. In particular, the Commission would welcome the cooperation of the United Kingdom and Rwanda in arranging an inspection of weapons captured on Iwawa Island, Rwanda, by the Government of Rwanda in November 1995 so that officials of the United Kingdom Ministry of Defence could establish their origin. In addition, the Commission looked forward to cooperating with Zambia in an investigation of allegations that several deliveries of arms and matériel had been made from the port of Mpulungu on Lake Tanganyika in 1996. Documents seized at the Mugunga refugee camp in the DRC (then Zaire) in November 1996, which reportedly named companies dealing with the former Rwandan government forces, would also be of interest to the Commission.

An inquiry conducted by Switzerland had revealed information concerning an arms sale that took place in Seychelles in June 1994. As the Commission had stated in its March 1996 report [YUN 1996, p. 69], those weapons were flown to Goma, Zaire, and it was highly probable that they were transferred to former Rwandan government forces then in Gisenyi, Rwanda. Also in that report, the Commission described the involvement in that arms transaction of Colonel Théoneste Bagosora, currently awaiting trial before the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda on charges arising from the genocide of 1994, and of Willem Petrus Ehlers, a South African citizen. On the basis of the information it had since received, the Commission intended to investigate further the precise role played by Mr. Ehlers in the Seychelles arms transaction and the source of the funds used to finance it.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 9 April [meeting 3870], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1161(1998). The draft text [S/1998/306] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the situation in Rwanda, in particular its resolutions 918(1994) of 17 May 1994, 997(1995) of 9 June 1995, 1011(1995) of 16 August 1995, 1013(1995) of 7 September 1995 and 1053(1996) of 23 April 1996,

Condemning the continuing violence in Rwanda, including the massacre of civilians, including refugees, at Mudende in December 1997, and similar acts of violence observed in the Great Lakes region, including in Burundi,

Expressing grave concern at reports of the sale and supply of arms and related matériel to the former Rwandan government forces and militias, in violation of the embargo imposed under its resolutions 918(1994), 997(1995) and 1011(1995), and underlining the need for Governments to take action to ensure the effective implementation of the embargo,

Commending the members of the International Commission of Inquiry established by resolution 1013(1995) on the investigation they conducted and, in particular, on their final report and its addendum thereto,

Noting that widespread violence in the eastern region of the former Zaire in October 1996 caused the suspension of effective follow-up to the work of the Commission, but recognizing the need for a renewed investigation of the illegal flow of arms to Rwanda, which is fuelling violence and could lead to further acts of genocide, with specific recommendations to the Security Council for action,

Reaffirming the need for a long-term solution to the refugee and related problems in the territories of States of the Great Lakes region,

Reaffirming also the importance of countering radio broadcasts and pamphlets which spread hate and fear in the region, and emphasizing the need for States to assist countries in the region to counter such broadcasts and publications,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to reactivate the International Commission of Inquiry, with the following mandate:

(a) To collect information and investigate reports relating to the sale, supply and shipment of arms and related matériel to former Rwandan government forces and militias in the Great Lakes region of central Africa, in violation of Security Council resolutions 918(1994), 997(1995) and 1011(1995);

(b) To identify parties aiding and abetting the illegal sale to or acquisition of arms by former Rwandan government forces and militias, contrary to the resolutions referred to above;

(c) To make recommendations relating to the illegal flow of arms in the Great Lakes region;

2. Calls upon all States, relevant United Nations bodies, including the Committee established pursuant to resolution 918(1994) and, as appropriate, other organizations and interested parties, to collate information in their possession relating to the mandate of the Commission, and to make this information available to the Commission as soon as possible;

3. Calls upon the Governments of the States concerned in which the Commission will carry out its mandate to cooperate fully with the Commission in the fulfilment of its mandate, including by responding positively to requests from the Commission for security, assistance and access in pursuing investigations, as specified in paragraph 5 of resolution 1013(1995);

4. Calls upon all States in the Great Lakes region to ensure that their territory is not used as a base for armed groups to launch incursions or attacks against any other State in violation of the Charter of the United Nations and other provisions of international law;

5. Urges all States and relevant organizations to cooperate in countering radio broadcasts and publications that incite acts of genocide, hatred and violence in the region;

6. Encourages States to make voluntary contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Rwanda to provide the financing for the work of the Commission and to contribute equipment and services to the Commission;

7. Recommends that the Commission resume its work as soon as possible, requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the reactivation of the Commission, and further requests him to submit an interim report to the Council on the initial conclusions of the Commission within three months of its reactivation, to be followed by a final report containing its recommendations three months later;

8. Reiterates its concern that the uncontrolled illegal flows of arms and related matériel in violation of its above-mentioned resolutions pose a threat to peace and stability in the Great Lakes region, and declares its willingness to consider further other measures in this regard, including the recommendations referred to in paragraph 1 (c) above, and any other related recommendations offered by the Commission;

9. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Reactivation of Commission. The Secretary-General, in a letter of 27 May to the Security Council [S/1998/438], reported on steps taken to reactivate the International Commission of Inquiry, as requested by the Council in resolution 1161(1998). He had requested Mahmoud Kassem (Egypt), who had served as Chairman of the Commission in 1995 and 1996, to resume his functions in that capacity and three other members had been appointed. The Commission convened in New York in May for briefings and consultations with representatives of interested Member States, senior UN officials and others before leaving for the region. On 13 May, the Commission re-established its base in Nairobi, where it resumed its contacts in Kenya and with Governments of the countries of the Great Lakes region and others.

The activities of the Commission would be financed entirely from the United Nations Trust Fund for Rwanda. As at 15 May, donations totalling $140,000 had been received from two Governments. Pledges of further contributions were made at and following the Security Council meeting on 9 April.

Interim report. The Secretary-General forwarded the Commission's interim report to the Council on 18 August [S/1998/777]. In his letter of transmittal, he drew attention to the budgetary constraints encountered by the Commission. Of the $710,000 pledged by Member States, $425,000 had been received.

The Commission described the change in circumstances since its 1995-1996 investigations. At that time, the ex-FAR were overwhelmingly concentrated in North Kivu province of what was then eastern Zaire, with smaller numbers in South Kivu and in the north-western part of the United Republic of Tanzania. There had been then, and apparently still was, significant organized support for the ex-FAR in Kenya, where members of the Rwandan Hutu community had been engaged in raising money to buy arms.

The events of October 1996 in the DRC (then Zaire) [YUN 1996, p. 72] had radically transformed the situation being investigated by the Commission and led to a delay of more than a year in the publication of the Commission's third report. Nearly two years of violent upheavals had left remnants of the ex-FAR scattered across Africa, to the point where the first task facing the Commission was to establish their whereabouts and current activities and, to the extent possible, their military capacities and intentions. In order to investigate the sale or supply of arms to the ex-FAR and to identify parties aiding and abetting them, the Commission visited a number of countries (Kenya, Rwanda, South Africa, Uganda, United Kingdom, Zambia) and interviewed officials of many Governments and organizations.

The Commission reserved its conclusions and recommendations for its final report (see below), but observed that many questions remained to be answered about the impact of the physical dispersion of the ex-FAR since 1996 on their long-term intentions, military planning and operational effectiveness, as well as about the implications of their alliances with other local rebel groups in their countries of refuge and their capacity to achieve their objectives through the purchase of arms to be used in Rwanda in violation of the UN arms embargo. In general, the Commission was able to determine that significant numbers of ex-FAR and militia personnel were still committed to the violent overthrow of the Government of Rwanda. To that end, many of those who remained in North and South Kivu provinces and those who had returned to north-western Rwanda since November 1996 were engaged in an insurgency against the Government that was characterized by repeated attacks against Rwandan civilians and government forces.

There were indications that armed groups, especially Burundian insurgents and elements of the former Forces armées zaïroises and an armed anti-government group in Uganda, the Allied Democratic Front, were aiding and abetting the ex-FAR and closely collaborating with them, including in violations of the UN embargo. The Commission intended to pursue its investigations of the sale or supply of arms to the ex-FAR and militia and the parties aiding them, compiling data on the current geographical distribution of those forces, their political activities and their military plans and intentions, with their approximate strength in each country, the alliances they had formed and their military and political activities, including rearmament, fund-raising and military training. During its current investigation, the Commission had heard reports of ex-FAR involvement in procuring weapons, reportedly for use in Angola, the Congo, the DRC, Uganda and possibly elsewhere.

Final report. In its final report, transmitted to the Council by the Secretary-General on 18 November [S/1998/1096], the Commission stated that the situation in the central African region since its August report had been transformed by the conflict that erupted in the DRC at about the time that report was issued. In response to the rebellion, and to reports that it was being supported by the armed forces of Rwanda and Uganda, some States members of SADC also intervened. The armed forces of Angola, Namibia and Zimbabwe had been deployed within the DRC territory in support of President Kabila. Troops from Chad had also been deployed near the border with the Central African Republic in support of the DRC Government.

Those developments had greatly complicated the task of the Commission, both by forcing sudden realignments in the alliances among Governments and armed groups in the subregion, and in making it impossible for the Commission to visit some locations. The war had also made some Governments and other sources less willing to cooperate with the Commission in its investigations.

Since its previous report, the Commission had visited Belgium, Burundi, Ethiopia, Kenya, Mozambique, Rwanda, South Africa, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe, and had contacts with officials in the United Kingdom.

The Commission described the activities of the ex-FAR and the Interahamwe, beginning with the 1994 genocide in Rwanda [YUN 1994, p. 282] when some 1.7 million Rwandan Hutus, including the perpetrators of the genocide, sought refuge in neighbouring countries, primarily in eastern Zaire and the western part of the United Republic of Tanzania. From those areas, tens of thousands of the ex-FAR and Interahamwe trained, re-armed and plotted to retake control of Rwanda, as the Commission had documented in earlier reports. The situation changed dramatically as the result of the rebellion in the then-Zaire, from November 1996 to May 1997, culminating in the overthrow of the Government and the installation of President Kabila. Hundreds of thousands of Rwandan refugees returned to Rwanda, while others fled further west, either to escape the fighting or as part of their strategy.

When the Commission returned to the region in May 1998, the ex-FAR and Interahamwe were scattered over a much larger area than when the Commission departed the region in October 1996. After a six-month investigation, the Commission believed that organized groups of the ex-FAR and Interahamwe were scattered in 10 countries: Angola, Burundi, the Central African Republic, the Congo, the DRC, Rwanda, the Sudan, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia. The Commission gave estimates for the number of ex-FAR in those locations. Officers and senior officials of those groups were located in other countries, including Belgium, Benin, Cameroon, Kenya, South Africa and Togo. However, the Commission found it difficult to identify and locate the leadership of the ex-FAR and Interahamwe. It reported that many of those forces had returned to Rwanda during late 1997 and throughout 1998.

Since the rebellion in the DRC began in August 1998, most of the ex-FAR and Interahamwe (approximately 15,000 to 18,000 at that time) apparently converged on the DRC from various countries. The Commission believed that since the outbreak of the insurgency in the DRC, the former Rwandan and militia forces had been receiving increased support from some of the Governments of the region. In order to help finance their arms purchases, members of the ex-FAR and Interahamwe were involved in the narcotics trade, a new development in the region.

The Commission reported that, due to lack of time, it had not been able to follow up reports concerning the origin of the weapons sold or supplied to the ex-FAR and militia. The primary source appeared to be mainly, but not exclusively, countries in Eastern Europe and East Asia. Lack of time had also prevented the Commission from following up activities of air cargo companies and data on air traffic and cargo operations, and from tracing serial numbers of captured weapons; the report therefore should be considered incomplete.

In its conclusions, the Commission warned that the situation in the Great Lakes region was rapidly heading towards a catastrophe of incalculable consequences, which required urgent and comprehensive measures on the part of the international community. The danger of a repetition of tragedy comparable to the Rwandan genocide of 1994, but on a subregional scale, could not be ruled out. During the preceding three years, the ex-FAR and Interahamwe had transformed themselves from defeated forces in disarray to a significant component of the international alliance against the Congolese rebels and their presumed sponsors, Rwanda and Uganda. The Commission was convinced that the ex-FAR and Interahamwe continued to receive arms and ammunition, both through their close links with other armed groups in Angola, Burundi, Uganda and elsewhere, and, most recently, from the DRC Government. Thus, the ex-FAR and Interahamwe had become in effect the allies of the DRC Government and its allies, Angola, Chad, Namibia and Zimbabwe. The new relationship had conferred a form of legitimacy on them, which the Commission described as profoundly shocking.

The free flow of small arms into and within Africa was a major long-term cause of insecurity and instability in the central African subregion, the Commission stated. It was fuelled by the presence of a multitude of rebel groups in the Great Lakes region who enjoyed a large measure of governmental support. Besides the ex-FAR, the Interahamwe and the Armée pour la libération du Rwanda, there might have been as many as 20 other rebel groups active not only in the DRC, but also in Angola, Burundi, the Sudan and Uganda. Those armed groups exchanged arms freely among themselves and received them from a variety of sources. The connection had weakened two embargoes imposed by the Security Council—one on the ex-FAR and Interahamwe, and the other on the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola. In the Commission's view, consideration should be given to devising a regional solution to the problem of illicit arms trafficking in order to confront that grave challenge to international peace and security. Most African countries, in particular the countries in the Great Lakes region, did not have the expertise, training or resources to monitor the illegal flow of arms, and some clearly lacked the political will to do so.

The Commission had been struck by the damage done to stability and security in Africa by the uncontrolled flow of small arms. Those arms, like the unemployed young men who bore them, crossed borders rapidly and without hindrance to wreak havoc on the entire subregion. The destructive process had been hastened by the close links that had been established among the armed groups, the armies of losers, which proliferated throughout central Africa, and of which the former Rwandan government forces were the most violent, well-armed, well-organized and dangerous. The Commission was disturbed at reports that some members of the ex-FAR and Interahamwe were engaged in smuggling drugs into Africa, primarily to help finance their arms purchases. Aware that the former Rwandan government forces and militias had abused the humanitarian assistance provided to Rwandan refugees, especially by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), and were accused of using the camps in eastern Zaire as bases from which to attack Rwanda, the Commission called on the international community to give maximum support for measures to support the efforts of refugee host countries to ensure the security and civilian and humanitarian character of refugee camps. The Commission suggested to the Security Council that the recommendations put forward in its March 1996 report [YUN 1996, p. 69] be reviewed in the light of recent events. They concerned mechanisms to monitor and ensure implementation of Council resolutions, to gather information and to preserve evidence; measures to foster stability in the subregion; confidence-building measures to reduce the flow of arms in the subregion; and steps to deter further violations of the embargo. As proposed at a 1995 summit meeting of African heads of State (Cairo, Egypt, November 1995) [YUN 1995, p. 378], the Commission called for a termination of illegal and inflammatory radio broadcasts from one country into another.

Recalling that the ex-FAR and Interahamwe were responsible for the genocide in Rwanda in 1994 in which more than half a million people were massacred, the Commission stated that it must be recognized that those forces were a significant player in the current conflict in central Africa, and that any long-term solution must find ways to deal with them.

With regard to resolutions 918(1994) [YUN 1994, p. 285], 997(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 386] and 1011(1995) [ibid., p. 380], which established the terms of the arms embargo, the Commission said that their wording should be made clearer and more explicit. The Council might wish to call on Governments engaged in the conflict in the DRC to dissociate themselves from the ex-FAR and Interahamwe and from appeals to racial hatred. The Commission recommended that the Council call on the Governments fighting in the DRC to resolve the conflict peacefully and to refrain from supplying the former Rwandan government forces and the militia with weapons, or participating with them in planning or conducting any military operations. Ultimately, the Council might consider inviting the Governments of the subregion to consider a moratorium on the manufacture and trade of small arms. Such a proposal might be discussed at a peace conference to address the totality of problems in the subregion. In that context, the Commission noted with interest the declaration of a moratorium on light weapons declared by the Authority of the Heads of State and Government of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) (Abuja, Nigeria, 31 October) (see PART ONE, Chapter VII).

The Commission called on all Governments to refrain from harbouring, collaborating with or supplying armed groups. In the longer term, the armed groups, including the former Rwandan government forces, had to be disarmed, demobilized and reintegrated into their societies. Therefore, the Commission recommended that the Council, in the context of its follow-up to the Secretary-General's April report on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa (see above), consider ways in which the international community might assist OAU and African Governments in eliminating the threat posed by such armed groups.

The Commission aligned itself with the recommendations of the Panel of Governmental Experts on Small Arms [YUN 1997, p. 506] pertaining to strengthening international and regional cooperation among police, intelligence, customs and border control officials in combating the illicit circulation of and trafficking in small arms and light weapons and in suppressing criminal activities related to the use of those weapons. The establishment of mechanisms and regional networks for information-sharing for those purposes should be encouraged. Furthermore, all such weapons that were not under legal civilian possession and that were not required for national defence and internal security should be collected and destroyed by Governments.

At the national level, it was suggested that the Council recommend that States adopt legislation to strengthen controls on the movement of illicit arms and to respect sanctions. The elaboration of practices governing import/export controls, the issuance of end-user certificates and the strengthening of police, customs and border control services would also serve that end. The Commission called on all African countries to participate in the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms (see PART ONE, Chapter VII). It stated that OAU and subregional groups should play a leading role in data collection and sharing, early-warning systems and standard-setting, and that Member States should be encouraged to incorporate UN sanctions into their national legislation and to prosecute their nationals and companies that violated the sanctions.

Communication. In a 30 November letter to the Security Council President [S/1998/1132], Zimbabwe responded to the Commission's final report. It stated that the report's conclusion that the ex-FAR and Interahamwe had become in effect the allies of the DRC and its allies, Angola, Chad, Namibia and Zimbabwe, was tendentious and revealed the Commission's partisan character. Having failed to link Zimbabwe to the illegal flow of weapons in the Great Lakes region, the Commission was trying to create a political link between Zimbabwe and those who perpetrated genocide in Rwanda. Zimbabwe, along with other SADC allies, had responded to the DRC request for assistance to repel invasion by Rwanda and Uganda.

Sanctions Committee

On 23 December [S/1998/1219], the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 918(1994) concerning the arms embargo against Rwanda [YUN 1994, p. 285] submitted to the Council President a report covering the Committee's activities during 1998. The Council had established the Committee to seek information regarding the implementation of the embargo, consider information concerning violations of it and make recommendations for strengthening it.

The Committee, noting that it had no specific monitoring mechanism to ensure implementation of the arms embargo and that it relied solely on the cooperation of States and organizations to provide pertinent information, stated that during the reporting period no violations of the embargo were brought to its attention. The Committee took note of Council resolution 1196(1998) (above) and endorsed the Council's encouragement of Member States to consider the adoption of legislation or other legal measures making the violation of arms embargoes a criminal offence. In accordance with the resolution, the Committee intended to consider steps to improve the monitoring of the arms embargo against Rwanda, and to that end would establish channels of communication with relevant regional and sub-regional organizations and bodies.

Human rights situation

The Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 52/146 [YUN 1997, p. 714], transmitted in September the report of OHCHR on the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda (HRFOR) [A/53/367]. The terms of resolution 52/146 were expanded by the Commission on Human Rights in April 1998 (see PART TWO, Chapter III). The report provided an overview of HRFOR activities and the human rights situation in Rwanda since the High Commissioner's October 1997 report [YUN 1997, p. 81]. The High Commissioner noted that, on 11 May 1998, Rwanda suspended the activities of HRFOR pending discussions on its future role. HRFOR was withdrawn from Rwanda on 28 July when the High Commissioner and Rwanda could not agree on a new OHCHR presence to succeed the Field Operation.

Since October 1997, HRFOR had focused its monitoring activities on alleged violations perpetrated chiefly in north-west Rwanda, on the extremely harsh conditions of detention and on national genocide trials. It had sought to redress shortcomings in the protection of human rights through the implementation of technical cooperation programmes that emphasized strengthening the capacity of public institutions and civil society and working towards the development of a human rights culture in Rwanda. In addition to informing the Government of alleged human rights violations, HRFOR made recommendations relating to legal reform, the administration of justice and the situation of detention. At the time of its closure, HRFOR comprised 58 international staff members and 85 national staff deployed in the country, operating from a headquarters office, five regional sub-offices and one smaller field office.

In late 1997, the High Commissioner began an internal review of HRFOR, with the full participation of Rwanda, with a view to keeping its mandate relevant to the changing situation. The Government presented HRFOR with a draft agreement that focused exclusively on a programme of technical assistance. On 11 May 1998, it suspended HRFOR's activities, pending the conclusion of an agreement on a revised mandate, and later terminated the original agreement. During its four years of activity, HRFOR had received a total of $32 million in contributions from Member States.

Between October 1997 and May 1998, field visits were carried out to investigate specific reports of human rights violations and to monitor the overall human rights situation, including the functioning of the justice system, genocide trials and detention conditions. Field trips became less frequent as the security situation worsened. HRFOR requested information from, and presented its findings to, the Government of Rwanda. It continued implementing its programme of technical assistance and human rights promotional activities, focusing on capacity-building for members of the judiciary, the penitentiary system and the security forces, other civil servants and national non-governmental human rights organizations; increasing public awareness of specific human rights through education activities and information campaigns; and channeling assistance to vulnerable groups, especially survivors of genocide.

The human rights situation in Rwanda remained closely linked to the deteriorating security conditions and the continuation of armed conflict in the north-west of the country, with insurgency and counter-insurgency activities spreading to central Rwanda. Elements of the ex-FAR and Interahamwe who had participated in the genocide had continued to attack both civilian and military targets and had been able to obtain weapons despite the Security Council embargo on the supply of arms in the region. Victims of the attacks included women, children, genocide survivors, returned 1959 refugees ("old-caseload returnees"), Congolese Tutsi refugees and local civilian authorities. Expatriates were also victims of non-fatal attacks carried out by armed groups. In response to those attacks, RPA continued to carry out large-scale counter-insurgency operations, at times resulting in mass arrests, arbitrary detentions and involuntary disappearances.

HRFOR documented other human rights violations, including killings of detainees during alleged escape attempts and ill-treatment of detainees. It had also received reports of missing persons. The detention situation, as a result of the challenge of bringing to justice the great number of Rwandan citizens presumed to have participated in the genocide, remained one of the most serious human rights problems facing Rwanda. At the end of April 1998, the total detainee population in Rwanda was estimated at 124,983, compared to 126,216 detainees at the end of 1997, and 92,392 at the end of 1996. Conditions of detention were extremely harsh due to overcrowding, poor sanitation, and lack of sufficient food and health care, sometimes resulting in the death of detainees. Domestic trials of persons accused of genocide or crimes against humanity, which began in December 1996, continued. By the end of May 1998, judgements had been handed down by the courts in respect of 443 defendants in 156 genocide trials. HRFOR monitored most of those trials and received information on the judgements of 385 defendants. Of that total, 32 per cent were sentenced to death and 32 per cent received life sentences. From the beginning of 1998, the pace of genocide trials slowed considerably. Nevertheless, HRFOR observed improvements in the functioning of the trials, such as an increase in the number of defendants and civil claimants represented by lawyers and an increase in the number of prosecution witnesses testifying in court. On 24 April, the Government publicly executed 22 defendants found guilty of genocide crimes. The High Commissioner made a statement regarding the executions, concerned that not all judicial guarantees were respected in some cases and that such public executions would have a negative impact on the process of national reconciliation. On 26 May, the six persons accused of killing five HRFOR staff members on 4 February 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 712] were sentenced to death. The defendants were tried without legal representation and there were no defence or prosecution witnesses in court. The case could be appealed to a higher court.

The High Commissioner regretted the closure of HRFOR before national governmental and non-governmental institutions responsible for the promotion and protection of human rights had reached their full capacity for action. Despite noteworthy advances in certain areas, the High Commissioner believed that Rwanda would still benefit from sustained international cooperation and support to strengthen its domestic capacity for the promotion and protection of human rights. The insecurity and human rights situation in the north-western prefectures in view of the escalating armed conflict in the region remained a concern, particularly given the ease with which armed groups appeared to have access to weapons despite the arms embargo. The international community should take measures to enforce the embargo and to bring to justice those supplying arms illegally within the region. The High Commissioner expressed concern at reports of military operations carried out in response to attacks, while recognizing the right and duty of Rwanda to protect its citizens and others on its territory from attacks by armed groups. She confirmed that those who took no part in hostilities must be treated in accordance with international humanitarian law. The High Commissioner was also concerned about the increasing number of alleged disappearances reported to HRFOR and encouraged Rwanda to assist families to locate missing persons by improving the registration system at detention centres and by informing families of those detained. Rwanda was urged to continue to strengthen the judicial system, particularly to ensure fair trials, to address the overcrowding in detention centres, and to halt the use of the death penalty in conformity with Commission on Human Rights resolution 1998/8 (see PART TWO, Chapter III).

Communication. By a 3 June letter [S/1998/461], Zimbabwe transmitted to the Security Council President an OAU press statement on the establishment of an International Panel of Eminent Personalities to Investigate the Genocide in Rwanda and the Surrounding Events. The seven-member Panel would address such issues as the root causes of the 1994 genocide, the circumstances in which that genocide took place and its consequences in Rwanda and the Great Lakes region, including the roles of States and non-State actors before, during and after the genocide. The Panel, to be inaugurated in September 1998, would have its secretariat in Addis Ababa.

UNAMIR financing

The General Assembly, by decision 52/498 of 8 September, decided to include in the draft agenda of its fifty-third session the item on the financing of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda (UNAMIR), the mandate of which had expired on 8 March 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 60].

By decision 53/458 of 18 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee should continue to consider the financing of UNAMIR at its resumed fifty-third session in 1999.

Burundi

Although security improved in Burundi in 1998 and despite the fact that mediation efforts to find a negotiated solution to the internal conflict showed some progress, sporadic outbreaks of violence by tribal groups were reported and the situation remained tense. The Government of Burundi reported that internal ethnic strife was exacerbated by support provided to rebel groups by neighbouring countries.

The Sixth Regional Summit on Burundi expressed concern that, despite efforts to find a negotiated solution, no significant progress had been achieved to end the conflict. The Summit stressed the importance of the forthcoming all-party talks in Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, as a way to return to constitutional order.

A positive momentum was created in the Burundi peace process during three sessions of inclusive talks in Arusha in June, July and October, under the guidance of the OAU Facilitator of the Burundi peace process. At those sessions, attended by the Government, the National Assembly and 15 political parties, participants agreed to suspend hostilities from 20 July and talks were held on democracy and good governance, as well as on peace and security. A timetable of work was agreed on for the fourth session scheduled for early 1999. Efforts continued within Burundi to build a partnership between the Government and the democratic opposition.

Political situation

Sixth Regional Summit. At the invitation of Uganda, the Sixth Regional Summit on the Burundi Conflict was held in Kampala on 21 February, and was attended by the Presidents of Kenya, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia, the Prime Minister of Ethiopia and representatives of the DRC, Rwanda and Zimbabwe, with the participation of the OAU Secretary-General and the Facilitator of the peace process, Mwalimu Julius K. Nyerere. The Summit issued a communiqué, forwarded to the Security Council by Kenya on 23 February [S/1998/152], in which it expressed concern that, despite all the efforts deployed for a negotiated solution to the conflict in Burundi, no significant progress had been achieved. The Summit reviewed the situation in Burundi since its last meeting in Dar es Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania, in September 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 87], and underscored the importance of the all-party talks in order to return to constitutionalism, democracy, peace and security. The leaders agreed to review the issue of sanctions as soon as the conditions stipulated in the Dar es Salaam Summit had been adhered to and the all-party talks under the auspices of the Facilitator had commenced.

Uganda, in a 27 March letter to the Council President [S/1998/276], summarized the action taken by the six regional summits on Burundi, which had come to be known as the Arusha Peace Process. At the Second Summit [YUN 1996, p. 84], which was held in the aftermath of the July 1996 coup in Burundi, sanctions were imposed on Burundi in an effort to bring pressure to bear on the new Government under Major Pierre Buyoya to negotiate with all other Burundi groups in order to return the country to legitimacy. Following that meeting, Mr. Nyerere, who initiated a series of consultations both within and outside Burundi, and Major Buyoya took steps towards meeting the conditions for lifting sanctions. At the Fourth Regional Summit [YUN 1997, p. 841, to which Major Buyoya was invited, the leaders decided to ease sanctions to allow for the flow of food, medicines, agricultural products, and educational and building materials into Burundi. The Summit declared its readiness to suspend sanctions if negotiations between the protagonists were initiated under the Facilitator. The Burundi Government was called on to disband regroupment camps and allow its nationals to go about their activities freely.

Mr. Nyerere attempted to convene the Burundi All-Party Negotiations in Arusha in August 1997, but Burundi called for a postponement at the last minute and denied the main internal leaders permission to travel, causing the talks to be called off. When the Fifth Regional Summit met in September 1997 [ibid., p. 87], the leaders expressed disappointment at the lack of progress and agreed to maintain sanctions. Mr. Buyoya expressed his commitment to the peace process, questioned the impartiality of Mr. Nyerere and the venue for negotiations, called for the total lifting of sanctions, refused to halt the trials of political opponents, refused to release the three political opponents as had been suggested by the Summit, and indicated his willingness to attend the all-party talks. Uganda reported that throughout that period the security and humanitarian situation in Burundi continued to deteriorate.

In addition to summarizing the results of the Sixth Regional Summit (see above), Uganda clarified some aspects of the sanctions, stating that they were not an embargo, but a selective regime of sanctions intended not to punish ordinary citizens of Burundi, but to pressure Mr. Buyoya's regime to come to the negotiating table. Those sanctions consisted of an arms embargo, a ban on importation of fuel except for humanitarian activities, a ban on commercial flights to and from Burundi, and a ban on exports.

The United Nations continued to monitor the internal political and security situation and to support the peace process through its Office in Burundi and by providing an adviser to the Facilitator of the Burundi peace process.

Communications. Burundi, on 2 March [S/1998/182], transmitted to the Security Council the statement of a round table on the Burundi peace process, which was held at Gitega from 18 to 21 February. The round table said that the current crisis had taken on a broad ethnic dimension with security, political, economic, social and moral components. It stated that negotiations open to all the parties to the conflict must complement an internal dialogue, preceded by an end to the war. The round table affirmed that genocide had become a reality in Burundi and in the Great Lakes subregion, and a policy to combat its ideology and practices, primarily through a mass educational effort, was needed. It called for the establishment of an international criminal court for Burundi, as well as an independent justice system. The international community was urged to provide assistance for the victims of the conflict and to resume cooperation for reconstruction and development, as well as aid for refugees. The round table demanded an immediate end to the embargo imposed on Burundi.

In a 17 March letter [S/1998/243], Burundi expressed appreciation to the Security Council for holding an informal meeting on recent developments in Burundi and attached the statement made to the Council by its Foreign Minister. Outlining the background of the crisis and the peace process, the Foreign Minister said that the acts of genocide and ethnic and political strife that followed the assassination of President Melchior Ndadaye in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 262] had led to a dangerous deterioration in the social and political situation, which successive Governments had been unable to manage. When President Buyoya took office in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 82], the Government attempted to organize a peace process based on dialogue without exclusion and political negotiations open to all parties. The Foreign Minister stated that peace was gradually returning despite some isolated acts by tribal groups bent on genocide. The terrorists involved were encouraged by the lack of pressure by the international community, by the countries that sheltered them and by the economic sanctions that were imposed in 1996 [ibid., p. 84] by States of the region. Resolving the question of the rebels, which was linked to the problem of refugees in the Great Lakes region, must be based on agreement among all the countries concerned, the Foreign Minister said.

Commenting on the domestic and external aspects of the Burundian peace process, the Foreign Minister said that the domestic initiative included several seminars and conferences attended by all the political forces. Two high-level round tables had been held and preparations were under way for a third. The Government and the Parliament had been working together on the peace process. Externally, the negotiation process had achieved some results: peace talks had begun in Rome between the Government and the main armed group, the Conseil national pour la défense de la démocratie (CNDD), and a peace conference attended by approximately 50 representatives of Burundian political forces and about 30 international observers was held in Paris from 26 to 28 September 1997. A similar meeting was held in 1998 in Fribourg, Switzerland, with the assistance of Africa Synergies. The regional Arusha initiative to find a negotiated settlement, which began in 1996 [YUN 1996, pp. 81 & 84] and continued in 1997 [YUN 1997, pp. 84 & 87] and 1998 (see above), had not made much headway, the Foreign Minister said, owing to a lack of flexibility on the part of the mediation body and a methodology based on force, occasional military constraint and violence.

Describing what he saw as major obstacles to the peace process, the Foreign Minister said that the economic sanctions imposed by the regional leaders in 1996 were unlimited in duration, illegal and unfair, having led to the starvation and death of the poorest people while enriching the wealthiest in the region. Another obstacle was the hospitality provided by certain neighbouring countries to rebel groups. The acts of violence perpetrated by the armed groups strengthened those who were opposed to negotiations.

Burundi said it was pursuing the peace process by complying with a number of the conditions set by the Arusha group, including: re-establishment of political parties; resumed functioning of Parliament; holding of peace conferences and negotiations; dismantling of most of the sites for protecting the displaced and regrouped persons; and release of all the key figures concerned, in particular two former Presidents and the President of the National Assembly. The Foreign Minister called on the Council to: support the peace process in Burundi; support the lifting of economic sanctions; establish an international criminal court on Burundi to judge crimes against humanity and genocide; and provide humanitarian and reconstruction assistance.

In a 13 April letter [S/1998/325], Burundi informed the Council President that the National Assembly had held a parliamentary conference in Bujumbura from 16 to 21 March on the problems of restoring peace, identifying, suppressing and eradicating the crime of genocide, and national reconciliation. In addition to members of the Government, the conference was attended by representatives of the people, recognized political formations, civil society, the magistrature, religious denominations, and defence and security forces. The participants declared that Burundi should remain a unitary State and encouraged the ongoing initiatives in the context of internal dialogue and meetings with the Burundian diaspora. They recommended that comprehensive negotiations between all the parties to the conflict in Burundi should start as soon as possible. Concerning genocide, they requested the Government to demand that the United Nations establish an international commission of inquiry to identify and characterize all such crimes committed in Burundi from the independence years to the current time and attribute responsibility for them. The Government should also demand the establishment of an international criminal tribunal to try the perpetrators. National reconciliation was a long-term task, the participants said, and would require strengthening the judicial system. They recommended that the existing social justice measures relating to the restoration of property stolen during the crises should be reviewed and that human rights commissions should be established in each municipality, and suggested that a truth and reconciliation commission be established as a means of instituting a voluntary reconciliation framework. The participants noted the conflict between the 1992 Constitution and the 1996 law organizing the transition system and recommended that the National Assembly and the Government establish a consensus transition text. They also recommended the establishment of inclusive State structures in which all components of the population would be represented, including in the national Government, Parliament, local government, the defence and security forces, the judiciary and the parastatal companies.

In a 15 June letter to the Secretary-General [S/1998/519], the EU welcomed the 4 June adoption by Burundi's National Assembly of a Constitutional Act and a political platform for transition.

Peace negotiations

Under the mediation of the Facilitator of the peace negotiations on Burundi, the parties to the Burundi conflict met in Arusha from 15 to 21 June. They issued a final declaration, which Burundi forwarded to the Security Council President on 24 June [S/1998/562]. In addition to the Government of Burundi and the National Assembly, the parties represented were: Front pour la démocratie au Burundi (FRODEBU), Union pour le progrès national (UPRONA), CNDD, Parti pour le redressement nationale (PARENA), Parti liberal (PL), Parti indépendant des travailleurs (PIT), Parti social démocrate (PSD), Alliance burundo-africaine pour le salut (ABASA), INKINZO, AV-INTWARI, Parti pour la reconciliation du peuple (PRP), Parti du peuple (PP), Rassemblement du peuple burundais (RPB), Parti pour la liberation du peuple hutu du Burundi (PALIPEHUTU) and Front de la liberation nationale (FROLINA). Representatives of three organizations of civil society were present—the Chamber of Commerce, the Women's Association and the Youth Organization. On signing the declaration, a number of the parties noted their reservations to certain clauses.

Pledging to carry out negotiations until they found a solution to the crisis, the participants undertook to settle the Burundi conflict by peaceful means and declared a suspension of hostilities as from 20 July. Although the participants agreed to return to Arusha on 20 July to start the second session of their negotiations, a number of them expressed reservations about the venue. The agenda of the second session would include: the nature of the Burundi conflict and solutions to the problems of genocide and exclusion; democracy and good governance, constitutional and institutional systems, the judicial system and administrative and transitional institutions; peace and security for all, including provisions for the ceasefire; rehabilitation and resettlement of refugees and displaced persons; reconstruction and development; and guarantees for implementing the agreement arising from the peace negotiations. The parties agreed to set up committees on those issues. In order to ensure orderly negotiations, the parties agreed to adopt a document on the methodology, organization and rules of procedure for the next round.

Burundi, in its accompanying letter, said that the political partnership between the National Assembly and the Government had just resulted in a common political platform and a constitutional act of transition. The Burundian people requested the support of the international community to help them remove all external obstacles to the peace process agreed on by all the parties.

The EU, in a 26 June statement [S/1998/624], welcomed the progress achieved at the first session of the Burundi peace talks in Arusha. It called on all armed parties to honour the commitment to suspend hostilities by 20 July and encouraged them to start a second round of negotiations by that date.

President Buyoya of Burundi, at a press conference at UN Headquarters on 22 September, said that his Government had embarked on a peace process intended to bring about a political solution. In his remarks, transmitted to the Security Council President on 5 October [S/1998/924], Mr. Buyoya said that a process of internal negotiation between the Government and the National Assembly (Parliament) had concluded with a constitutional act on the transition. That had resolved the constitutional impasse, a broadly based Government was established, and an expanded Parliament was ready to start work. That domestic partnership was preparing for the third round of negotiations with the Burundian diaspora, which began in Arusha on 15 June. The most dangerous threat to the peace process, in his view, was the unjust sanctions imposed in 1996. The conditions set for lifting the sanctions had all been met, and therefore Burundi urged the authors of the sanctions to end that constraint. Burundi was at the centre of a region in turmoil, the Great Lakes region, and the current conflict in the DRC (see above) was of great concern. Burundi, which was in no way involved in that war, was likely to experience a negative fallout from the situation, particularly regarding its security and economy. In a 28 August press release [A/5271029], Burundi again expressed concern about the crisis in the DRC and the possible adverse consequences of the situation on neighbouring countries.

The inclusive peace negotiations continued in the second half of 1998. Under the auspices of the Facilitator, the second session was held in July and the third in October, both in Arusha. On 3 November [S/1998/1026], Burundi transmitted to the Security Council the statement issued by the Government at the closing of the third session. Burundi noted that the results of the session had exceeded expectations. Discussions had taken place on democracy and good governance and peace and security, the first three committees were set up and a timetable of work was agreed upon in preparation for the fourth session, scheduled for 18 January 1999. However, the Government expressed concern at the persistent violence by armed groups, despite their commitment to the suspension of hostilities, noting that the sessions in Arusha had been preceded and followed by massacres by armed groups in a bid to win a place at the Arusha negotiations. In regard to the sanctions, Burundi said that new conditions for lifting them were imposed once the previous conditions had been met, and deadlines were constantly postponed. Burundi called on the international community to support the lifting of the embargo and the suspension of hostilities.

UN adviser to peace process

In a 15 October letter to the Security Council [S/1998/968], the Secretary-General said that for some time the United Nations had been providing support to the Arusha peace talks to help bring about a peaceful settlement in Burundi. In that context, he had decided to appoint Ayité Jean-Claude Kpakpo (Benin) as Senior United Nations Adviser to the Facilitator of the Burundi peace process, Mr. Nyerere. Mr. Kpakpo, who succeeded Felix Mosha (United Republic of Tanzania) in that position, had participated in the second round of the Arusha peace talks. Reiterating UN support for the Facilitator's efforts, the Secretary-General stated that a positive momentum was created in the Burundi peace process during two rounds of inclusive talks in Arusha in June and July. That momentum had been reinforced by successful efforts within Burundi to build a partnership between the Government and the democratic opposition. A great deal of hope was being placed in the third round of talks, which had begun two days earlier, and for which the United Nations was providing secretariat and conferencing services.

On 19 October [S/1998/969], the Council informed the Secretary-General that it had taken note of his decision to appoint Mr. Kpakpo.

Lifting of sanctions

The Central Organ of the OAU Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution, at its meeting at the level of heads of State and Government in Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso, on 17 December, considered, among other issues, the situation in Burundi. In a statement transmitted to the Secretary-General on 23 December [S/1998/1217], the Central Organ expressed satisfaction at the progress made in the peace process in the country and within the framework of the Arusha talks. The Central Organ commended the Facilitator and the countries of the region for their efforts to promote a peaceful solution to the conflict and appealed to them to lift the sanctions imposed on Burundi. By a resolution adopted at the meeting and forwarded to the Security Council on 28 December [S/1998/1229], the Central Organ, noting that Burundi had met the conditions demanded by the heads of State of the subregion, appealed to those heads of State to lift the sanctions immediately and invited the OAU Secretary-General to follow up the implementation of that request.

Other matters

UN Office in Burundi

The Secretary-General, on 11 November [S/1998/1084], informed the Security Council of his intention to extend the mandate of the United Nations Office in Burundi until the end of 1999. The Office, currently headed by Cheikh-Tidiane Sy (Senegal), was established by the Council following the crisis of October 1993, in support of initiatives aimed at promoting peace and reconciliation among the conflicting parties. The Office had played a role in improving, through seminars and other confidence-building activities, the relationships between the major political actors within Burundi. It also assisted with the internal negotiations, which culminated in June with the adoption of a political partnership and the formation of a transitional, broad-based Government. Following the encouraging results of the third round of the Arusha talks, the Secretary-General stated, there was a need for the Office to continue to monitor the internal political and security situation, and to help create an enabling environment for sustained commitment by the Burundians to negotiate in good faith during the subsequent rounds.

On 17 November [S/1998/1085], the Council took note of the Secretary-General's intention.

Closing of trust fund

In a 23 June letter to the Security Council [S/1998/590], the Secretary-General referred to the International Commission of Inquiry in Burundi, which was set up by Council resolution 1012(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 346] to investigate the 1993 assassination of the President of Burundi. The Council had also established a trust fund to receive voluntary contributions to help finance the work of the Commission, which issued its final report in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 88]. As all activities of the Commission ceased soon thereafter, the Secretary-General suggested that the Council close the trust fund and dispose of the assets in accordance with the UN Financial Rules and Regulations. Accordingly, the Council, on 30 June [S/1998/591], authorized the closing of the trust fund.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Burundi, in a 24 August letter to the Secretary-General [A/53/290], requested that the item entitled "The situation in Burundi" be withdrawn from the General Assembly's agenda since the reasons that prompted its inclusion no longer applied. Since 1993, the item had been included each year in the agenda at Burundi's request. On 8 September, the Assembly decided to conclude its consideration of the item (decision 52/494).

Angola

In 1998, after four years of relative peace, the civil war resumed in many areas of Angola. The situation began to deteriorate in May when it became apparent that the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA) refused to proceed with the extension of State administration throughout the country, as the Government and UNITA had agreed when they signed the 1994 Lusaka Protocol [YUN 1994, p. 348]. At meetings with UN officials, UNITA indicated its willingness to proceed but repeatedly refused to set specific dates for the extension of State administration to its four strongholds in the central highlands, where its headquarters were located. By mid-June, the security situation had deteriorated due to UNITA's reoccupation of localities where State administration had recently been established, attacks by armed elements of UNITA, new minelaying activities and banditry. At the same time, there were reports of serious abuses by some elements of the Angolan National Police (ANP).

In June, the Security Council condemned UNITA for its failure to implement its obligations under the Lusaka Protocol and imposed financial and trade measures against UNITA under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.

The political situation was aggravated further in August when UNITA announced that it was ceasing all cooperation with the three observer States attempting to find a solution (Portugal, Russian Federation, United States). That was followed by the Government's decision to break its dialogue with Jonas Savimbi, the UNITA leader, and recognize the Renovation Committee of UNITA as the interlocutor in the Angolan peace process.

As a result of the deteriorating situation, the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola (MONUA) had to withdraw from some of its team sites as it was obstructed in its verification activities, and the Secretary-General warned that the United Nations would be compelled to reconsider its deployment on the ground. The renewed hostilities caused a significant increase in the number of internally displaced persons, reaching over a million persons by the end of the year.

The Secretary-General's Special Representative for Angola, Alioune Blondin Beye, travelled extensively in the region in order to maintain contacts with all concerned parties, old and new, in an attempt to find a peaceful solution. On 26 June, Mr. Beye, together with other MONUA staff members and the crew, perished in the crash of a MONUA aircraft. Issa B. Y. Diallo became the Secretary-General's Special Representative in August.

Despite further deterioration in the situation and the absence of any progress towards implementation of the Lusaka Protocol, the Security Council decided to extend MONUA's mandate for short periods of time in an effort to dissuade the parties from a return to war.

Implementation of Lusaka Protocol

During 1998, the Secretary-General's Special Representative continued intensive consultations with President Jose Eduardo dos Santos of Angola and Jonas Savimbi of UNITA, with a view to accelerating the implementation of the remaining tasks under the 1994 Lusaka Protocol [YUN 1994, p. 348]. The Protocol dealt with a variety of issues, including the withdrawal, quartering and demilitarization of all UNITA forces; disarming of civilians; integration of forces into a national military; police functions; the electoral process; and national reconciliation. A Joint Commission, chaired by the Secretary-General's Special Representative and composed of representatives of the three observer States, the Government of Angola and UNITA, continued to steer the Protocol's implementation.

The peace process began in May 1991 when the two Angolan parties signed the "Acordos de Paz" [YUN 1991, p. 127], which brought about a ceasefire and eventually led to the first-ever multi-party elections in September 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 178].

Report of Secretary-General (January). The Secretary-General, in response to Security Council resolution 1135 (1997) [YUN 1997, p. 109], reported on 12 January on the situation in Angola [S/1998/17]. He stated that, despite the extensive efforts undertaken by the Angolan parties towards the consolidation of peace and the continued assistance of the international community, certain important tasks remained to be completed in order to conclude the peace process. Persistent delays in implementing the Lusaka Protocol continued to be a source of serious concern.

The Special Representative, Alioune Blondin Beye, had held consultations with President dos Santos and Mr. Savimbi with a view to accelerating implementation of the Protocol. On 9 January, the two parties agreed on a revised implementation timetable that foresaw the completion of the remaining tasks by the end of February. The normalization of State administration in UNITA-controlled areas, which began on 30 April 1997, proceeded at a very slow and uneven pace. As at 8 January 1998, central government authority had been established in 239 out of a total of 344 localities envisaged in the peace plan, and it was expected that that crucial process would be completed by the end of January at the earliest. While State administration had been extended in three strategically important areas, it still remained to be extended to UNITA strongholds in Andulo and Bailundo.

As indicated in earlier reports, the normalization process had encountered serious political and logistical difficulties, including lack of cooperation by UNITA militants in certain areas of the country and the inability of the Government to provide adequate logistical support. The Government and UNITA traded accusations of gross violations of human rights and MONUA had verified some of the accusations by both sides. MONUA found there had been incidents in which UNITA militants were attacked, harassed and arbitrarily detained by local government elements.

Tensions had decreased between the parties throughout the country since the Secretary-General's previous (December 1997) report [YUN 1997, p. 109], despite the continuing frictions between local government authorities and UNITA militants in some areas, some of which led to ceasefire violations, such as recently laid mines and widespread banditry.

Registration and disarmament of the residual UNITA military personnel, which had continued for four months, was formally concluded on 22 December 1997, with 7,877 UNITA soldiers having been registered. Demobilization was in progress and, as at 9 January 1998, 1,223 residual UNITA troops had been demobilized. Although it had been intended to complete that process by the end of 1997, technical difficulties had caused delays. At the same time, there were reports that UNITA continued to regroup military elements in some areas of Angola.

The plan for downsizing the military component of MONUA [YUN 1997, p. 98] was being implemented, and its strength stood at 1,604 as at 9 January 1998. Civilian police observers continued to conduct patrols and to monitor ANP's and the Government's collection of weapons from the civilian population. The Human Rights Division of MONUA continued to monitor the human rights situation and to organize public awareness campaigns.

The continuing arrival of internally displaced persons in some areas, as a result of banditry and military activity, remained a major source of concern. Those affected were assisted by UN programmes and agencies, as well as by NGOs.

A total of 78,887 UNITA troops were registered in 15 quartering areas and 7 centres for the war-disabled between November 1995 and December 1997. Under the demobilization programme, 41,796 UNITA soldiers had been demobilized, while 10,880 were incorporated into the Angolan Armed Forces (FAA). The approximately 25,000 former troops who deserted the quartering areas would have the opportunity to be demobilized under different arrangements by June 1998. The Government's programme of social reintegration of demobilized soldiers provided some training, cash subsidies and farm implements to former soldiers. The scope of the mine problem remained an impediment to the resettlement of internally displaced persons, the reintegration of ex-combatants, and the resumption of normal agricultural and commercial activities. The national demining programme, coordinated by UNDP, had trained 50 personnel. By the end of 1997, almost 50 per cent of the country had been surveyed for mines, covering the areas where 80 per cent of the population lived, and 10,000 mines out of an estimated total of 6 million to 8 million had been cleared.

The Secretary-General reported that, since the signing of the Lusaka Protocol, the peace process in Angola had shown progress, resulting in a two-year period of relative peace. Dialogue between the Government and UNITA was maintained and had led to the formation of the joint armed forces and the national police force, as well as the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation (GURN). The tasks of MONUA, established by Security Council resolution 1118(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 104] as the successor to the United Nations Angola Verification Mission III, were to help in enhancing confidence-building and in creating an environment of stability, democratic development and rehabilitation.

In the current circumstances, the Secretary-General believed that a continued UN presence in Angola was necessary, although at a reduced level. Despite the progress, the Angolan peace process had proceeded much slower than expected; the three major pending tasks—the demilitarization of UNITA, the normalization of State administration throughout the country and the transformation of the UNITA radio station (Radio Vorgan)—remained to be completed. The United Nations, with the support of the three observer States, had played a pivotal role in helping the two parties overcome their mutual mistrust, the Secretary-General stated. He recommended that the political, human rights and civilian police components of MONUA be strengthened, and that the military component be reduced to 910 personnel.

In his observations, the Secretary-General said that there was an urgent need for both parties, but in particular UNITA, to display a greater sense of urgency in carrying out the Lusaka agreements. In addition, UNITA needed to transform itself into a purely political party, declare that it had no more armed personnel or weapons under its control and move its leadership to Luanda. The Secretary-General said that while the UN presence in Angola was much needed to implement the remaining provisions of the Lusaka Protocol, he believed that the extension of the MONUA mandate should take into account the real commitment of both parties to respect their obligations and to expedite the peace process. In that connection, he welcomed the agreement reached on 9 January on the new implementation timetable [S/1998/561, which envisaged that major progress should be achieved by the end of February 1998 when the UNITA leadership had promised to install itself in Luanda and transfer its two strongholds to the control of State administration. Therefore, he recommended that the MONUA mandate be extended for three months, until 30 April. He also welcomed the ongoing contacts between the two parties concerning a meeting in Angola between President dos Santos and Mr. Savimbi, which could enhance mutual confidence and contribute to national reconciliation.

In a 27 January addendum [S/1998/17/Add.1], the Secretary-General affirmed that, as a result of delays in the peace process resulting in an increase in the responsibilities of MONUA, the additional cost for the Mission would be approximately $10 million. That would provide for the retention of an additional 785 military contingent personnel and 4 military observers, as well as the deployment of an additional 37 international civilian staff, 70 locally recruited staff and 10 United Nations Volunteers.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

On 27 January [meeting 3850], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1149(1998). The draft [S/1998/62] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 696(1991) of 30 May 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions,

Expressing its firm commitment to preserve the unity, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola,

Having considered with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General of 12 January 1998,

Welcoming the timetable approved by the Joint Commission on 9 January 1998, according to which the Government of Angola and the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA) agreed to complete the remaining tasks of the Lusaka Protocol by the end of February 1998,

Recognizing the important role of the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola at this critical stage of the peace process,

1. Stresses the urgent need for the Government of Angola and in particular UNITA to complete, in accordance with the timetable approved by the Joint Commission on 9 January 1998, the implementation of their obligations under the Lusaka Protocol as well as to complete the implementation of their obligations under the "Acordos de Paz" and relevant Security Council resolutions;

2. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola, including the military task force as outlined in paragraphs 35 and 36 of the report of the Secretary-General of 12 January 1998, until 30 April 1998;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit no later than 13 March 1998 a comprehensive report, which would also incorporate the report requested in paragraph 7 of resolution 1135(1997) of 29 October 1997, on the situation in Angola, especially in regard to the implementation of the timetable approved by the Joint Commission, with recommendations regarding the possible reconfiguration before 30 April 1998 of the components of the Mission, referred to in section VII of the report of the Secretary-General of 12 January 1998, as well as preliminary recommendations regarding the United Nations presence in Angola after 30 April 1998;

4. Stresses the importance of strengthening the rule of law, including the full protection of all Angolan citizens throughout the national territory;

5. Requests the Government of Angola, in cooperation with the Mission, to take appropriate steps, including through its integrated national police and armed forces, to ensure an environment of confidence and safety in which the United Nations and humanitarian personnel may carry out their activities;

6. Calls upon the Government of Angola and in particular UNITA to refrain from any action which might undermine the process of normalization of State administration or lead to renewed tensions;

7. Demands that the Government of Angola and in particular UNITA cooperate fully with the Mission, including by providing full access for its verification activities, and reiterates its call on the Government of Angola to notify the Mission in a timely manner of its troop movements, in accordance with the provisions of the Lusaka Protocol and established procedures;

8. Reaffirms its readiness to review the measures specified in paragraph 4 of resolution 1127(1997) of 28 August 1997 or to consider the imposition of additional measures in accordance with paragraphs 8 and 9 of resolution 1127(1997) and on the basis of the report referred to in paragraph 3 above;

9. Reiterates its belief that a meeting between the President of the Republic of Angola and the leader of UNITA could facilitate the process of peace and national reconciliation;

10. Urges the international community to provide assistance to facilitate the demobilization and social reintegration of ex-combatants, demining, the resettlement of displaced persons and the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the Angolan economy in order to consolidate the gains in the peace process;

11. Endorses the recommendation of the Secretary-General that his Special Representative continue to chair the Joint Commission, as established under the Lusaka Protocol, which has proved to be a vital mechanism for the advancement of the peace process;

12. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General, his Special Representative and the personnel of the Mission for assisting the Government of Angola and UNITA to implement the peace process;

13. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (March). In a 13 March report [S/1998/236], submitted in response to resolution 1149(1998), the Secretary-General stated that UNITA's failure to comply with the 9 January timetable had generated tension between the parties, which required renewed efforts by the United Nations and the observer States to put the peace process back on track. The resultant impasse was largely due to the persistent delays and last-minute conditions that had become a constant feature of UNITA tactics. However, a major advance was achieved on 6 March with the adoption of an adjusted timetable that envisaged the implementation of all remaining tasks by 31 March. In addition, an agreement was reached on the personal security detachment for Mr. Savimbi, according to which its projected strength of 400 personnel would be reduced gradually to 150 over nine months. The Secretary-General urged both parties to abide by the new understanding, the Lusaka Protocol and the relevant Security Council resolutions.

Since his January report, some progress had been achieved in the normalization of State administration, with State administration authority having been extended to 264 out of a total of 335 localities. The delay in the normalization of State administration in the UNITA strongholds of Andulo, Bailundo and Mussende also hindered the establishment of central authority in adjacent areas where UNITA appeared to be maintaining a security perimeter. To the extent possible, MONUA continued to monitor flights into UNITA-controlled areas. During January, some 40 flights landing at locations controlled by UNITA were recorded, compared to 187 flights in December 1997. The general military situation in Angola remained relatively stable during the reporting period. The current strength of MONUA stood at 1,045. As at 3 March, 48,027 of a total of 87,070 registered soldiers had been demobilized. However, the number of absentees (27,291) from the demobilization centres and "residual" troops eligible for demobilization through special arrangements remained a cause of major concern.

Under those conditions, the Secretary-General believed it was advisable to maintain a significant UN involvement in the peace process in order to promote confidence-building measures, national reconciliation and socio-economic development. President dos Santos expressed the view that MONUA should continue to be reduced gradually to a structure sufficient for the verification of the next elections and it should be phased out thereafter. The Secretary-General recommended that the political and human rights components and the Public Information Unit maintain their current strength and composition; that the civilian police be increased from 46 to 51; and that the military component's formed units withdraw by July, with the exception of one infantry company, the helicopter unit and the signals and medical support units. The Secretary-General appealed for the earliest resumption of the disarmament of the civilian population, a guarantee by UNITA of the security of international staff, the full normalization of State administration and the resolution of all issues related to Mr. Savimbi's security detachment, and the move of the UNITA leadership to Luanda.

With regard to the implementation of sanctions against UNITA, the Secretary-General noted that the Chairman of the Sanctions Committee had announced his intention to visit Angola and neighbouring countries.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

On 20 March [meeting 3863], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1157(1998). The draft [S/1998/254] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 696(1991) of 30 May 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions,

Expressing its firm commitment to preserve the unity, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 13 March 1998,

Deploping the failure by the União para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA) to complete the implementation of the remaining tasks of the Lusaka Protocol according to the timetable approved by the Joint Commission on 9 January 1998,

Taking note of the declaration by UNITA on the complete demilitarization of its forces as of 6 March 1998 and of the declaration by the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation on 11 March 1998 legalizing the status of UNITA as a political party,

1. Stresses the urgent need for the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation and in particular UNITA to complete immediately and without conditions the implementation of all remaining obligations under the "Acordos de Paz", the Lusaka Protocol, and relevant Security Council resolutions, and demands that UNITA stops its pattern of delays and linkages;

2. Calls upon the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation and in particular UNITA to complete immediately their obligations in the areas of demobilization of all remaining military elements of UNITA, normalization of State administration throughout the national territory, transformation of Radio Vorgan into a non-partisan broadcasting facility, as well as disarmament of the civilian population;

3. Endorses the planned visit by the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993) of 15 September 1993 to Angola and other interested countries to discuss the full and effective implementation of the measures specified in paragraph 4 of resolution 1127(1997) of 28 August 1997 with a view to urging compliance by UNITA with its obligations under the Lusaka Protocol and relevant Security Council resolutions;

4. Calls upon all Member States to implement fully and without delay the measures specified in paragraph 4 of resolution 1127(1997), reiterates its request that Member States having information on flights and other actions prohibited in paragraph 4 of resolution 1127(1997) provide this information to the Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993), and requests the Secretary-General to report on those violations by UNITA and certain Member States in the report referred to in paragraph 8 below;

5. Reaffirms its readiness to review the measures specified in paragraph 4 of resolution 1127(1997) or to consider the imposition of additional measures in accordance with paragraphs 8 and 9 of resolution 1127(1997);

6. Endorses the recommendation of the Secretary-General to resume the gradual downsizing of the military component of the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola before 30 April 1998, with the understanding that the withdrawal of all formed military units, with the exception of one infantry company, the helicopter unit and the signals and medical support units, will be completed as soon as conditions on the ground permit, but no later than 1 July 1998;

7. Decides to increase gradually and as needed the number of civilian police observers, giving special emphasis to their language qualifications, by up to eighty-three, to assist the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation and UNITA to resolve disputes during the normalization of State administration, identify and investigate allegations of abuse, and facilitate the training of the Angolan National Police according to internationally accepted standards, and requests the Secretary-General to keep the modus operandi of the civilian police component under review and to report by 17 April 1998 on whether its tasks can be performed on the basis of a more limited increase in the number of personnel or with a reconfiguration of existing personnel;

8. Takes note of the recommendations contained in section IX of the report of the Secretary-General of 13 March 1998, and requests the Secretary-General to report by 17 April 1998 on the status of the implementation of the peace process, with final recommendations regarding the modalities of the United Nations presence in Angola after 30 April 1998, including the exit strategy and expected termination date of the Mission and the follow-on activities by the United Nations, after the termination of the Mission, to consolidate the peace process and assist in the social and economic recovery of Angola;

9. Strongly condemns the attacks by members of UNITA on Mission personnel and on Angolan national authorities, and demands that UNITA immediately stop such attacks, cooperate fully with the Mission and guarantee unconditionally the safety and freedom of movement of Mission and other international personnel;

10. Calls upon the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation to continue to give priority to peaceful actions that contribute to the successful conclusion of the peace process and to refrain from any action, including the excessive use of force, which might undermine the process of normalization of State administration or lead to renewed hostilities;

11. Stresses the importance of strengthening the rule of law, including the full protection of all Angolan citizens throughout the national territory;

12. Urges the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation and in particular UNITA to cooperate fully with the National Institute for the Removal of Unexploded Ordnance and provide information on minefields, and urges the international community to continue to provide assistance to the demining programme;

13. Reiterates its belief that a meeting between the President of the Republic of Angola and the leader of UNITA could accelerate the process of peace and national reconciliation, and urges the leadership of UNITA to move to Luanda, as agreed upon in the Lusaka Protocol;

14. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General, his Special Representative and the personnel of the Mission for assisting the Government of Angola and UNITA to implement the peace process;

15. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Communications (March). On 25 March [S/19987281], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his intention to appoint Major-General Seth Kofi Obeng (Ghana) as Force Commander/Chief Military Observer of MONUA with effect from 1 May, replacing Major-General Phillip Valerio Sibanda (Zimbabwe) whose tour of duty would end on 30 April. The Council, on 30 March [S/1998/282], expressed its agreement with the appointment.

Angola, on 30 March [S/1998/279], informed the Council that the Government had established a new law in line with its commitments under the Lusaka Protocol, under which the UNITA leader would have appropriate political intervention in Angolan national life, enjoy all rights inherent to his role, including legal guarantees, protocol, treatment, personal security and others, provided by the Constitution. The law had entered into force on 20 March and would remain in effect until the next general elections. That move followed other steps by the Government over the previous few days to implement the Peace Accords, namely, the legalization of UNITA as a political party, the appointment of UNITA cadres to governorship and vice-governorship portfolios, and the request for six UNITA members to be named as Angolan ambassadors.

Report of Secretary-General (April). The Secretary-General, on 16 April [S/1998/333], stated that additional progress had been made in the implementation of the remaining tasks under the Lusaka Protocol outlined in the revised timetable approved by the Joint Commission on 6 March. While the deadline of 31 March was not fully met, 11 of the 12 pending tasks were completed. The extension of State administration throughout the country was the only remaining task, while the disarmament of the civilian population was continuing. The Secretary-General welcomed those developments, which included the promulgation into law of the special status of Mr. Savimbi, the appointment of governors and vice-governors nominated by UNITA, the return of some UNITA senior officials to Luanda and the termination of Radio Vorgan's broadcasts. However, regarding the extension of State administration, which should have been completed by 31 March, in 66 localities of a total of 335, central authority had still not been established, including the UNITA strongholds of Andulo and Bailundo.

As a result of measures imposed by Security Council resolution 1127(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 106], the number of aircraft landing in UNITA-controlled areas in violation of the sanctions regime continued to decline.

The security situation in some areas remained precarious, mostly the result of armed attacks, often targeting ANP and local government authorities in the countryside. There were also two attacks on MONUA but no MONUA casualties. Nevertheless, the overall military situation remained relatively calm. MONUA's military component continued to verify the tasks set out in the 6 March timetable. Out of the 7,714 registered UNITA residual troops considered eligible for demobilization, 6,435 had been demobilized. The remainder would be demobilized through a special procedure; therefore, the demobilization in situ had been concluded. A total of 49,851 troops had been demobilized between September 1996 and March 1998. Of the 218 high-ranking UNITA officers presented to MONUA, 135 were demobilized. Also, the registration of the 400 security guards of Mr. Savimbi was completed. Nevertheless, allegations persisted of the existence of a large number of unregistered and undemobilized armed UNITA elements. The human rights component pursued its activities aimed at promoting and protecting human rights; it had established a presence in 13 of the 18 Angolan provinces. The continued displacement of people and the presence in Angola of asylum-seekers, as well as new minelaying activities, continued to be a source of concern to humanitarian organizations.

In the Secretary-General's view, a significant UN involvement was still needed in the country in order to assist in consolidating peace, building national reconciliation and promoting socio-economic development; consequently, he reiterated his proposals as put forward in his two previous reports. Apart from the military component, he believed that the other MONUA components should continue their operations until the end of 1998, albeit at a progressively reduced level after October. From the beginning of 1999, UN activities would focus on national reconciliation, promotion of good governance, human rights and socio-economic recovery and development, carried out by UN programmes, funds and agencies operating in Angola. Throughout 1998, the Special Representative would continue to provide his good offices and to chair the Joint Commission, while the political affairs and human rights components would remain deployed throughout the country. The Secretary-General stated that the authorized increase in the number of civilian police observers—83 additional civilian police, scheduled to take place in May and June—was necessary for the effective discharge of the MONUA mandate at that critical phase of the peace process. He proposed retaining the 450 personnel of the military component until the end of 1998, in view of the crucial support they provided to the whole Mission. After the termination of MONUA, it would be important for the United Nations to continue to assist the Angolan people in the consolidation of national reconciliation, with a gradual transition from peace-keeping and emergency humanitarian intervention to the long-term objectives of peace-building and sustained development. A UN strategy in support of Angola's transition from emergency to development had been prepared and approved by the heads of UN programmes and agencies.

The Secretary-General recommended that the current MONUA mandate be extended for two months, until 30 June 1998.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

On 29 April [meeting 3876], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1164(1998). The draft [S/1998/349] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 696(1991) of 30 May 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions,

Expressing its firm commitment to preserve the unity, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 16 April 1998,

Welcoming the recent steps by the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation and the União para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA) towards completing the remaining tasks of the Lusaka Protocol, including promulgation of the law granting special status to the leader of UNITA, the appointment of the remaining governors and vice-governors nominated by UNITA, agreement on a list of ambassadors nominated by UNITA, cessation of broadcasts by Radio Vorgan and the arrival in Luanda of senior officials of UNITA to prepare for the establishment of the headquarters of UNITA in the capital,

1. Calls upon the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation and in particular UNITA to complete all remaining obligations under the "Acordos de Paz", the Lusaka Protocol and relevant Security Council resolutions, including the normalization of State administration throughout the national territory as well as disarmament of the civilian population;

2. Strongly reiterates its demands that UNITA stop its pattern of delays and linkages and cooperate immediately and without conditions in completing the normalization of State administration throughout the national territory, including in particular in Andulo and Bailundo;

3. Takes note of steps taken by UNITA regarding some of the obligations set out in paragraphs 2 and 3 of resolution 1127(1997) of 28 August 1997, and reaffirms its readiness to review the measures specified in paragraph 4 of resolution 1127(1997) or to consider the imposition of additional measures in accordance with paragraphs 8 and 9 of resolution 1127(1997);

4. Strongly condemns the attacks by members of UNITA on the personnel of the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola, international personnel and Angolan national authorities, including the police, demands that UNITA immediately stop such attacks, and urges the Mission to investigate promptly the recent attack in N'gove;

5. Calls upon the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation and in particular UNITA to guarantee unconditionally the safety, security and freedom of movement of all United Nations and international personnel;

6. Also calls upon the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation to refrain from any action, including the excessive use of force, which might undermine the process of normalization of State administration or lead to renewed hostilities, and encourages the Government to continue to give priority to peaceful actions that contribute to the successful conclusion of the peace process;

7. Reiterates its belief that a meeting in Angola between the President of the Republic of Angola and the leader of UNITA could facilitate the successful conclusion of the peace process and accelerate the process of national reconciliation;

8. Decides to extend the mandate of the Mission until 30 June 1998;

9. Reaffirms paragraph 6 of resolution 1157(1998) of 20 March 1998, and endorses the recommendation of the Secretary-General to complete the withdrawal of all military personnel, with the exception of one infantry company, the helicopter unit, the signals and medical support units and ninety military observers, no later than 1 July 1998, and in accordance with paragraph 38 of his report of 17 April 1998;

10. Endorses the recommendation of the Secretary-General in his report referred to in paragraph 9 above to deploy eighty-three additional civilian police observers, as authorized by resolution 1157(1998), following consultations with the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation;

11. Takes note with appreciation of the recommendations of the Secretary-General contained in section IX of his report regarding the beginning of the drawdown of the military observers and civilian personnel of the Mission and the termination of the Mission, and expresses its intention to take a final decision by 30 June 1998 on the mandate, size and organizational structure of the Mission or a follow-on United Nations presence after that date, based on progress in the peace process and in the light of the report referred to in paragraph 12 below;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report by 17 June 1998 on the status of the peace process, with further recommendations regarding the mandate, size and organizational structure of the Mission or a follow-on United Nations presence after 30 June 1998, and revised estimates of the cost of that United Nations presence;

13. Expresses its appreciation to the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993) who visited Angola and other interested countries and reinforced the need for full and effective implementation of the measures specified in paragraph 4 of resolution 1127(1997) in order to achieve compliance by UNITA with its obligations under the Lusaka Protocol and relevant Security Council resolutions;

14. Calls upon all Member States to implement fully and without delay the measures specified in paragraph 4 of resolution 1127(1997), reiterates its request that Member States having information on flights and other actions prohibited in paragraph 4 of resolution 1127(1997) provide this information to the Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993), and requests the Secretary-General to report on those violations by UNITA and certain Member States in the report referred to in paragraph 12 above;

15. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General, his Special Representative and the personnel of the Mission for assisting the Government of Angola and UNITA to implement the peace process;

16. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Communication. On 12 June [S/1998/503], Portugal forwarded to the Security Council President the text of a press release issued on 2 June by MONUA following a meeting of the Joint Commission, in which the Ambassadors of the three observer States to the peace process participated. The troika of observer States deplored UNITA's continuing delays in concluding the extension of State administration, having so far returned to the central Government 272 of the 335 areas it used to control. The Joint Commission meeting was held to discuss UNITA's new proposal to conclude that exercise by the end of June, and the troika recalled that the Special Representative of the Secretary-General had presented to the parties a plan to overcome the current deadlock in the peace process.

The UNITA leadership argued that the security situation was not conducive to the return of the so-called four sensitive areas (Andulo, Nharea, Bailundo and Mungo) but that it would nevertheless continue to honour its commitment to the peace process by agreeing to start the second stage of the three-stage normalization process between 17 and 21 June, and complete the process by the end of June. The Joint Commission condemned what seemed to be an attempt to isolate the province of Malange by an organized pattern of attacks and ambushes. It also condemned an armed attack against a convoy belonging to an NGO, Worldvision, in the vicinity of Malange. It reminded the Government that MONUA had to first be notified of the movements of its armed forces.

On the other hand, as part of its verification of UNITA's demilitarization, MONUA confirmed the existence of currently demobilized UNITA forces in the provinces of Uige, Malange, Lunda Norte, Lunda Sul and Bie. UNITA had declared in March that it had completed the demilitarization of its forces. However, the Joint Commission could not confirm an alleged concentration of UNITA military forces at the confluence of the Lomba and Camaxilo rivers.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May and June)

At informal consultations on 20 May, the Security Council received a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations on a 19 May incident in Angola, which resulted in serious injury to two MONUA officials and the death of a local interpreter.

On 22 May [meeting 3884], the President of the Council made the following statement on behalf of the Council members [S/PRST/1998/14]:

The Security Council strongly condemns the armed attack in Angola on 19 May 1998 against personnel from the United Nations and the Angolan National Police, in which one person was killed and three people were seriously injured. It demands that the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation and in particular the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA) guarantee unconditionally the safety and freedom of movement of all United Nations and other international personnel.

The Council strongly deplores the failure by UNITA to complete the implementation of its remaining obligations under the "Acordos de Paz," the Lusaka Protocol and relevant Council resolutions, especially its failure to cooperate in completing the normalization of State administration throughout the national territory, including in particular in Andulo and Bailundo. It also strongly condemns the confirmed attacks by members of UNITA on the personnel of the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola, international personnel and Angolan national authorities. The Council expresses its deep concern at the serious abuses committed by the Angolan National Police, particularly in areas recently transferred to State administration, as well as at the recent increase in hostile propaganda. The lack of progress in completing the remaining tasks of the peace process has led to a serious deterioration in the military and security situation in the country. The Council calls upon the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation and UNITA in the strongest terms to refrain from any action which might lead to renewed hostilities or derail the peace process.

The Council endorses the plan for the completion of the remaining tasks of the Lusaka Protocol by 31 May 1998 that was submitted by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General to the Joint Commission on 15 May 1998. The Council demands that the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation and in particular UNITA fulfil their obligations in accordance with this plan. In this context, the Council reaffirms its readiness to review the measures specified in paragraph 4 of resolution 1127 (1997) of 28 August 1997 and to consider the imposition of additional measures in accordance with paragraphs 8 and 9 of resolution 1127(1997).

The Council expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General, his Special Representative and the personnel of the Mission for their efforts to assist the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation and UNITA to implement their peace process obligations.

The Council will remain actively seized of this matter.

At informal consultations on 5 June, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General briefed the Council on the situation in Angola, particularly UNITA's failure to meet the demand for the normalization of State administration in the four sensitive localities and MONUA's future.

On 12 June [meeting 3891], the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1173(1998). The draft [S/1998/504] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 696(1991) of 30 May 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions, in particular resolution 1127(1997) of 28 August 1997,

Reaffirming its firm commitment to preserve the unity, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola,

Expressing its grave concern at the critical situation in the peace process, which is the result of the failure by the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA) to implement its obligations under the "Acordos de Paz", the Lusaka Protocol, relevant Security Council resolutions and the plan for the completion by 31 May 1998 of the remaining tasks of the Lusaka Protocol, which was submitted by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General to the Joint Commission on 15 May 1998,

Recalling the statement by its President of 22 May 1998,

Recognizing the steps taken by the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation to fulfil its obligations under the above-mentioned plan to cease the dissemination of hostile propaganda on State-controlled media and to reduce cases of abuse by the Angolan National Police,

Taking note of the statement of 2 June 1998 issued by the Mission regarding the continued existence of non-demobilized forces of UNITA,

A

1. Condemns UNITA, and holds its leadership responsible, for its failure to implement fully its obligations contained in the Lusaka Protocol, relevant Security Council resolutions, in particular resolution 1127(1997), and the plan submitted by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General to the Joint Commission;

2. Demands that UNITA fully cooperate without conditions in the immediate extension of State administration throughout the national territory, including in particular in Andulo, Bailundo, Mungo and Nharea, and stop any attempts to reverse this process;

3. Reiterates its demand that UNITA complete its demilitarization and stop any attempts to restore its military capabilities;

4. Demands that UNITA cooperate fully with the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola in the verification of its demilitarization;

5. Demands also that UNITA stop any attacks by its members on the personnel of the Mission, international personnel, the authorities of the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation, including the police, and the civilian population;

6. Urges the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation to continue to refrain from any action, including the excessive use of force, which might undermine the process of normalization of State administration, encourages to make use of the personnel of UNITA, as appropriate and in accordance with the provisions of the Lusaka Protocol, in areas to which State administration is extended, and also encourages the Government to continue to give priority to peaceful actions that contribute to the successful conclusion of the peace process;

7. Calls upon the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation and in particular UNITA to avoid taking any action which might lead to renewed hostilities or undermine the peace process;

8. Stresses the importance of strengthening the rule of law, including the full protection of all Angolan citizens throughout the national territory;

9. Calls upon the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation and in particular UNITA to guarantee unconditionally the safety, security and freedom of movement of all United Nations and international personnel;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to redeploy Mission personnel immediately and, as appropriate, to support and facilitate the extension of State administration throughout the national territory, including in particular in Andulo, Bailundo, Mungo and Nharea, and calls upon UNITA to cooperate fully in this regard;

B

Recalling paragraph 9 of resolution 1127(1997),

Determining that the current situation in Angola constitutes a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

11. Decides that all States, except Angola, in which there are funds and financial resources, including any funds derived or generated from property of UNITA as an organization or of senior officials of UNITA or adult members of their immediate families designated pursuant to paragraph 11 of resolution 1127(1997), shall require all persons and entities within their own territories holding such funds and financial resources to freeze them and ensure that they are not made available directly or indirectly to or for the benefit of UNITA as an organization or of senior officials of UNITA or adult members of their immediate families designated pursuant to paragraph 11 of resolution 1127(1997);

12. Decides also that all States shall take the necessary measures:

(a) To prevent all official contacts with the leadership of UNITA in areas of Angola to which State administration has not been extended, except for those by representatives of the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation, of the United Nations and of the Observer States to the Lusaka Protocol;

(b) To prohibit the direct or indirect import from Angola to their territory of all diamonds that are not controlled through the Certificate-of-Origin regime of the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation;

(c) To prohibit, upon notification by the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993) of 15 September 1993 of all Member States of guidelines approved by that Committee, the sale or supply to persons or entities in areas of Angola to which State administration has not been extended, by their nationals or from their territory, or using their flag vessels or aircraft, of equipment used in mining or mining services;

(d) To prohibit, upon notification by the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993) of 15 September 1993 of all Member States of guidelines approved by that Committee, the sale or supply to persons or entities in areas of Angola to which State administration has not been extended, by their nationals or from their territory, or using their flag vessels or aircraft, of motorized vehicles or watercraft or spare parts for such vehicles, or ground or waterborne transportation services;

13. Decides further that the Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993) may authorize, on a case-by-case basis, upon a no-objection procedure, exemptions to the measures specified in paragraphs 11 and 12 above for verified medical and humanitarian purposes;

14. Decides that the measures specified in paragraphs 11 and 12 above shall come into force without further notice at 0001 hours eastern daylight time on 25 June 1998, unless the Security Council decides, on the basis of a report by the Secretary-General, that UNITA has fully complied by 23 June 1998 with all its obligations under paragraph 2 above;

15. Expresses its readiness to review the measures specified in paragraphs 11 and 12 above and in paragraph 4 of resolution 1127(1997) and terminate them, if the Secretary-General reports at any time that UNITA has fully complied with all its relevant obligations;

16. Expresses its readiness also to consider the imposition of further additional measures if UNITA does not fully comply with its obligations under the "Acordos de Paz", the Lusaka Protocol and relevant Security Council resolutions;

17. Calls upon all States and all international and regional organizations to act strictly in accordance with the provisions of this resolution, notwithstanding the existence of any rights or obligations conferred or imposed by any international agreement or any contract entered into or any licence or permit granted prior to the date of adoption of the present resolution;

18. Also calls upon all States to implement strictly the measures imposed in paragraphs 19 to 21 of resolution 864(1993) and paragraph 4 of resolution 1127(1997), as well as to comply with paragraph 6 of resolution 1127(1997);

19. Requests the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation to designate, and to notify to the Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993), the areas of Angola to which State administration has not been extended;

20. Requests the Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993):

(a) To draw up guidelines expeditiously for the implementation of paragraphs 11 and 12 above and to consider ways and means for further strengthening the effectiveness of the measures adopted by the Council in its previous resolutions;

(b) To report to the Council by 31 July 1998 regarding the actions taken by States to implement the measures specified in paragraphs 11 and 12 above;

21. Requests Member States to provide to the Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993), no later than 15 July 1998, information on the measures they have adopted to implement the provisions of paragraphs 11 and 12 above;

22. Also requests Member States having information about any violations of the provisions of this resolution to provide this information to the Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993) for distribution to Member States;

23. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (June). On 17 June [S/1998/524], the Secretary-General again reported to the Security Council on MONUA and on the status of the Angolan peace process, in accordance with resolution 1164(1998) (see above). Despite strenuous efforts by his Special Representative, Mr. Beye, no progress was achieved during the reporting period in the implementation of one of the last major pending tasks under the Lusaka Protocol, namely, the normalization of State administration throughout the country, including in the four strategic areas of Andulo, Bailundo, Mungo and Nharea, which remained under UNITA's control. On 15 May, Mr. Beye presented to the Government and UNITA a "crisis resolution plan" aimed at overcoming the impasse. The plan, which was endorsed by the Government and UNITA, as well as by the observer States, on 19 May, envisaged full normalization of State administration by 31 May in those four localities, strict verification of the alleged presence of UNITA elements throughout the country, the cessation of hostile propaganda in the government mass media and an end to the harassment of UNITA members by ANP. The plan also stipulated that, if either party failed to implement it, the Council would be requested to consider taking appropriate measures. UNITA, while indicating its general support for the plan, presented new proposals with additional conditions that called for joint Government and UNITA technical teams to conduct their work in the four localities between 17 and 21 June and that the full normalization of State administration would take place by 25 June. Government representatives rejected the new delays and warned of possible action unless UNITA immediately disbanded the military structure it had maintained in defiance of the Lusaka Protocol. The Government also threatened to close down the UNITA headquarters, which was installed in Luanda on 1 June.

In the meantime, the Joint Commission acknowledged that the Government had exercised restraint on the ground in dealing with UNITA supporters, as well as in the mass media, but expressed serious concern at the lack of progress in the extension of State administration owing to UNITA's persistent delays. The transformation of Radio Vorgan into a non-partisan broadcasting facility and the establishment of "Radio Desperstar" were also experiencing delays.

The reporting period was also marked by a dangerous deterioration of the security situation in various parts of the country. Acts of banditry, new minelaying activities and troop movements had increased. MONUA came under fire and suffered casualties, and a UN team site was evacuated owing to mounting tensions. The normalization of State administration had been reversed in over 30 localities, MONUA reported, and the Government acknowledged that 17 localities had been reoccupied by UNITA elements. MONUA also confirmed the presence of armed "residual" UNITA troops in a number of locations. For its part, UNITA claimed that it had been the target of Angolan forces. In many instances, gross human rights abuses, including the killing of local UNITA functionaries in three locations, had been confirmed by MONUA.

The repatriation of UN military personnel from Angola was resumed, but, in view of the dangerous security situation, the Secretary-General decided to postpone the drawdown of formed units until the end of June. At mid-June, MONUA's strength stood at 414 troops in three infantry companies, 302 military support personnel (medical, air, logistics and communication), 39 staff officers, 90 military observers and 336 police observers.

The Secretary-General observed that the situation in Angola was deteriorating quickly and had become critical, mainly due to UNITA's failure to fulfil its obligations under the Lusaka Protocol and to implement the Special Representative's plan. He joined the Council in appealing to UNITA to cooperate with the United Nations in the immediate extension of State administration throughout the national territory and, in particular, to the four strategic locations.

The United Nations, the Secretary-General stated, should continue to assist Angola in restoring peace and national reconciliation; accordingly, if the demands made in resolution 1173(1998) were implemented, he would recommend that the mandate of MONUA be extended for two months, until 31 August, at the same strength. On the other hand, if there was no political will to complete the peace process, it would be necessary to resume the withdrawal of UN troops in accordance with resolution 1164(1998), stop the deployment to Angola of the additional police observers and review UN involvement in Angola.

Communication. On 24 June [S/1998/566], the Secretary-General referred to paragraph 14 of Council resolution 1173(1998), in which the Council decided that additional measures against UNITA would come into force on 25 June unless UNITA fully cooperated in the extension of State administration throughout Angola. Following intensive consultations undertaken by the Special Representative for Angola, the UNITA leader, Mr. Savimbi, expressed willingness to cooperate in the normalization of the four strategic localities by 30 June, although he did not set specific dates for implementation. President dos Santos agreed with the proposal to defer the entry into force of the sanctions until 30 June. The Joint Commission endorsed Mr. Beye's suggestion that the entry into force of additional measures against UNITA be postponed until that date.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 24 June [meeting 3894], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1176(1998). The draft [S/1998/569] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 696(1991) of 30 May 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions, in particular resolution 1173(1998) of 12 June 1998,

Taking note of the letter dated 24 June 1998 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council,

Determining that the current situation in Angola constitutes a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Demands that the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA) comply fully and unconditionally with the obligations referred to in resolution 1173(1998);

2. Decides that, notwithstanding paragraph 14 of resolution 1173(1998), the measures specified in paragraphs 11 and 12 of resolution 1173(1998) shall come into force without further notice at 0001 hours eastern daylight time on 1 July 1998, unless the Security Council decides, on the basis of a report by the Secretary-General, that UNITA has fully complied with all its obligations under paragraph 2 of resolution 1173(1998);

3. Requests the Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993), notwithstanding paragraph 20 (b) of resolution 1173(1998), to report to the Council by 7 August 1998 regarding the actions taken by States to implement the measures specified in paragraphs 11 and 12 of resolution 1173(1998);

4. Requests Member States, notwithstanding paragraph 21 of resolution 1173(1998), to provide to the Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993), no later than 22 July 1998, information on the measures they have adopted to implement the provisions of paragraphs 11 and 12 of resolution 1173(1998);

5. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

At informal consultations on 29 June, the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations briefed the Council on the 26 June crash of a MONUA aircraft, which cost the lives of the Secretary-General's Special Representative, Mr. Beye, five MONUA staff members and two crew members.

On the same date [meeting 3899], the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1180(1998). The draft [S/1998/5771 was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 696(1991) of 30 May 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 1173(1998) of 12 June 1998 and 1176(1998) of 24 June 1998,

Reaffirming its firm commitment to preserve the unity, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 17 June 1998,

Expressing concern in the strongest terms at the critical situation in the peace process, which is the result of the failure by the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA) to complete its obligations under the "Acordos de Paz", the Lusaka Protocol, and relevant Security Council resolutions, including in particular its obligation to cooperate fully and without conditions in the immediate extension of State administration throughout the national territory,

Expressing its grave concern at the deterioration of the security situation in Angola as a result of the reoccupation by UNITA of localities where State administration was recently established, attacks by armed elements of UNITA, new minelaying activities and banditry,

Noting with deep concern cases of serious abuse by some elements of the Angolan National Police, and stressing the importance of strengthening the rule of law, including the full protection of all Angolan citizens throughout the national territory,

Recognizing the important role of the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola at this critical stage of the peace process,

1. Welcomes the recommendations of the Secretary-General in paragraph 44 of his report of 17 June 1998, and decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola until 15 August 1998;

2. Decides to resume the withdrawal of the military component of the Mission in accordance with paragraph 9 of resolution 1164(1998) of 29 April 1998 as soon as conditions permit;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to reconsider the deployment of the additional civilian police observers authorized under paragraph 10 of resolution 1164(1998), taking into account conditions on the ground and progress in the peace process;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report, as necessary, but no later than 7 August 1998, with recommendations regarding the involvement of the United Nations in Angola, taking into account the safety and freedom of movement of Mission personnel and the status of the peace process;

5. Reiterates its demand that UNITA immediately stop any attacks by its members on Mission personnel, international personnel, the authorities of the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation, including the police, and the civilian population, and calls again upon the Government and in particular UNITA to guarantee unconditionally the safety and freedom of movement of all United Nations and international personnel;

6. Demands that the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation and in particular UNITA cooperate fully with the Mission in providing full access for its verification activities, including the verification of the full demilitarization of UNITA, and reiterates its call upon the Government to notify the Mission in a timely manner of its troop movements, in accordance with the provisions of the Lusaka Protocol and established procedures;

7. Calls upon the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation and in particular UNITA to refrain from the laying of new mines;

8. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General, his Special Representative and the personnel of the Mission for assisting the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation and UNITA to implement the peace process;

9. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Communications (July/August). Mozambique, on 27 July [S/1998/695], transmitted to the Security Council a communiqué on Angola issued by the Central Organ of the OAU Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution. The Central Organ, condemning UNITA for its armed aggression and reoccupation of the territory already handed over to State administration, held its leadership accountable for the resumption of hostilities. It called on all OAU member States to apply the measures adopted by the Council, especially within the context of resolutions 1135(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 109] and 1173(1998) (above).

The Secretary-General, in a letter of 7 August [S/1998/730], informed the Council of his intention to appoint Issa B. Y. Diallo of Guinea as Special Representative for Angola. He placed on record his appreciation for the invaluable and tireless efforts of Mr. Beye and his colleagues, who lost their lives in pursuit of peace in Angola. On the same date [S/1998/731], the Council took note of the Secretary-General's intention. In earlier letters to the Council, Angola [S/1998/594] and the United Kingdom [S/1998/625], on behalf of the EU, paid tribute to Mr. Beye's efforts over the past five years to find a peaceful solution to the Angolan conflict.

Report of Secretary-General (August). The Secretary-General reported on 6 August [S/1998/723] on MONUA and the situation in Angola since his 17 June report. After two months of delays, the Angolan Government and UNITA held consultations on 18 and 19 June, which led to a number of understandings, but UNITA again failed to set specific dates for the extension of State administration to its four strongholds of Andulo, Bailundo, Mungo and Nharea. The death of Mr. Beye on 26 June occurred at a critical phase in the peace process; at the time, he had been consulting on extending State administration. The Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Bernard Miyet, visited Angola from 29 June to 3 July to reaffirm the UN commitment to the peace process. The Secretary-General was himself, and through others, maintaining contacts with the parties to urge restraint and to avoid further deterioration of the situation. On 8 July, UNITA leader Savimbi expressed his readiness to implement the measures agreed upon on 18 and 19 June and suggested that MONUA should reopen a number of its team sites to assist in re-establishing cooperation between the two parties on the ground.

Subsequently, UNITA was repeatedly asked by the Joint Commission to establish dates for the transfer of the four localities to the Government's control. In response, however, it linked any consideration of such dates to the re-establishment of its party structures where, it claimed, they had been dismantled. Despite efforts by MONUA and the observers to the peace process, no agreement could be reached on a new timetable for extending State administration.

The reporting period was marked by the absence of any sustained dialogue between the Government and UNITA, as well as by the intensification of hostile propaganda. UNITA claimed that from April to June ANP had killed 263 UNITA members and sympathizers. It also claimed that the Government was attempting to dismantle its party, and had eliminated its structures in 212 of the 272 localities where State administration had been extended. For its part, the Government accused UNITA of trying to make the country ungovernable by reoccupying over 70 localities, which were earlier transferred to the Government's authority, and by killing hundreds of government functionaries and civilians and displacing tens of thousands of people.

The Secretary-General reported that risks of a resumption of full-scale hostilities had increased significantly. UNITA forces, apparently having maintained military capability despite declarations on its demilitarization, continued to threaten FAA and ANP in five provinces. On many occasions, UNITA "residual" troops had been identified as being responsible for attacks on villages and ambushes on major roads. Government-controlled diamond-mining areas had also been attacked and renewed minelaying activities were reported. MONUA confirmed that on 21 July over 100 civilians were massacred by unidentified elements in Bula, Lunda Norte Province. On the other hand, it was reported that FAA had started laying minefields around their positions in three regions and had embarked on forced conscription. Acts of violence perpetrated by FAA and ANP against UNITA sympathizers had increased. The recent developments had seriously affected the activities of MONUA, which continued to monitor and investigate allegations, despite the lack of cooperation and increased restrictions imposed on its activities by both parties. As a precautionary measure, MONUA relocated 19 of its 44 team sites to safer areas. UNITA attempted to obstruct the relocation of three of those teams. Owing to the prevailing insecurity, the downsizing of MONUA's military component was temporarily suspended, leaving it with 728 military personnel.

Urging the two parties to exercise restraint, the Secretary-General stated that he was most disturbed by UNITA's failure to demobilize fully and to facilitate the extension of State administration throughout the country, requirements that were the pillars of the Lusaka Protocol. UNITA should stop its attacks against Government-controlled areas and ANP should refrain from practices inconsistent with its status as defined under the Lusaka Protocol. Genuine dialogue would be possible only when the high-level UNITA representatives returned to Luanda and participated in the Joint Commission. When those steps were carried out and the security situation improved, MONUA would be prepared to re-establish its presence in key locations throughout the country. Alternatively, the Secretary-General asserted, the United Nations would be compelled to reconsider its deployment on the ground.

The Secretary-General sent Lakhdar Brahimi to Angola as his Special Envoy to assess the situation and to advise him on the possible course of action. In the meantime, the Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council extend the MONUA mandate for one month, until 15 September.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

On 13 August [meeting 3916], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1190(1998). The draft [S/1998/749] was submitted by Portugal, the Russian Federation and the United States.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 696(1991) of 30 May 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions, including resolutions 864(1993) of 15 September 1993, 1127(1997) of 28 August 1997 and 1173(1998) of 12 June 1998,

Reaffirming also its firm commitment to preserve the unity, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola,

Strongly deploring the deteriorating political and security situation in Angola, which is primarily the result of the failure by the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA) to complete its obligations under the "Acordos de Paz", the Lusaka Protocol and relevant Security Council resolutions,

Taking note of recent positive steps to restore confidence in the peace process,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 6 August 1998,

1. Welcomes the decision by the Secretary-General to dispatch a Special Envoy to assess the situation in Angola and advise on a possible course of action, and requests the Secretary-General to submit, no later than 31 August 1998, a report with recommendations regarding the future role of the United Nations in Angola;

2. Expresses its intention to review the recommendations referred to in paragraph 1 above and to consider appropriate actions;

3. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola until 15 September 1998, and takes note of the considerations specified in paragraph 38 of the report of the Secretary-General of 6 August 1998 regarding the deployment of the Mission throughout the country;

4. Calls upon the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation and in particular UNITA in the strongest terms to refrain from any steps which could further exacerbate the present situation;

5. Demands that UNITA comply immediately and without conditions with its obligations under the Lusaka Protocol and with relevant Security Council resolutions, in particular the complete demilitarization of its forces and full cooperation in the immediate and unconditional extension of State administration throughout the national territory, in order to prevent a further deterioration of the political and security situation;

6. Demands also that UNITA cease its reoccupation of localities where State administration was established and stop attacks by its members on civilians, authorities of the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation, including the police, and United Nations and international personnel;

7. Calls upon the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation and UNITA to cease hostile propaganda, refrain from laying new mines, stop forced conscriptions and renew efforts towards national reconciliation, including by implementing confidence-building measures, such as the reactivation of the joint mechanisms in the provinces and the disengagement of military forces on the ground;

8. Calls upon the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation to ensure that the Angolan National Police refrain from practices inconsistent with the Lusaka Protocol and to respect the legal activities of UNITA as a political party in accordance with the Lusaka Protocol;

9. Demands that the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation and in particular UNITA cooperate fully with the Mission in providing full access for its verification activities and guarantee unconditionally the safety and freedom of movement of all United Nations and international personnel, including those providing humanitarian assistance;

10. Expresses its firm belief that a meeting in Angola between the President of the Republic of Angola and the leader of UNITA could provide momentum to the peace process;

11. Calls upon Member States to implement fully the relevant provisions of resolutions 864(1993), 1127(1997) and 1173(1998);

12. Welcomes the appointment of a new Special Representative to Angola, and urges the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation and UNITA to cooperate fully with him in promoting peace and national reconciliation;

13. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue his personal engagement in the peace process;

14. Expresses its appreciation to the personnel of the Mission;

15. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (September).

In response to the Council's request (resolution 1190(1998) (above)), the Secretary-General submitted a 7 September report [S/1998/838] on MONUA and the situation in Angola. His Special Envoy, Mr. Brahimi, visited Angola from 31 July to 8 August and then travelled to other countries of the region. The Secretary-General asserted that it was evident that the situation had continued to deteriorate, and both parties seemed to be preparing for a confrontation. The current stalemate in the peace process was mainly the result of persisting delays by UNITA in fulfilling its major obligations under the Lusaka Protocol.

At a meeting of the Joint Commission, UNITA presented new proposals on the extension of State administration to the four strongholds by 15 October. The Government made a counter-proposal, which called for the full demilitarization of UNITA, the installation of its leadership in Luanda and the extension of State administration to the four localities by 31 August. On the basis of those two proposals, MONUA presented a compromise programme of activities that set 15 September as the deadline by which the four areas should be transferred to the Government's authority. Those activities included: reduction of hostile propaganda; the return of senior UNITA officials to Luanda; the return of both local government authorities and UNITA functionaries to the areas that they had left as a result of the deterioration of security conditions; and the cessation of violence and the determination of modalities for the demilitarization process. While the Government expressed its willingness to accept the programme, UNITA rejected its provisions about the conclusion of the demilitarization process.

The continued absence of many senior UNITA members from the capital and subsequent return of the hostile anti-UNITA tone in the Luanda mass media had compounded the general situation in the country. Also, the declaration by the UNITA leadership concerning the severance of cooperation with the observer States for allegedly being partial in the peace process contributed to the growing tensions.

On 31 August, the Angolan authorities decided to suspend UNITA members from GURN because of non-compliance with the commitments under the Lusaka Protocol. Contacts between the Government and UNITA had virtually ceased at the local level and were limited to interaction in the Joint Commission. A group of senior UNITA officials created a "temporary leadership" of the party, calling itself the Renovation Committee of UNITA, and said it would continue with the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol. The Government insisted that MONUA should cease its contacts with Mr. Savimbi.

Despite the escalation of tensions and the restriction on its movement, MONUA continued to monitor, to the extent possible, the military and security situation. The strength of the military component stood at 724 personnel and the civilian police component at 401.

Since the beginning of the year, more than 142,000 new internally displaced persons (IDPs) had been registered, out of which 108,000 had received assistance from the humanitarian community. The total number of IDPs was estimated at 1.3 million. Several thousands of Angolans were reported to have fled to neighbouring countries. The conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo had further complicated the situation in Angola.

The Secretary-General said that the United Nations was facing a crucial dilemma. A great deal had been achieved in Angola during the previous three and a half years, not least the fact that the country had enjoyed a period of relative peace; however, if the current insecurity were to continue, the United Nations would be forced to reduce further its presence in Angola. Moreover, MONUA would not be able to remain in Angola in case of a major military confrontation or if the parties, in particular UNITA, were to continue to fail to complete their tasks under the Lusaka Protocol. It was imperative that UNITA agree to complete the extension of State administration, to dismantle its "residual" forces and to become a political party. On the other hand, the Government had to establish a political and security environment in which UNITA could be transformed into an effective political party.

In the prevailing circumstances, the Secretary-General said, the international community should give the Angolan parties an additional chance to return to the peace process and the new Special Representative needed time to explore ways to overcome the current difficulties. Therefore, he proposed that the mandate of MONUA be extended until 31 January 1999, on the understanding that the Council would conduct a review of the situation by the end of November 1998. If the deadlock persisted at that time, the Council should accelerate the reduction of MONUA with a view to closing it down by early February 1999.

Communication (September). On 10 September [S/1998/847], the President of Angola informed the Secretary-General that the Government had decided to break its dialogue with Mr. Savimbi because his behaviour and practices had disqualified him as an interlocutor in the Angola peace process and had placed him outside the law. Mr. Savimbi, the letter said, had refused to comply with the Lusaka Protocol and had again launched a military campaign. A group of UNITA military and political leaders had broken away from Mr. Savimbi, creating a Renovation Committee, and the Angolan Government had decided to recognize it as the only legitimate interlocutor for the conclusion of the Lusaka Protocol.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 15 September [meeting 3925], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1195(1998). The draft [S/1998/850] was submitted by Kenya, Portugal, the Russian Federation, Slovenia and the United States.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 696(1991) of 30 May 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming its firm commitment to preserve the unity, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola,

Taking note of the letter dated 10 September 1998 from the President of the Republic of Angola to the Secretary-General,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 7 September 1998,

1. Emphasizes that the primary cause of the crisis in Angola and of the current impasse in the peace process is the failure by the leadership of the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA) to comply with its obligations under the "Acordos de Paz", the Lusaka Protocol and relevant Security Council resolutions, and demands that UNITA comply immediately and without conditions with its obligations, in particular the complete demilitarization of its forces and full cooperation in the immediate and unconditional extension of State administration throughout the national territory;

2. Demands that UNITA withdraw immediately from territories it has occupied through military action;

3. Reiterates its full support for the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol;

4. Demands that UNITA transform itself into a genuine political party through the dismantling of its military structure, and, in the context of the full implementation of the Lusaka Protocol, strongly urges the Angolan authorities to reconsider their decision to suspend the participation of members of UNITA in the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation and in the National Assembly;

5. Calls upon Member States to implement fully the relevant provisions of resolutions 864(1993) of 15 September 1993, 1127(1997) of 28 August 1997 and 1173(1998) of 12 June 1998;

6. Strongly urges the Government of Angola, UNITA and States in the region to reject military action, to pursue dialogue to resolve the crisis and to refrain from any steps which could exacerbate the current situation;

7. Reiterates its support to the Secretary-General for his personal engagement in the peace process, and urges the Government of Angola and UNITA to cooperate fully with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and with other relevant initiatives by Member States to seek a peaceful resolution of the crisis;

8. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola until 15 October 1998 and to assess the overall situation and take action on the future role of the United Nations in Angola on the basis of a report and recommendations to be submitted by the Secretary-General no later than 8 October 1998;

9. Endorses the decision of the Secretary-General to instruct the Mission to adjust its deployment on the ground, as needed, to ensure the safety and security of Mission personnel, and demands that the Government of Angola and in particular UNITA guarantee unconditionally the safety and freedom of movement of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and all United Nations and international humanitarian personnel, including those providing humanitarian assistance;

10. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Communications (September/October). In a 29 September statement [S/1998/919], transmitted to the Secretary-General by Austria on 1 October, the EU Presidency expressed its concern regarding the marked deterioration in the politico-military situation in Angola and stated that the blame for the current impasse in the peace process rested primarily with UNITA. The EU welcomed the decision by the Angolan authorities to reinstate UNITA members in GURN, encouraged the Government to exercise restraint and called on the two parties to assist the Special Representative in fulfilling his mandate.

On 5 October [S/1998/916], Portugal, the Russian Federation and the United States transmitted to the Secretary-General a 24 September statement on Angola by their Foreign Ministers. In view of the latest events in Angola, the troika stressed that there could be no military solution to the conflict, called on the Government and UNITA to seek a political settlement and demanded that UNITA comply immediately with its obligations under the Lusaka Protocol and cease all its military activity. Expressing its support for the efforts of the Secretary-General and the Special Representative to reinvigorate the peace process, the troika appealed to the Security Council to continue its engagement in the peace process and to maintain an appropriate presence of MONUA in support of that process.

The three Ministers attached to their statement a letter they had addressed to Mr. Savimbi, expressing their concern over reports of renewed fighting. They stated that all-out war was not inevitable and hostilities could be avoided if UNITA honoured its commitments under the Lusaka Protocol. In the meantime, the Government of Angola had largely fulfilled its obligations. The current situation was precarious and could be reversed only by UNITA, they stated.

Report of Secretary-General (October). In an 8 October report [S/1998/931], submitted in response to Security Council resolution 1195(1998), the Secretary-General said that the period since his last (7 September) report was marked by several developments that seriously threatened the continuation of the Angolan peace process, the most significant being the breaking by the Government of all contacts with UNITA, led by Mr. Savimbi, and its recognition of the leadership of the UNITA Renovation Committee as the only legitimate interlocutor for the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol. Although some UNITA members in the National Assembly and GURN had dissociated themselves from Mr. Savimbi, the UNITA leadership in Andulo insisted that it remained the legitimate partner in the peace process, thus creating a conflicting situation over the representation of UNITA in the Joint Commission and preventing that body from carrying out its duties. President dos Santos informed the Special Representative that he saw no utility in future contacts with Mr. Savimbi and expressed his desire for MONUA to work with the Renovation Committee to conclude the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol. The Renovation Committee had been active in many provinces of the country, appealing to UNITA members to join its ranks and give up their weapons, and the Government had been assisting the Committee in setting up provincial offices and holding political rallies. It was noted that, at their summit in Mauritius on 14 September [S/1998/915], the leaders of the Southern African Development Community had expressed support for the new UNITA group. On 23 September, the Government dismissed one UNITA minister and one vice-minister and lifted the three-week suspension of four ministers of GURN and seven vice-ministers designated by UNITA. In response, the UNITA leadership in Bailundo asserted that such moves were in violation of the Lusaka Protocol.

The security situation in Angola continued to deteriorate, primarily as a result of persistent UNITA attacks on strategic locations. The Government launched counter-attacks in several parts of the country and appeared to be attempting to recover control of diamond-mining areas and to defend the provincial capitals. With the worsening security situation, the MONUA task of disarming the civilian population had virtually ceased. The civilian population continued to bear the brunt of military operations by both sides and indiscriminate and summary killings, torture and harassment, abductions, destruction of property, forcible displacement and restrictions on movement were reported. As a result of the insecurity and instability, the humanitarian situation continued to deteriorate.

Expressing concern about the unravelling of the peace process, the Secretary-General called on the Government and, in particular, on UNITA to find a political settlement and to avert another full-scale war. To that end, it was important to keep the door to dialogue open. Accordingly, he had instructed his Special Representative to maintain contacts with all concerned, old parties and new. In view of the situation, he recommended that the Security Council extend MONUA for a period of up to six weeks, in order to give the Special Representative an additional opportunity to revive the stalled peace process. If, after the expiration of the proposed extension, the pattern of UNITA non-compliance with its obligations continued, the dialogue between the parties remained elusive and the Special Representative was unable to maintain meaningful contacts, and MONUA remained obstructed in its verification activities, the Secretary-General might propose that the United Nations proceed in December with the readjustment of its presence throughout the country. A gradual reconfiguration would be conducted, with its deployment being concentrated mostly in and around six regional headquarters, as well as Luanda and the logistical base in Lobito. On the humanitarian side, security clearances with all parties concerned and urgent additional funding were required to avoid further worsening of the emergency situation.

Communication (October). Angola, by a 12 October letter to the Security Council President [S/1998/944], transmitted a 7 October letter from President dos Santos to the Secretary-General. Responding to an 18 September letter from the Secretary-General on implementation of the Lusaka Protocol, the Angolan President said that it was important to note that the efforts of the international community had not produced any significant results for the re-establishment of peace in Angola, despite attempts made since 1989 and, more recently, the 1994 Lusaka Protocol. The United Nations should recognize that the responsibility for the failure of the Angolan peace process fell uniquely and exclusively on Mr. Savimbi. The emergence of the UNITA Renovation Committee was an extremely positive element; the Government was currently engaged in talks with the Committee with a view to finding solutions within the framework of the Lusaka Protocol that would permit the re-establishment of peace and the consolidation of democracy. The President advised the Secretary-General not to maintain the idea of giving more opportunities to Mr. Savimbi because that was contrary to the Government's position.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

On 15 October [meeting 3936], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1202 (1998). The draft [S/1998/952] was submitted by Portugal, the Russian Federation and the United States.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 696(1991) of 30 May 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming its firm commitment to preserve the unity, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola,

Reiterating the validity of the "Acordos de Paz", the Lusaka Protocol and relevant Security Council resolutions as the fundamental basis of the peace process,

Reaffirming its resolution 1196(1998) of 16 September 1998,

Taking note of the statement by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the three Observer States to the Lusaka Protocol and of their letter dated 24 September 1998 to the leader of the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA), Welcoming regional efforts in support of the peace process in Angola,

Noting the call on the international community, particularly countries and leaders who have an influence on the leader of UNITA, to persuade the rebel movement to rededicate itself to the path of peace and reconstruction in Angola as a matter of urgency, that was contained in the Final Communiqué of the Summit of the Heads of State or Government of the Southern African Development Community adopted on 14 September 1998,

Taking note of the establishment of UNITA-Renovada,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 8 October 1998,

1. Reiterates that the primary cause of the crisis in Angola and of the current impasse in the peace process is the failure by the leadership of UNITA to comply with its obligations under the "Acordos de Paz", the Lusaka Protocol and relevant Security Council resolutions, and demands that UNITA comply immediately and without conditions with its obligations, in particular the complete demilitarization of its forces and full co-operation in the immediate and unconditional extension of State administration throughout the national territory;

2. Demands that UNITA withdraw immediately from territories it has reoccupied through military action;

3. Stresses that there can be no military solution to the conflict in Angola, and calls upon the Government of Angola and in particular UNITA to seek a political settlement;

4. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola until 3 December 1998;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to adjust the deployment and force structure of the Mission, as needed, in accordance with security conditions and its ability to implement its mandate in support of the peace process, and to prepare further contingency plans;

6. Emphasizes that the extension of the mandate of the Mission provides the Special Representative of the Secretary-General with an additional opportunity to revive the stalled peace process, and strongly urges UNITA to take advantage of this period to transform itself into a genuine political party and to secure a legitimate and constructive role in the Angolan political process;

7. Reiterates its full support for the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol and for the reactivation of the Joint Commission;

8. Calls upon the Government of Angola and UNITA to cooperate fully with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, including by facilitating his contacts with all those key to the peace process in order to convey, inter alia, the demands reiterated in the present resolution;

9. Encourages the Special Representative of the Secretary-General to coordinate his efforts with regional and subregional organizations in order to bring about a solution within the framework of the Lusaka Protocol;

10. Reiterates its concern over the safety and security of Mission personnel and demands that the Government of Angola and UNITA guarantee unconditionally the safety and freedom of movement of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and all United Nations and international humanitarian personnel, including those providing humanitarian assistance, throughout the territory of Angola;

11. Stresses the importance of strengthening the rule of law and respect for human rights, including the full protection of all Angolan citizens throughout the national territory, in particular representatives and members of all political parties;

12. Expresses its deep concern at the continued deterioration of the humanitarian situation, especially the significant increase in the number of internally displaced persons, which now totals 1.3 million people, and the lack of access by humanitarian organizations to vulnerable groups;

13. Calls upon Member States to implement fully the measures imposed on UNITA contained in the relevant provisions of resolutions 864(1993) of 15 September 1993, 1127(1997) of 28 August 1997 and 1173(1998) of 12 June 1998, and expresses its readiness to consider appropriate reinforcing steps;

14. Requests the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993) to investigate reports that the leader of UNITA travelled outside Angola in violation of resolution 1127(1997) and that forces of UNITA received military training and assistance as well as arms from outside Angola in violation of resolution 864(1993);

15. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report no later than 23 November 1998 which will enable the Security Council to consider the future role of the United Nations in Angola and to make recommendations regarding ways of improving the implementation of the measures referred to in paragraph 13 above;

16. Expresses its deep concern at the crash of the Russian civilian aircraft in the Malanje region of Angola, which resulted in the loss of human lives, calls upon the Government of Angola to carry out without delay a thorough investigation of the causes of the crash, requests the Mission to assist as appropriate, and insists that UNITA cooperate fully with these efforts;

17. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (November). The Secretary-General reported on 23 November [S/1998/1110] on MONUA and the situation in Angola, as requested by the Security Council (see above), and affirmed that the situation remained much the same. There had been no progress in the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol, the overall political, military and security situation had further deteriorated, and the joint mechanisms, including the Joint Commission, were not functioning. UNITA, which bore the primary responsibility for the current crisis, still refused to implement the most important commitments under the Lusaka Protocol, and there had been no contacts between the Government and Mr. Savimbi and his group. In addition, the Government continued to be reluctant to allow the Special Representative to establish direct contacts with Mr. Savimbi. The Secretary-General had been in contact with all parties concerned and had called on Mr. Savimbi to respond to specific proposals presented to him by the Special Representative on 6 October. Meanwhile, the Special Representative, who had been maintaining liaison with all parties concerned in Luanda, including various elements of UNITA, was unable to establish direct contacts with Mr. Savimbi. At talks with the Special Representative, the Government had reaffirmed its refusal to pursue any dialogue with Mr. Savimbi and its recognition of the Renovation Committee as the UNITA representative in the Joint Commission.

The UNITA Renovation Committee held a general conference (Luanda, 13-15 October), attended by 280 delegates from 17 of the 18 Angolan provinces, at which it was decided to retain all the UNITA delegates in the National Assembly, thus averting a possible controversy at the opening of the Assembly on 20 October. However, the issue of leadership of the UNITA parliamentary group remained unresolved.

On 27 October, the National Assembly voted to abrogate the law granting special status to Mr. Savimbi as leader of the largest opposition political party, which was promulgated in accordance with the Lusaka Protocol. The decision was attributed to Mr. Savimbi's failure to fulfil his party's obligations under the Protocol.

During the reporting period, MONUA continued to carry out its functions, despite restrictions on the movement of personnel by Angolan officials. Within the framework of its reconfiguration exercise, MONUA had reduced its military personnel at two team sites. The total strength of the military component stood at 677 personnel. Romania had informed the Secretary-General of its intention to withdraw a company (137 personnel) in December. Civilian police observers continued to carry out their functions to the extent possible and assisted in monitoring the human rights situation in several provinces. Reports of human rights abuses had increased as a result of the security situation and access of humanitarian aid had been restricted. The confirmed number of IDPs had reached 331,000, reflecting an increase of over 150,000 persons since September.

Noting the prevailing insecurity throughout the country, the Secretary-General said he had instructed MONUA to pursue the reconfiguration of the UN presence in Angola, as indicated in his previous report. Despite the absence of any progress towards implementing the Lusaka Protocol, the Secretary-General believed that the international community should remain engaged in order to dissuade the parties from a return to war. Accordingly, he proposed that the MONUA mandate be extended for up to three months, on the understanding that if the security situation were to become untenable, he would submit further recommendations, including, if necessary, for the withdrawal of MONUA. He appealed to the international community to provide financial and other resources in order to allow the continued delivery of emergency relief assistance to Angola.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (3 and 23 December)

On 3 December [meeting 3951], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1213 (1998). The draft [S/1998/1135] was submitted by Portugal, the Russian Federation and the United States.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 696(1991) of 30 May 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 864(1993) of 15 September 1993, 1127(1997) of 28 August 1997 and 1173(1998) of 12 June 1998,

Reaffirming its firm commitment to preserve the unity, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola,

Emphasizing the validity of the "Acordos de Paz", the Lusaka Protocol and relevant Security Council resolutions as the fundamental basis of the peace process,

Strongly condemning the failure of the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA) to implement the remaining tasks of the Lusaka Protocol, in particular the complete demilitarization of its forces and full cooperation in the immediate and unconditional extension of State administration throughout the national territory,

Expressing its deep concern at the failure of the leader of UNITA to respond to the letter dated 6 October 1998 addressed to him by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, which contained proposals for restoring the peace process, and to the letter dated 24 September 1998 addressed to him by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the three Observer States to the Lusaka Protocol, which called for irreversible steps towards peace,

Expressing its grave concern at the serious humanitarian impact of the impasse in the peace process and the deteriorating security conditions,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 23 November 1998,

1. Emphasizes that the primary cause of the crisis in Angola and of the current impasse in the peace process is the failure by the leadership of UNITA in Bailundo to comply with its obligations under the "Acordos de Paz", the Lusaka Protocol and relevant Security Council resolutions, and demands that UNITA comply immediately and without conditions with its obligations, in particular the complete demilitarization of its forces and full cooperation in the immediate and unconditional extension of State administration throughout the national territory;

2. Demands that UNITA withdraw immediately from territories it has reoccupied through military or other action;

3. Calls upon the leadership of UNITA to cooperate fully and immediately with the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola in the withdrawal of Mission personnel from Andulo and Bailundo, and holds the leadership of UNITA in Bailundo responsible for their safety and security;

4. Stresses that there can be no military solution to the conflict in Angola, and calls upon the Government of Angola and UNITA to cooperate fully with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, including by facilitating his contacts with all those key to the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol, to seek a peaceful resolution of the crisis;

5. Emphasizes the importance of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General maintaining contact with all elements of UNITA in Luanda in order to revive the stalled peace process and encourage the transformation of UNITA into a genuine political party;

6. Stresses the importance of strengthening the rule of law and respect for human rights, including the full protection of all Angolan citizens throughout the national territory, in particular representatives and members of all political parties;

7. Reiterates its concern at the continued deterioration of the humanitarian situation, especially the significant increase in the number of internally displaced persons and the increase in minelaying activity, and calls on the Government of Angola and in particular UNITA to guarantee unconditionally the safety and freedom of movement of all international humanitarian personnel, to cooperate fully with international humanitarian organizations in the delivery of emergency relief assistance to affected populations, to cease minelaying activity, and to respect international humanitarian, refugee and human rights law;

8. Urges the international community to provide financial and other resources in order to allow the continued delivery of emergency relief assistance to vulnerable groups in Angola;

9. Urges all Member States to support the peace process in Angola through full and immediate implementation of the measures against UNITA contained in resolutions 864(1993), 1127(1997) and 1173(1998), and expresses its readiness to consider appropriate reinforcing steps in accordance with the recommendations contained in the report referred to in paragraph 13 below;

10. Decides to extend the mandate of the Mission until 26 February 1999, and endorses the recommendation contained in the report of the Secretary-General to continue to adjust the deployment and force structure of the Mission, as needed, in accordance with security conditions and its ability to implement its mandate;

11. Recognizes that the Secretary-General may revert to the Council before 26 February 1999 with further recommendations regarding the Mission in the light of security conditions on the ground;

12. Expresses its growing concern for the security and freedom of movement throughout Angola of Mission personnel, and calls upon the Government of Angola and in particular UNITA to ensure their safety;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report no later than 15 January 1999 regarding the status of the peace process, the future role and mandate of the United Nations in Angola and the force structure of the Mission in the light of its ability to carry out its mandated tasks, and reiterates the request contained in its resolution 1202(1998) of 15 October 1998 for recommendations regarding technical and other ways for Member States to improve the implementation of the measures referred to in paragraph 9 above;

14. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

At informal consultations on 4 December, the Council received a briefing from the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations on the military situation in Angola and UNITA's refusal to give clearance for the evacuation of 14 MONUA personnel from the UNITA strongholds of Andulo and Bailundo, as well as the intensification of military operations in the central region. The Council heard a briefing on the evacuation of the MONUA staff on 9 December and, on 17 December, it received a further briefing on the serious deterioration of the security situation.

On 23 December [meeting 3960], the President of the Council made the following statement on behalf of the Council members [S/PRST/1998/37]:

The Security Council deplores the serious deterioration of the situation in Angola and calls for an immediate cessation of hostilities. It reaffirms its firm commitment to preserve the unity, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola.

The Council reiterates that the primary responsibility for the failure to achieve peace in Angola clearly lies with the leadership of the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA). The persistent violation by UNITA, under the leadership of Mr. Jonas Savimbi, of its obligations under the "Acordos de Paz", the Lusaka Protocol and relevant Security Council resolutions, in particular those obligations related to the complete demilitarization of its forces and the extension of State administration throughout the national territory, has seriously undermined the peace process.

The Council demands that UNITA comply immediately and without conditions with its obligations and reiterates that only a political settlement, on the basis of the relevant agreements and resolutions, will bring a lasting peace to Angola.

The Council, in this context, urges the Government of Angola and UNITA to cooperate fully with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, including by facilitating his contacts with all those key to reviving the stalled peace process and to implementing the Lusaka Protocol. It expresses concern at the public statements blaming the United Nations for the recent aggravation of the security situation in the country. The Council reiterates its full support for the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola, whose mandate has been extended until 26 February 1999, and emphasizes that both the Government, which concurred with the extension of this mandate, and UNITA have an obligation to guarantee the safety and freedom of movement of Mission personnel.

The Council expresses its deep concern at the worsening humanitarian situation in Angola and emphasizes the responsibility of the Government of Angola and the leadership of UNITA to facilitate humanitarian assistance efforts, guarantee the safety and freedom of movement of humanitarian workers and permit an independent assessment of the needs of the civilian population, to be carried out swiftly in any part of the country as necessary. The Council also expresses concern at the plight of those most vulnerable groups, such as children, women, the elderly and internally displaced persons who are particularly at risk and need special protection.

The Council urges the Government of Angola and the leadership of UNITA to ensure full respect for international humanitarian, refugee and human rights law.

The Council underscores the need for the full and immediate implementation of the measures against UNITA contained in resolutions 864(1993) of 15 September 1993, 1127(1997) of 28 August 1997 and 1173(1998) of 12 June 1998. It expresses deep concern at recent reports of violations of those measures, particularly those related to arms and diamonds, and expresses its intention to follow up on those reports.

The Council expresses its grave concern at reports that aircraft were shot down over areas controlled by UNITA and demands full cooperation by all concerned, especially UNITA, in the investigation of those incidents, including of the fate of the crews and passengers.

The Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Further developments. In December, following incidents of harassment of and non-cooperation with MONUA in several areas of the country, including Luanda, MONUA decided to relocate all UN team sites to safer areas [S/1999/49]. The grave security risks faced by UN personnel in Angola were demonstrated by the apparent shooting down near Huambo of a UN-chartered aircraft on 26 December. UNITA and the Government initially showed no inclination to cooperate with MONUA in the search and rescue operations or to cease hostilities in the crash area, and neither party would consent to a survey of the site by UN aircraft. On 31 December, the Secretary-General dispatched United Nations Security Coordinator Benon Sevan to Angola in order to expedite the search and rescue operations and to assess the security situation.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (31 December)

On 29 and 31 December, the Assistant Secretaries-General for Peacekeeping Operations briefed the Council on the investigation of the UN-chartered aircraft reported missing on 26 December.

On 31 December [meeting 3962], the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1219(1998). The draft [S/1998/1238] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 696(1991) of 30 May 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 1202(1998) of 15 October 1998 and 1213(1998) of 3 December 1998,

Recalling the statement by its President of 23 December 1998,

Expressing concern in the strongest terms at the crash of United Nations flight 806 and at the disappearance of other aircraft reportedly over territory controlled by the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola(UNITA),

1. Expresses its deep concern regarding the fate of the passengers and crew of United Nations flight 806, and deplores the incomprehensible lack of cooperation in clarifying the circumstances of this tragedy and in permitting the prompt dispatch of a United Nations search and rescue mission;

2. Demands that the leader of UNITA, Mr. Jonas Savimbi, immediately respond to the appeals from the United Nations and guarantee the security and access necessary for, and assist in, the search for and rescue of possible survivors of the above-mentioned incidents in territory controlled by UNITA, and calls upon the Government of Angola to cooperate as appropriate in fulfilment of its expressed commitment to do so;

3. Expresses its serious concern at the increase in incidents involving the disappearance of aircraft reportedly over territory controlled by UNITA;

4. Condemns the lack of effective action to determine the fate of the crews and passengers of the aircraft referred to in paragraph 3 above, calls for an immediate and objective international investigation of those incidents, and calls upon all concerned, especially UNITA, to facilitate such an investigation;

5. Expresses its intention to assess compliance with the present resolution no later than 11 January 1999 and to take action, as appropriate, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter;

6. Reaffirms the need for compliance with the measures against UNITA contained in resolutions 864(1993) of 15 September 1993, 1127(1997) of 28 August 1997 and 1173(1998) of 12 June 1998, which were imposed under Chapter VII of the Charter;

7. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Other matters

Sanctions Committee

In accordance with Security Council resolution 1135(1997)[YUN 1997,p. 109], the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993)[YUN 1993,p. 256] to monitor sanctions against UNITA submitted lists of Member States that had replied to the request for information on action taken to implement measures against UNITA [S/1998/145 & Add.1,2]. In response to Council resolution 1176(1998) (see above), the Committee's Acting Chairman submitted in August [S/1998/728] a list of States that had provided information on action taken to implement the additional measures that went into effect on 1 July.

In December [S/1998/1227], the Chairman reported on the Committee's 1998 activities, stating that it had held two meetings during the year. It transmitted to all States and international organizations an addendum to the list of UNITA senior officials and their family members whose travel had been restricted in accordance with resolution 1127(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 106]. It also considered information received regarding a list of UNITA aircraft allegedly operating in four countries (Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, South Africa, Zambia). On 6 March, the Chairman sent reminders to those States that had not provided information on their measures in regard to sanctions. Additional replies were received (28), bringing the total to 57.

Given the deteriorating situation in Angola, the Committee stressed the need for Member States to comply with their obligations in implementing measures imposed against UNITA and drew attention, in particular, to resolution 1196(1998), in which the Council encouraged Member States to adopt legislation making the violation of arms embargoes by the Security Council a criminal offence.

South Africa, on 18 February [S/1998/139], reported to the Security Council on the interception by Angolan authorities of a private South African company-owned aircraft that had illegally entered Angola and violated sanctions against UNITA. The incident was being investigated, South Africa said.

MONUA financing and composition

Performance report, 1996-1997

On 2 February [A/52/385/Add.1 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General presented the financial performance report of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM III), which became MONUA in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 104], for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997. Against an appropriation of $308,096,900 gross ($301,964,900 net), there were reported expenditures of $302,328,300 gross ($297,761,200 net). There was also an additional obligation of $2,204,300 required for the period. The net unencumbered balance of $3,564,300 gross ($1,999,400 net) was the result of lower requirements under military and civilian personnel costs, premises/accommodation, infrastructure repairs, supplies and services and training programmes and was partially offset by additional requirements for transport and air operations, communications and other equipment, public information and mine-clearing programmes, assistance for disarmament and demobilization, air and surface freight and financing of the UN Logistics Base in Brindisi, Italy. The Secretary-General requested General Assembly authorization for him to use $2,204,300 to meet incurred expenses for the period that were not recorded, and to credit Member States with the unencumbered balance.

Budgets, 1997/98 and 1998/99

In a 23 February report [A/52/799], the Secretary-General presented a revised budget for MONUA for 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 of $180,689,000 gross ($176,430,200 net). That amount reflected an increase of $25,689,000 gross ($26,058,600 net) over the amount appropriated by the General Assembly for the same period in resolution 52/8A [YUN 1997, p. 110]. The increase provided for the delayed repatriation of military personnel, the retention of a military task force of 955 contingent personnel and requirements for the completion of the in situ registration and disarmament of some 6,000 UNITA personnel who were not previously reported to the United Nations. The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly appropriate an additional $25,689,000 for the period 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, assess an additional amount of $16,032,100 for the period 1 July 1997 to 30 April 1998, and assess $9,656,900 for the period from 1 May to 30 June 1998, based on the monthly requirements as listed in the revised budget, subject to the extension of the MONUA mandate by the Security Council beyond 30 April 1998.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), commenting on 10 March [A/52/825] on the revised MONUA budget, noted that the increased amount would cover requirements for an additional 785 troops, 4 military observers and 107 additional civilian personnel, in addition to increased operational costs. The total personnel would amount to 955 contingent personnel, 90 military observers, 345 civilian police and 577 civilian personnel. ACABQ recommended that, of the $25,689,000 requested by the Secretary-General, an additional $20 million for the maintenance of MONUA for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 be appropriated by the Assembly to cover the requirement of $15.4 million for additional military personnel. The appropriation for the maintenance of MONUA for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 would thus be $175 million gross. ACABQ noted that the financial performance report for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 of the Mission showed an unencumbered balance of $3,564,300. In that regard, the Committee would submit at a later date its comments to the Assembly on the financial performance of peacekeeping operations and the cost estimates for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999.

The Secretary-General, on 16 March [A/52/799/Add.1], presented the proposed budget for the maintenance of MONUA for 1 July 1998 to 30

June 1999, which amounted to $140,825,400 gross ($136,380,900 net). It reflected a decrease of 22 per cent, in gross terms from the previous estimate of $180,689,000 gross ($176,430,200 net) for the previous 12-month period. The proposed budget provided for the deployment of 90 military observers, 955 contingent personnel and 345 civilian police observers, supported by a civilian establishment of 281 international and 225 local staff and 71 United Nations Volunteers. The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly approve an appropriation of $140,825,400, subject to the extension of the MONUA mandate by the Security Council beyond 30 April 1998.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (March)

On 31 March [meeting 82], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/547/Add.1], adopted resolution 52/8 B without vote [agenda items 123 & 159].

Financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission and the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 626(1988) of 20 December 1988, by which the Council established the United Nations Angola Verification Mission, Council resolution 696(1991) of 30 May 1991, by which the Council decided to entrust a new mandate to the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (thenceforth called the United Nations Angola Verification Mission II), Council resolution 976(1995) of 8 February 1995, by which the Council authorized the establishment of a peacekeeping operation called the United Nations Angola Verification Mission III, Council resolution 1118(1997) of 30 June 1997, by which the Council decided to establish, as from 1 July 1997, the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola, and subsequent resolutions, the latest of which was Council resolution 1157(1998) of 20 March 1998,

Recalling its resolution 43/231 of 16 February 1989 on the financing of the Verification Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 52/8 A of 31 October 1997,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Observer Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Observer Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Observer Mission by certain Governments,

Concerned that the Secretary-General continues to face difficulties in meeting the obligations of the Observer Mission on a current basis, including reimbursement to current and former troop-contributing States,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola as at 20 March 1998, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 131,650,352 United States dollars, representing 13 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission to the period ending 30 June 1997 and from the inception of the Observer Mission to the period ending 30 April 1998, notes that some 15 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States that have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure the payment of their assessed contributions to the Observer Mission in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Observer Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to employ locally recruited staff for the Observer Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly before the second part of its resumed fifty-second session the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on the audit findings on the procurement process in the Verification Mission and the report on efforts to recover losses and corrective measures taken, which were requested in paragraph 9 of Assembly resolution 52/8 A;

9. Notes the labour relations difficulties at the Observer Mission, and requests the Secretary-General to report on the matter to the General Assembly for its consideration during the second part of its resumed fifty-second session;

10. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola a total amount of 175 million dollars gross (170,741,200 dollars net) for the operation of the Observer Mission for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, inclusive of the amount of 155 million dollars gross (150,371,600 dollars net) already appropriated under the provisions of General Assembly resolution 52/8 A;

11. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the additional amount of 20 million dollars gross (20,369,600 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 among Member States, taking into account the amount of 155 million dollars gross (150,371,600 dollars net) already authorized under the terms of General Assembly resolution 52/8 A, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1997, as set out in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and its decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995, and the scale of assessments for the year 1998, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997, and subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Observer Mission beyond 30 April 1998;

12. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 11 above, shall take into consideration the decrease in their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 369,600 dollars approved for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998;

13. Invites voluntary contributions to the Observer Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

14. Decides to keep under review during its fifty-second session the agenda items entitled "Financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission" and "Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola".

In a 13 May report [A/52/860/Add.8], ACABQ stated that no information was yet available as to when the Secretary-General's next report to the Security Council on MONUA would be issued and whether it would contain proposals that could change the mandate and operational requirements of the Mission. ACABQ noted that, by its resolution 1157(1998) (see above), the Council had decided to resume the gradual downsizing of the military component of MONUA and to increase the number of civilian police observers by up to 83 personnel. ACABQ had been informed that that would result in a decrease in monthly resource requirements for the Mission from $11.7 million to $10.9 million. Pending submission of the Secretary-General's report on resource requirements for the next financial period, ACABQ recommended that the Assembly assess a total of $43.6 million for the maintenance of MONUA for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, or $10.9 million per month.

In response to resolution 52/8 A [YUN 1997, p. 110], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly a report [A/52/881] prepared by the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the audits of the procurement process in UNAVEM. The Secretary-General concurred with the recommendations and noted that measures had been taken to correct the issues raised in the review. The report stated that the audits disclosed serious management deficiencies and apparent breaches of financial regulations, as well as improprieties and irregularities in the procurement process, which had in some cases resulted in significant losses to the Organization. Weaknesses in the management and control of procurement operations created a climate that might have fostered fraud and financial abuse. OIOS recommended that individual accountability for the improprieties and losses, as well as the lack of control in the procurement operations of the Mission, be determined for appropriate action; and that the Mission's Procurement Section be revamped, replacing officials of doubtful integrity, and the receiving and inspection function strengthened. It also proposed that internal controls be strengthened, particularly with regard to monitoring the processing of requisitions and management review of individual procurement actions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (June)

On 26 June [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/547/Add.2], adopted resolution 52/8 C without vote [agenda items 123 & 159].

Financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission and the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission and the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 626(1988) of 20 December 1988, by which the Council established the United Nations Angola Verification Mission, 696(1991) of 30 May 1991, by which the Council decided to entrust a new mandate to the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (thenceforth called the United Nations Angola Verification Mission II), 976(1995) of 8 February 1995, by which the Council authorized the establishment of a peacekeeping operation called the United Nations Angola Verification Mission III, 1118(1997) of 30 June 1997, by which the Council decided to establish, as from 1 July 1997, the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola, and subsequent resolutions, the latest of which was resolution 1164(1998) of 29 April 1998,

Recalling its resolution 43/231 of 16 February 1989 on the financing of the Verification Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 52/8 B of 31 March 1998,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Observer Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Observer Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Observer Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Observer Mission,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola as at 15 May 1998, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 90,306,237 United States dollars, representing 9 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission to the period ending 30 June 1997 and from the inception of the Observer Mission to the period ending 30 April 1998, notes that some 21 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure the payment of their assessed contributions to the Observer Mission in full and on time;

5. Takes note of the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Observer Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to employ locally recruited staff for the Observer Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Observer Mission;

8. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General and the annex thereto containing the observations and recommendations of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on the audits of the procurement process in the Verification Mission;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly before the second part of its resumed fifty-third session a report on the status of implementation of measures taken or initiated to address appropriately the issues, observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services and other related actions taken by the Observer Mission and the Secretariat;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that all managers exercising financial responsibility are issued the revised and updated version of the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations;

11. Further requests the Secretary-General to ensure that every official of the United Nations is responsible to the Secretary-General for the regularity of the actions taken by him or her in the course of his or her official duties and that any official who takes any action contrary to the Financial Rules, or to the administrative instructions issued in connection therewith, may be held personally responsible and financially liable for the consequences of such action;

12. Recalls its request to the Secretary-General in its resolution 49/218 of 23 December 1994 to include full implementation of the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations as a specific performance indicator in the performance appraisal of all managers;

13. Also recalls the budgetary process set out in its resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994 on the administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of the United Nations peacekeeping operations;

14. Notes that the recommendation contained in paragraph 7 of the report of the Advisory Committee deviates from Assembly resolution 49/233 A;

15. Takes note of the intention of the Advisory Committee to submit in due course its comments and observations to the General Assembly on the unencumbered balance of 3,564,300 dollars gross for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997;

16. Authorizes the Secretary-General to utilize the amount of 2,204,300 dollars from the unencumbered balance for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 to meet incurred expenses for the same period that have not yet been recorded;

17. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola an initial amount of 45,899,080 dollars gross (44,301,680 dollars net) for the operation of the Observer Mission for the period from 1 July to 31 October 1998, inclusive of the amount of 2,299,080 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999;

18. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 45,899,080 dollars gross (44,301,680 dollars net) for the period from 1 July to 31 October 1998 among Member States at a monthly rate of 11,474,770 dollars gross (11,075,420 dollars net), in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1998, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Observer Mission beyond 30 June 1998;

19. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 18 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 1,597,400 dollars approved for the period from 1 July to 31 October 1998;

20. Decides that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Observer Mission, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 18 above, their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 3,564,300 dollars gross (1,999,400 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997;

21. Decides also that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Observer Mission, their share of the unencumbered balance of 3,564,300 dollars gross (1,999,400 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

22. Invites voluntary contributions to the Observer Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

23. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the items entitled "Financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission" and "Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola".

On 3 December [A/53/722], ACABQ reported on the proposed budget for MONUA for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 [A/52/799/Add.1]. Earlier (see above), it had postponed consideration of the Secretary-General's proposed budget due to the circumstances and uncertainty of the term of MONUA's mandate. The Committee commented that although recent expenditure experience suggested a lower level of resources than that requested by the Secretary-General in the revised estimates, in view of the deteriorating overall situation outlined in his 23 November report to the Security Council [S/1998/1110], ACABQ recommended that the Secretary-General's revised estimate be approved. It therefore recommended that the General Assembly appropriate an additional amount of $87,200,000 gross ($84,575,000 net) for the period from 1 November 1998 to 30 June 1999, inclusive of the $10.9 million gross it had previously authorized for the month of November. The appropriation would be assessed at a monthly rate of $10.9 million gross ($10,571,875 net) for the eight-month period, subject to the Council's decision to extend the mandate of MONUA beyond 26 February 1999.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 18 December [meeting 93], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/745], adopted resolution 53/211 without vote [agenda item 123].

Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 626(1988) of 20 December 1988, by which the Council established the United Nations Angola Verification Mission, 696(1991) of 30 May 1991, by which the Council decided to entrust a new mandate to the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (thenceforth called the United Nations Angola Verification Mission II), 976(1995) of 8 February 1995, by which the Council authorized the establishment of a peacekeeping operation (thenceforth called the United Nations Angola Verification Mission III), 1118(1997) of 30 June 1997, by which the Council decided to establish, as from 1 July 1997, the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola, and its subsequent resolutions, the latest of which was resolution 1213(1998) of 3 December 1998,

Recalling its resolution 43/231 of 16 February 1989 on the financing of the Verification Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 52/8 C of 26 June 1998,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Observer Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Observer Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Observer Mission,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Observer Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola as at 30 November 1998, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 105.4 million United States dollars, representing 9 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission to the period ending 30 June 1997 and from the inception of the Observer Mission to the period ending 31 October 1998, notes that some 18 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure the payment of their assessed contributions to the Observer Mission in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Observer Mission is administered with maximum efficiency and economy;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Observer Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

8. Reiterates the request set out in paragraph 9 of its resolution 52/8 C;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that all managers exercising financial responsibility are issued the revised and updated version of the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that every official of the United Nations is responsible to the Secretary-General for the regularity of the actions taken by him or her in the course of his or her official duties and that any official who takes any action contrary to the financial rules, or to the administrative instructions issued in connection therewith, may be held personally responsible and financially liable for the consequences of such action;

11. Recalls its request to the Secretary-General in its resolution 49/218 of 23 December 1994 to include full implementation of the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations as a specific performance indicator in the performance appraisal of all managers;

12. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola the additional amount of 87.2 million dollars gross (84,575,000 dollars net) for the operation of the Observer Mission for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, taking into account the amount of 45,899,080 dollars gross (44,301,680 dollars net) already appropriated for the period from 1 July to 31 October 1998 under the provisions of its resolution 52/8 C, and inclusive of the amount of 10.9 million dollars gross (10,500,650 dollars net) authorized by the Advisory Committee for the month of November 1998 under the terms of section IV of General Assembly resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994;

13. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, and taking into account the amount of 45,899,080 dollars gross (44,301,680 dollars net) already apportioned under the provisions of its resolution 52/8 C, to apportion the additional amount of 42,821,400 dollars gross (41,532,400 dollars net) for the period from 1 November 1998 to 26 February 1999 among Member States, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of its resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the General Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1998 and 1999, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997;

14. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 13 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 1,289,000 dollars approved for the period from 1 November 1998 to 26 February 1999;

15. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion among Member States the amount of 44,378,600 dollars gross (43,042,600 dollars net) for the period from 27 February to 30 June 1999 at a monthly rate of 10.9 million dollars gross (10,571,875 dollars net), in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1999 as set out in its resolution 52/215 A, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Observer Mission beyond 26 February 1999;

16. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 15 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 1,336,000 dollars approved for the period from 27 February to 30 June 1999;

17. Invites voluntary contributions to the Observer Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

18. Decides to keep under review during its fifty-third session the agenda item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission and the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola".

The Assembly, by decision 53/458 of 18 December, decided that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the agenda item on financing of MONUA at its resumed fifty-third session in 1999.

Central African Republic

In April 1998, the United Nations deployed a peacekeeping mission in the Central African Republic to replace an inter-African force that had been in place since February 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 92]. Earlier in the year, the Security Council twice extended the mandate of that force—the Inter-African Mission to Monitor the Implementation of the Bangui Agreements (MISAB)—which was provided by Burkina Faso, Chad, Gabon, Mali, Senegal and Togo. In March, the Council established the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic (MINURCA), which assumed the responsibilities of MISAB.

Progress was achieved in 1998 in the implementation of the Bangui Agreements, in particular the holding of legislative elections in November and December. Other areas of progress were the creation of a system of better governance, the consolidation of the national reconciliation process and the initiation of economic and social reforms.

The Security Council extended the mandate of MINURCA in July and again in October, when it also enlarged the Mission in view of the forthcoming legislative elections.

Notwithstanding those encouraging developments, a number of serious political difficulties remained. The Government of National Unity, created in February 1997 and which included several opposition parties, remained an uneasy coalition. Important provisions of the Bangui Agreements had yet to be implemented, namely, the restructuring of the armed forces and measures to strengthen the economy.

At the end of the year, the Secretary-General reported that successful legislative elections had been held under international monitoring. He called for further international assistance for the Central African Republic and for extending the mandate of MINURCA until after the presidential elections, scheduled for late 1999.

Implementation of Bangui Agreements

During 1998, the Chairman of the International Monitoring Committee, established pursuant to the mandate of MISAB, reported to the Security Council in January and March on the situation in the Central African Republic, in particular on the implementation of the 1997 Bangui Agreements [YUN 1997, p. 91]. The Agreements included elements for a comprehensive settlement of the crisis that had begun in 1996 with three successive mutinies within the Central African Armed Forces and which stemmed largely from public discontent over social and economic problems. MISAB had been established to supervise the disarmament of former rebels who had taken weapons from government stores and its activities were later extended to the maintenance of security in the capital and its suburbs.

MISAB report (2 January). On 2 January [S/1998/3], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council the second periodic report from the Chairman of the International Monitoring Committee since the Council extended the MISAB mandate by resolution 1136(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 96]; it covered the period from 5 December 1997 to 4 January 1998. The International Monitoring Committee to supervise the implementation of the Bangui Agreements, chaired by General Amadou Toumani Toure, directed the actions of MISAB, receiving political guidance directly from the heads of State of the countries contributing troops, and especially from President El Hadj Omar Bongo of Gabon, who was Chairman of the International Mediation Committee. MISAB continued to receive logistical and technical support from UNDP.

The report stated that the provisions of the Bangui Agreements on the formation of a Government of national union, the adoption of an amnesty law covering offences in the context of the third rebellion and the situation of former heads of State had already been implemented. Regarding disarmament efforts, much success had been noted in the area of heavy weapons, with over 91 per cent of those weapons having been turned over to MISAB, but it appeared unlikely that the recovery of light arms (55 per cent collected at reporting time) would be as extensive. Difficulties had arisen over the recommendations of the Bangui Agreements on national defence, particularly the restructuring of the Central African Armed Forces, the National Gendarmerie and the Central African Police Force. The social situation continued to give rise to concern and, in that regard, the Committee urged the Government to place the national financial system on a sound basis so as to avoid social disruption. The Committee suggested that, with UNDP as lead agency, a round table of donors should be organized with a view to the reconstruction and rehabilitation of the country. The Central African Republic was still experiencing difficulties in meeting its internal obligations (wages and salaries, pensions, scholarships, the functioning of the State apparatus) and its external commitments, in particular the repayment of the arrears due to the Bretton Woods institutions. The greatest concern of the Central African authorities was to find the necessary resources to resolve the problem of six months' arrears of wages and salaries, which had provided a rationale for the strike taking place in certain sectors, such as education.

MISAB continued to ensure security in all neighbourhoods of Bangui by occupying 20 surveillance posts and was participating in joint security patrols with the Central African security and defence forces in the city. As a result, criminal acts had become rare.

Report of Secretary-General (January). In response to Security Council resolution 1136(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 96], the Secretary-General submitted a 23 January report on the situation in the Central African Republic [S/1998/61], which included recommendations on possible action after the MISAB mandate expired on 6 February. A UN multidisciplinary technical mission had visited Bangui from 6 to 13 December 1997 to assess the political, military, security and economic and social situation and to formulate proposals on further international support for MISAB. On the basis of that mission's recommendations, the Secretary-General sent Hedi Annabi, Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, as his Personal Envoy to meet the President of the Central African Republic, Ange-Félix Patassé, as well as President Bongo, in his capacity as Chairman of the International Mediation Committee. During his January trip, Mr. Annabi also met in Paris with General Toure, former President of Mali and current Chairman of the International Monitoring Committee. Mr. Annabi spoke of the need for the full implementation of the Bangui Agreements and for major reforms in the political, economic and security arenas.

The Secretary-General reported that all parties concurred that of the seven main provisions of the Bangui Agreements, three had been implemented: establishment of the Government of National Union in February 1997; promulgation of an amnesty act in March 1997 for offences committed during the third mutiny; and adoption of a law in October 1997 providing pensions to former Presidents of the Republic. Progress had also been made on a fourth provision on disarmament. Implementation was still outstanding on the remaining three main provisions: on recommendations of the General Meeting on National Defence (Etats généraux de la défense), especially those on the dissolution of the special security services and the downsizing and restructuring of the Presidential Guard; abandonment of the judicial enforcement of the parliamentary audit in respect of persons presumed to have misappropriated funds under the previous regime; and the holding of a National Reconciliation Conference, currently scheduled for February 1998, which would mark the completion of the implementation of the Bangui Agreements.

The economic situation of the Central African Republic continued to cause concern since, as a result of the chronic budget deficit, the Government had been unable to pay the salaries of civil servants, provide basic social services and at the same time meet its external debt obligations. According to a 1996 study, 65 per cent of adults lived below the poverty threshold (annual income of less than $100 per year), only 42 per cent of the population had access to potable water, and 75 per cent of children suffered from malnutrition.

Security was also a concern, despite the fact that MISAB had created relative calm in Bangui. Banditry and armed robbery were problems in the interior of the country and in certain sectors of the capital. The national security apparatus of the Central African Republic had been weakened and lacked the necessary resources. Only the Presidential Guard, which had been reinforced, was currently operational. In December 1997, President Patassé launched the restructuring of the armed forces for a national, republican and multi-ethnic army, and that initiative needed to be pursued. In the meantime, the regional security situation remained precarious, as many countries bordering the Central African Republic had suffered from social and political instability. As a consequence, refugees had fled to the Central African Republic where currently there were some 45,000 persons from neighbouring countries.

The Secretary-General commented that progress had been achieved, but for national reconciliation to take place and for stability to be restored, it was essential that the outstanding provisions of the Bangui Agreements be implemented and that substantial economic reforms be undertaken. President Patassé had stated the intention of his Government to revise the electoral code and then announce dates for municipal and parliamentary elections. The Government also intended to re-establish contact with the Bretton Woods institutions, with a view to reaching agreement on a structural adjustment programme.

In an 8 January letter to the Secretary-General, annexed to the Secretary-General's report, President Patassé said that it was essential for the United Nations to ensure that a credible peacekeeping force was maintained in the Central African Republic. That position was supported by the International Monitoring Committee and the States of the region. According to the Secretary-General, the withdrawal of MISAB, which was almost fully dependent on the logistical and financial support of France, could destabilize the fragile peace process, with consequences for the humanitarian situation and peace and stability in the subregion.

The States participating in MISAB were willing to continue their assistance, but they were unable to do so alone, as France was preparing to withdraw all its troops (over 1,400) and its logistical support by mid-April. International assistance to the Central African Republic would be vital after the expiration of the MISAB mandate on 6 February, the Secretary-General said, and the only viable option for the maintenance of stability would be the establishment of another peacekeeping operation authorized by the international community. Should the Council decide to establish a UN peacekeeping force, its structure and military role would be similar to that of MISAB. The mission would be of limited duration and should be completed two or three months after elections.

In addition to its military role, the UN mission would provide political guidance and support to other UN activities in the country and cooperate with other international partners, and facilitate the provision of technical assistance by the UN system for national reconciliation efforts and the rehabilitation and functioning of accountable and democratic institutions. Close collaboration with UNDP, international financial institutions and bilateral donors was essential in promoting an integrated approach to post-conflict peacebuilding in the Central African Republic. The mission would also assist in mobilizing international assistance, for which a special UN trust fund could be established.

The Secretary-General envisaged the appointment of a Special Representative to head the mission, supported by civilian officers. A UN force of 1,400 troops would be required for the military tasks. He recommended that the Council consider extending the authorization for MISAB, as provided under resolution 1136(1997), until 15 March 1998, and that it express its readiness to establish a UN peacekeeping operation in the Central African Republic, on the basis of a more detailed concept of operations that he would develop.

MISAB report (30 January). In his third periodic report [S/1998/86], as requested by the Security Council in resolution 1136(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 96], the Chairman of the International Monitoring Committee covered developments in the Central African Republic from 5 January to the end of the month.

It was reported that disarmament of former rebels was proceeding but was not yet complete. Most heavy weapons (92 per cent) and many light weapons (57 per cent) of the weapons taken from the State armories had been collected. At the same time, rumours were circulating that weapons were being imported into the country by supporters of both the presidential majority and the opposition, but there were very few reliable signs to support those claims. The provisions concerning the parliamentary audit had had varying degrees of success, and a new parliamentary procedure was being carried out on the basis of a reworked draft. Work was also proceeding on the implementation of the recommendations of the General Meeting on National Defence regarding restructuring the defence and security forces. A UNDP project on demobilization, retraining and reintegration of the armed forces was launched on 10 January. A number of activities were organized in preparation for the planned national reconciliation conference, such as awareness-raising seminars, a youth meeting, a woman's forum, and a forum on compensation for damage caused by the rebellions. The conference, originally scheduled for 10-14 February, was postponed until the end of that month. For various reasons, senior officials of the Groupe des onze partis politiques de l'opposition (Group of Eleven) and the four groups of affiliated trade unions decided to withdraw from the preparatory committee for the conference. The International Monitoring Committee was endeavouring to negotiate a modus vivendi between those opposition figures and the authorities, who had been accused by the opposition of resorting to acts contrary to the spirit of the Bangui Agreements and of not wishing to implement certain provisions. As for a new electoral code and the creation of an independent electoral commission, texts had been prepared for adoption by the National Assembly.

Overall, there were no items on the timetable of the International Monitoring Committee that had not been either fully or partially implemented, even if obstacles cropped up on the road to their implementation.

The Committee observed that for several weeks, with elections a few months away, an uneasiness had been noted within various political parties belonging to both the presidential majority and the opposition. The Committee intended to work towards helping the Central African political class understand that the situation called for moderation, restraint, leniency, tolerance and forgiveness. It had met with the President and head of State of the Central African Republic on several occasions to update him on unresolved issues and questions of security, which had recently been undermined by a revival of roadblocks, leading to acts of extortion in some parts of the country, and a resurgence of traditional urban banditry. In that regard, the Committee recommended to the head of State and the Central African Government that subregional cooperation with adjoining countries should be organized and strengthened. The mandate of MISAB did not include security of that nature, which did not appear to be directly linked to the rebellion.

The Committee stated that the residents of Bangui were convinced of the need for a military and security force after 6 February to help consolidate the peace and stimulate the process of national reconciliation. The Central African Republic was still experiencing difficulties in meeting its internal obligations and external commitments, in particular the repayment of the arrears due to the Bretton Woods institutions. The greatest concern of the Central African authorities was to resolve the problem of six months' arrears of wages and salaries, which had caused some strikes with more threatened.

The Committee recommended the extension of the mandate of MISAB for one to two months after 6 February, thus allowing the necessary time for the deployment of a multinational force during the post-MISAB period. Such a force would ensure the necessary security conditions for the implementation of reforms and the organization of free, democratic and transparent elections. In addition, the Committee said that steps should be taken to arouse a greater awareness among States, international organizations and financial institutions with a view to assisting in the development of the Central African Republic, as the Security Council had urged in resolution 1136(1997).

Communications. On 28 January [S/1998/88], the President of the Central African Republic informed the Security Council President of his agreement with the Secretary-General's recommendations for a peacekeeping operation to replace MISAB. He proposed that the current mandate of MISAB be extended for five weeks in order to prevent any disruption between the departure of the inter-African force and the deployment of a UN operation. Thus, the President thought it would be appropriate for the Council to continue its support for the conduct of the inter-African mission and accordingly renew the approval and authorization it gave to that operation in resolution 1136(1997).

In a letter of 4 February [S/1998/97], President Bongo of Gabon, in his capacity as Chairman of the International Mediation Committee on the Central African crisis and on behalf of the countries participating in MISAB, said that the situation in the Central African Republic had improved as the result of MISAB efforts, the logistic and financial support of France and UNDP assistance. As from 15 April, the composition of MISAB would change due to the withdrawal of France. If nothing were done to deploy a UN peacekeeping operation, the political situation in the country could again become precarious. Accordingly, Mr. Bongo requested the Council, in the short term, to agree to extend the mandate of MISAB until 15 March.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (February)

On 5 February [meeting 3853], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1152 (1998). The draft [S/1998/102] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 1125(1997) of 6 August 1997 and 1136(1997) of 6 November 1997,

Taking note of the third report to the Security Council by the International Committee for the follow-up of the Bangui Agreements,

Taking note also of the letter dated 28 January 1998 from the President of the Central African Republic to the President of the Security Council and the letter dated 4 February 1998 from the President of Gabon, on behalf of the members of the International Committee for the follow-up of the Bangui Agreements, to the President of the Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 23 January 1998, submitted to the Council in accordance with resolution 1136(1997),

Expressing its appreciation for the neutral and impartial way in which the Inter-African Mission to Monitor the Implementation of the Bangui Agreements has carried out its mandate, in close cooperation with the Central African authorities, and noting with satisfaction that the Inter-African Mission has contributed to stabilizing the situation in the Central African Republic, in particular through the supervision of the surrendering of arms,

Noting that the States participating in the Inter-African Mission and the Central African Republic have decided to extend its mandate in order for it to complete its mission with the prospect of the United Nations establishing a peacekeeping operation,

Stressing the importance of regional stability, and in this context fully supporting the efforts made by the Member States participating in the International Mediation Committee established by the Nineteenth Summit of the Heads of State, Government and Delegation of France and Africa, held at Ouagadougou from 4 to 6 December 1996, and by the members of the International Committee for the follow-up of the Bangui Agreements,

Stressing also the need for all signatories of the Bangui Agreements to continue to cooperate fully in respecting and implementing these Agreements in order to help to foster the conditions for long-term stability in the Central African Republic,

Determining that the situation in the Central African Republic continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

1. Welcomes the efforts made by the Member States participating in the Inter-African Mission to Monitor the Implementation of the Bangui Agreements and by those States providing support to them, and their readiness to maintain these efforts;

2. Welcomes also the support provided by the United Nations Development Programme to the International Committee for the follow-up of the Bangui Agreements, and encourages the United Nations Development Programme to continue this support;

3. Calls upon the parties in the Central African Republic to complete the implementation without delay of the provisions of the Bangui Agreements, and also calls for the fulfilment of the commitments expressed in the letter dated 8 January 1998 from the President of the Central African Republic to the Secretary-General;

4. Approves the continued conduct by Member States participating in the Inter-African Mission of the operation in a neutral and impartial way to achieve its objective as set out in paragraph 2 of resolution 1125(1997);

5. Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, authorizes the Member States participating in the Inter-African Mission and those States providing logistical support to ensure security and freedom of movement of their personnel;

6. Decides that the authorization referred to in paragraph 5 above will be initially extended until 16 March 1998;

7. Recalls that the expenses and logistical support for the Inter-African Mission will be borne on a voluntary basis in accordance with article 11 of the mandate of the Mission, and encourages Member States to contribute to the Trust Fund for the Central African Republic;

8. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General, as expressed in his report of 23 January 1998, to appoint a Special Representative to the Central African Republic, and expresses its belief that the prompt appointment of such a representative could assist the parties in the implementation of the Bangui Agreements and provide support to other activities of the United Nations in the country;

9. Reiterates its call to all States, international organizations and financial institutions to assist in post-conflict development in the Central African Republic;

10. Requests the Member States participating in the Inter-African Mission to provide a report to the Security Council through the Secretary-General before the end of the period referred to in paragraph 6 above;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report for its consideration, no later than 23 February 1998, on the situation in the Central African Republic, with recommendations regarding the establishment of a United Nations peacekeeping operation, including the structure, specific goals and financial implications of such an operation, and with information on the implementation of the Bangui Agreements and on the commitments expressed in the letter dated 8 January 1998 from the President of the Central African Republic to the Secretary-General;

12. Expresses its intention to take a decision by 16 March 1998 on the establishment of a United Nations peacekeeping operation in the Central African Republic on the basis of the report referred to in paragraph 11 above;

13. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (February). In response to Security Council resolution 1152(1998), the Secretary-General submitted a 23 February report on the situation in the Central African Republic [S/1998/148]. He also presented the findings of a UN team that visited Bangui from 8 to 16 February to finalize recommendations on the mandate and concept of a possible UN peacekeeping operation.

The Secretary-General stated that progress had been made in implementing the outstanding provisions of the Bangui Agreements and other political reforms. On 29 January, the Commission on the Restructuring of the Defence and Security Forces completed its work and recommended the dissolution of the security services (namely, the Centre nationale de recherche et d'investigation and the Section d'enquête, de recherche et de documentation) and major downsizing and restructuring of the Presidential Guard. President Patassé was expected to sign decrees enacting those key recommendations into law. In addition, the law on abandonment of the parliamentary audit in respect of persons presumed to have misappropriated funds under the previous regime was adopted by the National Assembly on 13 February, thus implementing another major provision of the Bangui Agreements. A draft electoral code was scheduled for consideration by the National Assembly in March. Preparations continued for the National Reconciliation Conference, which was scheduled to begin on 23 February.

The overall security situation had improved steadily, but was still a cause for concern. While relative calm had been established in Bangui, banditry/armed robbery was still a problem, particularly in the interior of the country, and light weapons remained in circulation. According to some reports, elements of the former armed forces of Zaire had found refuge in the southern part of the Central African Republic, and local militias were present in the north.

The Secretary-General said that, despite signs of progress, much remained to be done to ensure a lasting peace in the Central African Republic. In addition to national reconciliation and the adoption of an electoral code, substantial economic and financial reforms were needed, as were reforms of the military and police in order to maintain law and order. Since MISAB would not be able to continue its presence without external financing and logistical support, the only viable option was the establishment of a UN peacekeeping operation to take over from it. France had conveyed to the Secretariat its willingness to provide the UN peacekeeping operation with logistical and medical support, as well as its readiness to participate in the evacuation of UN personnel in case of emergency.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Council limit the duration of the operation to 90 days after the announcement of legislative election results, and that the initial mandate of the UN mission be for three months, in order to allow the Council to review the implementation of the commitments made by the Government of the Central African Republic.

Proposed mandate for MINURCA. In an annex to his 23 February report [S/1998/148], the Secretary-General presented a proposed plan and mandate for a UN mission in the Central African Republic. The multi-functional peacekeeping operation, known as the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic/Mission des Nations Unies en République centrafricaine (MINURCA), would have responsibilities in certain political, military, police and electoral matters. Its main goals would be: to assist the people of the country to consolidate the process of national reconciliation on the basis of the Bangui Agreements by promoting reforms; to assist in sustaining a secure and stable environment in Bangui; to support the establishment of conditions for holding free and fair legislative elections in August/September 1998; and to observe the conduct of the elections. The mandate would be of limited duration and would end 90 days after the announcement of election results.

MINURCA would be headed by a special representative with an office composed of political, legal, public information and human rights staff in Bangui. A UN force of six mechanized infantry companies, each with 120 to 150 personnel, would be required. The infantry would establish over 30 patrols/checkpoints on a 24-hour basis in various parts of the city and would provide security to key installations. A reinforced infantry company would be needed to guard the M'Poko airbase, and a military logistic unit, a long-range medical evacuation capacity, a military signals unit and force headquarters personnel would also be required. To cover those and other needs, the Secretary-General estimated that the minimum strength of the force would be 1,400 personnel. To conduct training-of-trainers programmes for the police and, to some extent, for the national gendarmerie, the Mission would need up to 24 civilian police experts/observers. The civilian police unit would also monitor the restructuring of the Central African security forces and monitor the national police before and during the legislative elections. In collaboration with UNDP, an electoral unit would assist the Central African authorities with technical support for the legislative elections.

A status-of-forces agreement would be concluded between the Central African Republic and the United Nations to cover various administrative aspects of the Mission such as facilities and accommodation. At the same time, the Mission would depend on the willingness of France to provide logistical support in the country and to maintain a presence in the region. A UN trust fund would be established for Member States to make voluntary contributions towards MINURCA activities.

As part of transitional arrangements, the Secretary-General had initiated contacts with the MISAB contributors and France, all of which had expressed readiness, in principle, to participate in the proposed UN operation. To allow enough time for a smooth transition to MINURCA, the Secretary-General suggested that an additional extension of the mandate of MISAB would be necessary until 15 April 1998. Such a transition could be executed in four to six weeks from the adoption of an enabling resolution by the Security Council. On the adoption of such a resolution, the Secretary-General could dispatch a transition team to Bangui. The transition would be facilitated if France would transfer to the new UN operation essential equipment and facilities and provide other services. The formal establishment of the new Mission would be accompanied by a transfer of authority of MISAB forces, totalling some 800 personnel, to UN command on 15 April. Additional units to provide operational and support services currently performed by the French troops should be deployed to Bangui not later than mid-April.

The Secretary-General informed the Council that the estimated total cost of the Mission would be $70.2 million gross for a nine-month period [S/1998/148/Add.1]. The estimate provided for the deployment of 45 military planners and logisticians supported by 49 staff for an advance headquarters during the transition period, and thereafter of 1,400 military personnel, 24 civilian police and 122 support staff, as well as 200 electoral observers during elections.

Communication. On 11 March [S/1998/219], President Patassé expressed his Government's endorsement of the Secretary-General's recomrecommendations on the establishment of MINURCA. He also informed the Security Council that he and President Bongo, Chairman of the International Mediation Committee, had decided to extend until 15 April the mandate of MISAB to allow for a smooth transition. Accordingly, he requested the Council to extend, for the last time, the MISAB mandate.

Mr. Patassé attached to his letter the National Reconciliation Pact adopted by the National Reconciliation Conference, held in Bangui from 26 February to 5 March and attended by 28 political parties, 6 trade unions, 3 religious denominations, 11 human rights groups and 17 other national organizations.

MISAB report (March). On 11 March, the Secretary-General forwarded to the Security Council the report of the International Monitoring Committee [S/1998/221], covering developments in the Central African Republic between 3 February and 10 March. The report was submitted in response to resolution 1152(1998) (see above).

The Committee stated that the pace of full implementation of the Bangui Agreements had recently increased somewhat. The Forum to Evaluate the Implementation of the Bangui Agreements (19 February) noted that the major provisions implemented included deployment of an inter-African force; formation of a Government of National Unity; abandonment of the judicial enforcement of the parliamentary audit; amnesty covering the third rebellion; certain disarmament issues; the situation of former heads of State; and the preliminary agreement on a national reconciliation pact. Those at an advanced stage of implementation concerned: the Electoral Code; the Press Code and the National Council for Radio and Television; recommendations of the General Meeting on National Defence on restructuring of defence and security forces; and procedures for appointment to the University of Bangui. Those provisions requiring more time concerned good governance; respect for the Constitution and institutions of the Republic; and national reconciliation. Those provisions that had not begun to be implemented concerned: amendment of criminal procedure; streamlining the office of the President; revision of certain articles of the Constitution; negotiation of a social contract with trade unions; and recommendations of the General Meeting on Youth. The thorny problem of arrears of wages and salaries, pensions and scholarships was among those provisions that had not been implemented owing to the precarious state of the national economy and public finance. Following an assessment of all the provisions that needed to be implemented, a plan of action was submitted to and adopted by the National Reconciliation Conference.

Disarmament was proceeding, but at a slower pace than earlier, with nearly 93 per cent of heavy weapons and 57 per cent of light weapons having been recovered. On 4 March, the President signed decrees on the dissolution of the security services (see above), the establishment of a documentation bureau to take charge of national security, and restriction on the powers and size of the Presidential Guard. The National Reconciliation Conference (see above) made recommendations on various issues, including political, social, economic, financial and foreign relations matters. Despite recovery efforts, the Central African Republic was still experiencing difficulties in meeting its internal obligations and external commitments.

The Committee was interested in extending the mandate of MISAB until 15 April, the expected date for deployment of a multinational force, as recommended by the Secretary-General.

Communication. In a 13 March letter [S/1998/233] to the Security Council President, President Bongo of Gabon, on behalf of the countries participating in MISAB, expressed support for the Secretary-General's recommendations on MINURCA (see above). In the meantime, it would be necessary for MISAB's current mandate to be extended until 15 April, and he suggested that the Council renew its authorization.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (16 March)

On 16 March [meeting 3860], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1155(1998). The draft [S/1998/231] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 1125(1997) of 6 August 1997, 1136(1997) of 6 November 1997 and 1152(1998) of 5 February 1998,

Taking note of the report of 10 March 1998 of the International Committee for the follow-up of the Bangui Agreements, submitted to the Security Council pursuant to resolution 1152(1998),

Taking note also of the letter dated 11 March 1998 from the President of the Central African Republic to the President of the Security Council and of the letter dated 13 March 1998 from the President of Gabon, on behalf of the members of the International Committee for the follow-up of the Bangui Agreements, to the President of the Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 23 February 1998, submitted to the Council in accordance with resolution 1152(1998),

Expressing its appreciation for the neutral and impartial way in which the Inter-African Mission to Monitor the Implementation of the Bangui Agreements has carried out its mandate, in close cooperation with the Central African authorities, and noting with satisfaction that the Inter-African Mission has contributed significantly to stabilizing the situation in the Central African Republic, in particular through the supervision of the surrendering of arms,

Noting that the States participating in the Inter-African Mission and the Central African Republic have decided to extend the mandate of the Mission until 15 April 1998 in order to ensure a smooth transition to the prospective deployment of a United Nations peacekeeping operation,

Stressing the importance of regional stability, and in this context fully supporting the efforts of the International Mediation Committee established by the Nineteenth Summit of the Heads of State, Government and Delegation of France and Africa and by the members of the International Committee for the follow-up of the Bangui Agreements,

Stressing also the need for all signatories to the Bangui Agreements to continue to cooperate fully in respecting and implementing these Agreements,

Determining that the situation in the Central African Republic continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

1. Welcomes the efforts made by the Member States participating in the Inter-African Mission to Monitor the Implementation of the Bangui Agreements and by those States providing support to them, and their readiness to maintain these efforts;

2. Urges the Government of the Central African Republic to continue to fulfil the commitments expressed in the letter dated 8 January 1998 from the President of the Central African Republic to the Secretary-General, and calls upon the parties in the Central African Republic to complete the implementation of the provisions of the Bangui Agreements and to implement the conclusions of the National Reconciliation Conference;

3. Approves the continued conduct by Member States participating in the Inter-African Mission of the operation in a neutral and impartial way to achieve its objective as set out in paragraph 2 of resolution 1125(1997);

4. Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, authorizes the Member States participating in the Inter-African Mission and those States providing logistical support to ensure security and freedom of movement of their personnel;

5. Decides that the authorization referred to in paragraph 4 above shall be extended until 27 March 1998;

6. Recalls that the expenses and logistical support for the Inter-African Mission will be borne on a voluntary basis in accordance with article 11 of the mandate of the Mission, and encourages Member States to contribute to the Trust Fund for the Central African Republic;

7. Affirms that it will take a decision by 27 March 1998 on the establishment of a United Nations peacekeeping operation in the Central African Republic on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General of 23 February 1998;

8. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Establishment of MINURCA

The Security Council established MINURCA on 27 March and the Mission became fully operational on 15 April. Later in the year, the Council extended MINURCA's mandate and enlarged it.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (27 March)

On 27 March [meeting 3867], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1159(1998). The draft [S/1998/268] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 1125(1997) of 6 August 1997, 1136(1997) of 6 November 1997, 1152(1998) of 5 February 1998 and 1155(1998) of 16 March 1998,

Recalling the report of 10 March 1998 of the International Committee for the follow-up of the Bangui Agreements, submitted to the Security Council pursuant to resolution 1152(1998),

Recalling also the letter dated 11 March 1998 from the President of the Central African Republic to the President of the Security Council and the letter dated 13 March 1998 from the President of Gabon, on behalf of the members of the International Committee for the follow-up of the Bangui Agreements, to the President of the Security Council,

Having further considered the report of the Secretary-General of 23 February 1998, submitted to the Council in accordance with resolution 1152(1998),

Reiterating its appreciation for the neutral and impartial way in which the Inter-African Mission to Monitor the Implementation of the Bangui Agreements has carried out its mandate, in close cooperation with the Central African authorities, and noting with satisfaction that the Inter-African Mission has contributed significantly to stabilizing the situation in the Central African Republic, in particular through the supervision of the surrendering of arms,

Recognizing that the States participating in the Inter-African Mission and the Central African Republic extended the mandate of the Mission until 15 April 1998 in order to ensure a smooth transition to the deployment of a United Nations peacekeeping operation,

Stressing the importance of regional stability and the need to consolidate the progress achieved by the Inter-African Mission, and in particular to assist the people of the Central African Republic to consolidate the process of national reconciliation and help to sustain a secure and stable environment conducive to the holding of free and fair elections,

Stressing also the need for all signatories to the Bangui Agreements to continue to implement the Agreements and for the authorities of the Central African Republic to take concrete steps to implement political, economic, social and security reforms as referred to in the report of the Secretary-General of 23 February 1998, including the establishment of an electoral code and preparations for legislative elections scheduled for August/September 1998,

Recognizing the link between peace and development and that a sustained commitment by the international community to assist and support the economic, social, and institutional development of the Central African Republic is indispensable for long-term peace and stability in the country, and in that regard welcoming the cooperation between the Government of the Central African Republic and the international financial institutions in developing an economic reform programme,

Determining that the situation in the Central African Republic continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

A

1. Welcomes the progress made by the Central African authorities and parties towards the achievement of national reconciliation and sustainable stability in the Central African Republic;

2. Urges the Government of the Central African Republic to continue to fulfil the commitments expressed in the letter dated 8 January 1998 from the President of the Central African Republic to the Secretary-General, and calls upon the parties in the Central African Republic to complete the implementation of the provisions of the Bangui Agreements and to implement the National Reconciliation Pact;

3. Reiterates its call to all States, international organizations and financial institutions to assist in post-conflict development in the Central African Republic;

B

4. Welcomes the efforts made by the Member States participating in the Inter-African Mission to Monitor the Implementation of the Bangui Agreements and by those States providing support to them, and their readiness to maintain these efforts;

5. Approves the continued conduct by the Member States participating in the Inter-African Mission of the operation in a neutral and impartial way to achieve its objective as set out in paragraph 2 of resolution 1125(1997);

6. Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, authorizes the Member States participating in the Inter-African Mission and those States providing logistical support to ensure security and freedom of movement of their personnel;

7. Decides that the authorization referred to in paragraph 6 above will end on 15 April 1998;

8. Recalls that the expenses and logistical support for the Inter-African Mission will be borne on a voluntary basis in accordance with article 11 of the mandate of the Mission, and encourages Member States to contribute to the Trust Fund for the Central African Republic;

9. Decides to establish a United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic with effect from 15 April 1998, and decides also that the military component of the Mission shall not exceed 1,350 personnel;

10. Decides that, taking into account the recommendations of the Secretary-General in his report of 23 February 1998, the Mission shall have the following initial mandate:

(a) To assist in maintaining and enhancing security and stability, including freedom of movement, in Bangui and the immediate vicinity of the city;

(b) To assist the national security forces in maintaining law and order and in protecting key installations in Bangui;

(c) To supervise, control storage and monitor the final disposition of all weapons retrieved in the course of the disarmament exercise;

(d) To ensure security and freedom of movement of United Nations personnel and the safety and security of United Nations property;

(e) To assist in coordination with other international efforts in a short-term police trainers programme and in other capacity-building efforts of the national police, and to provide advice on the restructuring of the national police and special police forces;

(f) To provide advice and technical support to the national electoral bodies regarding the electoral code and plans for the conduct of the legislative elections scheduled for August/September 1998;

11. Authorizes the Secretary-General to take the measures necessary to ensure that the United Nations Mission is fully deployed by 15 April 1998 in order to carry out its mandate, and to secure a smooth transition between the Inter-African Mission and the United Nations Mission;

12. Decides that the United Nations Mission is established for an initial period of three months until 15 July 1998, and expresses its intention to decide on the extension of the Mission on the basis of the report to be submitted by the Secretary-General pursuant to paragraph 15 below;

13. Affirms that the Mission may be required to take action to ensure security and freedom of movement of its personnel in the discharge of its mandate;

14. Welcomes the appointment by the Secretary-General, within the Mission, of his Special Representative in the Central African Republic:

(a) To assist in the promotion of the reforms necessary to achieve national reconciliation, security and stability in the country;

(b) To head the Mission;

(c) To have overall authority over all United Nations activities in the Central African Republic, in support of the mandate of the Mission;

(d) To provide good offices and mediation between the Government and political parties;

(e) To provide advice and facilitate technical assistance in the areas of good governance and the rule of law;

(f) To cooperate with other international partners, including international financial institutions, with the objective of supporting activities aimed at establishing the foundations for lasting peace, national reconstruction and development;

(g) To encourage the United Nations agencies and programmes to provide assistance to the Central African Republic, in particular in the areas referred to in the report of the Secretary-General;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council regularly informed and to submit a report to the Council by 20 June 1998 on the implementation of the mandate of the Mission, on developments in the Central African Republic, on progress towards the implementation of the commitments expressed in the letter dated 8 January 1998 from the President of the Central African Republic to the Secretary-General and on the implementation of the Bangui Agreements and the National Reconciliation Pact, including on commitments related to ensuring the economic recovery of the country;

16. Also requests the Secretary-General to provide information in his report referred to in paragraph 15 above on the progress by the Government of the Central African Republic to adopt an electoral code, set a date for the legislative elections, and develop specific plans for the conduct of the legislative elections, and to make recommendations on the future role of the United Nations in the legislative elections process;

17. Urges Member States to respond positively to the request made to them by the Secretary-General to contribute personnel, equipment and other resources to the Mission in order to facilitate its early deployment;

18. Approves the intention of the Secretary-General to establish a trust fund to enable Member States to make voluntary contributions to support the activities of the Mission and to assist in the financing of the Mission, and urges Member States to contribute to it;

19. Requests the Government of the Central African Republic to conclude a status-of-forces agreement with the Secretary-General before 25 April 1998, and recalls that pending the conclusion of such an agreement, the model status-of-forces agreement dated 9 October 1990 should apply provisionally;

20. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Appointments. On 31 March [S/1998/297], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his intention to appoint Oluyemi Adeniji (Nigeria) as his Special Representative for the Central African Republic and head of MINURCA. The Council expressed its agreement on 3 April [S/1998/298]. On 8 April [S/1998/320], the Secretary-General announced his appointment of Brigadier-General Barthélémy Ratanga (Gabon) as Force Commander of MINURCA and the Council expressed agreement on 14 April [S/1998/321].

Communication. On 20 April [S/1998/343], Zimbabwe forwarded to the Security Council a statement by its President and current Chairman of OAU, Robert Mugabe, on the occasion of the deployment of MINURCA. On behalf of OAU, Mr. Mugabe thanked the MISAB participating countries, as well as those providing assistance, for their role in arresting the escalation of conflict. MISAB was an example of Africans seeking to find solutions through subregional and regional efforts. He stated that MINURCA had a pivotal role to play in maintaining peace and stability in the Central African Republic and thereby create conditions conducive to holding elections in September. Mr. Mugabe hoped that the Council would give sympathetic consideration to President Patassé's request that the peacekeeping force be maintained until presidential elections in 1999.

Report of Secretary-General (June). In response to Security Council resolution 1159(1998), the Secretary-General submitted a 19 June report on MINURCA [S/1998/540], including developments in the Central African Republic, progress towards the implementation of commitments expressed by President Patassé in his letter of 8

January, and the implementation of the Bangui Agreements and the National Reconciliation Pact.

On 15 April, MINURCA was officially established and authority was transferred to it from MISAB. As at 15 June, total troop strength stood at over 1,200 personnel, with contingents from Burkina Faso, Canada, Chad, Côte d'Ivoire, France, Gabon, Mali, Senegal and Togo, out of the maximum authorized strength of 1,350 personnel. Of the approved total of 106 international civilian personnel, 73 had been deployed, with most of the remaining staff expected to arrive in Bangui shortly. Of the 24 civilian police trainers, only 8 had been deployed, owing to the late response of contributing countries.

The overall political situation in Bangui remained generally calm, but volatile, the Secretary-General reported. The process of national reconciliation launched by the Bangui Agreements received significant impetus from the adoption on 4 March 1998 of the National Reconciliation Pact by all Central African political parties. The Pact banned the use of force as an instrument of achieving political power, emphasizing that political power should be attained only through elections, and the signatories pledged to work for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the country. A Monitoring and Arbitration Committee (Comité de suivi et d'arbitrage) to follow up on implementation of the Pact and the Bangui Agreements and to arbitrate in case of disputes was set up by a presidential decree on 26 March. The Committee, composed of representatives of the Government, the opposition and civil society, with the support of UNDP, was in the process of organizing itself. Another important provision of the Bangui Agreements was implemented with the adoption by the National Assembly on 30 April of the Press Code and the establishment by presidential decree on 27 May of a commission to oversee the freedom of the press. A welcome development was the formation of the Group of Friends—Canada, Côte d'Ivoire, France, Gabon, Kenya, Senegal, Togo and the United States—which developed a number of indicators for necessary reforms, focusing on the need for progress in preparing for elections, in restructuring the security forces and in the conclusion of agreements with the Bretton Woods institutions.

Notwithstanding those encouraging developments, a number of political difficulties remained. Divisions and distrust, including along ethnic and regional lines, persisted. While the creation in February 1997 of a Government of National Unity, which included several opposition parties, was a major step towards reconciliation, the Government had remained a somewhat uneasy coalition, with recurring accusations from opposition parties that their ministers had been given less important responsibilities. The so-called Group of 11 opposition parties, which currently consisted of 9 parties, continued to threaten to withdraw from the Government.

Some progress had been made in preparing for the legislative elections scheduled for August/September, but much remained to be done. On 26 March, the Electoral Code was adopted by the National Assembly, which provided for the creation of an independent and mixed electoral commission (Commission électorale mixte et indépendante); however, a special committee of representatives of all recognized political parties failed to reach consensus on the text of a draft decree on the Commission. As the parties of the presidential majority and opposition parties remained divided on the issue of who would preside over the Commission, the Secretary-General's Special Representative undertook consultations aimed at finding a solution to the impasse. Agreement was reached on having all 35 registered political parties represented on the Commission, as well as representatives of the 16 prefectures and observers from civil society. The Commission was legally established, but had not yet met, as a significant number of opposition parties had not agreed to join it.

The security situation remained calm in Bangui following the deployment of MINURCA. However, the situation in the interior of the country was still precarious, with continued reports of banditry and other serious criminal acts. MINURCA had sent limited reconnaissance missions to the interior to assess the situation in preparation for elections. The Secretary-General reported some progress in the restructuring of the national armed forces, but no progress had been made concerning the creation of a national, republican and multi-ethnic army, as recommended by the Commission on the Restructuring of the Defence and Security Forces. In the area of disarmament, weapons and munitions recovered by MISAB were being stored and guarded by MINURCA.

The economy of the Central African Republic had not recovered. According to UNDP, 64.4 per cent of the population was living below the poverty line, with 35.5 per cent living in acute poverty. The Government had committed itself to undertaking reform measures, including increased revenue collection through enhanced transparency and accountability and anti-corruption measures; regular payment of salaries of public employees and the arrears of unpaid salaries; and fulfilment of conditions agreed upon with the Bretton Woods institutions. So far, those efforts had resulted in modest macro-financial progress. Improved revenue collection had permitted regular monthly payment of salaries from March 1998 onwards and a modest reduction, to 10 months, in the accumulated arrears of unpaid salaries.

An issue with serious humanitarian and security ramifications was the situation of the approximately 1,200 Rwandan asylum-seekers, who were mostly settled in the northern parts of the country. Following violent incidents between them and the local population in March, the Government insisted that they be resettled in third countries. Three European countries had offered to receive some asylum-seekers, and arrangements were being discussed for possible resettlement.

The Secretary-General pointed out that since the transfer of authority from MISAB to MINURCA on 15 April, MINURCA had succeeded in maintaining security and stability in Bangui, and his Special Representative had been actively promoting the reforms necessary to achieve national reconciliation, peace, reconstruction and development. The Secretary-General cautioned that if lasting peace was to be achieved, urgent action was needed in the following priority areas: the restructuring of the defence and security forces; the organization of free and fair legislative elections; and economic and social recovery. The main responsibility for implementing those tasks lay with the Central African Government and the political parties. At the same time, they needed external assistance, for which the Secretary-General appealed to Member States and regional organizations. He appealed to all Central African parties to reconcile their differences to allow for the installation of the Electoral Commission and the development of an operational plan for the elections. Only then would the Secretary-General be able to formulate recommendations on a future UN role in the elections process.

The electoral unit of MINURCA estimated that a minimum of 90 days would be required to prepare credible elections once the Electoral Commission had been installed and funding had been obtained. In the meantime, the Secretary-General recommended that the military component of MINURCA conduct reconnaissance missions and provide security escorts of short duration outside Bangui.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Council extend the mandate of MINURCA by two months, until 15 September 1998. However, should the necessary electoral preparations be made by the Central African parties before the expiration of the mandate period, he would be prepared to submit detailed recommendations on possible UN involvement in the electoral process.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 14 July [meeting 3905], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1182(1998). The draft [S/1998/637] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 1125(1997) of 6 August 1997, 1136(1997) of 6 November 1997, 1152(1998) of 5 February 1998, 1155(1998) of 16 March 1998 and 1159(1998) of 27 March 1998,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 19 June 1998, and noting the recommendations contained therein,

Noting with satisfaction the rapid and effective deployment of the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic,

Stressing the importance of regional stability and the need to consolidate the progress achieved so far and, in particular, to assist the people of the Central African Republic to consolidate the process of national reconciliation and to help to sustain a secure and stable environment conducive to the holding of free and fair elections,

Welcoming the inauguration of the Electoral Commission with a neutral and independent Chairman, and stressing the need for all signatories to the Bangui Agreements to cooperate to ensure the effective functioning of the Commission,

Reiterating the need for the authorities of the Central African Republic to continue to take concrete steps to implement political, economic, social and security reforms as referred to in the report of the Secretary-General of 23 February 1998 and to fulfil the commitments expressed in the letter dated 8 January 1998 from the President of the Central African Republic to the Secretary-General, including continued cooperation with the international financial institutions,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic until 25 October 1998;

2. Calls upon the Government of the Central African Republic to adopt, as soon as possible, a plan for the effective restructuring of the armed forces of the Central African Republic based on the proposals submitted by the Commission on the Restructuring of the Defence and Security Forces;

3. Urges the international community to lend its support to the restructuring of the security forces of the Central African Republic, including the gendarmerie, through bilateral and multilateral assistance programmes, and recognizes the role of the Mission of providing advice and technical assistance for the initial steps in restructuring those security forces and, in this connection, coordinating and channelling international support to this end;

4. Recognizes that the Mission, in implementing its mandate, may conduct reconnaissance missions of limited duration outside Bangui, and other tasks involving the security of United Nations personnel in accordance with paragraph 10 of resolution 1159(1998);

5. Calls upon the authorities of the Central African Republic to adopt rapidly an operational plan for the organization of the legislative elections and so enable the United Nations and international organizations to make arrangements for the provision of the necessary assistance;

6. Encourages the Mission to continue to consult with the United Nations Development Programme regarding the provision of advice and technical assistance to all relevant electoral bodies, and urges the Secretary-General to provide, as soon as possible, recommendations for United Nations assistance for the legislative election process;

7. Urges Member States to provide the required technical, financial and logistical assistance for the organization of free and fair elections;

8. Also urges Member States to support the efforts of the authorities of the Central African Republic in the economic and social development of the country, and, in particular, encourages international financial institutions to cooperate with the Central African Republic in this regard;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Security Council by 25 September 1998 on the implementation of the mandate of the Mission, on developments in the Central African Republic, on progress towards the implementation of the commitments expressed in the letter dated 8 January 1998 from the President of the Central African Republic to the Secretary-General and on the implementation of the Bangui Agreements and the National Reconciliation Pact, including on commitments related to ensuring the country's economic recovery;

10. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (August). The Secretary-General, in response to resolution 1182(1998), submitted on 21 August his second report on MINURCA and on the situation in the Central African Republic [S/1998/783]. The report also provided an update on electoral preparations.

As he had earlier reported in June, the Mixed and Independent Electoral Commission had not been able to begin work owing to differences among the political parties over its composition. In an effort to reconcile the differences, the Special Representative convened a meeting of political parties on 16 June and a consensus was reached on the chairmanship, Bureau and composition of the Commission. The Commission began work in late June. Due to the delay, the election dates were set for 20 September and 11 October. On 24 July, the President signed a law on electoral redistricting, which increased by 24 the previous number of deputies in the National Assembly to a total of 109 (representing 109 electoral districts), but that law was being contested by the opposition parties as unconstitutional. The Electoral Commission, after meetings with donors, adopted a budget of $3.2 million, for which pledges were made to cover the costs in full.

The Electoral Commission was fully operational in Bangui at the time of the report and most of its branches at the provincial level, the comités sous-préfectoraux, were also in place. However, operational activities in preparation for the elections were impeded by the delay in providing financial and other resources. Other preparatory activities for the elections were five weeks behind schedule.

During the reporting period, MINURCA, in collaboration with UNDP and others, continued to provide advice and technical assistance to the Central African authorities in the planning and organization of the elections. A UN radio station, Radio MINURCA, was launched on 22 July, featuring programmes related to the mandate of MINURCA and on the electoral process. MINURCA also completed its reconnaissance missions to key locations in the interior of the country to assess the situation in order to facilitate preparations for the elections and to formulate recommendations on a future UN role in the electoral process. A joint Government-MINURCA committee was established to agree on a programme for restructuring the Forces armées centrafricaines (FACA). The civilian police component of MINURCA began its first one-month training session of 60 members of the national gendarmerie on 11 August.

Given the developments in the electoral process, the Secretary-General proposed an operational plan for possible UN assistance in the process, as developed by MINURCA. Under that plan, and subject to Security Council approval, MINURCA would support the transport of electoral materials and equipment to selected sites and to the sous-préfectures and their retrieval, as well as the transport of UN electoral observers to and from the selected sites; provide a limited international observation of the first and second rounds of the legislative elections; and ensure the security of electoral materials and equipment during their transport, and the security of UN electoral observers.

The Secretary-General, noting that the operational activities of the Electoral Commission were well behind schedule, said it was clear that the elections scheduled to begin on 20 September would have to be delayed. Since the ultimate responsibility for the organization and conduct of the elections rested with the Commission, and any proposed UN assistance could only be complementary to the Commission's work, it was essential that the Commission ensure the timely delivery and retrieval of electoral material to all polling stations.

The Secretary-General stated that MINURCA had succeeded in maintaining security and stability in Bangui. At the same time, the Central African authorities, with the advice and support of the United Nations, had made progress in implementing the Bangui Agreements and initiating political and economic reforms, including the recent conclusion of an agreement with the Bretton Woods institutions to address economic and social difficulties. Nevertheless, the national reconciliation process and the security situation remained fragile. The holding of legislative elections would help to further the peace process and create a climate of stability for pursuing financial and economic reforms. The Secretary-General recommended that the Council expand the mandate of MINURCA to include assistance to the election process as he had outlined. Such support was necessary for the Central African Republic to hold the elections within a time frame consistent with constitutional provisions. In addition, he urged all the Central African parties to assume fully their responsibilities in the elections and to participate in them in a manner that would strengthen the democratic process and contribute to national reconciliation.

In an addendum to his report [S/1998/783/Add.1], the Secretary-General informed the Council of the costs for the deployment of UN electoral observers and additional MINURCA troops for two and a half months under two proposed options. Option 1 provided for an additional 300 troops to be deployed to the six selected provincial sites, together with 150 troops from the current MINURCA military component. They would be supported by 42 additional staff. In addition, 94 electoral observers were needed for varying lengths of time. The total cost of that option would be $6,318,000. Option 2, at a cost of $3,798,000, would entail the deployment of 250 current MINURCA troops to the six selected sites, complemented by 150 FACA troops, to be supported by the same number of civilian personnel and electoral observers.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

On 15 October [meeting 3935], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1201 (1998). The draft [S/1998/948] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 1125(1997) of 6 August 1997, 1136(1997) of 6 November 1997, 1152(1998) of 5 February 1998, 1155(1998) of 16 March 1998, 1159(1998) of 27 March 1998 and 1182(1998) of 14 July 1998,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 21 August 1998, and noting the recommendations contained therein,

Stressing that the complete implementation of the Bangui Agreements and of the National Reconciliation Pact is essential to peace and national reconciliation in the Central African Republic, and recognizing the significant progress made by the Government of the Central African Republic in implementing the Bangui Agreements and initiating major political and economic reforms,

Recalling the importance of regional stability and the need to consolidate the progress achieved so far and, in particular, to assist the people of the Central African Republic to consolidate the process of national reconciliation and to help sustain a secure and stable environment conducive to the holding of free and fair elections,

Emphasizing that the authorities of the Central African Republic and the mixed and independent Electoral Commission are responsible for the organization and conduct of the legislative elections,

Noting with satisfaction the adoption of an operational plan for the organization of the legislative elections by the Central African Republic and the mixed and independent Electoral Commission, and welcoming donor pledges made in support of the electoral process,

Recognizing the importance of the support already given by the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic to the mixed and independent Electoral Commission in the preparations for the elections,

1. Welcomes the announcement by the authorities of the Central African Republic and the mixed and independent Electoral Commission of the holding of legislative elections on 22 November and 13 December 1998;

2. Decides that the mandate of the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic shall include support for the conduct of legislative elections as described in section III of the report of the Secretary-General of 21 August 1998 and, in particular:

(a) The transport of electoral materials and equipment to selected sites and to the sous-préfectures, as well as the transport of United Nations electoral observers to and from electoral sites;

(b) The conduct of a limited but reliable international observation of the first and second rounds of the legislative elections;

(c) Ensuring the security of electoral materials and equipment during their transport to and at the selected sites, as well as the security of the international electoral observers;

3. Approves the recommendation contained in paragraph 25 of the report of the Secretary-General regarding the provision of security during the legislative election process, taking into account the need to ensure the stability and security of Bangui and in accordance with the cost estimate associated with this recommendation contained in the addendum to that report;

4. Welcomes the establishment of a joint committee of the Government of the Central African Republic and the Mission to address the restructuring of the Central African Armed Forces, and reiterates its call upon the Government of the Central African Republic to adopt as soon as possible a plan for the effective restructuring of the Armed Forces;

5. Welcomes the deployment of up to 150 troops of the Central African Armed Forces to the selected sites, operating under United Nations rules of engagement applicable to the Mission;

6. Calls upon the Central African authorities to provide the necessary assistance, including the security arrangements, that will enable the Central African Republic and the mixed and independent Electoral Commission to prepare adequately and freely for the legislative elections;

7. Urges all parties in the Central African Republic to assume fully their responsibilities in the legislative elections and to participate in them in a manner that will strengthen the democratic process and contribute to national reconciliation;

8. Urges Member States to provide the required technical, financial and logistical assistance for the organization of free and fair legislative elections;

9. Decides to extend the mandate of the Mission until 28 February 1999;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council regularly informed and to submit by 20 December 1998 the report called for in resolution 1182(1998) on the implementation of the mandate of the Mission, on developments in the Central African Republic, on progress towards the implementation of the commitments expressed in the letter dated 8 January 1998 from the President of the Central African Republic to the Secretary-General and on the implementation of the Bangui Agreements and the National Reconciliation Pact, including on commitments related to ensuring the economic recovery of the country and the restructuring of the security forces;

11. Expresses its intention to terminate the Mission no later than 28 February 1999, with its drawdown beginning no later than 15 January 1999, and requests the Secretary-General to make recommendations on this basis in his report referred to in paragraph 10 above;

12. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General, his Special Representative and the personnel of the Mission for their efforts to promote peace and national reconciliation in the Central African Republic;

13. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Legislative elections and other developments

With the assistance and support of the United Nations and other international organizations, the Electoral Commission of the Central African Republic organized legislative elections on 22 November and 13 December.

Report of Secretary-General (December). On 18 December, in his third report on MINURCA [S/1998/1203], the Secretary-General said that, pursuant to resolution 1201(1998) and in preparation for the elections, MINURCA had deployed troops from Bangui to five of the six provincial sites originally selected. The sixth site could not be made available by the Government, but that did not disrupt the electoral programme. Additional troops provided by Canada and France were also deployed to those sites, the Mission sent election observers, and the Central African Republic sent troops as well. The electoral campaign officially commenced on 7 November, and it was conducted without major incident.

The first round of the legislative elections was held on 22 November in an orderly manner, according to UN and other international observers, despite some organizational problems. A total of 848 candidates, including members of 29 political parties and 107 independent candidates, ran for the 109 seats in the National Assembly. On 7 December, the Constitutional Court announced the official results of the first round, according to which 46 candidates were elected. The 195 candidates who received more than 10 per cent of the vote in the first round were eligible to participate in the second round, which took place on 13 December. Final results announced on 28 December [S/1999/98] showed that the ruling party and its allies, known collectively as the Mouvement Présidentielle, had won 54 seats, while the coalition of opposition parties won 55 seats. However, in the period following the formal proclamation of the results, one opposition legislator announced his support for the Mouvement Présidentielle, which then claimed a majority in the Assembly and the right to the presidency and other key positions of the Assembly's Bureau.

Even before the final results were announced, the Secretary-General warned that the apparent voting pattern showed that each of the main political parties was drawing support from the ethnic and regional base of their leaders. Such a polarization of the political forces could have far-reaching consequences, not only for the formation of the new Government but also for the commitment of some of the political parties to the implementation of the Bangui Agreements. Thus, he affirmed, the continuous involvement of the international community in the Central African Republic, both in the political and security areas, remained crucial.

The dissemination of accurate information as a tool for national reconciliation and peace, particularly during the electoral period, was part of MINURCA's mandate. To that end, the Mission held weekly press conferences and broadcast daily programmes on its own radio station with country-wide coverage. A special programme on respect for human rights, another part of the Mission's mandate, was elaborated and the Mission helped to formulate a national plan of action for human rights education, in the framework of the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education (1995-2004). It launched an awareness campaign on Radio MINURCA to ensure widespread dissemination of human rights principles and aimed at strengthening national capacity in the promotion and protection of human rights.

MINURCA continued to assist in maintaining a secure and stable environment in Bangui through the conduct of patrols and maintenance of checkpoints, including joint patrols with FACA. During the election campaign, enhanced security arrangements were instituted, and MINURCA troops assisted in bringing the electoral materials to the provinces.

In September, the Special Representative, in accordance with resolution 1182(1998), convinced President Patassé to set up a joint Government/MINURCA committee on the restructuring of FACA. The committee completed preparation of draft laws on national defence, which defined the Central African defence forces as comprising FACA and the gendarmerie, and also spelled out the role of the President, the Prime Minister, various defence bodies and key ministries. Four draft decrees on various aspects of the reorganization of the defence and security forces were prepared for approval by the National Assembly.

Under the demobilization and reintegration programme funded by UNDP and the United Nations Office for Project Services, the registration of all FACA personnel, as well as the gendarmerie and the Special Force for the Defence of Republican Institutions, with MINURCA observing, began on 14 October. At the time of the report, 88 per cent (over 4,000) of all security forces were registered in Bangui and the western and central parts of the country. On completion of the registration, demobilization plans would be elaborated. Although not specifically part of its mandate, MINURCA participated in disarmament efforts by investigating reported cases of arms caches. A substantial number of arms were recovered in the period preceding the legislative elections, which was partly attributable to the illegal transfer of arms from the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC). The disarmament programme would need to be continued after the elections, the Secretary-General said, and he recommended that most of the collected weapons be destroyed under UN supervision.

MINURCA continued its efforts to assist the Government in training the police and to advise the authorities on restructuring the national police and special police forces. The civilian police component of the Mission elaborated a train-the-trainers programme aimed at providing skills to some 1,000 police and gendarmerie personnel. At the reporting date, 143 police officers and 120 gendarmes had completed the training. The continuation of the programme would require the involvement of the international community.

The Secretary-General reported that the economy of the Central African Republic was still precarious. Despite reform efforts, the Government was not able to meet the September benchmarks of the financial consolidation and economic reform programmes agreed with the Bretton Woods institutions. Revenues had declined and the Government once again failed to meet its obligations, in particular the regular payment of salaries to its employees. As a result, the IMF mission that visited the country in October could not recommend the release of the second allocation under its structural adjustment agreement reached on 22 July. The Government had to make efforts to implement the programme agreed with the Bretton Woods institutions, but the prospects for recovery hinged on the future security situation. The uncertainties surrounding the future of MINURCA had not helped, the Secretary-General reported. The Special Representative continued to consult with various international partners of the Central African Republic, including the financial institutions and UN agencies and programmes, in support of the peace process and of national reconstruction and development. Since the deployment of MINURCA, those organizations had been able to resume many programmes that had been suspended because of the security situation. At a December meeting, the representatives of agencies and programmes operating in the country expressed the view that it would be premature to withdraw the UN peacekeeping force as envisaged in Security Council resolution 1201(1998), as that could threaten the security environment.

MINURCA also provided assistance to the Central African Republic with regard to its refugee population. As the conflict in the DRC escalated (see above), the group of Rwandans camped in the Central African Republic began demanding to be returned to the DRC, their first country of asylum. The Central African Government, anxious to avoid endangering the legislative elections, transferred 776 Rwandans to the DRC on 11 November. In early November, Sudanese refugees in camps in the eastern part of the country were attacked by an armed group. At the request of the Government and UNHCR, MINURCA provided logistic assistance for the deployment of some FACA troops to ensure security at the camps and for the evacuation of UNHCR workers. In early December, an influx of refugees was reported in the Bangassou area, as fighting intensified in the DRC.

The Secretary-General observed that the establishment of MINURCA had been crucial for the maintenance of stability, not only in Bangui but also in the country, and had allowed the successful holding of legislative elections under international monitoring. As a result of the involvement of the United Nations, the Central African Republic had become relatively stable in an otherwise war-torn region. Since the deployment of the Mission in April and May, progress had also been made towards implementing important elements of the Bangui Agreements, creating a system of better governance, consolidating national reconciliation and undertaking economic and social reforms. MINURCA and the Special Representative had been instrumental in assisting the Government and the people in that process. However, voting patterns showed divisions along ethnic and regional lines, which would require close monitoring in the post-electoral period.

President Patassé had appealed to the international community to maintain its assistance to the country during the period leading to the next important stage of national institution-rebuilding, the presidential elections scheduled for the second half of 1999. Appeals were also made by the Special Representative and most opposition parties.

In the Secretary-General's view, further assistance to the Central African Republic had to be predicated on the country's capacity to maintain its own security and stability. That in turn would depend on the creation of an effective multi-ethnic national security and defence force. Progress towards restructuring the armed forces had been made by the joint Government/MINURCA committee, which would need substantial international assistance to implement its programme. The Special Representative intended to present to the Government a well-defined timeline and benchmarks that would serve to create a basis for the restructured armed forces by September/October 1999. The Secretary-General suggested that provision be made for a UN training assistance team, composed of 35 military personnel, in addition to the existing 25 UN civilian police advisers. Further international efforts would be required for rebuilding the national police and the gendarmerie. The continuation of the UN involvement was also important for the 1999 presidential elections. In the Secretary-General's view, there was still a need for the presence of a credible neutral military force that would maintain stability in Bangui and assist with the training and restructuring of the national armed forces. The basic operational assumptions mentioned in his February report (see above) remained valid, with a force level of approximately 1,300. The Secretary-General recommended that the Council extend the mandate of MINURCA with the existing structure and overall strength. In addition to its current mandate, MINURCA would assist the National Assembly in steering the country towards national reconciliation, good governance, stability and economic reform; provide advice on restructuring the security forces; and offer assistance for the presidential elections.

The exit strategy for the operation would be linked to the conduct of presidential elections, and the Mission would be terminated no later than 60 days after the announcement of the election results. In view of his recommendation to extend the Mission, the Secretary-General decided to postpone the drawdown scheduled to begin on 15 January 1999 until the Council had taken a decision on the matter. Should the Council extend the Mission, the Secretary-General would dispatch to Bangui a Personal Envoy to impress on President Patassé the need to implement all his undertakings in full, with a binding schedule.

In a later addendum to his December report [S/1998/1203/Add.1], the Secretary-General said that he had obtained the concurrence of ACABQ in the utilization of $18.1 million for the maintenance of the Mission from 1 December 1998 to 26 February 1999 and for the support of legislative elections. The total resources made available to MINURCA since its inception would therefore amount to $65.8 million. The cost of extending the mandate with the existing structure and overall strength beyond 26 February 1999 was projected at $62.1 million, based on the time frame for holding presidential elections in the latter part of 1999, with the electoral process to be completed by the end of October, and the termination of the Mission no later than 60 days thereafter. Should the Council decide to extend the mandate, the additional financial resources would be sought from the General Assembly.

Financing of MINURCA

The Secretary-General, on 11 May [A/52/895], submitted to the General Assembly a proposed budget for the establishment and operation of MINURCA for the period from 27 March to 30 June 1998, inclusive of the transition period from MISAB to MINURCA, and for the maintenance of the Mission from 1 July to 30 November. On a full-cost basis, the proposed budget amounted to $20,776,000 gross ($20,438,400 net) for the former period and $28,774,500 gross ($28,038,000 net) for the latter, inclusive of budgeted voluntary contributions in kind of $967,400 for the former period and $ 1,137,500 for the latter. The cost estimates provided for the authorized strength of 1,350 contingent personnel and 24 civilian police, supported by 179 civilian staff (106 international and 73 local).

The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly approve an appropriation and assessment of $19,808,606 gross ($19,471,000 net) for 27 March to 30 June; an appropriation of $27,637,000 gross ($26,900,500 net) for 1 July to 30 November; an assessment of $2,762,700 gross ($2,689,100 net) for 1 to 15 July; and an assessment at the monthly rate of $5,527,400 gross ($5,380,100 net), subject to the extension(s) of the mandate of MINURCA beyond 15 July.

Having considered the Secretary-General's report, ACABQ, on 19 May [A/52/911], taking into consideration the delay in deployment of the contingents and civilian staff, recommended that the Assembly approve an appropriation of $18,560,600 gross ($18,335,500 net) for 27 March to 30 June. It recommended the acceptance of the Secretary-General's request for 1 July to 30 November 1998. ACABQ noted that cost estimates for the electoral process would be submitted as a revised budget.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 June [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/942], adopted resolution 52/249 without vote [agenda item 161].

Financing of the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1159 (1998) of 27 March 1998, by which the Council established the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic for an initial period of three months, until 15 July 1998, and authorized the Secretary-General to take the measures necessary to ensure that the Mission was fully deployed by 15 April 1998,

Recognizing that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing also that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation the voluntary contributions in kind that have so far been made to the Mission,

Noting also that no voluntary contributions have so far been made to the Trust Fund for the support of the Mission's activities,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under Security Council resolution 1159(1998),

1. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic in full and on time;

2. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

3. Takes note of the information provided in paragraph 3 of the report of the Secretary-General and in paragraph 7 of the report of the Advisory Committee;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to employ locally recruited staff for the Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to report in his next financial performance report on the Mission on the implementation and efficiency of the system of providing allowances in lieu of rations to various contingents serving in the Mission;

7. Decides to appropriate the amount of 18,560,600 United States dollars gross (18,335,500 dollars net) for the establishment and operation of the Mission for the period from 27 March to 30 June 1998, inclusive of the amount of 12,844,900 dollars gross (12,469,900 dollars net) previously authorized by the Advisory Committee, and requests the Secretary-General to establish a special account for the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic;

8. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 18,560,600 dollars gross (18,335,500 dollars net) for the period from 27 March to 30 June 1998 among Member States, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1998, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997;

9. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 8 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 225,100 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 27 March to 30 June 1998;

10. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic the amount of 29,105,850 dollars gross (28,369,350 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 July to 30 November 1998, inclusive of the amount of 1,468,850 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations;

11. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion among Member States the amount of 2,910,585 dollars gross (2,836,935 dollars net) for the period from 1 to 15 July 1998, in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1998, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A;

12. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 11 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 73,650 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 1 to 15 July 1998;

13. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion among Member States the amount of 26,195,265 dollars gross (25,532,415 dollars net) for the period from 16 July to 30 November 1998 at a monthly rate of 5,821,170 dollars gross (5,673,870 dollars net), in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1998, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Mission beyond 15 July 1998;

14. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 13 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 662,850 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 16 July to 30 November 1998;

15. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic".

On 18 December, the General Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the agenda item on the financing of MINURCA at its resumed fifty-third session in 1999 (decision 53/458).

Eritrea-Ethiopia

In 1998, hostilities broke out between Eritrea and Ethiopia as a result of a border dispute that began in May. Numerous air strikes and violent clashes were reported by both countries, which accused each other of aggression and involvement in ethnic violence and human rights violations.

In June, the Security Council condemned the use of force and demanded that the two parties immediately cease hostilities. OAU took the lead in finding a solution to the conflict, together with a facilitator team composed of Rwanda and the United States.

A general agreement on the modalities for the settlement of the dispute was based on the delimitation and demarcation of their common border, established in accordance with colonial treaties and not clearly demarcated when Eritrea became independent in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 266]. While Ethiopia charged Eritrea with violating Ethiopian sovereignty, Eritrea reiterated that the dispute was about the violation by Ethiopia of its internationally recognized colonial boundary.

In June, the facilitators recommended that the United Nations Cartographic Section coordinate the delimitation and demarcation of the border and that an observer mission determine the authority that was administering the disputed area of Badme before the outbreak of the crisis. In November, OAU adopted a set of proposals for a framework agreement that envisaged the withdrawal of Eritrea from Badme and the restoration of Ethiopian civilian administration to the area. It also recommended that an investigation be carried out on the incidents of May and prior to that date, which could have contributed to a misunderstanding between the two parties regarding the boundary.

Border dispute

Communications (May/June). In a 14 May letter to the Security Council [S/1998/396], Ethiopia stated that Eritrea had carried out an unprovoked violation of Ethiopian sovereignty on 12 May. It claimed that Eritrean troops had attacked Ethiopian forces and police and occupied a few areas of Ethiopian territory over which Eritrea had claims. However, the two countries had earlier agreed to settle the disagreement over those areas through negotiations. Ethiopia demanded the immediate withdrawal of Eritrean troops from its territory as a condition for a peaceful solution.

Eritrea, in statements of 14 and 15 May [S/1998/399], rejected Ethiopia's allegations. Although there were continuing border disputes between the two countries, they had been instigated by Ethiopian incursions into Eritrea. It noted that the internationally recognized boundary between Eritrea and Ethiopia was clear and non-controversial and that a Joint Committee had been formed by both Governments to resolve the dispute and delineate the boundary line. However, on 6 May, an unprovoked Ethiopian attack had triggered a cycle of clashes in the south-western border areas around Badme. Condemning the use of force, Eritrea called for an independent inspection by any third party and insisted that Ethiopia declare its territorial claims and designate them on the political map with clear geographical coordinates.

On 19 May [S/1998/414], Ethiopia denied that the borders were fully delimited and demarcated, and maintained that the localities invaded by Eritrea had never been part of that country but had always been administered by Ethiopia. It stated that negotiations could take place only following the unconditional withdrawal of Eritrean troops and the establishment of the situation that prevailed prior to the invasion.

Eritrea, on 20 May [S/1998/417], denied any incursion into Ethiopian territory and identified the Eritrean territories within the internationally recognized boundary of Eritrea but incorporated into the Tigray Administrative Zone by a 1997 Ethiopian official map, which carved out large swaths of Eritrean territory in the country's south-western, southern and eastern parts. It reasserted Ethiopia's violation of the Eritrean boundaries and demanded its withdrawal. On 23 May [S/1998/427], Eritrea proposed that both countries announce to their peoples and to the international community the territories they claimed along the common border, and expressed its dismay at the inflammatory campaigns, inciting hatred, conducted by the Ethiopian Government and its mass media. It asserted that in July 1997 Ethiopian troops had occupied the Adi Murug area of Bada, in eastern Eritrea, dismantled the Eritrean administration and installed an Ethiopian one. A few days later, Ethiopian authorities had evicted Eritrean farmers from villages in the Badme area, saying that it had been demarcated as Ethiopian territory.

On 3 June [S/1998/459], Eritrea reported an Ethiopian attack on southern Eritrea, following four others during the preceding days. While affirming its legitimate right of self-defence, it reiterated that the crisis could be resolved only by peaceful means and called on Ethiopia to respect Eritrea's boundaries and withdraw. In a response of the same date [S/1998/467], Ethiopia denied any involvement and contested Eritrea's claims, presenting a brief history of events, which, it said, had started with the Eritrean aggression on 12 May. It stated that Eritrea was trying to make Ethiopia appear as an aggressor and accused the Eritrean Government of launching an attack on 3 June.

On 5 June [S/1998/474], Ethiopia reported a further escalation of the war, stating that Eritrea had carried out an air attack against Mekelle. Ethiopia, in response, had taken limited measures against the Asmara Air Force Base. On the same day [S/1998/478], Eritrea reported on that air attack and again called for the recognition of and adherence to the colonial borders; the demarcation of the boundary by the United Nations Cartographic Section; and the demilitarization of the entire border, to be monitored through an observer team acceptable to both sides.

On 6 June [S/1998/490], Ethiopia reported that a second air strike had been carried out on 5 June by Eritrea against civilian targets, including a school, in Makelle. It stated that Eritrea had provoked the recent hostilities by occupying Ethiopian territory and rejecting recommendations by the facilitators—Rwanda and the United States (see below). Ethiopia stated that it had ordered the Eritrean Embassy in Addis Ababa to limit the number of its diplomatic staff. On 6 June [S/1998/495], the EU expressed concern at the escalation of the conflict between Ethiopia and Eritrea and urged both parties to agree to a ceasefire and resume cooperation with the facilitators.

On 9 June [S/1998/483], Eritrea reported that Ethiopia had declared war pursuant to a resolution passed by its Parliament on 13 May. It stated that Ethiopia had launched a fresh attack in the Zalambasa area that day and was threatening to attack commercial planes and ships. Also on 9 June [S/1998/492], Eritrea called on the Council to condemn and stop the flagrant violation of the UN Charter. Ethiopia, on 10 June [S/1998/493], transmitted three press releases concerning Eritrea's renewed aggression and its expulsion and detention of Ethiopian nationals. It charged Eritrea with repeated attacks on the Zalambasa front, and stated that its Government misinformed the international media by shifting the blame to Ethiopia.

On 15 June [S/1998/508], Eritrea issued a statement on the agreement for a total ban on air strikes by both sides, a proposal put forward by the United States the day before. It welcomed the agreement as a step towards resolving the conflict through peace and legality, and stated that Eritrea had consistently been calling for the cessation of hostilities and demilitarization of the boundary, and that its actions against military targets had been in retaliation and legitimate self-defence. Ethiopia, in a 16 June response [S/1998/521], declared it had never taken a military initiative, but had only responded to Eritrean military moves. It accused Eritrea of trying to deceive the international community by stating that there was an agreement on a partial cessation of hostilities. Ethiopia said that the crisis was worsening and that it had agreed to a unilateral moratorium on air strikes unless it was required to respond to an aggressor in kind.

On 19 June [S/1998/541], Eritrea reported that Ethiopia had violated the moratorium on air strikes and was effectively maintaining an illegal blockade on international flights and shipping. Ethiopia, on the same date [S/1998/551], issued a press release concerning Eritrea's rejection of the peace effort by OAU (see below), and stated that the chance of resolving the crisis peacefully had been greatly diminished.

On 22 June [S/1998/556], Eritrea claimed that Ethiopia intended to invade the country, including the port of Assab, and stated that Ethiopia continued its expulsion of Eritrean nationals. Ethiopia, in a 24 June response [S/1998/565], denied the allegations and stated that although it had the right under international law and the UN Charter to take action in self-defence, it had imposed self-restraint in the belief that a peaceful solution could be found with the help of third parties, Africa and the international community, namely the Security Council.

Activities of OAU and facilitators

On 1 June [S/1998/465], Zimbabwe transmitted to the Security Council President a 29 May OAU press release on diplomatic efforts by its Secretary-General, Salim Ahmed Salim, to defuse tensions between Eritrea and Ethiopia. During his meetings with the leaders of the two countries—President Isaias Afwerki of Eritrea and Prime Minister Ato Meles Zenawi of Ethiopia—Mr. Salim had stressed the fact that a peaceful resolution of the dispute was the only viable option. He expressed his support for the ongoing efforts undertaken by Djibouti, which was holding the chairmanship of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD), and Rwanda and the United States, the facilitators in the Eritrea-Ethiopia negotiations.

On 4 June [S/1998/471], Ethiopia transmitted the statement made by its Minister for Foreign Affairs to the OAU Council of Ministers, in which he provided a historic background to the recent outbreak of hostilities and cited Eritrean aggression as the only cause. Eritrea, on 8 June [S/1998/482], transmitted the statement to the OAU Summit of its own Foreign Minister on the crisis, gave a history of the events and counter-charged Ethiopia with escalating the conflict.

Kenya and Zimbabwe, on 6 and 8 June [S/1998/480, S/1998/485], respectively, transmitted to the Council a 5 June resolution adopted by the OAU Council of Ministers, which met in a special session in Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso. The Council appealed to the two parties simultaneously to put an end to hostilities and accept and implement the recommendations of the facilitators. It recommended that the OAU heads of State and Government be seized of the matter.

On 10 June [S/1998/496], the Rwanda-United States facilitation team negotiating with Eritrea and Ethiopia submitted to the Secretary-General their implementation plan and recommendations. They proposed that an observer mission be deployed to Badme; that, within 24 hours of its arrival, Eritrean forces begin to redeploy to positions held before 6 May; that the civilian administration in place before that date return; and that an investigation be held into the 6 May events. The facilitators recommended that the entire common border be delimited and demarcated by the UN Cartographic Section on the basis of established colonial treaties and international law applicable to such treaties; and that the two parties agree to demilitarize the border as soon as possible and in accordance with the implementation plan.

On the same date [S/1998/494], Kenya transmitted a decision adopted by the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government at its thirty-fourth session (Ouagadougou, 8-10 June) [A/53/179]. It appealed to the two parties simultaneously to put an end to all hostilities and to accept and implement the recommendations of the facilitators, and decided to send to both countries a delegation of heads of State and Government. Following the visit of the delegation, OAU transmitted to the Security Council President a 19 June press release [S/1998/555] stating that the Ethiopian side had reiterated its acceptance of the proposals of the facilitators. Eritrea, however, stated that the facilitation process was over. The delegation, therefore, was unable to make headway with respect to the facilitators' recommendations. It urged both parties to continue to exercise maximum restraint and avoid taking any action that could escalate the tension.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 June [meeting 3895], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1177(1998). The draft [S/1998/572] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Expressing grave concern at the conflict between Ethiopia and Eritrea, its political, humanitarian and security implications for the region, and its effect on the civilian populations there,

Affirming the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Ethiopia and Eritrea,

Affirming also the principle of peaceful settlement of disputes, and stressing that the use of armed force is not acceptable as a means of addressing territorial disputes or changing circumstances on the ground,

Noting that the official statements by the Government of Ethiopia and the Government of Eritrea pledging to discontinue the threat of and use of air strikes in the conflict have contributed to the continuation of the efforts to achieve a peaceful resolution of the conflict, reduced the threat to the civilian populations as well as the economic and social infrastructure, and enabled the resumption of normal economic activity, including commercial transportation,

Noting the strong traditional ties between Ethiopia and Eritrea,

Welcoming the official statements by the Government of Ethiopia and the Government of Eritrea that they share the ultimate goal of delimiting and demarcating their common border on the basis of a mutually agreeable and binding arrangement, taking into account the charter of the Organization of African Unity, colonial treaties, and international law applicable to such treaties,

Taking note of the resolution adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity in special session on 5 June 1998,

Commending the efforts of the Organization of African Unity and of others, in cooperation with that organization, to achieve a peaceful settlement of the conflict,

1. Condemns the use of force and demands that both parties immediately cease hostilities and refrain from further use of force;

2. Welcomes the commitment of the parties to a moratorium on the threat of and use of air strikes;

3. Urges the parties to exhaust all means to achieve a peaceful settlement of the dispute;

4. Expresses its strong support for the decision of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity of 10 June 1998, as well as for the mission and efforts of the Heads of State, and urges the Organization of African Unity to follow up as quickly as possible;

5. Calls upon the parties to cooperate fully with the Organization of African Unity;

6. Also calls upon the parties to avoid any steps which would aggravate tensions, such as provocative actions or statements, and to take steps to build confidence between them, including by guaranteeing the rights and safety of each other's nationals;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to make available his good offices in support of a peaceful resolution of the conflict, and stands ready to consider further recommendations to this end;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to provide technical support to the parties to assist in the eventual delimitation and demarcation of the common border between Ethiopia and Eritrea, and, for this purpose, establishes a trust fund, and urges all Member States to contribute to it;

9. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

In a 1 July press statement [S/1998/603], Ethiopia said that it accepted the resolution and reiterated its acceptance of the facilitators' proposals. It charged Eritrea with rejecting the appeals of both the facilitators and OAU and stated that Eritrea should be required to implement the Council resolution. In that context, the international community had the responsibility of putting pressure on Eritrea to withdraw its troops.

OAU Ministerial Committee

The OAU Ministerial Committee on the Eritrea-Ethiopia conflict (Burkina Faso, Djibouti, Zimbabwe) (Ouagadougou, 1-2 August) reviewed the findings of the Committee of Ambassadors—established as a follow-up to the decision of the OAU High-level Delegation—that had visited Eritrea and Ethiopia in July. The Committee established that the disputed Badme area was under Ethiopian administration prior to 6 May.

Eritrea, in a 5 August press statement on the OAU meeting [S/1998/720], maintained that the cause of the dispute lay in Ethiopia's violation of Eritrea's colonial boundaries. Therefore, Ethiopia's insistence on first ascertaining which authority was administering Badme prior to 6 May was an obstructive posture glossing over Ethiopia's use of force in July 1997 to occupy Adi-Murug and areas around Badme. It stated that the administration was not valid if established illegally and the priority was to establish where Badme, Adi-Murug and other areas were situated within the recognized boundaries. In a 14 August communiqué [S/1998/759] on the OAU facilitation and Eritrea's response, Ethiopia highlighted OAU's conclusions on the Ethiopian administration of Badme until the Eritrean aggression and gave evidence of its possession prior to 1997, following Eritrea's formal independence in 1993.

On 25 August [S/1998/805], Ethiopia submitted to the Security Council a resolution on the conflict adopted at the thirty-fifth session of the Executive Committee and twenty-first Conference of the Union of African Parliaments (Niamey, Niger, 18-20 August). The Union called on Eritrea to respect the OAU Ministerial Committee's findings and to withdraw its troops to their pre-6 May positions, as recommended by the facilitators, OAU and the Security Council. It also called on the international community, particularly African Parliaments, to facilitate the investigation regarding the occurrence of war crimes in the conflict, as alleged by the resolution of the House of People's Representatives of Ethiopia (see below).

On 16 September [S/1998/870], Eritrea transmitted to the Council a 2 September letter addressed to the Union of African Parliaments Secretary-General, stating that the Union had been misled and reached wrong conclusions; it had not been properly apprised of the issues related to the conflict.

Other developments

Communications (September-December). On 10 September, Austria drew to the Council's attention a 3 September statement by the EU Presidency on the conflict [S/1998/845]. Eritrea and Ethiopia were urged to find a peaceful solution under OAU auspices and adhere to international humanitarian law and human rights standards. The EU stated that it would continue to monitor the humanitarian situation of foreign nationals in both countries.

On 15 October [S/1998/956], Eritrea informed the Security Council of a new map that had been circulated by the Ethiopian Foreign Ministry to the diplomatic community in Addis Ababa. The map, which conformed with the international boundary between the two countries, was a step towards the peaceful settlement of the conflict. However, Badme village, which was inside Eritrea, about 15 kilometres west of the boundary, was displaced, "located" inside Ethiopia and shaded as "occupied territory". Eritrea stated that the new map purportedly established Eritrean invasion of Ethiopia. It insisted that Ethiopia express in clear terms its respect for Eritrea's international boundaries, established in accordance with the colonial treaties of 1900, 1902 and 1908.

In response, Ethiopia, on 19 October [S/1998/977], charged Eritrea with deception and denied issuing a new map, unless Eritrea was referring to a map made available to the diplomatic community in May after the eruption of the conflict; the purpose of that map was to indicate the area occupied by Eritrea and it was based on maps used in Ethiopia for decades. Eritrea, on 26 October [S/1998/998], forwarded to the Council a statement, reproduced from an official paper of its Government, regarding Ethiopia's issuance of two distinct maps. Eritrea reiterated that Ethiopia issued a new map that conformed to Eritrea's recognized colonial boundaries, but in which Badme village had been relocated inside Ethiopia's territory.

On 6 November [S/1998/1043], Eritrea informed the Council that on 30 October Ethiopian shelling had intensified in the Badme and Senafe areas, destroying villages, burning crop fields and killing peasants. Eritrea warned that if those attacks persisted, it would defend itself. It asked the Council to take note of the situation and demand that Ethiopia cease its attacks.

In a 24 November statement [S/1998/1116], Eritrea reiterated its call for an immediate cessation of hostilities and reaffirmed its maximum restraint. It maintained that the placement of observers or independent monitors would verify those responsible for starting artillery exchanges, and charged Ethiopia with continuing its violation of human rights; it stated that the number of Eritreans deported from Ethiopia had reached over 36,000 and called on the international community to take urgent action.

In an 11 December press release [S/1998/1155], Eritrea stated that the Ethiopian mass media had intensified their war propaganda and were attempting to create obstacles to peace initiatives through the threat of imminent war. It reaffirmed its commitment to find a peaceful solution to the conflict.

OAU proposals (November)

The OAU High-Level Delegation (Ouagadougou, 7-8 November) [S/1998/1067] adopted a set of proposals constituting the elements of a framework agreement for a peaceful settlement of the dispute [S/1998/1223] and communicated them to Eritrea and Ethiopia. It recommended that: the armed forces in and around Badme be redeployed to the positions held before 6 May; the redeployment, to be supervised by a group of military observers, would be extended to all other contested areas within the framework of demilitarization of the border; an investigation to determine the origins of the conflict should be carried out; and the two parties should commit themselves to an immediate cessation of hostilities and use the UN Cartographic Section to carry out the border demarcation within a time frame of six months. At the humanitarian level, OAU, in collaboration with the United Nations, would deploy a team of human rights monitors in both countries.

Ethiopia, in statements of 9 and 11 November [S/1998/1045, S/1998/1061], accepted the OAU peace proposal and charged Eritrea with rejecting it. Eritrea, on its side, in two November statements [S/1998/1060, S/1998/1105], reiterated its view that the conflict was a border dispute to be resolved through demarcation on the basis of Eritrea's inherited Italian colonial boundaries, reaffirmed its commitment to the cessation of hostilities and added that the OAU talking points contained positive elements, such as the recognition that the dispute did not start in May but went back to at least July 1997. With reference to the request to Eritrea to redeploy from Badme, it reiterated its call that OAU ascertain the coordinates of the village according to Eritrea's colonial boundaries.

On 13 November, the Security Council confirmed its support for OAU efforts to promote a peaceful settlement and encouraged the parties to consider the proposals and refrain from the use of force [A/54/2]. On the same date [S/1998/1095], the EU Presidency issued a statement supporting the OAU proposals. It urged both parties to commit themselves to their acceptance and remained ready to contribute to their implementation. On 16 December [S/1998/1200], the EU reiterated its support for the OAU mediation efforts and expressed its hope that both sides would be able to respond positively to the OAU proposals and that a framework agreement would be concluded in December.

The Central Organ of the OAU Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution (Ouagadougou, 17 December) [S/1998/1217] endorsed the proposals for a framework agreement and took note of the two parties' positions.

On 21 December [S/1998/1205], Eritrea stated that it was awaiting a response to the opinions and queries submitted to the Central Organ in order to create the conditions for implementing the OAU framework agreement. It added that Ethiopia had not accepted that agreement, but its own amended version. On 22 December [S/1998/1210], Ethiopia transmitted the text of its statement to the OAU Central Organ, in which it reiterated its acceptance of the framework agreement. On 24 December [S/1998/1224], it issued a press release on Eritrea's refusal to accept all peace efforts and initiatives. On the same date [S/1998/1223], Ethiopia transmitted to the Council President a report covering the efforts made by the OAU High-level Delegation.

On 29 December, the members of the Security Council reaffirmed their support for the OAU mediation efforts and called on the parties to cooperate with OAU in order to find a just solution [A/54/2].

Djibouti-Eritrea. Djibouti, in a 10 November communiqué [S/1998/1062], stated that Eritrea, instead of expressing its views on the proposals contained in the framework agreement (see above), had requested the exclusion of Djibouti from the Mediation Committee, accusing it of contributing to the war effort on the side of Ethiopia. Djibouti rejected those allegations and reaffirmed its position of neutrality, as well as its willingness to contribute to the search for a negotiated settlement of the conflict. In an 18 November communiqué [S/1998/1093], Djibouti communicated its decision to break off diplomatic relations with Eritrea following the serious and unfounded accusations made by its President.

In a 19 November statement on Djibouti's decision to sever diplomatic ties [S/1998/1097], Eritrea stated that it had repeatedly expressed to Djibouti its concern about its cooperation with Ethiopia in its war efforts. Against that backdrop, Eritrea requested that Djibouti not be part of the OAU High-level Delegation. Djibouti had admitted its involvement by its silence at the meeting and had finally announced the breaking off of diplomatic ties with Eritrea.

On 20 November [S/1998/1107], Djibouti rejected Eritrea's allegations and said that the port of Djibouti had been constructed to provide Ethiopia with access to the sea and had always retained a significant portion of its external trade, being Ethiopia's natural port. It listed a number of provocations by Eritrea, the aim of which, according to Djibouti, was to paralyse the flow of traffic in goods and services between Djibouti and Ethiopia. Djibouti would continue to maintain moderation, neutrality and cooperation, while protecting its territorial integrity and ensuring the security of its citizens.

Human rights situation

During the second half of 1998, Eritrea and Ethiopia accused each other of violating the human rights of their nationals who were resident in the other country.

Communications. On 10 June [S/1998/499], Eritrea, in response to Ethiopian allegations charging Eritrea with the detention of 530 Ethiopians and the expulsion of over 3,000 [S/1998/493], denied the accusations, stating that over 100,000 Ethiopians residing in Eritrea continued to lead their lives without any reprisals. On 13 and 17 June [S/1998/505, S/1998/536], Eritrea charged Ethiopia with harassing, expelling and detaining Eritrean civilians, and Ethiopia, on 22 June [S/1998/552], counter-charged Eritrea with attempting to deceive the international community and divert attention from its crimes against the Ethiopian civilian population, as well as against schools and industrial and residential centres.

In a 3 July statement [A/52/974-S/1998/611], Eritrea accused Ethiopia of expelling, arbitrarily arresting and imprisoning Eritreans and of displacing them from their villages. In an updated memorandum on Eritrean aggression since May 1998, dated 16 July [S/1998/662, A/52/992], Ethiopia denied those allegations.

In a 2 July press release [A/52/980], Ethiopia refuted allegations by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights made in a 1 July statement regarding Ethiopian human rights violations against Eritreans. It also denounced atrocities committed by Eritreans against Ethiopian nationals.

On 10 July [S/1998/628], Eritrea replied to the Ethiopian statements, which, Eritrea said, attempted to justify the mass expulsion of Eritrean civilians. It claimed that over 6,000 Eritreans had been deported and that many of them were Ethiopian citizens expelled because of their ethnic origin.

In communications to the Security Council and the General Assembly during July and August [S/1998/690, A/52/994, A/52/1005-S/1998/722, A/52/1018], Eritrea and Ethiopia continued to exchange charges, each accusing the other of human rights violations.

In identical letters to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President [A/52/1026-S/1998/819], Eritrea, on 28 August, transmitted a statement on its release of Ethiopian soldiers, stating that its unilateral humanitarian decision reflected a desire to see an early resolution to the conflict through legal and peaceful means.

In an 18 November press release [S/1998/1098], Eritrea stated that three Eritreans had died in Ethiopian detention camps. It called on OAU, the United Nations, the United States and the EU to ensure that Ethiopia respected the international laws, covenants and charters on human rights to which it was a signatory; stopped human rights violations; ended the illegal deportation of Eritreans and Ethiopians of Eritrean origin; and released the more than 1,500 Eritrean youths who had spent over five months in detention.

On 29 December [A/53/774-S/1998/1234], Eritrea reported that two more Eritreans had died in Ethiopian detention camps and called for an independent investigation and for an immediate release of all civilians.

Independent investigations. On 12 October [A/53/494-S/1998/949], Eritrea transmitted to the Secretary-General an independent investigation report on violations by Ethiopia of the human rights of Eritreans and Ethiopians of Eritrean origin residing in Ethiopia. The report, written by Natalie S. Klein of Yale University Law School and covering the period from June to August, stated that more than 20,000 individuals were deported from Ethiopia in a programme of mass expulsion and that unknown numbers remained in Ethiopian detention camps.

By a 20 October letter to the Secretary-General [A/53/528-S/1998/981], Ethiopia transmitted a study and analysis by M. Wray Witten (Princeton University) concerning Eritrean aggression against Ethiopia and violations of the human rights of Ethiopian nationals. It stated that the number of Ethiopians deported from Eritrea had reached 27,866 and was increasing.

On 21 December [A/53/767-S/1998/1214], Eritrea transmitted to the Secretary-General an independent report entitled "Human Rights Watch World Report 1999", which described the violation of human rights of Eritreans and Ethiopians of Eritrean origin living in Ethiopia.

Guinea-Bissau

In mid-1998, a conflict broke out in Guinea-Bissau between government forces and the self-proclaimed military junta. Following mediation efforts by the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries (CPLP) and the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), the two sides reached a truce on 26 July, which was strengthened on 26 August with the signing of a ceasefire. On 1 November, the parties to the conflict signed the Abuja Agreement, by which they agreed to uphold the 26 August ceasefire; withdraw all foreign troops from Guinea-Bissau, with the simultaneous deployment of an ECOWAS interposition force, which would guarantee security along the Guinea-Bissau/Senegal border; form a Government of national unity; and hold general and presidential elections by March 1999.

The Security Council, in a November statement, welcomed the Abuja Agreement and, in late December, it adopted a resolution calling upon the Government and the self-proclaimed military junta to implement the agreements of 26 August and 1 November and the 15 December Protocol to the Abuja Agreement. The Council approved the mandate of the ECOWAS Monitoring Group (ECOMOG) and requested the Secretary-General to make recommendations on a possible UN role in the peace process in Guinea-Bissau.

At the end of the year, a contingent of the ECOMOG interposition force was deployed in Guinea-Bissau as foreign troops began to withdraw.

Internal conflict

On 7 June, certain elements of Guinea-Bissau's armed forces, led by the former Chief of Staff, General Ansoumane Mane, began a rebellion. The unstable situation in Guinea-Bissau was brought to the attention of the Security Council in a series of letters to the Council President from intergovernmental groups.

The United Kingdom transmitted an 8 June statement by the Presidency of the EU [S/1998/520], in which it condemned the attempted military coup against the democratic institutions of Guinea-Bissau by some elements of the armed forces. The EU called for the re-establishment of constitutional order and security in the country to prevent further bloodshed.

Brazil forwarded a 17 June statement of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of CPLP [S/1998/530], in which they expressed their serious concern about the situation in Guinea-Bissau and appealed for the rapid re-establishment of peace and the solution of the conflict through negotiated and pacific means. They expressed distress at the loss of life caused by the conflict and their readiness to provide aid and humanitarian assistance in order to minimize suffering. Furthermore, they were ready to help provide a diplomatic solution and to support any initiative that might put an end to the conflict.

The EU, in a 19 June statement [S/1998/553], forwarded by the United Kingdom, expressed concern at the further deterioration of the situation in Guinea-Bissau following the recent attempted military coup d'etat. It was particularly concerned at reports of civilian casualties and called on the mutineers to lay down their arms to enable the re-establishment of constitutional order and an end to bloodshed. The EU was prepared to provide humanitarian assistance as soon as the conditions on the ground made it possible.

Mediation efforts

Following violent clashes between loyalist and rebel forces in June, President Joao Bernardo Vieira requested the Chairman of ECOWAS to expand the sphere of activities and broaden the mandate of ECOMOG to include Guinea-Bissau. After consultations and a fact-finding mission to the Gambia, Guinea and Senegal, the Chairman decided to convene a meeting of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Defence. The meeting (Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire, 3 July) was attended by Benin, Burkina Faso, Côte d'Ivoire, the Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Liberia, Mali, the Niger, Nigeria, Senegal, Sierra Leone and Togo. Also participating were representatives of the UN Secretary-General, the OAU Secretary-General, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and the World Food Programme (WFP).

In a joint communiqué transmitted to the Security Council on 6 July [S/1998/638], the Ministers condemned the rebellion in Guinea-Bissau, warned the rebels not to commit any acts of atrocity against the civilian population and foreign nationals, and appealed for an immediate cessation of hostilities. They reaffirmed their support for the democratically elected Government of President Vieira and agreed that the main objective of ECOWAS in Guinea-Bissau was to restore peace and the authority of the Government. They aimed to achieve that objective through dialogue and negotiations, the imposition of sanctions and an embargo, and the use of force. They recommended that ECOMOG's activities and mandate be broadened to include Guinea-Bissau, which would require all States members to supply additional troops. A Committee of Seven was established, composed of Burkina Faso, Côte d'Ivoire, the Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Nigeria and Senegal, as well as representatives of the OAU and ECOWAS secretariats, to ensure that the recommendations were implemented. That Committee was instructed to seek the support of the Security Council for ECOWAS initiatives in Guinea-Bissau. The Ministers voiced their support for Guinea's and Senegal's rapid intervention in Guinea-Bissau. Expressing concern over the deteriorating humanitarian situation in that country, they invited humanitarian agencies to ensure that the civilian population was not forced to seek refuge in neighbouring countries because of famine and epidemics.

In a 3 July communiqué [S/1998/616], the CPLP member States expressed their strong support for and associated themselves with the good offices initiative of Angola and Portugal, aimed at reaching a negotiated solution to the conflict. They called on the parties to the conflict to respect the ceasefire and to cooperate with Angola and Portugal in their efforts to help reach a negotiated solution. All countries and organizations were urged to cooperate with that initiative and to refrain from action that could lead to greater military internationalization of an already complex situation.

At its Conference of Heads of State and Government (Praia, Cape Verde, 16-17 July) [S/1998/686], CPLP condemned the military rebellion in Guinea-Bissau and agreed to establish a six-member Contact Group at the level of Ministers for Foreign Affairs to explore diplomatic means to end the conflict. The Contact Group comprised Angola, Brazil, Cape Verde, Mozambique, Portugal and Sao Tome and Principe.

Ceasefire and political agreements

On 26 July [S/1998/698], following consultations by the CPLP Contact Group, the Government of Guinea-Bissau and the self-proclaimed military junta signed a memorandum of understanding, in which they agreed to an immediate truce and to begin negotiations within eight days. They also agreed to the principle of public recognition of the democratic institutions and their legal framework and to freeze military positions occupied by each side, with no movement permitted by either force in relation to the other, nor an increase in armaments or military personnel. A military observer or an interposition force would be deployed, preferably from Portuguese-speaking countries. In addition, humanitarian corridors would be opened and hostile propaganda would cease. The two parties, in an annex to the memorandum, pledged to withdraw their forces from the Mansoa sector once the interposition or observer force had been deployed. The self-proclaimed military junta, in another annex to the memorandum, declared its intention to lay down arms under conditions to be defined within the framework of the peaceful resolution of the conflict.

The EU, in a 29 July statement [S/1998/706], welcomed the signing of the memorandum of understanding and called on all parties in Guinea-Bissau to commit themselves to the negotiation process. The EU recalled its readiness to provide humanitarian aid to displaced persons and refugees and to participate in the social and economic rehabilitation of Guinea-Bissau.

The ECOWAS Committee of Seven on Guinea-Bissau (Accra, Ghana, 4 August) issued a communiqué [S/1998/717], in which it welcomed the truce between the loyalist troops and the rebel forces and underscored the need to support regional or subregional African initiatives to ensure peace and security. While reaffirming that ECOWAS had a primordial role to play in the resolution of the Guinea-Bissau crisis, the Committee expressed its preparedness to cooperate with CPLP and to support any other initiatives that might contribute to ECOWAS objectives in Guinea-Bissau.

ECOWAS and CPLP combined their mediation efforts at a meeting (Praia, August 25-26), under their joint chairmanship, with representatives of the Government of Guinea-Bissau and the self-proclaimed military junta. They decided to transform the truce agreed upon in the 26 July memorandum of understanding into a ceasefire, based mainly on the same principles with some additions and changes. The revised ceasefire agreement and the final communiqué issued by the two organizations were transmitted to the Security Council by Cape Verde and Côte d'Ivoire on 1 September [S/1998/825]. Under the new agreement, the two parties agreed to an immediate ceasefire based on the following principles: reaffirmation of the public recognition of democratic institutions and legality; freezing of the military positions held at the time of the 26 July agreement; reopening of the airport in order to facilitate humanitarian aid delivery, logistic support to the ceasefire observation mission and the return of refugees; deployment of observation and interposition forces, to be defined through negotiations; strengthening of the opening of humanitarian corridors; and the creation of conditions to facilitate the return of refugees and resettlement of displaced persons. The two annexes to the memorandum of understanding were an integral part of the new agreement. The meeting was attended by ECOWAS member States (Côte d'Ivoire, Gambia, Guinea, Nigeria, Senegal), CPLP member States (Angola, Brazil, Cape Verde, Mozambique, Portugal, Sao Tome and Principe) and representatives of the two parties of Guinea-Bissau. A representative of the Secretary-General was also present.

In a 2 September statement [S/1998/833], the EU welcomed the agreement to transform the truce into a ceasefire, and called on both parties to abide by it. In particular, the EU welcomed the decision to open Bissau Airport and the recognition of democratic institutions.

A second joint meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the ECOWAS and CPLP negotiating groups on Guinea-Bissau (Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire, 15-16 September) continued discussions on the timetable for negotiation, the establishment of an observer mission and an interposition force [S/1998/884]. The Ministers considered the report of the joint meeting of the ECOWAS Chiefs of Defence Staff of the Committee of Seven on Guinea-Bissau and CPLP military experts (Abidjan, 13-15 September). The parties to the conflict agreed on the modalities for implementing the ceasefire agreement as it related to the deployment of an ECOWAS/CPLP observer mission in Guinea-Bissau and signed an agreement to that effect. The two parties were encouraged to reach further agreements relating to the deployment of an interposition force.

Despite the agreements, loyalist troops and rebel forces in Guinea-Bissau resumed fighting, as reported by the EU in a 22 October statement [S/1998/1002]. The EU expressed concern about the renewed fighting, which again led to the exodus of thousands of civilians from the capital, and called on both parties to respect the ceasefire and to continue negotiations under the joint ECOWAS/CPLP mediation efforts.

Abuja Agreement. On 1 November, President Vieira for the Government of Guinea-Bissau and General Mane for the Self-Proclaimed Military Junta signed a peace agreement [S/1998/1028]. The parties to the conflict, having met in Abuja, Nigeria, on 31 October and 1 November in the context of the efforts of the twenty-first summit of the Authority of the ECOWAS Heads of State and Government, agreed to reaffirm the ceasefire agreement of 26 August. They also agreed that all foreign troops would be withdrawn from Guinea-Bissau, simultaneously with the deployment of an ECOMOG interposition force, which would take over from the withdrawn forces. The interposition force would guarantee security along the Guinea-Bissau/Senegal border, keep the warring parties apart and guarantee free access to humanitarian organizations to reach the affected civilian population. In that regard, the international airport and the seaport would be opened immediately. In addition, the two parties agreed immediately to put into place a Government of national unity, which would include representatives of the military junta. They also agreed that general and presidential elections would be held not later than March 1999. Those elections would be observed by ECOWAS, CPLP and the international community.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

On 6 November [meeting 3940], the President of the Security Council made the following statement [S/PRST/1998/31] on behalf of the Council members:

The Security Council welcomes the agreement reached on 1 November 1998, in Abuja, between the Government of Guinea-Bissau and the Self-Proclaimed Military Junta during the Twenty-first Summit of the Authority of the Heads of State and Government of the Economic Community of West African States. In this context, the Council commends the mediation efforts of the Economic Community of West African States and of the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries, and their respective Chairmen, and recognizes the role of other leaders, in particular the preponderant role of the President of the Gambia, in the negotiations that led to that agreement.

The Council affirms its firm commitment to preserve the unity, sovereignty, constitutional order and territorial integrity of Guinea-Bissau.

The Council considers the agreement to be a positive step towards national reconciliation and lasting peace in Guinea-Bissau. The Council calls upon the Government and the Self-Proclaimed Military Junta to respect fully their obligations under the Abuja Agreement and the Praia Agreement of 26 August 1998. The Council welcomes, in particular, the decision immediately to put in place immediately a government of national unity and to hold general and presidential elections not later than the end of March 1999.

The Council takes note of the agreement regarding the withdrawal from Guinea-Bissau of all foreign troops and of the simultaneous deployment of the interposition force of the Monitoring Group of the Economic Community of West African States, which will take over from the withdrawn forces. The Council calls upon all States to provide voluntarily technical, financial and logistical support to assist the Monitoring Group to carry out its mission.

The Council appeals to States and organizations concerned to provide urgent humanitarian assistance to displaced persons and refugees. It calls upon the Government and the Self-Proclaimed Military Junta to continue to respect relevant provisions of international law, including humanitarian law, and to ensure safe and unimpeded access by international humanitarian organizations to persons in need of assistance as a result of the conflict. In this regard, it welcomes the decision to open the international airport and the seaport at Bissau.

The Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

The EU, in a 17 November statement [S/1998/1094], welcomed the Abuja Agreement as an important step towards peace and national reconciliation in Guinea-Bissau. It expressed its readiness to support the organization of presidential and parliamentary elections and to provide humanitarian assistance to refugees and displaced persons.

Additional protocol. In the framework of the Abuja Agreement, President Gnassingbe Eyadema of Togo, the current ECOWAS Chairman, invited the head of State and Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces of Nigeria, Abdulsalam Abubakar, and the leaders of the two parties of Guinea-Bissau to a meeting in Lome on 14 and 15 December to discuss the evolution of the peace process in Guinea-Bissau. In the final communiqué of the Lome meeting [S/1998/1178], the two parties reiterated their commitment to continue to abide by the 26 August ceasefire agreement in order to facilitate implementation of the Abuja Agreement. The meeting's participants welcomed the recent appointment of a Prime Minister, and the parties to the conflict agreed to form a Government of National Unity according to a structure and a distribution of ministries to be provided for by each side, as outlined in the additional protocol to the Abuja Agreement. That protocol was adopted at the Lomé meeting and annexed to the communiqué. Having examined the situation in Guinea-Bissau, the participants reiterated the need to accelerate the deployment of an ECOMOG interposition force. They reaffirmed the need for general and presidential elections to be organized and called on the international community to provide assistance. Furthermore, the meeting commended the initiatives taken by President Eyadema, including the appointment of a Special Representative in Guinea-Bissau, the sending of the Commander-in-Chief of ECOMOG on an evaluation mission, the designation of liaison officers, and the sending of an ECOWAS mission, known as the Committee of Nine on Guinea-Bissau, to the United Nations. That Committee met with the Secretary-General and the Security Council on 11 December to seek their assistance for a settlement of the crisis and the rebuilding of Guinea-Bissau.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 21 December [meeting 3958], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1216 (1998). The draft [S/1998/1202] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming the statements by its President of 6 November 1998 and 30 November 1998,

Gravely concerned by the crisis facing Guinea-Bissau and the serious humanitarian situation affecting the civilian population in Guinea-Bissau,

Expressing its firm commitment to preserve the unity, sovereignty, political independence and territorial integrity of Guinea-Bissau,

1. Welcomes the agreements between the Government of Guinea-Bissau and the Self-Proclaimed Military Junta signed in Praia on 26 August 1998, and in Abuja on 1 November 1998 and the additional protocol signed in Lome on 15 December 1998;

2. Calls upon the Government and the Self-Proclaimed Military Junta to implement fully all the provisions of the agreements, including with regard to respect for the ceasefire, the urgent establishment of a government of national unity, the holding of general and presidential elections no later than the end of March 1999, and the immediate opening of the airport and seaport in Bissau and, in cooperation with all concerned, the withdrawal of all foreign troops in Guinea-Bissau and the simultaneous deployment of the interposition force of the Monitoring Group of the Economic Community of West African States;

3. Commends the States Members of the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries and the Economic Community of West African States on the key role they are playing to restore peace and security throughout Guinea-Bissau, and on their intention to participate with others in the observation of the forthcoming general and presidential elections, and welcomes the role of the Monitoring Group in the implementation of the Abuja Agreement, aimed at guaranteeing security along the Guinea-Bissau/Senegal border, keeping apart the parties in conflict and guaranteeing free access to humanitarian organizations and agencies to reach the affected civilian populations, to be carried out in accordance with, inter alia, paragraph 6 below;

4. Approves the implementation by the interposition force of the Monitoring Group of its mandate referred to in paragraph 3 above in a neutral and impartial way and in conformity with United Nations peacekeeping standards in order to achieve its objective to facilitate the return to peace and security by monitoring the implementation of the Abuja Agreement;

5. Calls upon all concerned, including the Government and the Self-Proclaimed Military Junta, to respect strictly relevant provisions of international law, including humanitarian and human rights law, and to ensure safe and unimpeded access by international humanitarian organizations to persons in need of assistance as a result of the conflict;

6. Affirms that the interposition force of the Monitoring Group may be required to take action to ensure the security and freedom of movement of its personnel in the discharge of its mandate;

7. Requests the Monitoring Group to provide periodic reports at least every month through the Secretary-General, the first report to be made one month after deployment of its troops;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to make recommendations to the Council on a possible role of the United Nations in the process of peace and reconciliation in Guinea-Bissau, including the early establishment of arrangements for liaison between the United Nations and the Monitoring Group;

9. Reiterates its appeal to States and organizations concerned to provide urgent humanitarian assistance to displaced persons and refugees;

10. Reiterates its call on States to provide voluntarily financial, technical and logistical support to assist the Monitoring Group to carry out its peacekeeping role in Guinea-Bissau;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to establish a trust fund for Guinea-Bissau which would assist in supporting the interposition force of the Monitoring Group in providing logistical support to them, and encourages Member States to contribute to the fund;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council regularly informed of the situation in Guinea-Bissau and to submit a report to it by 17 March 1999 on the implementation of the Abuja Agreement, including the implementation by the interposition force of its mandate;

13. Decides to review the situation, including the implementation of the present resolution, before the end of March 1999, on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General referred to in paragraph 12 above;

14. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

OAU action

The Central Organ of the OAU Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution, which met at the level of heads of State and Government in Ouagadougou on 17 December, adopted a communiqué [S/1998/1217] in which it addressed the situation in Guinea-Bissau. The Central Organ expressed satisfaction at the positive developments in Guinea-Bissau, particularly the signing of the 26 August ceasefire agreement and the 1 November Abuja Agreement and the appointment of a Prime Minister, as well as proposals to form a Government of national unity, as defined at the Lome meeting on 15 December. The Central Organ appealed to ECOWAS member States that had pledged to provide troops for deployment in Guinea-Bissau to honour their commitments as quickly as possible and appealed to member States of OAU and the United Nations to provide logistical support for the rapid deployment of ECOMOG in Guinea-Bissau.

Further developments

Despite logistical, financial and other difficulties, an advance ECOMOG contingent of 110 Togolese troops was deployed in Guinea-Bissau between 26 December and the end of the year [S/1999/294]. A further contingent of 300 troops was scheduled to be deployed in early 1999. With the arrival of ECOMOG forces, foreign troops began to withdraw.

Liberia

In 1998, peace in Liberia was consolidated through a process of national reconciliation and reconstruction, in which the United Nations

Peace-building Support Office in Liberia (UNOL), which was established in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 124], played a pivotal role. UNOL had replaced the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia (UNOMIL), whose four years of operation ended in 1997 with the disarmament and demobilization of the Liberian factions, which had been engaged in a civil war for seven years, the holding of presidential elections and the installation of a new Government [ibid., p. 123]. In November, the Security Council noted the Secretary-General's intention to extend UNOL's mandate until the end of 1999.

The United Nations and ECOWAS were active in trying to improve security relations between Liberia and Sierra Leone.

UNOL

In an 11 November letter to the Security Council President [S/1998/1080], the Secretary-General reviewed UNOL's activities since its establishment on 1 November 1997. Throughout the year, UNOL focused on the consolidation of peace; promoting reconciliation and the strengthening of democratic institutions; support for local human rights initiatives; political support for efforts to mobilize international resources and assistance for national recovery and reconstruction; and working to promote a coordinated effort by the UN system in the country on matters related to peace-building.

The Secretary-General's Representative in Liberia and head of UNOL, Felix Downes-Thomas (Gambia), was active in efforts to reduce tensions between Liberia and some of its neighbours, while also attempting to reduce tensions that had occasionally arisen between the Liberian Government and the Monitoring Group of ECOWAS. At the request of the Government and civil society groups, UNOL played an active role in the discussions that took place on the establishment of the Liberia Human Rights Commission. In addition, UNOL played a supportive role at the donors' conference, convened in April by the World Bank and UNDP, underscoring the link between development efforts and peace-building concerns. The Secretary-General stated his intention to extend the mandate of UNOL for a further year, until the end of December 1999.

On 16 November [S/1998/1081], the Council took note of the Secretary-General's intention.

Rehabilitation and reconstruction

On 14 September [A/53/377], the Secretary-General submitted a report to the General Assembly on assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Liberia (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

By resolution 53/1 I of 16 November, the Assembly urged the Secretary-General, among other things, to continue his efforts to mobilize assistance within the UN system to help Liberia in its reconstruction and development, including the return and reintegration of refugees, displaced persons and demobilized soldiers.

Sanctions committee

The Security Council Committee, established pursuant to resolution 985(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 355] to monitor sanctions against Liberia, issued a report on 24 December [S/1998/1220], covering its activities in 1998. The arms embargo was imposed by the Council by resolution 788(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 192].

The Committee noted that it did not have any specific monitoring mechanism to ensure the effective implementation of the arms embargo, and thus relied solely on the cooperation of States and organizations in a position to provide pertinent information. During the reporting period, no violations of the arms embargo were brought to its attention. The Committee strongly endorsed paragraph 2 of Council resolution 1196(1998) (see above, under "Promotion of peace in Africa"), in which the Council encouraged each Member State to consider the adoption of legislation or other legal measures making the violation of Council arms embargoes a criminal offence. The Committee was also planning to establish channels of communication with regional and subregional organizations in order to improve the monitoring of the arms embargo.

UNOMIL financing

On 12 January [A/52/401/Add.1], the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly the financial performance report of UNOMIL for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997. UNOMIL's mandate came to an end in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 123] after four years of operation. Of the total appropriation of $31,915,000 gross ($30,730,900 net) provided for UNOMIL maintenance for the period, an amount of $3,273,800 gross ($3,233,000 net) was utilized in the period beginning 1 July 1997 to meet the cost of the electoral process in Liberia. Expenditures amounted to $26,084,900 gross ($25,281,400 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $2,556,300 gross ($2,216,500 net).

It was recommended that the Assembly should take the following action: credit Member States with the unencumbered balance and assess the additional amount of $3,841,125 gross

($3,705,325 net) for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, in accordance with Assembly decision 52/407 [ibid., p. 127].

On 26 June [A/52/401/Add.2], the Secretary-General provided information on the final disposition of UNOMIL assets, which amounted to $14.6 million as at 15 February 1998.

On 18 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the question of UNOMIL financing at its resumed fifty-third session in 1999 (decision 53/458).

Liberia-Sierra Leone (UN-ECOWAS meeting)

On 2 July [S/1998/629], the UN Secretary-General and the Chairman of ECOWAS and head of State of Nigeria, General Abdulsalam Abubakar, co-hosted a meeting between President Charles Ghankay Taylor of Liberia and President Ahmad Tejan Kabbah of Sierra Leone in Abuja, Nigeria, which focused on security and cooperation issues between the two countries. Presidents Taylor and Kabbah called on their citizens not to be involved in destabilizing activities against the other State (see also under "Sierra Leone", below).

Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

In 1998, the Security Council continued to uphold sanctions imposed on the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya under resolution 748(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 55] and strengthened under resolution 883 (1993) [YUN 1993, p. 101], despite efforts by a number of regional organizations, including the League of Arab States (LAS), the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC), to have them lifted. The sanctions covered air links with, provision of military supplies to, restrictions on diplomatic and consular personnel of, and restrictions on suspected terrorist nationals of Libya. The Council, in August, welcomed the initiative taken by the United Kingdom and the United States to hold the trial of the two Libyans charged with the 1988 bombing of Pan Am flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland, before a Scottish court sitting in the Netherlands, and decided that the sanctions against Libya should be suspended immediately upon verification by the Secretary-General of the arrival of the two accused in the Netherlands for the trial. It noted that Libya had satisfied the French authorities regarding the 1989 bombing of Union de transports aériens (UTA) flight 772. As at 31 December, the two suspects had yet to be handed over to Dutch authorities, despite reassurances made by the Secretary-General to Libyan governmental officials, during an unscheduled visit to Libya in early December, on the good intentions of the Governments concerned.

The Council convened an open debate on the Lockerbie issue shortly after the International Court of Justice (ICJ) issued Judgments on the subject (see PART FOUR, Chapter I). The Secretary-General reported on a fact-finding mission to Libya, while the Sanctions Committee submitted a report covering its activities during 1998.

Sanctions regime

Fact-finding mission

On 15 January [S/1998/201], the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council President the report of the fact-finding mission that his emissary, Vladimir Petrovsky (Russian Federation), led to Libya from 13 to 18 December 1997. The mission's mandate was to hear and record information provided by Libyan officials concerning the implementation of Council resolutions 748(1992) and 883(1993) and the humanitarian and economic conditions of the country; to be briefed by representatives of the UN system about their activities and programmes; and to submit a report based on those discussions and briefings.

In their meetings with the mission, Libyan officials elaborated on the adverse impact that the air embargo had had on the economy, particularly on the health, social and agricultural sectors. The freeze on assets was mentioned by the Governor of the Central Bank, not so much in connection with its impact on the humanitarian situation, but on the overall economy. However, no mention was made of the arms embargo and the reduction and restriction of Libyan diplomatic and consular missions abroad, and the effect of the sanctions on the oil sector was raised only once by the Libyan officials.

According to government officials, the economic situation of the country had deteriorated during the last five years of sanctions. The unemployment rate had increased from less than 1 per cent in 1992 to 12 per cent in 1996, and the inflation rate had also increased sharply. The sectors that had been most affected included health and social services, agriculture and transportation. In response to queries from the mission regarding vulnerable groups, the Libyan officials mentioned women and children and indicated that the level of poverty in the country had increased overall.

Although the air embargo did not apply to domestic air travel, the restrictions on the purchase of aircraft, spare parts, navigational and landing equipment and on training and certification of pilots and other crew had reduced the number of airworthy aircraft and curtailed domestic air travel. That had placed restrictions on the ability of Libyans to respond to humanitarian emergencies and had limited the mobility of expatriate and foreign nationals, a view shared by the UN and the diplomatic community in the country.

The most adverse impact of the air embargo had been on the health sector, for it had restricted emergency medical evacuation both within and outside the country. The mission underlined that the Security Council Sanctions Committee (see below) had authorized exemptions to respond to humanitarian emergencies and that the Committee's reports indicated that the Libyan Government had not availed itself of them. The mission also noted that the Government had not responded to a proposal submitted to it by the World Health Organization in 1996 regarding the importation of vaccines, medicines and sera.

It was apparent to the mission that the Libyans considered the sanctions to be "illegal" and unjust and wanted them to be lifted as soon as possible. The mission pointed out the existing channels through which the Libyan Government could seek relief from the impact of the sanctions on the humanitarian situation on a case-by-case basis, and solicited its view on how to help mitigate the adverse impact of the sanctions, especially on vulnerable groups. The Libyan officials reiterated to the mission the specific exemptions that they would like the Council to approve, particularly urgent requests of a humanitarian nature relating to the health and social sectors. The mission emphasized that those requests could not be addressed within the existing mechanism and would require a Council decision.

Communications (January/March). By a 2 January letter to the Security Council President [S/1998/5], Libya said that it had proposed many initiatives and had accepted many of the suggestions made by regional and international organizations concerning the surrender of two Libyan nationals suspected of involvement in the 1988 bombing of Pan Am flight 103 over Lockerbie. More specifically, it had supported the following three options proposed to the Council by LAS and OAU, and endorsed by OIC and the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries: that the two suspects should be tried in a neutral country to be designated by the Council; that the two suspects should be tried by Scottish judges at ICJ in The Hague in accordance with Scottish law; and that a special criminal tribunal should be established in The Hague to try the accused.

On 27 January [S/1998/831], the President of the Arab Parliamentary Union and the Secretaries-General of LAS and OIC said that the crisis between Libya, on the one hand, and the United Kingdom and the United States, on the other, concerning the Lockerbie incident had lasted too long and had had negative repercussions on the Libyan people and neighbouring States. They called on the Security Council to accept one of the three solutions proposed by LAS, OAU and OIC. Pending a definitive peaceful and just settlement of the crisis, they hoped that the Council would lift the ban on certain flights carried out by the Libyan authorities, such as flights of a humanitarian nature and individual flights for religious purposes.

Libya, by a 27 January letter [S/1998/78], transmitted to the Council President the text of a resolution adopted at the eighth session of OIC (Tehran, Iran, 9-11 December 1997) on the crisis between Libya, on the one hand, and France, the United Kingdom and the United States, on the other.

On 2 March [S/1998/190], Libya submitted to the Council President the text of a 27 February decision of the Council of Ministers of OAU on the dispute over the Lockerbie incident. The Ministers supported Libya's call for an open meeting of the Security Council to take place in March 1998 and reiterated its appeal for the lifting of sanctions.

Also on 2 March [S/1998/191], Libya submitted the text of two Judgments delivered by ICJ on the interpretation and application of the 1971 Montreal Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation [YUN 1971, p. 739] in connection with the Lockerbie incident (see PART FOUR, Chapter I).

By a 4 March letter to the Secretary-General [S/1998/196], OAU requested the convening of a formal meeting of the Security Council to consider all aspects of the dispute over the Lockerbie incident. On 5 March, Saudi Arabia [S/1998/198], the members of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries [S/1998/200] and the Chairman of the OAU Committee on the Dispute between the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the United States and the United Kingdom [S/1998/202] made the same request to the Council President.

On 17 March [S/1998/242], Libya transmitted to the Security Council President the text of a resolution adopted by the Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers at its twenty-fifth session (Doha, Qatar, 15-17 March). The resolution, among other things, reaffirmed the risks posed by the continuation of the crisis to the security and safety of the region and urged the Council to suspend the sanctions imposed against Libya by resolutions 748(1992) and 883(1993).

Security Council consideration (March). On 6 March, the Council reviewed the sanctions imposed against Libya, concluding that there was no agreement that the necessary conditions existed for modification of the measures imposed.

In accordance with the understanding reached in prior consultations and at the request of Libya [S/1998/179], Algeria, Egypt, Libya, Mauritania, Morocco, the Syrian Arab Republic and Tunisia [S/1998/195], and Mali, as Chairman of the African Group [S/1998/199], the Council, on 20 March [meeting 3864], discussed letters from France, the United Kingdom and the United States dated 20 and 23 December 1991 [YUN 1992, p. 52], pertaining to the Lockerbie incident and the 1989 attack on UTA flight 772. With the Council's consent, the President invited Algeria, Colombia, Cuba, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Egypt, Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libya, Malaysia, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Morocco, Namibia, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Qatar, the Sudan, Syria, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Arab Emirates, the United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam, Yemen and Zimbabwe, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. Invitations were also extended to OIC, at the request of Indonesia [S/1998/251], to LAS, at the request of Bahrain [S/1998/252], and to OAU, at the request of Gabon [S/1998/253].

Libya stated that the letters under consideration contained three demands from the United States and the United Kingdom on Libya. The first demand asked for the extradition of two Libyan citizens suspected of being involved in the Lockerbie incident. That demand, it said, ran counter to Libyan national law, to the 1971 Montreal Convention and even to the judgements of the United States Supreme Court barring extradition in the absence of an extradition treaty. The second demand requested the payment of compensation, which, noted Libya, encroached on the defendant's right to be considered innocent until proven guilty. The third demand asked that Libya should provide the evidence proving the guilt of the two suspects. According to Libya, the burden of providing evidence fell on the United States and the United Kingdom, since they had accused the two Libyan citizens. Libya affirmed that it had endeavoured in every way possible to find a solution to the dispute, despite the fact that it had always been sure of the innocence of its two citizens.

Libya said that the Judgments rendered by ICJ on 27 February 1998 could be summarized as follows: there was a dispute between the parties on the interpretation and application of the Montreal Convention; ICJ had jurisdiction over the dispute; and Libya's requests were admissible, notwithstanding Council resolutions 748(1992) and 883(1993). Consequently, Libya called on the Council, among other things, to refrain from renewing the sanctions imposed against it, to rescind the two resolutions that had imposed the sanctions in the first place, and to consider the cases before ICJ as the only peaceful means for settling the dispute.

The United States pointed out that compelling evidence indicated that Libyan intelligence operatives placed the bombs that destroyed Pan Am flight 103 and UTA flight 772, and that evidence and the subsequent search for justice were at the core of the sanctions against Libya. Moreover, the assertions that the ICJ ruling required that sanctions against Libya be suspended were false. The ICJ ruling involved technical and procedural issues, stated the United States, and did not question the legality of the Council's actions affecting Libya or the merits of the criminal cases against the two accused suspects. Contrary to the assertions of the Libyan Government, the Court was not calling for review or suspension of the Council's resolutions.

The United States said that the UN sanctions against Libya were targeted sanctions, imposed to address aspects of Libyan involvement in international terrorism, but specifically designed to prevent suffering among the Libyan people. The sanctions did not prohibit the importation of food, medicine or clothing. They did not close Libya's land or sea borders, and they did not prevent Libya from selling its oil on the open market. In fact, according to the United States, industry estimates concluded that Libya earned nearly $10 billion from the sale of oil in 1997. In addition, the sanctions regime had always permitted exceptions to the air embargo for approved medical evacuation flights, and the Sanctions Committee had approved direct flights from Libya to Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, on third-country aircraft for Libyan pilgrims to fly directly to the Hajj.

LAS pointed out that, in cooperation with OAU and OIC, it had submitted three options to the Council as a basis on which to solve the problem (see above). Libya had responded to all the proposals and had manifested flexibility for the purpose of reaching a peaceful and just solution to the conflict. LAS added that Libya had accepted the principle of bringing the suspects to trial and it had also accepted the jurisdiction of the Scottish court and the application of Scottish law. It had cooperated fully with the French judiciary authorities in all of the investigations regarding UTA flight 772 and had repeatedly declared its condemnation of terrorism.

LAS said that the sanctions constituted a form of collective punishment of an entire people, despite the fact that there was no proof of either the guilt or the innocence of the two suspects. In addition, the sanctions had negative consequences on neighbouring Arab and African countries. LAS hoped that the Council would take into account the ICJ judgments and suspend resolutions 748(1992) and 883(1993).

The United Kingdom said that Libya had refused for over six years to comply with the Council's resolutions and had sought to enlist other UN Members behind its policies of non-compliance, on the basis of misrepresentations about the trial process, the impact of sanctions and the preliminary ICJ ruling. Libya had only to comply with the resolutions and hand over the two suspects in order for sanctions to be lifted.

The United Kingdom noted that the ICJ ruling was just one stage in the judicial proceedings and it had not decided that the Council's resolutions were invalid. Moreover, obligations under the UN Charter, including compliance with binding Council resolutions, took precedence over any other alleged international obligations.

OIC stated that the new situation created by the ICJ decision, and the fact that the international community was mobilized behind Libya, showed that the only action worth taking was suspension of the air embargo. Such a decision could not but strengthen the credibility of the approach taken by the Council pending a complete lifting of the embargo.

France pointed out that the debate was useful because, after so many years, it helped to recall the fact at the origin of the Council's decisions: the deliberate murder of 440 people aboard Pan Am flight 103 and UTA flight 772. With regard to the UTA incident, France said that the Libyan authorities had shown no real desire to cooperate with the French judiciary until early 1996. Subsequent cooperation on the part of Libyan authorities made it possible to progress towards establishing the truth in the UTA case and to the issue of six arrest warrants for Libyan nationals.

France said that the 27 February ICJ decision did not affect the relevant Council resolutions. The point of the sanctions was not to punish a population, but to ensure compliance with international law. At the same time, France had worked with the Council towards ensuring that the exemptions regime was applied generously and effectively. Having considered the report of the fact-finding mission (see above), France believed that other exemptions could be considered in a positive light.

Communications (April-July and November).

On 8 April [A/53/95-S/1998/311], Qatar submitted to the Secretary-General the final communiqué of the twenty-fifth session of the Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Doha, 15-17 March), in which it welcomed the ICJ ruling of 27 February on its competence and jurisdiction over the case.

On 27 May [A/52/970-S/1998/574], Colombia transmitted to the Secretary-General the documents of the Ministerial Meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, 19-20 May). The Ministers welcomed the ICJ Judgments and called on the Council to suspend the sanctions imposed on Libya. They also established a Committee of Six (Burkina Faso, Cuba, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malaysia, South Africa, Zimbabwe) to follow up the development of the dispute. On 10 June [S/1998/548], Libya forwarded that text to the Council President.

By a 29 June letter to the Security Council President [S/1998/596], the Committee of Six said that the ICJ decisions confirmed that sanctions should not have been imposed in the first place, as they were established to circumvent the decisions of ICJ. The Six therefore called on the Council to suspend the sanctions and to await the ICJ decision on the dispute.

On 10 June [S/1998/549], Libya transmitted to the Security Council President a decision concerning the crisis between its Government, on the one hand, and the United States and the United Kingdom, on the other, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU (Ouagadougou, 8-10 June). The decision called on the Council to suspend the sanctions until ICJ pronounced its verdict. The participants would no longer comply with the sanctions with effect from September 1998 if the United States and the United Kingdom continued to refuse to have the two suspects tried in a third neutral country. In addition, OAU decided, with immediate effect, that its members would not comply with the sanctions relating to religious obligations, humanitarian emergencies or fulfilment of OAU's statutory obligations.

By a 1 July letter to the Security Council President [S/1998/597], Libya recalled that ICJ, on 27 February, had determined that it had jurisdiction regarding the legal dispute between Libya, on the one hand, and the United States and the United Kingdom, on the other. Further, during the Council's consideration of the dispute on 20 March, the majority of Member States had called for the sanctions to be lifted and for a peaceful settlement of the dispute, and had stressed their objection to the Council's routine renewal of the sanctions every 120 days. Libya called on the Council to comply with the two Judgments of ICJ by lifting the sanctions; affirmed that it should be compensated for the material and moral losses and damages that it had suffered as a result of the sanctions; and urged the parties concerned either to reach a solution to the dispute through one of the peaceful means stipulated in the UN Charter or to await the decision of ICJ.

Also on 1 July, in similar letters, the Arab Committee of Seven (Algeria, Egypt, Libya, Mauritania, Morocco, Syria, Tunisia) [S/1998/598], the OAU Committee of Five (Cameroon, Ghana, Tunisia, Uganda, Zimbabwe) [S/1998/599] and Qatar, on behalf of OIC [S/1998/602], called for the immediate lifting of the sanctions against Libya by accepting one of the options submitted by OAU, LAS, the Non-Aligned Movement and OIC; or to suspend the sanctions pending the ICJ decision.

On 30 November [S/1998/1131 & Corr.2], Libya submitted to the Secretary-General a report on the damage caused by the implementation of Council resolutions 748(1992) and 883(1993), which covered the period from 15 April 1992 to 31 December 1997.

Sanctions Committee

The Committee established pursuant to Security Council resolution 748(1992) concerning the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya (Sanctions Committee) issued a report on 31 December covering its activities since the beginning of 1998 [S/1998/1237]. During the year, the Committee held 11 meetings and handled over 200 incoming communications relating to the implementation of the sanctions, as well as a comparable number of replies.

The Committee approved 91 medical emergency evacuation flights in 1998, compared to 70 in 1997. It also reiterated its willingness to facilitate the travel of Libyan pilgrims to the Hajj, as well as to continue to consider humanitarian exemptions from the sanctions regime. In August, the Committee approved, in principle, the purchase by Libya of three new air ambulances.

Throughout the year, the Committee considered communications concerning alleged flight violations of the sanctions regime on Libya. On 26 October, the Committee took note of the fact that some States had invoked the decision of a regional organization as overriding Security Council resolutions. The Committee sent letters to the Member States concerned (Burkina Faso, Chad, Eritrea, Mali, Niger, Sudan), reminding them of their obligations under the Charter and under resolution 748(1992), and noting that the flights in question were unacceptable breaches of the sanctions regime.

Initiative for trial of Pan Am 103 bombing suspects

By a 24 August letter to the Secretary-General [S/1998/795], the United Kingdom and the United States said that in the interest of resolving the crisis with Libya in a way that would allow for justice to be done, their Governments were prepared, as an exceptional measure, to arrange for the two accused Libyans to be tried by a Scottish court sitting in the Netherlands. After close consultations, the Government of the Netherlands had agreed to facilitate arrangements for such a court, which would follow Scottish law and procedure in every respect, except for the replacement of the jury by a panel of three Scottish High Court judges. Arrangements would be made for international observers to attend the trial. The text of the agreement between the Netherlands and the United Kingdom was annexed to the letter.

The two accused would have safe passage from Libya to the Netherlands and would not be transferred by the United Kingdom or the United States to any other jurisdiction while the trial was taking place. If found guilty, the accused would serve their sentences in the United Kingdom. If acquitted, or if the prosecution was discontinued by any process of law preventing further trial under Scottish law, the accused would have safe passage back to Libya. Should other offences committed prior to arrival in the Netherlands come to light during the course of the trial, neither of the two accused nor any other person attending the court, including witnesses, would be liable for arrest for such offences while in the Netherlands for the purpose of the trial.

The accused would be able to choose Scottish solicitors and advocates to represent them at all stages of the proceedings, would be given proper medical attention and could be visited in custody by international observers. The trial would be held in public, adequate provision being made for the media.

The United Kingdom and the United States were prepared to support a further Security Council resolution for the purpose of the initiative (which would also suspend sanctions upon the appearance of the two accused in the Netherlands) and which would require all States to co-operate to that end. Once that resolution was adopted, the United Kingdom would legislate to enable a Scottish court to hold a trial in the Netherlands. That legislation had already been prepared and was attached to the letter.

The United Kingdom and the United States stated that their initiative represented a sincere attempt to resolve the dispute with Libya, and was an approach that had been endorsed by, among others, OAU, LAS, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and OIC. In return, they requested Libya's cooperation by ensuring the timely appearance of the two accused in the Netherlands; by ensuring the production of evidence, including the presence of witnesses before the court; and by complying fully with all the requirements of the Security Council resolutions. They also reserved the right to propose further sanctions at the time of the next Council review and to withdraw the initiative if Libya failed to produce the accused in the Netherlands.

Communications (August). On 25 August [S/1998/803], Libya informed the Security Council President that it had received documents pertaining to the decision by the United Kingdom and the United States to try the two accused Libyan suspects in the Netherlands and that it had learned that a draft resolution had been presented to the Council. Libya requested that a decision on the draft resolution be postponed until its judicial authorities had completed their study of the documents.

In a 26 August response [S/1998/808] to the joint letter from the United Kingdom and the United States concerning the two Governments' consent to the trial of the two suspects in a neutral country, Libya expressed regret that so many years had to pass before the solution, which was originally proposed by Libya and supported by regional and international organizations, was finally accepted.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 August [meeting 3920], the Security Council adopted resolution 1192(1998) unanimously. The draft [S/1998/809] was prepared by the United Kingdom and the United States. With the Council's consent, the President invited Libya and the Netherlands, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 731(1992) of 21 January 1992, 748(1992) of 31 March 1992 and 883(1993) of 11 November 1993,

Taking note of the report of the independent experts appointed by the Secretary-General,

Having regard to the contents of the letter dated 24 August 1998 from the Acting Permanent Representatives of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and of the United States of America to the Secretary-General,

Noting, in the light of the above-mentioned resolutions, the communications of the Organization of African Unity, the League of Arab States, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the Organization of the Islamic Conference, as referred to in the letter dated 24 August 1998,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Demands once again that the Libyan Government immediately comply with the above-mentioned resolutions;

2. Welcomes the initiative for the trial of the two persons charged with the bombing of Pan Am flight 103 ("the two accused") before a Scottish court sitting in the Netherlands, as contained in the letter dated 24 August 1998 from the Acting Permanent Representatives of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and of the United States of America ("the initiative") and its attachments thereto, and the willingness of the Government of the Netherlands to cooperate in the implementation of the initiative;

3. Calls upon the Government of the Netherlands and the Government of the United Kingdom to take such steps as are necessary to implement the initiative, including the conclusion of arrangements with a view to enabling the court described in paragraph 2 above to exercise jurisdiction in the terms of the intended agreement between the two Governments, attached to the said letter of 24 August 1998;

4. Decides that all States shall cooperate to this end and, in particular, that the Libyan Government shall ensure the appearance in the Netherlands of the two accused for the purpose of trial by the court described in paragraph 2 above, and that the Libyan Government shall ensure that any evidence or witnesses in Libya are, upon the request of the court, promptly made available at the court in the Netherlands for the purpose of the trial;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, after consultation with the Government of the Netherlands, to assist the Libyan Government with the physical arrangements for the safe transfer of the two accused from Libya direct to the Netherlands;

6. Invites the Secretary-General to nominate international observers to attend the trial;

7. Decides that, on the arrival of the two accused in the Netherlands, the Government of the Netherlands shall detain the two accused pending their transfer for the purpose of trial before the court described in paragraph 2 above;

8. Reaffirms that the measures set forth in its resolutions 748(1992) and 883(1993) remain in effect and binding on all Member States, and in this context reaffirms the provisions of paragraph 16 of resolution 883(1993), and decides that the aforementioned measures shall be suspended immediately if the Secretary-General reports to the Council that the two accused have arrived in the Netherlands for the purpose of trial before the court described in paragraph 2 above or have appeared for trial before an appropriate court in the United Kingdom or the United States, and that the Libyan Government has satisfied the French judicial authorities with regard to the bombing of UTA 772;

9. Expresses its intention to consider additional measures if the two accused have not arrived or appeared for trial promptly in accordance with paragraph 8 above;

10. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Speaking before the vote, Libya said that it had accepted that the two suspects should be tried in a Scottish court in the Netherlands by Scottish judges, according to Scottish law. It expressed hope that the other parties to the dispute were serious about their position.

The United States affirmed that the arrangements endorsed in the resolution would assure a fair trial for the two Libyan suspects. The proceedings would be consistent with the requirements of UN resolutions, as well as United States, British and Dutch law. Failure by Libya to act promptly to ensure the appearance of the defendants would be a serious breach of faith that would compel the Council to act appropriately in response. The United States reaffirmed its continued support for France's demand for Libya's full cooperation in the question of the crash of UTA flight 772.

Speaking after the vote, the United Kingdom stated that although persons accused of terrorism had no right to determine their place of trial, the British Government, in order to bring to an end the years of waiting for justice by the relatives of the Lockerbie victims, concluded that it would be possible to arrange for a Scottish court to sit in the Netherlands. The resolution provided the basis for the necessary changes to British and Dutch law. It also made clear that it was Libya's responsibility to ensure the appearance of the accused in the Netherlands. Sanctions would be suspended as soon as the Secretary-General was able to confirm that the accused had been delivered to the Netherlands and that the requirements of French justice had also been met.

Communications (September-November). In similar letters to the Security Council President, the heads of State and Government of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries [S/1998/856], the Committee of Five established by the Council of Ministers of OAU [S/1998/930], the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States members of the Committee of Seven of the Council of LAS [S/1998/895], the Committee of Six established at the Cartagena meeting [S/1998/902] and the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States members of OIC [S/1998/926] expressed their satisfaction that the United Kingdom and the United States had accepted the proposal by regional and international organizations for the trial of the two suspects to be held in a third, neutral country. The two countries were called on to enter into direct negotiations with Libya in order to implement resolution 1192(1998), including trial arrangements and security measures relating to the two suspects. Support was affirmed for the following Libyan requests: that agreement be reached on guarantees that the two suspects would not be extradited, transferred or moved to the United Kingdom or the United States for any reason and that they would serve their term of punishment, in the event of conviction, in the Netherlands or Libya; that agreement be reached on clarification regarding the witnesses and their identification by Libya; that agreement be reached on guarantees of the legal, religious, personal, social and medical rights of the two suspects throughout the various stages of the trial, as well as on guarantees of their security and safety during travel to and from the Netherlands and during their stay there; and that the start of the trial mark the end of the crisis and that sanctions be lifted as soon as the two suspects appeared before the court.

Other developments

On 5 December, the Secretary-General visited Libya. He met with senior government officials who raised a number of issues of concern regarding the Lockerbie suspects, and the Secretary-General sought to reassure them that all the Governments concerned were dealing in good faith. While in Libya, he held talks with President Blaise Compaoré of Burkina Faso, the current President of OAU. The Secretary-General also met with Libyan leader Colonel Muammar Al-Qadhafi. At a press conference following that meeting, the Secretary-General stated that there had been a step forward in bringing to closure the matter of the transfer of the Libyan suspects to a court in the Netherlands.

1986 attack against Libya

The General Assembly, on 8 December (decision 53/425), deferred consideration of the agenda item "Declaration of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity on the aerial and naval military attack against the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya by the present United States Administration in April 1986" and included it in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth (1999) session.

Sierra Leone

In February 1998, the military regime that had ruled Sierra Leone for nine months was brought to an end by the concerted action of a military force drawn from Western African countries. Troops of the Monitoring Group (ECOMOG) of ECOWAS overthrew the military junta, occupied the capital, Freetown, and deployed further into the countryside after responding to incessant and unprovoked attacks against their positions by elements of the military regime. On 10 March, the exiled and constitutionally elected President of Sierra Leone, Ahmad Tejan Kabbah, returned to Freetown. Nevertheless, resistance by the ousted junta, composed of the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC) and the Revolutionary United Front (RUF), continued throughout 1998 and intensified towards the end of the year, creating a serious humanitarian crisis. Thousands of Sierra Leoneans were forced to abandon their homes, due to atrocities committed against them by junta rebels, including murder, rape and mutilations, and fled to other parts of the country, as well as into neighbouring States.

On 16 March, the Security Council terminated the prohibitions on the sale or supply to Sierra Leone of petroleum and petroleum products, and on 5 June it terminated the arms embargo against it. In April, the Council authorized the deployment of up to 10 UN military liaison and security advisory personnel to assess and report on the military situation in Sierra Leone. Subsequently, in July, it established the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone for an initial period of six months with the mandate, among other things, to monitor the security situation, as well as the disarmament and demobilization of former combatants, and to report on violations of humanitarian law and human rights. Also in July, the Secretary-General convened a Special Conference on Sierra Leone at UN Headquarters to focus on the initiatives taken by the Sierra Leone Government, ECOMOG and the international community in resolving the conflict, and co-hosted with the Chairman of ECOWAS and head of State of Nigeria, General Abdulsalam Abubakar, a meeting on Sierra Leone that addressed regional and subregional issues.

ECOWAS, as the regional organization directly concerned, took the lead in assisting President Kabbah's Government in its efforts to restore stability and order in Sierra Leone.

However, in December, Sierra Leone suffered a serious setback with intensification of hostilities and rebel attacks on Freetown. The ECOWAS Committee of Five (Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, Guinea, Liberia, Nigeria), established to monitor developments in Sierra Leone, had suspended its activities with the restoration of constitutional order in March. However, due to the renewed attacks by AFRC and RUF, the Committee resumed its activities in December and included Togo in its membership, becoming the Committee of Six.

The Sierra Leone crisis began in 1991 when RUF, under the leadership of Corporal Foday Sankoh, launched guerrilla warfare against the Government. After five years of civil war, Sierra Leone embarked on a successful transition to democracy, culminating in parliamentary and presidential elections in February and March 1996. In addition, a peace accord was signed between the newly elected civilian Government of Sierra Leone and RUF in Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire, on 30 November 1996. The Abidjan Accord [YUN 1996, p. 123] provided a framework to further the process of democratization and declared an immediate end to the armed conflict. However, its implementation was interrupted in May 1997 when AFRC, under the leadership of Major Johnny Paul Koroma, carried out a coup d'état and later formed an alliance with RUF.

Implementation of Conakry Agreement

On 14 January [S/1998/34], the exiled Government of Sierra Leone transmitted to the Secretary-General a statement by President Kabbah on the implementation of the 1997 Conakry peace plan [YUN 1997, p. 137]. The plan called for, among other things, the restoration of the constitutionally elected Government of President Kabbah by 22 April 1998. With only 13 weeks left to that deadline, the junta was blaming ECOWAS and UN representatives for the impasse in implementing the plan and setting forth unilateral demands, said President Kabbah. In addition, junta members had violated the sanctions imposed under Security Council resolution 1132(1997) [ibid., p. 135] by upgrading the airstrip at Magburaka for the illegal importation of arms and other supplies, and by not abiding by the travel restrictions imposed against them and their families. President Kabbah emphasized that he would not accept any changes or amendments to the Conakry peace plan that would result in an extension of the deadline beyond 22 April.

Report of Secretary-General (February). On 5 February [S/1998/103], the Secretary-General, in response to resolution 1132(1997), described developments in Sierra Leone since his last report of 5 December 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 139].

A technical survey team, led by the Secretary-General's Special Envoy to Sierra Leone, Francis G. Okelo, visited Conakry, Guinea, Monrovia, Liberia, and Freetown between 10 and 17 January. The team assessed the political, military and security situation in Sierra Leone; discussed with the junta the implementation of the Conakry peace plan; met with exiled President Kabbah in Conakry; consulted with ECOWAS on the planning undertaken so far by ECOMOG to carry out the military tasks listed in the peace plan; and examined installations and facilities, engineering works and the availability and reliability of equipment, supplies and services that might be used by a future UN military presence.

The team found that while the junta appeared to be in control of Freetown, the security situation in the countryside remained highly volatile and did not allow the UN group to travel outside the capital. It received reports that military activity was persisting in the east and south of the country. Intensified guerrilla-style actions against the junta forces were being conducted by the Civil Defence Unit (CDU). That organization, which apparently comprised the Kamajors and similar groupings of traditional village-based hunters, claimed to control all major roads in Sierra Leone. On 9 January, CDU indicated that it would cooperate with the implementation of the Conakry Agreement only in the event of a firm commitment by the junta to abide by its provisions, the rapid deployment of ECOMOG throughout Sierra Leone and the disarmament of all combatants, including RUF and the Republic of Sierra Leone Armed Forces (RSLMF).

The Chairman of AFRC, Major Koroma, informed the Special Envoy that a number of issues stood in the way of implementing the Conakry Agreement, namely: the need to release immediately Corporal Sankoh, the Deputy Chairman of the junta and head of RUF, who was detained in Nigeria; the need to exempt RSLMF from the disarmament exercise; and the need to address the role played by the Nigerian contingent in ECOMOG. The junta expressed its readiness for dialogue with ECOWAS and indicated that it would welcome the deployment of UN military observers.

The team requested from the junta information concerning reports that it had enlarged an airstrip at Magburaka and had received deliveries of weapons there in violation of Security Council resolution 1132(1997) [ibid., p. 135]. Those deliveries reportedly included surface-to-air missiles and other matériel allegedly paid for by sales of diamonds mined in Sierra Leone. The junta denied those reports and the team was unable to verify them. Nevertheless, during and after its stay in Freetown, the team received persistent reports that illegal arms sales were being paid for by the sale of diamonds.

The Secretary-General stated that the Chairman of ECOWAS and head of State of Nigeria, General Abacha, reporting on the outcome of the December 1997 meeting of the ECOWAS Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Committee of Five on Sierra Leone [ibid., p. 140], had indicated that the delays in implementing the Conakry Agreement were attributable solely to lack of co-operation on the part of the junta and its continued intransigence; the junta had carried out unprovoked attacks on ECOMOG peacekeepers and had violated the arms embargo. Stating the need for ECOWAS and the United Nations to implement the peace Agreement without further delay, General Abacha urged the Secretary-General to accelerate efforts towards deploying a UN military observer mission to Sierra Leone.

On 15 January, the United Kingdom convened an ad hoc meeting of donors and other interested parties on Sierra Leone in New York. The parties reached a number of conclusions concerning ECOMOG's concept of operations and its logistical and equipment requirements; the establishment of a trust fund to assist ECOMOG; the deployment of UN military personnel, subject to authorization by the Security Council; and the serious humanitarian situation in Sierra Leone.

The humanitarian situation had continued to deteriorate. In the absence of new supplies of food aid, commercial food was increasingly scarce and expensive in urban areas. That was primarily attributable to the overall decline in the country following the 25 May 1997 coup, as well as the scarcity of fuel, which had a direct impact on transportation costs. Existing stocks of relief food within the country were almost exhausted, as no food had entered Sierra Leone since the coup. The Secretary-General noted that a UN inter-agency assessment mission would be sent to Sierra Leone at the beginning of February (see below) to undertake a technical analysis of the humanitarian situation, including the humanitarian impact of the sanctions (see also PART THREE, Chapter III).

The Secretary-General observed that, although the junta claimed that it remained committed to the Conakry Agreement, the situation in Sierra Leone required the urgent attention of the international community. In particular, it was important to develop and finalize deployment, disarmament and demobilization plans if the Agreement was to be implemented. Consequently, it was premature to present to the Security Council a full concept of operations or an estimate of force size and structure in respect of a possible UN military presence.

The Secretary-General welcomed the proposed convening in New York of the ministerial meeting of the Committee of Five, which could give a much-needed impetus to the process of dialogue (see below). He also stated his intention to re-establish the UN liaison office in Sierra Leone under the direction of his Special Envoy. At the same time, the Secretary-General invited the Security Council to consider the deployment of a small military liaison cell of up to 10 soldiers, with the necessary support staff, to assess and report on the military situation within Sierra Leone. Such a deployment would signal the commitment of the Council and the international community to the peace process and would serve as an important confidence-building measure. The Secretary-General expressed concern about reports of persistent violations of the Council's arms embargo, which undermined the peace process. He noted that the United Nations would continue to work with the international community in trying to generate logistical, technical and financial support for ECOWAS.

ECOWAS meeting (5-6 February)

On 9 February [S/1998/107], Nigeria transmitted to the Security Council President the text of the final communiqué of the eighth meeting of the ECOWAS Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Committee of Five on Sierra Leone (New York, 5-6 February).

The Ministers, who briefed the Secretary-General and members of the Security Council on the latest situation in Sierra Leone, expressed concern at the impasse that existed in implementing the Conakry peace plan. They noted, in particular, the difficulty in deploying ECOMOG troops and the UN observer mission throughout Sierra Leone, owing to the intransigence of the junta, which had resorted to reopening issues already agreed upon in the peace plan.

The Ministers emphasized that the peace plan remained the best framework for the resolution of the situation in Sierra Leone and reaffirmed the three options available to ECOWAS in that regard: the pursuit of dialogue; the imposition of sanctions/embargo; and the possible use of force. The Ministers noted that the junta was in breach of the peace plan and called on it to comply with its provisions.

The Ministers emphasized that 22 April 1998 remained the terminal date for the restoration of the legitimate Government of President Kabbah and called on the Council to take steps in support of that objective. They also expressed concern that there had been flagrant violations of the sanctions imposed on the junta in Sierra Leone, in particular of the arms embargo and travel restrictions on members of the illegal regime and their families. Accordingly, they called on UN Member States to comply fully with the sanctions and embargo and appealed to the Council to take appropriate measures to ensure full compliance with the sanctions regime.

The Ministers noted with concern the plight of refugees, their impact on neighbouring countries and the deteriorating humanitarian situation in Sierra Leone. They welcomed the initiative to establish a contact group on Sierra Leone and expressed appreciation for the agreement of the Secretary-General to co-chair, with ECOWAS, the launching of the contact group. They expressed their appreciation for the pledges made by some countries to contribute to a trust fund for Sierra Leone and called on other Member States to make contributions.

OAU meeting (13 February)

By an 18 February letter to the Secretary-General [S/1998/135], Zimbabwe forwarded the text of a statement issued by the Central Organ of the OAU Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution at its forty-fourth ordinary session (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 13 February).

The Central Organ noted that the delay in implementing the Conakry Agreement had led to the exacerbation of the grave humanitarian situation in Sierra Leone. It deplored the fact that the intransigence of the junta had made it difficult for humanitarian agencies to bring in much-needed assistance to the people of Sierra Leone. That situation was being compounded by the massive displacement of people and the huge influx of refugees into neighbouring countries.

Inter-agency mission (February)

On 20 February [S/1998/155], the Secretary-General transmitted to the President of the Security Council the interim report of the inter-agency assessment mission to Sierra Leone. The mission, led by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, went to the region to undertake a technical analysis of the humanitarian situation in Sierra Leone since the 1997 coup d'état, including the effects of sanctions. However, because of the deterioration in the security situation in Sierra Leone, the mission worked in Conakry and prepared an interim report, drawing on information and analyses provided by UN agencies, ICRC and NGOs active in Sierra Leone. The interim report presented observations and recommendations in four main areas: food assistance, health care, population displacement and activities of humanitarian organizations. The report concluded that without rapid intervention by humanitarian organizations, Sierra Leone would face a large-scale food crisis. (For further information on the humanitarian situation in Sierra Leone, see PART THREE, Chapter III.)

Collapse of junta (February)

Communication. On 13 February [S/1998/123], Nigeria informed the Security Council President that Freetown and most parts of Sierra Leone were under the control of ECOMOG forces, which had responded to unprovoked attacks against their positions by elements of the military regime. Nigeria urged the Council to facilitate the deployment of a UN military observer mission to Sierra Leone and called on the international community to assist ECOMOG in implementing its mandate.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (February)

On 26 February [meeting 3857], the President of the Security Council made the following statement on behalf of the Council members [S/PRST/1998/5]:

The Security Council recalls its resolution 1132(1997) of 8 October 1997, and the statements by its President of 27 May, 11 July and 6 August 1997, following the military coup d'état in Sierra Leone on 25 May 1997. It expresses its deep regret at the violence, loss of life and property and immense suffering undergone by the people of Sierra Leone since the coup. It remains gravely concerned at the continued violence in the country and calls for an urgent end to the fighting.

The Council welcomes the fact that the rule of the military junta has been brought to an end, and stresses the imperative need for the immediate restoration of the democratically elected Government of President Ahmad Tejan Kabbah and a return to constitutional order, in accordance with paragraph 1 of its resolution 1132(1997).

The Council encourages the earliest possible return to Freetown by President Kabbah and looks forward to his re-establishing a functioning and autonomous government in the country.

The Council expresses its readiness to terminate the measures imposed by paragraphs 5 and 6 of its resolution 1132(1997) as soon as the conditions referred to in paragraph 1 of that resolution have been fulfilled.

The Council commends the important role that the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) has continued to play towards the peaceful resolution of this crisis. The Council encourages the ECOWAS Monitoring Group (ECOMOG) to proceed in its efforts to foster peace and stability in Sierra Leone, in accordance with relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations. It underlines the need for close cooperation between the legitimate Government of Sierra Leone, ECOWAS, and in particular its Committee of Five Ministers for Foreign Affairs on Sierra Leone, the commanders of ECOMOG, the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General and his staff, United Nations agencies and relevant international organizations in their work, and specifically in the development of a plan for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration into civilian life of all combatants in Sierra Leone. In this context, it supports the intention of the Secretary-General, subject to security conditions on the ground, to take rapid steps towards the reopening of the United Nations Liaison Office in Freetown in order to support the activities of his Special Envoy, and in particular to assist national reconciliation and political dialogue.

The Council expresses the view that the Conakry Agreement and the Abidjan Agreement provide important elements for a framework for peace, stability and national reconciliation in Sierra Leone. It calls upon all parties in Sierra Leone to work towards these objectives through peaceful means and political dialogue. In this regard, it condemns all reprisal killings and related violence in Sierra Leone and calls for an immediate end to such acts.

The Council looks forward to detailed proposals by the Secretary-General concerning the role of the United Nations and its future presence in Sierra Leone. It requests the Secretary-General to establish a trust fund to support such activities and calls upon all Member States to make early contributions to it.

The Council welcomes the interim report of the inter-agency assessment mission to Sierra Leone of 10 February 1998 and commends those Member States and international organizations which have provided urgent humanitarian assistance to Sierra Leone. It remains deeply concerned about the serious and fragile humanitarian situation in the country, and calls upon all States and international organizations to provide further urgent assistance to Sierra Leone and neighbouring countries affected by the crisis. It calls on ECOMOG and all those concerned to ensure safe and unrestricted access to those in need.

The Council expresses its concern about the safety of all humanitarian personnel in Sierra Leone and condemns the taking of hostages by former members of the deposed junta. It calls for the immediate release of all international personnel and others who have been detained or held hostage. It commends ECOMOG for its efforts to liberate those individuals being held against their will.

The Council will remain seized of this matter.

ECOWAS meeting (25 and 27 February)

On 27 February [S/1998/170], Nigeria transmitted to the Security Council President the text of a communiqué issued at the end of the ninth meeting of the ECOWAS Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Committee of Five on Sierra Leone (Addis Ababa, 25 and 27 February). The Ministers reviewed the situation in Sierra Leone following the liberation of Freetown, its environs and a substantial part of the country and took into consideration the report of the Chairman of the Committee of Five on his fact-finding visit to Freetown, as well as the report of ECOMOG's Force Commander on the situation in Sierra Leone.

The Ministers said that ECOMOG had no option but to defend itself following unprovoked attacks on it. They noted that the military operations in Freetown had resulted in minimum loss of life and property. Guinea and Nigeria had deployed additional troops in order to enhance ECOMOG's effectiveness in carrying out its mandate, though more troops were still needed from ECOWAS member States. The Ministers called for the early deployment of a UN military observer mission in Sierra Leone, alongside ECOMOG. They concluded that the restoration of constitutional order and the reinstatement of the legitimate Government would be accomplished with the return of President Kabbah to Freetown, scheduled for 10 March.

Report of Secretary-General (March). On 18 March [S/1998/249], the Secretary-General, in accordance with the 26 February Security Council presidential statement [S/PRST/1998/5], submitted detailed proposals concerning the role of the United Nations and its future presence in Sierra Leone, and described developments in that country since his 5 February report.

The Secretary-General described the military counter-attack launched by ECOMOG, which followed an attack by junta forces on its position at Lungi. The 13 February fall of the city was accompanied by widespread looting and some reprisal killings. The military regime had collapsed and it was expelled by force from Freetown. ECOMOG had subsequently established itself across most of the country. On 10 March, President Kabbah returned to Freetown to resume his office as head of State of Sierra Leone. Nevertheless, the security situation was still a source of concern due to the fact that many of the senior junta leaders, including the former AFRC Chairman, Major Koroma, had not been apprehended, and to the continuing violence being inflicted on civilians by RUF forces during their retreat.

ECOMOG had developed a concept of operations that set out the preliminary planning for the disarmament and demobilization of the Sierra Leonean combatants, including: deployment throughout Sierra Leone; manning of selected entry points by land, sea or air in order to ensure that no arms, ammunition or war matériel were brought into the country; disarmament of ex-combatants at designated sites; establishment of road blocks to check the movement of arms and ammunition and to assist in extending protection to refugees and internally displaced persons; conducting patrols to create an atmosphere conducive to freedom of movement and the restoration of established authority; and providing security for key individuals, UN personnel, including military personnel, and NGOs. The plan called for the deployment of 15,000 troops in the western, northern, southern and eastern sectors. The eastern sector was described as strategic in view of its mineral resources, the presence of heavy RUF and Kamajor concentration, and the border with Liberia.

Shortly after the collapse of the junta, the Secretary-General's Special Envoy led a security and humanitarian assessment mission to Sierra Leone. On 7 March, he reopened the UN office in Freetown.

A number of UN humanitarian assessment missions sent to Sierra Leone had determined that the humanitarian situation remained serious. UN agencies had prepared a consolidated inter-agency flash appeal, which was launched on 3 March (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

At the request of President Kabbah, and with financial help from Japan, UNHCR had begun to prepare for the repatriation from Conakry of up to 5,000 Sierra Leonean refugees. ECOMOG control of major towns in the southern part of the country was expected to encourage the early repatriation of Sierra Leonean refugees from Liberia. Of the total caseload of Liberian refugees in Sierra Leone, some 2,800 had been re-registered with UNHCR, about half of them requesting repatriation.

The Secretary-General observed that the developments in Sierra Leone since the submission of his last report should be seen as positive in the context of the wider situation in which they transpired. The removal of the junta had opened the way for the re-establishment not just of the legitimate Government, but also of civil order, the democratic process and the beginnings of economic and social development. The Secretary-General proposed a comprehensive set of measures to assist the Government and the people of Sierra Leone in their immediate and longer-term needs: the strengthening of the office of the Special Envoy in Freetown; the possible deployment of human rights observers; and the deployment of up to 10 UN military liaison personnel for a period of up to 90 days, whose functions, in addition to those outlined in his previous report (see above), would be to ascertain the state of and to assist in the finalization of planning by ECOMOG for future tasks, such as the identification of the former combatant elements to be disarmed and the design of a disarmament plan.

The Secretary-General said that the events that had taken place in Sierra Leone challenged the international community to consider how it should respond to similar crises; Africa could no longer tolerate or accept as fails accomplis coups d'état against elected Governments or the illegal seizure of power by military cliques. He called on the international community to maintain its vigilance and to provide bilateral and multilateral aid.

In an addendum to his report [S/1998/249/Add.1], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that the estimated cost of strengthening the Special Envoy's office and deploying the military liaison personnel in Freetown would amount to some $1.4 million gross for a three-month period.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

On 17 April [meeting 3872], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1162(1998). The draft [S/1998/324] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1132(1997) of 8 October 1997 and 1156(1998) of 16 March 1998 and the statement by its President of 26 February 1998,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 18 March 1998,

1. Welcomes the efforts made by the democratically elected President of Sierra Leone since his return on 10 March 1998 and by the Government of Sierra Leone to restore peaceful and secure conditions in the country, to re-establish effective administration and the democratic process and to embark on the task of reconstruction and rehabilitation;

2. Commends the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) and its Monitoring Group (ECOMOG), deployed in Sierra Leone, on the important role they are playing in support of the objectives related to the restoration of peace and security set out in paragraph 1 above;

3. Emphasizes the need to promote national reconciliation in Sierra Leone, and encourages all parties in the country to work together towards this objective;

4. Notes with satisfaction the steps taken by the Secretary-General to strengthen the office of his Special Envoy in Freetown with necessary civilian and military personnel with the aims proposed in his report of 18 March 1998;

5. Authorizes the deployment, with immediate effect, of up to ten United Nations military liaison and security advisory personnel, in accordance with paragraph 44 of the report of the Secretary-General, to Sierra Leone for a period of up to ninety days, to work under the authority of the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General, to coordinate closely with the Government of Sierra Leone and ECOMOG, to report on the military situation in the country, to ascertain the state of and to assist in the finalization of planning by ECOMOG for future tasks, such as the identification of the former combatant elements to be disarmed and the design of a disarmament plan, as well as to perform other related security tasks as identified in paragraphs 42, 45 and 46 of the report of the Secretary-General;

6. Welcomes the discussions taking place between the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General, the Government of Sierra Leone and ECOMOG on the further elaboration and implementation of the ECOMOG concept of operations, and the intention of the Secretary-General to revert to the Council with further recommendations on the possible deployment in this regard of United Nations military personnel, and expresses its intention to consider such recommendations and take a decision thereon expeditiously;

7. Urges all States and international organizations to provide urgent humanitarian assistance to Sierra Leone, in response to the consolidated inter-agency appeal launched on 3 March 1998;

8. Encourages all States and international organizations to assist and participate in the longer term tasks of reconstruction and economic and social recovery and development in Sierra Leone;

9. Urges all States to make contributions to the trust fund which has been established to support peace-keeping and related activities in Sierra Leone, and to provide technical and logistical support to assist ECOMOG to continue to carry out its peacekeeping role;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council periodically, including on the activities of the military liaison and security advisory personnel referred to in paragraph 5 above and on the work of the office of his Special Envoy in Sierra Leone, within the reporting time frame in paragraph 16 of resolution 1132(1997);

11. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Communications. On 20 May [S/1998/428], the Secretary-General proposed to the Security Council President that India, Kenya, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and Zambia be included in the list of countries contributing military personnel to the UN liaison team. He noted that some members of the team had already arrived in Sierra Leone under the leadership of Brigadier-General Subhash Chand Joshi (India). The Council's agreement with the proposal was conveyed to the Secretary-General on 26 May [S/1998/429].

Termination of sanctions

By a 9 March letter to the Security Council President [S/1998/215], the representative of the democratically elected Government of Sierra Leone, noting that the illegal military junta had been ousted by ECOMOG troops, requested that a meeting of the Council be convened as a matter of urgency to consider lifting the sanctions imposed by resolution 1132(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 135] on the importation of petroleum and petroleum products into Sierra Leone.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

On 16 March [meeting 3861], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1156(1998). The draft [S/1998/232] was submitted by Kenya and the United Kingdom.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 1132(1997) of 8 October 1997 and the relevant statements by its President,

Taking note of the letter dated 9 March 1998 from the Chargé d'affaires a.i. of the Permanent Mission of Sierra Leone to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Welcomes the return to Sierra Leone of its democratically elected President on 10 March 1998;

2. Decides to terminate, with immediate effect, the prohibitions on the sale or supply to Sierra Leone of petroleum and petroleum products referred to in paragraph 6 of resolution 1132(1997);

3. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to make proposals concerning the role of the United Nations and its future presence in Sierra Leone;

4. Decides to review the other prohibitions referred to in resolution 1132(1997) in accordance with paragraph 17 of that resolution and in the light of developments and further discussion with the Government of Sierra Leone;

5. Decides also to remain seized of the matter.

Communication (April). By a 3 April letter to the Security Council President [S/1998/295], Sierra Leone, noting that the sanctions imposed under resolution 1132(1997) would soon be coming up for review, expressed the view that the arms embargo and travel restrictions imposed should remain in force. Since fighting was still going on in parts of the eastern province and heinous crimes, such as genocide, murder, rape, arson and looting, were being committed daily by the remnants of the AFRC/RUF junta, lifting the arms embargo would allow the junta to import more arms into the country, leading to the intensification of the war. In addition, lifting the travel restrictions would allow leaders of the military junta to flee from Sierra Leone and hence from justice.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 5 June [meeting 3889], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1171(1998). The draft [S/1998/466] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1132(1997) of 8 October 1997, 1156(1998) of 16 March 1998 and 1162(1998) of 17 April 1998 and the statements by its President of 26 February and 20 May 1998,

Welcoming the efforts of the Government of Sierra Leone to restore peaceful and secure conditions in the country, to re-establish effective administration and the democratic process, and to promote national reconciliation,

Deploring the continued resistance to the authority of the legitimate Government of Sierra Leone, and stressing the urgency for all rebels to put an end to the atrocities, cease their resistance and lay down their arms,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides to terminate the remaining prohibitions imposed by paragraphs 5 and 6 of resolution 1132(1997);

2. Also decides, with a view to prohibiting the sale and supply of arms and related matériel to non-governmental forces in Sierra Leone, that all States shall prevent the sale or supply, by their nationals or from their territories, or using their flag vessels or aircraft, of arms and related matériel of all types, including weapons and ammunition, military vehicles and equipment, paramilitary equipment and spare parts for the aforementioned, to Sierra Leone other than to the Government of Sierra Leone through named points of entry on a list to be supplied by that Government to the Secretary-General, who shall promptly notify all Member States of the United Nations of the list;

3. Further decides that the restrictions referred to in paragraph 2 above shall not apply to the sale or supply of arms and related matériel for the sole use in Sierra Leone of the Monitoring Group of the Economic Community of West African States or the United Nations;

4. Decides that States shall notify all exports from their territories of arms or related matériel to Sierra Leone to the Committee established by resolution 1132(1997), that the Government of Sierra Leone shall mark, register and notify to the Committee all imports made by it of arms and related matériel, and that the Committee shall report regularly to the Council on notifications so received;

5. Also decides that all States shall prevent the entry into or transit through their territories of leading members of the former military junta and of the Revolutionary United Front, as designated by the Committee established by resolution 1132(1997), provided that the entry into or transit through a particular State of any such person may be authorized by the same Committee, and provided that nothing in the present paragraph shall oblige a State to refuse its own nationals entry to its territory;

6. Further decides that the Committee established by resolution 1132(1997) shall continue to undertake the tasks referred to in subparagraphs 10 (a), (b), (c), (d), (f) and (h) of that resolution in relation to paragraphs 2 and 5 above;

7. Expresses its readiness to terminate the measures referred to in paragraphs 2, 4 and 5 above once the control of the Government of Sierra Leone has been fully re-established over all its territory, and when all non-governmental forces have been disarmed and demobilized;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council within three months of the date of adoption of the present resolution, and again within six months, regarding, in particular, the export of arms and related matériel referred to in paragraph 2 above, and on progress made towards the objectives referred to in paragraph 7 above;

9. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

On 17 June [S/1998/604], the Russian Federation informed the Secretary-General that, in accordance with resolution 1156(1998), its President had issued a decree repealing the provisions of resolution 1132(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 135] prohibiting the sale and supply of petroleum and petroleum products to Sierra Leone. The Russian Federation was also preparing to adopt appropriate legislation to implement resolution 1171(1998).

Further developments

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

At informal consultations on 7 May, the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations briefed the Security Council on developments in Sierra Leone, in particular the deployment of military liaison personnel, as authorized in resolution 1162(1998), as well as the security and humanitarian situation. The Council was briefed by the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Sierra Leone at informal consultations on 13 May with regard to steps taken by President Kabbah towards the consolidation of democracy and the urgent problems facing Sierra Leone, particularly the national security situation.

On 20 May [meeting 3882], the President of the Security Council, on behalf of its members, made the following statement [S/PRST/1998/13]:

The Security Council condemns as gross violations of international humanitarian law the recent atrocities carried out against the civilian population of Sierra Leone, particularly women and children, by members of the Revolutionary United Front and the deposed military junta, including widespread rape, mutilation, and slaughter. It calls for an immediate end to all violence against civilians. The Council, in this regard, expresses grave concern about reports of military support being provided to the rebels. It calls upon all States to observe strictly the provisions of resolution 1132(1997) and to avoid any action that might further destabilize the situation in Sierra Leone.

The Council deplores the continued resistance to the authority of the legitimate Government of Sierra Leone and calls upon all rebels to cease their resistance, lay down their arms, and surrender to forces of the Monitoring Group (ECOMOG) of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) immediately. It again commends ECOWAS and ECOMOG for the important role they are playing in restoring peace and security in Sierra Leone. The Council reiterates its call for States to provide technical and logistical support to assist ECOMOG to continue to enhance its ability to carry out its peacekeeping role and contribute to bringing an end to the atrocities being committed against the people of Sierra Leone.

The Council expresses deep concern for the plight of all those affected by the continuing insecurity, including the tens of thousands of refugees and displaced persons. It urges all those concerned to continue humanitarian assistance and underscores the importance of a comprehensive response by United Nations agencies in coordination with the Government of Sierra Leone and with the support of ECOMOG. The Council also recognizes the important role played by the international community, including the Organization of African Unity and relevant non-governmental organizations, to provide humanitarian assistance to civilians in dire need in Sierra Leone. The Council commends the Governments of neighbouring countries for their reception of refugees and calls upon all States and relevant international organizations to help them in responding to the refugee crisis.

The Council expresses concern for the safety of all humanitarian personnel working in Sierra Leone. It calls upon all parties concerned to facilitate the work of humanitarian agencies. The Council urges the parties to protect displaced persons seeking refuge, as well as United Nations and humanitarian aid workers.

The Council welcomes the efforts made by the democratically elected Government since its return on 10 March 1998 to restore peace and stability and to re-establish effective administration and the democratic process in Sierra Leone. It encourages ECOWAS to renew its political efforts to foster peace and stability and urges all parties in the country to embark on the tasks of national reconstruction, rehabilitation and reconciliation. The Council urges all parties concerned to respect fully international law, including human rights and humanitarian law.

The Council urges States and other parties concerned to contribute to the trust fund to support peacekeeping and related activities in Sierra Leone, and to humanitarian assistance efforts.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to keep it advised of the situation in Sierra Leone.

The Council will remain seized of this matter.

Report of Secretary-General (June). On 9 June [S/1998/486], the Secretary-General observed that, since his last report, the situation in Sierra Leone had in some respects improved considerably. Since its restoration on 10 March, the Government had moved rapidly to reassert its authority throughout much of the country. However, in the eastern part and parts of the north, the remnants of the former junta continued to resist ECOMOG forces and attack civilians. President Kabbah, with the support of Parliament, had proclaimed a state of emergency, empowering him to take measures to ensure security and stability. The Government had also established a National Commission for Reconstruction, Resettlement and Rehabilitation, responsible for coordinating donor, government and non-governmental activities.

Although ECOMOG had continued to make progress, it was severely overextended and its advance had been beset by logistical constraints, as well as by fierce resistance from elements of AFRC and RUF, the partners in the former junta. As ECOMOG troops approached, the former junta soldiers attacked the local civilian population, killing, raping and mutilating hundreds of them, causing tens of thousands of Sierra Leoneans to flee into Guinea and Liberia and tens of thousands more to flee into the interior of Sierra Leone. Hundreds of patients had been admitted to hospitals suffering from amputation of limbs and ears and severe lacerations. ECOMOG was being supported by units of the Sierra Leonean Civil Defence Force (CDF), which was composed of irregular community-based fighters who fought the junta before the restoration of the legitimate Government.

The Special Envoy attended the seventeenth meeting of ECOWAS Chiefs of Staff (Accra, Ghana, 4-5 May), which discussed the situation in Sierra Leone. ECOMOG's objectives in Sierra Leone were outlined as follows: the attainment of peace, the training of a new Sierra Leonean army, and the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of Sierra Leonean combatants into society, accompanied by humanitarian assistance. The achievement of those objectives would be followed by ECOMOG's withdrawal.

The Secretary-General said that the security situation in Freetown continued to be favourable, with a strong but discreet ECOMOG presence and widespread deployment of the Sierra Leonean police. Schools, banks and markets were functioning normally, some international air links had been restored and food and fuel were widely available. Nevertheless, ECOMOG continued to recover weapons in house-to-house searches, conducted on the basis of information received about the presence in the capital of former junta members and common criminals.

Several groups of rebels had moved northwards and westwards in an apparent attempt to re-establish some of their camps in the north. They had been attacking towns and villages, terrorizing local communities and extorting food from them. The situation in the north was considered unsatisfactory and food convoys had to be guarded by armed escorts. In the course of their retreat towards the eastern part of the country, former junta elements had inflicted extensive damage and engaged in indiscriminate looting and property destruction.

The United States had contributed $3.9 million to ECOMOG over a four-month period through a logistical services company. However, additional contributions, whether bilateral or through the trust fund to support peacekeeping and related activities in Sierra Leone, would be needed to assist in the deployment of additional ECOMOG forces.

ECOMOG believed that it had identified some dead combatants as Liberians after clashes with junta elements and had reportedly captured more than 100 Liberian fighters. President Taylor of Liberia denied allegations that his Government was involved in the conflict in Sierra Leone and reaffirmed that Liberia would not permit its territory to be used to destabilize any neighbouring country. President Taylor also stated that he had approved the deployment of an ECOMOG observer unit at the border with Sierra Leone.

In northern and north-eastern Sierra Leone, the humanitarian situation continued to deteriorate as a result of the activity of the former junta forces. In the western area and the southern and eastern provinces, aid agencies had begun to re-activate programmes as they had benefited from improved security and access. The Secretary-General said that, as a consequence of the wave of atrocities, hospitals and clinics throughout the north had been overwhelmed by the influx of civilians suffering from amputations and maimings.

UNHCR reported that refugees from Sierra Leone were continuing to flow into eastern Guinea at a rate of 300 people per day, despite reported attempts by the remnants of the junta to prevent people from leaving the country. Since March 1998, some 237,000 Sierra Leoneans had poured into Guinea and Liberia, bringing the total number of Sierra Leonean refugees in the two neighbouring countries to 530,000 people since the start of the conflict in 1991. Reports indicated that there were also about 40,000 internally displaced persons.

Following the removal of the junta in February and the subsequent ECOMOG action, the Abidjan Agreement and the Conakry Agreement were considered to have been effectively superseded. However, at the State opening of Parliament, President Kabbah indicated that elements of the Agreements would be taken into consideration in the implementation of the disarmament and demobilization programme. The prompt implementation of such a programme was regarded as essential to the stability of Sierra Leone and of the subregion in general.

Although ECOMOG and the Government had developed plans for the disarmament and demobilization of former combatants and for their reintegration into society [S/1998/741], their implementation was dependent in part on the willingness of those who were still resisting ECOMOG's advance in the north to surrender. On 5 June, the Special Envoy convened a meeting of UN agencies, NGOs and donor representatives to discuss the coordination of international support and contributions to the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of the ex-combatants.

The Secretary-General said that the priority task in Sierra Leone was the disarmament and demobilization of as many former combatants as possible. He intended to convene a high-level conference in order to mobilize assistance for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process, and for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Sierra Leone (see below). The conference would discuss assistance to ECOMOG in order to improve its peacekeeping capacity.

The Secretary-General stated that he had developed a concept of operations for a UN peacekeeping observer mission, initially for a six-month period, whose immediate objectives would be to monitor the military and security situation in the country as a whole, with a view to assisting the Government and ECOMOG in the implementation of disarmament and demobilization and to monitor the demobilization of former combatants already disarmed by ECOMOG and concentrated in secure areas of the country. The mission would be known as the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone (UNOMSIL) and would be led by his Special Envoy, who would be designated Special Representative for Sierra Leone. The Chief Military Observer would be Brigadier-General Joshi, who was currently the team leader of the small military liaison cell already deployed in Sierra Leone.

In an addendum to his report [S/1998/486/Add.1], the Secretary-General estimated that the cost of UNOMSIL for an initial six-month period would total some $18.3 million gross. That estimate provided for the deployment of 186 military and civilian personnel, consisting of 70 military observers, a 15-person medical unit, 5 civilian police advisers, 48 international civilian personnel and 48 locally recruited staff.

The Secretary-General said that it was difficult to assess whether the mission might need to be expanded after the initial six-month period. His recommendations on the matter would depend on ECOMOG's progress in restoring security throughout the country. Since ECOMOG was a potential target of attacks by the remnants of the junta and, thus, unarmed military observers under its protection might not be regarded as neutral, the Secretary-General envisaged the possibility, at a future stage, of recommending the deployment of a highly mobile unit of armed UN troops, operating in close cooperation with ECOMOG but independent of it, to protect observers in locations where their security might be at risk. The Secretary-General also intended to pursue with President Taylor of Liberia his proposal for the deployment of a small contingent of UN military observers at the border with Sierra Leone, in order to assist in verifying that Liberian territory was not being used to destabilize Sierra Leone and that foreign forces were not assisting the remnants of the former junta there.

The Secretary-General joined with the Security Council in deploring the continued resistance to the legitimate Government, in calling on the supporters of the junta to lay down their arms, and in condemning the atrocities carried out by junta elements against the civilian population. In the longer term, UN agencies and NGOs would need to offer support in the form of prosthesis services for all amputees and psycho-social treatment of traumatized victims and their families. He supported the recommendation of his Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict, Olara A. Otunnu, that Sierra Leone be made a pilot project for a more concerted and effective response in the context of post-conflict peace-building.

UN-ECOWAS meeting (July)

By a 10 July letter [S/1998/629], Nigeria forwarded to the Security Council President the text of the joint communiqué issued following the meeting co-hosted by the Secretary-General and the Chairman of ECOWAS and head of State of Nigeria, General Abubakar. The meeting, held in Abuja, Nigeria, on 2 July, was attended by Presidents Kabbah of Sierra Leone and Taylor of Liberia. The participants addressed a number of regional and subregional issues, including ways in which security and cooperation between Liberia and Sierra Leone could be further improved, which confidence-building measures could be introduced by the two Governments and what role ECOWAS and the United Nations could play in support of those efforts.

Liberia and Sierra Leone condemned the continued rebel activities in Sierra Leone and the atrocities that had been committed there; reaffirmed the 1986 non-aggression protocol of the Mano River Union agreement (a customs and economic union between Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone) and their commitment to prevent their territories from being used for destabilization activities, with special attention drawn to the need to control demobilized former combatants; and welcomed the deployment of observers from the United Nations and ECOMOG along their borders.

The three regional leaders called on the United Nations to increase its presence in Sierra Leone, and the Secretary-General, expressing support for their call, noted that the Security Council was considering the matter.

Special Conference on Sierra Leone

On 17 August [S/1998/772], the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council President on the Special Conference on Sierra Leone convened by him in New York on 30 July. The Conference considered the Government's programme for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants and its peace-building initiatives; ECOMOG's role in re-establishing basic security; the actions necessary to meet ECOMOG's manpower and logistical needs; the humanitarian situation and refugees; and the role of the international community in mobilizing and coordinating support for Sierra Leone. Representatives of some 55 countries attended the Conference, as did representatives of regional organizations, including OAU, the EU and ECOWAS, and UN specialized agencies.

The participants commended the steps taken by President Kabbah since his restoration on 10 March to restore security, re-establish constitutional order and promote reconciliation, reconstruction and rehabilitation. The continued resistance of remnants of AFRC and RUF, especially their perpetration of atrocities, was strongly condemned. President Kabbah and President Taylor of Liberia were urged to continue to improve relations between their two countries and to improve regional security. The importance of stopping the entry of illegal weapons into Sierra Leone and ending neighbouring countries' support to the rebels was stressed. The need for the Sierra Leone Government to pursue policies directed at promoting national reconciliation, while ensuring that those responsible for crimes and atrocities against the civilian population were brought to justice, was acknowledged. All those accused had to be given fair trials with full respect for due process.

The achievements of ECOWAS and the efforts of ECOMOG in the restoration of the legitimate Government and basic security in many areas of the country were commended. ECOMOG had deployed almost 10,000 troops in Sierra Leone, mainly from Guinea and Nigeria, but 5,000 more were needed to enable the force to carry out its mandate effectively.

The humanitarian situation and the plight of the large number of refugees remained a serious cause for concern for which donor assistance was urgently needed. Appreciation was expressed to those countries that had provided sanctuary for the refugees, particularly Guinea and Liberia.

UNOMSIL

The Security Council met on 13 July [meeting 3902] to consider the Secretary-General's 9 June report [S/1998/486 & Add.1] (see above), in which he recommended the deployment of a UN observer mission in Sierra Leone. The Council unanimously adopted resolution 1181(1998). The draft [S/1998/620] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous relevant resolutions and the statements by its President,

Welcoming the continued efforts of the Government of Sierra Leone to restore peaceful and secure conditions in the country, to re-establish effective administration and the democratic process and to embark on the task of national reconciliation, reconstruction and rehabilitation,

Recognizing the important contribution of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) in support of these objectives,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 9 June 1998,

Noting the objectives set by ECOWAS for its Monitoring Group (ECOMOG), as described in paragraph 17 of the report of the Secretary-General,

Gravely concerned at the loss of life and immense suffering undergone by the people of Sierra Leone, including refugees and displaced persons, as a result of the continuing rebel attacks, and in particular at the plight of children affected by the conflict,

1. Condemns the continued resistance of remnants of the ousted junta and members of the Revolutionary United Front to the authority of the legitimate government and the violence they are perpetrating against the civilian population of Sierra Leone, and demands that they lay down their arms immediately;

2. Emphasizes the need to promote national reconciliation in Sierra Leone, encourages all parties in the country to work together towards this objective, and welcomes the assistance of the Secretary-General and his Special Envoy in that regard;

3. Welcomes the proposal in the report of the Secretary-General of 9 June 1998 on the establishment of the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone;

4. Notes that the Government of Sierra Leone has adopted a disarmament, demobilization and reintegration plan agreed with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the United Nations Development Programme and other donors;

5. Commends the positive role of ECOWAS and ECOMOG in their efforts to restore peace, security and stability throughout the country at the request of the Government of Sierra Leone, and notes the role of ECOMOG in assisting the implementation of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration plan adopted by the Government, including the provision of security and responsibility for arms collection and destruction;

6. Decides to establish the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone for an initial period of six months until 13 January 1999, and further decides that it shall include up to seventy military observers as well as a small medical unit, with the necessary equipment and civilian support staff, with the following mandate:

(a) To monitor the military and security situation in the country as a whole, as security conditions permit, and to provide the Special Representative of the Secretary-General with regular information thereon, in particular with a view to determining when conditions are sufficiently secure to allow subsequent deployments of military observers beyond the first phase described in paragraph 7 below;

(b) To monitor the disarmament and demobilization of former combatants concentrated in secure areas of the country, including monitoring of the role of ECOMOG in the provision of security and in the collection and destruction of arms in those secure areas;

(c) To assist in monitoring respect for international humanitarian law, including at disarmament and demobilization sites, where security conditions permit;

(d) To monitor the voluntary disarmament and demobilization of members of the Civil Defence Forces, as security conditions permit;

7. Decides also that the elements of the Mission referred to in paragraph 6 above shall be deployed as outlined in the report of the Secretary-General, with approximately forty military observers deployed in the first phase to the areas secured by ECOMOG, and that subsequent deployments shall take place as soon as security conditions permit, and subject to progress on the implementation of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration plan and the availability of the necessary equipment and resources;

8. Decides further that the Mission shall be led by the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General, who will be designated Special Representative for Sierra Leone, that the Mission shall subsume the office of the Special Envoy and its civilian staff, and that the augmented civilian staff, as recommended by the Secretary-General in paragraphs 74 and 75 of his report, shall perform, inter alia, the following tasks:

(a) To advise, in coordination with other international efforts, the Government of Sierra Leone and local police officials on police practice, training, re-equipment and recruitment, in particular on the need to respect internationally accepted standards of policing in democratic societies, to advise on the planning of the reform and restructuring of the Sierra Leone police force, and to monitor progress in that regard;

(b) To report on violations of international humanitarian law and human rights in Sierra Leone and, in consultation with the relevant United Nations agencies, to assist the Government of Sierra Leone in its efforts to address the country's human rights needs;

9. Welcomes the commitment of ECOMOG to ensure the security of United Nations personnel, and in this regard welcomes also the intention of the Secretary-General to establish security arrangements for United Nations personnel with the Chairman of ECOWAS and to conclude a status-of-mission agreement with Government of Sierra Leone;

10. Decides that the elements of the Mission referred to in paragraph 6 above shall be deployed when the Secretary-General informs the Council that security arrangements and the status-of-mission agreement have been concluded, and further decides to keep the deployment of the Mission under review in the light of the prevailing security conditions;

11. Stresses the need for full cooperation and close coordination between the Mission and ECOMOG in their respective operational activities;

12. Demands that all factions and forces in Sierra Leone strictly respect the status of Mission personnel, as well as organizations and agencies delivering humanitarian assistance throughout Sierra Leone, and that they respect human rights and abide by applicable rules of international humanitarian law;

13. Expresses its serious concern at the reports of cross-border arms flows and support to the rebels in Sierra Leone, welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General, as indicated in his report, to pursue with all parties concerned steps to eliminate these activities, and in that regard reaffirms the obligation of all States to comply strictly with the terms of the embargo on the sale or supply of arms and related matériel to Sierra Leone imposed by resolution 1171(1998) of 5 June 1998, and to bring all instances of violations of the arms embargo before the Committee established by resolution 1132(1997) of 8 October 1997;

14. Welcomes the efforts of the Government of Sierra Leone to coordinate an effective national response to the needs of children affected by armed conflict, and the recommendation of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict that Sierra Leone be made one of the pilot projects for a more concerted and effective response to the needs of children in the context of post-conflict peace-building;

15. Welcomes also the decision of the Secretary-General to convene a high-level conference to mobilize assistance for peacekeeping activities, emergency and humanitarian needs and reconstruction and rehabilitation in Sierra Leone;

16. Reiterates its urgent appeal to States to make contributions to the trust fund which has been established to support peacekeeping and related activities in Sierra Leone, to provide technical and logistical support to assist ECOMOG to carry out its peacekeeping role, and to help facilitate the provision by other States members of ECOWAS of additional troops to strengthen the deployment of ECOMOG in Sierra Leone;

17. Urges all States and international organizations to provide urgent humanitarian assistance to Sierra Leone, in response to the consolidated inter-agency appeal launched on 24 June 1998;

18. Encourages all States and international organizations to assist and participate in the longer-term tasks of reconstruction and economic and social recovery and development in Sierra Leone;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to submit an initial report to the Council within thirty days of the adoption of the present resolution and every sixty days thereafter on the deployment of the Mission and on its progress in carrying out its mandate, and also to inform the Council on plans for the later phases of the deployment of the Mission when security conditions permit these to be implemented;

20. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

In a 16 July letter to the Security Council President [S/1998/673], the Secretary-General proposed that China, Egypt, India, Kenya, Kyrgyzstan, New Zealand, Pakistan, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and Zambia be included in the list of countries contributing military personnel to UNOMSIL, and reiterated that Brigadier-General Joshi would serve as the Chief Military Observer. The Council agreed with the Secretary-General's proposal on 21 July [S/1998/674].

On 3 August [S/1998/714], in reference to the implementation of paragraphs 9 and 10 of resolution 1181(1998), the Secretary-General informed the Council President that he had written to President Kabbah on 29 July to state the terms of the status-of-mission agreement and that the Government of Sierra Leone had accepted the agreement that same day. He had also written to the Chairman of ECOWAS concerning the establishment of security arrangements for UN personnel. On 5 August [S/1998/715], the Council took note of the information contained in the Secretary-General's letter.

Reports of Secretary-General (August, October and December). On 12 August [S/1998/750], the Secretary-General submitted the first progress report on UNOMSIL's deployment and described developments in Sierra Leone since his 9 June report.

The Government of Sierra Leone continued to strengthen its authority and improve its organization and functioning, and relations between Liberia and Sierra Leone had improved significantly. A Liberian delegation that visited Freetown on 22 and 23 June denied allegations that its Government was supporting the remnants of AFRC and RUF and expressed concern that some Liberian dissidents were reported to be planning to use Sierra Leone as a base from which to attack Liberia. On 20 July, President Kabbah paid a one-day visit to Monrovia, at the written invitation of President Taylor, to attend the Liberian National Reconciliation Conference. In a joint communiqué issued after the meeting, the two leaders renewed their call to ECOWAS to deploy observer units on the Liberia/Sierra Leone border and agreed to coordinate border security activities. In a later development, Sierra Leone denied any involvement in an alleged plot to overthrow the Government of Liberia, which had been widely reported in Monrovia.

On 25 July, Nigeria released the leader of RUF, Corporal Sankoh, to Sierra Leonean custody. The Government of Sierra Leone detained him and issued a public statement calling for his supporters, who were still fighting, to surrender by 8 August. There had been no response to the Government's call.

Since the end of June, the military and security situation in Sierra Leone had improved somewhat, as reports of atrocities committed by elements of the former junta had declined markedly. ECOMOG had maintained its pressure on the remaining stronghold of the former junta in the eastern part of the country, while the situation in the north-east remained volatile and unpredictable, as was demonstrated by the rebels' capture and brief occupation of Kabala. ECOMOG had reinducted former RSLMF personnel, totalling some 2,500 men, alongside its own troops to assist in protecting supply lines and, in some cases, in combat duties. Although ECOMOG's operational capacity had improved, thanks to logistical assistance provided by the United States, ECOMOG was still overstretched and in need of significant additional logistical support in order to contain the rebels and restore and maintain order in the eastern and northern parts of the country. While CDF was nominally under ECOMOG's command, reports continued to be received of unruly or criminal behaviour on the part of some members of the Force. CDF had made a commitment to end its practice of recruiting and initiating child soldiers, who comprised a high proportion of their ranks.

The Secretary-General noted that, as at 10 August, a total of 26 UN military observers had been deployed in Sierra Leone, while the medical unit was expected to arrive by 20 August. The Special Representative was planning to dispatch, at the appropriate time, a team of observers from Freetown to the border between Liberia and Sierra Leone to examine the feasibility of an eventual co-deployment of UN military observers with ECOMOG troops in that region.

Following the Government of Sierra Leone's adoption of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme (see above), the National Committee had commenced work. RSLMF had effectively been disbanded and was in a state of disgrace as a result of its participation in the military coup of May 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 132] and the subsequent junta rule. One aspect of the reintegration process that had given cause for concern was the hostile attitude of the general public to former RSLMF personnel.

The rebel campaign of terror and their military activities had resulted in the displacement of over 410,000 people since February. Some 250,000 of those were in Guinea and Liberia and the remainder were internally displaced in Sierra Leone. Important humanitarian activities since June included efforts to address the serious crisis in north central Sierra Leone, the influx of spontaneous returnees from Liberia and the repatriation by UNHCR of Liberian and Sierra Leonean refugees.

Although 58 persons were being prosecuted in the regular courts and the court martial of 38 soldiers had begun, the Government of Sierra Leone conceded that its judicial system was entirely inadequate. Outside Freetown, the courts were not functioning at all and the traditional court system had collapsed. Sierra Leone had six functioning prisons, but prisoners were also held in an unverifiable number of other facilities, including military camps. Conditions in many facilities were overcrowded and unsanitary and the food and medical care were inadequate.

In his second progress report, of 16 October [S/1998/960], the Secretary-General stated that the Government and Parliament of Sierra Leone had continued to take steps to extend their authority and to reform national institutions, with a view to increasing efficiency and eliminating corruption and duplication. On 2 September, President Kabbah outlined plans to create a new national security system, based on the reconstitution of national armed forces, the reform of the police force and the integration of CDF.

A prominent issue was the handling of the civilian trial of RUF leader Corporal Sankoh, which commenced on 24 September. After Corporal Sankoh had been placed in government custody, RUF, on 17 August, announced a terror campaign against civilians, CDF and ECOMOG if the Government failed to release their leader within seven days. The Government had made it clear that Corporal Sankoh would stand trial and that there would be no resumption of negotiations or peace talks in view of the failure of RUF and the junta in the past to comply with the provisions of the Abidjan and Conakry Agreements.

Relations between Liberia and Sierra Leone had experienced complications, arising in part from the continuing conflict in eastern Sierra Leone. On 13 October, President Kabbah informed the Secretary-General of alleged preparations by Liberia for the dispatch of fighters for an incursion into Sierra Leone. The allegations were denied by President Taylor and UN military observers also detected no evidence of an armed incursion from Liberia. Following that incident, the two leaders were reported to have agreed to be in regular contact in order to work towards strengthening relations.

Following the Special Conference on Sierra Leone on 30 July (see above), the Government of Sierra Leone had established a 10-member working group charged with following up on the commitments and pledges made at the Conference. The United Kingdom had taken the initiative of convening an international contact group on Sierra Leone in London in early November.

The security situation in Sierra Leone had experienced considerable fluctuations. A relatively quiet phase in July was followed by some volatility in late August and September, marked by a considerable increase in rebel attacks, accompanied by a resurgence of atrocities, including the destruction of villages and the torture, mutilation and execution of large numbers of civilians. The rebel build-up had been most significant in the north and brought the area of rebel activity closer to the centre of the country. The situation in Freetown remained safe and stable and the whole of the southern province remained free of rebel activity. The Secretary-General said that he was keeping the situation in Sierra Leone under review and would deploy additional observers only after taking full account of the security situation.

The Governments of Côte d'Ivoire, the Gambia, Guinea, Mali and the Niger had indicated their readiness to provide contingents to assist ECOMOG troops, stating that they could be deployed if the international community was prepared to bear the costs of transporting them to Sierra Leone.

At the end of August, UNOMSIL completed the first phase of the deployment of its military component, consisting of 40 military observers, the Chief Military Observer and a medical team. In addition to mission headquarters in Freetown, UNOMSIL had deployed military observers to five team sites, namely, the three provincial capitals, Bo, Kenema and Makeni, the main demobilization site at Lungi, and Hastings airport. Although there had been occasional restrictions on their movement for security reasons, the observers had not experienced any disruption in their operations or threats to their personal safety.

A total of 2,145 former RSLMF and RUF personnel were screened and registered by 25 September. The full demobilization of those ex-combatants was scheduled to end in December. The pace of the programme lagged behind the original goals due to the fact that it was being implemented against the background of a continued war effort. Since most of the ex-RSLMF soldiers encamped at Lungi had been reinducted by ECOMOG, the number of individuals to be demobilized during the first phase of the programme had been considerably reduced. It was expected, however, that the soldiers who were fighting alongside ECOMOG would eventually undergo the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process. Reports indicated that CDF units had not started the demobilization process.

UNOMSIL and observers from the International Bar Association had found that the civilian group trials were being conducted in a manner that appeared to comply with international procedural standards. It remained a matter of concern, however, that those tried by court martial were deprived of their right to judicial review of the judgements and sentences.

The reform of the police force in Sierra Leone posed great challenges. Parts of the country were without police presence, since many officers were killed or had abandoned their posts during and after the conflict. Moreover, little or no training had been available for years. That situation was exacerbated by the breakdown of the general law enforcement system. Implementation of the Government's police reform process began in August and a three-year draft plan was under discussion. Germany and the United Kingdom had provided funds and equipment in support of those efforts, but further donor assistance was required.

A humanitarian crisis of serious proportions had developed in isolated areas of Sierra Leone, particularly in the north-east. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs estimated that an additional 70,000 persons had been internally displaced since August. The number of Sierra Leonean refugees in Guinea had reached 357,000, of which an estimated 217,700 had arrived since February. About 90,000 Sierra Leonean refugees were in Liberia, including 40,000 new arrivals, while another 10,000 had escaped to other countries, mainly Côte d'Ivoire, the Gambia and Senegal, for a total of 457,000 Sierra Leonean refugees in the subregion. A number of UN agencies continued to provide humanitarian assistance to vulnerable groups, farmers and institutions in accessible areas of the country, with UNHCR assistance. A total of 11,000 refugees from neighbouring countries had been repatriated to Freetown where, at the request of the Government, priority had been given to the return of skilled professionals, civil servants and students, who could contribute to the reconstruction efforts. A number of refugees had also voluntarily returned from Liberia.

The Secretary-General strongly condemned the senseless acts of terror by former junta elements perpetrated against children, such as the amputation of limbs of children as young as six years of age. The human rights abuses committed by the rebels also gave rise to the humanitarian emergency in Sierra Leone, as they continued to cause the widespread dislocation of local populations. The Secretary-General called on the donor community to contribute to the Inter-Agency Consolidation Appeal for Humanitarian Assistance to Sierra Leone (see PART THREE, Chapter III) and to lend every assistance to the Government of Sierra Leone in carrying out its disarmament plan. He commended, in particular, the United Kingdom for its role in providing equipment and logistical support for the screening and registration exercise and for continuing to provide food and emergency medical assistance to ex-combatants and to the larger community.

The Secretary-General urged the Government of Sierra Leone to consider a stay of execution of sentences pending review of the proceedings before international monitoring bodies. He also urged Liberia and Sierra Leone to exercise maximum restraint, pursue dialogue and implement confidence-building measures aimed at improving relations between the two countries. In that context, the deployment of ECOMOG troops at the border, subsequently accompanied by UN military observers, could help stabilize the situation and restore mutual confidence.

On 16 December [S/1998/1176], the Secretary-General submitted his third progress report on UNOMSIL and described developments in Sierra Leone since October.

The Government of Sierra Leone had continued its efforts to consolidate its position, to restore the stability of the country and to improve relations with its neighbours. A number of officers who had supported the May 1997 coup had been found guilty by a court martial and executed, and Corporal Sankoh, the leader of RUF, had been found guilty of treason and related offences and had been sentenced to death. He had selected legal advisers to undertake his appeal following efforts by the Government, with UNOMSIL assistance, to secure legal representation for him, since he had not been legally represented during his trial.

On 7 December, the Chairman of the Security Council Sanctions Committee, Hans Dahlgren (Sweden), arrived in Freetown for a four-day assessment mission (see below).

As called for by the 30 July Special Conference (see above), the United Kingdom convened a meeting of the International Contact Group of donors to Sierra Leone (London, 5 November). The participants agreed on a series of steps to be taken by Sierra Leone, ECOWAS, ECOMOG and the international community. Pursuant to the Council's 26 February Presidential statement (see above), the Secretary-General had established the Trust Fund to Support United Nations Peacekeeping-related Efforts in Sierra Leone on 26 March. As at 11 December, voluntary contributions to the Fund totalled $1.79 million from Japan and the United Kingdom.

On 12 November, at the invitation of President Lansana Conté of Guinea, Presidents Kabbah and Taylor participated in an extraordinary summit meeting of the Mano River Union in Conakry, following which the three heads of State announced their decision to rejuvenate the Union, to ensure the strict observance of the 1986 Non-Aggression and Security Cooperation Agreement between Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone, and to maintain stability in the subregion. In December, President Kabbah agreed with President Taylor's request for cooperation on joint border patrols.

On the basis of the information received by UNOMSIL on the strength, organization and activities of the rebels, there appeared to be six rebel battalion-type formations comprising approximately 300 fighters each. Two of them were primarily AFRC and were based in the north, and the other four, believed to be RUF with some AFRC elements, were deployed around Kailahun, in the eastern part of the country. In the north-west, rebel attacks against civilians had intensified. In the first days of December, a large rebel force moving southwards and westwards launched coordinated and well-planned attacks on several locations. That force was believed to be under the command of S. A. J. Musa, despite the fact that Mr. Musa had publicly offered to surrender to UNOMSIL. The attacks were taking place against the background of a rift that appeared to have arisen between the AFRC remnants in the north and RUF in the east. In the north-east, the rebel capacity to concentrate and coordinate their forces appeared to have eroded. Repeated rebel attempts to gain control of the diamond-rich Koidu area had been unsuccessful, though the area was still in danger of rebel attacks. ECOMOG and CDF had done much to disrupt the supply of arms and ammunition from Kailahun to the rebels in the north.

With regard to the first phase of the disarmament programme, which was supposed to have covered the former RSLMF and RUF personnel who were captured by ECOMOG and encamped at Lungi, 2,973 ex-combatants had been registered but the reintegration process had yet to start due to a lack of funding. Preparations for the opening of two more disarmament sites were under way but the pace of the programme continued to lag behind the original goals since the war had not subsided. The disarmament and demobilization of CDF had yet to begin, since most of its personnel were still fighting.

UNOMSIL had deployed its full complement of five civilian police advisers who were working on the reform and restructuring process of the Sierra Leone police force. Although policing activities had returned to normal, many police stations were still not functional and had to be rebuilt. Policing had yet to be reintroduced in certain areas of the country, while CDF had established its own police force in some of the areas under its control.

Despite the prevailing hostile environment and logistical constraints, the humanitarian agencies had been able to avert potential disasters through a wide range of relief programmes to the most affected war victims. Nevertheless, displacement of civilian populations continued. By mid-November, an estimated 308,695 persons had been internally displaced since February, an increase of 58,000 since the last report.

According to government data, there were encouraging signs of a steady recovery in economic output, reflected in the 0.7 per cent growth rate in the gross domestic product in real terms, compared to a negative 22 per cent for the same period in 1997. Although there was increased activity in the manufacturing, services and construction sectors, output in mining and agriculture continued to be depressed owing to persistent insecurity, especially in the north and east.

The Secretary-General said that, should the Council decide to extend UNOMSIL's mandate beyond 13 January 1999, it was anticipated that estimated additional requirements of some $0.6 million gross, arising during the 1998-1999 financial period in connection with the modest expansion of civilian staff, would be met from resources already provided by the General Assembly under resolution 53/29 (see below).

Noting that UNOMSIL's deployment had demonstrated to Sierra Leone's Government and people the international community's commitment to the restoration of peace and order in the country under the legitimate Government, and had also provided crucial support for humanitarian operations in the countryside, the Secretary-General recommended to the Council that UNOMSIL's mandate be extended for a further six months, until 13 July 1999.

The uncertain security situation in parts of the country and the delays to which the Government's disarmament programme had been subjected made it premature to proceed with further deployments of UN military observers, the Secretary-General stated. However, in order to address the growing demands on the ground and to assist the Government and people of Sierra Leone in their efforts to normalize the situation, he was planning a modest expansion of UNOMSIL's civilian staff.

UNOMSIL financing

On 2 October, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a report on the financing of UNOMSIL [A/53/454]. The proposed budget for the establishment and operation of UNOMSIL for the period 13 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 amounted to $24,323,500 gross ($23,472,800 net), inclusive of $783,700 gross ($768,100 net) related to the cost of strengthening the Office of the Special Envoy for the period 17 April to 12 July 1998. The estimate provided for the deployment of 188 military and civilian personnel, consisting of 85 military observers, inclusive of a 15-person medical unit, 5 civilian police advisers, 50 international civilian staff and 48 locally recruited personnel.

On 10 November [A/53/654], ACABQ, having considered the Secretary-General's report, recommended that the Assembly establish a special account for UNOMSIL and appropriate and assess an amount of $22 million gross for the period 13 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, inclusive of $783,700 gross ($768,100 net) relating to the period 17 April to 12 July 1998, subject to a Council decision on the extension of the mandate of UNOMSIL beyond 13 January 1999.

By a 13 August letter annexed to the report, the ACABQ Chairman had authorized the Secretary-General to enter into commitments in an amount not to exceed $10,624,200 gross ($10,409,500 net), to cover the immediate start-up requirements of UNOMSIL for the period 13 July to 13 November 1998.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/680], adopted resolution 53/29 without vote [agenda item 163].

Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1181(1998) of 13 July 1998, by which the Council decided to establish the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone for an initial period of six months, until 13 January 1999,

Recognizing that the costs of the Observer Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing also that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Observer Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Observer Mission,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Observer Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under Security Council resolution 1181(1998),

1. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

2. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone in full and on time;

3. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Observer Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to employ locally recruited staff for the Observer Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Observer Mission;

6. Decides to appropriate the amount of 22 million United States dollars gross (21,279,800 dollars net) for the establishment and operation of the Observer Mission for the period from 13 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, inclusive of the cost of deploying military and civilian personnel in the amount of 783,700 dollars gross (768,100 dollars net) for the period from 17 April to 12 July 1998 and of the amount of 10,624,200 dollars gross (10,409,500 dollars net) previously authorized by the Advisory Committee for the period from 13 July to 13 November 1998, and requests the Secretary-General to establish a special account for the Observer Mission;

7. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 12,926,600 dollars gross (12,610,300 dollars net) among Member States for the period from 13 July 1998 to 13 January 1999 in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1998 and 1999, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997;

8. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 7 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 316,300 dollars approved for the Observer Mission for the period from 13 July 1998 to 13 January 1999;

9. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 9,073,400 dollars gross (8,669,500 dollars net) among Member States for the period from 14 January to 30 June 1999 at a monthly rate of 1,620,250 dollars gross (1,548,125 dollars net), in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1999, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Observer Mission beyond 13 January 1999;

10. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 403,900 dollars approved for the Observer Mission for the period from 14 January to 30 June 1999;

11. Invites voluntary contributions to the Observer Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedures and practices established by the General Assembly;

12. Decides to keep under review during its fifty-third session the agenda item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone".

The General Assembly, by decision 53/458 of 18 December, decided that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the question of UNOMSIL financing at its resumed fifty-third session in 1999.

Intensification of hostilities

In December, Sierra Leone suffered a serious setback [S/1999/20]. On 17 December, ECOMOG opened an attack on an important rebel base and supply point in the eastern province, which, however, achieved only limited progress. On the following day, a strong rebel attack on Koidu in the eastern province obliged ECOMOG to fall back, eventually as far as Magburaka in the centre of the country, sustaining heavy casualties from ambushes along the route. On 22 December, a third group of rebels in the western area attacked Waterloo, some 20 miles from Freetown; the attack resulted in heavy casualties among civilians and the looting and destruction of property and sent thousands of people fleeing towards Freetown.

A rebel leader, Sam Bockarie, threatened to launch an assault on Freetown around the New Year unless the Government released RUF leader Corporal Sankoh, and advancing rebels announced that they were fighting ECOMOG and the United Nations. On 24 December, as a precautionary measure, UNOMSIL began relocating non-essential civilian staff from Freetown and withdrew military observer teams deployed at Bo and Kenema to Lungi. UN agencies, ICRC and international NGOs also began to withdraw their personnel from the country, and Governments with diplomatic representation in Freetown began reducing their embassy staff. The United Kingdom sent aircraft to evacuate British and other nationals from Sierra Leone.

On 27 December, Makeni fell to the rebels, who seized a number of vehicles, greatly enhancing their mobility and speed of movement. The following day, UNOMSIL withdrew most of its personnel from Freetown to Conakry, leaving a small core team led by Special Representative Okelo and comprising Chief Military Observer Joshi and other senior staff, as well as a few military observers.

In the closing days of December, the rebels advanced further westward, while ECOMOG continued to bring in further reinforcements.

In other developments, President Taylor of Liberia, on 20 December, announced the closure of the border between his country and Sierra Leone. He stated that he had ordered Armed Forces of Liberia personnel to deploy at the border, as he had received intelligence reports concerning an impending attack against Liberia, to take place in the latter part of December.

ECOWAS meeting (December)

On 29 December [S/1998/1232], Togo transmitted to the Security Council President the final communiqué adopted at an extraordinary meeting of the ECOWAS Committee of Five (Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire, 28 December). The meeting was also attended by observers from Sierra Leone, ECOMOG, UNOMSIL, UNHCR, the Special Envoy of the President of the United States to Liberia and a representative of the Government of the United Kingdom. The participants emphasized the need to find a rapid solution to the disturbing situation prevailing in Sierra Leone, primarily as a result of the resumption of fighting by AFRC and RUF. They expressed concern about the new situation, which, if not controlled in time, risked undermining security throughout the subregion, in addition to calling into question the development efforts made by ECOWAS.

The participants were informed that the rebels had received reinforcements of both men and equipment in violation of the arms embargo. The ECOMOG Commander and the representative of Sierra Leone described the military support that Liberia was said to be providing for the activities of the rebellion. Liberia denied any involvement in the conflict in Sierra Leone and called for the opening of an international inquiry to shed light on those accusations. The participants were also informed of the presence of foreign mercenaries alongside the rebels.

The Committee decided to resume its activities, which had been suspended since the restoration of constitutional order on 10 March. It also decided that Togo should be an ex officio member of the Committee, which would become the Committee of Six. The Committee, among other things, appealed to the rebels to cease fighting, to lay down their arms and to recognize President Kabbah's Government as the sole legitimate Government of Sierra Leone; commended Ghana, Guinea and Nigeria for dispatching troops to Sierra Leone in the context of ECOMOG operations; expressed great concern at the acts of aggression to which Sierra Leone had been subjected and condemned those countries that provided assistance to the rebels; strongly condemned the atrocities, particularly mutilations of the Sierra Leone population; recommended that the Chairman of ECOWAS undertake initiatives to bring about a rapprochement between the heads of State of Liberia and Sierra Leone; and demanded that the rebels cease hostilities forthwith, participate in the dialogue and take up the amnesty proposal put to them by the Sierra Leone Government.

Security Council Committee

On 31 December [S/1998/1236], Hans Dahlgren, Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1132(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 135] concerning Sierra Leone, submitted to the Security Council President an account of the Committee's activities since its establishment in October 1997.

Part of the Committee's mandate was to designate members of the military junta of Sierra Leone and adult members of their families whose entry or transit was to be prevented by all States. On 8 January 1998, the Committee had issued the first list of members of the military junta, which was to be updated on a regular basis and transmitted to all States and international organizations/specialized agencies.

The Committee had also received and approved requests for the importation into Sierra Leone of petroleum and petroleum products for verified humanitarian purposes, by the democratically elected Government of Sierra Leone, as well as the United Kingdom, ICRC, the United Nations Humanitarian Coordinator and the United Nations Children's Fund in Sierra Leone.

Since its inception, the Committee had maintained contact with ECOWAS and ECOMOG on implementation of the arms embargo and alleged violations. During the period under review, it had considered a number of alleged violations of the sanctions regime and, in some cases, had requested additional information from the Member States concerned. In response to reports of the alleged presence of Liberian combatants in Sierra Leone, Liberia, in a 4 August letter to the Chairman of the Committee, stated that the alleged activity was not supported or sanctioned by its Government.

During the reporting period, the Chairman undertook two visits to the region. In December 1997, he visited Guinea for discussions with the then-exiled President Kabbah, government authorities, UN agencies and NGOs. In December 1998, he visited Liberia and Sierra Leone to assess the implementation of resolution 1171(1998) (see above) and to enhance respect for the arms embargo and travel restrictions in force against the non-governmental forces of Sierra Leone. Extensive discussions were held with the leaders of the two countries and UN personnel and agencies, as well as with ECOMOG commanders and NGOs. On 18 December, the Chairman briefed the Council on his visit to the region. The Committee had also reported to the Council, on 7 August [S/1998/740] and on 15 December [S/1998/1170], on notifications received from States on the export of arms and related matériel to Sierra Leone, as well as on notifications of imports of arms by the Government of Sierra Leone.

The Committee observed that the rebel forces had continued to launch attacks, despite the efforts of the international community to isolate them. They derived their arms and ammunition from looting within the country, as well as from neighbouring States, including Liberia. The geographical conditions along the border between Sierra Leone and its neighbours were such that full governmental control or monitoring of the frontier was virtually impossible within the resources available in the region.

The Committee would continue to explore further measures to improve implementation of the arms embargo and travel restrictions, in particular by focusing on assistance to neighbouring countries, with a view to enhancing the monitoring of border crossings.

Somalia

In 1998, regional and international organizations continued their efforts to find a political solution to the situation in Somalia, which, since 1991, had been a country without a national Government. Despite the December 1997 signing by a number of Somali political leaders of the Cairo Declaration [YUN 1997, p. 144], in which they agreed to begin a national reconciliation process, a negotiated settlement of Somalia's crisis remained elusive.

In December, the General Assembly, in resolution 53/1 M, welcomed the efforts of intergovernmental organizations and others to resolve the situation in Somalia and called for further assistance for humanitarian relief and for the economic and social rehabilitation of the country (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

Regional peace initiatives

The National Reconciliation Conference, to which some Somali factions had agreed in the December 1997 Cairo Declaration, did not take place in February 1998 as planned. The purpose of the Conference was to adopt a transitional charter and establish a Government in transition. As Somalia had no national Government, State functions, such as the provision of social services, including health and education, the regulation of the movement of goods and persons, as well as the representation of the Somali people in inter-governmental and international forums, were largely absent, with the exception of administrations in certain parts of the country, notably in the north-west (Somaliland) and north-east (Puntland), which had begun to provide some basic services. Somalia remained divided along clan lines and the violence, where it was not simple banditry, was mainly defensive in nature.

Throughout 1998, the national reconciliation of Somalia was discussed in various international and regional forums. The Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD) was among those organizations actively attempting to find a solution. At its seventeenth session, the IGAD Council of Ministers (Djibouti, 14-15 March) adopted a declaration on Somalia, which Ethiopia forwarded to the Security Council on 27 March [S/1998/275]. The IGAD Council attributed the lack of progress in Somalia to the proliferation of parallel initiatives, a lack of the necessary resolve on the part of the faction leaders and insufficient humanitarian and development support from the international community. It reaffirmed the role of Ethiopia as the country mandated to lead the peace process in Somalia on behalf of IGAD. A new approach to finding a solution was suggested—by broadening the peace process to include participation of representatives of Somali civil society, shifting the focus away from faction leaders. The international community was invited to support preferentially those areas of Somalia where leaders showed a commitment to peace (the so-called "peace dividend" approach). To reduce the danger of parallel initiatives, IGAD proposed the creation of a mechanism, possibly through its Partners Forum, allowing other countries interested in the Somalia peace process to associate themselves with it. IGAD also proposed holding, under its auspices, an international conference for maximizing the support of the international community for the peace process. Such a conference, to include Somali civil society, as well as faction leaders, would develop an action plan for reinforcing the peace process and national reconciliation.

The sixth Summit of the Heads of State and Government of IGAD, which took place immediately after the Council meeting (Djibouti, 16 March), forwarded the text of its communiqué to the Security Council on 17 March [S/1998/247]. The Summit stressed that the ultimate responsibility for resolving the conflict rested with the Somali people and the international community could only facilitate that process. It urged that all assistance provided to Somalia be channelled through the IGAD mechanism.

The Committee on Somalia of the IGAD Partners Forum held its first meeting in Rome on 4 May. Italy forwarded its conclusions to the Secretary-General on 6 May [S/1998/380]. The participants stressed the need for the faction leaders to demonstrate the necessary resolve to achieve national reconciliation and reconstruction of their country. They also noted the need for close coordination within the international community in support of the IGAD initiative and agreed that the Committee on Somalia would promote such coordination. The Committee urged all Somalis to consider that the current situation of lack of authority, unrest and danger of instability for the neighbouring countries and the entire region could not continue.

The Liaison Group on Somalia, formed under the aegis of the IGAD Partners Forum to assist international actors in reaching a common position on Somalia, met for the first time in Addis Ababa (12 June) under the chairmanship of Italy. Those attending included IGAD member States, donors, including the European Commission, and the United Nations Political Office for Somalia (UNPOS), as well as UNDP.

Another consultative body, the Standing Committee on Somalia, whose membership was open to IGAD and its Partners Forum Liaison Group members and other interested States and organizations, was formed and met on 5 November, also in Addis Ababa, under the chairmanship of Ethiopia. From 1 to 5 December, a fact-finding mission of the Standing Committee visited several cities in Somaliland and Puntland to meet with political leaders, parliamentarians, elders, women's groups, the business community, intellectuals, NGOs and international organizations. In a 7 December press statement [S/1998/1195], the mission said it intended to visit cities in the south when conditions permitted.

The Council of the League of Arab States (LAS), in a resolution forwarded to the Secretary-General on 28 October [S/1999/882], called on the Somali parties to honour their agreements, to co-operate with the pan-Arab, regional and international efforts for national reconciliation, and to establish a national authority to restore the State of Somalia. The LAS Secretary-General, Ahmed Esmat Abdel Meguid, met with numerous Somali leaders, charged them with responsibility for the deteriorating situation in Somalia and urged them to make every effort to achieve security, stability and national reconciliation. The LAS secretariat sought a greater role for the United Nations in the Somali context and the relocation of UNPOS from Nairobi to Mogadishu for that purpose.

On several occasions in 1998, OAU expressed concern that, in spite of the efforts of several actors, substantive progress was still lacking and called for redoubled efforts in the search for a peaceful settlement in Somalia. In a 7 June decision [A/53/179], the OAU Council of Ministers called on all Somali faction leaders to close ranks and heed the efforts to achieve peace, expressed dismay at the spiralling violence arising from the intensification of intra- and inter-clan disputes, and expressed concern over the increasing flow of arms into Somalia in violation of Security Council resolution 733(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 199], which imposed an arms embargo on Somalia.

Ethiopia, addressing the OAU Council of Ministers as the mandated lead country for Somalia [S/1998/510], described the situation there as very fluid. In the north-west (Somaliland), there was relative stability, although the worsening economic situation could increase tension and trigger strife. In the north-east (Puntland), which was also relatively stable, efforts were under way to establish an administration. In the south, there were sporadic conflict situations as alignments shifted and where competition for territory and influence was fierce, such as in Kisimayo. In and around the capital, Mogadishu, despite agreements to establish an authority for the area, the jockeying for power had not played itself out, and its effects were felt further inland in the Baidoa area, where commitments to pull out militias had not been met. In Ethiopia's view, faction leaders had demonstrated that they were not ready to do what was necessary to reach agreement in Somalia. Therefore, it had become important to broaden the peace process to enable greater participation by Somali civil society, a suggestion supported by IGAD. The international community could contribute politically, diplomatically and financially, specifically by assisting the rehabilitation of those regions where faction leaders and their constituencies demonstrated a commitment to peace and national reconciliation, Ethiopia stated.

Communications. Eritrea, in a 2 January letter to the Security Council [S/1998/1], transmitted a government statement on the reconciliation efforts in Somalia. Noting that Egypt's December 1997 effort [YUN 1997, p. 144] to promote reconciliation among the factions had not brought about the desired results, Eritrea made the following points: the problem in Somalia could be resolved only by the Somali people themselves, and no international or subregional initiative could serve as a substitute; and endeavours that resulted in inadvertently or wilfully in the exclusion of one party or another, or that appeared to tip the balance in favour of one faction at the perceived expense of the other, would not succeed in bringing about the desired reconciliation.

On 16 January [S/1998/43], Ethiopia transmitted a statement made by the Chairman of the National Salvation Council of Somalia, Ali Mahdi Mohamed, at the Council's third session (Addis Ababa, 2-11 January), in which he expressed support for the IGAD, Ethiopian and Egyptian initiatives and other efforts to find a comprehensive solution. The National Salvation Council, which was one of the factions that had signed the 1997 Cairo Declaration, expressed its readiness to honour the Declaration's provisions.

Arms embargo

On 28 December [S/1998/1226], the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 751(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 202] concerning Somalia transmitted to the Council President the Committee's report covering the period January to December 1998. The Committee had been established to monitor the military and weapons embargo against Somalia imposed by resolution 733(1992) [ibid., p. 199].

The report stated that the Committee did not have any specific monitoring mechanism to ensure the implementation of the arms embargo and recalled that it relied solely on the cooperation of States and organizations to provide information on embargo violations. During the reporting period, no violations were brought to its attention. In that regard, the Committee took note of Council resolution 1196(1998) (see above, under "Promotion of peace in Africa"), in which the Council reiterated the obligation of all States to carry out its decisions on arms embargoes and requested them to report possible violations to the relevant committees. In accordance with paragraph 4 of that resolution, the Committee intended to consider appropriate steps with a view to improving the monitoring of the arms embargo and to that end would establish channels of communication with relevant regional and subregional organizations and bodies.

UNOSOM II financing

The Secretary-General, on 4 May [A/52/882], reported to the General Assembly on the financing of the United Nations Operation in Somalia (UNOSOM II). UNOSOM was established by Security Council resolution 751(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 202], and its mandate extended by resolution 954 (1994) [YUN 1994, p. 325]. The force was withdrawn from Somalia in March 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 400]. The May financial report provided updated information on the disposition of UNOSOM assets, contained in the Secretary-General's 1995 UNOSOM financial report [ibid., p. 404]. The adjusted inventory value of the Operation's assets, as at 11 May 1995 amounted to some $132.7 million. The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly take note of the report and approve the donation of assets (mainly communications equipment, computers and other electronic equipment, generators and transportation equipment) to the Somali district councils.

The Assembly, by decision 52/497 of 8 September, decided to include in the draft agenda of its fifty-third session the item on UNOSOM II financing. By decision 53/458 of 18 December, the Assembly decided that its Fifth Committee should continue consideration of that agenda item at its resumed fifty-third session in 1999.

Sudan

During 1998, the Sudan continued to be involved in disputes with the neighbouring countries of Eritrea and Uganda, and to suffer the effects of the civil war in the south of the country. Although the two parties to the civil conflict agreed to a ceasefire under the auspices of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD), the humanitarian situation deteriorated and international emergency relief efforts were needed. In August, in response to terrorist attacks on two of its embassies in East Africa (see PART FOUR, Chapter III), the United States bombed the Al-Shifa pharmaceutical plant in Khartoum, which, it claimed, was being used to produce chemical weapons. The Security Council received several communications on that issue.

The sixth Summit of the IGAD Heads of State and Government (Djibouti, 16 March) [S/1998/247] reviewed developments in the subregion, including southern Sudan, since the previous summit [YUN, 1997, p. 161]. The participants (Djibouti, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Kenya, Sudan, Uganda) expressed appreciation for the ongoing peace talks on the conflict in southern Sudan and encouraged the parties involved—the Government of the Sudan and the Sudanese People's Liberation Movement/Army (SPLM/A)—to work together towards a ceasefire.

On 1 May [S/1998/385], the EU issued a statement on the Sudan, expressing increasing concern about the worsening humanitarian crisis in Bahr al-Ghazal in the south of the country. The EU called on the Government to assist the United Nations and NGOs to deliver food and other supplies. It fully supported the IGAD efforts and called on the two parties to effect an immediate ceasefire.

The IGAD Ministerial Subcommittee—composed of Eritrea, Ethiopia, Kenya and Uganda—met with representatives of the parties to the conflict (Nairobi, Kenya, 4-6 May) to review the situation. In its communiqué [S/1998/382], the Subcommittee expressed appreciation for the parties' commitment to seek a negotiated settlement within the IGAD framework, underlined the importance of their agreement to facilitate humanitarian assistance to the areas affected by famine, and appealed to the international community to increase its assistance. While the Sudanese Government offered a ceasefire and immediate cessation of hostilities, SPLM/A believed that a ceasefire should be negotiated separately. The Subcommittee welcomed the agreement on the recognition of the right of self-determination for the people of south Sudan, to be decided under the IGAD peace process and exercised through an internationally supervised referendum at the end of an interim period. However, it was noted that the Government's definition of south Sudan encompassed the three provinces of Bahr al-Ghazal, Equatoria and Upper Nile as recognized at independence in 1956, while for SPLM/A the right of self-determination should be exercised by the people of those areas and also of Abyei, Southern Kordofan and Southern Blue Nile.

The IGAD Ministerial Subcommittee met again (Addis Ababa, 4-6 August) [S/1998/736] and issued a communiqué in which it called on the international community to provide humanitarian assistance, including food and medicines, to the Sudanese people in the war-zone areas, noted the commitment by both parties to maintain the ceasefire and enable relief supplies to all areas in need, and welcomed their agreement to reactivate the Technical Committee on humanitarian assistance, with membership drawn from the Government of the Sudan, SPLM/A, the United Nations Operation Lifeline Sudan (OLS) and IGAD. The Subcommittee regretted that the two parties had been unable to reach a common ground on the question of State and religion, and to define south Sudan for the purpose of a referendum.

On 15 October [A/53/505], the Sudan transmitted to the Secretary-General a 12 October statement on the extension of the ceasefire in the Bahr al-Ghazal area. Despite its belief that a ceasefire did not serve the desired objectives and could further worsen the situation, the Government of the Sudan announced its extension for another three months in order to ensure delivery of humanitarian assistance (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

In resolution 53/1 O of 17 December, the General Assembly called on the international community to continue its contribution to the needs of the Sudan and urged all parties involved to continue to offer assistance to guarantee the success of OLS.

Sudan-United States

On 21 August [S/1998/786], the Sudan informed the Security Council of an aerial attack against it by the United States, which had destroyed the Al-Shifa pharmaceutical plant in Khartoum, injured civilians and terrified the inhabitants of the surrounding areas (see PART FOUR, Chapter III). The factory, said the Sudan, was regarded as a model of joint regional investment and funding and was owned by the private sector and financed by Sudanese investors and the Bank of the Preferential Trade Area of the Common Market for Eastern and Southern Africa. Approved by the Security Council Committee established by resolution 661(1990)[YUN 1990,p.192] to export medical products to Iraq under the oil-for-food programme, the facility provided over 50 per cent of the Sudan's medicine requirements and exported part of its output to neighbouring countries.

According to the Sudan, United States allegations that the factory was owned by Osama bin Laden for the production of chemical weapons for terrorist purposes were devoid of truth. Repeated United States attempts to implicate the Sudan in international terrorism were not supported by any evidence. Indeed, the United States, although persistently asked to cooperate to resolve the issue, had continued to make accusations to defame the Sudan's reputation, damage its relations with other States and impose sanctions on it. The Sudan requested the Council to convene a meeting and send a technical mission to Khartoum in order to visit the site, consult documentation and establish the facts.

In a 25 September letter [S/1998/894], Lebanon transmitted to the Council a resolution of 17 September adopted by the Council of the League of Arab States (LAS) concerning the United States attack against the Sudan. The LAS Council called on the international community to take a stand against the use of military force to resolve problems between States and drew attention to the danger that foreign intervention in the affairs of LAS States members posed to regional stability. Arab States were urged to continue to provide humanitarian aid to the Sudan and the Secretary-General was requested to coordinate with concerned bodies and organizations on the implementation of the resolutions of the LAS Council to support the country.

Sudan-Eritrea

Eritrea, in two February letters to the Security Council [S/1998/127, S/1998/180], charged the Sudan with violating its sovereignty and territorial integrity. It reported the killing of three Eritrean nationals and the carrying out of artillery and air attacks on Eritrean regions near the common border.

The Sudan, in March and August [S/1998/258, S/1998/708], informed the Council of repeated Eritrean military aggression against Sudanese territories on the eastern borders. The Sudan stated that, if Eritrean aggression continued, it reserved the right to defend its own territories and citizens.

In August and December [S/1998/733, S/1998/1153], Eritrea stated that the Sudan continued its acts of aggression against Eritrean border towns and reiterated its accusation that the Sudan continued to arm and infiltrate into Eritrea terrorist elements—members of the so-called Islamic jihad.

Sudan-Uganda

On 6 October [S/1998/922], the Sudan informed the Security Council that Uganda continued to attack its southern border. It stated that, on 14 September, after a number of military movements, Uganda, supported by Eritrean forces, began to use artillery and heavy weapons in support of separatist rebels in border areas that were outside Sudanese government control. The Sudan stated that the Ugandan-Eritrean attack was likely to prolong the current war and increase the suffering in the region. It therefore expressed the hope that the Council would prevent Uganda and Eritrea from repeating such aggression and would take note of the Sudan's request that the two countries withdraw from Sudanese territory. On 13 October, Eritrea denied the allegations [S/1998/946].

Western Sahara

In 1998, the United Nations continued to work towards holding a referendum for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara, in accordance with a settlement plan approved by the Security Council in resolution 658(1990) [YUN 1990, p. 920]. Progress was made in the identification of voters, but that process stalled towards the end of the year over the identification of members of three tribal groupings.

The 1990 plan, to which the parties to the dispute—Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (POLISARIO)—agreed, set out conditions for a referendum by which the people of the Territory could determine their preference for either independence or integration with Morocco. To assist in implementing the plan, the Security Council, by resolution 690(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 794], had established the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO), composed of civilian, military and police units, which continued to carry out its functions in 1998.

In August, the identification of all applicants from tribes other than the H41, H61 and J51/52 tribal groupings drew to a close. All applicants from tribal groups other than those three had been convoked and their identification was completed. A total of 147,350 applicants were interviewed by the Identification Commission. When negotiations apparently reached a standstill over the issue of voter identification for the three tribal groupings, the Secretary-General, in December, put forward his own proposals on identification procedures so that the settlement plan could be implemented. However, at the end of the year the main point of contention remained the identification of applicants from tribal groupings H41, H61 and J51/52.

Report of Secretary-General (January). In response to Security Council resolution 1133(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 150], the Secretary-General submitted a 15 January progress report [S/1998/35] on implementation of the settlement plan. He had reported in December 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 152] that identification of potential voters in the referendum had resumed that month, following the deployment of observers of the two parties (Morocco and POLISARIO), the Organization of African Unity (OAU), tribal leaders (sheikhs) and Identification Commission staff. The Secretary-General's Acting Special Representative, Erik Jensen, continued to work with Morocco and POLISARIO to establish the measures for identification and to address other matters in implementing the settlement plan.

Since the resumption of identification at Laayoune in the Territory of Western Sahara and at Camp Smara in the Tindouf area of southern Algeria, five additional Identification Commission teams had begun work. Of the seven operating centres, three were in the Territory, two in the Tindouf area and two in southern Morocco. Between 3 December 1997 and 10 January 1998, 18,688 persons were convoked. Of those, 13,227 came before the Commission, bringing to 73,399 the total number of persons identified since the start of identification in 1994. Under the 1997 Houston agreements [ibid., p. 149], the parties had agreed that they would not directly or indirectly sponsor for identification anyone from tribal groupings H41, H61 and J51/52, other than persons included in the 1974 census and their immediate family members, but would not actively prevent individuals from those tribal groups from presenting themselves. Identification sessions for members of those three groups began at Laayoune and for members of tribal grouping J51/52 at two camps in the Tindouf area during the reporting period. Some 830 persons included in the 1974 census and their immediate family members were convoked and identified at those sessions. During the actual convocation days, 3,927 unconvoked individuals presented themselves at Laayoune and 495 in the Tindouf area; in succeeding days 8,613 individuals, mostly from tribal grouping H61, also came forward at Laayoune. It was proposed that in early February identification would begin for the first group of persons who presented themselves on the convocation days for members of tribal groupings H41, H61 and J51/52 at Laayoune and Dakhla. POLISARIO protested that Morocco was in breach of the Houston agreements with respect to the sponsorship of non-convoked individuals, while Morocco expressed its wish that, in addition to the two centres in southern Morocco envisaged in the work programme of the Identification Commission, centres be opened in northern Morocco in view of the large numbers of applicants from non-contested groups who resided in that part of the country and were to be convoked. Meanwhile, the identification process was scheduled to proceed, increasing in January and again from February to May in order to complete the process by the end of May, the Secretary-General reported. He cautioned, however, that that was conceivable only if a full complement of Commission and support staff was in place by the end of January and if there were no interruptions. The completion of the task by the deadline would be an arduous one, involving the convocation of more than 100,000 applicants and their identification in less than five months. It would require the commitment of the parties and an early resolution of issues related to tribal groupings H41, H61 and J51/52.

In consultation with his Personal Envoy, James A. Baker III (United States), and in conformity with the Houston agreements, the Secretary-General instructed MINURSO to proceed with the identification of those unconvoked individuals who presented themselves on the days of convocation of their respective tribal groups. With regard to applicants from non-contested tribes resident in northern Morocco, who were initially expected to travel to the identification centres at Tan Tan and Goulemine in southern Morocco, the Secretary-General decided that identification sessions for them should be held at two northern locations where the number of resident applicants exceeded 10,000. In order to maintain the momentum, it was essential, the Secretary-General stated, to adhere as much as possible to the timetable he had outlined in his settlement plan and timetable presented in November 1997 [ibid., p. 150]. That would require provision of the necessary resources in full and on time, including the early deployment of the engineering and other resources to undertake demining and prepare for the deployment of the Mission's military component. He therefore appealed to the Security Council and the General Assembly to extend the necessary support in that regard, so that the objective of holding the referendum by the end of 1998 might be maintained.

During the reporting period, MINURSO, which continued to monitor the ceasefire between the Royal Moroccan Army and the POLISARIO forces, reported that no incidents had occurred and the situation in its area of responsibility remained calm. The Force Commander, Major-General Bernd S. Lubenik (Austria), reached a new military agreement with the two parties, covering the period until the start of the transitional period under the settlement plan, which laid down guidelines and procedures to be followed by the forces of the two sides in the framework of the ceasefire. Throughout the year, the military component monitored the ceasefire and planned for full deployment. As at 6 April, the military component stood at 230 military observers and other personnel.

The MINURSO civilian police force, under the command of Chief Superintendent Peter Miller (Canada), continued to assist the Identification Commission in its daily tasks and to prepare for the transitional period. Its strength stood at 79 at the beginning of 1998.

The Secretary-General also reported that the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) continued its preparatory work for the repatriation of Saharan refugees, as foreseen in his settlement plan. Several missions were deployed to the area to present the UNHCR repatriation plan to the relevant authorities, resume pre-registration of refugees in the Tindouf area, initiate a public information campaign as a confidence-building measure and conduct other activities related to the establishment of the UNHCR presence and infrastructure development in the area.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

On 26 January [meeting 3849], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1148 (1998), approving the deployment of an engineering unit for demining activities as proposed by the Secretary-General in his referendum plan of November 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 150]. The draft [S/1998/60] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the question of Western Sahara, in particular resolution 1133(1997) of 20 October 1997 in which it decided to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara until 20 April 1998 and to increase its size in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary-General contained in his report of 24 September 1997,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 13 November 1997, which contains a detailed plan, a timetable and financial implications for the increase in the strength of the Mission,

Welcoming the letter dated 12 December 1997 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council, which, inter alia, records the resumption of the identification of eligible voters in accordance with the settlement plan and the agreements reached between the parties for its implementation, and the report of the Secretary-General of 15 January 1998, which, inter alia, records progress made since the resumption of the identification process,

Welcoming also the appointment of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Western Sahara,

1. Approves the deployment of the engineering unit required for demining activities and of the additional administrative staff required to support the deployment of military personnel as proposed in annex II to the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses its intention to consider positively the request for the remaining additional military and civilian police assets for the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara as proposed in annex II to the report of the Secretary-General, as soon as the Secretary-General reports that the identification process has reached a stage which makes the deployment of these assets essential;

3. Calls upon both parties to cooperate with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and to cooperate further with the Identification Commission established pursuant to the settlement plan in order that the identification process can be completed in a timely fashion in accordance with the settlement plan and the agreements reached between the parties for its implementation;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council fully informed of further developments in the implementation of the settlement plan;

5. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Letter from Secretary-General (February). In a 19 February letter to the Security Council President [S/1998/142], the Secretary-General described developments in Western Sahara since his January report. His Special Representative, Charles F. Dunbar (United States), arrived in the mission area on 9 February and held talks with the Prime Minister and other high officials of Morocco, as well as with POLISARIO leaders. He also planned to meet with Algerian and Mauritanian authorities.

Another identification centre was opened in Zouerate, Mauritania, on 9 February and plans for a second centre in Mauritania were under consideration. The Zouerate centre brought the number of identification centres to eight (three in Western Sahara, two in the Tindouf area, two in southern Morocco and one in Mauritania). Since the resumption of the identification process on 3 December 1997 through 18 February 1998, 42,484 persons were convoked by the Identification Commission. Of those, 30,425 came before the Commission for interview and identification, bringing to 90,537 the total number of persons identified since August 1994.

The Secretary-General noted that several interruptions in the identification process and other factors had contributed to an increase in tension between the two parties.

The parties expressed some reservations regarding the decisions contained in the Secretary-General's January report concerning the centres in Morocco, the identification of tribal groups H41, H61 and J51/52, as well as the identification of tribal group D13. The Commission expected to identify during late February and March some 4,000 unconvoked individuals, who had presented themselves at identification centres in Western Sahara on the days of convocation of members of tribal groups H41, H61 and J51/52 listed in the 1974 census and their immediate families. Decisions would then be made on ways to deal with any additional applicants from those tribal groups, including those in Morocco.

Report of Secretary-General (April). In response to Security Council resolution 1133(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 150], the Secretary-General submitted a 13 April report [S/1998/316] describing the latest developments in Western Sahara. As at 3 April, 56,703 applicants to the referendum had been convoked by MINURSO for identification since December 1997. Of those, 41,660 came before the Commission to be interviewed. They included 1,500 members of tribal groups H41 and J51/52 from among the 4,000 unconvoked individuals who had presented themselves on the days of convocation of members of groups H41, H61 and J51/52 listed in the 1974 census and their immediate families and whom MINURSO had decided to identify. That brought the total number of persons identified to 101,772. Fewer than 60,000 applicants remained to be convoked.

The pace of the identification process in February and March fell short of expectations, mainly due to the reluctance of Morocco to start identification at two locations in the northern part of the country and to complete the identification of the remaining 2,500 applicants from group H61 from among the 4,000 unconvoked individuals. Furthermore, during the previous two months, the identification process was hindered by interruptions provoked by representatives of the two parties attending the identification process over perceived slights and accusations arising from interactions with applicants. At the same time, there had been almost daily accusations in the Moroccan press about an alleged bias against Moroccan-sponsored applicants on the part of Identification Commission members. Morocco's concerns with respect to the issue of applicants from groups H41, H61 and J51/52 were expressed in letters from the Foreign Minister to the Special Representative and to the Secretary-General. In letters to both parties, the Special Representative confirmed that completion of the identification of the 4,000 individuals described above remained the most appropriate approach to reaching a just solution, in so far as it would allow sufficient time to work out proposals to deal with the complex issues of those "contested" groups. In the meantime, the Special Representative believed that the identification of applicants from "non-contested" tribes should proceed expeditiously and he was prepared to consider expanding identification activities in Morocco, where the majority of applicants yet to be convoked resided. Agreement was reached with the two parties on the identification programme for April and on additional identification activities in Morocco (in Casablanca, Marrakesh, Meknes and Rabat). Furthermore, Mauritania agreed that, in addition to Zouerate, an identification centre would be established at Nouadhibou.

The Secretary-General reported that it was currently unlikely that the target date of completing the identification process by 31 May 1998 could be met, due to the slowdown in identification activities in February and March and to the lack of progress in resolving issues linked to the identification of applicants from the three tribal groups. He also expressed concern about the climate of mutual mistrust that hindered progress and stated that the propaganda against MINURSO in the Moroccan press was clearly unjustifiable and should be halted. If both parties cooperated, it would be possible to complete the identification of all applicants from the "non-contested" tribes by the end of July 1998, the Secretary-General predicted. He cautioned, however, that until the outstanding issues concerning applicants from those tribes were resolved, and since it was not known for certain how many of those applicants might present themselves, it was not possible to specify the time required for completion of the identification process. Furthermore, he stressed that UN demining activities should start as soon as possible. In the current situation, the months of May and June would be crucial for determining if the identification process could be completed by the end of July. If no solution was found on the issue of the three "contested" tribes and if a large number of applicants from "non-contested" tribes remained to be identified, the Secretary-General intended to recommend that the Security Council reconsider the viability of MINURSO's mandate. In the meantime, he recommended that the mandate be extended for a period of three months, until 20 July 1998.

With regard to the military situation, MINURSO reported that both sides continued to adhere to the ceasefire. Meanwhile, planning was under way for full deployment of the Mission. The engineering unit was expected to be fully deployed by the end of May, in which connection, the Secretary-General, on 31 March [S/1998/356], informed the Security Council of his intention to add Sweden to the list of contributors to MINURSO, which the Council approved on 30 April [S/1998/357].

UNHCR continued preparations for the voluntary repatriation of Saharan refugees eligible to vote and their immediate families, as provided for in the settlement plan. Pre-registration of refugees in Zouerate and Tindouf continued, with some 5,100 and 7,300 refugees, respectively, pre-registered at the time of the report. Other activities were initiated, including logistics and physical infrastructure planning, a public information campaign and a mine-awareness campaign.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

On 17 April [meeting 3873], the Security Council approved the Secretary-General's recommendation to extend the mandate of MINURSO until 20 July by unanimously adopting resolution 1163(1998). The draft [S/1998/331] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the question of the Western Sahara,

Reaffirming its full support for the Secretary-General, his Personal Envoy, his Special Representative and the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara in the implementation of the settlement plan and the agreements reached by the two parties for its implementation, and recalling that under these agreements the responsibility for implementing the identification process lies with the Identification Commission,

Reiterating its commitment to assist the parties to achieve a just and lasting solution to the question of the Western Sahara,

Reiterating also its commitment to the holding without further delay of a free, fair and impartial referendum for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara in accordance with the settlement plan, which has been accepted by the two parties,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 13 April 1998, and supporting the observations and recommendations contained therein,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara until 20 July 1998, in order that the Mission may proceed with its identification tasks, with the aim of completing the process;

2. Calls upon the parties to cooperate constructively with the United Nations, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the Identification Commission established pursuant to the settlement plan in order to complete the identification-of-voters phase of the settlement plan and the agreements reached for its implementation;

3. Notes the continuing deployment of the engineering unit required for demining activities and of the administrative staff required to support the deployment of military personnel as proposed in annex II to the report of the Secretary-General of 13 November 1997, as further described in the recommendations of the report of the Secretary-General of 13 April 1998;

4. Expresses again its intention to consider positively the request for the remaining additional military and police assets for the Mission as proposed in annex II to the report of the Secretary-General of 13 November 1997, as soon as the Secretary-General reports that the identification process has reached a stage which makes the deployment of these assets essential;

5. Calls upon the Governments of Morocco, Algeria, and Mauritania to conclude respective status-of-forces agreements with the Secretary-General, and recalls that pending the conclusion of such agreements, the model status-of-forces agreement dated 9 October 1990, as provided for in General Assembly resolution 52/12 B of 19 December 1997, should apply provisionally;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council every 30 days from the date of extension of the mandate of the Mission on the progress of the implementation of the settlement plan and the agreements reached between the parties, and to keep the Council regularly informed of all significant developments in the interim period, and, as appropriate, on the continuing viability of the mandate of the Mission;

7. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (May). In his 18 May report on the latest developments in Western Sahara [S/1998/404], the Secretary-General stated that his Special Representative, Mr. Dunbar, had held meetings with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the POLISARIO Secretary-General, the Minister of State of Morocco and the Foreign Minister of Algeria. He also visited identification centres at Nouadhibou and Zouerate in Mauritania, where he met with local officials.

In April, the pace of the identification process was much slower than expected, with only 7,427 applicants identified during that time. The identification centre at Nouadhibou opened on 13 April and, in northern Morocco, identification sessions started at El Kelaa des Sraghna and Sidi Kacem. The two parties agreed to a programme of identification for the month of May, which provided for a substantially higher rate of identification of applicants from the "non-contested" tribes, with at times as many as 10 teams operating concurrently in the Territory, the Tindouf area, Mauritania and Morocco. Since 4 May, identification activities had proceeded without incident, the Secretary-General reported.

In the discussion of the programme for May, POLISARIO asked MINURSO to include, in the Tindouf area and in Mauritania, the identification of those applicants from tribal groups H41, H61 and J51/52 who were listed in the 1974 census and were therefore entitled to be convoked together with their immediate families. According to MINURSO's records, there were 603 such individuals. However, Morocco refused to participate in their identification until the overall issue of the eligibility of some 65,000 applicants from those three groups was resolved. Thus, identification of those 603 individuals could not take place since the process required the presence of observers of two parties.

As at 11 May, 78,002 applicants had been convoked by MINURSO for identification since December 1997. Of those, 51,132 came before the Identification Commission to be interviewed, bringing the total number of persons identified so far to 111,244. Fewer than 50,000 applicants from "non-contested" tribes remained to be convoked.

The outstanding issue was how to deal with the 65,000 applicants from groups H41, H61 and J51/52; the Special Representative was consulting with the two sides in the search for possible solutions. The Moroccan authorities remained opposed to the proposal put forward in the Secretary-General's last report that MINURSO complete, as a first step, the identification of the 4,000 individuals who had presented themselves on the days of convocation of members from the three groups who were listed in the 1974 census and their immediate families. Although POLISARIO accepted that proposal, it remained opposed to the identification of any applicants from those three groups other than those listed in the 1974 census and their immediate families.

UNHCR advanced in its preparatory work for the repatriation of Saharan refugees eligible to vote and their immediate families. In Mauritania, UNHCR had pre-registered 6,110 persons at Zouerate and 1,182 persons at Nouadhibou. At Camp Dakhla in the Tindouf area, there were 17,900 pre-registered refugees. Pre-registration was scheduled to start in late May at Camp Smara.

Report of Secretary-General (June). In his 18 June report on the situation in Western Sahara [S/1998/534], the Secretary-General stated that his Special Representative had pursued his consultations on issues relevant to implementation of the settlement plan and the Secretary-General had met with the Prime Minister of Morocco.

In May, identification proceeded at a substantially higher rate than during the previous month, with a total of 13,811 applicants identified by MINURSO. As at 14 June, 96,252 applicants had been convoked for identification since December 1997. Of those, 67,360 came before the Identification Commission to be interviewed. That brought the total number of persons identified to 127,472. Some 20,000 applicants from tribes other than H41, H61 and J51/52 remained to be convoked; that process was scheduled to be completed in August, the report said. A solution for the "contested" tribes was sought by the Special Representative, and that issue remained a source of major concern. The Secretary-General reiterated his appeal to the two parties to cooperate in the search for appropriate solutions, with a view to completing the identification process on a timely basis.

UNHCR, which continued its preparatory work for repatriation of Saharan refugees, organized a regional repatriation planning workshop (Geneva, 25-27 May), with the participation of MINURSO and the World Food Programme (WFP), to review and coordinate operational plans.

POLISARIO had expressed to UNHCR its concern regarding the lack of preparations for the return of refugees within the Territory, as had refugees in the camps. Many refugees interviewed by UNHCR had indicated that they would be unwilling to return to the Territory west of the berm unless they were assured of a safe and dignified repatriation. Further discussions were held among UNHCR, MINURSO and Morocco about UNHCR's role under the settlement plan, including the formalization of UNHCR's presence in Western Sahara, as well as freedom of access and movement of its personnel throughout the Territory. UNHCR held discussions with both parties and with the refugee communities regarding the places of return and modes of transportation. Technical discussions were required, especially with Morocco, to enable UNHCR to resolve outstanding issues and complete its planning for the voluntary repatriation of refugees. At the time of the report, UNHCR had pre-registered 8,342 persons at Zouerate and 5,311 persons at Nouadhibou. In the Tindouf area, 17,900 refugees had been pre-registered by mid-May. Pre-registration was scheduled to begin shortly at Camp Smara. Pre-registration would enable UNHCR to gather information on the final destinations and family composition of refugees, and on the special concerns of vulnerable groups. The Secretary-General stressed the importance of UNHCR's presence in the Territory being formalized without delay so that the refugees could return under conditions of safety and dignity, as provided for in the settlement plan.

With regard to military aspects of the mission, the Secretary-General reported that advance elements of the engineering and demining units had been deployed in the MINURSO area of responsibility. On 30 May, Morocco informed MINURSO that, for security reasons and under Moroccan law, all weapons and ammunition of the MINURSO military units had to be stored in depots of the Royal Armed Forces. While the issue remained under discussion, and pending the conclusion of the status-of-forces agreement, the United Nations postponed deployment of the military units. The Secretary-General said that the conclusion of status-of-forces agreements with Algeria, Mauritania and Morocco would contribute markedly to overcoming the current difficulties in the deployment of MINURSO's formed military units.

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples considered the question of Western Sahara on 30 June [A/53/23]. The Committee granted a request for a hearing to Moulud Said of POLISARIO and reviewed a working paper on developments concerning the Territory over the previous year [A/AC.109/2118]. The report summarized the activities of the good offices of the Secretary-General and action taken by the Security Council and the General Assembly. It also noted that, on 27 March, the Commission on Human Rights approved a resolution, in which it took note with satisfaction of the agreements reached between the parties and urged them to implement those agreements fully (see PART TWO, Chapter II).

Report of Secretary-General (July). The Secretary-General, on 10 July [S/1998/634], reported that MINURSO identified 13,142 applicants to the referendum in June, thus maintaining a high level of activity despite interruptions at the sessions held in Mauritania. As at 6 July, 104,200 applicants had been convoked for identification since December 1997. Of those, 75,555 had been interviewed by the Identification Commission, thus bringing the total number of those identified so far to 135,667.

The identification process for the "non-contested" tribal groups was proceeding on schedule, but the identification of applicants from tribal groupings H41, H61 and J51/52 listed in the 1974 Spanish census and their immediate families could not proceed due to Morocco's refusal to participate.

On 25 June, Moroccan observers halted the identification sessions at the Zouerate centre in Mauritania, on the grounds that certain applicants who reported to that centre had changed their place of residence from the refugee camps in the Tindouf area to Mauritania. Yet, as the Secretary-General pointed out, both parties had agreed with MINURSO on 14 November 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 151] that changes of address and any other information pertinent to the determination of the appropriate identification centre could be provided by either party. Following a protest by the Identification Commission, Morocco reiterated its refusal to allow changes of address between the refugee camps and Mauritania. That action could affect up to 2,000 applicants in Mauritania. Concerning the issue of the "contested" tribal groupings, neither group had changed its position.

The Secretary-General reported that the increase in the pace of identification would, if sustained, enable MINURSO to complete, during August, the identification of applicants from all Saharan tribes other than tribal groups H41, H61 and J51/52. That issue was the only major impediment to MINURSO's moving on to the final phase of the referendum process. The differences between the two parties in the interpretation of the status accorded to applicants from those three groupings in the settlement plan and the Houston agreements remained substantial. The Special Representative had been unable to obtain from either party practical suggestions that would allow for reconciliation of their points of view. The Secretary-General had asked that, after substantial completion of the process of identifying all groups other than H41, H61 and J51/52, his Personal Envoy engage the parties in seeking a solution to identifying those tribal groupings and to other issues. Thereafter, the Personal Envoy would assess the implementability of the plan and advise the Secretary-General on possible avenues to be pursued, and that assessment would influence decisions on the continued viability of MINURSO's mandate. In order to provide time for such an assessment, the Secretary-General recommended that MINURSO's mandate be extended for a period of two months, until 21 September 1998.

The preparatory work for the repatriation of Saharan refugees had proceeded during the reporting period, albeit at a reduced pace, due to the fact that Morocco was still withholding clearance on a number of remaining issues, including the formalization of UNHCR's presence in Western Sahara, arrangements to ensure the freedom of access and movement and the implementation of UNHCR preparatory work, such as confidence-building and infrastructure development. Pre-registration continued in Algeria and northern Mauritania. At Zouerate and Nouadhibou in Mauritania, UNHCR had pre-registered 14,000 persons. Pre-registration resumed at the Tindouf camps in Algeria, where 18,000 refugees had been pre-registered. Other activities in the Tindouf camps included water and infrastructure development, information-sharing, assessment of refugee needs, mine awareness, and logistics planning for safe repatriation.

The military component of MINURSO, as at 6 July, included the demining unit from Sweden and advance elements of the engineering support unit from Pakistan, bringing the total to 366 military personnel. The MINURSO area of responsibility had remained calm.

Drafts of the status-of-forces agreements had been submitted to Algeria, Mauritania and Morocco. Algeria sent a formal reply to the Secretariat, along with several proposed amendments. Mauritania indicated its acceptance, adding minor comments. The Secretariat expected that the agreements with those two Governments might be signed as soon as possible. The Secretary-General reported that Morocco had informed the Special Representative that the use of MINURSO aircraft should be limited to MINURSO personnel, and airport authorities had since denied access to several journalists. The Special Representative asked Morocco to reconsider its position.

During the reporting period, the MINURSO civilian police were hindered in efforts to assist UNHCR in their preparations for repatriation of Saharan refugees and in obtaining relevant information from Morocco.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

The Security Council acted on the Secretary-General's recommendation to extend MINURSO's mandate by adopting unanimously, on 20 July [meeting 3910], resolution 1185(1998). The draft [S/1998/661] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the question of Western Sahara,

Reaffirming its full support for the Secretary-General, his Personal Envoy, his Special Representative and the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara in the implementation of the settlement plan, and the agreements reached by the two parties for its implementation, and recalling that under these agreements the responsibility for implementing the identification process lies with the Identification Commission,

Reiterating its commitment to assist the parties to achieve a just and lasting solution to the question of Western Sahara,

Reiterating also its commitment to the holding without further delay of a free, fair and impartial referendum for the self-determination of the people of the Western Sahara in accordance with the settlement plan, which has been accepted by the two parties,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 10 July 1998 and supporting the observations and recommendations contained therein,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara until 21 September 1998, in order that the Mission may proceed with its identification tasks, with the aim of completing the process;

2. Welcomes, in line with the report of the Secretary-General, engagement by his Personal Envoy with the parties to seek a solution to those issues bearing upon implementation of the settlement plan;

3. Calls upon the parties to cooperate constructively with the United Nations, the Personal Envoy of the Secretary-General, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the Identification Commission established pursuant to the settlement plan in order to complete the identification-of-voters phase of the settlement plan and the agreements reached for its implementation;

4. Notes with satisfaction the expressed readiness of the Moroccan Government to cooperate with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in order to formalize the presence of the Office of the High Commissioner in the Western Sahara, according to the settlement plan;

5. Notes the continuing deployment of the engineering unit required for demining activities and of the administrative staff required to support the deployment of military personnel as proposed in annex II to the report of the Secretary-General of 13 November 1997, as further described in the recommendations of the report of the Secretary-General of 13 April 1998;

6. Expresses again its intention to consider positively the request for the remaining additional military and police assets for the Mission as proposed in annex II to the report of the Secretary-General of 13 November 1997, as soon as the Secretary-General reports that the identification process has reached a stage which makes the deployment of these assets essential;

7. Calls for a prompt conclusion of status-of-forces agreements with the Secretary-General which would greatly facilitate the full and timely deployment of Mission-formed military units, in particular the deployment of the military engineering support and demining units, and in this context notes progress that has been made, and recalls that pending the conclusion of such agreements, the model status-of-forces agreement dated 9 October 1990, as provided for in General Assembly resolution 52/12 B of 19 December 1997, should apply provisionally;

8. Calls for the lifting of any restrictions imposed on the Mission aircraft, or on passengers whose travel the Mission determines to be of assistance to the fulfilment of the mandate, in line with the practice of United Nations peacekeeping operations, and notes that discussions are being held to this end;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council every thirty days from the date of extension of the mandate of the Mission on the progress of the implementation of the settlement plan and the agreements reached between the parties, and to keep the Council regularly informed of all significant developments in the interim period, and, as appropriate, on the continuing viability of the mandate of the Mission;

10. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (August). In his 18 August report on Western Sahara [S/1998/775], the Secretary-General stated that during July MINURSO identified 9,054 applicants to the referendum. As at 16 August, 115,402 applicants had been convoked for identification since December 1997. Of those, 85,816 came before the Identification Commission to be interviewed, bringing to 145,928 the total number of persons identified. Identification operations were completed in July at Sidi Kacem and El Kelaa des Sraghna, and begun at Meknes and Rabat (Morocco). Arrangements were being discussed for the convocation of several hundred applicants resident abroad. Morocco continued to refuse the identification of applicants who were originally registered in refugee camps in the Tindouf area but reported to the two identification centres in Mauritania, which affected over 70 applicants. With regard to the three contested tribal groupings, neither party changed its position. Morocco also maintained that, until the overall issue of the identification of all applicants from those groupings was resolved, it would not participate in the identification of those members listed in the 1974 census and of their immediate families. The Secretary-General stated that prospects were good for completing the identification of applicants from all tribal groups and sub-factions in August, with the exception of groupings H41, H61 and J51/52.

UNHCR continued its preparatory work for the repatriation of Saharan refugees and pre-registered refugees in northern Mauritania and in the Tindouf area. In the towns of Zouerate and Nouadhibou in Mauritania, 22,000 individuals had been registered, and 31,000 were registered in Tindouf. Registration work was completed in the Dakhla and Awsard refugee camps. The Secretary-General welcomed Morocco's agreement to formalize the UNHCR presence in and access to the Territory.

A military agreement between MINURSO and Morocco was signed on 23 July, which provided guidelines for the handling of weapons, ammunition and explosives of MINURSO units west of the berm. Despite Morocco's cooperation in that area, its authorities had held up MINURSO's communications equipment at Laayoune airport in contradiction of the privileges and immunities traditionally granted by host countries to UN peacekeeping operations. While waiting for the necessary clearances for equipment, the MINURSO engineering support and demining units conducted reconnaissance and survey missions, in preparation for their construction and demining activities at specific sites.

Report of Secretary-General (September). In his 11 September report [S/1998/849], the Secretary-General stated that, during August, the identification of applicants from all tribes other than the H41, H61 and J51/52 tribal groupings was complete, with a few exceptions. As at 2 September, 147,350 applicants had been interviewed by the Identification Commission and a provisional voters list was expected to be completed in September.

The Moroccan authorities reiterated their refusal to identify in Mauritania persons who had registered in the Tindouf camps in Algeria, nor did they submit to MINURSO expected proposals as to the date and place of convocation of several hundred registered applicants resident abroad. Those applicants, in Mauritania and elsewhere, could use the appeals process to seek inclusion in the voters list. Neither party had put forward proposals on identification of applicants from tribal groupings H41, H61 and J51/52; the Secretary-General, while gratified that over 147,000 applicants had been identified, expressed concern over that outstanding problem. His Personal Envoy was pursuing contacts with the parties so that he could assess whether the settlement plan could be carried out or whether it might need adjustments. If he concluded that, even with adjustments, the plan could not be carried out, he would advise the Secretary-General on other courses of action. To allow for Mr. Baker's consultations with the two parties and for his assessment, the Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council extend MINURSO's mandate until 31 October 1998.

With regard to the refugee situation, the Secretary-General reported that UNHCR had pre-registered 31,000 refugees in the Tindouf area so far, and 23,000 at Zouerate and Nouadhibou. The exercise was completed in Mauritania and near completion in Algeria. Despite Morocco's decision to formalize UNHCR's presence and allow it free access in the Territory, UNHCR still awaited the designation of technical counterparts to undertake a joint mission to Western Sahara. As a result, UNHCR's infrastructure development and road reconnaissance activities had been delayed.

The military component continued with its construction work for logistical and accommodation purposes and with demining in preparation for the full deployment of MINURSO. In spite of such progress, the operational capabilities of military units remained constrained as Morocco continued to hold their communication equipment. Despite assurances from the Moroccan authorities, the Mission continued to be confronted with bureaucratic and procedural problems in customs clearance of equipment and other items.

During the reporting period, the Secretariat received positive replies from Algeria and Mauritania to its comments on their earlier responses to the draft status-of-forces agreement on MINURSO. A reply to the draft agreement was received from Morocco and was being reviewed by the Secretariat. The Secretary-General remarked that signature of the agreements was long overdue.

The Independent Jurist for Western Sahara, Emmanuel Roucouas, visited the mission area in late August. He met with the POLISARIO Coordinator with MINURSO and received a new list of Saharans alleged to be detained by Morocco for political reasons, which he submitted to Morocco. With regard to a list of presumed political prisoners that was submitted to Morocco in January 1997, the Moroccan authorities said that they had no further specific information on individual cases.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

The Security Council, by resolution 1198 (1998), adopted the Secretary-General's recommendation to extend MINURSO's mandate until 31 October. It acted on 18 September [meeting 3929] by a unanimous vote on a draft [S/1998/863] prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,
Recalling all its previous resolutions on the question of Western Sahara,

Reiterating its commitment to assist the parties to achieve a just and lasting solution to the question of Western Sahara,

Reiterating also its commitment to the holding without further delay of a free, fair and impartial referendum for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara in accordance with the settlement plan, which has been accepted by the two parties,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 11 September 1998, and supporting the observations and recommendations contained therein,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara until 31 October 1998;

2. Welcomes, in line with paragraph 23 of the report of the Secretary-General, engagement of his Personal Envoy with the parties to seek a solution to those issues bearing upon implementation of the settlement plan;

3. Welcomes also the agreement of the Moroccan authorities to formalize the presence of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in Western Sahara, and requests both parties to take concrete action to enable the Office of the High Commissioner to carry out the necessary preparatory work for the repatriation of Saharan refugees eligible to vote, and their immediate families, according to the settlement plan;

4. Calls for a prompt conclusion of status-of-forces agreements with the Secretary-General which would greatly facilitate the full and timely deployment of the Mission-formed military units, and in this context notes new progress that has been made, and recalls that pending the conclusion of such agreements, the model status-of-forces agreement dated 9 October 1990, as provided for in General Assembly resolution 52/12 B of 19 December 1997, should apply provisionally;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council thirty days from the date of extension of the mandate of the Mission on the progress of the implementation of the settlement plan and the agreements reached between the parties, and to keep the Council regularly informed of all significant developments and, as appropriate, on the continuing viability of the mandate of the Mission;

6. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (October). In his 26 October report on developments in Western Sahara [S/1998/997], the Secretary-General stated that neither party had put forward any proposals on the issue of tribal groupings H41, H61 and J51/52. Therefore, the Secretary-General had accepted the Special Representative's recommendation to resume identification of applicants from tribal groupings H41, H61 and J51/52 who wished to present themselves individually, and at the same time to begin the appeals process. He sent his Special Representative and the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Bernard Miyet, to Rabat and Tindouf to submit to the parties a set of measures intended to overcome obstacles, including protocols on the identification of those applicants, a memorandum on UNHCR activities, and an outline of the next stages of the settlement plan. A protocol on the repatriation of refugees would be submitted to the two parties and to the Algerian and Mauritanian authorities in the next few days. Agreement on those protocols was needed by mid-November, so that UNHCR could begin preparations to receive refugees in the Territory and for identification of applicants from the tribal groupings in question to begin on 1 December, the date scheduled for publication of the provisional list of voters other than those in the three groupings. Those steps, which involved a revision to the dates set in the Houston agreements, needed to be completed on time in order to meet the schedule for a referendum to be held in December 1999.

The United Nations, in presenting its proposals, was adhering to the principle that any registered applicant from any tribal grouping who met any of the identification criteria was entitled to have his or her name included in the list of voters. The Secretary-General would ask the Identification Commission to proceed to consider requests from any applicants from the tribal groupings in question who wished to present themselves individually in order to verify whether they had the right to vote, having regard to the criteria accepted by the parties. Embarking on that supplementary identification operation would prolong the Identification Commission's programme of work. Accordingly, the Secretary-General found it advisable to launch the phase of the appeals process simultaneously so as not to postpone the referendum too long. It would therefore be necessary to publish by 1 December 1998 the provisional list of voters resulting from the work of the Identification Commission on tribes other than tribal groupings H41, H61 and J51/52, so as to begin the appeals process concerning tribes that had already been identified. In order to implement that programme, the Secretary-General proposed increasing the Commission from 18 to 25 members and increasing support personnel.

The holding of the referendum would also depend on measures taken for the return of refugees who had been declared eligible to vote, and their immediate families, and on the conditions of that repatriation. Therefore, it was important that Morocco, POLISARIO, Algeria and Mauritania should grant United Nations organizations, particularly UNHCR, all necessary facilities and guarantees to enable them to prepare for the refugees' return as soon as possible. A major requirement was the formalization of the UNHCR presence in the Territory. UNHCR continued its preparatory work for the repatriation operation in the two asylum countries, Algeria and Mauritania, and in the Territory of Western Sahara, east of the berm. A mission was ready to deploy to Morocco and the Territory to commence activities, including confidence-building, infrastructure development and road reconnaissance, and was awaiting confirmation that Moroccan technical counterparts had been appointed to undertake a joint mission to the Territory. UNHCR prepared to resume pre-registration of refugees in the Tindouf camps, but plans were delayed when the camps had not received instructions from POLISARIO. After clarifying several issues with UNHCR, POLISARIO agreed to resume pre-registration.

During the reporting period, the Secretariat submitted to Algeria and Mauritania copies of the final version of the status-of-forces agreement on MINURSO, with a view to having it signed as soon as possible. The Secretariat also replied to the observations made by Morocco on the draft agreement, and was awaiting its response. The MINURSO mine-clearance unit completed the demining of those areas needed for the future deployment of civilian and military personnel. Further arrangements would have to be made to complete the demining tasks related to the repatriation programme.

Noting that Morocco and POLISARIO had stated their intention to cooperate with MINURSO in implementing his proposals, the Secretary-General recommended extending MINURSO's mandate to 30 April 1999, the closing date of the new identification phase.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

On 30 October [meeting 3938], the Security Council, in addition to the Secretary-General's October report, had before it a 30 October letter from Morocco [S/1998/1014], expressing concern about the draft resolution [S/1998/1011] that had been prepared in consultations among Council members. In particular, Morocco mentioned paragraph 6 of the text, by which the Council would support MINURSO's intention to publish the provisional list of voters by 1 December. That, Morocco stated, contradicted the settlement plan, which stipulated that the list would be published only when the identification process was complete. That would not be the case on 1 December because the identification of the 65,000 applicants from tribal groupings H41, H61 and J51/52 would only begin then. Therefore, Morocco said, it could not consider that provision as it would modify the relevant provisions of the settlement plan.

On the same date, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1204(1998), thereby extending MINURSO's mandate until 17 December 1998.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the question of Western Sahara,

Reiterating its commitment to assist the parties to achieve a just and lasting solution to the question of Western Sahara,

Reiterating its commitment also to the holding without further delay of a free, fair and impartial referendum for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara in accordance with the settlement plan, which has been accepted by the two parties,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 26 October 1998 and the observations and recommendations contained therein,

Welcoming also the stated intentions of the Government of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (POLISARIO) to cooperate actively with the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara in implementing the proposals contained in the report,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara until 17 December 1998;

2. Welcomes paragraph 4 of the report of the Secretary-General, regarding the protocol relating to the identification of those presenting themselves individually from tribes H41, H61 and J51/52, the protocol relating to the appeals process, the memorandum pertaining to the activities of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in the region, and an outline of the next stages of the settlement plan, and calls on the parties to agree to this package of measures by mid-November 1998 in order to allow positive consideration of further stages in the settlement process;

3. Notes the intention of the Office of the High Commissioner to forward to the parties soon a protocol relating to the repatriation of refugees, and supports efforts in this regard;

4. Welcomes also the agreement of the Moroccan authorities to formalize the presence of the Office of the High Commissioner in Western Sahara, and the agreement of the POLISARIO Front to resume pre-registration activities in the refugee camps, and requests both parties to take concrete action to enable the Office of the High Commissioner to carry out the necessary preparatory work for the repatriation of Saharan refugees eligible to vote, and their immediate families, according to the settlement plan;

5. Notes with regret the constraints on the operational capability of the engineering support unit of the Mission, calls for a prompt conclusion of status-of-forces agreements with the Secretary-General which is an indispensable prerequisite for the full and timely deployment of the Mission-formed military units, and recalls that pending the conclusion of such agreements, the model status-of-forces agreement dated 9 October 1990, as provided for in General Assembly resolution 52/12 B of 19 December 1997, should apply provisionally;

6. Supports the intention of the Mission to start publishing the provisional list of voters by 1 December 1998, as proposed by the Secretary-General, and supports also the proposed increase in staff of the Identification Commission from eighteen to twenty-five members, and the increase also in the necessary support personnel, in order to strengthen the Commission and enable it to continue working with utmost rigour and impartiality with a view to keeping to the proposed timetable;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council by 11 December 1998 on the implementation of the present resolution and on the progress of the implementation of the settlement plan and the agreements reached between the parties, and to keep the Council regularly informed of all significant developments and, as appropriate, on the continuing viability of the mandate of the Mission;

8. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Communications. By a 3 November letter to the Security Council [S/1998/1031], Algeria announced that it had signed the status-of-forces agreement with the United Nations, thus confirming its support for UN efforts, in cooperation with OAU, to hold an impartial referendum on self-determination in Western Sahara. Similarly, Mauritania, in a 24 November letter [S/1998/1142], informed the Council that it had signed the agreement on the status of MINURSO, confirming its support for UN efforts to arrive at a lasting solution to the question of Western Sahara.

Report of Secretary-General (December). In his 11 December report on the latest developments in Western Sahara [S/1998/1160], the Secretary-General described follow-up action to the proposals in his October report (see above) to move forward with the settlement plan. The Secretary-General stated that he had travelled to the region from 7 to 12 November and from 29 November to 2 December, and, accompanied by his Special Representative and other UN officials, met with Algerian, Mauritanian, Moroccan and POLISARIO authorities.

Morocco, while reiterating its readiness to cooperate with UNHCR, expressed concern about key provisions of the package of measures, in particular the simultaneous implementation of the appeals and identification procedures. That, they argued, was not in line with the settlement plan and would undermine the equal treatment that should be accorded to all applicants, and issuance of the provisional list of potential voters at that stage would trigger negative public reaction. In Tindouf, POLISARIO accepted the package of measures and presented a memorandum to that effect. Algeria and Mauritania also expressed support for the measures.

The Secretary-General stated that, on 20 November, the Moroccan Minister for Foreign Affairs and Cooperation had transmitted to him Morocco's formal response to the draft protocols, expressing the view that the principles of self-determination, cooperation and impartiality on which the settlement plan was based appeared to be called into question. The memorandum voiced concerns about several aspects of the modalities for identifying the three tribal groupings and the appeals procedures and requested clarification with respect to the timing of the next steps in implementing the settlement plan. It proposed that the UNHCR mission in Western Sahara be the subject of an agreement to be negotiated between Morocco and UNHCR.

In November, the Special Representative communicated to both parties the list of applicants from tribal groupings H41, H61 and J51/52, together with details for the start of the identification and appeals on 1 December. In the light of Morocco's position, and in the absence of practical steps for implementation on the ground, the Identification Commission did not publish the provisional list of potential voters on 1 December. Accordingly, no steps had been taken towards expanding the staff of the Commission.

The draft refugee repatriation protocol was presented to the Prime Minister of Morocco and to the POLISARIO Coordinator with MINURSO, and was forwarded to the Governments of Algeria and Mauritania. POLISARIO, while agreeing to the memorandum describing the work of UNHCR prior to the transition period, said that pre-registration of refugees, as proposed in that document, should resume when the other measures in the package came into effect. A response had not yet been received from Morocco. UNHCR continued its activities in Algeria, Mauritania and in the Territory east of the berm, including road reconnaissance, logistics and infrastructure development planning, water development surveys and cooperation with MINURSO.

As at 2 December, the strength of the military component of MINURSO was 384. The Swedish demining unit was repatriated on 20 November and arrangements would have to be made to complete MINURSO's mine-clearance tasks relating to the repatriation programme. During the reporting period, the engineering support unit completed its construction work for logistical and accommodation purposes at Dakhla and for the establishment of the forward logistical base at Awsard. The unit's operational capability remained constrained due to the lack of communication equipment, which the Moroccan authorities had failed to release. As further construction work in preparation for the transitional period was linked to the full deployment of MINURSO, it would not have been cost-effective to commence such work at that stage. Since no meaningful employment was envisaged for the engineering support unit in the near future, arrangements were being made for it to be repatriated in January 1999.

The Secretary-General observed that the identification of applicants from tribal groupings H41, H61 and J51/52 had been a constant source of contention and the subject of three recent compromise proposals—one accepted by the parties as part of the Houston agreements and the second offered in his report of 15 January 1998.

The third, which was supported by the Security Council in resolution 1204(1998), was to launch simultaneously the identification and appeals process. In view of the concerns expressed by Morocco, he confirmed that the latest proposed measures would entitle all applicants both to an initial identification hearing and to be part of an appeals process. The final list of voters would be published only after the end of the appeals process for applicants from all tribal groupings. The Secretary-General reiterated the need for the formalization of the UNHCR presence in the Territory for implementation of the settlement plan and hoped that it would be signed by Morocco, POLISARIO, Algeria and Mauritania soon and that pre-registration activities in the refugee camps would resume without further delay. It was also essential, he said, that Morocco sign promptly the status-of-forces agreement. To allow for further consultations and in the hope that those consultations would lead to an agreement on the various protocols before 31 January 1999, he recommended that MINURSO's mandate be extended until then. Should the prospects for completing the identification process remain uncertain at that time, he intended to revert to the Security Council and to ask his Personal Envoy to reassess the situation and the viability of the MINURSO mandate.

Letters from Morocco (December). Morocco, in a 15 December letter to the Security Council [S/199871169], referred to the Secretary-General's December report and drew a distinction between the Secretary-General's arbitration concerning the 65,000 applicants and all the other proposals contained in the draft protocols. In Morocco's view, the arbitration, which was within the responsibilities of the Secretary-General under the settlement plan, confirmed the right of those applicants under the plan, the criteria concerning identification, the compromise proposal on that interpretation of the criteria, the Houston agreements and the numerous reports of the Secretary-General, which stated that MINURSO should examine all applications submitted in due form. Morocco hoped that that arbitration would be carried out without delay so that the identification process could be completed. In doing so, Morocco said, it could not accept that the 65,000 applicants, almost twice the number presented by the other party, should be considered as falling in a second category and subject to conditions and procedures that were less favourable and not consistent with the settlement plan. Morocco reaffirmed that it was prepared to pursue a dialogue with the Secretariat with a view to arriving at a compromise on the other proposals.

On 17 December [S/1998/1184], as the Security Council was meeting to consider a draft resolution on Western Sahara (see below), Morocco raised the same concerns with regard to the draft text as it had with the Secretary-General's report. The draft text, Morocco noted, in particular the third preambular paragraph, did not reflect Morocco's acceptance of the Secretary-General's arbitration in favour of the 65,000 applicants. Furthermore, the text commended the other party for its acceptance of the package of measures, which was unjustified in view of the four years that had been lost due to the other party. Morocco continued to object that the simultaneity of the identification and appeals processes was not in conformity with the settlement plan. In addition, the proposed protocol on refugees concerned one of the host countries, rather than the other party.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 17 December [meeting 3956], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1215 (1998). The draft [S/1998/1183] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the question of Western Sahara, and reaffirming in particular resolution 1204(1998) of 30 October 1998,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 11 December 1998 and the observations and recommendations contained therein,

Noting the stated position of the Government of Morocco, and welcoming the formal acceptance by the POLISARIO Front to implement the package of measures contained in paragraph 2 of the report of the Secretary-General, in order to move forward with the implementation of the settlement plan,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara until 31 January 1999 to allow for further consultations in the hope that those consultations will lead to agreement on the various protocols without undermining the integrity of the Secretary-General's proposed package or calling into question its main elements;

2. Notes, in this regard, that the implementation of the proposal of the Secretary-General to launch simultaneously the identification and appeals processes could clearly demonstrate the willingness of the parties to accelerate the referendum process, in accordance with the wishes they have publicly expressed in recent months;

3. Calls upon the parties and the interested States to sign as soon as possible the proposed refugee repatriation protocol with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, urges the Government of Morocco to formalize the presence of the Office of the High Commissioner in the Territory, and requests both parties to take concrete action to enable the Office of High Commissioner to carry out the necessary preparatory work for the repatriation of Saharan refugees eligible to vote, and their immediate families, according to the settlement plan;

4. Urges the Government of Morocco promptly to sign a status-of-forces agreement with the Secretary-General as an indispensable condition for the full and timely deployment of the Mission-formed military units, and recalls that pending the conclusion of such agreement, the model status-of-forces agreement dated 9 October 1990, as provided for in General Assembly resolution 52/12 B of 19 December 1997, should apply provisionally;

5. Notes that the contracts of the majority of the Identification Commission staff will expire by the end of December 1998, and that future extensions will depend on the prospects for resuming the identification work in the immediate future and on the decisions the Council will take concerning the mandate of the Mission;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council by 22 January 1999 on the implementation of the present resolution and on the progress in the implementation of the settlement plan and the agreements reached between the parties, and further requests him to keep the Council regularly informed of all significant developments including, as appropriate, a reassessment by his Personal Envoy of the continuing viability of the mandate of the Mission;

7. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December [meeting 78], the General Assembly, having considered the Secretary-General's September report [A/53/368] summarizing developments in Western Sahara from 30 September 1997 to 1 October 1998, on the recommendation of the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee [A/53/594], adopted resolution 53/64 without vote [agenda item 18].

Question of Western Sahara

The General Assembly,

Having considered in depth the question of Western Sahara,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of all peoples to self-determination and independence, in accordance with the principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 52/75 of 10 December 1997,

Recalling also the agreement in principle given on 30 August 1988 by the Kingdom of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro to the proposals of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity in the context of their joint mission of good offices,

Recalling further Security Council resolutions 658(1990) of 27 June 1990 and 690(1991) of 29 April 1991, by which the Council approved the settlement plan for Western Sahara,

Recalling all the Security Council and General Assembly resolutions relating to the question of Western Sahara, Reaffirming the responsibility of the United Nations towards the people of Western Sahara, as provided for in the settlement plan,

Noting with satisfaction the entry into force of the ceasefire in accordance with the proposal of the Secretary-General, and stressing the importance it attaches to the maintenance of the ceasefire as an integral part of the settlement plan,

Also noting with satisfaction the agreements reached by the two parties during their private direct talks aimed at the implementation of the settlement plan, and stressing the importance it attaches to a full, fair and faithful implementation of the settlement plan and the agreements aimed at its implementation,

Further noting with satisfaction the progress made in the implementation of the settlement plan since December 1997,

Taking note of Security Council resolutions 1131(1997) of 29 September 1997 and 1198(1998) of 18 September 1998,

Having examined the relevant chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Having also examined the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Again notes with satisfaction the agreements reached between the Kingdom of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro for the implementation of the settlement plan during their private direct talks under the auspices of James Baker III, the Personal Envoy of the Secretary-General, and urges the parties to implement those agreements fully and in good faith;

3. Commends the Secretary-General and his Personal Envoy for their efforts in reaching these agreements as well as the two parties for the cooperation they have shown, and urges them to continue this cooperation in order to facilitate the speedy implementation of the settlement plan;

4. Urges the two parties to continue their cooperation with the Secretary-General and his Personal Envoy, as well as with his Special Representative, and to refrain from undertaking anything that would undermine the implementation of the settlement plan and the agreements reached for its implementation;

5. Notes with satisfaction the progress achieved in connection with the implementation of the settlement plan, and in this respect calls upon the two parties to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General, his Personal Envoy and his Special Representative in implementing the various phases of the settlement plan;

6. Reaffirms the responsibility of the United Nations towards the people of Western Sahara, as provided for in the settlement plan;

7. Reiterates its support for further efforts of the Secretary-General for the organization and the supervision by the United Nations, in cooperation with the Organization of African Unity, of a referendum for self-determination of the people of Western Sahara that is impartial and free of all constraints, in conformity with Security Council resolutions 658(1990) and 690(1991), by which the Council approved the settlement plan for Western Sahara;

8. Takes note of Security Council resolutions 1131 (1997) and 1198(1998);

9. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to consider the situation in Western Sahara, bearing in mind the positive ongoing implementation of the settlement plan, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session;

10. Invites the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Further developments. As a result of the period of operational inactivity, and pending the completion of consultations between MINURSO and the parties to the dispute, the contracts of 50 Identification Commission personnel were not renewed when they expired on 31 December 1998 [S/1999/88]. Twelve other Commission staff were reassigned to administrative functions in MINURSO.

UN Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara

The United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) reported that the situation remained calm during 1998 and that there had been no indications that either side intended to resume hostilities. Under the command of Major-General Bernd S. Lubenik (Austria), the MINURSO military component continued to monitor the ceasefire between the Royal Moroccan Army and the POLISARIO forces, which came into effect on 6 September 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 796]. The strength of the military was 384 as at 2 December 1998, including the engineering support unit (148 troops) from Pakistan, which was scheduled to be repatriated in January 1999. The civilian police component stood at 26, of an authorized force of 81. After 54 police officers were repatriated in late 1998, their replacement had been put on hold, pending a decision by the Security Council on the resumption of the identification process. After the departure of the Police Commissioner, Chief Superintendent Peter Miller (Canada), who completed his tour of duty in November, the component was under the temporary command of the Deputy Commissioner, Assistant Commandant Sunil Roy (India). The civilian police component performed security duties at Laayoune and Tindouf, including the guarding of the Identification Commission files, and worked with UNHCR in the planning process for the repatriation of refugees.

Financing of MINURSO

In February [A/52/730/Add.1], the Secretary-General reported on the financial performance of MINURSO for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997. He noted an unencumbered balance of $2,570,300 gross, attributable to the lower number of military personnel, the higher percentage of civilian staff on appointments of limited duration and lower actual requirements under premises/accommodations, air operations, communications and other equipment, miscellaneous supplies and air and surface freight. He proposed that the General Assembly credit Member States with that amount.

The Secretary-General, in a second February report [A/52/730/Add.2], submitted pursuant to Security Council resolution 1148(1998) (see above), by which the Council approved the deployment of the engineering unit for MINURSO demining activities, said that the additional cost would be $4,074,600 gross ($4,042,800 net), bringing the total financial requirement for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 to $47,402,100 gross ($44,419,700 net). The Secretary-General therefore recommended that the Assembly approve an additional appropriation of $17,172,300 gross ($15,989,300 net) to cover costs. In March [A/52/816 & Corr.1], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) recommended that the Assembly appropriate the additional amount proposed in the second report and approve the required assessments.

In March [A/52/730/Add.3 & Corr.2], the Secretary-General reported on MINURSO financing for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, which amounted to $65,053,200 gross ($60,972,000 net). It provided for the maintenance of the Mission at the authorized strength of 203 military observers, 186 contingent personnel, 7 force orderly personnel and 81 civilian police observers, supported by a civilian establishment of 285 international staff, 105 locally recruited personnel and 10 OAU observers.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (March)

On 31 March [meeting 82], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/843], adopted resolution 52/228 A without vote [agenda item 125].

Financing of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 690 (1991) of 29 April 1991, by which the Council decided to establish the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara, and the subsequent resolutions in which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission, the latest of which was resolution 1133(1997) of 20 October 1997,

Recalling its resolution 45/266 of 17 May 1991 on the financing of the Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 51/2 B of 13 June 1997,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Concerned that the Secretary-General continues to face difficulties in meeting the obligations of the Mission on a current basis, including reimbursement to current and former troop-contributing States,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara as at 20 March 1998, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 54,513,290 United States dollars, representing 19 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Mission to the period ending 20 April 1998, notes that some 12 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and notes that paragraph 7 of that report is neither an observation nor a recommendation;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to employ locally recruited staff for the Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

8. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara the amount of 17,172,300 dollars gross (15,989,300 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, inclusive of the amount of 9,300,500 dollars gross (8,478,100 dollars net) already authorized, with the concurrence of the Advisory Committee, for the period from 1 November 1997 to 31 March 1998 under the terms of General Assembly resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994 and in addition to the amount of 30,229,800 dollars gross (28,430,400 dollars net) already appropriated for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 under the provisions of Assembly resolution 51/2 B;

9. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the additional amount of 11,077,300 dollars gross (10,309,500 dollars net) for the period ending 20 April 1998 among Member States, taking into account the amount of 24,351,780 dollars gross (22,902,270 dollars net) already assessed for the same period under the terms of General Assembly resolution 51/2 B, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1997, as set out in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and its decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995, and the scale of assessments for the year 1998, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997;

10. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the additional estimated staff assessment income of 767,800 dollars approved for the period ending 20 April 1998, taking into account the amount of 1,449,510 dollars already approved for the same period;

11. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 6,095,000 dollars gross (5,679,800 dollars net) for the period from 21 April to 30 June 1998 among Member States at the monthly rates indicated in the annex to the present resolution, in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution and the scale of assessments for the year 1998, and subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Mission beyond 20 April 1998;

12. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 11 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 415,200 dollars approved for the period from 21 April to 30 June 1998;

13. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

14. Decides to keep under review during its fifty-second session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara".

ANNEX

Monthly assessments for the operation of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara for the period from 21 April to 30 June 1998

Month	Gross	Net
	(United States dollars)
April 1998 (balance)	743,000	683,700
May 1998	2,677,900	2,500,000
June 1998	2,674,100	2,496,100
Total	6,095,000	5,679,800

ACABQ, in a May report to the Assembly [A/52/860/Add.8], noted that the next report of the Secretary-General to the Security Council on MINURSO was expected to be submitted within a week and that no information was currently available as to what proposals might be made; therefore, ACABQ recommended a bridging appropriation and assessment for maintaining the Mission during a four-month period, from 1 July to 31 October 1998. As indicated by the Secretary-General in March, the resource requirements for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 were originally estimated at $65 million (gross), or a monthly rate of $5.4 million (gross). Pending the Secretary-General's report, ACABQ recommended that the Assembly appropriate and assess a total of $21.6 million (gross) for MINURSO for the four-month period, based on the monthly rate.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (June)

On 26 June [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/843/Add.1], adopted resolution 52/228 B without vote [agenda item 125].

Financing of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 690(1991) of 29 April 1991, by which the Council established the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission, the latest of which was resolution 1163(1998) of 17 April 1998,

Recalling its resolution 45/266 of 17 May 1991 on the financing of the Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 52/228 A of 31 March 1998,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara as at 15 May 1998, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 70,964,762 United States dollars, representing 23 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Mission to the period ending 30 June 1998, notes that some 7 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission in full and on time;

5. Takes note of the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to employ locally recruited staff for the Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

8. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara the amount of 22,749,540 dollars gross (21,473,540 dollars net) for the operation of the Mission for the period from 1 July to 31 October 1998, inclusive of the amount of 1,149,540 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999;

9. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 22,749,540 dollars gross (21,473,540 dollars net) for the period from 1 July to 31 October 1998 among Member States, at a monthly rate of 5,687,385 dollars gross (5,368,385 dollars net), in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1998, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Mission beyond 20 July 1998;

10. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 1,276,000 dollars approved for the period from 1 July to 31 October 1998;

11. Decides that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 2,570,300 dollars gross (2,163,200 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997;

12. Decides also that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, their share of the unencumbered balance of 2,570,300 dollars gross (2,163,200 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

13. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara".

ACABQ report (October). ACABQ reported again in October on MINURSO finances [A/53/474]. Having been informed that the Secretary-General was not contemplating submitting revised estimates for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, ACABQ based its comments on the proposed budget for that period (above), amounting to $65,053,200 gross ($60,972,000 net). The March proposal corresponded to the maintenance of the resources already in the mission area at the end of June, with the exclusion of two demining platoons (63 personnel). The proposed budget for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, ACABQ remarked, reflected an increase of $ 17,651,000, or some 37 per cent over the previous period, attributable to the strengthening of the Mission for completing identification activities and the redeployment of the engineering unit for demining and administrative costs. ACABQ was informed that, as at 21 September, outstanding assessments amounted to $70.2 million. With respect to reimbursement to troop-contributing countries, payments had been made through June 1996. As at 31 August 1998, the total expenditure for the period from 1 July to 31 August 1998 amounted to $8.6 million gross. Of that total, unliquidated obligations totalled some $3.2 million.

On 28 September, the United Nations Controller sought ACABQ's concurrence in entering into commitments in an amount not exceeding $2,372,000 for the deployment of the demining platoons and the increase in the cost of helicopter operations. ACABQ, responding on 8 October, said that, based on MINURSO's pattern of expenditures, it did not find a need for an additional commitment. It intended to review the requirements of the Mission for the entire period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, as proposed in March, together with further clarifications, and report to the Assembly at its fifty-third session.

ACABQ recommended that the Assembly approve the appropriation and assessment of the additional amount of $37,250,460 gross ($34,445,260 net) for MINURSO operations for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, subject to the extension of its mandate by the Security Council.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (November)

On 2 November [meeting 50], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/544], adopted resolution 53/18 A without vote [agenda item 125].

Financing of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara, and taking note of the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 690(1991) of 29 April 1991, by which the Council decided to establish the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission, the latest of which was resolution 1204(1998) of 30 October 1998,

Recalling its resolution 45/266 of 17 May 1991 on the financing of the Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 52/228 B of 26 June 1998,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara as at 15 October 1998, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 69,886,177 United States dollars, representing 21 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Mission to the period ending 21 September 1998, notes that some 17 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission in full and on time;

5. Takes note of the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to employ locally recruited staff for the Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

8. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara the additional amount of 37,250,460 dollars gross (34,445,260 dollars net) for the operation of the Mission for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30

June 1999, taking into account the amount of 22,749,540 dollars gross (21,473,540 dollars net) already appropriated for the period from 1 July to 31 October 1998 under the provisions of its resolution 52/228 B;

9. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, and taking into account the amount of 22,749,540 dollars gross (21,473,540 dollars net) already apportioned for the period from 1 July to 31 October 1998 under the terms of its resolution 52/228 B, to apportion the additional amount of 37,250,460 dollars gross (34,445,260 dollars net) for the period from 1 November 1998 to 30 June 1999 among Member States, at a monthly rate of 4,656,307.50 dollars gross (4,305,657.50 dollars net), in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1998 and 1999, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Mission beyond 17 December 1998;

10. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 2,805,200 dollars approved for the period from 1 November 1998 to 30 June 1999;

11. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

12. Decides to keep under review during its fifty-third session the agenda item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara".

On 18 December [meeting 93], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/521/Add.1], decided that the Committee should continue its consideration of the agenda item on the financing of MINURSO at its resumed fifty-third (1999) session (decision 53/458).

Other questions

Mozambique

On 6 February, the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/52/680/Add.1] on the financing of the United Nations Operation in Mozambique (ONUMOZ) from its inception in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 196] until its liquidation in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 368]. The resources provided to ONUMOZ, less the operating costs and after the application of credits to Member States, resulted in a cumulative unencumbered balance of $42,556,800 gross ($41,305,000 net) as at 30 June 1997; the interest and miscellaneous income credited to the ONUMOZ special account amounted to $4,971,000 and $10,328,200, respectively, inclusive of adjustments arising from unutilized obligations from prior periods. With regard to assessed contributions, the amount of $38.5 million was still outstanding.

The Secretary-General requested the Assembly to credit Member States with the cumulative unencumbered balance and take action concerning the cumulative interest and miscellaneous income, as well as any surplus arising from the eventual liquidation of the remaining obligations in the ONUMOZ special account.

On 2 April [A/52/853], ACABQ recommended that the Assembly credit Member States with the cumulative unencumbered balance and credit to the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund the interest and miscellaneous income, as well as any surplus from the eventual liquidation of ONUMOZ's remaining obligations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 June [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/936], adopted resolution 52/240 without vote [agenda item 129].

Financing of the United Nations Operation in Mozambique

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Operation in Mozambique and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 797(1992) of 16 December 1992, by which the Council established the United Nations Operation in Mozambique, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Operation, the latest of which was resolution 957(1994) of 15 November 1994, by which the Council decided to extend the mandate of the Operation until the new Government of Mozambique took office but not later than 15 December 1994, and authorized it to complete its residual operations prior to its withdrawal on or before 31 January 1995,

Recalling also its resolutions 47/224 A and B of 16 March 1993 on the financing of the Operation and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 49/235 of 10 March 1995,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Operation are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Operation, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Operation with the necessary financial resources to enable it to meet its outstanding liabilities,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Operation in Mozambique as at 15 May 1998, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 38.6 million United States dollars, representing 7.3 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Operation to the period ending 31 March 1995, notes that some 54 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Operation in full to facilitate the closing of the Special Account for the Operation;

5. Takes note of the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Approves, on an exceptional basis, the special arrangements for the Operation with regard to the application of article IV of the financial regulations of the United Nations, whereby appropriations required in respect of obligations owed to Governments which provided contingents and/or logistic support for the Operation shall be retained beyond the period stipulated under financial regulations 4.3 and 4.4, as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

7. Reiterates its resolutions 50/222 of 11 April 1996 and 51/218 E of 17 June 1997;

8. Emphasizes that, in implementing paragraph 3 of its resolution 50/222, double payment and/or overpayment or underpayment should be avoided so as to ensure that reimbursement is in accordance with the decision of the General Assembly;

9. Decides that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Operation, there shall be credited their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 36,956,800 dollars gross (35,705,000 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 31 March 1995 and their respective share of the miscellaneous income of 10,328,200 dollars and interest income of 4,971,000 dollars;

10. Decides also that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Operation, their share of the unencumbered balance of 36,956,800 dollars gross (35,705,000 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 31 March 1995 and their respective share of the miscellaneous income of 10,328,200 dollars and interest income of 4,971,000 dollars shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

11. Takes note of the views expressed by Member States on the treatment of accumulated interest income in the Special Account for the Operation;

12. Also takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the disposition of the assets of the Operation;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Operation in Mozambique".

ANNEX

Special arrangements with regard to the application of article IV of the financial regulations of the United Nations

1. At the end of the twelve-month period provided for in financial regulation 4.3, any unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question relating to goods supplied and services rendered by Governments for which claims have been received or which are covered by established reimbursement rates shall be transferred to accounts payable; such accounts payable shall remain recorded in the Special Account for the United Nations Operation in Mozambique until payment is effected;

2. (a) Any other unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question owed to Governments for goods supplied and services rendered, as well as other obligations owed to Governments, for which required claims have not yet been received shall remain valid for an additional period of four years following the end of the twelve-month period provided for in financial regulation 4.3;

(b) Claims received during this four-year period shall be treated as provided for under paragraph 1 of the present annex, if appropriate;

(c) At the end of the additional four-year period, any unliquidated obligations shall be cancelled and the then remaining balance of any appropriations retained therefor shall be surrendered.

By decision 53/458 of 18 December, the Assembly decided that, at the resumed fifty-third (1999) session of the Assembly, the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the financing of ONUMOZ.

Cameroon-Nigeria

On 13 March [S/1998/228], Cameroon transmitted to the Security Council its response to Nigerian statements concerning the situation in the Bakassi peninsula, over which a sovereignty dispute had started in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 370]. Cameroon accused Nigeria of manipulating international public opinion and of continuing aggression in that area and invited it to respect the measures decreed by ICJ in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1179]. It noted that ICJ had begun to consider the preliminary objections raised by Nigeria regarding the admissibility of the case and the competence of the court (see PART FOUR, Chapter I).

With regard to the Bakassi peninsula and other points along the border, Cameroon presented its position to the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa, which held a ministerial meeting in Libreville, Gabon, from 28 to 30 April [A/53/258-S/1998/763]. The Committee was informed of Nigeria's failure to respect the boundaries inherited from the colonial period. The Committee expressed the hope that Cameroon and Nigeria would abide by ICJ's decisions on the question.

On U December [S/1998/1159], Cameroon informed the Security Council President that, on 5 and 6 December, Nigeria, in violation of international law and of the interim measures of protection ordered by ICJ in 1996, had held municipal elections in the occupied part of Cameroonian territory in the Bakassi peninsula.

Comoros

On 27 January [S/1998/94], Zimbabwe transmitted to the Secretary-General the Addis Ababa Agreement on the Question of the Comoros, adopted at the International Conference on the Comoros (Addis Ababa, 10-13 December 1997), which was held under OAU auspices. The crisis in the Comoros started in 1997 with the announcement by the islands of Anjouan (Nzwani) and Mohéli (Mwali) of their secession. At the Addis Ababa meeting, the Comorian parties regretted the military actions carried out in Anjouan and Mohéli in 1997, requested the establishment of an international commission of inquiry and appealed for urgent assistance. They agreed to establish a commission to implement the Addis Ababa Agreement, and noted the firm position expressed by OAU, the United Nations, the League of Arab States (LAS) and the EU on the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros, as well as their decision to convene a round table of donors to mobilize international assistance.

The OAU Council of Ministers (Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso, 4-7 June) [A/53/179] reaffirmed that the action of the Comorian separatists represented a threat to peace, security and stability in all the Indian Ocean region and urged Member States and the international community to take the necessary measures to isolate the separatist leaders. It requested the OAU Secretary-General to continue his consultations for the convening of a donors' round table and to seize the United Nations, LAS, the Organization of the Islamic Conference and the EU of the matter.

The Central Organ of the OAU Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution (Ouagadougou, 17 December) [S/1998/1217] expressed concern over the situation of anarchy prevailing in Anjouan and the humanitarian problems caused by the fighting between opposing factions within the separatist movement. It appealed to Member States and the international community to provide assistance, expressed satisfaction over the dispatch of a military assessment mission by the countries of the region and requested them to take urgent measures to put an end to the situation.

Algeria

In an 8 July statement on Algeria [A/52/979], the EU welcomed the establishment by the Secretary-General of a panel of eminent persons, which would visit Algeria to gather information on the complex situation there and enhance cooperation between the Algerian Government and the international community. Condemning the acts of terrorism that the Algerian people had long suffered, the EU committed itself to a political dialogue with Algeria and supported its efforts to consolidate democracy and protect citizens from terrorism.

On 22 September [A/53/445], the EU welcomed the report of the United Nations Panel of Eminent Persons on the situation in Algeria, which it hoped would help the Government to develop the rule of law and strengthen the democratic process and reforms in the country. The Panel observed that Algeria should accelerate the pace of privatization, strengthen democratic pluralism and reinforce the civilian elements in government. It stated that Algeria deserved the support of the international community to consolidate democratic institutions, address economic challenges, defeat terrorism and establish security.

Cooperation between OAU and the UN system

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/20 [YUN 1997, p. 163], the Secretary-General submitted a 22 September report [A/53/419] on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity (OAU). The Secretary-General noted that he and the OAU Secretary-General had cooperated in a number of areas and consulted regularly on key questions with a view to coordinating initiatives and action to prevent and resolve conflicts in Africa. Following their 1997 agreement to meet twice a year to build closer ties, they met twice in 1998, in Addis Ababa in April and in New York in July, to discuss areas of cooperation and coordinate their efforts. A meeting between the two secretariats was also held in Addis Ababa in May to review the implementation of programmes of cooperation and to agree on follow-up action.

The Secretary-General reviewed cooperation and the exchange of information between the two organizations in the field of peace and security, involving the Department of Political Affairs, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights. He also reviewed cooperation in the area of economic and social development, involving the Department of Economic and Social Affairs, the Economic Commission for Africa, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Environment Programme, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the International Labour Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund and the World Intellectual Property Organization. The Universal Postal Union, the World Meteorological Organization and the United Nations Drug Control Programme were also cooperating with OAU.

At a 24 September meeting [S/PRST/1998/29] (see above, under "Promotion of peace in Africa"), the Security Council commended efforts by African States and regional and sub-regional organizations, in particular OAU, to resolve conflicts by peaceful means, and it called for an enhanced partnership between them.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/91 [draft: A/53/L.21/Rev.1] without vote [agenda item 35].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity,

Recalling the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations on regional arrangements or agencies, which set forth the basic principles governing their activities and establishing the legal framework for cooperation with the United Nations in the area of the maintenance of international peace and security, as well as resolution 49/57 of 9 December 1994, the annex to which contains the Declaration on the Enhancement of Cooperation between the United Nations and Regional Arrangements or Agencies in the Maintenance of International Peace and Security,

Recalling also the agreement of 15 November 1965 on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity as updated and signed on 9 October 1990 by the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity,

Recalling further its resolutions on the enhancement of cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, in particular resolutions 43/12 of 25 October 1988, 43/27 of 18 November 1988, 44/17 of 1 November 1989, 45/13 of 7 November 1990, 46/20 of 26 November 1991, 47/148 of 18 December 1992, 48/25 of 29 November 1993, 49/64 of 15 December 1994, 50/158 of 21 December 1995, 51/151 of 13 December 1996 and 52/20 of 24 November 1997,

Recalling that, in its resolutions 46/20, 47/148 and 48/25, it, inter alia, urged the Secretary-General and the relevant agencies of the United Nations system to extend their support for the establishment of the African Economic Community,

Recalling also its resolution 48/214 of 23 December 1993 on the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s,

Taking note of the resolutions, decisions and declarations adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-fourth ordinary session, held at Ouagadougou from 8 to 10 June 1998,

Noting the holding of the ministerial meeting of the Security Council on the situation in Africa on 24 September 1998 and the recognition of the symbiotic relationship between peace and development,

Mindful of the need for continued and closer cooperation between the United Nations and its specialized agencies and the Organization of African Unity, in particular in the political, economic, social, technical, cultural and administrative fields,

Noting that the Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution of the Organization of African Unity is developing its capacity in preventive diplomacy, Noting also the efforts of the Organization of African Unity, and the assistance of the United Nations, to promote the peaceful settlement of disputes and conflicts in Africa and the harmonious continuation of the process of democratization,

Deeply concerned that, despite the policies of reform being implemented by most African countries, their economic situation remains critical and African recovery and development continue to be severely hindered by the persistence of lower-level commodity prices, the heavy debt burden and the paucity of investment financing,

Aware of the efforts being made by the Organization of African Unity and its member States in the area of economic integration and of the need to accelerate the process of implementation of the Treaty Establishing the African Economic Community,

Acknowledging the assistance already rendered by the international community, in particular to refugees, displaced persons and African countries of asylum,

Deeply concerned about the gravity of the situation of refugees and internally displaced persons in Africa and the urgent need for increased international assistance to help refugees and African countries of asylum,

Recognizing the importance of developing and maintaining a culture of peace, tolerance and harmonious relationships based on good governance, social justice and international cooperation in order to contribute to the prevention of conflicts and wars in Africa,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity and of his efforts to strengthen that cooperation and to implement the relevant resolutions;

2. Welcomes the recent decision of the Secretary-General to establish a liaison office with the Organization of African Unity in Addis Ababa;

3. Notes with appreciation the continued and increasing participation of the Organization of African Unity in the work of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and its constructive contribution to that work;

4. Calls upon the United Nations organs, in particular the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council, to continue to involve the Organization of African Unity closely in all their activities concerning Africa;

5. Welcomes the initiative of the ministerial meeting of the Security Council on the situation in Africa, which took place on 24 September 1998, expresses its appreciation for the report of the Secretary-General on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa of 13 April 1998, and encourages the early implementation of the recommendations contained in the report by the United Nations and its organs and specialized agencies, each in its respective area of competence;

6. Calls upon the United Nations to cooperate and coordinate its efforts with those of the Organization of African Unity, inter alia, in the following areas:

(a) Peaceful settlement of disputes and maintenance of international peace and security in Africa, as provided for under Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations;

(b) Prevention of conflict through the promotion of a culture of peace, tolerance and harmonious relations in Africa and enhancement of the existing pattern of exchange of information and consultation;

7. Invites the United Nations to continue to assist the Organization of African Unity in strengthening the institutional and operational capacity of its Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution in Africa, in particular in the following areas:

(a) Establishment of an early-warning system;

(b) Technical assistance and training of personnel, including a staff exchange programme;

(c) Exchange and coordination of information between their respective early-warning systems;

(d) Logistical support;

(e) Mobilization of financial support;

8. Notes with appreciation the assistance provided by the United Nations and its agencies to African countries in the context of the democratization process, and urges the United Nations to encourage donor countries, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, to provide adequate funding and training for African countries in their efforts to enhance their peacekeeping capabilities, with a view to enabling those countries to participate actively in peacekeeping operations within the framework of the United Nations;

9. Urges the United Nations to continue to support the Organization of African Unity in its efforts to manage the expansion of the democratic experience in Africa, in particular in the areas of education for democracy, election observation, human rights and freedom, including technical support to the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights;

10. Calls upon all Member States and regional and international organizations, in particular those of the United Nations system, as well as non-governmental organizations, to provide appropriate assistance to refugees and displaced persons, as well as to the African countries of asylum, taking into account recent disquieting developments in this respect;

11. Stresses that the economic, technical and development assistance provided to Africa by the United Nations system must continue, and emphasizes the urgent need for those organizations to accord priority to Africa in this field;

12. Urges the Secretary-General, Member States, regional and international organizations, in particular those of the United Nations system, and non-governmental organizations to extend their support to the operations of the African Economic Community, its popularization and the strengthening of its institutional support;

13. Requests the agencies of the United Nations system working in Africa to include in their programmes at the national and regional levels activities that will enhance regional cooperation in their respective areas and to facilitate the realization of the objectives of the Treaty Establishing the African Economic Community;

14. Calls upon the United Nations agencies to intensify the coordination of their regional programmes in Africa in order to create linkages among them and to ensure the harmonization of their programmes with those of the African regional and subregional economic organizations;

15. Emphasizes the urgency of the need to adopt appropriate measures to ensure the effective implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, in particular regarding (a) economic reforms, including the effective mobilization and efficient utilization of domestic resources, (b) promotion of the private sector and foreign direct investment, (c) expansion of the democratic experience and the strengthening of civil society, (d) environment and development, (e) resource flows, (f) solution of Africa's debt problem, (g) trade facilitation and market access, (h) diversification of African economies, (i) improvement of physical and institutional infrastructure and social and human resource development and (j) women in development;

16. Urges all States and international subregional organizations actively to implement the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole of the General Assembly for the Mid-term Review of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, as adopted by the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

17. Invites the Secretary-General to associate closely the Organization of African Unity with the implementation, follow-up and evaluation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s and beyond, including the conduct of the final review of the implementation in the year 2002;

18. Calls upon the Secretary-General to develop new and effective strategies for the implementation of the recommendations of the meeting of the secretariats of the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations held from 6 to 8 May 1998;

19. Calls upon the relevant organs of the United Nations system to ensure the effective, fair and equitable representation of Africans at senior and policy levels at their respective headquarters and in their regional field operations;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution and on the development of cooperation between the Organization of African Unity and the organizations of the United Nations system.

Chapter III

Americas

During 1998, the United Nations continued to provide assistance to countries in the Americas region in the attainment and consolidation of political stability, security, economic and social development, judicial reform and the full respect of human rights. The Organization continued to monitor the situation in Central America; for the second consecutive year, not one of the countries of that subregion was plagued by internal conflict.

The United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala (MINUGUA), established in 1994, continued to fulfil its mandate by verifying compliance with the implementation of the peace accords signed in 1996 between the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca (URNG). In El Salvador and Nicaragua, the United Nations provided assistance for economic and social development. The democratization process in Nicaragua was consolidated further with the final demobilization of the last armed groups among the ex-combatants.

In Haiti, despite a prolonged political institutional crisis, the United Nations continued its co-operation with the Organization of American States (OAS) through the jointly fielded International Civilian Mission to Haiti (MICIVIH), established in 1993 to monitor the human rights situation. The United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti (MIPONUH), established in 1997, supervised, supported and trained the Haitian National Police. The Security Council extended the mandate of MIPONUH until 30 November 1999.

In October, the General Assembly again called on States to refrain from promulgating laws and measures, such as the ongoing United States economic embargo against Cuba. In other action, the Assembly adopted resolutions on strengthening UN cooperation with OAS and the Caribbean Community (CARICOM).

Central America

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/176 [YUN 1997, p. 168], the Secretary-General submitted an August 1998 report on the situation in Central America [A/53/315], covering progress achieved by Central American countries in the areas of peace, freedom, democracy and development since September 1997. The report concentrated on the five signatories to the Esquipulas II process [YUN 1987, p. 188] (Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua). In accordance with the new Central America agenda and the composition of Central American summit meetings, reference was also made to the situation in Belize and Panama.

The Secretary-General stated that democratically elected Governments had shown themselves to be stable despite internal difficulties. Presidential elections were held in Honduras on 30 November 1997 and in Costa Rica on 1 February 1998. In Nicaragua, elections were held peacefully in the Atlantic Coast region on 1 March 1998. Similarly, Guatemala held municipal elections in 30 municipalities on 7 June 1998. Panama continued the process of broadening national consensus around the goal of a successful transfer of the Panama Canal to exclusive Panamanian control after 31 December 1999.

Efforts to strengthen democratic institutions and to bring military and public security bodies under the control of civilian authorities were continuing, the Secretary-General noted. The offices of the ombudsmen for human rights in El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras were proceeding with their work. However, ombudsmen who attended a regional meeting in April in Honduras expressed concern regarding a region-wide tendency to limit the role of their offices and decrease their budgets. Honduras was continuing to demilitarize public security by creating the position of a civilian Security Minister and proposing the appointment of a civilian to take charge of the country's defence. In Guatemala, the constitutional amendments required to limit the role of the armed forces to that of external defence were yet to be approved by Congress. However, efforts had been made to strengthen the capacity and deployment of Guatemala's new National Civil Police.

Throughout the region, institutions responsible for public security were confronted with alarming levels of common criminality, which had their origin in the economic and social hardships experienced by a large proportion of the population, combined with difficulties in reinte-grating former combatants and those displaced by conflict. In June, the Inter-American Development Bank organized a forum on citizen security in the region to analyse the social and economic causes and costs of violence. The Bank's President expressed his concern that continued crime might undermine economic and social development.

The pursuit of policies necessary for macro-economic stabilization, liberalization of the economy and modernization of the State had done little to advance the alleviation of widespread poverty or the much needed creation of employment. While the risk of social unrest remained real, the fact that incidents of that nature had not been more frequent could be attributed to the region's high level of political organization and, to some extent, to the memories of recent experiences of internal conflict.

Reporting on regional cooperation efforts, the Secretary-General stated that progress had been achieved in settling territorial disputes. In January, the Presidents of El Salvador and Honduras signed an accord agreeing to demarcate the border between them within a year. With regard to the dispute over the Gulf of Fonseca involving El Salvador, Honduras and Nicaragua, Honduras and Nicaragua agreed in March to better signal their maritime limits. In the dispute over transit on the San Juan River along the border between Costa Rica and Nicaragua, the two countries emphasized the need to settle their differences through dialogue. At the extraregional level, the Second Summit of the Americas (Santiago, Chile, 18-19 April) established that the 34 participating countries shared common goals in areas as diverse as democracy, education, poverty alleviation and drug trafficking. (For information on economic cooperation, see PART THREE, Chapter V.)

As for UN efforts in Central America, the Secretary-General noted that in El Salvador a small follow-up unit continued to verify implementation of outstanding elements of the 1992 Peace Agreement [YUN 1992, p. 222] until 30 June 1998, while in Guatemala the Organization continued to verify compliance with the Agreement on a Firm and Lasting Peace, which came into effect in December 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 168J (for details, see below).

United Nations support to Central America through operational activities was comprehensive and diversified. A programme of subregional cooperation in Central America, established in 1996 by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), focused on three main areas: peace and democratic governance; eradication of poverty; and sustainable development of natural resources.

In the area of peace and democratic governance, the UN operational system was providing assistance to consensus-building processes and building capacity of democratic institutions. At the subregional level, projects supported the secretariat of the Central American Integration System and strengthened regional organizations representing civil society in order to facilitate their participation in the integration process. In Guatemala, UNDP, working with bilateral donors, the European Union and UN agencies, assisted in the demobilization of Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca ex-combatants, and was supporting their long-term social and economic integration through various projects. UNDP was also involved in supporting the demobilization of almost 2,000 combatants from groups in the north of Nicaragua and continued to assist in the reintegration of former combatants in El Salvador and Nicaragua. The strengthening of democratic institutions was assisted through various projects, specifically in the areas of judicial reform (creation of public defender systems in El Salvador and Guatemala), public security, offices of the human rights ombudsmen, fiscal reform and the process of decentralization. In Guatemala, the United Nations conducted programmes for the resettlement of uprooted populations, the promotion of respect for the identity and rights of the indigenous peoples and the resolution of land conflicts through the creation of cadastral systems and new institutions.

With regard to the eradication of poverty, the inter-agency execution of the Programme for the Promotion of Human Sustainable Development in Central America continued. Another important undertaking was a UNDP project that provided technical assistance for the agricultural development of Central America.

UNDP, together with other parts of the UN system, played an active role in the promotion of gender rights by supporting the preparation of national reports on gender violence as an input to the mid-term evaluation of the Beijing Platform for Action, adopted in 1995 at the Fourth World Conference on Women [YUN 1995, p. 1170]. UNDP was also assisting Central American countries in the protection and sustainable development of the environment throughout the region, such as supporting national efforts to fulfil the countries' commitments as parties to the 1992 United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change [YUN 1992, p. 681] and to the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity [ibid., p. 683].

The Secretary-General stated that, in accordance with the recommendations contained in his

July 1997 report on UN reform [YUN 1997, p. 1390], Guatemala was selected to be among the pioneering countries for developing a United Nations Development Assistance Framework. The UN country team in Guatemala was working on a framework of support to the peace accords, interacting with the Government and donors in the context of post-conflict peace-building.

The Secretary-General observed that, for peace to be firm and lasting throughout the region, strong linkage had to be maintained between freedom, democracy and development. The Central American Presidents were fully aware that the challenge of fulfilling the promise of peace was closely related to progress in human development, particularly in the alleviation and ultimate eradication of extreme poverty, the promotion of economic and social justice, progress in judicial reform and the safeguarding of human rights. The Secretary-General expressed his belief that, with the support and efforts of the international community as a whole, the Central American region could meet those challenges and become a model of conflict resolution, consolidated by peace and democracy through comprehensive development and the adoption of political solutions.

In a later report [A/54/311], the Secretary-General described the devastating impact that hurricane Mitch had on the entire Central American region during the latter part of October and early November (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/94 [draft: A/53/L.22/Rev.2 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 44].

The situation in Central America: procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace and progress in fashioning a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development

The General Assembly,

Considering the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, particularly resolution 637(1989) of 27 July 1989, and its own resolutions, particularly resolution 43/24 of 15 November 1988, in which it requests the Secretary-General to continue his good offices and to afford the fullest possible support to the Central American Governments in their efforts to achieve the objectives of peace, reconciliation, democracy, development and justice established in the agreement on "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America" of 7 August 1987,

Reaffirming its resolutions in which it recognizes and stresses the importance of international economic, financial and technical cooperation and assistance, both bilateral and multilateral, aimed at promoting economic and social development in the region with a view to furthering and supplementing the efforts of the Central American peoples and Governments to achieve peace and democratization, particularly resolution 50/58 B of 12 December 1995, concerning international assistance to and cooperation with the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America, as well as its resolution 53/1 C of 2 November 1998, concerning emergency assistance to Central America, owing to the destruction caused by hurricane Mitch,

Emphasizing the importance of the development of the Central American Integration System, which has as its main objective the promotion of the integration process; the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America as the integrated programme for national and regional development, which contains the commitments and priorities of the countries of the area for the promotion of sustainable development; the establishment of the subsystem and of the regional social policy; the model of democratic Central American security; and the implementation of other agreements adopted at the presidential summit meetings, which taken together constitute the global frame of reference for consolidating peace, freedom, democracy and development and the basis for the promotion of mutually advantageous relations between Central America and the international community,

Welcoming the visit of the Secretary-General to Guatemala in support of the process of consolidating peace, democracy and development in the Central American region, in particular, in that country,

Recognizing the progress made in the fulfilment of the commitments contained in the Guatemala Peace Agreements, implementation of which is being verified by the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala, including those relating to the demobilization and reintegration of former combatants into civilian life, the treatment of returnees, the establishment of special commissions, the reduction of the army, the promotion and protection of human rights and progress in respect of constitutional reforms,

Noting with gratification the efforts of the people and the Government of El Salvador to implement the peace accords fully,

Recognizing with satisfaction the role played by the peacekeeping operations and observer and monitoring missions of the United Nations, which carried out successfully their mandate in Central America pursuant to the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly, respectively,

Welcoming the changes and progress made by the Central American people, whose efforts have brought about, inter alia, constitutional reforms, the strengthening of civil society, the creation of new political forms, the holding of free and pluralistic elections, the creation of mechanisms for the protection and promotion of human rights, freedom of expression, the strengthening of democratic institutions and of the rule of law, judicial reform processes and the adoption of a fairer development model providing greater opportunities for the Central American peoples,

Emphasizing the importance of the end of a critical period in Central American history and the start of a new phase free from armed conflict, with freely elected Governments in each country and with profound political, economic, social and other changes which have created a climate conducive to the promotion of economic growth and further progress towards the consolidation and further development of democratic, just and equitable societies,

Reaffirming that firm and lasting peace and democracy in Central America are a dynamic and ongoing process that faces serious structural challenges, whose continuation and consolidation are closely related to progress in human development, especially the alleviation of extreme poverty, the promotion of economic and social justice, judicial reform, the safeguarding of human rights and fundamental freedoms, respect for minorities and the satisfaction of the basic needs of the most vulnerable groups among the people of the region, issues which have been a primary source of tension and conflict and which deserve to be discussed with the same urgency and dedication as was the case in the settlement of the armed conflicts,

Emphasizing the decision of the Presidents of the Central American countries to continue to do their utmost to expedite, gradually and progressively, the Central American Union referred to in the Declaration of Nicaragua of 2 September 1997, in accordance with the aspirations of the peoples of the region,

Recognizing the destructive effects of hurricane Mitch through the Central American region, which have resulted in a bleak panorama owing to the great loss of human lives and material damage,

Deeply concerned lest the devastating effects of this natural disaster bring about a significant setback as regards the efforts of the Central American peoples and the international community to overcome the aftermath of the armed conflicts and as regards the progress achieved with respect to political stability, democratization and sustainable development, which constitutes an emergency situation that will call for extraordinary measures, both on the part of the Governments of the region and on the part of the international community, in order to meet the priority needs of the affected populations and to promote as soon as possible rehabilitation and reconstruction projects in the region,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Commends the efforts of the peoples and the Governments of the Central American countries to re-establish peace and democracy throughout the region and promote sustainable development by implementing the commitments adopted at the summit meetings, and supports the decision of the presidents that Central America should become a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development;

3. Recognizes the need to continue to follow closely the situation in Central America in order to support national and regional efforts to overcome the underlying causes that have led to armed conflicts, avoid setbacks and consolidate peace and democratization in the area, and promote the objectives of the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America;

4. Emphasizes the importance of the global frame of reference and the establishment of national and regional development priorities as the basis for promoting the effective, consistent and sustainable progress of the Central American peoples, and for providing international cooperation in accordance with the new circumstances in and outside the region;

5. Welcomes the progress achieved in implementing the Guatemala Peace Agreements, and urges all sectors of society to combine efforts and work with courage and determination to consolidate peace;

6. Also welcomes the efforts made by the people and the Government of El Salvador to fulfil the commitments set forth in the peace accords, thus contributing substantially to the strengthening of the democratization process in the country;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, the bodies and programmes of the United Nations system, and the international community to continue to support and verify in Guatemala the implementation of all the peace agreements signed under United Nations auspices, compliance with which is an essential condition for a firm and lasting peace in that country, and to provide their resolute support for the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala in the fulfilment of its mandate;

8. Recognizes the importance of the Central American Integration System as the body set up to coordinate and harmonize efforts to achieve integration, a process aimed at establishing, gradually and progressively, the Central American Union, and calls upon the international community, the United Nations system and other international organizations, both governmental and non-governmental, to provide generous and effective cooperation with a view to improving the competence and efficiency of the Central American Integration System in the fulfilment of its mandate;

9. Encourages the Central American Governments to continue to carry out their historic responsibilities by fully implementing the commitments they have assumed under national, regional or international agreements, especially the commitments to implement the social programme to overcome poverty and unemployment, establish a more just and equitable society, improve public safety, consolidate a modern and transparent public administration and eliminate corruption, impunity, acts of terrorism and drug and arms trafficking, all of which are necessary and urgent measures for establishing a firm and lasting peace in the region;

10. Reiterates its deep appreciation to the Secretary-General, his special representatives, the groups of friends for the peace processes in El Salvador (Colombia, Mexico, Spain, United States of America and Venezuela) and Guatemala (Colombia, Mexico, Norway, Spain, United States of America and Venezuela), to the Support Group for Nicaragua (Canada, Mexico, Netherlands, Spain and Sweden), to the European Union for the political dialogue and cooperation, and to other countries that have contributed significantly and the international community in general for its support and solidarity in the building of peace, democracy and development in Central America;

11. Reaffirms the importance of international cooperation, in particular cooperation with the bodies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system, and the donor community in the new stage of consolidating peace and democracy in Central America, and urges them to continue to support Central American efforts to achieve those goals, bearing in mind the global framework of the new regional development strategy, which is in keeping with the collective aspirations and needs of the Central American peoples;

12. Recognizes the need for emergency aid for the Central American countries, as a result of the disaster caused by hurricane Mitch;

13. Notes with appreciation the expressions of international solidarity and support and the emergency aid provided to the victims of hurricane Mitch;

14. Appeals to all Member States, to the organs, organizations, funds and programmes of the United Nations system and to international financial institutions, as well as to non-governmental organizations, the private sector and other major actors in international civil society, generously to provide special cooperation and assistance and emergency aid for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the countries affected by the hurricane;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to lend his full support to the initiatives and activities of the Central American Governments, particularly their efforts to consolidate peace and democracy through the implementation of a new, comprehensive sustainable development programme and the initiative to establish the Central American Union, emphasizing, inter alia, the potential repercussions of natural disasters, in particular of hurricane Mitch, for the peace processes and the vulnerable economies of the region, and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "The situation in Central America: procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace and progress in fashioning a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development".

Guatemala

In 1998, Guatemala experienced a noticeable slowdown in the peace process, despite progress in several areas, such as the restructuring of the social sector, constitutional reforms and increased citizens' participation. The United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala (MINUGUA) continued to verify the implementation of the 1996 Agreement on a Firm and Lasting Peace [YUN 1996, p. 168] and the 1996 Agreement on the Implementation, Compliance and Verification Timetable for the Peace Agreements (the Timetable Agreement) [YUN 1997, p. 176], signed by the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca (URNG). The General Assembly renewed the mandate of the Mission until 31 December 1999.

The Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly reports by the MINUGUA Director covering the Mission's activities throughout 1998. The reports described uneven progress due to an increase in criminal violence, to inadequate budgetary allocations and to the fact that some commitments had not been carried out. On the positive side, the trend towards a reduction in human rights violations continued.

During his visit to Guatemala on 21 and 22 July, the Secretary-General observed that MINU-

GUA had contributed to keeping the peace process at the forefront of the political agenda and, together with the other parts of the UN system and the international community at large, had assisted in the consolidation of peace.

In late October, hurricane Mitch caused great devastation and human suffering throughout Guatemala. The Government undertook to reaffirm the peace agenda as a national priority and to regard it as complementary to and not as a substitute for the reconstruction programme.

MINUGUA

The mandate of MINUGUA, which was extended to 31 December 1998 by General Assembly resolution 52/175 [YUN 1997, p. 172], included verification of all agreements signed by the Government of Guatemala and URNG covering human rights, the parties' compliance with the ceasefire, separation and concentration of the respective forces, and disarmament and demobilization of former URNG combatants. The Mission's functions also comprised good offices, advisory and support services and public information. The parties to the agreements had requested that the duration of the mandate of MINUGUA be the same as that of the implementation timetable, namely four years, up to 31 December 2000.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 52/175, the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/53/288] covering the state of implementation of the peace agreements (see below, under "Verification of compliance") and the structure and staffing of MINUGUA. The Mission had implemented the changes authorized by the Assembly in resolution 52/175, including the strengthening of the Office of the Deputy Chief of Mission/Field Coordinator; minor adjustments to the staffing of regional offices and sub-offices; providing the Spokesman and the Office of Public Information with national officers to serve as information liaisons in the regions; and an increase in the contingent of civilian police observers and the military liaison team. The Secretary-General stated that he did not propose to introduce further modifications in the structure and staffing of the Mission at that stage in the implementation of the peace agreements.

In reviewing the work of MINUGUA, the Secretary-General paid tribute to the six members of the Mission and their pilot who lost their lives in a helicopter crash on 17 March while on their way to a meeting at an indigenous community in a remote mountainous region of Guatemala.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly authorize the renewal of MINUGUA's mandate for a further period of one year, until 31 December 1999. He noted that financial requirements, inclusive of support staff and operational costs for the period from 1 January to 31 December 1999, were estimated at $30.2 million.

Verification of compliance

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/175, the Secretary-General, on 28 September, submitted his third report [A/53/421 & Corr.1] on the verification of compliance with the agreements signed by the Government of Guatemala and URNG [YUN 1996, p. 168].

The implementation of the commitments entered into by the two parties was governed by the Timetable Agreement [YUN 1997, p. 176], which divided the period from 1997 to 2000 into three phases. The report covered the period from January to July 1998—the first seven months of the third phase. As indicated in the Secretary-General's 1997 report [YUN 1997, p. 179], the implementation of important commitments under the second phase had to be postponed; they included compensation for victims of human rights violations, reform and strengthening of the system of urban and rural development councils, establishment of an agrarian and environmental jurisdiction, reform of intelligence bodies, establishment of a career civil service and redeployment of the armed forces. The Commission to Follow Up the Implementation of the Peace Agreements was preparing a revised schedule for the remainder of 1998 and for 1999 in consultation with the State institutions and the organizations directly involved in the implementation of the Agreements.

With regard to compliance with the 1994 Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights [YUN 1994, p. 407], human rights violations had decreased. However, there was still a need for a national institution to monitor the performance of the administration and to promote new relations between the State and citizens. MINUGUA, for its part, had initiated a pilot joint verification programme with several of its regional offices and the sub-offices of the Office of the Counsel for Human Rights, the aim of which was to pass on the experience acquired by the Mission in the area of human rights verification to the staff of that Office.

As to compliance with the 1994 Agreement on Resettlement of the Population Groups Uprooted by the Armed Conflict [ibid.], during the period under review only 1,320 people belonging to 346 families had been resettled. The return process was moving slowly, due, among other things, to difficulties in negotiations over properties, the presence of intermediaries who distorted the price, overvaluation by the owners, the Government's determination to negotiate lower prices and the lack of alternatives for acquiring other land. There were also fewer returnees than expected. Resettlement had begun for internally displaced persons organized into communities, which were known as Comunidades de Población en Resistencia. There was still a need to speed up the provision of infrastructure and minimum services so as to ensure that uprooted population groups were resettled in conditions of dignity and sustainability. With regard to the Act on the Personal Documentation of the Population Uprooted by the Internal Armed Conflict, which entered into force in October 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 179], the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and MINUGUA had endeavoured to train registrars and to prepare guidelines, despite the fact that the Ministry of the Interior had yet to prepare regulations for the Act's implementation. At the same time, the documentation campaign being conducted by UNHCR, MINUGUA, the Technical Commission for the Implementation of the Resettlement Agreement and other organizations was still going on in 21 municipalities.

With regard to the 1994 Agreement on the Establishment of the Commission to Clarify Past Human Rights Violations and Acts of Violence That Have Caused the Guatemalan Population to Suffer [YUN 1994, p. 407], the Clarification Commission set up under that Agreement concluded its substantive activities on 31 July and set January 1999 as the date for the delivery of its report.

Under the 1995 Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples [YUN 1995, p. 432], priority was given to the establishment of joint commissions, composed of representatives of the Government and of indigenous organizations, and other specific commissions charged with preparing substantive reforms in such areas as education, official recognition of languages, preservation of holy sites and the land issue. The work of those commissions began to bear fruit with the submission of the initial report of the Joint Commission on Land Rights and the final reports of the Commission for the Official Recognition of Indigenous Languages and the Commission on Educational Reform.

Regarding the 1996 Agreement on Social and Economic Aspects and the Agrarian Situation [YUN 1996, p. 165], the Secretary-General noted that Guatemala's economic and financial performance in 1997 was better than that in 1996; real production of goods and services increased by 4.3 per cent, inflation stood at 7.1 per cent and the external sector's position improved. That trend continued in the first half of 1998.

With regard to fiscal policy, the taxation target was met in 1997, with a net tax burden of 8.8 per cent. During the period under review, tax receipts showed a slightly better performance than had been forecast by the Ministry of Finance, and that trend was expected to continue for the rest of the year. Those results, however, proved insufficient to meet the intermediate indicative tax burden target of 10.4 per cent set for 1998. A further concern was the decline in tax revenues forecast for 1999, owing, among other things, to tariff reductions and the repeal of the Act on a Single Property Tax. As for expenditures, in 1997 and the first half of 1998, progress was made in the amount of social spending and in its geographical distribution, resulting in an increase in the coverage of basic social services and an improvement in regional and local economic and social infrastructure.

Progress was made on State reform and social participation. The process of decentralization of government services, especially in the education and health sectors, had been intensified; the institutional restructuring of some ministries continued; and notable progress was made in modernizing government management through the introduction of the Integrated Financial Administration and Monitoring System. Those advances had led to better implementation of government policies, a more rational use of public resources and a strengthening of anti-corruption mechanisms. Despite those efforts, a significant weakness persisted in the State's institutional framework with regard to the functions assigned to it by the Guatemala Peace Agreements in the socio-economic and agricultural spheres. Moreover, the State still maintained only a limited presence at the regional level, and the problem of under-execution of public investment persisted.

With regard to participation of women, the measures introduced by ministries and State bodies were being implemented through dispersed plans and programmes, a practice that limited their sustainability and their impact on efforts to reduce inequity. To remedy that situation, the Social Welfare Secretariat in the Office of the First Lady, in coordination with the National Office for Women's Affairs and a consultative committee made up of women's organizations, had prepared the National Policy for the Promotion and Development of Guatemalan Women and the Equal Opportunities Plan, 1997-2001, which was a global strategy proposal with national coverage.

As to the agrarian situation and rural development, the Ministry of Agriculture, on the basis of the finding that previous rural policies had ceased to be effective, had introduced a transition process that covered the redefinition of rural development policy and of the State institutional framework in the agricultural sector, including the role of the Ministry itself. Though that process was commendable, the restructuring of the Ministry of Agriculture had led to a drastic decline in the institutional presence of the Ministry in some regions, which was creating an institutional vacuum and had caused a decline in the services provided to farmers.

There was an improvement in some aspects of the implementation of government policies in the sphere of social development in 1998, as a result of the allocation of increased resources, progress in the decentralization process, devolution and participation in public management and the institutional restructuring of the social ministries. In education, the National Programme for Educational Self-Management (PRONADE) managed to increase primary education coverage and attained 60 per cent of the target set for the year 2000 in the Peace Agreements. However, PRONADE contained little in the way of bilingual and intercultural education, even though it mainly covered areas with a rural indigenous population. The Ministry of Health policy for increasing health care coverage focused on implementing the Integrated Health Care System. In general, the system was well received and by June 1998 covered some 1.5 million people. However, the Ministry's demand that non-governmental organizations (NGOs) provide all primary health care services and that they report to it on their activities made some of those organizations reluctant to take part in the system. Serious concern remained at the inadequate level of vaccination coverage, which had resulted in outbreaks of diseases such as whooping cough in traditionally isolated areas of the country. Likewise, the mounting number of people who had not been vaccinated against measles increased the risk of an epidemic in the future.

Efforts to streamline dispute settlement and labour justice proceedings had been noteworthy and included the setting up of eight new labour courts and two courts of appeal, the amendment of the Labour Code to expedite legal proceedings and the establishment of a tripartite commission of international affairs. Nevertheless, those efforts had yet to succeed in conveying to workers and employers the necessity and usefulness of dialogue and consensus as tools for settling differences and disputes.

In the first seven months of 1998, some of the commitments contained in the 1996 Agreement on the Strengthening of Civilian Power and on the Role of the Armed Forces in a Democratic Society [YUN 1996, p. 167] were implemented. In the administration of justice, progress had been made in relation to the Commission on the Strengthening of the Justice System, the plan for the modernization of the judiciary and the coordinating body for the modernization of the justice sector. By contrast, the slow and uncertain process of constitutional reforms was cause for concern.

The lack of public security at a time when the police force was being restructured remained one of the greatest concerns of Guatemala's population. The many incidents of violence during the period under review showed that there were still inadequate guarantees for the enjoyment of fundamental rights. Despite the enthusiasm with which it had been received, the new National Civil Police (PNC) continued to face serious material and logistical constraints that were undermining its effectiveness, compounded by the ongoing training needs of police personnel in the field.

The commitments concerning the establishment of a Civil Intelligence Department and the ratification of laws providing for parliamentary oversight of intelligence bodies, regulating the classification and declassification of information relating to national security and characterizing the crime of maintaining illegal files and records, were rescheduled, pending the amendment of article 244 of the Constitution, which gave the armed forces responsibility for both external and internal security.

With regard to the armed forces, the Mission had been verifying the commitment to reduce the troop strength since January 1998, on the basis of the final version of the manning and equipment table, approved at 31,423 men at the end of 1997. Thus far, 14 military zones, 3 airbases, 2 naval bases, 3 brigades and 7 units, totalling 25,227 troops or nearly 80.3 per cent of the existing strength, had been verified. Various training programmes, which were open to former members of the Mobile Military Police, had been instituted in an effort to reintegrate demobilized members of the armed forces. As to the reorganization and deployment of military forces, the only measure that had been noted was that four military zones had been taken out of operation during 1997.

Regarding the commitments concerning the legislative branch, no progress had been made in the discussion of the issue dealt with by the Technical and Legislative Support Committee of the Congress, set up as a multi-party forum for enhancing, modernizing and strengthening the legislative branch.

As far as the 1996 Agreement on Constitutional Reforms and the Electoral Regime [YUN 1997, p. 178] was concerned, no real agreement was reached on constitutional amendments. The Electoral Reform Commission completed its work and issued a report entitled "Guatemala, peace and democracy", which contained a series of recommendations directed at the Supreme Electoral Tribunal, political parties, Congress and the universities.

Considerable progress was made towards fulfilling the 1996 Agreement on the Basis for the Legal Integration of the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca [YUN 1996, p. 169]. The demobilized combatants, who were staying in temporary hostels and who were considered the most vulnerable group, had been moved to properties acquired with the help of the Land Trust Fund. The distribution to demobilized combatants of packages of inputs for production activities had been completed and all demobilized combatants, together with members of the communities where they had settled, had successfully completed a remedial subprogramme. In addition, a small group of former soldiers were benefiting from a subprogramme of training and financing for micro-enterprise management. However, not all the subprogrammes, particularly those for demobilized combatants scattered throughout the country, had been designed or launched.

The Secretary-General observed that there had been progress in several areas in the third phase of the implementation timetable, particularly in the social sector, citizens' participation and the reform of public security. However, there had been a noticeable slowing down of the peace process since the beginning of 1998, compared with the previous year. The April assassination of Monsignor Gerardi (see below) caused many Guatemalans to wonder whether impunity could be overcome and justice made to prevail in the short term. That feeling was also due to the uncertainty hanging over the key issues of fiscal and constitutional reform. The rejection of the new Act on the Alcoholic and Other Beverages Sales Tax in February and the deep-seated resistance that the tax issue continued to arouse in certain population groups underscored the political obstacles standing in the way of achieving the modest taxation targets contained in the Guatemala Peace Agreements.

Those setbacks demonstrated that implementing the Peace Agreements meant not only overcoming resistance on the part of sectors of the population who were anxious to protect their privileges, but also making a considerable effort to explain and raise the consciousness of the population as a whole. They also confirmed that the signing of the Agreements did not mean that all the contradictions of Guatemalan society had been resolved, but simply marked the beginning of a new stage in the lengthy process of national development and reconciliation to bridge social, economic, political and ethnic divisions.

In a later report [A/54/526], the Secretary-General highlighted some of the developments that took place in the latter part of 1998. In October, the Congress adopted a package of constitutional reforms incorporating the main elements of the Peace Agreements and requested the Supreme Electoral Tribunal to organize a national referendum on it. The organization of the referendum was delayed by, among other things, the state of national emergency declared in the aftermath of hurricane Mitch.

With regard to the restructuring of the armed forces, MINUGUA confirmed on 23 September that the commitment to reduce the troop strength of the armed forces by 33 per cent had been fulfilled, the verified troop strength of 31,423 being in line with the manning and equipment table.

The conversion of URNG into a political party took place in November after completion of all legal steps, and represented an important event in the peace process.

On 16 October, faced with the impossibility of achieving the 12 per cent tax burden provided for in the 1996 Agreement on Social and Economic Aspects and the Agrarian Situation, the follow-up Commission rescheduled that target to 2002. To achieve it, the Government decided to adopt a minimum programme of short-term actions that would make it possible to maintain the trend of a gradual increase in the tax burden in 1999 and to promote an extensive process of national consultation to define a long-term fiscal policy.

Human rights

By a 15 June note [A/52/946], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the MINUGUA head's eighth report on human rights. He described the Mission's activities between 1 July 1997 and 31 March 1998, noting that progress had been made in the strengthening of political freedom and in the emergence of a culture of dialogue and negotiation. At the same time, he underscored the need to reschedule major commitments that had not been carried out, disseminate more broadly the content of the Peace Agreements, and overcome the serious public-security situation and the persistent economic and social difficulties in order to enable the entire population to enjoy the benefits of peace.

The changes in the human rights situation in Guatemala had two characteristics. On the one hand, there was a continuing gradual decline in the number of violations of the rights accorded priority under the Comprehensive Agreement, which had been influenced by the end of the armed confrontation and the demobilization of some of its principal participants, such as the Voluntary Civil Defence Committees, military commissioners and URNG. In addition, recorded violations were not generally characterized as being politically motivated or in response to government instructions to commit and conceal them. On the other hand, the changes had also been characterized by a continuing high level of criminal violence and a feeling of insecurity on the part of the citizens to the extent that the basic problem of protecting human rights had focused on ensuring fulfilment of the State's duty to guarantee those rights and to investigate and punish those who violated them. The social phenomena, excesses and structural shortcomings of the institutions involved in the administration of justice and of the police, which affected the enjoyment of basic human rights by the population, were part of that situation. The challenge facing the State was to carry out those duties in an effective manner, ensuring respect for human rights within the framework of a constitutional system.

The State's limitations and shortcomings in dealing with crime and providing security had caused impatience and frustration in society. The situation had increased tolerance for various forms of what was called "taking justice into one's own hands", action taken outside the law, such as lynchings and the murder of alleged criminals within the framework of "social cleansing" operations.

In order to deal with the lack of security and owing to the shortcomings of the National Police and the limitations of the recently formed PNC, the Government instructed the army to support the police in that task. Military personnel had thus begun to participate in joint patrols, whose real impact was difficult to assess. The crime statistics would indicate that they had not achieved the desired effect and that, moreover, in their activities they had not refrained from committing violations.

During the reporting period, the Mission admitted for verification 219 complaints, an analysis of which indicated a decline in alleged violations of the right to individual liberty, due process and freedom of association and assembly. On the other hand, there was an increase in complaints concerning the right to life, integrity and security of person and freedom of movement and residence.

The Mission noted some progress in regard to the commitment to protect the autonomy and freedom of action of the institutions responsible for the protection of human rights. Of particular note in the judiciary branch was the work of its modernization commission, whose aim was to bring about substantial improvements in the administration of justice by implementing a large number of reforms in 1998. The Public Prosecutor's Office completed the elaboration of the internal restructuring plan to improve the technical and administrative capacity of the institution. On the other hand, the army's general attitude was one of a lack of cooperation in efforts to clarify the involvement of its senior officers in human rights violations. Because of that attitude, the official investigations had stopped at the responsibility of the actual perpetrators, who were often junior officers, and there appeared to have been no judicial decisions that determined who the instigators were.

With regard to the commitment against impunity, it was noted that most of the judicial proceedings investigating human rights violations or serious crimes that had been followed up by the Mission were still at almost the same procedural stage as in the early part of 1997. The slowness and disarray of the proceedings projected the image of a justice system that was incapable of making progress in clearing up crimes and violations, thereby fomenting a social perception of impunity.

The Mission also reported that the legal and illegal proliferation of firearms in the country continued during the second half of 1997, with obvious consequences for the Government's public safety policies.

By a later note [A/53/853], the Secretary-General transmitted the MINUGUA head's ninth report on human rights, which described the period from 1 April to 31 December 1998.

Persistent shortcomings in the system of public security and administration of justice were perpetuating impunity and undermining the effective exercise of the right to security of person and to due process of law. In April, the Commission on the Strengthening of the Justice System published a report entitled "A new system of justice for peace", which was an important proposal for dealing with the problems of the justice system. Also during the period under review, two major loans to permit the implementation of plans for the reform of the judiciary were approved. Meanwhile, the ineffectiveness of the justice system continued to perpetuate the population's feeling that perpetrators enjoyed impunity.

The judiciary expanded its territorial coverage and began the process of increasing people's access to the justice system in their own language through the establishment of 102 new courts and 35 court interpreter posts. Pilot mediation and conciliation centres were established in Guatemala City, Quetzaltenango and Zacapa to ease the congestion of the courts, facilitate access to the system of justice and involve civil society in the settlement of disputes. Five experimental community courts of the peace were also set up, though the Supreme Court would have to decide on the future of that experiment. With regard to the Public Prosecutor's Office, 10 prosecutor's offices were operating on the basis of the new internal organizational model introduced in June. However, the Office was still underfunded, was not sufficiently decentralized and had little coordination with PNC.

On 26 April, Monsignor Juan Jose Gerardi Conedera, Auxiliary Bishop of the Diocese of Guatemala and Coordinator of the Archdiocesan Human Rights Office, was murdered two days after his office presented a report on the human rights violations that had occurred during the 36 years of the internal conflict. The report assigned direct responsibility for most of those violations to agents of the State. During his visit to Guatemala in July, the Secretary-General urged the authorities quickly to investigate and clear up the murder, which caused a public outcry both nationally and internationally. Also during his visit, the Secretary-General reiterated the full support of the United Nations for efforts to consolidate peace in Guatemala and stressed the need to take action on constitutional reforms, fiscal issues, the land problem and the system of justice.

Verification showed that the positive evolution that had characterized the situation of human rights after the signing of the Agreement on a Firm and Lasting Peace in December 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 168] had suffered a marked deterioration between July 1997 and December 1998. Available information confirmed that serious violations, such as extrajudicial executions, threats and torture, had occurred and that there had been an escalation in social conflicts related to the exercise of freedom of association and labour problems and an alarming increase in lynchings and in the phenomenon known as "social cleansing".

During the reporting period, the Mission admitted 215 complaints involving 2,373 alleged violations of the rights accorded under the Comprehensive Agreement: 1,168 of them were confirmed. A comprehensive qualitative analysis indicated the persistence of serious violations of the right to life, especially through the practice of extrajudicial executions, and of the right to due process of law and the right to freedom of association and assembly. An overall analysis revealed a decline in violations of the right to integrity and security of person and the right to individual liberty. There were no substantial changes in the number of confirmed violations of the other rights.

With regard to the commitment to protect the autonomy and freedom of action of the institutions responsible for the protection of human rights, it was noted that numerous cases of intimidation and threats against judges and prosecutors continued to occur. The situation faced by subjects of judicial proceedings and witnesses in cases of human rights violations was also a difficult one. The Mission reiterated its concern about the failure to adopt necessary administrative and budgetary measures to implement the Act for the Protection of Persons Involved in the Conduct of Judicial Proceedings and Persons Linked to the Administration of Criminal Justice.

The Mission saw a significant increase in the number of complaints of threats and intimidation against people working for the protection of human rights, especially after the murder of Monsignor Gerardi. Among the recipients of the reported threats were priests and members of the Catholic Church, promoters of the project for the recovery of historical memory, forensic anthropologists, journalists, human rights activists, witnesses and students.

Some progress had been made towards fulfilling the commitment in the Comprehensive Agreement for a programme of compensation and/or assistance to the victims of human rights violations. Two programmes, which were still at the preparatory stage, had been designed to provide assistance to those villages and areas that had been most directly affected by the armed conflict.

As noted in the Mission's eighth report, one of the main factors militating against the enjoyment of human rights in Guatemala remained criminal violence. The State's primary weakness in the area of human rights remained its inability to tackle the crime problem through the administration of speedy and full justice. In turn, that encouraged people to take justice into their own hands. Primary responsibility for addressing the situation of insecurity rested with State institutions. However, an analysis of cases of lynching showed that tackling the crime problem was not simply the State's task. The different national leaders, universities, social organizations and the media also had a role to play in that regard, both by promoting a better understanding of the overall issue of criminal violence and by developing responses that combined prevention and punishment.

Another source of particular concern was the fact that verification showed no progress being made with regard to respect for human rights in Guatemala. Although not all the statistics for the reporting period were available, the gradual decline in the number of violations, which began in the second half of 1996, had come to a halt. The Mission acknowledged that the majority of violations verified were not the result of government directives intended to cause or conceal them. However, the fact that some cases pointed to a political motive was a source of serious concern.

With regard to the National Police and PNC, there had been no progress in the development and implementation of effective measures to prevent or punish abuses and excesses committed by police officers. The report noted the resurgence of cases of torture, some of them involving members of the new police force. The Mission recommended that prosecutors should be given greater support and that the capacity of the Public Prosecutor's Office to fulfil its legal duty of supervising the functioning of the National Police and PNC should be optimized.

The Mission had repeatedly drawn attention to a twofold deficiency in efforts to combat impunity: first, the persistence of shortcomings in the criminal investigation system and in the administration of justice, a trend that had been maintained; and, second, a lack of commitment and diligence with regard to the perpetration of human rights violations by agents of the State. That was reflected in the large number of violations verified in respect of the actions of officers of the National Police and PNC and officials of the Public Prosecutor's Office and the judiciary, and the fact that most of the criminal proceedings in cases of serious human rights violations had made little headway.

The report noted that illegal security groups and clandestine structures continued to exist in various parts of the country and that it was often difficult to distinguish their activities from those of organized crime. Verification of the actions of those groups encountered obvious limitations, precisely because of their clandestine nature. They shared the characteristic of operating with the tolerance or participation—either direct or indirect—of agents of the State, and had broad operational capacity.

(See also PART TWO, Chapter I.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/93 [draft: A/53/L.20 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 44]. Having considered the Secretary-General's statement [A/C.5/53/32 & Corr.1] and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) [A/53/674] concerning the programme budget implications of the draft, the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee informed the Assembly that an additional appropriation of $22,640,800 would be required for the 1998-1999 biennium [A/53/699].

United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/175 of 18 December 1997, in which it decided to authorize the renewal of the mandate of the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala from 1 April to 31 December 1998,

Taking into account the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the eighth report of the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala on human rights,

Taking into account also the second and third reports of the Secretary-General on implementation of the Guatemala peace agreements,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Mission and the recommendations therein, which are aimed at improving its capacity to respond adequately to the demands of the verification process until 31 December 1999,

Encouraged by the progress and continued efforts of the parties and sectors of Guatemalan society in support of the peace agreements,

Stressing the role played by the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala in support of the Guatemala peace process, and acknowledging the support given to it by the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca,

Acknowledging the support of the international community for the programmes and projects deriving from the peace agreements,

Recalling the request of the parties that the duration of the mandate of the Mission should be the same as that of the Implementation, Compliance and Verification Timetable for the Peace Agreements, namely four years, from 1997 to 2000,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the second and the third reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Guatemala peace agreements;

2. Takes note of the eighth report on human rights of the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala;

3. Welcomes the progress made to date in implementing the peace agreements, in particular the recently adopted constitutional reforms, and stresses the need to ensure their broad acceptance in the upcoming referendum, through enhanced mechanisms of voter registration, to allow the widest participation possible;

4. Underscores the importance of further complying with the commitments set out in the peace agreements, particularly on issues identified as priorities, namely, the need to increase fiscal resources for the consolidation of the peace process, and to address the areas of land and justice;

5. Calls upon the parties to implement fully the commitments they entered into in the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights and those in the other peace agreements, in particular those contained in the third phase (1998-2000) of the Implementation, Compliance and Verification Timetable for the Peace Agreements;

6. Urges the parties and all sectors of Guatemalan society to remain committed to the goals of the peace agreements, particularly during the electoral period, and to strengthen further the efforts towards consensus-building, reconciliation and development, with particular attention to the most vulnerable sectors of society;

7. Invites the international community to continue its support for peace-related activities in Guatemala, inter alia, through voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund for the Guatemala peace process established by the Secretary-General;

8. Decides to authorize the renewal of the mandate of the Mission from 1 January to 31 December 1999;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit an updated report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session, with his recommendations with regard to the Mission after 31 December 1999;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to keep the General Assembly fully informed of the implementation of the present resolution.

Financing of MINUGUA

A 15 October report of the Secretary-General contained the preliminary financial performance of MINUGUA for the period from 1 January to 31 December 1998 [A/C.5/53/25 & Corr.1], Expenditures for the period were estimated at $31,515,000 net ($34,192,500 gross), resulting in an estimated unencumbered balance of $5,008,000 under section 3 (Peacekeeping operations and special missions) of the programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999, partly offset by over-expenditures of $329,400 under section 32 (Staff assessment), with a corresponding increase in the estimate of income under income section 1 (Income from staff assessment).

Financing of Military Observer Group

On 29 December, the Secretary-General submitted the performance report for the Military Observer Group of MINUGUA for the period from 15 February to 31 May 1997 [A/53/775]. The Military Observer Group had been deployed for three months—from 3 March to 27 May 1997—to verify the Agreement on the Definitive Ceasefire between the Government of Guatemala and the URNG [YUN 1997, p. 172].

A total of $4 million gross ($3,956,300 net) was appropriated by the General Assembly for the maintenance of the Military Observer Group for the period. The related expenditures at the end of the fiscal year amounted to $3,946,000 gross and net, resulting in an unencumbered balance of $54,000 gross ($10,300 net). Obligations amounting to $130,200 were subsequently liquidated, resulting in an increased unencumbered balance of $184,200 gross ($140,500 net). The report also contained the final disposition of the assets of the Military Observer Group.

On 8 September [meeting 92], the Assembly, by decision 52/499, decided to include in the draft agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Financing of the Military Observer Group of the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala".

On 18 December [meeting 93], the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the item on the financing of the Military Observer Group at the resumed fifty-third session in 1999 (decision 53/458).

El Salvador

In a 7 August letter to the General Assembly President [A/5271008], the Secretary-General reported on the status of implementation of the 1992 Peace Agreement [YUN 1992, p. 222] between the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional (FMLN), covering the period since his December 1997 report [YUN 1997, p. 185].

He stated that, in accordance with his 1997 proposal [ibid.], the United Nations had maintained a reduced presence in El Salvador, at the level of one international and one local staff member, until 30 June 1998 when it was closed. The verification and good offices of the Organization continued to be carried out from Headquarters. The unit, under the administrative umbrella of UNDP, had made every effort to assist the Government of El Salvador and FMLN with the implementation of the outstanding elements of the peace accords in the socio-economic area. Those aspects of the accords that remained outstanding, in particular the land transfer programme (PTT), the programme to transfer rural human settlements to their current occupants, the Fund for the Protection of the Wounded and War-Disabled, and the transfer of lands in excess of the constitutional limits of 245 hectares, did not attain the advances that had been envisaged for the reporting period. Moreover, the difficulties that had already been experienced in terms of the required cooperation from relevant agencies had continued to affect adversely the expeditious implementation of the accords.

The Secretary-General noted, however, that some advances had been made. PTT, in particular, reflected a significant advance and could be considered close to completion owing to the active role played by the implementing agency, the Land Bank. Land had been legally transferred to almost 35,500 beneficiaries, although there remained a small number of unresolved cases where resettlement would be necessary and where remaining properties had to be entered into the Land Registry.

With regard to the rural settlements programme, advances had been made only in negotiations for land purchase of those properties where beneficiaries had settled on land owned by others. There had been practically no progress with regard to the other elements of the programme, largely owing to obstacles in the deed registration process by the Land Registry and prolonged delays in payment to property owners. The United Nations had complied with its commitment to investigate the 40 remaining properties allegedly in excess of the constitutional limit of 245 hectares. However, the continuing reluctance of the Salvadoran Institute for Agrarian Transformation to accept and to act on the recommendations contained in the previous UN report on the matter had created the impression of a lack of progress and, unavoidably, an absence of political will.

The situation concerning the obstacles faced by relatives of deceased combatants who did not appear in the original 1993 census remained unchanged. Unfortunately, since no legislative changes were introduced into Legislative Decree 1040, the benefits of the Fund for the Protection of the Wounded and War-Disabled had not been extended to the entirety of potential beneficiaries.

While further assistance would be required to complete the implementation of the 1992 peace accords, the Secretary-General had advised the Government and FMLN that he proposed to entrust UNDP with the necessary follow-up to those matters, in consultation with donor Governments. The Organization's good offices functions would, as before, continue to be carried out by the UN Secretariat in coordination with UNDP. Thanks to the balance of voluntary contributions made by the Netherlands, some of the costs of those activities would be covered by existing resources from the Trust Fund for the Mission of the United Nations in El Salvador.

Nicaragua

In a 25 August report on international assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Nicaragua [A/53/291] (see PART THREE, Chapter III), the Secretary-General noted that, during the past two years, Nicaragua had experienced advancements in the consolidation of democracy as reflected in the process of democratic elections for president, vice-president and the National Assembly in October 1996. The new Liberal Alliance Government of Arnoldo Aleman took power on 10 January 1997, representing a transfer of power between two democratically elected Governments.

The first year of the new Government of President Aleman enjoyed the backing of the population. Nevertheless, the political polarization between the two principal electoral forces gave rise to Sandinista-backed demonstrations by students demanding better conditions for universities. At the end of 1997, upon signature of the property agreement and the approval of the Property Law, political tensions were reduced.

The municipal elections held in the Atlantic Coast region in March 1998 expressed in a moderate way the internal polarization. The governing party won the elections in keeping with the polls and, except for criticism directed at the President for mixing government and party interests, the electoral process could be summarized as having been peaceful.

The Second Congress of the main opposition party, the Frente Sandinista para la Liberación Nacional, held in May, revealed the crisis of the primary opposition force, which remained without leadership or proposals to overcome the political, social and economic crisis of the country.

The political landscape of the first half of 1998, as presented by the media, was marked by a few topics, such as the lack of transparency in public spending, the report of the Auditor-General's Office on the Government's failure to account for $500 million of the Central Bank's funds, dating back to the previous Government, and the increase in the crime rate. The debate on those topics reflected the unfolding of a climate of open communication and respect for public opinion.

The adoption of the Property Law in December 1997 was an important step in the consolidation of democracy and institutional modernization. Other steps included the Government's initiative of a national dialogue during the second half of 1997, supported by UNDP, which brought together a wide spectrum of political and civil society groups, and the endorsement by the President in May 1998 of the Code for Children and Adolescents, based on the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 560], which was strongly promoted by the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). A number of initiatives were carried out in the context of the consolidation of the rule of law, ranging from the modernization of laws and codes, restructuring of the Supreme Court and the Attorney-General's Office and installation of the Institute of Forensic Medicine, to the integrated and deep-seated reform of the penitentiary system. The National Programme for the Modernization of Justice was of the utmost importance and was being financed by a wide range of Governments and supported by UNDP. The police forces in Nicaragua were undergoing a deep transformation into a small, well-organized and professional institution. The national police force had received considerable technical cooperation from various sources, including a UNDP/Spain trust fund for the specialized training of police officers in the scientific, judiciary, traffic and citizen security aspects of policing.

An intrinsically successful area in the fight against the social consequences of the war was the demobilization of ex-combatants and their reintegration as legal citizens. In 1998, the demobilization of the last armed groups among the ex-combatants was completed. A UNDP-supported programme assisted more than 40 municipalities that were heavily affected by the war. In coordination with the army's mine-removal operations, and with the support of UNICEF, a social awareness campaign about the dangers of mines was carried out. Nevertheless, only 50 per cent of registered mines left over from the war had been found. It was calculated that 85 to 90 per cent of the population affected by mines and other explosives were children between the ages of 8 and 12. The Government also continued to work towards the reintegration of Nicaraguans in exile.

Between 1996 and 1998, the Nicaraguan Government made some progress in evolving from a focus primarily on natural disaster assistance to one on prevention and mitigation. Despite that progress, hurricane Mitch, in late October 1998, brought great devastation throughout the country (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

The Nicaraguan Government was undertaking a series of efforts towards decentralization of functions to the municipalities, including the establishment of an overall policy for reform and modernization of the State and the formation of a Sectoral Commission on Decentralization. A number of mechanisms were created at the local level to facilitate the intervention of civil society in the setting of priorities and decision-making on issues of local development. The United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), UNDP and UNICEF assisted in and supported the decentralization and reconstruction efforts.

The General Assembly, in resolution 53/1 D, stressed the need for the international community to continue its cooperation with Nicaragua and provide it with the necessary financial resources with a view to the effective promotion of its economic growth and development, the conservation of its natural resources and the strengthening of its democracy.

Communication. In a 19 November letter [A/53/685], Nicaragua responded to the Secretary-

General's report of 31 August on the situation in Central America (see above, under "Central America"). Nicaragua stated that there was no dispute between its Government and Costa Rica involving territorial sovereignty in relation to navigation on the San Juan River, inasmuch as under the Jérez-Cañas Treaty of 1858 it was agreed that Nicaragua had dominion and supreme authority over the waters of the river along its entire length. Nicaragua, in turn, accorded Costa Rica the right to freedom of navigation for purposes of trade along a stretch of the river.

Haiti

During 1998, Haiti continued to receive UN assistance in its transition towards security, development and full respect of human rights, despite a severe political institutional crisis that eroded the moral, political, economic and social fabric of the country. The United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti (MIPONUH) monitored and assisted the Haitian National Police (HNP), while the joint United Nations/Organization of American States (OAS) International Civilian Mission to Haiti (MICIVIH) provided institutional assistance, helped in the promotion and protection of human rights and verified observance of individual rights and fundamental freedoms.

The absence of a Prime Minister since June 1997 had resulted in a weakened public administration, a stalled decentralization process and a slowdown in the implementation of essential structural reforms, as well as a decline in public investment, which was directly attributable to dwindling foreign aid.

Almost one year after its establishment, MIPONUH had made substantial progress in fulfilling its mandate. HNP had developed a greater capacity to maintain law and order. However, a fully effective Haitian police force was not yet in existence; it remained extremely fragile and still lacked the experience, professional skills, resources and cohesion that were the hallmarks of a well-established police force. Also, delays in judicial reform placed at risk the progress that had been achieved by HNP.

MICIVIH maintained a high level of activity in the mandated areas of institution-building, human rights promotion and verification despite the difficulties of the political and general situation and a limited complement of staff (40 UN observers and 40 OAS observers). Training, outreach and promotion activities had, in general, offset the irritation that constant verification of respect for human rights and due process could engender in the scrutinized officials. The Mission had also been successful in maintaining excellent working relationships with governmental and institutional authorities. Four years after the re-establishment of constitutional order, undeniable progress had been made in the human rights field. However, in the absence of well-established institutions, that progress remained fragile. Rising intolerance and polarization stemming from the protracted political crisis had imperiled the full enjoyment of fundamental rights and freedoms. Concerns over the security of the State had impinged on respect for due process and the rule of law.

Civilian Police Mission

Report of Secretary-General (February). On 20 February [S/1998/144], the Secretary-General reported on the mandate of MIPONUH, which was established for one year by Security Council resolution 1141(1997) of 28 November 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 193] to assist the Government of Haiti by supporting and contributing to the professionalization of HNP in close cooperation with MICIVIH.

The Secretary-General said that the consolidation of democracy in Haiti had been undermined by the absence of a Prime Minister since 9 June 1997. The institutional crisis, which stemmed from divisions within the ruling Lavalas coalition, had entered its ninth month, exacerbating an already fragile situation. Following Parliament's rejection of Prime Minister-designate Eric Pierre, President René Préval nominated to the post on 12 November 1997 the newly elected Dean of Port-au-Prince University, Herve Denis. The nomination was officially rejected by the Chamber of Deputies in January 1998.

The political impasse had negative consequences for the economic and social development of Haiti and seriously compromised international cooperation. Haiti's economic performance remained below expectations in 1997; the gross domestic product (GDP) grew slightly more than 1 per cent and the Government remained unable to attract sufficient concessionary financing.

The secure and stable environment established under previous UN peacekeeping missions had held since the departure of the United Nations Transition Mission in Haiti (UNTMIH), the residual military elements of which left the country at the end of January 1998. On the negative side, however, there had been little change in the level of criminal activity, including organized crime related to drug trafficking. Although most instances of lawlessness did not appear to have a political motivation, some incidents had raised fears of a possible return of politically motivated killings.

A further cause for concern was the looming confrontation between the Government and some municipalities over weapons held by municipal authorities. The stand-off arose when the government call for such weapons to be turned over to HNP met with open opposition from the municipal authorities, who argued that they needed the arms for their protection.

Since November 1997, MIPONUH had worked to strengthen HNP, especially in the areas of personnel and property management, and in the training of specialized units to combat growing insecurity, banditry and drug trafficking.

As had previous UN missions, MIPONUH trained specialized units of HNP and the Bureau des affaires criminelles and worked to develop the force's capacity in information and operation analysis, traffic and community policing. However, while previous missions concentrated on the training needs of rank-and-file agents, MIPONUH gave special attention to training at the supervisory level.

The Mission coordinated its activities closely with UNDP's technical advisers and with the International Criminal Investigative Training Assistance Programme of the United States, which complemented the technical assistance provided by MIPONUH and UNDP in operations analysis and Palace security and provided basic training at the HNP Academy. In addition, the Mission organized seminars and workshops aimed at increasing the awareness and sensitivity of HNP officers to human rights issues.

The Secretary-General noted that, among other things, HNP had become less dependent on the UN civilian police, had improved its management, had built an effective cadre of commissaires and inspecteurs and had redeployed rank-and-file agents throughout the country to improve the balance in police coverage between the capital and the provinces. However, the absence of a functioning judicial system severely hindered its ability to carry out its tasks. The fact that incidents of human rights violations, corruption and other misconduct continued to be reported, notwithstanding the efforts of the HNP Inspector-General to rid the force of unqualified elements, was cause for concern. The Secretary-General stressed that without a functioning judiciary the international community's efforts to help create an effective, politically neutral and professional police force could become increasingly difficult.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 March [meeting 3866], the President of the Security Council made the following statement on behalf of the members [S/PRST/1998/8]:

The Security Council recalls its resolution 1141(1997) of 28 November 1997 and welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 20 February 1998 on the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti.

The Council commends the achievements of the Representative of the Secretary-General in Haiti, United Nations staff and the civilian police officers of the Mission in Haiti. It notes with appreciation the important contributions made by the United Nations Development Programme and the International Civilian Mission in Haiti.

The Council welcomes the progress made by the Haitian people towards the establishment of a durable democratic and constitutional system. It also welcomes the sustained improvement in security and stability in Haiti. The Council agrees with the Secretary-General in his assessment of the Haitian National Police, as expressed in his recent report. It also welcomes the significant progress made by the Haitian National Police, as mentioned in the report of the Secretary-General, and expresses confidence that the activities of the Civilian Police Mission will continue to build on the achievements of previous United Nations missions in Haiti and to further the professional development of the Haitian National Police. The Council expresses the hope that achievements of the Haitian National Police will be matched by progress in other areas, including the development of a functioning judicial system, and in this regard recognizes the importance of judicial reform.

The Council reaffirms that further assistance to the Haitian National Police, should it be needed, should be provided with the full support of the international community through the specialized agencies and programmes of the United Nations system, through international and regional organizations and by interested Member States.

The Council reaffirms also that the people and Government of Haiti bear the ultimate responsibility for national reconciliation, the maintenance of a secure and stable environment, the administration of justice and the reconstruction of their country. It emphasizes the importance of Haiti's continuing to settle its contentious issues peacefully and democratically. It expresses the view that a prompt solution of these issues in Haiti will facilitate economic development and the provision of international assistance. It fully supports the appeal of the Secretary-General to Haitian authorities and political leaders to resolve Haiti's political impasse so that the country can move forward and welcomes current efforts undertaken to this end.

The Council stresses that it is of the utmost importance that the next parliamentary and local elections in Haiti be conducted in a free, fair and transparent manner in order to allow the broadest possible voter participation, consistent with Haitian law. It notes that a substantial effort will be required to ensure the success of these vitally important elections. The Council looks forward to the steps taken by the Government of Haiti in this regard and urges the international community to be ready to provide electoral assistance as may be requested.

The Council recognizes that economic rehabilitation and reconstruction constitute the major tasks facing the Haitian Government and people and stresses that a sustained commitment by the international community and the international financial institutions, as well as the relevant United Nations bodies, to assist and support economic, social and institutional development in Haiti is indispensable for long-term sustainable development in the country. It commends the efforts of those organizations and countries currently involved in meeting these needs and encourages them to coordinate their activities.

The Council will remain seized of this matter.

Report of Secretary-General (May). On 28 May [S/1998/434], the Secretary-General reported on the activities of MIPONUH and on developments in the mission area since his 20 February report.

The institutional crisis had persisted, crippling both the executive and the legislative branches of Government. Despite efforts aimed at breaking the deadlock between the principal factions of what had been known as the Lavalas movement, Haiti was still without a Prime Minister and its Parliament had been virtually paralysed since January. President Préval had nominated Herve Denis for the position of Prime Minister for the second time, but the nomination was officially rejected by the Senate on 15 April. Following that rejection, President Préval had consultations with all the major political parties in order to reach an agreement, among other things, on a new Prime Minister and on the holding of legislative and local elections.

The institutional crisis was further manifested in the controversial Provisional Electoral Council (CEP), which continued to operate at reduced capacity following the resignation of six of its nine members in November 1997 and the death of one of the remaining three in April 1998. The image of CEP was further tarnished by infighting among its members and by a financial scandal. A broad consensus had emerged for the installation of a new, credible and transparent CEP as a precondition for the holding of elections. According to the Electoral Law, CEP was responsible for initiating the call for elections, which would need to be endorsed by a government decree signed by the Prime Minister.

The main political factions had indicated a desire to hold the legislative and local elections by the end of 1998. A loose coalition of 26 opposition groupings and parties had signed a declaration of principles calling for free and fair elections in which all political forces would participate.

Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations Bernard Miyet visited Haiti from 6 to 9 May to evaluate the progress of MIPONUH and to hold consultations with political leaders and representatives of civil society in the context of the continuing political impasse. He urged the Haitian leaders to reach a compromise through dialogue and expressed the willingness of the international community to help ensure the transparency and credibility of the electoral process.

The secure and stable environment established in Haiti under the previous UN peacekeeping missions continued to hold. While there had been some incidents, they did not appear to reflect any specific pattern of unrest or politically motivated violence.

As at 20 May, the civilian police element of MIPONUH included 285 officers. In order to respond to the increasing need for specialized expertise, MIPONUH had increased the number of civilian police officers advising on matters of drug control, judicial police and environmental matters. Some of MIPONUH's activities were coordinated with UNDP and bilateral programmes. On the initiative of HNP, UNDP sponsored a seminar in March, which was dedicated to the integration and coordination of police-training activities. With a view to complementing technical assistance with material support, MIPONUH was focusing on continued police station renovations and procurement of equipment.

HNP continued to progress in discharging its responsibilities and favourable comments largely outweighed criticism in the public debate on the police. Since March, there had been significant personnel changes within the Directorate of HNP with a view to improving the credibility of the National Police. Among the successful efforts of HNP were high-profile anti-gang operations, including against drug-related crime. The stronger presence of HNP in the day-to-day life of the Haitian citizenry was perceived as a positive development by the population.

The modernization of the judiciary and improvements in the administration of justice were advancing very slowly. The Haitian legislature adopted the law on judicial reform on 7 April. That law, which had not been promulgated, included specific provisions concerning the fight against impunity and provided that all crimes and misdemeanours committed between 30 September 1991 and 15 October 1994, the coup d'état period, were imprescriptible, regardless of their magnitude.

UNDP, which continued to play an important role in the Haitian transition process, extended its fifth-cycle country programme for two additional years. The focus was on promoting good governance through support for the democratization process (strengthening Parliament, the electoral process, the justice system, law and order, and the penitentiary), poverty eradication through grass-roots empowerment, and protection of the environment. Unfortunately, financial constraints had led to a sharp fall in the level of resources available for programming and to a severe reduction in UNDP's capacity to pursue important ongoing projects or launch new programming initiatives in Haiti.

The Secretary-General expressed concern that the continuing political crisis was having a destabilizing effect on Haiti's fledgling democracy and severe repercussions on economic activity. He urged Haiti's political leaders to demonstrate their political will to reach a settlement through practical and constructive compromise.

Report of Secretary-General (August). On 24 August [S/1998/796], the Secretary-General reported on the activities of MIPONUH and developments in the mission area since his 28 May report.

Efforts to resolve the institutional crisis in Haiti had not been successful and the deadlock continued to impede international assistance to the country. After protracted negotiations, an agreement was reached between President Préval and the Organisation du peuple en lutte (OPL), the main party in Parliament. However, the agreement did not extend to all political forces. In July, President Préval's nomination of the Minister of Education, Jacques-Edouard Alexis, for the post of Prime Minister was opposed by the Anti Neo-Liberal Group in the Chamber of Deputies.

While a number of political forces, including OPL and Lafanmi Lavalas, had indicated that legislative and local elections should take place by the end of the year, the prerequisite that there be an operational electoral council had yet not been fulfilled. President Préval had indicated that such elections would have to be postponed to 1999. In the meantime, the President had initiated discussions with the legislative and judicial branches with a view to the formation of a new provisional electoral council.

There was an increase in underlying tensions in Haiti during the reporting period. The murder on 3 August of a popular priest had been portrayed as a political assassination. In addition, a number of people suspected of threatening state security and drug trafficking had been arrested or were being sought by HNP amid rumours of a Duvalierist conspiracy.

On 15 August, the civilian police element of MIPONUH included 284 officers from 11 countries. It continued to focus on training officers at the supervisory level and monitoring the performance of members of the National Police in carrying out their professional duties. It also provided assistance in the renovation of police stations and continued to coordinate its activities with UNDP and bilateral programmes.

HNP made steady progress in maintaining law and order, and there appeared to have been a distinct improvement in the relations between its members and the Haitian citizenry. The Secretary-General observed, however, that the development of an effective police force was a complex and lengthy task, which called for a continued effort on the part of the United Nations to train HNP to strengthen the capacity of the force and consolidate the gains it had already achieved.

MIPONUH had assisted the National Police in strengthening its capacity to monitor the border area and protect the environment in the south-east of the country by preventing the illegal destruction of the region's forests. The effectiveness of the police continued to be hampered by financial, material and logistical constraints, while the increased illegal traffic in drugs, as well as drug-related crime, posed a major challenge to HNP. It remained a matter of concern that, on occasion, some police officers still used excessive force when making arrests and generally acted beyond the strict confines of the law.

At the end of July, a team of international consultants made a formal evaluation of UNDP's project of technical assistance to HNP. The report noted that the progress and investment made in building up HNP over the past three years had been extraordinary, but that it would turn out to be a failure if it was not sustained.

While the law on judicial reform adopted on 7 April 1998 had not been promulgated, important steps had been taken in that area. On 6 July, the Preparatory Commission on Legal and Judicial Reform presented its five-year strategic plan for judicial reform, which focused on three main objectives: reinforcing the strategic goals, programmes and services of the Ministry of Justice; strengthening judicial institutions and developing new judicial practices; and increasing the participation of the people in the reform and the administration of justice.

Some encouraging initiatives had been taken to improve the administration of justice, especially in the area of pre-trial detention. In addition, many of the judges who graduated in May from the Ecole de la Magistrature had been posted to tribunals across the country.

The prolonged political crisis had negative repercussions on public investment, which was mostly financed from external sources. According to an International Monetary Fund appraisal mission that visited Haiti in July, some progress had been made in the fight against inflation, which fell from 16 per cent in 1997 to 10 per cent in the first half of 1998. However, revenue collection was far below target in many important areas.

UNDP continued to play an important role in the Haitian transition process, primarily through its country programme activities. In addition to its mandate in the areas of good governance, poverty reduction and environmental protection, UNDP supported prison reform, cooperated with MICIVIH and donors to promote judicial reform and assisted the Human Rights Ombudsman in the discharge of his duties.

The Secretary-General observed that none of Haiti's formidable political and economic challenges could be met in the absence of a functioning Government.

Communication. On 27 October [S/199871003], Haiti transmitted to the Secretary-General a 22 October letter from President Préval concerning MIPONUH.

President Préval stated that remarkable progress had been made by HNP, thanks to the support that it had received from the UN missions in Haiti. However, since essential matters remained to be addressed, he requested the United Nations to continue to cooperate with Haiti in order to strengthen HNP.

Report of Secretary-General (November). In an 11 November report [S/199871064], the Secretary-General described the activities of MIPONUH and developments in the mission area since his August report. He also made recommendations on the role of the United Nations in Haiti after the expiration of the MIPONUH mandate on 30 November. Those recommendations were based on the consultations that his Representative in Haiti and Head of MIPONUH, Julian Harston, was holding with both the Haitian authorities and the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General for Haiti (Argentina, Canada, Chile, France, United States, Venezuela).

The Secretary-General stated that the consolidation of democracy and good governance in Haiti continued to be undermined by the absence of a Prime Minister. The institutional crisis had also eroded public confidence in the capacity and willingness of the authorities to solve the pressing economic and social problems facing the country.

President Préval had held discussions with representatives of civil society, trade unions, local authorities, the private sector and parliamentarians with a view to securing an agreement on the formation of a new provisional electoral council and the holding of legislative and local elections.

Despite initial optimism, little progress was made on reaching a consensus. President Préval had also called an extraordinary session of Parliament for 10 November to discuss the nomination of Mr. Alexis to the post of Prime Minister and to ratify Haiti's agreement with the Inter-American Development Bank.

The law on judicial reform adopted on 7 April was promulgated in the official journal, Le Moniteur, on 17 August. However, few concrete steps had been taken to implement the short- and long-range strategic plan for reform submitted on 6 July. The Office of the Ombudsman was still facing financial difficulties that impeded its capacity to fulfil its mandate.

On 9 November, the civilian police element of MIPONUH included 145 officers from 11 countries. In addition to the training and monitoring of HNP, the Mission focused on the capacity of the force in community policing, data processing, public relations and maintenance of registers. An average of some 400 police officers were trained by MIPONUH every week. MIPONUH provided logistical support to HNP and coordinated its activities with UNDP, MICIVIH and bilateral programmes.

The Secretary-General stated that HNP had strengthened its organization and operations and made some improvement with regard to respect for the legal rights of detainees in police stations. With the support of MIPONUH, efforts had also been made to update the official Police Development Plan for the period from 1998 to 2003. In particular, there had been a review of long-term objectives related to recruitment, training and administration. In cooperation with the police project undertaken by UNDP, the logistics division of the police force rehabilitated and constructed eight police stations in 1998; they were equipped with the joint assistance of UNDP and MIPONUH. In October, 75 police instructors graduated from the Police Academy after completing a one-year training programme conducted by Haitian and international instructors. Some 36 new recruits would receive six weeks of training as prison guards.

When hurricane Georges struck Haiti in September (see PART THREE, Chapter III), HNP demonstrated commendable professionalism. Civilian police officers of MIPONUH also helped with the relief effort during the crisis.

Despite the progress made, problems were still confronting the force. It lacked adequate resources and investigative capacity, absenteeism among police officers remained a problem and there had been instances of crime, corruption and drug trafficking within its ranks. Plans to establish a rural police force to complement the National Police had stalled because of financial constraints.

It was estimated that the cost of extending MIPONUH for a period of one year, at its current approved strength of 300 civilian police, 74 international staff, 133 locally recruited staff and 17 United Nations Volunteers, would be approximately $33.6 million. A breakdown of the estimated financial requirements was provided in an annex to the report.

The Secretary-General observed that the termination of the MIPONUH mandate would jeopardize the achievements of HNP and would have a negative effect on the country's efforts to reinforce its institutions. A strong police service remained a very important base on which to build democracy. Therefore, the Secretary-General shared the views expressed by President Préval in his 22 October letter (see above), requesting that the United Nations continue to cooperate with Haiti in order to strengthen the National Police. Accordingly, he recommended to the Security Council the extension of the mandate and concept of operations of MIPONUH for another period of one year until 30 November 1999. In addition to monitoring the field performance of HNP, the principal tasks for the Mission during the new mandate period, if so authorized by the Council, would be to reinforce the training already given to middle and senior cadres of the force, to reinforce the creation of a proper command structure and administration, and to strengthen the work already done on community policing. It was also essential to ensure that, on the eventual departure of MIPONUH, the central directorate of the police force had a functioning capability to manage aid from bilateral and multilateral sources.

In a later report [S/1999/181], the Secretary-General stated that on 15 December the Haitian Senate ratified President Préval's nominee for the position of Prime Minister, Mr. Alexis. Two days later, the Chamber of Deputies also voted in favour of his ratification. Mr. Alexis was then required to present his Cabinet and programme for parliamentary approval before the ratification process could be completed. However, despite negotiations between Mr. Alexis and OPL, the majority group in Parliament, agreement on the composition of the Government was not possible.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 November [meeting 3949], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1212 (1998). The draft [S/1998/1117] was sponsored by Argentina, Canada, Chile, Costa Rica, France, the United States and Venezuela.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, in particular resolution 1141(1997) of 28 November 1997, and those adopted by the General Assembly,

Taking note of the request of 22 October 1998 from the President of the Republic of Haiti to the Secretary-General,

Taking note also of the reports of the Secretary-General of 24 August and 11 November 1998, and the recommendations contained therein,

Commending the role of the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti in assisting the Government of Haiti by supporting and contributing to the professionalization of the Haitian National Police, and expressing its appreciation to all Member States which have contributed to the Civilian Police Mission,

Commending also the role of the Representative of the Secretary-General in Haiti in the coordination of activities by the United Nations system to promote institution-building, national reconciliation and economic rehabilitation in Haiti,

Noting the key role played to date by the United Nations civilian police, the International Civilian Mission in Haiti and the technical assistance of the United Nations Development Programme, as well as bilateral programmes, in helping to establish a fully functioning Haitian National Police Force of adequate size and structure as an integral element of the consolidation of democracy and the revitalization of Haiti's system of justice and, in this context, stressing the importance of the reform of Haiti's system of justice for the successful development of the Haitian National Police, and welcoming continued progress towards professionalization of the Haitian National Police and towards fulfilment of the May 1997 "Haitian National Police development plan for 1997-2001",

Stressing the link between peace and development, noting that significant international assistance is indispensable for sustainable development in Haiti, and stressing that a sustained commitment by the international community and the international financial institutions to assist and support the economic, social and institutional development in Haiti is indispensable for long-term peace and security in the country,

Expressing deep concern over the prolonged political stalemate, which presents considerable risks for peace and development,

Expressing its deep regret that this political stalemate has not yet made possible the transfer of the activities of the Civilian Police Mission to other forms of international assistance,

Recognizing that the people and the Government of Haiti bear the ultimate responsibility for national reconciliation, the maintenance of a secure and stable environment, the administration of justice, and the reconstruction of their country,

1. Reaffirms the importance of a professional, self-sustaining, fully functioning national police of adequate size and structure, able to conduct the full spectrum of police functions, for the consolidation of democracy and the revitalization of Haiti's system of justice, and encourages Haiti to pursue actively its plans in these respects;

2. Decides, further to paragraph 1 above, and at the request of the President of the Republic of Haiti, to extend until 30 November 1999 the present mandate, ineluding the concept of operation, of the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti, in order to continue to assist the Government of Haiti by supporting and contributing to the professionalization of the Haitian National Police in accordance with the arrangements set out in paragraph 32 of the report of the Secretary-General of 11 November 1998, including monitoring the field performance of the Haitian National Police and strengthening the capability of the central directorate of the police force to manage aid provided to it from bilateral and multilateral sources;

3. Affirms that future international assistance to the Haitian National Police should be considered through specialized agencies and programmes of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, and through other international and regional organizations and by Member States;

4. Requests Member States to provide appropriate support for the actions undertaken by the United Nations and by Member States pursuant to the present and other relevant resolutions in order to carry out the provisions of the mandate referred to in paragraph 2 above;

5. Underlines the importance of full coordination among multilateral and bilateral contributors in order to assure the effective allocation of international assistance provided to the Haitian National Police, and requests the Representative of the Secretary-General in Haiti to work closely with Member States to ensure that bilateral and multilateral efforts are complementary;

6. Strongly urges the Haitian authorities and political leaders to fulfil their responsibilities and to negotiate urgently an end to the crisis in a spirit of tolerance and compromise;

7. Calls upon the Haitian authorities to pursue the reform and strengthening of Haiti's system of justice, in particular its penal institutions;

8. Emphasizes that economic rehabilitation and reconstruction constitute the major tasks facing the Haitian Government and people and that significant international assistance is indispensable for sustainable development in Haiti, stresses the commitment of the international community to a long-term programme of support for Haiti, and invites United Nations bodies and agencies, especially the Economic and Social Council, to contribute to the designing of such a programme;

9. Requests all States to make voluntary contributions to the trust fund established pursuant to resolution 975(1995) of 30 January 1995 for the Haitian National Police, in particular for the recruitment and deployment by the United Nations Development Programme of police advisers to assist the Inspector General, Directorate General and department headquarters of the Haitian National Police;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council on the implementation of the present resolution every three months from the date of its adoption until the mandate of the Civilian Police Mission expires on 30 November 1999;

11. Expresses its intention not to extend the Civilian Police Mission beyond 30 November 1999, and requests the Secretary-General to make recommendations on a viable transition to other forms of international assistance in his second report referred to in paragraph 10 above, for the consideration of the Security Council, taking into account the need to preserve the progress made in the reform of the Haitian National Police and to strengthen further United Nations support for the consolidation of democracy, respect for human rights and the maintenance of law and order in Haiti;

12. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

International Civilian Mission to Haiti

Report of Secretary-General (July). In a 20 July report to the General Assembly [A/52/986], the Secretary-General reviewed the general situation of human rights and democracy in Haiti and described the activities of MICIVIH since his November 1997 report [YUN 1997, p. 196]. With a total of 80 observers, MICIVIH was operating in all nine regions of the country. It continued to co-operate with MIPONUH, which in turn provided MICIVIH with logistical and administrative support. The joint UN/OAS Mission was established in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 338] to verify full observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms, provide institution-building and support the development of a programme for the promotion and protection of human rights.

The Secretary-General stated that the human rights situation in Haiti appeared to be relatively healthy, despite certain slippages with regard to the enjoyment of fundamental freedoms and individual liberties. Institution-building, however, was seriously hampered by the prolongation of the political crisis (see above). Unfamiliarity with the give and take of the democratic process and rigidity in the interpretation and implementation of the constitution, which required the delicate balancing of competing interests and powers, had combined to impede the resolution of the stalemate. To the extent that the crisis was blamed on political leaders, it was having a corrosive effect, not only on the authority of the State but also on institutional behaviour. Despite efforts by police authorities to strengthen internal discipline, the worrisome trends of police involvement in crime and drug trafficking, the ill-treatment of persons in police custody and the misuse of the law as a form of retribution were symptomatic of the weakening of institutional authority. In that context, MICIVIH continued to make a vital contribution to the efforts of the Haitian authorities to fight impunity, to hold State agents accountable for their actions and to reform and consolidate key institutions, said the Secretary-General.

Monitoring the human rights dimension of police conduct continued to be one of the most important activities of the Mission. From January to May 1998, MICIVIH received 150 reports of beatings of suspected criminals and corroborated many of them through interviews of witnesses as well as detainees. At the urging of MICIVIH, a number of regional and local police authorities issued instructions to put an end to such abuses. Steps also needed to be taken to ensure that suspects were not detained beyond the constitutionally stipulated 48-hour limit without appearing before a judge. There were 13 reports of killings by police in the first five months of 1998, compared with 22 for the same period in 1997. The drop was particularly noticeable in the capital, where only two killings were reported since the end of March. With regard to police accountability, priority was given to tackling police involvement in drug trafficking, armed gangs and other crimes, while Parliament conducted inquiries into major incidents and invited the police leadership and executive oversight officials to appear before parliamentary committees for questioning on matters related to law and order. However, the laxity of the judiciary continued to undermine the efforts of the Office of the Inspector-General to pursue agents responsible for abuses or crimes. MICIVIH continued to collaborate with HNP and MIPONUH in the area of training, both in the field and at the Police Academy.

Despite some improvements in prison installations, living conditions of detainees were deteriorating. The prison population had mushroomed owing to the combination of slow judicial processing of cases and the increasing number of arrests by police. The traditional but illegal practice of detaining persons for civil debts, for so-called superstitious practices and for not respecting parental authority persisted. A MICIVIH survey in April showed a population of more than 3,300 in the 19 prisons, of whom only 626, some 19 per cent, had been sentenced.

The Office of the Ombudsman remained a key mechanism for the protection of human rights but its institutional development had been hampered by budgetary constraints and delays in the appointment of a deputy and advisory board. As public debate, interest and awareness of the issue of impunity and compensation continued to grow, the Justice Ministry established an office to handle the issue of compensation for victims of the coup d'etat period, from September 1991 to October 1994. The office's three main areas of work were social, economic and legal/medical assistance.

The Mission's human rights promotion programmes addressed specific groups through educational seminars and the broad public through information and cultural programmes. The long-sought objective of integrating human rights and civic education in the school curriculum came a step nearer when the Ministry of Education asked MICIVIH, as well as Haitian NGOs, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and UNICEF, to participate in a working commission on civic education to develop primary school curricula and texts.

MICIVIH's programme in non-violent conflict resolution, with specific technical and financial support by the OAS Unit for the Promotion of Democracy, focused on training judges and police in mediation techniques and publishing more extensively the Mission's work in that relatively unknown field in Haiti.

Report of Secretary-General (November). In an 18 November report [A/53/564], the Secretary-General reviewed the activities of MICIVIH since July. He noted that, four years after the re-establishment of constitutional order, undeniable progress had been made in human rights. However, in the absence of well-established institutions, that progress remained fragile. Rising intolerance and polarization stemming from the protracted political crisis had cast shadows over the full enjoyment of fundamental rights and freedoms.

HNP had continued to make institutional and operational advances and to address instances of crime, corruption and drug trafficking within its ranks. However, the rank and file still displayed a low threshold of self-discipline and respect for individual rights when dealing with surges of armed crime and with threats against members of the institution.

Between June and September, there were 14 reports of killings by police, bringing the total for the first nine months of the year to 27, which was 15 fewer than in the same period in 1997. During the same period, MICIVIH received 140 reports of beatings of persons in police custody, which represented a continuation of the higher rate of ill-treatment observed during the first five months of 1998. Also during the period under review, HNP was beset by widespread allegations of police involvement in drug trafficking and the work of the Office of the Inspector-General was more than ever dominated by those allegations. Prosecution of police abuses continued to be rare and were almost never undertaken on the sole initiative of judicial officials. MICIVIH's suggestion of a special prosecutor to deal specifically with cases of police abuse had not found favour with the authorities.

With regard to the constitutional rights of detainees, after MICIVIH repeatedly voiced concern about the large number of prisoners in some police stations, many of whom had been held for several months, a concerted effort was made to send detainees to court as quickly as possible and the number fell sharply from June onward. MICIVIH continued to hold general human rights seminars for police officers.

Calls for the improvement in the administration of justice, particularly the workings of the criminal justice system, became more widespread and pressing. MICIVIH documented and helped redress the most serious shortcomings of the system: jurisdictions weakened by absenteeism, resignations or dismissals and delays in appointing replacements; inadequate or non-existent judicial inquiries; non-observance of procedural time limits; and arbitrary sentences. MICIVIH continued to urge the ratification of outstanding regional and universal human rights instruments and the Secretary-General noted that Haiti had recognized the binding jurisdiction of the Inter-American Court of Justice.

MICIVIH encouraged or facilitated various initiatives to heighten public awareness in the fight against impunity and for the compensation of victims of past human rights abuses. In July, MICIVIH invited Louis Joinet, Special Rapporteur on impunity of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, to visit Haiti and, in August, MICIVIH provided assistance to a group of Haitian NGOs that had invited to Haiti Adolfo Perez Esquivel, winner of the 1980 Nobel Peace Prize, who was accompanied by two other Argentine human rights leaders. The visits played a key role in sensitizing the authorities and the general public to the importance of the questions of impunity and compensation.

During the period under review, little progress was made with regard to investigations and the preparations for trial of serious past abuses, although the Mission continued to provide judicial authorities with technical assistance and advice in the consolidation of case files. At the request of the Ministry of Justice, MICIVIH distributed on a national scale the 1996 report of the National Commission on Truth and Justice, whose recommendations with regard to impunity and compensation had not been implemented.

With regard to human rights promotion, MICIVIH increased its focus on women's rights by organizing seminars throughout the country on the theme of violence against women, in order to make participants more aware of the existing mechanisms that protected their rights. MICIVIH also translated into Creole legal texts relating to sexual discrimination and violence against women. As part of its advocacy activities, a new series of MICIVIH spots was broadcast on radio and television stations throughout the country. The series showed judges, police officers, detainees and the public in situations illustrating their rights and responsibilities in the functioning of the justice system.

After reviewing the activities of MICIVIH, and as requested by President Préval in a 6 November letter that was attached to his report, the Secretary-General recommended that the UN component of MICIVIH be extended for a period of one year with the current mandate and staff level.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 82], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/95 [draft: A/53/L.57 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 43]. Having considered the programme budget implications of the draft text, the Fifth Committee informed the Assembly that an additional appropriation of $5,919,800 would be required for the 1998-1999 biennium. An additional appropriation of $849,800 would be offset by income from staff assessment [A/53/732].

The situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "The situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti",

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, as well as those adopted on the question by the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights,

Taking note of Security Council resolution 1212(1998) of 25 November 1998, in which the Council decided to extend the mandate of the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti until 30 November 1999,

Taking note also of the relevant resolutions adopted on the question by the Organization of American States,

Reaffirming that the goal of the international community remains the full observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms and the promotion of social and economic development in Haiti,

Paying tribute to the people and the authorities of Haiti for their efforts to consolidate democracy, respect for human rights and the rule of law,

Underlining the importance of the role of Haitian authorities in initiating and implementing the process of judicial reform, without which the assistance of the international community will not have the desired impact,

Expressing deep concern at the prolonged political stalemate, which undermines the development and consolidation of democratic institutions in Haiti,

Strongly supporting the continuing leadership of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States in the efforts of the international community to further social, economic and political progress in Haiti,

Welcoming the continued efforts by States to provide humanitarian assistance and technical cooperation to the people of Haiti,

Supporting fully the contributions of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti, its Executive Director and staff and the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti in the establishment of a climate of freedom and tolerance propitious to the full observance of human rights and the full restoration of the constitutional democracy of Haiti,

Encouraging the continued cooperation between the International Civilian Mission to Haiti and the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti and others participating in institution-building, including police training activities,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti, and the request from the President of the Republic of Haiti to the Secretary-General contained in the annex thereto,

Stressing the importance of continuing to improve the situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti, and noting that the Haitian authorities remain committed to upholding human rights and fundamental freedoms and to improving accountability,

1. Welcomes the recommendation of the Secretary-General contained in his report to extend for one year the United Nations component of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti, with the tasks of:

(a) Assisting, as a priority, the efforts of the Haitian authorities in the field of institution-building, in particular providing technical assistance and guidance to the components of the judicial system as part of the process of judicial reform;

(b) Supporting the development of a programme for the promotion and protection of human rights in order to further the establishment of a climate of freedom and tolerance propitious to the consolidation of long-term constitutional democracy in Haiti and to contribute to the strengthening of democratic institutions;

(c) Verifying full observance by Haiti of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Decides to authorize, on the basis of the above recommendation, the renewal of the mandate of the United Nations component of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti until 31 December 1999, according to the terms of reference and modalities under which the Mission is operating;

3. Urges the authorities and political leaders to continue their efforts to find a compromise that will bring an end to the political crisis;

4. Calls upon the Haitian authorities to mobilize political will for the pursuit of the reform and strengthening of the system of justice of Haiti, including the improvement of the country's prisons;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly two reports on the implementation of the present resolution and, in the case of the first report, to be submitted no later than 15 May 1999, on the ways in which the international community can continue to assist in the tasks set out in paragraph 1 above;

6. Reaffirms once again the commitment of the international community to continue its technical, economic and financial cooperation with Haiti in support of its economic and social development efforts in order to strengthen Haitian institutions responsible for dispensing justice and guaranteeing democracy, respect for human rights, political stability and economic development;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to coordinate the efforts of the United Nations system in providing humanitarian aid and contributing to the development of Haiti;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "The situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti".

In resolution 53/159 on the situation of human rights in Haiti (see PART TWO, Chapter I), the Assembly encouraged the Government of Haiti to continue its work on the reform of the judicial system, underlining the priority of that reform in the framework of the bilateral and multilateral assistance provided by the international community; called on the authorities to improve Haiti's prisons; expressed concern over the prolonged political stalemate; and invited the international community to continue its involvement in the reconstruction and development of Haiti.

Financing of missions

In a March report [A/52/818], ACABQ drew the General Assembly's attention to a 3 March letter from its Chairman to the Secretary-General on the subject of financing the revised budget for UN peacekeeping operations in Haiti from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, as well as the proposed budget for 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999. Pending the Secretary-General's submission of revised estimates for 1997-1998 and 1998-1999 based on accurate data, ACABQ authorized him to continue to utilize resources already available, appropriated and assessed by Assembly resolution 51/15 B [YUN 1997, p. 188], and the amount of $9,237,300 gross ($8,805,800 net) authorized by ACABQ in an 18 December 1997 letter. ACABQ made that authorization on the basis of its consideration of the Secretary-General's October 1997 report [A/52/512] on the financing of the United Nations Mission in Haiti (UNMIH) (which terminated on 30 June 1996), the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti (UNSMIH) (which terminated on 31 July 1997) and UNTMIH (which was established for a single four-month period that ended on 30 November 1997) and an advance draft of his February 1998 report [A/52/798] on the financing of UNSMIH, UNTMIH and MIPONUH.

On 31 March, the Assembly took note of the ACABQ report (decision 52/472).

In April [A/52/854], the Secretary-General presented the financial performance report of UNSMIH for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997. The Assembly had appropriated a total of $56,105,000 gross ($53,708,600 net) for that period. The related expenditures amounted to $46,988,000 gross ($45,428,900 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $9,117,000 gross ($8,279,700 net).

Pursuant to the ACABQ Chairman's 3 March letter, the Secretary-General, in a 9 April report [A/52/869], submitted the revised budget for UN operations in Haiti for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, amounting on a full cost basis to $30,318,800 gross ($29,080,800 net). The total provided for: the maintenance of UNSMIH for the month of July 1997; the maintenance of UNTMIH from 1 August to 30 November 1997; and the maintenance of MIPONUH from 1 December 1997 to 30 June 1998. The report also contained the revised budget for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, totalling $18,524,800 gross ($17,779,200 net) on a full cost basis, providing for the maintenance of MIPONUH from 1 July 1998 to the end of the mandate on 30 November 1998 and for the liquidation of the Mission from 1 December 1998 to 30 June 1999.

In a 15 May report [A/52/905], ACABQ commented on the Secretary-General's reports on UN operations in Haiti.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 June [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/845/Add.1], adopted resolution 52/246 without vote [agenda item 141].

Financing of the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti, the United Nations Transition Mission in Haiti and the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti, the United Nations Transition Mission in Haiti and the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 1063(1996) of 28 June 1996, by which the Council established the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti, and 1086(1996) of 5 December 1996, by which the Council extended its mandate until 31 July 1997,

Bearing in mind also Security Council resolution 1123(1997) of 30 July 1997, by which the Council established the United Nations Transition Mission in Haiti for a single four-month period,

Bearing in mind further Security Council resolution 1141(1997) of 28 November 1997, by which the Council established the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti until 30 November 1998,

Recalling its resolution 51/15 A of 4 November 1996 on the financing of the Support Mission and its subsequent decisions and resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 51/15 B of 13 June 1997,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Support Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Support Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Missions by certain Governments,

Noting that the assessed contributions to the Special Account for the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti will cover only direct and indirect costs associated with the six hundred contingent personnel and the three hundred civilian police authorized by the Security Council in its resolution 1063(1996), the five hundred contingent personnel and the three hundred civilian police authorized by the Council in its resolution 1086(1996) and the fifty military personnel and the three hundred civilian police authorized by the Council in its resolution 1141(1997),

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Missions with the necessary financial resources to enable them to fulfil their responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti as at 15 May 1998, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 7.5 million United States dollars, representing 11 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Support Mission to the period ending 15 March 1998, notes that some 34 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Missions in full and on time;

5. Takes note of the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Decides to examine the recommendation of the Advisory Committee for 5 per cent across-the-board reductions of the budget proposals of the Secretary-General in the light of the next series of relevant financial performance reports;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Missions are administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to employ locally recruited staff for the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

9. Decides to continue to use the Special Account for the Support Mission, established in accordance with General Assembly resolution 51/15 A, for the United Nations Transition Mission in Haiti beginning on 1 August 1997 and for the Civilian Police Mission beginning on 1 December 1997;

10. Decides also to appropriate the amount of 13,227,900 dollars gross (12,602,500 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Support Mission, the Transition Mission and the Civilian Police Mission for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, in addition to the amount of 15,091,000 dollars gross (14,478,400 dollars net) already appropriated under the terms of General Assembly resolution 51/15 B and inclusive of the amount of 9,237,300 dollars gross (8,805,800 dollars net) authorized by the Advisory Committee under the terms of section IV of Assembly resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994;

11. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, taking into account the amount of 15,091,000 dollars gross (14,478,400 dollars net) already apportioned in accordance with its resolution 51/15 B, to apportion among Member States the additional amount of 13,227,900 dollars gross (12,602,500 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1997, as set out in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and its decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995, and the year 1998, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997;

12. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 11 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated additional staff assessment income of 625,400 dollars approved for the Missions for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998;

13. Decides also that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Support Mission, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 11 above, their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 9,117,000 dollars gross (8,279,700 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 1997;

14. Decides further that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their obligations to the Support Mission, their share of the unencumbered balance of 9,117,000 dollars gross (8,279,700 dollars net) for the period ending 30 June 1997 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

15. Decides to appropriate the amount of 17,704,685 dollars gross (16,959,085 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Civilian Police Mission for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, inclusive of the amount of 894,085 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations, to be apportioned, as an ad hoc arrangement, among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1998 and 1999, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A;

16. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 15 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 745,600 dollars approved for the Civilian Police Mission for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999;

17. Invites voluntary contributions to the Civilian Police in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

18. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session an item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti, the United Nations Transition Mission in Haiti and the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti".

On 18 December, the General Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the financing of UNMIH, UNSMTH, UNTMIH and MIPONUH and relevant reports at its resumed fifty-third session in 1999 (decision 53/458).

On 23 December [A/53/769], the Secretary-General submitted the financial performance report of UNSMTH, UNTMIH and MIPONUH for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998. Expenditures for the period totalled $27,412,100 gross ($26,215,700 net) excluding budgeted voluntary contributions in kind of $1,999,900, resulting in an unencumbered balance of $906,800 gross ($865,200 net).

UNMIH

On 19 March [A/52/833], the Secretary-General presented the financial performance report of the United Nations Mission in Haiti, which was terminated on 30 June 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 171], covering the liquidation period from 1 to 31 July 1996. The Assembly had appropriated $1,197,100 gross ($1,185,800 net) for that period and related expenditures totalled $1,159,000 gross and net, resulting in an unencumbered balance of $38,100 gross ($26,800 net). In a related report

[A/52/905], ACABQ stated that it would make a recommendation to the Assembly at its fifty-third session on the treatment of the unencumbered balance on receipt of the UNMIH final performance report. By decision 52/486 of 26 June, the Assembly deferred its consideration pending submission of that report.

Other questions

Cuba-United States

Report of Secretary-General. In a September report with later addenda [A/53/320 & Add.1-3], the Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 52/10 [YUN 1997, p. 198], submitted information from 59 States, one observer mission to the United Nations, and seven UN organs and specialized agencies on the implementation of the resolution, by which the Assembly had called on States to refrain from unilateral application of economic and trade measures against States, and urged them to repeal or invalidate such measures. The preamble to resolution 52/10 had made particular reference to the Helms-Burton Act, promulgated by the United States in 1996, which had strengthened sanctions against Cuba.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 14 October [meeting 37], adopted resolution 53/4 [draft: A/53/L.6] by recorded vote (157-2-12) [agenda item 29].

Necessity of ending the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States of America against Cuba

The General Assembly,

Determined to encourage strict compliance with the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming, among other principles, the sovereign equality of States, non-intervention and non-interference in their internal affairs and freedom of international trade and navigation, which are also enshrined in many international legal instruments,

Recalling the statements of the heads of State or Government at the Ibero-American Summits concerning the need to eliminate the unilateral application of economic and trade measures by one State against another that affect the free flow of international trade,

Concerned about the continued promulgation and application by Member States of laws and regulations, such as that promulgated on 12 March 1996 known as the "Helms-Burton Act", the extraterritorial effects of which affect the sovereignty of other States, the legitimate interests of entities or persons under their jurisdiction and the freedom of trade and navigation,

Taking note of declarations and resolutions of different intergovernmental forums, bodies and Governments that express the rejection by the international community and public opinion of the promulgation and application of regulations of the kind referred to above,

Recalling its resolutions 47/19 of 24 November 1992, 48/16 of 3 November 1993, 49/9 of 26 October 1994, 50/10 of 2 November 1995, 51/17 of 12 November 1996 and 52/10 of 5 November 1997,

Concerned that, since the adoption of its resolutions 47/19, 48/16, 49/9, 50/10, 51/17 and 52/10, further measures of that nature aimed at strengthening and extending the economic, commercial and financial embargo against Cuba continue to be promulgated and applied, and concerned also about the adverse effects of such measures on the Cuban people and on Cuban nationals living in other countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 52/10;

2. Reiterates its call on all States to refrain from promulgating and applying laws and measures of the kind referred to in the preamble to the present resolution in conformity with their obligations under the Charter of the United Nations and international law, which, inter alia, reaffirmed the freedom of trade and navigation;

3. Once again urges States that have and continue to apply such laws and measures to take the necessary steps to repeal or invalidate them as soon as possible in accordance with their legal regime;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the appropriate organs and agencies of the United Nations system, to prepare a report on the implementation of the present resolution in the light of the purposes and principles of the Charter and international law and to submit it to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Necessity of ending the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States of America against Cuba".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 53/4:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: El Salvador, Estonia, Georgia, Latvia, Lithuania, Morocco, Nepal, Nicaragua, Republic of Korea, Senegal, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Uzbekistan.

Communications. By a 24 February letter to the Secretary-General [A/53/76], the European Union (EU), following the visit by Pope John Paul II to Cuba from 21 to 25 January, expressed appreciation for the welcome extended by Cuba to the pontiff. The EU also welcomed the Cuban Government's decision to release a certain number of prisoners in response to the Pope's appeal.

By a 29 October letter to the Secretary-General [A/53/566], Portugal transmitted the declarations signed at the eighth Ibero-American Summit of the Heads of State and Government held in Oporto on 17 and 18 October. The signatories to the declarations, among other things, rejected the extraterritorial application of national laws and covert operations that violated the laws and regulations of other countries, as well as unilateral coercive procedures that constituted an obstacle to cooperation between States. In that connection, they reiterated their exhortation to the Government of the United States to put an end to the application of the Helms-Burton Act.

Cooperation with OAS

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/4 [YUN 1996, p. 201], the Secretary-General submitted an October report on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States (OAS) [A/53/272 & Add.1]. The report reviewed their joint participation in the International Civilian Mission to Haiti (see above), described consultations and information exchange on matters of mutual interest, and provided information on collaborative activities undertaken with OAS by the UN Secretariat, UNHCR, the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC), the World Food Programme (WFP), the United Nations International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP), UNESCO, the International Labour Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank, the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs.

The Secretary-General had visited OAS headquarters shortly after assuming office in January 1997 and on 18 June of that year had addressed the OAS Permanent Council. In his statement, he emphasized the important role played by both organizations in El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti and Nicaragua in the tasks of institution-building, strengthening of democracy and human rights and building a society ruled by law. On 29 and 30 April 1998, in Santa Fé de Bogota, Colombia, the Deputy Secretary-General attended the special meeting commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of the establishment of OAS and the adoption of the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man. On 28 and 29 July 1998, the OAS Secretary-General participated in a meeting in New York between the United Nations and regional organizations on effective ways of establishing cooperation for conflict prevention. While recognizing that no single model of cooperation would cover all eventualities, various possible modalities for cooperation were considered on the basis of the existing strengths and capabilities of the organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 October [meeting 42], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/9 [draft: A/53/L.10/Rev.1 & Add.1 | without vote [agenda item 21].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 51/4 of 24 October 1996 relating to the promotion of cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States,

Recalling that the purposes of the United Nations are, inter alia, to achieve international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and to be a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of these common ends,

Recalling also that the Charter of the Organization of American States reaffirms these purposes and principles and provides that that organization is a regional agency under the terms of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling further its resolutions 47/20 A of 24 November 1992, 47/20 B of 20 April 1993, 48/27 B of 8 July 1994, 49/5 of 21 October 1994, 49/27 B of 12 July 1995, 50/86 B of 3 April 1996 and 51/4 of 24 October 1996,

Aware that the effective consolidation of a new international order requires regional action in harmony with that of the United Nations,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States and his efforts to strengthen that cooperation;

2. Also takes note with satisfaction of the exchange of information between the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat and the Organization of American States with respect to the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, which is helping to keep that organization abreast of the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development;

3. Recognizes the work being done by the Organization of American States, on the occasion of its fiftieth anniversary, in the field of regional cooperation and in connection with its task of coordination with the United Nations;

4. Welcomes the undertaking of technical cooperation activities under the United Nations Trust Fund for New and Renewable Sources of Energy, financed by the Government of Italy, to assist small island developing States, including States members of the Organization of American States;

5. Recommends that a general meeting of representatives of the United Nations system and of the Organization of American States should be held in 1999 for the continued review and appraisal of cooperation programmes and of other matters to be mutually decided upon;

6. Expresses its satisfaction at the exchange with the Organization of American States of information and substantive reports on the advancement in the status of women, on matters relating to youth and on the eradication of poverty;

7. Emphasizes that the cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States should be undertaken in accordance with their respective mandates, scope and composition and be suited to each specific situation, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States".

Cooperation with CARICOM

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 51/16 [YUN 1996, p. 202], the Secretary-General submitted an August report with later addendum on cooperation between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community (CARICOM) [A/53/275 & Add.1]. He described consultations and information exchange between the two organizations since 1996, and provided information on collaborative activities undertaken with CARICOM by the UN Secretariat, UNDP, UNEP, UNDCP, UNHCR, the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, UNESCO, the Universal Postal Union, the World Bank, WFP, ECLAC and the Department of Economic and Social Affairs.

At the first general meeting between representatives of CARICOM and its associated institutions and of the United Nations system, held in New York on 27 and 28 May 1997, the UN Secretary-General and the CARICOM Secretary-General signed a cooperation agreement. The meeting welcomed new areas of possible cooperation and agreed that they should be explored further, subject to financial and human resource constraints. On 28 and 29 July 1998, the CARICOM Secretary-General attended the third meeting between the United Nations and regional organizations, which was convened by the UN Secretary-General to discuss practical and more effective ways of preventing conflicts. At the invitation of CARICOM, the United Nations was represented by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs and the Deputy Secretary-General, respectively, at the eighteenth and nineteenth Conferences of Heads of State and Government of the members of CARICOM, held in Jamaica and Saint Lucia in July 1997 and June/July 1998.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 October [meeting 49], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/17 [draft: A/53/L.15 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 23].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/8 of 16 October 1991, 49/141 of 20 December 1994 and 51/16 of 11 November 1996,

Noting with satisfaction the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community,

Bearing in mind the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations on the existence of regional arrangements or agencies for dealing with such matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security as are appropriate for regional action and other activities consistent with the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Also bearing in mind the assistance given by the United Nations towards the maintenance of peace and security in the Caribbean region,

Noting with satisfaction that the first general meeting between representatives of the Caribbean Community and its associated institutions and of the United Nations system was held in New York on 27 and 28 May 1997,

Welcoming the fact that the Deputy Secretary-General, on behalf of the Secretary-General, attended the meeting of the Heads of Government of the countries members of the Caribbean Community, held in Castries, Saint Lucia, from 30 June to 4 July 1998, on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Community,

Affirming the need to strengthen the cooperation that already exists between entities of the United Nations system and the Caribbean Community in the areas of economic and social development, as well as of political and humanitarian affairs,

Convinced of the need for the coordinated utilization of available resources to promote the common objectives of the two organizations,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community, as well as efforts to strengthen that cooperation;

2. Welcomes the signing on 27 May 1997 by the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Caribbean Community of a cooperation agreement between the secretariats of the two organizations;

3. Notes that the third meeting between the United Nations and regional organizations, which examined the potential for greater interaction and cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations in the field of conflict prevention, was held on 28 and 29 July 1998, and welcomes the fact that the follow-up meeting in the area of early warning and conflict prevention will be convened shortly;

4. Calls upon the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the Caribbean Community, to continue to assist in furthering the development and maintenance of peace and security within the Caribbean region;

5. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to promote and expand cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community in order to increase the capacity of the two organizations to attain their objectives;

6. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to cooperate with the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Caribbean Community in order to initiate, maintain and increase consultations and programmes with the Caribbean Community and its associated institutions in the attainment of their objectives, with special attention to the areas and issues identified in the meeting on 27 and 28 May 1997, as contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

7. Recommends that the second general meeting between representatives of the Caribbean Community and its associated institutions and of the United Nations system be hosted in 1999 in the Caribbean region in order to review and appraise progress in the implementation of the agreed areas and issues and to hold consultations on additional measures and procedures as may be required to facilitate and strengthen cooperation between the two organizations;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community".

Peru-Ecuador

Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Ecuador, Peru and the United States transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of the Presidential Act of Brasilia, signed on 26 October [A/53/790]. In that document, Ecuador and Peru placed on record that their differences with regard to the border dispute between them, which had divided the two countries for decades, had been definitively settled.

Chapter IV

Asia and the Pacific

In the Asia and Pacific region, ongoing UN activities to verify Iraq's compliance with its weapons-related obligations under Security Council resolution 687(1991), which brought a formal ceasefire to the 1991 Gulf War, suffered a major setback in 1998. A crisis was narrowly averted in February when, in the light of Iraq's continued refusal to allow the UN Special Commission (UNSCOM) charged with verifying its disarmament to conduct further inspection activities, the Secretary-General travelled to Baghdad and negotiated a Memorandum of Understanding on access to sensitive sites. As a result of that agreement, UNSCOM's inspections resumed in March. However, as the year progressed, Iraq's resistance to transparency and sustained full co-operation stiffened and UNSCOM remained unable to report to the Council that Iraq had finally fulfilled its obligations so that the sanctions on it could be lifted. Iraq's posture ultimately led UNSCOM and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), the specialized agency monitoring Iraq's nuclear activities, to withdraw from the country on 16 December. Following the withdrawal, the United States and the United Kingdom took independent military action against Iraq. In view of the continuing sanctions, the Council extended to 24 May 1999 the 1995 humanitarian programme for the Iraqi people based on an oil-for-food formula and raised the limit on the production of Iraqi oil to allow increased purchases of humanitarian goods.

In Afghanistan, the military confrontation between the Taliban and the United Front (formerly the Northern Alliance) continued, resulting in significant territorial gains by the Taliban. Despite repeated calls by the Council and the General Assembly, external military support flowed unabated to both parties. Grave breaches of human rights and international humanitarian law were reported in the wake of the fighting, including blockades of humanitarian relief deliveries. Nonetheless, the Secretary-General's Special Envoy for Afghanistan, with support from the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan, intensified his efforts to bring about intra-Afghan talks. The Assembly, in December, called on the Afghan parties to cease all armed hostilities and to engage in a political dialogue under UN auspices aimed at a political settlement through a broad-based, multi-ethnic and fully representative government that would protect the rights of all Afghans and observe Afghanistan's international obligations.

The implementation of the 1997 General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan was hampered by several political crises and by the volatile security situation in parts of the country. The Assembly, in December, encouraged the parties to expedite the full implementation of the General Agreement and encouraged the Commission on National Reconciliation, the main implementing body, to continue its efforts to institute a broad dialogue among the various Tajik political forces in the interests of restoring and strengthening civil accord.

On the Korean peninsula, the United Nations Command continued to monitor the 1953 Armistice Agreement. Despite the persistent efforts of IAEA, it remained unable to obtain full compliance from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) with its nuclear safeguards agreement with the Agency. In November, the Assembly called on the DPRK to comply with that agreement.

In Cambodia, the United Nations coordinated the international monitoring of the elections that took place in July, which were judged to be sufficiently free and fair and credibly reflective of the Cambodian people's will. The elections produced a new coalition Government in November, ending the crisis that led to the collapse 17 months before of the first (1993) coalition Government. Combined with guarantees from the Cambodian authorities, the political monitoring role of the United Nations, completed in September 1998, provided for the safe return of the political leaders who had fled Cambodia in 1997.

Also during the year, the United Nations agreed to establish a presence in Bougainville, Papua New Guinea, to help the parties that had been engaged in nine years of fighting to implement their recently concluded peace accords.

Other political matters within the region drawn to the attention of the United Nations concerned relations between India and Pakistan over the disputed territory of Jammu and Kashmir; the violations of Iran's territorial integrity by the United States; the continual disregard of the 1988 ceasefire agreement between Iraq and Iran; and the dispute between the United Arab Emirates and Iran regarding the islands of the Greater Tunb, the Lesser Tunb and Abu Musa.

Iraq

The United Nations Special Commission on Iraqi disarmament (UNSCOM) and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) endeavoured in 1998 to accelerate the final resolution of the outstanding issues in disarming Iraq of its nuclear, missile, chemical and biological weapons proscribed under Security Council resolution 687(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 172]. They concurrently continued their ongoing monitoring and verification (OMV) operations to ensure that Iraq did not reacquire or redevelop those weapons.

IAEA reported to the Council that, in March, Iraq successfully completed its undertaking to produce the consolidated version of its full, final and complete disclosure of its clandestine nuclear programme, which was found to be consistent with its own picture of that programme. Nonetheless, IAEA continued to refer to some elements of uncertainty in the completeness of that picture.

UNSCOM's best efforts, however, could not bring to closure the outstanding priority disarmament issues in the other three weapons areas. In January, Iraq reneged on its commitment to full cooperation with UNSCOM and IAEA by calling a halt to the work of an UNSCOM team that was attempting to inspect a series of sites declared by Iraq as sensitive, on the grounds that the composition of the team was not balanced in terms of nationality. A potential crisis was averted through the intervention of the Secretary-General, who travelled to Baghdad in February and negotiated a Memorandum of Understanding with Iraq, which defined the conditions for access to eight "presidential sites" hitherto closed to inspection. UNSCOM and IAEA visited those sites in March as part of a Special Group constituted for the purpose.

In August, Iraq demanded that UNSCOM report to the Council that Iraq had fulfilled its obligations under section C of resolution 687(1991) that it no longer had any weapons of mass destruction or the capability to produce them. Since UNSCOM could not comply, given the less-than-required level of verification of that fact, Iraq, on 5 August, suspended its cooperation with UNSCOM and IAEA but allowed limited monitoring activities to continue. Rather than comply with the Council's demand to rescind that decision, Iraq, on 31 October, ceased all UNSCOM activities, including monitoring; it allowed IAEA to continue monitoring, provided it was independent of UNSCOM. Those decisions led to the complete halt of all UNSCOM activities in Iraq and the withdrawal of UNSCOM and IAEA from the country on 11 November.

Following intensive consultations, Iraq rescinded its decisions on 14 November, once again allowing UNSCOM and IAEA to resume the full range of their work and declaring its clear and unconditional decision to cooperate with them immediately and fully. Subsequently, the Council agreed to undertake a comprehensive review of the disarmament process to determine what issues remained to be resolved once the Secretary-General confirmed, based on reports by UNSCOM and IAEA, that Iraq had returned to sustained full cooperation.

While IAEA reported that Iraq had provided the necessary cooperation, UNSCOM's December report presented a picture largely of Iraqi non-cooperation, which ensured that no progress could be made. In the wake of that report, the Executive Chairman removed UNSCOM personnel from Iraq to Bahrain on 16 December for their safety and security; IAEA did likewise, as it depended on UNSCOM's logistical support for its monitoring operations. On the same date, the United States and the United Kingdom informed the Council that they had begun military operations against Iraq in response to Iraq's continued refusal to comply with Council resolutions. As the Council met in the evening of 16 December to consider the reports of the two bodies, aerial bombing and missile strikes against Iraq were in progress and continued until 20 December.

In the context of the continuing sanctions against Iraq, the temporary arrangements for the humanitarian programme for the Iraqi people, based on an oil-for-food formula, was extended twice during the year, each time for another 180 days. The Council enhanced the programme by raising the ceiling of oil revenues to $5.256 billion and by including the export to Iraq of oil-production spare parts and equipment to enable it to produce the amount of oil to generate that sum.

The General Assembly, by decision 53/427 of 8 December, deferred consideration of the item entitled "Consequences of the Iraqi occupation of and aggression against Kuwait" and included it in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth (1999) session.

UN Special Commission

The United Nations Special Commission, established by the Secretary-General pursuant to Security Council resolution 687(1991), carried out its disarmament and monitoring operations from its headquarters in New York, the Baghdad Monitoring and Verification Centre (BMVC) in Iraq, and its field office in Muharraq, Bahrain. UNSCOM continued to be headed by Executive Chairman Richard Butler (Australia). BMVC operated under the directorship of Nils Carlstrom (Sweden).

UNSCOM continued to be financed from funds received from the implementation of Council resolution 986(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 475] and to receive significant in-kind support from a number of States in the form of government-paid experts, equipment, services and field office premises.

The Executive Chairman continued to conduct high-level and expert meetings in Baghdad to advance the joint efforts of UNSCOM and Iraq through agreed work schedules and to clarify disagreements. In the absence of full and unconditional cooperation by Iraq, as demanded by Council resolutions 687(1991) and 707(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 188], and to achieve the level of verification of Iraqi disclosure to enable UNSCOM to report to the Council that Iraq had completed all actions contemplated by resolution 687(1991), UNSCOM continued to conduct short- or no-notice inspections of designated sites. At Iraq's request, it convened technical evaluation meetings to which international experts were invited to review UNSCOM's findings on specific issues, as well as independent international expert meetings to review laboratory analyses of excavated weapons remnants.

The Executive Chairman submitted to the Council two consolidated six-month progress reports on UNSCOM's activities: the first [S/1998/332] covered the period from 11 October 1997 to 15 April 1998; the second [S/1998/920] covered the period from 16 April to 11 October 1998. The Executive Chairman also issued separate reports on an ad hoc basis as required.

High-level and expert meetings

During 1998, UNSCOM and Iraq held high-level meetings in Baghdad on 19-21 January, 22-26 March, 11-15 June and 2-4 August. At the January meeting [S/1998/58], policy issues discussed included inspection modalities for and access to Iraq's declared "presidential and sovereign sites" [YUN 1997, p. 221], arrangements for the technical evaluation meetings (TEMs) and the 17 January speech by Iraq's President, Saddam Hussein, which appeared to contain conditions on Iraqi cooperation with the Council. Also discussed were the dual-use equipment removed from certain facilities under monitoring during UNSCOM's temporary absence from Iraq [ibid., p. 217], UNSCOM's helicopter operations, the use of supplementary aircraft offered by France and the Russian Federation for aerial surveillance, UNSCOM's request to base its fixed-wing aircraft at Rasheed airbase, the recent rocket-grenade attack on the UN building housing BMVC, and UNSCOM 227, which was prevented from discharging its assigned January inspections (see below, under "Limitations on UNSCOM").

The Executive Chairman reported some definite improvements in implementing the revised (1997) arrangements for inspecting sensitive sites [ibid., p. 221], such as Iraq's agreement to more than four inspectors entering a sensitive site and less delay in obtaining entry, as well as the personal intervention of the Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister to speed site access. Two TEMs, one on special warheads and another on the chemical warfare agent VX, were scheduled for February. A third TEM, on the more complex biological area, was to be scheduled to allow its results to be reported in March. The Deputy Prime Minister did not agree to the Council's requirement for unconditional access and proposed postponing the issue pending the outcome of the TEMs, which, he said, would bring Iraq's disarmament obligations to an end, but to which it would not furnish new material. The Executive Chairman found it difficult to see the reason for the linkage between the technical evaluation process and a suspension, possibly indefinite, of an important part of UNSCOM's fieldwork.

As to other matters, the Executive Chairman confirmed that the monitoring inspections towards the end of 1997 [ibid., p. 222] found no evidence of the prohibited use of the dual-use equipment removed from their previous locations. The Deputy Prime Minister repeated his request for the termination of UNSCOM's high-altitude (U-2) surveillance flights, regarded by Iraq as serving United States purposes hostile to it, and suggested replacing the U-2 with non-United States aircraft. The Executive Chairman was exploring offers from France and the Russian Federation. On the issue of the use of Rasheed airbase, the Deputy Prime Minister reiterated that UNSCOM was adequately served at Habbaniyah airport, where arrangements were in place for receiving and checking inspection teams. He said the attack on the UN building was carried out by dissident groups opposed to the Government.

As to the information yielded by the cache of documents that came into UNSCOM's possession in August 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 487], which showed Iraq's full, final and complete disclosures (FFCDs) of its proscribed weapons programmes to have been misleading in many significant respects, the Deputy Prime Minister felt it deeply unfair that that information—which Iraq dismissed—had robbed it of what was to have been the end of the disarmament process. He referred to UNSCOM's investigative and verification activities since as one of unnecessary delay and evasion of the need to come to conclusions.

The Executive Chairman reminded the Council that full access was required for both disarmament and OMV purposes. He rejected Iraq's claims that UNSCOM officers were prolonging coming to a conclusion on disarmament issues for personal reasons.

In March [S/1998/278], the Iraqi side provided new information that no destruction of special (chemical and biological) warheads had taken place outside the period 9-11 July 1991 and explained the methodology of the destruction. In that connection, the Executive Chairman and Iraq's Minister of Oil visited the ongoing UNSCOM-supervised excavation of destroyed warheads at Nibai, 30 kilometres south of Baghdad. Both sides agreed to holding a further TEM on missile warheads to address unresolved issues, such as the indigenous production of missile engines and the accounting of missile propellants, and one on the entire issue of the chemical agent VX, as Iraq had challenged the methodology used to assess its capabilities in that respect.

The Executive Chairman expressed his satisfaction at the new spirit of cooperation between both sides since the signing of the Memorandum of Understanding (see below, under "Limitations on UNSCOM"), particularly during the March inspections of sensitive sites for which Iraq granted the UNSCOM inspection team full access and cooperation.

In June [S/1998/529], the Executive Chairman proposed that the discussions be based on an informal 4 June briefing paper he had presented to the Council listing priority disarmament issues (appendix I). The Deputy Prime Minister, while allowing discussions on the issues identified, disagreed that all were disarmament issues.

In the missile area, discussions centred on the accounting of missile warheads, particularly the results of the laboratory analysis of samples of the excavated special warhead remnants, the indigenous production of missile components, and the accounting for missile propellants. The Executive Chairman reiterated UNSCOM's concern over Iraq's modification of certain key components taken from the surface-to-air Volga missile system for use in developing its non-proscribed short-range Al-Samoud missile system. The Deputy Prime Minister did not regard the propellants issue as essential for the disarmament process and as such could be addressed under the OMV system; he would not agree to its inclusion in any work schedule. Also, since Iraq never achieved full capability to produce indigenously engines and gyroscopes for proscribed missiles, it was unnecessary to account for those components. He emphasized that any proscribed modification of a missile would be detected by UNSCOM's missile monitoring. He also did not accept the position that, under the OMV plan approved by Council resolution 715 (1991) [YUN 1991, p. 194], UNSCOM would not permit the use or modification of certain components in non-proscribed missile development.

As to chemical weapons, Iraq rejected the preliminary results of the chemical analysis of the warhead remnants and refused to clarify the extent of its attempts to produce VX, declaring the matter closed; it would only discuss evidence available to UNSCOM of any incorrect Iraqi VX declarations.

Regarding biological weapons, UNSCOM laid particular emphasis on the lack of physical or verifiable evidence in most aspects of Iraq's biological weapons programme. Iraq stated that it had already presented all the available evidence and would provide no additional information or documentation; it would not revise its FFCD declaration and again declared that the programme was obliterated in 1991.

The Executive Chairman stated that additional aerial surveillance was being initiated by France. The Deputy Prime Minister agreed to consider further the matter of appropriate basing of other aircraft from the Russian Federation and repeated his demand that UNSCOM stop using the U-2 surveillance aircraft. The Executive Chairman indicated that the additional aircraft were supplemental to the U-2; he would nonetheless study Iraq's request, but would base his decision on UNSCOM's operational requirements.

The discussions resulted in a two-month work schedule on certain disarmament issues, including several expert meetings to be held in Baghdad in July between Iraqi experts and UNSCOM. Iraq specifically demanded that the expert meetings include, in addition to UNSCOM and other international experts, select experts from China, France and the Russian Federation. Additional laboratory analyses, excavations and physical accounting of proscribed weapons would be undertaken by both sides.

While the work schedule included most of the priority issues identified in UNSCOM, the Iraqi side refused inclusion of the items on: the extent of Iraq's VX production, accounting for proscribed missile propellants, and clarification of Iraq's concealment actions and policies. It also declined the proposal for a special meeting to discuss UNSCOM's concern about possible Iraqi concealment activities.

At the August round of high-level talks [S/1998/719], the Executive Chairman reported that, with Iraq's cooperation, UNSCOM had carried out all of the tasks assigned to it under the agreed schedule of work but Iraq had not provided all of the new information and documents requested, which would have greatly helped to bring the disarmament issues to closure.

Given the significant progress achieved in the missile area with respect to accounting for proscribed special and conventional warheads, and the material balance of engine production components, the Executive Chairman suggested an accelerated work programme for the weeks prior to his October biannual report to the Council. The programme called for Iraqi clarifications on outstanding warhead issues, an expert meeting on those issues and an inspection to verify accountable aspects of the material balance and the unilateral destruction of major indigenous production components.

The Executive Chairman reported that the international experts who convened in Baghdad in mid-July to review the results of the chemical analysis, which had identified VX degradation products in samples of warhead remnants, unanimously judged those results to be valid. Iraq did not provide any technical explanation for the source of those products, stating that it had never weaponized VX. It was agreed that further steps be taken at the expert level to achieve a reasonable accounting for the missing 155-mm mustard-filled shells. New documents presented by Iraq in July on the disposition of the key components of its R-400 aerial bombs were found satisfactory by UNSCOM but, to enable UNSCOM to make a final accounting, Iraq was asked for data on the distribution of chemical and biological warfare agents in that type of bomb. It was also asked for documentation to support its explanations for the movement of some prohibited chemical-weapons production equipment found and destroyed in 1997.

Also discussed was the expert meeting in Baghdad in July to review Iraq's biological FFCD—the third such review since 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 204]—at which Iraq presented no new material. Using a different methodology, the international experts again found the FFCD not to be adequate to allow for the credible verification of the sub-components of the material balance of weapons, the production of biological weapons agents and growth media. The experts recommended that no further verification and/or assessment of Iraq's biological FFCD should be conducted until Iraq committed itself to providing new and substantive information.

The Deputy Prime Minister stressed the importance of distinguishing between major issues to be resolved to fulfil the Council's disarmament requirements and minor issues, which could be pursued during monitoring operations. He said that, to enable the Council to lift the sanctions, only two questions needed to be answered: whether Iraq retained any weapons of mass destruction, including long-range missiles; and whether it retained capabilities for their production. He asserted that, as established a long time ago, the answers were clearly negative and any dual-use equipment retained by Iraq was under rigorous and intrusive monitoring.

The Deputy Prime Minister said he would not discuss the VX issue further with UNSCOM but would present Iraq's case on that subject to the international community. Among other things, he accused UNSCOM of having brainwashed the international experts who assessed the biological FFCD; reiterated that Iraq's proscribed biological weapons programme had been entirely obliterated in 1991; and asserted that Iraq had never used biological weapons and that UNSCOM's approach was in implementation of the wish of the United States and the United Kingdom to maintain the Council sanctions on Iraq. He called on the Executive Chairman to report "the truth" to the Council that Iraq no longer had proscribed weapons or capabilities in any of the areas within UNSCOM's mandate and stated that the Executive Chairman should not be swayed by his experts, who were not objective.

The Executive Chairman said that UNSCOM would continue to implement the Council's mandate with Iraq's cooperation, but its work could be directed by the Council alone. He rejected charges that UNSCOM and its experts had been dishonest and slow, and had deliberately created confusion. UNSCOM's requests for Iraqi documents were to expedite verification. However, it had encountered difficulties, the most recent being Iraq's refusal to accede to a request for a document on Iraq's expenditure on non-conventional munitions during the Iran-Iraq war, which was highly pertinent to obtaining a verifiable material balance of Iraq's munitions filled with chemical or biological agents. The Council had requested Iraq to give UNSCOM the document, which had been placed under seal pending the current visit to Baghdad. The Executive Chairman pointed out that, based on the level of verification so far achieved, he was unable to report to the Council that Iraq no longer possessed any proscribed weapons or capabilities.

The Executive Chairman proposed that both sides consider substantive issues to help clarify what remained and define the framework of solutions for problems related to VX and the unilateral destruction of special warheads. He again asked that the document withheld by Iraq be produced and that both sides study the implications of its data on verification in the chemical weapons area. He also proposed that both sides elaborate an intensive work programme, to include specific meetings, inspections and provision of documents on issues related to the missile and chemical weapons areas, before the submission to the Council of UNSCOM's October biannual report. The Deputy Prime Minister did not accept those proposals and said he would never give the document requested as it was irrelevant to UNSCOM's work.

The Deputy Prime Minister reasserted that there were no more proscribed weapons and materials in Iraq, and if the Executive Chairman was not prepared to report that truth to the Council, there was no reason to believe that he would do so in his October report. Therefore, no useful purpose could be served by holding further high-level meetings, at either the policy or expert levels. Asked whether he was suggesting terminating co-operation with UNSCOM in its monitoring operations, he replied that he would report on the current meeting's outcome to the Iraqi leadership, which would take the required decisions. There would be no point in meeting again the following day (4 August), as planned, unless the Executive Chairman was prepared to agree to Iraq's position. Accordingly, no further meeting took place.

Communications. Commenting on the Executive Chairman's report on the June high-level meeting [S/1998/545], the Deputy Prime Minister stated that, since the accounting for missile engines, launchers and warheads had been completed, the question of missile propellants had become a secondary issue; the only remaining problem was the provision of documents to confirm Iraq's destruction of the propellants, which could be dealt with within the OMV framework. On the VX question, Iraq had submitted documentation proving that it had not produced VX in a sufficiently stable manner to be utilized within its armament programme. However, Iraq was ready to work in technical discussions, or to participate in considering evidence contradicting its position, which UNSCOM claimed to have. Iraq's FFCD on its proscribed biological weapons programme described the true situation concerning that programme. The concealment referred to by UNSCOM was non-existent and unrelated to the disarmament process. Moreover, UNSCOM should not insist in asking for non-existent documents.

The Deputy Prime Minister also observed that the report omitted the very important conclusion that the samples of water, air, soil and leaves, as well as the imprints taken at the presidential sites in March, did not indicate the presence at those sites of proscribed activities or elements.

On 10 August [S/1998/739], Iraq followed up the Executive Chairman's report on the 3 August high-level talks with a letter stating that, to inform the international community of the Executive Chairman's practice of suppressing the fact that Iraq had complied with its disarmament obligations under Security Council resolution 687(1991), it was transmitting videotapes of the two 3 August plenary meetings. On 7 August [S/1998/726], Iraq had provided a specific example of what it claimed were UNSCOM's delaying tactics in order to keep the disarmament files open and thereby prevent the implementation of paragraph 22 of resolution 687(1991).

Iraq commented on 3 September [S/1998/830] that the briefing notes attached to the Executive Chairman's 1 September letter circulated informally to the Council, providing further information on the status of three disarmament issues—VX in warheads, the material balance of special missile munitions (155-mm shells and R-400 bombs) and biological weaponization—contained misrepresentations, errors and/or omissions of fact. Iraq said the Executive Chairman was deliberately resurrecting an old issue relating to the Iran-Iraq war to confuse the Council into thinking that the work of his predecessor, Rolf Ekéus, covering the 1981-1988 period in the chemical area, was far from complete. It asserted that the 22 June formal report on the analytical results of the sample special warhead remnants listed only four, not seven, warheads showing traces of anthrax, which tended to confirm Iraq's account as given in its biological FFCD.

Technical evaluation meetings

Following Iraq's 1997 representations [YUN 1997, p. 221] to settle by means of technical "seminars" those substantive issues of disagreement arising from the verification of its disclosures on its proscribed weapons programmes, UNSCOM drew up specific modalities for the conduct of TEMs and, as agreed with Iraq, conducted three such meetings in 1998. The first, on the accounting for Iraq's special warheads for biological and chemical weapons, and the second, on Iraq's activities relating to the chemical agent VX, were held in Baghdad on 1-6 February and 2-6 February, respectively. The third meeting, dealing with all aspects of Iraq's biological weapons programme, took place in Vienna on 20-27 March.

The reports of the first two meetings were transmitted to the Security Council President on 19 February [S/1998/176]. For the TEM on proscribed missile warheads, UNSCOM's team comprised experts from China, France, Germany, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States, and UNSCOM headquarters staff from France, Germany, the Russian Federation and the United States. The Iraqi delegation was led by the Minister of Oil, Lieutenant-General Amer M. Rasheed. The issues discussed related to warhead material balance and accounting of different types of warheads, indigenous warhead production, and warhead design and testing activities.

The international expert team concluded that, through TEM and prior inspection activities, including findings from the re-excavation of warhead remnants, important progress was achieved in the overall accounting of proscribed missile warheads but not in the accounting of declared special warheads for chemical and biological weapons. Issues still to be resolved related to duplicate counting, unilateral warhead destruction and the system of warhead markings. The team believed that only by making available production and acquisition records would UNSCOM be able to obtain a full picture of Iraq's warhead production. The experts recommended that a specialized inspection team should address the issues of warhead design and testing and Iraq should be asked to provide written explanations beforehand of the specific issues raised on the subject during the TEM.

The team's report recorded that its evaluation work would have been better served by factual answers from Iraq rather than explanations of various degrees of probabilities that were difficult to assess scientifically and objectively. Annexed to the report were the comments of the head of Iraq's delegation.

Participating in the TEM on the chemical warfare agent VX were: an UNSCOM international team of experts, supplemented by experts from UNSCOM headquarters; and the Iraqi delegation led by the former Senior Deputy Director of the Military Industrial Commission, Lieutenant-General Amer Hamoodi Al Sa'adi.

Following Iraq's presentation on VX, the UNSCOM international expert team presented its commentary note on the declarations provided, pointing out that Iraq's changes to its VX declarations from April 1991 to the current TEM were the result of UNSCOM's verification efforts. The team stated that, to verify Iraq's VX programme, Iraq needed to supply complete documentation and verifiable evidence in the form of production records, research-and-development reports and munitions trials.

The expert team concluded that Iraq had the capability to produce significant quantities of VX before January 1991, probably as much as 50 to 100 tonnes, albeit of an uncertain quality; that Iraq currently had the know-how and process equipment, and might possess precursors to manufacture as much as 200 tonnes of VX; and that the level of verification achieved was not satisfactory. The team did not have enough information on the VX weaponization issue to reach any specific conclusion, as Iraq provided no further technical details beyond its declaration that weapons were qualified for chemical-weapons use through general, rather than agent-specific, testing. Attached to the team's report were the Iraqi delegation's final comments, including a statement that no production and weaponization of VX had ever taken place.

The report covering the TEM on Iraq's proscribed biological warfare programme was transmitted to the Council on 8 April [S/1998/308]. The Executive Chairman formed a team of international and UNSCOM experts. The Iraqi delegation was led by Lieutenant-General Al Sa'adi. Both sides agreed that the TEM's agenda would follow the sequence of the FFCD chapters, which included the programme's history; sites and buildings involved; the programme's organization and its connection to functional organs; acquisition of supplies, material and equipment; research and development; production; weaponization; and the military organization influencing the programme. Also discussed were Iraq's deception and concealment activities, which, although not part of the FFCD, the experts believed were of significance in understanding the programme from 1991 onwards.

The expert team concluded that no additional confidence in the veracity and scope of the FFCD was derived from the TEM, given that Iraq provided no new substantiating technical information. Iraq's construction of a material balance, based primarily on recollection, provided no confidence that resources, such as weapons, bulk agents, bulk media and seed stocks, were eliminated. The organizational aspects of the biological weapons programme were not clear and there was little confidence that the full scope of the programme was revealed. Other aspects, such as the existence of dormant or additional programmes, remained unresolved. When the expert team raised its concern about the FFCD, responses revealed that the Iraqi side was not prepared to tackle the issues in the technical detail demanded by the evaluation process. However, Iraq recognized the need to improve the FFCD and promised to do so.

In his April biannual report [S/1998/332], the Executive Chairman drew attention to two salient points that had emerged from the foregoing TEMs. First, besides failing to improve UNSCOM's ability positively to verify Iraq's claims about the status of its prohibited weapons programmes, the process indicated additional areas of uncertainty and the need for further work in the field rather than at a conference table. Second, the TEMs were extremely time-consuming, leading UNSCOM to slow down or postpone important fieldwork. The substitution of TEMs for fieldwork was of concern to UNSCOM as it should be to Iraq, given that the only way to resolve outstanding issues was by material results, not by conceptual results through argument and discussion, much of which was political rather than technical in character. The Executive Chairman said those observations would have been unnecessary had Iraq kept its word to bring to each of the TEMs new materials to help explain its claims regarding its prohibited weapons programmes.

Status of disarmament verification activities

Reports of Executive Chairman (April and October). The 1998 consolidated biannual progress reports of the Executive Chairman, submitted on 16 April [S/1998/332] and 6 October [S/1998/920], gave an account of developments in the relations between UNSCOM and Iraq during each reporting period. They recorded the status of the disarmament phase of UNSCOM's work in the proscribed missile, chemical and biological weapons areas, including an updated account of actions taken by UNSCOM and Iraq, the state of disarmament achieved in each of those areas, and UNSCOM's view of the remaining unresolved major priority issues. The reports also recorded progress in UNSCOM's ongoing monitoring operations.

The April report additionally described UNSCOM efforts to implement its 1997 emergency meeting recommendations [YUN 1997, p. 218] and improve its effectiveness, as well as the Memorandum of Understanding between the United Nations and Iraq with respect to the March/April initial visits to Iraq's presidential sites (see below). Annexed to the report was a detailed account of events bearing on Iraq's compliance with Security Council resolution 1115(1997) [ibid., p. 209], beginning with Iraq's 29 October 1997 decision [ibid., p. 214] to exclude United States nationals from UNSCOM operations until the end of the visits to the presidential sites on 2 April 1998. That resolution demanded that Iraq cooperate fully with UNSCOM and allow its inspection teams immediate access to any and all areas, facilities, equipment and records they wished to inspect.

The annex cited instances of Iraq's non-compliance with the resolution, including halting the work of UNSCOM 227 on 12 January and rejection of the Council's demand on access, as contained in the 14 January presidential statement (see below, under "Limitations on UNSCOM"). It also recorded that on the return of UNSCOM 227 to Iraq on 5-12 March, it was given full access to the series of sites it designated for inspection, several of which were declared sensitive, including the Ministry of Defence. The Executive Chairman expressed his appreciation for that cooperation to the Deputy Prime Minister at the March high-level meeting.

The annex further recorded Iraq's cooperation with the UNSCOM/IAEA team that conducted a baseline survey of the eight presidential sites, which enabled the team to accomplish its work without incident.

Communication. On 22 April [S/1998/342], having commented that the Executive Chairman's April report omitted and/or misrepresented facts, Iraq supplied information on its cooperative efforts over the preceding seven years to comply with the provisions of Council resolution 687(1991) in conjunction with UNSCOM's inspection and monitoring activities in Iraq from 1 October 1997 to 20 April 1998 (annex A); with the three TEMs in February and March 1998 (annex B); and with the UNSCOM-supervised destruction by Iraq of its prohibited weapons and related equipment and materials from 1991 to 1997 (annex C).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 14 May [meeting 3880] to review the April biannual report of UNSCOM, as well as that of IAEA (see below, under "IAEA activities"). Following consultations among its members, the Council authorized the President to make the following statement [S/PRST/1998/11] on its behalf:

The Security Council has reviewed the report of 16 April 1998 from the Executive Chairman of the Special Commission and the report of 7 April 1998 from the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency. The Council welcomes the improved access provided to the Special Commission and the Agency by the Government of Iraq following the signature of the memorandum of understanding by the Deputy Prime Minister of Iraq and the Secretary-General on 23 February 1998 and the adoption of its resolution 1154(1998) of 2 March 1998. The Council calls for continued implementation of the memorandum of understanding.

The Council expresses the hope that the agreement by the Government of Iraq to fulfil its obligation to provide immediate, unconditional, and unrestricted access to the Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency will reflect a new Iraqi spirit with regard to providing accurate and detailed information in all areas of concern to the Special Commission and the Agency as required by the relevant resolutions.

The Council expresses its concern that the most recent reports of the Special Commission, including the reports of the technical evaluation meetings, indicate that Iraq has not provided full disclosure in a number of critical areas, in spite of repeated requests from the Special Commission, and calls upon Iraq to do so. The Council encourages the Special Commission to continue its efforts to improve its effectiveness and efficiency and looks forward to a technical meeting of the members of the Council with the Executive Chairman of the Special Commission as a follow-up to the review of sanctions held by the Council on 27 April 1998.

The Council notes that the Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency must discharge their mandates as defined under resolutions 687(1991) of 3 April 1991 and 707(1991) of 15 August 1991 with full Iraqi cooperation in all areas, including fulfilment by Iraq of its obligation to provide full, final and complete declarations of all aspects of its prohibited programmes for weapons of mass destruction and missiles.

The Council notes that the investigations by the International Atomic Energy Agency over the past several years have yielded a technically coherent picture of Iraq's clandestine nuclear programme, although Iraq has not supplied full responses to all of the questions and concerns of the Agency, including those specified in paragraphs 24 and 27 of the report of the Director General of 7 April 1998.

The Council affirms its intention, given the progress of the International Atomic Energy Agency, and in line with paragraphs 12 and 13 of resolution 687(1991), to agree in a resolution that the Agency dedicate its resources to implementing its ongoing monitoring and verification activities under resolution 715(1991) of 11 October 1991, upon receipt of a report from the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency stating that the necessary technical and substantive clarifications have been made, including provision by Iraq of the necessary responses to all Agency questions and concerns, in order to permit full implementation of the ongoing monitoring and verification plan approved by resolution 715(1991). In this regard, the Council requests the Director General to provide this information in his report due on 11 October 1998 and to submit a status report by the end of July 1998 for possible action at that time.

The Council acknowledges that the International Atomic Energy Agency is focusing most of its resources on the implementation and strengthening of its activities under the ongoing monitoring and verification plan. The Council notes that, within the framework of its ongoing monitoring and verification responsibilities, the Agency will continue to exercise its right to investigate any aspect of Iraq's clandestine nuclear programme, in particular through the follow-up of any new information developed by the Agency or provided by Member States and to destroy, remove or render harmless any prohibited items discovered through such investigations falling under resolutions 687(1991) and 707(1991) in conformity with the Agency's ongoing monitoring and verification plan approved by resolution 715(1991).

The Executive Chairman's October report [S/1998/920] noted three central facts that had emerged from UNSCOM's work with Iraq in the preceding six months: the disarmament phase of the Council's requirements was possibly near its end in the missile and chemical weapons areas but not in the biological weapons area; monitoring work was permitted to be exercised only at a less-than-satisfactory level, yet its development was vital to the future; and full Iraqi disclosure of all necessary materials and information remained the crucial ingredient for an end to the disarmament process and for future monitoring.

Missiles

In the missile area, the outstanding issues concerned Iraq's proscribed missile warheads, both special and conventional; liquid missile propellants; and indigenous missiles and the major components used for their production. Due from Iraq were information, data and documentation specified by the February TEM on warhead issues (see above, under "Technical evaluation meetings"); new declarations and/or documentation to account for imported proscribed missile propellants declared unilaterally destroyed; and verifiable declarations on its achievements in indigenous production of proscribed missiles, including a verifiable material balance of their components.

UNSCOM accounted for the destruction of between 43 and 45 of the 45 operational special warheads declared unilaterally destroyed by Iraq in 1991. However, to assess whether that accounting was sufficient to verify fully Iraq's declared production and unilateral destruction of proscribed special warheads, the VX issue had to be resolved (see below, under "Chemical weapons"). UNSCOM and Iraqi joint efforts to clarify problems related to Iraq's actions of 1991 to hide special warheads were terminated on 30 July by Iraq's refusal to provide access to relevant sites and to discuss the issue further. Iraq and UNSCOM jointly accounted for most of the proscribed missile warheads, although remnants of some 50 conventional warheads (including some 30 indigenously produced) had yet to be recovered; clarifications had been sought from Iraq.

As to indigenous missile production, considerable progress was achieved at a July expert meeting in Baghdad. Remaining unresolved was the question of seven indigenously produced missiles in Iraq's missile force in 1991 and declared unilaterally destroyed, but neither remnants nor engines of which were recovered at the declared destruction sites. Progress was also achieved in the development of a rough material balance of key components for the indigenous production of proscribed missile engines. The July expert meeting concluded that, owing to Iraq's destruction methods and the incompleteness of its submitted destruction inventories, it might not be possible to establish even a rough material balance of Iraq's proscribed guidance and control components for missile gyroscopes. Also outstanding was a full accounting for proscribed liquid missile propellants, which Iraq refused to address.

As noted at the August high-level meeting, Iraq did not accept the specific steps outlined by the Executive Chairman to bring remaining issues in the missile area to closure.

Chemical weapons

As noted by the October report, the most important outstanding issues in the chemical weapons area were: the finalization of the material balance of special munitions, including the accounting for 550 155-mm artillery shells filled with mustard chemical warfare agent but declared lost shortly after the Gulf War; verification of the unilateral destruction of R-400 chemical and biological aerial bombs and of Iraq's expenditure of special munitions in the 1980s; accounting for the production of the chemical warfare agent VX; and verification of the completeness of Iraq's declarations on the material balance of chemical-weapons production equipment.

Iraq declared that it produced a total of 3.9 tonnes of VX: 2.4 tonnes in 1988, for which it provided production documents; and the remainder in 1990, for which it had yet to submit verifiable evidence. Chemical analysis performed in the United States in mid-June of remnants of unilaterally destroyed special missile warheads found degradation products of VX, casting doubt on Iraq's denial of ever having weaponized VX. Iraq's clarifications to UNSCOM in July 1998 on the repeated movement of 197 pieces of glass chemical-weapons production equipment required field verification, which had been blocked, however, since Iraq's 5 August decision to suspend cooperation with UNSCOM.

Subsequent to the October report, a group of international experts on VX and UNSCOM met (New York, 22-23 October) to evaluate the analytical results generated by laboratories in France, Switzerland and the United States on their sampling of warhead remnants. In his 26 October letter transmitting the expert group's report [S/1998/995], the Executive Chairman proposed that the Council draw to Iraq's attention the following key aspects of the report: all analytical data provided by the three laboratories were again considered conclusive and valid; the existence of VX degradation products conflicted with Iraq's declarations that the unilaterally destroyed special missile warheads had never been filled with chemical warfare agents; and the recommendation that UNSCOM invite Iraq to explain the origin and history of the fragments, the presence of degradation products of nerve agents and the presence of a compound known as VX stabilizer and its degradation product, and to provide more information on Iraqi efforts between mid-1988 and the end of 1990 to develop and produce VX by improved synthetic routes.

Biological weapons

In the biological weapons area, a full, complete and verifiable disclosure of Iraq's proscribed biological weapons programme constituted the outstanding issue. The April and October reports drew attention, respectively, to the March TEM and the July international expert meeting (see above, under "Technical evaluation meetings" and "High-level and expert meetings"), which reviewed Iraq's current (1997) biological FFCD and arrived at the same conclusion: that the document in its totality could not be verified. The July meeting moreover recommended that, until Iraq committed itself to providing substantive new information, no further verification of its FFCD should be conducted at the senior international expert level.

According to the experts' assessment of Iraq's major declared biological weapons munitions, the material balance of the following could not be verified: the production and destruction of Al Hussein missile warheads—regarding which, a week after the July expert meeting, Iraq stated that, instead of the declared 5 anthrax and 16 botulinum toxin missile warheads, there had in fact been 16 anthrax and 5 botulinum toxin warheads filled and insisted that the change in disclosure would not affect its declaration on the total quantity of biological weapons agents produced and weaponized; the sub-components of the R-400 aerial bombs and the number filled with biological weapons agents; the development of the drop tanks for disseminating such agents, which appeared to have been pursued with the utmost vigour by Iraq; and the aerosol generators for biological weapons agents, developed by modifying helicopter-borne commercial chemical insecticide disseminators.

Concealment investigations

UNSCOM continued to maintain a capable sites and concealment investigation unit to verify Iraqi assertions of being free of proscribed items and materials. The unit's inspections were based on data from a wide range of sources, including Iraqi documents, interviews, U-2 imagery and previous inspection findings. Iraq's official position was that it ended its concealment efforts in late 1991 and dismantled all concealment mechanisms, but that the late Lieutenant-General Hussein Kamel, former Minister of Industry and Military Industrialization, on a personal basis, had continued to engage in some concealment until his departure from Iraq in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 4871. It was therefore critical for UNSCOM to establish the veracity of those statements. In March 1998, documents discovered in Iraq, dated 1993, reflected Iraq's concealment activities at that time involving the destruction, removal and safeguarding of documentation relating to proscribed ballistic missile activity. That contradicted Iraq's current declarations concerning its earlier concealment activities and underscored the importance of continued UNSCOM vigilance and investigations. The October report stated that the concealment inspections were costly and time-consuming and had given rise to friction between UNSCOM and Iraq.

Ongoing monitoring and verification

The April report stated that the UNSCOM resident monitoring teams continued to experience varying levels of cooperation from Iraq's National Monitoring Directorate. While support at the working level was generally satisfactory, there continued to be incidents of non-compliance, including: late or incorrect declarations; movement of tagged equipment without the required notification; lack of site or room access due to absence of keys; discrepancies between a site's own declarations and those by the Directorate; interference by Directorate personnel with the progress of inspections; false replies by site personnel; departure of site personnel before completion of inspections; and the assignment of two different directors-general for the same site to different teams. Although small in number, the incidents had a negative effect on confidence in the monitoring system.

Monitoring inspections following the submission of the April report continued without major incident until Iraq's 5 August decision to suspend cooperation with UNSCOM in its current form and with IAEA (see below, under "IAEA activities"). While that decision specifically stated that monitoring activities as required by Council resolution 715(1991) would continue, in practice Iraqi authorities made clear that "capable site inspections" (inspections seeking to confirm that a site did not possess undeclared dual-use capabilities) would not be permitted to continue, as they were potentially related to the disarmament phase of UNSCOM's work. That position was demonstrated on 23 September when a monitoring team was blocked from attempting to inspect an undeclared facility deemed to be a "capable" site.

The BMVC missile monitoring group was monitoring 63 sites and 159 tagged items of equipment. Over 2,000 operational missiles had been tagged to ensure they were not modified for proscribed purposes. The issue of Iraq's continued reuse of Volga surface-to-air missile components in the development of its surface-to-surface non-proscribed Al-Samoud missile system remained unresolved.

The chemical monitoring group periodically inspected 120 sites under monitoring and, occasionally, other sites, ranging from petrochemical facilities to water treatment plants. Under monitoring were 518 items of tagged dual-use equipment and thousands of tonnes of dual-use chemicals. The group continued to discover dual-use items and materials that required tagging.

The biological monitoring group was responsible for examining semi-annual declarations provided by Iraq relating to 91 sites and for monitoring 1,335 items of tagged equipment. Undeclared dual-use materials subject to tagging also continued to be found.

The export/import monitoring group conducted inspections to verify imports of dual-use items subject to notification. A separate inspection was conducted of Iraq's customs and general import structure to identify elements of the overall import/export mechanism that could be refined. During the period covered by the October report, the joint UNSCOM/IAEA unit received notification of some 60 potential or actual transactions involving the import of notifiable dual-capable items.

In the light of experience gained in four years of OMV operations, UNSCOM anticipated making adjustments to the identification of items and materials subject to notification under its OMV lists and where it was judged that a higher threshold of declarable items could be safely implemented. UNSCOM was also preparing an assessment of additional resources required—personnel, training, equipment, logistic support, infrastructure and buildings—to make the monitoring system more effective.

The October report pointed out that undermining the efficacy of the monitoring system was Iraq's failure to provide timely information and unconditional access to sites and to enact the national measures to ensure that Iraq, and in particular any of its nationals, did not resume prescribed activities.

Aerial operations

The Baghdad-based UNSCOM aerial team continued aerial inspection of sites subject to monitoring and to provide support to ground inspections. The imagery derived from UNSCOM's U-2 surveillance aircraft also continued to provide important information for UNSCOM and IAEA inspection activities. Aerial operations had been enhanced by the addition of a Mirage-IV (medium altitude) surveillance aircraft from France. The possible addition of an AN-30 aircraft from the Russian Federation was pending due to Iraq's refusal to allow that aircraft to be based at Rasheed airbase. It also refused to allow UNSCOM's L-100 transport aircraft to use Rasheed or Basrah airports, instead of the considerably farther Habbaniyah airport.

Limitations on UNSCOM

Halting of inspections

As 1998 began, UNSCOM scheduled a series of inspections for 12-16 January. The inspection team, UNSCOM 227, led by Chief Inspector Scott Ritter, a United States national, consisted of 44 persons from 17 nations and BMVC staff. The inspections had been planned since the return of UNSCOM and IAEA to Iraq on 21 November 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 218] following their withdrawal earlier that month [ibid., p. 213].

On 12 January 1998 [S/1998/27], when the series was to begin with the inspection of seven sensitive (presidential) sites, the UNSCOM Executive Chairman advised the Security Council of Iraq's decision to halt the work of the team until its composition was reviewed and made more balanced by the equal participation of inspectors from the permanent Council members. He nonetheless proposed to instruct the Chief Inspector to seek to proceed with the planned inspections. Iraq explained on 13 January [S/1998/28] that the lack of balance in the team's composition was incompatible with the modalities for constituting UN teams and was unacceptable; it added that United States and British control of UNSCOM was the reason for the continuation of the sanctions imposed on Iraq by Council resolution 661(1990) [YUN 1990, p. 192].

On 12 January, following a briefing by the Executive Chairman on the circumstances relating to the halting of the UNSCOM inspections, the Secretary-General reiterated his call on Iraq not to take precipitous action prior to the Executive Chairman's next scheduled visit.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On receipt of the foregoing communications, the Security Council met on 14 January [meeting 3848] and, following consultations among its members, authorized its President to make the following statement [S/PRST/1998/1 ] on its behalf:

The Security Council deplores the statement of the Iraqi official spokesman of 12 January 1998 and the subsequent failure of Iraq to fulfil its obligations to provide the Special Commission with full, unconditional, and immediate access to all sites. The Council determines that this failure is unacceptable and a clear violation of the relevant resolutions.

The Council recalls the statement by its President of 29 October 1997 in which it condemned the decision of the Government of Iraq to try to dictate the terms of its compliance with its obligations to cooperate with the Special Commission.

The Council reiterates its demand, contained in resolution 1137(1997), that Iraq cooperate fully and immediately and without conditions or restrictions with the Special Commission in accordance with the relevant resolutions, which constitute the governing standard of Iraqi compliance.

The Council expresses its full support for the Special Commission and its Executive Chairman, including in his forthcoming travel to Iraq to continue his discussions with officials of the Government of Iraq aimed at the full implementation of the relevant resolutions and at increasing the effectiveness and efficiency of the operations of the Special Commission to this end. In this context, the Council recalls the statements by its President of 3 December and 22 December 1997 and encourages the efforts reported to it by the Executive Chairman.

The Council requests a full briefing by the Executive Chairman on these discussions as soon as possible after they have taken place, so that it can decide as necessary on an appropriate response on the basis of the relevant resolutions.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

(For the Executive Chairman's report on his January discussions with Iraq, see above, under "High-level and expert meetings".)

In February, several States and regional organizations expressed their concern to the Secretary-General and the Security Council [A/53/67-S/1998/122, S/1998/116, S/1998/118, S/1998/119, S/1998/151, S/1998/157] over the increasingly tense situation between UNSCOM and Iraq and its implications for regional and international peace and security. In the context of diplomatic efforts to find a solution, they attached particular importance to the Secretary-General's good offices to defuse the tension.

Between 13 and 17 February, the Secretary-General held intensive consultations with the Council's permanent members on ways to resolve the current stand-off between UNSCOM and Iraq with respect to the presidential sites. With the Council's support, he scheduled a mission to Baghdad, to be preceded by an advance technical team.

UN Technical Mission

The Secretary-General dispatched a five-member United Nations Technical Mission to Iraq, which conducted a survey of eight presidential sites between 15 and 18 February. Its report, transmitted by the Secretary-General to the Security Council on 27 February [S/1998/166/Add.1], was also transmitted to Iraq.

The survey included the perimeter of each site as identified by the global positioning system (GPS), on the basis of Iraq's indications and the perimeter marked on the original map provided by the Executive Office of the Secretary-General; an outline of the actual site area, with relevant GPS points and total size calculated in square metres; a list of GPS coordinates for each site and two additional scale maps of each; a list of buildings within each site, with an indication of their approximate number, as well as a description of their nature and use; and a complete set of aerial and ground photographs.

The report stated that the Mission exceeded its terms of reference by physically visiting as many buildings as it could. It had unhindered access and unrestricted authorization to take photographs that allowed for a more comprehensive aerial and ground photographic coverage than expected. Iraq granted the Mission access to relevant maps and clearly defined the perimeters for each presidential site. Because of time limitations, the Mission was unable to elaborate on the maps the exact location of the buildings within each site, although some main buildings were already identified on the original maps.

All eight sites appeared to be well defined by high walls or fences and had a similar landscape pattern: main guest houses, with an integrated system of ancillary buildings and villas for dignitaries. The area surveyed totalled about 31.5 square kilometres, with Radwaniyah, the largest site, totalling some 17.8 square kilometres and the smallest, 0.8 square kilometres. Artificial lakes within the sites covered approximately 10.2 square kilometres. At Iraq's request, the Mission also made an extensive internal and external survey of the Al Hyatt, a building within the presidential Republican Palace site, which had been a cause of contention between Iraq and UNSCOM in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 209].

Memorandum of Understanding

The Secretary-General undertook a mission to Baghdad from 20 to 23 February, at the conclusion of which he and the Deputy Prime Minister of Iraq signed a Memorandum of Understanding between the United Nations and Iraq, transmitted to the Security Council on 25 February [S/1998/166].

By the Memorandum, Iraq reconfirmed its acceptance of all relevant Council resolutions and reiterated its undertaking to cooperate fully with UNSCOM and IAEA and to accord them immediate, unconditional and unrestricted access in conformity with those resolutions. UNSCOM undertook to respect Iraq's legitimate concerns relating to national security, sovereignty and dignity. The United Nations further reiterated the commitment of all Member States to respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Iraq. Both sides agreed on special procedures for the initial and subsequent entries at the eight presidential sites—the Republican Palace, the Radwaniyah and Sijood sites in Baghdad, and those located at Tikrit, Tharthar, Jabal Makhul, Mosul and Basrah.

The Secretary-General would establish a Special Group to inspect those sites, in consultation with the UNSCOM Executive Chairman and IAEA Director General, to comprise senior diplomats appointed by the Secretary-General and experts drawn from UNSCOM and IAEA and to be headed by a Commissioner, also appointed by the Secretary-General. Specific detailed procedures would be developed, given the special nature of the presidential sites. All other areas of Iraq and facilities, equipment, records and means of transportation would be subject to UNSCOM procedures hitherto established. The United Nations and Iraq agreed to improve cooperation, efficiency, effectiveness and transparency of work to enable UNSCOM to report to the Council expeditiously under paragraph 22 of resolution 687(1991), through implementation of the recommendations of UNSCOM's 1997 emergency session [YUN 1997, p. 218]. The Secretary-General undertook to bring the lifting of the sanctions against Iraq to the attention of the Council.

Communications. In letters addressed to the Secretary-General and the Security Council between 23 February and 31 March, a number of States expressed their appreciation for the Secretary-General's diplomatic efforts and for the outcome of his mission to Iraq [A/53/70-S/1998/150, S/1998/153, S/1998/154, S/1998/165, S/1998/169, S/1998/178, S/1998/185, S/1998/189, S/1998/206, S/1998/220, S/1998/265, S/1998/292].

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 2 March [meeting 3858], the Security Council, having considered the Memorandum of Understanding between the United Nations and Iraq, unanimously adopted resolution 1154(1998), based on a draft [S/1998/175] sponsored by Japan and the United Kingdom.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions, which constitute the governing standard of Iraqi compliance,

Determined to ensure immediate and full compliance by Iraq without conditions or restrictions with its obligations under resolution 687(1991) of 3 April 1991 and the other relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of Iraq, Kuwait and the neighbouring States,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Commends the initiative by the Secretary-General to secure commitments from the Government of Iraq on compliance with its obligations under the relevant resolutions, and in this regard endorses the memorandum of understanding signed by the Deputy Prime Minister of Iraq and the Secretary-General on 23 February 1998, and looks forward to its early and full implementation;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council as soon as possible with regard to the finalization of procedures for presidential sites in consultation with the Executive Chairman of the Special Commission and the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency;

3. Stresses that compliance by the Government of Iraq with its obligations, repeated again in the memorandum of understanding, to accord immediate, unconditional and unrestricted access to the Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency in conformity with the relevant resolutions is necessary for the implementation of resolution 687(1991), but that any violation would have severest consequences for Iraq;

4. Reaffirms its intention to act in accordance with the relevant provisions of resolution 687(1991) on the duration of the prohibitions referred to in that resolution and notes that by its failure so far to comply with its relevant obligations Iraq has delayed the moment when the Council can do so;

5. Decides, in accordance with its responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations, to remain actively seized of the matter, in order to ensure implementation of the present resolution and to secure peace and security in the area.

Procedures for presidential sites

The Secretary-General, on 9 March [S/1998/208], submitted the specific detailed procedures for entry into the presidential sites. To carry out mandated tasks at a presidential site, a team would be constituted from the Special Group: UNSCOM and IAEA would designate the Head of the team and its expert members, while the Commissioner would designate its senior diplomatic observers, in no case less than two. The team might be divided into sub-teams at the discretion of the Head. The senior diplomatic observers would see to the implementation in good faith of the Memorandum's provisions and of the specific detailed procedures and report on any matter deemed appropriate to their functions; the UNSCOM and IAEA experts would function in accordance with their respective established procedures.

The UNSCOM Executive Chairman and/or the IAEA Director General would determine the need for the performance of mandated tasks within a presidential site, as well as the date and entry time. The Commissioner would notify the Government of an intended visit to any presidential site and of the team's composition.

The rights of the Special Group and its teams in the conduct of their work would be those provided for in the relevant Council resolutions. Upon entry into a presidential site, the team would conduct itself in a manner consonant with the nature of the site, taking into consideration any observations the Iraqi representative might wish to make regarding entry into a particular structure and then deciding on the appropriate course of action. That should not, however, impede the team's ability to fulfil its mandated tasks under the relevant Council resolutions.

The Commissioner's report would be submitted by UNSCOM to the Council through the Secretary-General. The senior diplomats might report directly to the Commissioner, who would discuss with UNSCOM and/or IAEA any observations made by the senior diplomats that should be conveyed to Iraq; he might also report any matters arising out of the senior diplomats' work to the Secretary-General and advise UNSCOM and IAEA accordingly.

The procedures were subject to revision in the light of experience in their implementation.

Special Envoy of Secretary-General in Baghdad

On 5 March [S/1998/213], the Secretary-General referred to the need for improved lines of communication between Iraq and his Office to help prevent the difficulties that arose from time to time between Iraq and the United Nations from developing into full-fledged crises. With that objective, he informed the Security Council of his decision to appoint Prakash Shah (India) as his Special Envoy in Baghdad for an initial period of six months, with which the Council agreed on 9 March [S/1998/214]. Mr. Shah was to be assisted by a small team of internationally and locally recruited staff.

The Special Envoy would follow closely all developments relevant to the role of the United Nations with regard to Iraq, lending his support to UN activities in the arms control, humanitarian and economic and social fields, while giving special attention to any crisis or problem that might benefit from intervention by UN Headquarters.

Visits to presidential sites

Report of Special Group. The Special Group constituted under the terms of the Memorandum of Understanding consisted of 20 senior diplomats and 77 experts from UNSCOM and IAEA. Jayantha Dhanapala, Under-Secretary-General for Disarmament Affairs, was appointed by the Secretary-General as Commissioner and Head of the Special Group. The report of the Special Group was transmitted to the Security Council, through the Secretary-General, on 15 April [S/1998/326].

The Special Group undertook initial visits to the eight presidential sites between 26 March and 2 April. The report described the experts' activities in connection with UNSCOM's baseline survey of each site, including the use of global positioning system (GPS) instrumentation, general aerial photography of the sites, and detailed drawings and sketches of the buildings, as well as random and spot checks of available documents and computers. The Special Group also carried out soil sampling and detailed examination of underground facilities for the disposal of rainwater (at the Jabal Makhul site).

As observed by the senior diplomats, the relations between the UNSCOM and IAEA experts and their Iraqi counterparts were generally correct; both sides conducted themselves with professionalism and restraint. The regular presence of senior members of the Iraqi leadership at the sites showed the seriousness with which Iraq approached the implementation of the Memorandum and allowed for quick decision-making. Throughout the visits, the Iraqi authorities raised objections, on national security grounds, to the survey activities, including helicopter flights over the populated areas adjacent to presidential sites. UNSCOM pointed out that the Security Council resolutions were the final source of their authority and that none of the activities objected to were specifically excluded by the procedures for implementing the Memorandum. Citing national dignity and sovereignty concerns, the authorities also objected to helicopter landings within the sites and entry into the offices and living quarters of the Iraqi leadership. UNSCOM respected those concerns but reserved the right to on-site helicopter landing. As to the concern about the confidentiality of the information being gathered, the experts maintained that such information was totally safe with UNSCOM. Permission for subsequent visits to some of the sites was readily granted and, despite some delays, access was facilitated. The Iraqi authorities did not accept the characterization of the initial visits as a "baseline survey" of the presidential sites. It was pointed out, however, that the Memorandum provided for "initial and subsequent entries for the performance of the tasks mandated at the eight presidential sites".

The summary report of the Head of the UNSCOM/IAEA team of experts (appendix III) emphasized that the mission, UNSCOM 243, was neither a search-type nor a no-notice mission and that Iraq had over a month to prepare for it. It was apparent that all sites had undergone extensive evacuation. Iraq explained that its evacuation measures were taken in anticipation of a military strike.

The baseline survey conducted at all presidential sites allowed UNSCOM to establish the location, general purpose and a general understanding of most buildings within the sites. The utility of the mission was threefold: the acquired database would allow UNSCOM and IAEA to conduct more focused subsequent inspections, which would support OMV tasks and the search for prohibited materials and related documents; the visits allowed inspectors to gain a better understanding of the nature of the facilities in those sites, thus helping to dispel many uncertainties and concerns; and the precedent of access to the sites and the use of normal UNSCOM/IAEA inspection techniques were demonstrated.

A key accomplishment was the more precise plotting of the boundaries of the presidential sites, as a result of which revisions were made to the established perimeters of four sites and agreed to in a signed note between the Deputy Executive Chairman and the Minister of Oil. The expert team sought to include in that note a provision for a 24-hour notification of any changes to portions of the sites. The Minister declined since it would imply a continuing UNSCOM right of access to the sites. He stated that Iraq had agreed only to a process of visits of finite duration—its view of what it had agreed to in the Memorandum of Understanding. The Minister acknowledged that the Deputy Executive Chairman's view was that access would be required for long-term monitoring. The Deputy Executive Chairman understood that the Secretary-General was of the same view.

While Iraqi cooperation allowed the completion of the mission, it was not always readily achieved and there were instances of denial of UNSCOM/IAEA rights, the most contentious issue being the overflight and photography of the presidential sites by the UNSCOM helicopter. On all but one occasion, Iraq blocked the UNSCOM helicopter from landing within the presidential sites, as well as the plan to fly inspectors and diplomats from a site to other locations. Iraq further stated that UNSCOM and IAEA staff could not enter buildings without the presence of a senior diplomat, despite the fact that the procedures did not contain such a requirement and indeed allowed for the division of the team into sub-teams at the discretion of the Head of the team without any stated requirement for a senior diplomat to be present in each sub-team.

The report concluded that, on balance, the mission was successful, having achieved its limited objectives. Iraqi cooperation was satisfactory and the presence of senior diplomatic observers worked out generally well. The report also noted the constructive presence of the Presidential Secretary and the Minister of Oil during the visits. It was apparent, however, that some key issues would arise again, not the least of which was the unsettled matter of continuing access, since the Iraqi side clearly felt that the Memorandum's reference to "initial and subsequent visits" meant for a limited period only.

Communications. On 27 April [S/1998/347], Iraq commented that the report of the Special Group should have fully reflected the principles embodied in the Memorandum of Understanding governing the reciprocal obligations of the Special Group and Iraq. It further conveyed its detailed comments on certain portions of the report of the Head of the UNSCOM/IAEA team, according to which UNSCOM's view, as reflected in his description of the threefold utility of the mission, contradicted the letter and spirit of the Memorandum and the immediate political context that had led to its adoption. Unlike IAEA's report on the visits (see below, under "IAEA activities"), the UNSCOM report contained no conclusions to negate the alleged presence of prohibited materials or equipment or prohibited activities at the sites. The report's view that UNSCOM had an absolute right of access to the presidential sites, to be exercised without any regard for their special nature, was in complete contradiction to the provisions of the Memorandum. Among other comments, Iraq cited the report's contradictory statements and refuted the criticisms relating to the evacuation of the sites, the presence of large numbers of Iraqi escorts and the time limits imposed on the mission.

On 23 July [S/1998/684], the UNSCOM Executive Chairman advised the Security Council that, as a result of UNSCOM's survey, new maps of Iraq's presidential sites had been prepared in the light of the adjustments made to the existing maps of four of those sites. The original maps had been prepared by the United Nations Technical Mission in February [S/1998/166/Add.1]. The new maps, together with the originals, were available for consultation at Headquarters.

UNSCOM staff obligations

Note by Secretary-General. By a 6 April note [S/1998/303], the Secretary-General, at the request of Iraq [S/1998/302], formally circulated a document for signature by UNSCOM personnel, committing them not to communicate or publish hitherto unpublicized material or information known to them by reason of their association with UNSCOM, without the Executive Chairman's specific authorization or approval, during or after their UNSCOM assignment.

The document was prepared in response to Iraq's 7 March protest [S/1998/207] about UNSCOM officers who, Iraq claimed, selectively publicized information obtained in the performance of their duties to make serious allegations about the Government of Iraq.

On 17 April [S/1998/334], Iraq accused UNSCOM personnel of violating their signed undertakings by making public statements and disseminating information on UNSCOM activities.

Suspension of disarmament activities and restrictions on monitoring rights

On 5 August [S/1998/718], Iraq's Deputy Prime Minister placed before the Security Council what he described as the essential facts confirming that Iraq had taken all measures and provided all information required by UNSCOM in fulfilment of its obligations under section C of Security Council resolution 687(1991). He claimed that the UNSCOM Executive Chairman had refused, at their 3 August high-level meeting, to so inform the Council, choosing instead to continue with UNSCOM's well-known method of deliberately prolonging the disarmament process—and thus the sanctions against Iraq—by raising marginal and often trivial issues for further verification, as distinct from the fundamental requirements, all of which Iraq had met. The Deputy Prime Minister drew attention to the "control" exercised by the United States and the United Kingdom over UNSCOM, as well as in the Council, where they had obstructed all measures designed to achieve justice and equity for Iraq. He stressed the fact that Iraq's cooperation in good faith with the Council, UNSCOM and IAEA and fulfilment of all its obligations had not led to the lifting of the sanctions, already in their eighth year.

In the circumstances, the Iraqi leadership announced, through a statement appended to the Deputy Prime Minister's letter, the total suspension of Iraq's cooperation with UNSCOM and IAEA, pending Council action on a series of steps outlined in the statement; in the interim, the monitoring activities required by Council resolution 715(1991) would continue, provided the inspectors observed, under penalty of expulsion, strict respect for Iraq's sovereignty and security.

The steps called for the Council to re-establish UNSCOM by creating a new executive bureau composed of an equal number of members representing each of the permanent Council members and chaired on a rotation basis, with Iraq participating as observer; restructure UNSCOM's administrative offices in New York, Bahrain and Baghdad according to the same principle; remove UNSCOM's headquarters to Geneva or Vienna, thereby insulating it from direct United States influence; observe its resolutions stipulating respect for Iraq's sovereignty and legitimate rights; abide by the United Nations Charter and the 23 February Memorandum of Understanding; and forcibly ban aerial surveillance over northern and southern Iraq by certain Council members.

On 12 August [S/1998/767], the Executive Chairman sought the Council's guidance as he described the implications of Iraq's 5 August decision for UNSCOM's disarmament activities. He said that the decision had forced their suspension throughout Iraq, including the political- and technical-level discussions, and a number of inspections planned in the missile, chemical and biological fields—all aimed at bringing to closure outstanding disarmament issues that had to be resolved if UNSCOM were to be able to report that Iraq was in compliance with its disarmament obligations.

Under the monitoring restrictions, UNSCOM was limited to monitoring only sites previously declared by Iraq or designated by UNSCOM, thus denying UNSCOM's right to inspect additional, non-declared sites where capabilities might exist for conducting activities that were proscribed or subject to monitoring. Consequently, UNSCOM could not continue to give the Council the same level of assurance as to Iraq's compliance with its obligation not to re-establish its proscribed weapons programmes. The Executive Chairman added that he fully shared IAEA's conclusions on the matter (see below, under "IAEA activities").

Iraq's Deputy Prime Minister, in identical letters of 13 August [S/1998/752] to the Secretary-General and the Council, asserted that UNSCOM and IAEA were being less than accurate in characterizing their monitoring activities as "limited", since the monitoring in which they could engage under the 5 August restrictions accounted for more than 94 per cent of all their customary activities.

The Council, on 18 August [S/1998/769], conveyed to UNSCOM the initial reaction of its members: they considered Iraq's announcement totally unacceptable and in contravention of the relevant Council resolutions and the 23 February Memorandum of Understanding. They regretted that the announcement came after a period of improved cooperation and achievement of some tangible results following the signing of the Memorandum. They reiterated their support for UNSCOM in the full implementation of its mandate and underscored Iraq's obligation under the relevant Council resolutions to cooperate with it. They emphasized the need for an early resumption of dialogue between UNSCOM and Iraq.

Iraq, on 20 August [S/1998/781], drew attention to a 17 August article in The New York Times, which it said was a statement of United States policy towards Iraq in the United Nations, quoting the United States Secretary of State as saying that, if Iraq could not be persuaded to back down from its 5 August decision, the foundation would have been laid for the United States to take its own decisive action. That blatant threat to use force against a Member State, Iraq said, confirmed that the United States would use the international machinery as a means to attain its own interests and would ride roughshod over it where it conflicted with those interests.

On 24 August [S/1998/797], Iraq drew attention to the "false assertions" made by the Executive Chairman to The New York Times on the previous day, in particular his suspicion that Iraq might be modifying its missiles to give them a range of more than 150 kilometres, which was prohibited by the Council. Iraq pointed out that it could not possibly engage in such activity under the rigorous and intrusive monitoring of its non-prohibited missile development programme. It hoped the Council would put a stop to such a tendentious approach to which the Executive Chairman repeatedly resorted, acknowledge that Iraq had fulfilled all its obligations under resolution 687(1991) and begin to implement paragraph 22 of that resolution.

Following the resignation of Inspector Scott Ritter from UNSCOM, Iraq asked the Council on 30 August [S/1998/820] to investigate the claims made in his resignation letter, which confirmed Iraq's long-held conviction that UNSCOM was under United States control. Iraq asked, as it had done on 5 August, that the Council correct the situation within UNSCOM so as to transform that body from an information service for a particular

State to the impartial international body that it should be.

Iraq, on 7 September [S/1998/837], labelled groundless and tendentious propaganda the Executive Chairman's claims that other undeclared sites in Iraq required inspection under the monitoring regime, contending that 496 sites were already being monitored in the missile, chemical, biological and nuclear areas and 70 more were under constant inspection by the export/import monitoring group. It called untrue the Executive Chairman's statement in his 3 September briefing to the Council that Iraq had restricted monitoring inspections only to previously declared sites. IAEA's 2 September statement claiming similar restrictions on its OMV plan was likewise untrue or inaccurate, for that plan was currently operating effectively and on a wide scale.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 9 September [meeting 3924], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1194(1998), based on a draft [S/1998/841] sponsored by Costa Rica, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 687(1991) of 3 April 1991, 707(1991) of 15 August 1991, 715(1991) of 11 October 1991, 1060(1996) of 12 June 1996, 1115(1997) of 21 June 1997 and 1154(1998) of 2 March 1998,

Noting the announcement by Iraq on 5 August 1998 that it had decided to suspend cooperation with the Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency on all disarmament activities and restrict ongoing monitoring and verification activities at declared sites, and/or actions implementing the above decision, Stressing that the necessary conditions do not exist for the modification of the measures referred to in section F of resolution 687(1991),

Recalling the letter dated 12 August 1998, from the Executive Chairman of the Special Commission to the President of the Security Council, in which the Executive Chairman reported to the Council that Iraq had halted all disarmament activities of the Special Commission and placed limitations on the rights of the Commission to conduct its monitoring operations,

Recalling also the letter dated 11 August 1998 from the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency to the President of the Security Council, in which the Director General reported the refusal by Iraq to cooperate in any activity involving investigation of its clandestine nuclear programme and other restrictions of access placed by Iraq on the ongoing monitoring and verification programme of the Agency,

Taking note of the letters dated 18 August 1998 from the President of the Security Council to the Executive Chairman of the Special Commission and the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency, in which the Council expressed its full support for those organizations in the implementation of the full range of their mandated activities, including inspections,

Recalling the memorandum of understanding signed by the Deputy Prime Minister of Iraq and the Secretary-General on 23 February 1998, in which Iraq reiterated its undertaking to cooperate fully with the Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency,

Noting that the announcement by Iraq of 5 August 1998 followed a period of increased cooperation and some tangible progress achieved since the signing of the memorandum of understanding,

Reiterating its intention to respond favourably to future progress made in the disarmament process, and reaffirming its commitment to comprehensive implementation of its resolutions, in particular resolution 687(1991),

Determined to ensure full compliance by Iraq with its obligations under all previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 687(1991), 707(1991), 715(1991), 1060(1996), 1115(1997) and 1154(1998), to permit immediate, unconditional and unrestricted access to the Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency to all sites they wish to inspect, and to provide the Special Commission and the Agency with all the cooperation necessary for them to fulfil their mandates under those resolutions,

Stressing the unacceptability of any attempts by Iraq to deny access to any sites or to refuse to provide the necessary cooperation,

Expressing its readiness to consider, in a comprehensive review, Iraq's compliance with its obligations under all relevant resolutions once Iraq has rescinded its above-mentioned decision and demonstrated that it is prepared to fulfil all its obligations, including, in particular on disarmament issues, by resuming full cooperation with the Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency consistent with the memorandum of understanding, as endorsed by the Council in resolution 1154(1998), and, to that end, welcoming the proposal of the Secretary-General for such a comprehensive review and inviting the Secretary-General to provide his views in that regard,

Reiterating the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of Kuwait and Iraq,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Condemns the decision by Iraq of 5 August 1998 to suspend cooperation with the Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency, which constitutes a totally unacceptable contravention of its obligations under resolutions 687(1991), 707(1991), 715(1991), 1060(1996), 1115(1997) and 1154(1998), and the memorandum of understanding signed by the Deputy Prime Minister of Iraq and the Secretary-General on 23 February 1998;

2. Demands that Iraq rescind its above-mentioned decision and cooperate fully with the Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency in accordance with its obligations under the relevant resolutions and the memorandum of understanding as well as resume dialogue with the Special Commission and the Agency immediately;

3. Decides not to conduct the review scheduled for October 1998 provided for in paragraphs 21 and 28 of resolution 687(1991), and not to conduct any further such reviews until Iraq rescinds its above-mentioned decision and the Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency report to the Council that they are satisfied that they have been able to exercise the full range of activities provided for in their mandates, including inspections;

4. Reaffirms its full support for the Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency in their efforts to ensure the implementation of their mandates under the relevant resolutions of the Council;

5. Also reaffirms its full support for the Secretary-General in his efforts to urge Iraq to rescind its above-mentioned decision;

6. Reaffirms its intention to act in accordance with the relevant provisions of resolution 687(1991) on the duration of the prohibitions referred to in that resolution, and notes that by its failure so far to comply with its relevant obligations, Iraq has delayed the moment when the Council can do so;

7. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Communications. On 30 September [S/1998/906], Iraq drew the Secretary-General's attention to statements made by Mr. Ritter, as published in the Israeli newspaper Ha'aretz and The Washington Post of the previous day, which confirmed that UNSCOM's object was not to monitor the implementation of the relevant Council resolutions but to spy on Iraq and to share the information and U-2 imagery it obtained with the intelligence services of the United States and Israel. On 16 October [S/1998/957], Iraq again cited examples of the practices of UNSCOM and IAEA inspection teams that served as a cover for intelligence-related activities on behalf of parties hostile to Iraq and, on 3 December [S/1998/1144], elaborated on UNSCOM's contacts with those parties.

Suspension of cooperation with UNSCOM and IAEA

On 31 October [S/1998/1023], UNSCOM's Deputy Executive Chairman, acting on instructions from the Executive Chairman, informed the Security Council of Iraq's decision of the same date to suspend, stop or cease all UNSCOM activities, including monitoring; its monitoring teams would not be asked to depart Iraq and its monitoring cameras and other equipment would remain in place and in operation, but visiting of those cameras would not be allowed; IAEA would be allowed to continue monitoring, provided those activities were independent of UNSCOM.

As requested at the Council's 31 October emergency session, the Executive Chairman presented on 2 November a technical report on the consequences of Iraq's decision [S/1998/1032]. He said the 5 August and 31 October decisions had brought all UNSCOM disarmament and monitoring activities to a complete halt. Routine and maintenance work were not prohibited, however, so that L-100 transport flights and maintenance of camera systems continued. Since IAEA was proceeding with its monitoring operations within the limitations imposed by the two decisions, UNSCOM would continue to provide the nuclear monitoring teams with logistical support when requested. The Executive Chairman pointed to the fact that the clear distinction that Iraq sought to draw between the monitoring activities of IAEA and UNSCOM would be difficult to establish, given the inherent link between their mandates. For the moment, he had decided to maintain the full scope of UNSCOM's personnel and capabilities in Iraq so that activities could be resumed without delay should the situation change.

The Executive Chairman added that in the circumstances UNSCOM was not in a position to provide the Council with any level of assurance regarding Iraq's compliance with its obligations.

In a 3 November letter [S/1998/1033], the IAEA Director General reported that, since Iraq's 31 October decision, the Agency had been able to continue its schedule of monitoring inspections. However, IAEA relied on UNSCOM for logistical services and facilities in Iraq and the effectiveness of its activities depended on UNSCOM's assistance.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 5 November [meeting 3939], the Security Council, following a debate on the foregoing communications on Iraq's 31 October decision, unanimously adopted resolution 1205(1998). The draft [S/1998/1038] was sponsored by Brazil, Costa Rica, France, Japan, Portugal, Slovenia, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions on the situation in Iraq, in particular resolutions 1154(1998) of 2 March 1998 and 1194(1998) of 9 September 1998,

Noting with alarm the decision of Iraq on 31 October 1998 to cease cooperation with the Special Commission, and its continued restrictions on the work of the International Atomic Energy Agency,

Taking note of the letters from the Deputy Executive Chairman of the Special Commission dated 31 October 1998 and the Executive Chairman of the Special Commission dated 2 November 1998 to the President of the Security Council, which reported to the Council the decision by Iraq and described the implications of that decision for the work of the Special Commission, and taking note also of the letter from the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency of 3 November 1998, in which the implications of the decision for the work of the Agency were described,

Determined to ensure immediate and full compliance by Iraq without conditions or restrictions with its obligations under resolution 687(1991) of 3 April 1991 and the other relevant resolutions,

Recalling that the effective operation of the Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency is essential for the implementation of resolution 687(1991),

Reaffirming its readiness to consider, in a comprehensive review, Iraq's compliance with its obligations under all relevant resolutions once Iraq has rescinded its above-mentioned decision and its decision of 6 August 1998 and demonstrated that it is prepared to fulfil all its obligations, including in particular on disarmament issues, by resuming full cooperation with the Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency consistent with the memorandum of understanding signed by the Deputy Prime Minister of Iraq and the Secretary-General on 23 February 1998, endorsed by the Council in resolution 1154(1998),

Reiterating the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of Kuwait and Iraq,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Condemns the decision by Iraq of 31 October 1998 to cease cooperation with the Special Commission as a flagrant violation of resolution 687(1991) and other relevant resolutions;

2. Demands that Iraq rescind immediately and unconditionally the decision of 31 October 1998, as well as the decision of 5 August 1998, to suspend cooperation with the Special Commission and to maintain restrictions on the work of the International Atomic Energy Agency, and that Iraq provide immediate, complete and unconditional cooperation with the Special Commission and the Agency;

3. Reaffirms its full support for the Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency in their efforts to ensure the implementation of their mandates under the relevant resolutions of the Council;

4. Expresses its full support for the Secretary-General in his efforts to seek full implementation of the memorandum of understanding of 23 February 1998;

5. Reaffirms its intention to act in accordance with the relevant provisions of resolution 687(1991) on the duration of the prohibitions referred to in that resolution, and notes that, by its failure so far to comply with its relevant obligations, Iraq has delayed the moment when the Council can do so;

6. Decides, in accordance with its primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security, to remain actively seized of the matter.

On 9 November [S/1998/1066], the European Union (EU) joined the Council in its condemnation of Iraq's decision and urged Iraq immediately to resume full cooperation with UNSCOM and IAEA.

Withdrawal from Iraq

The UNSCOM Executive Chairman informed the Security Council on 11 November [S/1998/1059] that all UNSCOM personnel had departed

Iraq earlier that day for Bahrain, where they were to remain pending a decision by Iraq that would enable their immediate return to Baghdad. His decision in that regard was prompted by concern for the safety of the staff and was executed speedily following consultations with the Council President, the IAEA Director General, the Permanent Mission of Chile to the United Nations (in view of the presence in UNSCOM of a significant Chilean Air Force contingent) and the Office of the Secretary-General.

The IAEA Director General transmitted notification of the relocation of Agency personnel to Bahrain on the same date [S/1998/1058].

Resumption of activities

Communications. The Secretary-General, on 14 November [S/1998/1077], transmitted to the Security Council his letter of the previous day to President Hussein, in which he reported that at a meeting that day all Council members expressed preference for a diplomatic solution of the crisis; he himself had made continuous efforts over the past three months to bring about such a solution. The Council unanimously endorsed his 11 November press statement appealing personally to President Hussein to rescind the decisions of 5 August and 31 October and resume immediate cooperation with UNSCOM and IAEA. He said the only way to lift the sanctions was for Iraq fully to cooperate with the Council, which had agreed to undertake a comprehensive review that would map out the steps remaining to complete the disarmament process.

Iraq, in a response to the Secretary-General of the same date [S/1998/1078], stated that its intention was neither to sever the relationship with UNSCOM and IAEA nor to halt implementation of its obligations under resolution 687(1991), but to end the suffering of its people caused by the sanctions. The Iraqi leadership said it had decided to resume working with UNSCOM and IAEA and to allow them to perform their duties according to the relevant Council resolutions and on the basis of the principles embodied in the 23 February Memorandum of Understanding. That opportunity was being made available, not out of fear of the threat of United States aggression, but out of a sense of responsibility and in response to the Secretary-General's appeal and to those of other friends.

Regarding the comprehensive review, Iraq's position was that it should be conducted without preconditions and completed within a very short period; it should focus on the five objectives outlined in the "possible concept for a comprehensive review" proposed by the Secretary-General on 5 October, and emphasize the question of evidence. The Council should be ready to implement paragraph 22 of resolution 687(1991) once the requirements of section C of that resolution had been established as fulfilled; it should set a limited time frame for the completion of any outstanding actions and, in the interim, lift or reduce the sanctions proportionately. The Council should undertake to abide by the legal interpretation of section C so as to preclude the imposition of additional conditions or restrictions on the implementation of paragraph 22.

The Iraqi leadership stressed, among other points, the importance of restructuring UNSCOM and dealing with the question of its Executive Chairman. It was imperative, it concluded, that the assurances requested by Iraq be communicated directly to the Iraqi leadership either by the Secretary-General or by a Council delegation.

Also on 14 November [S/1998/1079], Iraq reaffirmed that its stated views and preferences with regard to the comprehensive review were not linked to its decision to resume cooperation with UNSCOM and IAEA. That decision rendered void its previous decision to restrict or suspend cooperation with those two bodies and henceforth both would be able to continue all their activities in Iraq.

Following Council consultations on the foregoing Iraqi communications on 15 November, the Secretary-General announced in a press statement that a satisfactory diplomatic solution to the crisis appeared to have been achieved. However, Iraq had to move swiftly to ensure complete and unconditional compliance, which was the best way towards the lifting of sanctions and a better life for the people of Iraq.

In a press statement by the Council President issued the same day, members noted Iraq's decision to cooperate fully with UNSCOM and IAEA. They underlined that their confidence in Iraq's intentions needed to be established by unconditional and sustained cooperation with the two bodies. The Council members reaffirmed their readiness to proceed with a comprehensive review once the Secretary-General had confirmed, on the basis of UNSCOM and IAEA reports, that Iraq had returned to full cooperation.

UNSCOM-Iraq communications. On 20 November [S/1998/1106], the UNSCOM Executive Chairman informed the Security Council that, in the context of UNSCOM's resumption of work in Iraq on 17 November, he had written to Iraq on 17, 18 and 19 November requesting documents and explanations regarding the three weapons areas, designed to clear away as many outstanding issues as possible before the Council's comprehensive review and to provide Iraq with an opportunity to demonstrate the full cooperation required to enable that review to begin.

The Executive Chairman also offered UNSCOM's analyses and commentary on two Iraqi replies of 19 November, which were annexed to his communication, including their underlying contention that preparations for a comprehensive review of Iraq's compliance with its obligations had already begun. The main case in point was Iraq's apparent indication that it was not prepared to do any further disarmament work with UNSCOM in its biological weapons programme unless, as a result of the review, the Council required it to do so.

Iraq had pointed out that the Executive Chairman's approach ran counter to the prevailing trend in the Council's deliberations and the positions resulting therefrom, which had been to begin with a comprehensive review shortly after UNSCOM resumed its activities in Iraq. That trend, Iraq explained, implied that UNSCOM would submit reports on what had been achieved in disarming Iraq of its missiles and chemical and biological weapons from April 1991, when UNSCOM began its inspections, until the 3 August high-level meeting. It would be for the Council to adjudicate on the outstanding issues that had to be followed up.

Iraq, on 22 [S/1998/1108] and 25 November [S/1998/1125], transmitted detailed comments regarding the requests for new substantial information to rectify the technical and other inconsistencies in Iraq's current biological FFCD and access to archives; and the Executive Chairman's 19 November letter specifying six outstanding requests for clarifications, explanations, identifications and descriptions of matters relating to Iraq's proscribed missile and chemical weapons programmes.

On 29 November [S/1998/1128], Iraq transmitted copies of an exchange of letters between 26 and 29 November whereby UNSCOM agreed to Iraq's requests for the dispatch to Iraq of inspection teams to assist in investigating the disposition of the mustard-filled 155-mm shells declared lost; to verify Iraq's declaration on the accounting for R-400 aerial bombs, including their tail sections; and to locate the pits used to store special warheads at Fallujah Forest and the Tigris canal, which UNSCOM intended to assign to the BMVC missile monitoring group resident in Baghdad. UNSCOM specified the timing and information needed for the missions. Iraq said the missions requested, although not substantively related to disarmament tasks, could provide clarifications to issues to be addressed through UNSCOM-Iraq joint work.

On 30 November [S/1998/11271, the Executive Chairman furnished the Council with a copy of his 27 November letter to the Deputy Prime Minister requesting that the Air Force document on the consumption of special munitions, sealed by UNSCOM on 18 July, be handed over to the Acting Director of BMVC for translation and examination, as well as the documents concerning the creation and armament of Missile Unit 223.

In keeping with the terms of the review, Iraq, on 14 December [S/1998/1173], transmitted to the Secretary-General and the Council its own detailed account of the activities undertaken by UNSCOM and IAEA from 18 November to 13 December, together with its comments. Those activities included monitoring; inspections in the nuclear, missile, chemical and biological weapons areas; inspections of alleged Iraqi concealment activities; and air surveillance. Annexed to the report were tabulated lists of the sites inspected, the inspection teams sent to Iraq and the air surveillance conducted.

Reports of IAEA and UNSCOM. The reports called for by the Council President's 15 November press statement were transmitted to the Council by the Secretary-General on 15 December [S/1998/1172 & Corr.1]. IAEA stated that Iraq provided the necessary level of cooperation to enable the Agency's activities to be completed efficiently and effectively. The UNSCOM report, on the other hand, pointed out that, from the inception of UNSCOM's work in Iraq in 1991, Iraq's disclosure statements were never complete; contrary to the requirement that destruction of prohibited capabilities be conducted under international supervision, Iraq undertook extensive, unilateral, secret destruction; and it pursued a practice of concealment of proscribed items, including weapons. UNSCOM was thus obliged to undertake forensic work that was never intended. Despite years of work, it had not been possible to verify Iraq's declarations on the nature and magnitude of its proscribed weapons programmes and their current disposition. Its current claims—that it had fulfilled all of its disarmament obligations in each weapons area, that it had ceased concealment policies and actions, and that it possessed neither proscribed weapons nor the ability to make them—could not be accepted without further verification. Of invaluable help to UNSCOM to close remaining gaps and achieve acceptable confidence in Iraq's declarations would be the provision of documents available in Iraq recording relevant details of its proscribed programmes and actions.

The report stated that UNSCOM resumed its work on 17 November 1998 focusing mainly on requests for access to information through documents and interviews of Iraqi personnel; monitoring inspections; inspection of capable sites; and disarmament inspections relating to proscribed weapons and activities.

UNSCOM had requested a selection of 12 particular sets of documents in the chemical and missile areas and access to the relevant archives of Iraq's Ministry of Defence, Military Industrialization Corporation and other government departments. In response, Iraq provided only 64 pages related to Missile Unit 223, which did not appear to contain the information sought. It refused to return the Air Force document on its consumption of munitions in the 1980s, stating it was ready to "consider" with UNSCOM experts only relevant portions and in the presence of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General. Iraq stated that the remainder of the requested documents either did not exist, could not be found or were not relevant to UNSCOM's activities.

Iraq did not respond to the request for access to archives, nor did it deny their existence, but stated that previous inspections of the government institutions did not yield any relevant archives. Access to specific documents requested by a biological inspection team, among them one already seen by UNSCOM in 1995, was not granted. In the chemical weapons area, Iraq provided, as requested, a report on its own analysis of the samples from the excavated special missile warhead fragments. Despite the fact that three international expert teams had found that all analytical results confirming the presence of VX degradation products in the excavated warhead fragments were valid and conclusive, Iraq claimed for the first time that the VX contamination was the result of deliberate tampering with the samples taken to the United States for analysis. In the missile area, Iraq provided some clarifications sought; on other requests, it reiterated its known positions. It refused to allow the removal of missile engine components as not justified on "technical or scientific grounds". No new information or documents relating to Iraq's biological weapons activities were presented. Representatives of the National Monitoring Directorate repeatedly prevented a biological team from questioning doctoral- and masters-degree students at sites where declarable research had taken place.

The majority of the inspections of facilities and sites under the OMV system were carried out with Iraq's cooperation. However, problems had arisen indicating that the limitations imposed on the system on 5 August had not been fully rescinded.

During the reporting period, inspection teams conducted no-notice inspections at a number of undeclared sites where dual-use capabilities might exist. Access was provided and inspections took place, with the exception of a facility occupied by the People's Mujahedin Organization of Iran and thus declared as not under Iraq's authority. As a result of its dialogue with UNSCOM, that organization accepted in principle that its sites were subject to access by UNSCOM.

Disarmament inspections were conducted at six sites; all but the fifth site were declared sensitive. Iraq offered no objections or conditions on access at the first two (Taji military facility and a Special Security Organization cable office), but access at the third site, declared to be a Ba'ath Party headquarters, was not achieved as Iraq introduced new requirements, including a formal letter of request indicating what was being sought. While arrangements were agreed for the inspection of the fourth site, said to be the former headquarters of the Special Security Organization, the inspection team observed that the building had been emptied of relevant materials, the whereabouts of which Iraq would not disclose. The fifth site appeared to be a private residence, as confirmed by a brief walk through it. Access was granted to the sixth site, the management offices of the Military Industrialization Corporation; the inspection team assessed that Iraq had expected its arrival and prepared the site so as to avoid disclosure of relevant materials. Because of the clear evidence that Iraq had taken advance actions at certain of the locations to defeat the purposes of inspection, the Executive Chairman decided not to conduct the full range of planned inspections. No inspection of presidential sites took place.

To date, Iraq had not enacted legislation necessary to implement its obligations under section C of Council resolution 687(1991), resolution 707(1991) and the OMV plans. It would have been an indication of Iraq's full cooperation, sought on this issue since 1991, had it taken the required action during the period under review.

The UNSCOM report concluded that not only did Iraq not provide the full cooperation it promised on 14 November, it also initiated new restrictions on UNSCOM's work, ensuring that no progress could be made in disarmament or in accounting for its prohibited weapons programmes. In the absence of full Iraqi cooperation, it had to be recorded again that UNSCOM was not able to conduct the substantive disarmament work mandated by the Council and thus to give it the required assurances regarding Iraq's prohibited weapons programmes.

The Secretary-General, in his covering letter submitting the foregoing reports to the Council, suggested three possible options: the experience over the period since 17 November did not provide a sufficient basis to move forward with a comprehensive review at that time; Iraq did not provide full cooperation but should be permitted additional time to demonstrate its commitment to do so; and the Council might wish to proceed with a comprehensive review on the premise that it was sufficiently important to know precisely what had been achieved in the area of disarmament since 1991.

Second withdrawal from Iraq

On 16 December, the Executive Chairman confirmed to the Security Council President that, following their conversation of the previous evening, he had removed all UNSCOM personnel from Iraq to Bahrain and a small contingent to Amman, Jordan, where they would remain pending further instructions. The Executive Chairman also transmitted his decision to the Secretary-General, who expressed his understanding of the underlying considerations: to ensure the safety and security of the UNSCOM personnel and the need to act immediately.

Military action against Iraq

On 16 December [S/1998/1181], the United States informed the Security Council that coalition forces had begun substantial military operations against military targets in Iraq, namely, its weapons-of-mass-destruction programmes and its ability to threaten its neighbours. Every effort was being made to avoid civilian casualties and collateral damage. The United States explained that the action was a necessary and proportionate response to Iraq's continued refusal to comply with Council resolutions and the threat to international peace and security represented by its policy of unrelenting defiance and non-compliance, that only when it became evident that diplomacy had been exhausted was military force resorted to, and that Iraq bore full responsibility for the consequences of the operation. The United States further stated that the coalition looked to the highest level of the Iraqi leadership for an immediate demonstration of unconditional compliance with the terms of the Council resolutions and warned that any Iraqi attempt to attack coalition forces or to initiate aggressive action against a neighbouring State would be met with a swift response.

On the same date [S/1998/1182], the United Kingdom informed the Council that its armed forces, in association with those of the United States, took military action in Iraq, which was continuing, in order to degrade capabilities that had been the subject of Council resolutions since 1991. It said both countries acted on the basis of relevant Council resolutions when it became apparent that there was no prospect of achieving Iraqi compliance by peaceful means. The United Kingdom said targets had been carefully chosen to avoid civilian casualties.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION

On the evening of 16 December, the Security Council met to discuss the reports of IAEA and UNSCOM on their activities since resuming work in Iraq on 17 November, as well as Iraq's own record of those activities.

The Council also discussed the ongoing aerial attacks and missile strikes against Iraq by the United States and the United Kingdom, with those two members explaining the basis for their action. Further consultations on the subject were held on 17, 18 and 21 December, and the President issued a press release indicating that the Council was continuing, and was determined to continue, its discussions on the latest developments in Iraq and on methods of implementing Council resolutions, in accordance with the responsibility conferred upon it by the Charter to maintain international peace and security. During continued deliberations on 22, 23 and 29 December, the Council was briefed by the Secretariat on the effects of the military strikes on the humanitarian programme for Iraq.

Communications. Belarus [A/53/760-S/1998/1188], Kazakhstan [S/1998/1201], Mexico [A/53/759-S/1998/1185], the Russian Federation [S/1998/1186], the Sudan [S/1998/1196] and Yemen [S/1998/1190], as well as the Islamic Group at the United Nations [S/1998/1228] and the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries [A/53/762], issued statements on 17, 18 and 20 December calling for an immediate halt to the aerial bombing and missile strikes against Iraq and for a peaceful solution to the Iraq problem. The statements expressed regret and concern at the turn of events; firm opposition to and condemnation of the military action, which went far beyond the scope of the Council resolutions concerning Iraq, undermined the entire system of international security, and escalated tension in the region; and the conviction that the possibilities for a political and diplomatic solution were far from exhausted.

In a 20 December statement [S/1998/1206], Russian Federation President Boris Yeltsin, commenting on the declaration by the United States and the United Kingdom of a halt to what it called their senseless, illegal military action, said that apart from its negative political consequences, not to mention the loss of civilian lives and the additional damage inflicted on an Iraqi economy already crippled by sanctions, the use of force had only complicated the task of solving the Iraq problem.

Iraq [S/1999/28, S/1999/59] reported details of what it called the savage attack between 17 and 20 December, which targeted civilian areas, industrial installations, infrastructure, hospitals, health facilities, schools, universities, heritage sites and grain depots, leaving hundreds of civilian casualties and large-scale property damage, as well as continued air raids up to 22 December. Iraq also reported that the United States and the United Kingdom were continuing their aggression, firing six missiles at a village in Muthana governorate on 30 December.

IAEA activities

IAEA continued in 1998 to implement and strengthen its technical activities under its OMV plan for Iraq. It also continued verification inspections to clarify questions and uncertainties relevant to Iraq's clandestine nuclear programme. The BMVC-based Nuclear Monitoring Group, in coordination with UNSCOM, was charged with monitoring, while the Action Team, based at IAEA headquarters in Vienna, was responsible for the verification process with the assistance of experts from member States. IAEA employed essentially the same inspection techniques in both endeavours.

Although Iraq's suspension of cooperation with IAEA and UNSCOM on 5 August allowed IAEA to continue its monitoring activities, the restrictions under which it was allowed to do so resulted in a significant reduction in the level of assurance that could be provided under the OMV plan. As a result of Iraq's 31 October decision to stop all UNSCOM activities and to restrict further IAEA's monitoring activities, IAEA, along with UNSCOM, temporarily relocated all of its inspectors to Bahrain. Following Iraq's 14 November rescission of its 5 August and 31 October decisions, both bodies resumed their activities on 17 November. In view of the second (16 December) withdrawal from Iraq of UNSCOM—on whose logistical services and facilities IAEA depended—IAEA also departed Iraq on the same date for Bahrain, pending further instructions from the Council.

IAEA reports. Details of IAEA activities in Iraq were recorded in two consolidated six-month reports: the first [S/1998/312] covered the period 1 October 1997 to 1 April 1998; the second [S/1998/927] covered the period 1 April to 1 October 1998. At the request of the Council, IAEA issued additional brief reports on its activities on 3 November [S/1998/1033] and 14 December [S/1998/1172 & Corr.1].

Technical meetings and high-level talks

As a follow-up to the December 1997 technical meetings [YUN 1997, p. 225] devoted to the five specific areas of concern regarding Iraq's clandestine nuclear programme [ibid., p. 224], IAEA held further technical meetings in Baghdad from 22 to 25 March 1998. Iraq reported that it was unsuccessful in locating the requested Iraqi nuclear team reports that were required to be submitted to the head of Iraq's clandestine nuclear programme (PC-3). At IAEA's request, Iraq submitted on 1 April 1998 the entire document related to Iraq's January 1991 decision fixing the overall dimensions of the spherical wave explosive lenses for its missile delivery vehicle. Iraq also provided further information to facilitate the identification of foreign nationals involved in its clandestine nuclear programme, enabling IAEA formally to approach the Government of one of them to address the implications for wider proliferation.

Also discussed was IAEA's recent interview with one of the foreign nationals who had contributed to Iraq's centrifuge enrichment programme [YUN 1997, p. 225], which revealed that the assistance consisted of 18 carbon fibre composite cylinders for centrifuge rotors, which differed considerably from the 50 cylinders that Iraq attributed to the individual concerned. However, Iraq's explanation was credible and supported its earlier statements that all 50 were supplied by the same foreign source.

The leader of the IAEA Iraq Action Team met with Iraq's Deputy Prime Minister to explain that IAEA's interest in the so-called "high governmental committee" and the actions attributed to the late Lieutenant-General Kamel [YUN 1995, p. 483] centred on its attempt to locate documentary evidence supporting Iraq's declaration that it had abandoned its clandestine nuclear programme. IAEA pursued the matter in a written request to the Deputy Prime Minister to determine whether any record of a government-level decision to that effect existed.

Other technical meetings were held in Baghdad from 14 to 19 February and from 26 March to 4 April specifically to establish the technical achievements of Iraq's clandestine nuclear programme (see below).

Verification of nuclear weapons programme disclosure

On 25 March, Iraq submitted to IAEA a computer disk containing its FFCD on its clandestine nuclear weapons programme, along with annexes and addenda, consolidating the 1996 revised version [YUN 1996, p. 222] and later revisions and additions resulting from subsequent technical discussions between IAEA and Iraq. The consolidation brought together into one document information provided by Iraq and examined by IAEA in February, May and July 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 223]. IAEA noted that Iraq had thus satisfactorily completed its undertaking to produce a consolidated version of its nuclear FFCD.

As previously agreed, Iraq produced the first version of a document summarizing the technical achievements of its clandestine nuclear programme, which IAEA received on 5 February 1998. Found to require considerable revisions and additions, the document was subjected to detailed technical reviews in February and March/April. As a result, Iraq produced a third and final version containing a summary, which IAEA regarded to be consistent with the technically coherent picture of Iraq's clandestine nuclear programme, developed in the course of IAEA's verification activities in Iraq.

In its presidential statement of 14 May [S/PRST/1998/11] (see above), the Security Council noted from IAEA's April report [S/1998/312] that its investigations had yielded a technically coherent picture of Iraq's clandestine nuclear programme, although Iraq had not supplied full responses to all of IAEA's questions and concerns. Given that progress, the Council affirmed its intention to agree that IAEA dedicate its resources to implementing its OMV plan approved by resolution 715(1991) on receipt of a report from the Director General that the necessary clarifications had been made and responses to all IAEA questions and concerns had been received. The Council asked the Director General to provide that information in his October report and to submit a status report by the end of July.

Accordingly, IAEA reported in October [S/1998/927] that its verification activities revealed no indication that Iraq had achieved its objective of producing nuclear weapons or that it had produced more than a few grams of weapons-usable nuclear material or had clandestinely acquired such material. Nor were there indications of any remaining Iraqi capability to produce weapons-usable nuclear material of any practical significance, or significant discrepancies between the technically coherent picture that had evolved of Iraq's clandestine nuclear weapons programme and the information contained in Iraq's FFCD. There was, however, some uncertainty in the completeness of that picture owing to the inevitable limitations of any country-wide verification process. IAEA pointed out that greater transparency by Iraq would clarify the few remaining questions and concerns, specifically if it provided documentary evidence of actual technical achievements in nuclear weapons design and centrifuge development; identified and located the foreign national allegedly involved in an offer of assistance to Iraq's clandestine nuclear programme; and provided concrete evidence of the timing and modalities of its abandonment of that programme.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 53/21 of 2 November, the General Assembly welcomed IAEA's October report and called on Iraq immediately to resume dialogue with IAEA and to cooperate fully in accordance with the relevant Security Council resolutions and with the Memorandum of Understanding. The Assembly stressed that greater transparency by Iraq would contribute greatly to the resolution of the few remaining questions and concerns regarding its clandestine nuclear weapons programme.

Ongoing monitoring and verification

During the two IAEA reporting periods, the Nuclear Monitoring Group carried out 454 monitoring inspections at some 230 locations: 55 inspections were of locations not previously inspected. That brought to almost 1,540 the total number of inspections conducted since the Group's establishment in August 1994. The majority were no-notice inspections and a number were conducted in cooperation with UNSCOM monitoring groups. In addition, the joint IAEA UNSCOM multidisciplinary teams continued their inspection of capable sites. As of October, the inspections of such sites numbered some 85. No indication of prohibited materials, equipment or activities was detected by the two categories of inspections.

Iraq submitted in January and July semi-annual declarations on its current use of certain facilities, installations and sites, including those formerly involved in its clandestine nuclear programme, and on changes to the inventory and location of materials, equipment and isotopes identified in annexes 3 and 4 of the IAEA OMV plan. Based on the evaluation of those declarations, the repeatedly requested implementation by Iraq of quality assurance measures to deal with generic problems regarding accuracy, completeness and internal consistency, such as assigning additional technical personnel to the task, remained outstanding.

Iraq's National Monitoring Directorate submitted for approval 50 requests for the release or relocation of equipment and materials or for a change in the use of monitored buildings. Of those requests, processed in consultation with UNSCOM, 42 were approved, 6 were awaiting additional information and 2 were declined.

Review continued of Iraq's declarations of nuclear material transactions and inventories for the period 1 January 1989 to 31 December 1991, to clarify further nuclear material flows and inventories at the principal locations where nuclear material was used or stored during that period. Revisions to the data appeared to take into account many of the requested clarifications, but some inconsistencies remained to be resolved.

In its routine interviews of key Iraqi personnel, IAEA continued to encounter difficulties in locating some of them due to their stated transfer from government jobs to the private sector. Joint IAEA/Iraqi measures were under way to maintain a register of the workplaces of such personnel.

Although the eleventh radiometric survey of Iraq's main watercourses (14-28 April) revealed no indication of prohibited nuclear activities, it confirmed the technology's sensitivity by detecting Iraq's permitted use of radioisotopes in medical applications.

The third helicopter gamma survey campaigns of former nuclear-related installations (20 May-12 June) included overflights of sites known to have been involved in Iraq's clandestine nuclear programme, as well as test flights to verify the technical performance of the sensor system in various configurations. For the first time, near-real-time analysis capabilities were available, permitting the investigation and resolution of anomalies detected from the air through follow-up inspections on the ground.

IAEA continued to update and expand the technological components of OMV activities and procedures. Efforts were under way to consolidate a number of technical measures into a wide-area environmental monitoring programme, for which Iraq was providing the necessary practical and technical support, particularly for the installation and operation of air-sampling equipment.

The October report [S/1998/927] emphasized that OMV in Iraq, as required by the relevant Council resolutions, had to be comprehensive and intrusive to be effective. Its implementation was critically dependent on the full exercise of IAEA's rights of full and free access enshrined in the plan. In that connection, the report noted that, on 24 September, the Nuclear Monitoring Group was denied access to the Al Iraqi factory—a facility originally announced to IAEA in 1995 and inspected on eight previous occasions, but for which Iraq had not been asked to provide routine semi-annual declarations.

Export/import mechanism

The export/import monitoring mechanism for Iraq, jointly administered by IAEA and UNSCOM, had, since October 1996, received notifications of some 190 transactions involving the intended export to Iraq of items identified in the annexes to the respective OMV plans. Seven transactions involved items identified in annex 3 to the IAEA OMV plan and were under technical review.

National implementation measures

Iraq stated at the March technical meeting that the OMV plan's requirement that Iraq adopt measures to implement its obligations under the relevant Council resolutions and enact penal laws to enforce those measures were under active consideration. Although the Deputy Prime Minister informed the IAEA Iraq Action Team leader in July that Iraq planned to satisfy those requirements before October, notification of action to that effect had not been received by the reporting date.

Entry to presidential sites

As recorded in the April report [S/1998/312], the IAEA Action Team participated as technical adviser in the Secretary-General's February delegation to Iraq that discussed a mechanism through which to secure access for IAEA and UNSCOM to the eight locations designated by Iraq as presidential sites and therefore closed to inspections (see above). The Special Group of senior diplomats and UNSCOM and IAEA experts that resulted from the 23 February Memorandum of Understanding signed by the Secretary-General and the Deputy Prime Minister of Iraq (see above) visited all of the presidential sites from 26 March to 3 April for the purpose of establishing baseline data to facilitate future entry into those sites. With practical cooperation from Iraq, the 15 IAEA experts were able to complete their mandated tasks. They found no immediate indications of prohibited activities within those sites.

Limitation of activities

On 5 August, Iraq suspended cooperation with UNSCOM and IAEA (see above under "Limitations on UNSCOM"). However, IAEA obtained information through the National Monitoring Directorate that Iraq would continue to facilitate OMV inspections at sites for which it routinely provided declarations under the OMV plan and allow IAEA access to locations for the purpose of collecting environmental samples or carrying out radiometric surveys. It would not, however, permit access to capable sites, nor would it cooperate in any activity involving investigation of its clandestine nuclear programme.

IAEA confirmed to the Security Council on 11 August [S/1998/766] that it was carrying out a limited implementation of its OMV plan, as imposed by Iraq, and was awaiting instructions from the Council on how to proceed. It said those restrictions had resulted in the discontinuation of the joint IAEA/UNSCOM programme of inspection of capable sites. Consequently, IAEA's limited activities fell far short of full implementation of the OMV plan, resulting in a significantly reduced level of assurance than would be provided through the plan's full implementation.

The Council conveyed to IAEA on 18 August [S/1998/768] the initial reaction of its members: they considered that Iraq's announcement was totally unacceptable and contravened the relevant Council resolutions and the 23 February Memorandum of Understanding. They regretted that the announcement came after a period of improved cooperation and achievement of some tangible results following the signing of the Memorandum. They reiterated their full support for IAEA in the full implementation of its mandate and underscored Iraq's obligation under the relevant Council resolutions to provide IAEA with the cooperation necessary for it to undertake its activities, including inspections. They emphasized the need for an early resumption of dialogue between IAEA and Iraq.

Meanwhile, Iraq informed the Secretary-General and the Council on 13 August [S/1998/752] that the range of monitoring activities both bodies could engage in under Iraq's 5 August decision accounted for more than 94 per cent of all their customary activities; and that, between 6 and 12 August, besides 49 site visits made by IAEA and UNSCOM monitoring groups, IAEA's Nuclear Monitoring Group carried out a gamma-ray survey of 11 large areas. Thus, both bodies were being less than accurate in characterizing their current monitoring activities as limited.

On 31 October, when Iraq suspended all UNSCOM activities, it allowed IAEA to continue its monitoring activities provided they were independent of UNSCOM.

IAEA, responding to the Council's request for a briefing on Iraq's 31 October decision, reported on 3 November [S/1998/1033] that it was able to continue its schedule of monitoring inspections, with its monitoring group doing up to two monitoring inspections and two land-based radiation surveys a day. It had also planned a campaign of wide-area environmental sample collection. While IAEA was able to carry out the technical aspects of its monitoring inspections independently, the eficiency and effectiveness of its OMV activities were dependent on the continuing availability of UNSCOM logistical services and facilities in Iraq.

IAEA concluded that its inability to exercise its right to full and free access under its OMV plan had resulted in a significant reduction in the level of assurance that could be provided by that plan.

Withdrawal from Iraq and resumption of activities

On 11 November [S/1998/1058], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council a letter of the same date from the IAEA Director General indicating his decision temporarily to relocate to Bahrain all IAEA inspectors currently in Baghdad out of concern for their safety in view of the escalating situation in Iraq. He had taken that decision following consultations with the Secretary-General and in parallel with that of UNSCOM, on whose logistic support the IAEA inspectors were dependent.

On 14 November [S/1998/1078], Iraq transmitted its decision to resume cooperation with UNSCOM and IAEA, thus permitting resumption of all activities in conformity with the relevant Council resolutions. Accordingly, IAEA personnel returned to Iraq on 17 November.

Report of IAEA (December). In accordance with the report called for by the Council President's 30 October letter regarding Iraq's commitment to unconditional and sustained cooperation with IAEA and UNSCOM (see above), IAEA reported on 14 December [S/1998/1172 & Corr.1] that, since resuming work in Iraq on 17 November, its Nuclear Monitoring Group had carried out the following activities: 28 inspections of previously inspected sites; 11 inspections at new sites as part of the joint UNSCOM/IAEA ongoing programme of inspections at capable sites; 113 visits to locations to collect environmental monitoring samples; 15 road-vehicle-based radiation surveys; 3 interviews of personnel known to be former key employees with Iraq's clandestine nuclear programme; 2 site visits, each of several days' duration, to maintain and update IAEA video surveillance systems; and 1 site visit to install and commission a meteorological data collection station for the IAEA wide-area environmental monitoring programme. In addition, an IAEA team visited Iraq from 9 to 13 December to discuss the status of the few remaining questions and concerns related to Iraq's clandestine nuclear programme. Iraq expressed its intention to continue to cooperate in their resolution.

The report stated that Iraq provided the necessary level of cooperation to enable those activities to be completed efficiently and effectively.

The Secretary-General's 15 December letter to the Security Council [S/1998/1172 & Corr.1] transmitting IAEA's report, along with that of UNSCOM, noted IAEA's statement on Iraqi cooperation since 17 November but stated that UNSCOM did not enjoy full Iraqi cooperation.

For a second time, on 16 December [S/1998/1175], IAEA informed the Council through the Secretary-General that it had temporarily relocated all IAEA personnel in Baghdad to Bahrain out of concern for their safety and security. It took that action after UNSCOM, on whose logistic support IAEA depended, decided to withdraw its personnel from Iraq.

Arms and related sanctions

The Security Council, in informal consultations on 27 April and 20 August 1998, conducted reviews of the provisions of the sanctions against Iraq pursuant to paragraph 21 of resolution 687(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 172], in accordance with resolution 1134(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 213]. On 25 June, it conducted another review of paragraph 20 of resolution 687(1991). No modification of the sanctions regime resulted from those reviews.

By resolution 1194(1998) of 9 September, the Council decided not to conduct the review scheduled for October or any further such reviews until Iraq rescinded its 5 August decision suspending cooperation with UNSCOM and IAEA. In view of Iraq's 31 October decision to cease cooperation with UNSCOM, the Council, by resolution 1205(1998), reaffirmed its intention to act in accordance with the relevant provisions of resolution 687(1991) on the duration of the prohibitions referred to in that resolution. It noted that, by its failure to comply with its obligations, Iraq had delayed the moment when the Council could do so.

Communications. Following the Security Council's 27 April review, the Revolution Command Council of Iraq and the Iraqi Regional Command of the Arab Socialist Ba'ath Party, in joint meetings held on 1 May and 30 July, issued an open letter [S/1998/368] and a statement [S/1998/703] calling on the Council to carry out its responsibilities by lifting the sanctions on Iraq since Iraq had fulfilled all of its obligations under section C of resolution 687(1991). The same call was made in a resolution adopted by the Council of Arab Economic Unity, which Iraq transmitted on 17 June [S/1998/550]. On 24 September [A/53/425], Iraq presented a study on the repercussions of the unjust embargo imposed on the Iraqi people in the economic, health, environmental, agricultural and cultural sectors.

Travel restrictions on Iraqi officials

During the Security Council review of 27 April, the status was raised of the report called for in Council resolution 1137(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 216], regarding the fact that travel restrictions imposed on Iraqi officials were to terminate one day after the UNSCOM Executive Chairman reported to the Council that Iraq was allowing UNSCOM inspection teams access to areas, facilities, equipment, records and means of transportation, as well as to officials and other persons whom UNSCOM wished to interview.

Accordingly, the Executive Chairman reported to the Council on 6 May [S/1998/377] that, since the signing of the 23 February Memorandum of Understanding, Iraq had granted the required access, including to sites designated as "sensitive" and "presidential" and to various equipment UNSCOM wished to inspect. However, it had not provided access to records previously requested. The issue of access to means of transportation and to officials for interview purposes did not arise during the period. Under those circumstances, the Executive Chairman was of the view that, for the present, the requirements of paragraph 6 of resolution 1134(1997) were sufficiently implemented to allow for the termination of the provisions in paragraphs 4 and 5.

Sanctions Committee activities

In its annual report, adopted on 31 December [S/1998/1239], the Security Council Committee established by resolution 661(1990) [YUN 1990, p. 192] (Sanctions Committee for Iraq) provided details of its major activities between August 1997 and July 1998 relating to: the implementation of Council resolution 986(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 475], authorizing the humanitarian programme for the Iraqi people; humanitarian exemptions to the sanctions regime established under resolutions 661(1990) and 687(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 172] regarding dispatch of humanitarian goods to Iraq and requests for humanitarian flights to and from that country for medical, diplomatic and religious purposes; and payment requests from Iraqi frozen assets and financial claims against Iraq.

The report noted that, besides monitoring the implementation of the sanctions regime, the Committee, in coordination with the Secretary-General and the Office of the Iraq Programme established in October 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 241], continued to refine and clarify its procedures for expediting the processing and approval of applications to supply humanitarian goods to Iraq. (See also below, under "Oil-for-food programme".)

During the reporting period (August 1997-July 1998), the Committee received from States and international organizations 9,958 notifica-

tions/applications to send humanitarian goods to Iraq as exemptions under resolutions 661(1990) and 687(1991). It acknowledged receipt of all 96 foodstuff notifications and took note of 74 voluntary notifications for medical supplies, with a combined value estimated at $180 million. Under its no-objection procedure, the Committee processed all remaining 9,788 applications for the supply of other categories of goods to Iraq, of which 3,849 (estimated at $6.5 billion) were approved; 2,849 ($4.8 billion) were placed on hold pending further information clarification; and 3,090 ($5.2 billion) were blocked.

The Committee authorized all 27 requests from 17 Member States for the air shipment to Iraq of medicines, foodstuffs and other humanitarian donations. Inspections of the carriers upon their arrival in Iraq, conducted by designated UN personnel at the Committee's request, revealed two cases of discrepancies between shipments and the manifests, which the Committee Chairman took up with the States concerned. The Committee responded to a number of requests for proposed flights to take foreign officials to Iraq on diplomatic missions and granted approvals for three medical evacuation flights. Iraq informed the Committee that the proposal by the World Health Organization (WHO) for an overall arrangement for medical evacuation flights for Iraqi nationals, which was under consideration, was not an adequate solution to the problem; consequently, the Committee decided to continue to address medical evacuation requests on a case-by-case basis. It reiterated that it was unable to grant Jordan's request for a blanket authorization of weekly humanitarian flights between Amman and Baghdad.

As to flight requests for religious pilgrimages, the Committee approved in principle a January request from Jordan to fly Iraqi pilgrims to Saudi Arabia, subject to the receipt of information on the number of flights, financing arrangements and other specific elements, which Jordan subsequently provided. As to the Hajj, the Council, by resolution 1153(1998), directed the Committee to authorize, on the basis of specific requests, reasonable expenses related to the Hajj, to be met by funds in the escrow account established under resolution 986(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 475].

The Committee met four times in March to consider Iraq's request for the transfer of $44 million from the escrow account to the Central Bank of Iraq office to cover expenses of Iraqi pilgrims during the 1998 Hajj but reached no consensus on the request. Discussions on an alternative arrangement presented to Iraq, involving a voucher system with accountability procedures, were not concluded, as Iraq indicated that the travelling time for the Hajj was coming to an end. Therefore, no Hajj flight took place.

The Committee denied a request from Thailand for the release of Iraqi frozen funds held by the Bank of International Settlement (BIS) to pay for a rice shipment to Iraq, in view of the clear prohibition against such a release by paragraph 11 of resolution 778(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 320]. The Committee sought clarification from Switzerland regarding transfers of Iraqi frozen funds held by BIS reportedly made to several countries to settle Iraqi debts to foreign commercial companies. It notified Denmark that its request to pay Iraq for services previously rendered was in principle feasible but that payment would have to be deposited in a blocked account outside Iraq.

The Committee also considered projects proposed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and IAEA to address specific humanitarian problems in Iraq; approved in principle pest control activities of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) in accordance with previously established procedures; and ruled on requests from Turkey, Morocco and Germany for the import from Iraq of, respectively, petroleum and petroleum products, 1.5 million tons a year of sulphur and Iraqi dinars on behalf of a German national, as well as on issues related to diplomatic immunity. Requests for a passenger shipping service with Iraq, the sharing of research material, participation in trade fairs in Iraq and trans-shipment through that country were also considered.

In November 1997, the multinational interception force drew to the Committee's attention that smuggling of gas oil from Iraq inside Iranian territorial waters had dramatically increased. A response from the Iranian authorities was being awaited.

During 1998, the Committee issued four reports on the implementation of the arms and related sanctions against Iraq, in accordance with the guidelines [YUN 1991, p. 198] approved by Council resolution 700(1991) [ibid.] for facilitating full international implementation of resolution 687(1991). The reports were transmitted to the Council on 9 February [S/1998/108], 11 May [S/1998/387], 7 August [S/1998/729] and 10 November [S/1998/1055].

Each report indicated that, during the period under review, no State had brought to the Committee's attention any information relating to possible violations of the arms and related sanctions against Iraq committed by other States or foreign nationals; that no State or international organization had consulted the Committee on the question of whether certain items fell within the provisions of paragraph 24 of resolution 687(1991) or on cases relating to dual-use or multiple-use items; and that no international organization had reported any relevant information requested under the guidelines.

Humanitarian impact of sanctions

The Secretary-General, on 29 February [S/1998/147], drew attention to a statement on the humanitarian impact of sanctions issued by the Inter-Agency Standing Committee. According to that statement, the Council and other sanctions authorities would benefit from comprehensive information and objective analysis of the potential humanitarian impact of sanctions when deciding to impose sanctions, as well as from information on the evolution of humanitarian requirements under a sanctions regime. The Standing Committee was ready to support the Emergency Relief Coordinator in making such information and analysis available to the Council. It reaffirmed the view that sanctions should not impede the work of humanitarian organizations in the targeted countries and suggested that a regular review be undertaken of exemptions to the sanctions and of exemption procedures in order to make necessary adjustments.

The Secretary-General stated his belief that the statement would contribute to the Council's deliberations.

Oil-for-food programme

In accordance with Security Council resolutions 1143(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 245] and 1153(1998) (see below), each extending for a 180-day period the provisions of resolution 986(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 475], which authorized States to import Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products as a temporary measure to finance a humanitarian programme to alleviate the adverse consequence of the sanctions regime on the Iraqi people (also known as the oil-for-food programme) [YUN 1996, p. 225], the Secretary-General and the Sanctions Committee for Iraq each submitted a report 90 days after entry into force of each resolution and again before the end of the next 90 days. The 180-day periods under the first and second resolutions were extended, respectively, from 5 December 1997 to 28 May 1998 (phase III) and from 30 May to 25 November 1998 (phase IV).

The reports described progress in implementing the arrangements specified by the resolutions, taking account of the provisions of the 1996 Memorandum of Understanding between the UN Secretariat and the Government of Iraq [YUN 1996, p. 226] and the procedures established by the Sanctions Committee [ibid., p. 228] for the resolutions' implementation. They also described the distribution of humanitarian relief, on behalf of the Government of Iraq, in the three northern governorates of Arbil, Dihouk and Suleimaniyeh under the United Nations Inter-Agency Humanitarian Programme, to complement government distribution in central and southern Iraq and ensure equitable distribution to all segments of the Iraqi population.

Programme review

Sanctions Committee report (January). The Sanctions Committee reported on 30 January [S/1998/92] on efforts to refine its working procedures to accelerate the approval of applications for exports of humanitarian supplies to Iraq. It decided that the Secretariat should continue to organize orientation sessions for, and distribute information kits to, interested States and international organizations, and to circulate weekly reports to Committee members on the status of applications, as well as comments on delivery dates of time-sensitive supplies, a clear statement of which should be included in every application.

The Committee formulated a series of procedures, by which the Secretariat, while continuing to process applications on a first-come, first-served basis, could prioritize applications based on current needs as identified in the distribution plan, on the interrelated aspects of applications and on expected delivery dates, to be established by the Committee in coordination with the Office of the Iraq Programme. The procedures also covered incomplete or inconsistent applications, the length of time required to process applications, amendments to applications, project grouping, declarations declaring applications null and void, the blocking or placing on hold of applications, application review and validity of approval letters.

Report of Secretary-General (February). The Secretary-General, in his 1 February report [S/1998/90], recommended, on the basis of a January review by the Office of the Iraq Programme, ways to expand the humanitarian programme for Iraq and improve its implementation. He noted that the review was carried out without formal inputs from the Government of Iraq.

Starting with Iraq's distribution plan, the Secretary-General recommended that its content be improved by providing for, inter alia, an indication of priorities, interrelated items within a project or activity, required delivery dates, preferred points of entry and targeted objectives. There should be a single, ongoing distribution plan, to be reviewed and amended as necessary, to avoid the time-consuming preparations experienced with the plans for phases I to III.

The Office of the Iraq Programme would be enhanced with appropriate staff and a technical advisory team. It was directed, effective immediately, to process within two business days all applications; provide the Sanctions Committee information on priorities, interrelated and time-sensitive applications, delivery dates, potential dual-use items and spare parts and any other information and assure the Committee, through the UN observers in Iraq, that approved items were being utilized as authorized; organize briefings on Sanctions Committee rules and procedures and points of understandings; regularly brief the Committee on implementation difficulties; serve as focal point for coordinating all activities related to the programme; establish an integrated information system to provide timely, authoritative information on the progress of each application; submit for the Committee's consideration an improved format for reports and a reporting schedule; enhance the capacity of the independent inspection agents charged with authenticating and providing quality control of commodity flows; regularly disseminate to all concerned information on the progress of the programme's implementation and its impact on the humanitarian situation in Iraq; expedite reimbursements to the 53 per cent account (the account for humanitarian purchases for the 15 governorates of central and southern Iraq) from the 13 per cent account (the account for the three northern governorates) for bulk food and medicine purchases made by the Iraqi Government on behalf of those governorates; and work closely with the UN Controller to identify resources to complete activities expected to extend beyond the programme itself.

The Secretary-General directed the UN Treasurer to address difficulties under current banking arrangements, to facilitate which Iraq was urged to assign to New York a senior representative of the Central Bank of Iraq. UN agencies and programmes were to submit applications for the procurement of goods only after working out contract details with suppliers so as to avoid delays.

The Secretary-General suggested that the Sanctions Committee consider: using required delivery dates for prioritizing applications; identifying items likely to be subject to "hold" or requiring further information and end-use verification; approving applications in advance of the availability of funds on condition that letters of approval were released only after sufficient funds were available in the UN Iraq Account; issuing, within 24 hours, written explanations as to why items were on hold to enable the applicants concerned to fulfil any additional requirements; ex-exercising flexibility when responding to unforeseen events, such as epidemics or natural disasters; and delegating approval authority to the Secretariat for such items as food and routine medicine and health supplies.

Regarding the remaining unmet humanitarian requirements identified by the review, the Secretary-General proposed as priority the structural rehabilitation of the electricity sector and encouraged Iraq to present a programme of immediate and longer-term priority needs to the Security Council for funding, based on a joint evaluation with UN experts. He directed UNDP urgently to conduct a survey of the sector in the three northern governorates and outline a strategy with costs for presentation to the Council.

Other recommendations addressed the serious malnutrition in children and called for support to community childcare units and nutritional rehabilitation and primary health centres, for expanding the community childcare system, as well as supplementary food for chronically malnourished children under five years old, pregnant women and lactating mothers, internally displaced persons, returnees and hospital in-patients.

The Secretary-General pointed to the inadequacy of the level of funding authorized under resolution 986(1995)—$2 billion from the sale of Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products, of which $1.32 billion was for the purchase of humanitarian goods. Should the Council approve an expanded programme, resources, in addition to the $1.32 billion currently provided for, would amount to $2,115,570,590, of which $1,017,556,990 and $1,098,013,600 would be allocated, respectively, to recurrent and non-recurrent expenditures, bringing the cost of the humanitarian programme to $3,435,570,590. To provide for that amount and for the application of paragraph 8 of resolution 986(1991) (including the sum of $1,561,932,086 for the Compensation Fund) the production of oil worth $5,206,440,288 would be required.

Communications. Iraq, on 5 February [S/1998/104], among a number of objections to the Secretary-General's report, rejected the idea of a single, ongoing distribution plan. It asserted that any addition to the purchase and distribution plan under phase III was its responsibility and would not endorse any plan for the distribution of increased revenue prepared by any other party. Iraq stressed that it alone was responsible for identifying its needs in the electricity sector and for the purchase thereof, as well as those of the three northern governorates. It moreover rejected the deductions, as provided by paragraph 8 of resolution 986(1995), from the additional revenues recommended, since the resolution's goal was to meet the basic needs of the Iraqi people, not to provide additional sums for compensation or for administrative or other purposes.

On 15 February [S/1998/125], Iraq reiterated that it would not comply with provisions of the humanitarian programme that fell outside the framework of Council resolution 986(1995) and the 1996 Memorandum. As to generating supplementary resources to finance an expanded programme, Iraq stated that its operational capacity was such that it could export a maximum of only $4 billion worth of petroleum; a higher target was not feasible.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 February [meeting 3855], the Security Council, having considered the foregoing reports and communications from Iraq, unanimously adopted resolution 1153(1998). The draft [S/1998/136] was prepared during prior consultations.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 986(1995) of 14 April 1995, 1111(1997) of 4 June 1997, 1129(1997) of 12 September 1997 and 1143(1997) of 4 December 1997,

Convinced of the need as a temporary measure to continue to provide for the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi people until the fulfilment by Iraq of the relevant resolutions, including notably resolution 687(1991) of 3 April 1991, allows the Council to take further action with regard to the prohibitions referred to in resolution 661 (1990) of 6 August 1990, in accordance with the provisions of those resolutions, and emphasizing the temporary nature of the distribution plan envisaged by the present resolution,

Convinced also of the need for equitable distribution of humanitarian supplies to all segments of the Iraqi population throughout the country,

Welcoming the report submitted by the Secretary-General on 1 February 1998 in accordance with paragraph 7 of resolution 1143(1997) and his recommendations, as well as the report submitted on 30 January 1998 by the Committee established by resolution 661(1990), in accordance with paragraph 9 of resolution 1143(1997),

Noting that the Government of Iraq did not cooperate fully in the preparation of the report of the Secretary-General,

Noting with concern that, despite the ongoing implementation of resolutions 986(1995), 1111(1997) and 1143(1997), the population of Iraq continues to face a very serious nutritional and health situation,

Determined to avoid any further deterioration of the current humanitarian situation,

Reaffirming the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Iraq,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that the provisions of resolution 986(1995), except those contained in paragraphs 4, 11 and 12, shall remain in force for a new period of 180 days beginning at 0001 hours eastern standard time, on the day after the President of the Security Council has informed the members of the Council that he has received the report of the Secretary-General requested in paragraph 5 below, on which date the provisions of resolution 1143(1997), if still in force, shall terminate, except as regards sums already produced pursuant to that resolution prior to that date;

2. Decides also that the authorization given to States by paragraph 1 of resolution 986(1995) shall permit the import of petroleum and petroleum products originating in Iraq, including financial and other essential transactions directly relating thereto, sufficient to produce, in the 180-day period referred to in paragraph 1 above, a sum not exceeding a total of 5.256 billion United States dollars, of which the amounts recommended by the Secretary-General for the food/nutrition and health sectors should be allocated on a priority basis, and of which between 682 million United States dollars and 788 million United States dollars shall be used for the purpose referred to in paragraph 8 (b) of resolution 986(1995), except that if less than 5.256 billion United States dollars worth of petroleum or petroleum products is sold during the 180-day period, particular attention will be paid to meeting the urgent humanitarian needs in the food/nutrition and health sectors and the Secretary-General may provide a proportionately smaller amount for the purpose referred to in paragraph 8 (b) of resolution 986(1995);

3. Directs the Committee established by resolution 661 (1990) to authorize, on the basis of specific requests, reasonable expenses related to the Hajj, to be met by funds in the escrow account;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to take the actions necessary to ensure the effective and efficient implementation of the present resolution and, in particular, to enhance the United Nations observation process in Iraq in such a way as to provide the required assurance to the Council of the equitable distribution of the goods produced in accordance with the present resolution and that all supplies authorized for procurement, including dual-use items and spare parts, are utilized for the purpose for which they have been authorized;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council when he has entered into any necessary arrangements or agreements and approved a distribution plan, submitted by the Government of Iraq, which includes a description of the goods to be purchased and effectively guarantees their equitable distribution, in accordance with his recommendations that the plan should be ongoing and should reflect the relative priorities of humanitarian supplies as well as their inter-relationships within the context of projects or activities, required delivery dates, preferred points of entry and targeted objectives to be achieved;

6. Urges all States and, in particular, the Government of Iraq, to provide their full cooperation in the effective implementation of the present resolution;

7. Appeals to all States to cooperate in the timely submission of applications and the expeditious issue of export licences, facilitating the transit of humanitarian supplies authorized by the Committee established by resolution 661(1990), and taking all other appropriate measures within their competence in order to ensure that urgently required humanitarian supplies reach the Iraqi people as rapidly as possible;

8. Stresses the need to ensure respect for the security and safety of all persons directly involved in the implementation of the present resolution in Iraq;

9. Decides to conduct an interim review of the implementation of the present resolution 90 days after the entry into force of paragraph 1 above and a thorough review of all aspects of its implementation prior to the end of the 180-day period, upon receipt of the reports referred to in paragraphs 10 and 14 below, and expresses its intention, prior to the end of the 180-day period, to consider favourably the renewal of the provisions of the present resolution as appropriate, provided that the reports referred to in paragraphs 10 and 14 below indicate that those provisions are being satisfactorily implemented;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit an interim report to the Council 90 days after the entry into force of paragraph 1 above, and to submit a full report prior to the end of the 180-day period, on the basis of observations by United Nations personnel in Iraq, and on the basis of consultations with the Government of Iraq, on whether Iraq has ensured the equitable distribution of medicine, health supplies, foodstuffs and materials and supplies for essential civilian needs, financed in accordance with paragraph 8 (a) of resolution 986(1995), including in his reports any observations he may have on the adequacy of the revenues to meet Iraq's humanitarian needs and on Iraq's capacity to export sufficient quantities of petroleum and petroleum products to produce the sum referred to in paragraph 2 above;

11. Takes note of the observation by the Secretary-General that the situation in the electricity sector is extremely grave, and notes his intention to return to the Council with proposals for appropriate funding, requests him to submit urgently to the Council a report for this purpose prepared in consultation with the Government of Iraq, and further requests him to submit to the Council other studies, drawing upon United Nations agencies as appropriate and in consultation with the Government of Iraq, on essential humanitarian needs in Iraq, including necessary improvements to infrastructure;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to establish a group of experts to determine, in consultation with the Government of Iraq, whether Iraq is able to export petroleum or petroleum products sufficient to produce the total sum referred to in paragraph 2 above and to prepare an independent report on Iraqi production and transportation capacity and necessary monitoring, also requests him, in the light of that report, to make early and appropriate recommendations, and expresses its readiness to take a decision, on the basis of those recommendations and the humanitarian objectives of the present resolution, notwithstanding paragraph 3 of resolution 661(1990), regarding authorization of the export of the necessary equipment to enable Iraq to increase the export of petroleum or petroleum products and to give the appropriate directions to the Committee established by resolution 661(1990);

13. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council, if Iraq is unable to export petroleum or petroleum products sufficient to produce the total sum referred to in paragraph 2 above and, following consultations with relevant United Nations agencies and the Iraqi authorities, making recommendations for the expenditure of the sum expected to be available, consistent with the distribution plan referred to in paragraph 5 above;

14. Requests the Committee established by resolution 661(1990), in coordination with the Secretary-General, to report to the Council 90 days after the entry into force of paragraph 1 above, and again prior to the end of the 180-day period, on the implementation of the arrangements in paragraphs 1, 2, 6, 8, 9 and 10 of resolution 986(1995);

15. Also requests the Committee established by resolution 661(1990) to implement the measures and take action on the steps referred to in its report of 30 January 1998, with regard to the refining and clarifying of its working procedures, to consider the relevant observations and recommendations referred to in the report of the Secretary-General of 1 February 1998, in particular with a view to reducing to the extent possible the delay between the export of petroleum and petroleum products from Iraq and the supply of goods to Iraq in accordance with the present resolution, to report to the Council by 31 March 1998 and thereafter to continue to review its procedures whenever necessary;

16. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Sanctions Committee report (April). Responding to the foregoing resolution, the Sanctions Committee reported on 17 April [S/1998/336] that, in coordination with the Office of the Iraq Programme and the UN Treasurer, it had implemented in full most of the updated working procedures presented in its 30 January report. Further efforts were needed with respect to the prioritization of applications, and ways were being explored with Iraq regarding considering applications on a project basis, as were different options for the prompt issuance and signature of approval letters.

As to other action taken, the Committee had adopted guidelines and points of understanding on simplified procedures for approving applications for foodstuffs; on 30 March, the Office of the Iraq Programme began to make available electronically the status reports on applications to all Committee members, as well as to other States on request; the UN Treasurer continued to pursue practical options for streamlining the issuance of letters of credit by the Banque Nationale de Paris; and the Secretariat was finalizing recommendations to speed up reimbursement of the 53 per cent account from the 13 per cent account.

As to the measures proposed by the Secretary-General for its consideration, the Committee remarked that most were similar to the already refined working procedures it presented to the Council. It was, however, looking into the practicality of reviewing the annexes to Iraq's distribution plan beforehand to determine items likely to be placed on hold or to require further information or end-use verification.

Communication from Secretary-General. On 30 May [S/1998/449], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Council an exchange of letters of the same date constituting an agreement between the Secretariat and the Government of Iraq to extend the provisions of the 1996 Memorandum of Understanding for an additional 180-day period, effective 30 May 1998, in the light of Council resolution 1153(1998).

Export of oil-production equipment

Report of group of experts (April). As requested by Security Council resolution 1153(1998), the Secretary-General formed a six-member group of experts to determine, in consultation with Iraq, whether that country was capable of exporting petroleum sufficient to produce a sum not exceeding $5.256 billion. The group, which visited Iraq from 12 to 22 March, stated that the oil industry was in a lamentable state. Productivity of the developed oilfields was seriously reduced, some irreparably; oil processing and treatment facilities, refineries and storage terminals were severely damaged and continued to deteriorate. Because of the age and precarious physical condition of the main fields, the experts doubted that the production profile of 3 million barrels per day, as projected by Iraq, would be sustainable. A sharp increase in production without concurrent expenditure on spare parts and equipment would severely damage oil-containing rocks and pipeline systems. The transportation system and intermediary storage within Iraq needed repairs at critical points, significantly the degradation of the 40-inch pipeline, major losses in pumping capability and reduced intermediary storage capacity in the north, with identical problems in the south. Another constraint was the need for proper coordination of loading schedules at the offshore terminal at Mina Al-Bakr and support of reliable tugboats and mooring boats. Bringing the pipeline infrastructure and intermediary storage to the loading facilities in Ceyhan, Turkey, and Mina Al-Bakr up to standard could obviate the need to utilize other existing pipelines to increase export volumes.

In his 15 April letter [S/1998/330 & Corr.1] transmitting the group's report, the Secretary-General stated that the group was less optimistic than Iraq regarding its capacity to meet the $4 billion target in the period envisaged. The group estimated that, should the current average price of $10.50 a barrel for Iraqi crude oil remain unchanged, based on the existing export capacity of 1.6 million barrels a day, revenues amounting to only $3 billion could be achieved during a 180-day period, starting in June 1998, provided the spare parts required were ordered immediately. During a 180-day period starting in December, Iraq could export 1.7 million barrels a day, generating $3.9 billion based on $12.50 a barrel.

The group felt that Iraq's request for $300 million for spare parts was reasonable. The list of spare parts annexed to the report reflected only the most essential and urgent needs of Iraq's oil industry.

The Secretary-General recommended to the Council that the authorization given to States in resolution 986(1995) should permit the import of Iraqi petroleum sufficient to produce, in the next 180-day period, a sum of up to $4 billion to be utilized in accordance with the priorities set out in the approved distribution plan prepared pursuant to paragraph 5 of the same resolution. The Council could also authorize the export to Iraq of the spare parts and equipment necessary to enable it urgently to increase the volume of its oil exports to generate the estimated $300 million needed for the purchase of such equipment once the list of spare parts and equipment provided by Iraq was reviewed by the expert group and finalized by the Sanctions Committee.

The Secretary-General informed the Council that Iraq's Foreign Minister visited New York from 9 to 13 March to review with the Secretariat the implementation of resolution 1153(1998) and the preparation of the distribution plan.

Communication. On 18 June [S/1998/531], Iraq said that to change the humanitarian programme from a temporary measure, pending the lifting of the sanctions, into a permanent arrangement was unacceptable, stressing that it had fulfilled its obligations under section C of Council resolution 687(1998), making it incumbent on the Council to implement paragraph 22 (on the lifting of the sanctions) of that resolution. It therefore strenuously urged that phase IV be the final phase of the programme.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 June [meeting 3893], the Security Council considered the expert group's report and the approved distribution plan of Iraq for the next 180-day extension of the humanitarian programme [S/1998/446], beginning on 30 May (see below, under "Phase IV"). Based on a draft [S/1998/537] sponsored by Costa Rica, Japan, Portugal, Slovenia, Sweden and the United Kingdom, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1175(1998).

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 986(1995) of 14 April 1995, 1111(1997) of 4 June 1997, 1129(1997) of 12 September 1997, 1143(1997) of 4 December 1997, 1153(1998) of 20 February 1998 and 1158(1998) of 25 March 1998,

Welcoming the letter of the Secretary-General of 15 April 1998, to which was annexed the summary of the report of the group of experts established pursuant to paragraph 12 of resolution 1153(1998), and noting the assessment that under existing circumstances Iraq is unable to export petroleum or petroleum products sufficient to produce the total sum of 5.256 billion United States dollars referred to in resolution 1153(1998),

Welcoming also the letter from the Secretary-General of 29 May 1998 expressing his approval of the distribution plan submitted by the Government of Iraq,

Convinced of the need to continue the programme authorized by resolution 1153(1998) as a temporary measure to provide for the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi people until fulfilment by the Government of Iraq of the relevant resolutions, including notably resolution 687(1991) of 3 April 1991, allows the Council to take further action with regard to the prohibitions referred to in resolution 661(1990) of 6 August 1990 in accordance with the provisions of those resolutions,

Reaffirming its endorsement, in paragraph 5 of resolution 1153(1998), of the recommendations made by the Secretary-General in his report of 1 February 1998 concerning an improved, ongoing and project-based distribution plan,

Reaffirming also the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Iraq,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Authorizes States, subject to the provisions of paragraph 2 below, to permit, notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph 3 (c) of resolution 661 (1990), the export to Iraq of the necessary parts and equipment to enable Iraq to increase the export of petroleum and petroleum products, in quantities sufficient to produce the sum established in paragraph 2 of resolution 1153(1998);

2. Requests the Committee established by resolution 661 (1990), or a panel of experts appointed by that Committee for this purpose, to approve contracts for the parts and equipment referred to in paragraph 1 above according to lists of parts and equipment approved by that Committee for each individual project;

3. Decides that the funds in the escrow account produced pursuant to resolution 1153(1998) up to a total of 300 million United States dollars may be used to meet any reasonable expenses, other than expenses payable in Iraq, which follow directly from contracts approved in accordance with paragraph 2 above;

4. Decides also that the expenses directly related to such exports may, until the necessary funds are paid into the escrow account, and following approval of each contract, be financed by letters of credit drawn against future oil sales, the proceeds of which are to be deposited in the escrow account;

5. Notes that the distribution plan approved by the Secretary-General on 29 May 1998, or any new distribution plan agreed on by the Government of Iraq and the Secretary-General, will remain in effect, as required, for each subsequent periodic renewal of the temporary humanitarian arrangements for Iraq and that, for this purpose, the plan will be kept under constant review and amended as necessary through the agreement of the Secretary-General and the Government of Iraq and in a manner consistent with resolution 1153(1998);

6. Expresses its gratitude to the Secretary-General for making available to the Committee established by resolution 661(1990) a comprehensive review, with comments by the group of experts established pursuant to paragraph 12 of resolution 1153(1998), of the list of parts and equipment presented by the Government of Iraq, and requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with the intention expressed in his letter dated 15 April 1998, to provide for the monitoring of the parts and equipment inside Iraq;

7. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Phase III

On 5 January [S/1998/4], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Council the Iraqi Government's plan for the purchase and distribution of humanitarian supplies during the additional 180-day period specified in Security Council resolution 1143(1997), together with a letter to the Government conveying his acceptance of the plan. The Secretary-General approved the distribution plan on the understanding that its implementation would be governed by resolutions 986(1995) and 1143(1997) and the 1996 Memorandum of Understanding, without prejudice to the procedures followed by the Sanctions Committee. The approval was without prejudice to any recommendations that might be contained in a supplementary report referred to in paragraph 6 of resolution 1143(1997), which the Secretary-General intended to submit to the Council.

Reports of Secretary-General (March and June). As called for by resolution 1143(1997), the Secretary-General issued two reports under phase III of the oil-for-food programme on progress in the implementation of all aspects of the programme, including the United Nations Inter-Agency Humanitarian Programme in the three northern governorates. The first report, issued on 4 March [S/1998/194 & Corr.1], covered the period up to 15 February; the second, issued on 5 June [S/1998/477], covered the period up to 15 May. The reports updated the status of the sale of petroleum and petroleum products, the UN Iraq Account, the purchase and confirmation of the arrival of humanitarian supplies at the designated entry points, and their arrival at warehouses and distribution to beneficiaries or end-users.

The June report noted that during phase III there was a marked increase in the speed of approvals, deliveries and authentication at the borders. Annex I to that report gave the status of phase III applications; based on dollar amounts, the approval rate by the Sanctions Committee translated into approximately 95 per cent of the total applications submitted to it. The annex also gave the status of applications for phases I and II.

By 15 May, of the $2 billion authorized under resolution 1143(1997), $1,298.2 million for phase III had been deposited into the UN Iraq Account, bringing total oil revenues since the programme's inception to $5,572.6 million. The cumulative amounts allocated from that sum to the seven different accounts specified in paragraph 8 of resolution 986(1995) included $2,772.2 million for purchases of humanitarian supplies by Iraq for the 15 central and southern governorates and $679.5 million for similar purchases for distribution in the three northern governorates by the United Nations Inter-Agency Humanitarian Programme.

The reports described the activities of the UN observers charged with monitoring the delivery and distribution of all sectoral goods, and furnished data on the type and number of visits and spot checks conducted in all governorates, as well as the number of locations and end-users covered during the two reporting periods.

In addition to providing comprehensive data on commodities and supplies received and quantities distributed, the reports drew attention to conditions affecting distribution to illustrate the programme's success in meeting the criteria of efficiency, equitability and adequacy. Among the factors cited as limiting success in all sectors were: delays in contract approvals; the late, erratic and uncoordinated arrival of supplies and equipment, which affected the entire distribution chain; inadequate loading equipment, transport facilities and the absence of a functioning cold chain where required; poor communication and feedback between main warehouses and recipient facilities; inefficient warehouse management; lack of funds and qualified technicians where equipment installation was called for; and steadily deteriorating infrastructure, especially in the electricity sector. Observers confirmed that available in-country stocks were distributed equitably, although stock shortages due to late deliveries made for inadequate rations. The reports stated that the quantities of supplies received for the health sector remained inadequate, whether measured against the intentions of Iraq's distribution plan or against the essential or total health needs under that sector.

The Secretary-General noted the substantial progress in the expeditious processing and approval of applications and said further improvements to the whole approval process were under consideration by the Sanctions Committee and the Office of the Iraq Programme pursuant to his directives and recommendations. He welcomed the Committee's decision to approve applications in advance of the availability of funds in the UN Iraq Account, on the understanding that letters of approval would be released by the Secretariat only after confirmation that sufficient funds were available. He also noted that, owing to the shorter processing and approval time under phase III and improved contractual arrangements between Iraq and its suppliers, the range and volume of humanitarian supplies reaching Iraq had generally increased.

The Secretary-General expressed concern that the March 1998 survey conducted by Iraq's Ministry of Health, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the World Food Programme (WFP) found no measurable difference in the nutritional status of infants under five since the April 1997 survey, but welcomed the reported marked improvement in the availability of drugs in the three northern governorates, ending drug rationing there, as well as the increased frequency of arrivals of medicines and medical supplies in the 15 central and southern governorates.

Sanctions Committee reports (March and June). The Sanctions Committee reports for the first and second 90-day periods of phase III were issued on 3 March [S/1998/187] and 4 June [S/1998/469], respectively. They stated that the export of petroleum from Iraq proceeded well, with excellent cooperation among the oil overseers, the independent inspection agents (contracted for with Saybolt Nederland BV), Iraq's State Marketing Organization (SOMO) and the national oil purchasers.

According to the June report, the anticipated $400 million shortfall in the first 90-day revenue objective of $1.07 billion (including the pipeline fee), due to the delayed resumption in petroleum sales and a serious drop in oil prices, was met by Council resolution 1158(1998), which authorized States to import Iraqi petroleum sufficient to produce a sum not to exceed $1.4 billion within the second 90-day period beginning on 5 March. That brought the total revenue for phase III to about $2.14 billion at current prices.

The oil overseers approved 52 purchase contracts, corresponding to some 184.1 million barrels of oil; SOMO cancelled one contract for lack of supporting documents. A total of 150 liftings comprising 167.7 million barrels estimated at $1,945 million were completed; 16 liftings remained to be completed. The overseers and independent inspection agents worked closely to ensure the effective monitoring of oil installations and liftings, with full Iraqi cooperation.

The Secretariat received 578 applications for the export of humanitarian goods to Iraq under phase III, of which 11 were cancelled, 529 were circulated to the Committee for action and 38 were still being processed. Of the applications circulated, 17 were placed on hold; 44 were pending under the "no-objection" procedure; and 468 (corresponding to approximately $1.04 billion) were eligible for payment from the UN Iraq Account, with approval letters already released for 151, while the remaining 317 were awaiting availability of funds. Since revenues for purchases under phases I and II were exhausted by 9 March, at Iraq's request all pending medical applications under those phases were transferred to phase III, while contracts for non-health-sector supplies were returned to their respective applicants for resubmission under phase III or subsequent phases. The Committee delegated to the Secretariat authority to determine whether applications for foodstuffs were in order for submission to the Committee.

Confirmation of the arrival of goods by the UN independent inspection agents (contracted for with Lloyd's Register Inspection Limited) at the four entry points—Al-Walid, Trebil, Zakho and Umm Qasr—proceeded with full Iraqi cooperation. By the end of May, the arrival of 1,095 consignments of humanitarian supplies in total or partial shipments had been confirmed. In that connection, supplies approved under phases I and II continued to reach Iraq during the first reporting period; phase III had been running in parallel with those two phases since 2 February.

On 18 May, having been informed by the Office of the Iraq Programme that arrangements were in place for monitoring shipments of spare parts and equipment to Iraq for the repair and maintenance of the Kirkuk-Yumurtalik pipeline, the Committee approved applications for such shipments worth $24 million from Germany, Turkey and the United Kingdom.

Communications. On 23 July [S/1998/689], Iraq, following the visit to Iraq of Benon V. Sevan, Executive Director of the Office of the Iraq Programme, from 22 June to 3 July, said that, contrary to the Secretary-General's references in his periodic reports to the excellent performance of UN agencies in implementing the part of the distribution plan relating to the three northern governorates under the concluded phases I and II, the information provided in the table included in its letter to the Secretary-General and the Council revealed the agencies' poor performance. It called for consultations with those agencies to reach agreement on modalities for achieving the required level of implementation.

On 31 July [S/1998/705] and 18 [S/1998/771] and 20 August [S/1998/782], Iraq drew attention to obstructions by the United Kingdom and the United States to the approval of contract applications for foodstuffs, medicines, equipment for the electricity sector, and especially for urgently needed oil-production spare parts and equipment, and sought the Secretary-General's intervention to induce them to desist from such actions.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

Having considered the Secretary-General's 4 March report [S/1998/194 & Corr.1], the Security Council, on 25 March [meeting 3865], unanimously adopted resolution 1158(1998) based on a draft [S/1998/267] sponsored by Portugal.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 986(1995) of 14 April 1995, 1111(1997) of 4 June 1997, 1129(1997) of 12 September 1997, 1143(1997) of 4 December 1997 and 1153(1998) of 20 February 1998,

Welcoming the report submitted by the Secretary-General on 4 March 1998 in accordance with paragraph 4 of resolution 1143(1997) and noting with appreciation, as mentioned in the report, the commitment expressed by the Iraqi Government to cooperate with the Secretary-General in the implementation of resolution 1153(1998),

Concerned about the resulting humanitarian consequences for the Iraqi people of the shortfall in the revenue from the sale of petroleum and petroleum products during the first 90-day period of implementation of resolution 1143(1997), due to the delayed resumption in the sale of petroleum by Iraq and a serious price drop since the adoption of resolution 1143(1997),

Determined to avoid any further deterioration of the current humanitarian situation,

Reaffirming the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Iraq,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that the provisions of resolution 1143(1997) shall remain in force, subject to the provisions of resolution 1153(1998), except that States are authorized to permit the import of petroleum and petroleum products originating in Iraq, including financial and other essential transactions directly relating thereto, sufficient to produce a sum not exceeding a total of 1.4 billion United States dollars within the period of 90 days from 0001 eastern standard time on 5 March 1998;

2. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Phase IV

Iraq's enhanced plan for the purchase and distribution of humanitarian supplies during the new 180-day extension (phase IV) of the humanitarian programme, authorized by Security Council resolution 1153(1998) and approved by the Secretary-General on 29 May [S/1998/446], became operational on 30 May.

Reports of Secretary-General (September and November). The Secretary-General issued his first and second 90-day progress reports under phase IV on 1 September [S/1998/823], covering the period up to 31 July, and on 19 November [S/1998/1100], covering the period up to 31 October. Annexed to the reports were up-to-date information on the status of the UN Iraq Account, with details of the allocation of funds and expenditures of the different accounts.

The November report indicated that, as at 31 October, of the $5.256 billion authorized under resolution 1153(1998) for the 180-day period starting on 30 May (phase IV), $2,039.5 million had been deposited in the UN Iraq Account, bringing the total oil proceeds deposited since the programme's inception to $8,399.2 million. Of that sum, $4,194.5 million had been allocated for Government purchases of humanitarian supplies. The Banque Nationale de Paris issued letters of credit on behalf of the United Nations amounting to $4,357.9 million under phases I-IV, including $163.4 million due to be reimbursed for Government bulk purchases for northern Iraq. The sum of $1,028.2 million was allocated for the purchase of humanitarian goods for distribution in the northern governorates by the United Nations Inter-Agency Humanitarian Programme; expenditures recorded for goods approved by the Sanctions Committee amounted to $656 million.

The Office of the Iraq Programme was establishing a comprehensive integrated information system to provide authoritative information on the progress of applications, from contracting through distribution, and of the programme's implementation as a whole. The number of UN independent inspection agents was increased from 42 to 54 to ensure expeditious inspection and authentication of commodity arrivals and to perform speedy quality tests in Iraq. As at 28 September, those services covered supplies procured for the northern governorates. In addition, in accordance with resolution 1175(1998), authorizing the export to Iraq of oil-production spare parts and equipment to enable it to export oil in sufficient quantities to produce the sum specified in resolution 1153(1998), the Office of the Iraq Programme formed a monitoring team in July to monitor the approval, delivery, storage and utilization of such items.

To increase the coherence of observation activities, UN international sectoral, geographical and multidisciplinary observers began implementing a more narrowly focused and forward-looking quarterly observation plan, starting with the June-August quarter. In the food sector, for instance, WFP observers tracked commodities at warehouses weekly and at all mills monthly, while, under their supervision, national staff in each governorate spot-checked food agents and households. WHO observers focused on drug supply and distribution, the quality of drug management and utilization and dosage forms of selected drugs; the geographical observers assessed transportation problems, the efficiency of the cold chain, the timeliness of arrivals, the quality-control process for selected items and distribution to governorate warehouses, end-user facilities and private pharmacies. Monitoring activities also focused on the water and sanitation, agriculture and electricity sectors.

Despite the increase in oil exports, the target of the $3.1 billion required to implement the enhanced distribution plan was not met due to low oil prices. Nevertheless, the programme continued to help provide a more adequate food basket to the Iraqi people, although the full nutritional benefit of the extra foodstuffs was not yet realized. The improvement in infant nutrition noted since 1994 in the northern governorates was sustained. In the central and southern governorates, while not worsening, it continued to be of grave concern and the Secretariat had yet to receive applications for targeted nutrition supplies. Despite an estimated 15 per cent increase in wheat and barley yields in 1998, food production suffered shortages and food prices on the open market were rising. By contrast, there was a substantial increase in food production and a continued decline in open-market food prices in the northern governorates.

The health sector saw an increased availability of drugs and medical supplies; however, urgently needed essential drugs remained unavailable on a regular basis and the timely distribution of hospital equipment was a problem. Inputs in the electricity and water and sanitation sectors tended to have only a localized impact and thus could not offset the continuing structural deterioration of those sectors. For example, increased quantities of chlorinated water were being produced but the decaying distribution network precluded the guarantee of safe drinking water. Although the enhanced distribution plan had begun to address the widening gap between the supply and demand of electricity, short-term solutions to the deterioration in the power generation and distribution systems could not be addressed because of limited funding. An increasing number of schools were receiving furniture and educational supplies but relatively little rehabilitation of school buildings had taken place throughout the country. Improved distribution of school supplies in the three northern governorates brought about an increase in enrolment.

The Secretary-General pointed out that current funding constraints were likely to continue. Of the estimated $3.15 billion revenue for phase IV, $1.98 billion would be available for the humanitarian programme, including $300 million for oil-production spare parts and equipment. Because the Iraqi oil industry was in such a lamentable state, the Secretary-General hoped that the Sanctions Committee would expedite the approval of applications essential for the increase of oil production and exports. At the same time, he urged the Iraqi Government further to prioritize its request for spare parts and equipment. The Secretary-General pointed to the urgency of resolving the reimbursement of $237,588,447 currently due from the 13 per cent account to the 53 per cent account, which was contributing to the failure to reach the target of $3.1 billion for the implementation of the enhanced distribution plan.

In view of the magnitude of the overall humanitarian situation in Iraq, the Secretary-General recommended that the Council extend the relevant provisions of resolution 1153(1998) for a further 180-day period.

Sanctions Committee reports (August and November). The Sanctions Committee issued its first and second 90-day reports under phase IV on 27 August [S/1998/813] and 20 November [S/1998/1104], respectively.

As of 20 November, the oil overseers had reviewed and approved 55 contracts submitted by purchasers from 27 countries. In addition, the Sanctions Committee directly approved five contracts and cancelled one; another contract remained pending due to lack of supporting documentation. The quantity of oil for export under the approved contracts corresponded to approximately 308 million barrels for phase IV. A total of 243 liftings comprising 296.7 million barrels valued at $2,935 million were completed. At current low prices, the total revenue for phase IV was estimated at about $3.1 billion (including pipeline fees). Pursuant to the Committee's procedures, 299 national oil purchasers, nominated by 48 countries, were authorized to communicate directly with the oil overseers, who reported weekly to the Committee on petroleum contracts, including the cumulative quantity and approximate value of petroleum authorized for export.

The Secretariat received 769 applications under phase IV for exports of humanitarian supplies to Iraq (amounting to approximately $1.97 billion), of which 18 were cancelled and 165 were still being processed. The remaining 586 were circulated to the Committee, which found 547 (with a value of $1.39 billion) eligible for payment from the UN Iraq Account, placed 33 on hold and kept 6 pending under the "no-objection" procedure. United Nations independent inspection agents deployed at the four designated entry ports confirmed the arrival in Iraq of 1,835 consignments of humanitarian goods under phase IV in total or partial shipments. On 13 November, Lloyd's Register withdrew its agents from Iraq but they resumed their work on 16 November.

Although the Committee delegated authority to the Secretariat in May to approve applications for foodstuffs, the Committee continued to take action on such applications pending submission by Iraq of the necessary pricing mechanism for Committee approval.

The Committee began to approve contracts for the export to Iraq of oil-production spare parts and equipment according to lists authorized for each individual project, within the $300 million earmarked for that purpose. Of the 355 applications received by the Secretariat, 40 were under review by experts or were returned for further information, clarification or correction; 274 were circulated to the Committee, which approved 152 (valued at $102.8 million), placed 105 on hold and kept 17 pending under the "no-objection" procedure.

Communications. On 6 [S/1998/928] and 24 October [S/1998/996], Iraq again drew attention not only to the continuing obstruction of contract applications by the United Kingdom and the United States, but also to the number of contracts awaiting availability of funds, exacerbated by the delay in reimbursing the 53 per cent account from the 13 per cent account. The contracts on hold were for commodities in all sectors and for oil-production equipment under phase IV, but also some submitted under phases I-III. Iraq asked the Secretary-General to spare no effort in monitoring the implementation of the 1996 Memorandum of Understanding and of the whole process of application approval.

On 26 October [S/1998/1005], Iraq set out the rates of implementation in all sectors under phase IV in the three northern governorates, which it said raised concern and serious questions about the ability of UN agencies to implement the programme, despite the unobstructed flow of approved contracts for the area. Iraq claimed that the situation had led to cases of misuse of Iraqi funds allocated to those governorates and to the failure of the programme to mitigate the suffering of the Iraqi population there.

In a 19 November letter [S/1998/1103], Iraq stated that more than five months after the Council authorized the export of oil-production equipment to Iraq, not a single spare part had reached the country, resulting in its inability to achieve the financial ceiling of $5.256 billion worth of oil for the enhanced phase IV, which was about to terminate. Iraq was thus requesting a two-month extension of phase IV to allow fulfilment of the distribution plan.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

Having considered the second 90-day reports of the Secretary-General and the Sanctions Committee under phase IV, the Security Council, on 24 November [meeting 3946], unanimously adopted resolution 1210(1998), based on a draft [S/1998/1112] sponsored by France, Portugal, Sweden and the United Kingdom.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 986(1995) of 14 April 1995, 1111(1997) of 4 June 1997, 1129(1997) of 12 September 1997, 1143(1997) of 4 December 1997, 1153(1998) of 20 February 1998 and 1175(1998) of 19 June 1998,

Convinced of the need as a temporary measure to continue to provide for the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi people until the fulfilment by the Government of Iraq of the relevant resolutions, including notably resolution 687(1991) of 3 April 1991, allows the Council to take further action with regard to the prohibitions referred to in resolution 661 (1990) of 6 August 1990, in accordance with the provisions of those resolutions,

Convinced also of the need for equitable distribution of humanitarian supplies to all segments of the Iraqi population throughout the country,

Welcoming the positive impact of the relevant resolutions on the humanitarian situation in Iraq, as described in the report of the Secretary-General dated 19 November 1998,

Determined to improve the humanitarian situation in Iraq,

Reaffirming the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Iraq,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that the provisions of resolution 986(1995), except those contained in paragraphs 4, 11 and 12, shall remain in force for a new period of 180 days beginning at 0001 hours eastern standard time on 26 November 1998;

2. Also decides that paragraph 2 of resolution 1153(1998) shall remain in force and shall apply to the 180-day period referred to in paragraph 1 above;

3. Directs the Committee established by resolution 661 (1990) to authorize, on the basis of specific requests, reasonable expenses related to the Hajj, to be met by funds in the escrow account;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take the actions necessary to ensure the effective and efficient implementation of the present resolution, and to review, by 31 December 1998, the various options to resolve the difficulties encountered in the financial process, referred to in the report of the Secretary-General of 19 November 1998, and to continue to enhance as necessary the United Nations observation process in Iraq in such a way as to provide the required assurance to the Council that the goods produced in accordance with the present resolution are distributed equitably and that all supplies authorized for procurement, including dual usage items and spare parts, are utilized for the purpose for which they have been authorized;

5. Decides to conduct a thorough review of all aspects of the implementation of the present resolution 90 days after the entry into force of paragraph 1 above and again prior to the end of the 180-day period, upon receipt of the reports referred to in paragraphs 6 and 10 below, and expresses its intention, prior to the end of the 180-day period, to consider favourably renewal of the provisions of the present resolution as appropriate, provided that the said reports indicate that those provisions are being satisfactorily implemented;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council 90 days after the date of entry into force of paragraph 1 above, and again prior to the end of the 180-day period, on the basis of observations of United Nations personnel in Iraq, and of consultations with the Government of Iraq, on whether Iraq has ensured the equitable distribution of medicine, health supplies, foodstuffs, and materials and supplies for essential civilian needs, financed in accordance with paragraph 8 (a) of resolution 986(1995), including in his reports any observations he may have on the adequacy of the revenues to meet Iraq's humanitarian needs, and on Iraq's capacity to export sufficient quantities of petroleum and petroleum products to produce the sum referred to in paragraph 2 of resolution 1153(1998);

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council if Iraq is unable to export petroleum and petroleum products sufficient to produce the total sum provided for by paragraph 2 above and, following consultations with relevant United Nations agencies and the Iraqi authorities, make recommendations for the expenditure of the sum expected to be available, consistent with the priorities established in paragraph 2 of resolution 1153(1998) and with the distribution plan referred to in paragraph 5 of resolution 1175(1998);

8. Decides that paragraphs 1, 2, 3 and 4 of resolution 1175(1998) shall remain in force and shall apply to the new 180-day period referred to in paragraph 1 above;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Government of Iraq, to submit to the Council, by 31 December 1998, a detailed list of parts and equipment necessary for the purpose described in paragraph 1 of resolution 1175(1998);

10. Requests the Committee established by resolution 661(1990), in close coordination with the Secretary-General, to report to the Council 90 days after the entry into force of paragraph 1 above and again prior to the end of the 180-day period on the implementation of the arrangements in paragraphs 1, 2, 6, 8, 9 and 10 of resolution 986(1995);

11. Urges all States, and in particular the Government of Iraq, to provide their full cooperation in the effective implementation of the present resolution;

12. Appeals to all States to continue to cooperate in the timely submission of applications and the expeditious issue of export licences, facilitating the transit of humanitarian supplies authorized by the Committee established by resolution 661(1990), and to take all other appropriate measures within their competence in order to ensure that urgently required humanitarian supplies reach the Iraqi people as rapidly as possible;

13. Stresses the need to continue to ensure respect for the security and safety of all persons directly involved in the implementation of the present resolution in Iraq;

14. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Communication from Secretary-General. On 25 November [S/1998/1123], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Council an exchange of letters of the same date, constituting an agreement between the Secretariat and the Government of Iraq to extend the provisions of the 1996 Memorandum of Understanding for an additional 180-day period, effective 26 November 1998, in the light of Council resolution 1210(1998).

Phase V

The 180-day extension (phase V) of the humanitarian programme for Iraq, as authorized by Security Council resolution 1210(1998), began on 26 November.

Communications from Secretary-General. On 11 December [S/1998/1158], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Council Iraq's distribution plan for phase V, which he approved on 24 November, together with a letter of the same date informing Iraq of the approval, subject to certain understandings. Notable among them was that the approval did not constitute an endorsement of either the budgetary allocation for telecommunications or of the specific items listed in annex VII to the plan, or for equipment and supplies in support of the banking requirements in paragraph 66, or the specific items listed in annex X that were not included in the 1991 report of the Secretary-General [YUN 1991, p. 201] or in any further findings of humanitarian need by the Sanctions Committee. In addition, it was pointed out that the $2.596 billion in paragraph 3 of the executive summary should read $2.746 billion, and the $906 million for food in table 1 should read $1.056 billion.

In keeping with the Council's request in resolution 1210(1998), the Secretary-General, on 29 December [S/1998/1233], submitted a detailed list of spare parts and equipment necessary to enable Iraq to increase its oil export production as provided for in resolution 1153(1998). The list was drawn up by a group of four experts from Saybolt Nederland BV, who visited Iraq from 13 to 16 December to review the situation on the ground in consultation with the Government.

The group concluded that the list represented a pragmatic approach to sustaining, and eventually incrementally increasing, current production levels, albeit reflecting a continued reliance on outdated oilfield development concepts. So far, no significant improvements had been made, as recommended by the expert group in March [S/1998/330 & Corr.1], mainly because deliveries of spare parts and equipment procured under phase IV were just starting. Finally, the group noted an apparent duplication in many cases between the list submitted for phase IV and that for phase V, for the reason that the prices of the requested items for phase IV were marginally higher than estimated and would have resulted in exceeding the $300 million allocated for oil-production equipment.

Demining operations in northern Iraq

On 15 December [S/1998/1198], Iraq drew the Secretary-General's attention to references in his report on mine-clearance assistance [A/53/496] that the United Nations had deployed an international subcontractor in northern Iraq in connection with demining training and operations that began in February, and that two non-governmental organizations (NGOs) were conducting mine-action activities in the region in close liaison with the United Nations Office for Project Services. Iraq believed that UN cooperation with those parties, which had entered Iraq illegally, might be considered a violation of the relevant Security Council resolutions and of the provisions of the 1996 Memorandum of Understanding. Iraq therefore requested the Secretary-General to recommend that the Office of the Iraq Programme halt forthwith that cooperation and replace those parties with UN personnel and demining experts as part of the implementation of the Memorandum.

Elaborating further on the matter on 31 December [S/1999/1], Iraq stated that UN dealings with the parties in question were an infringement of its sovereignty and an infraction of the norms of international law and of Council resolutions affirming respect for the sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of Iraq. To the United Kingdom's statement at informal Council consultations on 29 December that, apart from the import of food and medicine, Iraq had no business with the implementation of the humanitarian programme in northern Iraq, which included a demining programme, Iraq said it did not believe that the United Kingdom was unaware of the Memorandum's provisions stating, among other things, that "Nothing in the present Memorandum should be construed as infringing upon the sovereignty or territorial integrity of Iraq". To the United Kingdom's further statement that the matter of the parties' presence in northern Iraq should be referred to the Sanctions Committee, Iraq said it was in no way possible for that Committee to be involved in any matter violating Iraq's sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity.

Temporary relocation of UN staff

According to a press statement issued by the Spokesman for the Secretary-General on 18 December, due to the prevailing situation in Iraq, 106 UN staff with the humanitarian programme left Baghdad by road for Amman, where they were to remain temporarily. The Special Envoy of the Secretary-General, Prakash Shah, and the Humanitarian Coordinator, Hans von Sponeck, remained in Baghdad, along with 26 UN personnel, including representatives of the UN agencies and programmes.

The 232 UN international and 880 national personnel implementing the United Nations Inter-Agency Humanitarian Programme in the three northern governorates continued to operate without interruption.

UN Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission

The United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM), established by Security Council resolution 687(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 172], continued in 1998 to discharge its functions in accordance with its terms of reference, as expanded by Council resolution 806(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 406]: to monitor the Khawr Abd Allah waterway and the demilitarized zone (DMZ) along the Iraq-Kuwait boundary established under the 1991 resolution, as adjusted in accordance with the 1993 technically demarcated international boundary line [ibid., p. 403]; to deter violations of the boundary through its presence in and surveillance of the DMZ; to observe any potentially hostile action mounted from the territory of one State into the other; and, as from 1993, to take physical action to prevent or redress small-scale violations of the DMZ or the boundary.

UNIKOM operations involved surveillance, control, investigation and liaison. Surveillance of the DMZ, an area about 200 kilometres long and extending 10 kilometres into Iraq and 5 kilometres into Kuwait, was based on patrol and observation bases, ground and air patrols, and observation points. Control operations included static checkpoints, random checks and maintenance of a force mobile reserve. Investigation teams were maintained at the sector level, as well as at UNIKOM headquarters, and continuous liaison was maintained with Iraqi and Kuwaiti authorities at all levels. For operational purposes, the DMZ was divided into the northern and southern sectors, with 10 and 7 patrol/observation bases, respectively. Construction work on the Warbah Island project, aimed at improving UNIKOM's monitoring of the Khawr Abd Allah waterway, continued; only the communications tower and installation of a floating pier remained to be completed.

The military observers were responsible for patrol, observation, investigation and liaison activities. The infantry battalion, deployed at Camp Khor, Kuwait, at a company camp in Al-Abdali, at platoon camps in the southern and northern sectors of the DMZ, and in the easternmost patrol/observation base on the Iraqi side of the DMZ, continued armed patrols within those areas, deploying its mobile reserve in sensitive situations, and manned checkpoints at border-crossing sites, making random checks in cooperation with Iraqi and Kuwaiti liaison officers. It also provided security for UNIKOM personnel and installations when necessary.

UNIKOM maintained headquarters at Umm Qasr in Iraq, liaison offices in Baghdad and Kuwait City and a support base at Camp Khor.

Reports of Secretary-General (March and September). UNIKOM's activities were described in two six-month reports by the Secretary-General, issued on 25 March [S/1998/269] and on 24 September [S/1998/889], covering the periods 24 September 1997 to 23 March 1998 and 24 March to 23 September 1998, respectively.

According to the reports, the situation in the DMZ was generally calm, with violations of the zone dropping from 175 during the first period to 67 during the second. In all, ground violations numbered 31, including sightings of weapons at Iraqi and Kuwaiti police posts, small-arms firings across the DMZ from both sides, incursion into it by a Kuwaiti military vehicle, and unauthorized border crossings into Kuwait by Iraqi policemen and civilians. Other violations included: two maritime violations in the Khawr Abd Allah waterway, one by a Kuwaiti landing craft and a coastguard patrol boat and the other by an Iraqi civilian vessel; 179 air violations in the first period and 46 in the second, by aircraft of the type used by "the coalition forces in the region"; and 12 oral complaints of territorial and maritime violations during each period, which UNIKOM could not verify due to the time elapsed between the alleged incident and receipt of the complaint.

Also reported were attacks on UNIKOM on the Iraqi side of the DMZ: on 20 November 1997, a UNIKOM position was fired at by unknown persons, seriously wounding a UN military observer and damaging UN property; on 18 February 1998, a UNIKOM vehicle was hijacked at gunpoint and later found stripped of its equipment; and some minor incidents involving Iraqi policemen pointing their rifles at a UN military observer and Iraqi children throwing stones at UNIKOM patrols.

UNIKOM also provided security and logistic support for the nine meetings of the Technical Subcommittee on Military and Civilian Missing Prisoners of War and Mortal Remains, a subcommittee of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC). In addition, UNIKOM continued to dispose of unexploded ordnance within the DMZ, mostly on the Iraqi side, destroying a total of 7,705 devices by the end of the second reporting period.

The Secretary-General recommended that UNIKOM be maintained in view of its continued contribution to the maintenance of calm and stability in the DMZ.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council informed the Secretary-General on 3 April [S/1998/296] and on 7 October [S/1998/925] that, in the light of his two reports, it had reviewed the question of termination or continuation of UNIKOM and its modalities of operation and concurred with his recommendation that UNIKOM be maintained. The Council would review the question once again by 7 April 1999.

Composition

As at 1 September, UNIKOM, under the command of Major-General Esa Kalervo Tarvainen (Finland), had an overall strength of 1,304, comprising 195 military observers from 32 Member States; an infantry battalion of 772 from Bangladesh; 132 support personnel, comprising an engineering unit of 50 from Argentina, a logistics unit of 34 from Austria, a helicopter unit of 35 from Bangladesh, and a medical unit of 13 from Germany; and a civilian staff of 205, of whom 58 were recruited internationally.

Financing

On 26 June [meeting 88], the General Assembly considered the Secretary-General's reports on UNIKOM of 9 February [A/52/790 & Corr.1] on efforts to recover the overpayment of mission subsistence allowance; of 10 February [A/52/790/Add.1 & Corr.1] on financial performance for the period 1 July 1996-30 June 1997; and of 10 March [A/52/824] containing the proposed budget for the 12-month period 1 July 1998-30 June 1999, together with the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) [A/52/860/Add.7 & Corr.1]. On the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/52/933], the Assembly adopted resolution 52/238 without vote [agenda item 124].

Financing of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 687(1991) of 3 April 1991 and 689(1991) of 9 April 1991, by which the Council decided to establish the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission and to review the question of its termination or continuation every six months,

Recalling also its resolution 45/260 of 3 May 1991 on the financing of the Observation Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 51/234 of 13 June 1997,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Observation Mission that are not covered by voluntary contributions are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Observation Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Expressing its appreciation for the substantial voluntary contributions made to the Observation Mission by the Government of Kuwait and the contributions of other Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Observation Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission as at 15 May 1998, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 9.6 million United States dollars, representing some 4 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Mission to the period ending 30 April 1998, notes that some 23 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses its continued appreciation of the decision of the Government of Kuwait to defray two thirds of the cost of the Observation Mission, effective 1 November 1993;

3. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

4. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

5. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Observation Mission in full and on time;

6. Takes note of the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

7. Decides to examine the recommendation of the Advisory Committee for 5 per cent across-the-board reductions of the budget proposals of the Secretary-General in the light of the next series of relevant financial performance reports;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Observation Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to employ locally recruited staff for the Observation Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

10. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission the amount of 52,143,800 dollars gross (50,255,600 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Observation Mission for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, inclusive of the amount of 2,618,400 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations, a two-thirds share of this amount, equivalent to 33,503,700 dollars, to be funded through voluntary contributions from the Government of Kuwait, subject to the review by the Security Council with regard to the question of termination or continuation of the Mission;

11. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, taking into consideration the funding through voluntary contributions from the Government of Kuwait of the two-thirds share of the cost of the Observation Mission, equivalent to 33,503,700 dollars, to apportion among Member States the amount of 18,640,100 dollars gross (16,751,900 dollars net), representing one third of the cost of the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, the said amount to be apportioned at a monthly rate of 1,553,342 dollars gross (1,395,992 dollars net), in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1998 and 1999, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997, subject to the review by the Security Council with regard to the question of termination or continuation of the Mission;

12. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 11 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 1,888,200 dollars approved for the Observation Mission for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999;

13. Decides that, taking into consideration the funding through voluntary contributions from the Government of Kuwait of the two-thirds share of the cost of the Observation Mission, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 11 above, their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 1,625,800 dollars gross (1,250,900 dollars net), representing one third of the unencumbered balance of 4,127,600 dollars gross (3,752,700 dollars net) in respect of the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997;

14. Decides also that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Observation Mission, their share of the unencumbered balance of 1,625,800 dollars gross (1,250,900 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

15. Decides further that two thirds of the net unencumbered balance of 3,752,700 dollars, equivalent to 2,501,800 dollars, shall be returned to the Government of Kuwait;

16. Expresses deep concern about the overpayment of mission subsistence allowance, at present calculated at 6,312,201.53 dollars, as well as the inaccuracy of the earlier estimated amount of 988,443.50 dollars, which represents a drastic increase of 5,323,758.03 dollars, and the delay in reporting the matter to the General Assembly;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to ensure that voluntary contributions towards the budgeted cost of the Observation Mission shall be utilized only in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

18. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to recover the overpayment of mission subsistence allowance in the revised estimated amount of 6,312,201.53 dollars and to submit a separate report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on developments relating to the issue of overpayment of mission subsistence allowance and compensatory time off, including measures taken with respect to those responsible for the overpayment on the basis of the conclusion of the inquiry;

19. Further requests the Secretary-General to review the recovery process, taking into account the results of the inquiry and bearing in mind various aspects of this measure;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that all managers exercising financial responsibility are issued with the revised and updated version of the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations;

21. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that every official of the United Nations is responsible to the Secretary-General for the regularity of the actions taken by him or her in the course of his or her official duties and that any official who takes any action contrary to the Financial Rules, or to the administrative instructions issued in connection therewith, may be held personally responsible and financially liable for the consequences of such action;

22. Recalls its request to the Secretary-General in its resolution 49/218 of 23 December 1994 to include full implementation of the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations as a specific performance indicator in the performance appraisal of all managers;

23. Invites voluntary contributions to the Observation Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

24. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session, under the item entitled "Financing of the activities arising from Security Council resolution 687(1991)", the sub-item entitled "United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission".

On 18 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the item on the financing of UNIKOM at the resumed fifty-third (1999) session (decision 53/458).

UN Compensation Commission and Fund

The United Nations Compensation Commission, established in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 196] for the resolution and payment through the United Nations Compensation Fund, established at the same time, of claims against Iraq for losses and damage resulting from its 1990 invasion and occupation of Kuwait [YUN 1990, p. 189], continued in 1998 to expedite the prompt settlement of claims. The Commission was headquartered in Geneva, where its Governing Council held all of its sessions.

Governing Council. The Governing Council of the Commission held the following sessions during the year: its seventh special session (2 February) [S/1998/146] and four regular sessions: the twenty-seventh (9-11 March) [S/1998/300], the twenty-eighth (29 June-1 July), the twenty-ninth (28-30 September) [S/1998/1007] and the thirtieth (14-16 December) [S/1999/37]. Iraq and Kuwait addressed the March, September and December sessions. Also addressing the September and December sessions were, respectively, India and the Sudan; and Bangladesh, Iran, Jordan and the Sudan.

At its special session, the Council considered the report of the Panel of Commissioners (the Panel) containing its recommendations regarding part one of the first instalment of category D claims (individual claims for damages above $100,000). The instalment covered 69 claims valued at $55 million, filed by 19 Governments on behalf of individuals and one international organization representing individuals not in a position to file their claims through Governments. The Council approved the Panel's recommended award of $5,406,161 for 61 of those claims and noted that no recommendations were made for eight claims, pending their re-categorization or review.

On the matter of explanatory statements by claimants in categories D, E (corporations and other legal entities) and F (Governments and international organizations on behalf of individuals), the Council decided that no loss should be compensated solely on the basis of a claimant's explanatory statement. The Council also decided that funds paid to Governments but not distributed to claimants should, after one year, be returned to the Commission, to be held for future payment once the claimants had been located. The Council agreed that the payment of awards to claimants who had applied for or acquired refugee status and who did not wish to be paid through the Governments that had originally submitted their claims should be made through a designated international organization or the host Government. It also approved the enlargement of the Commission's operating reserve to an amount sufficient to provide funding for the remaining period of its 1997-2000 work programme.

In March, the Council had before it the Panel's review of part two of the first instalment of category F claims concerning compensation sought by Kuwait for losses in the amount of $34,948, 111 for the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and $25,263,186 for Kuwait University. The Council approved the recommended award of $5,644,794 for the Ministry and $15,209,002 for the University. The Council also decided to correct the amounts of approved claim awards, one each under the first, second, fourth and sixth instalments of category A claims (for departure from Iraq or Kuwait during 2 August 1990-2 March 1991).

In July, the Council considered the sixth instalment of category C claims (damages up to $100,000), covering 71,042 individual claims. The Council approved the Panel's recommended awards for 64,425 of those claims, as well as the amounts of the corrected awards for one claim from the first instalment, five from the second and nine from the fourth, and decided that no compensation be awarded in respect of the remaining 6,617 claims [S/AC.26/Dec.52(1998)]. The Council also considered five "E2" claims and approved the amounts of the recommended awards concerning four of them (one having been withdrawn by the claimant), totalling $187,496,511.62 [S/AC.26/Dec.53(1998)]. The Council further approved corrections to previously approved awards for 19 category A claims from the third (3), fifth (2) and sixth (14) instalments [S/AC.26/Dec.54(1998)].

At the September session, Kuwait expressed the view that additional resources needed to be allocated urgently to category D claims and suggested that it might be necessary to appoint a second Panel of Commissioners. It stressed that priority be given to the processing of claims for environmental damage arising from Iraq's invasion and occupation of its country. Along with India and the Sudan, Kuwait focused on the issue of priority of payment to successful claimants. Currently, successful claimants in categories A, B (for death or serious personal injury) and C were accorded priority at both the processing and payment stages. Also discussed were ways whereby payment of awards in categories D, E and F could begin.

On 30 September, the Council approved the recommended awards concerning part one of the second instalment of category D claims, totalling $11,182,109, for 219 claims submitted by 18 Governments and one international organization. With regard to the second instalment of "F1" claims, consisting of 17 claims filed by 15 Governments, the Council approved the recommended awards totalling $97,665,367. In addition, it approved the corrections requested in the Executive Secretary's report to previously approved claim awards for five category A claims under the fourth, fifth and sixth instalments.

In December, the Council considered part two of the second instalment of category D claims, covering 150 claims filed by 16 Governments and one international organization on behalf of individuals. The Panel's recommendation to award $53,053,314 in compensation in respect of 129 of those claims was approved by the Council. Having considered the Panel's review of the first instalment of category E claims covering 10 construction and engineering claims, filed by six Governments, the Council approved the recommended aggregate amounts to be awarded per country, totalling $181,596,849.

The Governing Council appointed nine candidates nominated by the Secretary-General for three new panels of commissioners: the second category D Panel, to address individual claims for damages above $100,000; the E/F Panel, to address export credit guarantee claims; and the F4 Panel, to address environmental claims. Those appointments brought the total number of panels to 15.

Concerned about the significant amount of undistributed funds being held by some Governments, the Council asked the secretariat to inform those Governments to return such funds as soon as possible. If not returned by the March 1999 session, the Council might consider withholding future payments to those Governments. On the issue of priority of payment, it decided that the basic guideline for the payment mechanism for the second phase of payments, the priority of payments and the allocation of funds would remain unchanged; payment of the approved claims in categories D, E and F would begin with the commencement of the second phase of payments; and payments to all categories of claims would be made on a regular basis, avoiding periods of more than one year without any disbursements to successful claimants.

Communications. In a series of letters to the Secretary-General and the Security Council between 13 January and 26 November, Iraq expressed its concerns about the mechanism for settling the claims against it. Iraq stated its position that the Governing Council's five-year (1998-2003) work programme would transform the purely formal operational duties of the secretariat of the United Nations Compensation Commission into objective legal work, contrary to the Provisional Rules for Claims Procedure; it also complained about not being allowed at hearings of unusually complex claims, where its legal and objective opinion should be heard [S/1998/49, S/1998/542]. Iraq claimed that the policy pursued by the Commission to deny it the right to examine claims under $100,000 and to allow excessive awards to claimants seeking compensation beyond that amount based on extravagant and false assertions lacked legality. According to Iraq, some of the claims were "fantastic and unimaginable", among them corporate claims from the tourism sector [S/1998/875, S/1998/881, S/1998/910, S/1998/1129]. In response, the President of the Governing Council stated that, pursuant to the Rules, reports on such claims were given the required circulation, including to the Government of Iraq [S/1998/1018]. In September [S/1998/877], Iraq informed the Secretary-General that a report had been submitted to the Commission regarding Iraq's possible liability for debts and obligations prior to 2 August 1990 (when it invaded Kuwait) [YUN 1990, p. 189], citing that fact as an example of the Commission's attempt to expand the scope of its activities.

Other matters

Iraqi complaints

During 1998, Iraq addressed numerous communications to the Secretary-General and the Security Council drawing attention to violations of its airspace by aircraft of the United States, the United Kingdom and other countries from bases in Kuwait, Saudi Arabia and Turkey. Apart from two letters recording the total number of airspace violations in 1997 over the north and south of the country between 1 January and 30 June [S/1998/613] and 1 July and 31 December [S/1998/52], the majority submitted frequent counts of all such violations during 1998.

Iraq reported in October [S/1998/965] that the airspace violations had been continuous since 27 November 1991, when the United States illegally imposed a no-fly zone over northern Iraq. Aerial patrols were also carried out over southern Iraq, where a similar no-fly zone was imposed on 27 August 1992. Iraq asserted that the no-fly zones had no basis either in Council resolutions or in law and the aerial patrols constituted clear violations of Iraq's sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence. By 30 June 1998, Iraq had tracked a total of 41,972 airspace violations over the north and 124,215 over the south of the country. Iraq also reported a missile attack that hit water storage tanks north of Umm Qasr, claimed to be in retaliation for alleged Iraqi air defence action against the intruding aircraft [S/1998/606].

Asserting also that the U-2 surveillance flights ostensibly carried out in conjunction with UNSCOM's disarmament and monitoring activities (see above, under "UN Special Commission") were in fact for spy purposes, Iraq, in several communications [S/1998/89, S/1998/305, S/1998/451, S/1998/453, S/1998/829, S/1998/1211], stated that those flights were also violations of its airspace.

Iraq also cited violations of its territorial waters, as well as the unjustified actions carried out by the United States and other naval forces stationed in the Arabian Gulf in the form of undue detentions of vessels, mostly carrying foodstuffs and other humanitarian commodities bound for Iraq under the oil-for-food programme, subjecting them to arbitrary inspections and searches [S/1998/359, S/1998/392, S/1998/707, S/1998/871, S/1998/878, S/1998/1150, S/1998/1162]. Such disruptions, besides delaying the delivery of goods to the suffering people of Iraq, were a direct cause of rising Iraqi insurance and carriage costs. Iraq reaffirmed the right to seek compensation for the direct and indirect damage caused by such unmitigated hostility towards it.

Iraq further cited specific United States official statements and press reports concerning that country's efforts to overthrow President Saddam Hussein and indicating that the pressure of continued sanctions was a means to that end [S/1998/431, S/1998/439, S/1998/546, S/1998/663, S/1998/676, S/1998/742, S/1998/1130]. Iraq said that as late as 16 November, the Spokesman for the United States Department of State confirmed his country's determination to support Iraqi groups opposed to President Hussein—a blatant interference in Iraq's internal affairs. In that connection, Iraq reported the illegal entry of a high-level United States official into northern Iraq [S/1998/678, S/1998/681]. Iraq said these were all acknowledge by the United States National Security Adviser on 8 December [S/1998/1179] as part of a strategy for the "containment of Iraq". The failure of the Council and the United Nations to curb the United States, Iraq said, was tantamount to dereliction of their responsibilities.

Iraq also submitted reports [S/1998/351, S/1998/512, S/1998/765, S/1998/972, S/1998/1163] on its disposal of unexploded ordnance left behind by the 1991 aggression against it, which continued to be found in large quantities in the country.

In addition, Iraq, on 24 May [S/1998/430], drew attention to the recent admission by the United Kingdom that, along with the United States, it used missiles filled with depleted uranium (DU) during the Gulf War. That explained the large numbers of a variety of previously unknown illnesses in the bombarded areas, for which Iraq reaffirmed its right to fair compensation. It further transmitted a 1997 report [A/53/165-S/1998/601] on the disastrous effects on human health and the environment in Iraq from the use of DU weapons by the coalition forces, particularly the United Kingdom and the United States. The United Kingdom stated on 16 June [S/1998/517] that it had publicly acknowledged the use of DU-based tank ammunition (rather than missiles) as early as March 1991. It had fired fewer than 100 rounds against Iraqi forces at a considerable distance from population centres in southern Iraq. As to Iraq's attribution of DU ammunition use to an increase in ill health in Iraq, the United Kingdom said that, as it had seen no epidemiological research data on the Iraqi population, it could not comment on whether there was an unusually high incidence of ill-health in southern Iraq and that there was no evidence that the illnesses of the types listed by Iraq were uniquely associated with exposure to DU.

In other communications [S/1998/612, S/1998/899], Iraq protested Kuwait's sale of five Iraqi oil tankers and urged the Secretary-General to intervene at once with Kuwait to void the illegal sale and return the tankers to Iraq. Sent to Kuwait in 1991 to prevent their destruction during the Gulf War, the tankers had been held by Kuwait until their sale for scrap for $16.5 million. Kuwait claimed the tankers were used for the theft of large quantities of Kuwaiti oil during Iraq's occupation of Kuwait and their sale was to recover the $18.4 million it had spent on their maintenance and surveillance [S/1998/658].

Iraq-Turkey

In several communications to the Secretary-General and the Security Council, Iraq described Turkey's encroachments on Iraqi territory and airspace between 23 October and 25 December 1997 [S/1998/126] and reported fresh military operations mounted by Turkey deep inside northern Iraq with troops numbering in the thousands, supported by the Turkish air force [S/1998/455, S/1998/456, S/1998/509, S/1998/1047, S/1998/1049]. Iraq condemned such repeated incursions and categorically rejected Turkey's reasoning that the object of those operations was to pursue members of the Turkish Kurdish Workers' Party who intermittently launched attacks into Turkey from their bases in northern Iraq.

Afghanistan

Repeated UN calls for peace in Afghanistan remained unheeded in 1998 by the Taliban and the United Front (UF), the country's two warring parties, as did pleas for a halt to the supply to them of arms, ammunition, equipment and military personnel. In mid-July, the Taliban launched an offensive that wrested most of northern and central Afghanistan from UF control and led to the forcible displacement of large numbers of people and grave breaches of human rights and humanitarian law, including the murder of Iranian diplomats and UN personnel. The fatal attacks on the latter and other threats to their security caused the evacuation of all UN international staff from the country in August. On 23 October, the United Nations and the Taliban signed a supplementary protocol on the security of UN personnel to their 13 May Memorandum of Understanding governing humanitarian operations in Taliban-held areas.

The Special Envoy for Afghanistan, Lakhdar Brahimi (Algeria), with support from the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan (UNSM), widened and intensified his efforts at peacemaking and at reducing tensions in the region, in particular between Iran and the Taliban. UN agencies, in conjunction with international organizations and NGOs, continued to provide humanitarian assistance to the Afghan population and worked to improve the human rights situation in the country, especially of women and girls. The Mine Action Programme of the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Assistance to Afghanistan successfully demined large tracts of land and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) repatriated from Pakistan and Iran an ever-increasing number of Afghan refugees. The United Nations International Drug Control Programme continued efforts to reduce the illicit production and trafficking of opiates in Afghanistan.

The General Assembly and the Security Council condemned the murder of the Iranian diplomats and UN personnel and urged the Taliban to investigate the death, serious injury or disappearance of international and national staff employed by the United Nations. They reiterated their demand that all Afghan parties cease armed hostilities and their call on all States to refrain from interfering in Afghanistan's internal affairs. They further called for an investigation into reported massacres of innocent civilians and mass executions of prisoners of war and endorsed the Secretary-General's proposal to create a civil affairs unit within UNSMA to monitor the human rights situation in the country.

(For the credentials of Afghanistan to the fifty-third session of the General Assembly, see PART FIVE, Chapter IV.)

Situation in Afghanistan

Reports of Secretary-General (March, June and October). In response to General Assembly resolution 52/211 B [YUN 1997, p. 262], the Secretary-General submitted three progress reports in 1998 on the situation in Afghanistan: the first on 17 March [A/52/826-S/1998/222], the second on 19 June [A/52/957-S/1998/532] and the third on 2 October [A/53/455-S/1998/913]. The reports updated the military and political developments in the country, and detailed the activities of UNSMA, of the Special Envoy for Afghanistan and at United Nations Headquarters in New York. They also described the humanitarian and human rights situations, UN efforts to reduce the illicit cultivation, production and trafficking of drugs, and the impact of the Afghan war on the Afghanistan-Iran border.

The March report highlighted a stalemated military situation and a political deadlock, with foreign military assistance to the main warring parties continuing to pour into the country. It noted that the six countries bordering Afghanistan—China, Iran, Pakistan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan—plus the Russian Federation and the United States, referred to as the group of eight or the "six plus two" group, had finalized common talking points for use in their contacts, individually or collectively, with the Afghan factions. The reports further drew attention to the deteriorating humanitarian situation and security conditions for UN personnel, in particular the Taliban bombing of the airport in Bamyán as UN personnel were initiating an airlift of emergency food supplies to that city, to the plight of Afghan women and to disturbing evidence of possible mass killings.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

Having considered the Secretary-General's March report, the Security Council, on 6 April [meeting 3869], authorized its President to make the following statement [S/PRST/1998/9] on its behalf:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 17 March 1998 concerning the situation in Afghanistan.

The Council expresses its grave concern at the continued Afghan war, which is a serious threat to regional and international security and causes extensive human suffering, further destruction, refugee flows and other forcible displacement of large numbers of people.

The Council is concerned by the increasingly ethnic nature of the conflict, by reports of persecution on the grounds of ethnic origin, and by the threat this poses to the unity of the Afghan State.

The Council urges all Afghan parties to stop the fighting, to agree immediately on a ceasefire, and to engage without preconditions in a political dialogue aimed at achieving national reconciliation, a lasting political settlement of the conflict, which has no military solution, and the formation of a broad-based fully representative government.

The Council reaffirms its strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Afghanistan, and respect for its cultural and historical heritage.

The Council deplores the fact that foreign interference in Afghanistan continues unabated in the form of the supply of war-making materials to the factions. It also deplores the active political and military support from outside Afghanistan to the factions, thereby reinforcing the reluctance of faction leaders to engage in serious political dialogue with one another. The Council reiterates its call to all States to stop such interference immediately.

The Council notes with concern that all the Afghan parties have been actively engaged in arms replenishment throughout the last months, warns the conflicting parties that the resumption of large-scale fighting will seriously undermine the attempts of the international community to assist them in finding a political solution to the conflict and urges them to live up to their declared desire for such a solution.

The Council reiterates its position that the United Nations, as a universally recognized intermediary, must continue to play its central and impartial role in international efforts towards a peaceful resolution of the Afghan conflict and extends its full support for the activities of the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan and those of the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan, particularly in his current mission in the region.

The Council commends the consolidation of the process, initiated by the Special Envoy with the convening of the "six plus two" group, and calls upon all countries involved in it to continue to participate in its work in good faith, including in the discussion to devise effective and impartial ways to curb the flow of arms and other war-making materials into Afghanistan. The Security Council welcomes the support of other Member States for this process.

The Council is deeply concerned by the deteriorating security conditions for United Nations and humanitarian personnel and calls upon all Afghan factions, in particular the Taliban, to take necessary steps to assure their safety.

The Council remains deeply concerned at the continuing discrimination against girls and women and other violations of human rights as well as violations of international humanitarian law in Afghanistan.

The Council supports the steps of the Secretary-General to launch investigations into alleged mass killings of prisoners of war and civilians in Afghanistan, the outcome of which will be submitted to the General Assembly and the Security Council as soon as it becomes available.

The Council is also concerned with the sharp deterioration of the humanitarian situation in several areas in central and northern Afghanistan, which is caused by the Taliban-imposed blockade of the Bamyan region remaining in place despite appeals by the United Nations and several of its Member States to lift it, as well as by the lack of supplies coming in from the northern route owing to insecurity and looting. The Council strongly urges the Taliban to let the humanitarian agencies attend to the needs of the population.

The Council reiterates that the continuation of the conflict in Afghanistan provides a fertile ground for terrorism and illegal drug production and trafficking, which destabilize the region and beyond, and calls upon the leaders of the Afghan parties to halt such activities.

The Council will remain seized of the matter and requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep it regularly informed of the situation in Afghanistan.

Further report of Secretary-General (November). The Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly and the Security Council a 23 November progress report [A/53/695-S/1998/1109] on developments in Afghanistan and on UN activities in the country since his November 1997 report [YUN 1997, p. 259].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 93], the General Assembly, on the basis of a 54-nation draft [A/53/L.66], adopted resolution 53/203 A without vote [agenda items 20 (c) & 45].

The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/140 of 20 December 1994, 50/88 B of 19 December 1995, 51/195 B of 17 December 1996 and 52/211 B of 19 December 1997,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 1193 (1998) of 28 August 1998 and 1214 (1998) of 8 December 1998 and all statements of the President of the Security Council on the situation in Afghanistan,

Noting all recent declarations by participants of regional international meetings and by international organizations on the situation in Afghanistan,

Reaffirming its strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Afghanistan, and respecting its multi-cultural, multi-ethnic and historical heritage,

Convinced that there is no military solution to the Afghan conflict and that only a political settlement aimed at the establishment of a broad-based, multi-ethnic and fully representative government acceptable to the Afghan people can lead to peace and reconciliation,

Stressing the importance of non-intervention and non-interference in the internal affairs of Afghanistan, and deeply concerned at all forms of continued external support, which is causing the prolongation and intensification of the conflict,

Expressing its grave concern at the failure of all Afghan parties, in particular the Taliban, to put an end to the conflict, which seriously threatens stability and peace in the region, and strongly condemning the sharp escalation of this conflict and the intensification of the fighting in Afghanistan, which add to the enormous suffering of the Afghan people, resulting in the massive loss of human life, refugee flows, killing, harassment, the forcible displacement of innocent civilians and extensive destruction, and seriously threaten stability and peace in the region,

Also expressing its grave concern at persistent violations of human rights and breaches of international humanitarian law in Afghanistan, as exemplified by reports of mass killings and atrocities committed by combatants against civilians and prisoners of war,

Further expressing its grave concern at the continuing and substantiated reports of systematic discrimination against girls and women, particularly in areas controlled by the Taliban,

Deeply concerned by the increasingly ethnic nature of the conflict, by reports of persecution on the grounds of ethnic origin and religious persuasion, in particular against the Shiites, and by the threat this poses to the unity of the Afghan State,

Strongly condemning the armed attacks against United Nations personnel in territories controlled by the Taliban, in which United Nations staff members were murdered or injured,

Also strongly condemning the capture by Taliban militia of the Consulate-General of the Islamic Republic of Iran in Mazar-e Sharif and the killing of diplomatic and consular personnel of the Consulate-General and the correspondent of the Islamic Republic News Agency, and stressing that these unacceptable acts constitute violations of the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations and the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations,

Deeply disturbed by the continuing use of Afghan territory for the sheltering and training of terrorists as well as for the cultivation, production and trafficking of drugs, and by the dangerous repercussions of these activities, which reach Afghanistan's neighbours and far beyond,

Reiterating that the United Nations, as a universally recognized and impartial intermediary, must continue to play the central role in international efforts towards a peaceful resolution of the Afghan conflict,

Expressing its appreciation for the efforts made in this regard by the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan and by the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan,

Welcoming the contacts between the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan and various non-warring Afghan parties and personalities, and supporting calls by these independent Afghans for an end to the fighting and any proposals that might advance the cause of peace, including the convening of a genuine loya jirgah to promote a political settlement,

Expressing its appreciation for the commitment in support of and in coordination with the United Nations of the Organization of the Islamic Conference in Afghanistan, especially the missions to Afghanistan undertaken jointly by the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference,

Welcoming the recent exchange of prisoners between the Afghan parties,

Recalling paragraph 13 of its resolution 52/211 B requesting the Secretary-General to continue to investigate fully reports about mass killings of prisoners of war and civilians and incidents of rape in Afghanistan and to include his findings in his next report to be submitted to the General Assembly,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and endorses the observations and recommendations set out therein;

2. Stresses that the main responsibility for finding a political solution to the conflict lies with the Afghan parties, and urges all of them to respond to the repeated United Nations calls for peace;

3. Calls upon all Afghan parties to cease immediately all armed hostilities, to renounce the use of force and to engage, without delay or preconditions, in a political dialogue under United Nations auspices aimed at achieving a lasting political settlement of the conflict through creating a broad-based, multi-ethnic and fully representative government, which would protect the rights of all Afghans and observe the international obligations of Afghanistan;

4. Welcomes the recent exchange of prisoners between the Afghan parties, and urges them to take further confidence-building measures;

5. Urges the Taliban and other Afghan parties to refrain from all acts of violence, especially against civilians;

6. Condemns the fact that foreign military support to the Afghan parties continued unabated through 1998, and calls upon all States strictly to refrain from any outside interference and immediately to end the supply of arms, ammunition, military equipment, training or any other military support to all parties to the conflict in Afghanistan, including the presence and involvement of any foreign military, paramilitary or secret service personnel;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to authorize the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan, established under resolution 48/208 of 21 December 1993, to continue its efforts to facilitate an immediate and durable ceasefire among the Afghan parties and to institute a negotiating process leading to the formation of a broad-based, multi-ethnic and fully representative government of national unity;

8. Endorses the proposal of the Secretary-General to establish, taking into account security conditions, a separate civil affairs unit by adding a new monitoring function to the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan, with the primary objective of deterring grave violations of human rights and promoting respect for minimum humanitarian standards in the future, and to send an assessment mission to Afghanistan, as soon as security conditions permit, in order to determine the exact mandate, composition and location of the civilian monitors;

9. Welcomes the continuing commitment of the United Nations to facilitate the political process towards national reconciliation and a lasting political settlement with the participation of all parties to the conflict and all segments of Afghan society, and reaffirms its full support for the comprehensive efforts of the Secretary-General, the activities of the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan and those of the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan;

10. Welcomes in this regard the constitution of groups of interested States, in particular the "six plus two" group, to coordinate their efforts, as well as the activities of international organizations, in particular the Organization of the Islamic Conference and the initiatives of its Secretary-General, and urges these States and organizations to continue to use their influence in a constructive manner in support of and in close coordination with the United Nations to promote peace in Afghanistan;

11. Calls upon the Taliban to provide security guarantees to enable an investigation to be carried out under the auspices of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the reports of massacres of innocent civilians and of mass executions of prisoners of war as well as on reports of killings in Mazar-e Sharif and Bamian;

12. Urges all Afghan parties, in particular the Taliban, to demonstrate their full commitment to the safety and security of all international and humanitarian personnel, which is a prerequisite for their activities in Afghanistan, to facilitate their work;

13. Takes note of the Supplementary Protocol to the Memorandum of Understanding of 13 May 1998, signed by the United Nations and the Taliban on the security of United Nations personnel in Afghanistan, and urges the Taliban to take the necessary steps for its full implementation;

14. Urges the Taliban to proceed with the immediate and thorough investigation of the death, serious injury or disappearance of international or national staff members and other persons employed by the United Nations, in particular the killing of the two Afghan staff members of the World Food Programme and of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in Jalalabad and of the Military Adviser to the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan in Kabul, and to keep the United Nations regularly informed about the progress of its investigation;

15. Strongly condemns the killing of the diplomatic and consular staff of the Consulate-General of the Islamic Republic of Iran in Mazar-e Sharif and the correspondent of the Islamic Republic News Agency, which the Taliban has accepted as having been perpetrated by its militia, urges the Taliban to inform the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran and the United Nations about the result of its investigation to date, and calls upon the Taliban to cooperate fully with an international investigation of the murder of the Iranian diplomats and the Islamic Republic News Agency correspondent with a view to prosecuting the guilty parties;

16. Urges the Taliban and other Afghan parties to recognize, protect and promote all human rights and freedoms, including the right to life, liberty and security of persons, regardless of gender, ethnicity or religion;

17. Calls upon all parties, in particular the Taliban, to end discriminatory policies and to recognize, protect and promote the equal rights and dignity of men and women;

18. Condemns the continuing widespread violations of international humanitarian law in Afghanistan, and urgently calls upon all parties to respect strictly all its provisions that provide essential protection for the civilian population in armed conflicts;

19. Demands that all parties, in particular the Taliban, stop harbouring and permitting the training of terrorists and their organizations and that all Afghan parties cooperate with efforts to bring indicted terrorists to justice;

20. Reiterates its call to all Afghan parties, in particular the Taliban, to halt all illegal drug activities and to support international efforts to ban illicit drug production and trafficking;

21. Reiterates that the cultural and historic relics and monuments of Afghanistan belong to the common heritage of mankind, calls upon all Afghan parties, in particular the Taliban, to protect the cultural and historic relics and monuments of Afghanistan from acts of vandalism, damage and theft, and requests all Member States to take appropriate measures to prevent the looting of cultural artifacts and to ensure their return to Afghanistan;

22. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly every three months during its fifty-third session on the progress of the United Nations Special Mission and to report to the Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution;

23. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security".

Also on 18 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 53/203 B on emergency international assistance for peace, normalcy and reconstruction of war-stricken Afghanistan (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

Military and political developments

In his summary of military developments over a one-year period [A/53/695-S/1998/1109], the Secretary-General reported wide fluctuations in the military balance on the ground, with the Taliban wresting most of northern and central Afghanistan from the United Front (UF), formerly the Northern Alliance. After the breakdown of the talks in the joint Afghan Steering Committee to prepare for an intra-Afghan forum (see below, under "Intra-Afghan talks"), and the subsequent abandonment of the process by the Taliban, the two opposing parties reneged on their commitment not to engage in major military offensives against each other. The UF forces (of the Jamiat faction) under Commander Ahmed Shah Massoud, from their stronghold north of Kabul, intensified their rocket attacks on that city's international airport, where more than 130 rockets landed during 1 June-20 October, with nine Luna rockets falling on a residential area of Kabul, reportedly claiming the lives of 190 people. At the beginning of June, UF forces (of the Junbish faction), under General Abdul Rashid Dostum, mounted an unsuccessful attack to drive the Taliban out of Badghis Province. From mid-July, the Taliban captured the cities of Faryab, Sheberghan, Mazar-e-Sharif and Taloqan, as well as Bamyan in central Afghanistan. By mid-September, the Taliban had completed its sweep of northern Afghanistan. Its advance northward created tension along the border with Iran, where that country began massing its troops for military exercises. The situation deteriorated sharply with the news that 9 of 12 Iranians reported missing when Mazar-e-Sharif fell were found murdered (see below, under "Killing of Iranian nationals"). A multi-pronged Taliban offensive on 10 October against the last stronghold of Commander Massoud met stiff opposition from his forces, who recaptured Taloqan on 17 October.

Reports of external interference were rife, including the supply of massive amounts of military equipment and supplies, know-how and funds. Large numbers of non-Afghans, mostly of Pakistani origin, were reported to be engaging in all aspects of fighting alongside the Taliban.

As to the political situation, the fragmentation of UF led to its inability to achieve any common political objectives and to defend its territories against the well-planned Taliban offensive; it was also among the main barriers to effective peace talks with the Taliban, which maintained its unity under the leadership of Mullah Mohammad Omar. However, grave violations of human rights were attributed to it during its capture of Mazar-e-Sharif and Bamyan. Taliban advances towards the borders moreover caused alarm among central Asian republics, which feared the possible spread of a fundamentalist brand of Islam in their territories. A complicating factor was the presence in Afghanistan of Osama bin Laden and his alleged implication in the bombings of the United States embassies in Kenya and the United Republic of Tanzania, which led to a retaliatory missile attack by the United States on 20 August against targets in Afghanistan said to be training centres for international terrorists. In efforts aimed at consolidating the anti-Taliban forces politically and militarily, under a single unified command, UF held a meeting from 5 to 7 December in the Panjshir Valley to form a leadership council to discuss ways of uniting the groups under Commander Massoud.

Communications. Afghanistan, on 9 July [A/53/175, S/1998/630], took issue with a 30 June statement by Pakistan's Foreign Minister that Afghanistan had a Pashtun majority—also a major Pakistani ethnic group—and thus would afford "strategic depth" to Pakistan in any dispute with India. Afghanistan affirmed vigorously that no one ethnic group in Afghanistan constituted a majority. It called the Foreign Minister's remarks irresponsible and menacing, aimed at inciting racial hegemony and hatred among the multi-ethnic Afghan people.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council, on 6 August [meeting 3914], had before it Afghanistan's 5 August letter [A/52/1003-S/1998/713] appealing to the United Nations and countries interested in the Afghan peace process to pressure Pakistan into halting its support of the Taliban with military supplies and equipment, as well as with paramilitary personnel who were being trained and dispatched to Afghanistan in increasing numbers. Following consultations among the members, the Council authorized its President to make the following statement [S/PRST/1998/24] on its behalf:

The Security Council expresses its grave concern at the new sharp escalation of the military confrontation in Afghanistan, which is a growing threat to regional and international peace and security, and demands an urgent and unconditional ceasefire leading to a final end to the hostilities.

The Council reiterates that the Afghan crisis can be settled only by peaceful means, through direct negotiations between the Afghan factions under United Nations auspices, aimed at achieving mutually acceptable solutions accommodating the rights and interests of all ethnic, religious and political groups of Afghan society.

The Council calls upon all Afghan parties to return to the negotiating table without delay and preconditions and to cooperate with the aim of creating a broad-based and fully representative government, which would protect the rights of all Afghans and observe the international obligations of Afghanistan. The Council calls upon all States neighbouring Afghanistan and other States with influence in Afghanistan to intensify their efforts under the aegis of the United Nations to bring the parties to a negotiated settlement.

The Council demands that the Afghan parties and those countries concerned observe fully the provisions of the relevant resolutions on Afghanistan adopted by the General Assembly and the Council.

The Council calls upon all States to refrain from any outside interference in the internal affairs of Afghanistan, including the involvement of foreign military personnel. It reiterates that any such interference from abroad should cease immediately and calls upon all States to end the supply of arms and ammunition to all parties to the conflict and to take resolute measures to prohibit their military personnel from planning and participating in combat operations in Afghanistan.

The Council is deeply concerned at the serious humanitarian crisis in Afghanistan. It calls upon all Afghan parties and, in particular, the Taliban, to take the necessary steps to secure the uninterrupted supply of humanitarian aid to all in need of it and in this connection not to create impediments to the activities of the United Nations humanitarian agencies and international humanitarian organizations. The Council condemns the killing of the two Afghan staff members of the World Food Programme and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in Jalalabad.

The Council once again urges all Afghan factions to cooperate fully with the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan and international humanitarian organizations and calls upon them, in particular the Taliban, to take the necessary steps to assure the safety and freedom of movement of such personnel. The Council deplores the measures taken by the Taliban, which have made it impossible for nearly all international humanitarian organizations to continue their work in Kabul. It supports the efforts of the office of the coordinator for humanitarian affairs in its current talks with the Taliban in order to ensure adequate conditions for the delivery of aid by humanitarian organizations.

The Council remains deeply concerned at the continuing discrimination against girls and women and other violations of human rights as well as violations of international humanitarian law in Afghanistan.

The Council calls upon all parties to respect international conventions regarding the treatment of prisoners of war and the rights of non-combatants.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Communications. On 16 September [A/53/391-S/1998/860], Afghanistan transmitted a note from its Ministry of Foreign Affairs, in which it accused Pakistan of carrying out air raids against residential areas of Bamyan and alleged that Taliban forces, advised by Pakistani officers, had violated the human rights of civilians in central Afghanistan. Pakistan, on 18 September [A/53/436-S/1998/893], called those accusations baseless and false and reaffirmed its opposition to outside interference in Afghanistan's internal affairs. Afghanistan asserted on 7 October [A/53/468-S/1998/929] that Pakistani military personnel dispatched to Taliban-occupied areas since 1994 had grown to an estimated 800; together with various Pakistani paramilitary organizations, armed "volunteers" and other combatant groups fighting alongside the Taliban, Pakistanis currently in Afghanistan numbered around 33,000.

Other communications from a number of States—China, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan—issued individually or jointly among several of them between 17 March and 12 October, expressed concern about the escalation of the fighting and bloodshed in Afghanistan. The communications called for a halt to outside interference in Afghanistan's internal affairs and for the immediate cessation of hostilities [A/53/224-S/1998/743, A/53/277-S/1998/787, A/52/1027-S/1998/821]. Expressing concern also over the threat of cross-border fighting, drug trafficking and aggressive religious extremism, the States that could potentially be affected called for stepped-up efforts towards a peaceful settlement of the Afghan conflict, including offers to meet with the warring parties and a suggestion for a peace conference, and for the strengthening of the security arrangements between or among them [A/52/870-S/1998/317, A/52/978, A/53/216-S/1998/724, A/53/503-S/1998/954, A/53/506-S/1998/958].

Intra-Afghan talks

In January, Afghanistan's President, Burhanuddin Rabbani, accepted the Taliban's December 1997 proposal for a commission of ulema, or religious scholars, as a forum for such a negotiated settlement in the light of the sharia, or Islamic legal code. The proposal was endorsed by Pakistan's Prime Minister, Nawaz Sharif. The Secretary-General reported in June [A/52/957-S/1998/532] that Prime Minister Sharif had subsequently obtained from the head of the Taliban shura (Council) in Kabul agreement for the convening of a steering committee composed of representatives of the Afghan factions in preparation for the ulema commission. As negotiated by Special Envoy for Afghanistan Brahimi, a joint 14-member Afghan Steering Committee was constituted, which met on 26 April in Islamabad, under the auspices of the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC). After three days of debate on the definition of ulema, the two sides settled on a compromise to form an ulema commission of 20 persons from each side, whose credentials neither could challenge. Unfortunately, the meeting failed to conclude the debate on the remaining agenda items and collapsed when UF refused to accept an alternate Taliban delegation to replace four of the original five delegates who failed to return from consultations in Kandahar. The meeting adjourned on 3 May. On 17 May, the Taliban informed UNSMA that it had abandoned the idea of an ulema commission as a forum for intra-Afghan talks. The collapse of the meeting led to renewed fighting in Konduz and north of Kabul, with increased rocket attacks on the north-western province of Badghis.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 14 July [meeting 3906], the Security Council considered the Secretary-General's June report [A/52/957-S/1998/532]. After consultations among the members, the Council authorized its President to make the following statement [S/PRST/1998/22] on its behalf:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 19 June 1998 concerning the situation in Afghanistan.

The Council reaffirms its strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Afghanistan, and respect for its cultural and historical heritage. It reiterates its concern at the increasingly ethnic nature of the conflict, and at the continuing threat this poses to the unity of the Afghan State.

The Council expresses its grave concern at the continued Afghan conflict, which is a serious threat to regional and international security, and causes extensive human suffering, further destruction, refugee flows and other forcible displacement of large numbers of people.

The Council deplores the fact that military support, including the supply of arms and other related materiel, from outside Afghanistan to the warring factions continues unabated, despite repeated pleas to halt it made by the Council, the General Assembly and the Secretary-General. It reiterates its call to all States, in particular those in the region, to cease such interference immediately.

The Council considers it necessary that more active efforts be undertaken under the aegis of the United Nations and with the participation of interested countries aimed at a peaceful settlement of the Afghan conflict, taking into account the interests of all ethnic and religious groups and political forces involved therein.

The Council deplores the breakdown of the intra-Afghan talks in Islamabad and calls upon the parties to respect the wishes of the overwhelming majority of Afghans, to stop the fighting, to return without delay and preconditions to the negotiating table and to engage in a political dialogue aimed at achieving national reconciliation, a lasting political settlement of the conflict, which has no military solution, and the formation of a broad-based fully representative government. As an initial step towards that goal, the Council calls upon the parties to agree immediately on a ceasefire, an exchange of prisoners, and the lifting of all restrictions on the shipments of humanitarian supplies throughout the country.

The Council reiterates its position that the United Nations, as a universally recognized intermediary, must continue to play its central and impartial role in international efforts towards a peaceful resolution of the Afghan conflict, and extends its full support for the activities of the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan and those of the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan.

The Council takes note of the assessment of the Secretary-General that loya Jirgah as an informal, time-honoured Afghan method of settling disputes, advocated by some leaders of non-warring Afghan factions, continues to deserve attention, and encourages the Special Mission to continue to maintain useful contacts with them.

The Council commends the work of the "six plus two" group and calls upon all countries involved in the group to continue to participate in good faith with the aim of elaborating, on the basis of the agreed talking points, a coherent approach to the peacemaking efforts in Afghanistan, including the problem of curbing the flow of arms and other related materiel into Afghanistan in an effective and even-handed manner. It welcomes and encourages the additional support of other Member States for this process.

The Council urges all Afghan factions to cooperate fully with the Special Mission and international humanitarian organizations and calls upon them, in particular the Taliban, to take all necessary steps to assure the safety and freedom of movement of such personnel.

The Council acknowledges the signing of the memorandum of understanding between the United Nations and the Taliban on humanitarian issues and stresses the importance of its full implementation, including full respect for immunities of United Nations staff and for the assistance of the United Nations in health and education. Noting that some of the obstacles to the provision of assistance to Hazarajat have been overcome, it nevertheless remains concerned at the continuing use by the Taliban of United Nations humanitarian aid as a weapon against the Hazara and demands that this practice cease immediately. The Council also remains concerned at the lack of supplies coming from the northern route due to insecurity and looting. It calls upon all Afghan factions to lift unconditionally any blockade of humanitarian relief supplies.

The Council is concerned at recent reports of harassment of humanitarian organizations and at the unilateral decision by the Taliban to relocate humanitarian organizations' offices in Kabul. It calls upon all factions to facilitate the work of humanitarian agencies to the greatest extent possible.

The Council remains deeply concerned at the continuing discrimination against girls and women and other violations of human rights as well as violations of international humanitarian law in Afghanistan.

The Council supports the steps of the Secretary-General to launch investigations into alleged mass killings of prisoners of war and civilians in Afghanistan, the outcome of which will be submitted to the General Assembly and the Council as soon as it becomes available.

The Council reiterates that the continuation of the conflict in Afghanistan provides a fertile ground for terrorism and illegal drug production and trafficking which destabilize the region and beyond, and calls upon the leaders of the Afghan parties to halt such activities.

The Council will remain seized of the matter and requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep it regularly informed of the situation in Afghanistan.

Killing of Iranian nationals

Following the Taliban's occupation of Mazar-e-Sharif on 8 August, Iran reported that 11 of its diplomats and one press correspondent, all stationed at the Iranian Consulate-General in that city, were missing. On 10 September, the Taliban announced the recovery of the bodies of eight of the diplomats and the correspondent, stating that they had been killed on the first day of the city's occupation by Taliban soldiers acting without instructions. The Secretary-General later reported that the remaining Iranian diplomats had managed to escape and had made their way to Iran [A/53/695-S/1998/1109].

Communications. On 18 August [S/1998/776], Iran informed the Secretary-General and the Security Council that, apart from the 11 Iranian diplomats and the correspondent of the Islamic Republic News Agency, 36 Iranian relief workers had been detained by the Taliban and transferred to Kandahar. Iran asked the United Nations to use its good offices to seek the immediate release of all detained Iranians. Annexed to the letter was a list of all the Iranian nationals in question. On 2 September [A/53/317-S/1998/832], Iran requested the dispatch of a fact-finding mission to Afghanistan to determine the fate of the missing Iranians about whom it had received contradictory reports. Upon the Taliban's confirmation that its forces had killed the diplomats, Iran asked the Council on 10 September [A/53/360-S/1998/846] to condemn that war crime and called for the arrest of the perpetrators and their extradition to Iran for prosecution. Kazakhstan, on 13 September [A/53/388-S/1998/851], asserted that such a barbaric act should be immediately considered by the General Assembly and the Council.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

When the Iranians were first reported missing, the Security Council, in resolution 1193(1998) of 28 August, condemned the capture of the Iranian Consulate and demanded that all parties, and in particular the Taliban, do everything possible to ensure the safe and dignified passage out of Afghanistan of the Consulate personnel and other Iranian nationals missing in Afghanistan.

On 15 September [meeting 3926], the Council, following consultations among its members, authorized its President to make the following statement [S/PRST/1998/27] on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council strongly condemns the murder of Iranian diplomats in Afghanistan by Taliban combatants. This was a crime committed in flagrant violation of international law and despite repeated assurances by the Taliban leaders guaranteeing the safety and security of the personnel of foreign missions in Mazar-e-Sharif. The killing of Iranian diplomats by Taliban combatants has seriously increased tension in the region.

The Council expresses its deepest condolences to the families of the Iranian diplomats and to the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran. It believes that this criminal act should be fully investigated with the participation of the United Nations with a view to prosecuting those responsible. The Council demands that the Taliban release other Iranians detained in Afghanistan and ensure their safe and dignified passage out of Afghanistan without further delay.

The Council recalls its condemnation of the murders of members of the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan and the personnel of humanitarian agencies in areas controlled by the Taliban and demands that these crimes be investigated and the Taliban ensure the safety and security of all international personnel.

The Council expresses its deep concern at the escalating military operations in the Bamiyan province and at reports of mass killings of civilians in northern Afghanistan. It demands that the Taliban fully respect international humanitarian law and human rights.

The Council calls upon all concerned to exercise maximum restraint. It also calls upon the parties, in particular the Taliban, to take action in response to the strong concerns expressed by the international community, to stop fighting and resume negotiations aimed at achieving a peaceful settlement of the conflict on the basis of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Council.

The Council will keep the situation under close review and is prepared to consider urgently further action.

The General Assembly, in resolution 53/203 A of 18 December, also condemned the murder of the Iranian diplomats and correspondent.

Further communications. On 16 September [S/1998/869], Iran reported that the Taliban had attacked, occupied and looted its Consulate-General and Cultural House in the city of Bamiyan. There was no word on the whereabouts of the local staff, except one who had been set on fire. On 8 October [S/1998/934], Iran stated that it had responded to an attack on its territory by the Taliban militia, with proportionate military action.

UN activities

UN Special Mission to Afghanistan

As mandated by General Assembly resolution 52/211 B [YUN 1997, p. 262], UNSMA continued its efforts to facilitate national reconciliation and reconstruction in Afghanistan and to explore opportunities to promote dialogue between the warring parties. Established in 1993 by Assembly resolution 48/208 [YUN 1993, p. 732], UNSMA, which operated from Islamabad, was under the direction of James C. Ngobi (Uganda), Acting Head, from 29 December 1997 to the end of his assignment on 21 December 1998. Thereafter, Andrew Tesoriere (United Kingdom) was appointed Officer-in-Charge. Together with the UN Department of Political Affairs, the Special Envoy for Afghanistan, Lakhdar Brahimi, continued to oversee and guide the activities of UNSMA, including its coordination and cooperation with humanitarian and other UN activities in the country.

UNSMA held a round of meetings in January and February with the Taliban and UF to test the climate for peace talks. Following the collapse of the Steering Committee meeting in May (see above), UNSMA began a fresh round of talks to explore possible new avenues to restart face-to-face talks. In addition to monitoring military and political developments, it continued its normal programme of: contacts with various Afghan leaders, as well as with non-partisan Afghan groups and individuals within and outside Afghanistan who advanced a number of their own peace proposals, such as organizing a loya jirgah, or grand assembly, for the settlement of the conflict; consultations with intergovernmental groups in the region; and regular activities within the community of UN agencies and NGOs under the common programming arrangements for Afghanistan. It also responded to allegations of human rights violations.

Throughout 1998, UNSMA remained in contact with the Pakistani authorities in Islamabad, stressing that national reconciliation could be achieved only with the support and cooperation of neighbouring States. It kept abreast of the joint peace initiative begun early in July by Pakistan and Iran, which undertook two missions to the seat of the UF leadership in Mazar-e-Sharif and that of the Taliban in Kandahar. A progress report intended for review by the "six plus two" group was unfortunately made redundant by the military situation.

Attacks on UNSMA and other UN personnel

On 21 August, UNSMA's Political Affairs Officer and a Deputy Military Adviser were shot and severely wounded in Kabul, after their clearly marked UN vehicle was intercepted by a vehicle bearing official Taliban markings. The Deputy Military Adviser, Lieutenant-Colonel Carmine Calo (Italy), died of his wounds the next day. As at November, a UN request for a full report on the incident was still being awaited from the Taliban authorities, which had only expressed regret, with the information that two suspects, identified as Pakistani nationals, had been arrested. Pakistan said it could not identify the two suspects.

Earlier, on 13 July, two locally recruited staff members, employed by UNHCR and WFP, were abducted in Jalalabad and later found murdered elsewhere.

As a result of those fatal attacks on UN personnel and other incidents, the United Nations ordered the evacuation of all its international staff from the country on 21 August. It would make an assessment of whether or when UN personnel, programmes and funds should return to Afghanistan, provided the Taliban submitted to it full reports on the incidents described above and was ready to cooperate according to the provisions of the 13 May Memorandum of Understanding and of its supplementary protocol (see below, under "Humanitarian assistance").

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 August [meeting 3921 & resumed 3921J, following a debate on the murders and escalating conflict in Afghanistan, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1193(1998), based on a 17-nation draft [S/1998/810].

The Security Council,

Having considered the situation in Afghanistan,

Recalling its resolution 1076(1996) of 22 October 1996 and the statements of the President of the Security Council on the situation in Afghanistan,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 52/211 A and B of 19 December 1997,

Expressing its grave concern at the continued Afghan conflict which has recently escalated sharply as a result of the offensive by the Taliban forces in the northern parts of the country, causing a serious and growing threat to regional and international peace and security, as well as extensive human suffering, further destruction, refugee flows and other forcible displacement of large numbers of people,

Concerned by the increasingly ethnic nature of the conflict, by reports of ethnic and religious-based persecution, particularly against the Shiites, and by the threat this poses to the unity of the Afghan State,

Reaffirming its strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Afghanistan, and its respect for its cultural and historical heritage,

Deploping the fact that despite repeated pleas by the Council, the General Assembly and the Secretary-General to halt foreign interference in Afghanistan, including the involvement of foreign military personnel and the supply of arms and ammunition to all parties in the conflict, such interference continues unabated,

Reiterating its view that the United Nations must continue to play its central and impartial role in international efforts towards a peaceful resolution of the Afghan conflict,

Deeply concerned at the serious humanitarian crisis in Afghanistan, and deploping in this regard the measures taken by the Taliban which resulted in the evacuation of the United Nations humanitarian personnel from Afghanistan, and expressing hope for their early return under conditions of security,

Expressing its grave concern at the capture by the Taliban of the Consulate-General of the Islamic Republic of Iran in Mazar-e-Sharif and at the fate of the personnel of the Consulate-General and of other Iranian nationals missing in Afghanistan,

Deeply disturbed by the deteriorating security conditions for United Nations and other international and humanitarian personnel,

Deeply concerned at the continuing presence of terrorists in the territory of Afghanistan and at the production and trafficking of drugs,

Remaining deeply concerned at the continuing discrimination against girls and women and at other violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law in Afghanistan,

1. Reiterates that the Afghan crisis can be settled only by peaceful means, through direct negotiations between the Afghan factions under United Nations auspices, aimed at achieving a solution accommodating the rights and interests of all Afghans, and stresses that territorial gains through military operations will neither lead to a durable peace in Afghanistan, nor contribute to a comprehensive settlement of the conflict in this multicultural and multi-ethnic country;

2. Demands that all Afghan factions stop fighting, resume negotiations without delay and preconditions, and cooperate with the aim of creating a broad-based and fully representative government, which would protect the rights of all Afghans and would observe the international obligations of Afghanistan;

3. Reiterates once again that any outside interference in the internal affairs of Afghanistan should cease immediately, and calls upon all States to take resolute measures to prohibit their military personnel from planning and participating in military operations in Afghanistan and immediately to end the supply of arms and ammunition to all parties to the conflict;

4. Calls upon all States neighbouring Afghanistan and other States with influence in the country to intensify their efforts under the aegis of the United Nations to bring the parties to a negotiated settlement;

5. Reaffirms its full support for the efforts of the United Nations, in particular the activities of the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan and those of the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan, in facilitating the political process towards the goals of national reconciliation and a lasting political settlement with the participation of all parties to the conflict and all segments of Afghan society;

6. Condemns the attacks on the United Nations personnel in the Taliban-held territories of Afghanistan, including the killing of the two Afghan staff members of the World Food Programme and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in Jalalabad, and of the Military Adviser to the Special Mission in Kabul, and calls upon the Taliban to investigate urgently these heinous crimes and to keep the United Nations informed about the results of the investigation;

7. Demands that all Afghan factions and, in particular, the Taliban, do everything possible to assure the safety and freedom of movement of the personnel of the United Nations and other international and humanitarian personnel;

8. Condemns the capture of the Consulate-General of the Islamic Republic of Iran in Mazar-e-Sharif, and demands that all parties and, in particular, the Taliban, do everything possible to ensure safe and dignified passage out of Afghanistan of the personnel of the Consulate-General and other Iranian nationals missing in Afghanistan;

9. Urges all Afghan factions and, in particular, the Taliban, to facilitate the work of the international humanitarian organizations and to ensure unimpeded access and adequate conditions for the delivery of aid by such organizations to all in need of it;

10. Appeals to all States, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, specialized agencies and other international organizations to resume the provision of humanitarian assistance to all in need of it in Afghanistan as soon as the situation on the ground permits;

11. Expresses its readiness to call, on a priority basis, for all possible financial, technical and material assistance for the reconstruction of Afghanistan once the conditions are established by the achievement of lasting peaceful solution of the Afghan conflict, and for the voluntary, safe and secure return of refugees and internally displaced persons;

12. Reaffirms that all parties to the conflict are bound to comply with their obligations under international humanitarian law and, in particular, the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and that persons who commit or order the commission of grave breaches of the Conventions are individually responsible in respect of such breaches;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to continue investigations into alleged mass killings of prisoners of war and civilians as well as the forced displacement of large groups of the population based on their ethnic origin and other forms of mass persecution in Afghanistan, and to submit the reports to the General Assembly and the Council as soon as they become available;

14. Urges the Afghan factions to put an end to the discrimination against girls and women and to other violations of human rights, as well as violations of international humanitarian law, and to adhere to the internationally accepted norms and standards in this sphere;

15. Demands that the Afghan factions refrain from harbouring and training terrorists and their organizations and halt illegal drug activities;

16. Reminds all parties of the obligation to abide strictly by the decisions of the Council, and expresses its firm intention, in accordance with its responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations, to consider such further steps as may be required for the implementation of the present resolution;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep it regularly informed of the situation in Afghanistan;

18. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Civil Affairs Unit

The Secretary-General, on 23 November [S/1998/1139], notified the Security Council that, following the Special Envoy's 4 November briefing of the Council regarding his proposal to the Taliban leadership for the establishment of a mechanism to prevent gross violations of human rights, the Department of Political Affairs had moved the concept forward in contacts with all Afghan parties. In view of their agreement in principle to the deployment of civilian monitors in Afghanistan, the Secretary-General stated his intention to establish a Civil Affairs Unit within UNSMA, to be staffed initially by 12 civilian monitors, whose primary objectives would be to monitor the situation, seek to promote respect for minimum humanitarian standards and to deter massive systematic violations of human rights and humanitarian law. The monitors would supplement the core role of UNSMA in assisting the Special Envoy in his peacemaking activities, monitor the overall political and military situation, and maintain contacts with all Afghan factions, as well as with Governments and organizations concerned with the country's future.

The Secretary-General proposed sending an assessment mission to Afghanistan as soon as security conditions permitted to determine the exact mandate, composition and location of the civilian monitors.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 8 December [meeting 3952] to consider the Secretary-General's proposal and his November report [A/53/695-S/1998/1109]. The Council unanimously adopted resolution 1214(1998), based on a draft [S/1998/1140] prepared in the course of consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Having considered the situation in Afghanistan,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 1189(1998) of 13 August 1998 and 1193(1998) of 28 August 1998, and the statements by its President on the situation in Afghanistan,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 52/211 A and B of 19 December 1997,

Expressing its grave concern at the continued Afghan conflict, which has recently escalated sharply as a result of the offensive by the Taliban forces, which is continuing despite the repeated pleas by the Security Council to cease the fighting, and is causing a serious and growing threat to regional and international peace and security, as well as extensive human suffering, further destruction, refugee flows and other forcible displacement of large numbers of people,

Deploping the fact that despite the readiness of the United Front of Afghanistan to conclude a durable ceasefire and to enter into a political dialogue with the Taliban, fighting continues on both sides,

Concerned by the increasingly ethnic nature of the conflict, by reports of ethnic and religion-based persecution, particularly against the Shiites, and by the threat this poses to the unity of the Afghan State,

Reaffirming its strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Afghanistan, and its respect for its cultural and historical heritage,

Reiterating that any outside interference in the internal affairs of Afghanistan, including the involvement of foreign military personnel and the supply of arms and ammunition to all parties to the conflict, should cease immediately,

Reaffirming its full support for the efforts of the United Nations, in particular the activities of the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan and those of the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan, in facilitating the political process towards the goals of national reconciliation and a lasting political settlement with the participation of all parties to the conflict and all segments of Afghan society, and reiterating its position that the United Nations must continue to play its central and impartial role in international efforts towards a peaceful resolution of the Afghan conflict,

Welcoming the work of the "six plus two" group, and supporting in this regard the "points of common understanding" adopted at its meeting at the level of Ministers for Foreign Affairs, convened and chaired by the Secretary-General on 21 September 1998,

Deeply concerned at the serious and rapidly deteriorating humanitarian crisis in Afghanistan, deploring in this regard the measures taken by the Taliban which resulted in the evacuation of the United Nations humanitarian personnel from Afghanistan, and underlining the urgent need for the prompt implementation of the necessary security requirements to allow their early return,

Reaffirming that all parties to the conflict are bound to comply with their obligations under international humanitarian law and, in particular, under the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and that persons who commit or order the commission of breaches of the Conventions are individually responsible in respect of such breaches,

Deeply disturbed by the continuing use of Afghan territory, especially areas controlled by the Taliban, for the sheltering and training of terrorists and the planning of terrorist acts, and reiterating that the suppression of international terrorism is essential for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Deeply disturbed also by the growing cultivation, production and trafficking of drugs in Afghanistan, especially in areas controlled by the Taliban,

Reiterating its deep concern at the continuing discrimination against girls and women and at other violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law in Afghanistan,

1. Demands that the Taliban, as well as other Afghan factions, stop fighting, conclude a ceasefire and resume negotiations without delay and preconditions under the auspices of the United Nations, and cooperate with the aim of creating a broad-based and fully representative government, which would protect the rights of all Afghans and observe the international obligations of Afghanistan;

2. Welcomes the progress made by the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan in his efforts based on resolution 1193(1998) and its relevant preceding resolutions to reduce tensions in the region and towards improving the human rights and humanitarian situation in Afghanistan, and calls upon all concerned to implement fully the commitments they have already entered into;

3. Reiterates its very strong support and appreciation for the continuing efforts of the Special Envoy to secure the full implementation of its resolutions, and demands that all parties, in particular the Taliban, cooperate in good faith with these efforts;

4. Reiterates its strong call upon the Taliban to inform the United Nations without further delay about the results of the investigation into the killing of the two Afghan staff members of the World Food Programme and of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in Jalalabad, and of the Military Adviser to the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan in Kabul;

5. Condemns the capture by the Taliban of the Consulate-General of the Islamic Republic of Iran and the murder of the Iranian diplomats and a journalist in Mazar-e-Sharif, stresses that these acts constitute flagrant violations of international law, and calls upon the Taliban to cooperate with the United Nations in investigating these crimes with a view to prosecuting those responsible;

6. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to dispatch a mission to Afghanistan to investigate numerous reports of grave breaches and serious violations of international humanitarian law in that country, in particular mass killings and mass graves of prisoners of war and civilians and the destruction of religious sites, and urges all parties, especially the Taliban, to cooperate with this mission and, in particular, to assure the safety and freedom of movement of its personnel;

7. Supports the proposal of the Secretary-General, as contained in his letter dated 23 November 1998 to the President of the Security Council, to establish within the Special Mission, without prejudice to its mandate and taking into account security conditions, a civil affairs unit with the primary objective of monitoring the situation, promoting respect for minimum humanitarian standards and deterring massive and systematic violations of human rights and humanitarian law in the future, and to send an assessment mission to Afghanistan, as soon as security conditions permit, in order to determine the exact mandate, composition and location of the civilian monitors;

8. Encourages the initiatives of the "six plus two" group to facilitate the peace process in Afghanistan;

9. Also encourages the additional support of other Member States for the peace process in Afghanistan;

10. Reiterates its call upon all States to take resolute measures to prohibit their military personnel from planning and participating in military operations in Afghanistan and immediately to end the supply of arms and ammunition to all parties to the conflict;

11. Urges all Afghan factions and, in particular, the Taliban, to demonstrate their full commitment to the safety and security of all international and humanitarian personnel, which is a prerequisite for their activities in Afghanistan, to facilitate their work and to ensure unimpeded access and adequate conditions for the delivery of aid to all in need of it;

12. Demands that the Afghan factions put an end to discrimination against girls and women and other violations of human rights, as well as violations of international humanitarian law, and adhere to the international norms and standards in this sphere;

13. Demands also that the Taliban stop providing sanctuary and training for international terrorists and their organizations, and that all Afghan factions cooperate with efforts to bring indicted terrorists to justice;

14. Demands further that the Taliban, as well as others, halt the cultivation, production and trafficking of illegal drugs;

15. Deplores the failure of the leadership of the Taliban, in particular, to take measures to comply with the demands made in its previous resolutions, especially to conclude a ceasefire and to resume negotiations, and in this context expresses its readiness to consider the imposition of measures, in accordance with its responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations, with the aim of achieving the full implementation of its relevant resolutions;

16. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

The General Assembly, by resolution 53/203 A of 18 December, endorsed the Secretary-General's proposal for the creation of a Civil Affairs Unit within UNSMA.

Special Envoy

The Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan, Lakhdar Brahimi, undertook two missions in 1998. During the first (20 March-15 April), he visited Afghanistan's neighbouring countries to urge them—Iran and Pakistan in particular—to cooperate in curbing the flow of arms and ammunition to the Afghan factions. Before the mission, he had held talks with the Foreign Ministers of Iran, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia and other concerned Governments during the twenty-fifth ministerial meeting of OIC (15-18 March). During his visits to Pakistan, Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan, Kabul and Tehran, the Special Envoy held wide-ranging consultations on the situation in Afghanistan with heads of State and high-level officials, as well as with UF and Taliban leaders. In Peshawar and Lahore, Pakistan, he met with various Pakistani officials and political leaders, as well as with Afghan personalities, representatives of the Afghan parties, refugee groups and women's organizations, and international and Afghan NGOs. In his meetings with Taliban leaders in Kabul, he discussed how to proceed with the idea of a steering committee to prepare for the Taliban-proposed ulema commission.

The second mission (29 September-25 October) took the Special Envoy to Iran, Pakistan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, the United Arab Emirates and Uzbekistan. His consultations addressed the reported mass killings of civilians in the wake of the Taliban offensive into northern Afghanistan and the mounting tension between Iran and the Taliban.

At the invitation of the supreme leader of the Taliban, the Special Envoy also visited Kandahar on 14 October when he secured the Taliban leadership's agreement to release all Iranians taken from Mazar-e-Sharif and detained in Kandahar, to cooperate with an international mission of inquiry into the killing of the Iranian diplomats, to hold a meeting with Iran at a senior political level, and to cooperate with an international investigation into the reported mass killings and mass graves in Mazar-e-Sharif and elsewhere. Subsequently, the United Nations, in coordination with ICRC, received 26 Iranian truck drivers from Kandahar jails and repatriated them to Tehran on 17 October. UNSMA and ICRC were conducting an inquiry into the whereabouts of one Iranian reportedly still in detention.

In his talks with the Taliban leadership, the Special Envoy stressed the need for a broad-based, multi-ethnic government with genuine power-sharing and for the creation of conditions under which all ethnic and religious groups could live in harmony. In Tehran, he suggested that Iran might take reciprocal steps, such as releasing a comparable number of Taliban prisoners, withdrawing a substantial part of its troops from the border, and opening direct dialogue with the Taliban at the political level.

In December, the Special Envoy returned to Iran and Pakistan to consult with high-level officials and Afghan leaders.

Communication. Iran, on 3 October and 7 December [S/1999/544], informed Afghanistan of reports of violations committed against Iranian territory. It considered such border violations by armed Afghan forces and bandits a threat to peace and security at the border of the two countries and reserved the right to protect international borders.

UN Headquarters action

In the context of the Secretary-General's call for a solid international framework to address the external aspects of the Afghan question, the Special Envoy and the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs convened the fourth (3 March), fifth (July), sixth (21 August) and seventh (21 September) meetings of the "six plus two" group (China, Iran, Pakistan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan, and the Russian Federation and the United States). In March, the group finalized "common talking points on Afghanistan", annexed to the Secretary-General's June report [A/52/826-S/1998/2221], which called for a fair and verifiable arms embargo to check the flow of arms and other supplies to the warring parties.

The group pointed to the need for a representative government, the start of negotiations under UN auspices with OIC participation, confidence-building measures by the parties and agreement on a ceasefire, including a monitoring mechanism. The United Nations would continue its central role in the peaceful resolution of the Afghan conflict and, with the "group of eight", mobilize the international community for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Afghanistan once relative normality and stability prevailed. It was noted at the July meeting that the United States was the only member using the talking points in its Afghan contacts.

The September meeting, held at the ministerial level, adopted "points of common understanding", annexed to the Secretary-General's October report [A/53/455-S/1998/9131, which called on all Afghan forces to release immediately detained non-combatants, including Iranians; on the United Nations to investigate reported mass killings and mass graves in the country and resume humanitarian assistance, with all Afghan factions providing safe and secure conditions under internationally accepted norms; and on the Taliban to cooperate with an international investigation into the killings of the UN staff and the Iranian diplomats and to expedite the return of their remains, to respect international humanitarian law and human rights, including the rights of women, to cease providing a haven to international terrorists and to prevent the production and trafficking of narcotics.

In addition, the Under-Secretary-General convoked the fourth (1 June) and fifth (29 October) meetings of the group of 21 countries with influence in Afghanistan: China, Egypt, France, Germany, India, Iran, Italy, Japan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Netherlands, Pakistan, the Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Sweden, Tajikistan, Turkey, Turkmenistan, the United Kingdom, the United States and Uzbekistan, as well as OIC. The meetings supported the Secretary-General's approach to the Afghan conflict, namely, that the international community should speak with one coherent voice.

Humanitarian assistance

The ongoing conflict in parts of Afghanistan continued to impede the international community's ability to respond to widespread humanitarian emergencies arising from the conflict and natural disasters. Access to some vulnerable populations, particularly in the central and north-eastern areas, was limited, resulting in some cases in the loss of pre-positioned supplies, notably of food. During his visit to the country (20-25 February), the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator, Sergio Vieira de Mello, underlined the importance of improved security and of a unified, coherent and consistent approach by UN agencies in the implementation of humanitarian assistance programmes.

On 24 March, the United Nations suspended its activities in southern and south-western Afghanistan, including the Kandahar region. They were resumed on 28 May after the signing of a 23-point Memorandum of Understanding between the United Nations and the Taliban. During July and August, all UN and agency international staff, as well as most NGOs, had to withdraw from Afghanistan due to three events: the July order by the Kabul authorities that NCOs either relocate to a common compound or leave the country; increased fighting in the northern and central regions in August; and the United States missile attack on suspected terrorist training camps in Khost late that month. Subsequently, NGOs were allowed to resume activities from their Kabul offices, pending rehabilitation of the designated common compound and conditional upon the registration of the returning NGOs with the Kabul authorities. The temporary withdrawal of UN international staff restricted the ability of UN agencies, which continued to operate with the support of Afghan national staff, to deliver humanitarian assistance.

Following the 21 August attack on UN personnel (see above), the UN agencies subscribed to a "Next Steps Paper", setting out principles, strategic objectives and requirements to be met by the Afghan authorities. In the context of that paper, the United Nations and the Taliban, on 23 October, signed a supplementary protocol to their 13 May Memorandum of Understanding, which spelt out specific security arrangements for UN personnel.

The Afghanistan Support Group held two meetings during the annual reporting period: its second (New York, 3 December 1997) and third (London, 5 May 1998). The earlier meeting discussed, among other matters, the political and security situation in the country; a strategic framework for the implementation of international assistance; human rights, gender and related issues; and drug control. The later meeting endorsed the new common programming approach for assistance to Afghanistan, the phased implementation of which began in July. Participating in those meetings were major donor countries, including Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway, the Russian Federation, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States, the European Commission, UN agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs.

Communication. The Presidency of the EU issued a 28 July statement [A/52/998] expressing EU concern over the Taliban decision forcefully to close the offices of international NGOs, expel their foreign workers and imprison their local personnel. The EU further condemned the violation of the premises of its humanitarian office in Kabul and the treatment of its local staff. As a result, the EU, donor of two thirds of all humanitarian aid to Afghanistan, was obliged to suspend funding for projects in Kabul. (For further information on humanitarian assistance, see PART THREE, Chapter III.)

Human rights violations

On the recommendation of an UNSMA team that visited mass graves in Sheberghan, allegedly of Taliban prisoners massacred by Northern Alliance (later referred to as the United Front) forces in the summer of 1997, the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan of the Commission on Human Rights visited the sites (30 November-13 December 1997), including villages near Mazar-e-Sharif, where, in September 1997, retreating Taliban troops allegedly massacred the elders, women and children. In January 1998, the Northern Alliance called on the United Nations to investigate alleged new atrocities of murder, rape, beatings, abduction, looting and arson perpetrated by Taliban soldiers during their two-week occupation of Faryab Province in December 1997. The Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights dispatched an exploratory mission to northern Afghanistan in May to determine ways and means of launching a full investigation into the allegations.

The situation of women and girls in all areas under Taliban control had deteriorated. They continued to be denied access to adequate health care, all levels of education, employment and at times to humanitarian assistance. A number of them were reportedly abducted and raped during the Taliban siege of the north in August.

(For the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, see PART TWO, Chapter III; for the situation of women and girls in Afghanistan, see PART TWO, Chapter II, and PART THREE, Chapter X.)

Communications. In a series of communications between 6 January and 25 November, Afghanistan drew the attention of the Secretary-General and the Security Council to human rights violations perpetrated by the Taliban. Among them was the massacre of some 600 unarmed civilians during the Taliban occupation of Faryab on 1-2 January, forcing the exodus of as many as 20,000 civilians into Faryab's Almar district and the provincial capital of Maimana, as well as the mass graves of civilians. Afghanistan called for an investigation into the matter [A/52/759-S/1998/8]. Afghanistan transmitted an Amnesty International news release [A/53/397-S/1998/904] describing, among other atrocities, the systematic killing of thousands of ethnic Hazara civilians in Mazar-e-Sharif after the Taliban takeover on 8 August.

Afghanistan alleged that the city of Bamyan, already suffering from months of a food blockade, was bombed on 12-13 September, followed by a ground assault by a joint Pakistani-Taliban mercenary force, which plundered property, set houses ablaze, took away as many as 2,500 young men and rounded up some 12,000 civilians for destinations unknown [A/53/391-S/1998/860]; and that the Taliban militia retreating from Taloqan into the Andarab valley in October took as many as 760 people, mostly ethnic Tajik men, as part of a campaign to change the demographic composition of the country [A/53/540-S/1998/999]. Afghanistan drew attention to the 1 November issue of the London Sunday Times about the Taliban's slaughter of up to 8,000 people in Mazar-e-Sharif [A/53/639-S/1998/1036]; the imprisonment of thousands of civilians in premises resembling concentration camps [A/53/697-S/1998/111]; and a Pakistani news report of the mining of the 10-kilometre strip between Nijrab and Tagab in Kapisa Province [A/53/704-S/1998/1121]. In addition, the EU, concerned by reports of massacres of innocent civilians, mass executions of prisoners of war in northern Afghanistan, killings of Hazars in Mazar-e-Sharif and air rocket attacks on residential areas, called on all the parties involved fully to respect international humanitarian law and human rights in all parts of Afghanistan. It stated that it would welcome an international presence to observe compliance with those rights [A/53/446-S/1998/905 & Corr.1].

Drug control

The pilot country programme developed for Afghanistan by the United Nations International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP) in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1281] was based on a commitment to fund development projects in specific poppy-growing areas in exchange for the Taliban's agreement not to permit cultivation of opium poppy in new areas, to allow UNDCP to survey the opium poppy crop, to take action against the trafficking of illicit drugs and to destroy illicit laboratories. Projects to reduce poppy crop focused on rehabilitating small irrigation systems, desilting canals and maintaining canal structures, restoring a power station, developing community service infrastructures and introducing new, improved seeds to farmers as substitutes for opium poppy. In all, 71 sub-projects were approved, of which 54 related directly to poppy-crop reduction. The fifth annual opium poppy survey of Afghanistan revealed that the overall area under cultivation increased by 9 per cent to 63,674 hectares. Despite the agreement reached with the Taliban, opium poppy cultivation had spread to several new districts in areas under its control. Aside from the destruction of 2 metric tons of opium in Jalalabad in June, no enforcement action against the illegal production and trafficking of opiates was reported by the Taliban authorities. (See also PART THREE, Chapter XIV.)

Tajikistan

Final implementation of the 1997 General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan (the General Agreement), informally slated for July 1998, did not materialize. The delay was due in part to competing priorities of the parties to the General Agreement—the Government and the United Tajik Opposition (UTO)—creating mistrust between them. In mid-January, citing the Government's perceived lack of political will to move forward, UTO withdrew for a week from the joint Commission on National Reconciliation (CNR), the main implementation body. In May, the Parliament decided not to confirm the cabinet appointments of the two most senior UTO members and amended the CNR bill on political parties so that those based on religion would be banned from participating in the country's political life; a compromise draft bill remained pending in Parliament. In July, the murder of four members of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan (UNMOT) resulted in the temporary suspension of UNMOT's assistance to the demobilization operation, a critical component of the implementation process. Following the assassination in September of a prominent UTO member of CNR, UTO again briefly withdrew from CNR.

Further detracting from CNR's implementation efforts were repeated clashes between government police or security forces and individual UTO elements or unaffiliated groups, over whom the parties appeared to exercise limited control, including a full-scale anti-government uprising in Leninabad in November. A complicating factor was the precarious security situation in the country, characterized by Prévalent crime, hostage-taking, including of relief workers, and political assassinations on both sides, which constituted a serious hindrance to UNMOT's functioning and to humanitarian and other assistance.

The many obstacles notwithstanding, the leaders of the parties, the President of Tajikistan, Emomali S. Rakhmonov, and UTO leader and CNR Chairman, S. Abdullo Nuri, fulfilled a number of the General Agreement's provisions by year's end. The Security Council reminded the parties that the ability of the international community to mobilize and to continue assistance for the country was linked to the security of UNMOT, international organizations and humanitarian workers.

The Council extended the mandate of UNMOT twice, the second time until 15 May 1999.

UN Mission of Observers in Tajikistan

The United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan, established by Security Council resolution 968(1994) [YUN 1994, p. 596], continued in 1998 to assist in the implementation of the 1997 General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan [YUN 1997, p. 264]. Its tasks were to provide good offices and expert advice; cooperate with CNR and its subcommissions, and with the Central Commission on Elections and the Holding of a Referendum; participate in the work of the Contact Group of guarantor States and organizations and serve as its coordinator; investigate reports of ceasefire violations and report on them to the United Nations and CNR; monitor the assembly of UTO fighters and their reintegration, disarmament and demobilization; assist in the reintegration into governmental power structures or demobilization of ex-combatants; coordinate UN assistance to Tajikistan during the transition period; and maintain close contacts with the parties and cooperative liaison with the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) Collective Peacekeeping Forces, the Russian border forces and the OSCE Mission in Tajikistan.

During the year, UNMOT cooperated closely with OSCE on matters of constitutional reform and democratization. Its contact on military issues with the CIS Collective Peacekeeping Forces concerned their responsibilities regarding the return of UTO units from Afghanistan and the maintenance of the ceasefire and security; that with the Russian border forces was on matters of mutual concern.

The UNMOT mandate, which expired on 15 May, was extended twice by the Council for six-month periods. The first period ended on 15 November; the second was to end on 15 May 1999.

Security concerns

Overall security in Tajikistan remained precarious, especially in the greater Dushanbe area and between Dushanbe and Komsomolabad. UNMOT observed a dusk-to-dawn curfew and maintained other security precautions. In order to improve the security of UN personnel, the Secretary-General approved the concentration of UN offices and private personnel accommodations in Dushanbe in a small number of well-guarded premises. The CIS Collective Peacekeeping Forces declared their readiness to guard UN premises in Dushanbe, in accordance with their mandate to help ensure the personnel security of UNMOT, the OSCE Mission and other international organizations.

The lack of security impeded the movement of UNMOT field teams, especially in the Garm area and the Karategin valley. On 11 June, the team based in Tajikabad was harassed and robbed by masked gunmen while on routine patrol. On 20 July, four members of the team in Garm were shot dead on their return from a meeting with the UTO regional commander in Tavildara. UNMOT immediately suspended its activities in the field and recalled all teams to Dushanbe. The replacement of military observers at the completion of their tour of duty was suspended, as were the activities of all UN agencies and programmes in Tavildara and in the Karategin valley. On 22 July, the Tajikistan President set up a commission of government and CNR members, headed by the Deputy Prime Minister, to investigate the incident. On 1 September, UTO turned in three suspects who were taken to Dushanbe for further investigation. In August, an UNMOT security officer was found dead by gunshot in his apartment in Dushanbe. Following a warning from the authorities of possible hostage-taking by a renegade group in Dushanbe, the Secretary-General authorized the temporary relocation to Tashkent, Uzbekistan, of non-essential internationally recruited staff, many of them military observers, who were then repatriated to their home countries; the few who remained later returned to Dushanbe.

In his 13 August report on the situation in Tajikistan [S/1998/754 & Add.1], the Secretary-General noted that three options had been considered for the protection of UN personnel: the CIS peacekeeping forces could assume the task of securing the areas for the assembly and registration of UTO fighters, but that option was not acceptable to UTO; a UN infantry battalion could be deployed, but that was opposed by the Government; and the formation of a special detachment from government and UTO personnel already stationed in Dushanbe. While the detachment was constituted and trained, it was not operational due to lack of essential equipment.

In the meantime, UNMOT was to be provided with an additional 28 hard-skinned vehicles and better communications equipment to give its personnel at least passive protection. The Secretary-General estimated the associated costs at approximately $4.1 million.

Composition

UNMOT was headed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Tajikistan, Gerd Dietrich Merrem (Germany), until 31 May. He was succeeded by Jan Kubis (Slovakia), who was appointed by the Secretary-General through an exchange of letters with the Security Council on 15 and 19 May [S/1998/407, S/1998/408].

The UNMOT military component was under the command of the Chief Military Observer, Brigadier-General Boleslaw Izydorczyk (Poland), until 14 April 1998. He was succeeded by Brigadier-General Tengku Ariffin Bin Tengku Mohammed (Malaysia), who was appointed by the Secretary-General through an exchange of letters with the Council on 23 and 27 March [S/1998/273, S/1998/274].

As at October 1998, UNMOT comprised 33 military observers from 14 contributing countries; and 170 civilian staff, including 2 civilian police officers, of whom 54 were internationally recruited. Because of security concerns, Switzerland decided to withdraw its three-member medical team; it would be replaced by personnel from Bangladesh.

Financing

On 31 March [meeting 82], the General Assembly considered the Secretary-General's 13 February report [A/52/772/Add.1] containing the revised budget for UNMOT for the period 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998. The revised budget, which was necessitated by the Security Council having expanded the UNMOT mandate by resolution 1138(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 277], amounted to $19,887,800 gross ($18,954,000 net). The Assembly also had before it the related 5 March report of ACABQ [A/52/817]. On the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/844], the Assembly adopted resolution 52/229 A without vote [agenda item 136].

Financing of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 968(1994) of 16 December 1994, by which the Council decided to establish the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan, and the subsequent resolutions in which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission of Observers, the latest of which was resolution 1138(1997) of 14 November 1997, in which the Council authorized the Secretary-General to expand the size of the Mission of Observers and extended its mandate,

Recalling also its resolution 49/240 of 31 March 1995 on the financing of the Mission of Observers and its subsequent resolutions and decision thereon, the latest of which was resolution 51/237 of 13 June 1997,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission of Observers are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission of Observers, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission of Observers,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission of Observers with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan as at 20 March 1998, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 3,232,333 United States dollars, representing 12 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Mission of Observers to the period ending 15 May 1998, notes that some 12 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure the payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission of Observers in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission of Observers is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Decides, taking into account the commitment authority provided by the Advisory Committee, to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan a total amount of 15 million dollars gross (14,335,000 dollars net) for the expansion of the Mission of Observers for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, inclusive of the amount of $8,275,700 gross ($7,721,300 net) already appropriated under the provisions of General Assembly resolution 51/237;

8. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 5,379,440 dollars gross (5,290,960 dollars net) for the period ending 15 May 1998 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1997, as set out in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and its decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995, and the scale of assessments for 1998, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997, in addition to the amount of 7,241,241 dollars gross (6,756,141 dollars net) already apportioned for the period ending 15 May 1998;

9. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 2,379,319 dollars gross (2,287,899 dollars net) for the period from 16 May to 30 June 1998 among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in paragraph 8 above, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Mission of Observers beyond 15 May 1998;

10. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraphs 8 and 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the total estimated staff assessment income of 665,000 dollars approved for the period ending 30 June 1998;

11. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission of Observers in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

12. Decides to keep under review during its fifty-second session the agenda item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan".

On 26 June [meeting 88], the Assembly considered the Secretary-General's report of 22 January [A/52/772] containing the financial performance report of UNMOT for 1 July 1996-30 June 1997. Total resources for the period amounted to $7,478,000 gross ($6,971,600 net), while the related expenditures totalled $5,971,000 gross ($5,667,300 net). That resulted in an unencumbered balance of $1,507,900 gross ($1,304,300 net), which was due primarily to higher vacancy rates for military observers and international civilian staff and the limited use of helicopter services. The Assembly also had before it the proposed 1 July 1998-30 June 1999 budget for UN-MOT [A/52/772/Add.2], amounting to $22,282,100 gross ($20,998,100 net), together with the related ACABQ report [A/52/860/Add.8]. On the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/844/Add.1], the Assembly adopted resolution 52/229 B without vote [agenda item 136].

Financing of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 968(1994) of 16 December 1994, by which the Council established the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission of Observers, the most recent of which was resolution 1167(1998) of 14 May 1998,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 1138(1997) of 14 November 1997, by which the Council authorized the Secretary-General to expand the size of the Mission of Observers,

Recalling further its resolution 49/240 of 31 March 1995 on the financing of the Mission of Observers and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 52/229 A of 31 March 1998,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission of Observers are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission of Observers, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission of Observers,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission of Observers with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan as at 15 May 1998, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 6.9 million United States dollars, representing some 22 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Mission of Observers to the period ending 15 May 1998, notes that some 5 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure the payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission of Observers in full and on time;

5. Takes note of the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Approves, on an exceptional basis, the special arrangements for the Mission of Observers with regard to the application of article IV of the financial regulations of the United Nations, whereby appropriations required in respect of obligations owed to Governments providing contingents and/or logistic support to the Mission of Observers shall be retained beyond the period stipulated under financial regulations 4.3 and 4.4, as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission of Observers is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to employ locally recruited staff for the Mission of Observers against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission of Observers;

9. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan the initial amount of 8,015,120 United States dollars gross (7,587,120 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Mission of Observers for the period from 1 July to 31 October 1998, inclusive of an amount of 415,120 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, to be apportioned, as an ad hoc arrangement, among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of as-assessments for the years 1998 and 1999, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997;

10. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 428,000 dollars approved for the period from 1 July to 31 October 1998;

11. Decides further that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission of Observers, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 1,507,900 dollars gross (1,304,300 dollars net) in respect of the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997;

12. Decides that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission of Observers, their share of the unencumbered balance of 1,507,900 dollars gross (1,304,300 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

13. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission of Observers in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan".

ANNEX

Special arrangements with regard to the application of article IV of the financial regulations of the United Nations

1. At the end of the twelve-month period provided for in financial regulation 4.3, any unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question relating to goods supplied and services rendered by Governments for which claims have been received or which are covered by established reimbursement rates shall be transferred to accounts payable; such accounts payable shall remain recorded in the Special Account for the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan until payment is effected.

2. (a) Any other unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question owed to Governments for goods supplied and services rendered, as well as other obligations owed to Governments, for which required claims have not yet been received shall remain valid for an additional period of four years following the end of the twelve-month period provided for in regulation 4.3;

(b) Claims received during this four-year period shall be treated as provided for under paragraph 1 of the present annex, if appropriate;

(c) At the end of the additional four-year period, any unliquidated obligations shall be cancelled and the then remaining balance of any appropriations retained therefor shall be surrendered.

On 2 November [meeting 50], the Assembly again considered the Secretary-General's 13 March report [A/52/772/Add.2] on the proposed 12-month

(1 July 1998-30 June 1999) budget for UNMOT, together with the related ACABQ report [A/53/474]. On the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/545], the Assembly adopted resolution 53/19 A without vote [agenda item 136].

Financing of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 968(1994) of 16 December 1994, by which the Council established the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission of Observers, the latest of which was resolution 1167(1998) of 14 May 1998,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 1138(1997) of 14 November 1997, by which the Council authorized the Secretary-General to expand the size of the Mission of Observers,

Recalling further its resolution 49/240 of 31 March 1995 on the financing of the Mission of Observers and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 52/229 B of 26 June 1998,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission of Observers are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission of Observers, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission of Observers,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission of Observers with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan as at 15 October 1998, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 9.2 million United States dollars, representing some 22 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Mission of Observers to the period ending 31 October 1998, notes that some 16 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission of Observers in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission of Observers is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to employ locally recruited staff for the Mission of Observers against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

8. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan, for the maintenance of the Mission of Observers, for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, the amount of 11,984,880 dollars gross (11,128,880 dollars net), in addition to the initial amount of 8,015,120 dollars gross (7,587,120 dollars net) for the period from 1 July to 31 October 1998, inclusive of an amount of 415,120 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, already appropriated and assessed under the terms of its resolution 52/229 B;

9. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, and taking into account the amount of 8,015,120 dollars gross (7,587,120 dollars net) already apportioned under the terms of resolution 52/229 B, to apportion the additional amount of 11,984,880 dollars gross (11,128,880 dollars net) for the period from 1 November 1998 to 30 June 1999 among Member States, at a monthly rate of 1,498,110 dollars gross (1,391,110 dollars net), in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1998 and 1999, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Mission of Observers beyond 15 November 1998;

10. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the additional estimated staff assessment income of 856,000 dollars approved for the period from 1 November 1998 to 30 June 1999;

11. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission of Observers in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

12. Decides to keep under review during its fifty-third session the agenda item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan".

On 18 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the item on the financing of UNMOT at the resumed fifty-third (1999) session (decision 53/458).

Activities

Reports of Secretary-General (February and May). In accordance with Security Council resolution 1138(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 277], the Secretary-General issued two reports, on 10 February and 6 May, updating the record of developments in Tajikistan, and the activities of UNMOT and other UN bodies.

The February report [S/1998/113] noted that the international donor conference, held under UN auspices in support of peace and reconciliation in Tajikistan (Vienna, 24-25 November 1997), which had sought an aggregate amount of some $65 million for activities directly related to the implementation of the inter-Tajik agreements [YUN 1997, p. 264], resulted in $96 million in pledges, of which approximately $39 million related specifically to the objectives of the conference; the remainder was for humanitarian and rehabilitation assistance programmes beyond the transitional period.

The conference was overshadowed by the abduction of two French relief workers in Dushanbe on 18 November 1997 by a group led by Rizvon Sodirov demanding the release of his brother Bakhrom, held by the Tajik authorities for his involvement in the hostage-taking in February of that year [ibid., p. 271]. One of the relief workers escaped; the other was killed, together with his captors, during an exchange of fire with security personnel, who subsequently killed Rizvon Sodirov and arrested several members of his group.

The ceasefire between the Government and UTO held during the reporting period, except for a confrontation between police and UTO elements east of Dushanbe on 6 January 1998. Three UTO members arrested in that incident for carrying arms in public were later exchanged for five hostages held by UTO in retaliation.

The implementation of the General Agreement by CNR proceeded very slowly. On 15 January, UTO suspended its participation in that body to protest what it called the Government's lack of political will, citing delays in the incorporation of UTO personalities in the Government, in the repatriation of UTO armed personnel from northern Afghanistan and in implementing the Amnesty Law, as well as inadequate support for CNR's work. The Government, on the other hand, blamed UTO for failing to submit its list of candidates for senior government posts, to register, disarm and assemble all its armed personnel, and to effectively control its armed formations east of Dushanbe. Intervention by the Special Representative and members of the Contact Group of guarantor States and organizations—Afghanistan, Iran, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Pakistan, the Russian Federation, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan, and OSCE and OIC—led UTO to resume its participation in CNR and to the parties' agreement on 23 January that: UTO's deputy leader would be appointed as First Deputy Prime Minister on his return to Tajikistan, the Government would speed up the Amnesty Law's implementation, UTO would release the remaining prisoners of war (POWs), and both parties would remove illegal road checkpoints. UTO later released some 67 POWs, while the Government, in implementation of the Amnesty Law, dropped criminal charges against certain UTO personalities, including four of its leaders. UTO also submitted its awaited list of candidates for government appointment.

In addition to the second round table on the Constitution (27 November 1997), sponsored by OSCE, the legal Subcommission of CNR, with the assistance of an expert provided by UNMOT, drew up a concept paper on options for constitutional amendments. Draft laws on political parties and public associations were forwarded to Parliament for consideration. The UNMOT-monitored registration of UTO fighters was in progress in 8 of 10 assembly areas, with some 3,500 already registered. The repatriation of Tajik refugees from northern Afghanistan was completed on 15 November 1997 with the return of 3,158 from Sakhi Camp through the assistance of Uzbekistan. Tajik refugees in other CIS countries began to be repatriated on 13 January 1998, when 70 refugees returned from Turkmenistan. A special commission created by CNR was to look into the socioeconomic conditions faced by returnees, in particular in the Gissar and Khatlon areas.

Winter relief programmes initiated by UN and non-governmental humanitarian organizations included a broad range of technical assistance activities in the agricultural sector in 40 of the country's 51 districts.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 February [meeting 3856], the Security Council, following consultations among its members, authorized its President to make the following statement on its behalf [S/PRST/1998/4]:

The Security Council has considered the progress report of the Secretary-General of 10 February 1998 on the situation in Tajikistan, submitted pursuant to paragraph 12 of its resolution 1138(1997) of 14 November 1997.

The Council regrets that during the last three months work on the implementation of the General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan and the relevant activities of the Commission on National Reconciliation have proceeded very slowly. It welcomes recent efforts made by the parties in order to fulfil their obligations. The Council calls upon them to intensify their efforts to implement fully the General Agreement, including the protocol on military issues. It also encourages the Commission on National Reconciliation to continue its efforts aimed at the institution of a broad dialogue among the various political forces, as foreseen in the General Agreement.

The Council commends the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the personnel of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan for their work and encourages them to continue assisting the parties in the implementation of the General Agreement. It welcomes the results of the international donor conference in support of peace and reconciliation in Tajikistan convened by the Secretary-General in Vienna on 24 and 25 November 1997, and looks forward to the contribution of those results to consolidating the peace process in Tajikistan.

The Council reiterates its concern that the security situation in some parts of Tajikistan remains precarious. It reminds both parties that the international community is ready to continue assisting in the implementation of the General Agreement as well as in humanitarian and rehabilitation programmes, but that its ability to do so and also the ability of the Mission to carry out its tasks more effectively is linked to improvements in security conditions.

The Council firmly condemns the hostage-taking of relief workers that took place in November 1997 and urges the parties to cooperate further in ensuring the security and freedom of movement of the personnel of the United Nations, the collective peacekeeping forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States and other international personnel, and to take practical steps in this respect, such as those mentioned in paragraph 7 of the report of the Secretary-General.

The Council welcomes the presidential decree establishing a joint security unit with the task of providing security, including armed escorts, for Mission personnel and calls upon the parties to make the unit operational as soon as possible. It also welcomes the readiness of the collective peacekeeping forces to arrange for the guarding of United Nations premises in Dushanbe, as mentioned in the report of the Secretary-General, and encourages the Mission and the collective peacekeeping forces to make the relevant detailed arrangements.

The Council encourages the Secretary-General to continue the expansion of the Mission to the strength authorized by its resolution 1138(1997) as soon as the Secretary-General deems conditions appropriate.

The Secretary-General's May report [S/1998/374] noted that the implementation of the General Agreement was advanced by the appointment of five UTO members to cabinet-level posts on 12 February and of the UTO deputy leader as First Deputy Prime Minister for economic relations with CIS on 10 March. The names of UTO's representatives for appointment to the eight remaining national government posts allocated to it were also submitted. In addition, a total of 4,335 UTO fighters were registered in all assembly sites, although most lived with their families and not at the assembly site garrison. Also, of the 1,562 weapons registered, only some were stored at the assembly sites, a matter that UNMOT repeatedly raised with CNR.

Contributing to the reluctance of UTO personnel to go to the assembly areas was the slow implementation of the Amnesty Law. Of 1,370 cases reviewed by CNR and referred to the Government for action, 399 were granted amnesty. The slow pace was in part attributable to differences of opinion over the application of an article of the law that excluded from amnesty persons accused of terrorism, banditry, smuggling, large-scale embezzlement of public funds, premeditated murder, sexual assault and crimes involving narcotics.

Serious breaches of the ceasefire occurred between 9 and 25 March when UTO elements attacked government positions in Komsomolabad, Faizabad, Kofarnikhon and Remit; and again on 29 April in the area between Teppei-Samarkandi and Dushanbe and in eastern Dushanbe. An aborted attempt by an UNMOT/CNR team to stabilize the situation in Kofarnikhon on 24 March was followed by the Special Representative holding consultations with the Government, UTO, CNR and the Contact Group, which brought about a ceasefire on 25 March, resulting in UTO's release of 105 government soldiers and the withdrawal of the parties' forces to their previous positions. When severe fighting broke out again on 29 April, UNMOT worked closely with the Contact Group to defuse the situation and a special commission, led by the deputy UTO leader, restored the ceasefire on 3 May. Those incidents and numerous others in Dushanbe and its environs indicated that the UTO leaders exercised only limited control over some of their field commanders; the same was true of the Government, although to a lesser degree.

Although quickly contained, the March and April/May clashes reinforced the mistrust between the two sides, which continued to complicate and delay the General Agreement's implementation. UTO's priority was power-sharing according to the 30 per cent formula, while the Government's was the implementation of the military protocol. As long as UTO retained its military capacity, the Government was reluctant to move forward on power-sharing and other political issues. To reconcile those competing priorities, the Special Representative and his staff advised the parties to proceed in a balanced manner and to set intermediate goals. On 21 April, the Contact Group urged the parties to complete by 31 May the first phase of the military protocol: the complete registration and garrisoning of the UTO fighters in the assembly areas and the appointment of UTO representatives to the remaining eight positions in the central Government. It also set a 30 April deadline for the Government to provide CNR with a list of all amnestied persons and pending amnesty cases, the approval of the draft concept paper on constitutional amendments and the formation of the Central Electoral Commission, with the required 25 per cent UTO participation. CNR adopted its own detailed timetable, setting July for the completion of the General Agreement's political provisions.

With the assistance of UNHCR, 800 of the estimated 3,000 Tajik refugees in Turkmenistan were repatriated by mid-April and repatriation had begun of some 16,000 Tajik refugees in Kyrgyzstan.

A government unit for the coordination of post-conflict rehabilitation projects, which administered a $10 million credit allocated by the World Bank, was created to deal with immediate general budgetary needs associated with the General Agreement, as well as specific reconstruction projects in the Karategin valley. UNMOT and UN agencies and services elaborated projects in support of the demobilization of fighters, including labour-intensive projects for infrastructural rehabilitation, vocational training and start-up packages for reintegration into civilian life, as well as ongoing UNOPS and Aga Khan Foundation programmes of assistance for farming on leased land.

A consolidated appeal for Tajikistan was launched in March for a total of $34.6 million for 1998 to extend interventions undertaken within the framework of the donor alert that expired at the end of 1997 (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

The Secretary-General said that the task of building confidence between the former adversaries would take longer than envisioned, making it unlikely that elections could be held in 1998. International support, including financial assistance, remained essential for the continuation of the peace process. He therefore recommended that the Council extend UNMOT's mandate, due to expire on 15 May, for a further six months, until 15 November 1998. The cost of maintaining UNMOT for the 12-month period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 was estimated at $22,282,100 gross.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 14 May [meeting 3879], the Security Council had before it the Secretary-General's May report and a 30 April statement from Tajikistan [S/1998/367] drawing attention to UTO's failure to stop increasing violations of the General Agreement by individual UTO armed units, citing local armed clashes during April. On the basis of a draft [S/1998/390], prepared in prior consultations among its members, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1167(1998).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions and the statements by its President,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 6 May 1998 on the situation in Tajikistan,

Reaffirming its commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Tajikistan and to the inviolability of its borders,

Expressing regret that during the past three months progress in the peace process has been very slow,

Expressing concern at the precarious security situation in some parts of Tajikistan,

Expressing further concern at violations of the ceasefire in Tajikistan,

Welcoming the intensified contacts between the leadership of the Government of Tajikistan and the leadership of the United Tajik Opposition, which helped to contain the crises in the period covered by the report of the Secretary-General and confirmed the commitment of both parties to the peace process,

Recognizing that comprehensive international support remains essential for the intensification of the peace process in Tajikistan,

Welcoming the maintenance of close contact by the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan with the parties, as well as its cooperative liaison with the collective peacekeeping forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States, the Russian border forces and the mission in Tajikistan of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe,

Welcoming also the contribution of the Contact Group of Guarantor States and International Organizations to the peace process,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 6 May 1998;

2. Condemns renewed fighting in violation of the ceasefire resulting from attacks initiated by some local United Tajik Opposition commanders, and calls upon all concerned to refrain from acts of violence;

3. Calls upon the parties to undertake vigorous efforts to implement fully the General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan, including the protocol on military issues, and to create conditions for the holding of elections at the earliest possible time;

4. Also calls upon the parties, with the involvement of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan and the Contact Group of Guarantor States and International Organizations, to implement the timetable of measures adopted by the Commission on National Reconciliation on 29 April 1998, notably, and as a matter of priority, the implementation of the protocol on military issues and the appointment of United Tajik Opposition representatives to the remaining government positions allocated to them, as well as the implementation of the amnesty law;

5. Notes with appreciation the work of the retiring Special Representative of the Secretary-General, commends the efforts of all the personnel of the Mission, and encourages them to continue assisting the parties in the implementation of the General Agreement;

6. Calls upon the parties to intensify their efforts to bring into operation as soon as possible a joint security unit tasked with providing security for Mission personnel, and to cooperate further in ensuring the safety and freedom of movement of the personnel of the United Nations, the collective peacekeeping forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States, and other international personnel;

7. Encourages the Mission and the collective peacekeeping forces to continue discussion of options for improving security cooperation;

8. Calls upon Member States and others concerned to respond promptly and generously to the consolidated appeal for Tajikistan for 1998 launched in Geneva in March 1998, and expresses the hope that the meeting of the Consultative Group to be held by the World Bank on 20 May 1998 will bring positive results;

9. Decides to extend the mandate of the Mission for a period of six months until 15 November 1998;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council informed of all significant developments, in particular regarding the security situation, and also requests him to report within three months of the adoption of the present resolution on its implementation;

11. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Reports of Secretary-General (August and November). As requested by Security Council resolution 1167(1998), the Secretary-General reported on 13 August [S/1998/754] that the peace process suffered a setback in the form of two Tajik Parliament decisions of 21 and 23 May not to confirm the cabinet appointments of the two most senior UTO members in the Government, and to amend the bill agreed upon by CNR on political parties so that those based on religion would be banned, effectively removing the Islamic Revival Party, the largest UTO component, from participation in the political life of the country. The latter decision was based on the Constitution's stipulation that Tajikistan was a secular State. To defuse the rapidly mounting tension, a 12-member conciliation commission representing the Government, CNR and the Parliament, assisted by a specialist on constitutional law provided by UNMOT and funded by the Aga Khan Foundation, reached a consensus on 18 June to replace the contentious provision of the draft bill with a new text prohibiting the use of religious institutions for political purposes.

In July, the repatriation of 153 UTO fighters from Afghanistan to the Garm assembly site, together with a large amount of weapons and ammunition, was carried out by the CIS Collective Peacekeeping Forces and monitored by UNMOT.

On 30 July, CNR adopted a new timetable for implementing the General Agreement, setting new deadlines.

At a World Bank Consultative Group meeting on Tajikistan (Paris, 20 May), pledges of some $280 million were made for balance-of-payment and investment support and technical assistance. On 30 July, the Bank's Executive Board approved a structural adjustment loan of $50 million.

In his report of 3 November [S/1998/1029], the Secretary-General stated that another crisis had erupted on 22 September, when a prominent UTO member and senior CNR member, Otakhon Latifi, was shot dead in Dushanbe by an unknown gunman. The incident caused UTO to suspend its functions in the Government and CNR, conditioning its return on the arrest of the assassin and government measures to improve the security of UTO members. UTO resumed its functions on 29 September, following issuance on the previous day of a joint 10-point statement by the President and UTO, outlining measures to resolve the crisis and expedite the implementation of the General Agreement. In keeping with that statement, a joint commission was set up to monitor the Government's investigation of the assassination, and security measures for UTO representatives were bolstered through the assignment of personal security guards and allocation of funds for that purpose. In addition to their joint appeal to unaffiliated groups to surrender their weapons and return to civilian life, the Government, with UTO's endorsement, took military action against two armed groups operating east of Dushanbe. Throughout the crisis, the Special Representative and the Contact Group used their best efforts to contain the situation.

On 23-26 September, the last 157 UTO fighters in Afghanistan were repatriated, escorted by the CIS Collective Peacekeeping Forces and monitored by UNMOT. Having provided that group with bedding and a 30-day supply of food, UNMOT ended its two-month support for the assembly areas.

As to the status of implementation of the General Agreement, the joint working group set up by the President to verify the state of completion of the first two stages of the military protocol—registration, collection of weapons and oath-taking—found that those stages could not be considered complete: many UTO fighters did not remain in the assembly sites and only a limited number of weapons were registered and surrendered for storage. Meanwhile, the Joint Central Review Commission set up to evaluate the fitness of UTO personnel for continued military service, called for under the third stage of the protocol, had begun, as had joint action against unaffiliated armed groups. As later reported [S/1999/124], the UTO leader formally declared on 25 December the return of all its fighters to Tajikistan and the closing of all its bases outside the country.

Movement on political issues included: the appointment on 8 October of a UTO member, Zokir Vazirov, to the post of Deputy Prime Minister, all but completing UTO appointments to cabinet-level posts, except for the defence portfolio, in accordance with the 30 per cent quota; and the confirmed allocation of 19 senior government posts to UTO. Also, as later reported [ibid.], the President agreed to allocate six additional posts at the level of deputy minister. The ban on UTO political parties remained in force pending UTO's confirmation of the disbandment of its armed forces. No progress was reported towards the full implementation of the Amnesty Law or on the revision of the Electoral Law. Meanwhile, UTO submitted its list of candidates for the Central Electoral Commission.

CNR debated extensively a range of issues relating to constitutional development and reform, from which no clear proposals emerged. The revised draft law on political parties was awaiting consideration by Parliament. The return of Tajik refugees from Afghanistan was complete and repatriation from CIS countries continued with UNHCR assistance.

The lack of security continued to have a negative impact on humanitarian and other assistance, particularly in the Karategin valley, where UN activities remained suspended and where the humanitarian situation had deteriorated. The rehabilitation, reconstruction and development programme, financed by UNDP and executed by UNOPS, was implementing new subprogrammes through co-financing arrangements with the United States Agency for International Development, the European Community Humanitarian Office and UNHCR. The Aga Khan Foundation provided extensive humanitarian assistance to the Tajik population, particularly in the Gorniy-Badakshan region.

The security situation in the country, marked by Prévalent crime and frequent violent incidents, saw politically motivated murders in August, as well as the abduction and detention of government military personnel and officials, and explosions in Dushanbe in October. On 4 November, an ousted army colonel, Mahmud Khudoiberdiev, mounted an anti-government offensive in Leninabad, the country's largest and most prosperous region, taking control of the provincial capital, Khujand, and the mountain pass in the south linking the province with the rest of the country. A government counter-offensive, joined by UTO, retook the province by 10 November.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council informed the Secretary-General on 28 August [S/1998/818] that it had considered his August report and taken note of the information contained in its addendum (see above, under "Security concerns").

On 12 November [meeting 3943], the Council considered the Secretary-General's November report and a 4 November letter from Tajikistan [S/1998/1034] regarding the anti-government attack at dawn that day on Leninabad, as well as on Khatlon the previous day.

On the basis of a draft [S/1998/1063] prepared in the course of prior consultations, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1206(1998).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions and the statements by its President,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 3 November 1998 on the situation in Tajikistan,

Reaffirming its commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Tajikistan and to the inviolability of its borders,

Welcoming the movement towards the implementation of the General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan and the effective maintenance of the ceasefire between the Government of Tajikistan and the United Tajik Opposition, and noting that there remain difficulties to be resolved in this regard,

Welcoming also the intensified regular contacts between the leadership of the Government of Tajikistan and of the United Tajik Opposition which helped to contain the crises in the period covered by the report of the Secretary-General, confirmed the commitment of both parties to the peace process and contributed to the implementation of the General Agreement,

Welcoming further the maintenance of close contact by the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan with the parties, as well as its cooperative liaison with the collective peacekeeping forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States, the Russian border forces and the mission in Tajikistan of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe,

Welcoming the contribution of the Contact Group of Guarantor States and International Organizations to the peace process,

Expressing concern at the precarious security situation in some parts of Tajikistan,

Deeply concerned that there has not been sufficient progress in establishing all relevant facts concerning the murder of four members of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan in July 1998,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 3 November 1998;

2. Strongly condemns the recent fighting in the Leninabad area initiated by forces trying to hinder the peace process in Tajikistan, and calls upon all concerned to refrain from the use of force;

3. Calls upon the parties to undertake vigorous efforts to implement fully the General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan, including the protocol on military issues, and to create conditions for the holding of elections at the earliest possible time in 1999;

4. Notes with appreciation the work of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, commends the efforts of all the personnel of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan and encourages them to continue assisting the parties in the implementation of the General Agreement;

5. Welcomes the continued contribution made by the collective peacekeeping forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States in assisting the parties in the implementation of the General Agreement in coordination with all concerned;

6. Strongly condemns the murder of four members of the Mission, recognizes that the completion of the investigation into this case is important for the resumption of the field activities of the Mission, urges the Government of Tajikistan to complete the investigation expeditiously and to bring to justice all those found to be responsible for the crime, and also urges the United Tajik Opposition leaders to continue to cooperate fully with these efforts;

7. Acknowledges the efforts of the Government of Tajikistan to enhance the protection of international personnel, and calls upon the parties to cooperate further in ensuring the safety and freedom of movement of the personnel of the United Nations, the collective peacekeeping forces and other international personnel;

8. Notes with satisfaction the meeting of the Consultative Group held by the World Bank on 20 May 1998, and calls upon Member States and others concerned to respond promptly and generously to the consolidated appeal for Tajikistan for 1998 launched in Geneva in March 1998;

9. Recognizes that comprehensive international support remains essential for the intensification of the peace process in Tajikistan, and reminds both parties that the ability of the international community to mobilize and to continue assistance for Tajikistan is linked to the security of the personnel of the Mission and international organizations, and of humanitarian workers;

10. Decides to extend the mandate of the Mission for a period of six months until 15 May 1999;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council informed of all significant developments, in particular regarding the security situation and measures taken to enhance the security of the Mission, and also requests him to report within three months of the adoption of the present resolution on its implementation;

12. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Communications. On 7 November [S/1998/1099], Kazakhstan expressed support for Tajikistan's policy for achieving peace and national harmony and welcomed the Government's successful action to quell the recent rebellion in the country. Tajikistan stated on 3 December [S/1998/1143] that the events in the Leninabad region were an illustration of attempts by insurgents to split Tajik society by pitting the north against the south. They failed to take account, however, of the growing understanding in the country that the society had to be consolidated on the basis of the peace initiatives being carried out by the President.

In earlier communications, Tajikistan expressed serious concern that, from January through March, armed UTO units led by individual field commanders had been committing murder, robbery, banditry and sabotage and taking hostages in violation of the General Agreement; it said that the UTO leadership had failed to halt such actions despite the President's repeated calls on it to do so [S/1998/266]. Tajikistan took issue with mass media reports purporting to explain why the peace process was at a virtual impasse, when in reality the process had been considerably advanced [S/1998/665]. Details of achievements up to July under the Agreement were contained in a statement jointly issued by the Tajikistan President and the CNR Chairman [S/1998/701]. Iran and the Russian Federation, members of the Contact Group of Guarantor States, in a joint statement, expressed concern that the pace of implementation lagged behind the timetable envisaged and pledged to help Tajikistan to resolve all urgent problems related to the consolidation of the country's independence [S/1998/700].

Korea question

The United Nations Command (UNC) reiterated, in its annual report covering its 1997 activities with regard to implementing the 1953 Korean Armistice Agreement, that it would continue to carry out that mission until a durable peace through political dialogue could be achieved between the Republic of Korea and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK). The DPRK stated that UNC was not a real entity, never having been established by the Security Council, and reiterated its proposal for an interim agreement with the United States to be executed by a joint military mechanism until a peace agreement was adopted.

The DPRK continued to accept the activities of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) only within the context of the 1994 Agreed Framework between the DPRK and the United States rather than under its safeguards agreement with IAEA, which was binding and in force. IAEA thus remained unable in 1998 to verify the correctness and completeness of the DPRK's initial declaration of nuclear material subject to safeguards and consequently unable to conclude that there had been no diversion of nuclear material.

Communication. On 1 July [A/53/166], the DPRK circulated the text of its policy on national reunification, containing a restatement of the three principles agreed to by the DPRK and the Republic of Korea in 1972: that national reunification should be achieved independently, by peaceful means and by transcending differences in ideas, ideals and systems.

Infiltration incidents

On 2 July [S/1998/607], the Republic of Korea reported that, on 22 June, a military submarine was spotted about 11.5 miles off its eastern coast, entangled in a fishing net near the port city of Sokcho. An investigation revealed that the submarine and its crew of nine, who were found dead, belonged to an operational detachment of the North Korean Workers' Party, known to specialize in maritime infiltration, sabotage and espionage. Three of the crew were special agents, who left the submarine at Susan-ri, Yangyang-gun, in the Republic, to carry out assigned missions in a coastal land area. The submarine was on its way back to the DPRK when it got entangled. All nine crew members were presumed either to have committed suicide or to have been killed by their own colleagues. The DPRK, on 11 July [S/1998/635], claimed that the submarine was on a training mission when it drifted into the high seas due to mechanical trouble and demanded that the submarine and its crew be returned.

On 16 July [S/1998/656], the Republic of Korea drew attention to another incident of infiltration into its territory by at least one armed DPRK agent, whose body, clad in a diving suit, was found on a beach near Tonghae, 90 kilometres south of the DMZ, along with a submachine-gun, hand grenades, a transmission device and other equipment typically used by DPRK infiltrators. A semi-submersible torpedo-like propellant designed to carry infiltrating agents was also found nearby. The DPRK, on 24 July [S/1998/692], denied any connection with the so-called armed agent. It accused the Republic of South Korea of fabricating that story and of forcing the suicide of the crew of the submarine discovered on 22 June.

Armistice Agreement

On 9 September, the United States, on behalf of the Unified Command established pursuant to Security Council resolution 84(1950) [YUN 1950, p. 230], submitted to the Council the annual report of UNC [S/1998/844] concerning the maintenance in 1997 of the 1953 Armistice Agreement [YUN 1953, p. 136, GA res. 725(VIII)].

The report stated that of the original 16 UN Member States represented in UNC, only nine remained: Australia, Canada, Colombia, France, New Zealand, the Philippines, Thailand, the United Kingdom and the United States. Throughout 1997, the Korean People's Army (KPA) continued to reject joint investigations of reported violations of the Agreement through the Military Armistice Commission (MAC), the body created for that purpose. KPA met only selectively and informally with UNC, and only when KPA's purposes were served.

Regarding the three-year UNC-KPA negotiations to re-establish a general officer channel of communication, KPA in February 1997 appeared to moderate its earlier position that communications had to be bilateral between the DPRK and the United States by agreeing to UNC's conditions for such talks, namely, that UNC would be KPA's dialogue partner; that the Armistice Agreement would be the basis for talks; that the venue would be the MAC conference room at Panmunjom; and that all general officers would have an equal voice.

The DMZ remained relatively quiet throughout 1997. Its entire southern (UNC) portion continued to be monitored by "demilitarized zone police" provided by the Republic of Korea. UNC dispatched its joint observer team/special investigative team to its guard posts within or along the DMZ on 91 occasions to ensure continued compliance with the related provisions of the Agreement and deployed seven separate special investigative teams there to determine the facts associated with alleged armistice violations inside the 151-mile southern boundary. The resultant reports were delivered to KPA, which refused to accept them.

Among KPA armistice violations reported were: 11 demarcation-line crossings into the UNC side by individual KPA soldiers or a group of them on patrol; an exchange of machine-gun and rifle fire between KPA and UNC guard posts in September, following a UNC warning shot to drive back a 14-man KPA patrol that had intruded some 100 metres into the UNC side; and the firing of a round of machine-gun fire that hit the tower of a UNC guard post in December. Also reported was KPA's apprehension of two farmers from the Republic of Korea, who accidentally crossed into the northern side of the DMZ due to poor demarcation line markings, but were later released to UNC.

Three separate joint remains-recovery operations by the United States and the DPRK yielded the remains of six United States soldiers killed during the Korean War, which were later repatriated to the United States. For its part, UNC turned over to KPA at Panmunjom the remains of a Chinese soldier killed during the same war and of a KPA soldier killed in the DMZ on 9 September. Also in September, UNC repatriated a live KPA soldier who had been swept down the Han River estuary to the south on 25 August and asked to be returned to the DPRK.

The Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission (NNSC), created to conduct independent inspections and investigations of Armistice Agreement violations outside the DMZ, continued to be represented by only two neutral nations in residence, Sweden and Switzerland. It held weekly meetings in the joint security area to review and evaluate UNC reports on military personnel arrivals and departures. The Polish member, who was forced to evacuate Panmunjom in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 464], returned to Panmunjom in January, April and September 1997 to demonstrate Poland's continuing support to NNSC and armistice maintenance.

Although MAC had held no formal plenary sessions since 1991 [YUN 1992, p. 240], UNC and KPA continued to meet in Panmunjom at the officer level on an informal basis, holding 29 such meetings in 1997.

Communications. On 13 October [S/1998/943], the DPRK conveyed its views on the UNC report to the effect that UNC was a fabrication of the United States, which was trying desperately to maintain the paralysed armistice system to justify its continued stationing of forces in the Republic of Korea. The DPRK claimed earlier, on 9 March [S/1998/210], that UNC was a major obstacle to terminating the interference of foreign forces in south Korea, which should be a matter of priority if peace and security on the peninsula was to be ensured. It claimed on 1 May [S/1998/366] that the occupation of the south by United States troops was a violation of the Armistice Agreement and that their withdrawal was key to solving the Korea problem.

In several other communications [S/1998/244, S/1998/264, S/1998/798, S/1998/1141], the DPRK drew the Council's attention to the United States arms build-up in the Republic of Korea with jet fighters, helicopter gunships and strategic bombers; to the reorganization of the United States Eighth Army stationed there for the purpose of increasing its combat readiness and efficiency in an emergency; to the 12-day joint military exercises ("Ulji Focus Lens") in August of a combined Republic of Korea-United States force of over 70,000; and to the completion of a new war plan for the invasion of the DPRK.

IAEA safeguards inspections

Pursuant to the agreement between IAEA and the DPRK for the application of safeguards in connection with the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2373(XXII) [YUN 1968, p. 17], which was binding and in force since 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 73], IAEA continued to secure full compliance by the DPRK with that agreement. To that end, IAEA continued to dispatch to the country inspection teams from Vienna, in addition to the three IAEA inspectors continuously present in the Nyongbyon area to monitor the freeze of the DPRK's graphite-moderated reactors and facilities, which was instituted by the DPRK in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 442]. Developments in the safeguards implementation were reported yearly by the Director General to the General Conference of IAEA through its Board of Governors and communicated to the Security Council through the Secretary-General.

IAEA report. The IAEA Director General, in his report transmitted to the Council on 12 October [S/1998/940], noted that the DPRK continued to accept IAEA activities solely within the context of the 1994 Agreed Framework [YUN 1994, p. 442] between it and the United States and not under its safeguards agreement with IAEA. He said that, at the ninth and tenth rounds of IAEA technical discussions in Pyongyang on 24-28 February and 24-26 June 1998, respectively, no progress was made with regard to safeguards issues such as the preservation of information to enable future verification by IAEA of the correctness and completeness of the DPRK's initial declaration; and the sampling and measurement of liquid wastes at the reprocessing plant (the Radiochemical Laboratory) to verify that there was no movement or any operation involving the wastes. Furthermore, the DPRK refused to agree to the taking of environmental swipe samples at the hot cell of the research reactor, currently under a routine inspection regime, on the grounds that the safeguards agreement was not fully in force. Nor was there progress on access to technical buildings not subject to freeze measures in the facility sites of the 5-MW(e) Experimental Power Reactor, the Radiochemical Laboratory (the reprocessing plant) and the Fuel Fabrication Plant in order to confirm that the new scope of activities of the buildings was not relevant for the purpose of the freeze.

At the June discussions, the DPRK reported that, because of continuing corrosion, the remaining non-canned rods would have to be either reprocessed or canned. It linked maintenance activities performed at the Radiochemical Laboratory to the possibility of reprocessing the rods. For the purpose of maintaining the fresh fuel rods, the DPRK planned to transfer 8,000 rods (corresponding to one full reactor core loading) from their current location outside the 5-MW(e) Experimental Power Reactor to the fresh fuel storage in the reactor building. IAEA indicated that such a transfer would not be compatible with the purpose of the freeze or of any maintenance requirements. DPRK's request for IAEA to arrange for a hydraulic test of the mixer-settlers at the Radiochemical Laboratory was under review to ascertain that such a test would not result in the removal or alteration of the signatures of past activities.

The Director General also reported the DPRK's 3 April request that IAEA make arrangements to enable the construction of a heavy oil-fuelled boiler at the site of the 5-MW(e) Experimental Power Reactor to produce electricity and steam for district heating. IAEA did not object to the construction and operation of the boiler for the purposes stated, on the understanding that IAEA inspectors could visit the boiler building and related support buildings to confirm that the new scope of operations was not relevant to the purpose of the freeze; the DPRK confirmed that understanding on 22 May. The DPRK further requested IAEA on 11 May to make arrangements at the Radiochemical Laboratory, including detachment of some seals, to enable the operator to carry out inspection and maintenance activities. IAEA responded that all maintenance should be done under IAEA observation and that no decontamination activities or the introduction or transfer of solutions in the process system should be carried out as such activities could affect the preservation of information.

The Director General noted that DPRK cooperation remained limited. It had accepted some verification activities, such as containment and surveillance measures, needed to carry out the monitoring of the freeze. The means of communication between the DPRK's General Department of Atomic Energy and the relevant IAEA Division of Operations of the Department of Safeguards had further improved. The DPRK accepted the replacement of the surveillance systems with the new digital surveillance and agreed to the designation of additional inspectors. It also agreed to the installation, as of October, of an integrated monitoring system on the mixer-settler motors at the Radiochemical Laboratory, which would provide information as to whether such motors had been put into operation and for how long.

The DPRK refused, however, to agree to the installation of IAEA monitoring equipment at nuclear waste tanks or any sampling or measurements at any location in the Radiochemical Laboratory. Moreover, it continued to refuse measurements to assess the total amount of plutonium in the spent fuel rods from the 5-MW(e) Experimental Power Reactor.

As later reported by the Director General [S/1999/1268], the eleventh round of technical discussions took place on 5-8 October, during which no progress was made on the same key pending issues mentioned above.

In the light of the foregoing information, the General Conference of IAEA adopted a 25 September resolution expressing its deep concern about the continued non-compliance of the DPRK with its safeguards agreement and urging it to cooperate fully with IAEA in the implementation of that agreement.

By resolution 53/21 of 2 November (see PART THREE, Chapter VI), the General Assembly called on the DPRK to comply with the safeguards agreement and urged it to cooperate fully with IAEA.

Cambodia

Cambodia held its national elections on 26 July 1998 under international monitoring coordinated by the United Nations. The elections were judged sufficiently free and fair and their outcome as credibly reflecting the will of the Cambodian people. The United Nations monitored the safe return to Cambodia of those political leaders who had fled the country during the previous year's political upheaval. On 30 November, a new coalition Government of Cambodia was formed, which the Secretary-General hoped would mark the opening of a new chapter of reconciliation and cooperation among Cambodia's political forces, leading to Cambodia's resumption of its full role in the family of nations.

In December, the credentials of Cambodia to the fifty-third (1998) session of the General Assembly were approved by the Assembly (see PART FIVE, Chapter IV).

(For information on the human rights aspects of the electoral process, see PART TWO, Chapter I.)

Elections and formation of new Government

Security Council consideration. On 8 April [A/53/2], the Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs briefed the Security Council on developments in Cambodia since December 1997. Following informal consultations, the Council President in a statement to the press conveyed the Council's support for the Secretary-General's efforts to coordinate, at the Government's request, the monitoring by international observers of the general elections scheduled for 26 July and expressed the hope that the Cambodian parties would cooperate with the UN election monitoring efforts.

The Council also conveyed its appreciation for efforts of ASEAN, the EU and the other Friends of Cambodia—Australia, Canada, France, Germany, Japan, Korea, New Zealand, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States.

Communication. In connection with the elections, the EU Presidency issued a 25 June statement [S/1998/623] to the effect that the EU, which had demonstrated its commitment to democracy in Cambodia with $11 million in electoral assistance, underscored the importance it placed on free and fair elections and urged the Government to promote a political climate conducive to that end. The EU urged the Government to investigate the reported extrajudicial killings and other human rights abuses as a matter of priority, and to prevent any form of political intimidation, violence or malpractice in the election process. It urged the National Election Commission to act independently and to promote voter education, encouraged all political parties to work together to resolve outstanding issues and stressed the importance it placed on the full participation of all political parties in the elections. The EU would be sending a team of more than 100 short-term election monitors to supplement the long-term monitors already in Cambodia.

Further Security Council consideration. In informal consultations on 6 August, the Security Council discussed the outcome of the elections, noting that the vote counting was observed by several hundred international monitors. The Secretariat and the Council judged the elections as free and fair and as credibly reflecting the will of the Cambodian people [A/54/2].

Statements by Secretary-General. A press statement issued for the Secretary-General on 13 November welcomed the agreement reached that day between the two major political parties—the Cambodian People's Party (CPP) and the United National Front for an Independent, Neutral, Peaceful and Cooperative Cambodia (FUNCINPEC)—to convene the newly elected National Assembly on 25 November and to establish a coalition Government. By a press statement of 30 November, the Secretary-General welcomed the formation on that date of the new coalition Government, with Samdech Hun Sen as Prime Minister. The Secretary-General looked forward to the early completion of the process to establish a Senate as earlier agreed between CPP and FUNCINPEC. He expressed his desire to see Cambodia resume its full role in the family of nations.

Return of political leaders

Prior to the formation of the new Government, the Secretary-General, on 19 October [S/1998/986], informed the Security Council that UN monitoring of the return of the political leaders who had fled Cambodia following the July 1997 events [YUN 1997, p. 282] in that country, as arranged between the Secretary-General and the Cambodian authorities [ibid., p. 283], was completed on 30 September 1998. The Council took note of that information on 22 October [S/1998/987].

By resolution 53/145 of 9 December on the situation of human rights in Cambodia (see PART TWO, Chapter I), the General Assembly welcomed Cambodia's national elections and the agreement reached between political parties to convene the National Assembly and to establish a coalition Government.

Office of Secretary-General's Personal Representative in Cambodia

The Office of the Personal Representative of the Secretary-General in Cambodia (Lakhan L. Mehrotra (India)), set up in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 450], remained in place in Phnom Penh in 1998.

On 13 November [S/1998/1086], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that the then Second Prime Minister, Samdech Hun Sen, had agreed to his proposal to extend the Office of the Personal Representative for a further six months from 27 July, pending the establishment of a new National Assembly, which would decide on the future of the Office. The Secretary-General further proposed, and the Council agreed on 17 November [S/1998/1087], to extend the Office for a 12-month period as soon as a new Government was formed, in keeping with the 1991 Paris Agreements [YUN 1991, p. 155].

UNTAC financing

In connection with the liquidation of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC), which was terminated in 1993

[YUN 1993, p. 371], the General Assembly had before it the reports of the Secretary-General, deferred for actions since 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 447], on the following: the financial performance of UNTAC for the periods 1 October-31 December 1993 and 1 January-30 June 1994 [A/49/714]; the final disposition of UNTAC's assets [A/49/714/Add.1]; the comprehensive evaluation of all aspects of the administration and management of UNTAC [A/51/777], as well as UN property losses in UNTAC during the period 1 January 1993-31 December 1995 [A/53/340]; and updated information on the status of the UNTAC special account and additional UNTAC financial requirements [A/52/819].

Also before the Assembly were the reports of ACABQ relating to the Secretary-General's first two reports [A/49/867] and to his comprehensive evaluation [A/52/865].

On the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/934], the Assembly, on 26 June [meeting 88], adopted resolution 52/239 without vote [agenda item 126].

Financing and liquidation of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing and liquidation of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 717(1991) of 16 October 1991, 718(1991) of 31 October 1991, 728(1992) of 8 January 1992, 745(1992) of 28 February 1992, 766(1992) of 21 July 1992, 783(1992) of 13 October 1992, 792(1992) of 30 November 1992, 810(1993) of 8 March 1993, 826(1993) of 20 May 1993, 835(1993) of 2 June 1993, 840(1993) of 15 June 1993, 860(1993) of 27 August 1993 and 880(1993) of 4 November 1993,

Recalling its resolutions 46/198 A of 20 December 1991 and 46/198 B of 14 February 1992 on the financing of the United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia, 46/222 A of 14 February 1992, 47/209 A of 22 December 1992, 47/209 B of 14 September 1993 and 48/255 of 26 May 1994 on the financing of the Transitional Authority and 46/222 B of 22 May 1992 on the financing of the Advance Mission and the Transitional Authority,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Advance Mission and the Transitional Authority are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Advance Mission and the Transitional Authority, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economi-

catty less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such operations,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made by certain Governments to the Advance Mission, the Transitional Authority and the related trust funds,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Transitional Authority with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its commitments and obligations, which have not been met on a current basis owing to delays in the payment of assessed contributions by Member States,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia as at 15 May 1998, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 46.3 million United States dollars, representing 3 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Transitional Authority to the period ending 30 June 1994, notes that some 57 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Transitional Authority in full and on time;

5. Takes note of the information provided on the final disposition of the property of the Transitional Authority in the addendum to the report of the Secretary-General;

6. Also takes note of the excellent report of the Secretary-General on the comprehensive evaluation of all aspects of the administration and management of the Transitional Authority;

7. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue the evaluation exercise for other peacekeeping operations, including an analysis of the problems encountered and measures taken to identify and correct them, and to make proposals for their solution;

8. Takes note of the observations and recommendations contained in the reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

9. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion among Member States the amount of 32,562,900 dollars gross (25,691,600 dollars net) appropriated by the General Assembly in its resolution 48/255, to be offset by an equal amount from miscellaneous income, in accordance with paragraph 9 of that resolution;

10. Decides also to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia the amount of 17,724,400 dollars gross (21,232,600 dollars net) to meet the additional requirements of the Transitional Authority, to be apportioned, as an ad hoc arrangement, among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1998, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997;

11. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 6,871,300 dollars approved for the period from 1 September 1993 to 31 March 1994;

12. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 10 above, shall take into consideration the decrease in their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 3,508,200 dollars approved for the period from 1 November 1991 to 31 December 1995;

13. Decides also that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Transitional Authority, there shall be credited their respective share of the balance of the cumulative miscellaneous income of 1,799,400 dollars, the cumulative interest income of 6,944,000 dollars and any surplus arising from the eventual liquidation of the remaining obligations in the Special Account for the Transitional Authority;

14. Decides further that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Transitional Authority, their share of the balance of the cumulative miscellaneous income of 1,799,400 dollars, the cumulative interest income of 6,944,000 dollars and any surplus arising from the eventual liquidation of the remaining obligations in the Special Account for the Transitional Authority shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

15. Takes note of the views expressed by Member States on the cumulative interest income in the Special Account for the Transitional Authority;

16. Approves, on an exceptional basis, the special arrangements for the Transitional Authority with regard to the application of article IV of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, whereby appropriations required in respect of obligations owed to Governments providing contingents and/or logistic support to the Transitional Authority shall be retained beyond the period stipulated under financial regulations 4.3 and 4.4, as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

17. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Financing and liquidation of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia".

ANNEX
Special arrangements with regard to the application of article IV of the financial regulations of the United Nations

1. At the end of the twelve-month period provided for in financial regulation 4.3, any unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question relating to goods supplied and services rendered by Governments for which claims have been received or which are covered by established reimbursement rates shall be transferred to accounts payable; such accounts payable shall remain recorded in the Special Account for the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia until payment is effected.

2. (a) Any other unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question owed to Governments for goods supplied and services rendered, as well as other obligations owed to Governments, for which required claims have not yet been received, shall remain valid for an additional period of four years following the end of the twelve-month period provided for in regulation 4.3;

(b) Claims received during this four-year period shall be treated as provided for under paragraph 1 of the present annex, if appropriate;

(c) At the end of the additional four-year period, any unliquidated obligations shall be cancelled and the then remaining balance of any appropriations retained therefor shall be surrendered.

On 18 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the item on the financing and liquidation of UNTAC at the resumed fifty-third (1999) session (decision 53/458).

Papua New Guinea

Bougainville agreements

Papua New Guinea informed the Security Council on 31 March [S/1998/287] of recent developments in the nine-year conflict in Bougainville. In accordance with their agreement to resolve the dispute by peaceful means, the parties to the conflict—the Bougainville Transitional Government, the Bougainville Resistance Force, the Bougainville Interim Government and the Bougainville Revolutionary Army—met in Burnham, New Zealand (1-10 October 1997), where they signed the Burnham Truce. By the Truce, the parties agreed to respect and promote basic human rights and fundamental freedoms, to refrain from acts of intimidation and armed confrontation, to promote peace and reconciliation, to restore freedom of movement and meet regularly for consultations on the progress of implementation. They recommended that a neutral regional Truce Monitoring Group, composed of civilian and military personnel from Australia, Fiji, New Zealand and Vanuatu, be invited to promote public confidence in the peace process and to monitor the implementation of the Truce. The Group's deployment, which expired on 31 January 1998, was extended to 30 April.

Together with the Government of Papua New Guinea and the Bougainville leaders, the parties met again at Lincoln University in Christchurch, New Zealand (19-23 January), where they signed the Lincoln Agreement on Peace, Security and Development on Bougainville.

Under the Lincoln Agreement, the parties undertook to renounce the use of armed force and to resolve their differences by consultation; to institute a permanent and irrevocable ceasefire effective 30 April; to begin a phased withdrawal of the Papua New Guinea Defence Force from Bougainville upon restoration of civil authority; and to conclude arrangements for the successor to the regional Truce Monitoring Group no later than 30 April, for which the national Government would seek the endorsement of the UN Security Council and the appointment of a special observer mission to monitor those arrangements.

The successor to the Truce Monitoring Group would monitor and report on ceasefire compliance, foster confidence in the peace process, provide information about the ceasefire and other aspects of the peace process, provide such assistance as might be agreed upon by the parties and allowed by available resources, and assist in the democratic resolution of the situation. The parties further undertook to re-establish the village court system and restore civilian peacetime policing, to promote reconciliation among Bougainvilleans, to hold free and fair elections and elect a Bougainville Reconciliation Government before the end of 1998.

The Papua New Guinea national Government confirmed the removal of bounties and would facilitate the free and unhindered movement of Papua New Guineans within and in and out of the country; it would grant amnesty to persons involved in crisis-related activities on all sides and recommend pardon for those convicted of crisis-related offences on the basis of advice from the Advisory Committee on the Power of Mercy. Other provisions of the Agreement concerned restoration and development, consultation and liaison at the political level and promotion of public awareness of the Lincoln Agreement.

A further Agreement covering Implementation of the Ceasefire, annexed to the Lincoln Agreement, was signed in Arawa, Bougainville, on 30 April [S/1998/506]. That accord spelt out the terms of the ceasefire to take effect on that date; the mandate of the successor neutral regional Peace Monitoring Group that would take over on 30 April; the mandate of a UN observer mission; and the mechanism for consultation, namely, the Peace Process Consultative Committee, which was composed of the representatives of the national Government and the Bougainvillean parties and observers from the States contributing to the Peace Monitoring Group.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 April [meeting 3874], having considered Papua New Guinea's 31 March letter and following consultations among its members, the Council authorized the President to make the following statement [S/PRST/1998/10] on its behalf:

The Security Council, taking note of the development of the Bougainville conflict, strongly supports the Agreement on Peace, Security and Development on Bougainville, signed at Lincoln University, New Zealand, on 23 January 1998 (the "Lincoln Agreement"), achieved by the Government of Papua New Guinea, the Bougainville Transitional Government, the Bougainville Resistance Force, the Bougainville Interim Government, the Bougainville Revolutionary Army and the Bougainville leaders, with regard to a ceasefire among conflicting parties.

The Council welcomes the extension of the period of truce, and welcomes further a permanent and irrevocable ceasefire which will take effect on 30 April 1998 as stipulated in the Lincoln Agreement.

The Council encourages all parties to cooperate in promoting reconciliation, so that the objectives of the Lincoln Agreement can be met, and urges all parties to continue to cooperate in accordance with the Lincoln Agreement in order to achieve and maintain peace, to renounce the use of armed force and violence, to resolve any differences by consultation, both now and in the future, and to confirm their respect for human rights and the rule of law.

The Council commends the efforts of countries in the region for the resolution of the conflict, and welcomes the establishment, as outlined in the Lincoln Agreement, of the peace monitoring group composed of civilian and military personnel from Australia, Fiji, New Zealand and Vanuatu, the mandate of which is to monitor the implementation of the said Agreement.

The Council notes that the Lincoln Agreement calls for the United Nations to play a role in Bougainville, and requests the Secretary-General to consider the composition and financial modalities of such involvement by the United Nations.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

UN Political Office in Bougainville

In keeping with the Security Council's request, the Secretary-General, on 2 June [S/1998/506], informed the Council of Papua New Guinea's request for the deployment of a UN observer mission to monitor the implementation of the Lincoln Agreement. In response to an invitation to the signing ceremony of the Arawa accord on 30 April, he had sent the Director of the Asia and Pacific Division of the Department of Political Affairs to represent him and at the same time to head a mission to assess how the United Nations could best carry out the functions assigned to it by the parties to the Lincoln and Arawa agreements. Based on the assessment report, the Secretary-General concluded that a UN presence in Bougainville would provide added confidence to the parties, facilitate the tasks of the Peace Monitoring Group and assist in the promotion of the political process specified by the agreements. Accordingly, he proposed establishing a political office, to be formally known as the United Nations Political Office in Bougainville (UNPOB), which would work in conjunction with the Peace Monitoring Group, while maintaining the right to make its own observations and assessments; monitor and report on the implementation of the Lincoln and Arawa agreements, including the activities of the Peace Monitoring Group in relation to its mandate; chair the Peace Process Consultative Committee; and assist in other areas as agreed by the parties to the agreements.

UNPOB would be based in Arawa and staffed by a Director, two political and two military advisers, plus international and local support personnel. The financial implications associated with the Office were estimated at approximately $1.4 million for the period from June to December 1998. On 15 June [S/1998/507], the Council agreed to the Secretary-General's conclusion and proposal as detailed.

On 20 November [S/1998/1156], the Secretary-General informed the Council of his decision to appoint Noel Sinclair (Guyana) as Director of UNPOB, which had been headed since August by a senior political adviser. The Secretary-General anticipated that UNPOB would remain operational until December 1999. The Council, on 11 December [S/1998/1157], welcomed the appointment and agreed with the extension of UNPOB until December 1999, subject to the Council's review in June of that year of the situation in Bougainville and UNPOB activities. The Council also took note of the Secretary-General's intention to brief it, on a quarterly basis, on the implementation of the Lincoln and Arawa agreements and asked for details of the UNPOB 1999 work programme.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 93], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/485/Add.1], adopted resolution 53/214, section IX, without vote [agenda item 113].

United Nations Political Office in Bougainville

[The General Assembly . . .]

Takes note of the estimate of 1,395,300 dollars under section 3, Peacekeeping operations and special missions, and 148,300 dollars under section 32, Staff assessment, of the programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999, on the understanding that such additional appropriations as may be necessary will be dealt with outside the procedures related to the contingency fund, as provided in annex I, paragraph 11, to General Assembly resolution 41/213;

Other matters

India-Pakistan

The United Nations Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan (UNMOGIP) continued in 1998 to monitor the situation in Jammu and Kashmir. As at 31 December, UNMOGIP had a strength of 45 military observers under the command of the Chief Military Observer, who was Major-General Ahn Choung-Jun (Republic of Korea) until 14 March 1998. He was succeeded by Brigadier-General Sergio Hernan Espinosa Davies (Chile), appointed by an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the Security Council on 3 and 9 March [S/1998/211, S/1998/212]. From 15 December to the end of the year, Colonel Flemming Johansen (Denmark) served as Acting Chief Military Observer.

UNMOGIP headquarters alternated on either side of the line of control, between Srinagar, Kashmir, in the summer and Rawalpindi, Pakistan, in the winter.

On 29 September [A/53/448-S/1998/907], Pakistan drew attention to the fact that, two days before, UNMOGIP personnel and vehicles were fired upon by the Indian army across the line of control in Neelam valley. Pakistan stated that the incident was intended to restrict the movement of UNMOGIP in Azad Kashmir so as to prevent it from investigating ceasefire violations.

Communications. Pakistan reported on 4 May [A/53/117-S/1998/371] the massacre of 22 Kashmiri civilians in the village of Bandala in Azad Kashmir, approximately 600 metres from the line of control on the side of Azad Jammu and Kashmir. An investigation had established beyond reasonable doubt, said Pakistan, that the massacre, which added a new destabilizing dimension to the Jammu and Kashmir dispute, was an act of terrorism by Indian armed forces who crossed the line of control. On 27 May [A/53/131-S/1998/435], Pakistan transmitted three 21 March resolutions adopted by the Azad Jammu and Kashmir Council. The first called for, among other actions, an immediate plebiscite in Jammu and Kashmir, the withdrawal of India's forces from Indian-held Kashmir and an end to the violations of the human rights of the Kashmiri people. The second called on India to allow UNMOGIP to monitor both sides of the line of control, urged the United Nations to increase the number of military observers and asked the Secretary-General for a fact-finding mission to make an on-the-spot assessment of the losses caused by continuous violations of the line of control by the Indian armed forces. The third urged the Secretary-General and the Security Council to persuade India to desist from spreading terrorism in Pakistan.

Nuclear tests by India and Pakistan

In May, India (11 and 13 May) and Pakistan (28 May) conducted underground testing of nuclear devices (see PART ONE, Chapter VII). On 4 August [A/53/205-S/1998/711], Pakistan said it recognized the imperative for it and India urgently to address issues of peace and security and drew attention to the unanimous view of the international community that the deterioration of the security situation in South Asia, and especially the more recent developments, were inescapably linked with the outstanding dispute over Jammu and Kashmir. Pakistan believed that the international community should urge restraint on India and counsel the resumption of dialogue. It urged the United Nations to consider: a deeper engagement by the Secretary-General in resolving outstanding issues between India and Pakistan, particularly the core issue of Jammu and Kashmir; strengthening UNMOGIP and asking it to report regularly to the Council; and appointing a special representative of the Secretary-General for Jammu and Kashmir.

A number of communications addressed to the Secretary-General and the Council [S/1998/473, S/1998/489, S/1998/605, S/1998/619; A/52/951-S/1998/515] in the wake of the nuclear tests called on both parties to exercise restraint and to reduce tensions between them through dialogue to address the root causes of tension, notably the Jammu and Kashmir dispute.

The Council, in presidential statements of 14 and 29 May [S/PRST/1998/12, S/PRST/1998/17], deplored the three underground nuclear tests by India and those conducted by Pakistan. By resolution 1172(1998) of 6 June, the Council condemned the tests and urged both parties to exercise maximum restraint and avoid threatening military movements, cross-border violations or other provocations to prevent an aggravation of the situation.

In a July report [S/1998/619] submitted in response to that resolution, the Secretary-General indicated that frequent firing across the line of control in Jammu and Kashmir continued, as well as irregular warfare in the Indian-administered area between militants and Indian security forces. The Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs advised that in recent months there was a significant increase in the level of hostilities, reflected in a growing number of civilian casualties. The Secretary-General said that Pakistan had informed him also on 26 June of the deteriorating security situation in South Asia, and particularly in Jammu and Kashmir.

Iran-United States

By several letters to the Secretary-General, Iran continued to protest violations of its territory by the United States forces in the Persian Gulf region and demand an end to such violations.

Iran cited the harassment of its vessels by United States warships in February and June 1997 and violations of its airspace by submarine-detecting aircraft [S/1998/23]; the crashing of a United States helicopter in Iran's territorial waters in August 1997 [S/1998/416]; the intrusion in February 1998 of a United States warship in the same waters, as well as eight tugboats that surrounded an Iranian destroyer [S/1998/595]; and the interception of an Iranian aircraft by a United States aircraft in June [S/1998/1114].

Iran later reported that, on 17 December [S/1999/82], during the first round of military operations against Iraq by the United States and the United Kingdom, the Iranian city of Khorramshahr was thrice hit by American missiles. Iran said it held the United States Government responsible for the damage caused by the missiles.

Iraq-Iran

Throughout 1998, Iran and Iraq transmitted to the Secretary-General allegations of repeated violations of their 1988 ceasefire agreement [YUN 1988, p. 193] and of their 1991 Tehran agreements [YUN 1991, p. 163] concerning the area of separation between them. Iraq's communications covered the periods 29 September-25 November 1997 [S/1998/10], 25 November 1997-19 February 1998 [S/1998/205], 1 December 1997-2 May 1998 [S/1998/413], and 28 February-17 July 1998 [S/1998/702]. Among the violations alleged by Iraq were: the intensification of night-time foot and vehicular patrols and daily river patrols in the Shatt al-Arab (Arvand Rud) between Abadan and Khorramshahr; military and civilian movements in and out of the area of separation; the installation of a number of metal towers from 8 to 10 metres high, the emplacement of machine-guns, digging slit trenches and mine-laying; the reinforcement of guard posts with personnel and weapons and the temporary deployment of personnel to defensive positions 1.5 to 2 kilometres apart, as well as of caravans for use as observation or surveillance posts; firings at Iraqi guard posts and mortars landing on the Iraqi side; infiltrations into the Iraqi side by armed Iranians; and airspace violations by fighter aircraft and combat helicopters. In addition, Iraq reported the periodic seizure of Iraqi fishing boats and the temporary detention of their crews, as well as the arrest of herdsmen.

For its part, Iran, besides reporting in June 1998 [S/1998/573] similar Iraqi violations in the area of separation during March-May 1997, also charged that Kurdish mercenaries, supported by Iraq, infiltrated an Iranian border village to intimidate and rob the villagers; that in February [S/1998/277] the nine-member crew of an Iranian fishing motor boat that had sunk for reasons unknown was taken to Faw for interrogation, whose urgent release Iran demanded; and that, in November 1997 [S/1998/641] and April-June 1998 [S/1998/980], armed Iraqi vessels intercepted Iranian fishing boats in order to loot them.

In addition, Iran reported several incidents of infiltration by elements belonging to the terrorist "People's Mujahideen Organization" from Iraq into Iranian territory: in February [S/1998/687], when they ambushed and captured three Iraqi sentries; in May [S/1998/688], when an armed Iraqi group took a number of Iranian farmers captive, four of whom remained in detention; and in August [S/1998/817], when, in one day, two gunmen assassinated a businessman, killing two other Iranians in the process, and two other infiltrators engaged Iranian border guards, killing one of them. Iran held Iraq responsible for those terrorist acts since Iraq permitted the presence of that terrorist organization in its territory.

Japan-Democratic People's Republic of Korea

In a statement of 27 May [S/1998/462], the DPRK referred to three bills pending before the Diet of Japan on emergency areas surrounding that country, on amendments to the Law on Japanese Self-Defence Forces and on the Japan-United States agreement on materiel and manpower supply. Those bills, the DPRK claimed, testified to the dangerous and reckless attempts of Japanese reactionaries to create a powerful military State, which was already in the making.

Japan, on 4 September [S/1998/835], reported that the second stage of a two-stage ballistic missile, launched on 31 August from the eastern coast of the DPRK without prior warning, flew over Japan and fell in the sea off the coast of Sanriku. Japan regarded the action as directly affecting its security since the missiles were launched in the vicinity of frequently used airspace and sea lanes. It recalled the Security Council's 1992 presidential statement [YUN 1992, p. 35] declaring that the proliferation of all weapons of mass destruction constituted to be a threat to international peace and security. According to the DPRK's response of 14 September [S/1998/865], Japan was turning the DPRK satellite launch, intended for scientific and technological development purposes, into a ballistic missile launch. On 17 September [S/1998/866], the DPRK said the Council, at Japan's request, had discussed the satellite launch on 15 September. It claimed that the Council had also discussed issuing a press statement expressing grave concern (over the hazardous launching of a rocket-propelled object) and urging the DPRK to refrain from a repetition of the act. The DPRK asserted that its satellite launch was not a matter for the Council to discuss, nor was there any precedent for the Council to do so.

The DPRK, in an earlier 6 July letter [A/53/167] to the Secretary-General, reported on the indictment of the Committee for Investigations of Damages caused by the Japanese Imperialists during their Occupation of Korea relating to the drafting of Koreans and the killing of kidnapped Koreans.

United Arab Emirates-Iran

Greater Tunb, Lesser Tunb and Abu Musa

On 26 January [S/1998/68], the United Arab Emirates requested the Security Council to retain on its agenda the question of Iran's continued occupation of the Greater Tunb, Lesser Tunb and Abu Musa, three islands belonging to the United Arab Emirates.

The United Arab Emirates transmitted excerpts of the final communiques of the sessions of the Supreme Council of the Gulf Cooperation Council of December 1997 [S/1998/2] and 1998 [A/53/771-S/1998/1216] and of those of its Ministerial Council in March [S/1998/245], June [S/1998/615] and August [S/1998/842]. The excerpts acknowledged that the three islands belonged to the United Arab Emirates, reaffirmed that country's sovereignty over them, and reiterated the call on Iran to respond to repeated appeals for a peaceful settlement of the dispute over those islands, including agreeing to refer it to the International Court of Justice. They also called on Iran to end its occupation of the islands, renounce its policy of fait accompli, refrain from building further installations on the islands, destroy those already built and rescind all unilateral measures taken. Algeria transmitted a 25 March resolution [S/1998/319], adopted by the Council of the League of Arab States, repeating essentially the same provisions as those contained in the Gulf Cooperation Council communiques on the subject. The United Arab Emirates further transmitted a note verbale it had addressed to Iran [S/1999/64] protesting that country's air, ground and naval manoeuvres on 4-10 December, which included the three occupied islands.

To the 1997 protest [YUN 1997, p. 286] of the United Arab Emirates against Iran's construction of a dock on the Greater Tunb, Iran responded [S/1998/22] that it regarded the assertions contained in that protest as constituting interference in Iran's internal affairs and categorically rejected them.

Chapter V

Europe and the Mediterranean

The fragile peace in the Balkans was disrupted in 1998 by the escalation of the crisis in the Kosovo province of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) (FRY), creating new challenges for the United Nations and the international community, and having the potential for serious spillover effects in the surrounding countries. That situation, as well as those in other parts of the former Yugoslavia—Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia—highlighted the continuing concern of the international community for the maintenance of international peace and security in that region.

During the year, United Nations peacekeeping efforts in the countries of the former Yugoslavia achieved measured success. Its Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH) continued to assist the parties in implementing the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes (also known as the Dayton-Paris Peace Agreement) and the separate Dayton Agreement on implementing the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The General Assembly welcomed the successful implementation of certain aspects of that Agreement and reiterated its demand for its full implementation. In May, the Security Council authorized an increase in UNMIBH police personnel and agreed to consider an UNMIBH-led court-monitoring programme. In June, the Council extended UNMIBH's mandate until 21 June 1999. It also authorized the multinational Stabilization Force (SFOR), led by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), which was responsible for the military aspects of the Peace Agreement, to continue for a further 12 months.

The mandate of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES) ended successfully on 15 January. On 13 February, the Council stated that the experience of the multi-functional UNTAES operation might be useful for similar situations in the future. UNTAES was replaced on 16 January by the United Nations Civilian Police Support Group of 180 civilian police monitors, which continued to monitor the performance of the Croatian police in the Danube region. The Support Group's mandate ended on 15 October and its responsibilities were handed over to the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE), thereby ending direct UN involvement in that region.

The United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka (UNMOP) continued to monitor the demilitarization of the disputed Prevlaka peninsula and the neighbouring areas in Croatia and FRY. During the year, both Croatia and FRY submitted drafts of a proposed agreement on a permanent solution and began negotiations towards that end. The Council extended UNMOP's mandate until 15 January 1999.

The relative success of the UNTAES and UNMOP missions was, however, overshadowed by the scope and intensity of the conflict in Kosovo, which escalated dramatically during the year, leading to a potential humanitarian catastrophe. The Council, in March, imposed an arms embargo on FRY and, in September, demanded that both sides cease hostilities, maintain a ceasefire and enter immediately into a meaningful dialogue. The Kosovo crisis also led the Council to extend the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force in the neighbouring former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia until 28 February 1999. The situation stabilized in October following an agreement between FRY President Slobodan Milosevic and the United States Special Representative, Richard Holbrooke, on modalities for ending the conflict. In October, the Council endorsed the establishment of the OSCE/NATO Kosovo Verification Mission. Meanwhile, the Secretary-General decided that the United Nations role on the ground in Kosovo should be directed towards the complex humanitarian and human rights situation, resulting from the armed conflict there.

In other parts of Europe, the United Nations intensified efforts to reinvigorate the Georgian/Abkhaz peace process and to stabilize the situation in the zone of conflict through the efforts of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG). Of major concern during the year was the security environment in which UNOMIG operated, following numerous attacks on its personnel and facilities. In November, the Council approved the Secretary-General's proposal to increase the number of international and local lightly armed security personnel to provide internal security to the Mission's installations. The Council extended UNOMIG's mandate until 31 January 1999.

The prospects of bringing about a comprehensive settlement of the Cyprus conflict improved somewhat when the Greek and Turkish sides agreed to the Secretary-General's proposal that his Deputy Special Representative for Cyprus begin a process of on-island talks with both parties, which began on 16 October, with a view to reducing tension and promoting progress towards a just and lasting settlement.

The former Yugoslavia

UN operations

In 1998, the United Nations continued to work towards restoring peace and stability in the countries of the former Yugoslavia (Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) (FRY) and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM)) through its peacekeeping missions: the United Nations Transitional Administration in Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES), the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP) and the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH). UNTAES, whose mandate ended on 15 January, was replaced as of 16 January for a single nine-month period by the United Nations Civilian Police Support Group, which monitored the Croatian police in the Danube region, particularly with respect to the return of displaced persons. The United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka (UNMOP) continued to monitor the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula. The Security Council extended UNMIBH's mandate, which included the International Police Task Force, until 21 June 1999 and increased the strength of the civilian police by 30, to 2,057. UNPREDEP's troop strength was increased to 1,050 and its mandate extended until 28 February 1999.

Combined financing

During its resumed fifty-second session in 1998, the General Assembly again considered the combined financing of its missions in the former Yugoslavia. The Assembly had before it the Secretary-General's report on the final disposition of the assets of the United Nations Peace Forces (UNPF) as at 10 January 1996 [A/52/792], his performance report [A/52/815] on the financing of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPRO-

FOR), the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia (UNCRO), UNPREDEP and UNPF headquarters for the period 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, including information on liquidation tasks not completed as at 30 June 1997, and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) [A/52/868]. During the period, UNPF completed the liquidation of UNPROFOR and UNCRO. It continued to provide administrative and logistic support to UNPREDEP, UNTAES and UNMIBH.

(Details of the financing of the respective peacekeeping operations in the former Yugoslavia are to be found in the relevant sections below.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, by decision 52/485 of 26 June, took note of the Secretary-General's report on the disposition of UNPF assets and requested the Board of Auditors to examine that report in the light of the views expressed by Member States thereon in the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee. It also took note of ACABQ's concern regarding the use of gratis personnel as negotiators for United Nations wet-lease arrangements. The Assembly decided that, in future, detailed information on, and justification of, written-off and lost items should be provided in reports on the final disposition of assets of all peacekeeping operations, and to defer consideration of the treatment of the unencumbered balance of $3,467,200 gross ($4,094,200 net) for the period 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, pending submission of the final performance report for UNPF.

By decision 53/458 of 18 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee, at its resumed fifty-third session in 1999, should continue consideration of the item on the financing of UNPROFOR, UNCRO, UNPREDEP and UNPF headquarters.

State succession issues

In 1998, the Special Negotiator on succession issues of the Office of the High Representative continued to hold meetings with the five successor States of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia—Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, FRY, FYROM and Slovenia—in the search for an agreement on State succession issues. The High Representative reported in April [S/1998/314] that plenary meetings on succession issues, held in Brussels, Belgium, from 4 to 6 February and from 25 to 27 March, focused on a possible agreement on archives, citizenship, pensions, treaties and acquired rights, as well as on possible distribution of diplomatic and consular properties and some financial assets abroad of the former Yugoslavia. A compromise package was submitted to the five States by the Special Negotiator. The conclusions of the 1997 Bonn Peace Implementation Conference [YUN 1997, p. 293] relating to records and data relevant to the settlement of succession issues were also discussed. Other outstanding succession issues in the broader draft Framework Agreement submitted to the Bonn Conference would also need to be addressed, as would the future course of negotiations on those issues.

In July [S/1998/643], the High Representative reported that discussion on the compromise agreement package on succession issues failed to lead to any consensus: four delegations accepted the package but one (FRY) had substantial objections. Only limited progress was made regarding effective access to records and data relevant to succession issues, although FRY had decided in principle to make certain documents available.

On 9 June [S/1998/498], the Ministerial Meeting of the Steering Board of the Peace Implementation Council (PIC) (see below, under "Bosnia and Herzegovina") noted with concern that very limited progress had been made in complying with the call by PIC for effective access to relevant records and data. Although FRY had decided in principle to make certain documents available, that decision was inadequate to enable negotiations on the Special Negotiator's 1997 draft Framework Memorandum [YUN 1997, p. 290] to proceed effectively and on an equal footing.

The Steering Board also noted with concern the continuing lack of progress in arriving at a consensus on substantive issues within the draft Framework Memorandum. Stressing that negotiations on succession issues could not continue indefinitely, the Board supported the High Representative's recommendation that there be a pause in the negotiations until September. A further negotiating session to consider the draft Memorandum would be scheduled when conditions justified it, at which time the Steering Board would revisit the question, including the option of referring key outstanding issues to arbitration and steps to distribute relevant assets held abroad.

The High Representative reported that, in lieu of a further negotiating session that had been envisaged, the Special Negotiator had toured capitals between September and November. It was decided that he would hold bilateral meetings in Brussels with representatives of the five States, starting in January 1999 [S/1999/139].

Communications. In a 15 December letter [A/52/780-S/1998/82] to the Secretary-General, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, FYROM and Slovenia objected to the inclusion, as reflected in the UN Terminology Bulletin No. 347/Rev.1, of FRY in the list of States Members of the United Nations, members of specialized agencies or parties to the Statute of the International Court of Justice and to the use of the date of admission of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to the United Nations as the date of admission of FRY to the Organization. They requested a correction of the bulletin and previous related ones.

On 23 July [A/53/190-S/1998/691], the same countries transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a 1 July letter to the Chairman-in-Office of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE), expressing their view that FRY, as a new State, should adhere to the procedure for admission to OSCE as had been done by all other new States, including themselves. They reiterated that inclusion of FRY in OSCE and other international organizations should be based on the fact that it was a new State, one of the successors to the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

In a 14 August response [A/53/295-S/1998/811] to the OSCE Chairman-in Office, FRY made the distinction between State continuity and State succession. It said that succession addressed the distribution of assets and liabilities and those negotiations were under way, with its active participation. As for continuity, it recalled the 27 April 1992 declaration by which FRY undertook to respect the continuity of the international personality of Yugoslavia and to fulfil all the rights and obligations assumed by the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in international relations, including membership in all international organizations and participation in international treaties ratified or acceded to by Yugoslavia. Croatia and FYROM, by signing agreements on normalization of relations with FRY, and Bosnia and Herzegovina, by signing a joint communique in Paris at the conclusion of the Dayton-Paris Peace Agreement [YUN 1995 p. 544], had accepted the existence of the State continuity of FRY. The suspension of its membership in OSCE was political and linked to events in Bosnia and Herzegovina, said FRY. With the signing of the Dayton-Paris Peace Agreement, those reasons ceased to exist. FRY demanded that its full-fledged membership rights in OSCE be restored.

Bosnia and Herzegovina

In 1998, the United Nations continued to support efforts towards the full implementation of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina (the Peace Agreement), signed in December 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 544], through the Office of the High Representative responsible for the Agreement's civilian aspects [YUN 1996, p. 293J and UNMIBH [ibid., p. 294], the key components of which were the International Police Task Force (IPTF) and the Mine Action Centre (MAC). Both those entities worked in cooperation with the multinational Stabilization Force (SFOR), led by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), which was responsible for the military aspects of the Agreement.

Progress in the implementation of the Peace Agreement was reviewed during the year by the Steering Board of the Peace Implementation Council (PIC) and the PIC Conference. PIC noted that Bosnia and Herzegovina—which consisted of two multi-ethnic entities, the Federation and the Republika Srpska—had taken great strides forward during the year.

The Security Council authorized an increase in UNMIBH police monitors in May and, in June, extended the Mission's mandate until June 1999.

Implementation of Peace Agreement

Progress in implementing the General Framework Agreement was reviewed in June by the PIC Steering Board and in December by the PIC Peace Implementation Conference. The PIC Steering Board, established in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 511], comprised Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom, the United States, the European Union (EU) and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC).

PIC Steering Board meeting (June). The PIC Steering Board met at the Foreign Minister level in Luxembourg on 9 June to review progress in implementing the Peace Agreement and to adopt a peace implementation agenda for the next six-month period.

In the declaration [S/1998/498] issued at the conclusion of the meeting, the Board said that implementation of the Peace Agreement was characterized by both substantive progress and an inadequate rate of implementation. Progress achieved since the December 1997 Bonn Implementation Conference [YUN 1997, p. 293] included the emergence of a new and more pluralistic Government in Republika Srpska; the taking into custody of half the persons indicted for war crimes by the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY) (see PART FOUR, Chapter II) and cooperation with the Tribunal; the creation of a number of multi-ethnic assemblies following the September 1997 elections; restructuring of the public media and police forces in Republika Srpska and the Federation; progress in minority returns and property legislation; circulation of the provisional Konvertible Marka currency; the passing of new legislation on customs, privatization, foreign investment and State and entity budgets; and reaching agreement with the International Monetary Fund (IMF) on standby arrangements. However, the slow pace of implementation by the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina and their frequent procrastination were matters of serious concern. The Board said it was high time for those authorities to act in accordance with all aspects of the Peace Agreement and implement the commitments they undertook in Dayton. It said that the September 1998 elections (see below) were a major opportunity for the people of Bosnia and Herzegovina to express their wishes about the future of their country and called on them to exercise their democratic rights actively and to participate in the elections. It welcomed OSCE supervision of the registration and election processes and expected the election rules and regulations, adopted by the Provisional Election Commission, to be respected. It called on the Inter-Religious Council in Sarajevo and all religious leaders to engage directly in efforts to defuse conflicts and promote freedom of worship and movement for members of all religions. The Steering Board welcomed an 8 June EU declaration that set out the prospects for closer cooperation with European structures, if Bosnia and Herzegovina continued on the right path, and establishing a joint consultative task force towards that end.

Concerning public security and judicial reform, the Board urged the Federation and Republika Srpska to finish restructuring the police, in coordination with UNMIBH, and encouraged IPTF to complete the establishment of the joint police forces in the Federation and to continue its negotiations with Republika Srpska. It required Republika Srpska to fill at least 400 minority police officer posts in the restructured force by 31 August; that the Federation Ministry of the Interior be inaugurated by 15 June and restructured; and that the two remaining cantons inaugurate their new integrated police forces. All 10 cantons should have a restructured multi-ethnic police force established by 31 December 1998, reflecting the 1991 census.

As to economic reforms, the Board called for the immediate passage of the State-level privatization law by the Bosnia and Herzegovina Parliament; new privatization legislation in Republika Srpska, consistent with it, by 15 July; and the privatization process to be under way in both entities by 30 August. The Board recommended a number of measures to remove obstacles to free trade with specific dates for their implementation, as well as further action needed in the financial sector and to improve further the infrastructure network. It requested that international assistance for public utility sectors be conditioned upon a programme of restructuring and transparency set up by the High Representative, in consultation with the Chairman of the Commission on Public Corporations and main bilateral donors. The Board supported the High Representative's request for an increase in assistance to Republika Srpska in 1998 to make up for past low levels of international aid. It urged the authorities to undertake more actions and reforms to reduce corruption and misuse of public funds and welcomed the creation by the High Representative of an anti-fraud unit. To revitalize the economy, it was critical that operations of the Central Bank and introduction of the common currency went forward as scheduled, and that public authorities supported monetary stability and macroeconomic consolidation by adhering to fiscally sound, realistic, transparent and operative budget processes, and promoted a culture of public accountability. The Board urged immediate adoption of structural reforms to establish a market economy and suggested measures to be taken in that regard.

In the matter of democratic elections, the Board welcomed the successful implementation of the 1997 election results [YUN 1997, p. 310] and urged that the newly elected authorities work in a spirit of reconciliation and that the functioning of parallel municipal structures in certain municipalities cease immediately. It urged all participating OSCE States to ensure that OSCE had the personnel and financial resources to fully supervise the September 1998 elections and encouraged PIC members to contribute to the election budget. OSCE should fully utilize its authority to vet candidates and sanction those parties and candidates that obstructed free and fair elections. The Board stressed the need to accelerate the ongoing drafting of a permanent election law, to be adopted in the post-election period, to include provisions to increase pluralism in future elections.

In connection with media reform, the Board supported the High Representative's efforts to establish an Intermediate Media Standards and Licensing Commission and urged him to complete swiftly the restructuring of Bosnia and Herzegovina Television and to follow through on plans to establish a countrywide public broadcasting system.

The Board recognized that the institution-building process was proceeding slowly and noted with concern that neither the Presidency nor the Parliamentary Assembly nor the Council of Ministers had taken steps to build sustainable and efficient common structures. It requested the Council of Ministers to implement the Council of Ministers Law without delay and said that the full establishment of its common services should be completed by 30 July. The two Houses of the Parliamentary Assembly should establish an office for common services by 31 July. The Board decided that all elected or appointed officials and all citizens of Bosnia and Herzegovina should be required to use the new Bosnia and Herzegovina travel documents from 1 August 1998 and 1 January 1999, respectively. Refugees living abroad would be entitled to use their old official documents for their return to Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Board supported the efforts of the High Representative and IPTF to draft a State Border Police law by 30 June. It insisted on the immediate dismantling of illegal, parallel institutions and encouraged the High Representative to institute firm measures against persons maintaining those institutions.

The Board believed that enhanced focus should be placed on implementation of the Peace Agreement at the municipal and cantonal levels and requested the High Representative to establish an evaluation system of peace implementation at those levels. Noting that, despite improved cooperation by Bosnian Serb authorities with ICTY, a large number of indictees remained at large, including Radovan Karadzic, the Board stated that the competent authorities should immediately execute arrest warrants for all indicted persons under their jurisdiction and surrender them to ICTY. The authorities should provide full disclosure of all information that could assist in tracing missing persons and about the locations of grave sites.

The Board welcomed progress in strengthening the capabilities of the entities' military demining forces and encouraged all parties to continue demining operations. It commended the efforts of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) in Bosnia and Herzegovina and called on PIC members to support its work in preserving and rebuilding monasteries, churches, mosques, bridges and other national monuments.

The Board welcomed progress in confidence- and security-building measures and subregional arms control and invited the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina to explore ways to decrease the numbers of troops and heavy weapons in their respective defence establishments. It insisted that both entities make military spending more transparent and that all defence spending within an entity be centralized within an openly published defence budget. It urged greater efforts to complete the integration of the Federation military, including creation of a joint, integrated command structure.

The Board endorsed the Supplemental Award for Brcko (see below) and emphasized the importance of the establishment of the Republika Srpska Commission for Brcko to ensure that its terms were fulfilled.

The Board stressed that building a stable Bosnia and Herzegovina had to be addressed in a regional context and reminded Croatia and FRY of their obligations as signatories of the Peace Agreement and that they had to do more to fulfil those commitments. Croatia had to allow unimpeded refugee return, support the process of return in Bosnia and Herzegovina, establish an effective border regime with Bosnia and Herzegovina to allow accession to any international trade organization and enforce the Memorandum of Understanding signed with Bosnia and Herzegovina in February and the decision of the High Representative in May regarding common licence plates. It expressed concern about continuing payments by Croatia to Bosnian Croat officials and military personnel, which it contended should be immediately phased out. Bosnia and Herzegovina and FRY were called on to complete the establishment of diplomatic relations and the exchange of ambassadors without preconditions.

Peace Implementation Conference (December). The Peace Implementation Conference of PIC (Madrid, Spain, 15-16 December) [S/1998/139] reviewed progress in implementing the Peace Agreement since its December 1997 meeting [YUN 1997, p. 293].

PIC noted that Bosnia and Herzegovina had taken great strides forward in the past year: basic political and economic institutions of State had been established; key laws, including on foreign investment, privatization and property, were in place; freedom of movement across the country had substantially improved; fundamental reform of the media was under way; and elections had demonstrated a trend towards growing pluralism and tolerance. However, action was needed in particular on: inter-ethnic tolerance and reconciliation; the development of effective common institutions with powers clearly delineated from those of the entities; and an open and pluralistic political life. The growth of organized crime also represented a serious threat.

PIC stated that the next two years would be vital in strengthening the peace process and building democratic, market-oriented institutions, with the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina increasingly assuming greater responsibility for the functions currently being undertaken or coordinated by the international community. PIC would continue to encourage the return of refugees and displaced persons by fostering a political, economic and security environment conducive to returns; strengthen Bosnia and Herzegovina internally and externally; and support stronger ties with European institutions. It outlined its priority action for 1999, reaffirmed its support for the High Representative and supported expansion of his consultation and coordination, through the PIC Steering Board, with other coordinating bodies. It endorsed the powers given to the High Representative at the 1997 Peace Implementation Conference [YUN 1997, p. 293] and acknowledged the need to ensure timely and adequate funding for his Office.

Civilian aspects

The civilian aspects of the 1995 Peace Agreement [YUN 1995, p. 544] entailed a wider range of activities, including humanitarian aid, rehabilitation of infrastructure, establishment of political and constitutional institutions, promotion of respect for human rights and the holding of free and fair elections. The High Representative, Carlos Westendorp (Spain), who chaired the PIC Steering Board and other key implementation bodies, was the final authority with regard to implementing the civilian aspects. UNMIBH, which comprised a UN civilian office, IPTF and MAC, reported to the Secretary-General through the United Nations Coordinator.

Reports of the High Representative. The High Representative reported four times on the implementation process during the year, covering the periods from January to March [S/1998/314], April to June [S/1998/643], July to September [S/1998/947] and October to December [S/1999/139]. He described progress in the civilian implementation of the Peace Agreement, which he had been mandated to monitor, mobilize and coordinate. (For details, see below under specific subjects.)

During the year, the High Representative convened monthly PIC Steering Board meetings at the level of political directors of the respective Foreign Ministries and weekly meetings at the ambassadorial level in Sarajevo, each devoted to specific issues of the peace process.

UN Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH)

During the year, the Secretary-General submitted four reports to the Security Council on the activities of UNMIBH [S/1998/227 & Corr.1 & Add.1, S/1998/491, S/1998/862, S/1998/1174].

Special Representative and Coordinator. On 16 January, Elisabeth Rehn (Finland) succeeded Kai Eide (Norway) as the Secretary-General's Special Representative and Coordinator of United Nations Operations in Bosnia and Herzegovina. On 2 March, Richard Monk (United Kingdom) took over from Manfred Seitner (Denmark) as Commissioner of IPTF.

Report of Secretary-General (March). In March [S/1998/227 & Corr.1 & Add.1], the Secretary-General reported that in the Federation there were only 2 cantons out of 10 where the new police force had still not been inaugurated. In Republika Srpska, the election of the new Government of Milorad Dodik provided fresh impetus to the police restructuring process, while in the Federation it was being held up in the last two Croat-dominated cantons by political issues. The positive developments in Republika Srpska and the transfer to the second phase of police reform in the Federation brought an increased workload to IPTF. Responding to the Council's request contained in resolution 1144(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 300] that IPTF carry out new intensive training programmes for local police in a number of specialized fields, UNMIBH planned to set up three specialized police training units: a Critical Incident Management Unit; an Organized Crime Unit; and a Drug Control Unit. Once the police restructuring was completed, there would be 20,000 police officers in Bosnia and Herzegovina. To staff the training units, 43 specialists would be needed, 13 of whom might be accommodated from current IPTF posts, requiring an increase of 30 posts in the overall IPTF strength, bringing the total strength from 2,027 to 2,057. In addition, 21 IPTF officers from among the current monitors would supplement and support the Critical Incident Management Unit by assisting local police with tactical planning, exercises for dealing with crowds and emergencies. The Secretary-General proposed that the Council approve the increase, as well as his proposals for the related UNMIBH court-monitoring programme (see below).

The Secretary-General stated that, if approved, the associated cost of his proposals would amount to $0.9 million for the 30 IPTF monitors and approximately $1.1 million for the UNMIBH court-monitoring programme.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 21 May [meeting 3883], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1168(1998). The draft [S/1998/415] was sponsored by France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Portugal, the Russian Federation, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions concerning the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, including resolutions 1031(1995) of 15 December 1995, 1035(1995) of 21 December 1995, 1088(1996) of 12 December 1996, 1103(1997) of 31 March 1997, 1107(1997) of 16 May 1997 and 1144(1997) of 19 December 1997,

Expressing its continued commitment to the political settlement of conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, preserving the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States there within their internationally recognized borders,

Recalling the conclusions of the Ministerial Meeting of the Steering Board of the Peace Implementation Council held in Sintra, Portugal, on 30 May 1997 and the Peace Implementation Conference held in Bonn on 9 and 10 December 1997,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 12 March 1998, and taking note of his observations and the planning outlined in paragraphs 37 to 46 of that report,

Reaffirming its full support for the High Representative and his staff and his responsibility in implementing the civilian aspects of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement"),

Commending the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including the International Police Task Force, and recalling the recommendations of the Bonn Peace Implementation Conference relating to the Mission, including the Task Force, Expressing its appreciation to the personnel of the Mission, including the International Police Task Force, and to the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the Task Force Commissioner,

Emphasizing the increasing importance of specialized training for local police in Bosnia and Herzegovina, especially in the areas of critical incident management, corruption, organized crime and drug control, as outlined in the report of the Secretary-General,

Acknowledging that success in the area of police reform in Bosnia and Herzegovina is closely linked to complementary judicial reform, and taking note of the report of the High Representative of 9 April 1998, which emphasizes that judicial reform is a priority for further progress,

1. Decides to authorize an increase in the strength of the International Police Task Force by 30 posts, to a total authorized strength of 2,057;

2. Supports the improvements in the overall management of the International Police Task Force undertaken by the Secretary-General, his Special Representatives, and the Task Force Commissioners and personnel in Bosnia and Herzegovina, stresses the importance of continued reforms in this area, and in this regard strongly encourages the Secretary-General to make further improvements to the Task Force, in particular with regard to personnel management issues;

3. Encourages Member States to intensify their efforts to provide, on a voluntary funded basis and in coordination with the International Police Task Force, training, equipment and related assistance for local police forces in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

4. Recognizes that establishing an indigenous public security capability is essential to strengthening the rule of law in Bosnia and Herzegovina, agrees to consider expeditiously a court monitoring programme led by the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina as part of an overall programme of legal reform as outlined by the Office of the High Representative, and requests the Secretary-General to submit recommendations on the possibility of utilizing locally hired personnel as far as is practical and of voluntary funding;

5. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (June). In a June report [S/1998/491], the Secretary-General said that, in addition to its ongoing activities of monitoring, advising and training the local police, UNMIBH commenced the restructuring of police services in the two still-outstanding cantons of the Federation and in Republika Srpska. It introduced a common licence plate to enhance freedom of movement between the Federation and Republika Srpska and commenced preparations for the specialized training programme for local police, as well as the monitoring and assessment programme of the judicial system. He also described the activities of several UN system organizations in Bosnia and Herzegovina. He noted that the NATO Secretary-General had informed him that, on 28 May, NATO's Foreign Ministers had endorsed an operational plan for continuing a multinational force in Bosnia and Herzegovina. However, its continuation was contingent on the necessary mandate from the Security Council.

The Secretary-General recommended that UNMIBH's mandate be extended until 21 June 1999.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 15 June [meeting 3892], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1174(1998). The draft [S/1998/502] was submitted by France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Portugal, the Russian Federation, Slovenia, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions concerning the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, including resolutions 1031(1995) of 15 December 1995, 1035(1995) of 21 December 1995, 1088(1996) of 12 December 1996, 1144(1997) of 19 December 1997 and 1168(1998) of 21 May 1998,

Reaffirming its commitment to the political settlement of the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, preserving the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States there within their internationally recognized borders,

Underlining its commitment to supporting implementation of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement"),

Emphasizing its appreciation to the High Representative, the Commander and personnel of the multinational Stabilization Force, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the personnel of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including the Commissioner and personnel of the International Police Task Force, and the personnel of other international organizations and agencies in Bosnia and Herzegovina for their contributions to the implementation of the Peace Agreement,

Underlining once again the important role for the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in the successful development of the peace process in Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Stressing that a comprehensive and coordinated return of refugees and displaced persons throughout the region is crucial to lasting peace,

Taking note of the declaration of the Steering Board of the Peace Implementation Council in Luxembourg on 9 June 1998 and the conclusions of its previous meetings,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 10 June 1998,

Noting the report of the High Representative of 9 April 1998,

Determining that the situation in the region continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security,

Determined to promote the peaceful resolution of the conflicts in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter,

I

1. Reaffirms once again its support for the Peace Agreement, as well as for the Dayton Agreement on Implementing the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina of 10 November 1995, calls upon the parties to comply strictly with their obligations under those agreements, and expresses its intention to keep the implementation of the Peace Agreement and the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina under review;

2. Reiterates that the primary responsibility for the further successful implementation of the peace process lies with the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina themselves and that the continued willingness of the international community and major donors to assume the political, military and economic burden of implementation and reconstruction efforts will be determined by the compliance and active participation by all the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina in implementing the Peace Agreement and rebuilding a civil society, in particular in full cooperation with the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, in strengthening joint institutions and in facilitating returns of refugees and displaced persons;

3. Once again reminds the parties that, in accordance with the Peace Agreement, they have committed themselves to cooperate fully with all entities involved in the implementation of this peace settlement, as described in the Peace Agreement, or which are otherwise authorized by the Security Council, including the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, as it carries out its responsibilities for dispensing justice impartially, and underlines that full cooperation by States and entities with the International Tribunal includes the surrender for trial of all persons indicted by the Tribunal and provision of information to assist in Tribunal investigations;

4. Emphasizes its full support for the continued role of the High Representative in monitoring the implementation of the Peace Agreement and giving guidance to and coordinating the activities of the civilian organizations and agencies involved in assisting the parties to implement the Peace Agreement, and reaffirms that the High Representative is the final authority in theatre regarding the interpretation of annex 10 on civilian implementation of the Peace Agreement and that in case of dispute, he may give his interpretation and make recommendations, and make binding decisions as he judges necessary on issues as elaborated by the Peace Implementation Council in Bonn on 9 and 10 December 1997;

5. Expresses its support for the declaration of the Steering Board of the Peace Implementation Council in Luxembourg;

6. Recognizes that the parties have authorized the multinational force referred to in paragraph 10 below to take such actions as required, including the use of necessary force, to ensure compliance with annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement;

7. Reaffirms its intention to keep the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina under close review, taking into account the reports submitted pursuant to paragraphs 18 and 25 below, and any recommendations those reports might include, and its readiness to consider the imposition of measures if any party fails significantly to meet its obligations under the Peace Agreement;

II

8. Pays tribute to those Member States which participated in the multinational Stabilization Force established in accordance with its resolution 1088(1996), and welcomes their willingness to assist the parties to the Peace Agreement by continuing to deploy a multinational Stabilization Force;

9. Notes the support of the parties to the Peace Agreement for the continuation of the Stabilization Force set out in the declaration of the Steering Board of the Peace Implementation Council at Luxembourg;

10. Authorizes the Member States acting through or in cooperation with the organization referred to in annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement to continue for a further planned period of twelve months the Stabilization Force as established in accordance with its resolution 1088(1996), under unified command and control, in order to fulfil the role specified in annex 1-A and annex 2 of the Peace Agreement, and expresses its intention to review the situation with a view to extending this authorization further as necessary in the light of developments in the implementation of the Peace Agreement and the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

11. Authorizes the Member States acting under paragraph 10 above to take all necessary measures to effect the implementation of, and to ensure compliance with, annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement, stresses that the parties shall continue to be held equally responsible for compliance with that annex and shall be equally subject to such enforcement action by the Stabilization Force as may be necessary to ensure implementation of that annex and the protection of the Force, and notes that the parties have consented to the Force taking such measures;

12. Authorizes Member States to take all necessary measures, at the request of the Stabilization Force, either in defence of the Force or to assist the Force in carrying out its mission, and recognizes the right of the Force to take all necessary measures to defend itself from attack or threat of attack;

13. Authorizes the Member States acting under paragraph 10 above, in accordance with annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement, to take all necessary measures to ensure compliance with the rules and procedures, established by the Commander of the Stabilization Force, governing command and control of airspace over Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all civilian and military air traffic;

14. Requests the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina to cooperate with the Commander of the Stabilization Force to ensure the effective management of the airports of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in the light of the responsibilities conferred on the Force by annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement with regard to the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

15. Demands that the parties respect the security and freedom of movement of the Stabilization Force and other international personnel;

16. Invites all States, in particular those in the region, to continue to provide appropriate support and facilities, including transit facilities, for the Member States acting under paragraph 10 above;

17. Recalls all the agreements concerning the status of forces as referred to in appendix B to annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement, and reminds the parties of their obligation to continue to comply therewith;

18. Requests the Member States acting through or in cooperation with the organization referred to in annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement to continue to report to the Council, through the appropriate channels and at least at monthly intervals;

Reaffirming the legal basis in the Charter of the United Nations on which the International Police Task Force was given its mandate in resolution 1035(1995),

III

19. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina, which includes the International Police Task Force, for an additional period terminating on 21 June 1999, and also decides that the Task Force shall continue to be entrusted with the tasks set out in annex 11 of the Peace Agreement, including the tasks referred to in the conclusions of the peace implementation conferences in London on 4 and 5 December 1996, Bonn on 9 and 10 December 1997 and Luxembourg on 9 June 1998 and agreed upon by the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council regularly informed on the work of the International Police Task Force and its progress in assisting the restructuring of law enforcement agencies, and to report every three months on the implementation of the mandate of the Mission as a whole;

21. Reiterates that the successful implementation of the tasks of the International Police Task Force rests on the quality, experience and professional skills of its personnel, and once again urges Member States, with the support of the Secretary-General, to ensure the provision of such qualified personnel;

22. Reaffirms the responsibility of the parties to co-operate fully with, and instruct their respective responsible officials and authorities to provide their full support to the International Police Task Force on all relevant matters;

23. Reiterates its call upon all concerned to ensure the closest possible coordination between the High Representative, the Stabilization Force, the Mission and the relevant civilian organizations and agencies so as to ensure the successful implementation of the Peace Agreement and of the priority objectives of the civilian consolidation plan, as well as the security of International Police Task Force personnel;

24. Urges Member States, in response to demonstrable progress by the parties in restructuring their law enforcement institutions, to intensify their efforts to provide, on a voluntary-funded basis and in coordination with the International Police Task Force, training, equipment and related assistance for local police forces in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to submit to the Council reports from the High Representative, in accordance with annex 10 of the Peace Agreement and the conclusions of the Peace Implementation Conference held in London, on the implementation of the Peace Agreement and, in particular, on compliance by the parties with their commitments under the Agreement;

26. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Reports of Secretary-General (September and December). On 16 September [S/1998/862], the Secretary-General, in an update of UNMIBH's activities and those of other UN operations in Bosnia and Herzegovina, reported some progress in the first phase of police restructuring. The Federation's Ministry of the Interior was inaugurated on 1 July, following agreement between Bosniac and Croat officials on ethnic balance and power-sharing and amendments to the Federation Law on Internal Affairs. In preparation for the second phase of police restructuring, IPTF had begun to assess ongoing police reforms in the Federation to evaluate the extent to which joint police forces were succeeding in breaking down ethnically based structures and establishing standards of democratic policing. In addition, UNMIBH deployed 87 IPTF monitors as advisers, co-located with high-level Federation police officials at the federal, cantonal and municipal levels. There was less progress in police restructuring in Republika Srpska.

However, on 16 December [S/1998/1174], the Secretary-General reported that, following the elections in mid-September (see below), UNMIBH encountered delays in implementing its mandate with regard to police restructuring, reflecting a general political impasse in Bosnia and Herzegovina. In the Federation, the pace of police restructuring slowed as Croat officials continued to impede the inauguration of police services in the Ljubuski and Livno cantons and there was little progress in recruiting police personnel from minority ethnic groups. In response, UNMIBH intensified its recruitment of minority police in the Federation and froze the hiring of personnel from the predominant groups. In Republika Srpska, a Framework Agreement on Police Restructuring, Reform and Democratization was concluded on 9 December.

In the area of police certification and training, UNMIBH, in accordance with Council resolution 1168(1998), established the Drug Control, Organized Crime, and Public Order and Critical Incident Management Units. Each Unit had produced training presentations and courses, conducted assessments on pertinent issues and provided technical assistance in ongoing investigations, and instructors had been deployed temporarily in local police ministries and stations to provide on-the-job training.

The Secretary-General said that the growing importance for police reform of the co-location of IPTF monitors working alongside local police had led to a continuing requirement for monitors with specific, enhanced skills and qualifications. Similarly, UNMIBH success in investigating the failure of law enforcement officials to observe due process and respect for human rights would require the recruitment of monitors with strong backgrounds in investigations, and, as the civil affairs component integrated its activities with IPTF and the judicial assessment programme, there would be a growing need for officers with skills in operations and analysis. The Secretary-General appealed to Security Council members to extend their full diplomatic support to UNMIBH to implement its core mandate of creating multi-ethnic police services in the Federation and Republika Srpska.

UNMIBH financing

The Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a February report on financing of UNMIBH for the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 [A/52/786]. He requested $190,921,200 gross ($181,030,800 net) for the maintenance of UNMIBH, including UNMOP, central support services to the peacekeeping missions in the former Yugoslavia and the United Nations liaison offices in Belgrade and Zagreb. Although UNMOP and the liaison offices were independent, for administrative and budgetary purposes they were treated as part of UNMIBH.

The Assembly also had before it the financial performance report [A/52/708 & Corr.1] of UNMIBH, including UNMOP, for the period 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997. Out of an appropriation of $151,239,600 gross ($144,451,200 net), expenditures during the period totalled $118,207,900 gross ($113,719,500 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $33,031,700 gross ($30,731,700 net).

ACABQ was of the opinion that requirements for the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 should not exceed $180 million gross and that the unencumbered balance for the period 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 should be credited to Member States [A/52/860/Add.3].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 June [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/690/Add.1], adopted resolution 52/243 without vote [agenda item 138].

Financing of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 1035(1995) of 21 December 1995, by which the Council established the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina for an initial period of one year, and Council resolution 1174(1998) of 15 June 1998, by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission until 21 June 1999,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 1147(1998) of 13 January 1998, in which the Council authorized the United Nations military observers to continue to monitor the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula until 15 July 1998,

Recalling further its decision 50/481 of 11 April 1996 on the financing of the Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was decision 52/437 of 18 December 1997,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina as at 15 May 1998, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 66.6 million United States dollars, representing 19 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Mission to the period ending 21 June 1998, notes that some 19 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission in full and on time;

5. Takes note of the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Decides to examine the recommendation of the Advisory Committee for 5 per cent across-the-board reductions in the budget proposals of the Secretary-General in the light of the next series of relevant financial performance reports;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to employ locally recruited staff for the Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

9. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina the amount of 189,483,720 dollars gross (179,593,320 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, inclusive of the amount of 9,483,720 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations, to be apportioned, as an ad hoc arrangement, among Member States at a monthly rate of 15,790,310 dollars gross (14,966,110 dollars net) in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1998 and 1999, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Mission beyond 21 June 1999;

10. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 9,890,400 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999;

11. Decides further that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 33,031,700 dollars gross (30,731,700 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 1997;

12. Decides that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, their share of the unencumbered balance of 33,031,700 dollars gross (30,731,700 dollars net) for the period ending 30 June 1997 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

13. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina".

In December [A/53/764 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General submitted the financial performance report of UNMIBH for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998. Expenditures totalled $157,128,000 gross ($150,745,100 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $21,752,900 gross ($19,524,600 net).

On 18 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the financing of UNMIBH at its resumed fifty-third (1999) session (decision 53/458).

International Police Task Force (IPTF)

During 1998, the authorized strength of UNMIBH's International Police Task Force, deployed in 64 stations in seven regions, rose from 2,027 to 2,057, following increases approved by the Security Council in resolution 1168(1998) (see above).

In March [S/1998/227 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General reported that IPTF continued to train local police to operate according to the principles of democratic policing. It also continued to assist in rehabilitating and developing modern police academies and was preparing a curriculum for the Republika Srpska police academy, which reopened under the new Government on 9 February in Banja Luka. In support of freedom of movement, IPTF cooperated with local police in both entities to implement its checkpoint policy. On 10 January, it launched, in cooperation with SFOR and police in both entities, a two-week security operation on the transit road through Republika Srpska between Sarajevo and Gorazde, which had been plagued by security incidents. IPTF monitoring also resulted in reduced cases of local police charging illegal fees and road taxes on cars entering the country from Croatia. IPTF cooperated with SFOR in the programme of weapons inspections at local police stations and with OSCE in implementing the results of the 1997 municipal elections [YUN 1997, p. 310].

In June [S/1998/491], the Secretary-General observed that IPTF's role was changing from monitoring, observing and reporting towards training and advising in the field. The IPTF Commissioner was preparing new guidelines on criteria for police monitors. In the meantime, the Secretary-General invited Member States to note the Commissioner's need for monitors with extensive operational experience, managerial knowledge and investigative skills and for those with skills in organized crime, anti-corruption and drug control.

A central tool in advancing police reform was the co-location of IPTF monitors with local police for on-the-job advising and monitoring, which proved to be one of the most effective methods of professionalizing local police, said the Secretary-General in December [S/1998/1174]. Some 70 IPTF monitors in the Federation and 51 in Republika Srpska were co-located with high-ranking police officials; it was hoped to deploy co-located IPTF monitors to all 269 main police stations in the country. On 2 December, IPTF launched the first in a series of meetings between Republika Srpska and Federation Ministers of the Interior and IPTF Commissioners to establish priorities for co-operation, such as preventing and solving inter-entity crime and minority police hiring, and to introduce and clarify IPTF policies to the highest-level police officials from each entity. IPTF also conducted an inventory of equipment needs of local police stations in the Federation and of public security centres in Republika Srpska, concluding that an additional $70 million was required to repair and re-equip the more than 350 local police facilities throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina.

As part of its police restructuring efforts, IPTF completed a review of and revised its policy on the non-compliance of police with their professional obligations. It established a Non-Compliance Unit and a database of non-compliance reports. IPTF continued to promote the freedom of movement in and between both entities and was working to bring local police into compliance with the traffic and crime control policy. Its co-located advisers and trainers began working more intensively to familiarize local police with alternative methods for traffic and crime control. IPTF joined international agencies in addressing the intrusion of police from Croatia into the border area with Bosnia and Herzegovina, in the Bihac and Livno cantons, and co-operated with SFOR and the Office of the High Representative in calling for the inter-State border commission to meet and for an interim solution to enable Federation police to patrol the area to which Serb refugees and displaced persons had begun to return. In the Brcko Supervisory Area, which continued to serve as a model for police reform, IPTF reduced its patrols and expanded its community policing programme. It also expanded the co-location of its advisers to the middle management of the Brcko police service.

Mine Action Centre (MAC)

With the signing of an Agreement on Co-operation in the Field of Mine Action on 30 December 1997 between Republika Srpska and the Federation, all legal steps were completed for the establishment of the Bosnia and Herzegovina Mine Action Centre (BHMIC). In the early part of 1998 [S/1998/227 & Corr.1], arrangements were under way to transfer specific components of the UNMIBH MAC to BHMIC. MAC was assisting both entities to establish their mine action centres by 31 March 1998, to which the remaining components of MAC, including its field offices and trained team of deminers, would be transferred. Responsibility for local supervision of MAC activities was being transferred from UNMIBH to the United Nations Office for Project Services, while responsibility for funding and Headquarters supervision was being transferred to the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), which set up a trust fund to support the new phase of the demining programme. The United Nations Consolidated Appeal for 1998 set a target of $23 million for the mine action centres work in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Demining responsibilities were officially handed over to the Government in July [S/1998/862], thereby establishing the Bosnia and Herzegovina Mine Action Programme. The Programme operated through BHMIC in Sarajevo, which was responsible for overall coordination and guidance of mine-clearing action in the country, and through the entity mine action centres responsible for clearing mines in their respective areas. Nine demining teams were deployed throughout the country and the minefield database continued to be updated. UNDP trained managers to implement the four components of the Programme: mine awareness, minefield survey, mine clearance and training. It also worked with the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) on a mine-awareness campaign.

Civil affairs

The Secretary-General reported that UNMIBH's civil affairs officers continued to work closely with IPTF on police restructuring, freedom of movement and election implementation [S/1998/227 & Corr.1]. They assisted IPTF in inaugurating the cantonal police forces in the Federation and in developing a plan for multi-ethnic policing in Republika Srpska. In Brcko, the Civil Affairs Office assisted IPTF in developing the operational plan on multi-ethnic policing and testified at the Brcko arbitral hearings (see below) in Vienna in February. In collaboration with the Office of the High Representative, it developed an operational plan for, and monitored the introduction of, a joint licence plate for Bosnia and Herzegovina. It continued to cooperate with IPTF and OSCE in the Regional and National Election Results Implementation Committees and, together with IPTF, established a joint training unit for UNMIBH personnel.

In June [S/1998/491], the Secretary-General said that civil affairs officers worked closely with other international organizations operating in Bosnia and Herzegovina, especially in Drvar, where they developed operational plans with IPTF, SFOR, the Office of the High Representative and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) to cope with the large number of Serbs who returned in early spring, and produced a cohesive strategy after riots in Drvar in April when crowds attacked municipal offices and IPTF premises. Civil affairs officers interacted closely with UNHCR and the return and reconstruction task forces throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina. In September [S/1998/862], the Secretary-General stated that civil affairs officers worked on the project to monitor increases of freedom of movement across the inter-entity boundary line and across international borders and began cooperating with IPTF and the Office of the High Representative in developing a strategy for a Bosnian border police. Other action included working closely with UN agencies to address reconstruction needs in Srebrenica and enabling Bosniac authorities in Gorazde and Serb authorities in municipalities surrounding Gorazde to reach agreement on economic co-operation and mutual assistance in emergency situations. Towards the end of the year [S/1998/1174], the Civil Affairs Office established a Projects Unit in Sarajevo to support IPTF on programmes relating to minority police recruitment, non-compliance, de-certification, training, the establishment of multi-ethnic border police and the introduction of a common driving licence. It also supported the newly deployed judicial system assessment programme. The Civil Affairs Training Unit continued its weekly briefings of IPTF officers and cooperated with the United States Institute for Peace in developing a training package in mediation, negotiation and conflict resolution, and a package on community policing for co-located IPTF monitors. The Training Unit organized a three-week induction course for the judicial assessment programme and trained incoming personnel of the press and information component.

Federation issues

The High Representative reported in April [S/1998/314] that the Parliamentary Assembly adopted the Law on Split and New Municipalities and the housing and property legislation package. By March, the 1997 municipal election results had been successfully implemented, although several Federation municipalities would have to be monitored to ensure observation of inter-party agreements. The political and security situation in the Federation continued to improve overall, which was due in some measure to the successful establishment of a joint police force in most of the cantons and progress in reforming the judicial systems in the two cantons with a special regime. There was still evidence that structures of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Croat Republic of Herceg-Bosna continued to operate, despite the fact that they should have been disbanded following the establishment of Federation structures and common institutions of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

At a meeting of the Federation Forum (Mostar, 16 April) [S/1998/543], agreement was reached on a wide range of issues, including returns to Mostar, the dissolution of parallel structures and separate financial channels, as well as initiation of the second phase of municipal reform. As a result, Governors and Vice-Governors of the Central Bosnia and Herzegovina-Neretva cantons successfully paid joint visits to the municipalities in their cantons to accelerate the merging of parallel administrations, the full functioning of joint municipal administrations and implementation of canton return plans. The results were, however, still limited. An Inter-Ministerial Commission, which was established to begin the second phase of municipal reorganization, aimed to conclude its work by 31 December.

The most substantial minority return movement in early 1998 was to Drvar, which was accompanied by house burnings and security incidents, including attacks on the offices of the High Representative, IPTF, UNHCR and OSCE in April. In the light of the failure of local authorities to provide sufficient security, the Deputy Mayor of Drvar and the Chief of Police were removed from office. The High Representative, together with the major implementing agencies, took measures to assert the international presence in Drvar, re-establish a secure environment, initiate investigations and allow the return process to resume. Small-scale but significant returns of Bosniacs to the Croat municipalities of Vitez and Prozor-Rama continued and Bosniacs also returned to the heartland of Herzegovina. The first breakthroughs of Serb returns to Mostar and the Neretva Valley were achieved during the summer [S/1998/947]. Despite the successes in minority returns in Central Bosnia and Herzegovina, significant breakthroughs were still needed, as was firm action by Croat leaders to make clear that violent behaviour and intimidation would not be tolerated.

The High Representative also reported that the implementation of the results of the elections (see below) in the Federation House of Peoples was completed and the establishment of the Federation's new Government took place in December [S/1999/139]. Ongoing problems at the municipal level continued to cause difficulties on the Federation side. The functioning of multi-ethnic authorities improved generally, but inadequate progress in many areas and barely functioning joint authorities in a few municipalities were still matters of concern.

Republika Srpska issues

The High Representative reported during 1998 on issues related specifically to Republika Srpska, the entity of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina where primarily Bosnian Serbs resided.

On 18 January [S/1998/314], the new Government headed by Prime Minister Dodik came to power, representing a major democratization step and a likely turning point for the overall implementation of the Peace Agreement as it did not lead to the much feared split of Republika Srpska into western and eastern parts nor to any active resistance on the ground. The new Government, which continued to be purely Serb, demonstrated its resolve to undertake serious implementation efforts and improve inter-entity cooperation and had also started to address the serious social and economic situation in Republika Srpska. By the end of March, it had established full control over military, police, judiciary and customs authorities, as well as the public prosecutor's office. The Republika Srpska National Assembly adopted several important decisions, including annulment of all laws adopted by the previous Assembly since its dissolution in July 1997. It also adopted a budget and changed the seat of government and its institutions from Pale to Banja Luka. However, progress on peace implementation slowed between July and September [S/1998/947]. In the pre-election period, the SLOGA coalition (the three Serb government parties) in the National Assembly and the Government were reluctant to propose legislation on politically sensitive subjects, such as property and amnesty legislation, or to implement the Privatization Law. Cooperation on multi-ethnic police and the border police was negligible and movement on evictions to enable reinstatements was stopped by the Ministry of the Interior. However, the Government did make serious efforts to convert from Yugoslav dinars to Bosnia and Herzegovina Convertible Marka and began issuing passports.

In the September elections (see below), the SLOGA coalition, together with the different Federation parties, held the majority of seats in the National Assembly. However, by the end of the year [S/1999/139], the new President, Nikola Poplasen, had failed to nominate a candidate for Prime Minister capable of commanding a majority in the Assembly. The Assembly held its constitutive session between 29 October and 4 November, electing its authorities and Republika Srpska delegates to the House of Peoples. It also passed important legislation, including the Law on Use of Abandoned Property and the Law on Amnesty.

Brcko and the inter-entity boundary line

The dispute over control of the Brcko area in north-eastern Bosnia and Herzegovina and the related positioning of the inter-entity boundary line between the Federation and Republika Srpska in that area were decided by the February 1997 award of the arbitral tribunal [YUN 1997, p. 307], established in accordance with annex 2 of the Dayton Accords. On 15 March 1998 [S/1998/248], the tribunal issued a supplemental award for Brcko, which maintained the status quo under the existing international supervision arrangements, authorized and encouraged measures for economic revitalization and deferred a final arbitration award to the end of 1998 or early 1999. Republika Srpska set up a special government commission, with Bosniac participation, to ensure implementation of the award as regards refugee return and restoration of Brcko as a multi-ethnic community [S/1998/314]. The Supervisor of Brcko pursued a vigorous policy of implementation of the award, with improved cooperation by both entities. The multi-ethnic administration, judiciary and police were fully staffed by the end of June and were operational. The police expanded operations to include mobile and static multi-ethnic patrols in the zone of separation area and in Brcko proper. However, problems related to a lack of essential equipment and the sizeable disparity between the low salaries of Serb policemen and those of the other two ethnic groups performing the same jobs in the Federation remained to be resolved. The High Representative reported that, although Brcko was achieving steady progress in the reconstruction of municipal infrastructure, housing reconstruction and micro-projects, including small business promotion, its economy remained stagnant and it was in critical need of employment opportunities to support the multi-ethnic administration and returnees and deter potential social unrest [S/1998/643].

The High Representative reported in October [S/1998/947] that over 1,200 Bosniac refugee and displaced families had returned to their homes in Brcko but the process had slowed due to difficulties with displaced persons occupying properties in potential return areas. Slight progress was made regarding the return of Bosnian Serb displaced persons to the Federation. On 3 November, the Brcko Supervisor issued two Orders to enable the return of non-Serb members of the Assembly, police, judiciary and municipal administration and to restore full ownership rights to those property owners to whom the superseded Republika Srpska Law on Use of Abandoned Property had applied. The Orders stressed that no Serb displaced person would be evicted without having sufficient alternative accommodation and the municipal government should find space to relocate displaced persons by resolving cases of illegal occupation of multiple housing units by single families. By the end of 1998 [S/1999/139], the municipal government had failed to make progress on those Orders.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 March [meeting 3862], the Security Council met to consider the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Following consultations among Council members, the President made the following statement [S/PRST/1998/7] on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council welcomes the announcement of the decision on 15 March 1998 relating to Brcko by the arbitral tribunal pursuant to article V of annex 2 to the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and to the award of 14 February 1997.

The Council, recalling that the 1997 award helped to promote the start of a peaceful, orderly and phased return process in Brcko and the beginnings of the establishment of a multi-ethnic administration, considers that the decision of 15 March 1998 represents the best interests of the peace process. The Council commends the efforts of the Presiding Arbitrator and of the International Supervisor for Brcko.

The Council calls upon the parties to annex 2 to the General Framework Agreement to implement the decision without delay, as they are obliged to do. The Council underscores the importance of prompt and full cooperation by the parties to the Agreement in carrying out their commitments to implement the Agreement in its entirety, including cooperation with the International Supervisor for Brcko and the Office of the High Representative.

Communications. The EU Presidency, in a 15 March statement [S/1998/259], welcomed the arbitral tribunal's decision on Brcko and called on all parties to implement it unreservedly and to uphold their commitments to implement all aspects of the Peace Agreement, including allowing refugees and displaced persons to return to their pre-war homes. The EU was firmly committed to continuing its support for reconstruction and reconciliation.

On 14 December [A/53/746-S/1998/1165], Iran, as Chairman of the OIC Contact Group for Bosnia and Herzegovina, said that it would be unjust and counter to the development of peace if Brcko were to be awarded to Republika Srpska. It requested prompt action by the Secretary-General on the issue in the light of the fact that the arbitral tribunal would reach a final decision in early 1999.

General elections

In April [S/1998/314], the High Representative reported that preparations for the 1998 general elections had begun under the supervision of the Provisional Election Commission, which agreed on 11 March that the elections would be held on 12 and 13 September for all levels of government, and at the municipal level only for the 10 new municipalities in the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina that had been constituted in accordance with the recently adopted Law on Split and New Municipalities. The Commission decided that the OSCE Head of Mission, in his capacity as its Chairman, would retain, for six months after final certification, the discretion to revoke final certification from a municipality if it violated the rules and regulations or acceptable conditions. In June (S/1998/643), that was extended to September 1999. The Commission also reduced the term of office to two years for all levels of government, except the Bosnia and Herzegovina Presidency, which was regulated by the Constitution.

In October [S/1998/947], the High Representative reported that the general elections held on 12 and 13 September were the most peaceful and democratic in the country's history. The turnout (around 70 per cent) was high and the results, with one notable exception, showed further evidence of a steady trend towards greater moderation and pluralism. The share of the vote won by extreme nationalist parties fell in both entities and the monopoly of the three most important ethnically based parties was weakening, while the voice of an independent opposition in both entities was growing. For the first time since the signing of the Peace Agreement, the nationalist parties no longer had an absolute majority in the various parliamentary bodies of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The new Presidency would consist of Alija Izetbegovic, Ante Jelavic and Zivko Radisic, which offered a better prospect for cooperation, both with each other and the international community, than the previous tripartite body.

In the Federation, Republika Srpska-based parties took part in the elections, unlike in 1996, with 18 parties or coalitions winning seats in the Federation House of Representatives. The exception to the encouraging trend was the election of Mr. Poplasen, who had a record as a hard-liner, as President of Republika Srpska.

Refugees and displaced persons

Approximately 110,000 refugees returned to Bosnia and Herzegovina in 1998, bringing the total number of returnees since the end of the war to more than 300,000, the Secretary-General said in a report on UNMIBH activities [S/1999/284]. Some 41,000 people from minorities were estimated to have returned to their homes during 1998.

The High Representative, in his report covering October to December [S/1999/139], said that many returns took place despite damage to reconstructed houses and continued violent obstruction, notably in the Stolac and Capljina municipalities. Administrative integration remained a serious problem and the rule of law and implementation of new and existing property legislation remained poor in both entities. The reinstatement of minority residents in Banja Luka was slow, despite government assurances to the contrary. However, the Republika Srpska National Assembly passed legislation in December to allow former residents to reclaim socially owned abandoned property. The first cross-border returns of Croatian Serbs to Croatia took place in November.

Developments during the year that facilitated the return of refugees and displaced persons included: the Sarajevo Return Conference, held in February [S/1998/314], which agreed on steps to be taken by the authorities and the international community to make Sarajevo a model canton for minority return and multinational coexistence; the Banja Luka Conference on Regional Return (April) [S/1998/643], which marked the first in a series of steps to promote regional return and set out requirements for accelerated return between Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina and from FRY to each of those two countries; Croatia's adoption of a new return programme on 26 June, which marked a further step towards the realization of regional return; the meeting of the PIC Humanitarian Issues Working Group (Geneva, 26 June), which reviewed and endorsed the Regional Return Strategy of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees; and UNHCR's promotion of minority return through the development of "open cities", of which there were 14 by September [S/1998/862].

The plight of refugees and displaced persons was addressed by the PIC Steering Board meeting in June (see above) [S/1998/498], which expressed its disappointment at the insufficient progress towards agreed targets for returns and urged the relevant authorities to accelerate implementation and remove immediately all remaining obstacles to minority returns. It called on all parties to implement the UNHCR Regional Return Strategy and asked the High Representative and UNHCR to report regularly on progress in its implementation. It urged that links between the Reconstruction and Return Task Force (RRTF) and relevant actors in neighbouring countries be further developed, and called on the authorities in both entities to enable UNHCR to organize a census/registration of displaced persons, refugees and returnees. The authorities should also put in place by 1 August mechanisms to ensure that citizens had full access to personal documentation. The Board encouraged active coordination by the High Representative of the local police, together with SFOR and IPTF, in developing and implementing security planning for refugee returns with UNHCR. The Board welcomed the entry into force of the Federation's property legislation on 4 April and urged its full implementation. Welcoming the property options strategy developed by the Commission for Real Property Claims of displaced persons and refugees, the Board affirmed that resources for a property compensation fund should be generated locally and called on the entity Governments to fund the pilot project phase.

The issue was also considered by the PIC Conference in December (see above) [S/1999/139], which expressed concern about the frequency of violent incidents in parts of Bosnia and Herzegovina related to refugee return and called on all concerned to act in accordance with the Peace Agreement. It also called for a redoubling of efforts to create the conditions for a large number of returns in 1999. PIC endorsed the RRTF action plan for 1999 and undertook to provide funding, commitment and resources for that purpose. To create the right environment to make returns sustainable, PIC agreed to focus on inculcating the principles of the free market economy and the institutions to uphold it.

Human rights

The High Representative said that return-related incidents between October and December [S/1999/139], including the destruction of property and violence, continued, particularly in Stolac, Capljina and Teslic, and that the response of local authorities and police was inadequate. He remained concerned by the continued failure of the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina to ensure that the decisions and recommendations of the Human Rights Chamber and the Human Rights Ombudsperson were implemented, particularly as they referred to property-related cases and local authorities' non-implementation of judicial decisions concerning rights to property. No action had been taken by the West Mostar authorities regarding the prosecution of persons responsible for the shooting death and injuries in February 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 307], contrary to the recommendations of the Ombudsperson. Human rights caseloads continued to expand. At the end of December, the Office of the Ombudsperson had registered 2,742 cases and had issued final reports with respect to 293, while it transferred 110 to the Human Rights Chamber and issued 13 ex officio special reports. While the process for registering claims for repossessing property in the Federation improved, the rate of decision-making and enforcement continued to be very poor. In November, the High Representative suspended the reallocation of apartments and the sale of apartments to individuals who had acquired occupancy rights after April 1991 and asked the Federation Government and Parliament to review the laws and administrative practices relating to property and housing to eliminate outstanding obstacles to return. His Office was commissioning a second review of the implementation of property laws. Implementation of the Textbook Review Project on the removal of offensive materials from textbooks in primary and secondary schools, which was agreed to in May, progressed very slowly. In particular, the commitment of the Sarajevo educational authorities to withdraw offensive textbooks had not been met.

The High Representative was also concerned at the widespread discrimination in economic and social rights, including labour and social protection. His Office was engaged in discussions with international organizations regarding possible strategies to prevent, sanction and eliminate that form of discrimination. Tremendous progress was made in 1998 in the area of exhumations and missing persons. Unrestricted access to grave sites and the collection of surface remains had been provided by each of the three ethnic groups, without demands for reciprocity.

The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) continued to support the work of UNMIBH and the Special Rapporteur, the Secretary-General said in his September report [S/1998/862.1. OHCHR, in cooperation with UNMIBH, began a human rights training project for IPTF monitors in June. It provided expertise in judicial reform to a team working on reformed criminal codes in Republika Srpska, monitored war crimes trials and carried out a survey assessing needs in the courts there. In addition, it supported the work and implementation of the decisions of national human rights institutions, continued to promote the implementation of gender-related activities in the work of UN offices and agencies and participated in working groups on solutions to human rights problems related to the educational system in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

In December [S/1998/1174], the Secretary-General stated that on 20 November his Special Representative and the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights signed an agreement on co-operation between OHCHR's field operations in Bosnia and Herzegovina and UNMIBH, under which OHCHR would contribute specialized support and guidance to UNMIBH on gender issues, discrimination, treatment of minorities and the rule of law.

The General Assembly, in resolution 53/163, expressed concern about continuing human rights violations within Bosnia and Herzegovina (see PART TWO, Chapter III).

Communications. Bosnia and Herzegovina, on 26 February [S/1998/160], requested the Security Council to review urgently eyewitness statements alleging that 40 to 50 citizens of Srebrenica, who were not registered with ICRC, were being held in a prison in FRY. It also asked the Council to investigate the matter further to secure the safety of those who might still be alive and to ascertain the facts and fate of those identified. That request was supported by Indonesia in a 12 March letter [S/1998/226], in its capacity as Chairman of the expanded OIC Contact Group. Indonesia said that the Council continued to retain the authority and responsibility to address the fate of the population of the "safe areas", particularly Srebrenica.

Judicial reform

The Secretary-General, in March [S/1998/227 & Corr.1], said that UNMIBH, under the coordination of the High Representative, had held intensive consultations with other concerned organizations on the design and implementation of a programme of legal and judicial reform in Bosnia and Herzegovina, setting out the division of labour among the organizations. The High Representative, in communicating the results of those consultations to the Secretary-General in February, urged UNMIBH to focus on monitoring the court system and the mandated work already begun in implementing annex 11 of the Peace Agreement [YUN 1995, p.544].

On 21 May, the Security Council, in resolution 1168(1998) (see above), acknowledged that the success of police reform in Bosnia and Herzegovina was closely linked to judicial reform and agreed to consider an UNMIBH-led court-monitoring programme as part of overall legal reform, as outlined by the Office of the High Representative.

The Secretary-General, in June [S/1998/491], provided details of the staffing and activities of the court-monitoring programme, which would be funded as an expense of the Organization.

The PIC Steering Board (Luxembourg, 9 June) [S/1998/498] supported the judicial reform efforts coordinated by the High Representative and urged that qualified people from Bosnia and Herzegovina be employed in the programme to build local experience and capacity. The entities should bring the first phase of the Criminal Law reform to completion. The Board urged the Federation and Republika Srpska to enact the new criminal codes and criminal procedure codes by 30 June and 31 August, respectively, to be followed by a systematic review of the Criminal Laws. It stressed the need to ensure that judicial appointments were based solely on merit and that all ethnic groups were fairly represented in the judicial system. It supported efforts to strengthen the office of the Federation's prosecutor and urged active use of that office, especially in cases where officials used, or protected those who used, violence to obstruct implementation of the Peace Agreement.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 July [meeting 3909], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1184(1998). The draft [S/1998/648] was sponsored by France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Portugal, the Russian Federation, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions concerning the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, in particular resolutions 1168(1998) of 21 May 1998 and 1174(1998) of 15 June 1998,

Recalling also the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement"),

Taking note of the conclusions of the Peace Implementation Conference in Bonn on 9 and 10 December 1997 and of the declaration of the Steering Board of the Peace Implementation Council in Luxembourg on 9 June 1998,

Taking note also of the recommendations of the High Representative of 9 April 1998,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General of 12 March and 10 June 1998, in particular his observations and planning regarding the issue of legal reform,

1. Approves the establishment by the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina of a programme to monitor and assess the court system in Bosnia and Herzegovina, as part of an overall programme of legal reform as outlined by the Office of the High Representative, in the light of the Peace Agreement, the recommendations of the Peace Implementation Conference in Bonn and the Steering Board of the Peace Implementation Council in Luxembourg, and the recommendations of the High Representative;

2. Requests the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina to cooperate fully with, and instruct their respective responsible officials to provide their full support to the court monitoring programme;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council regularly informed on the implementation of the programme to monitor and assess the court system in Bosnia and Herzegovina through his reports on the implementation of the mandate of the Mission as a whole;

4. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

The PIC Conference in December (see above) [S/1999/139] identified building of the rule of law as a top priority for 1999 through a programme of judicial reform, including the creation of an independent, impartial and multi-ethnic judiciary; establishment of judicial institutions at the State level, including an institution to deal with criminal offences by Bosnia and Herzegovina public officials; strengthening prosecution of organized crime, return-related violence, corruption and other serious criminality; faster police restructuring; rationalizing and reinforcing the institutions for human rights protection; strengthening the Constitutional Court; better public information about the rights of citizens and legal assistance; and developing and implementing an equitable mechanism to enforce legal rulings.

The High Representative, in his report covering the period October to December [S/1999/139], said that he remained concerned at the lack of independence and impartiality of the judiciary in both entities. A draft law addressing the selection and dismissal of Federation judges was submitted to the Council of Europe and the Federation Judges' Association for comment and would be submitted to the Parliament in 1999. His Office was working with UNMIBH, the Council of Europe and OSCE to reform the criminal justice system and developments were encouraging. The revised Federation Criminal Code and Criminal Procedure Code became effective on 28 November. The expert team to reform the Criminal Law of Republika Srpska submitted draft revised codes to the Government for review and comment; the final drafts would be submitted to the Council of Europe in February 1999 for assessment. An initiative to enhance the entity-level prosecutor's offices, developed by the Office of the High Representative and OSCE, was due to begin in early 1999.

Economic reform and reconstruction

The High Representative, in July [S/1998/643], said that important progress had been made towards moving Bosnia and Herzegovina to a market-led economy, but implementation of reforms in economic management remained difficult. A major step forward was the approval by IMF on 29 May of an $82 million standby arrangement to strengthen the country's financial position and that of its Central Bank in particular. It would also facilitate the realization of the 1998-1999 macroeconomic programme. Further support was provided by the World Bank, which approved on 4 June the public finance structural adjustment credit totalling $63 million. The Konvertible Marka, the new common currency, was introduced on 22 June and pegged to the deutsche mark (DM) in a ratio of 1:1. On 28 May, the Presidency of Bosnia and Herzegovina approved the liquidation of the former national bank. At the fourth donors' conference for Bosnia and Herzegovina (Brussels, 7-8 May), a total of $1.2 billion was pledged by 30 countries and international organizations. Reconstruction projects completed in 1998 amounted to $130 million, with an additional $600 million under implementation. The Republika Srpska Government received budgetary assistance of some DM 27 million from Canada, the Netherlands, Sweden, the United Kingdom, the United States and the EU to cover wage arrears in the public service.

In a later report [S/1997/139], the High Representative stated that members of the Paris Club (a group of creditor Governments) agreed on 28 October to provide significant debt relief to Bosnia and Herzegovina by writing off the country's external debt owed to foreign Governments at a level of 67 per cent of the value of unpaid principal and interest due through 30 April 1999. Further discussions were to be held concerning late interest payments for the period 1 July 1998 to 30 May 1999.

The World Bank disbursed nearly $200 million in funds and donor funds-in-trust for projects in Bosnia and Herzegovina during 1998 [S/1998/1174]. It also approved eight new operations, bringing the number of projects funded by the Bank, together with other donors, to 24, with total Bank contributions of $533 million. The Bank's programme focused on donor coordination, project implementation and support for the country's transition to a market economy. In addition, the International Finance Corporation had invested nearly $28 million in the country since 1997.

UNDP continued to focus on post-war adjustment of the economic and social situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Its employment programme, which provided short-term employment to the war-affected population while helping to improve seriously damaged infrastructure and the environment, was being implemented nationwide and would be extended to longer-term employment through support of small businesses. UNDP's programme expenditure in Bosnia and Herzegovina for 1998 totalled $29.3 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November [meeting 72], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/35 [draft: A/53/L.55] without vote [agenda item 41].

The situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/242 of 25 August 1992, 47/1 of 22 September 1992, 47/121 of 18 December 1992, 48/88 of 20 December 1993, 49/10 of 3 November 1994, 51/203 of 17 December 1996 and 52/150 of 15 December 1997 and all relevant resolutions of the Security Council regarding the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Reaffirming its support for the independence, sovereignty, legal continuity and territorial integrity of Bosnia and Herzegovina, within its internationally recognized borders,

Also reaffirming its support for the equality of the three constituent peoples and others in Bosnia and Herzegovina as a united country with two multi-ethnic entities,

Welcoming the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement"), signed in Paris on 14 December 1995,

Also welcoming the efforts for the respect, promotion and protection of human rights in all of Bosnia and Herzegovina and for the functioning of the common institutions of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Peace Agreement,

Supporting those institutions and organizations of Bosnia and Herzegovina which are engaged in implementation of the Peace Agreement and the process of reconciliation and reintegration,

Concerned by the continuing obstructions faced by refugees and displaced persons wishing to return to their homes, in particular in areas where they would be an ethnic minority, emphasizing the need for all parties and the relevant States and international organizations to create the conditions necessary to facilitate return, and stressing the need for a regional approach to the issue of refugees and displaced persons,

Welcoming the results of the Sarajevo and Banja Luka conferences on return, and urging the authorities to accelerate implementation of those results and remove immediately all remaining political, legal and administrative obstacles to minority returns,

Expressing its support for the efforts of the Coalition for Return and the Inter-Religious Council in facilitating the objectives of annex 7 of the Peace Agreement,

Supporting fully the efforts of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, stressing the importance and urgency of the work of the International Tribunal as an element of the process of reconciliation in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in the region as a whole, demanding that States and parties to the Peace Agreement meet their obligations to cooperate fully with the Tribunal, as required by Security Council resolutions 827(1993) of 25 May 1993, 1022(1995) of 22 November 1995 and 1207(1998) of 17 November 1998, including with respect to surrendering persons sought by the Tribunal, and welcoming the efforts to secure compliance with the orders of the Tribunal, consistent with the Security Council mandate,

Having considered the fifth annual report of the International Tribunal, noting that the reporting period has been characterized by a substantial improvement over previous years with respect to execution of the Tribunal's orders and compliance with obligations under international law, also noting that much remains to be done by entities and States in the area, and welcoming the efforts of the High Representative for Implementation of the Peace Agreement in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Commander of the Stabilization Force in implementing the provisions of the Peace Agreement,

Noting that most indictees at large are known or are believed to remain free in the territory of the Republika Srpska, an entity of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, expressing grave concern over the fact that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia continues to ignore relevant obligations under international law, particularly through its refusal to arrest and surrender persons indicted by the International Tribunal, and also noting that there have been some positive signs on the part of the Republika Srpska for willingness to cooperate with the Tribunal,

Commending the work of the International Commission on Missing Persons, and urging the parties to cooperate more effectively to clarify the fate of all missing persons,

Welcoming the mutual recognition among all the successor States of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia within their internationally recognized borders, and stressing the importance of full normalization of relations, including the unconditional establishment of diplomatic relations among those States in accordance with the Peace Agreement and the settlement of all issues relating to the succession of the former Yugoslavia, in order to contribute to the achievement of lasting peace and stability in the area,

Welcoming the signing of the agreement on the establishment of an Inter-State Council for Cooperation between the Republic of Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina and the signing of the Agreement on the Establishment of Special Relations between the Republic of Croatia and the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Also welcoming the signing of the Agreement on Free Transit through the Territory of the Republic of Croatia to and from the Port of Ploče and through the Territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina at Neum, and emphasizing its importance with respect to the economic benefit to the two countries and the comprehensive bilateral relationship between them,

Further welcoming the signing of the Protocol on the Introduction of Traffic in Internal Navigable Waterways on the Sava River and its Tributaries between the Republic of Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina, and annex 2 of the Memorandum of Understanding concerning Joint Reconstruction of Traffic Links between the Republic of Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Stressing the importance of full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for the success of the peace efforts for the region, and calling upon the Governments and the authorities in the region, as well as relevant international organizations, to facilitate such full respect,

Noting that democratization in the region will enhance the prospects for a lasting peace and help to guarantee full respect for human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in the region,

Welcoming the successful holding of general elections throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina under the supervision of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe on 12 and 13 September 1998, and looking forward to the rapid implementation of the election results,

Noting the positive impact of the four previous pledging conferences, held on 21 December 1995, 13 and 14 April 1996, 25 July 1997 and 8 and 9 May 1998 and chaired by the World Bank and the European Union, on the peace process and reintegration of the country as well as the reconstruction effort, stressing the importance and urgency of providing the pledged financial assistance and technical cooperation for reconstruction efforts, and stressing the role of economic revitalization in the process of reconciliation, in the improvement of living conditions and in the maintenance of a durable peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in the region,

Stressing that the provision of reconstruction aid and financial assistance is conditional upon the parties meeting their obligations under the Peace Agreement,

Welcoming in particular the important efforts of the European Union and bilateral and other donors to provide humanitarian and economic assistance for reconstruction,

Welcoming the European Union Declaration on Bosnia and Herzegovina of 8 June 1998, setting out the prospects for closer cooperation between Bosnia and Herzegovina and the European Union and the creation of the European Union and Bosnia and Herzegovina Consultative Task Force,

Underlining that the full, comprehensive and consistent implementation of the Peace Agreement is vital for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Recognizing the importance of demining for the normalization of life and for the return of refugees and internally displaced persons,

1. Expresses its full support for the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement"), which constitutes the key mechanism for the achievement of a durable and just peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina, leading to stability and cooperation in the region and the reintegration of Bosnia and Herzegovina at all levels;

2. Welcomes the successful implementation of certain aspects of the Peace Agreement, including the establishment of a lasting cessation of hostilities, the introduction of a new flag, passports, common licence plates and a common currency, the implementation of the municipal elections held on 13 and 14 September 1997, and the holding of free and fair elections on 12 and 13 September 1998 throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina;

3. Reiterates its demands for the full, comprehensive and consistent implementation of the Peace Agreement in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

4. Supports fully the coordinated efforts of the High Representative in the implementation of the peace process in Bosnia and Herzegovina, in accordance with the Peace Agreement, and calls upon all parties to cooperate fully and in good faith with him;

5. Reaffirms the conclusions of the Peace Implementation Conference, held at Bonn, Germany, on 9 and 10 December 1997, and calls upon all parties as signatories to the Peace Agreement and others concerned to implement fully those conclusions, including compliance with the decisions of the High Representative, and to continue to work for a peaceful, reintegrated and stable Bosnia and Herzegovina, in accordance with the Peace Agreement;

6. Welcomes the conclusions of the Ministerial Meeting of the Steering Board of the Peace Implementation Council, held in Luxembourg on 9 June 1998, and demands their full implementation;

7. Calls upon all parties to cooperate fully, and in good faith, in ensuring substantial functioning of all of the common institutions of Bosnia and Herzegovina in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Peace Agreement, and urges the relevant international organizations to continue to provide assistance to meet the infrastructural needs of the common institutions of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

8. Recognizes that responsibility for consolidating the peace lies primarily with the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina, as was confirmed in particular in the joint declaration adopted at Geneva on 14 August 1996;

9. Also recognizes that the role of the international community remains essential, and welcomes the readiness of the international community to continue its efforts towards a self-sustaining peace;

10. Underlines that the assistance provided by the international community remains strictly conditional upon compliance with the Peace Agreement and subsequent obligations, including, in particular, cooperation with the International Tribunal and facilitation of the return of refugees and displaced persons;

11. Welcomes the vital contribution of the multinational Stabilization Force in providing a secure environment for the implementation of civilian aspects of the Peace Agreement, calls upon all parties to cooperate fully with it, and, in this context, welcomes the authorization by the Security Council of the extension of the mandate of the Force;

12. Expresses its full support for the efforts of the United Nations International Police Task Force in carrying out its mandate, and calls for the fullest cooperation by all parties in this regard;

13. Stresses the importance of the full, comprehensive and consistent implementation of the Peace Agreement, including cooperation and compliance with the International Tribunal, the establishment of the necessary conditions for the voluntary return of refugees and displaced persons and the establishment of the necessary conditions for freedom of movement;

14. Welcomes the successful implementation of the 1997 municipal elections in the overwhelming majority of municipalities, requests the full implementation of the results, and urges the elected authorities to work in a spirit of reconciliation;

15. Underlines the importance of establishing, strengthening and expanding throughout all of Bosnia and Herzegovina free and pluralistic media, welcomes the establishment of the Independent Media Commission in order to promote free, independent and fully restructured media, and stresses the importance of continuing the implementation and development of a truly public television broadcasting service throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina;

16. Insists upon the need to surrender all indictees to the International Tribunal for trial, notes that the Tribunal has the authority to address individual responsibility for the perpetration of the crime of genocide, crimes against humanity and other serious violations of international humanitarian law, including in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and demands that all the parties fulfil their obligations to hand over to the Tribunal all indicted persons in territories under their control and otherwise to comply fully with the orders of the Tribunal and to cooperate with the work of the Tribunal, including with exhumations and other investigative acts, in accordance with article 29 of the statute of the Tribunal, with all relevant Security Council resolutions and in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Peace Agreement, in particular the Constitution of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

17. Welcomes the support given by Member States so far and urges Member States, taking into account the orders and requests of the International Tribunal, to offer the Tribunal their full support, including financial support, in order to ensure the completion of the purpose of the Tribunal, and to carry out their obligations under the statute of the Tribunal and all relevant Security Council resolutions;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to provide, by 1 September 1999, a comprehensive report, including an assessment, on the events dating from the establishment of the safe area of Srebrenica on 16 April 1993 under Security Council resolution 819(1993) of 16 April 1993, which was followed by the establishment of other safe areas, until the endorsement of the Peace Agreement by the Security Council under resolution 1031(1995) of 15 December 1995, bearing in mind the relevant decisions of the Security Council and the proceedings of the International Tribunal in this respect, and encourages Member States and others concerned to provide relevant information;

19. Reaffirms once again the right of refugees and displaced persons to return voluntarily to their homes of origin in accordance with the Peace Agreement, in particular its annex 7, and the realization of the same in cooperation with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and host countries, calls upon all parties to improve substantially their cooperation with the international community at the State, entity and local levels, in order to establish immediately the conditions necessary for the return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes and for the freedom of movement and communication of all the citizens of Bosnia and Herzegovina and upon the relevant international organizations to enhance the conditions to facilitate return, in accordance with relevant provisions of the Peace Agreement and its annexes, in particular the Constitution of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and welcomes continued and new efforts by the United Nations agencies, the European Union, bilateral and other donors and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to establish and implement projects designed to facilitate the early voluntary and orderly return of refugees and displaced persons to all regions of Bosnia and Herzegovina, including projects that would help to create a safe and secure environment with increased economic opportunity;

20. Encourages the acceleration of the peaceful, orderly and phased return of refugees and displaced persons, including to areas where they would be in the ethnic minority, strongly condemns all acts of intimidation, violence and killings, including those acts designed to discourage the voluntary return of refugees and displaced persons, and demands that such acts be investigated and prosecuted;

21. Reaffirms once again its support for the principle that all statements and commitments made under duress, in particular those regarding land and property, are wholly null and void, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Peace Agreement, and supports the effective engagement of the Commission for Real Property Claims of Displaced Persons and Refugees, in compliance with its mandate;

22. Urges the adoption and effective implementation of new non-discriminatory property and housing legislation in both entities in order to enable refugees and displaced persons to return to their pre-war homes;

23. Emphasizes the importance of economic revitalization and reconstruction for the successful consolidation of the peace process in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

24. Recognizes the important contribution of the international community, and invites it to continue to improve coordination;

25. Stresses the need for a more comprehensive approach to economic reform, which should contribute to the more homogeneous development of economy and trade in the two entities and across the inter-entity boundary line;

26. Stresses the importance of establishing an economic programme that should include the creation of a framework for private-sector development, including privatization and improvement of foreign investment conditions, the restructuring of banking and capital markets, the reform of the financial system and adequate social protection;

27. Welcomes the progress made in implementing the decision of the Brcko Arbitration Board, stresses that the obligation to cooperate fully with the Supervisor for Brcko and his decisions is an essential obligation for both entities, and notes that the outcome of the Arbitration Award will be significantly affected by the degree of compliance shown by the parties;

28. Also welcomes the progress made in the implementation of articles II and IV of the Agreement on Regional Stabilization and the successful graduation to article V, and urges all parties to continue to pursue the full implementation of their obligations;

29. Stresses the need for timely information about the level of cooperation and compliance with the International Tribunal and its orders, the status and programme for the return of refugees and displaced persons to and within Bosnia and Herzegovina and the status and implementation of the Agreement on Subregional Arms Control;

30. Welcomes the efforts of international and regional organizations, Member States and non-governmental organizations, including through the Board of Donors, as well as the efforts of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in the field of mine action and, in this context, also welcomes the recent transfer of the responsibilities for the national mine-action programme to the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the establishment of the Slovenian International Trust Fund for Demining and Mine Victims Assistance in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and invites Member States to continue to support the mine-action activities in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

31. Commends the efforts of the international community, including the Council of Europe, the European Union, the European Community Monitoring Mission, the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Committee of the Red Cross, the International Monetary Fund, the multinational Stabilization Force, non-governmental organizations, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the Islamic Development Bank, the Islamic Chamber of Commerce and Industry, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, the Peace Implementation Council and the World Bank, in their roles in the implementation of the Peace Agreement;

32. Commends in particular the efforts of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, the Office of the High Representative for Implementation of the Peace Agreement in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Office of the Special Rapporteur for Human Rights of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the United Nations International Police Task Force, the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the United Nations Development Programme and the other United Nations agencies in the peace process, and encourages their further engagement in the peace process in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

33. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "The situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina".

Military aspects of Agreement

Stabilization Force

During 1998, the NATO Secretary-General reported monthly to the Security Council, in accordance with resolution 1088(1996) [YUN 1996, p. 310], on the activities of SFOR, also known as Operation Joint Guard [S/1998/39, S/1998/105, S/1998/238, S/1998/310, S/1998/501, S/1998/528, S/1998/659, S/1998/732, S/1998/897, S/1998/985, S/1998/1072, S/1998/1167]. The Force operated under the leadership of NATO. At the end of 1998, approximately 32,500 troops were deployed in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in Croatia, with contributions from all 16 NATO members and 19 non-NATO countries.

On 20 February, the North Atlantic Council agreed, subject to the necessary mandate from the Security Council, that NATO was prepared to organize and lead a multinational force in Bosnia and Herzegovina following the end of SFOR's mandate in June. In a statement adopted at its meeting in Luxembourg on 28 May [S/1998/475], NATO approved operational plans for maintaining SFOR beyond June, including the establishment within SFOR of a specialized multinational unit to help local authorities deal with civil unrest without acting as a police force, thereby facilitating the return of refugees and displaced persons and the taking of office by elected officials. NATO adopted criteria for measuring the progress achieved in the overall implementation of the Peace Agreement to make it possible gradually to reduce the number of SFOR members and reduce its profile in terms of its agreed tasks. By resolution 1174/1998 of 15 June (see above), the Security Council authorized NATO member States to continue SFOR for a further period of 12 months.

In July [S/1998/659], the NATO Secretary-General said that the continuation of SFOR was accompanied by the adoption of a transition strategy to permit and promote that reduction, as emphasis shifted from military to civil implementation, leading to eventual withdrawal. Following the September elections (see above), and at intervals of six months, the security situation and the overall implementation of the Peace Agreement would be assessed to permit NATO, in consultation with other SFOR contributors, to consider the scope for further reductions.

During the year, SFOR continued to conduct surveillance and reconnaissance by means of ground and air patrols. It monitored crossing points on the border with FRY and inspected government-owned factories and weapons storage sites to help ensure compliance with the prohibition on the transport of weapons established by Security Council resolution 1160(1998) (see below). It supported OSCE during preparations for, and conduct of, the September elections, and provided a safe and secure environment for the elections and communications support to OSCE throughout the polling period. SFOR signed a Memorandum of Understanding with Bosnia and Herzegovina, permitting the opening of Tuzla Airport on 10 October. In respect of Sarajevo Airport, a Memorandum of Understanding permitted cargo operations to take place and enabled commercial aircraft to remain on the apron overnight.

Croatia

The mandate of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES), established by Security Council resolution 1037(1996) [YUN 1996, p. 319] to assist Croatia and the local Serb community in peacefully reintegrating the subregion into Croatia, ended on 15 January 1998. On 13 February, the Council said that the experience of the multifunctional operation might be useful for similar situations in the future. It noted, however, that much still remained to be done and called on Croatia to intensify efforts to promote full reintegration of the region.

UNTAES was replaced on 16 January by the United Nations Police Support Group (UNPSG), whose mandate was to continue monitoring the performance of the Croatian police in the Danube region, particularly in connection with the return of displaced persons. The Group was headed by Souren Seraydarian (Syrian Arab Republic), who was also the Secretary-General's Representative and head of the United Nations Liaison Office in Zagreb.

On 26 June, the Croatian State Parliament adopted a Programme for the Return and Accommodation of Displaced Persons, Refugees and Exiled Persons. By October, the Secretary-General reported that the security situation remained satisfactory, although there was a worrying trend of ethnically motivated incidents. Police performance improved considerably and the Government took steps to maintain it. Returns to Croatia under the new return programme continued, albeit slowly, and the programme remained to be fully implemented. The United Nations, through UNDP, continued to support government efforts to develop and implement a national reconstruction plan.

UNPSG's mandate ended on 15 October and it handed over its responsibilities to OSCE.

End of UNTAES mission in Croatia

As decided by the Security Council in resolution 1145(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 332], a support group of police monitors replaced UNTAES on 16 January 1998. UNTAES had been assisting Croatia and the local Serb community in the process of peacefully reintegrating the subregion of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium into Croatia.

Report of Secretary-General. On 22 January, the Secretary-General, in his final report on UNTAES [S/1998/59], said that the United Nations Civilian Police component of UNTAES, which remained within its authorized strength until 15 January 1998 and continued to monitor all operations of the Transitional Police Force, began its drawdown on 16 January and would reach the ceiling of 180 officers for UNPSG, authorized by the Security Council in resolution 1145(1997), by 31 January. A military liquidation force, operational since October 1997, was being progressively phased out as of 15 January. However, a UN guard element of 60 military personnel would be retained until 1 March, as would 30 military personnel from that date until the completion of liquidation on 31 May.

Reviewing the general situation in the region, the Secretary-General observed that progress continued to be made on a range of issues and the Government of Croatia had displayed commendable energy and commitment in the conduct of its comprehensive programme for national reconciliation, which gave hope that the conclusion of the UNTAES mandate would not jeopardize the results of two years of intensive international investment and effort in the region. Key factors for consolidating those achievements would be continued demonstration by government authorities of their determination to protect the rights of all minorities; revitalization of the economy and the creation of real and equal opportunities for all citizens; and the support of the international community. However, several other issues remained unresolved, including the fulfilment of obligations in property-related issues, tenancy rights, funding for the Joint Council of Municipalities and full implementation of the Amnesty Law. Critical to sustaining progress would be the role of the international community and Croatia's bilateral partners, which had to remain actively engaged in assessing Croatian performance. Towards that end, the Secretary-General had instructed the head of the United Nations Liaison Office in Zagreb to maintain close contact with UN agencies in Croatia, in particular UNHCR, the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights and other international organizations, especially OSCE, in order to keep the Council informed of the situation in the region. Croatia's request for further UN police assistance demonstrated its political will to complete the process of peaceful integration and acceptance of its responsibilities for non-discriminatory policing in the future.

Communications. The EU, supported by Central and Eastern European countries associated with it, and Cyprus, Iceland and Liechtenstein, in a 15 January statement [S/1998/46] on the occasion of the conclusion of the UNTAES mandate, called on the Croatian Government, at the national and local levels, to ensure the right of refugees and displaced persons to return, respect for the rule of law, the equitable treatment of all citizens regardless of ethnic origin and the protection of minorities. The EU also called on all Croatian citizens, Serbs and Croats alike, in Eastern Slavonia and throughout Croatia to see the conclusion of the UNTAES mandate as marking a new era of cooperation between them.

FRY, in a 16 January statement [S/1998/50], said that UNTAES had made a major contribution to the positive results achieved in the past two years in the implementation of the 1995 Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium [YUN 1995, p. 587] by laying the groundwork for peace, stability and development. FRY fully supported the further active presence of UN and OSCE representatives in the region as additional guarantees for the preservation of its multi-ethnic character, the realization of lasting equality of all residents and respect for their civil and human rights. It emphasized the importance of creating conditions for the successful functioning of local authorities, particularly the Joint Council of Municipalities, as well as for accelerated social and economic development. FRY reaffirmed its readiness to ensure that the Serb and Montenegrin citizens of Croatia were also granted Yugoslav citizenship, and its commitment to the concept of "soft borders", the establishment and strengthening of small-border traffic, the liberalization of overall trade and the establishment of a no-visa regime for citizens of both countries.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 13 February [meeting 3854], the Security Council met to consider the situation in Croatia. Following consultations among the members, the President issued the following statement on the Council's behalf [S/PRST/1998/3]:

The Security Council welcomes the successful completion of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium, as described in the report of the Secretary-General of 22 January 1998. The experience of this multifunctional operation may be useful for similar situations in the future.

The Council commends the commitment shown by the Government of the Republic of Croatia to the implementation of its comprehensive programme of national reconciliation, and stresses the need for continued progress in this regard. The Council is also encouraged by signs of increasing participation in Croatian political life by the region's ethnic Serb citizens, and underlines the importance of continued efforts by the Government of the Republic of Croatia to ensure full participation by the Serb minority in the political life of the country, including through urgent funding of the Joint Council of Municipalities.

The Council notes that, despite the positive conclusion of the Transitional Administration and the efforts of the Government of the Republic of Croatia, including its request for the establishment of the civilian police support group, much remains to be done. The Government of the Republic of Croatia remains responsible for the rights and safety of members of all ethnic groups within the Republic of Croatia and bound by its obligations and commitments under the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium and other international agreements. In this regard, the Council calls upon the Government of the Republic of Croatia to intensify its efforts to promote full reintegration of the region, in particular to resolve property issues and other problems which are hindering the return of refugees and displaced persons, to protect human rights, including by taking action against harassment, to address in full uncertainties about the implementation of the Amnesty Law and to take measures to improve public confidence in the Croatian police.

In this context, the Council emphasizes the key role of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe throughout the Republic of Croatia, including in the Danubian region. The Council strongly supports the closest possible cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, in particular between the mission of that organization and the support group and other United Nations offices and agencies in the Republic of Croatia, as envisaged by the Secretary-General, and, to that end, encourages the support group and the mission to keep each other fully informed.

The Council pays tribute to the dedicated men and women of the Transitional Administration and, in particular, expresses its appreciation to the Transitional Administrators and the Force Commanders for their leadership of the mission of the Transitional Administration.

Financing of UNTAES

In February [A/52/801], the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly revised budget estimates for period 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 for the maintenance of UNTAES until 15 January 1998 and of UNPSG thereafter. The revised budget totalled $139,213,300 gross ($133,317,900 net), inclusive of budgeted voluntary contributions in kind of $297,500 for UNTAES; $17,397,600 gross ($16,397,400 net) for its liquidation after 15 January; and $9,693,400 gross ($9,050,900 net) for the maintenance of UNPSG (see below) from 16 January to 30 June 1998. The budget for UNPSG from 1 July to 15 October totalled $7,121,400 gross ($6,632,500 net), including $1,507,900 gross ($1,448,600 net) for its liquidation.

The Secretary-General also submitted the financial performance report [A/52/722] for UNTAES for the period 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, showing an unencumbered balance of $15,899,400 gross ($13,162,800 net) resulting from delayed deployment of military and civilian personnel, availability of rent-free accommodation, supplies provided by United Nations Peace Forces headquarters and the operation of fewer vehicles than estimated.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 June [meeting 88], the General Assembly, having considered the revised cost estimates, the financial performance report and the related report of ACABQ [A/52/859], and on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/940], adopted resolution 52/244 without vote [agenda item 139].

Financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium and the Civilian Police Support Group

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium and the Civilian Police Support Group and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 1037(1996) of 15 January 1996, by which the Council established the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium for an initial period of twelve months, and 1145(1997) of 19 December 1997, by which the Council noted the termination of the Transitional Administration on 15 January 1998 and established the Civilian Police Support Group for a single period of up to nine months,

Recalling also its decision 50/481 of 11 April 1996 on the financing of the Transitional Administration and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 51/153 B of 13 June 1997,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Transitional Administration are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Transitional Administration, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Transitional Administration,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the missions with the necessary financial resources to enable them to fulfil their responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium as at 15 May 1998, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 37.9 million United States dollars, representing 8 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Transitional Administration to the period ending 15 January 1998, notes that some 24 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Transitional Administration and the Civilian Police Support Group in full and on time;

5. Takes note of the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Decides to examine the recommendation of the Advisory Committee for 5 per cent across-the-board reductions of the budget proposals of the Secretary-General in the light of the next series of relevant financial performance reports;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Transitional Administration and the Support Group are administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to employ locally recruited staff for the Support Group against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Support Group;

9. Decides to continue to use the Special Account for the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium, established in accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/242 of 7 June 1996, for the Support Group beginning on 16 January 1998;

10. Decides also to reduce the appropriation provided by the General Assembly in its resolution 51/153 B in the amount of 275,344,900 dollars gross (266,226,000 dollars net), inclusive of the amount of 10,276,000 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations, for the maintenance of the Transitional Administration for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, to the amount of 134,824,800 dollars gross (129,235,900 dollars net), inclusive of the amount of 10,276,000 dollars for the support account;

11. Decides further to reduce the apportionment provided by the General Assembly in its resolution 51/153 B at a monthly rate of 22,945,408 dollars gross (22,185,500 dollars net), subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Transitional Administration, to the amount of 111,824,800 dollars gross (107,572,100 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Transitional Administration for the period from 1 July 1997 to the end of its mandate on 15 January 1998;

12. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 23 million dollars gross (21,663,800 dollars net) for the liquidation of the Transitional Administration and the maintenance of the Support Group for the period from 16 January to 30 June 1998 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1998, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997;

13. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 12 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 1,336,200 dollars approved for the period from 16 January to 30 June 1998;

14. Decides further that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Transitional Administration, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 12 above, their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 15,899,400 dollars gross (13,162,800 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 1997;

15. Decides that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Transitional Administration, their share of the unencumbered balance of 15,899,400 dollars gross (13,162,800 dollars net) for the period ending 30 June 1997 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

16. Decides also to appropriate the amount of 7,483,160 dollars gross (6,994,260 dollars net) for the maintenance and liquidation of the Support Group for the period from 1 July to 30 November 1998, inclusive of the amount of 383,160 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations, to be apportioned, as an ad hoc arrangement, among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1998, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A;

17. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 16 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 488,900 dollars approved for the period from 1 July to 30 November 1998;

18. Invites voluntary contributions to the Transitional Administration and the Support Group in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

19. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session an item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium and the Civilian Police Support Group".

In December, the Secretary-General submitted the financial performance report [A/53/742] of UNTAES and UNPSG for the period 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, showing an unencumbered balance of $15,247,300 gross ($14,448,200 net), resulting from early repatriation of military contingents, civilian vacancies and the availability of spare parts and supplies from stock. Of that amount, ACABQ had concurred that $553,400 gross ($493,700 net) be applied for completion of liquidation tasks.

On 18 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the item on the financing of UNTAES and UNPSG at its resumed fifty-third (1999) session (decision 53/458).

Post-UNTAES situation

Communications. FRY, on 26 February [S/1998/161], transmitted to the Security Council President an aide-memoire, reporting that, following the termination of the UNTAES mandate on 15 January, worrisome negative developments had taken place in Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium, leading to an exodus of Serbs on an ever-larger scale and jeopardizing the results of the UN mission. Croatia showed no readiness to comply fully with the Basic Agreement [YUN1995,p.587] or with the commitments undertaken in its 13 January 1997 letter of intent [YUN 1997, p. 314]. Instead, Serbs continued to be subjected to various forms of discrimination, pressure, intimidation, anti-Serb media campaigns, summary dismissals and the denial of property, educational, cultural and other rights. Some 5,000 Serbs had left the region within the past 40 days; the exodus continued unabated and might soon turn into ethnic cleansing, invalidating the concept of the multi-ethnic nature of the region.

At informal consultations on 2 March, the Council received a briefing from the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations on the increase in incidents of harassment and intimidation against the local Serb population in Eastern Slavonia and the lack of progress by Croatia in implementing long-standing commitments.

On 5 March [S/1998/197], Croatia stated that since assuming executive authority on 16 January, it continued its reintegration activities, primarily within the programme established by the National Council for Reconciliation. It had also begun redrafting legislation on housing and private ownership to accelerate the two-way return. So far, over 31,000 ethnic Serbs had returned: 12,000 from the region and 19,000 from FRY and Bosnia and Herzegovina. Croatia was the only party in the region to register notable returns of persons formerly affiliated with the occupying/rebel forces. The Croatian leadership was active in reassuring ethnic Serbs about their rightful place in Croatian society. The reintegration process would continue with its peaks and troughs, but its general trend was positive.

Croatia said that economic revitalization and local police activity were crucial for the continued success of reintegration and, while the latter was a success, the former remained the key source of problems in the region, which Croatia could not address alone. Some of the local population were discouraged by the economic prospects and were leaving, while many more, equally discouraged, were not returning. Croatia was planning an international conference for reconstruction and development in May.

Croatia remained committed to the complete reintegration of ethnic Serbs into its society, to the protection of their equal status as citizens and of their minority rights, and to its long-standing policy of international cooperation in that regard.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 6 March [meeting 3859], the Security Council met to consider the situation in Croatia. Following consultations among its members, the President made the following statement [S/PRST/1998/6] on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council expresses its concern at the Croatian Government's lack of compliance with obligations assumed under the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium, the letter from the Croatian Government dated 13 January 1997 and the agreement of 23 April 1997 between the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Croatian Government concerning the return of refugees and displaced persons. The Council notes that the overall security situation in the Danube region remains relatively stable, but is particularly concerned about the increasing incidence of harassment and intimidation of the local Serb community in the region and the failure of the Croatian Government to apply the process of national reconciliation in an effective way at the local level. This worrying situation, together with recent statements by the Croatian authorities, cast doubt upon the commitment of the Republic of Croatia to include ethnic Serbs and persons from other minorities as full and equal members of Croatian society.

The Council, recalling the statement by its President of 13 February 1998 and having taken note of the letter dated 5 March 1998 from the Permanent Representative of the Republic of Croatia to the United Nations, calls upon the Croatian Government publicly to reaffirm and by its actions to demonstrate its commitment to fulfilling its obligations under the Basic Agreement and other agreements in full, including through progress on national reconciliation at every level. In particular, the Council calls upon the Croatian Government to take prompt and unequivocal steps to ensure the safety, security and rights of all Croatian citizens and to build confidence among the Serb community throughout Croatia, including by providing promised funding for the Joint Council of Municipalities. These steps should include measures to create the conditions to allow local Serbs to remain in the region, to facilitate the return of refugees and displaced persons and to address underlying practical and economic issues which inhibit returns. The Council calls upon the Croatian Government to establish clear procedures for the documentation of refugees from Croatia; to issue an equitable plan for nationwide two-way returns; to implement fully and fairly its legislation on amnesty; to act promptly to pass equitable property and tenancy rights legislation which would encourage returns and stimulate additional international reconstruction assistance; to ensure fair employment benefit practices and equal economic opportunity; and to ensure the non-discriminatory application of the rule of law.

The Council recognizes that, since the end of the mandate of the Transitional Administration, the performance of the Croatian police has been generally satisfactory, and in this context expresses its appreciation and support for the work of the United Nations civilian police support group. The Council notes, however, that public confidence in the police is low. The Council calls upon the Croatian Government to take measures, including through public information and police preventive action, to improve public confidence in the police as part of a wider programme of measures to prevent ethnically motivated crime and ensure the protection and equal treatment of all Croatian citizens, regardless of ethnicity.

The Council stresses that, following the termination of the Transitional Administration, responsibility for the full reintegration of the Danube region lies clearly with the Croatian Government. The United Nations will continue to work closely with the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe in monitoring the situation and reminding the Croatian Government of its obligations.

UN Police Support Group

The United Nations Police Support Group, established on 16 January in accordance with Security Council resolution 1145(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 332], comprised 180 police monitors deployed in 14 Croatian police stations in the region and within the departmental Croatian police headquarters in Vinkovci and Osijek. The Group continued to monitor the performance of the Croatian police in the Danube region, particularly in connection with the return of displaced persons.

On 13 January [S/1998/30], the Council agreed with the Secretary-General's 8 January proposal [S/1998/29] to appoint Souren Seraydarian (Syrian Arab Republic) as his Representative and head of UNPSG and the United Nations Liaison Office in Zagreb. Halvor Hartz was named Police Commissioner. The headquarters of UNPSG was located in Vukovar, operating under the overall responsibility of a substantive unit based in Zagreb.

Report of Secretary-General (June). In a 15 June report on UNPSG [S/1998/500], the Secretary-General said that the transition from UNTAES civilian police operations to UNPSG was seamless. Its functions included monitoring local police operations at all levels; patrolling; participating in and following up case investigations by the local police; human rights monitoring; and providing guidance and limited training to the local police force, which, as at 7 June, comprised 794 Croats, 673 Serbs and 49 persons of other ethnicity. The police force would gradually draw down to a strength of about 1,250 officers. The Government had stated that maintaining the ethnic balance of the reduced force remained a priority.

Working conditions, salaries and welfare benefits within the local police force were now the same for all officers regardless of ethnicity, and no discriminatory practices were evident. Only a few inter-ethnic incidents were reported.

The Secretary-General said that the overall performance of the Croatian police had improved since the beginning of UNPSG's mandate. The level of training of police officers in the region varied but generally they were professional, well equipped and capable of responding rapidly to events. Their response to ethnically related incidents, evictions and housing intimidation cases was, however, not always satisfactory. On 9 January, the Ministry of the Interior issued guidelines on how to respond to cases of attempted eviction. However, failure to implement those guidelines effectively on all occasions had strengthened the local perception of police partiality. Small fines in cases of disturbing public peace were insufficient to deter offenders and prevent recidivism and contributed to the common perception that harassment went unpunished. Lack of confidence in the system resulted in the non-reporting of incidents by residents, irrespective of ethnicity. While Serb and Croat local leaders reported an improved level of confidence in the police force, much more needed to be done to improve its image. To that end, UNPSG urged the Ministry of the Interior to institute a community policing programme as a matter of priority.

Concerning refugees and displaced persons, UNHCR estimated that, since late 1996, some 42,500 Serb residents and displaced persons had emigrated from Croatia, including more than 2,200 who had requested asylum in Norway. Departures were motivated by a combination of continued security incidents and ethnically related intimidations; a dire economic situation; bureaucratic hurdles; discriminatory legislation; and a stalled two-way return programme. Of the more than 33,200 Serb displaced persons registered in 1997, only 12,600 remained in the region. Up to 12,000 Serb displaced persons had returned from the region to their homes in other parts of Croatia. Most of those returns took place outside the Agreement on the Operational Procedures of Return, resulting in difficulties for displaced persons in obtaining necessary documents and benefits. The number of those wishing to return within Croatia was, however, declining. Returns of Croat displaced persons to the region were also slow for economic reasons.

At the national level, core issues related to the return of displaced persons, such as the abolition of discriminatory property laws and the establishment of effective mechanisms to allow owners to recover their properties, remained unresolved. Continued intimidation and the absence of property restitution resulted in some Serb displaced persons accepting accommodation in collective centres, despite the fact that there were hundreds of available vacant houses and apartments in the region. On 15 May, the Government announced that it would finance the reconstruction of 1,200 houses for Bosnian Croat returnees in the central Bosnian canton. In contrast, only 21 displaced Croatian citizens of Serb ethnic origin in the region had received cash grants for the repair of slightly damaged houses and none was provided for more seriously damaged houses. On 27 April, the Croatian Sabor adopted refugee return procedures that contained serious flaws. Following action by the international community, including the postponement of a proposed reconstruction conference, the Government issued mandatory instructions that took into consideration some of the concerns of the international community.

Regarding the situation in the Danube region, since the termination of UNTAES, the Government of Croatia had met the majority of its obligations concerning the provision of public services and employment within the public sector. However, almost no progress had been achieved in reconciliation since January. At the national level, the programme continued to be pursued within the framework of the National Committee for the Establishment of Trust, but that was not evident at the municipal level throughout Croatia. In many instances, local authorities viewed reconciliation committees as a mechanism for solving problems related to returning Croat displaced persons rather than for re-establishing confidence between ethnic communities. In some areas of Serb return, reconciliation committees had not been formed. The Government of Croatia published a list of 13,575 Serbs to whom the Amnesty Law applied.

With the exception of Vukovar, almost all the municipalities within the region were functioning. However, the poor economic situation and unemployment were major obstacles to overall progress in the area, and little had been done to redress those problems. UNPSG, with contributions from Belgium, Norway and the United States, was implementing a number of projects in the region, including the reconstruction and building of an apartment block, two pensioners' homes, a kindergarten and a school; the provision of educational equipment for schools; and demining.

The Secretary-General observed that, since 15 January, there had been progress on a number of issues that remained outstanding at the end of the UNTAES mandate. However, core issues remained unresolved, including the abolition of discriminatory property laws and the establishment of effective property recovery mechanisms. The Government still had to adopt a comprehensive nationwide programme for returns and to develop a balanced reconstruction plan. A wide gap continued to exist between commitments reconfirmed at the highest official level and implementation at lower levels. Those factors combined to produce a perception among the local Serb population that they had no future in Croatia.

Despite improvements, much work remained to be done before the police enjoyed local confidence and proved itself to be capable of impartially policing a multi-ethnic community. The Secretary-General stressed that the improving performance of the Croatian police in the region was not sufficient by itself to offset the range of outstanding problems that created a climate that fostered ethnic hatred, intolerance and intimidation.

The Secretary-General said that he intended to downsize the UNPSG operation gradually beginning in August and he would submit arrangements for its termination by 15 October. In the meantime, he had instructed his Representative to establish a timetable for the handover of UNPSG functions to OSCE. On 31 March, the Secretary-General's Representative invited OSCE to begin contingency planning for the transfer.

Communication (June). On 29 June [S/1998/589], Croatia transmitted to the Security Council President the text of a Programme for the Return and Accommodation of Displaced Persons, Refugees and Exiled Persons, adopted by the Croatian State Parliament on 26 June.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 2 July [meeting 3901], the Security Council President made the following statement on behalf of the Council members [S/PRST/1998/19]:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 11 June 1998 pursuant to its resolution 1145(1997) of 19 December 1997.

The Council notes that the overall security situation in the Danube region is relatively stable. It also notes that the generally satisfactory performance of the Croatian police in the region is largely due to comprehensive monitoring by the United Nations Police Support Group and the special attention paid to the situation by the Ministry of the Interior of the Republic of Croatia. However, the Council is concerned that, despite the large presence of the Croatian police, ethnically related incidents, evictions and housing intimidation cases have not been stopped, and that such incidents have increased in the recent period.

The Council expresses its grave concern that a large number of Serb residents and displaced persons have emigrated from the Republic of Croatia since late 1996, mainly because of continued security incidents, ethnically related intimidation, a dire economic situation, bureaucratic hurdles, discriminatory legislation and a stalled return programme. A continuation of this trend could have a seriously negative effect on the restoration of a multi-ethnic society in the Republic of Croatia. The Council, therefore, welcomes the adoption by the Government of Croatia, on 26 June 1998, of a nationwide programme for the return and accommodation of displaced persons, refugees and exiled persons and calls for its prompt and full implementation at all levels, including the abolition of discriminatory property laws and the establishment of effective mechanisms allowing owners to recover their property. It stresses the importance of the prompt and full implementation of the programme on reconciliation at all levels throughout Croatia and of preventing and responding to incidents of harassment and unlawful evictions.

The Council reiterates the continuing obligations of the Government of Croatia under the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium as well as under international conventions and other agreements. It notes with satisfaction that the Government of Croatia has met the majority of its obligations concerning the provision of public services and employment within the public sector, set out in the Basic Agreement. The Council, however, reiterates that a number of obligations have yet to be fulfilled in such areas as the implementation of the Convalidation Law and the Amnesty Law, the functioning of local municipalities and the permanent funding of the Joint Council of Municipalities. In this regard, the Council stresses the significance of the Article 11 Commission, formed under the provisions of article 11 of the Basic Agreement, as a key instrument in encouraging the Government of Croatia to meet its obligations fully and in underscoring continued international commitment to the successful completion of peaceful reintegration.

The Council calls upon the Government of Croatia to improve police response to ethnically related incidents, evictions and housing intimidation cases and to take other measures to strengthen public confidence in the police, including through public information and police preventive action. In this context, the Council stresses the importance of the implementation of the guidelines issued by the Ministry of the Interior on 9 January 1998 and the institution of a community policing programme by the Ministry.

The Council fully supports the activities of the United Nations Police Support Group and the United Nations Liaison Office in Zagreb. It welcomes the decision of 25 June 1998 of the Permanent Council of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe to deploy civilian police monitors to assume, from 15 October 1998, the responsibilities of the Support Group. It also welcomes the invitation by the representative of the Secretary-General to the head of the mission of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe in Croatia to begin planning for the intended transfer of the police monitoring function in the region to that organization. It supports the establishment of a timetable for the handover of the functions of the Support Group to the organization and agrees with the intention of the Secretary-General to reduce gradually the number of civilian police monitors, under the conditions specified in his report. The Council looks forward to a report by the Secretary-General by mid-September detailing the arrangements for the termination of the mandate of the Support Group by 15 October 1998.

Report of Secretary-General (September). In a September report on UNPSG [S/1998/887], the Secretary-General said that the security situation in the region continued to be relatively stable, with a lower level of crime than in most other areas of Croatia. The overall level of housing-related and ethnically related incidents was decreasing, particularly housing-related intimidation. Despite those improvements, the severity of ethnically related incidents increased, including shootings, explosions, assaults and vandalism.

Although the overall police response to criminal activity met international standards, the police response to ethnic incidents was less encouraging, with signs of a growing unwillingness by some officers to take action in such cases. Police performance was also undermined by an inefficient judicial system. The inability of the courts to hear charges promptly contributed to the population's perception that the system was not impartial and that the police and the courts could not be trusted to deal with ethnically related cases. Continuing difficulties with standards of training and supervision were reflected in the number of formal disciplinary proceedings. UNPSG's attempts to address differences in the level of training were hampered by reluctance on the part of some Serb and other minority officers to undertake training outside the region. Despite the Security Council's call on 2 July (see above) for Croatia to strengthen public confidence in the police, little response was made to requests that local police officers take part in public relations activities, and the Ministry of the Interior was yet to institute a community policing programme.

Concerning the return of refugees and displaced persons, the Secretary-General said that the Programme for the Return and Accommodation of Displaced Persons, Refugees and Exiled Persons was a major step in the right direction. However, the Programme had its shortcomings as it did not establish a satisfactory non-discriminatory mechanism to enable apartment dwellers to return to formerly socially owned apartments or to receive alternative accommodation or compensation. As to the implementation of the Programme, the Secretary-General reported that most of the housing commissions were established by the deadline of 31 July, but many were not operational and the Government Coordination Committee on Return was yet to meet. However, since the Programme's adoption, 10,411 Croatian Serbs refugees in FRY and Bosnia and Herzegovina (Republika Srpska) had made requests to return. UNHCR reported that 3,810 individuals were cleared for return, of whom 700 returned spontaneously and 719 returned under the newly established mechanism. Only 5,700 previously registered displaced Serbs still remained in the region, down from 33,200 in 1997, and 21,349 Croat displaced persons had returned to the region. Two-way returns continued to be impeded by lack of employment opportunities and the low level of confidence in the prospects for long-term return. Economic difficulties continued to prompt original residents to leave the region.

UNPSG continued to cooperate closely with OSCE. They established a joint steering committee to oversee the transition of activities and two joint working groups to deal with police-related matters and logistics.

Report of Secretary-General (October). In his final report on UNPSG, issued in October [S/199871004], the Secretary-General stated that the security situation in the region remained satisfactory, although there continued to be a worrying trend of ethnically motivated incidents. Police performance improved notably and the Government had taken steps to maintain it. The Secretary-General suggested that further steps could include increasing the level of professional training of the police, greater support for the judicial system to overcome the substantial case backlog and improve the transparency of its operation, and measures to enhance public confidence in the police through an information campaign, police preventive action and the institution of a community policing programme. The Secretary-General contended that for the return programme to gather momentum a number of outstanding issues needed to be addressed: the Government should harmonize legislation with the provisions of the programme to enable its non-discriminatory implementation; ensure that all housing commissions functioned effectively; make access to reconstruction funding equally available to all; restore rights to socially owned apartments; provide all returnees with access to information, particularly about housing; remove impediments to the acquisition of documents needed for returnee status and benefits; and alleviate doubts about security in the areas of return, including by more effective policing and the opening of additional police stations. The United Nations, through UNDP, continued to support the Government's efforts to develop and implement a national reconstruction plan. The Government had also adopted a plan incorporating the suggestions of the international community.

In other areas, the Joint Council of Municipalities, on which all Serb ethnic communities in the region were represented, was on the brink of collapse. Failure to make progress on that issue was undermining local confidence in the continued implementation of the commitments made by Croatia. The continued failure to implement fully the law on convalidation was having a significant negative effect, as employees who would otherwise be eligible for pensions and other social security benefits were unable to obtain them. The Secretary-General urged the Government to recommit itself fully to the reconciliation process.

The Secretary-General reported that UNTAES liquidation was complete and that of UNPSG was expected to be completed by 15 December. The conclusion of UNPSG's mandate marked the positive outcome of the use of civilian police personnel to ensure consolidation of peace after the withdrawal of a much larger operation. UNPSG had helped to prevent the return of instability to the region and proved to be a cost-effective instrument in maintaining conditions conducive to the orderly handover to OSCE, pending the ultimate transfer of full responsibility to national authorities.

Communications (September/October). On 28 September, Croatia's Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs informed the General Assembly that the Programme for the Return and Accommodation of Displaced Persons, Refugees and Exiled Persons was being successfully implemented. So far, more than 45,000 Croatian Serbs had returned. Croatia was also taking measures to encourage the process of reconciliation, and a successful donors' conference on reconstruction, to be held later in the year, should further contribute to the ongoing process of return and normalization of daily life, especially in the war-affected areas.

FRY, in a 7 October letter [A/53/480] to the Secretary-General, challenged Croatia's claim regarding refugees, which, it said, was disproved by the Secretary-General's September report [S/1998/887] and the Council's censure of Croatia for failing to take appropriate measures. In its statement to the Assembly, Croatia did not mention the ongoing exodus of Serbs from Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium and was silent about the difficulties encountered by Serbs who had returned to Croatia. FRY drew attention to the parts of the Secretary-General's report that referred to Croatia's failures in the areas of national reconciliation, implementation of the convalidation law, commitments to the Joint Council of Municipalities, intimidation and serious criminal acts as a result of property disputes and ethnic intolerance and lack of reconstruction assistance to Serbs.

In response, Croatia, on 19 October [S/1998/964], maintained that it had successfully implemented its return and reconciliation programmes for refugees and displaced persons, irrespective of their ethnicity, and it remained committed to the process. The UNTAES mission, which was a joint success of the United Nations and Croatia, and the conclusion of UNPSG's mandate demonstrated the continuing trend of positive developments.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

On 6 November [meeting 3941], the Security Council President made the following statement on behalf of the Council [S/PRST/1998/32]:

The Security Council welcomes the final report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Police Support Group and, in particular, his description of the successful conclusion of the mandate of the Support Group and the smooth transition of responsibilities to the police monitoring programme of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe. The Council recalls the commitment of the Government of Croatia to ensure that police monitors of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe will have the same access to police stations, documents and police operations, including investigations and checkpoints, as that accorded to the Support Group.

While the overall security situation in the Danube region remains satisfactory and police performance has improved notably and the Government of Croatia has taken steps to ensure that this continues, a worrying trend of ethnically motivated incidents persists in the region. The Council remains deeply concerned at the continuing departures of Serb residents, resulting to a considerable extent from these incidents. In this context, the Council is mindful of the importance of economic revitalization and reconstruction in creating an environment for sustained returns. The Council calls upon the Government of Croatia to make every effort to enhance public confidence in the police force and to recommit itself fully to the process of reconciliation between ethnic groups.

The Council also calls upon the Government of Croatia to address the perceived lack of security, which is contributing to continuing departures of Serbs from the region, and to remedy a number of problems that are preventing the full implementation of the "Programme for the Return and Accommodation of Displaced Persons, Refugees and Exiled Persons". While noting that in his previous report the Secretary-General recognized progress in the implementation of the Programme, the Council calls upon the Government of Croatia promptly and fully to address all unresolved issues, which include restitution of property to Croatian citizens of Serb ethnicity, harmonization of legislation with the provisions of the return programme to enable non-discriminatory implementation, effective functioning of all housing commissions, equal access to reconstruction funding, restoration of rights to socially owned apartments, access to information, removal of impediments to the acquisition of documents needed for returnee status and benefits, and implementation of the Convalidation Law.

The Council expresses particular concern about the Joint Council of Municipalities, which represents all Serb ethnic communities in the region and which is described by the Secretary-General as being on the brink of collapse. The Council reiterates the continuing obligations of the Government of Croatia under the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium, as well as under international conventions and other agreements, and, in this context, stresses the importance of full implementation of the "Programme for the Establishment of Trust, Accelerated Return and Normalization of Living Conditions in the War-Affected Regions of the Republic of Croatia".

The Council expresses its full support for the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, which has now assumed the role of the Support Group, and looks forward to being kept informed, whenever necessary, of relevant developments in the Danube region of Croatia.

The Council expresses its deep appreciation to all the men and women who participated in the United Nations peacekeeping operations in the Danube region of Croatia. Their dedication and perseverance made a significant contribution to regional peace.

UN Mission of Observers in Prevlaka (UNMOP)

During 1998, the United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka, which became a separate mission in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 330], continued to monitor the demilitarization of the disputed Prevlaka peninsula and of the neighbouring areas in Croatia and FRY by carrying out patrols on both sides of the border. The Mission, which comprised 28 military observers, also maintained contacts with local authorities to strengthen liaison, reduce tension, improve safety and security and promote confidence between the parties. On 24 June [S/1998/564], the Security Council agreed with the Secretary-General's intention [S/1998/563] to appoint Lieutenant-Colonel Graeme Roger Williams (New Zealand) to replace Colonel Harold Mwakio Tangai (Kenya) as Chief Military Observer.

Both Croatia and FRY continued to reiterate their firm commitment to a negotiated resolution of the disputed issues of Prevlaka in accordance with article 4 of the Agreement on Normalization of Relations between them, signed in Belgrade on 23 August 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 340]. During the year, both parties submitted to each other drafts of a proposed agreement on a permanent solution to those issues. By the end of the year, three negotiating sessions had been held but no substantial progress was made.

In January, the Council authorized a six-month extension of UNMOP until 15 July; a further six-month extension until 15 January 1999 was authorized in July.

Although an independent mission, UNMOP was treated for administrative and budgetary purposes as part of UNMIBH. (For details on the financing of UNMOP, see above, under "UNMIBH financing".)

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

On 13 January [meeting 3847], the Security Council, having considered the Secretary-General's report of 30 December 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 338] on the situation in Prevlaka, adopted resolution 1147(1998) unanimously. The draft [S/1998/16] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its earlier relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 779(1992) of 6 October 1992, 981(1995) of 31 March 1995, 1025(1995) of 30 November 1995, 1038(1996) of 15 January 1996, 1066(1996) of 15 July 1996, 1093(1997) of 14 January 1997 and 1119(1997) of 14 July 1997,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 30 December 1997, and welcoming the positive developments noted therein,

Reaffirming once again its commitment to the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Croatia,

Noting again the Joint Declaration signed at Geneva on 30 September 1992 by the Presidents of the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, in particular article 3, which reaffirmed their agreement concerning the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula, and emphasizing the contribution that this demilitarization has made to the decrease of tension in the region,

Noting with concern continued long-standing violations of the demilitarization regime in the United Nations designated zones in the region, but welcoming a decrease in the number of violations,

Welcoming the first substantial progress in implementing the practical options proposed by the United Nations military observers in May 1996, as referred to in the report of the Secretary-General of 31 December 1996,

Noting with concern that there has been no progress towards a settlement of the disputed issue of Prevlaka through mutual negotiations,

Recalling the Agreement on Normalization of Relations between the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, signed in Belgrade on 23

August 1996, committing the parties to settle peacefully the disputed issue of Prevlaka by negotiations in the spirit of the Charter of the United Nations and good neighbourly relations, and stressing the need for the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to agree on a settlement which would peacefully resolve their differences,

Noting that the presence of the United Nations military observers continues to be essential to maintain conditions that are conducive to a negotiated settlement of the disputed issue of Prevlaka,

1. Authorizes the United Nations military observers to continue monitoring the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula, in accordance with resolutions 779(1992) and 981(1995) and paragraphs 19 and 20 of the report of the Secretary-General of 13 December 1995, until 15 July 1998;

2. Welcomes steps taken by the parties in adopting the practical options proposed by United Nations military observers to reduce tension and improve safety and security in the area, and calls upon the parties to make further progress in this regard;

3. Reiterates its call upon the parties to cease all violations of the demilitarization regime in the United Nations designated zones, to cooperate fully with the United Nations military observers and to ensure their safety and freedom of movement;

4. Urges the parties to abide by their mutual commitments and to implement fully the Agreement on Normalization of Relations between the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia of 23 August 1996;

5. Expresses its support for the commitment by the parties to a negotiated resolution of the disputed issue of Prevlaka in accordance with article 4 of the agreement mentioned in paragraph 4 above;

6. Urges the parties to take concrete steps towards a negotiated resolution of the disputed issue of Prevlaka in good faith and without delay;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council by 5 July 1998 a report on the situation in the Prevlaka peninsula and, in particular, on progress made by the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia towards a settlement which would peacefully resolve their differences;

8. Requests the United Nations military observers and the multinational Stabilization Force authorized by the Council in resolution 1088(1996) of 12 December 1996 to cooperate fully with each other;

9. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Proposals for a permanent solution

On 18 June [S/1998/533], Croatia submitted to the Security Council President the text of a proposed draft agreement between Croatia and FRY on a permanent solution to the security issue of Prevlaka. In the draft agreement, which was formally submitted to FRY on 15 June in Zagreb, Croatia proposed the establishment of a joint Croatian-Yugoslav commission for regulating the southern border between the two countries. Croatia also proposed that the border-crossing points at Debeli Brijeg and Konfin be opened, delimitation of the sea between the two countries be carried out in accordance with international law, and demilitarization be carried out within a zone 2 kilometres deep from the international frontier towards the interior of their respective territories. Croatia also agreed to temporary asymmetrical demilitarization to a distance of 5 kilometres for a period of five years.

FRY's proposed draft agreement [S/1998/632], submitted on 10 July, also suggested the establishment of a joint commission. It further proposed the establishment of a permanent border-crossing point for international transport along the Herceg Novi-Sutorina-Dubrovnik motorway and that a border traffic regime be established for specific counties of FRY/the Republic of Montenegro and Croatia.

On 8 July [S/1998/617], Croatia said that it appreciated the Secretary-General's call to the parties, contained in his June report on UNMOP (see below), to make use of the current situation and to engage in substantive talks towards resolving the Prevlaka issue. It was also encouraged by the first positive public reaction to its proposed agreement by the Montenegrin authorities, which it viewed as conducive to a more constructive approach for improving cooperation and resolving the remaining bilateral issues. Croatia looked forward to proceeding with bilateral negotiations to resolve the Prevlaka issue permanently and welcomed the recently expressed preparedness of FRY to do so in its letter of 24 June [S/1998/593].

On 13 October [S/1998/961], FRY informed the Secretary-General that on 18 August the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Croatia and FRY had agreed that the two countries should proceed to the realization of their commitments on delimitation and arranging their borders by agreement under article 2 of the 1996 Agreement on Normalization of Relations [YUN 1996, p. 340]. As a result, two rounds of negotiations were held: the first in Zagreb on 15 September and the second in Belgrade on 9 October. FRY stated that the beginning of negotiations represented an important step forward and a positive contribution to the development of relations between the two countries.

The Secretary-General reported that the third round of negotiations was held in Zagreb on 23 December [S/1999/16]. The parties did not make substantive progress on a settlement but expressed their intention to continue discussions through further meetings of their experts and through other bilateral contacts.

Report of Secretary-General (June). In a June report [S/1998/578], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that the stability in the UNMOP area of responsibility had not been disrupted by any serious incidents, but neither party showed any signs of ceasing the continuing violations of the demilitarization regime in the two UN-designated areas. As the military threat in the area decreased, UNMOP experienced an increase in difficulties of a civilian nature, such as claims by local landowners and fishermen to make commercial use of the UN-controlled zones, but had avoided any steps that would prejudice the outcome of bilateral negotiations.

Both parties continued to reiterate their firm commitment to a negotiated resolution of the dispute, in accordance with the 1996 Agreement on Normalization of Relations. For the first time, a formal proposal (see above) for the settlement of the disputed issue was presented, which it was hoped would provide a much-needed impetus for the start of negotiations. The Secretary-General urged Croatia and FRY to engage in substantive talks. He recommended a further six-month extension of UNMOP's mandate, until 15 January 1999.

Communication. On 24 June [S/1998/593], FRY said that although the security situation in the Prevlaka area had improved and tensions were considerably reduced, the security risks were not removed, creating a climate of insecurity and making confidence-building measures and the search for a peaceful solution to the disputed territorial issue more difficult. Those risks resulted from Croatia's continued violation of the status of the UN-controlled area and attempts to demonstrate the legitimacy of its authority in that area. The population of Herceg Novi and Boka Kotorska felt constantly threatened. FRY did not in any way endanger the inhabited areas on the Croatian side and consistently applied the demilitarization and security regime in the Prevlaka area. It had also taken further steps in accepting and implementing practical options for reducing tension and enhancing security. FRY was prepared to embark immediately upon negotiations on the settlement of the territorial dispute in accordance with the Agreement on Normalization of Relations. It considered it necessary for the Security Council to extend UNMOP's mandate beyond 15 July until a commonly acceptable solution was found through bilateral negotiations.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 15 July [meeting 3907], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1183(1998). The draft [S/1998/642] was sponsored by France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Portugal, the Russian Federation, Slovenia, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its earlier relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 779(1992) of 6 October 1992, 981(1995) of 31 March 1995 and 1147(1998) of 13 January 1998,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 26 June 1998, and noting the positive assessment in the report of the Secretary-General of recent developments, including the initiative by the Republic of Croatia for a final resolution of the disputed issue of Prevlaka,

Noting the proposal by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia on the permanent settlement of the disputed issue of Prevlaka,

Reaffirming once again its commitment to the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Croatia within its internationally recognized borders,

Noting again the Joint Declaration signed at Geneva on 30 September 1992 by the Presidents of the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, in particular article 3, which reaffirmed their agreement concerning the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula, and emphasizing the contribution that this demilitarization has made to the decrease of tension in the region,

Concerned, however, at the continued long-standing violations of the demilitarization regime in the United Nations designated zones in the region and the failure of the parties to improve their compliance with the demilitarization regime as recommended by the United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka, including important demining activities within the demilitarized area, and by continued restrictions on the freedom of movement of its personnel within their area of responsibility,

Recalling the Agreement on Normalization of Relations between the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, signed in Belgrade on 23 August 1996, committing the parties to settle peacefully the disputed issue of Prevlaka by negotiations in the spirit of the Charter of the United Nations and good neighbourly relations, and deeply concerned at the lack of significant progress towards such a settlement,

Noting that the presence of the United Nations military observers continues to be essential to maintain conditions that are conducive to a negotiated settlement of the disputed issue of Prevlaka,

1. Authorizes the United Nations military observers to continue monitoring the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula, in accordance with resolutions 779(1992) and 981(1995) and paragraphs 19 and 20 of the report of the Secretary-General of 13 December 1995, until 15 January 1999;

2. Calls upon the parties to take further steps to reduce tension and improve safety and security in the area;

3. Reiterates its call upon the parties to cease all violations of the demilitarization regime in the United Nations designated zones, to cooperate fully with the United Nations military observers and to ensure their safety and full and unrestricted freedom of movement, and calls upon them to complete promptly the demining of the area;

4. Urges the parties to abide by their mutual commitments and to implement fully the Agreement on Normalization of Relations between the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia of 23 August 1996, in particular their commitment to reach a negotiated resolution of the disputed issue of Prevlaka in accordance with article 4 of the Agreement, and calls upon them to engage promptly and constructively in negotiations;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council by 15 October 1998 a report on the situation in the Prevlaka peninsula and in particular on progress made by the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia towards a settlement which would peacefully resolve their differences, and, in this context, on the possible adaptation of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka;

6. Requests the United Nations military observers and the multinational Stabilization Force authorized by the Council in resolution 1088(1996) of 12 December 1996 and extended by resolution 1174(1998) of 15 June 1998 to cooperate fully with each other;

7. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

On 28 September, Croatia's Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs informed the General Assembly that Croatia had come a long way in its bilateral relations with FRY. It had signed 10 bilateral agreements since the end of hostilities and it hoped that the last outstanding issue—the security arrangement for the Prevlaka area—would be negotiated promptly. Croatia stood ready not only to open the border crossings with Montenegro but to continue demilitarization on its side of the border and with the security regime administered by UNMOP, whose mandate should terminate by 15 January 1999, because another prolongation of its mandate could be misused to stall negotiations indefinitely.

Report of Secretary-General (October). In October [S/1998/939], the Secretary-General reported that the Croatian authorities continued to routinely grant civilians unauthorized access to the UN-controlled zone. Local officials had told the Chief Military Observer that Croatia did not recognize any part of that zone (including the sea) other than the land of the Ostra peninsula. The waters of the UN-controlled zone continued to be violated frequently by Croatian fishing boats, occasionally by Croatian police boats and frequently by Yugoslav fishing and tourist boats. The situation of the identified minefields within the UNMOP area of responsibility had not changed significantly, but both parties had informed the Chief Military Observer that a demining programme would commence in the near future.

The Secretary-General said that the stability of the UNMOP area of responsibility and the opening of negotiations between the parties should contribute to an atmosphere in which substantive progress could be made. He appealed to the parties to work jointly towards a final settlement of the dispute. Substantial progress in that regard would allow him to make further recommendations to the Security Council about the next steps to be taken by the United Nations and, in particular, concerning UNMOP's mandate and its presence in the area.

Communications. On 7 October [A/53/480], FRY said that it had every right to expect that the extension of UNMOP's mandate would be fully supported by the Security Council as long as negotiations lasted. Croatia's announcement that, if necessary, it would terminate the UNMOP mandate by unilateral action by 15 January 1999 was contrary to the 1996 Agreement on Normalization of Relations and to the Secretary-General's June recommendations (see above).

Responding on 19 October [S/1998/964], Croatia said that it was unhelpful that bilateral talks on Prevlaka were being unnecessarily extended by FRY's evasion of the core issue— acceptance of the principle of the inviolability of the international borders of the successor States of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. Croatia had and would continue to have full understanding for FRY's security concerns in the Boka Kotorska Bay, for which the best solution was demilitarization. However, it would not allow its internationally recognized borders to be brought into question. Once FRY accepted those basic principles, the question of Prevlaka would become an easily resolvable, technical matter of marking the existing international land border and delimiting the border at sea, as well as defining the demilitarization regime and the measures by which it would be verified.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in a later report [S/1999/16], said that Croatia, which had denied UN military observers unrestricted access to positions in the north-western portion of the demilitarized zone, advised the Chief Military Observer in December that it would in future allow foot patrols to those areas. Since then, patrols had been conducted without obstruction and the Croatian authorities had taken steps to enable direct communication between UNMOP and the local military commander. On 23 December, the crossing point between Croatia and FRY (Montenegro) at Debeli Brijeg, in the demilitarized zone, was opened for the holiday period and was to remain open until 15 January 1999.

The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM)

Developments in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia were mixed during 1998. Positive developments included continued progress in improving inter-ethnic relations within the country, the adoption of the electoral law and the successful holding of general elections in October and November, resulting in a change of Government. UN agencies in FYROM adopted a programme of action for a consolidated approach to development issues. However, the demarcation of the border between FYROM and FRY remained unresolved and developments in Kosovo province of FRY (see below) highlighted the danger of renewed violence in the area and the serious repercussions it could have on FYROM's internal and external security.

The United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP), whose presence, the Secretary-General said, had so far contributed to successfully preventing the spillover of conflicts elsewhere in the region to FYROM, continued to have a stabilizing effect. Because of the developing situation in Kosovo, the Security Council, contrary to its December 1997 decision, contained in resolution 1142(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 3461, to withdraw UNPREDEP's military component as of 31 August 1998, was obliged to extend the mission's mandate to 28 February 1999 and to increase its troop strength to 1,050.

UN Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP)

The United Nations Preventive Deployment Force continued to monitor and report any developments along the borders of FYROM that could affect its peace and stability. During most of the year, UNPREDEP's military component consisted of two mechanized battalions, each with a strength of 350 personnel, supported by a 50-person heavy engineering platoon. In addition, there were 35 military observers and 26 civilian police monitors. By resolution 1186(1998) of 21 July, the Security Council authorized a troop increase for UNPREDEP and extended its mandate to 28 February 1999 in order to monitor FYROM's borders with Kosovo and Albania. The military units conducted community and border patrols, while the civilian component continued to play an important role in implementing the mandate of good offices of the Special Representative, especially by conducting an active dialogue with the authorities and all other major political forces in the country. It also monitored developments in FYROM, including possible areas of conflict, and the application of international human rights standards. The mission continued to be headed by the Secretary-General's Special Representative, Henryk J. Sokalski (Poland). On 18 December [S/1998/1192], the Security Council noted the Secretary-General's intention [S/1998/1191] to appoint Fernando Valenzuela Marzo (Spain) as Special Representative as of 1 January 1999 to replace Mr. Sokalski. The Secretary-General, through an exchange of letters with the Council [S/1998/853, S/1998/854], appointed Brigadier-General Ove Johnny Strömberg (Norway) as Force Commander to replace Brigadier-General Bent Sohnemann (Denmark), whose tour of duty ended on 30 September.

Communication (May). On 15 May [S/1998/401], FYROM informed the Secretary-General that, because of the negative developments to the north of the country, especially in Kosovo, and the possibility of direct military conflicts, the undemarcated border between FYROM and FRY, and tensions along the Albania-FRY border, the peace and stability of the neighbouring countries, including FYROM, could be endangered. Consequently, if UNPREDEP were terminated on 31 August, as decided by the Security Council in resolution 1142(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 346], a security gap would arise, not only along FYROM's northern and western borders but also in the wider region. FYROM therefore requested an extension of UNPREDEP's mandate beyond 31 August, and asked that consideration be given to strengthening the military component, which currently stood at 750, if the situation in Kosovo deteriorated further.

Reports of Secretary-General. In a June report [S/1998/454 & Corr.1] on UNPREDEP, the Secretary-General said that there was growing concern over developments in Kosovo and their potential impact on peace and stability in the region, notably in the countries bordering that province. The bilateral relations between FYROM and its neighbours remained unchanged, although a better understanding and cooperation had developed between FYROM and Albania as a result of the signing of a number of agreements on mutual cooperation and the exchange of official visits. The assurances of Albania's Prime Minister, Fatos Nano, that Albania would not support policies of radicalism and conflict were an important contribution in that regard. Direct collaborative ventures with Greece were steadily advancing, but relations with Bulgaria continued to be affected by the unresolved dispute over the language issue. The first round-table meeting of intellectuals from the two countries, initiated by the non-governmental community, was held in April. The demarcation of the border between FYROM and FRY remained unresolved. Protracted discussions in the Joint Border Commission led to intensified patrolling by both parties in some of the disputed border areas, placing an additional burden on UN peacekeepers. The Commission resumed its deliberations in May, after an eight-month suspension, but made no further progress in the resolution of the problem, which seemed to have become hostage to extraneous political considerations.

On the FYROM political scene, several positive developments were conducive to improved inter-ethnic relations in the country. The inter-party dialogue, held under the auspices of the President of FYROM, continued with a third political summit (2-3 April) devoted to inter-ethnic relations, which, although it failed to agree on a joint statement, was conducted in a spirit of tolerance. Also, the Constitutional Court concluded that the statutes of the two ethnic Albanian parties (the Party for Democratic Prosperity of Albanians (PDPA) and the National Democratic Party (NDP)) seeking to merge with the Democratic Party of Albanians (DPA) were not contrary to the Constitution. The process of internal reforms was enhanced also by the adoption of the electoral law for national elections to be held in late 1998. On the other hand, the human rights situation was criticized by reputable non-governmental organizations (NGOs), and opposition parties and independent media objected to the procedures for the distribution of radio and television frequencies and to the allocation of funds to support the print media. The imprisonment of the ethnic Albanian Mayor of Gostivar, Rumi Osmani, although all means of appeal had not been exhausted, sparked protest marches by DPA, which also withdrew or suspended its mayors, municipal councillors and members of Parliament from State structures. A UN request to visit Mr. Osmani in prison was denied by the authorities. Following the publication in March 1998 of the report on the 1997 police action in Gostivar [YUN 1997, p. 344], the National Assembly obligated the Government to report by 31 May on action taken to improve the ethnic structure of the police force, to enhance its human rights training of the police and to effect disciplinary measures against officers who had exceeded their authority in Gostivar.

A consultative meeting (Skopje, 10-12 March) of the 22 entities of the UN system on their activities in FYROM agreed on a programme of action for a consolidated approach to developmental issues in the country.

The Secretary-General observed that peace and stability in FYROM continued to depend largely on developments in other parts of the region. The situation in Kosovo (see below) highlighted the danger of renewed violence in the area and the serious repercussions it could have on the external and internal security of the country. Moreover, continuing uncertainties in the region might exacerbate domestic problems within FYROM, particularly those relating to inter-ethnic relations.

UNPREDEP's presence had so far contributed successfully to preventing the spillover of conflicts elsewhere in the region to FYROM and to generating dialogue among the various political forces and ethnic communities in the country and continued to have a stabilizing effect. During the past few months, the confidence inspired by its presence was particularly important in defusing tensions that could have arisen as a result of the crisis in Kosovo. The outcome of discussions on the possible need for an expanded international military presence in the region as a consequence of the situation in Kosovo and consultations on the establishment of a comprehensive regime to monitor the implementation of the prohibitions imposed on FRY by Security Council resolution 1160(1998) (see below) might well have implications for FYROM and, therefore, also on UNPREDEP. In the meantime, the Secretary-General felt it premature to proceed with the decision to withdraw UNPREDEP after 31 August 1998. He recommended that the Council extend UNPREDEP's mandate for a further period of six months, until 28 February 1999. Due to the Kosovo situation, he intended to submit, by 15 July, specific proposals on a possible strengthening of the Force's overall capacity.

On 9 July [S/1998/627], FYROM reiterated its recommendation for an extension of UNPREDEP's mandate beyond 31 August and endorsed the Secretary-General's proposal to increase its military component.

In a July report [S/1998/644] on UNPREDEP, the Secretary-General said that consultations were continuing at the international level on the possible need for an expanded international military presence in the FYROM region and on the establishment of a comprehensive monitoring regime as a result of the Kosovo situation.

The Secretary-General proposed increasing UNPREDEP's troop strength by 350 all ranks, of which 230 would be deployed at nine new permanently manned observation posts along the Kosovo and Albanian borders to monitor and report on developments in those areas, including developments relating to implementation of resolution 1160(1998) imposing sanctions on FRY. Two reserve platoons of 60 soldiers would perform limited ground and air patrolling duties, supplemented by a 35-man medical unit and three helicopters to enable the Force to respond promptly to emergencies involving UNPREDEP personnel. The Secretary-General also proposed increasing the strength of the military observer and civilian police elements by an additional 12 and 24 personnel, respectively.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 July [meeting 3911], the Security Council adopted resolution 1186(1998) unanimously. The draft [S/1998/668] was sponsored by France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Portugal, the Russian Federation, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions concerning the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, in particular resolution 795(1992) of 11 December 1992, in which it addressed possible developments which could undermine confidence and stability in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia or threaten its territory, and resolution 1142(1997) of 4 December 1997,

Recalling also its resolutions 1101(1997) of 28 March 1997 and 1114(1997) of 19 June 1997, in which it expressed its concern over the situation in Albania, and its resolution 1160(1998) of 31 March 1998, in which it decided that all States shall prevent the sale or supply to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, including Kosovo, of arms and related materiel of all types and shall prevent arming and training for terrorist activities there,

Reiterating its appreciation for the important role played by the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force in contributing to the maintenance of peace and stability, and paying tribute to its personnel in the performance of their mandate,

Commending the role of the Force in monitoring the border areas and reporting to the Secretary-General on any developments which could pose a threat to the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and by its presence deterring threats and preventing clashes, including monitoring and reporting on illicit arms flows within its area of responsibility,

Reiterating its call on the Governments of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to implement in full their agreement of 8 April 1996, in particular regarding the demarcation of their mutual border,

Taking note of the letters dated 15 May and 9 July 1998 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia to the Secretary-General, requesting the extension of the mandate of the Force and endorsing the option of an increase in its troop strength,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General of 1 June and 14 July 1998 and the recommendations contained therein,

Reaffirming its commitment to the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia,

1. Decides to authorize an increase in the troop strength of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force up to 1,050 and to extend the current mandate of the Force for a period of six months until 28 February 1999, under which the Force would continue by its presence to deter threats and prevent clashes, to monitor the border areas, and to report to the Secretary-General any developments which could pose a threat to the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, including the tasks of monitoring and reporting on illicit arms flows and other activities that are prohibited under resolution 1160(1998);

2. Expresses its intention to consider further the recommendations of the Secretary-General in his report of 14 July 1998;

3. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

In a later report [S/1999/161], the Secretary-General stated that the third parliamentary elections were held in FYROM in October and November. They were monitored by international observers from the OSCE Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe and international NGOs, all of whom assessed the overall electoral process to be well conducted and in accordance with OSCE and Council of Europe standards. The elections were held in a peaceful atmosphere, resulting in a change of Government. The new Government represented a coalition of three parties, including the ethnic Albanian coalition PDPA/NDP. The new Prime Minister, Ljubco Georgievski, in his policy statement before assuming office, said that the formation of a new inclusive Government was a demonstration of his Government's commitment to the fostering and development of inter-ethnic relations.

Financing of UNPREDEP

In January, the General Assembly had before it the financial performance report [A/52/768] of UNPREDEP for the period 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, which showed an unencumbered balance of $1,264,400 gross ($560,300 net). That surplus resulted from lower deployment of civilian staff, availability of supplies from United Nations Peace Forces headquarters and a greater reliance on the UN-owned communications network. The Assembly also considered cost estimates [A/52/805] for the maintenance of UNPREDEP, amounting to $15,713,200 gross ($15,491,900 net) for the period 1 July to 31 August 1998, and for its liquidation thereafter in the amount of $6,600,900 gross ($6,348,700 net), and the comments of ACABQ on the two reports [A/52/860/Add.1].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (June)

On 26 June [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/941], adopted resolution 52/245 without vote [agenda item 140].

Financing of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 983(1995) of 31 March 1995, by which the Council decided that the United Nations Protection Force within the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia should be known as the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force, and 1142(1997) of 4 December 1997, by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force for a final period, until 31 August 1998,

Recalling also its decision 50/481 of 11 April 1996 on the financing of the Force and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 51/154 B of 13 June 1997,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Force are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Force, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Force by certain Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force as at 15 May 1998, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 11.3 million United States dollars, representing 9 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Force to the period ending 30 June 1998, notes that some 20 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Force in full and on time;

5. Takes note of the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Decides to examine the recommendation of the Advisory Committee for 5 per cent across-the-board reductions of the budget proposals of the Secretary-

General in the light of the next series of relevant financial performance reports;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Force is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to employ locally recruited staff for the Force against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Force;

9. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force the amount of 21,053,745 dollars gross (20,580,245 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Force for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, inclusive of the amount of 1,053,745 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations, to be apportioned, as an ad hoc arrangement, among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1998 and 1999, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997;

10. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 473,500 dollars approved for the Force for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999;

11. Decides further that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Force, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 1,264,400 dollars gross (560,300 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 1997;

12. Decides that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Force, their share of the unencumbered balance of 1,264,400 dollars gross (560,300 dollars net) for the period ending 30 June 1997 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

13. Invites voluntary contributions to the Force in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force".

In September, the Secretary-General submitted revised estimates [A/53/437] for the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, amounting to $34,438,800 gross ($33,609,600 net), to maintain an increased troop strength of up to 1,050, as authorized by the Security Council in resolution 1186(1998).

ACABQ, in October [A/53/481], recommended that the Assembly appropriate $29 million gross for a total amount of $50 million gross for UNPREDEP for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (November)

On 2 November [meeting 50], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/546], adopted resolution 53/20 A without vote [agenda item 140].

Financing of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 983(1995) of 31 March 1995, by which the Council decided that the United Nations Protection Force within the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia should be known as the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force, and 1186(1998) of 21 July 1998, by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force until 28 February 1999,

Recalling also its decision 50/481 of 11 April 1996 on the financing of the Force and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 52/245 of 26 June 1998,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Force are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Force, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Force by certain Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force as at 15 October 1998, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 22.7 million United States dollars, representing 19 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Force to the period ending 30 June 1999, notes that some 19 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Force in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Force is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to employ locally recruited staff for the Force against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Force;

8. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force the amount of 29 million dollars gross (28,170,800 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Force for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, in addition to the amount of 21,053,745 dollars gross (20,580,245 dollars net) already appropriated under the provisions of its resolution 52/245;

9. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, and taking into account the amount of 21,053,745 dollars gross (20,580,245 dollars net) already apportioned in accordance with its resolution 52/245, to apportion the additional amount of 12,315,418 dollars gross (11,920,452 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 1998 to 28 February 1999 among Member States, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1998 and 1999, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997;

10. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 394,966 dollars approved for the Force for the period from 1 July 1998 to 28 February 1999;

11. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion, among Member States, the amount of 16,684,582 dollars gross (16,250,348 dollars net) for the period from 1

March to 30 June 1999 at a monthly rate of 4,171,145.50 dollars gross (4,062,587 dollars net), in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution and taking into account the scale of assessments for 1999, as set out in resolution 52/215 A, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Force beyond 28 February 1999;

12. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 11 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 434,234 dollars approved for the Force for the period from 1 March to 30 June 1999;

13. Invites voluntary contributions to the Force in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

14. Decides to keep under review during its fifty-third session the agenda item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force".

On 18 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the item on the financing of UNPREDEP at its resumed fifty-third (1999) session (decision 53/458).

Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY)

In 1998, the scope and intensity of the conflict in Kosovo, the southern province of the Republic of Serbia in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), grew dramatically, resulting in extensive loss of life, destruction of property, a massive exodus of refugees, many displaced persons, serious human rights violations and a potential humanitarian catastrophe.

Since 1992, the international community had been paying close attention to the situation in Kosovo, particularly the human rights situation. Under the auspices of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, established in 1992 to oversee a final settlement of the problems in that region, FRY had accepted the mission of the Council for Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE) (later the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE)) in Kosovo, Sandjak and Vojvodina to promote dialogue between the authorities and communities in the three regions, collect information on human rights violations and promote solutions to such problems. Following its suspension from CSCE in 1992, FRY withdrew its cooperation with the mission.

However, the United Nations, through the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Special Rapporteur for the former Yugoslavia, continued to monitor human rights violations in the former Yugoslavia, including Kosovo. In resolution 48/153 [YUN 1993, p. 947], the General Assembly had condemned FRY's violation of the human rights of ethnic Albanians in Kosovo and urged it to end those violations, re-establish democratic institutions and resume dialogue. Two years later, in resolution 50/190 [YUN 1995, p. 816], the Assembly had requested the Secretary-General and relevant regional organizations to establish an international monitoring presence in Kosovo. That request was repeated in resolutions 51/111 [YUN 1996, p. 715] and 52/139 [YUN 1997, p. 743].

During 1998, international efforts, through the Contact Group on the Former Yugoslavia, OSCE and the United Nations, were directed towards bringing the parties together with a view to resolving the conflict. FRY and the Republic of Serbia claimed that their actions in Kosovo were to combat terrorism by Albanian national separatists and to preserve the country's sovereignty and territorial integrity. Fighting between Serbian forces and the Kosovo Liberation Army increased and all attempts to get the two sides to resume talks failed. As the situation deteriorated, the Security Council, in March, imposed an arms embargo on FRY, and the OSCE countries and Japan applied economic sanctions, including the freezing of assets and a ban on new investments. In September, the Council demanded that both sides cease hostilities and maintain a ceasefire and called on them to enter immediately into a meaningful dialogue without preconditions and with international involvement. The situation stabilized in October following the agreement between FRY President Slobodan Milosevic and United States Special Representative Richard Holbrooke on modalities for ending the conflict. At the same time, OSCE and NATO signed agreements with FRY for the establishment of a Verification Mission to oversee compliance by FRY with its undertakings and commitments. That permitted the return of refugees and displaced persons and some restoration of normal life. However, by the end of the year, there was new evidence of a resurgence of violence on both sides and significant violations of the ceasefire. With OSCE becoming the lead political organization dealing with the Kosovo crisis, the Secretary-General said that the UN role in Kosovo would focus on humanitarian (see PART THREE, Chapter III) and human rights (see PART TWO, Chapter III) issues.

Situation in Kosovo

Communication. On 4 March [S/1998/193], Albania requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to discuss measures needed to prevent a new tragedy in Kosovo and the region. It informed the Council that it had requested the immediate intervention of the Contact Group on the Former Yugoslavia (see below) to resolve the crisis.

Albania explained that it was compelled to write to the Council President because of the latest bloody incidents in Kosovo, where many Albanians were massacred by Serbian police and military forces. It recalled that the international community had long since denounced the State-sponsored violence and had requested the Government in Belgrade to restore basic human rights and freedoms in Kosovo. Albania joined the opinion of the international community that a stable solution to the problem of Kosovo could be achieved only through peaceful means, within the framework of a civilized dialogue between Belgrade and Pristina.

Contact Group meeting (9 March). The Contact Group, established in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 553] by the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, comprised France, Germany, Italy, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States. On 9 March, in London [S/1998/223], the Foreign Ministers of the Contact Group countries discussed the increasingly tense situation in Kosovo and the unacceptable use of force. Noting the recent violence that had resulted in at least 80 fatalities, the Group condemned the use of excessive force by Serbian police against civilians and against peaceful demonstrators in Pristina on 2 March, and the large-scale police actions of the previous 10 days. It said that the violent repression of non-violent expression of political views was completely indefensible and called on the Belgrade authorities to invite independent forensic experts to investigate allegations of extrajudicial killings and to prosecute and punish those responsible.

The Contact Group requested a mission to Kosovo by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights; urged the Office of the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY) to begin gathering information related to the violence in Kosovo that might fall within its jurisdiction; supported the proposal for a new mission by Felipe Gonzalez, the Personal Representative of the OSCE Chairman-in-Office for FRY, that would include a new and specific mandate for addressing the problems in Kosovo; supported the return of the OSCE long-term missions to Kosovo, Sandjak and Vojvodina; and recommended that the special session of the OSCE Permanent Council (see below) arrange for embassies in Belgrade of OSCE participating States to intensify their visits to Kosovo to provide for a continuous presence. The Group said that it would continue to support efforts to secure implementation of the Education Agreement and to identify resources to assist a fair and acceptable arrangement. It proposed the establishment of an international consortium, including NGOs, to promote the building of a civil society in Kosovo and the distribution of humanitarian assistance, and agreed to hold an urgent meeting of the Contact Group with Governments in the region to discuss the grave consequences of the inter-ethnic conflict and its possible spillover to other parts of the region. The meeting would also consider the possible dispatch of a short-term OSCE monitoring group to enhance the ability of the Albania mission's Shkoder field office to monitor the FRY (Kosovo) border and the strengthening of the OSCE mission in Skopje, the capital of FYROM.

The Group recommended adapting the mandate of UNPREDEP in FYROM (see above), and supported the maintenance of an international military presence on the ground there when UNPREDEP's mandate expired. It would monitor the situation in Kosovo by frequent joint visits to Pristina by Contact Group and other representatives.

The Group endorsed consideration by the Security Council of a comprehensive arms embargo against FRY, including Kosovo; refusal to supply it with equipment that might be used for internal repression or terrorism; denial of visas for senior FRY and Serbian representatives responsible for repressive action by FRY security forces in Kosovo; and a moratorium on government-financed export credit support for trade and investment, including government financing for privatizations, in Serbia.

The Group called on President Milosevic to stop the violence and engage in a commitment to find a political solution to the issue of Kosovo through dialogue. Specifically, he should within 10 days: withdraw the special police units and cease action by the security forces affecting the civilian population; allow access to Kosovo by ICRC and other humanitarian organizations, as well as by representatives of the Contact Group and other embassies; commit himself publicly to begin a dialogue with the leadership of the Kosovar Albanian community; and cooperate with the Contact Group.

The Group warned that failure by President Milosevic to take those steps would result in further international measures, specifically a freeze on funds held abroad by the FRY and Serbian Governments.

The Group supported an enhanced status for Kosovo within FRY, which a substantially greater degree of autonomy would bring, including meaningful self-administration, and indicated its readiness to facilitate a dialogue between the authorities in Belgrade and the Kosovar Albanian community.

Further communications. The Republic of Serbia, FRY, in a 10 March statement [A/53/81-S/1998/225], said that the recent activities of its Ministry of the Interior in Kosovo and Metohija were carried out exclusively to combat terrorism, which had escalated. Serbia condemned the terrorism of the Albanian separatists in Kosovo and Metohija and confirmed its readiness to ensure the rule of law in those two regions and full equality and life in peace and security for all citizens, regardless of nationality. It made a clear distinction between terrorists, on the one hand, and the members of the Albanian national minority on the other, and called on responsible representatives of that minority to dissociate themselves from terrorism and join in its universal condemnation.

Serbia invited an ICRC expert group to visit Kosovo and Metohija to verify, in cooperation with the Yugoslav Red Cross, the rumours circulating in some media. It was open to having all questions related to civil and human rights and faster economic and cultural development resolved through dialogue and by open political means, and invited responsible members of the Albanian national minority to embark on such a dialogue.

On 10 March [A/53/84-S/1998/234], the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of countries of south-eastern Europe met in Sofia, Bulgaria, and, in a joint declaration, called on the Serb authorities and the ethnic Albanians to initiate a genuine dialogue and to condemn and refrain from the use of violence as a means of resolving their conflict. They called on all ethnic Albanian organizations to deny any secessionist policies and respect FRY's territorial integrity. FRY was called on to enable the return of the international monitors to Kosovo as a means of preventive diplomacy.

