Recalling Security Council resolutions 983(1995) of 31 March 1995, by which the Council decided that the United Nations Protection Force within the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia should be known as the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force, and 1186(1998) of 21 July 1998, by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force until 28 February 1999,

Recalling also its decision 50/481 of 11 April 1996 on the financing of the Force and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 53/20 A of 2 November 1998,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Force are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Force, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Force by certain Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to meet its outstanding liabilities,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force as at 30 April 1999, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 12.2 million United States dollars, representing 8.2 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Force to the period ending 28 February 1999, notes that some 26 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Force in full and on time;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the liquidation of the Force is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Decides to reduce the appropriation provided by the General Assembly in its resolutions 52/245 of 26 June 1998 and 53/20 A in the amount of 50,053,745 dollars gross (48,751,045 dollars net), inclusive of the amount of 1,053,745 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations, for the maintenance of the Force in respect of the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, to the amount of 43,062,700 dollars gross (42,004,600 dollars net), inclusive of the amount of 1,053,745 dollars for the support account;

8. Decides also as an ad hoc arrangement, and taking into account the amount of 21,053,745 dollars gross (20,580,245 dollars net) already apportioned in accordance with its resolution 52/245 and the amount of 12,315,418 dollars gross (11,920,452 dollars net) apportioned in accordance with its resolution 53/20 A, to apportion among Member States the additional amount of 9,693,537 dollars gross (9,503,903 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1998 and 1999, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997;

9. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 8 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated additional staff assessment income of 189,634 dollars approved for the Force for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999;

10. Decides that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Force, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 8 above, their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 6,895,700 dollars gross (6,310,400 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 1998;

U. Decides also that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Force, their share of the unencumbered balance of 6,895,700 dollars gross (6,310,400 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 1998 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force".

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item on the financing of UNPREDEP would remain for consideration at the resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session (decision 54/465), and that the item would be considered by the Fifth Committee at that session (decision 54/462 A).

Relations with Greece

In connection with FYROM's relations with Greece, the Secretary-General, in an exchange of letters [S/1999/1286, S/1999/1287], informed the Security Council of his intention to appoint Matthew Nimetz (United States) as his Personal Envoy, to replace Cyrus Vance who had resigned for personal reasons. The Secretary-General also reported that, pursuant to Council resolution 845(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 209], negotiations continued between the two countries concerning the differences between them, particularly the name-related dispute, the most recent meeting having been held on 6 December.

Georgia

Despite the continued efforts of the Secretary-General's Special Representative, of the Russian Federation and of the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General (France, Germany, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States), which led to positive developments on some issues, the Abkhaz/Georgian peace process remained at an impasse in 1999.

In April, in an attempt to reinvigorate the peace process, the Council of Heads of State of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) had adopted and signed a draft agreement on peace and guarantees for the prevention of armed confrontation and a draft protocol on refugee return and economic rehabilitation. However, those measures remained largely unimplemented. Meanwhile, the Secretary-General's Special Representative convened a meeting on confidence-building measures in Turkey in July, which provided a forum for the development of direct bilateral ties at several levels and the elaboration of projects for cooperation in a variety of fields. That meeting also resulted in the revival of the Working Groups of the Coordinating Council. Those efforts continued to be supported by the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia. The peace process was complicated by the holding of elections during the year. On 3 October, the Abkhaz side held "presidential elections" and a referendum on the Abkhaz "constitution". On 12 October, the Abkhaz de facto parliament adopted the "Act on State Independence of the Republic of Abkhazia". The Security Council condemned the elections as unacceptable and illegitimate. Georgia also held parliamentary elections on 31 October, except for the district of Abkhazia, whose parliamentarians retained their seats.

During the year, the security situation improved, in particular the reduction of tension along the line of separation of forces. However, the security forces of both sides remained unable to combat the criminal and terrorist elements operating in the area, particularly in the lower Gali region.

UN Observer Mission in Georgia

The United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG), established by Security Council resolution 858(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 509], continued to monitor and verify compliance with the 1994 Agreement on a Ceasefire and Separation of Forces [YUN 1994, p. 583] and to fulfil other tasks as mandated by resolution 937(1994) [ibid., p. 584]. The Mission operated in close collaboration with the CIS collective peacekeeping force that had been in the zone of conflict, at the request of the parties, since 1994 [ibid., p. 583]. The Council extended the Mission's mandate twice during the year, the first time until 31 July 1999 and the second until 31 January 2000.

UNOMIG's main headquarters was located in Sukhumi (Abkhazia, Georgia), with administrative headquarters in Pitsunda, a liaison office in the Georgian capital of Tbilisi and team bases and a sector headquarters in each of the Gali and Zugdidi sectors. A team base in the Kodori Valley was manned by observers operating from Sukhumi. UNOMIG, as at October 1999, had a strength of 101 military officers.

The Mission was headed by Liviu Bota (Romania), who was also the Secretary-General's Special Representative. He was succeeded on 24 November by Dieter Boden (Germany) [S/1999/1079, S/1999/1080]. Major-General Tariq Waseem Ghazi (Pakistan) concluded his tour of duty as UNOMIG's Chief Military Observer on 31 December 1999 and was succeeded by Major-General Anis Ahmed Bajwa (Pakistan).

Activities

Report of Secretary-General (January). The Secretary-General, in response to resolution 1187(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 397], submitted a January report [S/1999/60] on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, including UNOMIG's operations. He observed that, while the political process towards a settlement had been slow, and at times seemed to be almost blocked, UNOMIG continued to contribute to a lessening of tensions, preventing an exacerbation of potentially serious incidents and providing a climate in which substantive political negotiations could take place. The measures taken by UNOMIG had enabled its military observers to conduct limited patrolling without serious security incidents during the past three months. Should that situation continue, and in view of the deployment of internationally recruited security personnel and the arrival of ballistic-protected vehicles, a return to the patrolling patterns in effect before February 1998 might reasonably be contemplated in the coming months. For that to happen, however, the two sides in the conflict would have to take substantive and tangible measures to curb criminal and terrorist activities.

The recent intensification of the peace process, the establishment of negotiation mechanisms and implementation of UNOMIG's mandate, together with the exercise of local good offices, highlighted the need for strengthening the Mission's civilian component, particularly in political and civil affairs and public information. An additional modest civil affairs capacity would allow UNOMIG to maintain better liaison with humanitarian agencies and NGOs. Public information activities were needed to promote a better understanding of UNOMIG's mandate and activities by the parties and within the population in the various sectors, as well as to provide impartial information for the better performance of the Mission and the advancement of the peace process. Those requirements were currently under review. The Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council extend UNOMIG's mandate until 31 July.

Communication. Georgia's President, Eduard Shevardnadze, said on 22 January [S/1999/71] that it was clear that the Abkhaz separatist regime was carrying out a well-planned obstruction of every peace initiative, creating insurmountable obstacles to the elaboration of documents to define measures for the return of refugees, the maintenance of peace and the region's economic rehabilitation, and preventing the holding of a meeting for the signing of those documents. The current situation demanded decisive steps: starting the process of return of refugees and displaced persons, with guaranteed security conditions; and definition of their international status. Georgia attached special importance to the 1998 meeting of the parties in Athens, Greece [YUN 1998, p. 400], and would actively support the development of that initiative. The development and promotion of UNOMIG's human rights activities could play an important role in establishing tolerance between the parties. Georgia hoped the Security Council would strengthen the Mission's joint investigative groups, which should define the direction of its investigative and political activities. Georgia was concerned about attacks on CIS peacekeepers and the damage they caused to the peace process. It was confident that, with the help of the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General, a plan of action could be worked out, but the international community should be aware of the consequences of the escalation of the conflict and that the elimination of that hotbed in the Caucasus required consideration of the use of force.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 January [meeting 3972], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1225(1999). The draft [S/1999/79] was submitted by France, Germany, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, in particular resolution 1187(1998) of 30 July 1998, and the statement by its President of 25 November 1998,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 20 January 1999,

Noting the letter dated 22 January 1999 from the President of Georgia to the President of the Security Council,

Deeply concerned at the continuing tense and unstable situation in the conflict zone and at the risk of resumed fighting,

Deeply concerned also at the continued deadlock in achieving a comprehensive settlement of the conflict in Abkhazia, Georgia,

Welcoming, in this context, the contribution that the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia and the collective peacekeeping force of the Commonwealth of Independent States have made to stabilizing the situation in the zone of conflict, noting that the working relationship between the Mission and the collective peacekeeping force has been good at all levels, and stressing the importance of continued close cooperation and coordination between them in the performance of their respective mandates,

Recalling the conclusions of the Lisbon summit of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe regarding the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia,

Reaffirming the necessity for the parties strictly to respect human rights, expressing its support for the efforts of the Secretary-General to find ways to improve their observance as an integral part of the work towards a comprehensive political settlement, and noting developments in the work of the United Nations Human Rights Office in Abkhazia, Georgia,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 20 January 1999;

2. Expresses its concern at the failure of the parties to conclude, after bilateral contacts and the Athens meeting of 16 to 18 October 1998 on confidence-building measures, agreements on security and the non-use of force, the return of refugees and displaced persons and economic reconstruction, and urges the parties to resume bilateral negotiations to this end;

3. Demands that both sides widen their commitment to the United Nations-led peace process, continue to seek and engage in dialogue, expand their contacts at all levels and display without delay the necessary will to achieve substantial results on the key issues of the negotiations, and underlines the necessity for the parties to achieve an early and comprehensive political settlement, which includes a settlement on the political status of Abkhazia within the State of Georgia, which fully respects the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia within its internationally recognized borders;

4. Emphasizes, in this context, that the readiness and ability of the international community to assist the parties depend on their political will to resolve the conflict through dialogue and mutual accommodation and on their acting in good faith to implement promptly concrete measures towards bringing about a comprehensive political settlement of the conflict;

5. Strongly supports the sustained efforts made by the Secretary-General and his Special Representative with the assistance of the Russian Federation, in its capacity as facilitator, as well as of the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, to prevent hostilities and to give a new impetus to the negotiations within the United Nations-led peace process in order to achieve a comprehensive political settlement, and welcomes, in this context, the intention of the Secretary-General to propose a strengthening of the civilian component of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia;

6. Demands that both sides observe strictly the Agreement on a Ceasefire and Separation of Forces, signed in Moscow on 14 May 1994, and all their obligations to refrain from the use of force and to resolve disputed issues by peaceful means only, and calls upon them to display greater resolve and willingness to make the Joint Investigation Group functional;

7. Expresses its continuing concern at the situation of refugees and displaced persons, resulting most recently from the hostilities of May 1998, reaffirms the unacceptability of the demographic changes resulting from the conflict and the imprescriptible right of all refugees and displaced persons affected by the conflict to return to their homes in secure conditions in accordance with international law and as set out in the Quadripartite Agreement on the Voluntary Return of Refugees and Displaced Persons, of 4 April 1994, and calls upon the parties to address this issue urgently by agreeing and implementing effective measures to guarantee the security of those who exercise their unconditional right to return;

8. Welcomes, in this context, the efforts of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General to facilitate, as a first step, the safe return of refugees and displaced persons to the Gali region, and calls upon the parties to resume and intensify their bilateral dialogue to this end;

9. Condemns the activities by armed groups, including the continued laying of mines, which endanger the civilian population, impede the work of the humanitarian organizations and seriously delay the normalization of the situation in the Gali region, and deplores the lack of serious efforts by the parties to bring an end to those activities;

10. Reiterates its demand that both sides take immediate and determined measures to put a stop to such acts and ensure that the security environment of all international personnel improves significantly, and welcomes the first steps taken in this regard;

11. Reiterates its deep concern regarding the security of the Mission, welcomes the implementation of measures in this regard, and requests the Secretary-General to keep the security of the Mission under constant review;

12. Decides to extend the mandate of the Mission for a new period terminating on 31 July 1999, subject to a review by the Council of the mandate of the Mission in the event of any changes that may be made in the mandate or in the presence of the collective peacekeeping force of the Commonwealth of Independent States;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep the Council regularly informed and to report after three months from the date of the adoption of the present resolution on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia;

14. Expresses its intention to conduct a thorough review of the operation at the end of its current mandate, in the light of steps taken by the parties to achieve a comprehensive settlement;

15. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

On 19 February [S/1999/189], the Supreme Council of Abkhazia, Georgia, protested the participation of the delegation of the self-proclaimed "Republic of Abkhazia", headed by Vladislav Ardzinba, at the meeting of the Association for the Social and Economic Cooperation of the Republics and Regions of the North Caucasus (5-7 February), under the chairmanship of the Russian Federation's Deputy Prime Minister. The Supreme Council also demanded that the Russian Federation end the exercise of its jurisdiction in Georgia's territory occupied by the separatist regime.

Report of Secretary-General (April). The Secretary-General reported in April [S/1999/460] that his Special Representative, the Russian Federation and the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General had made a concerted effort to achieve an agreement on the return of refugees to the Gali district in its old boundaries and on Abkhazia's economic rehabilitation. On 12 January, the Special Representative and the Abkhaz leader, Mr. Ardzinba, discussed terms for the return of refugees and displaced persons to the Gali district and agreed on the extent of participation by returnees in the Gali district's local law enforcement organs; the role and deployment of the CIS peacekeeping force; normalization of the customs and border regime at the Psou River, including transportation; and that Mr. Ardzinba would formally outline those agreements to the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General. However, during a meeting on 23 January with the Special Representative and the Group of Friends, Mr. Ardzinba presented different proposals. On 27 January, the Friends of the Secretary-General expressed disappointment that an opportunity to take the first important step forward in the negotiation process had been lost.

The seventh session of the Coordinating Council of the Georgian and Abkhaz sides (Tbilisi, 11 February) discussed issues relating to the lasting non-resumption of hostilities and security problems, refugees and internally displaced persons, and economic and social problems. The Council decided that a meeting of the two sides, UNOMIG and the CIS peacekeeping force would be convened within two weeks to develop a mechanism for the Joint Investigation Group (see below); together, they would elaborate and implement measures for the non-resumption of hostilities, prevention of confrontation and separation of forces. Representatives of the force structures of the two sides would examine any information that could lead to a renewal of hostilities, and bilateral negotiations on a mechanism for the return of refugees and displaced persons to the Gali district should continue. The respective commissions of the two sides would report to the Council at its next session concerning missing-in-action cases from the 1992-1993 conflict [YUN 1993, p. 506]. Subsequently, active mediation efforts on the return of refugees to the Gali district led to agreement in principle on formulations for two of those issues. However, on 1 March, the Abkhaz side unilaterally began implementation of a refugee return programme to the Gali district, including registration of returnees. Because of lack of safety and security guarantees, the initiative elicited numerous reservations from the international community and the Georgian side. It was also feared that, because it would be implemented in a security vacuum, the return programme could prove fertile ground for an escalation of tensions.

UNOMIG continued limited patrolling within the security and restricted weapon zones, facilitated meetings between local commanders and monitored progress on the ground. The establishment of the Joint Investigation Group (YUN 1998, p. 399), as a mechanism for investigating violations of the 1994 Moscow Agreement [YUN 1994, p. 583], was still under negotiation. UNOMIG's legal experts produced draft guidelines for the Group's functioning but both sides requested more time to study them. Meanwhile, UNOMIG continued to arrange and monitor ad hoc joint investigations of alleged violations of the Moscow Agreement and acts of terrorism. While that approach was possible for incidents along the ceasefire line, the parties, particularly the Abkhaz side, did not permit joint investigations in other areas.

The Secretary-General also reported that, while the general situation in the conflict zone remained tense and unstable, the situation along the ceasefire line had become relatively calm and exchanges of fire had considerably diminished. However, activities by armed groups, particularly in the lower Gali area, had not ceased and the Abkhaz militia continued to be targeted. Criminal activities also increased. The situation in the Kodori Valley remained calm; however, the Abkhaz side repeatedly accused Georgia of undertaking a military build-up in the area. The team base at Ajara in the upper Kodori Valley remained closed.

The security and safety of UNOMIG personnel continued to receive the highest priority and consideration. Cases of theft of UNOMIG property occurred, mostly in Sukhumi at premises guarded by Abkhaz authorities. UNOMIG was pursuing better security arrangements.

UNHCR continued to protect and monitor activities in the parts of the Gali district where security conditions permitted access. Since 1 March, the start of the Abkhaz unilateral refugee return initiative, several displaced persons had returned, primarily to Gali town and some areas in the upper part of the district. The beginning of the agricultural season was expected to bring more returnees to lower Gali, in particular to those areas where the Abkhaz militia had limited presence. In other parts of western Georgia, UNHCR, in cooperation with its implementing partners and local authorities, completed emergency shelter repairs and school rehabilitation projects. Together with projects in the health, water and sanitation sectors, that assistance helped to improve basic living conditions in communal centres for the majority of internally displaced persons. The UN Human Rights Office in Abkhazia started projects in human rights training and education for schools. The security conditions, especially in the Gali region, as well as the rising level of poverty among the population as a whole, were responsible for numerous cases of violations of basic human rights.

The Secretary-General observed that the failure to reach agreement in January on the return of refugees and displaced persons and on Abkhazia's economic rehabilitation meant that a valuable opportunity was missed to take a major step forward in the peace process. The time for bargaining over formulations had long since passed. Each side had to demonstrate the political will to conclude an agreement. Pending such an agreement, direct bilateral contacts between the parties should continue, not only at the level of the Coordinating Council, but also in economic projects and confidence-building measures. In addition to measures to stabilize the security environment, the full separation of forces from the ceasefire line and the establishment of a joint investigation mechanism would significantly help to improve the situation on the ground.

The Secretary-General later reported that the eighth session of the Coordinating Council (Sukhumi, 29 April) decided to reinvigorate the activities of its three working groups; to discuss further the draft "Protocol concerning a Joint Group for Establishment of Facts concerning Violations of the Moscow Agreement of 14 May 1994 and Terrorist and Subversive Acts"; to continue bilateral talks on the creation of security conditions for returning refugees and internally displaced persons; and to support the activities of the Joint/Bilateral Coordination Commission of the two sides.

CIS peace proposals

The CIS Council of Heads of State (Moscow, 2 April) [S/1999/392] adopted further measures to settle the conflict in Abkhazia, Georgia, including consultations on ways in which other CIS States might participate, together with the Russian Federation, in the CIS peacekeeping operation. The Council also decided that, within one month, the sides should finalize and sign the draft agreement on peace and guarantees for the prevention of armed confrontation and the draft protocol on the return of refugees to the Gali district and measures for economic rehabilitation. It confirmed the mandate of the CIS peacekeeping force until 2 April and agreed in principle to extend its stay for six months, or until one of the parties requested that it cease operations. Should they fail to reach agreement within the designated period, the Council would reconsider the force's continued presence in the zone of conflict. It urged the parties to resolve the question of the establishment of temporary transitional administrations and instructed the CIS Councils of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and of Defence to establish, before 1 July, a task force to ensure their coordinating role in the implementation of its decisions.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 7 May [meeting 3997], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/1999/11 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 21 April 1999 concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia.

The Council reiterates its demand that both sides widen their commitment to the United Nations-led peace process, continue to seek and engage in dialogue, expand their bilateral contacts and display without delay the necessary will to achieve substantial results on the key issues of the negotiations, and underlines the necessity for the parties to achieve an early and comprehensive political settlement, which includes a settlement on the political status of Abkhazia within the State of Georgia, which fully respects the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia within its internationally recognized borders.

The Council reaffirms the unacceptability of the demographic changes resulting from the conflict and the imprescriptible right of all refugees and displaced persons affected by the conflict to return to their homes in secure conditions, and calls upon the parties to address this issue urgently by agreeing and implementing effective measures to guarantee the security of those who exercise their unconditional right to return.

The Council welcomes in this context the decision of the Council of Heads of State of the Commonwealth of Independent States of 2 April 1999 on further measures to settle the conflict in Abkhazia, Georgia. The Council notes the conclusions of the eighth session of the Coordinating Council of the Georgian and Abkhaz sides held on 29 April 1999.

The Council expresses its deep concern at the failure of the parties to reach an agreement on the terms for the return of refugees and displaced persons to the Gali region and measures for economic rehabilitation. The Council stresses the need for them to conclude urgently such an agreement, which would make it possible for the international community to participate in this effort, as well as an agreement on peace and guarantees for the prevention of armed confrontation.

The Council welcomes the improvements in the security situation, but notes that the general situation in the conflict zone still remains tense and unstable.

The Council urges the parties to exercise great restraint in their responses to any incidents arising on the ground and to take concrete steps to improve their cooperation in this field. The Council demands that both sides take immediate and determined measures to put a stop to the activities by armed groups, including the continued laying of mines, and to establish a climate of confidence allowing refugees and displaced persons to return. The Council further demands that both sides ensure a full separation of forces from the ceasefire line, in accordance with the ceasefire protocol signed on 25 May 1998, and establish a joint investigation mechanism without further delay.

The Council welcomes the continued contribution that the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia and the collective peacekeeping force of the Commonwealth of Independent States have made to stabilizing the situation in the zone of conflict and notes that the working relationship between the Mission and the collective peacekeeping force has remained good.

The Council reaffirms the importance it attaches to the security of the Mission and of all international personnel and recalls the obligations of both sides in this regard. The Council welcomes the steps taken to enhance the operations and security of the Mission.

The Council strongly supports the sustained efforts made by the Secretary-General and his Special Representative with the assistance of the Russian Federation, in its capacity as facilitator, as well as of the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe to prevent hostilities, to protect human rights and to advance a settlement.

Report of Secretary-General (July). In July [S/1999/805], the Secretary-General reported that his Special Representative convened a meeting of the Georgian and Abkhaz sides on confidence-building measures (Istanbul, Turkey, 7-9 June), focusing primarily on the return of refugees and displaced persons and economic issues. Agreement was reached to hold a meeting within one week to address the exchange of hostages and detainees; work with UNOMIG's Chief Military Observer in the joint investigation of potentially destabilizing incidents in the zone of conflict; revive the working groups within the framework of the Coordinating Council, including the convening of all three groups within one week after the Istanbul meeting; facilitate implementation of the Protocol concerning the stabilization of the situation along the line of separation of forces [YUN 1998, p. 400]; develop cooperation at the local level, particularly in the economic area; organize meetings between political and social figures of the two sides; create mechanisms for the regular exchange of information; exchange information and carry out consultations among the law enforcement organs for the prevention of illegal acts; and arrange a meeting among representatives of the respective missing-in-action commissions within one month.

Subsequently, the Coordinating Council's Working Group I dealing with security matters met on 25 June, after one and half years of deadlock. The Working Group decided: to hold monthly meetings, starting in early August; that the number of law enforcement personnel on both sides would be brought in line with agreed levels; that all fortifications and positions along the line of separation would be dismantled by 10 July and no new positions would be occupied; and that the sides would propose by 10 July measures for the withdrawal of forces and redeployment to rear positions. UNOMIG intended to pursue implementation vigorously, despite the fact that the initial deadlines had not been kept. In connection with the meeting of Working Group I, the Abkhaz leader's Personal Representative to the peace process met separately with the Georgian State Minister to discuss issues related to the return of refugees and internally displaced persons, and a mechanism for joint investigation and the exchange of hostages and detainees. That meeting made some progress on those issues.

The Secretary-General said that the meetings on confidence-building measures, held in Athens [YUN 1998, p. 400] and in Istanbul (see above), were successful in providing a forum for the development of direct bilateral ties at several levels and the elaboration of cooperation projects in a variety of fields. On 25 June, UNOMIG facilitated the travel to Tbilisi by the director of an Abkhaz wine-producing firm, who reached preliminary agreements with his Georgian counterparts on plans for business cooperation. The Joint/Bilateral Coordination Commission for Practical Questions continued to be instrumental in fostering economic cooperation between the sides.

Meanwhile, preparatory work continued on the political status of Abkhazia, Georgia. The Special Representative was working with academic institutions to elaborate proposals on the distribution of constitutional competences between Tbilisi and Sukhumi, which would be submitted to the two sides for consideration after consultations with the Russian Federation, OSCE and the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General.

On 4 June, the CIS Council of Foreign Ministers reviewed implementation of the 2 April decision on further measures to settle the conflict (see p. 377) and noted that the timetable envisaged for steps to be taken in the peace process remained unimplemented and therefore the mandate of the CIS peacekeeping force had not been extended. The Council decided that the Russian Federation and the Georgian side should consult before 1 August on measures for implementing those decisions.

Substantial progress was made towards the setting up of a joint investigation mechanism for violations of the 1994 Moscow Agreement [YUN 1994, p. 583], resulting in the acceptance of a modified UNOMIG draft as a basis for negotiations. Only the provision concerning the scope of incidents to be investigated remained contentious. While the final agreement was being negotiated, UNOMIG had undertaken initiatives to involve representatives from all parties in joint investigations of several incidents of violence and alleged acts of terrorism on an ad hoc basis. That effort contributed to keeping the situation under control and, more importantly, to preventing wider escalation.

The situation along the ceasefire line improved considerably and exchanges of fire were reduced even more as a result of UNOMIG's success in separating the opposing forces further. Despite apprehensions and widespread rumours of an impending escalation, the anniversary of the events of May 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 394] passed without any major incident. On the other hand, terrorist activities by so-called "uncontrolled" partisan groups, particularly in the lower Gali area, had not ceased and the Abkhaz militia continued to be targeted. The Moscow Agreement was violated by random acts of deployment of prohibited weapons, mine incidents and denial of access to patrols. During the spring season, a higher movement of refugees to the Gali region was observed and many internally displaced persons had taken up semi-permanent residence. The Abkhaz unilateral initiative to facilitate the return of refugees and displaced persons to the Gali region had met a fair response from the displaced population and an increased number of returnees had used the opportunity to cultivate their lands. However, that was assessed as a temporary phenomenon as the lack of security guarantees and absence of a supporting infrastructure inhibited their move on a permanent basis. Access to the upper Kodori Valley remained impossible by road because of the destroyed bridge on the route from Sukhumi and the closure of the mountain pass along the route from Zugdidi. An exploratory patrol along the latter route was robbed at gunpoint on 10 May. The local authorities in the Georgian-controlled part of the valley expressed displeasure with UNOMIG's efforts to report and pursue the perpetrators through the Zugdidi police. The situation in the valley had been calm; however, UNOMIG's efforts to facilitate a meeting between Abkhaz and Georgian military leaders had met with resistance.

The Secretary-General observed that, while progress in the negotiations process aimed at the comprehensive settlement of the conflict continued to be difficult, contacts between the sides at all levels continued to grow. The recent improvements in the security situation along the line of separation of forces and the efforts of the sides to produce those improvements were noted, but the full separation of forces, in accordance with the Moscow Agreement and the September 1998 Protocol [YUN 1998, p. 400], remained to be accomplished. The Secretary-General called on the sides to take immediate steps to implement Working Group I decisions towards that end. He recommended that the Security Council extend UNOMIG's mandate until 31 January 2000.

Communications. On 19 July [S/1999/801], Georgia informed the Security Council President that the Abkhaz separatist authorities intended to hold so-called presidential elections in the autumn in Abkhazia, Georgia. Georgia said that, at a time when two thirds of the Abkhazia population were disenfranchised and expelled from the region, the holding of elections was illegitimate and attempted to establish the demographic changes resulting from the conflict and to obstruct the peace process. The holding of free and fair elections would become possible only after agreement had been reached on Abkhazia's political status. Georgia expected the United Nations, the Friends of the Secretary-General and international organizations to condemn any attempt to subvert the process of the comprehensive settlement of the conflict in Abkhazia.

The Georgian President, on the same day [S/1999/809], expressed support for the NATO and Russian operation in the FRY province of Kosovo (see p. 356) and attempted to draw a parallel between the Kosovo and Abkhaz situations. He said that, while the United Nations might not be able to carry out an operation in Georgia similar to the one in Kosovo, he believed that it should assume a more firm and uncompromising position towards the separatists who blatantly disregarded all of the Council's resolutions. The Council should warn the separatist regime that more drastic measures would be taken against them if they continued their non-compliance with its demands and condemn the so-called elections, at any level, in Abkhazia, until the process of the return of refugees and displaced persons was complete. The Council should consider, as a matter of urgency, the full resumption of UNOMIG's functions, including reinforcing the monitoring of the human rights situation. Georgia requested that the Secretary-General renew consultations on his proposals for the introduction of self-protection units [YUN 1998, p. 393], and believed that the time was ripe to begin consultations on giving UNOMIG police functions as well.

The conflict in Abkhazia also merited the Council's attention in the context of its 8 July debate on the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants in a peacekeeping environment, Georgia stated on 20 July [S/1999/806]. The continued availability of large amounts of armaments to the Abkhaz separatists had unleashed violence against returnees, claiming the lives of 1,500 people and displaying a consistent pattern of ethnic cleansing. The Abkhaz separatists were in possession of more than 124 units of heavy weaponry, as well as military aircraft, attack helicopters and military vessels, in violation of international treaties and Council resolutions. Georgia supported the commitment of Council members that all nations that exported arms and light weapons, or were involved in the traffic of those weapons, bore responsibility and that there was a need for concerted action to curb arms transfers to zones of conflict. It believed that presidential statement S/PRST/1999/21 (see p. 50) offered sound ground for bringing strict implementation of resolution 876(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 510] into the focus of the Council's forthcoming discussion on the situation in Abkhazia. Empowering UNOMIG to monitor arms transfers to Abkhazia could be one way to reinvigorate the process of the conflict settlement, which had been at an impasse for too long.

In that regard, Georgia, on 22 July [S/1999/813], submitted its basic principles for determining the status of Abkhazia within Georgia's new State structure. That status would be defined by the basic principles of the inviolability of Georgia's territorial integrity within the internationally recognized borders existing as at 21 December 1991, and of Abkhazia within the borders of the former Abkhaz Autonomous Republic as part of the Georgian Soviet Socialist Republic as at 21 December 1992; recognition of Abkhazia's right to exercise its competence within the federation as a component of the federal State of Georgia; and institutional incorporation, in the Constitutions of Abkhazia and Georgia, of the right of the Abkhaz people to develop their culture and long-standing traditions, and to integrate historical elements into the political and social life of the people, with full respect and guarantees for the human rights and freedoms of the entire multi-ethnic population of Abkhazia, and with the guarantee of active participation by its representatives in the work of the federal organs of power. Georgia also set out a number of specific principles and sovereign rights that the Republic of Abkhazia should enjoy.

Georgia also submitted to the Council President, on 22 July [S/1999/814], the text of President Shevardnadze's address to the International Conference-Seminar on the Policy of Genocide and Ethnic Cleansing in Abkhazia, Georgia: the Principal Weapon of Aggressive Separatism, together with the texts of the Conference's appeal to the Security Council and the world community, the statement of Georgia's Prosecutor General and statements by eyewitnesses of the Abkhaz tragedy.

On 30 July [meeting 4029], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1255(1999). The draft [S/1999/832] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, in particular resolution 1225(1999) of 28 January 1999, and the statement by its President of 7 May 1999,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 20 July 1999,

Taking note of the letter dated 19 July 1999 from the President of Georgia to the Secretary-General,

Stressing that, notwithstanding positive developments on some issues, the lack of progress on key issues of a comprehensive settlement of the conflict in Abkhazia, Georgia, is unacceptable,

Deeply concerned at the continuing volatile situation in the conflict zone, welcoming in this regard the important contributions that the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia and the collective peacekeeping force of the Commonwealth of Independent States continue to make in stabilizing the situation in the zone of conflict, noting that the working relationship between the Mission and the collective peacekeeping force has been good at all levels, and stressing the importance of continuing and increasing close co-operation and coordination between them in the performance of their respective mandates,

Recalling the conclusions of the Lisbon summit of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe regarding the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia,

Reaffirming the necessity for the parties strictly to respect human rights, and expressing its support for the efforts of the Secretary-General to find ways to improve their observance as an integral part of the work towards a comprehensive political settlement,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 20 July 1999;

2. Demands that the parties to the conflict widen and deepen their commitment to the United Nations-led peace process, continue to expand their dialogue and contacts at all levels and display without delay the necessary will to achieve substantial results on the key issues of the negotiations;

3. Strongly supports the sustained efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative with the assistance of the Russian Federation, in its capacity as facilitator, as well as of the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe to promote the stabilization of the situation and to give new impetus to the negotiations within the United Nations-led peace process in order to achieve a comprehensive political settlement, and commends the tireless efforts of the retiring Special Representative of the Secretary-General, Mr. Liviu Bota, in carrying out his mandate;

4. Emphasizes, in this context, that the readiness and ability of the international community to assist the parties depend on their political will to resolve the conflict through dialogue and mutual accommodation and on their acting in good faith to implement promptly concrete measures towards bringing about a comprehensive political settlement of the conflict;

5. Underlines the necessity for the parties to achieve an early and comprehensive political settlement, which includes a settlement on the political status of Abkhazia within the State of Georgia, which fully respects the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia within its internationally recognized borders, and supports the intention of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative, in close cooperation with the Russian Federation, in its capacity as facilitator, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General, to continue to submit proposals for the consideration of the parties on the distribution of constitutional competences between Tbilisi and Sukhumi as part of a comprehensive settlement;

6. Considers the holding of self-styled elections in Abkhazia, Georgia, unacceptable and illegitimate;

7. Expresses its continuing concern at the situation of refugees and displaced persons, resulting, in particular, from the hostilities of May 1998, reaffirms the unacceptability of the demographic changes resulting from the conflict and the imprescriptible right of all refugees and displaced persons affected by the conflict to return to their homes in secure conditions in accordance with international law and as set out in the Quadripartite Agreement on the Voluntary Return of Refugees and Displaced Persons, of 4 April 1994, and calls upon the parties to address this issue urgently by agreeing and implementing effective measures to guarantee the security of those who exercise their unconditional right to return;

8. Welcomes, in this context, the efforts of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General to facilitate, as a first step, the safe return of refugees and displaced persons to the Gali region, and emphasizes, in this regard, that the lasting return of the refugees cannot be ensured without concrete results from the bilateral dialogue between the parties, which produce the necessary security and legal guarantees;

9. Takes note with appreciation of the agreements reached at the meetings of 16 to 18 October 1998 and 7 to 9 June 1999, hosted respectively by the Governments of Greece and Turkey, aimed at building confidence, improving security and developing cooperation, and calls upon the parties to enhance their efforts to implement those decisions in an effective and comprehensive manner, notably at the prospective meeting in Yalta at the invitation of the Government of Ukraine;

10. Demands that both sides observe strictly the Agreement on a Ceasefire and Separation of Forces, signed in Moscow on 14 May 1994, and takes note with appreciation, in this context, of the substantial progress reported towards setting up a joint investigation mechanism for violations of the Agreement, as well as of the greater restraint exercised by the parties along the line of separation of forces;

11. Condemns the ongoing activities by armed groups, which endanger the civilian population, impede the work of the humanitarian organizations and seriously delay the normalization of the situation in the Gali region, reiterates its concern regarding the security of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia, welcomes the implementation of measures in this regard, and requests the Secretary-General to keep the security of the Mission under constant review;

12. Decides to extend the mandate of the Mission for a new period terminating on 31 January 2000, subject to a review by the Council of the mandate of the Mission in the event of any changes that may be made in the mandate or in the presence of the collective peacekeeping force of the Commonwealth of Independent States;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep the Council regularly informed and to report three months from the date of the adoption of the present resolution on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia;

14. Expresses its intention to conduct a thorough review of the operation at the end of its current mandate, in the light of steps taken by the parties to achieve a comprehensive settlement;

15. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Elections

On 27 August [A/54/284-S/1999/928], Georgia declared that, in accordance with a decree of 4 August, parliamentary elections would be held in Georgia on 31 October. The decree provided for the filing of the lists of political parties by 25 September, for the completion of the registration of candidates by 6 October and for the participation of foreign and local observers in the pre-election campaign and voting process.

The Secretary-General reported that the Abkhaz side held "presidential elections" on 3 October, in which Mr. Ardzinba ran unopposed, and a referendum on the Abkhaz November 1994 "Constitution" [YUN 1994, p. 586]. He recalled in that connection that the Security Council, in resolution 1255(1999) (see above), considered "unacceptable and illegitimate the holding of self-styled elections", in the absence of the majority of the population of Abkhazia, Georgia. On 12 October, the Abkhaz de facto parliament adopted a document entitled "Act on State Independence of the Republic of Abkhazia" [S/1999/1087].

The Security Council President, in a 4 October press statement [A/55/2], said that Council members regarded the 3 October self-styled elections and referendum as unacceptable and illegitimate and that such elections would be possible within the framework of a comprehensive political settlement, and with guaranteed full participation for all refugees and displaced persons.

The EU, on 6 October [S/1999/1040], regretted the 3 October elections and referendum and considered them null and void and detrimental to efforts to find a peaceful solution to the conflict.

The CIS Council of Ministers for Foreign Affairs, meeting in Yalta, Ukraine, on 8 October [S/1999/1156], considered those elections as flouting the will of the international community, particularly Council resolution 1255(1999), and that they were not conducive to the settlement of the conflict and complicated the search for mutually acceptable solutions regarding Abkhazia's status.

The Secretary-General later reported that, following the 3 October elections, an inauguration ceremony was held in Sukhumi for the Abkhaz leader on 6 December, who subsequently reshuffled his cabinet, replacing de facto Prime Minister Sergei Bagapsh with Viacheslav Tsugba [S/2000/39].

In the 31 October Georgian parliamentary elections, in which some 67.7 per cent of the eligible population took part, the ruling Citizens Union of Georgia won a clear majority in the 235-seat Parliament. Only two other parties, the Revival bloc and the Industry Will Save Georgia party, received the minimum 7 per cent of votes required to qualify for the 150 seats allocated by proportional representation. No elections were held for the districts of Abkhazia. The parliamentarians already representing those constituencies retained their seats.

Further developments

Report of Secretary-General (October). In October [S/1999/1087], the Secretary-General said that, on 20 September, he discussed important aspects of the peace process, including the political status of Abkhazia, Georgia, with President Shevardnadze in New York. The President welcomed the Special Representative's intention to submit later in the year, for the consideration of the two sides, proposals relating to the distribution of constitutional competences between Tbilisi and Sukhumi.

The ninth session of the Coordinating Council, which had originally been planned for 30 July, had been postponed indefinitely. Meanwhile, the intensity and scope of direct contacts between the Georgian and Abkhaz sides had accelerated, including a meeting in Moscow on 4 August and one in Tbilisi on 21 September. As a result, both sides reported progress on a draft agreement addressing the return of refugees and internally displaced persons to the Gali district in its old borders and on measures for Abkhazia's economic rehabilitation. In mid-September, Mr. Ardzinba expressed concern to President Shevardnadze about the possible deterioration of the security situation on the ground. As a result, the respective heads of the defence, internal affairs and security structures of the two sides met on 21 September in Tbilisi, with the participation of UNOMIG's Chief Military Observer and the Commander of the CIS peacekeeping force.

On the basis of the discussions held in June during the Istanbul meeting on confidence-building measures (see p. 378) and following numerous high-level direct telephone contacts, a number of detainees held by each side were exchanged on 8 September. The Special Representative continued to call on the two sides to effect a full exchange of detainees on an "all-for-all" basis. In the economic and cultural spheres, positive developments during the reporting period included the travel by a group of 20 Georgian and 20 Abkhaz children to summer camp in the United States; the convening of a meeting of Georgian and Abkhaz elders and war veterans and the restoration by the Georgiafilms studio of films shot in Abkhazia at various times during the century; and a meeting in September in Tbilisi, which brought winemakers from the Georgian and Abkhaz sides close to an agreement on cooperation in the production and sale of wine.

Progress in the peace process was slow in part because of the campaign for the Georgian parliamentary elections held in October (see p. 381).

UNOMIG continued to take the lead in the joint investigations of violent incidents and pursued implementation of the agreements on the separation of forces reached at the June session of Working Group I (see p. 378). While the original deadline (10 July) for carrying out those measures had not been met, the main obligations had largely been fulfilled after significant pressure from UNOMIG. As a result, UNOMIG had noticed a steady improvement in mutual confidence between the sides, making direct bilateral contacts at the lower levels possible as well.

The strength of the forces directly confronting each other on both sides of the ceasefire line decreased noticeably during the reporting period. As a result, cross-border firing remained at a very low level in comparison to a year previously. The general level of calm along the line was also facilitated by agreements between lower-level force commanders and local administrators to maintain order.

During the reporting period, most of the violent incidents recorded were assessed to have been carried out by criminal elements motivated by economic gain. On the Abkhaz side, law enforcement structures remained unable to combat either the criminal or the terrorist elements operating in the area, especially in the lower Gali region. The Abkhaz authorities attempted to extend their authority in the security field by encouraging villages to form self-defence units of local residents armed with their own weapons, which were to be formally registered with the Gali administration. On the whole, the two sides had failed to check effectively, or to cooperate in preventing, the activities of criminals and armed groups. The establishment of effective law enforcement throughout the zone of conflict remained a priority task for both sides.

The situation in the Kodori Valley had been calm until the kidnapping for ransom by armed individuals of seven UNOMIG personnel on patrol in the Georgian-controlled part of the valley on 13 October. By 15 October, all seven were released unconditionally after negotiations led by senior Georgian government officials.

Late in August, Georgia supported the extension of the CIS peacekeeping force's mandate for six months. The Georgian side expressed its confidence that that step would encourage the peacekeeping force to carry out its mission with more vigour and determination.

Recent periods of calm on the ground in the Gali district had no fundamental effect on the human rights situation. There was no change in the language policy in the schools with predominantly Georgian-speaking students, where Georgian was taught a limited number of hours and the language of instruction in the first four grades continued to be Russian. The United Nations Human Rights Office in Abkhazia, Georgia, continued to monitor reports from local residents of apartment evictions and violations of the right of property. The Office was pursuing reported cases of harassment through local law enforcement authorities. Visiting Georgia from 4 to 7 September, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees expressed dismay about the politicization of the plight of persons displaced from Abkhazia, Georgia, many of whom lived in grim conditions. She urged President Shevardnadze and the Government of Georgia to do everything in their power to improve conditions for internally displaced persons and to provide them with the social and legal rights necessary to develop a capacity for self-reliance.

The socio-economic picture in Abkhazia remained bleak and without prospects for immediate change. Some of the region was affected again by a drought that had reduced the expected harvest. Wage-earning opportunities remained almost non-existent and the level of petty crime was high. Demographically, the population continued to dwindle, as those with any means or connections sought jobs or education elsewhere.

The Secretary-General said that his September meeting with President Shevardnadze had reinforced his conviction that, in the search for a comprehensive settlement of the Georgian/Abkhaz dispute, efforts should be strengthened to achieve progress on the core question of the conflict, namely, the political status of Abkhazia. In that regard, his Special Representative would work closely with the Russian Federation, OSCE and the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General before submitting proposals to both sides.

Communications. On 12 October [S/1999/1058], Georgia informed the Council President that it had issued a decree on 19 May on the Provisional Rules of Navigation to the Seaports of the Autonomous Republic of Abkhazia to prevent arms smuggling and other illegal shipments into Abkhazia and to ensure unimpeded access of humanitarian aid. On 12 November [S/1999/1173], Georgia said that, despite the positive developments reflected in the Secretary-General's October report (see above), it believed that the situation in Abkhazia remained tense as to merit more attention from the international community. The "Law on Independence" passed on 12 October constituted the only response of the separatist regime to the Council's efforts to consolidate a multilateral approach to determining Abkhazia's political status with Georgia. That regime had established a consistent pattern of behaviour against international efforts to defuse tensions and to secure positive developments in implementing confidence-building measures. Local criminal groups, abetted by the so-called Abkhazia militia, were appropriating the revenues from trading citrus and nuts of the returned peasants, depriving them of their only source of survival. Clashes between those groups and widespread violence against the population were becoming a normal sequence of life. By the same token, the intention of the separatist regime to encourage villages in the Gali region to form armed self-defence units was permeated by its desire to give the impression that formal registration of arms by the Georgian population was permitted to face the threat stemming from the negative reaction of "partisan" groups for doing so. Georgia welcomed UNOMIG's intensified efforts to enhance the flexibility of the Mission's access to remote and unvisited areas, thus strengthening its capability of monitoring and reporting on events in the conflict zone. It hoped that UNOMIG's operation in the Kodori Valley would be resumed soon.

On 12 November [meeting 4065], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/1999/30 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 22 October 1999 concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia.

The Council warmly welcomes the appointment of Mr. Dieter Boden as resident Special Representative of the Secretary-General, and hopes the parties will see this as an opportune moment to give renewed impetus to the search for a political settlement.

The Council welcomes the acceleration of bilateral contacts at all levels between the Georgian and Abkhaz sides and calls upon them to continue to expand their contacts.

The Council notes with grave concern that, notwithstanding positive developments on some issues, no progress has been made on the key issues of the settlement, particularly the core issue of the status of Abkhazia, Georgia. The Council therefore strongly supports the intention of the Special Representative to submit as soon as possible further proposals to both sides on the distribution of constitutional competences between Tbilisi and Sukhumi, as part of a comprehensive settlement, with full respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia within its internationally recognized borders, working in close cooperation with the Russian Federation, in its capacity as facilitator, the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General, and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe.

The Council reiterates its demand that the parties to the conflict widen and deepen their commitment to the United Nations-led peace process, in particular by resuming regular meetings of the Coordinating Council and of its working groups, and agrees with the Secretary-General that they must continue to meet regularly, regardless of the constraints of domestic politics. The Council calls upon the parties to agree upon and to take, in the nearest future, the first concrete steps towards the full return to Abkhazia, Georgia, of refugees and internally displaced persons in safe, secure and dignified conditions. The Council reminds the parties that this would enable the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to provide substantial material assistance. The Council reiterates its view on the unacceptability of any action by the Abkhaz leadership in contravention of the principles of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia.

The Council notes with satisfaction that the security situation has improved slightly, in particular in the reduction of tension along the line of separation of forces, while noting the persistent precariousness of the security of United Nations personnel. The Council reiterates its condemnation of the hostage-taking of seven United Nations personnel on 13 October 1999, welcomes the release of the hostages, and stresses that the perpetrators of this unacceptable act should be brought to justice. The Council welcomes the fact that the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia is keeping its security arrangements under constant review in order to ensure the highest possible level of security for its staff.

The Council pays tribute to Mr. Liviu Bota for his valuable work while serving as Special Representative of the Secretary-General. The Council welcomes the important contributions that the Mission and the collective peacekeeping force of the Commonwealth of Independent States continue to make in stabilizing the situation in the zone of conflict, notes that the working relationship between the Mission and the collective peacekeeping force has been good at all levels, and stresses the importance of continuing and increasing close cooperation and coordination between them in the performance of their respective mandates.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General later reported that Georgia and the Russian Federation agreed in November that the Russian Federation would withdraw two of its four military bases in Georgia by 1 July 2001, including the base at Gudauta, in Abkhazia [S/2000/39]. Also in November, the Russian Federation decided to close the Russian-Georgian border at the Psou River to all crossings, including by UNOMIG personnel and vehicles. That decision had blocked a possible exit route from the zone of conflict and was seriously complicating the procurement of supplies for the Mission. Consultations were going on with the Russian Federation authorities to resolve the issue.

In November, Georgian Ministry of the Interior troops were withdrawn from their posts along the ceasefire line. On the Abkhaz side, there were currently no militia posts close to the ceasefire line. While undirected shooting across the line continued, incidents of targeted shooting were rare. The high level of criminal activity along the ceasefire line and the lack of effective action and mutual cooperation by the law enforcement agencies on both sides continued to be a cause for concern. In December, a series of tit-for-tat kidnappings occurred in the Gali and Zugdidi sectors. There was also a spate of criminal lootings by bandits in the Gali sector.

In December, OHCHR organized a human rights seminar for representatives of institutes of higher learning. A round table organized by the Office to address the situation of minorities in Abkhazia led to the establishment of a permanent public council on minority issues, which provided a forum for expressing views on the subject and for shaping public policy. The Office had begun drafting a plan of action for human rights education in schools, universities and law enforcement organs.

Financing

On 8 June [meeting 101], the General Assembly, having considered the Secretary-General's report on UNOMIG's financial performance for the period 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 [A/53/821], the proposed budget for the Mission's maintenance for the period 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 [A/53/844 & Corr.1,2], and ACABQ's comments and recommendations thereon [A/53/895/Add.4], adopted without vote, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/983], resolution 53/232 [agenda item 131].

Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 854(1993) of 6 August 1993, by which the Council approved the deployment of an advance team of up to ten United Nations military observers for a period of three months and the incorporation of the advance team into a United Nations observer mission if such a mission was formally established by the Council,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 858(1993) of 24 August 1993, by which the Council decided to establish the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Observer Mission, the latest of which was resolution 1225(1999) of 28 January 1999,

Recalling further its decision 48/475 A of 23 December 1993 on the financing of the Observer Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 52/242 of 26 June 1998,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Observer Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Observer Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Observer Mission,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Observer Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia as at 30 April 1999, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 8.8 million United States dollars, representing 11 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Observer Mission to the period ending 30 June 1999, notes that some 16 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Observer Mission in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

Armenia-Azerbaijan

Armenia and Azerbaijan, at the end of 1999, were no nearer to reaching a settlement of the armed conflict between them, which had erupted in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 388] over the Nagorny Karabakh region in Azerbaijan, despite continued efforts by the Minsk Group of OSCE to reach a settlement. During the year, both countries addressed communications to the Secretary-General regarding developments in the conflict.

Communications. Azerbaijan said, on 29 January [S/1999/93], that military cooperation between the Russian Federation and Armenia and the Russian military presence in Armenia were a threat to its security, particularly since the Russian military base and personnel were being used to strengthen the Armenian armed forces in the context of the country's armed aggression against it. The strengthening of such cooperation, the continued delivery of military materiel to Armenia, and the inaction of the trilateral committee for the settlement of the problem of weapons deliveries pointed to the fact that there were certain forces in the Russian Federation plotting to nullify efforts to put an end to the arming of Armenia and to settle the conflict between Armenia and Azerbaijan by peaceful means. Azerbaijan was considering measures to guarantee the country's security and defend its independence and sovereignty.

Armenia, on 26 February [S/1999/211], described as unfounded the accusations relating to Armenian-Russian military cooperation, including the existence of a Russian military base in Armenia. Armenia reiterated that Armenia-Russia bilateral relations, including military cooperation, were regulated by internationally recognized legal documents and stressed that a nation's right to choose the means of ensuring its security was fully recognized within UN statutes and OSCE norms and principles. That cooperation was not directed at a third country. Armenia called on the Azerbaijani authorities to refrain from nonconstructive and provocative actions that endangered the peace and stability of the region and obstructed the peaceful settlement of the Nagorny Karabakh conflict.

In a further assessment of the situation, Armenia said, on 25 February [S/1999/210], that Azerbaijan's President had written to the Presidents of the three Co-Chair countries of the OSCE Minsk Group—France, the Russian Federation and the United States—expressing his dismay at the delays in finding a resolution to the Nagorny Karabakh conflict. That call on the three Presidents to promote constructive approaches came from the only party to the conflict that had rejected the most recent proposal presented by the three Co-Chairs. The main obstacle to the resolution of the conflict was Azerbaijan's counter-productive approach, which appeared to prefer a military solution. For Armenia, the "common state", a basic element of the latest proposal, was a promising concept for a true compromise, which might lead to a peaceful resolution of the conflict, and for that reason it had accepted it as a basis for negotiations. However, Azerbaijan had rejected the proposal, proving once again its unwillingness to compromise. Other Azerbaijan obstacles included its refusal to accept Nagorny Karabakh as a full party to the conflict and rejection of direct contact with the Nagorny Karabakh leadership; Azerbaijan's clear pattern of presenting the conflict in terms of the broader Russia/Turkey confrontation; the myth that the ongoing blockade of Armenia would eventually force it to make unilateral concessions; that the artificially inflated oil factor would help impose a resolution to the conflict advantageous to Azerbaijan; and the Azerbaijan leadership's belief that time was on their side and that they would eventually achieve military superiority over Armenia.

On 27 February [S/1999/222], Azerbaijan reported the violation of its airspace in the Kelbadjar district occupied by Armenian forces by a Russian air force fighter plane. Azerbaijan also drew attention to a statement by the Russian air force commander on 17 February referring to deliveries of C-300 surface-to-air missile systems to the Russian military base in Armenia in the light of the threat from a neighbouring State, and the fact that, as of 1 April, Armenia would be included in the roster of the unified anti-aircraft defence system. Azerbaijan hoped that the Russian side would take measures to prevent the recurrence of such incidents. It reiterated that developments in connection with Armenia's unilateral rearmament was fraught with unpredictable consequences for the region of the south Caucasus.

On 3 June [S/1999/643], Azerbaijan reported that it had sought clarification from China concerning the delivery of eight "Taifeng" missile systems to Armenia and which, according to information available, had already been deployed in the Azerbaijani region of Upper Karabakh, which was occupied by Armenian troops. The delivery of the missile systems was a matter of particular concern to Azerbaijan in that its people viewed China as a friendly State. Azerbaijan trusted that China would take measures to ensure the return to China of those weapons unlawfully delivered to Armenia, whose deployment had a negative impact on the process of settling the conflict, as well as the development of relations between Azerbaijan and China.

Azerbaijan reported on 14 June [S/1999/686] that its armed forces had repulsed three attempts by Armenian troops to capture Azerbaijani armed forces' positions in the vicinity of the town of Terter. Two Azerbaijani soldiers were killed and four injured.

The "Nagorny Karabakh Ministry of Foreign Affairs", on 15 June [S/1999/681], said that Azerbaijan had recently been disseminating reports of an alleged attack by Nagorny Karabakh armed forces in the Martakert sector of the line of contact between the two sides. In fact, on 14 June, Nagorny Karabakh defence forces had opposed the advance of Azerbaijani armed forces. After sustaining losses, the opposing side was compelled to withdraw to its initial position. Two Nagorny Karabakh soldiers were wounded. Nagorny Karabakh drew attention to Azerbaijani propaganda regarding the deliveries to Nagorny Karabakh of Chinese-manufactured "Typhoon" multiple rocket launchers. Azerbaijan's rejection of the latest proposals by the Co-Chairmen of the OSCE Minsk Group left no doubt as to its aim to resolve the Nagorny Karabakh problem by force. It called on Azerbaijan to refrain from propaganda and the policy of disinformation and to initiate constructive dialogue among all parties for a speedy and comprehensive settlement of the existing problems.

Cyprus

In 1999, efforts to bring about a negotiated settlement of the Cyprus problem between Cyprus President Glafcos Clerides and Turkish Cypriot leader Rauf R. Denktas continued. Progress towards a comprehensive settlement took a modest step forward in 1999 when the two leaders accepted the Secretary-General's 30 September invitation to enter into negotiations without preconditions and in a spirit of compromise. The first session of proximity talks was held from 3 to 14 December in New York. Meanwhile, the Secretary-General reported that the situation along the ceasefire lines remained essentially stable and the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) continued to assist in the restoration of normal conditions and in humanitarian functions. The Security Council twice extended UNFICYP's mandate, the second time until 15 June 2000.

On 13 September (decision 53/493), the General Assembly included in the draft agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Question of Cyprus". On 23 December (decision 54/465), it decided that the item would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session.

Incidents

Communications. Throughout 1999, the Secretary-General received numerous letters from the Government of Cyprus and from the Turkish Cypriot authorities containing charges and countercharges, protests and accusations and explanations of position. The letters from the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" were transmitted by Turkey.

In communications dated between 13 January and 30 November [A/53/798-S/1999/57, A/53/824-S/1999/137, A/53/832-S/1999/164, A/53/842-S/1999/206, A/53/848-S/1999/218, A/53/864-S/1999/283, A/53/871-S/1999/310, A/53/874-S/1999/321, A/53/887-S/1999/355, A/53/933-S/1999/499, A/53/934-S/1999/502, A/53/949-S/1999/532, A/53/953-S/1999/537, A/53/956-S/1999/545, A/53/959-S/1999/565, A/53/965-S/1999/577, A/53/991-S/1999/632, A/53/1007-S/1999/744, A/53/1030-S/1999/835, A/53/1047-S/1999/932, A/54/446-S/1999/1034, A/54/522-S/1999/1120, A/54/642-S/1999/1211], Cyprus protested violations of its airspace and unauthorized intrusions into the flight information region of Nicosia by military aircraft of the Turkish Air Force. Turkey transmitted letters from the "Representative of the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" refuting those allegations, stating that the flights took place within its sovereign airspace.

In letters of 8 March [A/53/858-S/1999/256], 20 May [A/53/973-S/1999/598], 30 June [A/53/1008-S/1999/745] and 13 October [A/54/463-S/1999/1059], the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" claimed that the "Greek Cypriot administration" was engaging in an unprecedented build-up of arms and armed forces, that its National Guard had sharply increased provocations along the borders and that the administration had held joint military manoeuvres with Greece in south Cyprus in October.

In several communications received during the year, Cyprus alleged that Turkey was methodically altering the demographic character of occupied Cyprus by plundering its religious, historical and cultural identity [A/53/836-S/1999/178], which was denied by the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" [A/53/852-S/1999/234], and each side accused the other of compulsory population transfers and the implantation of settlers [A/53/863-S/1999/282, A/53/903-S/1999/385].

Good offices mission

Negotiations on a comprehensive settlement

Communication (June). The G-8 countries (Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States), in a 20 June statement [S/1999/711], said that the Cyprus problem had gone unresolved for too long and a resolution would benefit the people of Cyprus and have a positive impact on peace and security in the region. Both parties to the dispute had legitimate concerns that could and should be addressed in comprehensive negotiations covering all issues. They urged the Secretary-General to invite the two leaders to negotiations in the autumn of 1999. The leaders should commit themselves to the principles of no preconditions; all issues on the table; commitment in good faith to continue to negotiate until a settlement was reached; and full consideration of relevant UN resolutions and treaties.

Report of Secretary-General (June). Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1218(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 411], the Secretary-General submitted a June report [S/1999/707] stating that, in continuation of his 1998 initiative of on-island talks [ibid., p. 410], his Deputy Special Representative for Cyprus, Ann Hercus, had, over the preceding six months, held numerous meetings with Mr. Clerides and Mr. Denktas, both of whom continued to engage in them in a constructive manner. Those discussions, which remained confidential, confirmed the importance of the issue of political equality. In pursuing the mission of good offices, the Secretary-General had always dealt with the two sides on an equal footing and the work had been conducted on an equal and even-handed basis, said the report. However, the Turkish Cypriot side contended that other aspects of their situation placed them at a disadvantage and undermined the commitment to political equality. A major challenge of the negotiations was how to translate that commitment into clear, practical provisions to be agreed upon by both sides.

In the decades during which it had resisted efforts at settlement, the Cyprus problem had become overlain with legalistic abstractions and artificial labels, which were more difficult to disentangle and which appeared increasingly removed from the actual needs of both communities, the Secretary-General said. Based on past and current discussions and negotiations with and between the two leaders, the remaining core issues were: security, distribution of powers, property and territory. A compromise on those issues would remove the remaining obstacles towards a peaceful settlement, but it was essential that those core issues be addressed without preconditions in comprehensive negotiations.

The Secretary-General appreciated the call by the heads of State of the G-8 countries for holding comprehensive negotiations (see above). He was ready to invite both leaders to enter into a process of comprehensive negotiations without preconditions and in a spirit of compromise and cooperation. The Secretary-General would ask his Special Representative designate to continue the process of dialogue with the parties to that end.

On 29 June [meeting 4018], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1250(1999). The draft [S/1999/724] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming all its earlier resolutions on Cyprus, particularly resolution 1218(1998) of 22 December 1998,

Reiterating its grave concern at the lack of progress towards an overall political settlement on Cyprus,

Appreciating the statement of the heads of State and Government of Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America on 20 June 1999 calling for comprehensive negotiations in the autumn of 1999 under the auspices of the Secretary-General,

1. Expresses its appreciation for the report of the Secretary-General of 22 June 1999 on his mission of good offices in Cyprus;

2. Stresses its full support for the Secretary-General's mission of good offices as decided by the Security Council and, in this context, for the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative;

3. Reiterates its endorsement of the initiative of the Secretary-General announced on 30 September 1998, within the framework of his mission of good offices, with the goal of reducing tensions and promoting progress towards a just and lasting settlement in Cyprus;

4. Notes that the discussions between the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the two sides are continuing, and urges both sides to participate constructively;

5. Expresses the view that both sides have legitimate concerns that should be addressed through comprehensive negotiations covering all relevant issues;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with the relevant Security Council resolutions, to invite the leaders of the two sides to negotiations in the autumn of 1999;

7. Calls upon the two leaders, in this context, to give their full support to such a comprehensive negotiation, under the auspices of the Secretary-General, and to commit themselves to the following principles:

- No preconditions;
- All issues on the table;
- Commitment in good faith to continue to negotiate until a settlement is reached;
- Full consideration of relevant United Nations resolutions and treaties;

8. Requests the two sides in Cyprus, including military authorities on both sides, to work constructively with the Secretary-General and his Special Representative to create a positive climate on the island that will pave the way for negotiations in the autumn of 1999;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council informed of progress towards the implementation of the present resolution and to submit a report to the Council by 1 December 1999;

10. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

In a November report [S/1999/1203], the Secretary-General stated that, on 14 November, in response to his invitation, Mr. Clerides and Mr. Denktas agreed to start proximity talks in New York on 3 December to prepare the ground for meaningful negotiations leading to a comprehensive settlement.

Proximity talks. On 14 December [A/55/2], the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on Cyprus briefed the Security Council on the proximity talks held in New York from 3 to 14 December. Council members welcomed the fact that the talks had been conducted throughout in a positive and constructive atmosphere and without preconditions. They commended the commitment shown and encouraged all concerned to continue their efforts towards a comprehensive settlement of the Cyprus question. They looked forward to the continuation of the talks in early 2000.

UNFICYP

The United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus, established by Security Council resolution 186(1964) [YUN 1964, p. 165], continued in 1999 to monitor the ceasefire lines between the Turkish and Turkish Cypriot forces on the northern side and the Cypriot National Guard on the southern side; to maintain the military status quo and prevent a recurrence of fighting; and to undertake humanitarian and economic activities. In the absence of a formal ceasefire agreement, the military status quo, as recorded by UNFICYP in 1974, remained the standard by which the Force judged whether changes constituted violations of the status quo.

UNFICYP, under the overall authority of the Deputy Special Representative and Chief of Mission, continued to keep the area between the ceasefire lines, known as the buffer zone, under constant surveillance through a system of observation posts, and through air, vehicle and foot patrols.

On 20 June [S/1999/722], the Secretary-General informed the Council that he was considering the advantages in the longer term, including continuity and greater familiarity with events in Cyprus, of reverting to the previous practice of having a Special Representative of the Secretary-General resident on the island. In that connection, and following the resignation of Diego Cordovez as his Special Adviser on Cyprus on 22 April, he intended to appoint Ann Hercus as resident Special Representative and Chief of UNFICYP, with effect from 1 July. The Council, on 25 June [S/1999/723], noted the Secretary-General's intention. Ann Hercus relinquished her post as of 30 September and the Secretary-General appointed James Holger as Acting Special Representative and Chief of Mission for three months effective 1 October [S/1999/1043]. The Council noted that appointment on 11 October [S/1999/1044]. On 29 October, the Secretary-General informed the Council of his intention to appoint Alvaro de Soto as Special Adviser on Cyprus as of 1 November 1999, with the rank of Under-Secretary-General. Mr. de Soto would become Special Representative, resident in Cyprus, in the course of spring 2000 [S/1999/1111]. The Council noted the course of action proposed on 1 November [S/1999/1112].

As at November, UNFICYP, under the command of Major-General Evergisto Arturo de Vergara (Argentina), comprised 1,219 troops and 35 civilian police. The military personnel were from Argentina, Austria, Canada, Finland, Hungary, Ireland, the Netherlands, Slovenia and the United Kingdom. The civilian police were from Australia and Ireland. The civilian component comprised 37 international and 197 local staff.

On 10 December [S/1999/1234], the Council noted the Secretary-General's intention [S/1999/1233] to appoint Major-General Victory Rana (Nepal) as UNFICYP's Commander, replacing Major-General de Vergara who relinquished his post on 15 December.

Activities

Report of Secretary-General (June). The Secretary-General submitted a report covering developments and UNFICYP activities from 9 December 1998 to 9 June 1999 [S/1999/657 & Add.1]. He said that the situation along the ceasefire lines remained stable apart from small incidents, particularly in the area of Nicosia, where the positions of the opposing forces were in close proximity. Military construction along the ceasefire lines took place on both sides and there were also some overflights above the buffer zone from each side. UNFICYP continued to resist any challenge to the delineation of the ceasefire lines. The routine replacement by Turkish forces of marker buoys off the shore of Famagusta led to several days of tension in May, partly because of the wrong positioning of one buoy. UNFICYP continued to monitor the fenced area of Varosha; suggestions by the Turkish Cypriot side that they might open Varosha for settlement provoked a strong public reaction on the Greek Cypriot side. UNFICYP did not observe any significant change in the status quo in that area, for which the United Nations held the Government of Turkey responsible, said the report.

The suspension of bicomunal contacts imposed by the Turkish Cypriot authorities remained in effect and continued to limit on-island contacts between the two communities. However, trade unions on both sides continued to maintain regular contact, holding a forum on 26 and 29 May, which was attended by 300 Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot trade union representatives. UNFICYP continued to facilitate civilian use of the buffer zone for manufacturing and agriculture and for the maintenance of public utilities and to act as intermediary between the two sides to facilitate cooperation on such matters as the distribution of water and electricity and the disposal of sewage. It also assisted in arranging pilgrimages to religious sites by members of both communities and was involved when police on either side detained members of the other community. UNFICYP also continued to carry out humanitarian tasks in respect of Greek Cypriots and Maronites residing in the northern part of the island and Turkish Cypriots in the southern part. Greek Cypriots on the Karpas Peninsula were being allowed to travel in the northern part of the island without first reporting to the local police, while first-degree relatives in the southern part of the island benefited from more flexible crossing regulations and could stay with relatives in the north beyond the previously imposed time limit. According to Turkish Cypriot authorities, the review of legislation prohibiting Greek Cypriots and Maronites in the northern part of the island from bequeathing their movable and immovable property to heirs that did not reside there had not been completed. The 310 Turkish Cypriots in the southern part of the island who had made themselves known to UNFICYP had made little use of the UNFICYP liaison office that was opened in Limassol in 1996; the office was therefore closed on 1 March 1999. However, UNFICYP had increased visits to the areas of residence of those Turkish Cypriots.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council extend UNFICYP's mandate for a further period of six months, until 15 December 1999.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 June [meeting 4018], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1251(1999). The draft [S/1999/725] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 8 June 1999 on the United Nations operation in Cyprus,

Noting that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island it is necessary to keep the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus beyond 30 June 1999,

Reaffirming all its earlier resolutions on Cyprus, in particular resolutions 1217(1998) and 1218(1998), of 22 December 1998,

Calling once more upon all States to respect the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of the Republic of Cyprus, and requesting them, along with the parties concerned, to refrain from any action which might prejudice that sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity, as well as from any attempt at partition of the island or its unification with any other country,

Noting that the situation along the ceasefire lines is essentially stable, but expressing its grave concern at the increasing practice by both sides of engaging in provocative behaviour along the ceasefire lines, which heightens the risk of more serious incidents,

Reminding the parties that the package of measures of the Force aimed at reducing tensions along the ceasefire lines was designed to reduce incidents and tensions, without affecting the security of either side,

Reiterating the need to make progress on a comprehensive political solution,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus for a further period ending 15 December 1999;

2. Reminds both sides of their obligation to prevent any violence directed against Force personnel, to co-operate fully with the Force and to ensure its complete freedom of movement;

3. Calls upon the military authorities on both sides to refrain from any action, including acts of provocation in the vicinity of the buffer zone, which would exacerbate tensions;

4. Requests the Secretary-General and his Special Representative to continue to work intensively with the two sides with a view to early agreement on further specific tension-reducing steps, with full consideration of its resolution 1218(1998);

5. Calls upon the two sides to take measures that will build trust and cooperation and reduce tensions between them, including demining along the buffer zone;

6. Urges the Greek Cypriot side to agree to the implementation of the package of measures of the Force, and encourages the Force to continue its efforts towards the rapid implementation of the package by both sides;

7. Reiterates its grave concern at the continuing excessive levels of military forces and armaments in the Republic of Cyprus and the rate at which they are being expanded, upgraded and modernized, including by the introduction of advanced weapon systems by either side, and at the lack of progress towards any significant reduction in the number of foreign troops in the Republic of Cyprus, which threaten to raise tensions both on the island and in the region and complicate efforts to negotiate an overall political settlement;

8. Calls upon all concerned to commit themselves to a reduction in defence spending, a reduction in the number of foreign troops in the Republic of Cyprus, and a staged process aimed at limiting and then substantially reducing the level of all troops and armaments in the Republic of Cyprus as a first step towards the withdrawal of non-Cypriot forces as described in the set of ideas, to help restore confidence between the sides, stresses the importance of eventual demilitarization of the Republic of Cyprus as an objective in the context of an overall comprehensive settlement, welcomes in this context any steps either side may take to reduce armaments and troops, and encourages the Secretary-General to continue to promote efforts in this direction;

9. Calls upon both sides to refrain from the threat or use of force or violence as a means to resolve the Cyprus problem;

10. Reaffirms that the status quo is unacceptable and that negotiations on a final political solution to the Cyprus problem have been at an impasse for too long;

11. Reaffirms its position that a Cyprus settlement must be based on a State of Cyprus with a single sovereignty and international personality and a single citizenship, with its independence and territorial integrity safeguarded, and comprising two politically equal communities as described in the relevant Security Council resolutions, in a bicomunal and bi-zonal federation, and that such a settlement must exclude union in whole or in part with any other country or any form of partition or secession;

12. Welcomes the ongoing efforts by the Force to implement its humanitarian mandate in respect of Greek Cypriots and Maronites living in the northern part of the island and Turkish Cypriots living in the southern part, as mentioned in the report of the Secretary-General;

13. Reiterates its support for the efforts of the United Nations and others concerned to promote the holding of bicomunal events so as to build cooperation, trust and mutual respect between the two communities, and calls upon the Turkish-Cypriot leadership to resume such activities;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report by 1 December 1999 on the implementation of the present resolution;

15. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (November). In his report covering the period 10 June to 29 November [S/1999/1203 & Corr.1 & Add.1], the Secretary-General said that the situation along the ceasefire lines remained stable. However, military construction continued along the lines on both sides, including minefield refurbishment and construction of anti-tank ditches by the National Guard. There were several violations by the National Guard in the area of Athienou. The annual National Guard exercise "Nikiforos" took place from 2 to 7 October. Its profile and duration were reduced from previous years. During the traditional National Guard parade on 1 October, the TOR-MI low-to-medium-altitude surface-to-air missile system was publicly displayed for the first time. The annual Turkish Forces exercise "TOROS II" took place from 25 to 27 November, also on a smaller scale than in previous years. Some alterations of the status quo in the fenced area of Varosha were observed. Crossings of the eastern maritime security line by Greek Cypriot boats increased significantly, despite UNFICYP warnings, causing Turkish Forces to fire warning shots.

Despite the continuing Turkish Cypriot restrictions regarding on-island contact between the two communities, some 5,000 people, of whom 3,000 were Turkish Cypriots, attended an international open house organized by UNFICYP, and, on 12 November, a Turkish and a Greek television station organized and aired a debate attended by Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot politicians, business personalities and journalists. In the buffer zone, new regulations relating to farming at night and burning of fields were introduced to increase safety. UNFICYP maintained close cooperation with both sides to resolve problems concerning water, electricity and sewage and continued to promote stability and the well-being of residents in the mixed village of Pyla. Religious pilgrimages by both sides were facilitated by UNFICYP. In the humanitarian area, the Turkish Cypriot practice of preventing the burial of Greek Cypriot residents in the Karpas Peninsula whenever their bodies had been temporarily brought to the southern part of the island for post mortem examinations remained unresolved. UNFICYP continued to press the Turkish Cypriot authorities to allow Greek Cypriots from the Peninsula to be buried there regardless of where and by whom the post mortem examinations were conducted. After an interruption of more than three years, the Committee on Missing Persons began its one hundred eighty-third session in November to discuss the possibility of resuming its investigative work.

UNDP, through the United Nations Office for Project Services, continued to implement its confidence-building programme in areas of mutual concern, notably public health, environment, sanitation, water, urban renovation, preservation of cultural heritage, natural resources and education.

The Secretary-General recommended a further extension of UNFICYP's mandate, until 15 June 2000.

The Security Council,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 29 November 1999 on the United Nations operation in Cyprus, and in particular the call to the parties to assess and address the humanitarian issue of missing persons with due urgency and seriousness,

Noting that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island it is necessary to keep the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus beyond 15 December 1999,

1. Reaffirms all its relevant resolutions on Cyprus, in particular resolution 1251(1999) of 29 June 1999;

Financing

On 8 June [meeting 101], the General Assembly, having considered the Secretary-General's report on UNFICYP's financial performance for the period 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 [A/53/783], the proposed budget for UNFICYP's maintenance for the period 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 [A/53/805] and ACABQ's comments and recommendations [A/53/895/Add.3], adopted, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/980], resolution 53/231 without vote [agenda item 130].

Financing of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 186(1964) of 4 March 1964, by which the Council established the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force, the latest of which was resolution 1217(1998) of 22 December 1998,

Recalling also its resolution 52/241 of 26 June 1998 on the financing of the Force,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Force that are not covered by voluntary contributions are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Force by certain Governments,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Force, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Expressing its appreciation to all those Member States and observer States which have made voluntary contributions to the Special Account established for the financing of the Force during the period prior to 16 June 1993,

Noting that voluntary contributions were insufficient to cover all the costs of the Force, including those incurred by troop-contributing Governments prior to 16 June 1993, and regretting the absence of an adequate response to appeals for voluntary contributions, including that contained in the letter dated 17 May 1994 from the Secretary-General to all Member States,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus as at 30 April 1999, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 17.7 million United States dollars, representing 12.7 per cent of the total assessed contributions from 16 June 1993 to the period ending 30 June 1999, notes that some 16 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Force in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Force is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Force against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Force;

8. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus an amount of 45,630,927 dollars gross (43,892,427 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Force for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, inclusive of an amount of 2,270,759 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations, and the amount of 445,268 dollars for the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy;

9. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, taking into consideration the funding through voluntary contributions of one third of the cost of the Force, equivalent to 14,630,810 dollars, by the Government of Cyprus and the annual pledge of 6.5 million dollars from the Government of Greece, to apportion among Member States the amount of 24,500,117 dollars gross (22,761,617 dollars net), for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, at a monthly rate of 2,041,676 dollars gross (1,896,801 dollars net) in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1999 and 2000 as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Force beyond 30 June 1999;

10. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 1,738,500 dollars approved for the Force for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000;

11. Decides that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Force, there shall be set off against the apportionment as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 178,500 dollars gross (6,300 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 1998;

12. Decides also that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Force, their share of the unencumbered balance of 178,500 dollars gross (6,300 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 1998 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

13. Decides further to continue to maintain as separate the account established for the period prior to 16 June 1993 for the Force, invites Member States to make voluntary contributions to that account, and requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts in appealing for voluntary contributions to the account;

14. Invites voluntary contributions to the Force in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus".

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item on UNFICYP's financing would remain for consideration at the resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session (decision 54/465). On the same date, it decided that the Fifth Committee would continue consideration of the item at that session (decision 54/462 A).

Other issues

Cooperation with OSCE

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/85 [YUN 1998, p. 419], the Secretary-General, in a November report [A/54/537 & Corr.1], described cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE).

He said that, during the year, contacts were maintained with the OSCE Chairman-in-Office, Secretary-General and representatives on a regular basis. The two organizations continued to face humanitarian and political challenges in the Balkans and in some countries of the former Soviet Union. Cooperation in the field had intensified and the two organizations continued to practice a division of labour based on their comparative advantages. Efforts to improve consultation and cooperation in the field and between the respective headquarters resulted in enhanced coordination that made better use of international resources in the interests of the countries being assisted.

In the context of the UNHCR/OSCE comprehensive strategic partnership, frequent consultations took place, particularly with the Chairman-in-Office, to share information and ensure coherence and complementarity of action. UNHCR was an active participant in the Implementation Meetings on the Human Dimension of the Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights (ODIHR), which covered issues directly relevant to UNHCR. Cooperation with the OSCE High Commissioner on National Minorities (HCNM) was also institutionalized and covered an ever larger range of topics, mainly on issues of citizenship and statelessness; the formerly deported peoples in Crimea, Ukraine; the problems faced by Meshketian Turks, another category of formerly deported peoples; and ethnic tolerance in Central Asia. As a follow-up to the Regional Conference to Address the Problems of Refugees, Displaced Persons, Other Forms of Involuntary Displacement and Returnees in the Countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States and Relevant Neighbouring States [YUN 1996, p. 1117], UNHCR, together with the International Organization for Migration (IOM) and ODIHR, organized an annual steering group meeting in June to review progress made in implementing the Programme of Action adopted by the Conference. An international meeting sponsored by HCNM, UNHCR and the Open Society Institute was held in 1999 to address problems faced by Meshketian Turks. Significant progress was made towards developing a comprehensive approach to the issue with the participation of all concerned countries (Azerbaijan, Georgia, Russian Federation, Turkey, Uzbekistan).

The Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) continued its commitment to strengthening co-operation with OSCE. A new area for potential co-operation was the development of the UN special programme for the economies of Central Asia, in which ECE and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific played the leading role. Cooperation continued between UNDP and OSCE institutions at headquarters and at the field level, including the exchange of expertise and participation in meetings hosted by both organizations. UNDP worked closely with ODIHR in the area of human rights. Its focal point coordinated activities in support of democracy, good governance and participation with OSCE and ODIHR, with special attention to the Central Asian States and Estonia, Georgia and Ukraine. Additional cooperation with OSCE took place within the framework of the commemoration of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights adopted by General Assembly resolution 217 A (III) [YUN 1948-49, p. 535]. Partnership framework agreements were developed between UNDP and HCNM, including the establishment in April of a framework for close cooperation, with the nomination of focal points in each office.

The United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH) and OSCE worked together extensively in the field of human rights. In Bosnia and Herzegovina, the two organizations cooperated in the return of displaced persons and refugees. OSCE developed a support plan for the Return and Reconstruction Task Force led by OHCHR and UNHCR. In February, UNHCR, UNMIBH, OSCE and the European Commission Monitoring Mission signed an inter-agency memorandum of understanding on a returnee monitoring framework for Bosnia and Herzegovina to address national protection extended to returnees and displaced persons. Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina offered good examples of partnerships in fostering conditions conducive to return. UNHCR and OSCE cooperated on various levels in promoting and facilitating voluntary return, with UNHCR focusing on humanitarian activities and OSCE on monitoring elections, human rights and compliance with return agreements. There was close cooperation also with regard to cross-border returns of refugees from Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina (in particular Republika Srpska). In the context of the municipal elections in Bosnia and Herzegovina, OSCE and IOM concluded in 1999 a memorandum of understanding governing IOM's advisory and operational role with regard to Bosnians living abroad.

The establishment of an international civil presence in Kosovo to provide an interim administration required an integrated approach with a clear distribution of labour. At a 15 June meeting to discuss the allocation of responsibilities in Kosovo between the United Nations and OSCE, it was agreed that OSCE would take the lead role in human resources capacity-building, including training a new Kosovo police service, judicial personnel and civil administrators; media affairs; democratization and governance; the organization and supervision of elections; and the monitoring, protection and promotion of human rights, in cooperation with OHCHR and the Council of Europe.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First (Disarmament and International Security) Committee [A/54/568], adopted resolution 54/59 without vote [agenda item 81].

Strengthening of security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the subject, including resolution 53/82 of 4 December 1998,

Reaffirming the primary role of the Mediterranean countries in strengthening and promoting peace, security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region,

Bearing in mind all the previous declarations and commitments, as well as all the initiatives taken by the riparian countries at the recent summits, ministerial meetings and various forums concerning the question of the Mediterranean region,

Recognizing the indivisible character of security in the Mediterranean and that the enhancement of cooperation among Mediterranean countries with a view to promoting the economic and social development of all peoples of the region will contribute significantly to stability, peace and security in the region,

Recognizing further that prospects for closer Euro-Mediterranean cooperation in all spheres can be enhanced by positive developments worldwide, in particular in Europe, in the Maghreb and in the Middle East,

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on means to strengthen security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Strengthening of security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region".

Stability and development in South-Eastern Europe

On 17 May [S/1999/589], the EU, in its decision on the Kosovo crisis (see p. 345), agreed to begin preparatory work on the establishment of a stability pact for South-Eastern Europe and instructed the relevant working bodies to work towards the convening of a meeting of senior officials in Bonn, Germany, on 27 May. The stability pact, which would help ensure cooperation among the countries of the region towards comprehensive measures for the long-term stabilization, security, democratization and economic reconstruction and development of the region, and for the establishment of durable good-neighbourly relations among and between them and with the international community, would be founded on the UN Charter, OSCE principles and commitments and relevant Council of Europe treaties and conventions. The EU would play a key role in the stability pact, which should be developed and implemented in close association with OSCE.

The Stability Pact was adopted on 10 June in Cologne, Germany.

The G-8 countries, on 20 June [S/1999/711], welcomed the adoption of the Stability Pact and declared their readiness to take strong action to achieve its objectives. They called on the international donor community to give the countries of the region a strong signal of active international support and solidarity and to organize donor conferences as early as feasible. They also welcomed the progress through the European Commission and the World Bank towards establishing a donor coordination process to develop a coherent international assistance strategy for the region, which would be guided by the High-level Steering Group.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/571], adopted resolution 54/62 by recorded vote (155-0-2) [agenda item 84].

1. Affirms the urgency of consolidating South-Eastern Europe as a region of peace, security, stability, democracy, cooperation, economic development, observance of human rights and good-neighbourliness, thus contributing to the maintenance of international peace and security and enhancing the prospects for sustained development and prosperity for all peoples in the region as an integral part of Europe;

Chapter VI

Middle East

In 1999, United Nations involvement in the Middle East peace process continued through its peacekeeping operations, the good offices of the Secretary-General and programmes of economic, social and other forms of assistance, as well as active participation in multilateral negotiations. During the first six months of the year, the peace process, which began in Madrid, Spain, in 1991, stagnated, due, among other things, to the accelerated establishment of new and the expansion of existing Israeli settlements in the occupied Palestinian territory. Following the election of a new Israeli Government in May, the peace process regained momentum in early September with the signing of the Sharm el-Sheikh Memorandum between Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO). The Memorandum set out to resolve outstanding issues, such as those pertaining to the permanent status negotiations, and set a timetable for implementing previous commitments.

In February, the General Assembly resumed its tenth emergency special session, which first convened in 1997, to discuss the item "Illegal Israeli actions in Occupied East Jerusalem and the rest of the Occupied Palestinian Territory". It demanded, among other things, that Israel comply with the provisions of the resolutions adopted by the emergency session in 1997 and 1998 and the full cessation of all settlement activities, and recommended that the High Contracting Parties to the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention) hold a conference on measures to enforce the Convention in the occupied Palestinian territory. The conference took place in Geneva on 15 July.

The Secretary-General appointed Terje Roed-Larsen as the new United Nations Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process and as his Personal Representative to the PLO and the Palestinian Authority. In that position, the Special Coordinator would also serve as the focal point for overall UN assistance to the Middle East. The United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of its establishment and continued to provide a wide-ranging programme of education, health, relief and social services to over 3.6 million Palestinian refugees living both in and outside camps in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, as well as in Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic. Despite pledges of voluntary contributions, UNRWA continued to experience severe financial difficulties.

During the year, the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories reported to the Assembly on the situation in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, the Gaza Strip and the Golan Heights. The Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People continued to mobilize international support for the Palestinians. Among other activities, it organized, in cooperation with the Government of Italy, the Bethlehem 2000 International Conference, which, in its final document, the Rome Declaration, stressed the urgency of bringing economic recovery to the Palestinian people.

The situation in southern Lebanon remained tense and volatile in 1999. Nevertheless, a significant development occurred in May and June with the withdrawal of Israeli forces from Jezzín and the return of that town to Lebanese jurisdiction, thereby reducing the area under Israeli control for the first time since 1985. The United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) pursued efforts to limit the conflict and protect inhabitants from its consequences. The mandates of UNIFIL and of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force in the Golan Heights were extended twice during the year, and the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization continued to assist both peacekeeping operations in their tasks. Some headway was made in Israel-Syrian Arab Republic relations with the resumption of negotiations in December 1999, under the auspices of the United States.

By decision 54/425 of 9 December, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the agenda item "Armed Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system concerning the peaceful use of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security" and included it in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth (2000) session. The item had been inscribed yearly on the Assembly's agenda since 1981, following the bombing by Israel of a nuclear research centre near Baghdad [YUN 1981, p. 275].

Peace process

Overall situation

The stalemate in the peace negotiations continued during the first six months of 1999. The escalation of Israeli settlement activities since the signing of the Wye River Memorandum [YUN 1998, p. 424], Israel's unilateral decision to halt its implementation of the Memorandum during the first six months of the year, the adoption in January 1999 by the Knesset of a new law that impeded the return of the occupied Syrian Arab Golan and Jerusalem to the Palestinian people, and the failure to hold a conference of the High Contracting Parties to the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention), as recommended by the General Assembly at its tenth emergency special session in 1998, led to the reconvening of the emergency session in February 1999. The Assembly called once again for the convening of a conference by the High Contracting Parties on measures to enforce the Convention in the occupied Palestinian territory. A UN meeting on the convening of the conference was held in June. On 15 July, the High Contracting Parties met in Geneva.

A few months after the election in May 1999 of a new Israeli Government, led by Ehud Barak, peace negotiations resumed between Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO). On 4 September, Prime Minister Barak and Palestinian Authority President Yasser Arafat signed the Sharm el-Sheikh Memorandum on Implementation Timeline of Outstanding Commitments of Agreements Signed and the Resumption of Permanent Status Negotiations. The agreement was a timetable for implementing the Wye River Memorandum. By the end of the five-month process laid down under the new agreement, Palestinians would control 41 per cent of the West Bank, some 350 Palestinian security prisoners would be released and negotiation teams would be established to begin intensive talks on a final peace accord. The target date for reaching the final-status deal was set for 13 September 2000. In addition, the southern "safe passage" route was to be opened and construction of the Gaza seaport was to commence on 1 October.

In an October report [A/54/457-S/1999/1050] on the question of Palestine (see p. 419) and the situation in the Middle East, the Secretary-General noted with cautious optimism that the signing of the Sharm el-Sheikh Memorandum had brought the peace process back on track. The new agreement contained a time line for implementation of all the commitments the two sides had made since the signing in 1993 of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements [YUN 1993, p. 521]. It also stated that the two sides had reaffirmed their understanding that the negotiations on permanent status would lead to the implementation of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) [YUN 1967, p. 257] and 338(1973) [YUN 1973, p. 213], and that they had agreed to conclude a comprehensive agreement on all permanent status issues within one year from the resumption of those negotiations, i.e., September 2000.

In resolution 54/42 of 1 December (see p. 420), the General Assembly, noting with satisfaction the signing of the Sharm el-Sheikh Memorandum, expressed its full support for the ongoing peace process, which began in Madrid in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 221], and the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements, as well as the subsequent agreements, including the 1995 Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip [YUN 1995, p. 626]. It also expressed the hope that the process would lead to the establishment of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East.

Committee on Palestinian Rights. In its annual report [A/54/35], the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian Rights) welcomed the resumption in August 1999 of the Israeli-Palestinian negotiations followed by the signing of the Sharm el-Sheikh Memorandum. The Committee noted with satisfaction the beginning of the Memorandum's implementation and hoped that it would be completed in good faith and in strict compliance with the agreed timetable.

Occupied territories

Communications (February). On 1 February [S/1999/105], Israel informed the Secretary-General that it had implemented its end of the Wye River Memorandum by fulfilling its responsibilities according to the first two stages of the time line, as well as its other undertakings set forth in the agreement. Specifically, Israel stated that it had implemented the first stage of redeployment, transferring a total of 491.4 square kilometres; completed protocols on the Gaza Airport, which was opened in November 1998, and opened an industrial park in Gaza, planned to provide 20,000 jobs; and was ready to complete the opening of the southern route of safe passage. According to Israel, with the exception of the modification of the PLO Charter and the enactment of a partial anti-incitement law, the PLO had not fulfilled any of its obligations under the Memorandum. Those failures seriously elevated the security threat to Israel. Israel insisted on peace with reciprocity and would go forward if the Palestinians implemented their obligations as well.

Responding on 9 February [A/53/823-S/1999/136], the Permanent Observer of Palestine said that the content of Israel's letter was regrettable at a time when the international community was well aware of the reality of the state of the peace process and the responsibility the Israeli Government bore in that regard, especially the freezing of the Wye River Memorandum.

Emergency special session

In accordance with General Assembly resolution ES-10/5 [YUN 1998, p. 425] and at the request of Jordan [A/ES-10/31], on behalf of the Group of Arab States at the United Nations, supported by the Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries [A/ES-10/32], the tenth emergency special session of the Assembly resumed on 5 February 1999 to discuss "Illegal Israeli actions in Occupied East Jerusalem and the rest of the Occupied Palestinian Territory". The session was first convened in April 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 394] and resumed in July and November of that year, as well as in March 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 425].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 February [meeting 12], the General Assembly adopted resolution ES-10/6 by recorded vote (115-2-5) [draft: A/ES-10/L.5/Rev.1] [agenda item 5].

Illegal Israeli actions in Occupied East Jerusalem and the rest of the Occupied Palestinian Territory

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the resolutions of its tenth emergency special session, namely, ES-10/2 of 25 April 1997, ES-10/3 of 15 July 1997, ES-10/4 of 13 November 1997 and ES-10/5 of 17 March 1998,

Determined to uphold the purposes and principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, international humanitarian law and all other instruments of international law, as well as relevant General Assembly and Security Council resolutions,

Reiterating the permanent responsibility of the United Nations towards the question of Palestine until it is solved in all its aspects,

Aware that Israel, the occupying Power, has not heeded the demands made in the resolutions of the tenth emergency special session and that it continues to carry out illegal actions in Occupied East Jerusalem and the rest of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, in particular settlement activity, including the construction of the new Israeli settlement at Jebel Abu Ghneim, the building of other new settlements and the expansion of existing settlements, the construction of bypass roads and the confiscation of lands,

Reaffirming that all illegal Israeli actions in Occupied East Jerusalem and the rest of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, especially settlement activities and the practical results thereof, remain contrary to international law and cannot be recognized, irrespective of the passage of time,

Expressing its appreciation to the Government of Switzerland, in its capacity as depositary of the four Geneva Conventions, and to the International Committee of the Red Cross for their efforts to uphold the integrity of the Conventions,

Increasingly concerned about the persistent violations by Israel, the occupying Power, of the provisions of the Fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

Conscious of the serious dangers arising from persistent violations and grave breaches of the Fourth Geneva Convention and the responsibilities arising therefrom,

Aware of the upcoming fiftieth anniversary of the four Geneva Conventions, which is an occasion for renewed determination to promote international humanitarian law further and to reaffirm the undertaking by the High Contracting Parties to respect and to ensure respect for the Conventions in all circumstances in accordance with common article 1,

Taking note of the measure taken by the Government of Switzerland to organize a meeting between the Palestinian and Israeli sides, in the presence of the International Committee of the Red Cross, which was held at Geneva from 9 to 11 June 1998 and was aimed at examining ways to contribute to the effective application of the Fourth Geneva Convention in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and expressing disappointment that Israeli violations of the Convention continued unabated in spite of such a measure,

Taking note also of the meeting of experts of the High Contracting Parties, convened from 27 to 29 October 1998 at the invitation of the Government of Switzerland, in its capacity as the depositary of the Convention, on general problems concerning the Convention, in particular in occupied territories, as well as of the Chairman's report of the proceedings of that meeting,

Gravely concerned at the suspension, on 20 December 1998, by the Government of Israel of the implementation of the Wye River Memorandum, signed at the White House in Washington, D.C., on 23 October 1998, including the negotiations on the final settlement, which should be concluded by 4 May 1999,

Determined to persist in its work to bring about compliance by Israel, the occupying Power, with the terms of resolutions adopted by the tenth emergency special session,

Aware that, under the circumstances, it should continue to consider the situation with a view to making appropriate recommendations to the States Members of the United Nations in accordance with General Assembly resolution 377 A (V) of 3 November 1950,

1. Reiterates its condemnation of the failure of the Government of Israel to comply with the provisions of resolutions ES-10/2, ES-10/3, ES-10/4 and ES-10/5;

2. Expresses its grave concern at the adoption by the Knesset of the law of 26 January 1999 and the legislation of 27 January 1999, and reaffirms that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, which have altered or purport to alter the character, legal status and demographic composition of Occupied East Jerusalem and the rest of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, are all null and void and have no validity whatsoever;

3. Reiterates in the strongest terms all the demands made of Israel, the occupying Power, in the above-mentioned resolutions of the tenth emergency special session, including the immediate and full cessation of the construction at Jebel Abu Ghneim and of all other Israeli settlement activities, as well as of all illegal measures and actions in Occupied East Jerusalem, the acceptance of the de jure applicability of the Fourth Geneva Convention and compliance with relevant Security Council resolutions, the cessation and reversal of all actions taken illegally against Palestinian Jerusalemites and the provision of information about goods produced or manufactured in the settlements;

4. Reiterates also its previous recommendations to Member States for the cessation of all forms of assistance and support for illegal Israeli activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including Jerusalem, in particular settlement activities and actively to discourage activities that directly contribute to any construction or development of those settlements;

5. Affirms that, in spite of the actual deterioration of the Middle East peace process as a result of the lack of compliance by the Government of Israel with the existing agreements, increased efforts must be exerted to bring the peace process back on track and to continue the process towards the achievement of a just, comprehensive and lasting peace in the region on the basis of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) and the principle of land for peace, as well as Security Council resolution 425(1978);

6. Reiterates its recommendation that the High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention convene a conference on measures to enforce the Convention in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including Jerusalem, and to ensure respect thereof in accordance with common article 1, and further recommends that the High Contracting Parties convene the said conference on 15 July 1999 at the United Nations Office at Geneva;

7. Invites the Government of Switzerland, in its capacity as the depositary of the Geneva Convention, to undertake whatever preparations are necessary prior to the conference;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary facilities available to enable the High Contracting Parties to convene the conference;

9. Expresses its confidence that Palestine, as a party directly concerned, will participate in the above-mentioned conference;

10. Decides to adjourn the tenth emergency special session temporarily and to authorize the President of the most recent General Assembly to resume its meeting upon request from Member States.

Speaking before the vote [A/ES-10/PV.10], the Permanent Observer of Palestine said that Israel continued to construct settlements in Jerusalem and in the rest of the occupied Palestinian territory, to confiscate land and to build so-called bypass roads, separating the West Bank from the Gaza Strip. In addition, Israel had suspended implementation of the Wye River Memorandum on 20 December 1998 and froze the final status negotiations, which were scheduled to be completed by 4 May 1999, when the five-year transition period agreed upon by the two sides would come to an end. The Permanent Observer recalled that the Assembly, since 1997 in resolution ES-10/3 [YUN 1997, p. 402], had been recommending the convening of the High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention and, in resolution ES-10/5 [YUN 1998, p. 425], had requested Switzerland, in its capacity as the depositary of the Convention, to prepare for a conference on measures to enforce the Convention in the occupied territories. The Permanent Observer stressed that the time had come for the convening of the conference and hoped that the meeting would take place no later than 8 April.

Israel said that the High Contracting Parties had not met since 1949 to discuss the Fourth Geneva Convention or its application, even after wars of aggression against UN Member States. The calling for a conference of those Parties was an anti-Israel initiative that would be a precedent for selectively politicizing the application of the Geneva Conventions to any conflict and would compromise international humanitarian institutions that had remained neutral since 1949. Moreover, the Fourth Geneva Convention had been and continued to be applied in the West Bank and Gaza Strip and, in fact, Israel was the only country in the world to apply it at all.

The Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian Rights said that, after its suspension of the Wye River Memorandum, Israel imposed additional conditions on the Palestinian side, which could only result in delays and bring disillusionment to the Palestinian people. That decision re-attested to Israel's lack of good faith, since it always reneged on agreements it had entered into. In addition, on 26 January 1999, the Knesset adopted a law whose basic objective was to block future negotiations by tightening the conditions for the restoration of land to the Palestinians of East Jerusalem and to Syria in the occupied Syrian Golan. The Committee considered the convening of a conference of the High Contracting Parties at a specific date of crucial importance.

Egypt [A/ES-10/PV.12] said that, since the emergency special session adopted its first resolution in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 395], Israel had continued to implement and intensify its settlement plans in the occupied Palestinian territory, including in particular East Jerusalem, and had confiscated more territory after signing of the Wye River Memorandum. By doing so, Israel was ignoring not only the requests embodied in the Assembly's resolutions on the matter, but also the consensus opinion expressed by the international community for 30 years regarding the applicability of the Fourth Geneva Convention to all the Arab and Palestinian territories occupied by Israel in June 1967. The continuing settlement activities, the confiscation of Palestinian and Arab land, the construction of bypass roads and the implementation of policies of closure of the areas under the control of the Palestinian Authority (PA) constituted serious violations of the Fourth Geneva Convention and justified the Assembly's recommendation to specify a date for convening the conference.

The United States said that the draft resolution's call for a meeting of all the High Contracting Parties would serve only to damage the climate necessary for productive and ultimately successful direct negotiations between the Palestinians and Israel. The draft's language and its proposed steps prejudged negotiations on permanent status issues and hampered the chances for eventually achieving peace. The United States remained concerned that the draft resolution, like similar ones in the past, constituted an unacceptable assault on the basic uses and meaning of the Fourth Geneva Convention. The United States wanted to see the Wye River Memorandum implemented in its entirety by both sides as soon as possible and progress in the permanent status negotiations.

The Observer of Switzerland, who participated in the debate at the Assembly's invitation, said his Government believed that the Convention was fully applicable to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem. Major violations of the Convention had been noted that affected the development and rights of the civilian population. Switzerland, as the Convention's depository, convened two meetings: one for the Palestinians and the Israelis with the participation of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) in June 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 427], and the other for experts of the High Contracting Parties in October 1998 [ibid.]. Convening such a conference, however, raised many questions that the Geneva Conventions and their additional protocols did not resolve, and which only the States parties could address. Since the October 1998 meeting, Switzerland had undertaken a new round of consultations with the States parties to the Conventions, ICRC and the organizations more directly concerned on the possible convening of conferences devoted to specific situations. Switzerland said that it could consider taking an active role in the convening and holding of a conference only if States parties first defined a solid basis for the implementation of such a measure.

Israel replied that the attempt to convene a conference of the signatories to the Fourth Geneva Convention with respect to the West Bank and Gaza was a distortion of international humanitarian law for political interests. Moreover, no conference intended to address the status of civilians in time of war could have any relevance whatsoever to the Israeli situation, since 97 per cent of the Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza were under Palestinian rule.

Speaking after the vote, the Observer of Palestine said that the resolution constituted a step forward because it called for the High Contracting Parties to meet on 15 July 1999 in Geneva to consider measures to enforce the Convention in the occupied Palestinian territories, including Jerusalem.

Communications (March-November). By a 22 March letter [A/53/869-S/1999/308] to the Secretary-General, the United Arab Emirates transmitted a press release issued by the Ministerial Council of the Gulf Cooperation Council at its seventieth session (Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, 14-15 March) condemning Israel's policy of establishing settlements on occupied Arab land, its decision to extend its geographical borders to include "Al-Quds Al-Sharif" (Jerusalem), and its modification of the city's demographic structure. In that regard, the Council condemned the Israeli Parliament's 26 January decision on a new law impeding the return of the occupied Syrian Arab Golan to Syria and of Jerusalem to the Palestinian people, as well as the Israeli Government's decision to include the Lebanese village of Arnoun in the occupied border strip in southern Lebanon (see p. 442). The Council reaffirmed its belief that peace could not be achieved unless legitimate Arab rights were restored and a commitment made to relevant UN resolutions, the terms of reference of the Madrid conference and the principle of land for peace.

On 25 March [A/53/879-S/1999/334], the Permanent Observer of Palestine, responding to comments in the media and to the Israeli Foreign Minister's statement that General Assembly resolution 181(II) [YUN 1947-48, p.247] was "null and void", said that the resolution, among other things, provided the legal basis for the existence of both the Jewish and the Arab States in Mandated Palestine. The Israeli claim was therefore illegal and inadmissible.

Israel responded on 30 March [A/54/77-S/1999/365] that resolution 181(II) was made null and void by the Arab States and the Palestinian leadership in the aftermath of its adoption in November 1947. In addition, it had never been part of the agreed foundation for the peace process between Israel and the Palestinians. The letters of invitation to the 1991 Madrid peace conference [YUN 1991, p.221] and the Oslo Agreements, which comprised the 1993 Declaration of Principles [YUN 1993, p.521] and the 1995 Interim Agreement [YUN 1995, p. 626], signed between Israel and the PLO provided that permanent status negotiations were to be based only on Security Council resolutions 242(1967) [YUN 1967, p. 257] and 338(1973) [YUN 1973, p. 213].

The European Union (EU), on 25 March [A/54/76-S/1999/348], welcomed the decision by the Palestinian National Union and associated bodies to reaffirm the nullification of the provisions in the Palestinian National Charter which had called for the destruction of Israel and to reaffirm their commitment to recognize and live in peace with Israel. However, the EU remained concerned at the deadlock in the peace process and called on the parties to implement fully the Wye River Memorandum. The EU was convinced that the creation of a democratic, viable and peaceful sovereign Palestinian State on the basis of existing agreements and through negotiations would be the best guarantee of Israel's security and of Israel's acceptance as an equal partner in the region.

In a 19 April letter [A/54/83-S/1999/464] to the Secretary-General, Israel said that as 4 May 1999 approached, it was necessary to clarify the precise legal obligations of Israel and the PLO in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip with respect to the interim arrangements created by the Oslo Agreements, since repeated Palestinian arguments claimed that the transitional period would end on 4 May and the ensuing legal and political vacuum should be filled by a unilateral declaration of a Palestinian State. Israel noted that the original hope of the parties was indeed to reach agreement on permanent status arrangements by 4 May, while transitional interim agreements were being implemented. That, though, was only a suggested target date. The interim agreements were to continue until the permanent status negotiations had been concluded and the status of the disputed territories was not to be altered until those negotiations were completed. It was for that reason that the Interim Agreement contained a date for its entry into force but no date for its conclusion. Israel stressed that the Palestinians had refused to negotiate a permanent status agreement; therefore, they could not be permitted to rely on the absence of such an agreement to justify a unilateral declaration of statehood.

By a 23 April letter [A/53/923-S/1999/474], the Permanent Observer Mission of Palestine informed the Secretary-General that Israel, on 22 April, had decided to issue closure orders against PA offices at the Orient House in East Jerusalem in violation of international law and UN resolutions, as well as agreements reached between the two parties.

Israel contended on 3 May [A/54/92-S/1999/507] that PA governmental activity at the Orient House, or at any other location outside the areas under Palestinian territorial jurisdiction, constituted a clear violation of Israel-PLO agreements. Such activity was politically motivated and designed to change the legal status and character of the city with no legal validity whatsoever.

In identical letters of 11 May to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President [A/53/972-S/1999/597], the Permanent Observer of Palestine said that implementation of further closure orders issued on 10 May was delayed only as a result of a petition by an Israeli group to the Israeli High Court.

On 3 May [A/53/935-S/1999/505], the Permanent Observer of Palestine transmitted a 29 April letter by Yasser Arafat, PLO Chairman and PA President, and a copy of the final communique adopted by the Palestinian Central Council at its extraordinary session (Gaza, 27-29 April). Mr. Arafat said that the Council addressed all aspects of the political situation, the peace process, the options open to the Palestinian leadership with respect to the end of the interim period on 4 May, and the establishment of an independent State of Palestine with "Al-Quds Al-Sharif" as its capital. The Council also decided to form a number of working committees, including a special committee on the draft State constitution, and called on Israel to halt its policy of settlement and the expropriation of Palestinian land.

On 4 May [A/53/938-S/1999/512], the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian Rights expressed the Committee's full support for the decisions taken by the extraordinary session of the Palestinian Central Council. The Committee was hopeful that the Council's statement would lead to the revitalization of the peace process and called on Israel to return to the negotiating table, without preconditions and in good faith, so as to allow the permanent status negotiations to proceed towards a comprehensive and lasting settlement of the question of Palestine.

In identical letters of 7 May to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President [A/53/946-S/1999/525], Algeria, on behalf of the members of the League of Arab States, referred to the fiftieth anniversary of the adoption by the General Assembly of resolution 273(III) [YUN 1948-49, p. 405], admitting Israel to UN membership. The Arab States stressed that it was incumbent on Israel to discharge the obligations and fulfil the undertakings that it had assumed upon UN membership. They called on Israel to withdraw, without qualifications or conditions, from all the occupied Palestinian territories, including Jerusalem, from the occupied Syrian Golan back to the lines of 4 June 1967, and from the occupied zone in southern Lebanon. Israel also had to desist from its policy of settler colonialism and respect the national rights of the Palestinian people and principally its right to exercise self-determination and establish an independent Palestinian State.

On 11 May [A/53/972-S/1999/597], the Permanent Observer of Palestine said that Israel had funnelled in additional financial resources for settlement activity in Jerusalem. According to him, the Israeli Government had pledged to provide each settler who moved into a new neighbourhood in occupied East Jerusalem with $5,000. Settlement activities also continued in several locations throughout the occupied Palestinian territory, with the expansion of already existing settlements and the creation of new ones. On 20 May [A/53/968-S/1999/587], the Permanent Observer further informed the Secretary-General of resumed Israeli settlement activities in and around East Jerusalem, specifically at Jebel Abu-Ghneim and at Ras al-Amud. On 3 June [A/53/995-S/1999/640], the Permanent Observer informed the Secretary-General of the Israeli Government's decision the previous week to enlarge the Ma'ale Adumim settlement by approximately 12,000 dunums (3,250 acres). The settlement was located approximately 6 kilometres east of Jerusalem and, if implemented, the plan would link the settlement with the enlarged municipal boundaries of Jerusalem, thereby separating the northern half of the West Bank from its southern half, making it all the more difficult to apply international law and legitimacy with respect to Jerusalem.

On 5 August [A/53/1032-S/1999/854, A/ES-10/35], the Permanent Observer said that the Israeli army had announced its intention to allow 27 of the 31 settler encampments that were set near existing settlements since the signing of the Wye River Memorandum to remain intact. The Permanent Observer noted that that decision was the first Israeli reaction to the conference of the High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention (see p. 415). For the occupying Power, itself a High Contracting Party, to continue such serious violations of the Convention was a matter of grave concern; the recent Israeli actions, if not reversed, required serious consideration and follow-up by the High Contracting Parties.

On 21 October [A/54/485-S/1999/1081], the Permanent Observer informed the Secretary-General that the previous week the Israeli Government had taken a decision related to the so-called hilltop settlements, established by Jewish settlers after the signing of the Wye River Memorandum. That decision, while removing some of those settlements, effectively meant that Israel was proceeding with the establishment of 32 new settlements in the occupied Palestinian territory. Furthermore, the Israeli Government continued to issue tenders for the construction of additional housing units in existing settlements, including at Jebel Abu-Ghneim and in the Gaza Strip. Thousands of acres of land had also been confiscated by the Israeli army in the southern West Bank. The Permanent Observer noted that it was very unfortunate that all of the above was happening at a time when some hope had been emerging with regard to the implementation of the Sharm el-Sheikh Memorandum.

In related matters, on 20 July [A/54/173-S/1999/808], Israel's Foreign Minister said that the new Israeli Government was determined to advance the Middle East peace process on all fronts. On a practical level, the Government would accelerate diplomatic activities by focusing on the Wye River agreement, the renewal of the final status negotiations with the Palestinians and the advancement of negotiations between Israel, Syria and Lebanon. It would also restart the multilateral process, focusing on regional issues, such as the economy, water, environment, refugees and security. The Foreign Minister stressed that there could be no progress in the peace process against a background of terrorism and hostile political activity. He hoped that a solution would be found for the normalization of Israel's involvement in the UN system, since Israel's exclusion from any regional group had deprived it of its right to be an equal participant in the United Nations.

By an 8 November letter [A/54/538-S/1999/1150] to the Secretary-General, Israel said that on 6 November three pipe bombs exploded near the main shopping centre of Netanya, a coastal town in Israel. At least 14 people were wounded in the blast. The attack took place a day before the start of the permanent status negotiations between Israel and the PA. Israel affirmed that it would not allow acts of terror to weaken its resolve to advance the peace process.

Special Committee on Israeli Practices. In its thirty-first report [A/54/325], the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories (Special Committee on Israeli Practices) stated that settlement activity had accelerated markedly after the signature of the Wye River Memorandum in 1998 and in particular subsequent to the unilateral suspension by Israel for six months of its implementation of the Memorandum. There were reportedly 194 Jewish settlements, although some Palestinian estimates placed that number at some 220. New settlements were established in 1999 in all parts of the West Bank, especially around Bethlehem, as well as in the occupied Syrian Golan. In the West Bank and Gaza, aside from East Jerusalem, the settler population had increased from 116,400 in 1993 to 175,000 in 1998. The Israeli Knesset had approved new funding for settlement expansion throughout the occupied territories. The Israeli army had assisted in the expropriation of land and, on occasion, had imposed curfews on the localities from which the land was to be confiscated. In general, Palestinians did not accept compensation for confiscated lands because they believed that the expropriations were political in nature and not due to any natural expansion. In addition, there were no legal procedures for confiscating land.

Report of Secretary-General. On 28 July [A/54/183], the Secretary-General informed the Assembly that Israel had not replied to his June request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement the relevant provisions of resolution 53/55 [YUN 1998, p.433], demanding that Israel, among other things, cease all construction of new settlements in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee [A/54/576], adopted resolution 54/78 by recorded vote (149-3-3) [agenda item 89].

Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Recalling its relevant resolutions, including those adopted at its tenth emergency special session, as well as relevant Security Council resolutions, including resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967, 446(1979) of 22 March 1979, 465(1980) of 1 March 1980 and 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan,

Aware of the Middle East peace process started at Madrid and the agreements reached between the parties, in particular the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements of 13 September 1993 and the Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip of 28 September 1995,

Expressing grave concern about the continuation by Israel of settlement activities, including the ongoing construction of the new settlement at Jebel Abu-Ghneim, in violation of international humanitarian law, relevant United Nations resolutions and the agreements reached between the parties,

Taking into consideration the detrimental impact of Israeli settlement policies, decisions and activities on the Middle East peace process,

Gravely concerned in particular about the dangerous situation resulting from actions taken by the illegal armed Israeli settlers in the occupied territory, as illustrated by the massacre of Palestinian worshippers by an illegal Israeli settler at Al-Khalil on 25 February 1994,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms that Israeli settlements in the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan are illegal and an obstacle to peace and economic and social development;

2. Calls upon Israel to accept the de jure applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan and to abide scrupulously by the provisions of the Convention, in particular article 49;

3. Demands complete cessation of the construction of the new settlement at Jebel Abu-Ghneim and of all Israeli settlement activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan;

4. Stresses the need for full implementation of Security Council resolution 904(1994) of 18 March 1994, in which, among other things, the Council called upon Israel, the occupying Power, to continue to take and implement measures, including confiscation of arms, with the aim of preventing illegal acts of violence by Israeli settlers, and called for measures to be taken to guarantee the safety and protection of the Palestinian civilians in the occupied territory;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Jerusalem

East Jerusalem, where most of the city's Arab inhabitants lived, remained one of the most sensitive issues in the Middle East peace process. The construction and expansion of the Jebel Abu-Ghneim settlement to the south of East Jerusalem increased the level of hostilities and distrust in Israeli-Palestinian relations. The General Assembly's tenth emergency special session called once again for an end to Israel's settlement activities in and around East Jerusalem (see p. 402).

Special Committee on Israeli Practices. In its annual report [A/54/325], the Special Committee on Israeli Practices described restrictions imposed by the Israeli authorities on Jerusalem's Palestinian population and Israeli violations of their human rights.

The situation of Palestinians living in East Jerusalem had become more precarious since the Committee's last report [YUN 1998, p. 434]. Palestinian inhabitants continued to lose their residency rights when their identity cards were revoked and confiscated by Israeli authorities. More than 2,000 family identity cards were confiscated between 1996 and 1998 (700 in 1998), which affected some 8,000 persons. Palestinians who lost their identity cards since their "centre of life" was found not to be in Jerusalem were usually given 15 days to leave Israel. The Special Committee was informed that Palestinian identity cards were revoked in order to change the demographic composition of East Jerusalem with a view to reducing the Palestinian component. Additional difficulties for the Palestinian population were brought about by the alteration of the boundaries or city limits of East Jerusalem.

At the same time, the Israeli population in East Jerusalem had increased by tens of thousands in recent years, mainly as a consequence of the construction of new settlements around the city. The Committee was informed that 15 Israeli settlements with 45,000 housing units had been established in East Jerusalem since 1967, on 24 square kilometres of land confiscated for public use. The Israeli population in East Jerusalem stood at 170,000. Building in neighbourhoods such as Ras al-Amud and Silwan in East Jerusalem was exacerbating the trend. The Israeli policy concerning Jerusalem was to create and maintain that majority and remove any distinction between the eastern and western parts of the city.

Since the Israeli authorities considered Jerusalem a part of Israel, Palestinians from other parts of the occupied territories faced considerable difficulties in obtaining permits to enter the city. The lack of access to East Jerusalem had repercussions for the inhabitants of the West Bank as the principal Palestinian health, education, religious and cultural facilities were located there. Access of Palestinian health workers and patients to East Jerusalem had been restricted further during the period under review.

The Special Committee believed that the circumstances of East Jerusalem, because of their particular complexity, required special attention and emphasis in view of what seemed to be a very confusing environment in terms of residency rights, travel limitations, isolation from relatives and friends in other parts of the territories, disruption of family life and other aspects to which its attention was drawn.

Transfer of diplomatic missions

Report of Secretary-General. On 25 October [A/54/495], the Secretary-General reported that six Member States had replied to his request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement General Assembly resolution 53/37 [YUN 1998, p. 436], which addressed the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem in violation of Security Council resolution 478(1980) [YUN 1980, p. 426] and called on them to abide by the relevant UN resolutions.

Committee on Palestinian Rights. In its annual report [A/54/35], the Committee on Palestinian Rights said that Israel continued to challenge and violate the internationally recognized status of Jerusalem. In a communique issued on 14 March 1999, the Israeli Cabinet challenged the legal status of the city by stating that Jerusalem's position as a corpus separatum was legally incorrect and unacceptable to Israel. It declared further that Israel would never accept the "division or internationalization" of the city. The Committee was particularly alarmed by the beginning of the actual Israeli construction work in May 1999 at Jebel Abu-Ghneim, south of East Jerusalem, and at the Ras al-Amud neighbourhood. The Committee stressed the illegality of the continued Israeli policy of "silent transfer" of Palestinians from East Jerusalem.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/37 [draft: A/54/L.40 & Add.1] by recorded vote (139-1-3) [agenda item 43].

Jerusalem

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/120 E of 10 December 1981, 37/123 C of 16 December 1982, 38/180 C of 19 December 1983, 39/146 C of 14 December 1984, 40/168 C of 16 December 1985, 41/162 C of 4 December 1986, 42/209 D of 11 December 1987, 43/54 C of 6 December 1988, 44/40 C of 4 December 1989, 45/83 C of 13 December 1990, 46/82 B of 16 December 1991, 47/63 B of 11 December 1992, 48/59 A of 14 December 1993, 49/87 A of 16 December 1994, 50/22 A of 4 December 1995, 51/27 of 4 December 1996, 52/53 of 9 December 1997 and 53/37 of 2 December 1998, in which it, inter alia, determined that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, which have altered or purported to alter the character and status of the Holy City of Jerusalem, in particular the so-called "Basic Law" on Jerusalem and the proclamation of Jerusalem as the capital of Israel, were null and void and must be rescinded forthwith,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 478(1980) of 20 August 1980, in which the Council, inter alia, decided not to recognize the "Basic Law" and called upon those States which had established diplomatic missions at Jerusalem to withdraw such missions from the Holy City,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Determines that the decision of Israel to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Holy City of Jerusalem is illegal and therefore null and void and has no validity whatsoever;

2. Deplores the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem in violation of Security Council resolution 478(1980) and their refusal to comply with the provisions of that resolution;

3. Calls once more upon those States to abide by the provisions of the relevant United Nations resolutions, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and social situation

A report on the economic and social repercussions of the Israeli occupation on the living conditions of Palestinians in the occupied territory, including Jerusalem, and of the Arab population of the occupied Syrian Golan [A/54/152-E/1999/92] was prepared by the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA), in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1998/32 [YUN 1998, p. 436] and General Assembly resolution 53/196 [ibid., p. 437]; it covered the period since its previous report [ibid., p. 436].

The repercussions of Israeli occupation on Palestinian health care had been severe. In education, movement restrictions continued to affect school attendance for those students who had to cross Israeli-controlled checkpoints. Economic development in Israeli settlements also had deleterious effects on the Palestinian community, and the numerous restrictions imposed by Israel for security reasons negatively affected Palestinians. The confiscation of lands declared by Israel as "State land" as a prelude to their transfer to Israeli control had a critical impact on the Palestinian community. Israeli occupation was also affecting and undermining the Palestinians' supply of drinking water as well as its quality, resulting in an increase of infectious diseases.

The unemployment situation among Palestinians in the occupied territories remained critical, owing in particular to closures and Israel's increased reliance on expatriate workers from outside the region. The number of Palestinian workers in Israel dropped from an average of 120,000 on a monthly basis in 1992 to 45,800 during the first half of 1998. Closures had an adverse effect on the continuity and regularity of production, marketing, income generation and employment of Palestinian workers. The macro-economic impact of Israeli occupation on the occupied Palestinian territory inhibited investment and growth as a result of the continued ambiguity of the legal and political situation.

In the Syrian Golan, while incentives and investment continued to promote the Israeli presence, the Arab population faced further deterioration in living conditions due to Israel's restrictions on employment and education, as well as prohibitive levels of taxation. The employment available to the Syrian population in the Golan was limited to unskilled and semi-skilled daily wage labour, and, in most cases, those workers had no access to social benefits or health insurance.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July [meeting 45], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1999/53 [draft: E/1999/L.32] by roll-call vote (44-1-3) [agenda item 11].

Economic and social repercussions of the Israeli occupation on the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and the Arab population in the occupied Syrian Golan

Reaffirming the principle of the permanent sovereignty of peoples under foreign occupation over their natural resources,

Convinced that the Israeli occupation impedes efforts to achieve sustainable development and a sound economic environment in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan,

Gravely concerned about the deterioration of economic and living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and of the Arab population of the occupied Syrian Golan, and the exploitation by Israel, the occupying Power, of their natural resources,

Aware of the important work being done by the United Nations and the specialized agencies in support of the economic and social development of the Palestinian people,

Conscious of the urgent need for the development of the economic and social infrastructure of the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and for the improvement of the living conditions of the Palestinian people as a key element of a lasting peace and stability,

1. Stresses the need to preserve the territorial integrity of all of the occupied Palestinian territory and to guarantee the freedom of movement of persons and goods in the territory, including the removal of restrictions on going into and from East Jerusalem, and the freedom of movement to and from the outside world;

2. Also stresses the vital importance of the construction and operation of the seaport in Gaza and safe passage to the economic and social development of the Palestinian people;

3. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to cease its measures against the Palestinian people, in particular the closure of the occupied Palestinian territory, the enforced isolation of Palestinian towns, the destruction of homes and the isolation of Jerusalem;

4. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the Palestinian people and the Arab population of the occupied Syrian Golan to all their natural and economic resources, and calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, not to exploit, endanger or cause loss or depletion of these resources;

6. Stresses the importance of the work of the organizations and agencies of the United Nations, and of the United Nations Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories under the auspices of the Secretary-General;

7. Urges Member States to encourage private foreign investment in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, in infrastructure, job-creation projects and social development, in order to alleviate the hardship of the Palestinian people and improve living conditions;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on the implementation of the present resolution and to continue to include, in the report of the Special Coordinator, an update on the living conditions of the Palestinian people, in collaboration with relevant United Nations agencies;

9. Decides to include the item entitled "Economic and social repercussions of the Israeli occupation on the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and the Arab population in the occupied Syrian Golan" in the agenda of its substantive session of 2000.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December (meeting 87), the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/54/591], adopted resolution 54/230 by recorded vote (145-3-6) [agenda item 103].

Permanent sovereignty of the Palestinian people in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including Jerusalem, and of the Arab population in the occupied Syrian Golan over their natural resources

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/196 of 15 December 1998 and taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/53 of 29 July 1999,

Reaffirming the principle of the permanent sovereignty of peoples under foreign occupation over their natural resources,

Other aspects

Special Committee on Israeli Practices. On 8 September, the Special Committee on Israeli Practices, established in 1968 [YUN 1968, p. 556], reported for the thirty-first time to the General Assembly on events in the territories it considered to be occupied—the Golan Heights, the West Bank, including Jerusalem, and the Gaza Strip [A/54/325].

In addition to that annual report, the Special Committee, at the Assembly's request, submitted two periodic reports in 1999, one covering the period from 6 November 1998 to 31 January 1999 [A/54/73], and the other covering the period from 1 February to 31 August 1999 [A/54/73/Add.1]. The three reports contained information obtained from the Arab and Israeli press; testimony from persons from the occupied territories; and communications and reports from Governments, organizations and individuals. The Committee benefited from the cooperation of Egypt, Jordan, Syria, Palestinian representatives and the UN resident coordinator/United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) Resident Representative in Syria. As in the past, the Committee received no response from Israel to its requests for cooperation and was unable to obtain access to the occupied territories, which had been the case since 1968.

The Special Committee was informed that restrictions in the occupied territories of Gaza, the West Bank and East Jerusalem, with respect to land, housing and water, severely affected the Palestinians, and the confiscation of Palestinian-owned land continued, as well as the establishment of new and expansion of existing settlements.

In view of its natural scarcity and the manner of its utilization by the settlements, water was one of the most serious problems for the Palestinians. Israel controlled most of the West Bank aquifer, as well as the digging of artesian wells, and it had free use of some 80 per cent of water resources in the area, while the remaining 20 per cent was distributed by an Israeli State company. Some Palestinian villages had no water at all, while in others water shortages and cuts affected the cultivation of crops.

The general situation with respect to housing remained virtually unchanged. Severe housing shortages were reported in Gaza and the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, due, among other things, to the fact that the master plans for Palestinian towns and villages had not been modified since 1948, despite the increase in population; and to Israel's policy of not allowing the Palestinian population in Jerusalem to increase beyond 28 per cent. House demolitions continued throughout the period under review, and had been stepped up in East Jerusalem. It was estimated that some 30,000 persons had been left homeless since 1967 and 1,300 structures demolished since 1990. Palestinian families whose homes had been demolished had been living in abandoned buildings, buses and tents. Some Israeli human rights activist groups who cooperated with their Palestinian counterparts resisted demolitions of Palestinian houses and rebuilt structures that had been demolished, an illegal act in Israel since it was considered an act of resistance against the occupation.

Restrictions imposed by the Israeli authorities on the movement of Palestinians within and between parts of the occupied territories and departure for and return from travel abroad continued. In the West Bank, in particular, there were additional complications for travel between areas A, B and C established subsequent to the Oslo Accords. Requirements concerning identity cards and travel permits were complicated and there was a system of controls of movement through checkpoints and closures. The freedom of movement of Palestinians between the West Bank and East Jerusalem and the West Bank and Gaza remained severely restricted. The average number of work permits issued to Palestinians to work in Israel was about 55,000 in 1998. Restrictions were particularly visible at border crossings and checkpoints. Violence against Palestinian men at military checkpoints had resulted in killings on a number of occasions. According to representatives of Israeli organizations, reports of violence at checkpoints by the army or police were often not taken seriously by the Israeli judicial authorities.

The average number of Palestinian prisoners had been quite stable over the past years, averaging around 3,000. At the end of 1998, some 2,253 Palestinian political prisoners were in Israeli prisons. The conditions of detention of Palestinian prisoners had been described as very bad. Among the principal complaints were inadequate medical care and neglect, overcrowding, lack of hygiene, bad ventilation and bad and insufficient food. Allegations of psychological and physical torture by the Israeli General Security Service (CSS) against Palestinian prisoners were brought to the attention of the Special Committee. In May 1998, the Committee against Torture (the monitoring body of the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 39/46 [YUN 1984, p. 813]) concluded that some of the methods used by CSS constituted torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. Some members of the Knesset, civil rights activists, including doctors and lawyers, and human rights organizations had raised the issue of torture of Palestinian prisoners and had called for the establishment of ethics committees while trying to raise awareness of such issues among the Israeli public.

The prolonged Israeli occupation had affected the lives of all Palestinians in the occupied territories with respect to health, including access to medical care, psychological well-being, education and the economy. Numerous Palestinians had been killed, injured or permanently incapacitated as a result of violent incidents involving the Israeli army and security forces, as well as settlers. Many inhabitants, in particular former detainees and prisoners, had sustained permanent bodily and psychological disabilities. The integration of disabled persons into Palestinian society remained difficult, due to the general economic situation and to a lack of adequate rehabilitation centres. The Israeli Government had decided not to compensate those persons injured by the Israeli army during the intifada (the Palestinian uprising which started in 1987). The occupation had also engendered depression and pessimism not only among young people but also in Palestinian society as a whole.

The average unemployment rate in the occupied territories dropped to 14.5 per cent in 1998, owing to the creation of 25,000 additional jobs and to a reduction in the number of days workers were prevented from going to jobs in Israel. Nevertheless, the average in Gaza remained high, at around 20 per cent. It was estimated that the Palestinian labour force surpassed 600,000 in 1998, of whom some 400,000 were employed in the occupied territories. It was also estimated that more than 100,000 Palestinians made a living by working in Israel.

The Special Committee visited the Syrian Arab Republic and reported on the Israeli occupied Syrian Golan Heights (for details, see p. 450).

The Special Committee observed that the Israeli authorities had put in place a comprehensive and elaborate system of laws and regulations and administrative measures that affected all aspects of the lives of the Palestinian and Syrian peoples in the occupied territories. They were designed to meet the policy objectives of the Israeli Government and to enhance its control over the territories and their population. Though the Committee welcomed the resumption of dialogue in the peace process, it stressed that the sense of alienation, exclusion and separation from their homeland experienced by the Palestinians remained a matter of concern. The Committee called on the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in consultation with the Secretary-General, to establish a system of continuous communication with the Israeli authorities with a view to improving the difficult circumstances under which the Palestinian and Syrian peoples of the occupied territories lived.

In a later report [A/55/373], the Committee presented updated information on the human rights situation in the occupied territories during the last four months of 1999, providing details on restrictions relating to land, housing and water, as well as those affecting movement of Palestinians within and between the occupied territories, and the manner of implementation of restrictions and their economic, social and cultural effects on the Palestinian population. Also included was information on the occupied Syrian Arab Golan.

The report also provided information on the implementation of the Sharm el-Sheikh Memorandum (see p. 401). In accordance with the agreement, on 10 September 1999, the first stage of Israeli redeployment in the West Bank was completed. Seven per cent of Area C (Israeli control) was converted into the status of Area B (Palestinian civilian control), where Israel controlled security and the Palestinians exercised civilian control. That brought the total area under Palestinian civilian or civilian-security control to 36 per cent of the West Bank. The second redeployment, scheduled to take place on 15 November, was postponed due to disagreement between the two sides on the location of the withdrawal.

On 25 October, the first safe passage for Palestinians between Gaza and the West Bank was opened, a month after the target date outlined in the Sharm el-Sheikh Memorandum. On 9 September, Israel released 199 Palestinian security prisoners and, on 15 October, it fulfilled its commitment to the Memorandum by releasing another 151 Palestinian political prisoners. On 29 December, it was reported that Israel had released, as a goodwill gesture, 26 security prisoners, which represented the third group of prisoners Israel had agreed to free in accordance with the Memorandum.

Also, on 4 November, the Palestinian Civil Aviation and Airport Director-General announced that Gaza International Airport was to start operating 24 hours a day later in November.

Report of Secretary-General. On 28 July [A/54/185], the Secretary-General informed the Assembly that Israel had not replied to his June request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement Assembly resolution 53/56 [YUN 1998, p. 440] demanding that Israel, among other things, cease all practices and actions which violated the human rights of the Palestinian people and accelerate the release of all remaining Palestinians arbitrarily detained or imprisoned.

In a July report [A/54/181], the Secretary-General stated that all necessary facilities were provided to the Special Committee on Israeli Practices, as requested in General Assembly resolution 53/53 [YUN 1998, p. 441]. Fourth Geneva Convention

Conference of High Contracting Parties

The Conference of the High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention on Measures to Enforce the Convention in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including Jerusalem, was held on 15 July in Geneva, pursuant to General Assembly resolution ES-10/6 (see p. 402). It was the first time in the history of the Geneva Conventions that a conference was convened to consider a specific case of violations of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War.

The Conference was attended by the majority of States High Contracting Parties, a delegation from Palestine, ICRC, UN agencies and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). Australia, Canada, Israel and the United States announced that they would not participate.

The Permanent Observer Mission of Palestine to the United Nations presented a paper entitled "Israel's belligerent occupation of the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and international humanitarian law".

In a statement adopted at the conclusion of the Conference, the participating High Contracting Parties reaffirmed the applicability of the Fourth Geneva Convention to the occupied Palestinian territory, including East Jerusalem, and reiterated the need for full respect for the Convention's provisions. The Conference adjourned on the understanding that it would convene again in the light of consultations on the development of the humanitarian situation in the field.

UN International Meeting

Prior to the Conference, the United Nations International Meeting on the Convening of the Conference on Measures to Enforce the Fourth Geneva Convention in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including Jerusalem, (Cairo, Egypt, 14-15 June), organized under the auspices of the Committee on Palestinian Rights, was attended by international legal experts and representatives of the Secretary-General, intergovernmental organizations, the PA, Governments, UN system organizations and agencies, ICRC, NGOs and the media. The participants discussed Israeli violations of the Fourth Geneva Convention, enforcement of the Convention, and the conference of the High Contracting Parties and its possible outcomes. In its final document [A/ES-10/34, A/53/977], the participants expressed concern with regard to breaches and violations by Israel of the Convention, especially the continuing settlement activities, which included land confiscation and the transfer of Israeli civilians to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem. The participants supported the convening by the High Contracting Parties of the conference on measures to enforce the Convention, on 15 July in Geneva. The participants called on the High Contracting Parties to strive for concrete results by the conference to be incorporated in a declaration or resolution or both. The conference should emphasize the responsibility of the High Contracting Parties to ensure respect for the Convention and live up to their obligations under it, affirm its de jure applicability in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and establish a follow-up mechanism, in the form of a committee under the leadership of the depositary (Switzerland).

Report of Secretary-General. In July [A/54/182], the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly that Israel had not replied to his June request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement Assembly resolution 53/54 [YUN 1998, p. 442] demanding that Israel accept the de jure applicability of the Convention in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and that it comply scrupulously with its provisions. Also in June, the Secretary-General noted, he had drawn the attention of all States parties to paragraph 3 of resolution 53/54 calling on them to exert all efforts to ensure respect by Israel for the Convention's provisions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/54/576], adopted resolution 54/77 by recorded vote (154-2-1) [agenda item 89].

Noting also the convening on 15 July 1999 for the first time of a Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, as recommended by the General Assembly in its resolution ES-10/6 of 9 February 1999, on measures to enforce the Convention in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including Jerusalem, and to ensure respect thereof in accordance with article 1 common to the four Geneva Conventions, and aware of the statement adopted by the Conference,

Stressing that Israel, the occupying Power, should comply strictly with its obligations under international law,

1. Reaffirms that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

2. Demands that Israel accept the de jure applicability of the Convention in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, and that it comply scrupulously with the provisions of the Convention;

3. Calls upon all States parties to the Convention, in accordance with article 1 common to the four Geneva Conventions, to exert all efforts in order to ensure respect for its provisions by Israel, the occupying Power, in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

4. Reiterates the need for speedy implementation of the recommendations contained in its resolutions ES-10/3 of 15 July 1997, ES-10/4 of 13 November 1997, ES-10/5 of 17 March 1998 and ES-10/6 of 9 February 1999 with regard to ensuring respect by Israel, the occupying Power, for the provisions of the Convention;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Palestinian women

The Secretary-General, in a December report [E/CN.6/1999/2] to the Commission on the Status of Women on follow-up and progress in the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170], reviewed, in response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1998/10 [YUN 1998, p. 444], the situation of Palestinian women and described assistance provided by UN organizations during the period September 1997 to September 1998. He stated that the daily life of women in the occupied territories continued to be adversely affected by the Israeli occupation, particularly the imposition of closures and other security-related measures, which had a detrimental impact on their socio-economic condition. As in the past, Palestinian women were experiencing the gender-specific impact of those measures, which was reinforced by existing inequalities in society between women and men. Women's average labour force participation rate declined from 13 per cent in 1996 to 12.3 per cent in 1997, a relative decline of 5.8 per cent for women compared with 1.5 per cent for men. Further, women's full employment rates and the total number of fully employed women also fell in 1997, while those for men rose considerably. Their average unemployment rate increased from 20.6 to 21.4 per cent. According to the 1997 Palestinian Population, Housing and Establishment Census, women represented 49.2 per cent of the total Palestinian population. The census also showed that 20.1 per cent of women were illiterate, compared with 7.7 per cent of men, and that the fertility rate was 6.1 per cent.

The UN system continued to support Palestinian women and sought to mainstream a gender perspective in its programmes and funds. The four-year, $7.2 million programme of assistance to the Palestinian people of the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) focused on reproductive health including family planning, population and development strategies, and advocacy. The World Health Organization (WHO) assisted in the consolidation of the Women's Health Development Department at the PA's Ministry of Health, as well as with the implementation of two reproductive health projects in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) provided assistance to Palestinian women through its programmes in advocacy and capacity-building, health and nutrition, and basic education. The United Nations Volunteers were implementing the Community-based Youth Participation and Development Project, aimed at promoting the development of youth, in particular young women, to be participants in and contributors to the development of Palestinian society. The International Labour Organization (ILO), as part of its International Programme for More and Better Jobs for Women, formulated a draft Action Plan for the West Bank and Gaza Strip, which included the development of a gender-sensitive labour market information system to improve data collection, analysis and dissemination. Other ILO activities included the promotion and development of Palestinian women's entrepreneurship.

As part of its programme of assistance to the Palestinian people, UNDP supported the establishment of a Gender Statistics Unit within the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics. In conjunction with the PA's Inter-Ministerial Committee, UNDP created a Rural Girls Development Centre, which provided general education and comprehensive training in health and agriculture. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights supported the establishment of a Women and Group Rights Unit within the Palestinian Centre for Human Rights in Gaza to work with the local community for the development of a favourable women's rights policy environment.

The United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) implemented its empowerment agenda for women through three programme areas: strengthening women's economic capacity, engendering governance and leadership, and promoting women's human rights. UNIFEM's Global Campaign for the Eradication of Violence against Women was planning to raise public awareness among Palestinians on that particular issue. The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) integrated Palestinian women's concerns in its assistance work, which included granting scholarships through the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA). ESCWA supported the economic and social situation in the West Bank and Gaza Strip and provided advisory services and technical assistance.

Palestinian women refugees were direct or indirect beneficiaries of UNRWA's programmes. For example, in the education programme, women accounted for 62 per cent of all trainees enrolled in technical/semi-professional courses in 1997/98. Of the 1,055 scholarships granted during 1997/98 by UNRWA to refugee students, 46 per cent went to Palestinian women. As part of its income-generation programme, UNRWA granted loans valued at $2.7 million to 3,296 women who supported some 16,310 dependants.

The Secretary-General observed that the PA and civil society, with the assistance of the international community, had taken considerable steps to advance the situation of Palestinian women. However, further efforts and assistance were needed, particularly within the context of mainstreaming a gender perspective into all policies and programmes. A sound information basis was essential for gender mainstreaming; therefore the efforts of the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics to acquire and disseminate gender-disaggregated statistics had to be augmented by UN bodies in order to keep gender disaggregated data on their operations. That would aid the reporting process and enhance the effectiveness of support programmes.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on the Status of Women [E/1999/27], adopted resolution 1999/15 by roll-call vote (34-1-4) [agenda item 14 (a)].

Palestinian women

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered with appreciation the section concerning the situation of Palestinian women and assistance provided by organizations of the United Nations system of the report of the Secretary-General on follow-up to and implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women,

Recalling the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in particular paragraph 260 concerning Palestinian women and children, and the Beijing Platform for Action,

Recalling also its resolution 1998/10 of 28 July 1998 and other relevant United Nations resolutions,

Recalling further the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women as it concerns the protection of civilian populations,

Gravely concerned at the suspension, on 20 December 1998, by the Government of Israel of the implementation of the Wye River Memorandum, signed in Washington, D.C., on 23 October 1998, including the negotiations on the final settlement which were to have been concluded by May 1999,

Concerned about the continuing difficult situation of Palestinian women in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including Jerusalem, and about the severe consequences of continuous illegal Israeli settlement activities, as well as the harsh economic conditions and other consequences for the situation of Palestinian women and their families resulting from the frequent closures and isolation of the occupied territory,

1. Stresses its support for the Middle East peace process and the need for speedy and full implementation of the agreements already reached between the parties;

2. Affirms that in spite of the actual deterioration of the Middle East peace process as a result of the lack of compliance by the Government of Israel with the existing agreements, increased efforts must be exerted to bring the peace process back on track towards the achievement of a just, comprehensive and lasting peace in the region and the achievement of tangible results towards the improvement of the situation of Palestinian women and their families;

3. Reaffirms that the Israeli occupation remains a major obstacle for Palestinian women with regard to their advancement, self-reliance and integration into the development planning of their society;

4. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply fully with the provisions and principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Regulations annexed to The Hague Convention IV, of 18 October 1907, and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August

1949, in order to protect the rights of Palestinian women and their families;

5. Calls upon Israel to facilitate the return of all refugee and displaced Palestinian women and children to their homes and properties in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, in compliance with the relevant United Nations resolutions;

6. Urges Member States, financial organizations of the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations and other relevant institutions to intensify their efforts to provide financial and technical assistance to Palestinian women for the creation of projects responding to their needs, especially during the transitional period;

7. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women to continue to monitor and take action with regard to the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in particular paragraph 260 concerning Palestinian women and children, and the Beijing Platform for Action;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to review the situation and to assist Palestinian women by all available means and to submit to the Commission on the Status of Women at its forty-fourth session a report on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Issues related to Palestine

General aspects

The General Assembly continued to consider the question of Palestine in 1999. Having discussed the annual report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian Rights) [A/54/35], the Assembly adopted four resolutions, reaffirming, among other things, the necessity of achieving a peaceful settlement of the Palestine question—the core of the Arab-Israeli conflict—and stressing the need for the realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestinians, primarily the right to self-determination, for Israeli withdrawal from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967 and for resolving the problem of the Palestine refugees.

In commemoration of the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People, celebrated annually on 29 November, in accordance with Assembly resolution 32/40 B [YUN 1977, p. 304], the Committee held a solemn meeting and other activities. Under the Committee's auspices, an exhibit entitled "Follow the Star: Images from the Palestinian City of Bethlehem at the New Millennium" was presented by the Permanent Observer Mission of Palestine.

Report of Secretary-General. In an October report on the question of Palestine [A/54/457-S/1999/1050], the Secretary-General made observations on the Middle East peace process (see p.401).

By a 28 July note verbale, the Secretary-General sought the positions of the Governments of Egypt, Israel, Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic, as well as the PLO, regarding steps taken by them to implement the relevant provisions of resolution 53/42 [YUN 1998, p. 445]. As at 6 October, only Jordan and the PLO had responded.

Jordan stated that it was pursuing implementation of the provisions of the 1994 Jordanian-Israeli Treaty of Peace [YUN 1994, p. 614] and the agreements to which it gave rise. Jordan had also made use of its relations and contacts with all the parties to advance the negotiation process on the Palestinian-Israeli track. It was of the view that the outcome of the May 1999 Israeli elections and the assumption of office by the new Government constituted a plebiscite in which Israeli society voted in favour of peace. The new Government was urged to take decisive steps to honour the agreements and commitments that had been entered into and, in particular, to implement the 1998 Wye River Memorandum [YUN 1998, p. 424] and to resume negotiations on the Syrian and Lebanese tracks from the point at which they were suspended.

The FLO said that since the adoption of resolution 53/42, little progress was made in the implementation of the agreements reached; the situation on the ground, including the economic and living conditions of the Palestinian people, continued to deteriorate; and tension had increased in the region as a whole. However, with the new Israeli Government, the two parties, in September 1999, succeeded in reaching the Sharm el-Sheikh Memorandum. Initial steps in the implementation of the Memorandum had already begun. Moreover, the parties had agreed to reach the final settlement within a year from the signing of the Memorandum. The Palestinian side believed that the international community, represented by the General Assembly, had to uphold its positions related to the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and should maintain its positions related to the elements of the final settlement (permanent status issues), including Jerusalem, settlements and refugees.

The PLO welcomed the work done by UNRWA and hoped that the United Nations would contribute to the efforts being undertaken to help push the peace process forward. For a peaceful settlement of the Palestine question to be achieved within the framework of the current peace process, it was necessary to respect the principle of the return of land for peace and the implementation of Council resolutions 242(1967) [YUN 1967, p. 257] and 338(1973) [YUN 1973, p. 213].

The Secretary-General observed that the signing of the Sharm el-Sheikh Memorandum brought with it cautious optimism that the Middle East peace process had been brought back on track. While the issues that remained to be resolved were difficult, five decades of conflict and unease should at least be brought to an end. It was hoped that progress on the Israeli-Palestinian track would soon lead to movement in the Syrian and Lebanese tracks so that peace, security and stability might be achieved for all peoples in the region.

Strengthening UN presence in the Middle East

On 10 September [S/1999/983], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council President of his intention to appoint Terje Roed-Larsen (Norway) as the new United Nations Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process and his Personal Representative to the PLO and the Palestinian Authority (PA) as at 1 October 1999, replacing Chinmaya R. Gharekhan (India). The functions assigned to the new UN Special Coordinator took into account the resumption of Israeli-Palestinian negotiations and the prospect for renewed talks in other bilateral tracks. The Special Coordinator would act as a UN focal point on the ground, enabling the United Nations to respond in an integrated and coordinated manner to requests for assistance. On 16 September [S/1999/984], the Council took note of the Secretary-General's intention.

By a 9 November letter to the Council President [S/1999/1226], the Secretary-General said that the Prime Minister of Israel and the PLO Chairman, meeting in Oslo, Norway, on 1 and 2 November, had agreed that Israeli and Palestinian negotiating teams would start final status talks in Ramallah on 9 November, and that a deadline for a framework agreement would be set for 15 February 2000, prior to a final agreement to be reached by September 2000. With the Middle East peace process entering a new phase, the United Nations had to ensure that it was in a position to respond quickly and effectively to any requests from the parties as they made progress in their bilateral and multilateral negotiations. The Secretary-General had therefore decided that the United Nations should establish a unified structure in the region, with a clearly recognized focal point for the Organization's contributions to the implementation of the peace agreements and with overall responsibility for enhancing UN assistance. In that connection, the Secretary-General had asked the Special Coordinator to reconfigure the existing office based in Gaza, bearing in mind that he would likely require additional resources. On 8 December [S/1999/1227], the Council took note of the request to the Special Coordinator.

In a December report to the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/C.5/54/40], the Secretary-General stated that those additional requirements were estimated at $3,755,800, which would be charged against the $86.2 million proposed for special political missions under section 3, Political affairs, of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 2000-2001, as approved by Assembly resolution 53/206 [YUN 1998, p. 1284]. As the activities fell under the programme of political affairs, it was also proposed that the existing resources in the proposed 2000-2001 programme budget related to the activities of the Office of the Special Coordinator should be transferred from section 5, Peacekeeping operations, to section 3.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in a December report [A/54/7/Add.11], stated that it had no objection to the Secretary-General's proposal.

On 23 December, by resolution 54/251, section VII, the Assembly approved the charge of total requirements of $3,755,800 against the provisions proposed for special political missions under section 3 of the proposed 2000-2001 programme budget, and concurred that the related provisions for the Office of the Special Coordinator should be transferred from section 5 to section 3.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 54/42:

In favour Afghanistan, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belarus, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Gabon, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, Marshall Islands, United States.

Abstaining: Micronesia, Uzbekistan.

Speaking before the vote, the United States said that the text laid out the position of one party to the negotiations and, by adopting it, the Assembly would seek inappropriately to interject its views into those negotiations. The draft complicated United States efforts and those of the parties themselves to achieve a settlement.

Israel stated that all diplomatic breakthroughs in the Middle East were arrived at exclusively through direct negotiations between the parties. The draft resolution sought to predetermine the issues to be resolved by those negotiations, and it both violated existing agreements and undermined the integrity and the foundations of the peace process.

Speaking after the vote, the Observer of Palestine expressed the hope that Israel would abandon its current policy and positions and start complying with requirements of international legitimacy.

By decision 54/465 of 23 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda items entitled "Question of Palestine" and "The situation in the Middle East" remained for consideration during its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session.

Committee on Palestinian Rights

As mandated by General Assembly resolution 53/39 [YUN 1998, p. 450], the Committee on Palestinian Rights, established in 1975 by Assembly resolution 3376(XXX) [YUN 1975, p. 248], continued to review the situation relating to the Palestine question, reported on it and made suggestions to the Assembly or the Security Council.

The Committee, having restructured its NGO programme, including its programme of meetings, held consultations with NGO representatives during the Bethlehem 2000 International Conference (Rome, Italy, 18-19 February 1999). A second consultation meeting was held in New York on 26 November.

In response to Assembly resolution 53/27 [YUN 1998, p. 451], the Committee organized, in cooperation with Italy and the Holy See, the Bethlehem 2000 International Conference, which was attended by many high-level participants, including representatives of different religious denominations and the UN Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs. At the conclusion of the Conference, the participants adopted the Rome Declaration, in which they promoted the Bethlehem 2000 Project launched by the PA and highlighted the urgency of bringing economic recovery and prosperity to the Palestinian people. The participants also expressed the view that freedom of movement and unhindered access to Holy Places in Bethlehem by all religions and nationalities were essential to the city's revival. The Committee Chairman submitted a report [A/54/416] to the Secretary-General on the Conference, in which he noted that the UN system had taken an early lead in offering support to the Bethlehem 2000 Project. Since 1997, UNDP had initiated a wide range of infrastructure improvements and the development of the tourist sector in close coordination with the Municipality of Bethlehem. The World Bank and UNESCO had, through their active involvement in specific projects on the ground, strengthened the viability of the initiative.

The Committee continued to follow the Palestine-related activities of intergovernmental bodies, such as the Organization of African Unity, and participated in a meeting celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of the Pontifical Mission for Palestine (New York, 25 October). Through its Bureau, the Committee continued its cooperation on the question of Palestine with the EU. The Committee took part in the United Nations African Meeting in Support of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Windhoek, Namibia, 20-22 April). The Windhoek Declaration, the meeting's final document, focused on the role of African States in supporting the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, as well as the international community's action in promoting the Bethlehem 2000 Project. The Committee supported the United Nations International Meeting on the Convening of the Conference on Measures to Enforce the Fourth Geneva Convention in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including Jerusalem (see p. 416). Following that meeting, a Committee delegation visited Gaza from 16 to 18 June. During the visit, the first for the Committee, the delegation met with the Chairman of the PLO Executive Committee and PA President, Mr. Arafat, as well as with other high-ranking Palestinian officials and UN agencies' representatives, and visited, among other places, a number of UNDP projects in Gaza City.

In its annual report to the Assembly [A/54/35], covering the period from 4 November 1998 to 12 November 1999, the Committee expressed its regret that, for the greater part of 1999, the peace process remained stalled. At the same time, the Committee was encouraged by a series of important developments that had a positive effect on the peace process, including the decisions of the Palestinian Central Council at its extraordinary session from 27 to 29 April. It was also hopeful that the new Israeli Government would honour its obligations vis-a-vis the Palestinian side under the Wye River Memorandum, restore the spirit of confidence between the two parties, re-engage in the peace negotiations without preconditions and move forward towards the stage of permanent status negotiations. In that connection, the Committee noted the beginning of the implementation of the Sharm el-Sheikh Memorandum in September and hoped that it would be completed in strict compliance with the agreed timetable.

The Committee supported the convening of the Conference of the High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention on Measures to Enforce the Convention in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including Jerusalem (see p. 415).

In the year under review, the Committee continued to follow closely the situation on the ground, including the illegal Israeli settlement activities. In May, the Knesset Finance Committee allocated $3 million for infrastructure work in 32 settlements in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, beyond the borders of existing settlements. According to Israeli press reports, more than 20 per cent of all land slated by Israel's Ministry of Construction and Housing for marketing in 1999 was located in the occupied Palestinian territory, including East Jerusalem. In February, the Israeli Government had approved its 1999 budget, adding $38 million for settlement construction. In spite of the stated position of the new Israeli Government not to build new settlements, the Ministry of Construction and Housing had since July reportedly issued tenders for the construction of over 2,500 new residential units slated for settlements around Jerusalem.

Another feature of the settlement drive had been the "grab and settle" policy targeting hilltops in the various parts of the West Bank, as well as the construction of bypass roads to service those settlements. Some 42 new hilltop settlements had been established since the signing of the Wye River Memorandum. The Committee also reported that, in the course of the year, groups of extremist settlers continued in their attempts to occupy Palestinian land and property, harassed Palestinian civilians and often engaged in violent confrontations with them. For the first time since 1967, a civilian guard was established in June 1999 in the West Bank settlements, intended to operate independently from the Israel Defence Forces.

The Committee expressed concern at Israel's detention of some 2,000 Palestinians, 350 of whom were released in September and October, in accordance with the Sharm el-Sheikh Memorandum. However, having noted the delay in the implementation of the second stage of the prisoner release, the Committee hoped that the release would be implemented on time and in compliance with the Memorandum. The Committee also noted the decision of Israel's High Court of Justice in September, stipulating that Israel's General Security Service was not authorized to employ certain investigation and interrogation methods involving the use of physical pressure against detainees.

Although the Palestinian economy showed signs of a slight growth in real terms during the year under review, it continued to suffer from structural imbalance due to the occupation and over-reliance on the Israeli economy. Israeli restrictions on the movement of goods and labour between the West Bank and East Jerusalem and between the West Bank and the Gaza Strip and the protracted lack of agreement on the safe passage routes had a negative impact on the Palestinian economy. The economic situation in the Gaza Strip, in particular, remained of great concern.

The Committee viewed continued UN system assistance to the Palestinian people as an important support for the peace process, as well as a crucial contribution to the development of a sustainable Palestinian economy and to Palestinian institution- and nation-building. It called on the international donor community to step up its assistance to the Palestinian people and hoped that contributions pledged towards the development of the Palestinian economy would be disbursed in full and as a matter of highest priority. In that regard, the Committee noted the signing at an Ad Hoc Liaison Committee meeting (Tokyo, 15 October) of a tripartite action plan aimed at assisting the peace process and accelerating the disbursement of commitments, to expedite implementation of essential development projects. The Committee stressed the crucial role played by UNRWA in assisting Palestine refugees through the provision of relief and social services, in spite of the worsening financial constraints faced by the Agency.

In making its recommendations, the Committee emphasized that after more than five decades of suffering and dispossession, the Palestinian people had yet to see its aspirations for self-determination and statehood realized. Despite breakthroughs in the peace process, millions of Palestinians were still forced to live in refugee camps, while the territory under the PA's jurisdiction represented a disjointed multitude of enclaves surrounded by a dense net of settlements, which restricted the Palestinians' freedom of movement and severely affected their livelihood. The Committee was of the view that the adjustments made to its programme of meetings had made the programme more effective and focused and had played a useful role in heightening international awareness of the question of Palestine and in achieving wider recognition for the exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable rights. The Committee would continue to review and assess that programme to make it more effective and responsive to the evolving situation on the ground and in the peace process. In its programme for the next year, the Committee intended to focus on the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, Palestinian nation- and institution-building, socio-economic development and permanent status issues.

8. Requests the Secretary-General to circulate the report of the Committee to all the competent bodies of the United Nations, and urges them to take the necessary action, as appropriate;

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 54/39:

Against Israel, Marshall Islands, United States.

Abstaining: Andorra, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, Croatia, Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Greece, Guatemala, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Kazakhstan, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Micronesia, Monaco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, United Kingdom, Uzbekistan.

The United States said that the draft resolution did not take into consideration achievements that had occurred in the Middle East peace process: the safe passage route between Gaza and the West Bank was operating, the Gaza seaport had been approved, further redeployments had been made, additional prisoners had been released and the parties had begun talks on a framework agreement for permanent status. It added that the Assembly should be in the business of supporting that process of negotiation and should not be issuing one-sided criticism or authorizing wasteful expenditure for anachronistic committees and reports.

Israel stated that the Committee on Palestinian Rights, as well as the UN Secretariat Division for Palestinian Rights, since their inception, had obstructed dialogue and understanding through a pre-set, one-sided portrayal of the Arab-Israeli conflict. They had been engaged in activities which hindered progress towards achieving a peaceful, negotiated and mutually acceptable solution.

Finland, on behalf of the EU, said that important progress had been made in the Middle East peace process over the years and welcomed the signing of the Sharm el-Sheikh Memorandum and the resumption of permanent status negotiations. It regretted that the mandate of the two UN entities in charge of the agenda item "Question of Palestine", the Committee on Palestinian Rights and the Division for Palestinian Rights, did not take into account the spirit of the peace process. The EU, nevertheless, welcomed the ongoing dialogue with the Committee on Palestinian Rights and stated that it would continue that exchange of views with the particular aim of adapting the Committee's mandate to the spirit of the Madrid and Oslo accords.

Division for Palestinian Rights

Under the guidance of the Committee on Palestinian Rights, the Division for Palestinian Rights of the UN Secretariat continued to function as a centre of research, monitoring, preparation of studies, and collection and dissemination of information on all issues related to the Palestine question. The Division continued to respond to requests for information and to prepare and disseminate the following publications: a monthly bulletin covering action by the Committee, UN bodies and agencies, and intergovernmental organizations concerned with Palestine; a periodic bulletin entitled "Developments related to the Middle East peace process"; a monthly chronology of events relating to the question of Palestine, based on media reports and other sources; reports of meetings organized under the auspices of the Committee; a special bulletin on the observance of the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People (29 November); and an annual compilation of relevant General Assembly and Security Council resolutions, decisions and statements.

The Committee, in its annual report [A/54/35], noted that the Division had prepared publications for a number of related meetings and activities and, in cooperation with relevant technical services of the UN Secretariat, had continued to develop the electronic United Nations Information System on the Question of Palestine (UNISPAL), as mandated by Assembly resolution 46/74B [YUN 1991, p. 228]. The Division also coordinated and supervised the electronic conversion of the records of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, in accordance with Assembly resolution 51/129 [YUN 1996, p. 423].

The Committee requested the Division to continue its publications programme and other activities, including the completion of its work on the UNISPAL collection and on the project for the modernization of the records of the Conciliation Commission. It also requested that the annual training programme for staff members of the PA be continued.

Special information programme

As requested in General Assembly resolution 53/41 [YUN 1998, p. 453], the UN Department of Public Information (DPI) in 1999 continued its special information programme on the question of Palestine, which included the convening of an international encounter on the theme "Prospects for Peace" (Madrid, Spain, 23-24 March) and the organization of a training programme for Palestinian broadcasters and journalists at UN Headquarters.

The DPI Public Inquiries Unit responded to 33 queries from the public on the question of Palestine, while the Dissemination and Communications Unit distributed material in hard copy and by electronic mail. DPI also provided press coverage of all meetings held at UN Headquarters, including those of the Committee on Palestinian Rights, as well as coverage of conferences and meetings held under the auspices of the Committee in Rome, Windhoek and Cairo. The quarterly publication UN Chronicle continued its coverage of the Palestine question, including articles on the establishment, 50 years earlier, of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization and on the Bethlehem 2000 Project. The Radio and Central News Service covered all aspects of the Palestine question in daily news bulletins and current affairs radio programmes in various languages for regional and worldwide dissemination.

As in previous years, DPI cooperated in the media promotion of the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People through extensive print and electronic media coverage. UN information centres (UNICs) organized briefings, media campaigns, press conferences, interviews, lectures, seminars and television programmes on the International Day. Also, throughout the year, many UNICs dealt with the Palestine question and organized special outreach activities related to the issue.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/41 [draft: A/54/L.44 & Add.1] by recorded vote (151-3-2) [agenda item 44].

Special information programme on the question of Palestine of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat

Recalling its resolution 53/41 of 2 December 1998,

Convinced that the worldwide dissemination of accurate and comprehensive information and the role of non-governmental organizations and institutions remain of vital importance in heightening awareness of and support for the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people,

Aware of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements signed by the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization in Washington, D.C., on 13 September

1993, and of the subsequent implementation agreements, in particular the Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip signed in Washington, D.C., on 28 September 1995, and the Sharm el-Sheikh Memorandum of 4 September 1999, and their positive implications,

(b) To continue to issue and update publications on the various aspects of the question of Palestine in all fields, including materials concerning the recent developments in that regard, in particular the prospects for peace;

(c) To expand its collection of audio-visual material on the question of Palestine and to continue the production of such material, including the updating of the exhibit in the Secretariat;

(d) To organize and promote fact-finding news missions for journalists to the area, including the territories under the jurisdiction of the Palestinian Authority and the occupied territories;

(e) To organize international, regional and national seminars or encounters for journalists, aiming in particular at sensitizing public opinion to the question of Palestine;

(f) To continue to provide assistance to the Palestinian people in the field of media development, in particular to strengthen the training programme for Palestinian broadcasters and journalists initiated in 1995;

4. Requests the Department of Public Information to promote the Bethlehem 2000 Project, within existing resources and until the Bethlehem 2000 commemoration comes to a close, including the preparation and dissemination of publications, audio-visual material and the establishment of a "Bethlehem 2000" site on the United Nations Internet home page.

Assistance to Palestinians

UN activities

Report of Secretary-General. In a July report [A/54/134-E/1999/85], the Secretary-General described UN assistance to the Palestinian people between June 1998 and May 1999, assessed ongoing programmes and needs still unmet and presented proposals for additional assistance.

Throughout the reporting period, the UN Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories focused on ensuring better coordination between the relevant PA institutions and UN agencies, as well as the donor community; strengthening the rule of law and other institution-building programmes through better-targeted technical assistance; monitoring and documenting economic and social conditions in the occupied Palestinian territory and providing periodic analyses on those aspects and on specific issues relevant to the development effort; providing logistic and other assistance to the PA in the preparation of the Palestinian Development Plan, 1999-2003; and encouraging expeditious donor disbursements to facilitate its implementation. The Plan, which represented the PA's commitment to developing national capacity in medium-term development planning and in the implementation of development projects, was presented to the donor community at the sixth meeting of the Consultative Group for the West Bank and Gaza, convened by the World Bank (Paris, 4-5 February 1999). The Plan included over 170 projects with which the United Nations was associated that had a total value of about $286 million. Both in numerical and value terms, that amount represented an increase over the previous Plan [YUN 1998, p. 454], underscoring the deepening commitment of the UN system to the socio-economic development of the occupied Palestinian territory.

As part of his efforts to improve UN coordination, the Special Coordinator convened the fifth UN inter-agency meeting (Gaza, 7-8 October 1998), which assessed the role and contribution of UN agencies to Palestinian development. As in previous years, the meeting provided a forum for finalizing the document entitled "The United Nations and the Palestinian Development Plan", which surveyed some salient features of that relationship. The UN presence in the occupied Palestinian territory had increased from three organizations in 1993 to 13 in 1999, and an additional 16 UN organizations were providing the PA with technical assistance and expertise.

The Conference to Support Middle East Peace and Development (Washington, D.C., 30 November 1998) reaffirmed the international community's political commitment to the Middle East peace process and to continue the economic assistance required to give it momentum. Conference participants announced pledges totalling $3.36 billion to be disbursed over a two- to five-year period.

The Special Coordinator also gave an update on assistance provided to the Palestinian people in the occupied territories during the reporting period by UN departments, agencies and programmes. The update included information from the Department of Economic and Social Affairs, ESCWA, the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO), the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD), ILO, the International Maritime Organization (IMO), the International Trade Centre, the International Telecommunication Union (ITU), the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, UNDP, UNESCO, UNFPA, UNICEF, the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM), the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR), UNRWA, the Office of the Special Coordinator, the World Food Programme (WFP) and WHO.

Living conditions in the West Bank and Gaza Strip

The Palestinian Ministry of Finance and the International Monetary Fund estimated real gross domestic product and gross national product growth rates of 3.0 and 5.5 per cent, respectively for 1998, as well as a marginal rise in annual per capita income levels in the occupied Palestinian territory for the first time since the beginning of the interim period in 1994. Such growth was mainly due to fewer comprehensive closures imposed by the Israeli authorities on the occupied territory. In fact, closures affected 5.2 per cent of working days in 1998, compared with 20.5 per cent of such days in 1997. That resulted in a 16.9 per cent increase in the number of Palestinian workers employed in Israel in 1998 and generally improved trade flows, as the nominal value of registered trade between Israel and the occupied Palestinian territory rose by 9.3 per cent.

Moderate growth was reported in the private investment sector. Construction licensing activity grew by 4.6 per cent in 1998, compared to over 13 per cent the previous year. Overall, new company registrations climbed by 12.6 per cent. While donor disbursements declined by 27.4 per cent in 1998 to a reported level of $399.8 million, total public investment spending rose by an estimated 11 per cent to $215 million. Public investment absorbed a higher share of total disbursement in 1998, in part because the PA achieved a balanced recurrent budget for the first time.

The labour force increased by an estimated 5.9 per cent to about 585,000 persons in 1998, and the number of fully employed persons increased by 18.9 per cent to 456,240. The standard unemployment rate fell from 20.9 per cent in 1997 to 15.6 per cent in 1998, the lowest rate recorded since 1995. An estimated 58,450 new jobs for Palestinian workers were created in 1998, a 13.4 per cent increase over the preceding year, with employment growth in every economic branch. However, women's labour force participation fell to 11.7 per cent of working-age women, as compared with 12.3 per cent in 1997. Under the impact of the sharp depreciation of the new shekel/United States dollar exchange rate in late 1998, the rate of inflation in the consumer price index rose 9.7 per cent, compared with 6.1 per cent in 1997. Food prices increased faster than the general price level, placing an additional burden on household budgets.

UNRWA

In 1999, the revival of Middle East peace negotiations, amidst indications of a more vigorous pursuit of "final status" issues, which included the future of Palestinian refugees, affected the working environment of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA). Fifty years after its establishment by General Assembly resolution 302(IV) [YUN 1948-49, p. 211], the Agency was still providing vital education, health and relief and social services to a growing refugee population, but was facing increasing difficulty in mobilizing the financial resources to keep services at adequate levels.

By mid-1999, 3.62 million refugees were registered with UNRWA, an increase of 2.9 per cent over the 1998 figure of 3.52 million. The largest refugee population was registered in Jordan (1.5 million, or 41.4 per cent of the Agency-wide total), followed by the Gaza Strip (798,000, or 21.8 per cent), the West Bank (569,000, or 15.7 per cent), Lebanon (370,000, or 10 per cent) and the Syrian Arab Republic (374,000, or 10 per cent).

In his annual report on the work of the Agency (1 July 1998-30 June 1999) [A/54/13], the UNRWA Commissioner-General said that the reporting period was a time of challenges and some setbacks, but also of many achievements for the Agency. As it prepared to mark 50 years of operations, UNRWA could reflect on its significant contribution to educating new generations, maintaining the health of the Palestine refugee community and providing badly needed basic relief and social services to some of the poorest people in the region. The delivery of effective and efficient services remained UNRWA's top priority; by that measure, the Agency was successful during the reporting period, even though its financial difficulties seemed to overshadow its achievements.

The Palestine refugee community and host authorities in all fields of operation continued to express concern about the perceived reduction in UNRWA services. The Agency's financial difficulties were seen by many as politically motivated, signalling a weakening in the international community's commitment to the refugee issue, and a dereliction by UNRWA of its humanitarian duties. Austerity and other cost-reduction measures were rigorously maintained. Even with such measures in place and additional ad hoc contributions from donors, the Agency ended 1998 with a deficit and depleted cash and working capital reserves.

Advisory Commission. By a letter of 30 September to the Commissioner-General, included in his report [A/54/13], the Advisory Commission of UNRWA viewed the Agency's continuing difficult financial situation as extremely grave, for although some donors' annual contributions increased in absolute terms, UNRWA's resources were still constrained. The Commission noted with approval the Agency's decision to adjust and clarify its 2000-2001 budget format, which would hopefully increase transparency and improve programme management, and commended its continued commitment to internal restructuring. It also welcomed the findings contained in the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services [A/54/367] on allegations of corruption at UNRWA's field office in Lebanon, which found no evidence of endemic corruption.

Peace Implementation Programme

In its sixth year of operation, UNRWA's Peace Implementation Programme (PIP) remained the main channel for project funding of activities associated with the Agency's education, health and relief and social services programmes, as well as income-generation. Since its inception in October 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 569], PIP had demonstrated the tangible benefits of the peace process by improving Palestine refugees' living conditions, creating employment opportunities and developing infrastructure. The latter focused on the construction and expansion of UNRWA facilities to meet the increasing demand for its services (especially in education), maintaining or upgrading existing facilities to adequate standards, and improving housing and environmental health conditions in camps. Against a background of insufficient funding for the Agency's regular programmes, PIP funds enabled UNRWA to meet some of the most pressing needs and helped to prevent a qualitative deterioration in programmes.

During the period under review, UNRWA received $7.8 million in pledges and contributions for PIP projects, a decline of $2.1 million or some 21 per cent in comparison to the $9.9 million received in its previous period. As at 30 June 1999, total pledges and contributions received over the life of the programme totalled $221.3 million. The number of projects funded under PIP as at that date was 347.

Between mid-1998 and mid-1999, with PIP funding, UNRWA completed construction of 10 schools, 39 additional classrooms, four specialized rooms (e.g., laboratories, libraries), two health centres, one health laboratory, one mother and child centre, two women's programme centres and three libraries at those centres, and two community rehabilitation centres. PIP funds also enabled the Agency to rehabilitate 334 shelters of special hardship families. Completed projects to improve camp infrastructure and services included a sewerage and drainage system for a refugee camp in Gaza; rehabilitation of a water supply system in Lebanon; construction of a central pharmacy, 11 water reservoirs and five latrines in refugee camps in Jordan; and upgrading a camp sewerage system and a mobile dental unit in Syria. Ongoing projects, as at mid-1999, included a feasibility study for sewerage and drainage in five refugee camps; reinstatement of storm-water drainage, roads and pathways; construction of a public health laboratory in the West Bank; several components of the sewerage and drainage scheme for the middle area camps in Gaza; a major sewerage and drainage project for eight refugee camps in Lebanon; and the construction of a polyclinic in Beirut. Other PIP-funded activities included a slow learners' programme in Jordan and Lebanon; integration of visually impaired children into the regular school system; care for the destitute aged; provision of prosthetic devices; and nurse training in Lebanon. PIP also helped to sustain regular Agency programmes by funding the routine maintenance of a number of schools in Gaza and the West Bank, the running costs of two health centres in Gaza and the cost of university scholarships for refugee students. Cash expenditure under PIP was $32 million between mid-1998 and mid-1999, excluding expenditures on the European Gaza Hospital project.

Lebanon appeal

Of the $11 million sought in additional contributions under the special emergency appeal, launched in July 1997 to support essential health, education, relief and social services activities for Palestine refugees in Lebanon, the Agency received $8.8 million and had expended $6.3 million by mid-1999. Ongoing projects included the construction of shelters and a secondary school; reconstruction of a health centre and an elementary/preparatory school; and the construction and operation of computer laboratories.

Major service areas

Education

During the 1998/99 school year, the 650 UNRWA schools across the region accommodated 458,716 pupils, mostly in the elementary and preparatory cycles, but also included 1,367 students at the three Agency secondary schools in Lebanon. Total enrolment increased by 2.6 per cent, or 11,448 pupils, over the 1997/98 school year. However, growth in enrolment was unevenly distributed, with rapid growth in the Gaza Strip (6 per cent), moderate growth in the West Bank and Lebanon (3.9 and 4.3 per cent, respectively), low growth in the Syrian Arab Republic (1.3 per cent) and negative growth in Jordan (-1.4 per cent). UNRWA's school system continued to maintain full gender balance, with 49.9 per cent of pupils being female. The education programme, which was run in cooperation with UNESCO, remained UNRWA's largest single area of activity, with the 13,915 education personnel representing more than two thirds of all Agency staff.

Financial constraints and steadily rising enrolment at UNRWA schools had obliged the Agency to continue hiring teachers on a contract basis at rates of pay lower than those of equivalent Agency posts, as well as on a daily-paid or temporary assistance basis in Jordan, Lebanon and Syria. The policy of operating schools on a double-shift basis (housing two schools in a single building) also continued.

The Agency's education infrastructure remained in need of major improvements. UNRWA sought to obtain funding for the improvement and expansion of its educational facilities and, between mid-1998 and mid-1999, it completed construction of four school buildings and 12 additional classrooms, upgraded five schools, and built seven toilet blocks, 12 water reservoirs and two canteens.

The eight UNRWA vocational and technical training centres had a total enrolment of 4,655 in the 1998/99 school year, an increase of 95 over the previous year. At the post-preparatory level, 22 two-year vocational training courses were offered to male trainees, and at the post-secondary level, 28 two-year technical/semi-professional courses were offered to male and female trainees in a variety of technical, paramedical and commercial skills. Women accounted for 30.5 per cent of all trainees and for 62.2 per cent of trainees in technical/semi-professional courses. In addition, at training centres in Jordan, Lebanon and the West Bank, 346 trainees were enrolled in 14 short-term courses, which included training in auto electrics, executive secretarial skills, building techniques, aluminium fabrication, numerical control systems in metal lathing, first aid, Hebrew and English language, computer software and technical drawing. The Agency also sponsored 25 Palestine refugee students in vocational training courses at private institutions in the West Bank, mainly with project funding.

The three branches of the Educational Sciences Faculty in Jordan and the West Bank continued to provide pre-service and in-service teacher training leading to a first university degree, as part of the process of upgrading the qualification of UNRWA teaching staff to meet revised standards set by the Government of Jordan and the PA. The Agency also provided in-service training to promote and improve the professional competence of its teachers, head-teachers and school supervisors, through the UNRWA/UNESCO Institute of Education. In 1998/99, the total number enrolled in such training was 1,119.

During the 1998/99 school year, UNRWA continued to contribute to a university scholarship programme through project funding. A total of 167 scholars graduated during the year, while the number of continuing scholars was 866, including 398 women.

Overall, the austerity measures in place since 1993 had restricted the education programme's ability to expand at a rate commensurate with growth in the beneficiary population. Financial constraints also curbed the Agency's efforts to keep up with education reforms introduced by the various host Governments, thereby widening the gap between their education systems and UNRWA's.

Health

UNRWA's health programme remained focused on comprehensive primary health care, including a full range of maternal and child health (MCH) and family planning services, school health services, health education and promotion activities, out-patient medical services, prevention and control of communicable diseases and non-communicable diseases, and specialist care, with emphasis on gynaecology and obstetrics, paediatrics and cardiology. Those services were provided through a network of 122 primary health-care facilities, including 89 health centres, 23 health points offering a wide range of health-care services on a part-time basis, and 10 MCH centres offering comprehensive family health services, backed up by basic services such as X-ray and laboratory facilities. During the reporting period, Agency outpatient facilities handled 5.4 million medical and 500,000 dental visits, as well as 1.1 million visits for nursing services.

The proposed health programme budget for the 1998-1999 biennium was $126 million. Owing to funding constraints, allocations had to be reduced below the 1996-1997 budget level, making average health expenditure per refugee a little more than $13.50 per year, a fraction of what other health-care providers in the area spent. Approximately 63 per cent of cash allocations to the health programme were devoted to the costs of 3,500 locally recruited health staff, who implemented all core programme activities. Workloads in UNRWA primary health-care facilities remained high, with an average of 100 patients seen by each doctor per day. WHO provided UNRWA with the services of the Agency's Director of Health and covered the cost of the four local posts of headquarters division chiefs.

Family health continued to be emphasized as an integral part of the Agency's regular health programme. Progress towards the development of a comprehensive maternal health and family planning strategy was reinforced through additional contributions under a three-year convention between UNRWA and the EU, which helped to meet staff costs, upgrade medical equipment in MCH clinics and procure contraceptive supplies.

UNRWA's health programme also sought to prevent and control communicable diseases. Special efforts were made to control vaccine-preventable diseases; prevent vector-borne diseases and newly emerging diseases, such as HIV/

AIDS; control re-emerging infectious diseases, such as tuberculosis; and prevent and control other diseases, such as diabetes mellitus, hypertension, heart disease and cancer. As part of a WHO regional strategy, implemented in coordination with local health authorities and using poliomyelitis vaccines donated by UNICEF, the Agency immunized 214,115 refugee children under the age of five during two rounds of national immunization. UNRWA also joined with other health-care providers in the West Bank and Gaza in implementing the public health component of a brucellosis surveillance and control programme developed in 1997 by the PA, in co-operation with WHO and UNDP.

During the reporting period, UNRWA redefined its strategic approach to health education, integrating programmes within its health centres and within school educational activities. The youth-centred educational programme on the prevention of tobacco use resumed in 1998/99 and was expanded to include children in the sixth grade and above. With support from the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS, the multisectoral school health education programme on the prevention of HIV/AIDS was maintained for schoolchildren in grades 9 and 10, and its scope was broadened to include UNRWA vocational and technical training centres, educational sciences faculties and women's programme centres.

The Agency provided assistance towards secondary care for Palestine refugees by partially reimbursing costs incurred for treatment at governmental or non-governmental hospitals or through contractual agreements with non-governmental or private hospitals. Secondary care was also provided directly at the Agency-run hospital in the West Bank. With project funding received mainly under PIP, UNRWA continued to rehabilitate or replace health facilities, which helped to improve service standards and patient flow.

More than 1.1 million Palestine refugees in 59 camps benefited from environmental health services provided by UNRWA, in cooperation with local municipalities, including sewage disposal, management of storm water run-off, provision of safe drinking water, collection and disposal of refuse, and control of insect and rodent infestation. The Agency continued to play an active role, particularly in the Gaza Strip, in planning and implementing large-scale projects to install sewerage, drainage and water networks in refugee camps.

UNRWA cooperated with the PA in the health sector and provided assistance to enhance the health infrastructure, including the implementation of a three-year maternal health and family planning project in Gaza. A close dialogue was maintained among UNRWA, the PA and the European Community to reach a common understanding on the commissioning and future operation of the European Gaza Hospital. The Agency cooperated with the PA and donors on the construction of a public health laboratory in the West Bank; the upgrading of UNRWA's Qalqilia Hospital in the West Bank; and improvements to environmental health infrastructure in the Gaza Strip. It also maintained close cooperation with health ministries in Jordan, Lebanon and Syria, including through the exchange of information, coordination of disease-control measures, and participation in national conferences and immunization campaigns.

Relief and social services

UNRWA assisted refugee families unable to meet basic needs for food, shelter and other essentials through food support, shelter rehabilitation, poverty alleviation initiatives (such as small loans for personal or business needs), higher hospitalization subsidies and preferential access to UNRWA training centres. The number of refugees in households meeting the stringent eligibility criteria—no male adult medically fit to earn an income and no other identifiable means of financial support above a defined threshold—increased by 2.3 per cent, from 195,616 in June 1998 to 200,078 a year later. The proportion of special hardship cases within the total registered refugee population decreased slightly, from 5.6 per cent to 5.5 per cent. The percentage of refugees enrolled in the programme continued to be highest in Lebanon (10.6 per cent) and the Gaza Strip (8.4 per cent) and lowest in Jordan (2.6 per cent). UNRWA's food support to 51,525 special hardship case families was a crucial safety net in areas subject to unexpected border closures or fluctuations in the price of commodities in local markets. However, the regular budget allocation for selective cash assistance, given to families who experienced distress as a result of emergency situations, remained frozen due to the Agency's continuing financial difficulties.

With extrabudgetary project funding, UNRWA rehabilitated 1,305 shelters of special hardship case families in 1998/99, compared with 505 in 1997/98. Shelter rehabilitation was carried out either on a self-help basis, with the Agency providing financial and technical assistance and beneficiary families arranging volunteer labour, or by small camp-based contractors, with the aim of creating employment within the local refugee community. Available resources for the programme continued to fall short of identified needs, especially in Lebanon, where a large number of special hardship case families lived in sub-standard shelters, and many families lived outside camps in terrible conditions.

Under its poverty alleviation programme, UNRWA assisted disadvantaged refugees, including women, youth and the physically and mentally disabled, to improve their socio-economic status. Soft loans and fully repayable loans for the establishment of micro-enterprises continued, and the number of grants increased from 58 in 1997/98 to 87 in 1998/99. The Agency increased cooperation with third-party partners in providing training in basic business skills to several centres and to families and social workers. A total of 1,526 participants benefited from the poverty alleviation programme, which was separate from the self-sustaining income-generating activities undertaken by the Agency in recent years (see next page).

Participation in UNRWA's community-based social development programmes for women, youth and persons with disabilities increased by 14.3 per cent, from 38,417 at mid-1998 to 43,918 at mid-1999. The focal point for the programmes was the network of 131 Agency-supported community centres, comprising 70 women's programmes centres, 27 youth activities centres and 34 community rehabilitation centres. Activities at women's centres included projects and training to establish income-generating micro-enterprises; lectures and workshops on issues of concern to women and the community, such as family health; training courses to enhance women's social development; and provision of support services for women, such as kindergartens and legal advice bureaux. Youth activities centres continued to offer sports and recreational and cultural activities to young men and women, while community rehabilitation centres focused on the rehabilitation and integration into schools and society of refugees with disabilities, as well as increasing public awareness of disability issues.

UNRWA's strategy for community-based organizations (CBOs) was to shift assistance away from direct financial and staff support towards skills training with a view to facilitating institution-building and self-sustainability in accordance with the five-year plan (1995-1999). The plan aimed to enhance and eventually achieve full administrative and financial sustainability for CBOs. The Agency provided technical assistance to develop the administrative structures of the centres, and continued to provide partial subsidies towards running costs until financial independence could be achieved.

Income generation

UNRWA's income-generation programme supported small and micro-enterprises within the refugee community by providing technical assistance, as well as capital investment and working capital through field-based revolving loan funds. The programme's objective was to create employment, generate income, reduce poverty and empower refugees, in particular women, through socio-economic growth.

The Agency's income-generation activities were concentrated in the Gaza Strip. During the reporting period, the programme achieved operational self-sufficiency. With 42 per cent of refugee camp dwellers and 51 per cent of the population of southern Gaza living below the poverty line, the programme continued to target formal business enterprises that had the capacity to provide jobs, as well as informal enterprises that could generate income for poor families. Credit to those target groups was provided through flexible collateral and guarantee mechanisms, including business plan-based lending and individual, group and cheque-guarantee methods. Although no additional donor funds were received, the number of loans disbursed increased from 6,193, valued at $7.3 million, in 1997/98, to 7,014 loans, valued at $8.3 million, in 1998/99. The income-generation programme in Gaza was composed of four subprogrammes: small-scale enterprise, which provided working capital and capital investment loans to new and established businesses in the industry and service sectors to promote job creation, exports and import substitution; solidarity group lending, which provided working capital loans solely to women micro-enterprise owners; micro-enterprise credit (MEC), which targeted the 20,432 micro-enterprises in Gaza; and small and micro-enterprise training, which contributed to employment generation and socio-economic development.

In the West Bank, small-scale enterprise lending methodology was restructured and the management information and loan-tracking system was improved and integrated with that in Gaza. By the end of June 1999, the programme had provided 197 loans valued at $2.5 million. The MEC subprogramme in the West Bank expanded rapidly through its Nablus branch office by concentrating on developing its credit delivery capacity. The programme was in the initial phase of opening two credit outreach units in the northern West Bank, where up to 28 per cent of the population lived below the poverty line. As at June 1999, MEC had provided 1,410 loans valued at $1.4 million and maintained an annual repayment rate of 96 per cent.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

11. Calls upon all donors, as a matter of urgency, to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the anticipated needs of the Agency, including the remaining costs of moving the headquarters to Gaza, encourages contributing Governments to contribute regularly and to consider increasing their contributions, and urges non-contributing Governments to contribute.

Aware of the work of the new Peace Implementation Programme of the Agency,

Recalling the signing in Washington, D.C., on 13 September 1993 of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements by the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization, and the subsequent implementation agreements, including the Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip signed in Washington, D.C., on 28 September 1995, as well as the signing of the Sharm el-Sheikh Memorandum on 4 September 1999,

UNRWA financing

In 1999, UNRWA continued to face a critical financial situation characterized by large funding shortfalls in the regular budget, depleted working capital and cash reserves, and cumulative deficits in certain project accounts. The structural deficit—representing the inability of income to keep pace with needs arising from natural growth in the refugee population and inflation, which increased the cost of maintaining a constant level of services—remained a problem. However, through a combination of ad hoc additional donor contributions and prudent financial management, including the retention of austerity and cost-reduction measures, UNRWA, by mid-1999, was making some progress in reducing the deficit.

UNRWA began 1999 with depleted working capital, low cash reserves and no expectation of a significant increase in overall income. Since expected cash income for 1999 fell far short of the $322.1 million regular budget for the year, the Agency was obliged to carry forward austerity measures previously implemented, including those announced in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 453]. Expected cash expenditure was also reduced slightly by other factors, such as managed higher vacancy rates and delayed recruitment of all posts in the context of the general recruitment freeze; realization of benefits from previous and ongoing restructuring measures; and non-utilization of certain budget lines as a result of stricter financial controls. At mid-1999, those measures reduced expected 1999 cash expenditure below the $322.1 million level of the budget, which was then estimated at $251.5 million as compared to expected income of $251.8 million. However, the Agency's cash position remained weak and additional contributions were sought to overcome the difficult cash situation.

In an addendum to his report [A/54/137Add.1], the Commissioner-General said that even if the core deficit were covered, the Agency would record an overall budget deficit of $67.1 million for 1999. The weak cash position underlined the need to restore the Agency's depleted working capital, eliminate cumulative deficits in certain extrabudgetary accounts ($11.6 million in the European Gaza Hospital account and $5.2 million in the headquarters relocation account) and secure payment of some $20 million owed by the PA. The addendum also contained the 2000-2001 budget estimates totalling $735.7 million, an increase of 6 per cent over the 1998-1999 budget of $695.7 million.

Working Group. The Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA held two meetings in 1999, on 10 September and 13 October. In its report to the General Assembly [A/54/477], the Working Group noted that UNRWA had ended the 1998 financial year with a core deficit of $1.9 million in its regular budget, representing the difference between actual expenditure of $254 million and the income of $252.1 million. However, the difference between cash income and the cash budget of $314 million for the year meant that the Agency had recorded a budget deficit of $61.9 million. The deficit in the cash budget was covered out of working capital, reducing it to a level of negative $4.8 million by the end of 1998.

The Agency's major donors had responded repeatedly and generously in recent years to special appeals from the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General for special funding of UNRWA's General Fund budget, as well as of project funds. After consultations with donors in September 1998, April 1999 and September 1999, additional contributions were pledged to help the Agency with its cash-flow problem.

The Working Group noted that in 1999 UNRWA had adopted a more transparent budgeting methodology for the 2000-2001 biennium. By adopting a programme-based approach, UNRWA hoped to achieve full funding of its 2000-2001 budget and to move beyond the budget crisis of recent years. New policies were also adopted in 1999 for the engagement of area staff, beginning with teachers recruited for the 1999/2000 school year. Under those new policies, staff previously working on temporary contracts were being offered fixed-term contracts with an improved package of entitlements.

The Working Group expressed deep concern about UNRWA's financial prospects and emphasized that it was the responsibility of the international community to ensure the maintenance of UNRWA services at acceptable quantity and quality levels, as defined by the needs of the refugee community, and to ensure that service levels kept pace with the natural growth of the refugee population. It also expressed alarm at the continuing negative effect of seven years of austerity measures on the Agency's humanitarian operations, especially in the education and health-care sectors.

The Working Group appreciated that UNRWA had made significant progress towards eliminating the structural deficit problem through the use of contract teachers, reductions in international staffing and other reforms. It called for the early and complete fulfilment of pledges and other commitments to the Agency, in particular reimbursement of value-added tax and other charges paid to the PA, and of funds advanced by the Agency from its regular budget for the completion of the European Gaza Hospital and its headquarters relocation.

The Working Group noted the introduction of regularized conditions of employment for staff working on temporary contracts and the adoption of new staff policies that would facilitate the employment of fixed-term staff. Over the long run, that would make a significant contribution to reducing costs, particularly in its education programme. However, the Working Group appreciated that that action was not a long-term solution to securing funding of the Agency's regular activities on a sustainable basis. It was concerned that freezes on regular budget allocations for university scholarships, rehabilitation of shelters and selective cash assistance had not only reduced the Agency's activities in those areas, but made them dependent on extrabudgetary contributions. The Group feared that additional austerity cuts could cause severe social and economic hardships to an already suffering refugee population and put an increased burden on the authorities hosting the refugees.

The Working Group urged Governments, among other things, to consider making special contributions to cover the deficit and build up the working capital, so that UNRWA services could continue uninterrupted and the Agency could restore services cut as a result of the austerity measures, and to ensure that donor support of emergency-related and special programmes or capital projects did not in any way decrease or divert contributions to the Agency's regular programmes.

Pledging Conference. At a 1999 meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee of the General Assembly for the Announcement of Voluntary Contributions to UNRWA (New York, 8 December), 20 countries pledged $172 million for the Agency's 2000 programmes, about 61 per cent of what UNRWA needed to maintain its regular services. The largest pledges were made by the United States ($80 million), the European Community ($40 million), Sweden ($18.8 million), Norway ($12.5 million), the Netherlands ($5 million), Switzerland ($4.9 million) and Germany ($4.5 million).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the Fourth Committee's recommendation [A/54/575], adopted resolution 54/70 without vote [agenda item 88].

Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2656(XXV) of 7 December 1970, 2728(XXV) of 15 December 1970, 2791(XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 53/47 of 3 December 1998 and the previous resolutions on this question,

Recalling also its decision 36/462 of 16 March 1982, by which it took note of the special report of the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East,

Having considered the report of the Working Group,

Taking into account the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East covering the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999,

Deeply concerned about the continuing critical financial situation of the Agency, which has affected and affects the continuation of the provision of necessary Agency services to Palestine refugees, including the emergency-related programmes,

Emphasizing the continuing need for extraordinary efforts in order to maintain, at least at the current minimum level, the activities of the Agency, as well as to enable the Agency to carry out essential construction,

1. Commends the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for its efforts to assist in ensuring the financial security of the Agency;

2. Takes note with approval of the report of the Working Group;

3. Requests the Working Group to continue its efforts, in cooperation with the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General, to find a solution to the financial situation of the Agency;

4. Welcomes the new, unified budget structure for the biennium 2000-2001, which can contribute significantly to improved budgetary transparency of the Agency;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary services and assistance to the Working Group for the conduct of its work.

Displaced persons

In a September report [A/54/377] on compliance with General Assembly resolution 53/48 [YUN 1998, p. 468], which called for the accelerated return of all persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities to their homes or former places of residence in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, the Secretary-General said that since UNRWA was not involved in arrangements for the return of either refugees or displaced persons not registered with it, the Agency's information was based on requests by returning registered refugees for the transfer of their entitlements to their areas of return. Displaced refugees known by UNRWA to have returned to the West Bank and Gaza Strip since June 1967 numbered 18,380. Records indicated that, between 1 July 1998 and 30 June 1999, 1,022 refugees had returned to the West Bank and 257 to Gaza. Some of the refugees might not have been displaced in 1967, but might be family members of a displaced registered refugee whom they either had accompanied on return or had joined later.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the Fourth Committee's recommendation [A/54/575], adopted resolution 54/71 by recorded vote (154-2-2) [agenda item 88].

Persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities

The General Assembly,

Taking note also of the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East covering the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999,

Concerned about the continuing human suffering resulting from the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities,

Taking note of the relevant provisions of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements, signed in Washington, D.C., on 13 September 1993 by the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization, with regard to the modalities for the admission of persons displaced in 1967, and concerned that the process agreed upon has not yet been effected,

1. Reaffirms the right of all persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities to return to their homes or former places of residence in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

2. Expresses the hope for an accelerated return of displaced persons through the mechanism agreed upon by the parties in article XII of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements;

3. Endorses, in the meanwhile, the efforts of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to continue to provide humanitarian assistance, as far as practicable, on an emergency basis, and as a temporary measure, to persons in the area who are currently displaced and in serious need of continued assistance as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities;

4. Strongly appeals to all Governments and to organizations and individuals to contribute generously to the Agency and to the other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned for the above-mentioned purposes;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, after consulting with the Commissioner-General, to report to the General Assembly before its fifty-fifth session on the progress made with regard to the implementation of the present resolution.

Education, training and scholarships

In a September report [A/54/376], the Secretary-General transmitted responses received to the General Assembly's 1998 appeal in resolution 53/49 [YUN 1998, p. 469] for States, specialized agencies and NGOs to augment special allocations for scholarships and grants to Palestine refugees, for which UNRWA acted as recipient and trustee.

In the 1999 fiscal year, Japan awarded nine fellowships to Palestine refugees, of which five were for vocational training for staff employed by UNRWA, one was in vocational training administration and three were in community health. All the fellowships were for training in Japan. Under Japanese grants of $400,000 made annually between 1992 and 1994, $500,000 in 1995 and $600,000 in both 1996 and 1997, 437 students were participating in the UNRWA university scholarship programme during 1998/99. Contributions from Switzerland in 1997 totalling $338,000 enabled 19 scholars to continue pursuing their university studies in the 1998/99 academic year. Out of the 315 students who benefited from part of the 1997 Swiss contribution for one year only, 67 scholars graduated in 1998, seven failed and 87 were granted scholarships in 1998/99 from savings of previous Swiss contributions. UNESCO granted 13 scholarships to Palestinian students in 1998/99, while WHO provided 62 fellowships or study tours for candidates nominated by the PA.

Proposed University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds"

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/52 [YUN 1998, p. 470], the Secretary-General submitted a September report on the proposal to establish a university for Palestine refugees in Jerusalem [A/54/385]. First mentioned by the Assembly in resolution 35/13 B [YUN 1980, p. 443], the issue had been the subject of annual reports by the Secretary-General.

To assist in the preparation of a feasibility study and at the Secretary-General's request, the Rector of the United Nations University again asked expert Mihaly Simai to visit the area and meet with Israeli officials. In response to the Secretary-General's note verbale of 28 July, requesting Israel to facilitate the visit, Israel, in a 26 August reply, stated that it had consistently voted against the resolution on the proposed university and that its position remained unchanged. It charged that the resolution's sponsors sought to exploit higher education for political purposes extraneous to genuine academic pursuits. Accordingly, Israel was of the opinion that the proposed visit would serve no useful purpose. The Secretary-General reported that it had not been possible to complete the study as planned.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, acting on the Fourth Committee's recommendation [A/54/575], adopted resolution 54/75 by recorded vote (155-2-1) [agenda item 88].

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/146 G of 16 December 1981, 37/120 C of 16 December 1982, 38/83 K of 15 December 1983, 39/99 K of 14 December 1984, 40/165 D and K of 16 December 1985, 41/69 K of 3 December 1986, 42/69 K of 2 December 1987, 43/57 J of 6 December 1988, 44/47 J of 8 December 1989, 45/73 J of 11 December 1990, 46/46 J of 9 December 1991, 47/69 J of 14 December 1992, 48/40 I of 10 December 1993, 49/35 G of 9 December 1994, 50/28 G of 6 December 1995, 51/130 of 13 December 1996, 52/63 of 10 December 1997 and 53/52 of 3 December 1998,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General, Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East covering the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999,

1. Emphasizes the need for strengthening the educational system in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 5 June 1967, including Jerusalem, and specifically the need for the establishment of the proposed university;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take all necessary measures for establishing the University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds", in accordance with General Assembly resolution 35/13 B of 3 November 1980, giving due consideration to the recommendations consistent with the provisions of that resolution;

3. Calls once more upon Israel, the occupying Power, to cooperate in the implementation of the present resolution and to remove the hindrances that it has put in the way of establishing the University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds";

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Property rights

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/51 [YUN 1998, p. 471], the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/54/345] on steps taken to protect and administer Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel and to establish a fund for income derived therefrom, on behalf of the rightful owners. He indicated that he had transmitted the resolution to Israel and all other Member States, requesting information on any steps taken or envisaged with regard to its implementation.

In a 23 August reply, reproduced in the report, Israel stated that its position on the resolutions on Palestine refugees had been set forth in successive annual replies, the latest of which had been included in the Secretary-General's 1998 report on the subject [YUN 1998, p. 471]. Israel regretted that the resolutions regarding UNRWA remained rife with political issues irrelevant to the Agency's work and detached from the reality in the area. While Israel believed that UNRWA could play an important role in promoting the social and economic advancement foreseen in agreements between Israel and the Palestinians, it called on the Assembly to consolidate the resolutions on UNRWA into one directly related to the Agency's humanitarian tasks.

Report of Conciliation Commission. The United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, in its fifty-third report covering the period from 1 September 1998 to 31 August 1999 [A/54/338], noted that, pursuant to Assembly resolution 51/129 [YUN 1996, p. 423], the project to preserve and modernize its records was nearing completion.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/54/575], adopted resolution 54/74 by recorded vote (154-2-2) [agenda item 88].

Palestine refugees' properties and their revenues

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 194(III) of 11 December 1948, 36/146 C of 16 December 1981 and all its subsequent resolutions on the question,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General in pursuance of resolution 53/51 of 3 December 1998,

Taking note also of the report of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine for the period from 1 September 1998 to 31 August 1999,

Recalling that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the principles of international law uphold the principle that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his or her property,

Recalling in particular its resolution 394(V) of 14 December 1950, in which it directed the Conciliation Commission, in consultation with the parties concerned, to prescribe measures for the protection of the rights, property and interests of the Palestine Arab refugees,

Taking note of the completion of the programme of identification and evaluation of Arab property, as announced by the Conciliation Commission in its twenty-second progress report, and of the fact that the Land Office had a schedule of Arab owners and file of documents defining the location, area and other particulars of Arab property,

Recalling that, in the framework of the Middle East peace process, the Palestine Liberation Organization and the Government of Israel agreed, in the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements of 13 September 1993, to commence negotiations on permanent status issues, including the important issue of the refugees,

1. Reaffirms that the Palestine Arab refugees are entitled to their property and to the income derived therefrom, in conformity with the principles of justice and equity;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take all appropriate steps, in consultation with the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, for the protection of Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel, expresses its appreciation for the work done to preserve and modernize the existing records of the Commission, and requests the Secretary-General to complete this task;

3. Calls once more upon Israel to render all facilities and assistance to the Secretary-General in the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Calls upon all the parties concerned to provide the Secretary-General with any pertinent information in their possession concerning Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel that would assist him in the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Urges the Palestinian and Israeli sides, as agreed between them, to deal with the important issue of Palestine refugees' properties and their revenues in the framework of the final status negotiations of the Middle East peace process;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Peacekeeping operations

Lebanon

Though the situation in southern Lebanon remained volatile and dangerous in 1999, the withdrawal of Israeli forces from Jezzín and the return of that town to the jurisdiction of the Lebanese Government was a positive development that could lead to the complete withdrawal of Israel from the occupied Lebanese zone, and thus remove a major obstacle to regional peace.

On 4 January [A/53/777-S/1999/6], Lebanon informed the Secretary-General that on 3 January Israeli military aircraft carried out an attack near the village of Nahle, wounding seven civilians. Lebanon condemned that open assault on its sovereignty and urged the international community to take the necessary steps to halt Israeli military attacks and end the intimidation of its inhabitants. On 8 January [A/53/785-S/1999/23], Lebanon also reported that, the previous day, Israeli forces destroyed at least 14 homes in the township of Arnun and carried out a large-scale raid on the village of Shab'a, expelling 25 residents.

Responding on 26 January [A/53/809-S/1999/69], Israel said that Lebanon continued to be directly responsible for the volatile security situation along the Israeli-Lebanese border through its support for Hezbollah, an international terrorist organization, and its use of Lebanese territory for an elaborate military infrastructure. Lebanon had let itself become a launching pad for acts of aggression and terrorism against Israel and, in addition to Hezbollah, a number of Lebanese and Palestinian terrorist organizations had been given free rein to attack Israel from Lebanon. Israel reiterated its willingness to implement Security Council resolution 425 (1978) [YUN 1978, p. 312] and called on the Lebanese Government to cooperate with Israel to restore peace along their common border.

On 11 February [A/53/825-S/1999/146], Lebanon transmitted to the Secretary-General a letter from the Follow-up Committee for the support of Lebanese detainees in Israeli prisons addressed to the Lebanese Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs. The letter recalled the decision of the Israeli Supreme Court granting the Israeli authorities permission to hold Lebanese detainees in Israeli prisons and detention camps without trial and to keep them as hostages.

Rejecting those statements, Israel, on 12 February [A/53/828-S/1999/150], reaffirmed that Lebanon had a clear duty under international law and the UN Charter not to allow its territory to be a base for attacks on Israel, to disarm all terrorist groups and to cease all aid and encouragement to them. As a result of Lebanon's failure to do so, Israel was compelled to take defensive measures against those terrorist activities, which were not only supported by Lebanon but directly aided, financially and otherwise, by the Syrian Arab Republic and Iran.

Responding on 24 March [A/53/876-S/1999/326] to the Israeli accusation, the Syrian Arab Republic said that it condemned terrorism as criminal and called for genuine cooperation among all States to prevent, combat and eliminate its causes. It had also called for the preparation of internationally agreed standards that clearly distinguished between terrorism, which had to be condemned and countered, and legitimate national struggles against foreign occupation, which had to be supported. Syria stated that the UN Charter enshrined the right of peoples to self-determination, freedom and independence and to liberate their territory from foreign occupation. On the other hand, Israeli State terrorism, as practised against the Lebanese people, the people of Palestine and Syrian citizens of the occupied Syrian Golan, had to be condemned. According to Syria, Israel had never ceased to carry out acts of terrorism in order to achieve its goal of extending its hegemony and intimidating the Arab people.

On 18 February [A/53/834-S/1999/172 & Corr.1], Lebanon said that Israel had expanded the area it occupied in southern Lebanon by incorporating the village of Arnun into its security zone. On 22 February [A/53/840-S/1999/185], Israel said Lebanon had deliberately misrepresented the facts on the ground, since Arnun had long been part of the security zone, which Israel had been compelled to maintain in response to the terrorist attacks emanating from Lebanese territory. Since the village was being exploited by Hezbollah as a forward staging area for terrorist attacks, Israeli forces had placed barbed wire on the outskirts of Arnun as an additional measure of self-defence. On 8 April [A/53/904-S/1999/399], Lebanon informed the Secretary-General that, on 6 April, Israeli occupation forces ejected 18 residents of Shab'a from the occupied zone, bringing the number of residents expelled from Shab'a since the beginning of the year to 70. On 15 April [A/53/909-S/1999/430], Lebanon said that Israeli armed forces, in a new attempt to include Arnun in the occupied southern zone, had entered and separated the village from the liberated area, arrested some residents and prevented inhabitants from entering it.

On 24 March [A/53/878-S/1999/333], Lebanon said that Israel's letters ignored the prime fact in southern Lebanon that had been the cause of the violence and abuse directed against Lebanese residents, namely the 21 years of Israeli occupation in violation of the UN Charter. Israel's leaders had repeatedly issued statements linking acceptance of resolution 425(1978) with measures and conditions that were alien to its letter and spirit and that, once admitted, would alter its legal and political character. The Lebanese resistance targeted only the Israeli occupation inside Lebanese territory and responded to Israel's targeting of Lebanese civilians in its assaults.

By a 19 April letter [A/54/82-S/1999/463], Israel said that Syria and Lebanon were engaging in an insidious form of complicity to terrorism in their letters and in their policies on the ground by trying to disguise terrorism as national resistance. In particular, the Lebanese claim that Hezbollah targeted only the Israeli forces that operated in Lebanon was false. The declared willingness of the Syrian and Lebanese Governments to host an elaborate terrorist infrastructure, permit its regular reinforcement and endorse its operations directed against a neighbouring country was incompatible with the provisions of resolution 425(1978). Israel added that the possibility of peace and security along its border with Lebanon was being sabotaged by Syria, which in effect was holding the implementation of that resolution hostage to its own bid for territorial gains with Israel.

On 24 June [A/53/1010-S/1999/714], Lebanon informed the Secretary-General that Israeli aircraft had launched that day a series of attacks against the area of Al-Joumhour on the Beirut heights and had bombed the local power station. At the same time, Israeli aircraft had launched a number of bombing attacks against an area south of Beirut and one in the northern Bekaa. Those attacks were part of a new series of Israeli incursions, which had left five people dead and 13 wounded and had caused destruction of civilian property. The next day [A/53/1011-S/1999/717], Lebanon said that Israeli aircraft had bombed an electric power station at Arb Salim, as well as several bridges connecting the southern region to Beirut and certain bridges linking the southern areas. Reports indicated that 13 people had been killed and about 84 civilians had been injured.

On 26 June [S/1999/734], the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States condemned those repeated Israeli assaults on Lebanon. He said that the League regarded Israel's practices as an escalation of tension and an indication that reflected negatively on efforts being made to revive the peace process. It requested that all necessary measures be taken to halt Israel's acts of aggression.

Explaining its version of the incidents, Israel, on 30 June [S/1999/740], said that Lebanon had presented only a selective and one-sided account of events, which disregarded the acts of terror that had precipitated Israel's response. Such acts were conducted by the Hezbollah group from within Lebanese territory against Israeli civilians and territory, with the support and active encouragement of the Lebanese Government. In an attempt to exercise maximum restraint, Israel had appealed to the monitoring group established by the 26 April 1996 understanding [YUN 1996, p. 428], with the hope that Lebanon and Hezbollah would honour commitments established by the understanding and refrain from further attacks. It was only after a 24 May Hezbollah attack on civilian areas in northern Israel, which caused the death of two civilians and injured several others, that Israel opted to respond.

On 9 July [A/53/1016-S/1999/771], Lebanon transmitted to the Secretary-General a letter by the Follow-up Committee for the support of Lebanese detainees in Israeli prisons on the occasion of Lebanese Detainee Day, commemorated on 14 July. The Committee called on the international community to intensify its efforts for the release of those Lebanese held in Khiam and other Israeli prisons. By a 15 July letter [A/53/1021] to the Secretary-General, Lebanon said that on the eve of Lebanese Detainee Day, Lebanese prisoners held at the Khiam prison declared a hunger strike to protest against their continued detention. According to the Committee for the Defence of Lebanese Detainees in Israeli Prisons, 130 Lebanese were being detained in Khiam, which was administered by the South Lebanon Army in collaboration with Israeli authorities, while 21 Lebanese were held in prisons inside Israel. Later, on 2 August [A/53/1031-S/1999/839], Lebanon informed the Secretary-General that Israeli military forces had been holding the people and village of Ayta under siege since 15 July. A number of villagers had been detained and taken to the Khiam detention centre. Lebanon called for an end to the siege there and other besieged villages and for the release of all those Lebanese citizens who were being held hostage.

On 9 August [A/53/1034-S/1999/861], Saudi Arabia affirmed that Israel was holding 170 Lebanese detainees in its prisons, 128 of them in the Khiam prison centre and 42 in prisons inside Israel, as well as 10 Palestinian residents of Lebanon. Saudi Arabia called on the international community to send an international commission of inquiry to the Khiam prison centre and to secure the immediate release of the sick, the young and the elderly. Responding on 22 August [A/53/1041-S/1999/906], Israel said that the detainees referred to by Lebanon and Saudi Arabia were all active members of terrorist organizations, such as Hezbollah. The detainees in Israel were not being held arbitrarily, but pursuant to Israeli law applicable to all detainees. With regard to the Khiam detention facility, it was common knowledge that the South Lebanon Army exercised independent authority and responsibility over the functioning of that centre and Israeli personnel were neither stationed there nor involved in its maintenance. Nonetheless, Israel had encouraged the establishment and enhancement of adequate conditions and improved standards for the detainees therein. An October 1998 ICRC report confirmed that the South Lebanon Army had taken steps towards improving the conditions at Khiam. Furthermore, that particular detention centre, according to Israel, was the only one of its kind in Lebanon, regularly visited and supervised by ICRC.

In a 28 October note verbale to the Secretary-General [A/54/516-S/1999/1105], the Syrian Arab Republic transmitted a statement issued by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs on the occasion of the International Day to Close the Khiam Detention Camp. Syria said that Khiam had become the symbol of the flagrant violation of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights [YUN 1948-49, p. 535] and all related international instruments, and that Israel had not allowed an international mission of inquiry or a human rights organization to enter the camp from the outset.

On 12 August [A/53/1035-S/1999/878], Israel said that an increasing number of roadside bombs had been placed along the main axes of movement in the central sectors of the security zone in southern Lebanon. On 22 July, Israel Defence Forces (IDF) units discovered a large store of weaponry, including roadside bombs for use by Hezbollah. Israel noted that the use by Hezbollah of Lebanese villages and population centres as launching points and staging areas for terror operations was yet a further violation of the April 1996 understanding. In that context, the allegations made by Lebanon on 2 August that Israel had been holding the people of Ayta under siege was baseless. Movement by residents of the village was unrestricted both within the security zone and outside.

On 6 December [A/54/656-S/1999/1224], Lebanon reported that Israeli military forces were maintaining their siege of Ayta and continued to harass and arrest its inhabitants. The town was completely cut off from the outside world owing to its continued encirclement by Israeli forces.

In a series of monthly communications [A/53/792-S/1999/33, A/53/831-S/1999/158, A/53/859-S/1999/257, A/53/918-S/1999/459, A/53/967-S/1999/586, A/53/999-S/1999/687, A/53/1024-S/1999/811, A/53/1050-S/1999/971, A/54/435-S/1999/1023, A/54/524-S/1999/1122, A/54/655-S/1999/1220, A/54/689-S/1999/1272], Lebanon detailed Israeli attacks on southern Lebanon and the Western Bekaa and its practices against the civilian inhabitants of those areas. Israel, on four occasions [A/54/74-S/1999/300, A/54/138-S/1999/704, A/54/351-S/1999/979, A/54/620-S/1999/1178], replied that Lebanon's monthly letters merely obscured the fact that the Lebanese Government was directly responsible for the volatile situation along its southern border, since it continued to encourage Hezbollah and other terrorist organizations to use Lebanese territory for their declared war against Israel.

UNIFIL

The Security Council twice extended the mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) in 1999, in January and July, each time for a six-month period.

UNIFIL, which was established by Council resolution 425(1978) following Israel's invasion of Lebanon [YUN 1978, p. 296], was originally entrusted with confirming the withdrawal of Israeli forces, restoring international peace and security, and assisting the Lebanese Government in ensuring the return of its effective authority in southern Lebanon. Following a second Israeli invasion in 1982 [YUN 1982, p. 428], the Council, in resolution 511(1982) [ibid., p. 450], authorized the Force to carry out, in addition to its original mandate, the interim task of providing protection and humanitarian assistance to the local population, while maintaining its positions in the area of deployment.

The Force headquarters, based predominantly in Naqoura, provided command and control, as well as liaison with Lebanon and Israel, the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO) and a number of NGOs.

Composition and deployment

As at 31 December 1999, UNIFIL comprised 4,504 troops from: Fiji (600), Finland (494), France (245), Ghana (653), India (619), Ireland (612), Italy (46), Nepal (604) and Poland (631). The Force was assisted in its tasks by 51 military observers of UNTSO. In addition, UNIFIL employed 460 civilian staff, of whom 116 were recruited internationally and 344 locally. On 15 November [S/1999/1168], the Security Council took note of the Secretary-General's intention [S/1999/1167] to appoint Major-General Seth Kofi Obeng (Ghana) as Force Commander on 1 December, to replace Major-General Jioji Konousi Konrote (Fiji), who completed his tour of duty on 30 September.

Since the establishment of UNIFIL, 229 members of the Force had lost their lives: 77 as a result of firings or bomb explosions, 94 in accidents and 58 from other causes. A total of 341 were wounded by shooting or by mine or bomb explosions.

Activities

Report of Secretary-General (January). In a report on developments from 16 July 1998 to 15 January 1999 in the UNIFIL area of operation [S/1999/61], the Secretary-General said that hostilities continued between IDF and its local Lebanese auxiliary, the de facto forces (DFF), on the one hand, and armed elements who had proclaimed their resistance against the Israeli occupation, on the other.

During the reporting period, UNIFIL recorded 386 operations by armed elements against IDF/DFF, the highest number in a long time. Some 280 operations north of the Litani River were also reported, the vast majority of which were carried out by the Islamic Resistance, the military wing of the Shiite Muslim Hezbollah organization. The Shiite movement Amal took responsibility for some 30 operations; a few were attributed to other Lebanese groups. The armed elements employed small arms, mortars, rocket-propelled grenades, anti-tank missiles, recoilless rifles, rockets and explosive devices. IDF/DFF, in response to attacks or in operations they initiated, employed artillery, mortars, tanks, helicopter gunships, fixed-wing aircraft and explosive devices. IDF continued its practice of conducting pre-emptive artillery bombardments but reduced long-range patrols forward of its positions. UNIFIL recorded close to 18,000 rounds of artillery, mortar, tanks and missiles fired by IDF/DFF, an increase of 70 per cent over the last reporting period [YUN 1998, p. 476]. IDF conducted seven air raids in UNIFIL's area of operation and another 58 air raids were carried out against targets north of the Litani River. The Israeli navy patrolled the Lebanese territorial waters in the south and imposed restrictions on local fishermen.

UNIFIL continued its efforts to limit the conflict and to protect the inhabitants from the fighting through its network of checkpoints and observation posts and an active programme of patrolling, as well as continuous contacts with the parties. Nevertheless, civilians were again killed or injured in UNIFIL's area of operation. Serious incidents were also reported outside that area. Incidents of armed elements operating close to UN positions became more frequent and firings at or close to UN personnel increased to 98, compared to 72 during the last reporting period. The monitoring group set up in accordance with the 26 April 1996 understanding held 16 meetings at UNIFIL headquarters to consider complaints by Israel and Lebanon.

Within the Israeli-controlled area (ICA), Israel continued to maintain a civil administration and security service. The infrastructure in ICA continued to be improved with funds provided by the Lebanese Government. However, ICA remained economically dependent on Israel, where more than 2,500 of the inhabitants worked. IDF/DFF conducted search operations in some villages in ICA and made several arrests, while its security apparatus restricted the movement of the inhabitants on a number of occasions.

UNIFIL extended assistance to the civilian population in its area of operation and ICA in the form of medical care, harvest patrols and the distribution of educational material and equipment to poorer schools and orphanages. The Force also assisted the Government of Lebanon in transporting and distributing supplies to villages in ICA when they faced shortages owing to restrictions imposed by IDF/DFF. Throughout the period, UNIFIL cooperated on humanitarian matters with the Lebanese authorities, UN agencies, ICRC and other organizations and agencies operating in Lebanon. In addition, the Force carried out 41 controlled explosions of unexploded ordnance in its area of operation.

The Secretary-General observed that fighting in south Lebanon continued at an increased pace and the situation in the area remained volatile and dangerous, with a heightened risk of escalation. Although UNIFIL had been prevented from implementing the mandate contained in Security Council resolution 425(1978), its contribution to stability and the protection it was able to afford the population of the area remained important. Therefore, he recommended that the Council accede to Lebanon's request (see next page) and extend UNIFIL's mandate for another six months, until 31 July 1999.

Communication (January). By an 8 January letter to the Secretary-General [S/1999/22], Lebanon requested the Security Council to extend UNIFIL's mandate for a further interim period of six months. Lebanon called for the full implementation of resolution 425(1978), which called on Israel to cease its military action against Lebanese territorial integrity and to withdraw forthwith its forces from all Lebanese territory.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

On 28 January [meeting 3970], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1223(1999). The draft [S/1999/75] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) of 19 March 1978, 501(1982) of 25 February 1982, 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982 and 520(1982) of 17 September 1982, as well as all its resolutions on the situation in Lebanon,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General of 19 January 1999 on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, and taking note of the observations expressed and the commitments mentioned therein,

Taking note of the letter dated 8 January 1999 from the Permanent Representative of Lebanon to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General,

Responding to the request of the Government of Lebanon,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for a further period of six months, that is, until 31 July 1999;

2. Reiterates its strong support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and political independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries;

3. Re-emphasizes the terms of reference and general guidelines of the Force as stated in the report of the Secretary-General of 19 March 1978, approved by resolution 426(1978), and calls upon all parties concerned to cooperate fully with the Force for the full implementation of its mandate;

4. Condemns all acts of violence committed in particular against the Force, and urges the parties to put an end to them;

5. Reiterates that the Force should fully implement its mandate as defined in resolutions 425(1978), 426(1978) and all other relevant resolutions;

6. Encourages further efficiency and savings provided they do not affect the operational capacity of the Force;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue consultations with the Government of Lebanon and other parties directly concerned with the implementation of the present resolution and to report to the Security Council thereon.

At the same meeting, the President made statement S/PRST/1999/4 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has noted with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General of 19 January 1999 on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, submitted in conformity with resolution 1188(1998) of 30 July 1998.

The Council reaffirms its commitment to the full sovereignty, political independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries. In this context, the Council asserts that all States shall refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations.

As the Council extends the mandate of the Force for a further interim period on the basis of resolution 425(1978), it again stresses the urgent need for the implementation of that resolution in all its aspects. It reiterates its full support for the Taif Agreement of 22 October 1989 and for the continued efforts of the Lebanese Government to consolidate peace, national unity and security in the country, while successfully carrying out the reconstruction process. The Council commends the Lebanese Government for its successful effort to extend its authority in the south of the country in full coordination with the Force.

The Council expresses its concern over the continuing violence in southern Lebanon, regrets the loss of civilian life and urges all parties to exercise restraint.

The Council takes this opportunity to express its appreciation for the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General and his staff in this regard. The Council notes with deep concern the high level of casualties the Force has suffered and pays a special tribute to all those who gave their lives while serving in the Force. It commends the troops of the Force and troop-contributing countries for their sacrifices and commitment to the cause of international peace and security under difficult circumstances.

Report of Secretary-General (July). In a report on developments from 16 January to 15 July [S/1999/807], the Secretary-General noted that there had been an increase in fighting between IDF/DFF and anti-Israeli armed elements. UNIFIL recorded 359 operations conducted by armed elements against IDF/DFF. There were also reports of some 200 operations north of the Litani River by the Islamic Resistance, 20 by Amal and a few by other Lebanese groups. The hostilities reached their peak on 24 June, when Israel carried out air raids against civilian targets in Lebanon and armed elements fired rockets into northern Israel.

A significant development was DFF's withdrawal from the town of Jezzin at the end of May and in the first days of June and its return under the full control of the Lebanese authorities, thereby reducing the area under Israeli control for the first time since 1985. The withdrawal complied with the April 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 472] decision by the Israeli Ministerial Committee for National Security to accept Security Council resolution 425(1978). Inside UNIFIL's area of operation, however, the situation was more volatile. Armed elements displayed an increasing tendency to operate in the vicinity of villages and UNIFIL positions. DFF showed signs of loosened control and, in some cases, vented their apparent frustration by firing into villages and targeting UNIFIL positions.

UNIFIL troops were deployed to provide a measure of protection to villages and farmers working in the fields, as part of its continued efforts to limit the conflict and protect the inhabitants from the fighting. Nevertheless, civilians were again killed or injured. In carrying out its functions, the Force encountered hostile reactions by both armed elements and IDF/DFF. On 31 May, a UNIFIL soldier was killed and two were wounded by a mortar round fired by IDF/DFF at a UN position. The number of firings at or close to UN positions and personnel was almost double that of the last reporting period, totalling 10 111 by IDF/DFF, 56 by armed elements and 13 unattributable.

The Secretary-General reported the death of five members of the Force during the period under review. In addition to the soldier killed by IDF/DFF fire, one member of the Force died due to the accidental discharge of a service rifle, while three others died of natural causes.

UNIFIL continued to assist in the delivery of humanitarian assistance to the civilian population and to cooperate on humanitarian matters with the Lebanese authorities, UN agencies, ICRC and other organizations. The disposal of unexploded ordnance also continued, with 117 explosions being carried out in UNIFIL's area of operation. The monitoring group set up in accordance with the April 1996 understanding held 15 meetings at UNIFIL headquarters to consider complaints by Israel and Lebanon.

The Secretary-General observed that, notwithstanding the escalation of hostilities, the return of Jezzín under the jurisdiction of the Lebanese Government had been a positive sign and it was hoped that the same would become possible for the part of Lebanon that was still under Israeli control. He reaffirmed his belief that UNIFIL's contribution to the stability and the protection it provided to the population of the area remained important. Therefore, he recommended that the Force's mandate be extended for another six months, until 31 January 2000, as requested by Lebanon on 25 June [S/1999/720].

On 2 June, the Security Council President issued a press statement in which the Council members noted the information provided by the Secretary-General on 1 June concerning a 31 May mortar attack on UN positions located in and around the edge of Brashit and the resulting casualties, including the death of an Irish soldier. Members of the Council expressed their deep sympathy and condolences to the families of the victims and condemned any action that violated UNIFIL's non-combatant status.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 30 July [meeting 4028], the Security Council adopted resolution 1254(1999) unanimously. The draft text [S/1999/826] had been prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) of 19 March 1978, 501(1982) of 25 February 1982, 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982 and 520(1982) of 17 September 1982, as well as all its resolutions on the situation in Lebanon,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General of 21 July 1999 on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, and taking note of the observations expressed and the commitments mentioned therein,

Taking note of the letter dated 25 June 1999 from the Permanent Representative of Lebanon to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General,

Responding to the request of the Government of Lebanon,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for a further period of six months, that is, until 31 January 2000;

2. Reiterates its strong support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and political independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries;

3. Re-emphasizes the terms of reference and general guidelines of the Force as stated in the report of the Secretary-General of 19 March 1978, approved by resolution 426(1978), and calls upon all parties concerned to cooperate fully with the Force for the full implementation of its mandate;

4. Condemns all acts of violence committed in particular against the Force, and urges the parties to put an end to them;

5. Reiterates that the Force should fully implement its mandate as defined in resolutions 425(1978), 426(1978) and all other relevant resolutions;

6. Encourages further efficiency and savings provided they do not affect the operational capacity of the Force;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue consultations with the Government of Lebanon and other parties directly concerned with the implementation of the present resolution and to report to the Security Council thereon.

After the adoption of the resolution, the President made statement S/PRST/1999/24, which was identical to statement S/PRST/1999/4 (see p. 446), except for the first paragraph:

The Security Council has noted with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General of 21 July 1999 on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, submitted in conformity with resolution 1223(1999) of 28 January 1999.

Further developments

In a report on developments during the second half of 1999 [S/2000/28], the Secretary-General noted that a significant political development for the region was the resumption, in December, of negotiations between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic, under the auspices of the United States. Hostilities continued at a somewhat reduced level between IDF/DFF, on the one hand, and anti-Israeli armed elements, on the other. Nevertheless, the Secretary-General observed that the situation in the area remained volatile.

UNIFIL recorded 340 operations by armed elements against IDF/DFF from 16 July to 31 December. The Islamic Resistance continued to carry out operations north of the Litani River, while the Palestinian group Islamic Jihad, which had not been active in the area for two years, took responsibility for two operations. IDF/DFF, in response to attacks or in operations they initiated, relied more heavily on air raids as a retaliatory measure, though they continued their practice of conducting pre-emptive artillery bombardments. Incidents of armed elements operating from close to UN positions increased, reaching a high of 21 in December. Roughly half of those incidents were attributable to the Islamic Resistance and the other half to the Shiite movement Amal.

In the area where it was deployed, UNIFIL continued its efforts to limit the conflict, to protect the inhabitants from the fighting through its network of checkpoints and observation posts, and to assist the civilian population in the form of medical care, harvest patrols, water projects, services for schools and supplies to social services.

Financing

Reports of Secretary-General and ACABQ. In a January report [A/53/797], the Secretary-General submitted the financial performance report of UNIFIL for the period 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998. Expenditures for the period totalled $125,027,300 gross ($121,704,700 net), resulting in additional requirements of $57,600 ($844,000 net), compared to the amount appropriated for the maintenance of UNIFIL by the General Assembly in its resolution 51/233 [YUN 1997, p. 463]. The report also provided updated information on expenditure in connection with the incident at Qana on 18 April 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 429], totalling $1,284,633 against the commitment authorization of $1,773,618 granted by the Assembly in resolution 51/233.

In February [A/53/819], the Secretary-General presented the proposed budget for UNIFIL for the period 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, in the amount of $140,044,200 gross ($136,014,800 net), inclusive of a $135,000 budgeted voluntary contribution.

The comments and recommendations of ACABQ were contained in an April report [A/53/895/Add.1].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 June [meeting 101], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/982], adopted resolution 53/227 by recorded vote (119-2-1) [agenda item 122 (b)].

Financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 51/233 of 13 June 1997 and 52/237 of 26 June 1998,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 425 (1978) of 19 March 1978, by which the Council established the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force, the latest of which was resolution 1223(1999) of 28 January 1999,

Recalling its resolution S-8/2 of 21 April 1978 on the financing of the Force and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 52/237,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Force are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Force, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Force,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Concerned that the Secretary-General continues to face difficulties in meeting the obligations of the Force on a current basis, including reimbursement to current and former troop-contributing States,

Concerned also that the surplus balances in the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon have been used to meet expenses of the Force in order to compensate for the lack of income resulting from non-payment and late payment by Member States of their contributions,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon as at 30 April 1999, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 119,646,994 United States dollars, representing 4 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Force to the period ending 30 June 1999, notes that some 12 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, particularly those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses its deep concern that Israel did not comply with General Assembly resolutions 51/233 and 52/237;

3. Stresses once again that Israel should strictly abide by General Assembly resolutions 51/233 and 52/237;

4. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

5. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

6. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Force in full and on time;

7. Takes note of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Force is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue his efforts to recruit local staff for the Force against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Force;

10. Decides to revise the amount of the commitment authority granted in paragraph 7 of General Assembly resolution 51/233 in connection with the costs resulting from the incident at Qana on 18 April 1996 and, correspondingly, the amount to be borne by Israel as decided in paragraph 8 of the same resolution, from 1,773,618 dollars to 1,284,633 dollars;

11. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to ensure the full implementation of paragraph 8 of General Assembly resolution 51/233 and paragraph 5 of resolution 52/237, stresses once again that Israel shall pay the amount of 1,284,633 dollars resulting from the incident at Qana on 18 April 1996, and requests the Secretary-General to report on this matter to the Assembly at its fifty-fourth session;

12. Takes note of the additional requirements of 57,600 dollars gross (844,000 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, which will be covered by the liquidation of obligations no longer required for that period;

13. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon the amount of 148,904,683 dollars gross (144,875,283 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Force for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, inclusive of the amount of 7,407,886 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations and the amount of 1,452,597 dollars for the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy;

14. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion among Member States the amount of 12,397,474 dollars gross (12,061,690 dollars net) for the period from 1 to 31 July 1999, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1999 and 2000, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997;

15. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 14 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 335,784 dollars approved for the period from 1 to 31 July 1999;

16. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion among Member States the amount of 136,372,209 dollars gross (132,678,593 dollars net) for the period from 1 August 1999 to 30 June 2000, at a monthly rate of 12,397,474 dollars gross (12,061,690 dollars net) in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1999 and 2000 as set out in its resolution 52/215 A, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Force beyond 31 July 1999;

17. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 16 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 3,693,616 dollars approved for the period from 1 August 1999 to 30 June 2000;

Abstaining: Iran.

The Assembly and the Committee adopted the first preambular paragraph and operative paragraphs 2, 3, 10 and 11 by a recorded vote of 74 to 2, with 42 abstentions, and 84 to 2, with 46 abstentions, respectively.

Speaking before the vote, Israel said that it bore no responsibility or blame for taking necessary measures in the legitimate exercise of self-defence, as it did in the case of the Qana incident. Israel could, however, negotiate a resolution to the conflict that would restore peace and security to the Israeli-Lebanese border and ultimately prevent those incidents.

Lebanon said that resistance against the Israeli forces in southern Lebanon would continue, along with political endeavours, until the implementation of Security Council resolution 425(1978), which called for the unconditional and immediate withdrawal of Israel from the Lebanese territories to internationally recognized boundaries.

By decision 54/462 A of 23 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of UNIFIL's financing at the resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session.

Syrian Arab Republic

In 1999, the General Assembly again called for Israel's withdrawal from the Golan Heights in the Syrian Arab Republic, which it had occupied since 1967. The area was effectively annexed by Israel when it extended its laws, jurisdiction and administration to the territory towards the end of 1981 [YUN 1981, p. 309].

Israeli policies and measures affecting the human rights of the population in the Golan Heights and other occupied territories were monitored by the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli Practices) and were the subject of resolutions adopted by the Commission on Human Rights (see p. 736 to 738) and the Assembly.

Special Committee on Israeli Practices. In its annual report [A/54/325], the Committee on Israeli Practices stated that it had visited Damascus as well as Quneitra province, which bordered the occupied area, where it received information from witnesses on the current situation in the Syrian Arab Golan. The Committee was informed that there had been no change in Israeli policy regarding the occupied Golan, that the number of settlers had increased and existing settlements had expanded during the period under review, though no new ones were established.

The Committee was informed that the Golan was inhabited by some 23,000 Syrians who lived in five villages under Israeli occupation. The approximately 40 Israeli settlements in the Golan, the largest of which was Katzrin, were inhabited by 15,000 settlers. The Israeli authorities had set a target figure for 36,000 settlers and, accordingly, 2,500 new housing units were to be added to the settlements. The settlements competed with Syrians in economic terms regarding agriculture, and competition was rendered more uneven by the restricted access of the Syrian inhabitants to water resources. The Committee was informed that the main purpose of the Golan's occupation was control over those resources.

The Committee's attention was drawn in particular to three serious problems: the use of the educational curriculum by Israel to incite sectarian differences among the Arab population and the marginalization of the Arabic language; the separation of families living on either side of the valley constituting the demarcation line; and the danger posed by landmines, especially those laid close to villages and houses. The Committee called on the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in consultation with the Secretary-General, to establish a system of continuous communication with the Israeli authorities with a view to improving the living conditions of the Palestinian and Syrian peoples in the occupied territories.

Reports of Secretary-General. On 28 July [A/54/184], the Secretary-General reported that no reply had been received from Israel to his June request for information on steps taken to implement General Assembly resolution 53/57 [YUN 1998, p. 481], which called on Israel to desist from changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the Golan, and from its repressive measures against the population.

By a 25 October report [A/54/495], the Secretary-General transmitted replies received from six Member States in response to his request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement Assembly resolutions 53/38 [YUN 1998, p. 480], which dealt with Israeli policies in the Syrian territory occupied since 1967, and 53/37 [ibid., p. 436] on the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem (see p. 408).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/38 [draft: A/54/L.41 & Add.1] by recorded vote (92-2-53) [agenda item 43].

The Syrian Golan

The General Assembly,
Having considered the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East",

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,
Recalling Security Council resolution 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Reaffirming the fundamental principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force, in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming once more the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Syrian Golan,

Deeply concerned that Israel has not withdrawn from the Syrian Golan, which has been under occupation since 1967, contrary to the relevant Security Council and General Assembly resolutions,

Stressing the illegality of the Israeli settlement construction and activities in the occupied Syrian Golan since 1967,

Noting with satisfaction the convening at Madrid on 30 October 1991 of the Peace Conference on the Middle East, on the basis of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967, 338(1973) of 22 October 1973 and 425(1978) of 19 March 1978 and the formula of land for peace,

Expressing grave concern over the halt in the peace process on the Syrian and Lebanese tracks, and expressing the hope that peace talks will soon resume from the point they had reached,

1. Declares that Israel has failed so far to comply with Security Council resolution 497(1981);

2. Declares also that the Israeli decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan is null and void and has no validity whatsoever, as confirmed by the Security Council in its resolution 497(1981), and calls upon Israel to rescind it;

3. Reaffirms its determination that all relevant provisions of the Regulations annexed to the Hague Convention of 1907, and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, continue to apply to the Syrian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, and calls upon the parties thereto to respect and ensure respect for their obligations under those instruments in all circumstances;

4. Determines once more that the continued occupation of the Syrian Golan and its de facto annexation constitute a stumbling block in the way of achieving a just, comprehensive and lasting peace in the region;

5. Calls upon Israel to resume the talks on the Syrian and Lebanese tracks and to respect the commitments and undertakings reached during the previous talks;

6. Demands once more that Israel withdraw from all the occupied Syrian Golan to the line of 4 June 1967 in implementation of the relevant Security Council resolutions;

7. Calls upon all the parties concerned, the co-sponsors of the peace process and the entire international community to exert all the necessary efforts to ensure the resumption of the peace process and its success;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

The occupied Syrian Golan

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories,

Deeply concerned that the Syrian Golan occupied since 1967 has been under continued Israeli military occupation,

Recalling Security Council resolution 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Recalling also its previous relevant resolutions, the last of which was resolution 53/57 of 3 December 1998,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General submitted in pursuance of resolution 53/57,

Recalling its previous relevant resolutions in which, inter alia, it called upon Israel to put an end to its occupation of the Arab territories,

Reaffirming once more the illegality of the decision of 14 December 1981 taken by Israel to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan, which has resulted in the effective annexation of that territory,

Reaffirming that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible under international law, including the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming also the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Syrian Golan,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967,

Welcoming the convening at Madrid of the Peace Conference on the Middle East on the basis of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 and 338(1973) of 22 October 1973 aimed at the realization of a just, comprehensive and lasting peace, and expressing grave concern about the stalling of the peace process on the Syrian and Lebanese tracks,

1. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to comply with the relevant resolutions on the occupied Syrian Golan, in particular Security Council resolution 497(1981), in which the Council, inter alia, decided that the Israeli decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan was null and void and without international legal effect, and demanded that Israel, the occupying Power, rescind forthwith its decision;

2. Also calls upon Israel to desist from changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the occupied Syrian Golan and in particular to desist from the establishment of settlements;

3. Determines that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken or to be taken by Israel, the occupying Power, that purport to alter the character and legal status of the occupied Syrian Golan are null and void, constitute a flagrant violation of international law and of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and have no legal effect;

4. Calls upon Israel to desist from imposing Israeli citizenship and Israeli identity cards on the Syrian citizens in the occupied Syrian Golan, and to desist from its repressive measures against the population of the occupied Syrian Golan;

5. Deplores the violations by Israel of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

6. Calls once again upon Member States not to recognize any of the legislative or administrative measures and actions referred to above;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

UNDOF

The mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF), established by Security Council resolution 350(1974) [YUN 1974, p. 205], to supervise the observance of the ceasefire between Israel and Syria in the Golan Heights area and ensuring the separation of their forces, was renewed twice in 1999, in May and November, each time for a six-month period.

UNDOF maintained an area of separation, which was some 80 kilometres long and varied in width between approximately 10 kilometres in the centre to less than 1 kilometre in the extreme south. The area of separation was inhabited and policed by the Syrian authorities and no military forces other than UNDOF were permitted within it.

Composition and deployment

As at November 1999, UNDOF comprised 1,053 troops from Austria (368), Canada (189), Japan (45), Poland (358) and Slovakia (93). It was assisted by 78 UNTSO military observers. Major-General Cameron Ross (Canada) continued as Force Commander. The Force was entirely deployed within and close to the area of separation, with two base camps, 44 permanently manned positions and 11 observation posts. UNDOF's headquarters was located at Camp Faouar and an office was maintained in Damascus.

The Austrian battalion deployed in the northern part of the area of separation and the Polish battalion in the south conducted mine-clearing operations. The Canadian and Japanese logistic units, based in Camp Ziouani, with a detachment in Camp Faouar, performed second-line general transport tasks, rotation transport, control and management of goods received by the Force and maintenance of heavy equipment.

Activities

UNDOF continued in 1999 to supervise the area of separation between Israeli and Syrian troops in the Golan Heights, to ensure that no military forces of either party were deployed there, by means of fixed positions and patrols. The Force, accompanied by liaison officers from the party concerned, carried out fortnightly inspections of armament and force levels in the areas of limitation. As in the past, both sides denied inspection teams access to some of their positions and imposed some restrictions on the Force's freedom of movement.

UNDOF assisted ICRC with facilities for mail and the passage of persons through the area of separation. Within the means available, medical treatment was provided to the local population upon request.

Reports of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General reported to the Security Council on UNDOF activities between 15 November 1998 and 15 May 1999 [S/1999/575] and between 16 May and 15 November 1999 [S/1999/1175]. Both reports noted that UNDOF continued to perform its functions effectively, with the cooperation of the parties. In general, the ceasefire in the Israel-Syria sector was maintained without serious incident, and the UNDOF area of operation remained calm. On 1 April, two Austrian soldiers travelling in a UN vehicle were shot at near Damascus; Syrian authorities were investigating the incident. Minefields, especially in the area of separation, continued to be a concern.

The Secretary-General observed that, despite the quiet in the Israel-Syria sector, the situation in the Middle East continued to be potentially dangerous and was likely to remain so, unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem could be reached. He hoped for determined efforts by all concerned to tackle the problem in all its aspects, with a view to arriving at a just and durable peace settlement, as called for by Council resolution 338(1973) [YUN 1973, p. 213]. Stating that he considered the Force's continued presence in the area to be essential, the Secretary-General, with the agreement of both Syria and Israel, recommended that UNDOF's mandate be extended for a further six months, until 30 November 1999 in the first instance and 31 May 2000 in the second.

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 15 November 1999 on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, Decides:

(a) To call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately Security Council resolution 338(1973) of 22 October 1973;

(b) To renew the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for another period of six months, that is, until 31 May 2000;

(c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the development in the situation and the measures taken to implement resolution 338(1973).

After the adoption of each resolution, the President made statements S/PRST/1999/15 [meeting 4009] and S/PRST/1999/33 [meeting 4071] on behalf of the Council:

As is known, the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force states, in paragraph 11 [10 in the November report]: "Despite the present quiet in the Israeli-Syrian sector, the situation in the Middle East continues to be potentially dangerous and is likely to remain so, unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem can be reached." That statement of the Secretary-General reflects the view of the Security Council.

Financing

Reports of Secretary-General and ACABQ.

On 5 January, the Secretary-General presented a report [A/53/779 & Corr.1] on UNDOF's financial performance for the period 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998. On 29 January, he also presented UNDOF's proposed budget for the period 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 [A/53/779/Add.1], totalling $33,247,500 gross ($32,514,600 net), which reflected a 1.2 per cent decrease in gross terms compared with the resources approved for the preceding 12 months.

ACABQ's comments and recommendations on the two reports were contained in an April report to the Assembly [A/53/895/Add.1].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 June [meeting 101], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/979], adopted resolution 53/226 without vote [agenda item 122 (n)].

Financing of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 350(1974) of 31 May 1974, by which the Council established the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force, the latest of which was Security Council resolution 1211(1998) of 25 November 1998,

Recalling also its resolution 3211 B (XXIX) of 29 November 1974 on the financing of the United Nations Emergency Force and of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force and its subsequent resolulions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 52/236 of 26 June 1998,

Reaffirming that the costs of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Force, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Force,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Concerned that the surplus balances in the Special Account for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force have been used to meet expenses of the Force in order to compensate for the lack of income resulting from non-payment and late payment by Member States of their contributions,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force as at 30 April 1999, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 17.6 million United States dollars, representing 14 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Force to the period ending 31 May 1999, notes that some 15 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, particularly those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Force in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Force is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to expedite the process of improving the working conditions of the local staff in the Force, taking into account the difficulties arising from the relocation of Force headquarters from Damascus to Camp Faouar, and requests the Secretary-General to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to employ local staff for the Force against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Force;

9. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force the amount of 35,351,308 dollars gross (34,618,408 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Force for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, inclusive of the amount of 1,758,908 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations and the amount of 344,900 dollars for the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, to be apportioned among Member States at the monthly rate of 2,945,942 dollars gross (2,884,867 dollars net), in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1999 and 2000, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Force beyond 30 June 1999;

10. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 732,900 dollars approved for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000;

11. Decides further that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Force, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the unencumbered balance of 1,085,300 dollars gross (887,600 dollars net) in respect of the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998;

12. Decides that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Force, their share of the unencumbered balance of 1,085,300 dollars gross (887,600 dollars net) in respect of the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to credit back to Member States in a phased manner not to exceed three years, beginning with 5.6 million dollars during the current session of the General Assembly, according to the procedures contained in paragraphs 9 to 12 above, the net surplus balance of 13,622,162 dollars held in the suspense account for the Force;

14. Invites voluntary contributions to the Force in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session, under the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations peacekeeping forces in the Middle East", the sub-item entitled "United Nations Disengagement Observer Force".

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee would continue consideration of the item on the financing of UNDOF at the resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session (decision 54/462 A).

By decision 54/465 of 23 December, the Assembly decided that agenda item "Financing of the United Nations peacekeeping forces in the Middle East" remained for consideration during its fifty-fourth session.

Chapter VII

Disarmament

During 1999, differences among Member States persisted on many disarmament issues. The Conference on Disarmament was unable to take action on any of the items on the agenda of its annual session due to continuing lack of agreement on what would constitute a balanced programme of work. The Disarmament Commission was not able to establish the objectives and agenda of a fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, but did agree on guidelines on establishing nuclear-weapon-free zones and on common guidelines for conventional arms control/limitation and disarmament.

The Preparatory Committee for the 2000 Review Conference of the Parties to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, at its third session, reviewed all aspects of the Treaty and finalized its consideration of organizational and procedural issues related to the Conference. However, no decisions were taken on substantive issues as divergences of views prevailed.

The Conference on Facilitating the Entry into Force of the 1996 Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty (CTBT) in October called on signatory States to ratify the Treaty as soon as possible.

Efforts to strengthen the 1971 Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, through the elaboration of a protocol to the Convention, were carried out within the Ad Hoc Group of the States Parties. The Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons, which marked its second full year of operation in 1999, continued its activities under the 1993 Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction.

In December, the General Assembly decided to convene the United Nations Conference on the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects in June/July 2001. The United Nations Register of Conventional Arms and the standardized instrument of international reporting of military expenditures contributed to building transparency in military matters.

During the year, two legal instruments dealing with anti-personnel mines were strengthened. The 1997 Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction (the Mine-Ban Convention, formerly known as the Ottawa Convention) entered into force on 1 March, followed by the First Meeting of the States Parties to the Mine-Ban Convention in May, when an inter-sessional work programme was developed. Also, the States parties to the 1996 amended Protocol on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices (Protocol II) to the 1980 Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects held their first annual conference in December.

At the regional level, renewed efforts were made towards consolidating the existing nuclear-weapon-free zones, and negotiations on drafting the text of a treaty for a Central Asian nuclear-free zone continued. The issue of the illicit manufacturing and trafficking of small arms was addressed by various regional organizations. The Security Council emphasized the importance of regional cooperation in tackling that matter.

UN role in disarmament

UN machinery

Disarmament issues before the United Nations in 1999 were considered mainly through the General Assembly and its First (Disarmament and International Security) Committee, the Disarmament Commission (a deliberative body) and the Conference on Disarmament (a multilateral negotiating forum, which met in Geneva).

The Department for Disarmament Affairs (DDA) of the UN Secretariat continued to support the work of Member States and treaty bodies, to service the Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters and to administer the fellowship programme.

First Committee agenda items

In decision 54/416 of 1 December, the General Assembly included in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth (2001) session the item entitled "Compliance with arms limitation and disarmament and non-proliferation agreements".

Fourth special session devoted to disarmament

Disarmament Commission action. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/77 AA [YUN 1998, p. 487], the Disarmament Commission considered the question of the fourth special session of the Assembly devoted to disarmament. The Assembly, by resolution 51/45 C [YUN 1996, p. 447], had decided to convene the session in 1999, subject to the emergence of a consensus on its agenda and objectives. Working Group II of the Commission, entrusted to deal with the item, in an exchange of views held between 14 and 29 April, decided that the paper presented by its Chairman in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 488], which was also annexed to its 1999 report to the Assembly [A/54/42], should serve as a basis for consideration of the subject. Following consideration of various proposals by delegations, the Chairman submitted two compromise proposals. Although, at its final meeting, the vast majority of delegations reiterated their agreement with the Chairman's proposals, the Group was not able to reach consensus on the fourth special session's objectives and agenda.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/563], adopted resolution 54/54 U without vote [agenda item 76 (s)].

Convening of the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/75 I of 15 December 1994, 50/70 F of 12 December 1995, 51/45 C of 10 December 1996, 52/38 F of 9 December 1997 and 53/77 AA of 4 December 1998,

Recalling also that, there being a consensus to do so in each case, three special sessions of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament were held in 1978, 1982 and 1988, respectively,

Bearing in mind the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, adopted by consensus at the first special session devoted to disarmament, which included the Declaration, the Programme of Action and the Machinery for disarmament,

Bearing in mind also the objective of general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Taking note of paragraph 145 of the Final Document of the Twelfth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Durban, South Africa, from 29 August to 3 September 1998, which supported the convening of the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, which would offer an opportunity to review, from a perspective more in tune with the current international situation, the most critical aspects of the process of disarmament and to mobilize the international community and public opinion in favour of the elimination of nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction and of the control and reduction of conventional weapons,

Taking note also of the report of the 1999 substantive session of the Disarmament Commission and of the fact that no consensus was reached on the item entitled "Fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament",

Desiring to build upon the substantive exchange of views on the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament during the 1999 substantive session of the Disarmament Commission,

Reiterating its conviction that a special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament can set the future course of action in the field of disarmament, arms control and related international security matters,

Emphasizing the importance of multilateralism in the process of disarmament, arms control and related international security matters,

Noting that, with the recent accomplishments made by the international community in the field of weapons of mass destruction as well as conventional arms, the following years would be opportune for the international community to start the process of reviewing the state of affairs in the entire field of disarmament and arms control in the post-cold-war era,

1. Decides, subject to the emergence of a consensus on its objectives and agenda, to convene the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of States Members of the United Nations on the objectives, agenda and timing of the special session and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Convening of the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament".

Disarmament Commission

The Disarmament Commission, composed of all United Nations Member States, held six plenary meetings in 1999 (New York, 12-30 April) [A/54/42]; it also held organizational meetings on 19 March and on 2 December.

At its 1999 session, the Commission considered the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at among the States of the region concerned (see p. 476); the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament (see above); and guidelines on conventional arms control/limitation and disarmament, with particular emphasis on consolidation of peace in the context of Assembly resolution 51/45 N [YUN 1996, p. 490] (see p. 493). The Commission adopted consensus texts on the items concerning nuclear-weapon-free zones and guidelines on conventional arms control/limitation and disarmament.

Those agenda items were dealt with by three working groups, which met between 14 and 29 April.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/565], as orally amended by Mexico, adopted resolution 54/56 A without vote [agenda item 78 (a)].

Report of the Disarmament Commission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Disarmament Commission,

Recalling its resolutions 47/54 A of 9 December 1992, 47/54 G of 8 April 1993, 48/77 A of 16 December 1993, 49/77 A of 15 December 1994, 50/72 D of 12 December 1995, 51/47 B of 10 December 1996, 52/40 B of 9 December 1997 and 53/79 A of 4 December 1998,

Considering the role that the Disarmament Commission has been called upon to play and the contribution that it should make in examining and submitting recommendations on various problems in the field of disarmament and in the promotion of the implementation of the relevant decisions adopted by the General Assembly at its tenth special session,

Bearing in mind its decision 52/492 of 8 September 1998,

1. Takes note of the report of the Disarmament Commission;

2. Commends the Disarmament Commission for the successful conclusion of its consideration of the items entitled "The establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at among the States of the region concerned" and "Guidelines on conventional arms control/limitation and disarmament, with particular emphasis on consolidation of peace in the context of General Assembly resolution 51/45 N of 10 December 1996", and endorses the consensus texts adopted thereon;

3. Notes with regret that the Disarmament Commission was not able to reach a consensus on the item entitled "The fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament";

4. Reaffirms the importance of further enhancing the dialogue and cooperation among the First Committee, the Disarmament Commission and the Conference on Disarmament;

5. Also reaffirms the role of the Disarmament Commission as the specialized, deliberative body within the United Nations multilateral disarmament machinery that allows for in-depth deliberations on specific disarmament issues, leading to the submission of concrete recommendations on those issues;

6. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue its work in accordance with its mandate, as set forth in paragraph 118 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and with paragraph 3 of Assembly resolution 37/78 H of 9 December 1982, and to that end to make every effort to achieve specific recommendations on the items of its agenda, taking into account the adopted "Ways and means to enhance the functioning of the Disarmament Commission";

7. Recommends that the Disarmament Commission, at its 1999 organizational session, adopt the following items for consideration at its 2000 substantive session:

(a) To be considered at the organizational session of the Disarmament Commission;

(b) To be considered at the organizational session of the Disarmament Commission;

8. Requests the Disarmament Commission to meet for a period not exceeding three weeks during 2000 and to submit a substantive report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Disarmament Commission the annual report of the Conference on Disarmament, together with all the official records of the fifty-fourth session of the General Assembly relating to disarmament matters, and to render all assistance that the Commission may require for implementing the present resolution;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure full provision to the Disarmament Commission and its subsidiary bodies of interpretation and translation facilities in the official languages and to assign, as a matter of priority, all the necessary resources and services, including verbatim records, to that end;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Report of the Disarmament Commission".

Conference on Disarmament

The Conference on Disarmament, a multilateral negotiating body, held a three-part session in Geneva in 1999 (18 January-26 March, 10 May-25 June and 26 July-8 September) [A/54/27].

The Conference considered the cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament; prevention of nuclear war; prevention of an arms race in outer space; effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons; new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons; a comprehensive programme of disarmament; and transparency in armaments.

During the session, successive Presidents of the Conference conducted intensive consultations with a view to reaching consensus on the programme of work. At the end of their respective terms of office, two Presidents tabled proposals for the programme of work [CD/1566, CD/1575]. Proposals in that regard were also submitted by the Group of 21 [CD/1570], and jointly by France, the United Kingdom and the United States [CD/1586]. Although those proposals had a number of common elements, they differed considerably on how the Conference should deal with nuclear disarmament and prevention of an arms race in outer space. As a result, none of them achieved consensus. The consultations conducted by the Presidents were inconclusive and, consequently, the Conference did not re-establish or establish any mechanism on any of its agenda items during the session.

Throughout the session, a number of Western and Eastern European States called for the re-establishment of the two ad hoc committees that had met in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 489], so that they might continue their work on a ban on the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices, and on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons. Those calls were challenged by the non-aligned countries and China, which continued to insist that a comprehensive and balanced programme of work should be adopted as a whole. Chile made a proposal aimed at the intensification of informal consultations conducted by Presidents of the Conference, according to which the Presidents would organize open-ended consultations on each item of the agenda [CD/PV.834]. The proposal was favourably received by some Western and Eastern European States, but was not further developed.

Following consideration of a proposal by the President to expand the membership of the Conference [CD/1567], the Conference, on 5 August, decided to admit Ecuador, Ireland, Kazakhstan, Malaysia and Tunisia [CD/1588], bringing the membership to 66.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/565], adopted resolution 54/56 B without vote [agenda item 78 (b)].

Report of the Conference on Disarmament

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Conference on Disarmament,

Convinced that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum of the international community, has the primary role in substantive negotiations on priority questions of disarmament,

Recognizing, in this respect, the need for additional impetus to multilateral negotiations with the aim of reaching concrete agreements,

Noting that the Conference on Disarmament has a number of urgent and important issues to negotiate,

1. Reaffirms the role of the Conference on Disarmament as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum of the international community;

3. Welcomes the decision of the Conference on Disarmament on 5 August 1999 to admit five new members, and notes that the Conference recognizes the importance of continuing consultations on the question of the expansion of its membership;

4. Also welcomes the strong collective interest of the Conference on Disarmament in commencing substantive work as soon as possible during its 2000 session;

5. Further welcomes the undertaking by the current President of the Conference on Disarmament to conduct consultations jointly with the incoming President during the inter-sessional period to try to achieve this goal, as expressed in his statement contained in paragraph 38 of the report of the Conference;

6. Encourages the Conference on Disarmament to continue the ongoing review of its agenda and methods of work;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to ensure the provision to the Conference on Disarmament of adequate administrative, substantive and conference support services;

8. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Report of the Conference on Disarmament".

Nuclear disarmament

Conference on Disarmament

In 1999, the profound divergence of views on the possible role of the Conference on Disarmament in the field of nuclear disarmament was one of the reasons that prevented a comprehensive agreement on the establishment of subsidiary bodies to carry out substantive work on items on the Conference's agenda, despite the fact that new proposals were submitted by Egypt [CD/1563] and the Group of 21 [CD/1571] for the establishment of an ad hoc committee on nuclear disarmament, and by South Africa [CD/1564], Belgium, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands and Norway [CD/1565], and Canada [CD/1568, CD/1574, CD/1578].

In addition, certain international developments, particularly the stalling of the START process (see p. 462), attempts to define new roles for nuclear weapons and to strengthen deterrence doctrines, as well as proposals to amend the Anti-Ballistic Missile (ABM) Treaty (see p. 469), had adversely affected the international environment for advancing the multilateral arms limitation and disarmament agenda.

Fissile material

Although the re-establishment of the ad hoc committee on the prohibition of the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices [YUN 1998, p. 492] was a non-controversial element of every proposal in 1999, the impasse with regard to the adoption of a comprehensive programme of work prevented the Conference on Disarmament from doing so. At the close of the annual session, Finland, on behalf of the European Union (EU), presented the EU declaration on the fissile material cut-off treaty negotiations [CD/1593], which emphasized that such a treaty would strengthen the international nuclear non-proliferation regime and constitute a significant step towards the effective implementation of article VI of the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) [YUN 1968, p. 17]. In view of its agreement in 1998 to re-establish the ad hoc committee on fissile material, it was incumbent on the Conference to take an early decision to resume those negotiations.

Security assurances

The issue of security assurances for non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons was addressed in the Conference on Disarmament in the context of its programme of work. All proposals in that regard provided for the re-establishment of the ad hoc committee to negotiate with a view to reaching agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons. Those arrangements could take the form of an internationally legally binding instrument. However, due to the lack of consensus on a comprehensive programme of work, the ad hoc committee was not re-established.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/561], adopted resolution 54/52 by recorded vote (111-0-53) [agenda item 74].

Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the need to allay the legitimate concern of the States of the world with regard to ensuring lasting security for their peoples,

Convinced that nuclear weapons pose the greatest threat to mankind and to the survival of civilization,

Welcoming the progress achieved in recent years in both nuclear and conventional disarmament,

Noting that, despite recent progress in the field of nuclear disarmament, further efforts are necessary towards the achievement of general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Convinced that nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons are essential to remove the danger of nuclear war,

Determined strictly to abide by the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations on the non-use of force or threat of force,

Recognizing that the independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty of non-nuclear-weapon States need to be safeguarded against the use or threat of use of force, including the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Considering that, until nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to develop effective measures and arrangements to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons from any quarter,

Recognizing that effective measures and arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons can contribute positively to the prevention of the spread of nuclear weapons,

Bearing in mind paragraph 59 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, in which it urged the nuclear-weapon States to pursue efforts to conclude, as appropriate, effective arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, and desirous of promoting the implementation of the relevant provisions of the Final Document,

Recalling the relevant parts of the special report of the Committee on Disarmament^a submitted to the General Assembly at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, and of the special report of the Conference on Disarmament submitted to the Assembly at its fifteenth special session, the third special session devoted to disarmament, as well as the report of the Conference on its 1992 session,

Recalling also paragraph 12 of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980, which states, inter alia, that all efforts should be exerted by the Committee on Disarmament urgently to negotiate with a view to reaching agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting the in-depth negotiations undertaken in the Conference on Disarmament and its Ad Hoc Committee on Effective International Arrangements to Assure Non-Nuclear-Weapon States against the Use or Threat of Use of Nuclear Weapons, with a view to reaching agreement on this question,

Taking note of the proposals submitted under the item in the Conference on Disarmament, including the drafts of an international convention,

Taking note also of the relevant decision of the Twelfth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Durban, South Africa, from 29 August to 3 September 1998, as well as the relevant recommendations of the Organization of the Islamic Conference,

Taking note further of the unilateral declarations made by all the nuclear-weapon States on their policies of non-use or non-threat of use of nuclear weapons against the non-nuclear-weapon States,

Noting the support expressed in the Conference on Disarmament and in the General Assembly for the elaboration of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, as well as the difficulties pointed out in evolving a common approach acceptable to all,

Taking note of Security Council resolution 984(1995) of 11 April 1995 and the views expressed on it,

Recalling its relevant resolutions adopted in previous years, in particular resolutions 45/54 of 4 December 1990, 46/32 of 6 December 1991, 47/50 of 9 December 1992, 48/73 of 16 December 1993, 49/73 of 15 December 1994, 50/68 of 12 December 1995, 51/43 of 10 December 1996, 52/36 of 9 December 1997 and 53/75 of 4 December 1998,

1. Reaffirms the urgent need to reach an early agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

2. Notes with satisfaction that in the Conference on Disarmament there is no objection, in principle, to the idea of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, although the difficulties with regard to evolving a common approach acceptable to all have also been pointed out;

3. Appeals to all States, especially the nuclear-weapon States, to work actively towards an early agreement on a common approach and, in particular, on a common formula that could be included in an international instrument of a legally binding character;

4. Recommends that further intensive efforts be devoted to the search for such a common approach or common formula and that the various alternative approaches, including, in particular, those considered in the Conference on Disarmament, be further explored in order to overcome the difficulties;

5. Recommends also that the Conference on Disarmament actively continue intensive negotiations with a view to reaching early agreement and concluding effective international arrangements to assure the non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, taking into account the widespread support for the conclusion of an international convention and giving consideration to any other proposals designed to secure the same objective;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons".

^aRedesignated the Conference on Disarmament as from 7 February 1984.

START and other bilateral agreements and unilateral measures

The United States and the Russian Federation continued to implement the 1991 Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (START I) [YUN 1991, p. 34], which entered into force on 5 December 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 145], by reducing their nuclear-arms stockpiles. Although efforts continued in the Russian Federation to ratify the 1993 START II Treaty [YUN 1993, p. 117], concerns in the Russian Duma regarding strategic arms reductions, enlargement of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) membership, the United States announcement of its intention to develop a national missile defence (NMD) system and NATO air strikes against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in March 1999 (see PART ONE, Chapter V) contributed to a pattern of postponement of votes, precluding the Treaty's ratification. At the summit of the Group of Eight (G-8) major industrialized countries (Cologne, Germany, 18-20 June), following discussions between Russian President Boris Yeltsin and United States President William J. Clinton, the two States issued a joint statement concerning strategic offensive and defensive arms and further strengthening of stability. They stated that strategic stability could be strengthened only through compliance with existing agreements between the parties on limitation and reduction of arms and that they would do everything to facilitate the successful completion of the START II ratification processes in both countries. They reaffirmed their readiness, expressed in Helsinki in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 481], to conduct new negotiations on strategic offensive arms aimed at further reducing for each side the level of nuclear warheads and that they would strive to achieve results in those negotiations as soon as possible. In addition, they agreed to begin discussions on START III.

Following an agreement on 27 July between the Russian Federation and the United States, several rounds of talks on START III, as well as on ABM issues, took place. However, no progress was reported due to differences over warheads ceilings under START III. Questions also arose concerning tactical nuclear weapons, and whether to include sea-based cruise missiles and restrictions on anti-submarine warfare in the Treaty.

In June, a protocol to the Agreement between the Russian Federation and the United States concerning the Safe and Secure Transportation, Storage and Destruction of Weapons and the Prevention of Weapons Proliferation was signed by the two parties. The protocol continued the Cooperative Threat Reduction (CTR) programme in Russia until June 2006. Through the CTR programme, the United States provided equipment, services and technical support to assist Russia and other newly independent States in preventing proliferation and securing and dismantling weapons of mass destruction, related materials and production facilities inherited from the former Soviet Union. In July, the United States and Ukraine also extended the agreement to continue the CTR programme in Ukraine until December 2006. Earlier in the year, CTR achieved a major milestone: the complete elimination of the SS-9 intercontinental ballistic missile (ICBM) system, 130 missile silos and 13 launch control centres.

Under the 1996 "Trilateral Initiative" [YUN 1996, p. 465] among the United States, the Russian Federation and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)—established to address IAEA regulation of fissile material removed from weapons to ensure that, once withdrawn from weapons programmes, it would not be returned to the defence stockpile—further progress was made towards completing the model verification agreement that would serve as the basis for implementing the programme. Moreover, work was under way to develop the verification arrangements for specific facilities identified by Russia and the United States where the new agreement would apply. The model verification agreement could also be used by other NPT nuclear-weapon States for international verification of fissile material in conjunction with future arms control measures.

Communication. By a 15 October letter to the Secretary-General [A/54/469-S/1999/1063], South Africa, as Chairman of the Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, transmitted a communique of the meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (New York, 23 September). The Ministers, among other things, expressed concern at the updating of strategic defence doctrines that set out new rationales for the use of nuclear weapons. They called for an international conference, at the earliest possible date, to agree on a phased programme for the complete elimination of nuclear weapons with a specified time frame to eliminate all nuclear weapons, to prohibit their development and to provide for their destruction.

Report of Secretary-General. In a September report entitled "Towards a nuclear-weapon-free world: the need for a new agenda" [A/54/372], the Secretary-General presented observations on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 53/77 Y [YUN 1998, p. 501].

The Secretary-General said that global negotiations on nuclear disarmament remained at a standstill. The persistence of divergent views on the most pressing issues on the international disarmament agenda had affected, once again, the work of the Conference on Disarmament during 1999. The Secretary-General noted that the joint statement by the Russian Federation and the United States concerning strategic offensive and defensive arms and further strengthening of stability, signed at Cologne on 20 June (see p. 462), was an important development in revitalizing the START process. He also noted that a conference on facilitating the entry into force of the 1996 Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty was to be held in Vienna in October 1999 (see p. 471).

In accordance with resolution 53/77 Y, a number of international organizations and bodies presented their views on possible elements for developing global verification arrangements. IAEA said that, from its perspective, the universal application of strengthened IAEA safeguards, and effective verification of compliance with agreements to eliminate existing nuclear arsenals, would provide a sound basis for a world free from nuclear weapons. The ability to verify the non-diversion of nuclear material to nuclear weapons and the absence of any undeclared nuclear material and activities would be conducive to an international environment that would discourage the pursuit of the nuclear weapons option. Additional views were expressed by the Organization for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean, Thailand, as depositary of the 1995 Treaty on the South-East Asia Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone, the South Pacific Forum Secretariat, as depositary of the 1985 South Pacific Nuclear-Free Zone Treaty and the Provisional Technical Secretariat of the Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/563], adopted a series of resolutions related to nuclear disarmament.

The Assembly adopted resolution 54/54 D by recorded vote (153-0-12) [agenda item 76].

Nuclear disarmament with a view to the ultimate elimination of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/75 H of 15 December 1994, 50/70 C of 12 December 1995, 51/45 G of 10 December 1996, 52/38 K of 9 December 1997 and 53/77 U of 4 December 1998,

Bearing in mind the recent nuclear tests, as well as the regional situations, which pose a challenge to international efforts to strengthen the global regime of non-proliferation of nuclear weapons,

Noting the progress made in commencing the discussions between the United States of America and the Russian Federation on START III,

Welcoming the efforts to increase transparency in nuclear disarmament activities as a contribution towards building international confidence and security,

Also welcoming the international efforts to promote the entry into force of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty at the conference convened at Vienna from 6 to 8 October 1999 in accordance with article XIV of the Treaty,

Taking note of the report of the Tokyo Forum for Nuclear Non-Proliferation and Disarmament,^a bearing in mind the views of Member States on the report,

Recognizing that the enhancement of international peace and security and the promotion of nuclear disarmament mutually complement and strengthen each other,

Reaffirming the crucial importance of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons as the cornerstone of the international regime for nuclear non-proliferation and as an essential foundation for the pursuit of nuclear disarmament,

Also reaffirming the conviction that further advancement in nuclear disarmament will contribute to consolidating the international regime for nuclear non-proliferation, ensuring international peace and security,

1. Reaffirms the importance of achieving the universality of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, and calls upon States not parties to the Treaty to accede to it without delay and without conditions;

2. Also reaffirms the importance for all States parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to fulfil their obligations under the Treaty;

3. Calls for the determined pursuit by the nuclear-weapon States of systematic and progressive efforts to reduce nuclear weapons globally, with the ultimate goal of eliminating those weapons, and by all States of general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control;

4. Stresses that, in order to make advancements towards the ultimate goal of eliminating nuclear weapons, it is important and necessary to pursue such actions as:

(a) The early signature and ratification of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty by all States, especially by those States whose ratification is required for its entry into force, with a view to its early entry into force, as well as the cessation of nuclear tests pending its entry into force;

(b) Intensive negotiations in the Conference on Disarmament on the early conclusion of a non-discriminatory, multilateral and internationally and effectively verifiable treaty banning the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices, on the basis of the report of the Special Coordinator of 1995 and the mandate contained therein, and, pending its entry into force, a moratorium on the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons;

(c) Multilateral discussions on possible future steps on nuclear disarmament and nuclear non-proliferation;

(d) The early entry into force of the Treaty on Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (START II) and the early commencement and conclusion of negotiations for START III by the Russian Federation and the United States of America, and the continuation of the process beyond START III;

(e) Further efforts by the five nuclear-weapon States to reduce their nuclear arsenals unilaterally and through their negotiations;

5. Invites the nuclear-weapon States to keep the States Members of the United Nations duly informed of the progress or efforts made towards nuclear disarmament;

6. Welcomes the ongoing efforts in the dismantlement of nuclear weapons, notes the importance of the safe and effective management of the resultant fissile material, and calls for continued efforts by States that possess fissile material no longer required for defence purposes to make such material available for safeguards by the International Atomic Energy Agency as soon as practicable;

7. Calls upon all States to redouble their efforts to prevent the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, inter alia, nuclear weapons, confirming and strengthening if necessary their policies not to export equipment, materials or technology that could contribute to the proliferation of those weapons;

8. Stresses the importance of the Model Protocol Additional to the Agreement(s) between State(s) and the International Atomic Energy Agency for the Application of Safeguards for ensuring nuclear non-proliferation, and encourages all States that have not done so to conclude an additional protocol with the International Atomic Energy Agency as soon as possible;

9. Underlines the vital importance of the 2000 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons for the preservation and strengthening of the regime anchored in the Treaty, and calls upon all States parties to the Treaty to reaffirm the decisions and the resolution adopted at the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty and to intensify their efforts with a view to reaching an agreement on updated objectives for nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament, based on a review of the achievements since 1995;

10. Encourages the constructive role played by civil society in promoting nuclear non-proliferation and nuclear disarmament.

Resolution 54/54 P was adopted by recorded vote (104-41-17) [agenda item 76 (g)].

Nuclear disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/75 E of 15 December 1994 on a step-by-step reduction of the nuclear threat, and its resolutions 50/70 P of 12 December 1995, 51/45 O of 10 December 1996, 52/38 L of 9 December 1997 and 53/77 X of 4 December 1998 on nuclear disarmament,

Reaffirming the commitment of the international community to the goal of the total elimination of nuclear weapons and the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free world,

Bearing in mind that the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction of 1972 and the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction of 1993 have already established legal regimes on the complete prohibition of biological and chemical weapons, respectively, and determined to achieve a nuclear weapons convention on the prohibition of the development, testing, production, stockpiling, loan, transfer, use and threat of use of nuclear weapons and on their destruction, and to conclude such an international convention at an early date,

Recognizing that there now exist conditions for the establishment of a world free of nuclear weapons,

Bearing in mind paragraph 50 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, calling for the urgent negotiation of agreements for the cessation of the qualitative improvement and development of nuclear-weapon systems, and for a comprehensive and phased programme with agreed timeframes, wherever feasible, for the progressive and balanced reduction of nuclear weapons and their means of delivery, leading to their ultimate and complete elimination at the earliest possible time,

Noting the reiteration by the States parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons of their conviction that the Treaty is a cornerstone of nuclear non-proliferation and nuclear disarmament and the reaffirmation by the States parties of the importance of the decision on strengthening the review process for the Treaty, the decision on principles and objectives for nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament, the decision on the extension of the Treaty and the resolution on the Middle East, adopted by the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

Reiterating the highest priority accorded to nuclear disarmament in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and by the international community,

Recognizing that the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty and any proposed treaty on fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices must constitute disarmament measures, and not only non-proliferation measures, and that these measures, together with an international legal instrument on the joint undertaking of no first use of nuclear weapons by the nuclear-weapon States and on adequate security assurances of non-use and non-threat of use of such weapons for non-nuclear-weapon States, respectively, and an international convention prohibiting the use of nuclear weapons, should be integral measures in a programme leading to the total elimination of nuclear weapons,

Welcoming the entry into force of the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (START I), to which Belarus, Kazakhstan, the Russian Federation, Ukraine and the United States of America are States parties,

Welcoming also the conclusion of the Treaty on Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (START II) by the Russian Federation and the United States of America and the ratification of that Treaty by the United States of America, and looking forward to the full implementation of the START I and START II Treaties by the States parties, and to further concrete steps for nuclear disarmament by all the nuclear-weapon States,

Welcoming further the joint declaration of the Russian Federation and the United States of America to commence START III negotiations, regardless of the status of completion of the START II process,

Noting with appreciation the unilateral measures by the nuclear-weapon States for nuclear arms limitation, and encouraging them to undertake further such measures,

Recognizing the complementarity of bilateral, plurilateral and multilateral negotiations on nuclear disarmament, and that bilateral negotiations can never replace multilateral negotiations in this respect,

Noting the support expressed in the Conference on Disarmament and in the General Assembly for the elaboration of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, and the multilateral efforts in the Conference on Disarmament to reach agreement on such an international convention at an early date,

Recalling the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, issued on 8 July 1996, and welcoming the unanimous reaffirmation by all Judges of the Court that there exists an obligation for all States to pursue in good faith and bring to a conclusion negotiations leading to nuclear disarmament in all its aspects under strict and effective international control,

Mindful of paragraph 114 and other relevant recommendations in the Final Document of the Twelfth Conference of Heads of State or Government of the Non-Aligned Countries, held at Durban, South Africa, from 29 August to 3 September 1998, calling upon the Conference on Disarmament to establish, on a priority basis, an ad hoc committee to commence negotiations in 1998 on a phased programme of nuclear disarmament and for the eventual elimination of nuclear weapons with a specified framework of time,

Bearing in mind the proposal of twenty-eight delegations to the Conference on Disarmament that are members of the Group of 21 for a programme of action for the elimination of nuclear weapons, and expressing its conviction that this proposal will be an important input and will contribute to negotiations on this question in the Conference,

Commending the initiative by twenty-six delegations to the Conference on Disarmament that are members of the Group of 21 proposing a comprehensive mandate for an ad hoc committee on nuclear disarmament, which includes negotiations for, as a first step, a universal and legally binding multilateral agreement committing all States to the objective of the total elimination of nuclear weapons, an agreement on further steps required in a phased programme leading to the total elimination of these weapons and a convention on the prohibition of the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices taking into account the report of the Special Coordinator on that item and the views relating to the scope of the treaty,

Recalling paragraphs 38 to 50 of the final communiqué of the meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Non-Aligned Countries, held in New York on 23 September 1999,

Taking note of the draft decision and mandate on the establishment of an ad hoc committee on nuclear disarmament proposed by the Group of 21,

1. Recognizes that, in view of recent political developments, the time is now opportune for all the nuclear-weapon States to undertake effective disarmament measures with a view to the total elimination of these weapons;

2. Also recognizes that there is a genuine need to de-emphasize the role of nuclear weapons and to review and revise nuclear doctrines accordingly;

3. Urges the nuclear-weapon States to stop immediately the qualitative improvement, development, production and stockpiling of nuclear warheads and their delivery systems;

4. Also urges the nuclear-weapon States, as an interim measure, to de-alert and deactivate immediately their nuclear weapons;

5. Calls for the conclusion, as a first step, of a universal and legally binding multilateral agreement committing States to the process of nuclear disarmament leading to the total elimination of nuclear weapons;

6. Reiterates its calls upon the nuclear-weapon States to undertake the step-by-step reduction of the nuclear threat and to carry out effective nuclear disarmament measures with a view to the total elimination of these weapons;

7. Calls upon the nuclear-weapon States, pending the achievement of the total elimination of nuclear weapons, to agree on an internationally and legally binding instrument on the joint undertaking not to be the first to use nuclear weapons, and calls upon all States to conclude an internationally and legally binding instrument on security assurances of non-use and non-threat of use of nuclear weapons against non-nuclear-weapon States;

8. Urges the nuclear-weapon States to commence plurilateral negotiations among themselves at an appropriate stage on further deep reductions of nuclear weapons as an effective measure of nuclear disarmament;

9. Welcomes the establishment in the Conference on Disarmament in 1998 of the Ad Hoc Committee on the prohibition of the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices, urges a speedy conclusion of a universal and non-discriminatory convention thereon, welcomes the establishment in 1998 of the Ad Hoc Committee on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, and urges the pursuit of efforts in this regard as a matter of priority;

10. Expresses its regret that the Conference on Disarmament was unable to establish an ad hoc committee on nuclear disarmament at its 1999 session, as called for in General Assembly resolution 53/77 X;

11. Reiterates its call upon the Conference on Disarmament to establish, on a priority basis, an ad hoc committee on nuclear disarmament to commence negotiations early in 2000 on a phased programme of nuclear disarmament and for the eventual elimination of nuclear weapons, through a set of legal instruments, which may include a nuclear weapons convention;

12. Calls for the convening of an international conference on nuclear disarmament at an early date with the objective of arriving at an agreement or agreements on a phased programme of nuclear disarmament and for the eventual total elimination of nuclear weapons, through a set of legal instruments, which may include a nuclear weapons convention;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

The Assembly adopted resolution 54/54 G by recorded vote (111-13-39) [agenda item 76 (r)].

Towards a nuclear-weapon-free world: the need for a new agenda

The General Assembly,

Convinced that the existence of nuclear weapons is a threat to the survival of humanity,

Concerned at the prospect of the indefinite possession of nuclear weapons, believing that the contention that nuclear weapons can be retained in perpetuity and never used is not supported by the history of human experience, and convinced that the only complete defence is the elimination of nuclear weapons and the assurance that they will never be produced again,

Concerned also at the continued retention of the nuclear-weapons option by those three States that are nuclear-weapons-capable and that have not acceded to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, and concerned at their failure to renounce that option,

Concerned further that negotiations on nuclear arms reductions are currently stalled,

Bearing in mind that the overwhelming majority of States have entered into legally binding commitments not to receive, manufacture or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices, and recalling that these undertakings were made in the context of the corresponding legally binding commitments by the nuclear-weapon States to the pursuit of nuclear disarmament,

Recalling the unanimous conclusion of the International Court of Justice in its 1996 advisory opinion that there exists an obligation to pursue in good faith and bring to a conclusion negotiations leading to nuclear disarmament in all its aspects under strict and effective international control,

Stressing that the international community must not enter the new millennium with the prospect that the possession of nuclear weapons will be considered legitimate for the indefinite future, and convinced of the imperative to proceed with determination to prohibit and eradicate them for all time,

Recognizing that the total elimination of nuclear weapons will require measures to be taken firstly by those nuclear-weapon States that have the largest arsenals, and stressing that these States must be joined in a seamless process by those nuclear-weapon States with lesser arsenals in the near future,

Welcoming the achievements to date and the future promise of the Strategic Arms Reduction Talks process and the possibility it offers for development as a plurilateral mechanism including all the nuclear-weapon States, for the practical dismantling and destruction of nuclear armaments undertaken in pursuit of the elimination of nuclear weapons,

Welcoming also the Trilateral Initiative between the United States of America, the Russian Federation and the International Atomic Energy Agency to ensure the irreversible removal of fissile materials from weapons programmes,

Believing that there are a number of practical steps that the nuclear-weapon States can and should take immediately before the actual elimination of nuclear arsenals and the development of requisite verification regimes take place, and in this connection noting certain recent unilateral and other steps,

Underlining that the Treaty on the Limitation of Anti-Ballistic Missile Systems remains a cornerstone of strategic stability,

Stressing that each article of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons is binding on the respective States parties at all times and in all circumstances,

Stressing also the importance of pursuing negotiations in the Conference on Disarmament in the Ad Hoc Committee established under item 1 of its agenda entitled "Cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament", on the basis of the report of the Special Coordinator and the mandate contained therein, on a non-discriminatory, multilateral and internationally and effectively verifiable treaty banning the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices, and considering that such a treaty must further underpin the process towards the total elimination of nuclear weapons,

Emphasizing that, for the total elimination of nuclear weapons to be achieved, effective international cooperation to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons is vital and must be enhanced through, inter alia, the extension of international controls over all fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices,

Emphasizing also the importance of existing nuclear-weapon-free-zone treaties and of the early signature and ratification of the relevant protocols to those treaties,

Noting the joint ministerial declaration of 9 June 1998 and its call for a new international agenda to achieve a nuclear-weapon-free world, through the pursuit, in parallel, of a series of mutually reinforcing measures at the bilateral, plurilateral and multilateral levels,

Acknowledging the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 53/77 Y of 4 December 1998,

Taking note of the observations of the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency contained in the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Calls upon the nuclear-weapon States to make an unequivocal undertaking to accomplish the speedy and total elimination of their nuclear arsenals and to engage without delay in an accelerated process of negotiations, thus achieving nuclear disarmament, to which they are committed under article VI of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

2. Calls upon the United States of America and the Russian Federation to bring the Treaty on Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (START II) into force without further delay and to commence negotiations on START III with a view to its early conclusion;

3. Calls upon the nuclear-weapon States to undertake the necessary steps towards the seamless integration of all five nuclear-weapon States into the process leading to the total elimination of nuclear weapons;

4. Calls for the examination of ways and means to diminish the role of nuclear weapons in security policies so as to enhance strategic stability, facilitate the process of the elimination of these weapons and contribute to international confidence and security;

5. Calls upon the nuclear-weapon States, in this context, to take early steps:

(a) To reduce tactical nuclear weapons with a view to their elimination as an integral part of nuclear arms reductions;

(b) To examine the possibilities for and to proceed to the de-alerting and removal of nuclear warheads from delivery vehicles;

(c) To examine nuclear weapons policies and postures further;

(d) To demonstrate transparency with regard to their nuclear arsenals and fissile material inventories;

(e) To place all fissile material for nuclear weapons declared to be in excess of military requirements under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards in the framework of the voluntary safeguards agreements in place;

6. Calls upon those three States that are nuclear weapons capable and that have not yet acceded to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to reverse clearly and urgently the pursuit of all nuclear weapons development or deployment and to refrain from any action that could undermine regional and international peace and security and the efforts of the international community towards nuclear disarmament and the prevention of the proliferation of nuclear weapons;

7. Calls upon those States that have not yet done so to adhere unconditionally and without delay to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and to take all the necessary measures which flow from adherence to that instrument as non-nuclear-weapon States;

8. Calls upon those States that have not yet done so to conclude full-scope safeguards agreements with the International Atomic Energy Agency and to conclude additional protocols to their safeguards agreements on the basis of the Model Protocol approved by the Board of Governors of the Agency on 15 May 1997;

9. Calls upon those States that have not yet done so to sign and ratify, unconditionally and without delay, the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty and, pending the entry into force of the Treaty, to observe a moratorium on nuclear tests;

10. Calls upon those States that have not yet done so to adhere to the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material and to work towards its further strengthening;

11. Urges the development of the Trilateral Initiative between the United States of America, the Russian Federation and the International Atomic Energy Agency, and urges that similar arrangements be developed by the other nuclear-weapon States;

12. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to re-establish the Ad Hoc Committee under item 1 of its agenda entitled "Cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament", on the basis of the report of the Special Coordinator and the mandate contained therein, of a non-discriminatory, multilateral and internationally and effectively verifiable treaty banning the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices, taking into consideration both nuclear non-proliferation and nuclear disarmament objectives, and to pursue and conclude these negotiations without delay, and, pending the entry into force of the treaty, urges all States to observe a moratorium on the production of fissile materials for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices;

13. Also calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to establish an appropriate subsidiary body to deal with nuclear disarmament and, to that end, to pursue as a matter of priority its intensive consultations on appropriate methods and approaches with a view to reaching such a decision without delay;

14. Considers that an international conference on nuclear disarmament and nuclear non-proliferation, which would effectively complement efforts being undertaken in other settings, could facilitate the consolidation of a new agenda for a nuclear-weapon-free world;

15. Notes, in this context, that the Millennium Summit of the United Nations in 2000 will consider peace, security and disarmament;

16. Stresses the importance of the full implementation of the decisions and the resolution adopted at the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, and, in this connection, underlines the significance of the forthcoming Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, to be held in April/May 2000;

17. Affirms that the development of verification arrangements will be necessary for the maintenance of a world free from nuclear weapons, and requests the International Atomic Energy Agency, together with any other relevant international organizations and bodies, to continue to explore the elements of such a system;

18. Calls for the conclusion of an internationally legally binding instrument to effectively assure non-nuclear-weapon States parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

19. Stresses that the pursuit, extension and establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones, on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at, especially in regions of tension, such as the Middle East and South Asia, represent a significant contribution to the goal of a nuclear-weapon-free world;

20. Affirms that a nuclear-weapon-free world will ultimately require the underpinnings of a universal and multilaterally negotiated legally binding instrument or a framework encompassing a mutually reinforcing set of instruments;

21. Requests the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to compile a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

22. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Towards a nuclear-weapon-free world: the need for a new agenda", and to review the implementation of the present resolution.

Resolution 54/54 K was adopted by recorded vote (104-43-14) [agenda item 76 (g)].

Reducing nuclear danger

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that the use of nuclear weapons poses the most serious threat to mankind and to the survival of civilization,

Reaffirming that any use or threat of use of nuclear weapons would constitute a violation of the Charter of the United Nations,

Convinced that the proliferation of nuclear weapons in all its aspects would seriously enhance the danger of nuclear war,

Convinced also that nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons are essential to remove the danger of nuclear war,

Considering that until nuclear weapons cease to exist, it is imperative on the part of the nuclear-weapon States to adopt measures that assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Considering also that the hair-trigger alert of nuclear weapons carries unacceptable risks of unintentional or accidental use of nuclear weapons, which would have catastrophic consequences for all mankind,

Emphasizing the imperative need to adopt measures to avoid accidental, unauthorized or unexplained incidents arising from computer anomaly or other technical malfunctions before the next millennium,

Conscious that limited steps relating to detargeting have been taken by the nuclear-weapon States and that further practical, realistic and mutually reinforcing steps are necessary to contribute to the improvement in the international climate for negotiations leading to the elimination of nuclear weapons,

Mindful that reduction of tensions brought about by a change in nuclear doctrines would positively impact on international peace and security and improve the conditions for the further reduction and the elimination of nuclear weapons,

Reiterating the highest priority accorded to nuclear disarmament in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and by the international community,

Recalling that the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons states that there exists an obligation for all States to pursue in good faith and bring to a conclusion negotiations leading to nuclear disarmament in all its aspects under strict and effective international control,

1. Calls for a review of nuclear doctrines and, in this context, immediate and urgent steps to reduce the risks of unintentional and accidental use of nuclear weapons;

2. Requests the five nuclear-weapon States to undertake measures towards the implementation of paragraph 1 of the present resolution;

3. Calls upon Member States to take the necessary measures to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons in all its aspects and to promote nuclear disarmament, with the ultimate objective of eliminating nuclear weapons;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to seek inputs from the Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters on information with regard to specific measures that would significantly reduce the risk of nuclear war and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Reducing nuclear danger".

ABM Treaty and other missile issues

On 20 January, the United States announced that it would request a further $6.6 billion to finance its NMD and theatre missile defence (TMD) programmes. It also announced that the 1972 ABM Treaty might have to be amended in order to build an NMD system. On 23 July [CD/1589], President Clinton stated that he had signed the National Missile Defense Act of 1999, making it United States policy to deploy an NMD system as soon as technologically possible. The proposal to amend the ABM Treaty met with strong opposition from the Russian Federation [CD/1580].

In February, the United States and the Russian Federation discussed issues related to the ABM Treaty. Although they reaffirmed their belief that the Treaty was a cornerstone of strategic stability, they also recognized the serious differences between them regarding NMD and related ABM Treaty issues. Because of the NATO air strikes against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (see PART ONE, Chapter V), no consultations between the two sides took place until June. At the G-8 summit meeting in Cologne in June, Presidents Clinton and Yeltsin issued a joint statement reaffirming their commitment to the Treaty and affirming their obligations under the ABM Treaty to consider possible changes in the strategic situation that had a bearing on the Treaty and, as appropriate, possible proposals for further increasing the Treaty's viability. Although the parties continued to discuss those issues, no agreement was reached by the end of the year.

On 23 September [S/1999/996], the five permanent members of the Security Council called for, among other things, continued efforts to strengthen the ABM Treaty and to preserve its integrity and validity so that it would remain a cornerstone in maintaining global strategic stability and in promoting further strategic nuclear arms reduction.

On 2 October, the United States conducted a test of an anti-missile rocket. On 5 October [A/C.1/54/3], the Russian Federation criticized the action, stressing that the test was a step that ran counter to the ABM Treaty. China's reaction was reflected in a position paper, which stated that the development and deployment of an NMD system and eventual amendment of the ABM Treaty would have a severe negative impact on global strategic balance, hinder the nuclear disarmament process and disrupt international non-proliferation efforts [A/C.1/54/7].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/563], adopted resolution 54/54 A by recorded vote (80-4-68) [agenda item 76].

Preservation of and compliance with the Treaty on the Limitation of Anti-Ballistic Missile Systems

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 50/60 of 12 December 1995 and 52/30 of 9 December 1997 on compliance with arms limitation and disarmament and non-proliferation agreements,

Recognizing the historical role of the Treaty on the Limitation of Anti-Ballistic Missile Systems of 26 May 1972 between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics as a cornerstone for maintaining global peace and security and strategic stability, and reaffirming its continued validity and relevance, especially in the current international situation,

Stressing the paramount importance of full and strict compliance with the Treaty by the parties,

Recalling that the provisions of the Treaty are intended as a contribution to the creation of more favourable conditions for further negotiations on limiting strategic arms,

Mindful of the obligations of the parties to the Treaty under article VI of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

Concerned that the implementation of any measures undermining the purposes and provisions of the Treaty affects not only the security interests of the parties, but also those of the whole international community,

Recalling the widespread concern about the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and their means of delivery,

1. Calls for continued efforts to strengthen the Treaty on the Limitation of Anti-Ballistic Missile Systems and to preserve its integrity and validity so that it remains a cornerstone in maintaining global strategic stability and world peace and in promoting further strategic nuclear arms reductions;

2. Calls also for renewed efforts by each of the States parties to preserve and strengthen the Treaty through full and strict compliance;

3. Calls upon the parties to the Treaty, in accordance with their obligations under the Treaty, to limit the deployment of anti-ballistic missile systems and refrain from the deployment of anti-ballistic missile systems for the defence of the territory of their country and not to provide a base for such a defence, and not to transfer to other States or deploy outside their national territory anti-ballistic missile systems or their components limited by the Treaty;

4. Considers that the implementation of any measure undermining the purposes and the provisions of the Treaty also undermines global strategic stability and world peace and the promotion of further strategic nuclear arms reductions;

5. Urges all Member States to support efforts aimed at stemming the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and their means of delivery;

6. Supports further efforts by the international community, in the light of emerging developments, towards safeguarding the inviolability and integrity of the Treaty, which is in the strongest interest of the international community;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session an item entitled "Preservation of and compliance with the Treaty on the Limitation of Anti-Ballistic Missile Systems".

* Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

On the same date [meeting 69], the Assembly, also on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/563], adopted resolution 54/54 F by recorded vote (94-0-65) [agenda item 76].

Missiles

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the role of the United Nations in the field of arms regulation and disarmament and the commitment of Member States to take concrete steps to strengthen that role,

Realizing the need to promote regional and international peace and security in a world free from the scourge of war and the burden of armaments,

Convinced of the need for a comprehensive approach towards missiles, in a balanced and non-discriminatory manner, as a contribution to international peace and security,

Bearing in mind that the security concerns of Member States at the international and regional levels should be taken into consideration in addressing the issue of missiles,

Underlining the complexities involved in considering the issue of missiles in the conventional context,

Expressing its support for the international efforts against the development and proliferation of all weapons of mass destruction,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of all Member States on the issue of missiles in all its aspects, and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session an item entitled "Missiles".

Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty

Status

As at 31 December 1999, 155 States had signed the 1996 Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty (CTBT), adopted by General Assembly resolution 50/245 [YUN 1996, p. 454], and 51 had ratified it.

During the year, the Treaty was ratified by Azerbaijan, Belgium, Bolivia, Bulgaria, Estonia, Finland, Greece, Hungary, Ireland, Italy, Lesotho, Luxembourg, Mali, Mexico, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Panama, Poland, the Republic of Korea, Romania, Senegal, Slovenia, South Africa and Switzerland.

In accordance with article XIV, CTBT was to enter into force 180 days after the 44 States possessing nuclear reactors, listed in annex 2 of the Treaty, had deposited their instruments of ratification. By year's end, 26 of those States had ratified the Treaty.

Conference on facilitating entry into force

The Conference on Facilitating the Entry into Force of CTBT (Vienna, 6-8 October) was convened in accordance with article XIV of the Treaty, which stipulated that if the Treaty had not entered into force three years after the date of its opening for signature, the depositary should convene a conference at the request of a majority of States that had already deposited their instruments of ratification to consider and decide by consensus the measures to facilitate early entry into force. Following informal consultations among the ratifying and signatory States in May, the ratifying States requested the Secretary-General, the depositary of CTBT, to convene the Conference. The Conference was attended by 92 ratifying and signatory States and 4 non-signatory States.

On 8 October, the Conference adopted a Final Declaration [A/54/514-S/1999/1102] in which it called on signatory States to ratify the Treaty as soon as possible, and urged the three States (Democratic People's Republic of Korea, India, Pakistan) whose ratifications were needed for entry into force, but had not yet signed, to do so. It also called on the remaining three nuclear-weapon States (China, Russian Federation, United States) to accelerate their ratification processes. It agreed that the ratifying States would select one of their number to lead informal consultations on the early entry into force.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/572], adopted resolution 54/63 by recorded vote (158-0-6) [agenda item 85].

Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty

The General Assembly,

Recalling that the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty was adopted by its resolution 50/245 of 10 September 1996 and opened for signature on 24 September 1996,

Noting that the first Meeting of the States Signatories adopted resolution CTBT/MSS/RES/1 on 19 November 1996, thereby establishing the Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization,

Noting also that by decision 53/422 of 4 December 1998, it decided to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty",

Encouraged by the signing of the Treaty by one hundred and fifty-five States, including forty-one of the forty-four needed for its entry into force, and welcoming also the ratification of fifty-one States, including twenty-six of the forty-four needed for its entry into force,

Welcoming the convening of the Conference on Facilitating the Entry into Force of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty at Vienna from 6 to 8 October 1999 to promote the entry into force of the Treaty at the earliest possible date,

1. Endorses the Final Declaration of the Conference on Facilitating the Entry into Force of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty and, in particular:

(a) Calls upon all States that have not yet signed the Treaty to sign and ratify it as soon as possible and to refrain from acts that would defeat its object and purpose in the meanwhile;

(b) Calls upon all States that have signed but not yet ratified the Treaty, in particular those whose ratification is needed for its entry into force, to accelerate their ratification processes with a view to their early successful conclusion;

2. Urges all States to sustain the momentum generated by the Conference by continuing to remain seized of the issue at the highest political level;

3. Welcomes the contributions by States signatories to the work of the Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization, in particular to its efforts to ensure that the Treaty's verification regime will be capable of meeting the verification requirements of the Treaty at entry into force, in accordance with article IV of the Treaty;

4. Urges States to maintain their moratoria on nuclear weapon test explosions or any other nuclear explosions;

Preparatory Commission for CTBT Organization

The Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization, established in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 452], continued its efforts towards setting up an International Monitoring System (IMS), to detect and identify nuclear explosions prohibited under article I of CTBT, and an International Data Centre (IDC). IMS would comprise a network of 321 stations worldwide, including 50 primary and 120 auxiliary seismological stations equipped to detect nuclear explosions, and 80 radionuclide stations designed to identify radioactive particles released during a nuclear explosion. IMS would transmit data to IDC, located in Vienna. As at October 1999, IMS had completed about 55 per cent of the site surveys to select the most appropriate locations for the global network of stations and to assess the equipment they would need. About 45 per cent of the work to install the stations was under way or completed by that time, and the certification process for 16 stations had been initiated. The Preparatory Commission had also agreed to establish a database on chemical explosions, thereby creating the basic technical conditions for the implementation of confidence-building measures after the Treaty entered into force.

The Commission held its eighth (20-22 April) [CTBT/PC-8/1/Rev.1], ninth (24-26 August) [CTBT/PC-9/1] and tenth (15-19 November) [CTBT/PC-10/1] sessions, all in Vienna, to discuss organizational, budgetary and other matters. The Commission adopted a budget of $79.94 million for 2000, of which over half was earmarked for the continued establishment or upgrade of the global network of stations for IMS and the remainder for building up IDC, establishing the global communications infrastructure and developing procedures and guidelines to support on-site inspections once CTBT entered into force. The Commission also adopted a decision authorizing its Executive Secretary to enter into negotiations with the Secretary-General regarding an agreement to regulate the relationship between the two organizations [CTBT/PC-8/1/Annex IX].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/65 [draft. A/54/L.48 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 167].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization

The General Assembly,

Noting that on 10 September 1996 the General Assembly, by its resolution 50/245, adopted the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty,

Noting also that the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty was opened for signature at United Nations Headquarters in New York on 24 September 1996,

Noting further that on 19 November 1996 the Meeting of States Signatories of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty established the Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization, which has the status of an international organization, for the purpose of carrying out the necessary preparations for the effective implementation of the Treaty,

Reaffirming the decision on an agreement to regulate the relationship between the Preparatory Commission and the United Nations, adopted by the Preparatory Commission on 22 April 1999,

Invites the Secretary-General to take the appropriate steps to conclude with the Executive Secretary of the Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization an agreement to regulate the relationship between the United Nations and the Preparatory Commission, to be submitted to the General Assembly for its approval.

Non-Proliferation Treaty

In 1999, the number of States parties to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2373(XXII)[YUN 1968, p. 17], remained at 187. NPT entered into force on 5 March 1970.

Quinquennial review conferences, as called for under article VIII, paragraph 3, of the Treaty, were held in 1975 [YUN 1975, p. 27], 1980 [YUN 1980, p. 51], 1985 [YUN 1985, p. 56], 1990 [YUN 1990, p. 50] and 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 189].

At its third session (New York, 10-21 May) [NPT/CONF.2000/1], the Preparatory Committee for the 2000 NPT Review Conference considered all aspects of the Treaty, including the universality of NPT, nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament; negative security assurances; negotiations on a convention banning the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons; nuclear-weapon-free zones; IAEA safeguards; peaceful uses of nuclear energy; and the resolution on the Middle East adopted at the 1995 Review Conference [YUN 1995, p. 189].

The Committee finalized its consideration of organizational and procedural issues related to the Review Conference, scheduled to be held from 24 April to 19 May 2000 in New York. Regarding deliberations on substantive issues pertaining to the Treaty, significant differences persisted and no decisions on such matters were taken. The Chairman presented a working paper containing elements of draft recommendations to the Review Conference, which he later revised following consultations. However, the Committee was unable to agree on any substantive recommendations to the Conference. Both of the Chairman's working papers were annexed to the Committee's report.

On 8 December, the Committee held a brief resumed session in New York to decide on the presidency of the Conference. It unanimously endorsed the candidacy of Abdallah Baali (Algeria), the representative of the States parties members of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries.

IAEA safeguards

As at 31 December, the Model Protocol Additional to Safeguards Agreements, approved by the IAEA Board of Governors in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 486], had been signed by 45 States, including 4 nuclear-weapon States and Cuba, the first country outside NPT to do so. The Model Protocol, the first major change in the IAEA safeguards system in 25 years, provided the Agency with the legal authority to implement a more effective safeguards system to detect and verify possible non-peaceful nuclear activities in a State at an early stage. At year's end, Protocols were in force in Australia, the Holy See, Indonesia, Japan, Jordan, Monaco, New Zealand and Uzbekistan.

In October [GC(43)/RES/17], the IAEA General Conference again requested all concerned States and other parties to safeguards agreements that had not done so to sign additional protocols promptly. Those that had signed them were asked to bring them into force or to apply the protocols provisionally.

Regarding the implementation of the agreement between IAEA and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) for the application of safeguards in connection with NPT, the Director General stated in September that the Agency remained unable to verify that all nuclear material subject to safeguards in the DPRK had been declared to IAEA. The General Conference, on 1 October, again expressed its deep concern over the continuing non-compliance of the DPRK with the IAEA-DPRK safeguards agreements and called on the DPRK to comply fully with it [GC(43)/RES/3] (see also p. 277).

Middle East

In 1999, the General Assembly (see below) and the IAEA General Conference [GC(43)/RES/23] took action regarding the risk of nuclear proliferation in the Middle East. While the Assembly called on the non-party in the region to accede to NPT and to place all unsafeguarded nuclear facilities under full-scope safeguards, IAEA reaffirmed the urgent need for all States in the Middle East to accept forthwith the applications of full-scope Agency safeguards and invited the countries concerned to adhere to international non-proliferation regimes, including NPT.

Pursuant to Assembly resolution 53/80 [YUN 1998, p. 510], the Secretary-General reported in October [A/54/459] that, apart from the IAEA resolution on the application of IAEA safeguards in the Middle East, he had not received any additional information since his 1998 report on the subject [YUN 1998, p. 510]. The IAEA resolution was annexed to the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/566], adopted resolution 54/57 by recorded vote (149-3-9) [agenda item 79].

The risk of nuclear proliferation in the Middle East

*The General Assembly,
Bearing in mind its relevant resolutions,*

Taking note of the relevant resolutions adopted by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency, the latest of which is resolution GC(43)/RES/23 adopted on 1 October 1999,

Cognizant that the proliferation of nuclear weapons in the region of the Middle East would pose a serious threat to international peace and security,

Mindful of the immediate need to place all nuclear facilities in the region of the Middle East under full-scope safeguards of the International Atomic Energy Agency,

Recalling the resolution on the Middle East adopted by the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons on 11 May 1995, in which the Conference noted with concern the continued existence in the Middle East of unsafeguarded nuclear facilities, reaffirmed the importance of the early realization of universal adherence to the Treaty and called upon all States in the Middle East that had not yet done so, without exception, to accede to the Treaty as soon as possible and to place all their nuclear facilities under full-scope International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards,

Recalling also the decision on principles and objectives for nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament adopted by the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons on 11 May 1995, in which the Conference urged universal adherence to the Treaty as an urgent priority and called upon all States not yet parties to the Treaty to accede to it at the earliest date, particularly those States that operate unsafeguarded nuclear facilities,

Noting that, since the adoption of General Assembly resolution 51/48 of 10 December 1996, Israel remains the only State in the Middle East that has not yet become party to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

Concerned about the threats posed by the proliferation of nuclear weapons to the security and stability of the Middle East region,

Stressing the importance of taking confidence-building measures, in particular the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East, in order to enhance peace and security in the region and to consolidate the global non-proliferation regime,

Noting the adoption of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty and its signature by one hundred and fifty-five States, including a number of States in the region,

1. Calls upon the only State in the region that is not party to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to accede to the Treaty without further delay and not to develop, produce, test or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons, and to renounce possession of nuclear weapons, and to place all its unsafeguarded nuclear facilities under full-scope International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards as an important confidence-building measure among all States of the region and as a step towards enhancing peace and security;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "The risk of nuclear proliferation in the Middle East".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 54/57:

In favour Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cambodia, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Estonia, Fiji, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Prohibition of use of nuclear weapons

In 1999, the Conference on Disarmament was unable to carry out negotiations on a convention on the prohibition of the use of nuclear weapons, as requested in General Assembly resolution 53/78 D [YUN 1998, p. 512].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/564], adopted resolution 54/55 D by recorded vote (104-42-17) [agenda item 77 (d)].

Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons

The General Assembly,

Convinced that the use of nuclear weapons poses the most serious threat to the survival of mankind,

Bearing in mind the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 8 July 1996 on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons,

Convinced that a multilateral, universal and binding agreement prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons would contribute to the elimination of the nuclear threat and to the climate for negotiations leading to the ultimate elimination of nuclear weapons, thereby strengthening international peace and security,

Conscious that some steps taken by the Russian Federation and the United States of America towards a reduction of their nuclear weapons and the improvement in the international climate can contribute towards the goal of the complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

Recalling that, in paragraph 58 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it is stated that all States should actively participate in efforts to bring about conditions in international relations among States in which a code of peaceful conduct of nations in international affairs could be agreed upon and that would preclude the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming that any use of nuclear weapons would be a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity, as declared in its resolutions 1653(XVI) of 24 November 1961, 33/71 B of 14 December 1978, 34/83 G of 11 December 1979, 35/152 D of 12 December 1980 and 36/92 I of 9 December 1981,

Determined to achieve an international convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of nuclear weapons, leading to their ultimate destruction,

Stressing that an international convention on the prohibition of the use of nuclear weapons would be an important step in a phased programme towards the complete elimination of nuclear weapons, with a specified framework of time,

Noting with regret that the Conference on Disarmament, during its 1999 session, was unable to undertake negotiations on this subject as called for in General Assembly resolution 53/78 D of 4 December 1998,

1. Reiterates its request to the Conference on Disarmament to commence negotiations, in order to reach agreement on an international convention prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly on the results of those negotiations.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 54/55 D:

In favour Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Cambodia, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Chile, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Marshall Islands, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Saint Lu-

Advisory opinion of International Court of Justice

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/77 W [YUN 1998, p. 513], the Secretary-General presented information received from five States (Cuba, DPRK, India, Mexico, Saudi Arabia) on measures they had taken to implement the resolution and nuclear disarmament [A/54/161 & Add.1].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/563], adopted resolution 54/54 Q by recorded vote (114-28-22) [agenda item 76 (p)].

Follow-up to the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/75 K of 15 December 1994, 51/45 M of 10 December 1996, 52/38 O of 9 December 1997 and 53/77 W of 4 December 1998,

Convinced that the continuing existence of nuclear weapons poses a threat to all humanity and that their use would have catastrophic consequences for all life on Earth, and recognizing that the only defence against a nuclear catastrophe is the total elimination of nuclear weapons and the certainty that they will never be produced again,

Reaffirming the commitment of the international community to the goal of the total elimination of nuclear weapons and the creation of a nuclear-weapon-free world,

Mindful of the solemn obligations of States parties, undertaken in article VI of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, particularly to pursue negotiations in good faith on effective measures relating to cessation of the nuclear arms race at an early date and to nuclear disarmament,

Recalling the principles and objectives for nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament adopted at the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, and in particular the objective of determined pursuit by the nuclear-weapon States of systematic and progressive efforts to reduce nuclear weapons globally, with the ultimate goal of eliminating those weapons,

Recalling also the adoption of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty in its resolution 50/245 of 10 September 1996, and expressing its satisfaction at the increasing number of States that have signed and ratified the Treaty,

Recognizing with satisfaction that the Antarctic Treaty and the treaties of Tlatelolco, Rarotonga, Bangkok and Pelindaba are gradually freeing the entire southern hemisphere and adjacent areas covered by those treaties from nuclear weapons,

Noting the efforts by the States possessing the largest inventories of nuclear weapons to reduce their stockpiles of such weapons through bilateral agreements or arrangements and unilateral decisions, and calling for the intensification of such efforts to accelerate the significant reduction of nuclear-weapon arsenals,

Recognizing the need for a multilaterally negotiated and legally binding instrument to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the threat or use of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming the central role of the Conference on Disarmament as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum, and regretting the lack of progress in disarmament negotiations, particularly nuclear disarmament, in the Conference on Disarmament during its 1999 session,

Emphasizing the need for the Conference on Disarmament to commence negotiations on a phased programme for the complete elimination of nuclear weapons with a specified framework of time,

Desiring to achieve the objective of a legally binding prohibition of the development, production, testing, deployment, stockpiling, threat or use of nuclear weapons and their destruction under effective international control,

Recalling the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, issued on 8 July 1996,

Taking note of the relevant portions of the note by the Secretary-General relating to the implementation of resolution 53/77 W,

1. Underlines once again the unanimous conclusion of the International Court of Justice that there exists an obligation to pursue in good faith and bring to a conclusion negotiations leading to nuclear disarmament in all its aspects under strict and effective international control;

2. Calls once again upon all States immediately to fulfil that obligation by commencing multilateral negotiations in 2000 leading to an early conclusion of a nuclear weapons convention prohibiting the development, production, testing, deployment, stockpiling, transfer, threat or use of nuclear weapons and providing for their elimination;

3. Requests all States to inform the Secretary-General of the efforts and measures they have taken on the implementation of the present resolution and nuclear disarmament, and requests the Secretary-General to apprise the General Assembly of that information at its fifty-fifth session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Follow-up to the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 54/54 Q:

In favour Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Cambodia, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

The First Committee adopted paragraphs 1 and 2 by separate recorded votes of 137 to 2, with 3 abstentions, and 94 to 25, with 22 abstentions, respectively. The draft as a whole was adopted by a recorded vote of 98 to 27, with 21 abstentions. The Assembly retained those paragraphs by recorded votes of 156 to 3, with 3 abstentions, and 107 to 29, with 26 abstentions, respectively.

Nuclear-weapon-free zones

As decided at the 1998 organizational session of the Disarmament Commission [YUN 1998, p. 488] and in accordance with General Assembly resolution 53/79 A [ibid., p. 489], the Disarmament Commission continued to consider the agenda item "Establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at among the States of the region concerned" in Working Group I [A/54/42].

The Group based its discussion on a working paper submitted by the Chairman, which took into consideration working papers from previous Commission sessions. Following a discussion on specific elements contained in the Chairman's working paper and written and oral proposals made by delegations, the Chairman presented four revisions of his paper. The Group, by consensus, adopted its report and a text on the item. The text, which was annexed to the Commission's report, presented a general overview of developments and contained recommendations related to objectives and purpose of the zones, principles and guidelines on establishing them and future initiatives.

Africa

By year's end, 13 States had ratified the African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty (Treaty of Pelindaba) [YUN 1995, p. 203], which was opened for signature in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 486]. China and France had ratified Protocols I and II thereto and France had also ratified Protocol III. The Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States had signed Protocols I and II. The Treaty had 55 signatories.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/557], adopted resolution 54/48 without vote [agenda item 70].

African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty (Treaty of Pelindaba)

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/46 of 9 December 1997 and all its other relevant resolutions, as well as those of the Organization of African Unity,

Recalling also the successful conclusion of the signing ceremony of the African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty (Treaty of Pelindaba) that was held in Cairo on 11 April 1996,

Recalling further the Cairo Declaration adopted on that occasion, which emphasized that nuclear-weapon-free zones, especially in regions of tension, such as the Middle East, enhance global and regional peace and security,

Noting the statement made by the President of the Security Council on behalf of the members of the Council on 12 April 1996, in which it was stated that the signature of the African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty constituted an important contribution by the African countries to the maintenance of international peace and security,

Considering that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones, especially in the Middle East, would enhance the security of Africa and the viability of the African nuclear-weapon-free zone,

1. Calls upon African States that have not yet done so to sign and ratify the African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty (Treaty of Pelindaba) as soon as possible so that it may enter into force without delay;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the nuclear-weapon States that have signed the Protocols that concern them, and calls upon those that have not yet ratified the Protocols concerning them to do so as soon as possible;

3. Calls upon the States contemplated in Protocol III to the Treaty that have not yet done so to take all necessary measures to ensure the speedy application of the Treaty to territories for which they are, de jure or de facto, internationally responsible and which lie within the limits of the geographical zone established in the Treaty;

4. Calls upon the African States parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons that have not yet done so to conclude comprehensive safeguards agreements with the International Atomic Energy Agency pursuant to the Treaty, thereby satisfying the requirements of article 9 (b) of and annex II to the Treaty of Pelindaba when it enters into force, and to conclude additional protocols to their safeguards agreements on the basis of the Model Protocol approved by the Board of Governors of the Agency on 15 May 1997;

5. Expresses its gratitude to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity and the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency for the diligence with which they have rendered effective assistance to the signatories to the Treaty;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty".

Asia

Central Asia

Negotiations on drafting the text of a treaty for a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Central Asia continued during the year. The UN-sponsored Expert Group, consisting of experts from each of the five States (Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan), held three meetings (Tashkent, Uzbekistan, 1-3 February; Geneva, 27-30 April; and Sapporo, Japan, 5-8 October) with the assistance of the Regional Centre for Asia and the Pacific of DDA. It succeeded in narrowing differences on several key issues, but difficulties pertaining to transit and to the issue of other agreements remained unresolved.

At a number of meetings, the States of the region addressed issues related to the treaty. Thus, the heads of State of Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan issued a joint statement (Ashgabat, Turkmenistan, 8-9 April) [A/54/80], in which they reaffirmed that the establishment of the zone was in keeping with the requirements and interests of national, regional and global security. Those efforts were supported by the heads of State of China, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation and Tajikistan in the Bishkek (Kyrgyzstan) Declaration of 25 August [A/54/314]. The Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the member States of the Conference on Interaction and Confidence-Building Measures in Asia (Almaty, Kazakhstan, 14 September) [A/54/368-S/1999/993] expressed support for the establishment of zones free of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction in Asia.

On 1 December, the General Assembly decided to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth (2000) session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Central Asia" (decision 54/417).

Mongolia

On 1 September, Mongolia issued a memorandum on its international security and nuclear-weapon-free status [A/54/323-S/1999/951], in which it stated that it was consulting with the States concerned, especially the five nuclear-weapon States, on ways to implement General Assembly resolution 53/77 D [YUN 1998, p. 515], namely, defining its status and addressing its international security needs and interests. A regional disarmament meeting (Ulaanbaatar, Mongolia, 3-5 August), held under the auspices of the Government of Mongolia and DDA's Regional Centre for Asia and the Pacific, examined, among other things, questions pertaining to Mongolia's external security needs and its nuclear-weapon-free status.

South-East Asia

Consultations continued between the members of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) and various nuclear-weapon States regarding the adherence of the latter to the Protocol of the Treaty on the South-East Asia Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone (Bangkok Treaty), but no further progress was made. The Treaty opened for signature in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 207] and entered into force in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 495]. With no new ratifications in 1999, the number of States that had ratified the Treaty remained at nine.

The Foreign Ministers of ASEAN convened for the first time the Commission of the Bangkok Treaty (Singapore, 23-24 July) as a step towards the implementation of the Treaty and urged the nuclear-weapon States to accede to the Protocol. The ASEAN Regional Forum made a similar appeal at their meeting in Singapore on 26 July.

Latin America and the Caribbean

The Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean General Conference, at its sixteenth session (Lima, Peru, 30 November-1 December) [A/55/62], adopted the Lima Appeal, which called for, among other things, the creation of an international public awareness in order to advance a complete prohibition of the use and manufacture of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/569], adopted resolution 54/60 without vote [agenda item 82].

Consolidation of the regime established by the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco)

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in its resolution 1911 (XVIII) of 27 November 1963 it expressed the hope that the States of Latin America would take appropriate measures to conclude a treaty that would prohibit nuclear weapons in Latin America,

Recalling also that in the same resolution it voiced its confidence that, once such a treaty was concluded, all States, and in particular the nuclear-weapon States, would lend it their full cooperation for the effective realization of its peaceful aims,

Considering that in its resolution 2028(XX) of 19 November 1965 it established the principle of an acceptable balance of mutual responsibilities and obligations between nuclear-weapon States and those which do not possess such weapons,

Recalling that the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco) was opened for signature at Mexico City on 14 February 1967,

Noting with satisfaction the holding on 14 February 1997 of the eleventh special session of the General Conference of the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean in commemoration of the thirtieth anniversary of the opening for signature of the Treaty of Tlatelolco,

Recalling that in its preamble the Treaty of Tlatelolco states that military denuclearized zones are not an end in themselves but rather a means for achieving general and complete disarmament at a later stage,

Recalling also that in its resolution 2286(XXII) of 5 December 1967 it welcomed with special satisfaction the Treaty of Tlatelolco as an event of historic significance in the efforts to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons and to promote international peace and security,

Recalling further that in 1990, 1991 and 1992 the General Conference of the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean approved and opened for signature a set of amendments to the Treaty of Tlatelolco, with the aim of enabling the full entry into force of that instrument,

Recalling resolution C/E/RES.27 of the Council of the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean, in which the Council called for the promotion of cooperation and consultations with other nuclear-weapon-free zones,

Noting with satisfaction that the Treaty of Tlatelolco is now in force for thirty-two sovereign States of the region,

Also noting with satisfaction that on 18 January 1999 Colombia and on 20 January 1999 Costa Rica deposited their instruments of ratification of the amendments to the Treaty of Tlatelolco approved by the General Conference of the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean in its resolutions 267(E-V) of 3 July 1990, 268(XII) of 10 May 1991 and 290(E-VII) of 26 August 1992,

Further noting with satisfaction that the amended Treaty of Tlatelolco is fully in force for Argentina, Barbados, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Guyana, Jamaica, Mexico, Paraguay, Peru, Suriname, Uruguay and Venezuela,

1. Welcomes the concrete steps taken by some countries of the region during the past year for the consolidation of the regime of military denuclearization established by the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco);

2. Urges the countries of the region that have not yet done so to deposit their instruments of ratification of the amendments to the Treaty of Tlatelolco approved by the General Conference of the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean in its resolutions 267(E-V), 268(XII) and 290(E-VII);

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Consolidation of the regime established by the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco)".

Middle East

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/74 on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East [YUN 1998, p. 517], the Secretary-General reported in September on the implementation of that resolution [A/54/190 & Add.1]. He regretted that no positive developments had occurred and urged all concerned parties to review the situation to determine possible new approaches and to resume discussions. The report included information received from China, Egypt, Iraq and Saudi Arabia regarding measures to move towards the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/560], adopted resolution 54/51 without vote [agenda item 73].

Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3263(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3474(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/71 of 10 December 1976, 32/82 of 12 December 1977, 33/64 of 14 December 1978, 34/77 of 11 December 1979, 35/147 of 12 December 1980, 36/87 A and B of 9 December 1981, 37/75 of 9 December 1982, 38/64 of 15 December 1983, 39/54 of 12 December 1984, 40/82 of 12 December 1985, 41/48 of 3 December 1986, 42/28 of 30 November 1987, 43/65 of 7 December 1988, 44/108 of 15 December 1989, 45/52 of 4 December 1990, 46/30 of 6 December 1991, 47/48 of 9 December 1992, 48/71 of 16 December 1993, 49/71 of 15 December 1994, 50/66 of 12 December 1995, 51/41 of 10 December 1996, 52/34 of 9 December 1997 and 53/74 of 4 December 1998 on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Recalling also the recommendations for the establishment of such a zone in the Middle East consistent with paragraphs 60 to 63, and in particular paragraph 63 (d), of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Emphasizing the basic provisions of the above-mentioned resolutions, which call upon all parties directly concerned to consider taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East and, pending and during the establishment of such a zone, to declare solemnly that they will refrain, on a reciprocal basis, from producing, acquiring or in any other way possessing nuclear weapons and nuclear explosive devices and from permitting the stationing of nuclear weapons on their territory by any third party, to agree to place their nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards and to declare their support for the establishment of the zone and to deposit such declarations with the Security Council for consideration, as appropriate,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of all States to acquire and develop nuclear energy for peaceful purposes,

Emphasizing the need for appropriate measures on the question of the prohibition of military attacks on nuclear facilities,

Bearing in mind the consensus reached by the General Assembly since its thirty-fifth session that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East would greatly enhance international peace and security,

Desirous of building on that consensus so that substantial progress can be made towards establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East,

Welcoming all initiatives leading to general and complete disarmament, including in the region of the Middle East, and in particular on the establishment therein of a zone free of weapons of mass destruction, including nuclear weapons,

Noting the peace negotiations in the Middle East, which should be of a comprehensive nature and represent an appropriate framework for the peaceful settlement of contentious issues in the region,

Recognizing the importance of credible regional security, including the establishment of a mutually verifiable nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Emphasizing the essential role of the United Nations in the establishment of a mutually verifiable nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 53/74,

1. Urges all parties directly concerned to consider seriously taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and, as a means of promoting this objective, invites the countries concerned to adhere to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

2. Calls upon all countries of the region that have not done so, pending the establishment of the zone, to agree to place all their nuclear activities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards;

3. Takes note of resolution GC(43)/RES/23, adopted on 1 October 1999 by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency at its forty-third regular session, concerning the application of Agency safeguards in the Middle East;

4. Notes the importance of the ongoing bilateral Middle East peace negotiations and the activities of the multilateral Working Group on Arms Control and Regional Security in promoting mutual confidence and security in the Middle East, including the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone;

5. Invites all countries of the region, pending the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East, to declare their support for establishing such a zone, consistent with paragraph 63 (d) of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and to deposit those declarations with the Security Council;

6. Also invites those countries, pending the establishment of the zone, not to develop, produce, test or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons or permit the stationing on their territories, or territories under their control, of nuclear weapons or nuclear explosive devices;

7. Invites the nuclear-weapon States and all other States to render their assistance in the establishment of the zone and at the same time to refrain from any action that runs counter to both the letter and the spirit of the present resolution;

8. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

9. Invites all parties to consider the appropriate means that may contribute towards the goal of general and complete disarmament and the establishment of a zone free of weapons of mass destruction in the region of the Middle East;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to pursue consultations with the States of the region and other concerned States, in accordance with paragraph 7 of resolution 46/30 and taking into account the evolving situation in the region, and to seek from those States their views on the measures outlined in chapters III and IV of the study annexed to his report or other relevant measures, in order to move towards the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East".

South Pacific

In 1999, the number of parties to the 1985 South Pacific Nuclear-Free Zone Treaty (Treaty of Rarotonga) [YUN1985,p.58] remained at 16. The total included nuclear-weapon States: China and the Russian Federation had ratified Protocols 2 and 3, and France and the United Kingdom had ratified all three Protocols.

Under Protocol 1, the States internationally responsible for territories situated within the zone would undertake to apply the relevant prohibitions of the Treaty to those territories; under Protocol 2, the five nuclear-weapon States would provide security assurances to parties or to territories within the same zone; and under Protocol 3, the five would not carry out nuclear tests in the zone.

Southern hemisphere and adjacent areas

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/563], adopted resolution 54/54 L by recorded vote (157-3-4) [agenda item 76 (m)].

Nuclear-weapon-free southern hemisphere and adjacent areas

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 51/45 B of 10 December 1996, 52/38 N of 9 December 1997 and 53/77 Q of 4 December 1998,

Welcoming the adoption by the Disarmament Commission at its 1999 substantive session of a text entitled "Establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at among the States of the region concerned",

Determined to continue to contribute to the prevention of the proliferation of nuclear weapons in all its aspects and to the process of general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control, in particular in the field of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction, with a view to strengthening international peace and security, in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling the provisions on nuclear-weapon-free zones of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, as well as of the decision on principles and objectives for nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament of the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

Stressing the importance of the treaties of Tlatelolco, Rarotonga, Bangkok and Pelindaba, establishing nuclear-weapon-free zones, as well as the Antarctic Treaty, to, inter alia, the ultimate objective of achieving a world entirely free of nuclear weapons, and underlining also the value of enhancing cooperation among the nuclear-weapon-free zone treaty members by means of mechanisms such as joint meetings of States parties, signatories and observers to those treaties,

Recalling the applicable principles and rules of international law relating to the freedom of the high seas and the rights of passage through maritime space, including those of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea,

2. Calls for the ratification of the treaties of Tlatelolco, Rarotonga, Bangkok and Pelindaba by all States of the region concerned, and calls upon all concerned States to continue to work together in order to facilitate adherence to the protocols to nuclear-weapon-free zone treaties by all relevant States that have not yet done so;

3. Welcomes the steps taken to conclude further nuclear-weapon-free zone treaties on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at among the States of the region concerned, and calls upon all States to consider all relevant proposals, including those reflected in General Assembly resolutions on the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in the Middle East and South Asia;

4. Reiterates the important role of nuclear-weapon-free zones in strengthening the nuclear non-proliferation regime and in extending the areas of the world that are nuclear-weapon-free, and, with particular reference to the responsibilities of the nuclear-weapon States, calls upon all States to support the process of nuclear disarmament, with the ultimate goal of eliminating all nuclear weapons;

5. Calls upon the States parties and signatories to the treaties of Tlatelolco, Rarotonga, Bangkok and Pelindaba, in order to pursue the common goals envisaged in those treaties and to promote the nuclear-weapon-free status of the southern hemisphere and adjacent areas, to explore and implement further ways and means of cooperation among themselves and their treaty agencies;

6. Encourages the competent authorities of nuclear-weapon-free zone treaties to provide assistance to the States parties and signatories to such treaties so as to facilitate the accomplishment of these goals;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Nuclear-weapon-free southern hemisphere and adjacent areas".

Nuclear safety and radioactive waste

The First Review Meeting of the Contracting Parties to the 1994 IAEA Convention on Nuclear Safety [YUN 1994, p. 925] (Vienna, 12-23 April) was convened to review States parties' national reports on steps and measures taken to implement the Convention. The meeting concluded that efforts to enhance nuclear safety were proceeding well, although certain improvements were necessary. The Convention entered into force in 1996.

In October, the IAEA General Conference adopted a series of resolutions on nuclear, radiation and waste safety. A resolution on the safety of radiation sources and the security of radiological materials [GC(43)/RES/10] endorsed an action plan developed and adopted by the IAEA Board of Governors [GOV/1999/46-GC(43)10]. Regarding the safety of transport of radioactive materials [GC(43)/RES/11], the General Conference asked States that shipped radioactive materials to provide assurances to potentially affected States that their national regulations took into account IAEA transport regulations. A resolution on the radiological protection of patients [GC(43)/RES/12] requested the UN Secretariat, in collaboration with the World Health Organization, to organize an international meeting on the subject.

Weapons of mass destruction

Although the item "New types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons" was on the agenda of the Conference on Disarmament [A/54/27], the Conference did not establish an ad hoc committee on the subject.

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/552], adopted resolution 54/44 without vote [agenda item 65].

Prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons,

Recalling also its resolution 51/37 of 10 December 1996 relating to the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons,

Taking note of paragraph 77 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Determined to prevent the emergence of new types of weapons of mass destruction that have characteristics comparable in destructive effect to those of weapons of mass destruction identified in the definition of weapons of mass destruction adopted by the United Nations in 1948,

Noting the desirability of keeping the matter under review, as appropriate,

1. Reaffirms that effective measures should be taken to prevent the emergence of new types of weapons of mass destruction;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session the item entitled "Prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons: report of the Conference on Disarmament".

Bacteriological (biological) and chemical weapons

Bacteriological (biological) weapons

Efforts continued in 1999 to strengthen the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction (BWC), adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2826(XXVI) [YUN 1971, p. 19]. The Ad Hoc Group of the States Parties to the Convention attempted to achieve that goal through the development of a protocol on verification and confidence-building measures. However, obstacles remained at the end of the year.

Ad Hoc Group

The Ad Hoc Group of the States Parties to BWC held its thirteenth (4-22 January) [BWC/AD HOC GROUP/44], fourteenth (29 March-9 April) [BWC/AD HOC GROUP/45], fifteenth (28 June-23 July) [BWC/AD HOC GROUP/46], sixteenth (13 September-8 October) [BWC/AD HOC GROUP/47] and seventeenth (22 November-10 December) [BWC/AD HOC GROUP/49 & Add. 1-3] sessions in 1999, all in Geneva.

The Group, as in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 519], considered definitions of terms and objective criteria; measures to promote compliance; confidentiality; national implementation and assistance; measures related to article X (scientific exchange and technological cooperation); investigations; legal issues; and the seat of the organization. The work was conducted in groups, each led by a Friend of the Chair. At the sixteenth session, a Friend of the Chair was appointed for article I (general provisions) of the future protocol. The Chairman continued to steer discussions on issues relating to organization and implementation arrangements. As had been done previously, the results of discussions during the sessions were incorporated into the rolling text, with brackets reflecting sections of the text on which agreement was not yet possible. Although those proposals were annexed to the rolling text, it was reaffirmed that the rolling text was the only basis for negotiations in the Ad Hoc Group.

By year's end, the rolling text contained a preamble, 23 articles, 7 annexes and 6 appendices. The main articles, additional to the standard ones on legal issues, were: I. General provisions; II. [Definitions [and criteria]]; III. Compliance measures; IV. Confidentiality provisions; V. Measures to redress a situation and to ensure compliance; VI. Assistance and protection against biological and toxin weapons; VII. Scientific and technological exchange for peaceful purposes and technical cooperation; VIII. Confidence-building measures; IX. The Organization; and X. National implementation measures. The annexes, which provided detailed procedures for implementing the protocol's provisions, dealt with the following issues: A. Declarations; B. [Visits]; C. [Measures to strengthen the implementation of article III]; D. Investigations; E. Confidentiality provisions; F. Scientific and technological exchange for peaceful purposes and technical cooperation; and G. Confidence-building measures. The appendices covered the following areas: A. [Information to be provided in declarations of past biological and toxin offensive and/or defensive [programmes] [activities]]; B. Declaration of current biological defensive [programmes] [activities]; C. [Facilities]; D. [Listing of facilities participating in biological defensive activities]; E. [Information to be provided [in the declaration of implementation of article X of the Convention and article VII of the Protocol] [under section G of article VII]]; and F. [List of approved investigation/visit equipment].

At its December session, the Group decided that it would hold four sessions in 2000. In addition, it decided to reserve two periods of two weeks each in the latter part of 2000; by the end of the twentieth session, it would decide on whether a further session would be convened and, if so, in which of the two reserved periods.

Parallel to their efforts to develop a verification mechanism, States parties continued their information exchange in the agreed framework of politically binding confidence-building measures, exchanging information on, among other things, relevant research centres and laboratories; national biological defence research and development programmes; outbreaks of infectious diseases and similar occurrences caused by toxins; relevant legislation, regulations and other measures; past activities in offensive and/or defensive biological research and development programmes; and vaccine production facilities. In 1999, 36 States parties submitted reports to the United Nations, bringing the number of States that had submitted at least one report since 1987 to 82.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/570], adopted resolution 54/61 without vote [agenda item 83].

Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions relating to the complete and effective prohibition of bacteriological (biological) and toxin weapons and to their destruction,

Noting with satisfaction that there are one hundred and forty-three States parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin

Weapons and on Their Destruction, including all the permanent members of the Security Council,

Bearing in mind its call upon all States parties to the Convention to participate in the implementation of the recommendations of the Review Conferences, including the exchange of information and data agreed to in the Final Declaration of the Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, and to provide such information and data in conformity with standardized procedure to the Secretary-General on an annual basis and no later than 15 April,

Recalling its resolution 49/86, adopted without a vote on 15 December 1994, in which it welcomed the final report of the Special Conference of the States Parties to the Convention, adopted by consensus on 30 September 1994, in which the States parties agreed to establish an ad hoc group, open to the participation of all States parties, whose objective should be to consider appropriate measures, including possible verification measures, and draft proposals to strengthen the Convention, to be included, as appropriate, in a legally binding instrument to be submitted for the consideration of the States parties,

Recalling also the provisions of the Convention related to scientific and technological cooperation and the related provisions of the final report of the Ad Hoc Group of Governmental Experts to Identify and Examine Potential Verification Measures from a Scientific and Technical Standpoint, the final report of the Special Conference of the States Parties to the Convention, and the final documents of the Review Conferences,

Recalling further the Final Document of the Twelfth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Durban, South Africa, from 29 August to 3 September 1998, in which the heads of State or Government noted the progress achieved so far in the negotiation of a protocol, stressed the importance of achieving further substantive progress for the conclusion of a universally acceptable and legally binding instrument designed to strengthen the Convention and reaffirmed the decision of the Fourth Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention urging the conclusion of the negotiations by the Ad Hoc Group as soon as possible before the commencement of the Fifth Review Conference,

Welcoming the reaffirmation made in the Final Declaration of the Fourth Review Conference that under all circumstances the use of bacteriological (biological) and toxin weapons and their development, production and stockpiling are effectively prohibited under article I of the Convention,

Recalling the declaration of the informal ministerial meeting, held in New York on 23 September 1998, in which the participants and the co-sponsors affirmed their strong support for the Convention and for strengthening its effectiveness and improving its implementation,

Bearing in mind the forthcoming seventy-fifth anniversary of the signature of the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925, and the twenty-fifth anniversary of the entry into force of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction on 26 March 1975,

1. Welcomes the progress achieved so far in the negotiation of a protocol to strengthen the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, and reaffirms the decision of the Fourth Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention urging the conclusion of the negotiations by the Ad Hoc Group of Governmental Experts to Identify and Examine Potential Verification Measures from a Scientific and Technical Standpoint as soon as possible before the commencement of the Fifth Review Conference and urging it to submit its report, which shall be adopted by consensus, to the States parties to be considered at a special conference;

2. Notes with satisfaction the increase in the number of States parties to the Convention, and reaffirms the call upon all signatory States that have not yet ratified the Convention to do so without delay, and also calls upon those States that have not signed the Convention to become parties thereto at an early date, thus contributing to the achievement of universal adherence to the Convention, duly noting the forthcoming anniversary of the twenty-fifth year of the entry into force of the Convention;

3. Calls upon all States parties, in this context, to accelerate the negotiations and to redouble their efforts within the Ad Hoc Group to formulate an efficient, cost-effective and practical regime and to seek an early resolution of the outstanding issues through renewed flexibility in order to complete the protocol on the basis of consensus at the earliest possible date;

4. Welcomes the information and data provided to date, and reiterates its call upon all States parties to the Convention to participate in the exchange of information and data agreed to in the Final Declaration of the Third Review Conference;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to render the necessary assistance to the depositary Governments of the Convention and to provide such services as may be required for the implementation of the decisions and recommendations of the Review Conferences, as well as the decisions contained in the final report of the Special Conference, including all necessary assistance to the Ad Hoc Group and the special conference that is to consider the report of the Ad Hoc Group, in accordance with its mandate, as confirmed by the Fourth Review Conference;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction".

Chemical weapons

Chemical weapons convention

In 1999, Estonia, the Holy See, Liechtenstein, Micronesia, Nicaragua, Nigeria, San Marino and the Sudan ratified the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction, bringing the total number of States parties to 129. The number of signatories stood at 165. The Convention was adopted by the Conference on Disarmament in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 65] and entered into force in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 499].

At the fourth session of the Conference of the States Parties to the Convention (see below), the Director-General of the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW) noted that 29 of the States parties had not submitted their initial declarations. (Under article III of the Convention, a State party was obligated to declare, 30 days after entry into force, whether or not chemical weapons or facilities existed on its territory, and to report on plans to destroy or convert existing chemical weapons and related facilities and on related laboratories and equipment that could be used to make chemical weapons. A State party was also obliged to declare all riot control agents.)

Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons

In 1999, the fourth session of the Conference of States Parties (The Hague, Netherlands, 28 June-2 July) [OPCW, C-IV/6] adopted the 2000 OPCW programme and budget, approved the draft relationship agreement between the United Nations and OPCW and authorized the Director-General to transmit it to the Secretary-General on the understanding that the Conference did not wish to reopen the text of the draft. With respect to inspections, the Conference approved model facility agreements for chemical weapons storage facilities and for chemical weapons production facilities.

The OPCW Executive Council considered a number of technical issues at its fourteenth (2-5 February), fifteenth (26-29 April), sixteenth (21-24 September) and seventeenth (30 November-3 December) sessions. It also held specially scheduled meetings on 23 June and 22 July. Among other things, it discussed requests for OPCW to provide more information about verification activities, including inspection results (a contentious issue because of the need to protect confidential information) and the issue of costs associated with inspections of old/abandoned chemical weapons.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee 1A/54/5631, adopted resolution 54/54 E without vote [agenda item 76 (n)].

Implementation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the subject of chemical weapons, in particular resolution 53/77 R of 4 December 1998, adopted without a vote, in which it noted with appreciation the ongoing work to achieve the objective and purpose of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction,

Determined to achieve the effective prohibition of the development, production, acquisition, transfer, stockpiling and use of chemical weapons and their destruction,

Noting with satisfaction that, since the adoption of resolution 53/77 R, six additional States have ratified the Convention, bringing the total number of States parties to the Convention to one hundred and twenty-six,

1. Notes with appreciation the ongoing work of the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons to achieve the objective and purpose of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction, to ensure the full implementation of its provisions, including those for international verification of compliance with it, and to provide a forum for consultation and cooperation among States parties;

2. Stresses the importance of the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons in verifying compliance with the provisions of the Convention as well as in promoting the timely and efficient accomplishment of all its objectives;

3. Also stresses the vital importance of full and effective implementation of and compliance with all provisions of the Convention;

4. Urges all States parties to the Convention to meet in full and on time their obligations under the Convention and to support the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons in its implementation activities;

5. Emphasizes the necessity of universal adherence to the Convention, and calls upon all States that have not yet done so to become States parties to the Convention without delay;

6. Stresses the importance to the Convention that all possessors of chemical weapons, chemical weapons production facilities and chemical weapons development facilities, including previously declared possessor States, should be among the States parties to the Convention, and welcomes progress to that end;

7. Welcomes the cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons and efforts towards the prompt conclusion of a relationship agreement between the United Nations and the Organization, in accordance with the provisions of the Convention;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Implementation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction".

Conventional weapons

In 1999, the United Nations continued to consider the question of small arms and light weapons. The General Assembly adopted nine resolutions dealing with conventional weapons, among them resolution 54/54 V, by which it decided to convene in 2001 the UN Conference on the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects.

While the Register of Conventional Arms remained the most well-known instrument of transparency for conventional weapons, the decrease in the number of replies for 1998 reflected the continuing differences among Member States regarding its future development. Some States, such as EU members and the United States, advocated the inclusion of additional information on procurement through national production and military holdings, while others, mostly non-aligned States, advocated inclusion of weapons of mass destruction. Participation by Member States in the standardized reporting instrument for military expenditures remained low. However, by the end of 1999, it appeared that military spending itself was on the rise.

Further progress was made in strengthening the two legal instruments dealing with anti-personnel mines. The 1997 Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction [YUN 1997, p. 503] entered into force on 1 March and the first meeting of the States parties took place (Maputo, Mozambique, 3-7 May). Also, the First Annual Conference of the States Parties to Amended Protocol II to the 1980 Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects [YUN 1980, p. 76] was held (Geneva, 15-17 December).

Group of Governmental Experts. The Group of Governmental Experts on Small Arms, established by the Secretary-General in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 524], completed its study [A/54/258] on progress made in implementing the 24 recommendations of the 1997 Panel of Governmental Experts on Small Arms [YUN 1997, p. 506] and recommended further actions. In 1999, the Group held its second and third sessions (Geneva, 22-26 February; New York, 21-30 July) and conducted regional workshops in Tokyo (31 May-3 June) and Geneva (18-20 February).

The Group reviewed the implementation of each of the 24 recommendations made in 1997, noting that progress was being made through the efforts of the United Nations, other international forums, regional and subregional organizations, and Member States. In general, they found that most of the recommendations were in the process of being implemented and a few had been almost completely implemented, while for a few others implementation had not yet begun.

In connection with the General Assembly's decision to convene an international conference on the illicit arms trade in all its aspects no later than 2001 (resolution 54/54 V), the Group recommended that the Conference's objective should be to develop and strengthen international efforts and that it should focus on small arms and light weapons that were manufactured to military specifications.

Disarmament Commission action. On 28 April [A/54/42], the Disarmament Commission adopted by consensus the report of its Working Group III on guidelines on conventional arms control/limitation and disarmament, with particular emphasis on consolidation of peace in the context of General Assembly resolution 51/45 N [YUN 1996, p. 490]. The Working Group had concluded that the excessive accumulation of small arms and light weapons could be best averted by a combination of reduction and prevention measures.

Other action. At the regional and subregional levels, the first Summit of the Heads of State and Government of Latin America and the Caribbean and the EU (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, June) [A/54/448] adopted the Declaration of Rio de Janeiro and Priorities for Action, which welcomed the 1998 Joint Action on Small Arms adopted by the EU [A/54/374] aimed at combating the destabilizing accumulation and spread of small arms and light weapons. At its thirty-fifth ordinary session (Algiers, Algeria, 12-14 July) [A/54/424], the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) adopted a decision on the illicit proliferation, circulation and illicit trafficking of small arms and light weapons which, among other things, called for a coordinated African approach to the problems addressed by the decision and requested the OAU secretariat to organize a preparatory conference of continental experts on the matter.

The Second Oslo Meeting on Small Arms and Light Weapons (Oslo, Norway, 6-7 December) [A/54/739] discussed the humanitarian, developmental and security concerns raised by small arms and light weapons.

Issues related to small arms were also dealt with in the Coordinating Action on Small Arms (CASA) mechanism, established in 1998 by DDA [YUN 1998, p. 525]. In 1999, CASA held three meetings (1 March, 25 May and 23 November) at which information was disseminated to participants within and outside the UN system via DDA's web site and press releases. At its May meeting, representatives of the International Action Network on Small Arms (IANSA), an initiative launched by over 200 organizations working to prevent the proliferation and misuse of small arms, briefed CASA on two broad categories of policy measures: controlling the availability and access to small arms and reducing the demand for small arms. They further noted that IANSA would act as a clearing house for information on small arms and, in particular, for the production and dissemination of educational materials on small arms to support NGOs in the field. CASA members shared the view that IANSA could make an important contribution in promoting advocacy and supporting the UN lead role in encouraging efforts to address the wide-ranging problems posed by small arms.

On 10 December, the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) adopted a code of conduct for the implementation of the 1998 Moratorium on the Importation, Exportation and Manufacture of Small Arms and Light Weapons in West Africa [YUN 1998, p. 525].

Proposed conference on small arms trade. As requested in Assembly resolution 53/77 E [YUN 1998, p. 525], the Secretary-General, in an August report with later addenda [A/54/260 & Add.1-3], presented the views of 26 States on the objective, scope, agenda, dates and venue of and preparatory work for an international conference on the illicit arms trade in all its aspects.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 80], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/563], adopted resolution 54/54 V by recorded vote (119-0-2) [agenda item 76 (f)].

Small arms

Reaffirming the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament and the commitment of Member States to take concrete steps in order to strengthen that role,

Recognizing the importance of the role of civil society, including non-governmental organizations, in preventing and reducing the excessive and destabilizing accumulations of small arms and light weapons,

Convinced of the need for a comprehensive approach to promote, at the global and regional levels, the control and reduction of small arms and light weapons in a balanced and non-discriminatory manner as a contribution to international peace and security,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1209(1998) of 19 November 1998 on illicit arms flows to and in Africa and the statement by the President of the Security Council of 24 September 1999 on behalf of the Council in connection with the Council's consideration of the item entitled "Small arms",

Taking note of the complementarity of the efforts to prevent and reduce the excessive and destabilizing accumulation and transfer of small arms and light weapons and the work of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, including a protocol to combat illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition,

Reaffirming also the right of self-determination of all peoples, in particular peoples under colonial or other forms of alien domination or foreign occupation, and the importance of the effective realization of this right, as enunciated, inter alia, in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Concerned about the wide range of humanitarian and socio-economic consequences affecting, in particular, large segments of civilian populations, exacerbated by the illicit trafficking in and the ready availability of small arms and light weapons,

Also concerned about the close link between terrorism, organized crime and drug trafficking, on the one hand, and the uncontrolled spread of small arms and light weapons, on the other, and stressing the importance of international efforts aimed at combating them,

Welcoming the adoption by the Disarmament Commission of the "Guidelines on conventional arms control/limitation and disarmament, with particular emphasis on consolidation of peace in the context of General Assembly resolution 51/45 N",

Also welcoming the report of the Secretary-General on small arms, prepared with the assistance of the Group of Governmental Experts on Small Arms pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/38 J,

Taking due note of the report of the Group of Experts on the problem of ammunition and explosives,

Welcoming with appreciation the recommendations of the Secretary-General on the international conference on the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons in all its aspects to be convened no later than 2001 and the relevant recommendations contained in his report on small arms,

Welcoming the offer by the Government of Switzerland to host at Geneva, no later than 2001, an international conference on the illicit arms trade in all its aspects,

1. Decides to convene the United Nations Conference on the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects in June/July 2001;

2. Also decides that the scope of the Conference shall be the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons in all its aspects;

3. Further decides to establish a preparatory committee open to participation by all States, which will hold no fewer than three sessions, the first session to be held in New York from 28 February to 3 March 2000;

4. Decides that the specialized agencies, other relevant intergovernmental organizations and relevant entities, having received a standing invitation to participate as observers in the sessions and in the work of the General Assembly, shall participate, as observers, in the Preparatory Committee, and requests the Committee to take a decision on the modalities of attendance of non-governmental organizations at its sessions;

5. Requests the Preparatory Committee to decide, at its first session, on the date and venue of the Conference in 2001 as well as on the dates and venue of its subsequent sessions;

Ammunition and explosives

The Group of Experts appointed by the Secretary-General in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 527] completed the study on the problems of ammunition and explosives in all their aspects [A/54/1551, taking into account the work carried out by the Panel on Small Arms of 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 506]. The Group, which held its second and third sessions (New York, 11-15 January and 1-5 June), analysed information received on the manufacture of ammunition and explosives; legal transfers and illicit trafficking; stocks and surpluses; legislative control measures, with special reference to national legislation, and bilateral, regional and multilateral agreements; marking of ammunition and explosives; programmes for the reduction of ammunition stocks; and options for control measures on ammunition and explosives. The Group made recommendations concerning prevention and reduction measures, and proposed that the problem of ammunition and explosives be integrated into a number of UN activities.

Illicit traffic

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/77 E [YUN 1998, p. 525], the Secretary-General convened a consultative meeting of experts (New York, 20-21 May) [A/54/160] to ascertain the feasibility of undertaking a study for restricting the manufacture and trade of small arms and light weapons and ammunition to manufacturers and dealers authorized by States. After examining the scope of the proposed study, the experts concluded that a study on the subject was both feasible and desirable.

Regarding assistance to States to curb the illicit traffic in small arms and to collect them, the Secretary-General, in a September report [A/54/309] prepared in response to Assembly resolution 53/77 B [YUN 1998, p. 529], highlighted sub-regional, regional and international initiatives to address the issue. He also provided details on requests for assistance from four countries. In Albania, the collection of weapons in exchange for community development incentives took place through the Gramsh district pilot project, launched in January. Bolivia had presented to the Group of Interested States (see p. 493) a proposal for a programme on conflict prevention, negotiation and resolution within the framework of its strategy to fight drugs. DDA then requested Bolivia to prepare a project proposal with a clear disarmament dimension. The Government of Liberia, the United Nations and the Monitoring Group of ECOWAS (ECOMOG) agreed to dispose of all the weapons that were kept in a number of containers in Monrovia, with the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia (UNOMIL) and ECOMOG in control of the keys. By August, 18,420 small arms, 2,870,910 rounds of ammunition and 606 heavy machine-guns had been destroyed. Consultations between the Government of the Niger and DDA resumed when the Niger submitted a project for collecting 5,000 weapons over an initial period of nine months.

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/77 T [YUN 1998, p. 528], the Secretary-General, in a September report with later addendum [A/54/404 & Add.1], presented the views of 10 Member States and the EU on the magnitude and scope of the phenomenon of illicit trafficking in small arms; possible measures to combat such trafficking, including those suited to indigenous regional approaches; and the role of the United Nations in collecting, sharing and disseminating information on illicit trafficking in small arms. The Secretary-General had held broad-based consultations on the issue of illicit small arms trafficking. In addition, DDA, through the UN Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean, organized a workshop on illicit trafficking issues in small arms in Latin America and the Caribbean (Lima, Peru, 23-25 June); and, through the UN Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, DDA organized a regional workshop on illicit trafficking in small arms in Africa (Lome, Togo, 2-4 August).

Other action. In a 24 September statement [S/PRST/1999/28], the Security Council President, in reference to the implementation of arms embargoes, emphasized the importance of regional cooperation in tackling the issue of illicit trafficking in small arms (see p. 48).

The Council of Ministers at the nineteenth Summit of the Heads of State or Government of the Southern African Development Community (Maputo, Mozambique, 17-18 August) [A/54/488-S/1999/1082] adopted a decision on the prevention and combating of illicit trafficking in small arms and related crimes.

In June, the General Assembly of the Organization of American States (OAS) urged all member States that had not ratified the 1997 Inter-American Convention against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Ammunition, Explosives, and Other Related Materials [YUN 1997, p. 509] to do so without delay. Also in June, OAS adopted a resolution on the proliferation of and illicit trafficking in small arms and light weapons, in which it requested its Inter-American Drug Abuse Control Commission to continue to provide assistance to OAS member States in order to facilitate compliance with the Inter-American Convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/563], adopted resolution 54/54 R without vote [agenda item 76 (o)].

Illicit traffic in small arms

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/77 T of 4 December 1998,

Expressing its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the report on the results of his broad-based consultations on the magnitude and scope of the phenomenon of illicit trafficking in small arms and light weapons, possible measures to combat illicit trafficking in and illicit circulation of small arms and light weapons, and the role of the United Nations in collecting, collating, sharing and disseminating information on illicit trafficking in small arms and light weapons,

Convinced of the importance of national, regional and international measures to combat illicit trafficking in and illicit circulation of small arms and light weapons, including those suited to indigenous regional approaches,

Welcoming in this regard the decision on the illicit proliferation, circulation and trafficking of small arms and light weapons, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-fifth ordinary session, held at Algiers from 12 to 14 July 1999, the entry into force of the Inter-American Convention against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Ammunition, Explosives and Other Related Materials, the decision on prevention and combating of illicit trafficking in small arms and related crimes, adopted by the Council of Ministers at the nineteenth Summit of Heads of State or Government of the Southern African Development Community, held at Maputo on 17 and 18 August 1999, the initiative taken by States members of the Economic Community of West African States in declaring a moratorium on the importation, exportation and manufacture of small arms and light weapons in West Africa, and the adoption by the European Union of the Programme for Preventing and Combating Illicit Trafficking in Conventional Arms and the other initiatives it has taken, such as the Joint Action on Small Arms that has been endorsed by several Member States not members of the European Union,

Welcoming also the assistance provided by Member States in support of bilateral, regional and multilateral initiatives aimed at addressing illicit trafficking in small arms and light weapons,

Mindful of the impact of surplus small arms and light weapons on the illicit trade in these weapons, and welcoming the practical measures taken by Member States to destroy surplus weapons and confiscated or collected weapons, in accordance with the recommendations of the Secretary-General in his reports on small arms,

Recognizing the human suffering caused by illicit trafficking in small arms and that Governments bear the responsibility to intensify their efforts by developing an understanding of the issues and practical ways of addressing the problem,

Bearing in mind the interface between violence, criminality, drug trafficking and terrorism and illicit trafficking in small arms,

Stressing the importance of ongoing efforts to elaborate an international convention against transnational organized crime, including a protocol to combat the illicit manufacturing of and illicit trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, within the framework of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice,

Considering that the United Nations could, through a coordinated approach, collect, share and disseminate information to Member States on useful and successful practices to prevent the illicit trafficking in small arms and light weapons, and mindful of the role of the mechanism for Coordinating Action on Small Arms in this regard,

Emphasizing the importance of increased co-operation and coordination both among the relevant United Nations intergovernmental bodies and within the Secretariat through the mechanism for Coordinating Action on Small Arms in its ongoing initiatives related to illicit trafficking in small arms and light weapons,

Noting with appreciation the workshops on illicit trafficking in small arms, held at Lome and Lima, organized, respectively by the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa and the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean,

Conscious of its decision to convene an international conference on the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons in all its aspects no later than 2001, and taking into consideration the recommendations of the Secretary-General in his report on small arms, prepared with the assistance of the Group of Governmental Experts on Small Arms, as well as the views of Member States on the objectives, scope, agenda, dates and venue of such an international conference,

Convention on excessively injurious conventional weapons and Protocols

As requested in General Assembly resolution 53/81 [YUN 1998, p. 530], the Secretary-General reported on the status, as at 15 June 1999 [A/54/162], of the 1980 Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects [YUN 1980, p. 76] and two of its four Protocols: the 1995 Protocol on Blinding Laser Weapons (Protocol IV) [YUN 1995, p. 221] and the 1996 amended Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices (amended Protocol II) [YUN 1996, p. 484]. He stated that amended Protocol II had entered into force on 3 December 1998 and that 37 States had notified their consent to be bound by it. Regarding Protocol IV, which entered into force on 30 July 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 530], 39 States had notified their consent to be bound by it.

The accession of Senegal and Tajikistan in 1999 brought the number of States parties to the Convention as at 31 December to 75.

Pursuant to resolution 53/81, the First Annual Conference of the States Parties to Amended Protocol II met in Geneva from 15 to 17 December [CCW/AP.II/CONF.1/2].

The Conference had before it 31 national annual reports, containing information on: dissemination of information on the Protocol to armed forces and civilian populations; mine clearance and rehabilitation programmes; steps taken to meet technical requirements of the Protocol and any other relevant information pertaining thereto; legislation related to the Protocol; measures taken on international technical information exchange, on international cooperation on mine clearance, and on technical cooperation and assistance; and other relevant matters.

On 17 December, the Conference issued a declaration urging all States that had not done so to take all measures to accede to amended Protocol II as soon as possible.

The Conference recommended that the Secretary-General of the United Nations, as depositary of amended Protocol II, consider sending a communication to heads of State and/or Government of those States that had not acceded to the Protocol, urging them to do so at the earliest possible date. The Conference further requested the President of the Second Annual Conference to exercise his authority to achieve the goal of universality of the Protocol and, in that regard, requested him to consider reporting to the fifty-fifth session of the General Assembly. The Conference also called on the States parties to promote wider adherence to amended Protocol II in their respective regions and decided to convene the Second Annual Conference from 11 to 13 December 2000, in Geneva.

Practical disarmament

The Group of Interested States, established in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 531] to examine and, whenever possible, support concrete projects of practical disarmament, met four times during 1999 (27 January, 6 May, 10 September, 7 December) to discuss practical disarmament measures in Albania, Bolivia, South Africa-Mozambique and the Niger. It also reviewed projects that it had undertaken in Albania, Central Africa and Central America.

Representatives of 37 Member States and various UN departments and agencies met for the first time (New York, 26 January) to review and discuss the UN pilot project for weapons collection in Albania (see p. 489). During the year, in spite of the project's suspension for two months owing to the Kosovo crisis, 6,000 weapons and 100 tonnes of ammunition were voluntarily surrendered and stored for destruction. The project was overseen by a National Steering Committee, DDA and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).

Disarmament Commission action. In 1999 [A/54/42], the Disarmament Commission allocated to Working Group III the item entitled "Guidelines on conventional arms control/limitation and disarmament, with particular emphasis on consolidation of peace in the context of General Assembly resolution 51/45 N", using the Chairman's 1998 paper [YUN 1998, p. 531] as a basis for the deliberations. Following the Chairman's presentation of three revisions of his paper, the Group agreed on a set of guidelines, which the Commission adopted, consisting of practical disarmament measures in post-conflict situations; confidence-building in post-conflict situations; regional and international financial and technical assistance; other conventional arms control/limitation and disarmament measures; and the role of the United Nations. The Commission noted that the guidelines were primarily applicable to the consolidation of peace in post-conflict situations and should be applied on a voluntary basis and with the consent of the States concerned; the root causes of conflict and the specific conditions and characteristics of the region concerned should be taken into account; States within the region, as well as those outside, had a particular responsibility to promote arms control and disarmament measures; and the guidelines should not be used as a means to interfere in the internal affairs of other States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/563], adopted resolution 54/54 H without vote [agenda item 76 (j)].

Consolidation of peace through practical disarmament measures

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 51/45 N of 10 December 1996, 52/38 G of 9 December 1997 and 53/77 M of 4 December 1998,

Convinced that a comprehensive and integrated approach towards certain practical disarmament measures, such as, inter alia, arms control, particularly with regard to small arms and light weapons, confidence-building measures, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants, demining and conversion, often is a prerequisite to maintaining and consolidating peace and security and thus provides a basis for effective rehabilitation and social and economic development in areas that have suffered from conflict,

Noting with satisfaction that the international community is more than ever aware of the importance of such practical disarmament measures, especially with regard to the growing problems arising from the excessive and destabilizing accumulation and proliferation of small arms and light weapons, which pose a threat to peace and security and reduce the prospects for economic development in many regions, particularly in post-conflict situations,

Stressing that further efforts are needed in order to develop and effectively implement programmes of practical disarmament in affected areas,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General prepared with the assistance of the Group of Governmental Experts on Small Arms, and in particular the recommendations contained therein, as an important contribution to the consolidation of the peace process through practical disarmament measures,

1. Welcomes the adoption by consensus of the "Guidelines on conventional arms control/limitation and disarmament, with particular emphasis on consolidation of peace in the context of General Assembly resolution 51/45 N" at the 1999 substantive session of the Disarmament Commission;

2. Stresses the particular relevance of the guidelines in the context of the present resolution;

3. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the consolidation of peace through practical disarmament measures, submitted pursuant to resolution 51/45 N, and once again encourages Member States, as well as regional arrangements and agencies, to lend their support to the implementation of recommendations contained therein;

4. Welcomes the activities undertaken by the group of interested States that was formed in New York in March 1998, and invites the group to continue to analyse lessons learned from previous disarmament and peace-building projects, as well as to promote new practical disarmament measures to consolidate peace, especially as undertaken or designed by affected States themselves;

5. Encourages Member States, including the group of interested States, to lend their support to the Secretary-General in responding to requests by Member States to collect and destroy small arms and light weapons in post-conflict situations;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Consolidation of peace through practical disarmament measures".

Transparency

Conference on Disarmament. In 1999, the issue of transparency in armaments was addressed during plenary meetings of the Conference on Disarmament [A/54/27], mainly in connection with efforts to find a comprehensive agreement on the establishment of subsidiary bodies on the agenda items. All the proposals in that regard envisaged the reappointment of a special coordinator to seek the views of the members on the most appropriate way to deal with the question.

By a 29 July letter [CD/1591], Brazil and the United States transmitted the text of the Inter-American Convention on Transparency in Conventional Weapons Acquisitions, which was approved by the OAS General Assembly in Guatemala on 7 June.

UN Register of Conventional Arms

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/77 V [YUN 1998, p. 533], the Secretary-General submitted the seventh annual report on the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms [A/54/226 & Corr.1 & Add.1-6], which was established in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 75] to promote enhanced levels of transparency regarding arms transfers.

The report presented information provided by 80 Governments on imports and exports during the 1998 calendar year in the seven categories of conventional arms (battle tanks, armoured combat vehicles, large-calibre artillery systems, attack helicopters, combat aircraft, warships, and missiles and missile launchers). Governments also provided information on procurement from national production and military holdings. The report indicated a decrease in the number of submissions.

The question of early expansion of the scope and further development of the Register was scheduled for examination in 2000 by a Group of Governmental Experts.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/5631, adopted resolution 54/54 I by recorded vote (97-48-15) [agenda item 76 (b)].

Transparency in armaments

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, Member States have undertaken to promote the establishment and maintenance of international peace and security with the least diversion for armaments of the world's human and economic resources,

Considering the urgent need to accelerate efforts towards general and complete disarmament with a view to maintaining regional and international peace and security in a world free from the scourge of war and the burden of all types of armaments,

Considering also that openness and transparency relating to all types of armaments would contribute greatly to confidence-building and security among States,

Recognizing that an enhanced level of transparency relating to both conventional weapons and weapons of mass destruction and transfers of equipment and technologies directly related to the development and manufacture of such weapons, as well as to high technology with military applications, would promote stability, strengthen regional and international peace and security, and accelerate efforts towards general and complete disarmament,

Convinced that the principle of transparency should also apply to all weapons of mass destruction, in particular nuclear weapons, and to transfers of equipment and technology directly related to the development and manufacture of such weapons, as well as to high technology with military applications,

Recognizing that the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms, in its current form, constitutes an important first step towards the promotion of transparency in military matters on a comprehensive, universal and non-discriminatory basis,

Aware of the need to foster international efforts in this direction through, inter alia, the constant review of the operation of the Register with a view to its development,

Stressing the need to achieve universality of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, and of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction and the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, with a view to realizing the goal of the total elimination of all weapons of mass destruction,

Recalling its earlier resolutions on transparency in armaments,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on transparency in armaments;

2. Recalls the reports of the Group of Governmental Experts on the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms, which convened in 1994 and 1997 to consider the continuing operation of the Register and its development, and the views expressed and proposals presented therein;

3. Recognizes the importance of achieving greater progress in the development of the Register in order that it may truly enhance confidence-building and security among States and accelerate efforts towards attainment of general and complete disarmament;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, with the assistance of the Group of Governmental Experts to be convened in the year 2000 and taking into account the views submitted by Member States, to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on:

(a) The early expansion of the scope of the Register;

(b) The elaboration of practical means for the development of the Register in order to increase transparency related to weapons of mass destruction, in particular nuclear weapons, and to transfers of equipment and technology directly related to the development and manufacture of such weapons;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Transparency in armaments".

Transparency of military expenditures

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/72 [YUN 1998, p. 535], the Secretary-General, in September [A/54/298], presented reports from 35 Member States on military expenditures for the latest fiscal year for which data were available. The reporting instrument used was that recommended by the Assembly in resolution 35/142 B [YUN 1980, p. 88].

Also pursuant to resolution 53/72, DDA continued consultations with international and regional organizations that received data on military expenditures from Member Governments and had received their views on the recommendations contained in the 1998 report of the Secretary-General [YUN 1998, p. 534].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/551], adopted resolution 54/43 without vote [agenda item 64 (b)].

Objective information on military matters, including transparency of military expenditures

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/72 of 4 December 1998 on objective information on military matters, including transparency of military expenditures,

Also recalling its resolution 35/142 B of 12 December 1980, which introduced the United Nations system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures, and its resolutions 48/62 of 16 December 1993, 49/66 of 15 December 1994, 51/38 of 10 December 1996 and 52/32 of 9 December 1997, calling upon all Member States to participate in it, and its resolution 47/54 B of 9 December 1992, endorsing the guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters and inviting Member States to provide the Secretary-General with relevant information regarding their implementation,

Noting that since then national reports on military expenditures and on the guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters have been submitted by a number of Member States belonging to different geographic regions,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General on ways and means to implement the guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters, including, in particular, how to strengthen and broaden participation in the United Nations system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures,

Expressing its appreciation to the Secretary-General for providing Member States with the reports on military expenditures in standardized form reported by States and on the guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters,

Welcoming the decision of many Member States to exchange and to publish information annually on their military budgets and to implement the guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters, as appropriate,

Noting the efforts of several regional organizations to promote transparency of military expenditures, including standardized annual exchanges of relevant information among their member States,

Reaffirming its firm conviction that a better flow of objective information on military matters can help to relieve international tension and contribute to the building of confidence among States and to the conclusion of concrete disarmament agreements,

Convinced that the improvement of international relations forms a sound basis for promoting further openness and transparency in all military matters,

Recalling that the guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters recommended certain areas for further consideration, such as the improvement of the United Nations system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures,

1. Recommends the guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters to all Member States for implementation, fully taking into account specific political, military and other conditions prevailing in a region, on the basis of initiatives and with the agreement of the States of the region concerned;

2. Welcomes the continuation by the Secretary-General of consultations with relevant international bodies with a view to ascertaining the requirements for adjusting the present instrument to encourage wider participation;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for providing Member States with a report on the outcome of those consultations, as well as for his intention to organize international and regional symposia and training seminars in the coming biennium, and notes his intention to encourage, inter alia, the United Nations regional centres for peace and disarmament in Africa, in Asia and the Pacific, and in Latin America and the Caribbean to assist Member States in their regions in enhancing their knowledge of the standardized reporting system;

4. Calls upon all Member States to report annually, by 30 April, to the Secretary-General their military expenditures for the latest fiscal year for which data are available, using, preferably and to the extent possible, the reporting instrument as recommended in its resolution 35/142 B or, as appropriate, any other format developed in conjunction with similar reporting on military expenditures to other international or regional organizations;

5. Encourages relevant international bodies and regional organizations to promote transparency of military expenditures and to enhance complementarity among reporting systems, taking into account the particular characteristics of each region, and to consider the possibility of an exchange of information with the United Nations;

6. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue the practice of sending an annual note verbale to Member States requesting the submission of data to the reporting system, together with the reporting format and related instructions, and to publish in a timely fashion in appropriate United Nations media the due date for transmitting data on military expenditures;

(b) To promote international and regional symposia and training seminars to explain the purpose of the United Nations system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures and to give relevant technical instructions;

(c) To circulate annually the reports on military expenditures as received from Member States;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue consultations with relevant international bodies, within existing resources, with a view to ascertaining the requirements for adjusting the present instrument to encourage wider participation, with emphasis on examining possibilities for enhancing complementarity among international and regional reporting systems, and to exchange related information with those bodies;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to make recommendations, based on the outcome of those consultations and taking into account the views of Member States, on necessary changes to the content and structure of the United Nations system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures in order to strengthen and broaden participation, and to submit a report on the subject to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session;

9. Calls upon all Member States, in time for the deliberation by the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session, to provide the Secretary-General with their views on the analysis and the recommendations contained in his report and with further suggestions to strengthen and broaden participation in the United Nations system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures, including necessary changes to its content and structure;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Objective information on military matters, including transparency of military expenditures".

He noted the activities undertaken by OPCW, the Preparatory Commission for CTBTO, the parties to the Biological Weapons Convention, and the parties to the Mine-Ban Convention.

Anti-personnel mines

1997 Convention

The Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction (Mine-Ban Convention, formerly known as the Ottawa Convention), adopted in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 503], entered into force on 1 March 1999, six months following the deposit of the fortieth instrument of ratification. As at 31 December, 90 States had become parties to the Convention.

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/77 N [YUN 1998, p. 536], the First Meeting of the States Parties to the Convention was convened in Maputo, Mozambique, from 3 to 7 May [APLC/MSP.1/1999/1]. Preparations were made during two rounds of open-ended informal consultations in Geneva, on 1 March, the day of the Convention's entry into force, and on 13 April.

The Meeting adopted the Maputo Declaration, in which the participants reaffirmed their commitment to the total eradication of anti-personnel mines, called on the international community to implement and universalize the new international standard and norm of behaviour that the Convention was establishing, committed themselves to mobilize resources and energies to that end, and established a programme of inter-sessional work.

It also considered a number of matters pertaining to specific articles of the Convention and agreed that the Second Meeting of the States Parties would be held from 11 to 15 September 2000 in Geneva.

During the course of the Meeting, the inter-sessional work programme was established, under which five Standing Committees of Experts (SCEs) would consider the themes of the general status and operation of the Convention; mine clearance; victim assistance and mine-awareness; stockpile destructions; and technologies for mine action. Beginning in September, meetings of four of the SCEs were convened by the Geneva International Centre for Humanitarian Demining.

From May to the end of 1999, 34 States parties submitted their reports on transparency measures in accordance with article 7 of the Convention. With respect to stockpiles of anti-personnel landmines, many parties reported that they had none. Austria, Belgium, Canada, Germany and South Africa had destroyed their stocks prior to the entry into force of the Convention, with the exception of anti-personnel mines (APMs) retained for the development of and training in mine detection, mine clearance or mine destruction techniques, in accordance with article 3. On 21 December, the Government of France announced that it had completed the destruction of its stockpiles.

Several mine-affected countries—Croatia, Honduras, Jordan, Senegal, Thailand and Yemen—submitted their comprehensive reports, including detailed information on the type and quality of each type of APM in each detected mined area that contained, or was suspected to contain, APMs.

(For information on assistance in mine clearance, see p. 829.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/563], adopted resolution 54/54 B by recorded vote (139-1-20) [agenda item 76].

Implementation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/77 N of 4 December 1998,

Reaffirming its determination to put an end to the suffering and casualties caused by anti-personnel mines, which kill or maim hundreds of people every week, mostly innocent and defenceless civilians and especially children, obstruct economic development and reconstruction, inhibit the repatriation of refugees and internally displaced persons, and have other severe consequences for years after emplacement,

Believing it necessary to do the utmost to contribute in an efficient and coordinated manner to facing the challenge of removing anti-personnel mines placed throughout the world, and to assure their destruction,

Wishing to do the utmost in ensuring assistance for the care and rehabilitation, including the social and economic reintegration, of mine victims,

Welcoming the entry into force on 1 March 1999 of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction,

Recalling the First Meeting of the States Parties to the Convention, held at Maputo from 3 to 7 May 1999, and the reaffirmation made in the Maputo Declaration of a commitment to the total eradication of anti-personnel mines,

Noting with satisfaction the addition of new States signatories to the Convention, the rapid ratification by many signatories, and the accession to the Convention by other States, bringing the total number of States that have signed to one hundred and thirty-three, and that eighty-nine States have ratified or acceded to the Convention in the two years since it was opened for signature,

Emphasizing the desirability of attracting the adherence of all States to the Convention, and determined to work strenuously towards the promotion of its universalization,

Noting with regret that anti-personnel mines continue to be used in conflicts around the world, causing human suffering and impeding post-conflict development,

1. Invites all States that have not signed the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction to accede to it without delay;

2. Urges all States that have signed but not ratified the Convention to ratify it without delay;

3. Stresses the importance of the full and effective implementation of, and compliance with, the Convention;

4. Urges all States parties to provide the Secretary-General with complete and timely information, as required in article 7 of the Convention in order to promote transparency and compliance with the Convention;

5. Invites all States that have not ratified the Convention or acceded to it to provide, on a voluntary basis, information to make global mine action efforts more effective;

6. Renews its call upon all States and other relevant parties to work together to promote, support and advance the care, rehabilitation and social and economic reintegration of mine victims, mine awareness programmes, and the removal of anti-personnel mines placed throughout the world and the assurance of their destruction;

7. Invites and encourages all interested States, the United Nations, other relevant international organizations or institutions, regional organizations, the International Committee of the Red Cross and relevant non-governmental organizations to participate in the programme of inter-sessional work established at the First Meeting of States Parties to the Convention;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with article 11, paragraph 2, of the Convention, to undertake the preparations necessary to convene the Second Meeting of the States Parties to the Convention at Geneva, from 11 to 15 September 2000, and, on behalf of States parties and according to article 11, paragraph 4, of the Convention, to invite States not parties to the Convention, as well as the United Nations, other relevant international organizations or institutions, regional organizations, the International Committee of the Red Cross and relevant non-governmental organizations to attend the Meeting as observers;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Implementation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction".

Regional and other approaches to disarmament

Africa

OAU continued to play a primary role in addressing the various political disputes and armed conflicts that had spread throughout the continent. The OAU Council of Ministers (Algiers, Algeria, 8-10 July) [A/54/424] urged the OAU Secretary-General to seek further the views of member States on illicit trafficking in small arms and appealed to the international community to assist affected countries in implementing programmes that would deal with such problems. At the thirty-fifth summit of OAU (Algiers, 12-14 July) [ibid.], member States adopted decisions on the illicit proliferation, circulation and trafficking of small arms and light weapons; on the First Meeting of the States Parties to the 1997 Mine-Ban Convention [YUN 1997, p. 503]; and on the UN Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa.

On 10 December in Lome, Togo, the ECOWAS heads of State and Government adopted a Code of Conduct to implement the 1998 Moratorium on the Importation, Exportation and Manufacture of Small Arms and Light Weapons in West Africa [YUN 1998, p. 525]. The Code of Conduct set out a stringent waiver procedure for ECOWAS member States wishing to import, export or manufacture light weapons during the Moratorium. In addition, the summit approved the implementation of the prototype of a regional arms register and database on light weapons. The UN Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa would host the arms register and database.

Standing Advisory Committee

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/78 A [YUN 1998, p. 538], the Secretary-General submitted a September report on the activities of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa, which held two summit meetings (Yaounde, Cameroon, 25-26 February; Malabo, Equatorial Guinea, 25 June) [A/54/364]. At the first summit meeting [A/53/868-S/1999/303], the heads of State and Government decided to create the Council for Peace and Security in Central Africa (COPAX) to prevent, manage and settle conflicts in the sub-region, as well as to promote, maintain and consolidate peace and security. It adopted the Yaounde Declaration on Peace, Security and Stability in Central Africa, which, among other things, took note of the threat to stability and security posed by cross-border crime and by the trafficking in and illicit circulation and proliferation of weapons of war. At the second summit meeting [A/54/364], the heads of State and Government decided to incorporate COPAX into the Economic Community of Central African States (ECCAS).

The Standing Committee organized a high-level subregional seminar (Yaounde, 19-21 July) [A/54/209-S/1999/859] on the implementation of the recommendations contained in the Secretary-General's 1998 report on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa [YUN 1998, p. 66]. The participants adopted a number of recommendations, among them several measures to combat illicit trafficking in and proliferation of light weapons, including the establishment of national commissions; a request to the Secretary-General to establish an advisory mission on the proliferation of light weapons in the Central African subregion; the establishment of a subregional register of conventional arms; and revision and harmonization of national laws on the bearing of arms (see also p. 78). In addition, the Committee convened a subregional conference (N'Djamena, Chad, 25-27 October) [A/54/530-S/1999/1141], which reviewed the proliferation of and illicit traffic in small arms in Central Africa and discussed the development of an effective programme of action to combat the proliferation of small arms. The conference made a number of recommendations for practical measures at the national and subregional levels.

The Standing Committee held its eleventh (Yaounde, 21-23 July) [A/54/210-S/1999/860] and twelfth (N'Djamena, 27-30 October) [A/54/530-S/1999/1141] ministerial meetings.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/564], as amended [A/54/L.39], adopted resolution 54/55 A without vote [agenda item 77 (a)].

18. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Regional confidence-building measures: activities of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa".

Asia and the Pacific

The Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN), its Regional Forum (ARF) and the Council for Security Cooperation in the Asia Pacific continued to play important roles in maintaining regional security and stability. The United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific also contributed to security and stability in the region through its activities (see p. 512).

At the thirty-second ASEAN ministerial meeting (Singapore, 23-24 July), the Foreign Ministers agreed to hasten the implementation of the 1998 Hanoi Plan of Action [YUN 1998, p. 539].

The sixth ministerial meeting of ARF (Singapore, 26 July) encouraged the further development of confidence-building measures and called on ARF countries to sign and ratify the global non-proliferation treaties. They also recognized that the illegal accumulation of small arms and light weapons posed a threat to peace and security in many regions and urged the international community to focus its attention on that problem. They endorsed the recommendations of the ARF Inter-sessional Support Group on Confidence-building Measures (Bangkok, 3-5 March).

At the bilateral level, on 30 July in Beijing, China and Japan signed a Memorandum of Understanding on the clean-up of chemical weapons abandoned in China by the Japanese Army, under which Japan would provide the necessary facilities, experts, expertise and funds, while China would provide appropriate cooperation for the destruction.

Europe

Developments that had an impact on security in Europe during 1999 included the Kosovo crisis and NATO air strikes against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) (FRY) (see PART ONE, Chapter V); the approval of the 1997 Adaptation [YUN 1997, p. 518] of the 1990 Treaty on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe (CFE Treaty) [YUN 1990, p. 79] to the newly created security environment in the region; the adoption of the new NATO doctrine; and the adoption of the Vienna document on confidence- and security-building measures (CSBMs).

NATO continued its activities through various bodies and through the Euro-Atlantic Partnership Council, established in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 519]. With regard to the 1997 Protocols of Accession of the New Members to NATO [ibid.], the Czech Republic, Hungary and Poland became members in March when they submitted their instruments of accession to the Alliance's depositary Power, the United States.

In accordance with the 1995 General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina (the Peace Agreement) [YUN 1995, p. 544] and under OSCE auspices, the States parties to the 1996 Agreement on Subregional Arms Control [YUN 1996, p. 493], signed by Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, FRY, the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Republika Srpska, continued to destroy surplus weapons. However, owing to the escalation of violence in Kosovo, FRY temporarily suspended implementation of the Peace Agreement.

On 30 March, the CFE parties reached a preliminary agreement on the 1997 Adaptation of the Treaty [YUN 1997, p. 518], and the Agreement on the Adaptation of the CFE Treaty was signed on 18

November at the Istanbul Summit of OSCE. A CFE Final Act was also signed, containing a confirmation by the Russian Federation of its commitment to all Treaty provisions. The Adaptation Agreement updated the 1990 Treaty to create a new, transparent set of limitations on conventional forces and to bring it in line with the current European security environment. It replaced the Treaty's bloc-to-bloc structure with national based limits and a national ceiling for each State. Those States with territory in the CFE area of application would also have a territorial ceiling limiting the total amount of equipment that could be on their soil. The Agreement increased the quotas for mandatory on-site inspections and strengthened requirements for host nation consent to the presence of foreign forces, including notifications to all parties as to whether such consent had been granted.

The OSCE Forum for Security Cooperation adopted, on 16 November in Istanbul, the Vienna Document 1999 on the Negotiations on Confidence- and Security-Building Measures, which built upon and added to the CSBMs contained in previous documents. A major addition was a chapter on regional measures, which encouraged OSCE participating States to undertake measures of transparency and confidence in a bilateral, multilateral or regional context.

The EU continued, through its 1998 Joint Action on Small Arms [YUN 1998, p. 540], to contribute to combating the destabilizing accumulation and spread of small arms and light weapons and to cooperate with the United Nations, NATO and other regional organizations in promoting transparency, arms control and disarmament, and mine clearance.

Latin America

A major development in the Americas region was the adoption of the Inter-American Convention on Transparency in Conventional Weapons Acquisitions by the OAS General Assembly on 7 June [CD/1591], the main objective of which was to contribute to regional openness and transparency in the acquisition of conventional weapons through the exchange of information. States parties agreed to submit annual reports on imports and exports of conventional weapons and to exchange information on acquisitions through notification of imports, national production and "no activity".

In an effort to strengthen peace and security in the region, OAS members continued to promote the adoption and implementation of measures related to programmes such as mine-clearing, confidence-building and the prohibition of illicit trafficking in small arms. The OAS General Assembly also adopted a resolution on the 1997 Inter-American Convention against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms (see p. 489).

A regional seminar on anti-personnel landmines, "Reaffirming our commitment" (Mexico City, 11-12 January), sponsored by Canada and Mexico, with the support of OAS and the Pan American Health Organization, discussed the future of the 1997 Mine-Ban Convention; the goal of the Americas as a landmine-free zone; the challenges of ratification, implementation and universality of the Convention; international co-operation for demining; and inter-American co-operation to rehabilitate mine victims.

In an effort to advance a strategic partnership between Latin America and Europe, the first Summit of the Heads of State and Government of Latin America and the Caribbean and the EU convened in Rio de Janeiro in June (see p. 486).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/563], adopted resolution 54/54 N without vote [agenda item 76 (k)].

Regional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/58 P of 4 December 1990, 46/36 I of 6 December 1991, 47/52 J of 9 December 1992, 48/75 I of 16 December 1993, 49/75 N of 15 December 1994, 50/70 K of 12 December 1995, 51/45 K of 10 December 1996, 52/38 P of 9 December 1997 and 53/77 O of 4 December 1998 on regional disarmament,

Believing that the efforts of the international community to move towards the ideal of general and complete disarmament are guided by the inherent human desire for genuine peace and security, the elimination of the danger of war and the release of economic, intellectual and other resources for peaceful pursuits,

Affirming the abiding commitment of all States to the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations in the conduct of their international relations,

Noting that essential guidelines for progress towards general and complete disarmament were adopted at the tenth special session of the General Assembly,

Taking note of the guidelines and recommendations for regional approaches to disarmament within the context of global security adopted by the Disarmament Commission at its 1993 substantive session,

Welcoming the prospects of genuine progress in the field of disarmament engendered in recent years as a result of negotiations between the two super-Powers,

Taking note of the recent proposals for disarmament at the regional and subregional levels,

Recognizing the importance of confidence-building measures for regional and international peace and security,

Convinced that endeavours by countries to promote regional disarmament, taking into account the specific characteristics of each region and in accordance with the principle of undiminished security at the lowest level of armaments, would enhance the security of all States and would thus contribute to international peace and security by reducing the risk of regional conflicts,

1. Stresses that sustained efforts are needed, within the framework of the Conference on Disarmament and under the umbrella of the United Nations, to make progress on the entire range of disarmament issues;

2. Affirms that global and regional approaches to disarmament complement each other and should therefore be pursued simultaneously to promote regional and international peace and security;

3. Calls upon States to conclude agreements, wherever possible, for nuclear non-proliferation, disarmament and confidence-building measures at the regional and subregional levels;

4. Welcomes the initiatives towards disarmament, nuclear non-proliferation and security undertaken by some countries at the regional and subregional levels;

5. Supports and encourages efforts aimed at promoting confidence-building measures at the regional and subregional levels in order to ease regional tensions and to further disarmament and nuclear non-proliferation measures at the regional and subregional levels;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Regional disarmament".

Also on 1 December [meeting 69], on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/563], the Assembly adopted resolution 54/54 M by recorded vote (159-1-1) [agenda item 76 (l)].

Conventional arms control at the regional and subregional levels

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/75 J of 16 December 1993, 49/75 O of 15 December 1994, 50/70 L of 12 December 1995, 51/45 Q of 10 December 1996, 52/38 Q of 9 December 1997 and 53/77 P of 4 December 1998,

Recognizing the crucial role of conventional arms control in promoting regional and international peace and security,

Convinced that conventional arms control needs to be pursued primarily in the regional and subregional contexts since most threats to peace and security in the post-cold-war era arise mainly among States located in the same region or subregion,

Aware that the preservation of a balance in the defence capabilities of States at the lowest level of armaments would contribute to peace and stability and should be a prime objective of conventional arms control,

Desirous of promoting agreements to strengthen regional peace and security at the lowest possible level of armaments and military forces,

Noting with particular interest the initiatives taken in this regard in different regions of the world, in particular the commencement of consultations among a number of Latin American countries and the proposals for conventional arms control made in the context of South Asia, and recognizing, in the context of this subject, the relevance and value of the Treaty on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe, which is a cornerstone of European security,

Believing that militarily significant States and States with larger military capabilities have a special responsibility in promoting such agreements for regional security,

Believing also that an important objective of conventional arms control in regions of tension should be to prevent the possibility of military attack launched by surprise and to avoid aggression,

1. Decides to give urgent consideration to the issues involved in conventional arms control at the regional and subregional levels;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament, as a first step, to consider the formulation of principles that can serve as a framework for regional agreements on conventional arms control, and looks forward to a report of the Conference on this subject;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Conventional arms control at the regional and subregional levels".

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

In 1999, the Conference on Disarmament did not establish an ad hoc committee on the prevention of an arms race in outer space. The Third United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE III) was held from 18 to 30 July in Vienna (see p. 556).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/562], adopted resolution 54/53 by recorded vote (162-0-2) [agenda item 75].

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the common interest of all mankind in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Reaffirming the will of all States that the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, shall be for peaceful purposes and shall be carried out for the benefit and in the interest of all countries, irrespective of their degree of economic or scientific development,

Reaffirming also the provisions of articles III and IV of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies,

Recalling the obligation of all States to observe the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations regarding the use or threat of use of force in their international relations, including in their space activities,

Reaffirming paragraph 80 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it is stated that in order to prevent an arms race in outer space further measures should be taken and appropriate international negotiations held in accordance with the spirit of the Treaty,

Recalling its previous resolutions on this issue, and taking note of the proposals submitted to the General Assembly at its tenth special session and at its regular sessions, and of the recommendations made to the competent organs of the United Nations and to the Conference on Disarmament,

Recognizing that prevention of an arms race in outer space would avert a grave danger for international peace and security,

Emphasizing the paramount importance of strict compliance with existing arms limitation and disarmament agreements relevant to outer space, including bilateral agreements, and with the existing legal regime concerning the use of outer space,

Considering that wide participation in the legal regime applicable to outer space could contribute to enhancing its effectiveness,

Noting that the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, taking into account its previous efforts since its establishment in 1985 and seeking to enhance its functioning in qualitative terms, continued the examination and identification of various issues, existing agreements and existing proposals, as well as future initiatives relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space, and that this contributed to a better understanding of a number of problems and to a clearer perception of the various positions,

Noting also that there were no objections in principle in the Conference on Disarmament to the re-establishment of the Ad Hoc Committee, subject to re-examination of the mandate contained in the decision of the Conference on Disarmament of 13 February 1992,

Emphasizing the mutually complementary nature of bilateral and multilateral efforts in the field of preventing an arms race in outer space, and hoping that concrete results will emerge from those efforts as soon as possible,

Convinced that further measures should be examined in the search for effective and verifiable bilateral and multilateral agreements in order to prevent an arms race in outer space, including the weaponization of outer space,

Stressing that the growing use of outer space increases the need for greater transparency and better information on the part of the international community,

Recalling in this context its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 45/55 B of 4 December 1990, 47/51 of 9 December 1992 and 48/74 A of 16 December 1993, in which, inter alia, it reaffirmed the importance of confidence-building measures as means conducive to ensuring the attainment of the objective of the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

Conscious of the benefits of confidence- and security-building measures in the military field,

Recognizing that negotiations for the conclusion of an international agreement or agreements to prevent an arms race in outer space remain a priority task of the Ad Hoc Committee and that the concrete proposals on confidence-building measures could form an integral part of such agreements,

1. Reaffirms the importance and urgency of preventing an arms race in outer space, and the readiness of all States to contribute to that common objective, in conformity with the provisions of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies;

2. Reaffirms its recognition, as stated in the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, that the legal regime applicable to outer space by itself does not guarantee the prevention of an arms race in outer space, that this legal regime plays a significant role in the prevention of an arms race in that environment, that there is a need to consolidate and reinforce that regime and enhance its effectiveness, and that it is important to comply strictly with existing agreements, both bilateral and multilateral;

3. Emphasizes the necessity of further measures with appropriate and effective provisions for verification to prevent an arms race in outer space;

4. Calls upon all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the objective of the peaceful use of outer space and of the prevention of an arms race in outer space and to refrain from actions contrary to that objective and to the relevant existing treaties in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and promoting international cooperation;

5. Reiterates that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum, has the primary role in the negotiation of a multilateral agreement or agreements, as appropriate, on the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

6. Invites the Conference on Disarmament to complete the examination and updating of the mandate contained in its decision of 13 February 1992 and to establish an ad hoc committee as early as possible during the 2000 session of the Conference on Disarmament;

7. Recognizes, in this respect, the growing convergence of views on the elaboration of measures designed to strengthen transparency, confidence and security in the peaceful uses of outer space;

8. Urges States conducting activities in outer space, as well as States interested in conducting such activities, to keep the Conference on Disarmament informed of the progress of bilateral and multilateral negotiations on the matter, if any, so as to facilitate its work;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Prevention of an arms race in outer space".

Disarmament and development

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/77 K [YUN 1998, p. 545], the Secretary-General, in August [A/54/254], informed the Assembly that the high-level Steering Group on Disarmament and Development (consisting of the Under-Secretary-General for Disarmament Affairs, the Under-Secretary-General for Economic and Social Affairs, the UNDP Administrator and the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations) had been established to determine the short-, medium- and long-term priorities from a broadly defined mandate as contained in the action programme adopted at the 1987 International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development [YUN 1987, p. 83]. The Group reviewed disarmament and development issues, with particular reference to: conversion; conflict prevention; causes of conflict and arms acquisition; post-conflict practical disarmament measures; military expenditure; the role of other UN departments/agencies, as well as international organizations; relevant international events; the availability and dissemination of factual and analytical materials on disarmament and development; lessons learned by UNDP and the Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) in post-conflict situations; and the role of NGOs and their interaction with the United Nations.

The Steering Group adopted a forward-looking approach for revisiting disarmament and development and advocated a close interaction between the United Nations and civil society. It identified a series of programmes and activities.

The report contained the views of two States on the implementation of the action programme.

A symposium on disarmament and development (New York, 20 July), organized jointly by DDA, the Department of Economic and Social Affairs, DPKO and UNDP, in collaboration with Economists Allied for Arms Reduction, discussed military spending; conversion; small arms proliferation; disarmament; demobilization and reintegration; post-conflict peace-building; the peace dividend; and development assistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/563], adopted resolution 54/54 T without vote [agenda item 76 (i)].

Relationship between disarmament and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly concerning the relationship between disarmament and development,

Recalling also the adoption on 11 September 1987 of the Final Document of the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development,

Recalling further its resolutions 49/75 J of 15 December 1994, 50/70 G of 12 December 1995, 51/45 D of 10 December 1996, 52/38 D of 9 December 1997 and 53/77 K of 4 December 1998,

Bearing in mind the Final Document of the Twelfth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Durban, South Africa, from 29 August to 3 September 1998,

Taking note of the deliberations during the symposium on disarmament and development held at Headquarters on 20 July 1999,

Stressing the growing importance of the symbiotic relationship between disarmament and development in current international relations,

1. Acknowledges the report of the Secretary-General, and welcomes the establishment, as a first step by the Secretary-General, of the Steering Group on Disarmament and Development with the purpose of determining the short, medium and long-term priorities, according to the mandate set out in the action programme adopted at the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development;

2. Urges the international community to devote part of the resources made available by the implementation of disarmament and arms limitation agreements to economic and social development, with a view to reducing the ever widening gap between developed and developing countries;

3. Invites all Member States to communicate to the Secretary-General, by 15 April 2000, their views and proposals for the implementation of the action programme adopted at the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development, as well as any other views and proposals with a view to achieving the goals of the action programme, within the framework of current international relations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take action, through appropriate organs and within available resources, for the implementation of the action programme adopted at the International Conference;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Relationship between disarmament and development".

Science and technology

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/73 [YUN 1998, p. 545], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/54/167] containing the view of one Member State (United States) on his 1998 report on scientific and technological developments and their impact on international security [YUN 1998, p. 545]. The Secretary-General stated that, in the absence of adequate information from Member States, he was not in a position to make recommendations on possible approaches to multilaterally negotiated, universally acceptable, non-discriminatory guidelines for international transfers of dual-use goods and technologies and high technologies with military applications. India submitted its views in October [A/54/167/Add.1].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/559], adopted resolution 54/50 by recorded vote (98-46-19) [agenda item 72].

Role of science and technology in the context of international security and disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recognizing that scientific and technological developments can have both civilian and military applications and that progress in science and technology for civilian applications needs to be maintained and encouraged,

Concerned that military applications of scientific and technological developments can contribute significantly to the improvement and upgrading of advanced weapon systems and, in particular, weapons of mass destruction,

Aware of the need to follow closely the scientific and technological developments that may have a negative impact on international security and disarmament and to channel scientific and technological developments for beneficial purposes,

Cognizant that the international transfers of dual-use as well as high-technology products, services and know-how for peaceful purposes are important for the economic and social development of States,

Also cognizant of the need to regulate such transfers of dual-use goods and technologies and high technology with military applications through multilaterally negotiated, universally applicable, non-discriminatory guidelines,

Expressing concern over the growing proliferation of ad hoc and exclusive export control regimes and arrangements for dual-use goods and technologies, which tend to impede the economic and social development of developing countries,

Recalling that in the Final Document of the Twelfth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Durban, South Africa, from 29 August to 3 September 1998, it was noted with concern that undue restrictions on exports to developing countries of material, equipment and technology for peaceful purposes persist,

Emphasizing that internationally negotiated guidelines for the transfer of high technology with military applications should take into account the legitimate defence requirements of all States and the requirements for the maintenance of international peace and security, while ensuring that access to high-technology products and services and know-how for peaceful purposes is not denied,

1. Affirms that scientific and technological progress should be used for the benefit of all mankind to promote the sustainable economic and social development of all States and to safeguard international security and that international cooperation in the use of science and technology through the transfer and exchange of technological know-how for peaceful purposes should be promoted;

2. Invites Member States to undertake additional efforts to apply science and technology for disarmament-related purposes and to make disarmament-related technologies available to interested States;

3. Urges Member States to undertake multilateral negotiations with the participation of all interested States in order to establish universally acceptable, non-discriminatory guidelines for international transfers of dual-use goods and technologies and high technology with military applications;

4. Takes note of the report, including its addendum, submitted by the Secretary-General in pursuance of paragraph 4 of General Assembly resolution 53/73 of 4 December 1998;

5. Encourages United Nations bodies to contribute, within existing mandates, to promoting the application of science and technology for peaceful purposes;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Role of science and technology in the context of international security and disarmament".

Arms limitation and disarmament agreements

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/77 J [YUN 1998, p. 546], the Secretary-General submitted a July report with later addendum [A/54/163 & Add.1] containing information from four Member States on measures they had taken to ensure the application of scientific and technological progress in the context of international security, disarmament and related areas, without detriment to the environment or to its effective contribution to attaining sustainable development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/563], adopted resolution 54/54 S by recorded vote (159-0-4) [agenda item 76 (h)].

Observance of environmental norms in the drafting and implementation of agreements on disarmament and arms control

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 50/70 M of 12 December 1995, 51/45 E of 10 December 1996, 52/38 E of 9 December 1997 and 53/77 J of 4 December 1998,

Emphasizing the importance of the observance of environmental norms in the preparation and implementation of disarmament and arms limitation agreements,

Recognizing that it is necessary to take duly into account the agreements adopted at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, as well as prior relevant agreements, in the drafting and implementation of agreements on disarmament and arms limitation,

Mindful of the detrimental environmental effects of the use of nuclear weapons,

1. Reaffirms that international disarmament forums should take fully into account the relevant environmental norms in negotiating treaties and agreements on disarmament and arms limitation and that all

States, through their actions, should fully contribute to ensuring compliance with the aforementioned norms in the implementation of treaties and conventions to which they are parties;

2. Calls upon States to adopt unilateral, bilateral, regional and multilateral measures so as to contribute to ensuring the application of scientific and technological progress in the framework of international security, disarmament and other related spheres, without detriment to the environment or to its effective contribution to attaining sustainable development;

3. Welcomes the information provided by Member States on the implementation of the measures they have adopted to promote the objectives envisaged in the present resolution;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Observance of environmental norms in the drafting and implementation of agreements on disarmament and arms control".

Studies, information and training

Disarmament studies programme

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/38J [YUN 1997, p. 507], two studies were completed by groups of experts. The Group of Experts on the Problem of Ammunition and Explosives completed and submitted its report [A/54/155] to the Assembly in June (see p. 488). The Group of Governmental Experts on Small Arms, appointed by the Secretary-General to prepare a report on progress made in implementing the recommendations of the 1997 report on small arms [YUN 1997, p. 506], completed and submitted its report [A/54/258] to the Assembly in August (see p. 486).

In 1999, the Assembly, in resolution 54/54 V, requested the Secretary-General to carry out a study on the feasibility of restricting the manufacture and trade of small arms and light weapons to the manufacturers and dealers authorized by States, and to submit it as one of the background documents for the 2001 conference on illicit trade in small arms. By resolution 54/54 I, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to carry out a study on the early expansion of the scope of the UN Register of Conventional Arms; and the elaboration of practical means to develop the Register in order to increase transparency related to weapons of mass destruction, in particular nuclear weapons, and to transfers of equipment and technology directly related to the development and manufacture of such weapons.

Disarmament Information Programme

The UN Disarmament Information Programme reflected the priorities of DDA. A continuing priority was in the area of weapons of mass destruction, especially nuclear weapons. Much of that activity centred on the third Preparatory Committee for the 2000 Review Conference of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT) (see above, under "Non-Proliferation Treaty"). Another priority area was that of conventional weapons, the excessive and destabilizing accumulation of small arms and light weapons, and the disarmament-development perspective, activities for which focused on preparations for the United Nations Conference on the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects, scheduled to take place in 2001 (see above, under "Conventional weapons"), and on events organized by the Secretary-General's newly established high-level Steering Group on Disarmament and Development (see above, under "Disarmament and development").

DDA expanded the volume of its publications output, establishing two new series: the quarterly Update, a newsletter containing accounts of UN activities in the area of disarmament, and Occasional Papers, collections of articles and presentations on topical subjects.

The DDA web site was expanded and incorporated into the "United Nations and Disarmament" web site (<http://www.un.org>, link to "Peace and security: Disarmament"), which provided access to the main disarmament bodies, to DDA and to a series of regularly updated materials, and to databases on disarmament resolutions and decisions.

The Disarmament Information Programme fostered cooperation between the UN and research institutes and educational institutions at various levels. In August, the UN Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR) and DDA partnered a symposium in Geneva on developments in information and telecommunications in the context of international security, in partial response to General Assembly resolution 53/70 [YUN 1998, p. 38]. The aim of the meeting was to raise awareness among Member States of the possible negative potential of such technologies and to initiate multilateral discussions. The Department also organized a symposium on "Missile Development and Its Impact on Global Security" for the diplomatic community and NGOs on 22 April in New York.

In February, DDA, in collaboration with the Cooperative Monitoring Center of the Sandia National Laboratories of the United States Department of Energy, sponsored four workshops consisting of a portable demonstration of cooperative monitoring techniques. The Department cooperated with the NGO Committee on Disarmament and the UN Department of Public Information in conducting a number of panel discussions on issues related to weapons of mass destruction.

Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters

The Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters, which advised the Secretary-General on the disarmament studies programme and implementation of the Disarmament Information Programme and served as the Board of Trustees of UNIDIR, held its thirty-second and thirty-third sessions (Geneva, 20-22 January; New York, 28-30 June) [A/54/218 & Corr.1]. The Board also held a discussion away from headquarters (1-2 July) on disarmament and international security in the twenty-first century as a contribution to the report under preparation by the Secretary-General for the Millennium Summit in September 2000 (see PART ONE, Chapter VIII, and PART FIVE, Chapter IV).

At its two sessions, the Board formulated advice and recommendations to the Secretary-General on possible disarmament scenarios in Iraq; conventional disarmament in Europe; disarmament contributions to African security; tactical nuclear weapons; a ban on the production of fissile material for weapons purposes; biological weapons; missile defences; and the situation in the DPRK.

The Board continued to review its own mandate and functions and proposed that the language for the formal mandate of the Board, adopted by General Assembly resolution 37/99 K [YUN 1982, p. 150], be readjusted to reflect its actual functions as they had been performed for more than a decade. The thrust of the amendment would be to emphasize the Board's proactive advisory role on disarmament matters over its role to advise on various aspects of studies and research. Its function as the Board of Trustees of UNIDIR would remain unchanged. The Secretary-General endorsed the proposed mandate and recommended that the Assembly adopt it.

By decision 54/418 of 1 December, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to adjust the language in the mandate of the Advisory Board.

UN Institute for Disarmament Research

The Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the UNIDIR Director covering the period from July 1998 to June 1999, as well as the report of the UNIDIR Board of Trustees on the proposed programme of work for 1999-2000 [A/54/201].

The Institute's research activities focused on global security, regional security and human security. The report described UNIDIR's cooperation with and among research institutes and contained a list of publications issued during the reporting period.

The Board of Trustees agreed that a subvention of $213,000 from the UN regular budget was necessary in order to cover the costs of the regular staff and to ensure the independence of the Institute.

By resolution 54/251, section I, of 23 December, the General Assembly approved the recommendation of a subvention to UNIDIR of $213,000 from the UN regular budget for 2000, on the understanding that no additional appropriation would be required under section 4, Disarmament, of the proposed programme budget for the 2000-2001 biennium.

Disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services

In 1999, 26 fellows participated in the UN disarmament fellowship, training and advisory programme, which began in Geneva on 30 August and ended in New York on 2 November. It included a study session in Geneva; study visits to Austria, Germany, Japan and the Netherlands; a seminar and a workshop in the United States; and a study session at Headquarters.

Regional centres for peace and disarmament

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/564], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/55 E without vote [agenda item 77 (e)].

United Nations regional centres for peace and disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/78 F of 4 December 1998 regarding the maintenance and revitalization of the three United Nations regional centres for peace and disarmament,

Recalling also the reports of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific and the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean, and welcoming the appointment by the Secretary-General of the Director of the Centre for Africa and the Director of the Centre for Latin America and the Caribbean,

Reaffirming its decision, taken in 1982 at its twelfth special session, to establish the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme, the purpose of which is to inform, educate and generate public understanding and support for the objectives of the United Nations in the field of arms control and disarmament,

Bearing in mind its resolutions 40/151 G of 16 December 1985, 41/60 J of 3 December 1986, 42/39 D of 30 November 1987 and 44/117 F of 15 December 1989 on the regional centres for peace and disarmament in Nepal, Peru and Togo,

Recognizing that the changes that have taken place in the world have created new opportunities as well as posed new challenges for the pursuit of disarmament and, in this regard, bearing in mind that the regional centres for peace and disarmament can contribute substantially to understanding and cooperation among the States in each particular region in the areas of peace, disarmament and development,

Noting that in paragraph 146 of the Final Document of the Twelfth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Durban, South Africa, from 29 August to 3 September 1998, the heads of State or Government welcomed the decision adopted by the General Assembly on maintaining and revitalizing the three regional centres for peace and disarmament in Nepal, Peru and Togo,

1. Reiterates the importance of the United Nations activities at the regional level to increase the stability and security of its Member States, which could be promoted in a substantive manner by the maintenance and revitalization of the three regional centres for peace and disarmament;

2. Reaffirms that, in order to achieve positive results, it is useful for the three regional centres to carry out dissemination and educational programmes that promote regional peace and security aimed at changing basic attitudes with respect to peace and security and disarmament so as to support the achievement of the principles and purposes of the United Nations;

3. Appeals to Member States in each region and those that are able to do so, as well as to international governmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations, to make voluntary contributions to the regional centres in their respective regions to strengthen their programmes of activities and implementation;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary support, within existing resources, to the regional centres in carrying out their programmes of activities;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "United Nations regional centres for peace and disarmament".

Africa

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/78 C [YUN 1998, p. 551], the Secretary-General described the activities of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa [A/54/332], covering the period from July 1998 to August 1999. The Centre was established in Lome, Togo, in 1986 [YUN 1986, p. 85].

The Secretary-General reported that, in accordance with Assembly resolution 52/220 [YUN 1997, p. 1421], he had appointed a new Director as a first step towards the Centre's revitalization. In February, the Director presented to the Group of African States at the United Nations a programme of work for the revitalization process. The programme, which was endorsed by the Group, comprised: support to peace initiatives in Africa; arms limitation and disarmament; and information, research and publications.

During the period under review, the Centre provided support for the implementation and realization of peace and security-related activities undertaken by African Governments, including the process of destruction of weapons in Liberia and observance of the peace talks between the Government of Sierra Leone and the Revolutionary United Front, which culminated in the signing of a peace agreement on 7 July (see PART ONE, Chapter II). The Centre provided support to DDA in organizing a workshop (Lome, 2-4 August) for the African region on illicit trafficking in small arms. A workshop of experts (Accra, Ghana, 23-24 September) was organized to define the operational modalities and nature and type of an African arms register and database. The Centre also coordinated peace and disarmament activities and efforts of civil society organizations and research institutions.

While a number of Member States had made financial pledges in support of the implementation of its work programme, the Centre continued to experience financial and operational difficulties.

As at 30 June, the balance of the Centre's Trust Fund stood at $37,072 [A/54/332/Add.1].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/564], adopted resolution 54/55 B without vote [agenda item 77 (c)].

United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa

Aware of the widespread support for the revitalization of the Regional Centre and the important role that the Centre can play in the present context in promoting confidence-building and arms limitation measures at the regional level, thereby promoting progress in the area of sustainable development,

Taking into account the report of the Secretary-General on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa,

Bearing in mind the efforts undertaken in the framework of the revitalization of the activities of the Regional Centre for the mobilization of the resources necessary for its operational costs,

Taking into account the need to establish close cooperation between the Regional Centre and the Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution of the Organization of African Unity, in conformity with the decisions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-fifth ordinary session, held at Algiers from 12 to 14 July 1999,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and commends the activities carried out by the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, in particular in support of the efforts made by the African States in the areas of peace and security;

2. Reaffirms its strong support for the revitalization of the Regional Centre, and emphasizes the need to provide it with resources to enable it to strengthen its activities and carry out its programmes;

the programmes of activities of the Regional Centre and facilitate their implementation;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Regional Centre with all necessary support, within existing resources, for better achievements and results;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to facilitate the establishment of close cooperation between the Regional Centre and the Organization of African Unity, in particular in the area of peace, security and development, and to continue to assist the Director of the Regional Centre in his efforts to stabilize the financial situation of the Centre and revitalize its activities;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa".

Asia and the Pacific

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 53/78 B [YUN 1998, p. 552], the Secretary-General reported in August on the activities of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific from August 1998 to July 1999 [A/54/255]. The Centre was inaugurated in Kathmandu, Nepal, in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 88].

During the reporting period, the Centre organized three major meetings. A UN conference on the theme "Towards a world free from nuclear weapons" (Nagasaki, Japan, 24-27 November 1998) considered, among other things, preventing further proliferation of nuclear weapons capability; improving and strengthening the existing nuclear non-proliferation regime; a multi-lateral approach towards nuclear disarmament; and immediate priorities to avoid accidental nuclear war. Participants adopted a resolution reaffirming their commitment to ensuring that Nagasaki would remain the last city to suffer from the calamity of nuclear weapons. The eleventh regional disarmament meeting in the Asia and Pacific region, on the theme "Security concerns and regional cooperation in Asia and the Pacific" (Kathmandu, 18-20 March 1999), focused on regional cooperation for confidence-building, stability and prosperity. A conference on the theme "Security concerns and disarmament strategy for the next decade" (Kyoto, Japan, 27-30 July 1999), organized in close cooperation with the Government of Japan, considered disarmament priorities for the next decade; nuclear disarmament and missile proliferation; the promotion of peace and security; and stability and cooperation in North-East Asia.

Pursuant to Assembly resolution 53/77 A [YUN 1998, p. 514], the Centre assisted five Central Asian States in the drafting of a treaty to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Central Asia (see p. 477).

The Secretary-General appealed to Member States to continue to contribute to the Centre in order to ensure its viability and enhance its effective functioning.

As at 30 June, the balance of the Centre's Trust Fund stood at $306,809 [A/54/255/Add.1].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/564], adopted resolution 54/55 C without vote [agenda item 77 (b)].

United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 42/39 D of 30 November 1987 and 44/117 F of 15 December 1989, by which it established the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and renamed it the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific, with headquarters at Kathmandu and with the mandate of providing, on request, substantive support for the initiatives and other activities mutually agreed upon by the Member States of the Asia-Pacific region for the implementation of measures for peace and disarmament, through appropriate utilization of available resources,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General, in which he expresses his belief that the mandate of the Regional Centre remains valid and that the Centre could be a useful instrument for fostering a climate of cooperation in the post-cold-war era,

Noting that trends in the post-cold-war era have emphasized the function of the Regional Centre in assisting Member States as they deal with new security concerns and disarmament issues emerging in the region,

Commending the useful activities carried out by the Regional Centre in encouraging regional and sub-regional dialogue for the enhancement of openness, transparency and confidence-building, as well as the promotion of disarmament and security through the organization of regional meetings, which has come to be widely known within the Asia-Pacific region as the "Kathmandu process",

Expressing its appreciation to the Regional Centre for its organization of substantive regional meetings at Nagasaki in 1998 and at Kathmandu, Kyoto and Ulaanbaatar in 1999,

Welcoming the idea of the possible creation of an educational and training programme for peace and disarmament in Asia and the Pacific for young people with different backgrounds, to be financed from voluntary contributions,

Noting the important role of the Regional Centre in assisting region-specific initiatives of Member States, including its assistance in the work related to the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Central Asia,

Appreciating highly the important role that Nepal has played as the host nation of the headquarters of the Regional Centre,

1. Reaffirms its strong support for the continuing operation and further strengthening of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific;

2. Underscores the importance of the Kathmandu process as a powerful vehicle for the development of the practice of region-wide security and disarmament dialogue;

3. Expresses its appreciation for the continuing political support and financial contributions to the Regional Centre, which are essential for its continued operation;

4. Appeals to Member States, in particular those within the Asia-Pacific region, as well as to international governmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations, to make voluntary contributions, the only resources of the Regional Centre, to strengthen the programme of activities of the Regional Centre and the implementation thereof;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, taking note of paragraph 6 of General Assembly resolution 49/76 D of 15 December 1994, to provide the Regional Centre with all necessary support, within existing resources, in carrying out its programme of activities;

6. Invites the Secretary-General to initiate consultations with the Government of the Kingdom of Nepal as well as with other Member States concerned and interested organizations to assess the possibility of enabling the Centre to operate effectively from Kathmandu;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific".

Latin America and the Caribbean

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 53/78 F [YUN 1998, p. 550], the Secretary-General reported in September on the activities of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean from December 1998 to July 1999 [A/54/310]. The Centre was inaugurated in Lima, Peru, in 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 88].

The Secretary-General reported that he had appointed a Director as a first step towards the revitalization of the Centre, the activities of which had been suspended in July 1996 owing to lack of sufficient voluntary contributions to finance its operational and administrative costs. On assuming his post, the new Director undertook several missions within and outside the region with a view to securing funding and laying the groundwork for possible cooperation between the Regional Centre and Governments, regional entities, research institutes and NGOs. A programme of work drawn up by the Director addressed regional and subregional security issues, including training of national police forces and border patrol officers in combating trafficking in firearms, ammunition and explosives, the organization of seminars on awareness-building for existing regional agreements and the training of regional peacekeepers in implementing disarmament mandates. As the first such activity, the Centre organized a workshop (Lima, 23-25 June), on the theme "Illicit trafficking in small arms: Latin American and Caribbean issues", which provided a forum for regional experts to debate the role that the Centre could play as a UN entity. The Centre also launched a project entitled "Regional clearing house on illicit trafficking in firearms, ammunition and explosives", intended to serve as a tool for nurturing national and regional expertise in practical disarmament through workshops, training courses and preventive activities.

As at 30 June, the balance of the Trust Fund for the Centre stood at $59,939 [A/54/310/Add.1].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/564], adopted resolution 54/55 F without vote [agenda item 77].

United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/60 J of 3 December 1986, 42/39 K of 30 November 1987 and 43/76 H of 7 December 1988 on the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean, with headquarters in Lima,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General, in which he expresses his belief that the Regional Centre can make an important contribution to the exchange of information on peace, disarmament and development issues among Governments, non-governmental organizations, industry and various sectors of civil society in the region,

Noting that security and disarmament issues have always been recognized as transcendent topics in Latin America and the Caribbean, the first inhabited region in the world to be declared a nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Welcoming the revitalization of the Centre, the efforts made by the Government of Peru to that end and the appointment of the Director of the Centre by the Secretary-General,

Keeping in mind the important role the Centre can play in promoting confidence-building measures, arms control and limitation, disarmament and development at the regional level,

Expressing its appreciation to the Centre for organizing the international workshop on the theme "Illicit trafficking in small arms: Latin American and Caribbean issues", successfully held in Lima from 23 to 25 June 1999,

Bearing in mind the importance of information, research, education and training for peace, disarmament and development in order to achieve understanding and cooperation among States,

Recognizing the need to provide the three United Nations regional centres for peace and disarmament with sufficient financial resources for the planning and implementation of their programmes of activities,

1. Reiterates its strong support of the role of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean in the promotion of United Nations activities at the regional level to increase peace, stability, security and development among its Member States;

2. Expresses its satisfaction with the reinitiation of the activities of the Regional Centre, with headquarters in Lima;

3. Expresses its appreciation for the political support and financial contributions to the Regional Centre, which are essential for its continued operation;

4. Urges all the States of the region to make greater use of the potential of the Centre to meet the current challenges facing the international community, with a view to fulfilling the aims of the Charter of the United Nations regarding peace, disarmament and development;

5. Appeals to Member States, in particular those within the Latin American and Caribbean region, as well as to international governmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations, to make voluntary contributions to strengthen the programme of activities of the Regional Centre and the implementation thereof;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Centre with all necessary support, within existing resources, so that it may carry out its programme of activities and attain better results;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session an item entitled "United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean".

Chapter VIII

Other political and security questions

The United Nations continued to consider in 1999 support for new or restored democracies, the promotion of self-determination of the remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories (NSGTs) and the peaceful uses of outer space. It also considered the activities of the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, the reform of UN information policies, and arrangements for the convening in 2000 of a special United Nations Millennium Assembly and Summit, under the theme "The United Nations in the twenty-first century".

During the year, preparations were under way for the convening of the Fourth (2000) International Conference of New or Restored Democracies. The General Assembly, in November, encouraged Member States to promote democratization and identify steps to support efforts of Governments to promote and consolidate new or restored democracies.

The Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples reviewed progress in implementing that 1960 Declaration, particularly the exercise of self-determination by the remaining NSGTs. By a popular consultation in August, the people of East Timor rejected a constitutional framework providing for special autonomy under Indonesian rule. In December, the Assembly concluded consideration of the item on the question of East Timor and decided to enter on its provisional agenda in 2000 the item "The situation in East Timor during its transition to independence".

The United Nations continued to reform its public information and communications activities through the development of a "communication culture", which aimed to ensure that information and communication priorities were featured prominently in all UN policies, programmes and projects.

The Third United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE III) took place in Vienna from 19 to 30 July, under the theme "Space benefits for humanity in the twenty-first century". The participants adopted a resolution entitled "The Space Millennium: Vienna Declaration on Space and Human Development" as a strategy to address global challenges in the future. In December, the Assembly endorsed the resolution and declared 4 to 10 October World Space Week to observe annually the contributions of space science and technology to the betterment of the human condition, bearing in mind that 4 October 1957 was the date of the launch of the first human-made satellite.

General aspects of international security

Implementation of 1970 Declaration

The General Assembly, by decision 54/419 of 1 December, decided to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth (2001) session the item entitled "Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security" [YUN 1970, p. 105].

Support for democracies

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 53/31 [YUN 1998, p. 555], the Secretary-General reported in October on UN support for the efforts of Governments to promote and consolidate new or restored democracies [A/54/492]. The report described the activities of the follow-up mechanism to the Third International Conference of New or Restored Democracies on Democracy and Development [YUN 1997, p. 530], preparations for the Fourth Conference, to be held in Benin in December 2000, and UN efforts to further democratization and governance.

The follow-up mechanism, comprising participants from interested countries, the UN system, academia and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), and chaired by Romania, continued to meet in 1999. A third "democracy forum" was held (New York, 22 March) on the theme of development of democracy in Albania. Romania hosted an expert meeting (Bucharest, 17-18 May), which discussed UN assistance to Governments, an analysis of indicators for evaluating national progress in strengthening democracy and preparations for the Fourth Conference. The meeting also considered the first draft of a code of democratic conduct, introduced by Romania, which was subsequently finalized [A/54/178].

The Fourth International Conference would be held on the theme "Democracy, Peace, Security and Development" and preceded by a forum for youth and a civil society forum. Four preparatory meetings would be held in Africa on the theme of the Conference and regional conferences or seminars would be organized on lessons learned about democratic transition in various parts of the world. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) was assisting Benin in the preparatory process.

An interim review of UN activities from 1994 to 1999 covered Assembly action, reports and documents, democracy forums, the establishment of inter-linked web sites on democratization and good governance by UNDP and the UN Departments of Political Affairs and of Economic and Social Affairs, and the creation of electronic networks of the "friends of democracy".

The report described initiatives outside the United Nations to promote democratization, such as the first conference of the Worldwide Movement for Democracy (New Delhi, India, February) and the Forum on Emerging Democracies (Sana'a, Yemen, 27-30 June), which adopted the Sana'a Declaration relating to democratic rights and principles [A/54/321].

The Secretary-General concluded that international conferences of new or restored democracies were part of a growing trend of the democratization process as a global phenomenon. New and fragile democracies still faced difficult challenges and periodic regressions, as did established democracies in their response to problems such as violent crime, discrimination, corruption, the manipulation of public opinion and inefficiencies in the public sector and in governance. Consequently, while assistance to new or restored democracies should continue and increase, debate about the measures to be taken by established democracies to address the multifaceted challenges of globalization and threats to security, progress and development in the coming decades should not be neglected.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 November [meeting 64], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/36 [draft: A/54/L.33 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 39].

Support by the United Nations system of the efforts of Governments to promote and consolidate new or restored democracies

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the indissoluble links between the principles enshrined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the foundations of any democratic society,

Recalling the Manila Declaration adopted by the First International Conference of New or Restored Democracies in June 1988,

Considering the major changes taking place on the international scene and the aspirations of all peoples for an international order based on the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, including the promotion and encouragement of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and other important principles, such as respect for the equal rights and self-determination of peoples, peace, democracy, justice, equality, the rule of law, pluralism, development, better standards of living and solidarity,

Recalling its resolution 49/30 of 7 December 1994 in which it recognized the importance of the Managua Declaration and Plan of Action adopted by the Second International Conference of New or Restored Democracies in July 1994, as well as its resolutions 50/133 of 20 December 1995, 51/31 of 6 December 1996, 52/18 of 21 November 1997 and 53/31 of 23 November 1998,

Recalling also the document entitled "Progress Review and Recommendations", adopted by the Third International Conference of New or Restored Democracies on Democracy and Development, held at Bucharest from 2 to 4 September 1997, in which guidelines, principles and recommendations were addressed to Governments, civil society, the private sector, donor countries and the international community,

Noting in particular the recommendations contained in that document addressed to the United Nations system and the international financial organizations,

Taking note with satisfaction of the seminars, workshops and conferences on democratization and good governance organized in 1999, as well as those currently being planned, under the auspices of the International Conference of New or Restored Democracies,

Taking note of the views of Member States expressed in the debate on this question at its forty-ninth, fiftieth, fifty-first, fifty-second, fifty-third and fifty-fourth sessions,

Bearing in mind that the activities of the United Nations carried out in support of the efforts of Governments to promote and consolidate democracy are undertaken in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and only at the specific request of the Member States concerned,

Also bearing in mind that democracy, development and respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms are interdependent and mutually reinforcing and that democracy is based on the freely expressed will of the people to determine their own political, economic, social and cultural systems and on their full participation in all aspects of their lives,

Noting that a considerable number of societies have recently undertaken significant efforts to achieve their social, political and economic goals through democratization and the reform of their economies, pursuits that are deserving of the support and recognition of the international community,

Noting with satisfaction that the Fourth International Conference of New or Restored Democracies will be held at Cotonou, Benin, from 4 to 6 December 2000,

Stressing the importance of support by Member States, the United Nations system, the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations for the holding of the Fourth International Conference of New or Restored Democracies,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Expresses its appreciation for the activities carried out by the United Nations system, and endorses the recommendations contained in the report;
3. Invites the Secretary-General, Member States, the relevant specialized agencies and bodies of the United Nations system, as well as other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to contribute actively to the follow-up process of the Third International Conference of New or Restored Democracies on Democracy and Development;

7. Recognizes that the Organization has an important role to play in providing timely, appropriate and coherent support to the efforts of Governments to achieve democratization within the context of their development efforts;
8. Stresses that the activities undertaken by the Organization must be in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;
9. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to improve the capacity of the Organization to respond effectively to the requests of Member States through coherent, adequate support of their efforts to achieve the goals of good governance and democratization;
10. Encourages Member States to promote democratization and to make additional efforts to identify possible steps to support the efforts of Governments to promote and consolidate new or restored democracies;
11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution;
12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Support by the United Nations system of the efforts of Governments to promote and consolidate new or restored democracies".

South Atlantic as a basis for the promotion of co-operation among the countries of the region;

Indian Ocean

In 1999, the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean (New York, 14 July) [A/54/29] continued to consider approaches to achieving the goals of the 1971 Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2832(XXVI) [YUN 1971, p. 34].

Following consultations with Committee members, permanent members of the Security Council and major maritime users of the Indian Ocean, the Chairman of the Committee concluded that there appeared to be a general sense among those Committee members consulted that there were complexities and difficulties in the way of implementation of the Declaration. As to the three permanent Council members that did not participate in the Committee's work (France, United Kingdom, United States), he concluded, after consulting them, that their earlier-stated views as to the Committee's work had not changed; hence, their continued non-participation.

The Ad Hoc Committee reaffirmed the conclusions of its 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 155], 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 182] and 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 512] sessions and emphasized the need to foster consensual, step-by-step approaches. It remained convinced that the participation of all permanent Council members and major maritime users in its work would assist the progress of a mutually beneficial dialogue to develop conditions of peace, security and stability in the region. The Chairman was requested to continue informal consultations with Committee members and to report to the Assembly in 2001.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First (Disarmament and International Security) Committee [A/54/556], adopted resolution 54/47 by recorded vote (120-3-41) [agenda item 69].

Implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, contained in its resolution 2832(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, and recalling also its resolution 52/44 of 9 December 1997 and other relevant resolutions,

Recalling also the report of the Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean held in July 1979,

Recalling further paragraph 148 of the Final Document of the Twelfth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Durban, South Africa, from 29 August to 3 September 1998, in which it was noted, inter alia, that the Chairperson of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean would continue his informal consultations on the future work of the Committee,

Emphasizing the need to foster consensual approaches, in particular given the prevailing international climate, which is conducive to the pursuit of such endeavours,

Noting the initiatives taken by countries of the region to promote cooperation, in particular economic cooperation, in the Indian Ocean area and the possible contribution of such initiatives to overall objectives of a zone of peace,

Convinced that the participation of all the permanent members of the Security Council and the major maritime users of the Indian Ocean in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee is important and would assist the progress of a mutually beneficial dialogue to develop conditions of peace, security and stability in the Indian Ocean region,

Considering that greater efforts and more time are required to develop a focused discussion on practical measures to ensure conditions of peace, security and stability in the Indian Ocean region,

Having considered the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean;

2. Reiterates its conviction that the participation of all the permanent members of the Security Council and the major maritime users of the Indian Ocean in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee is important and would greatly facilitate the development of a mutually beneficial dialogue to advance peace, security and stability in the Indian Ocean region;

3. Requests the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee to continue his informal consultations with the members of the Committee and to report through the Committee to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to render, within existing resources, all necessary assistance to the Ad Hoc Committee, including the provision of summary records;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace".

Antarctica

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/56 [YUN 1996, p. 515], the Secretary-General submitted a September report on the activities of the Antarctic Treaty system and international bodies and recent developments pertaining to the Antarctic environment [A/54/339 & Corr.1], based on reports of the Twenty-first Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meeting (Christchurch, New Zealand, 19-30 May 1997), the Twenty-second Meeting (Tromsø, Norway, 25 May-5 June 1998) and the Twenty-third Meeting (Lima, Peru, 24 May-4 June 1999). The Antarctic Treaty was adopted in 1959 and entered into force on 23 June 1961 [UN Treaty Series, vol. 402, No. 5578]. At the Twenty-third Meeting, the Consultative Parties adopted the Lima Declaration on the occasion of the fortieth anniversary of the signing of the 1959 Treaty, reiterating their commitment to the principles of the Treaty and to the objectives of its 1991 Protocol on Environmental Protection (the Madrid Protocol).

Since the Twentieth Consultative Meeting in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 514], Consultative Parties had carried out inspections in all areas of Antarctica to ensure observance of the Treaty's provisions. No infringements were observed. Strenuous efforts were being made at all stations to comply with the provisions of the Madrid Protocol, although operational practices varied and gaps in implementation were evident, notably with respect to environmental impact assessments. Although there was an agreement among Consultative Parties to establish a permanent secretariat, no consensus was reached on its location and modalities. Talks were being held between Argentina and the United Kingdom to help resolve the issue of location.

As at 21 May 1999, there were 28 parties to the Madrid Protocol. A Committee for Environmental Protection was established to, among other things, advise and formulate recommendations on the Protocol's implementation for consideration at the Consultative Meetings.

Fishing, sealing and whaling were regulated by the 1980 Convention on the Conservation of Antarctic Marine Living Resources. To reduce the risk of localized overfishing and augment the collection of data for stock assessment, a new regulation was introduced under the Convention for new fisheries of toothfish during the 1996/97 season. The Commission for the Conservation of Antarctic Marine Living Resources (CCAMLR) system of inspection was amended to increase its efficiency regarding illegal fishing activities. The Twenty-third Meeting recommended that the list of specifically protected species be reviewed by the Scientific Committee on Antarctic Research together with CCAMLR, Consultative Parties and other expert bodies, with a view to including new species and removing those no longer appropriate.

Developments relating to the Antarctic environment were reported in the areas of science and support activities, environmental monitoring and a possible state of the Antarctic environment report, environmental impact assessment, safety of operations, emergency response and contingency planning, waste disposal and management, prevention of marine pollution, ozone depletion, conservation of Antarctic fauna and flora, area protection and management, sea ice and ice sheets, the question of liability for damage arising from activities in the area, Antarctic tourism and other non-governmental operations, and the exchange of information on scientific and logistical activities in the Arctic and in Antarctica.

The Secretary-General stated that, with the entry into force of the Madrid Protocol, human activities in Antarctica were being regulated to protect the environment and its dependent and associated ecosystems. However, some issues of concern and possible challenges would have to be addressed, particularly unreported, unregulated and illegal fishing for toothfish in the Southern Ocean, which threatened not only the toothfish but also other dependent and related species. No agreement had been reached on one or more annexes to the Madrid Protocol concerning liability for environmental damage. As Antarctic tourism was increasing steadily, presenting risk to the marine and terrestrial environments, efforts by the Antarctic Treaty parties and the International Association of Antarctica Tour Operators to prevent and mitigate the environmental impacts of tourism should continue.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/54/553], adopted resolution 54/45 without vote [agenda item 66].

Question of Antarctica

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 51/56 of 10 December 1996, in which it requested the Secretary-General to submit a report consisting of the information provided by the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties on their consultative meetings and on their activities in Antarctica, and on developments in relation to Antarctica,

Taking into account the debates on the question of Antarctica held since its thirty-eighth session,

Conscious of the particular significance of Antarctica to the international community, including for international peace and security, the global and regional environment, its effects on global and regional climate conditions, and scientific research,

Reaffirming that the management and use of Antarctica should be conducted in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and of promoting international co-operation for the benefit of mankind as a whole,

Recognizing that the Antarctic Treaty, which provides, inter alia, for the demilitarization of the continent, the prohibition of nuclear explosions and the disposal of nuclear wastes, the freedom of scientific research and the free exchange of scientific information, is in furtherance of the purposes and principles of the Charter,

Welcoming the entry into force of the Protocol on Environmental Protection to the Antarctic Treaty on 14 January 1998, under which Antarctica has been designated as a natural reserve, devoted to peace and science, and the provisions contained in the Protocol regarding the protection of the Antarctic environment and dependent and associated ecosystems, including the need for environmental impact assessment in the planning and conduct of all relevant activities in Antarctica,

Welcoming also the continuing cooperation among countries undertaking scientific research activities in Antarctica, which may help to minimize human impact on the Antarctic environment,

Welcoming further the increasing awareness of an interest in Antarctica shown by the international community, and convinced of the advantages to the whole of mankind of a better knowledge of Antarctica,

Reaffirming its conviction that, in the interest of all mankind, Antarctica should continue for ever to be used exclusively for peaceful purposes and that it should not become the scene or object of international discord,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the question of Antarctica and the role accorded by the Secretary-General to the United Nations Environment Programme in preparing his report and also of the Twenty-first, Twenty-second and Twenty-third Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meetings, which were held at Christchurch, New Zealand, from 19 to 30 May 1997, at Tromsø, Norway, from 25 May to 5 June 1998, and at Lima, from 24 May to 4 June 1999, respectively;

2. Recalls the statement under chapter 17 of Agenda 21, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, that States carrying out research activities in Antarctica should, as provided for in article III of the Antarctic Treaty, continue:

(a) To ensure that data and information resulting from such research are freely available to the international community;

(b) To enhance the access of the international scientific community and the specialized agencies of the United Nations system to such data and information, including the encouragement of periodic seminars and symposia;

3. Welcomes the invitations to the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme to attend Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meetings in order to assist such meetings in their substantive work, and urges the parties to continue to do so for future consultative meetings;

4. Welcomes also the practice whereby the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties regularly provide the Secretary-General with information on their consultative meetings and on their activities in Antarctica, and encourages the parties to continue to provide the Secretary-General and interested States with information on developments in relation to Antarctica, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report which shall consist of that information to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session the item entitled "Question of Antarctica".

Decolonization

The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Special Committee on decolonization) held its annual session in New York in two parts—22 February and 31 March for the first part, and from 21 June to 21 July and on 28 July for the second. It considered various aspects of the implementation of the 1960 Declaration, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 1514(XV) [YUN 1960, p. 49], including general decolonization issues and the situation of individual Non-Self-Governing Territories (NSGTs). Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/68 [YUN 1998, p. 559], the Special Committee transmitted to the Assembly the report on its 1999 activities [A/54/23].

Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism

The Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 46/181 [YUN 1991, p. 777], submitted an August 1999 progress report [A/54/219] on implementation of the plan of action [YUN 1991, p. 777] for the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism (1990-2000), declared by the Assembly in resolution 43/47 [YUN 1988, p. 734]. He stated that the Special Committee on decolonization had encouraged the cooperation and participation of Member States, particularly the administering Powers, the UN system, inter-governmental organizations, the specialized agencies and international institutions to work towards achieving the Decade's objectives and to assist the peoples of NSGTs. The Special Committee had reviewed yearly the situation in each NSGT and held seminars in the Caribbean and Pacific regions in alternate years to review progress in implementing the plan of action.

The Economic and Social Council considered annually the Declaration's implementation by specialized agencies and other UN organizations. Also, in an ongoing effort to strengthen co-ordinated action, the Council President and the Special Committee Chairman had consulted on ways to strengthen international assistance for the economic and social development of NSGTs.

In the context of the International Decade, information on decolonization had been disseminated, including through the Internet, and was available at UN information centres and services worldwide.

The Secretary-General said he would present a detailed final report on the achievements of the Decade to the Assembly in 2000.

Caribbean regional seminar

As part of its activities to implement the plan of action for the Decade, the Special Committee on decolonization organized a Caribbean regional seminar (Castries, Saint Lucia, 25-27 May) to review the political, economic and social conditions in the small island NSGTs [A/54/23].

The seminar concluded that the implementation of the 1960 Declaration was not complete as long as there remained NSGTs that had yet to exercise their right to self-determination, a process in which the United Nations had a valid ongoing role. Participants supported closer cooperation between the Special Committee and the Economic and Social Council in providing UN economic and political assistance to NSGTs. Concerning proposed measures to be undertaken by the member States of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) in respect of offshore banking, participants emphasized the need for consultations between the administering Powers, OECD members and NSGT representatives to formulate appropriate laws and to ensure that the economic rights of NSGTs were not compromised by the administering Powers.

The seminar recommended that the Special Committee transmit to the General Assembly its conclusions and recommendations and that the Secretary-General prepare a consolidated report on the implementation of decolonization resolutions since the declaration of the International Decade. Participants supported the initiation, at the regional level, of a UN study on access of NSGTs to UN programmes and activities in furtherance of the decolonization process. They emphasized the desirability of holding future seminars in NSGTs, reconfirmed the need for periodic visiting missions to NSGTs, and requested the Special Committee to organize activities on the occasion of the fortieth anniversary of the Declaration and the last year of the Decade, particularly the dissemination of information on UN decolonization activities. Participants also recommended that the Special Committee formulate an updated plan of action to eradicate colonialism.

On 21 July, the Special Committee adopted the draft report of the seminar.

Status of remaining NSGTs

The Special Committee had before it a working paper by Chile on a conceptual framework for the review of the constitutional and juridical status of NSGTs and on progress in the implementation of the 1960 Declaration [A/AC.109/1999/20]. The paper contained a proposed set of guidelines to enable the Special Committee to decide on the status of the remaining NSGTs. A working paper by Saint Lucia [A/AC.109/1999/21] contained comments on Chile's submission.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/91 [draft: A/54/L.50 & Add.1] by recorded vote (141-2-14) [agenda item 18].

Implementation by international organizations

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 53/62 [YUN 1998, p. 563], the Secretary-General reported, in June [A/54/119], that he had brought that resolution regarding implementation of the 1960 Declaration on decolonization to the attention of UN specialized agencies and organizations. Summaries of replies received, describing action taken to support NSGTs, were contained in a July report [E/1999/69].

Assistance to NSGTs was provided by UNDP, the Universal Postal Union, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, the World Health Organization regional office for the Western Pacific region and the United Nations Environment Programme.

In July [E/1999/SR.39], the Special Committee Chairman stated that the Committee had called for closer cooperation between the Economic and Social Council and itself in assisting the NSGTs. He said that, at the Committee's Caribbean regional seminar (see p. 522), a UNDP representative had stressed the importance of conducting analyses on governance, economic management and increasing resource mobilization to help those Territories, whose vulnerability persisted even as their graduated status precluded them from receiving aid and official development assistance.

The Chairman reported in August [A/AC.109/1999/L.16] that, in the context of resolution 53/62, he had held consultations in 1999 with the Council President. The Chairman emphasized the importance of cooperation between the Committee and the Council. UN programmes, specialized agencies and international organizations had to be mobilized to expand their activities and strengthen international assistance for economic and social development in respect of NSGTs. A joint meeting of the Committee and the Council devoted to NSGTs would provide an opportunity to discuss strategies to promote implementation of the 1960 Declaration. That could be done in the context of the International Decade, which would conclude in 2000, or as part of a new plan of action being developed by the Committee in consultation with administering Powers for the period beyond 2001.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July [meeting 45], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1999/52 [draft: E/1999/L.34] by roll-call vote (29-0-17) [agenda item 9].

The Economic and Social Council,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General and the information submitted by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system on their activities with regard to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Having heard the statement by the representative of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960, the resolutions of the Special Committee and other

Noting that the large majority of the remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories are small island Territories,

Welcoming the assistance extended to Non-Self-Governing Territories by certain specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme,

Stressing that, because the development options of small island Non-Self-Governing Territories are limited, there are special challenges to planning for and implementing sustainable development and that those Territories will be constrained in meeting the challenges without the continued cooperation and assistance of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system,

Mindful of the imperative need to keep under continuous review the activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in the implementation of the various United Nations decisions relating to decolonization,

4. Reaffirms that the specialized agencies and other organizations and institutions of the United Nations system should continue to be guided by the relevant resolutions of the United Nations in their efforts to contribute to the implementation of the Declaration and all other relevant General Assembly resolutions;

5. Also reaffirms that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the aspirations of the peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories to exercise their right to self-determination entails, as a corollary, the extension of all appropriate assistance to those peoples;

6. Expresses its appreciation to those specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have continued to cooperate with the United Nations and the regional and subregional organizations in the implementation of resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, and requests all the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to implement the relevant provisions of those resolutions;

9. Recommends that the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system formulate, with the active cooperation of the regional organizations concerned, concrete proposals for the full implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and submit the proposals to their governing and legislative organs;

10. Also recommends that the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system continue to review at the regular meetings of their governing bodies the implementation of resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

17. Also welcomes the adoption by the General Assembly of resolution 53/189 of 15 December 1998, in which, inter alia, the Assembly called for the participation of associate members of regional economic commissions in the special session on small island developing States, subject to the rules of procedure of the General Assembly, and in the preparatory process thereof, in the same capacity of observer that held for their participation in the 1994 Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States;

18. Requests the President of the Economic and Social Council to continue to maintain close contact on these matters with the Chairman of the Special Committee and to report thereon to the Council;

Military activities and arrangements in colonial countries

The Special Committee on decolonization considered military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration. It had before it working papers containing, among other things, information on military activities and arrangements in Bermuda, Guam and the United States Virgin Islands [A/AC.109/1999/3, A/AC.109/1999/14, A/AC.109/1999/7 & Corr.1].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee

[A/54/580], adopted decision 54/421 by recorded vote (99-53-1) [agenda items 93 & 18].

Military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration

At its 71st plenary meeting, on 6 December 1999, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political and Decolonization Committee (Fourth Committee), adopted the following text by a recorded vote of 99 to 53, with 1 abstention:

"1. The General Assembly, having considered the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to an item on the agenda of the Special Committee entitled 'Military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration', and recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and all other relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to military activities in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories, reaffirms its strong conviction that military bases and installations in the Territories concerned could constitute an obstacle to the exercise by the people of those Territories of their right to self-determination, and reiterates its strong views that existing bases and installations, which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, should be withdrawn.

"2. Aware of the presence of such bases and installations in some of those Territories, the General Assembly urges the administering Powers concerned to continue to take all necessary measures not to involve those Territories in any offensive acts or interference against other States.

"3. The General Assembly reiterates its concern that military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration might run counter to the rights and interests of the colonial peoples concerned, especially their right to self-determination and independence. The Assembly once again calls upon the administering Powers concerned to terminate such activities and to eliminate such military bases in compliance with its relevant resolutions.

"4. The General Assembly reiterates that the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories and areas adjacent thereto should not be used for nuclear testing, dumping of nuclear wastes or deployment of nuclear or other weapons of mass destruction.

"5. The General Assembly deplores the continued alienation of land in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories, particularly in the small island Territories of the Pacific and Caribbean regions, for military installations. The large-scale utilization of local resources for this purpose could adversely affect the economic development of the Territories concerned.

"6. The General Assembly takes note of the decision of some of the administering Powers to close or downsize some of those military bases in the Non-Self-Governing Territories.

"7. The General Assembly requests the Secretary-General to continue to inform world public opinion of those military activities and arrangements in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories which constitute an obstacle to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

"8. The General Assembly requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the Assembly at its fifty-fifth session."

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/54/580], adopted resolution 54/84 by recorded vote (153-2-5) [agenda items 93 & 18].

Economic and other activities which affect the interests of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Economic and other activities which affect the interests of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories",

Reaffirming the solemn obligation of the administering Powers under the Charter of the United Nations to promote the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the Territories under their administration and to protect the human and natural resources of those Territories against abuses,

Reaffirming also that any economic or other activity that has a negative impact on the interests of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories and on the exercise of their right to self-determination in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) is contrary to the purposes and principles of the Charter,

Reaffirming further that the natural resources are the heritage of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories, including the indigenous populations,

Aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location, size and economic conditions of each Territory, and bearing in mind the need to promote the economic stability, diversification and strengthening of the economy of each Territory,

Conscious of the particular vulnerability of the small Territories to natural disasters and environmental degradation,

Conscious also that foreign economic investment, when done in collaboration with the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories and in accordance with their wishes, could make a valid contribution to the socio-economic development of the Territories and could also make a valid contribution to the exercise of their right to self-determination,

Concerned about any activities aimed at exploiting the natural and human resources of the Non-Self-Governing Territories to the detriment of the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the final documents of the successive Conferences of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries and of the resolutions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, the South Pacific Forum and the Caribbean Community,

1. Reaffirms the right of peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories to self-determination in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and with General Assembly resolution 1514(XV), containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, as well as their right to the enjoyment of their natural resources and their right to dispose of those resources in their best interest;

5. Affirms the need to avoid any economic or other activities that adversely affect the interests of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories;

6. Calls once again upon all Governments that have not yet done so to take, in accordance with the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolution 2621 (XXV) of 12 October 1970, legislative, administrative or other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction that own and operate enterprises in the Non-Self-Governing Territories that are detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories, in order to put an end to such enterprises;

7. Reiterates that the damaging exploitation and plundering of the marine and other natural resources of the Non-Self-Governing Territories, in violation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, is a threat to the integrity and prosperity of those Territories;

8. Invites all Governments and organizations of the United Nations system to take all possible measures to ensure that the permanent sovereignty of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories over their natural resources is fully respected and safeguarded;

9. Urges the administering Powers concerned to take effective measures to safeguard and guarantee the inalienable right of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories to their natural resources and to establish and maintain control over the future development of those resources, and requests the administering Powers to take all necessary steps to protect the property rights of the peoples of those Territories;

10. Calls upon the administering Powers concerned to ensure that no discriminatory working conditions prevail in the Territories under their administration and to promote in each Territory a fair system of wages applicable to all the inhabitants without any discrimination;

12. Appeals to the mass media, trade unions and non-governmental organizations, as well as individuals, to continue their efforts to promote the economic well-being of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories;

13. Decides to follow the situation in the Non-Self-Governing Territories so as to ensure that all economic activities in those Territories are aimed at strengthening and diversifying their economies in the interest of their peoples, including the indigenous populations, and at promoting the economic and financial viability of those Territories;

14. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session.

Study and training

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/63 [YUN 1998, p. 569], the Secretary-General reported on offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of NSGTs during the period from 7 August 1998 to 12 August 1999 [A/54/267]. Over the years, 47 Member States and one non-member State had made scholarship and training offers. During the reporting period, Austria, Finland and the United Kingdom informed the Secretary-General of their offers.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/54/582], adopted resolution 54/86 without vote [agenda item 95].

Offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/63 of 3 December 1998,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories, prepared pursuant to its resolution 845(IX) of 22 November 1954,

Conscious of the importance of promoting the educational advancement of the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Strongly convinced that the continuation and expansion of offers of scholarships is essential in order to meet the increasing need of students from Non-Self-Governing Territories for educational and training assistance, and considering that students in those Territories should be encouraged to avail themselves of such offers,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States that have made scholarships available to the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories;

3. Invites all States to make or continue to make generous offers of study and training facilities to the inhabitants of those Territories that have not yet attained self-government or independence and, wherever possible, to provide travel funds to prospective students;

4. Urges the administering Powers to take effective measures to ensure the widespread and continuous dissemination in the Territories under their administration of information relating to offers of study and training facilities made by States and to provide all the necessary facilities to enable students to avail themselves of such offers;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

6. Draws the attention of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to the present resolution.

Visiting missions

The Special Committee on decolonization considered the question of sending visiting missions to Territories, particularly the specific Territories referred to it. In 1999, at the invitation of France, a mission visited New Caledonia from 23 to 28 August. In a report submitted by Papua New Guinea [A/54/921], the mission informed the Secretary-General of the results of its visit.

On 9 July [A/54/23], the Special Committee stressed the need to dispatch periodic visiting missions to NSGTs, called for the continued co-operation of the administering Powers and asked them to consider new approaches in the Committee's work. It asked its Chairman to enter into consultations with the administering Power of Guam (United States) to facilitate a mission there.

Puerto Rico

In accordance with the Special Committee's decision of 11 August 1998 concerning the self-determination and independence of Puerto Rico [YUN 1998, p. 570], the Committee's Rapporteur, in a June report [A/AC.109/1999/L.13], described recent constitutional and political developments in Puerto Rico, UN action on the question and the views of the parties concerned.

Based on its usual practice, the Committee acceded to requests for hearings from representatives of 21 organizations, who presented their views on 6 July. Subsequently, the Committee, by a roll-call vote (12-0-5), adopted a resolution that reaffirmed the inalienable right of Puerto Rico to self-determination and independence; expressed the hope that the United States would assume its responsibility to expedite a process to allow the full exercise of that right; and asked the Rapporteur to report in 2000 on the resolution's implementation.

Territories under reviewEast Timor

The Special Committee on decolonization in 1999 continued to consider the political status of the Territory of East Timor [A/54/23].

By resolution 32/34 [YUN 1977, p. 890], the General Assembly had rejected the claim, reaffirmed by Indonesia in 1977 [ibid., p. 868], that East Timor had been integrated into Indonesia, as the people of the Territory had not been able to exercise freely their right to self-determination and independence. In resolution 37/30 [YUN 1982, p. 1349], the Assembly had requested the Secretary-General to initiate consultations with the parties concerned to explore ways to achieve a compromise settlement. The Secretary-General, through his good offices, had since conducted tripartite talks involving Indonesia, Portugal (the administering Power) and East Timorese representatives. In October 1998, he had proposed to Indonesia and Portugal a draft constitutional framework for autonomy for East Timor within Indonesia, which did not prejudice the shape of a final settlement [YUN 1998, p. 572]. Negotiations between the two sides on that framework took place through the tripartite senior-officials meeting process.

The Special Committee examined a Secretariat working paper on political developments, the human rights situation, and economic, social and educational conditions in the Territory [A/AC.109/1999/10 & Corr.1]. Regarding political developments, on 27 January, prior to scheduled UN-sponsored talks between Indonesia and Portugal, Indonesia stated that it would be willing to grant East Timor independence if the East Timorese rejected an offer of autonomy. On the same day, the Secretary-General welcomed a report that Xanana Gusmao, the East Timorese resistance and pro-independence leader, imprisoned since 1992, would be transferred to residential detention. Following talks between the Secretary-General's Personal Representative for East Timor and the negotiator from Portugal, Portugal and Indonesia, on 11 March, agreed to a UN-supervised ballot involving Timorese living in the Territory and abroad (an estimated 600,000 of East Timor's population of 800,000 were eligible to vote, along with 20,000 to 30,000 living abroad). According to press reports, on 5 April, Mr. Gusmao ordered his supporters to take up arms, thus ending a four-month ceasefire, reportedly in reaction to the alleged killing of 17 civilians by Indonesian troops on that same day. Also on 5 April, two members of a six-person UN team that had been visiting East Timor to prepare for a consultative process on East Timor's future, met with the Portuguese Foreign Ministry official responsible for East Timor, as well as with the head of the International Organization for Migration, the representative of the National Resistance Council of Timor and other Timorese figures. In the meantime, a heated exchange had escalated between pro-integrationists and pro-independence supporters, resulting in numerous killings in and around Dili. A renewed ceasefire, signed in Dili on 21 April, called on all parties to cease the violence, to respect peacemaking efforts by the United Nations and the local Roman Catholic church, and to set up a peace and stability commission. The Governments of Indonesia and Portugal, on 5 May in New York, signed an Agreement entrusting the Secretary-General with the organization and conduct of a popular consultation to ascertain whether the East Timorese people would accept or reject a proposed constitutional framework providing for special autonomy for East Timor under Indonesian rule. The two parties also signed two supplementary Agreements with the United Nations on the modalities for the popular consultation of the East Timorese through a direct ballot and on security arrangements. The full texts of the Agreements were contained in a May report of the Secretary-General [A/53/951-S/1999/513].

A later Secretariat working paper [A/AC.109/2000/12] stated that the registration period for the vote, which was scheduled for 30 August, was marked by violence and intimidation carried out by pro-autonomy militias. Following the vote, in which 78.5 per cent voted to reject and 21.5 per cent voted to accept the proposed special autonomy, there was an eruption of violence, in which pro-integration militias and members of the Indonesian military and the police ransacked towns and forcibly displaced hundreds of thousands of East Timorese. Steps towards reconciliation were facilitated by the strong will on the part of the Government of Indonesia and the National Council of Timorese Resistance to establish good relations. In addition, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and Transitional Administrator in East Timor, Sergio Vieira de Mello, visited Jakarta in December and met with the President of Indonesia, Abdurrahman Wahid, and other senior officials.

General Assembly consideration. Portugal, on 2 June [A/54/121], said that since it continued to be de facto deprived from exercising its responsibilities for the administration of East Timor, it could not provide the information required under Article 73 e of the UN Charter. It drew the Secretary-General's attention to the Agreements of 5 May and provided information on the situation in East Timor and on the reaction of the international community to developments there.

The Secretary-General, in a 13 December progress report [A/54/654], described negotiations that led to the signing of the 5 May Agreements, the establishment of the United Nations Mission in East Timor, security concerns, the consultation process, post-consultation violence, the establishment of a multinational force and the establishment of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor (see PART ONE, Chapter IV).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

A report of the Fourth Committee [A/54/583] stated that on 17 September, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee, decided to include in the agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Question of East Timor" and to consider it in plenary, on the understanding that bodies and individuals having an interest in the question would be heard in the Committee.

The Assembly, by decision 54/422 of 6 December, took note of the Committee's report.

On 17 December [meeting 84], the Assembly adopted resolution 54/194 [draft: A/54/L.73] without vote [agenda item 96].

Question of East Timor

The General Assembly,

Recalling all relevant General Assembly resolutions on the question of East Timor,

Recalling also the relevant Security Council resolutions and decisions on the question of East Timor, in particular resolutions 1236(1999) of 7 May 1999, 1246(1999) of 11 June 1999, 1262(1999) of 27 August 1999, 1264(1999) of 15 September 1999 and 1272(1999) of 25 October 1999,

Recalling further the Agreement of 5 May 1999 between Indonesia and Portugal on the question of East Timor and the Agreements between the United Nations, Indonesia and Portugal of the same date regarding the modalities for the popular consultation of the East Timorese people through a direct ballot and security arrangements,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Welcomes the successful conduct of the popular consultation of the East Timorese people on 30 August 1999, takes note of its outcome, which began a process of transition to independence under the authority of the United Nations, and welcomes the decision of the Indonesian People's Consultative Assembly on 19 October 1999 concerning East Timor in accordance with article 6 of the Agreement of 5 May 1999;
3. Decides to conclude its consideration of the item entitled "Question of East Timor" and to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session a new item entitled "The situation in East Timor during its transition to independence".

Falkland Islands (Malvinas)

In July, during its consideration of the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), the Special Committee on decolonization examined a Secretariat working paper on constitutional and political developments and the economic, social and educational conditions in the Territory [A/AC.109/1999/12]. The paper reported that, in his New Year's message, Prime Minister Tony Blair of the United Kingdom said that he had told Argentina's President, Carlos Menem, that the sovereignty of the islands was not for negotiation, nor was the right of the Falkland Islanders to determine their own future. Argentina's Ministry of Foreign Affairs, in a 2 January press communique, expressed its unwavering determination to regain, through diplomatic negotiations, the exercise of sovereignty over the Malvinas Islands, and reiterated its readiness to explore with the United Kingdom ways of consolidating mutual trust and cooperation in the South Atlantic. Argentina reaffirmed its belief that a resumption of negotiations on the substance of the question would contribute to a fair and definitive settlement of the dispute.

His Royal Highness Prince Charles visited Argentina from 9 to 11 March and held meetings with President Menem, at which they reportedly discussed the climate of reconciliation between the two countries. Argentina and the United Kingdom, at the end of talks on South Atlantic issues (London, 25-27 May), jointly agreed to continue to study air links and human contacts to and from the Falklands Islands, including access by Argentines; to exchange ideas for improving cooperation on the conservation of fish stocks in the South Atlantic, especially ways to tackle poaching; and to find ways of making progress over a range of South Atlantic issues of common interest.

In a 1 July resolution [A/54/23], the Special Committee reiterated that a peaceful and negotiated settlement of the sovereignty dispute between Argentina and the United Kingdom would put an end to the colonial situation of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) and requested the two countries to resume negotiations.

The Foreign Ministers of the United Kingdom and Argentina issued a joint statement (London, 13-14 July) [A/54/229] regarding travel by Argentine citizens to the Falkland Islands on their own passports; the resumption of civil air services between Chile and the Falkland Islands, including stops in mainland Argentina; and the possibility of flights between the Falkland Islands and third countries, with the option from 16 October of making stops in mainland Argentina. They agreed on enhanced cooperation in the maintenance and conservation of fish stocks in the South Atlantic and on confidence-building measures, including landmine clearance in the Falkland Islands.

In an exchange of letters on 14 July, the United Kingdom informed Argentina that some of its commitments and responsibilities under the joint statement would be discharged by Her Majesty's Government of the Falkland Islands [A/54/230]. Argentina responded that, pursuant to their October 1989 joint statement issued in Madrid [YUN 1989, p. 766], any arrangements made by the United Kingdom with a view to their implementation were an internal affair of the United Kingdom and had no bearing on the nature of the controversy over sovereignty of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands and surrounding maritime areas [A/54/253].

The President of Argentina, speaking during the Assembly's general debate on 21 September [A/54/PV.7], said that he was convinced the conditions existed for the two countries to begin a dialogue towards a definitive solution of the sovereignty dispute. Exercising its right of reply on 22 September [A/54/420], the United Kingdom said that nothing in the July agreement compromised the United Kingdom position in relation to its sovereignty over the Falkland Islands. Representatives of the Territory had asked the Special Committee on decolonization to recognize that they, like other democratic people, were entitled to exercise the right of self-determination and reiterated that the people of the Falkland Islands did not want to be part of Argentina.

On 13 October [A/54/472], Argentina rejected the United Kingdom's claim that the "wishes" of the inhabitants of the Malvinas should be respected. It had repeatedly proved its commitment to protect the interests of the islanders and Argentina's Constitution guaranteed strict respect for the lifestyle of the inhabitants of the islands. Argentina trusted that, in response to the numerous invitations by the international community and within the framework of bilateral relations, negotiations would be renewed.

By decision 54/412 of 4 November, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the item on the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) and included it in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth (2000) session.

Gibraltar

The Special Committee on decolonization took up the question of Gibraltar on 21 June. It had before it a Secretariat working paper updating the overall situation in the Territory and setting forth the positions of the United Kingdom (the administering Power), Gibraltar and Spain concerning Gibraltar's future status [A/AC.109/1999/5]. The Committee heard statements by Spain, the Chief Minister of Gibraltar and a representative of the Self-Determination for Gibraltar Group, following which it decided to continue consideration of the question in 2000.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/54/584], adopted decision 54/423 without vote [agenda item 18].

Question of Gibraltar

At its 71st plenary meeting, on 6 December 1999, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political and Decolonization Committee (Fourth Committee), adopted the following text:

"The General Assembly, recalling its decision 53/420 of 3 December 1998, and recalling at the same time that the statement agreed to by the Governments of Spain and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland at Brussels on 27 November 1984 stipulates, inter alia, the following:

'The establishment of a negotiating process aimed at overcoming all the differences between them over Gibraltar and at promoting cooperation on a mutually beneficial basis on economic, cultural, touristic, aviation, military and environmental matters. Both sides accept that the issues of sovereignty will be discussed in that process. The British Government will fully maintain its commitment to honour the wishes of the people of Gibraltar as set out in the preamble of the 1969 Constitution', takes note of the fact that, as part of this process, the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Spain and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland hold annual meetings alternately in each capital, the most recent of which was held in London on 10 December 1997, and urges both Governments to continue their negotiations with the object of reaching a definitive solution to the problem of Gibraltar in the light of relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and in the spirit of the Charter of the United Nations."

New Caledonia

The Special Committee on decolonization considered the question of New Caledonia on 29 June and 9 July. It had before it a Secretariat working paper describing political and economic developments and economic conditions in the Territory [A/AC.109/1999/6 & Corr.1]. The paper stated that the 1998 Noumea Accord on the Territory's future status [YUN 1998, p. 574], signed by France (the administering Power) and the two main Caledonian political groupings—the Rassemblement pour la Calédonie dans la République (RPCR) and the Front de libération nationale kanak socialiste (FLNKS)—was ratified by New Caledonians on 8 November 1998, with 72 per cent of the electorate voting in favour. In keeping with the Accord, the French Parliament on 6 July 1998 passed a constitutional reform inserting two new articles, calling on the people of New Caledonia to express their views on the Accord before the end of the year (article 76), and providing that, following approval of the Accord, a Constitution would be voted on in Parliament in order to enable New Caledonia to move forward on the basis of the Accord (article 77). On 19 March 1999, the French Legislature ratified an organic law codifying the matters addressed in article 77, namely, the powers to be transferred to the newly created institutions and their organization, rules governing citizenship and the electoral regime and conditions and deadlines by which New Caledonians would determine their accession to full sovereignty; and an ordinary law dealing with social and economic matters covered under the Accord.

The governmental structure, created as a result of the entry into force of the organic law, provided for a 54-member Congress as New Caledonia's deliberative assembly, composed of 7 from the Provincial Assembly of the Loyalty Islands, 15 from the Provincial Assembly of the North Province and 32 from the Provincial Assembly of the South Province; and an executive (the Government), elected by the Congress and responsible to it and replacing the institution of the High French Commissioner for New Caledonia, which would cease to exist. The provincial assemblies were responsible for matters not directly attributed to the President of the Provincial Assembly, who would act as the executive of the province. A 28-member Economic and Social Council would be created to advise the Government on projects and possible economic and social laws. A parallel set of institutions was to be created in the eight areas that were designated as "customary" to accommodate the full political recognition of the Kanak identity. The uncertain legal status of the customary areas was to be revised, thereby enhancing their role. In particular, a Customary Council would be created in each customary area, whose composition would be determined by traditions proper to the area. In addition, a Territory-wide Customary Senate would be created, comprising 16 members (2 elected by each of the 8 customary councils). The Customary Senate would be represented in the Economic and Social Council, the Administrative Council, the Consultative Council on Mines and local development agencies. The Customary Senate and the councils were to be consulted by the executive and legislative organs on matters directly related to the Kanak identity. Elections were held on 9 May for the provincial assemblies and the Congress, which were in place by 14 May. The Government was to be elected by 18 June and the customary councils and the Customary Senate would be designated by 28 August.

The precondition for the talks leading to the Noumea Accord, the exchange of nickel reserves from the French State-owned company, Eramet, to the Kanak-controlled Société minière du Sud Pacifique (SMSP), was realized, permitting SMSP to go ahead with the construction of a smelter in a joint venture with the Canadian company Falconbridge. In February, the French Government announced the acquisition of SIMA, an important producer of steel and nickel alloys. That acquisition strengthened the position of Eramet within its sector. Under the privatization agreement, 30 per cent of Eramet's New Caledonian nickel unit would be transferred to a public organization. Along with that organization, New Caledonia would take an 8 per cent stake in Eramet. In that way, New Caledonians would be shareholders in the management of the country's major source of economic wealth.

Regarding the 9 May elections, a later Secretariat report [A/AC.109/2000/4] stated that the campaign and the polling were conducted without incident, with 75 per cent of the electorate voting. RPCR obtained a majority of the 74 seats in the provincial assemblies in the South Province, while FLNKS obtained a majority in the other two provinces. Of those voted into the provincial assemblies, 54 of them became members of New Caledonia's Congress. Thus, RPCR obtained a relative majority of 24 seats in Congress and FLNKS, 18. Congress elected the new Government of Jean Lèques (RPCR) on 28 May, which comprised six members from RPCR, four from FLNKS and one from the Fédération des comités de coopération indépendantistes, a dissident offshoot of FLNKS currently allied with RPCR. The Customary Senate was formally constituted on 27 August.

However, following the elections, press reports noted considerable friction between RPCR and FLNKS due to differing interpretations of "collegiality" in government matters. They also disagreed on the interpretation of eligibility to vote in future elections to the Congress, provincial assemblies and, ultimately, to vote on accession to full sovereignty. The French National Assembly on 10 June and the Senate on 12 October passed legislation stipulating that the right to vote should be exercised by persons already on the electoral roll as at 8 November 1998 and who, at the time, had been residents for at least 10 years.

The Secretariat reported that 1999 was marked by high-level diplomatic visits to New Caledonia to explore commercial, economic and cultural partnerships. In August, the South Pacific Forum Ministerial Committee on New Caledonia completed a fact-finding mission on implementation of the Noumea Accord. In October, the South Pacific Forum admitted New Caledonia as an official observer. Also, at the invitation of France, a three-member delegation of representatives of permanent missions to the United Nations visited New Caledonia from 23 to 28 August to observe implementation of the first phase of the Accord [A/54/921].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/54/584], adopted resolution 54/88 without vote [agenda item 18].

Question of New Caledonia

Noting with satisfaction the intensification of contacts between New Caledonia and neighbouring countries of the South Pacific region,

1. Welcomes the significant developments that have taken place in New Caledonia as exemplified by the signing of the Noumea Accord of 5 May 1998 between the representatives of New Caledonia and the Government of France;

2. Urges all the parties involved, in the interest of all the people of New Caledonia, to maintain, in the framework of the Noumea Accord, their dialogue in a spirit of harmony;

4. Also notes the relevant provisions of the Noumea Accord to the effect that New Caledonia may become a member or associate member of certain international organizations, such as international organizations in the Pacific region, the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the International Labour Organization, according to their regulations;

5. Further notes the agreement between the signatories of the Noumea Accord that the progress made in the emancipation process shall be brought to the attention of the United Nations;

16. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session.

Tokelau

The Special Committee on decolonization on 29 June considered the question of Tokelau, three small atolls (Nukunonu, Fakaofu and Atafu) in the South Pacific, administered by New Zealand. It examined a Secretariat working paper detailing the Territory's constitutional development, economic and social conditions, and the positions of New Zealand and Tokelau concerning its future status [A/AC.109/1999/17].

In accordance with recommendations made in the "Modern House of Tokelau" report [YUN 1998, p. 575], a new electoral system was instituted for the General Fono (the national representative body of Tokelau), whose 27 members were chosen by each Taupulega (Council of Elders) to serve three-year terms. Only the Faipule (the representative of each village) and the Pulemuku (mayor of each village) were elected. In January, elections for the reformed General Fono, made up of six members from each village, were held on the basis of universal adult suffrage. The new arrangement was expected to promote continuity in administration and provide the basis for the development of a sense of professionalism. New Zealand said that Tokelau's decision to move from a system of selection and appointment to elections was significant in the wider context of preparation for self-determination.

The Tokelau Public Service was relocated from Samoa to the atolls and was restructured by devolving most public service functions to the villages and making all authorities accountable to Tokelau institutions. A draft of the restructuring plan was prepared, setting out the functions to be devolved to the villages (or corporatized or privatized).

The Ulu-o-Tokelau (the highest authority on Tokelau), speaking before the Special Committee, said that the current preference for free association did not mean that Tokelau dismissed any possibility of pursuing another option, particularly that of integration. Tokelau would wish to be more fully informed, in its dialogue with the administering Power, of what would be possible under integration, as well as under free association.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/54/584], adopted resolution 54/89 without vote [agenda item 18].

Question of Tokelau

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Tokelau,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the question of Tokelau,

Recalling the solemn declaration on the future status of Tokelau, delivered by the Ulu-o-Tokelau (the highest authority on Tokelau) on 30 July 1994, that an act of self-determination in Tokelau is now under active consideration, together with the constitution of a self-governing Tokelau, and that the present preference of Tokelau is for a status of free association with New Zealand,

Recalling also its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to Non-Self-Governing Territories, in particular General Assembly resolution 53/66 of 3 December 1998,

Recalling further the emphasis placed in the solemn declaration on the terms of Tokelau's intended free association relationship with New Zealand, including the expectation that the form of help Tokelau could continue to expect from New Zealand in promoting the well-being of its people, besides its external interests, would be clearly established in the framework of that relationship,

Noting with appreciation the continuing exemplary cooperation of New Zealand as the administering Power with regard to the work of the Special Committee relating to Tokelau and its readiness to permit access by United Nations visiting missions to the Territory,

Noting also with appreciation the collaborative contribution to the development of Tokelau by New Zealand and the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme and the International Telecommunication Union,

Recalling the dispatch in 1994 of a United Nations visiting mission to Tokelau,

Noting that, as a small island Territory, Tokelau exemplifies the situation of most remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Noting also that, as a case study pointing to successful decolonization, Tokelau has wider significance for the United Nations as it seeks to complete its work in decolonization,

1. Notes that Tokelau remains firmly committed to the development of self-government and to an act of self-determination that would result in Tokelau assuming a status in accordance with the options on future status for Non-Self-Governing Territories contained in principle VI of the annex to General Assembly resolution 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960;

2. Also notes Tokelau's desire to move at its own pace towards an act of self-determination;

3. Further notes the inauguration in 1999 of a national Government based on village elections by universal adult suffrage;

4. Commends Tokelau's ongoing work in charting a distinctive constitutional course, reflecting its unique traditions and environment;

5. Also commends Tokelau for current initiatives and endeavours, based on wide consultation with its people, to construct a true "house of Tokelau", acknowledging the role of the village as the foundation of Tokelau, as well as the need to continue the process of strengthening the basis of national self-government and the aim of establishing the capacity for economic survival in a sustainable way;

6. Acknowledges the attention being given to broader matters of governance, including the upgrading of financial regulations, to establish clear local channels of responsibility in national and village government;

7. Notes that, responding to the desire of Tokelau, the Government of New Zealand has legislation in place to enable responsibility for the Tokelau Public Service to be passed from the State Services Commissioner in New Zealand to Tokelau, the timing to be set by mutual agreement when Tokelau has established a suitable local employment framework;

8. Acknowledges Tokelau's need for reassurance, given that local resources cannot adequately cover the material side of self-determination, and the ongoing responsibility of Tokelau's external partners to assist

Tokelau in balancing its desire to be self-reliant to the greatest extent possible with its need for external assistance;

9. Welcomes the assurances of the Government of New Zealand that it will meet its obligations to the United Nations with respect to Tokelau and abide by the freely expressed wishes of the people of Tokelau with regard to their future status;

10. Welcomes also the statement on official development assistance cooperation between New Zealand and Tokelau, setting out the direction and broad structure of New Zealand official development assistance to Tokelau, to better meet new development and governance needs in the medium term;

11. Calls upon the administering Power and United Nations agencies to continue their assistance to Tokelau, as it further develops its economy and governance structures within the context of its ongoing constitutional evolution;

12. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session.

Western Sahara

The question of Western Sahara was considered by the Special Committee on 22 June [A/54/23]. A Secretariat working paper [A/AC.109/1999/11] provided detailed information on the exercise of the Secretary-General's good offices with the parties concerned and action taken by the Security Council and the General Assembly (see also PART ONE, Chapter II). The Special Committee transmitted the relevant documentation to the Assembly's fifty-fourth (1999) session to facilitate the Fourth Committee's consideration of the question.

Island Territories

The Special Committee on decolonization considered working papers prepared by the Secretariat on American Samoa [A/AC.109/1999/13], Anguilla [A/AC.109/1999/8], Bermuda [A/AC.109/1999/3], the British Virgin Islands [A/AC.109/1999/9], the Cayman Islands [A/AC.109/1999/4], Guam [A/AC.109/1999/14], Montserrat [A/AC.109/1999/15], Pitcairn [A/AC.109/1999/1 & Corr.1], St. Helena [A/AC.109/1999/16], the Turks and Caicos Islands [A/AC.109/1999/18] and the United States Virgin Islands [A/AC.109/1999/7 & Corr.1], describing political developments and economic and social conditions in each of those Territories. On 21 July, the Special Committee approved two draft resolutions for adoption by the General Assembly (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/54/584], adopted resolutions 54/90 A and B without vote [agenda item 18].

Questions of American Samoa, Anguilla, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, Guam, Montserrat, Pitcairn, St. Helena, the Turks and Caicos Islands and the United States Virgin Islands

General

The General Assembly,

Having considered the questions of American Samoa, Anguilla, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, Guam, Montserrat, Pitcairn, St. Helena, the Turks and Caicos Islands and the United States Virgin Islands, hereinafter referred to as "the Territories",

Having examined the relevant chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to those Territories, including, in particular, the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the individual Territories covered by the present resolution,

Recognizing that the specific characteristics and the sentiments of the peoples of the Territories require flexible, practical and innovative approaches to the options of self-determination, without any prejudice to territorial size, geographical location, size of population or natural resources,

Recalling its resolution 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960, containing the principles that should guide Member States in determining whether or not an obligation exists to transmit the information called for under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations,

Expressing its concern that even thirty-nine years after the adoption of the Declaration there still remain a number of Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Acknowledging the significant achievements by the international community towards the eradication of colonialism in accordance with the Declaration, and conscious of the importance of continuing effective implementation of the Declaration, taking into account the target set by the United Nations to eradicate colonialism by the year 2000 and the plan of action for the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism,

Noting the positive constitutional developments in some Non-Self-Governing Territories about which the Special Committee has received information, while also acknowledging the need for recognition to be given to expressions of self-determination by the peoples of the Territories consistent with practice under the Charter,

Recognizing that in the decolonization process there is no alternative to the principle of self-determination as enunciated by the General Assembly in its resolutions 1514(XV), 1541(XV) and other resolutions,

Welcoming the stated position of the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland that it continues to take seriously its obligations under the Charter to develop self-government in the dependent Territories and, in cooperation with the locally elected Governments, to ensure that their constitutional frameworks continue to meet the wishes of the people, and the emphasis that it is ultimately for the peoples of the Territories to decide their future status,

Welcoming also the stated position of the Government of the United States of America that it supports fully the principles of decolonization and takes seriously its obligations under the Charter to promote to the utmost the well-being of the inhabitants of the Territories under United States administration,

Aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location and economic conditions of each Territory, and bearing in mind the necessity of promoting economic stability and diversifying and strengthening further the economies of the respective Territories as a matter of priority,

Conscious of the particular vulnerability of the Territories to natural disasters and environmental degradation and, in this connection, bearing in mind the programmes of action of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, the World Conference on Natural Disaster Reduction, the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States and other relevant world conferences,

Aware of the usefulness both to the Territories and to the Special Committee of the participation of appointed and elected representatives of the Territories in the work of the Special Committee,

Convinced that the wishes and aspirations of the peoples of the Territories should continue to guide the development of their future political status and that referendums, free and fair elections and other forms of popular consultation play an important role in ascertaining the wishes and aspirations of the people,

Convinced also that any negotiations to determine the status of a Territory must not take place without the active involvement and participation of the people of that Territory,

Recognizing that all available options for self-determination of the Territories are valid as long as they are in accordance with the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned and in conformity with the clearly defined principles contained in resolutions 1514(XV), 1541(XV) and other resolutions of the General Assembly,

Mindful that United Nations visiting missions provide an effective means of ascertaining the situation in the Territories, and considering that the possibility of sending further visiting missions to the Territories at an appropriate time and in consultation with the administering Powers should be kept under review,

Noting that the Special Committee held a Caribbean regional seminar at Castries, Saint Lucia, from 25 to 27 May 1999 to hear the views of the representatives of the Territories, as well as Governments and organizations in the region, in order to review the political, economic and social conditions in the Territories,

Mindful that in order for the Special Committee to enhance its understanding of the political status of the peoples of the Territories and to fulfil its mandate effectively, it is important for it to be apprised by the administering Powers and to receive information from other appropriate sources, including the representatives of the Territories, concerning the wishes and aspirations of the peoples of the Territories,

Mindful also in this connection that the Special Committee regards the holding of regional seminars in the Caribbean and Pacific regions and at Headquarters and other venues, with the active participation of representatives of the Non-Self-Governing Territories, as a helpful means to fulfil its mandate, while recognizing the need for reviewing the role of those seminars in the context of a United Nations programme for ascertaining the political status of the Territories,

Mindful further that some Territories have not had any United Nations visiting mission for a long period of time and that no such visiting missions have been sent to some of the Territories,

Noting with appreciation the contribution to the development of some Territories by specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, and regional institutions such as the Caribbean Development Bank,

Noting the ongoing efforts of the Special Committee in carrying out a critical review of its work with the aim of making appropriate and constructive recommendations and decisions to attain its objectives in accordance with its mandate,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the peoples of the Territories to self-determination, including, if they so wish, independence, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and with General Assembly resolution 1514(XV), containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

2. Reaffirms also that it is ultimately for the peoples of the Territories themselves to determine freely their future political status in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter, the Declaration and the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and in that connection calls upon the administering Powers, in cooperation with the territorial Governments, to facilitate programmes of political education in the Territories in order to foster an awareness among the people of their right to self-determination in conformity with the legitimate political status options, based on the principles clearly defined in Assembly resolution 1541 (XV);

3. Requests the administering Powers to transmit to the Secretary-General information called for under Article 73 e of the Charter and other updated information and reports, including reports on the wishes and aspirations of the peoples of the Territories regarding their future political status as expressed in fair and free referendums and other forms of popular consultation, as well as the results of any informed and democratic processes consistent with practice under the Charter that indicate the clear and freely expressed wish of the people to change the existing status of the Territories;

4. Stresses the importance for the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to be apprised of the views and wishes of the peoples of the Territories and to enhance its understanding of their conditions;

5. Reaffirms that United Nations visiting missions to the Territories at an appropriate time and in consultation with the administering Powers are an effective means of ascertaining the situation in the Territories, and requests the administering Powers and the elected representatives of the peoples of the Territories to assist the Special Committee in this regard;

6. Reaffirms also the responsibility of the administering Powers under the Charter to promote the economic and social development and to preserve the cultural identity of the Territories, and recommends that priority continue to be given, in consultation with the territorial Governments concerned, to the strengthening and diversification of their respective economies;

7. Requests the administering Powers, in consultation with the peoples of the Territories, to take all necessary measures to protect and conserve the environment of the Territories under their administration against any environmental degradation, and requests the specialized agencies concerned to continue to monitor environmental conditions in those Territories;

8. Calls upon the administering Powers, in cooperation with the respective territorial Governments, to continue to take all necessary measures to counter problems related to drug trafficking, money laundering and other offences;

9. Stresses that the eradication of colonialism requires the full and constructive cooperation of all parties involved, and notes with concern that the plan of action for the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism cannot be concluded by the year 2000;

10. Calls upon the administering Powers to enter into constructive dialogue with the Special Committee before the fifty-fifth session of the General Assembly to develop a framework for the implementation of the provisions of Article 73 of the Charter and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples for the period beyond 2000;

11. Notes the particular circumstances that prevail in the Territories concerned, and encourages the political evolution in them towards self-determination;

12. Urges Member States to contribute to the efforts of the United Nations to usher in the twenty-first century in a world free of colonialism, and calls upon them to continue to give their full support to the Special Committee in its endeavours towards that noble goal;

13. Invites the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to initiate or to continue to take all necessary measures to accelerate progress in the social and economic life of the Territories, and calls for closer cooperation between the Special Committee and the Economic and Social Council in furtherance of the provision of assistance to the Territories;

Information

UN public information

The General Assembly's 93-member Committee on Information, at its twenty-first session (New York, 3-14 May (first part) and 1-5 November (resumed)) [A/54/21 & Add.1], continued to examine UN information policies and activities and to evaluate and follow up efforts made and progress achieved in information and communications. The Committee had before it reports on the reorientation of UN activities in public information and communications, the development of a UN international radio broadcasting capacity and the activities of the Joint United Nations Information Committee. It also considered reports on the integration of UN information centres (UNICs) with UNDP field offices and the allocation of resources for those centres, and the development of UN web sites.

The Committee recommended two draft resolutions to the Assembly—one on information in the service of humanity and the other on UN public information policies and activities—and a draft decision on increasing the Committee's membership, which were adopted by the Assembly in December.

By decision 54/420 of 6 December, the Assembly increased the Committee's membership from 93 to 95.

Reorientation of information and communications activities

Pursuant to resolution 53/59 B [YUN 1998, p. 587], the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee on Information an April report on measures to reorient the public information and communications activities of the Department of Public Information (DPI) [A/AC.198/1999/2], particularly new measures to develop further the conceptual framework for policies of the new orientation, presented to the Committee in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 583].

A more effective news gathering and delivery system, which the Secretary-General identified in his reorientation plan as one of the most immediate priorities of DPI, was entering into operation. DPI's immediate priority was the development of the UN News Service to transmit information via e-mail and facsimile directly to the media and other important opinion-making constituencies. The centrepiece of the Service would be a brief "Headline News Alert" on breaking news from the United Nations, which would be posted on the UN web site. The Service would also contain an expanded news feature service. In 1999, DPI began placement, on a worldwide basis, of op-ed articles by senior UN officials, who would also be able to brief senior journalists by telephone at the national and sub-regional levels on issues of pressing concern to them. Another priority was the development of a daily news page on the UN web site to provide breaking news on all major events and activities and information on upcoming meetings and events. DPI's press releases in English and French were currently disseminated worldwide, almost instantly, on the Internet.

In radio and television, efforts were under way to increase the provision of live feeds and other easy-to-assemble raw materials that could be quickly disseminated by establishing links with radio stations worldwide. An important breakthrough in that regard was the delivery of Chinese-language programmes to major broadcasting stations in China, as well as in the United States, by electronic audio transfer. Other important developments were the creation of the first audio-visual web page and the posting of brief audio news clips on the UN Radio web page for immediate use by broadcasters. Priority was also given to the development of the news content of programme production. To that end, DPI was engaged in staff training, strengthening co-operation with specialized agencies to generate more diverse programme material and setting up a network of field stringers to expand coverage and enrich programme content.

Similar changes were under way in the visual area to generate greater coverage for UN views and concerns. Finished video products, which were broadcast through cooperative arrangements with the Cable News Network International, were envisaged for posting as streaming video or digital files. The Department purchased equipment and upgraded technical facilities to change to digital television technology. A significant development was the introduction of web pages in all six UN official languages. Future plans for the web site included additions of audio and video elements, a larger volume of older documents and improved presentation and design.

In the context of DPI's reorientation, strengthening working relations with the thematic departments had become a key priority. Working arrangements with departments active in economic and social matters had been reinforced through a process of consultation with department heads. The effect of new technologies in the thematic areas was reflected in an improved capacity to produce better-quality information products more expeditiously and to design them simultaneously for issue in hard copy and on the Internet. DPI was engaged in revitalizing its publications programme and, although it retained its primary focus on the production of print, effective utilization of the electronic media was vital for the Department's outreach. The Yearbook of the United Nations was planning to launch a CD-ROM project incorporating the first 50 volumes, from 1946 to 1996. New web sites for the UN Chronicle and Africa Recovery were being further developed. Development Business, in cooperation with the World Bank, developed a web site version of the publication.

UN international radio broadcasting capacity

The Committee on Information had before it a March report of the Secretary-General on steps taken to design a small-scale pilot project in connection with DPI's direct international radio broadcasting capacity [A/AC.198/1999/5]. The main objective of the project would be to test the technical feasibility, programming capacity and listeners' interest in a UN international radio broadcasting capacity. It would emphasize the production and delivery of timely news packages and current affairs programmes on a daily and weekly basis to wider audiences, using more effective modes of transmission, including satellite distribution and the Internet. DPI had consulted regional and international radio broadcasting organizations on trends in national and international broadcasting, the most suitable programme design for target regions in different languages and the most cost-effective means for the timely delivery of UN radio programming to national and regional audiences. Member States and regional groups were contacted, but were unable to make a commitment regarding broadcasting facilities for the pilot project without consulting their respective broadcasting organizations.

The design and scope of the pilot project would link production capacity, linguistic diversity, telecommunications technology and target audiences. It would seek to provide a daily 5- to 15-minute package of news, interviews and features for broadcast to national and regional audiences in countries and regions where airtime might be made available for that purpose; weekly 10- to 15-minute regional magazines focusing on issues, activities and personalities of exclusive regional interest; special news bulletins covering Security Council and General Assembly meetings of particular interest to specific countries and regions; and a feature programme series on core issues of interest to national, regional and international audiences. The project would cover regions where the six official languages were used as principal languages and would use the most effective radio delivery system available in the target region. The duration of the pilot project would be one year, in two six-month periods, followed by an evaluation. The report described the broadcasting technology available in areas using the six languages.

The Secretary-General said that since no Member State or broadcast organization had made a commitment to provide the technical facilities or to contribute resources for the pilot project, and given the scale of extrabudgetary resources needed for the main project (some $4 million annually), DPI did not plan to initiate the project until there were clear indications of the availability of the resources required. In the meantime, it would continue to harness all affordable aspects of technological innovation in the ongoing modernization of UN Radio.

DPI activities

DPI continued the reorientation of its activities (see p. 547) with a view to projecting the United Nations as an open, transparent and public institution capable of meeting the objectives of the UN Charter, said the Secretary-General in a September report on questions relating to information [A/54/415]. Despite financial constraints, DPI made the UN web site available in all six official languages and increased the availability of audio and video elements on the web site; new elements were introduced, such as web pages on Kosovo and East Timor, the United Nations and civil society, and the United Nations and business.

The Office of the Spokesman of the Secretary-General used Internet technology to expand the audience for its products. Highlights of daily press briefings, information on the Secretary-General's appointments, the schedule of press conferences and other breaking developments were posted on the UN web site. DPI stepped up efforts to reach and establish links with journalists in as many Member States as possible through the web-based United Nations News Service (see p. 547). It produced a CD containing a special series of radio programmes on population and development. The Department continued to strengthen its relationship with television organizations worldwide. In cooperation with the United Nations Population Fund and the United Nations Children's Fund, it co-produced a five-part series of 45-minute documentaries with the German public broadcaster ZDF on the theme "Year of the six billion". DPI continued to enhance its cooperation with NGOs and held the fifty-second annual Conference for NGOs (New York, 15-17 September). Education outreach activities emphasized face-to-face contact, video-conferencing and student days at the United Nations. Other activities included workshops for teachers, briefing programmes for groups and special events. In October, in association with a coalition of NGOs active in distance learning, DPI launched a series of monthly videoconferences on UN issues.

DPI continued to develop thematically integrated information programmes, highlighting the Organization's role in furthering economic and social development, human rights and peace and security. It also focused on the follow-up to the global conferences held earlier in the decade. Publications remained an essential component of DPI's information and media strategy. While moving towards a greater use of electronic media, print remained its most widely accepted and authoritative method of communication. The UN Chronicle, Africa Recovery and Development Business continued to update their respective web pages, thus widening their outreach. Technological advances were also used to improve the timeliness of all four current publications, including the Yearbook of the United Nations.

Library services

The Dag Hammarskjöld Library continued efforts to become a virtual library with a worldwide outreach. New elements added to the Library's web page included the full text of current General Assembly resolutions in English and French, the electronic newsletter Depository News Updates and the "United Nations System Pathfinder", a guide to major references, sources and frequently requested UN and specialized agency reports. Parts of the web page became available in Arabic, Chinese and Russian. To facilitate multilingual subject access to UN databases, including the optical disk system, the Library had undertaken a project to translate the UNBIS Thesaurus (United Nations Bibliographic Information System) into the remaining official languages (Arabic, Chinese, Russian). With the launch of a specialized web page for maps, DPI cartographic services had been expanded significantly. DPI was also moving towards the Geographic Information Systems technology. DPI was cooperating with UN system organizations to develop a standard geographic database of the world using the new technology.

UN information centres

UNICs continued to develop networks with the media, NGOs and the business community to promote a greater understanding of UN priority issues. Some 24 centres thus far had increased their outreach considerably through web sites in local languages, while others made progress in the better use of new communications technology to develop and disseminate electronic news bulletins. Special consideration was given to youth outreach. The centres undertook numerous public information and communications activities geared to local audiences and concerns, and translated relevant information materials into local languages to promote issues relating to special events and observances.

At its 1999 session, the Committee on Information considered an April report of the Secretary-General on the status of the integration of UNICs with UNDP field offices [A/AC.198/1999/3]. The report stated that DPI's ongoing evaluations of UNICs had shown that, while the objectives of the integration exercise remained valid, problems had been encountered in implementation. The Secretary-General's Task Force on the Reorientation of United Nations Public Information Activities [YUN 1997, p. 567] recognized that the experience of integrating UNICs with UN offices under a resident coordinator had "not been uniformly productive".

DPI found that, in general, the integrated information centres had a lower level of programme delivery and a narrower range of activities than those that had not been integrated. Interaction with DPI at Headquarters and the frequency of reporting on activities were also often weaker. Some of the difficulties were the diminished availability of resources and the lack of familiarity on the part of some UNDP resident representatives/UN resident coordinators with DPI's mandate and the work of the UNICs. In terms of cost-effectiveness, integration with UNDP allowed all UNICs to be maintained, despite the abolition of a large number of director posts. Other savings relating to economies of scale or the sharing of common services were more difficult to discern. Benefits gained included a more central location, additional space and better possibilities for coordinating activities with other UN offices. Co-location also enhanced a unified image of the United Nations, one of the original objectives of integration. The sharing of communications networks with UNDP offices in common premises also had not been uniformly positive.

Future action included the development of guidelines, spelling out the operational framework for the integrated information centres; focal points in DPI, UNDP and the United Nations Development Group Office had been designated to do so. DPI would provide input into the performance evaluations of UNDP resident representatives/UN resident coordinators with regard to information functions and would be consulted in selecting them in countries where they served concurrently as centre directors or acting directors. DPI would strengthen its support structure at Headquarters to enhance its liaison with UNDP regarding the operations of the integrated UNICs. To enhance the calibre of the national information officers (local professionals), training opportunities should be increased and exchanges among UNICs in the same region encouraged. Measures to improve their conditions of service and career prospects should also be explored.

The Secretary-General called for a concerted effort to address the problems encountered in implementation of the integration exercise in a number of UNICs. To that end, he had asked DPI and UNDP to strengthen their cooperative relationship.

In a March report [A/AC.198/1999/4], the Secretary-General provided a breakdown of host government assistance to UNICs in 1998.

Development of UN web sites

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/208 C [YUN 1998, p. 1355], the Secretary-General submitted a March report on the continuous development, maintenance and enrichment of UN websites [A/AC.198/1999/6].

The UN web site, which was coordinated, managed and maintained by DPI, currently received some 2.8 million accesses every week from over 140 countries. As the level of available technology developed and staff acquired skills, DPI, in co-operation with other departments and offices, embarked on a project aimed at making the web site available in all official languages.

The report presented three proposals to address the equitable treatment of official languages for consideration by Member States. Proposal A would accord all languages equal treatment on the UN web site regardless of the current availability of materials in other languages or the level of technology in those languages; differences in the availability of material among official languages should be overcome by the end of 2001, as long as the required funding was provided. Proposal B sought to establish the infrastructure to service and provide equitable coverage beginning on 1 January 2001, with the differences at that time addressed over a period of several bienniums, as staff and technological resources were made available. Under proposal C, certain modules would be made available in some languages, while addressing the issue of equality on an incremental basis over a period of several bienniums in accordance with the availability of the required resources.

The Secretary-General concluded that proposals A and B would require a prohibitive level of investment and recurrent maintenance costs. Thus, proposal C seemed to be the preferred option. Language materials in their conventional format would be included in the UN web site to the extent possible, and modules and audio-visual components would be included in accordance with priorities established by the Assembly. Additional activities for ongoing maintenance arrangements for all official languages would depend on available funding.

In October, the Secretary-General presented three further proposals for the multilingual development, maintenance and enrichment of UN web sites [A/AC.198/1999/9 & Corr.1,2], which were viewed as sub-options of proposal C. The first of those proposals entailed the translation and rendering of the contents of the current UN web site into all official languages on an incremental basis, with no time frame for achieving full parity. Under the second option, only selected basic modules, including the audio-visual module, would be translated and made available on an ongoing basis. The third proposal would establish a sound foundation for the current maintenance and enhancement activities of the web site, with provision of content in other languages related to the level of usage of the web site in those languages; additional monitoring of usage levels would be carried out and new modules made available on an ongoing basis as usage levels increased. Modules would not necessarily be translated in their entirety.

The Secretary-General recommended that, before enhancing the UN web site, the current ad hoc arrangements should be formalized so that at least the current status of the maintenance of the site in the six languages could be maintained. Also, minimum investment would need to be made to allow for an increase in web publishing and electronic distribution of adapted multilingual audio-visual products already available in the conventional format. He recommended pursuing the third proposal to ensure a realistic and cost-effective use of limited resources, achieve a balanced linguistic diversity on the web site and establish a sound foundation for its future expansion. Resource requirements were annexed to the report.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions [A/54/7], during its consideration of the 2000-2001 proposed programme budget, requested that cost estimates with a Secretariat-wide plan for the development of the UN web site be submitted to the Assembly at its fifty-fourth (1999) session.

In an October note [A/C.5/54/27], the Secretary-General reported that the resource requirements for the recommended option were estimated at $13.5 million for 2000-2001.

The General Assembly, in resolution 54/251, section XII, of 23 December, took note of the Secretary-General's note.

OIOS review

In March [E/AC.51/1999/4], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) a report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the triennial review of the implementation of CPC recommendations made in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1349] on the evaluation of DPI. OIOS found that DPI had made an effort to follow through on a number of recommendations. However, progress was uneven and the effect of measures adopted in 1997 and 1998, following the reorientation of UN public information activities, needed to be reviewed at a later time, particularly progress in developing partnerships with important redisseminators of information.

CPC recommendations on the issuance of a Secretary-General's bulletin on disclosure of information and on the adoption of a policy for approving new UN publications, aimed at improving the quality of publications, were not implemented. Thus, OIOS recommended that the Secretary-General's bulletin be issued by September 1999 to facilitate prompt access to UN officials by media organizations. The bulletin should provide policy guidelines to encourage officials to speak informally to the media and to accept requests for formal interviews. Regarding improving the quality of publications, it recommended that the Publications Board adopt a policy by year's end that required departments to establish departmental reading committees, or a procedure for peer review of technical publications. Each author department should adopt arrangements adapted to the nature of its work.

CPC, at its thirty-ninth session (New York, 7 June-2 July) [A/54/16], recommended full implementation of the OIOS recommendation regarding the Secretary-General's bulletin. It endorsed the recommendation to improve the quality of publications.

JUNIC

The Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC), the inter-agency Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) body on information activities within the UN system, held its twenty-fifth session in Vienna from 6 to 8 July [ACC/1999/11].

In its discussion of ways to promote better public understanding of the role and achievements of the United Nations, JUNIC members were informed of steps taken to promote a communication culture and the issuance of media guidelines for UN officials. In that regard, the need for training and guidance was stressed, possibly through the facilities offered by the United Nations Staff College, which might receive some funding from the host Government (Italy). JUNIC proposed that the Secretary-General bring the media guidelines to the attention of the executive heads of UN organizations. In view of the complexity and importance of communication issues in building support among UN constituencies, JUNIC reiterated its recommendation that a broad-based discussion on strengthening the information and communication capacity of the UN system be placed on the agenda of forthcoming ACC meetings. JUNIC agreed on the need to develop a joint vision of the common objectives of the UN system as a means of strengthening its sense of unified purpose. It was also agreed to consider further at future sessions the relationship of the organizations of the UN system with the business community.

JUNIC also discussed the work of the Non-Governmental Liaison Service and, in view of its continuing precarious financial situation, urged UN programmes, funds and specialized agencies to strengthen their support for the Service. In other action, the Committee considered a consolidated draft of the 1992 ACC guidelines on the joint participation of the UN system in international expositions and decided that suggestions for changes should be communicated to the Secretariat by 15 September to finalize the text in time for the meeting of the ACC Organizational Committee. JUNIC discussed the work of its Technical Advisory Group on the use of computer technology in public information, system-wide guidelines for posting information on the Internet and arrangements for joint participation in international film competitions, film festivals and media markets.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/54/578], adopted resolutions 54/82 A and B without vote [agenda item 91].

Questions relating to information

Urges all countries, organizations of the United Nations system as a whole and all others concerned, reaffirming their commitment to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and to the principles of freedom of the press and freedom of information, as well as to those of the independence, pluralism and diversity of the media, deeply concerned by the disparities existing between developed and developing countries and the consequences of every kind arising from those disparities that affect the capability of the public, private or other media and individuals in developing countries to disseminate information and communicate their views and their cultural and ethical values through endogenous cultural production, as well as to ensure the diversity of sources and their free access to information, and recognizing the call in this context for what in the United Nations and at various international forums has been termed "a new world information and communication order, seen as an evolving and continuous process":

(a) To cooperate and interact with a view to reducing existing disparities in information flows at all levels by increasing assistance for the development of communication infrastructures and capabilities in developing countries, with due regard for their needs and the priorities attached to such areas by those countries, and in order to enable them and the public, private or other media in developing countries to develop their own information and communication policies freely and independently and increase the participation of media and individuals in the communication process, and to ensure a free flow of information at all levels;

- (ii) The creation of conditions that will enable developing countries and their media, public, private or other, to have, by using their national and regional resources, the communication technology suited to their national needs, as well as the necessary programme material, especially for radio and television broadcasting;

- (iii) Assistance in establishing and promoting telecommunication links at the subregional, regional and interregional levels, especially among developing countries;
- (iv) The facilitation, as appropriate, of access by the developing countries to advanced communication technology available on the open market;

(f) To provide full support for the International Programme for the Development of Communication of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, which should support both public and private media.

United Nations public information policies and activities

The General Assembly,

Reiterating its decision to consolidate the role of the Committee on Information as its main subsidiary body mandated to make recommendations to it relating to the work of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat,

Concurring with the view of the Secretary-General that public information and communications should be placed at the heart of the strategic management of the United Nations, and that a culture of communications should permeate all levels of the Organization, as a means of fully informing the peoples of the world of the aims and activities of the United Nations,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 13(I) of 13 February 1946, in which it established the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat;

2. Welcomes Angola, the Republic of Moldova and Solomon Islands to membership in the Committee on Information;

3. Calls upon the Secretary-General, in respect of the public information policies and activities of the United Nations, to continue to implement fully the recommendations contained in paragraph 2 of its resolution 48/44 B of 10 December 1993 and other mandates as established by the General Assembly;

4. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the reorientation of United Nations activities in the field of public information and communications and encourages him to continue the reorientation exercise, while stressing the need to take into account the views of Member States, and requests him to report thereon to the Committee on Information at its twenty-second session in May 2000;

5. Emphasizes that, through its reorientation, the Department of Public Information should maintain and improve its activities in the areas of special interest to developing countries and, where appropriate, other countries with special needs, including countries in transition, and that such reorientation should contribute to bridging the existing gap between the developing and the developed countries in the crucial field of public information and communications;

6. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on programme 23, Public information, of the proposed medium-term plan for the period 2002-2005 and, emphasizing that the implementation of the broad objectives outlined in the proposal should be in accordance with the objectives set forth in relevant General Assembly resolutions regarding questions relating to information, requests the Secretary-General to proceed with the submission of the proposal to the Committee for Programme and Coordination for consideration, in accordance with section I of General Assembly resolution 53/207 of 18 December 1998;

7. Requests the Secretary-General also to focus in particular on educational institutions as key and indispensable partners of the United Nations in its efforts fully to inform the peoples of the world of its aims and activities;

8. Takes note with appreciation of the efforts of the Secretary-General to strengthen the public information capacity of the Department of Public Information for the formation and day-to-day functioning of the information components of peacekeeping and other field operations of the United Nations, and requests the Secretariat to continue to ensure the involvement of the Department from the planning stage of such future operations through interdepartmental consultations and coordination with other substantive departments of the Secretariat;

9. Encourages the Secretary-General further to strengthen consultative arrangements between the Department of Public Information and other substantive departments of the Secretariat, in particular those dealing with development issues;

10. Recalls its resolution 53/22 of 4 November 1998 concerning the proclamation of 2001 as the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations, and encourages the Secretary-General to strengthen the public information capacity of the Department of Public Information with a view to disseminating information on and drawing international attention to the dialogue among civilizations and the impact it could have on promoting mutual understanding, tolerance, peaceful coexistence and international cooperation;

11. Also recalls its resolution 53/202 of 17 December 1998 concerning the designation of the fifty-fifth session of the General Assembly as the Millennium Assembly of the United Nations and the convening, as an integral part of the Millennium Assembly, of the Millennium Summit of the United Nations, and encourages the Secretary-General to formulate and implement an effective public information strategy in this regard so as to ensure that the Summit will enjoy broad international support;

12. Emphasizes that all publications of the Department of Public Information should fulfil an identifiable need, should not duplicate other publications of the United Nations system and should be produced in a cost-effective manner;

13. Takes note with appreciation of the efforts of the Secretary-General to move the Dag Hammarskjöld Library in the direction of a virtual library, and requests him, at the same time, to enrich the stock of books and journals in the Library, including publications on peace and security and development-related issues, in order to ensure that it continues to be a broadly accessible resource for information about the United Nations and its activities;

14. Urges the Secretary-General to exert all efforts to ensure that publications and other information services of the Secretariat, including the United Nations

Web site, contain comprehensive, objective and equitable information about the issues before the Organization and that they maintain editorial independence, impartiality, accuracy and full consistency with resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly;

15. Notes that the request made to the Secretary-General, in its resolution 53/59 B of 3 December 1998, to ensure full and direct access for the representatives of Member States to the briefings organized at Headquarters by the Office of the Spokesman for the Secretary-General and to ensure wider outreach of the outcome of such briefings has not been implemented, and therefore reiterates that request;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that information presented to the media is made available to delegations fully and in a timely fashion;

17. Reaffirms the importance attached by Member States to the role of United Nations information centres in effectively and comprehensively disseminating information in all parts of the world, in particular in developing countries and countries in transition, and especially in those countries where there is need for a better understanding of United Nations activities;

18. Also reaffirms the importance of all United Nations information centres meeting the primary objectives outlined by the Committee on Information in its report on its ninth session;

19. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the integration of United Nations information centres with field offices of the United Nations Development Programme, in which he notes that the objectives of the integration exercise remain valid, and notes his intention to make a concerted effort to address the problems encountered in the implementation of the integration exercise in a number of information centres;

20. Notes with concern that, while the co-location of United Nations information centres with field offices of the United Nations Development Programme has, to some extent, been able to enhance the image of the United Nations, the integration of United Nations information centres with field offices of the Programme has, in general, resulted in a lower level of programme delivery and a narrower range of activities and, in cases of relocation of information centres to common premises with the Programme, has frequently resulted in higher maintenance costs and leadership and staff problems, and that, to a large extent, the policy of integration has not in all cases achieved its stated objective of performing functions efficiently, effectively and in a cost-effective manner;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to carry out a case-by-case review and submit his proposals on the functioning of the integrated centres on a priority basis, in full consultation with the host Governments, and to submit a report to the Committee on Information at its twenty-second session;

22. Notes that the Department of Public Information intends to prepare, in collaboration with the United Nations Development Programme, a set of guidelines indicating the operational framework for the integrated centres, and requests the Secretary-General to report on the guidelines, prior to their implementation, to the Committee on Information at its twenty-second session;

23. Reaffirms the role of the General Assembly in relation to the opening of new United Nations information centres, and invites the Secretary-General to make such recommendations as he may consider necessary regarding the establishment and location of such centres;

24. Takes note of the information provided by the Secretary-General in his report concerning the allocation of resources to United Nations information centres in 1998, and calls upon him to continue to study ways and means of rationalizing and effecting the equitable disbursement of available resources to all United Nations information centres and to report thereon to the Committee on Information at its twenty-second session;

25. Welcomes the action taken by some Member States with regard to providing financial and material support to United Nations information centres in their respective capitals, and invites the Secretary-General, through the Department of Public Information, to consult Member States, where appropriate, on the possibility of providing the centres with additional voluntary support on a national basis, bearing in mind that such support should not be a substitute for the full allocation of financial requirements for the United Nations information centres in the context of the programme budget of the United Nations;

26. Welcomes also the requests by Croatia, Gabon, Guinea, Haiti, Jamaica and Kyrgyzstan for information centres or information components;

27. Recognizes the continuing enhanced co-operation between the Department of Public Information and the University for Peace in Costa Rica as a focal point for promoting United Nations activities and disseminating United Nations information materials, and requests the Secretary-General to report on those activities;

28. Expresses its full support for wide, accurate, equal and prompt coverage of United Nations activities through the continuation and improvement of United Nations press releases, stresses the importance of having these press releases issued in all official languages of the United Nations, and requests other relevant bodies of the General Assembly to give due consideration to this matter;

29. Stresses that radio is one of the most cost-effective and far-reaching media available to the Department of Public Information and an important instrument in United Nations activities, such as development and peacekeeping, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 48/44 B;

30. Encourages further increasing the number of programmes of United Nations Radio, in all available languages, on the United Nations site on the Internet;

31. Requests the Secretary-General to implement fully the recommendations contained in paragraph 9 of General Assembly resolution 38/82 B of 15 December 1983 with regard to the introduction of full programming in French and Creole in the work programme of the Caribbean Unit of United Nations Radio;

32. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the design and scope of a pilot project for the development of an international radio broadcasting capacity for the United Nations, and requests the Department of Public Information to start, as soon as possible, the implementation of the pilot project through, inter alia, contacts with interested Member States and specialized institutions, with a view to ensuring the assistance necessary for the success of the project, taking into account the need to enhance the existing resources and services, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a progress report on the implementation of this project to the Committee on Information at its twenty-second session;

33. Underlines the continuing importance of using traditional and mass media channels to disseminate information on the United Nations, and encourages the Secretary-General, through the Department of Public Information, to continue to take full advantage of recent developments in information technologies, including the Internet, in order to improve, in a cost-effective manner, the dissemination of information on the United Nations, in accordance with the priorities established by the General Assembly and taking into account the linguistic diversity of the Organization;

34. Takes note of efforts by some United Nations information centres to establish their own Web pages in local languages, and recommends that the Department of Public Information encourage other information centres to develop Web pages in the respective local languages of their host countries;

35. Takes note with appreciation, with reference to the report of the Secretary-General on the continuous development, maintenance and enrichment of United Nations Web sites and the report of the Secretary-General on the multilingual development, maintenance and enrichment of United Nations Web sites, of the efforts of the Secretary-General to develop and enhance the United Nations Web sites in all official languages of the Organization, requests him to pursue these efforts and to continue to develop proposals for consideration by the Committee on Information at its twenty-second session, having in mind the goal of achieving modular parity among official languages, stressing that this goal should be achieved in a cost-effective manner and with a focus on textual content;

36. Welcomes the establishment of the Geneva Diplomatic Community Network, which has improved the dissemination of information among the permanent missions, the United Nations Office at Geneva and the other international organizations based in Geneva, and requests the Secretary-General to continue providing his support to this important programme;

37. Expresses its appreciation for the ongoing programme for broadcasters and journalists from developing countries and countries in transition conducted by the Department of Public Information, and calls for its further expansion so as to include a larger number of trainees from developing countries;

38. Acknowledges the important work carried out by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and its collaboration with news agencies and broadcasting organizations in developing countries in disseminating information on priority issues;

39. Requests the Department of Public Information to continue to ensure the greatest possible access for United Nations guided tours, and to ensure that displays in public areas are kept as informative, up-to-date, relevant and technologically innovative as possible;

40. Recalls its resolutions concerning the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster, in particular resolutions 51/138 B of 13 December 1996 and 52/172 of 16 December 1997, and encourages the Department of Public Information, in cooperation with the countries concerned and with the relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to continue to take appropriate measures to enhance world public awareness of the consequences of that disaster;

41. Recalls also its resolution 53/1 H of 16 November 1998, concerning international cooperation and coordination for the human and ecological rehabilitation of the Semipalatinsk region of Kazakhstan, which has been affected by nuclear tests, and encourages the Department of Public Information, in cooperation with relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to take appropriate measures to enhance world public awareness of the problems and needs of the Semipalatinsk region;

42. Recalls its resolution 53/59 B of 3 December 1998 and urges the Department of Public Information to take the necessary measures, through the provision of relevant and objective information, with a view to achieving the major objectives set forth in the report of the Secretary-General on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa;

43. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Committee on Information at its twenty-second session and to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the activities of the Department of Public Information and on the implementation of the recommendations contained in the present resolution;

44. Requests the Committee on Information to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

45. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Questions relating to information".

Information and communications in the context of international security

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/70 [YUN 1998, p. 38], the Secretary-General, in an August report [A/54/213], transmitted the views of 10 Member States on the general appreciation of the issues of international security; the definition of basic notions related to information security, including unauthorized interference with or misuse of information and telecommunications systems and information resources; and the advisability of developing international principles to enhance the security of global information and telecommunications systems and help combat information terrorism and criminality.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First (Disarmament and International Security) Committee [A/54/558], adopted resolution 54/49 without vote [agenda item 71].

Developments in the field of information and telecommunications in the context of international security

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/70 of 4 December 1998,

Recalling also its resolutions on the role of science and technology in the context of international security, in which, inter alia, it recognized that scientific and technological developments could have both civilian and military applications and that progress in science and technology for civilian applications needed to be maintained and encouraged,

Noting that considerable progress has been achieved in developing and applying the latest information technologies and means of telecommunication,

Affirming that it sees in this process the broadest positive opportunities for the further development of civilization, the expansion of opportunities for cooperation for the common good of all States, the enhancement of the creative potential of mankind and additional improvements in the circulation of information in the global community,

Recalling in this connection the approaches and principles outlined at the Information Society and Development Conference, held at Midrand, South Africa, from 13 to 15 May 1996,

Taking note of the results of the Ministerial Conference on Terrorism, held in Paris on 30 July 1996, and of the recommendations it made,

Noting that the dissemination and use of information technologies and means affect the interests of the entire international community and that optimum effectiveness is enhanced by broad international cooperation,

Expressing concern that these technologies and means can potentially be used for purposes that are inconsistent with the objectives of maintaining international stability and security and may adversely affect the security of States in both civilian and military fields,

Considering that it is necessary to prevent the misuse or exploitation of information resources or technologies for criminal or terrorist purposes,

Noting the contribution of those Member States that have submitted their assessments on issues of information security to the Secretary-General pursuant to paragraphs 1 to 3 of resolution 53/70,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General containing those assessments,

Welcoming the timely initiative taken by the Secretariat and the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research in convening an international meeting of experts at Geneva in August 1999 on developments in the field of information and telecommunications in the context of international security,

Considering that the assessments of Member States contained in the report of the Secretary-General and the international meeting of experts have contributed to a better understanding of the substance of issues of international information security, related notions and possible measures to limit the threats emerging in this field,

1. Calls upon Member States to promote further at multilateral levels the consideration of existing and potential threats in the field of information security;

2. Invites all Member States to continue to inform the Secretary-General of their views and assessments on the following questions:

(a) General appreciation of the issues of information security;

(b) Definition of basic notions related to information security, including unauthorized interference with or misuse of information and telecommunications systems and information resources;

(c) Advisability of developing international principles that would enhance the security of global information and telecommunications systems and help to combat information terrorism and criminality;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Developments in the field of information and telecommunications in the context of international security".

Peaceful uses of outer space

UNISPACE III

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/56 [YUN 1997, p. 579], the Third United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE III) was held in Vienna from 19 to 30 July [A/CONF.184/6] as a special session of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (Committee on Outer Space), under the theme "Space benefits for humanity in the twenty-first century".

The purpose of the Conference was to review the advances in space science and technology that had taken place since the Second Conference in 1982 [YUN 1982, p. 162], with a view to promoting their greater use, particularly by developing countries, in all areas of scientific, economic, social and cultural development.

On 30 July, the participants adopted a resolution entitled "The Space Millennium: Vienna Declaration on Space and Human Development", by which they declared a strategy to protect Earth's environment and manage its resources; use space applications for human security, development and welfare; advance scientific knowledge of space and protect the space environment; enhance education and training and ensure public awareness of the importance of space activities; and strengthen and reposition space activities in the UN system.

The Conference was attended by 98 Member States, Switzerland and the Holy See and the observer for Palestine. Also in attendance were the secretariats of UN regional commissions, several specialized agencies and UN programmes, inter-governmental organizations, international organizations having permanent observer status with the Committee on Outer Space and organizations not having permanent observer status, in addition to representatives of a large number of NGOs and space industries.

The Conference established two main committees and a Technical Forum. Committee I dealt with the status of the scientific knowledge of Earth and its environment; the benefits of basic space science and capacity-building; information needs; and the promotion of international cooperation [A/CONF.184/L.17]. Committee II considered the status and applications of space science and technology; and economic and societal benefits of space technology [A/CONF.184/L.18]. The Technical Forum, which examined issues of space science, technology and law, consisted of 38 seminars, workshops, symposia, scientific and technical forums, round tables and panel discussions. The conclusions and proposals emanating from the Technical Forum were annexed to the report of the Conference.

By an October note [A/54/476], the Secretary-General drew to the General Assembly's attention the report of the Conference.

Preparations for UNISPACE III

The Committee on Outer Space, at its forty-second session in Vienna from 14 to 16 July [A/54/20 & Corr.1], acting as the Preparatory Committee for UNISPACE III, continued to consider preparations for the Conference and reviewed the reports of the 1999 sessions of its Scientific and Technical and Legal Subcommittees on issues assigned to them by General Assembly resolution 53/45 [YUN 1998, p. 593]. The Preparatory Committee noted that the Advisory Committee (the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee) had convened the Working Group of the Whole to assist it in finalizing its preparatory work for UNISPACE III. The Working Group considered the revised draft text of the Conference's report and the revised draft text of the Vienna declaration on space and human development, as well as the recommendations of the regional preparatory conferences for UNISPACE III for Asia and the Pacific, Africa and the Middle East [A/CONF.184/PC/L.5] and for Latin America and the Caribbean and Eastern Europe [A/CONF.184/PC/L.5/Add.1]. In 1999, a regional preparatory conference for UNISPACE III for Eastern Europe took place (Bucharest, Romania, 25-29 January) [A/CONF.184/PC/5].

As part of the follow-up to UNISPACE III, the Preparatory Committee agreed that the executive secretariat should prepare a report on organizational matters relating to UNISPACE III to provide other entities of the UN system with guidelines on using existing resources to organize a conference on global issues. The report was submitted to the Assembly's Fourth Committee in October [A/C.4/54/9]. The Preparatory Committee recommended that the Working Group of the Whole be reconvened by the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee at its thirty-seventh (2000) session to assist the Subcommittee in considering its future work in the light of UNISPACE III recommendations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/54/574], adopted resolution 54/68 without vote [agenda item 87].

Scientific and Technical Subcommittee

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee of the Committee on Outer Space, at its thirty-sixth session (Vienna, 22-26 February) [A/AC.105/719], reviewed preparations for UNISPACE III, the United Nations Programme on Space Applications and space debris.

UN Programme on Space Applications

The United Nations Programme on Space Applications, as mandated by General Assembly resolution 37/90 [YUN 1982, p. 163], continued to focus on developing indigenous capability at the local level in space science and technology through long-range training fellowships, technical advisory services, regional and international training courses and conferences; acquiring and disseminating space-related information; and promoting cooperation between developed and developing countries.

As indicated by the UN Expert on Space Applications in his report to the Subcommittee [A/AC.105/730], pursuant to Assembly resolution 45/72 (YUN 1990, p. 99), the Programme continued to work with Member States to establish regional centres for space science and technology education in developing countries. Jordan, which was identified as the host country for a space science and technology education centre in western Asia, was asked to prepare a draft agreement to be entered into by all the countries of the region. Other centres were operating in Africa (Morocco and Nigeria); Asia and the Pacific (India); and Latin America and the Caribbean (Brazil). A meeting of national coordinators on the proposed network of space science and technology education and research institutions for Central, Eastern and South-Eastern Europe (Sofia, Bulgaria, 21-22 October) made progress towards finalizing a draft text of an agreement to establish the network. The Office for Outer Space Affairs would also prepare for signature a cooperation agreement between the Office and the network.

The Programme held six training courses, workshops and conferences in 1999, including one preparatory meeting for UNISPACE III. It received three fellowship offers from the European Space Agency for 1999-2000. Various technical advisory services were also provided under the Programme.

The Subcommittee, noting that the Programme was the priority activity of the Office for Outer Space Affairs, expressed concern over its limited financial resources and appealed for voluntary contributions from Member States.

The Assembly, in resolution 54/67 (see p. 560), endorsed the 2000 UN Programme on Space Applications, as proposed by the Expert on Space Applications.

Scientific and technical issues

Space debris

In 1999, the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee agreed that international cooperation was needed to expand strategies to minimize the potential impact of space debris on future space missions. It considered information received from 14 States on their space programmes, including information on the spin-off benefits of space activities [A/AC.105/729 & Add.1], and noted the replies received from five States [A/AC.105/708 & Add.1,2] in response to its request for information on national research on space debris, the safety of nuclear-powered satellites and the problems of collisions of nuclear-powered sources with space debris. Further replies were received by December from six additional States [A/AC.105/731]. The Subcommittee adopted the final text of the technical report on space debris [A/AC.105/707]. In the Subcommittee, the view was expressed that there was a need to develop a common database for space debris that could serve as a clearing house of information for the international community for research.

The Committee on Outer Space agreed with the Subcommittee's recommendations that the Inter-Agency Space Debris Coordination Committee (IADC) should continue to brief the Subcommittee annually on space debris and that efforts should continue to model and characterize the debris environment. It also agreed that the Subcommittee in 2000 should review international application of the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) standards and IADC recommendations concerning the disposal of satellites at the end of their useful life. The Committee further recommended that the Secretariat should compile relevant data on space objects in geosynchronous orbit.

In response to that request, the Secretariat submitted a December report on the disposal of satellites in geosynchronous orbit [A/AC.105/734], which concluded that, because the ITU standards and IADC recommendations had been developed only recently and were not mandatory, it was difficult to evaluate their international application. Although most satellite operators were aware of the seriousness of the situation near the geostationary satellite orbit and had acknowledged the wisdom of taking some mitigation measures, because of technical and managerial problems even self-imposed guidelines were not being followed in many cases. For geostationary orbit-protection measures to become effective, a broad international consensus should be reached on the guidelines, and their implementation systematically monitored.

Legal Subcommittee

The Legal Subcommittee, at its thirty-eighth session (Vienna, 1-5 March) [A/AC.105/721], again considered, through its working group, the definition and delimitation of outer space and the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit, including ways to ensure its rational and equitable use, without prejudice to ITU's role. The Subcommittee agreed that a working paper submitted by the Czech Republic [A/AC.105/C.1/L.216] to the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee provided a scientific and technical basis for further discussions.

A working group established by the Subcommittee continued to review the status of the five legal instruments governing outer space: the 1966 Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2222(XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 41]; the 1967 Agreement on the Rescue of Astronauts, the Return of Astronauts and the Return of Objects Launched into Outer Space, adopted in resolution 2345(XXII) [YUN 1967, p. 33]; the 1971 Convention on International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects, contained in resolution 2777(XXVI) [YUN 1971, p. 52]; the 1974 Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space, contained in resolution 3235(XXIX) [YUN 1974, p. 63]; and the 1979 Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, contained in resolution 34/68 [YUN 1979, p.111].

The working group recommended a series of measures to achieve the fullest adherence to the five instruments: States not parties to them should be invited to consider ratifying or acceding to them; States should be invited to consider making a declaration, in accordance with Assembly resolution 2777(XXVI), thereby binding themselves on a reciprocal basis to the decisions of the Claims Commission, established in the event of a dispute in terms of the provisions of the 1971 Convention; and the issue of the strict compliance by States with the provisions of instruments governing outer space to which they were currently parties should be examined further to identify measures to encourage full compliance.

In response to a 1998 request of the Subcommittee [YUN 1998, p. 593], the Secretariat, in June [A/AC.105/724], submitted a list of international agreements and other available legal documents relevant to space-related activities. A revised version of the list, incorporating the comments of Member States, had been published in a booklet, International Agreements and Other Available Legal Documents Relevant to Space-related Activities, for reference during UNISPACE III.

In accordance with its 1998 recommendation [YUN 1998, p. 593], the Subcommittee suspended consideration of the 1992 Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space [YUN 1992, p. 116], pending the results of deliberations in the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/54/574], adopted resolution 54/67 without vote [agenda item 87].

24. Also recommends that more attention be paid to all aspects related to the protection and the preservation of the outer space environment, especially those potentially affecting the Earth's environment;

25. Considers that it is essential that Member States pay more attention to the problem of collisions of space objects, including those with nuclear power sources, with space debris, and other aspects of space debris, calls for the continuation of national research on this question, for the development of improved technology for the monitoring of space debris and for the compilation and dissemination of data on space debris, also considers that, to the extent possible, information thereon should be provided to the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, and agrees that international cooperation is needed to expand appropriate and affordable strategies to minimize the impact of space debris on future space missions;

26. Urges all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the goal of preventing an arms race in outer space as an essential condition for the promotion of international cooperation in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes;

27. Emphasizes the need to increase the benefits of space technology and its applications and to contribute to an orderly growth of space activities favourable to sustained economic growth and sustainable development in all countries, in particular in the developing countries, and mitigation of the consequences of natural disasters;

28. Takes note of the interest of some developing countries, as well as other countries, in becoming members of the Committee, and requests the continued examination of the subject of increasing the number of members of the Committee;

29. Requests the Committee to resume its consideration, at its forty-third session, as a matter of priority, of ways and means of maintaining outer space for peaceful purposes and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

30. Also requests the Committee to resume its consideration, at its forty-third session, of the item entitled "Spin-off benefits of space technology: review of current status";

31. Requests the specialized agencies and other international organizations to continue and, where appropriate, enhance their cooperation with the Committee and to provide it with progress reports on their work relating to the peaceful uses of outer space;

32. Requests the Committee to continue its work, in accordance with the present resolution, to consider, as appropriate, new projects in outer space activities and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session, including its views on which subjects should be studied in the future.

Effects of atomic radiation

The United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation held its forty-eighth session in Vienna from 12 to 16 April [A/54/46]. The Committee, responding to General Assembly resolution 53/44 [YUN 1998, p. 596], continued to review problems of radiation doses and effects. It reported that its deliberations focused on a review of documents prepared by the Secretariat on subjects that the Committee had selected as the most important topics for further study, including exposures from natural radiation sources; exposures from man-made sources of radiation; medical radiation exposures; occupational radiation exposures; dose assessment methodologies; epidemiological evaluation of radiation-induced cancer; DNA repair and mutagenesis; hereditary effects of radiation; combined effects of radiation and other agents; biological effects at low radiation doses—models, mechanisms and uncertainties; and exposures and effects of the Chernobyl accident. The Committee made suggestions for the further development of those topics.

The Committee expected to complete its current assessments and publish its findings in the year 2000.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/54/573], adopted resolution 54/66 without vote [agenda item 86].

Effects of atomic radiation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 913(X) of 3 December 1955, by which it established the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, and its subsequent resolutions on the subject, including resolution 53/44 of 3 December 1998, in which, inter alia, it requested the Scientific Committee to continue its work,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation,

Reaffirming the desirability of the Scientific Committee continuing its work,

Noting the views expressed by Member States at its fifty-fourth session with regard to the work of the Scientific Committee,

Conscious of the continuing need to examine and compile information about atomic and ionizing radiation and to analyse its effects on mankind and the environment,

1. Commends the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation for the valuable contribution it has been making in the course of the past forty-four years, since its inception, to wider knowledge and understanding of the levels, effects and risks of atomic radiation, and for fulfilling its original mandate with scientific authority and independence of judgement;

2. Reaffirms the decision to maintain the present functions and independent role of the Scientific Committee, including the present reporting arrangements;

7. Expresses its appreciation for the assistance rendered to the Scientific Committee by Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and non-governmental organizations, and invites them to increase their cooperation in this field;

8. Welcomes, in this context, the readiness of Member States to provide the Scientific Committee with relevant information on the effects of atomic radiation in affected areas, and invites the Scientific Committee to analyse and give due consideration to such information, particularly in the light of its own findings;

9. Invites Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations concerned to provide further relevant data about doses, effects and risks from various sources of radiation, which would greatly help in the preparation of future reports of the Scientific Committee to the General Assembly.

Millennium Assembly

In accordance with the General Assembly's decision in resolution 53/202 [YUN 1998, p. 598] to designate its fifty-fifth (2000) session as the Millennium Assembly and to convene as part of the Assembly a Millennium Summit, the Secretary-General, in a May report with later addendum [A/53/948 & Add.1], proposed as the overall theme "The United Nations in the twenty-first century". He suggested that sub-topics of the Summit focus on peace and security, including disarmament; development, including poverty eradication; human rights; and strengthening the United Nations. The report contained other proposals submitted during informal consultations of the plenary.

By resolution 53/239 of 8 June, the Assembly decided that the Millennium Summit should begin on Wednesday, 6 September 2000 (see p. 1269).

Chapter I

Promotion of human rights

In 1999, the United Nations continued its activities to promote and protect human rights through the Commission on Human Rights and its subsidiary body—the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, renamed in July the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights. The Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights proceeded with its increasing responsibilities in the United Nations system-wide, in national, regional and international coordination and implementation of human rights, and in the provision of advisory services and technical cooperation.

Human rights instruments and their monitoring bodies promoted civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, and addressed racial discrimination, discrimination against women and migrants, the protection of children, and torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. During the year, the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Convention on the Rights of the Child was commemorated.

In September, the General Assembly adopted the Declaration and Programme of Action on a Culture of Peace to guide Governments, international organizations and civil society in promoting and strengthening a culture of peace in the new millennium.

UN machinery

Commission on Human Rights

The Commission on Human Rights held its fifty-fifth session in Geneva from 22 March to 30 April [E/1999/23], during which it adopted 82 resolutions and 13 decisions. The Commission recommended one draft resolution and 31 draft decisions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council. By decision 1999/288 of 30 July, the Council took note of the Commission's report. In September, the Commission held a special session on the human rights situation in East Timor, convened in response to reports of widespread violence and serious human rights violations following the popular consultation on the future status of the country [E/1999/23/Add.1] (see PART TWO, Chapter III).

On 23 March [dec. 1999/101], the Commission invited special representatives, special rapporteurs, chairmen/rapporteurs of various working groups and experts to participate in its meetings.

In response to a 1998 Commission request [YUN 1998, p. 601], the Bureau reviewed the Commission's mechanisms to enhance their effectiveness [E/CN.4/1999/104 & Corr.1]. The Bureau presented 13 recommendations, supporting observations and related proposals for consideration by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights or, in some cases, by the Secretary-General. On 26 February [E/CN.4/1999/120], Algeria, Bhutan, China, Cuba, Egypt, India, Iran, Malaysia, Myanmar, Nepal, Pakistan, Sri Lanka, the Sudan and Viet Nam transmitted their comments, observations and alternate recommendations on the report of the Bureau. On 9 March [E/CN.4/1999/124], the Asian Group transmitted a position paper on the Bureau's report. In a statement made by the Chairperson on behalf of the Commission on 29 April [E/1999/23], the Commission decided to establish an inter-sessional open-ended working group to continue to examine the Bureau report, as well as other contributions thereto. The Commission requested the chair of the group to report in 2000, including recommendations for endorsement by the Commission, and authorized the group to meet for 15 working days prior to its 2000 session. The Commission recommended that the Economic and Social Council include in its resumed organizational session consideration of proposals regarding special procedures mandates adopted at the Commission's annual session, and that the title of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities be changed to Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights. By decision 1999/256 of 27 July, the Council endorsed the Commission's decisions and approved its recommendations.

The Subcommission, on 26 August [E/CN.4/2000/2 (dec. 1999/115)], expressing concern at the Bureau's view that the Subcommission was the most expensive of the Commission's subsidiary mechanisms, decided to ask the Secretary-General to submit to the working group and to the Commission in 2000 official data on all the respective estimated costs during the current biennium of the activities carried out by or programmed for the Subcommission, the Commission and all other mechanisms of the Commission mentioned by the Bureau.

The Working Group on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights met twice in 1999 (Geneva, 28 September-1 October and 6-10 December) [E/CN.4/2000/112]. Further meetings were scheduled for 2000.

Organization of work in 2000

The Commission considered a January note by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/1999/109] containing statistical data regarding its 1998 session intended to assist it with the organization of its work in 1999.

On 28 April [dec. 1999/112], the Commission decided that its fifty-sixth session should take place from 20 March to 28 April 2000. On 27 July, by decision 1999/254, the Economic and Social Council approved that decision.

Also on 28 April [dec. 1999/113], the Commission recommended that the Council authorize 30 fully serviced additional meetings, to be utilized only if necessary, for the Commission's 2000 session, and requested its Chairperson to make every effort to organize the session's work within the times normally allotted. By decision 1999/255 of 27 July, the Council authorized the additional meetings and approved the request to the Chairperson.

Thematic procedures

Pursuant to a 1998 Commission resolution [YUN 1998, p. 602], the Secretariat, in March [E/CN.4/1999/96], provided documentary references to the conclusions and recommendations of thematic special rapporteurs and working groups. Regarding the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to convene further periodic meetings of all thematic special rapporteurs, representatives, experts and chairpersons of working groups to enable them to continue to exchange views, cooperate and coordinate more closely and make recommendations, a meeting was held in 1998, the report of which [E/CN.4/1999/3 & Corr.1 & Add.1 & Add.1/Corr.1,2] was considered by the Commission in 1999.

On 28 April [dec. 1999/110], the Commission decided to consider human rights and thematic procedures in 2000.

Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights

1999 session

The Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, formerly the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities (see above), at its fifty-first session (Geneva, 2-27 August) [E/CN.4/2000/2], adopted 30 resolutions and 17 decisions, and recommended nine draft decisions for adoption by the Commission.

The Subcommission adopted decisions on voting by secret ballot whenever a vote was requested on proposals pertaining to allegations of violations of human rights [dec. 1999/104], and on the composition of its inter-sessional and pre-sessional working groups [dec. 1999/116]. The former decision was adopted by a roll-call vote of 23 to 1.

Review of Subcommission work

Report of Subcommission Chairman. The Commission on Human Rights had before it a report [E/CN.4/1999/84], submitted in response to its 1998 request [YUN 1998, p. 602] and prepared by the Subcommission's 1998 Chairperson, El-Hadji Guissé (Senegal), describing the steps taken to reform and improve the Subcommission's methods of work.

Commission action. On 28 April [res. 1999/81], the Commission, welcoming the steps taken by the Subcommission, asked it to continue to avoid duplication with Commission work, to improve further its methods of work and to devote sufficient time in 1999 to its working methods.

The Commission authorized the Subcommission to organize its 1999 four-week session so that it held not more than 30 public meetings and decided that the Subcommission should meet in closed session to consider the implementation of the present resolution; the Subcommission was asked to report in 2000 on the results of its consideration of its methods of work.

The Commission Chairperson was invited to address the Subcommission on the Commission's debate under the item. The Secretary-General was asked to ensure that documents were available in all UN official languages prior to each Subcommission session and, in responding to requests from the Subcommission to solicit information from Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to agree to the requests only after they were approved by the Commission. The Subcommission Chairperson was requested to report in 2000.

Subcommission action. On 3 August [dec. 1999/102], the Subcommission established a sessional working group on its methods of work. The working group met on 9, 11 and 13 August [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/22] to examine the working paper on rules of procedure, guidelines, decisions and practices applicable to the Subcommission [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/2], prepared by Ribot Hatano (Japan). Annexed to the working group's report were "Guidelines for the application by the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights of the rules of procedure of the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council and other decisions and practices related thereto", as revised by the group. On 26 August [dec. 1999/114], the Subcommission transmitted the guidelines to the Commission. It asked the High Commissioner for Human Rights to disseminate the guidelines in printed form in order to make them readily accessible to Subcommission participants.

In an August note [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/47], the Subcommission Chairperson stated that, as proposed by the Bureau of the Commission [E/CN.4/1999/104], the Subcommission held a discussion of its future functions and the consequences thereof for its working time, its methods of work, its composition and the election of its members. The Chairperson presented the conclusions agreed upon. Annexed to the report was a summary of discussions held by the Working Group on Communications concerning the procedure established under Economic and Social Council resolution 1503(XLVIII) [YUN 1970, p. 530] to deal with communications alleging denial or violation of human rights.

Areas of Subcommission work

Note by Secretary-General. In June [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/23], the Secretary-General reviewed developments between 1 June 1998 and 1 June 1999 in areas with which the Subcommission had been concerned. They related to the status and monitoring bodies of the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination [YUN 1965, p. 440, GA res. 2106 A (XX)], the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights [YUN 1966, pp. 419 & 423, GA res. 2200 A (XXI)], the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment [YUN 1984, p. 813, GA res. 39/46], the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child [YUN 1989, p. 560, GA res. 44/25] and the 1990 International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families [YUN 1990, p. 594, GA res. 45/158].

ILO report. In July, the International Labour Organization (ILO) submitted a memorandum concerning ratifications of ILO conventions relating to the concerns of the Subcommission [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/24]. The conventions dealt with forced labour, discrimination, freedom of association, migrant workers, indigenous and tribal peoples, minimum age and vocational rehabilitation. The ILO Conference in June adopted the Convention and Recommendation on the elimination of the worst forms of child labour. ILO activities were described regarding the prevention of discrimination, action against discrimination based on HIV/AIDS and the situation of Arab workers of the occupied Arab territories.

Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights

Reports of High Commissioner. In her annual report to the Commission on Human Rights [E/CN.4/1999/9], submitted in March, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, Mary Robinson (Ireland), summarized key areas of the human rights programme of particular interest to the Commission and presented the evolving orientations and trends in the Office of the High Commissioner (OHCHR). She stated that particular attention was being given to national strategies and systems, the integration of human rights in all areas of endeavour, the development of respect for human rights through education and promotional activities, efforts for human rights protection, universal implementation of the rights of the child, promoting equality and combating discrimination, responding to emerging problems affecting the enjoyment of human rights and harnessing the energies of new actors in the global quest to uphold respect for human rights. OHCHR was emphasizing professionalism and quality control, and arrangements and policies were developed to support field presences.

Areas dealt with in the report were: human rights violations; the rights of the child; gender and the human rights of women; the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance (see p. 602); the right to development; technical cooperation, national strategies, national institutions and education; field presences; civil society and non-governmental organizations (NGOs); the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights [YUN 1998, p. 615] and the five-year review of the implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action [ibid., p. 626]; and strengthening UN machinery for the promotion and protection of human rights.

The High Commissioner concluded that the gap between human rights rhetoric and the reality of the lives of millions of human beings was the tragedy of the times. Genocide and mass killings were still part of the world and over 1 billion human beings were denied the basic material elements of life—food, shelter and access to health care. Similar large numbers were denied access to basic education and many were persecuted because of their race, religion or ethnic origin. Torture and arbitrary executions were commonplace and democratic participation in Government was denied to millions as corruption undermined the integrity of Government and the rule of law. Other challenges to human rights were scientific and technological developments in areas such as genetics, human cloning and biotechnology. The United Nations and the international community had much to contribute to overcome those challenges. However, the main responsibility was at the national level, with Governments, civil society and individuals.

In a July report [E/1999/96], the High Commissioner provided an overview of developments in the implementation of economic, social and cultural rights at the international level (see next chapter). By decision 1999/288 of 30 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of that report.

In a September report [A/54/36], the High Commissioner presented an overview of the main activities of OHCHR to promote and protect human rights and information on specific areas, including widespread violations of human rights (East Timor, Kosovo, Sierra Leone (see PART TWO, Chapter III), civilians in armed conflict (see p. 647)); the implementation and protection of human rights (see next chapter); regional human rights cooperation (see p. 582); the right to development and economic, social and cultural rights (see p. 651); globalization and human rights (see p. 655); the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance (see p. 602); indigenous people (see p. 681); minorities (see p. 615); and gender issues and the human rights of women (see pp. 659 and 666).

On 17 December, the General Assembly took note of the September report (decision 54/434) and the report of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/54/605/Add.5] regarding that report (decision 54/436).

Commission action. On 27 April [res. 1999/54], the Commission called on the High Commissioner to continue to emphasize the promotion and protection of the realization of the right to development in her Office and in that regard encouraged the High Commissioner to continue to strengthen her relationship with the appropriate UN bodies, funds and specialized organizations. It recommended that the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly provide OHCHR with the means commensurate to its increasing tasks, as well as more resources for special rapporteurs; on 27 July, by decision 1999/243, the Council endorsed that recommendation.

The Commission called on the High Commissioner to continue to provide States with information on voluntary contributions. It invited her to continue to provide information on cooperation with other UN bodies and with Governments, and to make available information concerning agreements with States and other UN bodies and their implementation in an open and transparent manner. The Commission called on OHCHR to seek ways by which voluntary funds could be used to provide support to all of the Commission's mechanisms. The High Commissioner was asked to submit information pursuant to the current resolution in her annual report to the Commission.

Composition of staff

Report of High Commissioner. In response to a 1998 Commission request [YUN 1998, p. 606], the High Commissioner submitted a report on the composition of OHCHR staff reflecting grade, nationality and gender, as at 31 December 1998 [E/CN.4/1999/97].

Commission action. On 28 April [res. 1999/70], by a roll-call vote of 34 to 16, with 3 abstentions, the Commission requested the Secretary-General to pay particular attention to the recruitment of personnel from developing countries for existing vacancies and other OHCHR posts so as to ensure an equitable geographical distribution, giving priority to high-level and Professional posts and the recruitment of women. It asked the High Commissioner to report in 2000.

Strengthening UN action

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 53/149 [YUN 1998, p. 606], in August [A/54/216], the Secretary-General described approaches taken to strengthen UN action in human rights, including the promotion of international cooperation and the importance of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity. To promote transparency and the sharing of information with respect to mainstreaming technical cooperation in all areas of human rights, the Secretary-General suggested that OHCHR be invited to prepare and update a table, biennially, indicating the States that had received OHCHR assistance to establish or strengthen national institutions; OHCHR advisory services and technical cooperation assistance; or a mission under a special procedures mandate.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/174 without vote [agenda item 116 (b)].

Strengthening United Nations action in the field of human rights through the promotion of international cooperation and the importance of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that among the purposes of the United Nations are those of developing friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and taking other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace, as well as achieving international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Desirous of achieving further progress in international cooperation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Considering that such international cooperation should be based on the principles embodied in international law, especially the Charter of the United Nations, as well as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other relevant instruments,

Deeply convinced that United Nations action in this field should be based not only on a profound understanding of the broad range of problems existing in all societies but also on full respect for the political, economic and social realities of each of them, in strict compliance with the purposes and principles of the Charter and for the basic purpose of promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms through international cooperation,

Recalling its previous resolutions in this regard,

Reaffirming the importance of ensuring the universality, objectivity and non-selectivity of the consideration of human rights issues, as affirmed in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Affirming the importance of the objectivity, independence and discretion of the special rapporteurs and representatives on thematic issues and on countries, as well as of the members of the working groups, in carrying out their mandates,

Underlining the obligation that Governments have to promote and protect human rights and to carry out the responsibilities that they have undertaken under international law, especially the Charter, as well as various international instruments in the field of human rights,

1. Reiterates that, by virtue of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, all peoples have the right freely to determine, without external interference, their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development, and that every

State has the duty to respect that right within the provisions of the Charter, including respect for territorial integrity;

2. Reaffirms that it is a purpose of the United Nations and the task of all Member States, in cooperation with the Organization, to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and to remain vigilant with regard to violations of human rights wherever they occur;

3. Calls upon all Member States to base their activities for the promotion and protection of human rights, including the development of further international cooperation in this field, on the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and other relevant international instruments, and to refrain from activities that are inconsistent with that international framework;

4. Considers that international cooperation in this field should make an effective and practical contribution to the urgent task of preventing mass and flagrant violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and to the strengthening of international peace and security;

5. Reaffirms that the promotion, protection and full realization of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, as a legitimate concern of the world community, should be guided by the principles of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity and should not be used for political ends;

6. Requests all human rights bodies within the United Nations system, as well as the special rapporteurs and representatives, independent experts and working groups, to take duly into account the contents of the present resolution in carrying out their mandates;

7. Expresses its conviction that an unbiased and fair approach to human rights issues contributes to the promotion of international cooperation as well as to the effective promotion, protection and realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

8. Stresses, in this context, the continuing need for impartial and objective information on the political, economic and social situations and events of all countries;

9. Invites Member States to consider adopting, as appropriate, within the framework of their respective legal systems and in accordance with their obligations under international law, especially the Charter, and international human rights instruments, the measures that they may deem appropriate to achieve further progress in international cooperation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

10. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to take duly into account the present resolution and to consider further proposals for the strengthening of United Nations action in the field of human rights through the promotion of international cooperation and the importance of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity;

11. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and further requests the Secretary-General to ask Member States to present practical proposals and ideas that should contribute to the strengthening of United Nations action in the field of human rights, through the promotion of international cooperation based on the principles of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity, and to submit a comprehensive report on this question to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

12. Decides to consider this matter at its fifty-fifth session, under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Promotion of dialogue on human rights issues

Commission action. On 28 April [res. 1999/68], the Commission called on States, intergovernmental organizations and specialized agencies to continue to carry out constructive dialogue and consultations to enhance understanding and the promotion and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, and encouraged NGOs to contribute to the endeavour. It invited States and relevant UN human rights mechanisms and procedures to pay continued attention to the importance of mutual cooperation, understanding and dialogue in ensuring human rights promotion and protection. The High Commissioner was asked to report in 2001.

Subcommission action. On 26 August [res. 1999/25], the Subcommission, reiterating its commitment to international cooperation in human rights, invited governmental and non-governmental observers of the Subcommission to carry out constructive dialogue and consultations on human rights issues based on equality and mutual respect. It endorsed a cooperative approach in search of common understanding of divergent views.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/181 without vote [agenda item 116 (b)].

Enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/154 of 9 December 1998, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1999/68 of 28 April 1999 on the enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights, and recalling also Assembly resolution 53/22 of 4 November 1998 on the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations,

Reaffirming its commitment to promoting international cooperation, as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations, in particular Article 1, paragraph 3, as well as relevant provisions of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, for enhancing genuine cooperation among Member States in the field of human rights,

Recognizing that the enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights is essential for the full achievement of the purposes of the United Nations, including the effective promotion and protection of all human rights,

Reaffirming the importance of ensuring the universality, objectivity and non-selectivity of the consideration of human rights issues, and underlining the importance of the promotion of dialogue on human rights issues,

Noting the adoption of resolution 1999/25 of 26 August 1999, entitled "Promotion of dialogue on human rights issues", by the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights of the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-first session, and noting the decision of the Subcommission to consider the question of a dialogue among civilizations at its fifty-second session,

1. Welcomes the decision of the Commission on Human Rights to continue to consider the enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights at its fifty-sixth session;

2. Calls upon Members States, specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations to continue to carry out a constructive dialogue and consultations for the enhancement of understanding and the promotion and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, and encourages non-governmental organizations to contribute actively to this endeavour;

3. Invites States and all relevant United Nations human rights mechanisms and procedures to continue to pay attention to the importance of mutual cooperation, understanding and dialogue in ensuring the promotion and protection of all human rights;

4. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its fifty-fifth session.

Right to promote and protect human rights

Commission action. On 28 April [res. 1999/66], the Commission called on States to promote and give effect to the 1998 Declaration on the Right and Responsibility of Individuals, Groups and Organs of Society to Promote and Protect Universally Recognized Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 53/144 [YUN 1998, p. 608]. Urging treaty bodies, special representatives, rapporteurs and working groups of the Commission and the Subcommission to give due regard to the Declaration within their mandates, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to report thereon in 2000. It also asked him to consider ways to promote and implement the Declaration and to report with proposals in 2000.

On the same date [dec. 1999/111], the Commission postponed until 2000 consideration of a draft text on human duties and responsibilities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/170 without vote [agenda item 116 (b)].

Declaration on the Right and Responsibility of Individuals, Groups and Organs of Society to Promote and Protect Universally Recognized Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 53/144 of 9 December 1998, by which it adopted the Declaration on the Right and Responsibility of Individuals, Groups and Organs of Society to Promote and Protect Universally Recognized Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, annexed to that resolution,

Reiterating the importance of the Declaration,

Convinced of the important role of the Commission on Human Rights in following up the Declaration,

Noting with deep concern that, in many countries, persons and organizations engaged in promoting and defending human rights and fundamental freedoms are facing threats, harassment and insecurity as a result of those activities,

1. Calls upon Governments, specialized agencies and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to submit, at the request of the Secretary-General, on the basis of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1999/66 of 28 April 1999, proposals and ideas that should contribute substantially to further work on the implementation of the Declaration on the Right and Responsibility of Individuals, Groups and Organs of Society to Promote and Protect Universally Recognized Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms;

2. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights to consider at its fifty-sixth session the report to be prepared by the Secretary-General pursuant to Commission resolution 1999/66;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on measures to implement the Declaration;

4. Decides to consider this question at its fifty-fifth session, under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Human rights instruments

General aspects

In 1999, seven UN human rights instruments were in force that required monitoring of their implementation by expert bodies. The instruments and their treaty bodies were: the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination [YUN 1965, p. 440, GA res. 2106 A (XX)] (Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination); the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights [YUN 1966, p. 423, GA res. 2200 A (XXI)] (Human Rights Committee); the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights [ibid., p. 419, GA res. 2200 A (XXI)] (Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights); the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid [YUN 1973, p. 103, GA res. 3068 (XXVIII)] (Group of Three, suspended in 1995) [YUN 1995, p. 693]; the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women [YUN 1979, p. 895, GA res. 34/180] (Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women); the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment [YUN 1984, p. 813, GA res. 39/46] (Committee against Torture); and the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child [YUN 1989, p. 560, GA res. 44/25] (Committee on the Rights of the Child).

Human rights treaty bodies

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 49/178 [YUN 1994, p. 1060], the Secretary-General transmitted the report of the persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies on their eleventh meeting (Geneva, 31 May-4 June) [A/54/805]. The meeting reviewed recent developments relating to the work of the treaty bodies. Positive results were noted with respect to some treaty bodies as a consequence of modifications in their work methods. The chairpersons expressed concern over problems such as the large backlog of State reports to be examined, the unbalanced geographical and gender representation in their committees and inadequate meeting time and interpretation services. Ways to improve the work of treaty bodies and cooperation with other UN entities and NGOs were discussed. The chairpersons approved a Plan of Action for strengthening implementation of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. On 2 June, a joint meeting was held between the chairpersons and the sixth meeting of special rapporteurs and representatives, experts and chairpersons of working groups of the special procedures system of the Commission on Human Rights and of the advisory services programme, which made suggestions to enhance cooperation between treaty bodies and the special procedures system.

The chairpersons made recommendations regarding their relationship with the Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Council's functional commissions; public information; HIV/AIDS; cooperation with NGOs; documents and publications; the recommendations of the joint meeting with the special procedures system; regional meetings; technical briefings; coordination among treaty bodies; the Plan of Action; human rights indicators; and corporate responsibility for human rights.

The chairpersons considered an April report [HRI/MC/1999/3] containing follow-up to the recommendations of the tenth meeting [YUN 1998, p. 611].

Reservations to human rights treaties

Pursuant to a 1998 Subcommission request [YUN 1998, p. 612], Françoise Jane Hampson (United Kingdom) submitted in June a working paper on reservations to human rights treaties [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/28 & Corr.1]. She concluded that the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties [YUN 1969, p. 730] was partly responsible for the difficulties posed by reservations since it did not contemplate the possibility of independent enforcement/monitoring bodies taking a view on the validity of reservations. The subject matter of human rights treaties, especially but not only non-derogable provisions, also contributed significantly to the nature and scale of the problem. There was a need for a comprehensive review of the reservations across different human rights treaties, to be carried out in cooperation with the enforcement/monitoring mechanisms and States and with NGO assistance. The study should gather together reservations and interpretative declarations on human rights treaty norms by norm, by treaty and by State. States and NGOs should comment on the provisions of domestic law which made the reservation necessary. States should be asked whether they envisaged removing the domestic impediment to withdrawing the reservation in due course and, where relevant, whether they regarded a statement as an interpretative declaration or a reservation. Ms. Hampson invited the Subcommission to recommend to the Commission that such a study be carried out. Annexed to the working paper was an analysis of reservations to certain human rights treaties.

Subcommission action. On 26 August [res. 1999/27], the Subcommission endorsed the conclusions made in the working paper. It appointed Ms. Hampson as Special Rapporteur to prepare a comprehensive study on reservations to human rights treaties based on the working paper, as well as comments made and discussions that took place at the Subcommission's 1999 session. She was requested to submit a preliminary report in 2000, a progress report in 2001 and a final report in 2002, and to seek the advice and cooperation of the relevant treaty bodies. The Secretary-General was asked to assist her.

Universal Declaration of Human Rights

In response to a 1998 Subcommission request [YUN 1998, p. 615], Vladimir Kartashkin (Russian Federation) submitted a working paper, in June [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/29], on ways in which the Sub-commission could examine the observance of the human rights and fundamental freedoms contained in the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 217 A (III) [YUN 1948-49, p. 535], by States not parties to UN human rights conventions. He proposed that the Subcommission establish for three years an inter-sessional working group to encourage efforts to observe those human rights and fundamental freedoms by States not parties to the International Covenants and other conventions that placed on States the obligation to observe the particular rights embodied in the Declaration. He suggested guidelines for the group's functions.

Subcommission action. On 26 August [res. 1999/28], the Subcommission asked Mr. Kartashkin to continue his work on the subject, without financial implications, and to submit an additional working paper in 2000.

Fiftieth anniversary of Geneva Conventions

On 12 August, the Secretary-General participated in a ceremony commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 on the protection of victims of war, sponsored by the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC). He signed, with others, an appeal to all peoples, nations and Governments, among other things, to reject the idea that war was inevitable and to work to eradicate its underlying causes.

On 26 August [dec. 1999/113], the Subcommission expressed gratitude and appreciation to ICRC on the fiftieth anniversary. It asked the Secretary-General to transmit the decision to ICRC.

Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and Optional Protocols

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1999, parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 423], totalled 144 and 95 States, respectively. During the year, Burkina Faso and Tajikistan acceded to the Covenant and the Optional Protocol.

In 1999, Azerbaijan, Bulgaria, Cyprus, Georgia, Slovakia and the United Kingdom became parties to the Second Optional Protocol, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty—adopted by the Assembly in resolution 44/128 [YUN 1989, p. 484]—bringing the total number of States parties to 41 at year's end.

The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Covenant and its Optional Protocols as at 1 August [A/54/277 & Corr.1] and 15 December [E/CN.4/2000/89].

Implementation

Monitoring body. The Human Rights Committee, established under article 28 of the Covenant, held three sessions in 1999: its sixty-fifth session from 22 March to 9 April in New York, and its sixty-sixth session from 12 to 30 July [A/54/40, vol. I] and its sixty-seventh from 18 October to 5 November [A/55/40, vol. I], both in Geneva.

In 1999, the Committee considered reports from 14 States—Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Chile, China (Hong Kong Special Administrative Region), Costa Rica, Lesotho, Mexico, Morocco, Norway, Poland, Portugal (Macau), Republic of Korea, Romania—under article 40 of the Covenant. It adopted views on communications from individuals claiming that their rights under the Covenant had been violated, and decided that other such communications were inadmissible. Those views and decisions were annexed to the Committee's reports [A/54/40, vol. II; A/55/40, vol. II].

On 18 October, the Committee adopted General Comment No. 27 concerning article 12 of the Covenant (freedom of movement).

Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1999, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1960, p. 419], had 142 States parties. Burkina Faso, Tajikistan and Thailand acceded to the Covenant during the year.

The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Covenant as at 1 September [A/54/277 & Corr.1] and 15 December [E/CN.4/2000/89].

Draft optional protocol

In January and March [E/CN.4/1999/112 & Add.1], the Secretariat submitted comments received from States parties and NGOs on the draft optional protocol for the consideration of communications concerning non-compliance with the Covenant.

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 1999/25], the Commission requested the High Commissioner for Human Rights to urge all States to submit their comments on the draft optional protocol and to report in 2000 on options relating to the proposal for such a protocol.

Implementation

Monitoring body. The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights held its twentieth (26 April-14 May) and twenty-first (15 November-3 December) sessions, both in Geneva [E/2000/22]. The Committee's pre-session, five-member working group met in Geneva for five days prior to each of the sessions to identify issues that might most usefully be discussed with representatives of reporting States. In 1999, the Committee examined reports covering articles 16 and 17 of the Covenant submitted by Argentina, Armenia, Bulgaria, Cameroon, Denmark, Iceland, Ireland, Mexico, Solomon Islands and Tunisia. The Committee adopted General Comment No. 11 on plans of action for primary education, General Comment No. 12 on the right to adequate food (see p. 660) and General Comment No. 13 on the right to education (see p. 661).

In a draft decision for adoption by the Economic and Social Council [E/1999/L.19], the Committee sought approval to hold an additional regular session in New York beginning in 2000, as well as a pre-session working group for one week, to enhance the effectiveness and profile of its work. By decision 1999/287 of 30 July, the Council approved the holding of two additional three-week extraordinary sessions of the Committee, as well as respective pre-session working groups for one week during 2000 and 2001, provided additional funding was made available. The Council requested that those sessions be used to reduce the backlog of reports and asked the Committee to consider ways to improve the efficiency of its working methods and to report in 2001.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.1 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 54/157 without vote [agenda item 116 (a)].

International Covenants on Human Rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/116 of 12 December 1997 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1998/9 of 3 April 1998,

Mindful that the International Covenants on Human Rights constitute the first all-embracing and legally binding international treaties in the field of human rights and, together with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, form the core of the International Bill of Human Rights,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Recalling the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and reaffirming that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights should never exempt or excuse States from the promotion and protection of the other rights,

Recognizing the important role of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in examining the progress made by States parties in fulfilling the obligations undertaken in the International Covenants on Human Rights and the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and in providing recommendations to States parties on their implementation,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the International Covenants on Human Rights as major parts of international efforts to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Strongly appeals to all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, as well as to accede to the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and to make the declaration provided for in article 41 of the Covenant;

3. Invites the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to intensify systematic efforts to encourage States to become parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights and, through the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, to assist such States, at their request, in ratifying or acceding to the Covenants and to the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

4. Emphasizes the importance of the strictest compliance by States parties with their obligations under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and, where applicable, the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

5. Stresses the importance of avoiding the erosion of human rights by derogation, and underlines the necessity of strict observance of the agreed conditions and procedures for derogation under article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, bearing in mind the need for States parties to provide the fullest possible information during states of emergency so that the justification for the appropriateness of measures taken in those circumstances can be assessed;

6. Encourages States parties to consider limiting the extent of any reservations they lodge to the International Covenants on Human Rights, to formulate any reservations as precisely and narrowly as possible and to ensure that no reservation is incompatible with the object and purpose of the relevant treaty or otherwise incompatible with international treaty law;

7. Also encourages States parties to review regularly any reservations made in respect of the provisions of the International Covenants on Human Rights and the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights with a view to withdrawing them;

8. Takes note with appreciation of the annual report of the Human Rights Committee submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session, and takes note of General Comments Nos. 25 and 26 adopted by the Committee;

9. Also takes note with appreciation of the reports of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on its sixteenth and seventeenth sessions and eighteenth and nineteenth sessions, and takes note of General Comments Nos. 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12 adopted by the Committee;

10. Urges States parties to fulfil in good time such reporting obligations under the International Covenants on Human Rights as may be requested and in their reports to make use of gender-disaggregated data;

11. Stresses the importance of taking fully into account a gender perspective in the implementation of the International Covenants on Human Rights at the national level, including in the national reports of States parties and in the work of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

12. Urges States parties to take duly into account, in implementing the provisions of the International Covenants on Human Rights, the observations made at the conclusion of the consideration of their reports by the Human Rights Committee and by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, as well as the views adopted by the Human Rights Committee under the first Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

13. Invites States parties to give particular attention to the dissemination at the national level of the reports they have submitted to the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the summary records relating to the examination of those reports by the Committees and the observations made by the Committees at the conclusion of the consideration of the reports;

14. Once again encourages all Governments to publish the texts of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights in as many local languages as possible and to distribute them and make them known as widely as possible in their territories;

15. Invites the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, when considering the reports of States parties, to continue to identify specific needs that might be addressed by United Nations departments, funds and programmes and the specialized agencies, including through the advisory services and technical assistance programme of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights;

16. Stresses the need for improved coordination between relevant United Nations mechanisms and bodies in supporting States parties, upon their request, in implementing the International Covenants on Human Rights and the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and encourages continued efforts in this direction;

17. Invites States to continue to contribute, with practical proposals and ideas, to the dialogue on ways of improving the functioning of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

18. Welcomes the continuing efforts of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to strive for uniform standards in the implementation of the provisions of the International Covenants on Human Rights, and appeals to other bodies dealing with similar human rights questions to respect those uniform standards, as expressed in the general comments of the Committees;

19. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to assist States parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights in the preparation of their reports, including by convening seminars or workshops at the national level for the purpose of training government officials engaged in the preparation of such reports, and by exploring other possibilities available under the regular programme of advisory services in the field of human rights;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights effectively assists the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in the implementation of their respective mandates, including by the provision of adequate Secretariat staff resources;

21. Welcomes the initiative by the Secretary-General, taking into account the suggestions of the Human Rights Committee, to take determined steps, in particular through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, to give more publicity to the work of that Committee and, similarly, to the work of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

22. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session, under the item entitled "Human rights questions", a report on the status of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, including all reservations and declarations.

Convention against racial discrimination

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1999, there were 155 parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2106A(XX)[YUN1965,p.440]. Georgia and Indonesia acceded to the Convention during the year.

On 28 April [res. 1999/78], the Commission appealed to States that had not done so to consider ratifying or acceding to the Convention and to consider making the declaration provided for in article 14 (see below).

Implementation

Monitoring body. The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD), set up under article 8 of the Convention, held its fifty-fourth and fifty-fifth sessions in Geneva from 1 to 19 March and from 2 to 27 August, respectively [A/54/18].

The Committee devoted its sessions mainly to examining reports submitted by States parties on measures taken to implement the Convention. It considered reports, comments and information submitted by 28 States parties and summarized its members' views on each country report and the statements made by the States parties concerned.

Under the item dealing with the prevention of racial discrimination, including early warning and urgent procedures, the Committee adopted decisions concerning situations in Australia, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Kosovo), Rwanda and the Sudan. It adopted statements on the human rights of the Kurdish people and on Africa.

In conformity with article 14 of the Convention, CERD considered communications from individuals or groups of individuals claiming violation of their rights under the Convention by a State party recognizing CERD's competence to receive and consider such communications. Twenty-eight States parties (Algeria, Australia, Bulgaria, Chile, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, France, Hungary, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, Malta, Netherlands, Norway, Peru, Poland, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Senegal, Slovakia, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Ukraine, Uruguay) had declared such recognition.

Under article 15, the Committee was empowered to consider copies of petitions, reports and other information relating to Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories. CERD observed that it found it impossible to fulfil its functions under article 15 as documents received did not include copies of petitions. The Committee asked that the appropriate information be furnished.

In other action, the Committee decided to hold its fifty-eighth session in March 2001 in New York and asked the General Assembly to implement that decision. By decision 54/433 of 17 December, the Assembly, while taking note of the Committee's report, decided to refer back to the Committee its decision for further consideration, in the light of a statement of programme budget implications submitted by the Secretary-General [A/54/18/Add.1].

In resolution 54/154, the Assembly urged States to limit the extent of any reservation they lodged to the Convention, to formulate any reservation as precisely and as narrowly as possible, to ensure that no reservations were incompatible with the Convention, to review their reservations regularly and to withdraw those that were contrary to the Convention's objective and purpose.

As at 31 December, 25 States parties had accepted a 1992 amendment to the Convention regarding the financing of CERD [YUN 1992, p. 714]. The amendment was to enter into force when accepted by a two-thirds majority of States parties.

Convention against torture

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1999, 118 States were parties to the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 39/46 [YUN 1984, p. 813]. During the year, Belgium, Bolivia, Burkina Faso, Japan, Mali, Mozambique and Turkmenistan became parties. Forty-one parties had made the required declarations under articles 21 and 22 (under which a party recognized the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications to the effect that a party claims that another is not fulfilling its obligations under the Convention, and to receive communications from or on behalf of individuals claiming to be victims of a violation of the Convention by a State party) and three had made the declaration under article 21 only.

The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention as at 15 July [A/54/189 & Corr.1] and 1 November [E/CN.4/2000/50].

On 26 April [res. 1999/32], the Commission urged all States to become parties to the Convention, and invited States parties that had not done so to make the declaration provided for in articles 21 and 22 and to withdraw reservations to article 20.

Draft optional protocol

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 1999/30], the Commission requested the working group on the draft optional protocol to the Convention (intended to establish a preventive system of regular visits to places of detention) to meet prior to the Commission's 2000 session to complete the final and substantive text. It asked the Secretary-General to transmit the report of the working group to Governments, specialized agencies, chairpersons of human rights treaty bodies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs and to invite them to submit their comments to the group. The Secretary-General was also requested to invite them, as well as the Chairperson of the Committee against Torture and the Special Rapporteur on the question of torture, to participate in working group activities.

By decision 1999/237 of 27 July, the Economic and Social Council authorized the group to meet for two weeks and encouraged the group's Chairman/Rapporteur to hold informal inter-sessional consultations to facilitate the completion of a consolidated text.

Working group activities. The working group on the draft optional protocol held its eighth session in Geneva from 4 to 15 October [E/CN.4/2000/58]. Annexed to its report were the texts of the articles that constituted the outcome of the second reading and of those that constituted the basis for future work.

In response to the Commission's request that the group's Chairman/Rapporteur hold informal consultations during inter-sessional periods, the group, in April [E/CN.4/1999/59/Add.1], stated that its Chairman/Rapporteur at the seventh session would not be available to do so. On 29 April, the group met to elect someone as Chairperson until the group's eighth session.

Implementation

Monitoring body. The Committee against Torture, established as a monitoring body under the Convention, held its twenty-second session in Geneva from 26 April to 14 May [A/54/44]. Under article 19, it considered reports submitted by Bulgaria, Egypt, Italy, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Mauritius, Morocco, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Venezuela.

The Committee held eight closed meetings during which, in accordance with article 20, it studied confidential information that appeared to contain well-founded indications that torture was systematically practised in a State party to the Convention. Under article 22, the Committee considered communications submitted by individuals who claimed that their rights, as enumerated in the Convention, had been violated by a State party and who had exhausted all available domestic remedies.

The Committee held its twenty-third session, also in Geneva, from 8 to 19 November [A/55/44], during which it reviewed reports submitted by Austria, Azerbaijan, Finland, Kyrgyzstan, Malta, Peru and Uzbekistan under article 19. In four closed meetings, the Committee examined communications from individuals claiming to be victims of violations by States parties. It also considered communications under article 22.

The seventh meeting of States parties to the Convention (Geneva, 24 November) [CAT/SP/23]

elected five Committee members to replace those whose terms were to expire on 31 December 1999.

The General Assembly, in resolution 54/156, urged States that had not done so to become parties to the Convention and invited those becoming parties and those that were parties but had not done so to make the declarations provided for in articles 21 and 22 and to consider withdrawing reservations to article 20.

Convention on elimination of discrimination against women

On 17 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 54/137, urged States that had not ratified or acceded to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women to do so as soon as possible, so that universal ratification could be achieved by the year 2000. The Assembly noted its adoption of the Optional Protocol to the Convention (resolution 54/4).

(For details on the status of the Convention and on the Optional Protocol, see p. 1099.)

Convention on the Rights of the Child

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1999, there continued to be 191 States parties to the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 560].

On 30 September and 1 October, the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) held a special meeting entitled "The Convention on the Rights of the Child: a decade of achievements and challenges" to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the Convention's adoption. On 11 November, the Assembly commemorated the anniversary [A/54/PV.52].

The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention as at 1 August [A/54/265] and 30 November [E/CN.4/2000/70]; by decision 54/432 of 17 December, the Assembly took note of the former report.

An amendment to the Convention that would expand CRC membership from 10 to 18, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 50/155 [YUN 1995, p. 706], had been accepted by 71 States parties in 1999. The amendment required acceptance by a two-thirds majority to enter into force.

Implementation

Monitoring body. In 1999, CRC held its twentieth (11-29 January) [CRC/C/84], twenty-first (17 May-4 June) [CRC/C/87] and twenty-second (20 September-8 October) [CRC/C/90] sessions, all in Geneva. Each session was preceded by a presessional working group which facilitated the Committee's work by reviewing State party reports and identifying in advance the main questions that would need to be discussed with the representatives of the reporting States. It also provided an opportunity to consider technical assistance and international cooperation.

Under article 44 of the Convention, CRC considered reports from 17 States parties: Austria, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Chad, Guinea, Honduras, Mali, Mexico, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Russian Federation, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Sweden, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Yemen.

At its twenty-second session, CRC adopted a general recommendation on the administration of juvenile justice, by which it asked the High Commissioner to give priority to promoting the Convention's provisions and those of existing international standards relating to the subject; to consider steps to identify obstacles preventing their full implementation; and to design ways to overcome the obstacles.

The working group on the rights of children with disabilities, established as an outcome of the day of general discussion in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 605], held its first and second meetings (London, 23-24 January, 29-30 May). The group developed a plan of action for its 18-month term.

On 18 and 19 November, a workshop on the child and the media, entitled "The Oslo Challenge", was held as a result of the Committee's day of general discussion in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 581].

The seventh meeting of the States parties to the Convention met in New York on 16 February to elect five CRC members to replace those whose terms were to expire on 28 February.

Commission action. On 28 April [res. 1999/80], the Commission urged States that had not done so to sign and ratify or accede to the Convention. It called on States parties to implement the Convention; cooperate with CRC; ensure training for those involved in activities for children; ensure the registration of all children immediately after birth and improve national systems for the collection of comprehensive and disaggregated data for areas covered by the Convention; withdraw reservations incompatible with the purpose of the Convention and consider reviewing others; and accept the amendment that would increase CRC membership. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to ensure the provision of staff and facilities for CRC's effective performance; on 27 July, by decision 1999/249, the Economic and Social Council endorsed that request.

Children in armed conflict

Working group activities. At its fifth session (Geneva, 11 January and 24 March) [E/CN.4/

1999/73], the working group on a draft optional protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on involvement of children in armed conflict held a general discussion on the draft. Annexed to the group's report was an informal working paper by the Chairperson, prepared pursuant to a 1998 Commission request [YUN 1998, p. 623].

Commission action. On 28 April [res. 1999/80], the Commission asked the Secretary-General to give the working group the necessary support to meet for a maximum of two weeks, and to transmit the group's report to Governments, relevant UN bodies and specialized agencies, CRC, the Special Representative on the question of the impact of armed conflict on children, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, and to invite their comments thereon in time for circulation prior to the working group's next session. The Chairperson of the working group was asked to continue broad informal consultations to promote an early agreement on the optional protocol and to produce a report, including recommendations on how to finalize the formal negotiations. The working group was asked to meet early in 2000 to finalize its work before the tenth anniversary of the entry into force of the Convention and to report to the Commission in 2000. The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1999/249 of 27 July, endorsed the Commission's requests.

Sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography

Working group activities. At its fifth session (Geneva, 25 January-5 February and 24 March) [E/CN.4/1999/74], the working group for the elaboration of a draft optional protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography held a general discussion on the draft protocol. Annexed to the report were texts resulting from the group's discussions.

Commission action. On 28 April [res. 1999/80], the Commission asked the Secretary-General to support the working group to meet for a maximum of two weeks, and to transmit the group's report to Governments, relevant UN bodies and specialized agencies, CRC, the relevant Special Rapporteur, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, and to invite their comments thereon in time for circulation prior to the group's next session. The working group was requested to meet early in 2000 to finalize its work before the tenth anniversary of the entry into force of the Convention and to report to the Commission in 2000. The Chairperson was asked to conduct informal consultations. By decision 1999/249 of 27 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's requests.

Convention on migrant workers

Status of convention

As at 31 December 1999, the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 45/158 [YUN 1990, p. 594], had been ratified or acceded to by Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cape Verde, Colombia, Egypt, Mexico, Morocco, the Philippines, Senegal, Seychelles, Sri Lanka and Uganda, and signed by Bangladesh, Chile and Turkey.

The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention as at 31 August [A/54/346] and 1 November [E/CN.4/2000/77].

Commission action. On 27 April [res. 1999/45], the Commission called on all Member States to sign and ratify or accede to the Convention as a matter of priority. It asked the Secretary-General to provide all assistance necessary to promote the Convention through the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights and the human rights programme of advisory services (see pp. 590 and 582), and to report in 2000 on the status of the Convention and on the Secretariat's efforts to promote it and the protection of the rights of migrant workers.

(For further information on migrant workers, see p. 612.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.1 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 54/158 without vote [agenda item 116 (a)].

International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming once more the permanent validity of the principles and norms set forth in the basic instruments regarding the international protection of human rights, in particular the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Bearing in mind the principles and norms established within the framework of the International Labour Organization and the importance of the work done in connection with migrant workers and members of their families in other specialized agencies and in various organs of the United Nations,

Reiterating that, despite the existence of an already established body of principles and norms, there is a need to make further efforts to improve the situation and to guarantee respect for the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers and members of their families,

Aware of the situation of migrant workers and members of their families and the marked increase in migratory movements that has occurred, especially in certain parts of the world,

Considering that, in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, all States are urged to guarantee the protection of the human rights of all migrant workers and members of their families,

Underlining the importance of the creation and promotion of conditions to foster greater harmony and tolerance between migrant workers and the rest of the society of the State in which they reside, with the aim of eliminating the growing manifestations of racism and xenophobia perpetrated in segments of many societies by individuals or groups against migrant workers,

Recalling its resolution 45/158 of 18 December 1990, by which it adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families,

Bearing in mind that, in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, States are invited to consider the possibility of signing and ratifying the Convention at the earliest possible time,

Recalling that, in its resolution 53/137 of 9 December 1998, it requested the Secretary-General to submit to it at its fifty-fourth session a report on the status of the Convention,

1. Expresses its deep concern at the growing manifestations of racism, xenophobia and other forms of discrimination and inhuman or degrading treatment directed against migrant workers in different parts of the world;

2. Welcomes the signature or ratification of or accession to the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families by some Member States;

3. Calls upon all Member States to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the Convention as a matter of priority, expresses the hope that it will enter into force at an early date, and notes that, pursuant to article 87 of the Convention, only eight ratifications or accessions are still needed for it to enter into force;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all the facilities and assistance necessary for the promotion of the Convention through the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights and the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights;

5. Welcomes the global campaign for the entry into force of the Convention, and invites the organizations and agencies of the United Nations system and inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations to intensify further their efforts with a view to disseminating information on and promoting understanding of the importance of the Convention;

6. Also welcomes the decision of the Commission on Human Rights, in its resolution 1999/44 of 27 April 1999, to appoint a Special Rapporteur on the human rights of migrants to examine ways and means to overcome the obstacles existing to the full and effective protection of the human rights of this vulnerable group;

7. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and requests him to submit an updated report on the status of the Convention to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

8. Decides to consider the report of the Secretary-General at its fifty-fifth session under the sub-item entitled "Implementation of human rights instruments".

Convention on genocide

As at 31 December 1999, 130 States were parties to the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 260 A (III) [YUN 1948-49, p. 959]. In 1999, Portugal and Uzbekistan acceded to the Convention.

Commission action. On 28 April [res. 1999/67], by a roll-call vote of 48 to none, with 5 abstentions, the Commission stressed the importance of and the need to implement the Convention.

Convention against apartheid

As at 31 December 1999, there were 101 States parties to the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 3068(XXVIII) [YUN 1973, p. 103].

The Commission on Human Rights had suspended in 1995 both consideration of the item on the Convention's implementation [YUN 1995, p. 790] and meetings of the Group of Three [ibid., p. 693], the Convention's monitoring body.

Other activities

Follow-up to the 1993 World Conference

Report of High Commissioner. In March [E/CN.4/1999/9], the High Commissioner for Human Rights recalled that the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action (VDPA), adopted by the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights [YUN 1993, p. 908], called on States to consider developing a national plan of action identifying steps to improve human rights promotion and protection. She stated that OHCHR had encouraged and supported State initiatives for the creation of national plans as a means of translating commitments to human rights into concrete steps for action. Australia, Bolivia, Brazil, Ecuador, Indonesia, Latvia, Malawi, the Philippines, South Africa and Venezuela had developed such plans. In addition, a number of initiatives, many of them region-specific, were under way to facilitate the process by which national plans were developed and implemented, including specialized programmes and workshops in the African, Asian-Pacific, European, and Latin American and Caribbean regions.

Report of Secretary-General. In a June report [E/1999/83], the Secretary-General reviewed progress in the implementation of the 1998 agreed conclusions of the Economic and Social Council on the coordinated follow-up to and implementation of VDPA [YUN 1998, p. 626]. The Secretary-General stated that since the adoption of the agreed conclusions, new developments had given evidence that the processes initiated by the recognition of human rights as a cross-cutting challenge within the United Nations continued with the support of all sectors of the Organization. Progress was made in integrating human rights into policies of the UN system, as well as the willingness of its components to cooperate and coordinate activities; recognizing human rights as a vehicle of complementarity and consistency of UN system activities; integrating the human rights programme within the managerial structures of the United Nations at the Headquarters, regional and national levels; paying greater attention to the right to development and economic, social and cultural rights; mainstreaming a gender dimension and the human rights of women into the activities of the human rights machinery and the UN system; increasing the availability of technical cooperation in the area of human rights to States as a result of better programme coordination within the UN system; and intensifying human rights education and information campaigns. In spite of progress achieved, further efforts aimed at the optimal use of resources and capacities were necessary.

Note by High Commissioner. In an August note [E/CN.4/2000/5], the High Commissioner transmitted to the Commission the report of the meeting of special rapporteurs/representatives, experts and chairpersons of working groups of the Commission's special procedures and of its advisory services programme (Geneva, 31 May-3 June), as called for in VDPA. Participants discussed cooperation between special rapporteurs and UN departments, specialized agencies, funds, programmes and mechanisms; the future of the special procedures system and capacity-building to improve the effectiveness of extra-conventional mechanisms; and cooperation with the Commission and OHCHR. They adopted the "Manual for Special Rapporteurs".

By decision 54/435 of 17 December, the General Assembly took note of the Third Committee's report on the comprehensive implementation of and follow-up to VDPA [A/54/605/Add.4].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1999/35 [draft: E/1999/L.29] without vote [agenda item 6].

Implementation of agreed conclusions 1998/2 of the Economic and Social Council on the coordinated follow-up to and implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its agreed conclusions 1998/2 of 28 July 1998, on the coordinated follow-up to and implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action in the United Nations system,

Recognizing that agreed conclusions 1998/2 provided an important contribution to the five-year review of the implementation of the Programme of Action,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Welcomes the efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the relevant components of the United Nations system, within their respective mandates, towards the implementation of agreed conclusions 1998/2;
3. Stresses the need for further efforts for the full implementation by the relevant components of the United Nations system of agreed conclusions 1998/2;
4. Decides that the implementation of agreed conclusions 1998/2 shall be taken into account as part of the overall review by the Economic and Social Council in 2000 of progress made in an integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to major United Nations conferences and summits.

Advisory services and technical cooperation

In 1999 [E/CN.4/2000/105 & Add.1], the UN technical cooperation programme in the field of human rights continued to assist Governments, at their request, in promoting and protecting human rights. Assistance included expert advisory services, training courses, workshops and seminars, fellowships, grants, the provision of information and documentation and assessment of domestic human rights needs. OHCHR assistance was provided for incorporating international human rights standards in national laws and policies, building and strengthening national institutions capable of promoting and protecting human rights and democracy under the rule of law, formulating national plans of action, training and education, and promoting a human rights culture. Priority was given to projects to be implemented in countries in transition and least developed countries, projects corresponding to national development objectives and integrated into broader UN strategies in the country concerned, and projects which facilitated broad participation of all elements of society and which offered sustainable institution-building benefits. Activities were funded partly by the UN regular budget and mainly by the Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights. During 1999, nine projects were completed and 45 were under way or approved.

During the year, a large number of countries received assistance to establish or strengthen national capacities and human rights institutions, including Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bhutan, Gabon, Georgia, Guatemala, Haiti, Indonesia, Latvia, Madagascar, Mongolia, Nepal, Somalia and Uganda. Other projects related to support for the rule of law and democratic processes (Burundi, Malawi, Palestine, Republic of Moldova); human rights education in schools (North-East Asia, Morocco, Russian Federation, Sierra Leone); and training for police (Southern African Regional Police Chiefs Cooperation Organization, El Salvador, Nicaragua). Technical cooperation activities were also carried out within the framework of OHCHR field presences in Abkhazia (Georgia), Afghanistan, Angola, Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Burundi, Cambodia, Croatia, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, El Salvador, Guatemala, Indonesia, Liberia, Mongolia, Palestine, Sierra Leone, South Africa, Togo and Uganda.

The fellowship course for 1999 was facilitated by the United Nations Staff College project in Turin, Italy. Due to circumstances beyond the control of organizers, the training course was postponed and scheduled to take place from 7 to 18 February 2000. Twenty-six candidates were selected to attend the training representing 13 countries: Afghanistan, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Ethiopia, Gambia, Indonesia, Kenya, Seychelles, Solomon Islands, Sri Lanka, Uganda, Viet Nam, Yemen and Zambia.

Commission action. On 28 April [res. 1999/73], by a roll-call vote of 27 to 19, with 7 abstentions, the Commission, welcoming the increase in the number of requests for advisory services and technical cooperation, called on the High Commissioner to take urgent measures to develop to the fullest extent the potential of advisory services and technical cooperation and to accord those activities the highest priority. It also called on her to include "exit strategies" based on the delivery of advisory services and technical cooperation as an integral part of all monitoring and preventive field operations; to offer advisory services to all countries irrespective of their economic status; and to examine ways to enhance the visibility and distinct identity of technical cooperation.

The Commission called on OHCHR to submit in 2000 a compendium of institutions and resource centres in developing countries specializing in human rights-related activities, with a view to promoting South-South cooperation; to make available annually to the Commission details of persons included on its roster of experts available for technical cooperation activities, to advertise widely in the media, especially in developing countries, its need for such experts and to invite States to nominate experts for inclusion on the roster; and to develop technical cooperation policy guidelines aimed at building national capacities and institutions. It invited OHCHR to institutionalize measures for the systematic follow-up of recommendations made by special rapporteurs and independent experts on the provision of advisory services and technical cooperation and for identifying resources required to implement them, and urged it to improve coordination with UN development agencies and to undertake an information campaign to publicize the importance of development for the promotion of human rights. The Commission asked the High Commissioner to report in 2000.

Workshop. On 27 April [E/CN.4/2000/163], Ecuador transmitted to the Commission the Conclusions and Framework of Technical Cooperation for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights in Latin America and the Caribbean, adopted by a meeting of States of that region (Quito, 29 November-1 December).

Voluntary Fund Board

In 1999, the Board of Trustees of the Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights held its eleventh and twelfth sessions (Geneva, 14-17 June, 13-15 December) [E/CN.4/2000/105]. The Board considered 14 new project proposals; reviewed two completed and evaluated projects; examined the implementation status of nine current projects and activities; discussed project priorities, formats and procedures; and examined financial and administrative matters.

As part of a new fund-raising strategy, OHCHR developed a global Annual Appeal, beginning in 2000, to provide a thorough presentation of the planned activities and financial requirements to encourage more predictable and timely funding and permit longer-term planning.

Contributions received by the Fund in 1998/99 totalled $14.2 million.

Cambodia

Reports of Secretary-General. In three reports, the Secretary-General described the twelfth (9-21 January) [E/CN.4/1999/101], thirteenth (14-26 March), fourteenth (10-20 May) [A/54/353], fifteenth (21-26 August) and sixteenth (18-27 October) [E/CN.4/2000/109] missions of his Special Representative for human rights in Cambodia, Thomas Hammarberg (Sweden).

During his twelfth mission, the Special Representative visited the highland province of Ratanakiri where he focused on the economic, social and cultural rights of the indigenous peoples, in particular the aspects of logging and land use, as well as the difficulties faced by indigenous women in the areas of education, health and economic development. Major issues of concern were politically related violence, proceedings regarding Khmer Rouge crimes, impunity, the judicial system, torture and ill-treatment of arrested persons, prison conditions, labour rights, HIV/AIDS, women's and children's rights, the rights of ethnic minorities and of indigenous populations, and land rights.

In a review of the implementation of his previous recommendations, the Special Representative stated that, although the Government had recognized the need for major structural human rights reform, that work had not progressed very far. He presented the plans of various ministers of the new Government, stating that their implementation would go a long way towards addressing the problems he had raised. In an addendum to his report [E/CN.4/1999/101/Add.1], the Special Representative discussed the report of the Group of Experts on the crimes committed during the Khmer Rouge regime from 1975 to 1979 [A/53/850-S/1999/231] (see PART ONE, Chapter IV) and the 6 March arrest of Ta Mok, the former Khmer Rouge military commander of the south-west region.

The thirteenth mission focused on the question of bringing Khmer Rouge leaders to justice. The Special Representative sought clarifications concerning possible international assistance on the issue of the Khmer Rouge and, after detailed discussions with the Prime Minister, other Cambodian ministers and the diplomatic community, he received broad support to set up an international tribunal to bring former Khmer Rouge leaders to justice. The Special Representative also looked into the areas of the right to education, the protection of minorities and judicial reform.

The fourteenth mission continued discussions on the question of establishing a tribunal to try those most responsible for the most serious crimes committed under the Khmer Rouge regime. The Prime Minister indicated that work was under way to prepare a draft law which would enable foreign judges, prosecutors and lawyers to participate in the proceedings. He indicated Cambodia's interest in having the judges and prosecutors appointed by the Secretary-General and in receiving assistance in the drafting of the enabling law for submission to the National Assembly. The Special Representative stressed the importance of the entire process meeting international standards and outlined the legal issues that needed to be resolved before the undertaking of actual proceedings. He indicated his commitment to continue to facilitate international assistance to the Government and provide international expertise to assist with the preparation of the draft law. Other issues of concern were the right to health and the problem of torture. The Special Representative concluded that continued assistance to establish the rule of law was essential. The concern for civil and political rights was maintained, while at the same time economic, social and cultural rights would be given more attention. Priorities for the UN human rights programme were: assistance to the Government to monitor the human rights situation; greater integration of the human rights dimension into education, health and other development programmes; police, gendarmerie and armed forces training in support of government restructuring and reform; assistance to reform the administration of justice and the police; identifying assistance to combat impunity; strengthening the legislative process; provision of advice, on request, regarding Cambodia's submission of reports related to international human rights treaties; and provision of advice and assistance to the Government and its civil society partners on establishing an independent national human rights institution and the creation of a national plan of action on human rights. The priority areas were included in a draft memorandum of understanding (MOU) covering the work of the Cambodia Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (COHCHR) submitted for government consideration in August. The current MOU under which COHCHR operated was due to expire in March 2000. The report contained a review of COHCHR activities from September 1998 to June 1999.

During the fifteenth mission, the Special Representative discussed the continued cooperation of the Government with COHCHR. There was agreement that the MOU covering COHCHR activities would have a planning period of two years.

The last official mission stressed the functioning of the judicial system. The Special Representative raised the issue of prison conditions, including the diversion of daily allocations made for prisoners' subsistence to other purposes, overcrowding, special needs of women and prison reform. On the Khmer Rouge, he reiterated his conviction that the international community would support a trial in Cambodia provided that it met the standards of justice, fairness and due process of law and that it was fully independent. The Prime Minister stated that a new draft of the law to establish proceedings against the Khmer Rouge was in preparation with assistance from several foreign experts, and that the draft would be circulated for comment to the United Nations in November before it was submitted to the Council of Ministers in December. He expected the process to be under way in the first quarter of 2000. The Special Representative highlighted other areas of concern and reviewed the implementation of his recommendations.

Commission action. On 28 April [res. 1999/76], the Commission expressed grave concern about violations of human rights in Cambodia and called on the Government to investigate urgently and prosecute all those who had perpetrated human rights violations. It also expressed grave concern at the situation of impunity and appealed to the Government to ensure that those most responsible for the most serious human rights violations were brought to account in accordance with the international standards of justice, fairness and due process of law.

The Commission asked the Secretary-General, through his Special Representative, to assist the Government in ensuring the protection of human rights and to ensure adequate resources for the continued functioning of COHCHR and to enable the Special Representative to continue to fulfil his tasks. Those requests to the Secretary-General were approved by the Economic and Social Council in decision 1999/247 of 27 July. The Secretary-General was requested to report in 2000.

Role of COHCHR

In a report on the 1999 activities and programmes of COHCHR [E/CN.4/2000/108], the Secretary-General provided an overview of the assistance provided for legislative reform, the administration of justice, national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights, treaty reporting and international obligations, human rights NGOs, education and training programmes and curriculum development, information and documentation, monitoring and protection activities, the provincial office network and participation in UN system activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/171 without vote [agenda item 116 (b)].

Chad

On 22 April [dec. 1999/102], the Commission requested the High Commissioner to report in 2000 on the establishment and implementation of a technical cooperation project based on a joint needs-assessment mission to Chad undertaken by OHCHR and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in 1998.

In accordance with the Commission's decision, OHCHR and UNDP drew up a project document for technical cooperation with Chad in the areas of human rights and governance [E/CN.4/2000/107]. The project document was signed by the Government of Chad and UNDP on 6 and 13 August, respectively. It was also approved and signed by the High Commissioner.

Croatia

On 10 May, a technical cooperation agreement was signed between the Government of Croatia and OHCHR, with a view to building human rights capacity and human rights education. The agreement provided for capacity-building activities, including dissemination of documentation and training on human rights standards for military, police and prison officials; training and advice for government officials in reporting obligations; training and advice for NGOs; advice on developing human rights education curricula; advice and assistance to the Ombudsman's office; and establishment of a Human Rights Documentation Centre. As at December, OHCHR had conducted a human rights summer school for law students and had held seminars for the military on international human rights and humanitarian law standards, as well as for government representatives on reporting obligations. (For information on the human rights situation in Croatia, see p. 727.)

Haiti

Commission action. On 28 April [res. 1999/77], the Commission expressed concern at the lack of progress on judicial system reform and called upon the Government of Haiti to continue structural reforms in the police and justice sectors, to investigate politically motivated crimes properly and prosecute perpetrators of such crimes in accordance with Haitian law, and to eliminate continuing human rights violations. It urged Haiti to improve the overall conditions in prisons and to put in place measures to address violence against women. The Commission drew attention to the need for the Haitian National Police to continue receiving technical training to enable it to perform its functions efficiently, within the context of respect for human rights.

The Commission invited the High Commissioner to contribute to the strengthening of the Office of Protection of the Citizen, through a programme of technical cooperation. The Commission's independent expert was asked to report to the General Assembly in 1999 and to the Commission in 2000. The request to the expert was approved by Economic and Social Council decision 1999/248 of 27 July.

Report of independent expert. In September, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the independent expert, Adama Dieng (Senegal) [A/54/366], who had visited Haiti (11-20 March) and met with high-level government officials, including the President. He observed that there had been significant advances in human rights since the return to constitutional legality; however, serious problems of governance, security and poverty remained as threats to the rule of law. The Haitian authorities were called on to ensure that the perpetrators of the crimes committed during and after the coup d'etat were arrested, prosecuted and tried in accordance with the relevant human rights standards. Women's groups and other NGOs were taking action to combat violence against women; the Haitian National Police was committed to helping combat the violence as well. The situation of children working as servants was increasingly alarming. Access to education remained a major problem, despite government action. The independent expert reaffirmed that the renewal of the mandate of the International Civilian Mission in Haiti (MICIVIH) was necessary to improve the human rights situation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.3], adopted resolution 54/187 without vote [agenda item 116 (c)].

Somalia

Commission action. On 28 April [res. 1999/75], with regard to Somalia, the Commission condemned the widespread violations and abuses of human rights and humanitarian law and violation of international law on armed conflicts, including hostage-taking and abduction. It expressed deep concern at reports of arbitrary and summary executions, torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment and violence, and at the absence of an effective judicial system. It strongly urged all parties in Somalia to respect human rights and international humanitarian law, to re-establish the rule of law and to protect UN personnel, humanitarian relief workers, and NGO and international media representatives.

The Commission welcomed the High Commissioner's decision to appoint a human rights officer within the office of the United Nations Resident Humanitarian Coordinator for Somalia. The Secretary-General was asked to continue to provide adequate resources to fund activities of the Commission's independent expert and the High Commissioner for the implementation of advisory services and technical cooperation. Governments and organizations were asked to respond positively to requests for assistance in implementing the Commission's resolution.

The Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to continue to provide resources to the expert by decision 1999/246 of 27 July.

Report of independent expert. Independent expert Mona Rishmawi (Jordan) reported on the situation of human rights in Somalia following her visit to the country (14-24 November) [E/CN.4/2000/110 & Corr.1]. As to the security and political situations, during 1999, nearly half of the country had been peaceful, especially in the north. The powers of the warlords had declined and with their defeat in areas in the south much of the violence was criminal rather than political. A new power had emerged in parts of central and southern Somalia, with the institution of Shariah courts that were supported by their own militia. Areas under the control of the courts experienced tranquillity and economic growth due to the deterrence of banditry. However, many acts that could be qualified as war crimes or crimes against humanity were being committed in Somalia, particularly in the south. The independent expert examined acts of violence, civilian attacks, recruitment of child soldiers, rape and other sexual violence, persecution of minorities, displacement of civilians and denial of due process. Regarding the mass graves in Hargeisa [YUN 1997, p. 617], she said that a technical committee for the investigation of war crimes continued to focus on identifying victims. The expert welcomed the placement by OHCHR of a human rights officer in Nairobi to serve as a focal point for human rights assistance to Somalia.

Public information

Commission action. On 28 April [res. 1999/60], the Commission urged OHCHR and the UN Department of Public Information (DPI) to cooperate closely to produce multimedia information programmes in the field of human rights; develop strategies to strengthen the role of the mass media to further human rights education and public information; utilize effectively UN information centres to disseminate information on human rights; and produce information material, in particular audio-visual material, on all aspects of human rights in connection with the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights, launched by the General Assembly in resolution 43/128 [YUN 1988, p. 539], and the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education (1995-2004), proclaimed by Assembly resolution 49/184 [YUN 1994, p. 1039]. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to report in 2001 on public information activities, emphasizing activities relating to the World Campaign.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General described, in September, public information activities in the area of human rights carried out by OHCHR and DPI [A/54/399 & Add.1]. He provided details of the OHCHR publications programme, the use of electronic means to maximize the impact of information and external relations, including briefings, exhibitions, human rights observances and fellowships. DPI continued to initiate and coordinate activities of the World Public Information Campaign, the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education, the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1993-2002), the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People (1995-2004) and the United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006). Other DPI activities included the production of printed materials in various languages disseminated through UN information centres and services and other UN offices and electronically through the World Wide Web. Its multimedia approach entailed radio and television programmes, press conferences, press briefings and special events, exhibits, special media outreach activities, activities with educational organizations and NGOs, and public services for visitors. The Secretary-General presented a list of publications issued by OHCHR and human rights publications available from DPI.

Human rights education

Commission action. On 28 April [res. 1999/60], the Commission urged Members States to develop a comprehensive, effective and sustainable national plan of action for human rights education and public information in accordance with the guidelines for national plans of action for human rights education [YUN 1997, p. 618] and the Plan of Action for the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education (1995-2004), proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 49/184 [YUN 1994, p. 1039]. OHCHR was encouraged, through its programme of advisory services and technical cooperation (see p. 582), to give priority and support for the development of national capacities in the areas of human rights education and public information.

Also on 28 April [res. 1999/64], the Commission asked the High Commissioner to accelerate implementation of the Plan of Action for the Decade and encourage and facilitate the establishment of national plans of action for human rights education in Member States in accordance with national conditions. It also asked her to continue to implement the Assisting Communities Together (ACT) project [YUN 1998, p. 635] and to consider other ways to support human rights education activities. The Secretary-General was asked to report on the implementation of the Commission's resolution in 2000.

Reports of Secretary-General. In September [A/54/399], the Secretary-General summarized activities taken to implement the Plan of Action for the Decade. OHCHR, in a joint effort with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), was carrying out a survey of existing programmes, materials and organizations for human rights education of Decade partners at all levels. A second round of ACT project grants would be awarded at year's end. Within the UN system, UNESCO held regional conferences on human rights education and publications were produced. Other international organizations, NGOs and human rights institutes initiated or continued projects for human rights education. The report summarized information on initiatives taken by 19 countries to strengthen human rights education. Work continued on the six training packages for human rights monitors, judges and lawyers, prison officials, primary and secondary schoolteachers, journalists and national and local NGOs.

In a later report [E/CN.4/2000/93], the Secretary-General provided supplementary information received in the period from September to mid-December 1999. In November, OHCHR launched the second phase of the ACT project, for which 16 countries/territories had been selected. In cooperation with the Government of the Republic of Korea and within the Asia-Pacific Framework for Regional Technical Cooperation, OHCHR organized a subregional training workshop on human rights education in North-East Asia (Seoul, 1-4 December). OHCHR was awarded the Guinness World Record for having collected, translated and disseminated the Universal Declaration of Human Rights into more than 300 languages and dialects, from Abkhaz to Zulu. The report described actions taken by human rights institutes, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, and described the initiatives taken by 15 countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/161 without vote [agenda item 116 (b)].

United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education, 1995-2004, and public information activities in the field of human rights

The General Assembly,

Guided by the fundamental and universal principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, article 26 of which states that "education shall be directed to the full development of the human personality and to the strengthening of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms", and the provisions of other international human rights instruments, such as those of article 13 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, article 10 of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, article 7 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, article 29 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, article 10 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and paragraphs 78 to 82 of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, which reflect the aims of the aforementioned article,

Believing that the World Public Information Campaign is a valuable complement to the activities of the United Nations aimed at the further promotion and protection of human rights, and recalling the importance attached by the World Conference on Human Rights to human rights education and information,

Convinced that every woman, man and child, in order to realize their full human potential, must be made aware of all their human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Convinced also that human rights education should involve more than the provision of information and should constitute a comprehensive, lifelong process by which people at all levels of development and in all societies learn respect for the dignity of others and the means and methods of ensuring that respect,

Recognizing that human rights education and information are essential to the realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms and that carefully designed training, dissemination and information programmes can have a catalytic effect on national, regional and international initiatives to promote and protect human rights and prevent human rights violations,

Convinced that human rights education and information contribute to a holistic concept of development consistent with the dignity of women and men of all ages, which takes into account particularly vulnerable segments of society such as children, young persons, older persons, indigenous people, minorities, the rural and urban poor, migrant workers, refugees, persons with the human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome and disabled persons,

Taking into account the efforts to promote human rights education made by educators and non-governmental organizations in all parts of the world, as well as by intergovernmental organizations, including the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Labour Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations Development Programme,

Recognizing the invaluable and creative role that non-governmental and community-based organizations can play in disseminating public information and engaging in human rights education, especially at the grass-roots level and in remote and rural communities,

Aware of the potential supportive role of the private sector in implementing at all levels of society the Plan of Action for the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education, 1995-2004, and the World Public Information Campaign, through creative initiatives and financial support for governmental and non-governmental activities,

Convinced that the effectiveness of existing human rights education and public information activities would be enhanced by better coordination and co-operation at the national, regional and international levels,

Recalling that it is within the responsibility of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to coordinate relevant United Nations education and public information programmes in the field of human rights,

Taking note with appreciation of the increased efforts undertaken so far by the Office of the High Commissioner to disseminate human rights information through its web site and its publications and external relations programmes,

Welcoming the initiative of the Office of the High Commissioner to develop further the project entitled "Assisting Communities Together", launched in 1998, supported by voluntary funds and designed to provide small grants to grass-roots and local organizations carrying out practical human rights activities,

Recalling that, according to the Plan of Action, in 2000 a mid-term global evaluation of progress made towards the achievement of the objectives of the Decade shall be undertaken by the Office of the High Commissioner, in cooperation with all other principal actors in the Decade,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education, 1995-2004, and public information activities in the field of human rights, including the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights;

6. Encourages States, where such national public access human rights resource and training centres already exist, to strengthen their capacity to support human rights education and public information programmes at the international, national, regional and local levels;

7. Calls upon Governments, in accordance with national conditions, to accord priority to the dissemination, in the relevant national and local languages, of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other human rights instruments, human rights materials and training manuals, as well as reports of States parties under international human rights treaties, and to provide information and education in those languages on the practical ways in which national and international institutions and procedures may be utilized to ensure the effective implementation of those instruments;

12. Urges the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat to continue to utilize United Nations information centres for the timely dissemination, within their designated areas of activity, of basic information, reference and audio-visual materials on human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the reports of States parties under international human rights instruments and, to this end, to ensure that the information centres are supplied with adequate quantities of those materials;

13. Stresses the need for close collaboration between the Office of the High Commissioner and the Department of Public Information in the implementation of the Plan of Action and the World Public Information Campaign, and the need to harmonize their activities with those of other international organizations such as the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization with regard to its project entitled "Towards a culture of peace" and the International Committee of the Red Cross and relevant non-governmental organizations with regard to the dissemination of information on international humanitarian law;

16. Calls upon international, national and regional non-governmental organizations and intergovernmental organizations, in particular those concerned with women, labour, development, food, housing, education, health care and the environment, as well as all other social justice groups, human rights advocates, educators, religious organizations and the media, to undertake specific activities of formal, non-formal and informal education, including cultural events, alone and in cooperation with the Office of the High Commissioner, in implementing the Plan of Action;

17. Urges Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute to the mid-term global evaluation of progress made towards the achievement of the objectives of the Decade to be undertaken by the Office of the High Commissioner in 2000, by providing appropriate information on steps taken in this regard;

Culture of peace

Commission action. On 28 April [res. 1999/62], the Commission encouraged the General Assembly to conclude its deliberations on the adoption of a declaration and programme of action on a culture of peace and reiterated its invitation to States to promote a culture of peace based on the purposes and principles established in the UN Charter. It asked OHCHR to prepare a report in 2000, taking into consideration the comments and views of all Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, on the contribution of the promotion and protection of human rights to the further development of a culture of peace.

Report of OHCHR. In response to the above resolution, OHCHR invited Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to submit their comments and views. A December report summarized the views of two States [E/CN.4/2000/97].

Declaration and Programme of Action

On 13 September [meeting 107], the General Assembly adopted resolutions 53/243 A and B [draft: A/53/L.79] without vote [agenda item 31].

A

Declaration on a Culture of Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Charter of the United Nations, including the purposes and principles embodied therein,

Recalling also the Constitution of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, which states that "since wars begin in the minds of men, it is in the minds of men that the defences of peace must be constructed",

Recalling further the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other relevant international instruments of the United Nations system,

Recognizing also that the end of the cold war has widened possibilities for strengthening a culture of peace,

Expressing deep concern about the persistence and proliferation of violence and conflict in various parts of the world,

Recognizing the need to eliminate all forms of discrimination and intolerance, including those based on race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national, ethnic or social origin, property, disability, birth or other status,

Recalling its resolution 52/15 of 20 November 1997, by which it proclaimed the year 2000 as the "International Year for the Culture of Peace", and its resolution 53/25 of 10 November 1998, by which it proclaimed the period 2001-2010 as the "International Decade for a Culture of Peace and Non-Violence for the Children of the World",

ACC endorsed the holding of an ad hoc meeting of the senior officials responsible for programme planning in their respective organizations to examine the feasibility of the proposed approach; UNESCO would host the meeting in 2000.

National institutions and regional arrangements

National institutions for human rights promotion and protection

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 52/128 [YUN 1997, p. 623], the Secretary-General, in September, reported on OHCHR activities to strengthen national institutions and on the measures taken by Governments and national human rights institutions in those areas, as well as the work of the treaty monitoring bodies and the Commission's special mechanisms to consult further with established national institutions [A/54/336]. The report covered the period from 15 October 1997 to 15 August 1999.

OHCHR activities included the provision of information, advice or assistance at the request of Governments or entities in the process of establishing national institutions or contemplating doing so. It also responded to requests from Governments and NGOs seeking information on national institutions. The Special Adviser on National Institutions conducted missions to advise or assist Governments, among other things. OHCHR expanded its roster of consultants and experts on national human rights institutions, compiled legislation of such institutions, established a database on best practices of national institutions' work on thematic issues and was preparing a training manual for national institutions on economic, social and cultural rights. OHCHR had 11 field offices in Africa, a field office in Gaza and four others in the Asia and Pacific region, five in Europe, Central Asia and North America and three in Latin America and the Caribbean. The International Coordinating Committee of National Institutions, which constituted an international network promoting the establishment and strengthening of national human rights institutions, at its seventh session (Geneva, 20-22 April), considered the role of national institutions in promoting and protecting the rights of the child.

In December [E/CN.4/2000/103], the Secretary-General stated that in 1999 OHCHR emphasized facilitating the exchange of national institutions' practices in promotion and protection of the rights of women, children and human rights defenders, particularly in Asia and the Pacific. The fourth annual meeting of the Asia-Pacific Forum of National Human Rights Institutions (Manila, Philippines, September) addressed the problem of trafficking of persons in the region, including women, and discussed the results of a questionnaire distributed by the National Human Rights Commission of New Zealand to all established national institutions requesting information on their mandates, functions, methods of work, activities and programmes. In preparation for the "Beijing plus 5 review" (see PART THREE, Chapter X), OHCHR planned to organize in 2000 a series of meetings to review the implementation of the Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170], adopted at the 1995 Fourth World Conference on Women in Beijing, with international organizations, NGOs and national institutions. Regarding the tenth anniversary of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, related OHCHR initiatives included a preparatory workshop with national institutions of the Asia-Pacific region aimed at promoting the exchange of best practices in the promotion and protection of children's rights. The workshop was organized by OHCHR, in close consultation with the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), in cooperation with the Philippines National Human Rights Commission and the Asia-Pacific Forum of National Human Rights Institutions, in Manila from 8 to 10 September.

In other action, the Special Adviser on National Institutions and/or the National Institutions Team sent advisory missions to Azerbaijan, Ecuador, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Malawi, the Philippines, Rwanda, Sierra Leone and Zimbabwe. Advice on legislation for the establishment of a national institution was provided by the Special Adviser in Sierra Leone and Zimbabwe; technical cooperation activities continued in Bolivia, Georgia, Guatemala, Indonesia, Latvia, Malawi, Palestine, the Republic of Moldova, South Africa and Uganda. Consultations on co-operating agreements continued with established institutions in Colombia, Ecuador, Fiji, Indonesia, Malawi, Peru and Rwanda and a new project for Ukraine was under consideration. At the regional level, OHCHR supported the fourth annual meeting of the Asia-Pacific Forum, the third Annual Congress of the Ibero-American Federation of Ombudsmen (Tegucigalpa, Honduras, September), the Central American Council of Defensores (Managua, Nicaragua, November) and the fifth UNDP International Workshop on Ombudsman and Human Rights Institutions (Almaty, Kazakhstan, November). OHCHR organized a governmental meeting in November on regional strategies for technical cooperation in the Latin American and Caribbean region. Co-operation on national technical cooperation projects continued with UNDP, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE), the Council of Europe, United Nations Volunteers and UNICEF. Joint initiatives between national institutions and NGOs, with OHCHR support, included a workshop, organized by the Asia-Pacific Forum, the Sri Lanka Human Rights Commission and the Asia-Pacific Consultative Group of NGOs (Kandy, Sri Lanka, 27-28 July), on early warning, public inquiries and promotional and educational activities.

Commission action. On 28 April [res. 1999/72], the Commission asked the Secretary-General to continue to provide assistance for the holding of Coordinating Committee meetings during its sessions; and to continue to provide, from within existing resources and the UN Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights, the necessary assistance for regional meetings of national institutions. Those requests were approved by the Economic and Social Council on 27 July by decision 1999/245.

The Secretary-General was asked to report in 2000.

Regional arrangements

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/148 [YUN 1998, p. 641], the Secretary-General reported on OHCHR regional strategies and developments [A/55/279] since the submission of his last report [YUN 1998, p. 640]. OHCHR had been developing close cooperation at the regional level with UN partners, particularly UNDP, UNICEF and UNESCO. It was continuing to explore possible areas in which to involve the regional commissions in the promotion of human rights. The High Commissioner had appointed four regional advisers who, among other things, stimulated government and public interest in the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance (see p. 602).

A concept of the subregional centre for human rights and democracy in Central Africa was in the implementation phase following the Assembly's request in December to the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner to establish the centre (resolution 54/55 A) (see p. 501). The decision to establish the centre originated at the fourth meeting of the Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa. An appropriation of $1 million was to be made for the 2000-2001 biennium; the centre was to be established in Yaounde, Cameroon, by the end of 2000. In Europe and Central Asia, OHCHR continued its cooperation with regional organizations, including the Council of Europe, OSCE and the European Union. A priority was the development of a regional strategy against trafficking in persons. In Latin America and the Caribbean, the Office organized a regional workshop that adopted the Quito Framework for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights (Quito, Ecuador, 29 November-1 December). (For information on the Asia and Pacific region, see below.)

Commission action. On 28 April [res. 1999/71], the Commission invited States in areas where regional arrangements in the field of human rights did not exist to consider concluding agreements with a view to establishing within their respective regions suitable regional machinery to promote and protect human rights. It asked OHCHR to continue to pay attention to ways of assisting, at their request, countries of the different regions under the programme of technical cooperation and to make, where necessary, relevant recommendations. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 2001.

Asia and the Pacific

As requested by the Commission in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 641], the Secretary-General reported, in March, on regional arrangements to promote and protect human rights in Asia and the Pacific [E/CN.4/1999/94]. OHCHR organized the seventh workshop on regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights in the Asia and Pacific region (New Delhi, India, 16-18 February). The workshop called on the High Commissioner to develop and implement the proposals made in the four areas of the framework for regional technical cooperation (national plans of action for the promotion and protection of human rights and the strengthening of national capacities; human rights education; national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights; strategies for the realization of the right to development and economic, social and cultural rights) and to report to the next workshop on progress made. The workshop called on OHCHR to establish a bulletin board on the regional technical cooperation activities under the framework and decided that the annual regional workshop should take up a specific theme, pertaining to one of the four areas identified under the framework.

In later reports [A/55/279, E/CN.4/2000/102], the Secretary-General discussed inter-sessional workshops held to address issues covered by the framework, including the inter-sessional regional workshop on the role of national human rights commissions in the promotion and protection of economic, social and cultural rights (Manila, May), the inter-sessional regional workshop on national human rights action plans (Bangkok, Thailand, 5-7 July), the fourth annual meeting of the Asia-Pacific Forum of National Human Rights Institutions (Manila, September), the Seminar on the Role of National Institutions in the Protection and Promotion of the Human Rights of Children (Manila, September) and the inter-sessional subregional workshop on human rights education in North-East Asia (Seoul, Republic of Korea, 1-4 December).

Commission action. On 28 April [res. 1999/69], the Commission endorsed the conclusions of the seventh workshop and its decisions regarding the next steps to be taken to facilitate the process of regional cooperation in the Asia and Pacific region. It called on OHCHR to develop and implement the project proposals in the four areas identified under the regional framework. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to report in 2000 on the conclusions of the eighth workshop and on the progress achieved.

Cooperation with UN human rights bodies

In accordance with a 1998 Commission request [YUN 1998, p. 642], the Secretary-General, in January [E/CN.4/1999/27], summarized information covering situations in which persons were intimidated or suffered reprisals for having cooperated with UN human rights bodies; availed themselves of international procedures; provided legal assistance for that purpose; and/or were relatives of victims of human rights violations.

Commission action. On 23 April [res. 1999/16], the Commission urged Governments to refrain from acts of intimidation or reprisal against persons who sought to cooperate or had cooperated with representatives of UN human rights bodies, or who had provided testimony or information to them; individuals who availed themselves of UN procedures and those who had provided legal assistance to them for that purpose; those who submitted communications under procedures established by human rights instruments; and relatives of victims of human rights violations. It asked representatives of UN human rights bodies and treaty bodies monitoring the observance of human rights to help prevent the hampering of access to UN human rights procedures and to continue to take urgent steps to prevent the occurrence of intimidation or reprisal. It also asked them to include in their reports references to allegations of intimidation or reprisal, as well as an account of action taken. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to draw its resolution to the attention of UN human rights and treaty bodies and to report in 2000.

Chapter II

Protection of human rights

The protection of human rights—civil and political, as well as economic, social and cultural—continued to be a major focus of UN activities in 1999.

In an effort to protect children and other civilians in situations of armed conflict, the Security Council, in August and September, condemned the deliberate targeting of those groups. It called on all parties to end the practice and on States that had not done so to consider ratifying the major instruments of international humanitarian, human rights and refugee law.

The working group to review and formulate proposals for the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, to be convened in 2001, held its first session. In December, the General Assembly welcomed the offer of South Africa to host the Conference. It reaffirmed the proclamation of the year 2001 as the International Year of Mobilization against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, aimed at drawing attention to the objectives of the Conference. In other action, a resolution adopted by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) proclaimed 23 August of every year International Day for the Remembrance of the Slave Trade and its Abolition.

Special rapporteurs, special representatives and independent experts of the Commission on Human Rights and its subsidiary body, the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, examined, among other issues, allegations of torture; extra-legal executions; impunity; mercenary activity; affirmative action; the rights of migrants; the independence of the judiciary; freedom of opinion and expression; religious intolerance; human rights and terrorism; internally displaced persons; globalization and its impact on human rights; extreme poverty; illicit practices related to toxic and dangerous products and wastes; sexual violence during armed conflict; violence against women; the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography; and the situation of children affected by armed conflict.

Working groups considered arbitrary detention, enforced or involuntary disappearances, minorities, the right to development, structural adjustment policies, contemporary forms of slavery, and a draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples. The sessional working group on the working methods and activities of transnational corporations (TNCs), at its first session in August, decided to consider developing a code of conduct for TNCs based on human rights standards.

Racism and racial discriminationThird Decade against racism

The General Assembly, in resolution 48/91 [YUN 1993, p. 853], had proclaimed the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1993-2003) and adopted the Decade's Programme of Action. The Third Decade's goals and objectives were the same as those of the first Decade, which the Assembly had adopted in resolution 3057(XXVIII) [YUN 1973, p. 523]. The revised Programme of Action for the Third Decade was adopted by the Assembly in resolution 49/146 [YUN 1994, p. 988].

Implementation of Decade Programme

Commission action. On 28 April [E/1999/23 (res. 1999/78)], the Commission on Human Rights, regretting the lack of interest, support and financial resources for the Decade and Programme of Action and that few of the activities planned for 1994-1998 were carried out, recommended that the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, ask the Secretary-General to assign high priority to the Programme's activities and earmark adequate resources to finance them. The Commission appealed to States, inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and individuals in a position to do so to contribute to the Trust Fund for the Programme of Action for the Third Decade and asked the Secretary-General to encourage contributions to the Fund. States were asked to encourage the reporting of acts motivated by racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia or ethnic reasons and to give priority to education as the main means to prevent and eradicate racism and racial discrimination.

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 53/132 [YUN 1998, p. 646], the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council, in June [E/1999/61], his annual report describing activities to implement the Programme for the Decade. He concluded that contributions by the UN system, Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to the Third Decade continued to reflect global and concerted efforts to address the issues and provide long-lasting solutions. However, few of the activities planned for 1994-1998 could be carried out owing to lack of funds. Although there was strong support for holding the 2001 World Conference, it would require resources. Annexed to the report was a list of contributions received from Governments to the Trust Fund as at May 1999. By decision 1999/288 of 30 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

In a September report to the General Assembly on the same issue [A/54/299], the Secretary-General noted that the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, pursuant to Assembly resolution 53/132, had sought the resources necessary to coordinate the Programme of Action, whose activities were to be oriented towards the objectives of the World Conference. Since the Programme of Action was scheduled to be completed in 2003, it would be possible to submit proposals to supplement it, if necessary, on the basis of the conclusions and recommendations of the Conference. Those proposals could serve as a basis for a possible programme of action to launch a fourth Decade. Annexed to the report was a list of contributions available in the Trust Fund as at 18 August.

In a December report to the Commission on Human Rights [E/CN.4/2000/15], the Secretary-General stated that activities under the Programme of Action included a seminar of experts on racism, refugees and multi-ethnic States (Geneva, 6-8 December); a study on economic factors contributing to racism and racial discrimination; and a study on the effects of racial discrimination on the children of minorities and of migrant workers. Reports on those activities would be submitted to the first (2000) session of the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference.

Subcommission action. On 25 August [E/CN.4/2000/2 (res. 1999/6)], the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, regretting the continued lack of interest, support and resources for the Decade and the Programme of Action, called on Governments, UN bodies, specialized agencies and interested NGOs to contribute fully to the Programme's implementation.

World Conference

As the General Assembly had decided in resolution 52/111 [YUN 1997, p. 629], the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance was scheduled to convene not later than 2001. The Conference would focus on practical measures to eradicate racism, including measures of prevention, education and protection and the provision of effective remedies. One of its aims would be to increase the effectiveness of UN programmes aimed at eradicating contemporary forms of racism and racial discrimination. The Commission on Human Rights was designated the Preparatory Committee for the Conference.

In December (resolution 54/154), the General Assembly welcomed the offer of South Africa to host the Conference in 2001.

Report of High Commissioner. Pursuant to a 1998 Commission request [YUN 1998, p. 644], the High Commissioner presented, in March [E/CN.4/1999/12], an analytical outline of the seven objectives of the World Conference as contained in General Assembly resolution 52/111: review progress made in the fight against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance; consider ways to ensure respect for existing standards and instruments to combat the problem; increase awareness about the scourges of the problem; formulate recommendations on increasing the effectiveness of UN activities through programmes aimed at combating the problem; review the political, historical, economic, social, cultural and other factors leading to the problem; formulate recommendations for additional national, regional and international measures to combat all forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance; and make recommendations for ensuring that the United Nations had the resources to combat the phenomenon. The report included a review of the views communicated to the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) by States, UN bodies and NGOs.

The High Commissioner concluded that despite progress, racism and racial discrimination had not disappeared and were assuming new forms. Efforts should be intensified, especially through education and awareness-arousing as means of prevention. Universal and unconditional accession to the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 2106A(XX) [YUN 1965, p. 440] (see previous chapter), was vital. States were urged to adopt laws to prevent and eradicate racial discrimination and to abrogate and modify policies that had the effect of inciting or perpetuating racial hatred.

Working group activities. The open-ended working group to review and formulate proposals for the World Conference, established by the Commission in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 644], held its first session (Geneva, 24-26 March) [E/CN.4/1999/16 & Corr.1,2]. It considered the seven objectives of the Conference by taking as a starting point proposals presented by the African Group, and discussed procedural matters. The discussions highlighted the organization of regional experts' seminars on recourse procedures and good practices; the creation of a web site on the Conference; and the preparation of questionnaires to evaluate measures taken by States, specialized agencies, international governmental organizations, NGOs and national institutions. Annexed to the report were the African Group's proposals and proposals by the Subcommittee on Racism, Racial Discrimination and Decolonization of the Special Committee of International NGOs on Human Rights.

Commission action. On 28 April [res. 1999/78], the Commission adopted recommendations regarding the Conference, as well as requests to the Secretary-General, the High Commissioner and the Subcommission that were either endorsed or approved by the Economic and Social Council (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July [meeting 42], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/1999/23], as amended [E/1999/L.30], adopted resolution 1999/12 without vote [agenda item 14 (h)].

against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, particularly since the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and, on the other, to reappraise the obstacles to further progress in the field and ways to overcome them, and to send them as soon as possible to States, specialized agencies, international and non-governmental organizations and national institutions;

(k) To review progress made in the fight against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, in particular since the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and to reappraise the obstacles to further progress in the field and ways to overcome them, with a view to submitting her conclusions to the Preparatory Committee;

(l) To organize an international seminar of experts on the remedies available to the victims of acts of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and on good national practices in this field, which will be financed by voluntary contributions, to encourage other activities, particularly seminars forming part of the preparations for the World Conference, and to submit the recommendations of those seminars to the Preparatory Committee;

(m) To draw up a draft agenda for the first session of the Preparatory Committee;

7. 8. Also approves the Commission's requests:

10. Decides to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance for a further period of three years.

Subcommission action. On 25 August [res. 1999/6], the Subcommission suggested that the World Conference focus on situations of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia, related intolerance and ethnic conflict and other patterns of discrimination based on race, colour, descent, national or ethnic origin or gender, as well as a series of related topics. It recommended that the Conference prepare a declaration and a programme of action to combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related forms of intolerance and define a global and system-wide strategy to combat racism and racial discrimination. The Secretary-General was asked to provide for the participation in the Preparatory Committee, as the Subcommission's representative, of Paulo Sergio Pinheiro (Brazil), who had been asked in 1998 to prepare proposals for the Conference's work [YUN 1998, p. 646]. The High Commissioner was called on to advance the regional preparatory processes.

In June [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/6], the secretariat had informed the Subcommission that Mr. Pinheiro was unable to prepare proposals for the Conference's work but would report orally on the subject. On 10 August [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/SR.9], he proposed that a working paper be prepared on proposals for the Conference based on the Subcommission's studies since the Second (1983) World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination [YUN 1983, p. 802]. A preliminary version of the paper could be prepared for the Preparatory Committee in 2000.

CERD. On 26 August [A/54/18 (dec. 5(55))], the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) proposed to the Preparatory Committee that it include in the Conference's agenda action by the international community to prevent or mitigate mass and flagrant human rights violations of persons belonging to ethnic and racial groups and minorities. It decided to make relevant information available to the Preparatory Committee and, with OHCHR assistance, to make an assessment of the best practices of States parties to the 1965 Convention in combating racial discrimination. CERD suggested elements for a plan of action for the Conference.

(For other CERD activities, see preceding chapter.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee

[A/54/603], adopted resolution 54/154 without vote [agenda item 114].

Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and the convening of the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its objectives, as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations, of achieving international co-operation in solving problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming also its firm determination and its commitment to eradicate totally and unconditionally racism in all its forms and racial discrimination and its conviction that racism and racial discrimination constitute a total negation of the purposes and principles of the Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention against Discrimination in Education, adopted by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on 14 December 1960,

Noting the efforts of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination since its establishment in 1970 to promote the implementation of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,

Recalling the outcome of the two World Conferences to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, held at Geneva in 1978 and in 1983,

Recalling also the outcome of the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, and, in particular, the attention given in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action to the elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and other forms of intolerance,

Stressing the importance and sensitivity of the activities of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

Recalling with satisfaction its resolutions 48/91 of 20 December 1993 and 49/146 of 23 December 1994, by which, respectively, it proclaimed the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, which began in 1993, and adopted the revised Programme of Action for the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Noting with grave concern that, despite the efforts of the international community, the principal objectives of the two previous Decades for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination have not been attained and that millions of human beings continue to the present day to be the victims of varied forms of racism and racial discrimination,

Noting with great concern that, despite the efforts undertaken by the international community at various levels, racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related forms of intolerance, ethnic antagonism and acts of violence are showing signs of increase in many parts of the world and that the number of associations established on the basis of racist and xenophobic platforms and charters is increasing, as reflected in the report of the Special Rapporteur,

Alarmed that technological developments in the field of communications, including the Internet, continue to be utilized by various groups engaged in violent activity to promote racist and xenophobic propaganda aimed at inciting racial hatred and to collect funds to sustain violent campaigns against multi-ethnic societies throughout the world,

Noting that the use of such technologies can also contribute to combating racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

Having considered the report submitted by the Secretary-General within the framework of the implementation of the Programme of Action,

Recalling its resolution 53/132 of 9 December 1998, in which it requested the Secretary-General to ensure the financial and personnel resources necessary for the implementation of the Programme of Action,

Recognizing the importance of strengthening national legislation and institutions for the promotion of racial harmony and for the effective enforcement of such legislation,

Remaining firmly convinced of the need to take more effective and sustained measures at the national and international levels for the elimination of all forms of racism and racial discrimination,

Deeply concerned that the phenomenon of racism and racial discrimination against migrant workers continues to increase, despite the efforts made by the international community to improve the protection of the human rights of migrant workers and members of their families,

Recalling the adoption at its forty-fifth session of the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families,

Acknowledging that indigenous people are at times victims of particular forms of racism and racial discrimination,

II

Contemporary forms of racism

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In January [E/CN.4/1999/15], the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, Maurice Glélé-Ahanhanzo (Benin), presented information regarding activities of far right and neo-Nazi movements; discrimination against blacks; racism and racial discrimination against Arabs; anti-Semitism; discrimination against the Roma, Gypsies or travellers; and the untouchables in India. The report contained allegations of racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia transmitted to four Governments by the Special Rapporteur in 1998 and one reply. In conclusion, the Special Rapporteur regretted the rise of neo-fascism and neo-Nazism, continuing use of the Internet to spread racist ideologies, the rise in ethnonationalism, continuing discrimination against the Gypsies or travellers and manifestations of anti-Semitism. He recommended that OHCHR establish bodies and mechanisms to ensure that the World Conference was prepared for in a methodical manner, by organizing regional meetings of experts to assess work on the issue by reviewing studies and undertaking new ones on specific topics and contemporary situations; by involving UN specialized agencies and regional and subregional organizations and NGOs in the Conference preparatory process; and by establishing, within OHCHR and under the High Commissioner's authority, an observatory on neo-fascism, neo-Nazism and ethnonationalism.

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/133 [YUN 1998, p. 651], the Secretary-General transmitted, in September [A/54/347], an interim report of the Special Rapporteur describing his activities and follow-up to field missions, major trends in contemporary manifestations of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and measures taken by Governments. The Special Rapporteur concluded that attention should be paid to the use of the Internet for purposes of incitation to racial hatred, racial discrimination and xenophobia. In preparation for the World Conference, measures should be taken to promote research and consultations on the use of the Internet to combat the phenomenon and to prepare an education programme on human rights, a culture for peace and non-violence in collaboration with, for example, UNESCO, NGOs and relevant governmental organizations. Collaboration should be established among the bodies and mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights. A campaign should be launched to stimulate international awareness about the World Conference.

Commission action. On 28 April [res. 1999/78], the Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to continue his exchange of views with Member States and the UN system and to use all sources of information, including country visits and the mass media, and to elicit responses from Governments with regard to allegations. Governments of the States thus far visited were asked to consider implementing the Special Rapporteur's recommendations; any results would be included in his 2000 report. The High Commissioner was urged to provide the countries visited by the Special Rapporteur, at their request, with assistance to implement the recommendations. She was asked to conduct research and hold consultations on Internet use to incite racial hatred, racist propaganda and xenophobia, to study ways of promoting international cooperation thereon and to draw up a programme of human rights education over the Internet on the struggle against racism, xenophobia and anti-Semitism.

Regional mission. The Special Rapporteur visited the Czech Republic, Hungary and Romania (20-30 September) [E/CN.4/2000/16/Add.1] to consider allegations he had received of systematic discrimination, particularly in education, employment and housing, against the Roma citizens of those countries and frequent acts of violence against them by members of extreme right organizations and the police. Those countries were selected solely for illustrative and comparative purposes and owing to insufficient resources and time, and not because the situation of the Roma there was more unusual than in other countries. The Special Rapporteur observed that prejudice against the Roma was the same in the three countries but, whereas violence against them was under control in Romania, it persisted in the Czech Republic and Hungary. He stressed that in their common desire to become European Union members, the three Governments were committed to carrying out reforms to benefit the Roma. Recommendations were made to the three Governments. (For Subcommission action on the human rights of the Roma, see p. 616.)

Globalization and racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia

Working paper. In response to a 1998 Subcommission request [YUN 1998, p. 646], Joseph Oloka-Onyango (Uganda) submitted, in June [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/8], a working paper on globalization in the context of increased incidents of racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia, as a contribution to the World Conference. He stated that the issue required further study and action by the UN system, multilateral agencies and human rights organizations. CERD needed to encourage States parties to the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination to highlight the ways in which globalization had fostered increasing incidents of racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia, and their efforts to address those developments; examine ways that various international human rights instruments could be better applied to non-State actors having a critical role in the process of globalization; and urge countries to review methods of recruiting police and immigration officers, institute racially sensitive training systems, and encourage police and immigration forces to be more inclusive and diverse.

In the light of Commission resolution 1999/59 on globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of all human rights (see below, under "Economic, social and cultural rights"), the Subcommission should cooperate with CERD in making a more comprehensive examination of the impacts of globalization on racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/603], adopted resolution 54/153 without vote [agenda item 114].

Measures to combat contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/133 of 9 December 1998, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1999/78 of 28 April 1999,

Stressing that the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993 attaches importance to the elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and other forms of intolerance,

Convinced that racism, as one of the exclusionist phenomena plaguing many societies, requires resolute action and cooperation for its eradication,

Having examined the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, including its conclusions and recommendations,

Deeply concerned that, despite continued efforts, racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, as well as acts of violence, persist and even grow in magnitude, incessantly adopting new forms, including tendencies to establish policies based on racial, religious, ethnic, cultural and national superiority or exclusivity,

Deeply concerned also that those advocating racism and racial discrimination misuse new communication technologies, including the Internet, to disseminate their repugnant views,

Noting that the use of such technologies can also contribute to combating racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

Conscious of the fundamental difference between, on the one hand, racism and racial discrimination as governmental policy or resulting from official doctrines of racial superiority or exclusivity and, on the other hand, other manifestations of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance that are increasingly visible in segments of many societies and are perpetrated by individuals or groups, some of which manifestations are directed against migrant workers and members of their families,

Reaffirming, in this regard, the responsibility of Governments for safeguarding and protecting the rights of individuals residing in their territory against crimes perpetrated by racist or xenophobic individuals or groups,

Recognizing both the challenges and the opportunities in combating racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance in an increasingly globalized world,

Noting with concern that racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance may be aggravated by, inter alia, inequitable distribution of wealth, marginalization and social exclusion,

Deeply concerned that racism and racial discrimination against migrant workers continue to increase despite the efforts undertaken by the international community to protect the human rights of migrant workers and members of their families,

Noting that the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, in its general recommendation XV(42) of 17 March 1993 concerning article 4 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, holds that the prohibition of the dissemination of ideas based on racial superiority or racial hatred is compatible with the right to freedom of opinion and expression as outlined in article 19 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and in article 5 of the Convention,

Noting also that the reports that the States parties submit under the Convention contain, inter alia, information about the causes of as well as measures to combat contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

Particularly alarmed at the rise of racist and xenophobic ideas in political circles, in the sphere of public opinion and in society at large,

Noting with appreciation that the Special Rapporteur will continue to pay attention to the rise of racist and xenophobic ideas in political circles, in the sphere of public opinion and in society at large,

Underlining the importance of urgently eliminating growing and violent trends of racism and racial discrimination, and conscious that any form of impunity for crimes motivated by racist and xenophobic attitudes plays a role in weakening the rule of law and democracy and tends to encourage the recurrence of such crimes, and requires resolute action and cooperation for its eradication,

Emphasizing the importance of creating conditions that foster greater harmony and tolerance within societies,

1. Reaffirms the proclamation of 2001 as the International Year of Mobilization against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance;

2. Calls upon the relevant United Nations bodies, Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to carry out, promote and disseminate activities and action within the framework of the commemorative year in order to strengthen its impact and ensure its success, in particular the outcome of the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance;

3. Expresses its full support and appreciation for the work of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, encourages its continuation, and takes note with appreciation of the report of the Special Rapporteur;

4. Requests the Special Rapporteur to continue his exchange of views with Member States, related United Nations organs and the specialized agencies, other relevant mechanisms and non-governmental organizations in order to further their effectiveness and mutual cooperation;

5. Commends the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination for its role in the effective implementation of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, which contributes to the fight against contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

6. Reaffirms that acts of racist violence against others stemming from racism do not constitute expressions of opinion but rather offences;

7. Declares that racism and racial discrimination are among the most serious violations of human rights in the contemporary world and must be combated by all available means;

8. Expresses its profound concern about and unequivocal condemnation of all forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, in particular all racist violence, including related acts of random and indiscriminate violence;

9. Also expresses its profound concern about and unequivocal condemnation of all forms of racism and racial discrimination, including propaganda, activities and organizations based on doctrines of superiority of one race or group of persons that attempt to justify or promote racism and racial discrimination in any form;

10. Expresses its profound concern about and condemnation of manifestations of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance against as well as stereotyping of migrant workers and members of their families, persons belonging to minorities and members of vulnerable groups in many societies;

11. Expresses deep concern about the increase in racial and xenophobic violence in many parts of the world, as well as the increasing number of associations established on the basis of racist and xenophobic platforms and charters, as reflected in the report of the Special Rapporteur;

12. Encourages all States to include in their educational curricula and social programmes at all levels, as appropriate, knowledge of and tolerance and respect for foreign cultures, peoples and countries;

13. Recognizes that the increasing gravity of different manifestations of racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia in various parts of the world requires a more integrated and effective approach on the part of the relevant mechanisms of United Nations human rights machinery;

14. Encourages Governments to take appropriate measures to eradicate all forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

15. Calls upon all States to review and, where necessary, revise their immigration policies with a view to eliminating all discriminatory policies and practices against migrants which are inconsistent with relevant international human rights instruments;

16. Condemns the misuse of print, audio-visual and electronic media and new communication technologies, including the Internet, to incite violence motivated by racial hatred;

17. Recognizes that Governments should implement and enforce appropriate and effective legislation to prevent acts of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

18. Calls upon all Governments and intergovernmental organizations, with the assistance of non-governmental organizations, as appropriate, to continue to supply relevant information to the Special Rapporteur to enable him to fulfil his mandate;

19. Commends non-governmental organizations for the action that they have taken against racism and racial discrimination and for the continuous support and assistance that they have provided to the victims of racism and racial discrimination;

20. Urges all Governments to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur with a view to enabling him to fulfil his mandate, including the examination of incidents of contemporary forms of racism and racial discrimination, inter alia, against blacks, Arabs and Muslims, xenophobia, Negrophobia, anti-Semitism and related intolerance;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all the necessary human and financial assistance to carry out his mandate efficiently, effectively and expeditiously and to enable him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session.

Right to nationality

Report of Secretary-General. In response to a 1998 Commission request [YUN 1998, p. 652], the Secretary-General presented information received from 10 Governments on measures they had taken to prevent the arbitrary deprivation of nationality [E/CN.4/1999/56 & Add.1,2].

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 1999/28], the Commission called on States to refrain from taking measures that discriminated against persons on grounds of race, colour, gender, religion, or national or ethnic origin by nullifying or impairing the exercise, on an equal footing, of their right to a nationality, and to repeal such legislation if it existed. It urged the Commission's mechanisms and UN treaty bodies to continue to collect information and to report on the issue. The Secretary-General was also asked to continue to collect information and to make it available to the Commission.

Rights of non-citizens

Working paper. In response to a 1998 Subcommission request [YUN 1998, p. 652], David Weissbrodt (United States) presented, in May [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/7], a working paper on the rights of persons who were not citizens of the country in which they lived. It reviewed the development of the rights of non-citizens since the 1985 adoption by the General Assembly in resolution 40/144 of the Declaration on the Human Rights of Individuals Who are not Nationals of the Country in which They Live [YUN 1985, p. 850] and other issues not covered by the Declaration. It also examined the rights of non-citizens under the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and other standards relevant to them. The paper recommended actions for CERD and proposed that the paper be transmitted to it for its advice and reactions. If CERD determined that a full study would be helpful, the Subcommission should transmit the paper, together with CERD's comments, to the Commission, along with a proposal for the study.

CERD should be encouraged to prepare a general recommendation on the rights of non-citizens.

An addendum to the report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/77Add.1] examined ways to overcome impediments to the ratification of the 1990 International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 45/158 [YUN 1990, p. 594], and ways to contribute to the efforts of the working group of intergovernmental experts on the human rights of migrants. As the Commission had replaced the working group with a Special Rapporteur on the human rights of migrants, the paper should be transmitted to the Special Rapporteur. (For further information on the rights of migrants, see below.)

Subcommission action. On 25 August [res. 1999/7], the Subcommission recommended that the rights of non-citizens be addressed explicitly at the World Conference. It endorsed the conclusions contained in the working paper, including the importance of undertaking an updated study on the rights of non-citizens.

Migrant workers

Commission action. On 27 April [res. 1999/44], the Commission decided to appoint, for a three-year period, a special rapporteur on the human rights of migrants to examine ways to overcome obstacles to the protection of their human rights. The Special Rapporteur was asked to report in 2000 and the Secretary-General was asked to assist him/her.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/1999/23], adopted decision 1999/239 without vote [agenda item 14 (h)].

- (iii) The Secretary-General to give the Special Rapporteur all necessary human and financial assistance for the fulfilment of his/her mandate.

On 6 August, the Chairperson of the Commission, following consultations with Bureau members, appointed Gabriela Rodríguez Pizarro (Costa Rica) as Special Rapporteur on the human rights of migrants.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/166 without vote [agenda item 116 (b)].

Protection of migrants

The General Assembly,

Considering that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights proclaims that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights and that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set out therein, without distinction of any kind, in particular as to race, colour or national origin,

Reaffirming the provisions concerning migrants adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, the International Conference on Population and Development, the World Summit for Social Development and the Fourth World Conference on Women,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1999/44 of 27 April 1999 on the human rights of migrants, and of its decision to appoint a Special Rapporteur on the human rights of migrants,

Recalling its resolution 40/144 of 13 December 1985 by which it approved the Declaration on the Human Rights of Individuals Who are not Nationals of the Country in which They Live,

Bearing in mind the situation of vulnerability in which migrants frequently find themselves, owing, inter alia, to their absence from their State of origin and to the difficulties they encounter because of differences of language, custom and culture, as well as the economic and social difficulties and obstacles for the return to their States of origin of migrants who are non-documented or in an irregular situation,

Deeply concerned at the manifestations of violence, racism, xenophobia and other forms of discrimination and inhuman and degrading treatment against migrants, especially women and children, in different parts of the world,

Encouraged by the increasing interest of the international community in the effective and full protection of the human rights of all migrants, and underlining the need to make further efforts to ensure respect for the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all migrants,

Taking note with appreciation of the recommendations on strengthening the promotion, protection and implementation of the human rights of migrants of the working group of intergovernmental experts on the human rights of migrants established by the Commission on Human Rights,

Noting the efforts made by States to penalize the international trafficking of migrants and to protect the victims of this illegal activity,

Taking note of the decisions of the relevant international juridical bodies on questions relating to migrants, in particular advisory opinion OC-16/99, issued by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights on 1 October 1999, regarding the right to information about consular assistance within the framework of due process guarantees,

1. Requests all Member States, in conformity with their respective constitutional systems, effectively to promote and protect the human rights of all migrants, in conformity with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the international instruments to which they are party, which may include the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and other applicable international human rights instruments;

2. Strongly condemns all forms of racial discrimination and xenophobia with regard to access to employment, vocational training, housing, schooling, health services and social services, as well as services intended for use by the public, and welcomes the active role played by governmental and non-governmental organizations in combating racism and assisting individual victims of racist acts, including migrant victims;

3. Calls upon all States to review and, where necessary, revise immigration policies with a view to eliminating all discriminatory policies and practices against migrants and to provide specialized training for government policy-making and law enforcement, immigration and other concerned officials, thus underlining the importance of effective action to create conditions that foster greater harmony and tolerance within societies;

4. Reiterates the need for all States to protect fully the universally recognized human rights of migrants, especially women and children, regardless of their legal status, and to provide humane treatment, in particular with regard to assistance and protection, including those under the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, regarding the right to receive consular assistance from the country of origin;

5. Welcomes the decision of the Commission on Human Rights to appoint a Special Rapporteur on the human rights of migrants to examine ways and means to overcome the obstacles existing to the full and effective protection of the human rights of this vulnerable group, including obstacles and difficulties for the return of migrants who are non-documented or in an irregular situation, with the following functions:

(a) To request and receive information from all relevant sources, including migrants themselves, on violations of the human rights of migrants and their families;

(b) To formulate appropriate recommendations to prevent and remedy violations of the human rights of migrants, wherever they may occur;

(c) To promote the effective application of relevant international norms and standards on the issue;

(d) To recommend actions and measures applicable at the national, regional and international levels to eliminate violations of the human rights of migrants;

(e) To take into account a gender perspective when requesting and analysing information, as well as to give special attention to the occurrence of multiple discrimination and violence against migrant women;

6. Requests all Governments to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur in the performance of the tasks and duties mandated and to furnish all information requested, including by reacting promptly to his/her urgent appeals;

7. Encourages Member States that have not yet done so to enact domestic criminal legislation to combat international trafficking of migrants, which should take into account, in particular, trafficking that endangers the lives of migrants or includes different forms of servitude or exploitation, such as any form of debt bondage, sexual or labour exploitation, and to strengthen international cooperation to combat such trafficking;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

The Assembly adopted the tenth preambular paragraph by a recorded vote of 134 votes to 1, with 14 abstentions. Similarly, the Committee adopted the paragraph by a recorded vote of 121 to 1, with 19 abstentions.

Freedom of travel

On 17 December [meeting 83], the Assembly adopted resolution 54/169, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.2], by recorded vote (95-1-66) [agenda item 116 (b)].

Respect for the right to universal freedom of travel and the vital importance of family reunification

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated,

Recalling the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Stressing that, as stated in the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, family reunification of documented migrants is an important factor in international migration and that remittances by documented migrants to their countries of origin often constitute a very important source of foreign exchange and are instrumental in improving the well-being of relatives left behind,

Recalling its resolution 53/143 of 9 December 1998,

1. Once again calls upon all States to guarantee the universally recognized freedom of travel to all foreign nationals legally residing in their territory;

2. Reaffirms that all Governments, in particular those of receiving countries, must recognize the vital importance of family reunification and promote its incorporation into national legislation in order to ensure protection of the unity of families of documented migrants;

3. Calls upon all States to allow, in conformity with international legislation, the free flow of financial remittances by foreign nationals residing in their territory to their relatives in the country of origin;

4. Also calls upon all States to refrain from enacting, and to repeal if it already exists, legislation intended as a coercive measure that discriminates against legal migrants, whether individuals or groups, by adversely affecting family reunification and the right to send financial remittances to relatives in the country of origin;

5. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its fifty-fifth session, under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Affirmative action

Commission action. On 27 April [dec. 1999/107], the Commission endorsed the Subcommission's 1998 decision to appoint Marc Bossuyt (Belgium) as Special Rapporteur to undertake a study on the concept and practice of affirmative action [YUN 1998, p. 652]. By decision 1999/253 of 27 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision.

Secretariat note. A June note by the secretariat [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/5] stated that the Special Rapporteur would report in 2000, owing to the fact that the collection of information for the report was not possible in the time available for the preparation of documents.

Subcommission action. On 25 August [dec. 1999/106], the Subcommission renewed its authorization to the Special Rapporteur to request the High Commissioner to send a questionnaire to Governments, international organizations and NGOs, inviting them to provide relevant national documentation on affirmative action. The Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur.

Other forms of intolerance

Cultural prejudice

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third

Committee [A/54/605/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/160 without vote [agenda item 116 (b)].

Human rights and cultural diversity

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the relevant provisions of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Noting that numerous instruments within the United Nations system promote cultural diversity, as well as the conservation and development of culture, in particular the Declaration of the Principles of International Cultural Cooperation, proclaimed on 4 November 1966 by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its fourteenth session,

Welcoming the designation by the General Assembly, in its resolution 53/22 of 4 November 1998, of the year 2001 as the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations,

Reaffirming that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that the international community must treat human rights globally in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing and with the same emphasis, and that, while the significance of national and regional particularities and various historical, cultural and religious backgrounds must be borne in mind, it is the duty of States, regardless of their political, economic and cultural systems, to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recognizing that cultural diversity and the pursuit of cultural development by all peoples and nations are a source of mutual enrichment for the cultural life of humankind,

Considering that tolerance of cultural, ethnic and religious diversities is essential for peace, understanding and friendship among individuals and people of different cultures and nations of the world,

Recognizing in each culture a dignity and value which deserves recognition, respect and preservation, and convinced also that in their rich variety and diversity, and in the reciprocal influences they exert on one another, all cultures form part of the common heritage belonging to all humankind,

Convinced that the promotion of cultural pluralism, tolerance towards and dialogue among various cultures and civilizations would contribute to the efforts of all peoples and nations to enrich their cultures and traditions by engaging in a mutually beneficial exchange of knowledge and intellectual, moral and material achievements,

1. Affirms the importance for all peoples and nations to hold, develop and preserve their cultural heritage and traditions in a national and international atmosphere of peace, tolerance and mutual respect;

2. Recognizes that respect for cultural diversity and the cultural rights of all enhances cultural pluralism, contributing to a wider exchange of knowledge and understanding of cultural background, advancing the application and enjoyment of universally accepted human rights across the world and fostering stable friendly relations among peoples and nations worldwide;

3. Emphasizes that the promotion of cultural pluralism and tolerance at the national and international levels is important for enhancing respect for cultural rights and cultural diversity;

4. Calls upon States, international organizations and United Nations agencies, and invites civil society, including non-governmental organizations, for the purpose of advancing the objectives of peace, development and universally accepted human rights, to recognize and respect cultural diversity;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in the light of the present resolution, to prepare a report on human rights and cultural diversity, taking into account the views of Member States, relevant United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations, and to submit it to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

6. Decides to continue consideration of this question at its fifty-fifth session under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Discrimination against minorities

Report of Secretary-General. In January [E/CN.4/1999/113], the Secretary-General provided an overview of the concluding observations of human rights treaty bodies relating to the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities; the 1997 visit to Germany of the Special Rapporteur on religious intolerance [YUN 1997, p. 637]; the work of the Working Group on Minorities in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 654]; and the activities of the Special Rapporteurs on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions [ibid., p. 670], on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) [YUN 1997, p. 737], on the human rights situation in Iraq [ibid., p. 727] and on the human rights situation in Myanmar [ibid., p. 730].

Commission action. On 27 April [res. 1999/48], the Commission urged States and the international community to promote and protect the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, as set out in the 1992 Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 47/135 [YUN 1992, p. 723]. The Secretary-General was called on to make available, at the request of Governments concerned, qualified expertise on minority issues. The High Commissioner for Human Rights was called on to promote the implementation of the Declaration and to engage in a dialogue with Governments to do so; to improve coordination and cooperation of UN programmes and agencies dealing with minority issues; and to seek voluntary contributions to facilitate participation by minority groups in the activities of the Working Group on Minorities. The Commission asked the Working Group to contribute to the preparations for the World Conference. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Group and to report in 2000.

Working Group activities. The five-member Working Group on Minorities, at its fifth session (Geneva, 25-31 May) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/21], reviewed the promotion of the 1992 Declaration, examined possible solutions to problems involving minorities, including the promotion of mutual understanding between and among minorities and Governments, and recommended further measures to promote and protect the rights of minorities.

The Working Group recommended that its members prepare a revised Commentary on the principles of the Declaration as part of a manual on the Declaration. The manual would also review procedures by which members of minorities could address regional and international organizations with their concerns. The Working Group considered the questions of effective participation by minorities, multicultural and intercultural education, and information presented by NGOs and minority representatives on situations where, in their opinion, the standards contained in the Declaration were not adequately implemented. It addressed the special case of the legacy of plantation slavery and the situation of African Americans generally in different parts of the Americas, and examined forcible displacement and the return of persons who had been forcefully displaced. The Group discussed a proposal to begin work on a definition of the concept of minority, and examined the feasibility of establishing a database containing a list of organizations and events, a bibliography of publications and a description of minorities. Recommendations included strengthening its secretariat and inviting the High Commissioner to call on Governments and others to provide voluntary contributions, with a view to facilitating participation by underrepresented minority groups in the Working Group's activities.

The Working Group and the European Centre for Minority Issues organized a regional Central and East European expert seminar on the effective participation of minorities (Flensburg, Germany, 30 April-2 May) [E/CN.4/2000/79]. The seminar focused on various mechanisms within States to enable the political participation of minorities in public life, and non-institutional conditions that provided an enabling environment for minorities to participate effectively.

The international seminar on intercultural and multicultural education (Montreal, Canada, 29 September-2 October), organized by the Centre d'études sur le droit et la mondialisation and the Working Group, considered the issue of intercultural and multicultural education in the light of the Declaration [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/27].

Subcommission action. On 26 August [res. 1999/23], the Subcommission, endorsing the conclusions and recommendations of the Working Group, decided to entrust Erika-Irene Daes (Greece) and Asbjørn Eide (Norway) with the preparation of a working paper on the relationship and distinction between the rights of persons belonging to minorities and those of indigenous peoples, for submission to the next sessions of the Working Group on Minorities and the Working Group on Indigenous Populations and to the Subcommission in 2000. It asked the Secretary-General to invite States, specialized agencies, other UN bodies, NGOs and scholars to provide comments to the Working Group in 2000 on the Commentary to the Declaration. He was asked to invite UN bodies and specialized agencies to provide information to the Working Group on their activities and programmes relating to minority protection. The Subcommission called for the report of the seminar on intercultural and multicultural education (see above) to be transmitted to the Working Group and the Preparatory Committee of the World Conference in 2000. It recommended that OHCHR be strengthened to support the Working Group's activities.

Also on 26 August [dec. 1999/109], the Subcommission decided to entrust Yeung Kam Yeung Sik Yuen (Mauritius) with preparing a working paper on the human rights problems and protection of the Roma, for submission to the Working Group in 2000 in order to enable the Subcommission to decide on the feasibility of a study on the subject.

Reports of Secretary-General. In September [A/54/303] and December [E/CN.4/2000/79], the Secretary-General described action taken to promote the 1992 Declaration. A number of projects had had an indirect impact on greater respect for minority rights, including assistance aimed at the effective functioning of the National Human Rights Office in Latvia; the provision of expertise to key institutions in South Africa; the organization of a seminar for human rights NGOs and workshops for governmental officials, NGOs, educators and the legal community in Armenia; human rights training for national police agencies in Eastern Slavonia, Croatia; practical assistance to promote human rights in Azerbaijan; and a national training workshop for human rights NGOs and the Government of the Russian Federation on the human rights treaty system. The reports described cooperation between OHCHR and the specialized agencies, action taken by human rights treaty bodies to monitor the observance by States parties of the minority-specific rights contained in the instruments, and the activities of special rapporteurs, special representatives and NGOs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/162 without vote [agenda item 116 (b)].

Effective promotion of the Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/135 of 18 December 1992, by which it adopted the Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities, and its subsequent resolutions thereon,

Considering that the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities contribute to political and social stability and peace and enrich the cultural heritage of society as a whole in the States in which such persons live,

Concerned by the frequency and severity of disputes and conflicts concerning minorities in many countries and their often tragic consequences, and concerned also that persons belonging to minorities are particularly vulnerable to displacement through, inter alia, population transfers, refugee flows and forced relocation,

Acknowledging that the United Nations has an increasingly important role to play regarding the protection of minorities by, inter alia, taking due account of and giving effect to the Declaration,

Noting that the Working Group on Minorities of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights of the Commission on Human Rights held its fourth and fifth sessions from 25 to 29 May 1998 and 25 to 31 May 1999, respectively,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Reaffirms the obligation of States to ensure that persons belonging to minorities may exercise fully and effectively all human rights and fundamental freedoms without any discrimination and in full equality before the law, in accordance with the Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities;
3. Urges States and the international community to promote and protect the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, as set out in the Declaration, including through the facilitation of their participation in all aspects of the political, economic, social, religious and cultural life of society and in the economic progress and development of their country;
4. Urges States to take, as appropriate, all the necessary constitutional, legislative, administrative and other measures to promote and give effect to the Declaration;

5. Recognizes that respect for human rights and the promotion of understanding and tolerance by Governments as well as between and among minorities are central to the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to minorities;

6. Appeals to States to make bilateral and multilateral efforts, as appropriate, in order to protect the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities in their countries, in accordance with the Declaration;

7. Calls upon the Secretary-General to make available, at the request of Governments concerned, qualified expertise on minority issues, including the prevention and resolution of disputes, to assist in existing or potential situations involving minorities;

8. Calls upon the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to promote, within her mandate, the implementation of the Declaration and to continue to engage in a dialogue with Governments concerned for that purpose;

9. Requests the High Commissioner to continue her efforts to improve the coordination and cooperation among United Nations programmes and agencies on activities related to the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to minorities and to take the work of relevant regional organizations active in the field of human rights into account in her endeavours;

10. Calls upon the High Commissioner to resume inter-agency consultations with United Nations programmes and agencies on minority issues, and urges those programmes and agencies to contribute actively to this process;

11. Encourages intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to contribute to the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities;

12. Calls upon the Working Group on Minorities of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights of the Commission on Human Rights to implement further its mandate with the involvement of a wide range of participants;

13. Invites the High Commissioner to seek voluntary contributions to facilitate the effective participation, including through training seminars, in the work of the Working Group on Minorities of representatives of non-governmental organizations and persons belonging to minorities, in particular those from developing countries;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution, including on good practices in the fields of education and the effective participation of minorities in decision-making processes;

15. Decides to continue consideration of this question at its fifty-sixth session, under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Religious intolerance

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In January [E/CN.4/1999/58], the Special Rapporteur on religious intolerance, Abdelfattah Amor (Tunisia), described his examination of incidents and governmental action inconsistent with the provisions of the 1981 Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, contained in General Assembly resolution 36/55 [YUN 1981, p. 882]. He provided an analysis of: legislation as part of his efforts to create an international compendium of national enactments relating to freedom of religion or belief; initiatives taken by States and NGOs to combat intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief; information on in situ visits and follow-up; and communications he had sent to and replies received from States since the Commission's 1998 session. The Special Rapporteur summarized 63 communications, including four urgent appeals, that he had sent to 46 States; he also summarized the responses of 22 States. An analysis of the communications revealed a decline in anti-religious State policies and the manipulation of religion in the interest of a political ideology, and yet the persistence of those policies in several countries and even the emergence of problems they had brought about. There was also an upsurge of State policies directed against minorities in matters of religion or belief; a growing number of policies and practices of intolerance and discrimination by non-State entities; and an increased number of policies and practices of intolerance and discrimination against women, deriving from interpretations and traditions attributed by men to religion.

A later report described the Special Rapporteur's visit (1-3 September) to the Holy See [E/CN.4/2000/65], which, the Special Rapporteur stated, provided an opportunity to see what was being done in the area of inter-religious dialogue from the point of view of the Holy See. The visit contributed to better knowledge of one religion in its relations with others and therefore to shared experience, as well as to dialogue between communities belonging to different religions and beliefs, and lastly to enhanced protection of freedom of religion and belief.

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 1999/39], the Commission, condemning all forms of intolerance and of discrimination based on religion or belief, urged States to: provide adequate constitutional and legal guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief; ensure that no one, because of religion or belief, was deprived of the rights to life, liberty and security of person, or was subjected to torture or arbitrary arrest or detention; combat hatred, intolerance and acts of violence, intimidation and coercion motivated by religious intolerance; recognize the right of all persons to worship or assemble in connection with a religion or belief and to establish and maintain places for those purposes; ensure that members of law enforcement bodies, civil servants, educators and other public officials respected different religions and beliefs; ensure that religious places, sites and shrines were respected and protected; and promote tolerance through education and other means. The Commission invited the Special Rapporteur to contribute to the 2001 World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance by forwarding to the High Commissioner his recommendations on religious intolerance that had a bearing on the Conference. Noting the Special Rapporteur's request to change his title from Special Rapporteur on religious intolerance to Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief, the Commission decided to consider the request in 2000. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Special Rapporteur, submit an interim report to the Assembly in 1999 and report to the Commission in 2000.

On 30 April [res. 1999/82], the Commission urged States to take measures to combat hatred, discrimination, intolerance and acts of violence, intimidation and coercion motivated by religious intolerance, including attacks on religious places, and to encourage understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief. It expressed concern at negative stereotyping of religions and that Islam was frequently and wrongly associated with human rights violations and with terrorism. The Commission invited the High Commissioner, in the context of preparations for the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations (2001) (see PART THREE, Chapter IX), to consider holding seminars to promote a dialogue among cultures. The Economic and Social Council approved that invitation on 27 July (decision 1999/250).

Interim reports of Special Rapporteur. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/140 [YUN 1998, p. 657], the Secretary-General, in September [A/54/386], transmitted the Special Rapporteur's interim report. Since the submission of his last report, the Special Rapporteur had sent 65 communications (including two urgent appeals) to 49 States. The report contained summaries of his communications and the replies received.

Regarding the compendium of national enactments relating to freedom of religion and belief, 49 States had replied to the Special Rapporteur's requests to provide the text of constitutions or equivalent texts, legislation and regulations governing religious freedom and public worship. He recommended that research should be conducted on the status of women with regard to religion and human rights; proselytism, freedom of religion and poverty; and sects, new religious movements and communities of religion and belief and human rights. Referring to a questionnaire he had sent in 1994 to States on issues relating to freedom of religion and belief in primary and secondary schools [YUN 1995, p. 731], the Special Rapporteur stated that 77 States had replied, making it possible to formulate an international education strategy to combat intolerance and discrimination based on religion and belief. Lack of resources had delayed the analysis of replies. He had drawn up a plan to finalize the analysis by November 2001, the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the 1981 Declaration. An international consultative conference would be held in November 2001 on the content of curricula and textbooks at institutions of primary or basic and secondary education relating to freedom of religion and belief. The Special Rapporteur described the initiatives of the Commission, States and NGOs.

Communications in 1999 revealed an increase in religious extremism, the continued existence of policies adversely affecting freedom of religion and belief and the persistence of discrimination against women. Religious extremism, the Special Rapporteur stressed, spared no society and no religion, and its most common victims were minorities and women. The report described where and by whom religious extremism and related policies were carried out.

The Special Rapporteur visited Turkey (30 November-9 December) [A/55/280/Add.1], where he examined legislation and policies relating to freedom of religion and beliefs, and the situation of the non-Muslim communities. He noted that Turkey's legislation, particularly its constitutional legislation, provided absolute guarantees of freedom of religion and belief and protected its manifestations, while imposing certain limitations. Those limitations were so vaguely worded as to lend themselves to very broad interpretation, which might lead to State intervention and excessive restrictions. The Special Rapporteur recommended the use of precise terminology and interpretation consistent with international human rights standards and with the jurisprudence of the Commission on Human Rights. While the constitution enshrined the principle of secularism in relations between the State and religion, secularism was apparently compromised by the optional mention of religion on identity cards and by compulsory religious and ethics instruction. Despite the proclaimed secular nature of the State, the treatment of Islam in Turkey tended to give a quasi-official status to Hanafi Islam.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the authorities take steps to make education a vehicle for promoting human rights and building a culture of tolerance.

There had been violations against Muslim communities and non-Muslim minorities, arising mainly from a narrow interpretation and application of the principle of nationalism in the form of Turkization, which was not always compatible with the right to tolerance and to non-discrimination. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the authorities establish a principle whereby nationalism was not used against minority religious communities. The Criminal Code punished any attack on religion and religious manifestations and a law on public service and another on national education enshrined the constitutional principle of equal access to the public service and to national education, while a media law sought to ban any act of blasphemy. Other legislation, however, raised serious questions, such as a law permitting the authorities to reject any given or family name considered contrary to the national culture, which would appear to reflect limitations and bias against minority communities, inspired by a policy of Turkization. The Special Rapporteur recommended revision of the law on names.

Non-Muslims, with the exception of the Jewish minority, suffered as a result of State policies on secularism and nationalism. Representatives of the Christian, Greek Orthodox and Armenian (Orthodox, Catholic and Protestant) minorities said that they enjoyed freedom of religion and worship but that they faced problems affecting the religious affairs of their community. The Greek Orthodox community was slowly disappearing owing to Turkey's policy limiting the citizenship status of Orthodox Greeks. As to the Armenian minority, its position appeared fragile, despite the fact that numerically it was the most important Christian community. The Jewish minority insisted that its situation was satisfactory, explained in large part by the fact that, in contrast to the Armenians and the Greeks, the Jews had made no claim to lands in Turkey, and also by the close relations between Turkey and Israel. The Syrians and the entire Assyro-Chaldean community were not recognized as a distinct religious and cultural community and seemed to be gradually disappearing. The impact of the armed conflict between the Turkish authorities and Kurdish insurrectionists had placed the community in a climate of constant fear from acts of terrorism and had provoked their massive departure from south-eastern Turkey. The Special Rapporteur made a series of recommendations regarding the Christian, Greek Orthodox and Armenian minorities and general recommendations applicable to all religious communities in Turkey.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/159 without vote [agenda item 116 (b)].

Elimination of all forms of religious intolerance

The General Assembly,

Recalling that all States have pledged themselves, under the Charter of the United Nations, to promote and encourage universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming that discrimination against human beings on the grounds of religion or belief constitutes an affront to human dignity and a disavowal of the principles of the Charter,

Recalling article 18 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and article 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Reaffirming its resolution 36/55 of 25 November 1981, by which it proclaimed the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief,

Emphasizing that the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief is far-reaching and profound and that it encompasses freedom of thought on all matters, personal conviction and the commitment to religion or belief, whether manifested individually or in community with others,

Reaffirming the call of the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, for all Governments to take all appropriate measures in compliance with their international obligations and with due regard to their respective legal systems to counter intolerance and related violence based on religion or belief, including practices of discrimination against women and the desecration of religious sites, recognizing that every individual has the right to freedom of thought, conscience, expression and religion,

Calling upon all Governments to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on religious intolerance to enable him to carry out his mandate fully,

Alarmed that serious instances of intolerance and discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief, including acts of violence, intimidation and coercion motivated by religious intolerance, occur in many parts of the world and threaten the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Deeply concerned that, as reported by the Special Rapporteur, the rights violated on religious grounds include the right to life, the right to physical integrity and to liberty and security of person, the right to freedom of expression, the right not to be subjected to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment and the right not to be arbitrarily arrested or detained,

Believing that further efforts are therefore required to promote and protect the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief and to eliminate all forms of hatred, intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief,

1. Reaffirms that freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief is a human right derived from the inherent dignity of the human person and guaranteed to all without discrimination;

2. Urges States to ensure that their constitutional and legal systems provide effective guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief, including the provision of effective remedies in cases where the right to freedom of religion or belief is violated;

3. Also urges States to ensure, in particular, that no one within their jurisdiction is, because of his or her religion or belief, deprived of the right to life or the right to liberty and security of person or subjected to torture or arbitrary arrest or detention;

4. Further urges States, in conformity with international standards of human rights, to take all necessary action to prevent such instances, to take all appropriate measures to combat hatred, intolerance and acts of violence, intimidation and coercion motivated by religious intolerance and to encourage, through the educational system and by other means, understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief;

5. Recognizes that legislation alone is not enough to prevent violations of human rights, including the right to freedom of religion or belief;

6. Emphasizes that, as underlined by the Human Rights Committee, restrictions on the freedom to manifest religion or belief are permitted only if limitations are prescribed by law, are necessary to protect public safety, order, health or morals, or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others, and are applied in a manner that does not vitiate the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion;

7. Urges States to ensure that, in the course of their official duties, members of law enforcement bodies, civil servants, educators and other public officials respect different religions and beliefs and do not discriminate against persons professing other religions or beliefs;

8. Calls upon all States to recognize, as provided for in the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, the right of all persons to worship or assemble in connection with a religion or belief and to establish and maintain places for those purposes;

9. Expresses its grave concern at any attack upon religious places, sites and shrines, and calls upon all States, in accordance with their national legislation and in conformity with international human rights standards, to exert the utmost efforts to ensure that such places, sites and shrines are fully respected and protected;

10. Recognizes that the exercise of tolerance and non-discrimination by persons and groups is necessary for the full realization of the aims of the Declaration;

11. Takes note with appreciation of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on religious intolerance, who was appointed to examine incidents and governmental actions in all parts of the world that are incompatible with the provisions of the Declaration and to recommend remedial measures as appropriate, and encourages

12. Notes the request by the Special Rapporteur that his title be changed from Special Rapporteur on religious intolerance to Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief, which will be considered further by the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-sixth session;

13. Encourages the Special Rapporteur to contribute effectively to the preparatory process for the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance to be held in 2001 by transmitting to the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights his recommendations on religious intolerance which have a bearing on the Conference;

14. Encourages Governments to give serious consideration to inviting the Special Rapporteur to visit their countries so as to enable him to fulfil his mandate even more effectively;

15. Also encourages Governments, when seeking the assistance of the United Nations Programme of Advisory Services and Technical Assistance in the Field of Human Rights, to consider, where appropriate, including requests for assistance in the field of the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion;

16. Welcomes and encourages the continuing efforts of non-governmental organizations and religious bodies and groups to promote the implementation and dissemination of the Declaration;

17. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue its consideration of measures to implement the Declaration;

18. Requests the Special Rapporteur to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Special Rapporteur receives the necessary resources to enable him fully to discharge his mandate;

20. Decides to consider the question of the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance at its fifty-fifth session, under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Civil and political rights

Right to self-determination

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/134 [YUN 1998, p. 658], the Secretary-General, in September [A/54/327], summarized action taken by the Commission on Human Rights on the right of peoples to self-determination.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/604], adopted resolution 54/155 without vote [agenda item 115].

Universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance, for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights, of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and embodied in the International Covenants on Human Rights, as well as in the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Welcoming the progressive exercise of the right to self-determination by peoples under colonial, foreign or alien occupation and their emergence into sovereign statehood and independence,

Deeply concerned at the continuation of acts or threats of foreign military intervention and occupation that are threatening to suppress, or have already suppressed, the right to self-determination of sovereign peoples and nations,

Expressing grave concern that, as a consequence of the persistence of such actions, millions of people have been and are being uprooted from their homes as refugees and displaced persons, and emphasizing the urgent need for concerted international action to alleviate their condition,

Recalling the relevant resolutions regarding the violation of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights as a result of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation adopted by the Commission on Human Rights at its thirty-sixth, thirty-seventh, thirty-eighth, thirty-ninth, fortieth, forty-first, forty-second, forty-third, forty-fourth, forty-fifth, forty-sixth, forty-seventh, forty-eighth, forty-ninth, fiftieth, fifty-first, fifty-second, fifty-third, fifty-fourth and fifty-fifth sessions,

Reaffirming its resolutions 35/35 B of 14 November 1980, 36/10 of 28 October 1981, 37/42 of 3 December 1982, 38/16 of 22 November 1983, 39/18 of 23 November 1984, 40/24 of 29 November 1985, 41/100 of 4 December 1986, 42/94 of 7 December 1987, 43/105 of 8 December 1988, 44/80 of 8 December 1989, 45/131 of 14 December 1990, 46/88 of 16 December 1991, 47/83 of 16 December 1992, 48/93 of 20 December 1993, 49/148 of 23 December 1994, 50/139 of 21 December 1995, 51/84 of 12 December 1996, 52/113 of 12 December 1997 and 53/134 of 9 December 1998,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the right of peoples to self-determination,

1. Reaffirms that the universal realization of the right of all peoples, including those under colonial, foreign and alien domination, to self-determination is a fundamental condition for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights and for the preservation and promotion of such rights;

2. Declares its firm opposition to acts of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, since these have resulted in the suppression of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights in certain parts of the world;

3. Calls upon those States responsible to cease immediately their military intervention in and occupation of foreign countries and territories and all acts of repression, discrimination, exploitation and maltreatment, in particular the brutal and inhuman methods reportedly employed for the execution of those acts against the peoples concerned;

4. Deplores the plight of the millions of refugees and displaced persons who have been uprooted as a result of the aforementioned acts, and reaffirms their right to return to their homes voluntarily in safety and honour;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to give special attention to the violation of human rights, especially the right to self-determination, resulting from foreign military intervention, aggression or occupation;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report on this question to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session under the item entitled "Right of peoples to self-determination".

Rights of Palestinians

On 27 April [res. 1999/55], the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 44 to 1, with 8 abstentions, reaffirmed the unqualified Palestinian right to self-determination, including the option of a State. It called on the Secretary-General to transmit its resolution to Israel and all other Governments, to distribute it as widely as possible, and to make available to the Commission, prior to its 2000 session, information pertaining to its implementation by the Government of Israel.

The Commission considered a report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/1999/10], which stated that he had received no reply to his request to Israel for information on implementation of its 1998 resolution on the situation in occupied Palestine [YUN 1998, p. 659].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/604], adopted resolution 54/152 by recorded vote (156-2-1) [agenda item 115].

The right of the Palestinian people to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Aware that the development of friendly relations among nations, based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, is among the purposes and principles of the United Nations, as defined in the Charter,

Recalling the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Recalling also the Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations,

Expressing hope for rapid progress in the peace process and the achievement of a final settlement between the Palestinian and Israeli sides by the agreed time of September 2000,

Affirming the right of all States in the region to live in peace within secure and internationally recognized borders,

1. Reaffirms the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including the option of a State;

2. Expresses the hope that the Palestinian people will soon be exercising their right to self-determination, which is not subject to any veto, in the current peace process;

3. Urges all States and the specialized agencies and the organizations of the United Nations system to continue to support and assist the Palestinian people in their quest for self-determination.

Western Sahara

On 23 April [res. 1999/4], the Commission, noting with satisfaction the agreements on the settlement plan reached between Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro, called on the two parties to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General, his Personal Envoy and his Special Representative in implementing the plan. It expressed support for further efforts of the Secretary-General for the organization and supervision by the United Nations, in cooperation with the Organization of African Unity, of a referendum for self-determination of the people of Western Sahara (see p. 176).

Mercenaries

Commission action. On 23 April [res. 1999/3], the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 35 to 12, with 6 abstentions, urged States to take legislative measures to ensure that their territories and those under their control were not used for the recruitment, assembly, financing, training and transit of mercenaries to plan activities designed to impede the right to self-determination. It called on States that had not done so to consider signing or ratifying the 1989 International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 44/34 [YUN 1989, p. 825]. The Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to report in 2000 and the Secretary-General to invite Governments to make proposals towards a clearer legal definition of mercenaries. OHCHR was asked to publicize the adverse effects of mercenary activities on the right to self-determination and, when requested, to render advisory services to States that were so affected.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/135 [YUN 1998, p. 661], the Secretary-General, in September [A/54/326], transmitted a report by the Special Rapporteur on the question of the use of mercenaries, Enrique Bernales Ballesteros (Peru).

The Special Rapporteur visited the United Kingdom (25-30 January), at the invitation of the Government. Meetings with high-level government officials, academic institutions, NGOs and individuals resulted in a concurrence of opinion on the treatment of mercenary activities, on the assessment of situations, and on procedures for better regulation of private companies offering security services and military assistance and advice.

Mercenary activities continued to be carried out through traditional recruitment and had taken on new forms, such as recruitment and hiring by private companies offering security services and military assistance and advice, and their hiring in turn by Governments to provide security, to maintain public order and safety and to engage in armed combat against rebel forces or organized crime. The growing tendency of such companies to hire mercenaries constituted a threat to the international human rights protection system. As recruitment and hiring had become more businesslike, the number of mercenaries had increased. The Special Rapporteur observed that the international rules to deal with and punish mercenary activities were inadequate. He made recommendations for action by the General Assembly.

In December [E/CN.4/2000/14 & Corr.1], the Special Rapporteur reported on his visit to Cuba (12-17 September), made at the invitation of the Government. He stated that the visit enabled him to confirm that attacks had been carried out on hotels and tourist facilities in Havana in 1997, that the attacks had been carried out by foreigners for financial gain and that the persons concerned had been recruited, trained, hired and funded by third parties of Cuban origin acting outside the country. He concluded that the attacks were designed to inflict high-profile damage on tourist flows to Cuba, thereby flouting the fundamental rights of the Cuban people and basic principles of international law. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Commission condemn the incident in Cuba and recommend that judicial proceedings be initiated in each country whose territory had been used unlawfully. In more general recommendations, he called on the Commission to remind OHCHR of the need to carry out studies and disseminate information on the adverse effects of mercenary activities; suggest that Member States be extremely careful in their dealings with private military security companies; and, given the gaps in legislation that facilitated the use of mercenaries, reiterate its call to Member States to ratify or accede to the 1989 Convention. He also suggested that Member States should consider international and domestic rules on military security.

International Convention

As at 31 December, the International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries had been ratified or acceded to by 19 States and had a total of 16 signatories. The Convention was to enter into force on the thirtieth day following the date of deposit with the Secretary-General of the twenty-second instrument of ratification or accession.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/604], adopted resolution 54/151 by recorded vote (110-16-35) [agenda item 115].

Use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/135 of 9 December 1998, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1999/3 of 23 April 1999,

Recalling also all of its relevant resolutions, in which, inter alia, it condemned any State that permitted or tolerated the recruitment, financing, training, assembly, transit and use of mercenaries with the objective of overthrowing the Governments of States Members of the United Nations, especially those of developing countries, and recalling further the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and the Organization of African Unity,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations concerning the strict observance of the principles of sovereign equality, political independence, the territorial integrity of States, the non-use of force or of the threat of use of force in international relations and the self-determination of peoples,

Reaffirming also that, by virtue of the principle of self-determination, as developed in the Declaration on

Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, all peoples have the right freely to determine, without external interference, their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development and every State has the duty to respect this right in accordance with the provisions of the Charter,

Recognizing that mercenary activities continue to increase in many parts of the world and take on new forms, permitting mercenaries to operate in a better organized way, with increased pay, and that their numbers have grown and more persons are prepared to become mercenaries,

Alarmed and concerned about the danger that the activities of mercenaries constitute to peace and security in developing countries, in particular in Africa and in small States, and also elsewhere,

Deeply concerned about the loss of life, the substantial damage to property and the negative effects on the policy and economies of affected countries resulting from mercenary aggression and criminal activities,

Convinced that it is necessary for Member States to ratify the International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries adopted by the General Assembly on 4 December 1989 and to develop and maintain international co-operation among States for the prevention, prosecution and punishment of mercenary activities,

Convinced also that, notwithstanding the way in which mercenaries or mercenary-related activities are used or the form they take to acquire some semblance of legitimacy, they are a threat to peace, security and the self-determination of peoples and an obstacle to the enjoyment of human rights by peoples,

1. Takes note of the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the question of the use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination;

2. Reaffirms that the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries are causes for grave concern to all States and violate the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Recognizes that armed conflict, terrorism, arms trafficking and covert operations by third Powers, inter alia, encourage the demand for mercenaries on the global market;

4. Urges all States to take the necessary steps and to exercise the utmost vigilance against the menace posed by the activities of mercenaries and to take the necessary legislative measures to ensure that their territories and other territories under their control, as well as their nationals, are not used for the recruitment, assembly, financing, training and transit of mercenaries for the planning of activities designed to destabilize or overthrow the Government of any State or threaten the territorial integrity and political unity of sovereign States, or to promote secession or to fight the national liberation movements struggling against colonial or other forms of alien domination or occupation;

5. Calls upon all States that have not yet done so to consider taking the necessary action to sign or to ratify the International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries;

6. Welcomes the cooperation extended by those countries that have invited the Special Rapporteur;

7. Also welcomes the adoption by some States of national legislation that restricts the recruitment, assembly, financing, training and transit of mercenaries;

8. Invites States to investigate the possibility of mercenary involvement whenever criminal acts of a terrorist nature occur;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all the necessary assistance, both professional and financial;

10. Urges all States to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur in the fulfilment of his mandate;

11. Requests the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, as a matter of priority to be programmed in its immediate activities, to publicize the adverse effects of the activities of mercenaries on the right to self-determination and, when requested and where necessary, to render advisory services to States that are affected by the activities of mercenaries;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to invite Governments to make proposals towards a clearer legal definition of mercenaries, and, in this regard, requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to convene expert meetings, as requested in previous General Assembly resolutions, to study and update the international legislation in force and to propose recommendations for a clearer legal definition of mercenaries that would allow for more efficient prevention and punishment of mercenary activities;

13. Requests the Special Rapporteur to report his findings on the use of mercenaries to undermine the right of peoples to self-determination, with specific recommendations, to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

14. Decides to consider at its fifty-fifth session the question of the use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination under the item entitled "Right of peoples to self-determination".

Administration of justice

Although the Subcommission decided on 3 August [dec. 1999/103] not to establish a sessional working group on the administration of justice in 1999, papers were submitted in accordance with a 1998 Subcommission request [YUN 1998, p. 663]. A paper by Hector Fix-Zamudio (Mexico) on the improvement and efficiency of the judicial instruments for the protection of human rights examined domestic instruments, notably amparo and habeas corpus, and analysed the impact of domestic legislation in the international sphere. Miguel Alfonso Martínez (Cuba) noted that an increasing trend towards the privatization of prisons could be identified in countries other than the United States. In a paper on the evolution of capital punishment, El Hadji Guissé (Senegal) stated that apart from Europe, where the use of the death penalty had diminished, not much progress had been made in abolishing the death penalty elsewhere.

Pursuant to a 1998 Subcommission request [YUN 1998, p. 662], the Secretary-General, in a January note [E/CN.4/1999/111], transmitted to the Commission the text of the draft international convention on the protection of all persons from enforced disappearance, as well as the comments thereon of the Subcommission and the sessional working group on the administration of justice. On 26 August [res. 1999/24], the Subcommission urged the Commission to give priority consideration to the draft convention.

Compensation for victims

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1997 Commission request [YUN 1997, p. 650], the Secretary-General stated, in a January note [E/CN.4/1999/53], that he had received additional replies from Governments regarding legislation they had adopted or were in the process of adopting relating to the right to restitution, compensation and rehabilitation for victims of grave violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms. The replies were submitted to the independent expert on the right and their full texts were in the files of the Secretariat.

Report of independent expert. As requested by the Commission in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 663], the independent expert on the right to restitution, compensation and rehabilitation for victims of grave violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms, M. Cherif Bassiouni (Egypt/United States), submitted a February report [E/CN.4/1999/65] in which he laid the groundwork for a revised version of the basic principles and guidelines on the right. He analysed previous versions of the guidelines proposed in 1993 [YUN

1993, p. 962], 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 623] and 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 649]. Based on the proposed guidelines, the 1985 Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, contained in General Assembly resolution 40/34 [YUN 1985, p. 742], and the Statute of the International Criminal Court [YUN 1998, p. 1209], as well as the views of Governments, the expert observed that some areas needed clarification before a revised version could be prepared.

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 1999/33], the Commission asked the Secretary-General to invite States, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to collaborate with the independent expert. The expert was asked to complete his work and submit to the Commission in 2000 a revised version of the basic principles and guidelines prepared in 1997, taking into account the views of States, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs.

Rule of law

On 28 April [res. 1999/74], the Commission, noting that the OHCHR programme of advisory services and technical cooperation did not have sufficient funds to provide substantial financial assistance to national projects on the realization of human rights and the maintenance of the rule of law in countries that were committed to those ends, but which faced economic hardship, welcomed the cooperation between OHCHR and the UN system, particularly between the United Nations Development Programme and OHCHR in providing technical assistance in the promotion of the rule of law. The High Commissioner was encouraged to pursue consultations with the UN system aimed at enhancing inter-agency cooperation in providing assistance for that purpose, as well as to explore support from financial institutions. She was asked to accord high priority to OHCHR technical cooperation activities regarding the rule of law.

(See p. 582 for further information on OHCHR technical cooperation activities.)

State of siege or emergency

As requested by the Commission in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 664], OHCHR submitted, in July [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/31], a list of countries or territories in which a state of emergency had been proclaimed before June 1997 and extended thereafter. OHCHR stated that it had encountered difficulties in obtaining information on the imposition of states of emergency in countries not parties to the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 423], and therefore had no obligation to notify the Secretary-General of such imposition. Furthermore, information could not be easily obtained on de facto states of emergency where various security laws and measures were imposed. In order to understand the implications of the proclamation, extension and termination of states of emergency for human rights, an analysis of legal instruments and States' practices affecting human rights and fundamental freedoms during states of emergency was essential. For those reasons, the list was not complete or comprehensive.

Humanitarian standards

The Commission considered a report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/1999/92] containing information received from Governments, UN bodies and NGOs on issues identified in his 1998 report on fundamental standards of humanity [YUN 1998, p.664].

The Secretary-General stressed that fundamental standards of humanity were intended to ensure the protection of human beings at all times and in all circumstances, especially during international armed conflict and internal violence. Further means to ensure adequate protection of victims of abuses during situations of internal violence might be required, such as improved implementation of international law, better dissemination of information pertaining to existing human rights standards and humanitarian principles, and education and training programmes in international law.

Commission action. On 28 April [res. 1999/65], the Commission invited Governments, UN bodies, the human rights treaty bodies, mechanisms of the Commission, intergovernmental and regional organizations, the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and NGOs to comment on the Secretary-General's report, as well as on his 1998 report. The Secretary-General was requested to report in 2000 on fundamental standards of humanity.

Arbitrary detention

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 1999/37], the Commission, requesting the Governments concerned to take account of the views of the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention and to take steps to remedy the situation of persons arbitrarily deprived of their liberty, encouraged them to pay attention to the Group's recommendations and to ensure that their legislation was in conformity with the relevant international standards and legal instruments. Those Governments were requested to give attention to the Working Group's urgent appeals on a humanitarian basis.

The Secretary-General was asked to assist Governments, special rapporteurs and working groups, with a view to ensuring observance of the guarantees on states of emergency embodied in international instruments. The Commission asked the Working Group to report in 2000.

Working Group activities. The Working Group on Arbitrary Detention held its twenty-fourth (17-21 May), twenty-fifth (13-17 September) and twenty-sixth (24 November-3 December) sessions in 1999 in Geneva [E/CN.4/2000/4]. During the year, the Working Group transmitted 30 communications concerning 116 new cases of alleged arbitrary detention to 19 Governments, of which 10 had provided information. The alleged cases were based on information submitted to the Group by NGOs and private sources. In 1999, the Group adopted 36 opinions regarding 115 persons in 24 countries. A description of the cases and the contents of the Governments' replies, as well as the complete text of 23 of the opinions, were contained in a separate report [E/CN.4/2000/4/Add.1]. The Group transmitted 101 urgent actions concerning 580 individuals to 39 Governments and to the Palestinian Authority. Of the 101 urgent actions, 56 appeals were issued by the Group jointly with other special rapporteurs. Replies to the appeals were received from 18 Governments.

The Group drew attention to the lack of protection for human rights defenders, who had become targets for repressive measures. In that regard, it urged States to implement the 1998 Declaration on the Right and Responsibility of Individuals, Groups and Organs of Society to Promote and Protect Universally Recognized Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 53/144 [YUN 1998, p. 608]. It recommended that States make moderate use of so-called states of emergency.

The Working Group visited Indonesia (31 January-12 February) [E/CN.4/2000/4/Add.2], at the invitation of the Government, and was granted uninhibited access to detention facilities in Jakarta, Denpasar (Bali) and East Timor. The Group observed positive measures, such as the release of many political prisoners, notably those belonging to the former Indonesian Communist Party, decreased use of legislation that facilitated arbitrary deprivation of liberty, and the elimination of prolonged detention for political motives. On the other hand, the incidence of violence accompanying repressive activities had hardly diminished. Arrests were characterized by flaws that resulted in detentions being arbitrary. The majority of the situations were the responsibility of the former regime, while others resulted from deficiencies in legislation and from deficiencies of the authorities applying the law. The Working Group encouraged the Government to ratify international human rights instruments and recommended releasing political prisoners; separating the police from the armed forces; placing the judiciary under the authority of the Supreme Court instead of the Ministry of Justice in order to guarantee their independence; intensifying information and education efforts; reforming the Code of Criminal Procedure so that a detainee was presented before a judge promptly and in person; creating a central detention register; guaranteeing the independence of the National Commission for Human Rights; abrogating emergency laws and measures and replacing them with a legal system to be applied in times of national crisis; limiting the competence of military tribunals; and informing detained individuals of their rights and providing legal representation where needed.

(For further information on the human rights situation in East Timor and the Commission's special session held in that regard, see next chapter.)

Impunity

Report of Secretary-General. In January [E/CN.4/1999/57], the Secretary-General presented the views of Governments, UN agencies and programmes and NGOs on a report of the Special Rapporteur on the question of the impunity of perpetrators of violations of human rights (civil and political) and the revised set of principles for the protection of human rights through action to combat impunity annexed thereto [YUN 1997, p. 655], and information on steps they had taken to combat impunity and on remedies available to victims of human rights violations.

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 1999/34], the Commission asked all other States, international organizations and NGOs to provide the Secretary-General with their views on the Special Rapporteur's report, and asked the Secretary-General to provide information on steps they had taken to combat impunity for human rights violations and on remedies for victims. The Secretary-General was also asked to report in 2000. Special rapporteurs and other mechanisms of the Commission were invited to consider the issue of impunity in discharging their mandates.

On 28 April [res. 1999/58], by a roll-call vote of 21 to 9, with 22 abstentions, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to disseminate the final report of the Special Rapporteur on the question of impunity of perpetrators of violations of economic, social and cultural rights [YUN 1997, p. 655], and to invite States, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to provide him with their views thereon. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 2000.

Independence of the judicial system

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In January, the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, Param Kumaraswamy (Malaysia), submitted his annual report covering his activities in 1998 [E/CN.4/1999/60].

The Special Rapporteur transmitted 19 communications to 18 Governments and 11 urgent appeals to eight States. Replies to communications were received from eight countries and to urgent appeals from four countries. The report briefly summarized the communications and urgent appeals, as well as the replies received from Governments. The Special Rapporteur expressed concern over the possible proliferation of judicial standards. He appealed to Governments to respond promptly to his interventions and to his requests to visit the country. He called on Governments, national judiciaries, bar associations and NGOs to submit to him court judgements and legislation affecting the independence of the judiciary and the legal profession, and asked that OHCHR provide him with translation assistance.

The Special Rapporteur visited Guatemala (16-26 August) [E/CN.4/2000/61/Add.1] to inquire into allegations concerning threats, intimidation and harassment of lawyers, judges and prosecutors. He reported that the justice system, which was devastated during 34 years of armed conflict, was marginalized and had not recovered. Its neglect since had led to inefficiency and incompetence within the system, compounded by the fact that some of those who had allegedly committed human rights crimes were appointed to hold public office in the administration of justice and other related key public institutions, including the military. With regard to allegations of threats, harassment and intimidation of judges, the Special Rapporteur found those concerns to be real. The Supreme Court failed to respond to such concerns and instil public confidence in the judicial system. As for impunity, the Special Rapporteur regretted the unavailability of statistics, but, he stated, no one in the Government denied that impunity was prevalent. He found that there was no organized system of continued legal education for judges, prosecutors and lawyers, nor any statistics on court decisions. The Special Rapporteur was most concerned over juvenile justice, as the Government had not discharged its obligations to provide adequate shelter, welfare and justice for the country's 6,000 street children. He welcomed the appointment of the first woman in charge of matters relating to indigenous women, but expressed concern at the allegations of gender-based discriminatory provisions in the Criminal Procedure Code and the Labour Code. Recommendations were made regarding threats, harassment and intimidation of judges; impunity; the tenure of judges; reforms of the administration of justice; discipline and removal of judges; judicial corruption and influence peddling; human rights monitoring and capacity-building; the indigenous community; children; the status of women; lynching; and the media.

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 1999/31], the Commission, noting with concern the increasingly frequent attacks on the independence of judges, lawyers and court officers, encouraged Governments that faced difficulties to consult and to consider the Special Rapporteur's services, for instance by inviting him to their countries. It asked the High Commissioner to provide technical assistance to train judges and lawyers and to associate the Special Rapporteur in the development of a manual on human rights training of judges and lawyers. The Special Rapporteur was asked to report in 2000 and the Secretary-General was asked to assist him.

Capital punishment

Report of Secretary-General. In response to a 1998 Commission request [YUN 1998, p. 669], the Secretary-General, in January, provided information received from States on changes in law and practice concerning the death penalty [E/CN.4/1999/52 & Corr.1]. As at 1 December 1998, 88 countries retained the death penalty for ordinary crimes; 65 were totally abolitionist; 16 were abolitionist for ordinary crimes only; and 26 were abolitionist de facto (they retained the death penalty for ordinary crimes but had not executed anyone in the preceding 10 years or more). The trend towards the abolition of the death penalty continued, with the number of totally abolitionist countries increasing from 61 to 65. There was also an increase in the number of countries ratifying international instruments that provided for the abolition of the death penalty. No abolitionist country made legal changes to reintroduce the death penalty and one retentionist country was reclassified as abolitionist de facto.

A March addendum [E/CN.4/1999/52/Add.1] summarized information received from Governments and intergovernmental organizations on the death penalty.

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 30 to 11, with 12 abstentions, the Commission, on 28 April [res. 1999/61], called on States parties to the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights that had not done so to consider acceding to or ratifying the Second Optional Protocol thereto, on the abolition of the death penalty, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 44/128 [YUN 1989, p. 484]. States that maintained the death penalty were urged to comply with the Covenant and the Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 44/25 [ibid., p. 560], notably not to impose the death penalty for any but the most serious crimes, not to impose it for crimes committed by persons under the age of 18, to exclude pregnant women from capital punishment and to ensure the right to seek pardon or commutation of sentence; to ensure that the notion of most serious crimes did not go beyond international crimes with lethal or extremely grave consequences and that the death penalty was not imposed for non-violent financial crimes or for non-violent religious practice or expression of conscience; to observe the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty, annexed to Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/50 [YUN 1984, p. 710]; not to impose the death penalty on a person suffering from any form of mental disorder; to restrict the number of offences for which the death penalty might be imposed; to establish a moratorium on executions, with a view to abolishing the death penalty; and to make available information on the imposition of the death penalty. The Secretary-General was asked to submit his sixth quinquennial report on capital punishment and implementation of the 1984 safeguards in 2000.

Communication. On 22 July [E/1999/113], Singapore, also on behalf of 49 other States, dissociated itself from the Commission's resolution.

Subcommission action. By a secret ballot vote of 14 to 5, with 5 abstentions, the Subcommission, on 24 August [res. 1999/4], condemning the imposition and execution of the death penalty on those aged under 18 at the time of the offence, called on States that did so to abolish the practice. It also called on States that retained the death penalty for refusal to undertake military service or for desertion not to apply it if the action was the result of conscientious objection to such service. States that retained the death penalty and did not apply a moratorium on executions were asked, in order to mark the millennium, to commute the sentences of those under sentence of death on 31 December 1999 to sentences of life imprisonment and to commit themselves to a moratorium on the imposition of the death penalty throughout 2000. The Commission was asked to reaffirm its resolution 1999/61 in 2000. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 2000 on the number of executions of juveniles carried out between the adoption of the Subcommission's resolution and the start of its next session and on the number of executions generally carried out in the same period.

Communication. On 27 August [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/52], Singapore, on behalf also of 25 other States, expressed concern that the recommendations in the Subcommission's resolution went beyond that body's mandate.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/163 without vote [agenda item 116 (b)].

Mindful of the importance of establishing the rule of law and promoting human rights in the administration of justice, in particular in post-conflict situations, as a crucial contribution to building peace and justice,

Recalling its resolution 52/124 of 12 December 1997, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1998/39 of 17 April 1998 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/28 of 28 July 1999 on the administration of juvenile justice,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the full and effective implementation of all United Nations standards on human rights in the administration of justice;

3. Invites Governments to provide training, including gender-sensitive training, in human rights in the administration of justice, including juvenile justice, to all judges, lawyers, prosecutors, social workers, immigration and police officers, and other professionals concerned, including personnel deployed in international field presences;

4. Stresses the special need for national capacity-building in the field of the administration of justice in post-conflict situations, in particular through reform of the judiciary, the police and the penal system;

5. Invites States to make use of technical assistance offered by the relevant United Nations programmes in order to strengthen national capacities and infrastructures in the field of the administration of justice;

6. Invites the international community to respond favourably to requests for financial and technical assistance for the enhancement and strengthening of the administration of justice;

7. Calls upon the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, as well as mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights and its subsidiary bodies, including special rapporteurs, special representatives and working groups, to continue to give special attention to questions relating to the effective promotion of human rights in the administration of justice and to provide, where appropriate, specific recommendations in this regard, including proposals for measures to provide advisory services and technical assistance;

9. Encourages the regional commissions, the specialized agencies and United Nations institutes in the areas of human rights and crime prevention and criminal justice, and other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, including national professional associations concerned with promoting United Nations standards in this field, to continue to develop their activities in promoting human rights in the administration of justice;

10. Calls upon the coordination panel on technical advice and assistance in juvenile justice to increase co-operation among the partners involved, to share information and pool their capacities and interests in order to increase the effectiveness of programme implementation;

11. Invites the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to coordinate closely their activities relating to the administration of justice;

12. Underlines the importance of rebuilding and strengthening structures for the administration of justice and respect for the rule of law and human rights in post-conflict situations, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure system-wide coordination and coherence of programmes and activities of the relevant parts of the United Nations system in the field of the administration of justice in post-conflict situations, including assistance provided through United Nations field presences;

13. Decides to consider the question of human rights in the administration of justice at its fifty-sixth session, under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Right to democracy

By a roll-call vote of 51 to none, with 2 abstentions, the Commission, on 27 April [res. 1999/57], affirmed that the rights of democratic governance included, among other things, the rights to freedom of opinion and expression, of thought, conscience and religion, and of peaceful association and assembly; the right to freedom to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media; the rule of law; the right of universal and equal suffrage, as well as periodic and free elections; the right of political participation; transparent and accountable government institutions; the right of citizens to choose their governmental system through constitutional or other democratic means; and the right to equal access to public service in one's country. Human rights treaty bodies, OHCHR and Commission and Subcommission mechanisms were asked to pay attention to those elements of democratic governance. The Commission requested OHCHR to give priority to its technical cooperation programmes to promote democracy and the rule of law and to promote democracy-related activities throughout the UN system. The High Commissioner was asked to reflect progress on implementation of the Commission's resolution in her report in 2000. The Secretary-General was asked to bring the Commission's resolution to the attention of Member States, UN organs, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs and to disseminate it widely.

Electoral processes

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/129 [YUN 1997, p. 644], the Secretary-General, in October [A/54/491], presented information on UN electoral assistance between 17 September 1997 and 30 September 1999. The number of requests for electoral assistance totalled 48 for 38 Member States.

During the biennium, the Electoral Assistance Division of the UN Secretariat assisted with two major missions: preparations for elections in the Central African Republic (see p. 118); and the popular consultation on the future status of East Timor (see p. 280). Other activities related primarily to coordinating international election observers and technical assistance.

Annexed to the report were summaries of the requests and action taken thereon.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/173 by recorded vote (153-0-11) [agenda item 116 (b)].

Strengthening the role of the United Nations in enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections and the promotion of democratization

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the subject, in particular resolutions 49/190 of 23 December 1994, 50/185 of 22 December 1995 and 52/129 of 12 December 1997,

Reaffirming that United Nations electoral assistance and support for the promotion of democratization are provided only at the specific request of the Member State concerned,

Acknowledging that United Nations electoral assistance has facilitated the holding of successful elections in several Member States, which has resulted in the orderly and non-violent assumption of office by elected officials, recognizing that elections can be free and fair only if the secrecy of the ballot is protected and elections are held free of coercion and intimidation, and underlining the importance of respect for the results of elections that have been verified as free and fair,

Noting with satisfaction that increasing numbers of Member States are using elections as peaceful means of national decision-making and confidence-building, thereby contributing to greater national peace and stability,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, adopted on 10 December 1948, in particular the right freely to choose representatives through periodic and genuine elections which shall be by universal and equal suffrage and held by secret vote or by equivalent free voting procedures,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1999/57 of 27 April 1999, in which, inter alia, the Commission urged the continuation and expansion of activities carried out by the United Nations system, other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and Member States to promote and consolidate democracy within the framework of international cooperation and to build a democratic political culture through the observance of human rights, mobilization of civil society and other appropriate measures in support of democratic governance,

Recognizing the usefulness of a comprehensive and balanced approach in the activities carried out by the United Nations in this field in contributing to strengthening both democracy and all human rights within the country concerned,

Recognizing also the need for strengthening national capacity-building, electoral institutions and civic education in the requesting countries in order to consolidate and regularize the achievements of previous elections and support subsequent elections,

Recalling the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, in particular the recognition therein that assistance provided upon the request of Governments for the conduct of free and fair elections is of particular importance in the strengthening of a pluralistic civil society,

Welcoming the support provided by States to the electoral assistance activities of the United Nations, inter alia, through the provision of electoral experts, including electoral commission staff, and observers, as well as through contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Electoral Observation,

Noting with appreciation the efforts of the Electoral Assistance Division of the Department of Political Affairs of the Secretariat, in collaboration with other electoral assistance organizations and United Nations agencies, to gather and make available through electronic means information on and for national election administrators, processes and institutions,

Noting the regional conference for Central Asian election administrators, held at Almaty, Kazakhstan, in November 1998, and the conference of the Global Electoral Organization Network, held at Ottawa in April 1999,

Welcoming the Fourth International Conference of the New or Restored Democracies, to be held at Cotonou, Benin, in December 2000, and calling upon the international community, including the United Nations Development Programme, the Electoral Assistance Division and other relevant organizations and institutions to render all possible assistance to ensure the successful outcome of the Conference,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on United Nations activities aimed at enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Commends the electoral assistance provided upon request to Member States by the United Nations, and requests that such assistance continue on a case-by-case basis in accordance with the evolving needs of requesting countries to improve and refine their electoral institutions and processes and with the guidelines on electoral assistance, recognizing that the fundamental responsibility of organizing free and fair elections lies with Governments;

3. Requests the Electoral Assistance Division of the Department of Political Affairs of the Secretariat, in its role as coordinator of United Nations electoral assistance, to continue to inform Member States on a regular basis about the requests received, responses given to those requests and the nature of the assistance provided;

4. Requests that the United Nations continue its efforts to ensure, before undertaking to provide electoral assistance to a requesting State, that there is adequate time to organize and carry out an effective mission for providing such assistance, that conditions exist to allow a free and fair election and that provisions can be made for adequate and comprehensive reporting of the results of the mission;

5. Recommends that the Electoral Assistance Division continue to provide technical advice before and after elections and post-election assistance, as appropriate, based on needs assessment missions, to requesting States and electoral institutions, in order to contribute to the sustainability of their electoral processes and the consolidation of the democratization process;

6. Also recommends that United Nations electoral assistance be geared towards comprehensive observation of the entire time-span of the electoral process in instances where more than technical assistance is required by the requesting State;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to take further steps to support States that request assistance by, inter alia, enabling the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in accordance with her mandate, to support democratization activities related to human rights concerns, including human rights training and education, assistance for human rights-related legislative reform, strengthening and reform of the judiciary, assistance to national human rights institutions and advisory services on treaty accession, reporting and international obligations as related to human rights;

8. Requests the United Nations Development Programme to continue its commendable programmes of assistance for governance in cooperation with other relevant organizations and institutions, as outlined in the report of the Secretary-General, in particular those for strengthening democratic institutions and participation and linkages between concerned sectors of society and Governments;

9. Recalls the establishment by the Secretary-General of the United Nations Trust Fund for Electoral Observation, and calls upon Member States to consider contributing to the Fund;

10. Reiterates the importance of reinforced coordination within the United Nations system, including cooperation with all relevant departments within the Secretariat, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Volunteers, and encourages the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs, as the focal point for United Nations electoral assistance activities, supported by the Electoral Assistance Division, to continue to develop new and more effective mechanisms for cooperation and to strengthen collaboration with those entities, including through an exchange of personnel when appropriate;

11. Notes with appreciation additional efforts being made to enhance cooperation with other international, governmental and non-governmental organizations in order to facilitate more comprehensive and need-specific responses to requests for electoral assistance, and expresses appreciation to those Member States, regional organizations and non-governmental organizations that have provided observers or technical experts in support of United Nations electoral assistance efforts;

12. Encourages the Secretary-General, through the Electoral Assistance Division, to respond to the evolving nature of requests for assistance and the growing need for specific types of medium-term expert assistance aimed at supporting and strengthening the existing capacity of the requesting Government, in particular through enhancing the capacity of national electoral institutions;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Electoral Assistance Division with adequate human and financial resources to allow it to carry out its mandate, and to continue to ensure that the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights is able to respond, within its mandate and in close coordination with the Electoral Assistance Division, to the increasing number of requests from Member States for advisory services;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution, in particular on the status of requests from Member States for electoral assistance and verification, and on his efforts to enhance the Organization's support of the democratization process in Member States.

Also on 17 December [meeting 83], the Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/168 by recorded vote (91-59-10) [agenda item 116 (b)].

Respect for the principles of national sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of States in their electoral processes

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purpose of the United Nations to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling also its resolution 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970, by which it approved the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling further the principle enshrined in Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter, which establishes that nothing contained in the Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters that are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any State or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the Charter,

Reaffirming the obligation of Member States to comply with the principles of the Charter and the resolutions of the United Nations regarding the right to self-determination, by virtue of which all peoples can freely determine, without external interference, their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development,

Recognizing also the richness and diversity of political systems and models for electoral processes in the world, based on national and regional particularities and various backgrounds,

Stressing the responsibility of States in ensuring ways and means to facilitate full and effective popular participation in electoral processes,

Welcoming the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, in which the Conference reaffirmed that the processes of promoting and protecting human rights should be conducted in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter,

1. Reiterates that, by virtue of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, all peoples have the right, freely and without external interference, to determine their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development and that every State has the duty to respect that right in accordance with the provisions of the Charter;

Other issues

Extra-legal executions

Reports of Special Rapporteur. A January report of the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, Asma Jahangir (Pakistan) [E/CN.4/1999/39 & Add.1], updated activities since the submission of the last report on the subject [YUN 1998, p. 670]. Between 1 November 1997 and 31 October 1998, the Special Rapporteur transmitted to 40 Governments communications on allegations regarding the violation of the right to life of more than 2,300 individuals, as well as 63 urgent appeals regarding 158 individuals to prevent imminent loss of life. The report summarized the communications and the replies of Governments. Issues of special concern to the Special Rapporteur included capital punishment, impunity, child soldiers, traditional practices and customs affecting the right to life, and the right to life and sexual orientation. The Special Rapporteur concluded that there was no indication of a decrease in violations of the right to life. She made recommendations to Governments relating to capital punishment, death threats, deaths in custody, excessive use of force by law enforcement officials, violations of the right to life during armed conflict, the imminent expulsion of persons to countries where their lives were in danger, genocide, impunity and child soldiers.

The Special Rapporteur visited the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (23-25 May) and Albania (25-28 May) [E/CN.4/2000/3/Add.2] to collect information regarding the situation in Kosovo, with a view to assessing and evaluating allegations of human rights violations relevant to her mandate. She observed that summary executions had taken place there in varying circumstances and situations: targeted, indiscriminate, individual and mass killings had been witnessed and recounted. Killings were mostly carried out by forces under direct or indirect State control. She had received notice of direct targeting and killing of activists, lawyers, intellectuals and others. Refugees described how groups of refugees were indiscriminately fired upon while trying to flee their homes and villages. Some of the most harrowing accounts described individual, random or group killings in connection with forced expulsion. The Special Rapporteur, stating that there could be no impunity for such crimes, encouraged the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (see PART FOUR, Chapter II) to continue its investigations and to bring perpetrators to justice. She called for an end to the vicious circle of reprisals and restoration of confidence between ethnic groups.

At the invitation of the Government, the Special Rapporteur visited Mexico (12-24 July) [E/CN.4/2000/3/Add.3] in the light of repeated allegations of individual cases of extrajudicial killings, and reports of massacres in past years in the States of Guerrero and Chiapas. Despite the Government's initial steps to guarantee the right to life of all persons, extrajudicial killings and the impunity enjoyed by the perpetrators continued. The incidence of violence and killings remained widespread, although there had been a decrease in the last year. The ineffectiveness of the justice system had given rise to human rights violations. There was a reluctance on the part of the authorities to hold military personnel accountable for extrajudicial killings and other human rights violations. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government continue the reform process; invite international observers to elections in 2000; reopen talks with the Zapatista National Liberation Army; protect human rights defenders; avoid deputizing the armed forces to maintain law or to eradicate crime; strengthen the independence of the public prosecutors; grant the victims of human rights violations legal mechanisms to file criminal complaints; end impunity; strengthen its human rights commissions; and repeal capital punishment laws.

In a letter to OHCHR [E/CN.4/2000/126], Mexico stated that the Special Rapporteur had overstepped her mandate by bringing up the subject of the elections and the constitutional role of national bodies such as the armed forces.

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 1999/35], the Commission, strongly condemning all extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, demanded that Governments end those practices. It appealed to them to ensure that all persons deprived of their liberty were treated with humanity and respect. The Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to continue her work and report annually; respond to information she received; enhance her dialogue with Governments and follow up on her recommendations after country visits; pay special attention to extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions of children and to allegations concerning violence against participants in peaceful public manifestations or against persons belonging to minorities; pay special attention to executions where the victims were carrying out peaceful activities in defence of human rights and fundamental freedoms; monitor the implementation of international standards on safeguards and restrictions relating to the imposition of capital punishment; and apply a gender perspective in her work. Governments were urged to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur and to respond to her communications. The Secretary-General was asked to assist her, particularly in cases where the minimum standard of legal safeguards provided for in articles 6, 9, 14 and 15 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 423], appeared not to be respected, and to ensure that personnel specialized in human rights and humanitarian law issues formed part of UN missions, where appropriate, in order to deal with human rights violations, such as extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions.

On 27 September [E/1999/23/Add.1 (res. 1999/S-4/1)], the Commission asked the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, among others, to carry out a mission to East Timor, to report to the Commission in 2000 and to submit an interim report to the Assembly in 1999.

The Special Rapporteur visited East Timor from 4 to 10 November [A/54/660] (see next chapter).

Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 1999/38], the Commission encouraged the five-member Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances to continue to promote communication between families of disappeared persons and the Governments concerned; to observe UN standards and practices regarding the handling of communications and the consideration of government replies; to continue to consider the question of impunity; to pay particular attention to cases of children subjected to enforced disappearance and children of disappeared persons; to pay particular attention to cases of ill-treatment, serious threats or intimidation of witnesses or relatives of disappeared persons; to pay particular attention to cases of disappearance of persons working for the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms; to apply a gender perspective in its reporting process; to provide assistance to States in implementing the 1992 Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 47/133 [YUN 1992, p. 744]; and to continue its deliberations on its working methods. The Commission asked the Group to report in 2000. The Secretary-General was asked to ensure that the Group received assistance and resources and to keep the Group and the Commission informed of action he had taken to disseminate and promote the 1992 Declaration. The Commission urged Governments to cooperate with the Group; to protect witnesses and the lawyers and families of disappeared persons against ill-treatment; to shed light on unresolved cases; and to provide mechanisms to seek reparation for victims or their families. States were asked to provide the Group with information on measures taken and obstacles encountered in preventing enforced, involuntary or arbitrary disappearances and in giving effect to the 1992 Declaration.

On 27 September [E/1999/23/Add.1 (res. 1999/S-4/1)], the Commission asked the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, among others, to carry out a mission to East Timor, to report to the Commission in 2000 and to submit an interim report to the Assembly in 1999.

Working Group activities. The Working Group held three sessions in 1999: its fifty-seventh in New York (10-14 May) and its fifty-eighth and fifty-ninth in Geneva (30 August-3 September, 24 November-3 December) [E/CN.4/2000/64 & Corr.1,2]. In addition to its original mandate, which was to act as a channel of communication between families of disappeared persons and Governments concerned, with a view to ensuring that sufficiently documented individual cases were investigated and the whereabouts of the disappeared persons clarified, the Working Group monitored States' compliance with the 1992 Declaration. However, due to limitations in its resources and the requested reduction of its report, information regarding the Declaration was not included in the Group's report; nor did it include observations on the draft international convention on the prevention and punishment of enforced disappearances (see p. 625).

The number of cases under active consideration stood at 46,054 and the number of countries with outstanding cases of alleged disappearance was 69. During the period under review, up to 3 December, the Group received 300 new cases of disappearance in 23 countries. The Group regretted that out of the 69 countries with unclarified cases, the Governments of 34 countries had not communicated with the Group. The Group sent urgent action appeals to 19 Governments in respect of 125 cases.

The Group concluded that full implementation of the 1992 Declaration was crucial to prevent and end disappearances and emphasized the importance of cooperation with Governments and NGOs. It noted that since its establishment in 1980, it had transmitted more than 49,000 cases to Governments and, although 3,000 cases had been clarified, 46,000 remained outstanding. The Working Group stressed that impunity was one of the main causes of enforced disappearance and one of the major obstacles to clarifying past cases. In some cases, the Group was hindered because of the lack of cooperation on the part of Governments; it asked the Commission to appeal to them to cooperate. It urged the Commission to meet its need for resources. The report contained a separate opinion by two members of the Group objecting to the application of a 32-page limit on its report, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 47/202 B [YUN 1992, p. 1083].

A member of the Working Group visited Sri Lanka (25-29 October) [E/CN.4/2000/64/Add.1] to follow up on the Group's recommendations made during its visits in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 560] and 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 742], as well as to follow up on the latest developments. The Group noted that since its inception in 1980, 12,258 cases of disappearance alleged to have occurred in the country had been reported to the Group.

The Group appreciated the measures that the current and previous Governments of Sri Lanka had taken, in compliance with the Group's earlier recommendations, to clarify cases of disappearances that occurred during the former Government, to provide justice to the families of disappeared persons and to prevent future disappearances. Notwithstanding those encouraging facts, the Group stressed that Sri Lanka remained the country with the second largest number of non-clarified cases of disappearances on its list. Although a considerable number of criminal investigations had been initiated in relation to disappearances that occurred some 10 years earlier, only very few of the suspected perpetrators had been convicted, and some of them had even been promoted. NGOs claimed that the current Government had not done enough to investigate disappearances that occurred after it took office and to prevent future disappearances. Regarding prevention, many of the Group's earlier recommendations had not been implemented. The Group recommended that the Government establish an independent body to investigate disappearances that had occurred since 1995; speed up efforts to bring the perpetrators to justice; make the act of enforced disappearance an independent offence under the criminal law of Sri Lanka punishable as stipulated in the 1992 Declaration; abolish the current Prevention of Terrorism Act and the Emergency Regulations or bring them into line with internationally accepted standards of personal liberty; dissolve unofficial places of detention; set up a central register of detainees; compensate families; apply equally the procedure for issuing death certificates; and respond to cases submitted by the Group on a case-by-case basis.

Torture and cruel treatment

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In January [E/CN.4/1999/61], the Special Rapporteur on torture, Nigel S. Rodley (United Kingdom), summarized his 1998 activities. He had sent 64 letters to 59 Governments on behalf of 400 individuals and 10 groups involving some 250 persons, and also transmitted 122 urgent appeals to 41 countries on behalf of some 380 individuals (30 known to be minors and 30 known to be women), as well as 20 groups of persons (one involving 190 women) involving about 1,500 persons with regard to whom fears had been expressed that they might be subjected to torture. In addition, 35 countries provided the Special Rapporteur with replies on 450 cases, whereas 17 did so regarding some 300 cases submitted in previous years. The Special Rapporteur provided brief summaries of general allegations and individual cases, as well as of the urgent appeals transmitted to Governments and their replies. His observations were presented where applicable. The Special Rapporteur recommended that States should ensure that prolonged incommunicado detention—any period beyond 24 to 48 hours—was not permitted; ratify the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court [YUN 1998, p. 1209]; and enact legislation to permit them to take jurisdiction over perpetrators of human rights crimes, including torture, genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes.

The Special Rapporteur visited Romania (19-29 April) [E/CN.4/2000/9/Add.3] to assess the situation with regard to the practice of torture and ill-treatment. Based on his observations, the Special Rapporteur concluded that such practices were not routine, but, as acknowledged by government officials, there were persistent, albeit sporadic, cases of police abuse. There was evidence that the Roma were more likely to be victims of police abuse than others. He expressed concern that military prosecutors lacked independence and impartiality and there was inadequate legal defence for indigent detainees. The establishment of the Office of the Ombudsman was a positive development but it did not receive the necessary cooperation from other government agencies. The Special Rapporteur recommended removing from confinement in detention centres on remand all persons detained in excess of the officially proclaimed capacity of existing institutions; using existing laws to release suspects on bail; repealing the 1974 order regulating conditions of detention in police lock-ups; ensuring regular inspection of places of detention; placing pre-trial detention centres under the authority of the Ministry of Justice; video- and audiotaping of proceedings in police interrogation rooms; transferring the power to investigate claims of police abuse and torture from military to civilian prosecutors; speeding up trials of public officials indicted for torture or ill-treatment and handing down sentences commensurate with the gravity of the crime; suspending public officials indicted for abuse or torture; prioritizing training of police officials; improving legal aid services; allowing the presence of legal counsel in the first 24 hours of detention prior to issuance of an arrest warrant; and granting the Ombudsman powers to sanction officials who refused to cooperate with the investigation of a complaint.

In Cameroon (12-20 May) [E/CN.4/2000/9/Add.2], the Special Rapporteur evaluated the situation regarding torture and ill-treatment. Torture was used to obtain information relevant to the maintenance of law and public order, to obtain confessions to crimes from suspects and to administer instant extrajudicial punishment. Neither youth nor age protected detained persons from being inhumanly treated. Contributing to the problem were corruption, a freeze on personnel recruitment, which led superiors to retain rather than dismiss undisciplined subordinates, and impunity. Prisons were overcrowded and lacked adequate health facilities and inmates were subjected to the arbitrariness of warders. Positive developments were the 1997 adoption of a law criminalizing torture and a decision to grant ICRC access to places of detention. The Special Rapporteur recommended proclaiming that torture and other ill-treatment committed by public officials would not be tolerated; establishing a corps of prosecutors, with specialized independent investigative personnel; endowing the National Commission on Human Rights with the authority to inspect any place of detention; granting detainees unmonitored access to families and lawyers; disbanding the anti-gang unit in Maroua, which had arbitrarily detained, tortured and summarily executed suspects; releasing non-violent first-time offenders, especially those under 18; and inviting the Special Rapporteurs on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and on the independence of judges and lawyers to visit the country.

At the invitation of the Government, the Special Rapporteur visited Kenya (20-29 September) [E/CN.4/2000/9/Add.4]. The internal state of affairs and the rule of law in the country lent itself to abuse, including abuse within the Special Rapporteur's mandate, he stated. Thus, in respect of any capital crime, which term included the crime of robbery with violence, the police were entitled to hold a suspect for up to 14 days, as compared with 24 hours for other crimes. Moreover, in practice, those time limits might not be respected. Legal aid was virtually unavailable for most of the suspects. In addition, not only were the police responsible for the forensic investigation of complaints against the police, but they sometimes refused to make available the form required for medical documentation of a complainant's physical state. The Special Rapporteur's official interlocutors acknowledged that there was a tradition in Kenya of physically rough treatment of suspects by the police. The prison system faced problems of extreme overcrowding and inadequate resources. Conscientious record-keeping in police stations, disbanding of the Special Branch, which dealt with political and public order cases and employed gruesome methods of torture, and a free and assertive press were encouraging signs. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government ensure independent and thorough investigation of torture and similar ill-treatment; grant compensation to victims; bring into line the period of police detention in capital cases with the normal 24-hour period applicable to persons suspected of other crimes; deem inadmissible confessions made in detention without a lawyer; provide legal aid to anyone held in police custody or on remand; inform family members of their relative's detention and grant access to them; abandon the police monopoly of issuing forms for detainees' medical examinations; abolish corporal punishment as a criminal penalty; and open up the prison system to better access by civil society.

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 1999/32], the Commission called on Governments to prohibit torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment and reminded them that prolonged incommunicado detention might facilitate the perpetration of torture and could constitute a form of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment. Governments, the High Commissioner for Human Rights and UN bodies and agencies, as well as relevant intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, were called on to commemorate 26 June as the UN International Day in Support of Victims of Torture. States were urged to become parties to the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment contained in General Assembly resolution 39/46 [YUN 1984, p. 813]. The Commission invited the Special Rapporteur to continue to examine questions concerning torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment directed against women and to make recommendations concerning the prevention and redress of gender-specific forms of torture. It also asked him to continue to consider the torture of children. The Special Rapporteur was asked to present an interim report to the Assembly in 1999 and a full report to the Commission in 2000.

On 27 September [E/1999/23/Add.1 (res. 1997 S-4/1)], the Commission asked the Special Rapporteur on the question of torture, among others, to carry out a mission to East Timor, to report to the Commission in 2000 and to submit an interim report to the Assembly in 1999.

The Special Rapporteur visited East Timor from 4 to 10 November [A/54/660] (see next chapter).

Interim report of Special Rapporteur. In October, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the interim report of the Special Rapporteur [A/54/426]. The report covered the period from 15 December 1992 to 31 August 1999. Areas of special concern to the Special Rapporteur included gender-specific forms of torture, torture of children, corporal punishment, incommunicado detention, torture of human rights defenders, the question of non-refoulement, impunity, compensation and rehabilitation of torture victims, ratification of the 1984 Convention, the preparation of a manual on investigation of torture, and the International Criminal Court (see p. 1227).

The Special Rapporteur concluded that torture continued to plague all regions and it could be eradicated only if there was a genuine will on the part of Governments to prevent it. He recommended that States ratify the 1984 Convention and make the declaration provided for in articles 21 and 22 (see p. 578); enact legislation to ensure that torture was a punishable offence; prohibit incommunicado detention for more than 24 hours or, under special circumstances, 48 hours; ensure that education regarding the prohibition of torture was included in the training of law enforcement personnel and others involved in the custody, interrogation or treatment of those detained or imprisoned; carry out investigations whenever there were indications of torture; ensure that the victims obtained redress and had the right to compensation; and provide support to the UN Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture. The General Assembly should consider endorsing the principles on the effective investigation and documentation of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, which were annexed to the Special Rapporteur's report.

Voluntary Fund for torture victims

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 1999/32], the Commission appealed to Governments, organizations and individuals to contribute annually to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture. It called on the Fund's Board of Trustees to present in 2000 an updated assessment of the global need for international funding for rehabilitation services for torture victims. The Secretary-General was asked to continue to include the Fund among the programmes receiving donations at the annual UN Pledging Conference for Development Activities; transmit to Governments Commission appeals for contributions; ensure adequate staffing and technical facilities for the Fund; and inform the Commission of the Fund's operations annually.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General's annual report on the status of the Fund, submitted in July [A/54/177], stated that contributions received between 1 August 1998 and 2 July 1999 totalled $2,632,770 from 32 countries. Contributions from four private individuals totalled $3,881.

The Fund's Board of Trustees held its eighteenth session in Geneva (17-28 May). The total amount then available for grants to assist victims of torture came to some $5,100,000, of which $100,000 was earmarked for emergency grants falling between the Board's annual sessions and $200,000 for urgent grants to organizations that might face financial difficulties because of delayed payment of grants from the European Commission. During the year, $8.2 million was requested for 139 projects. On 11 June, the High Commissioner, on behalf of the Secretary-General, approved the Board's recommendations on grants to 133 projects submitted by 117 humanitarian organizations in 53 countries. The Fund also gave support to 14 other humanitarian organizations that provided medical, psychological and social assistance or trained health professionals. Annexed to the report was the Joint Declaration on the occasion of 26 June 1999, the International Day in Support of Victims of Torture—issued by the Committee against Torture, the Fund's Board of Trustees, the Special Rapporteur and the High Commissioner—and three press releases issued on that occasion.

In a December report [E/CN.4/2000/60], the Secretary-General stated that an additional $852,569 had been received since May for allocation at the nineteenth session of the Board in May 2000. Annexed to the report were the proceedings of the Eighth International Symposium on Torture (New Delhi, India, 22-25 September), which the Fund had helped to finance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.1 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 54/156 without vote [agenda item 116 (a)].

Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment

The General Assembly,

Recalling article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, article 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and its resolution 39/46 of 10 December 1984, by which it adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, and all its subsequent relevant resolutions,

Recalling that freedom from torture is a right that must be protected under all circumstances, including in times of internal or international disturbance or armed conflict,

Recalling also that the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, firmly declared that efforts to eradicate torture should, first and foremost, be concentrated on prevention and called for the early adoption of an optional protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, which is intended to establish a preventive system of regular visits to places of detention,

Urging all Governments to promote the speedy and full implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, in particular the section relating to freedom from torture, in which it is stated that States should abrogate legislation leading to impunity for those responsible for grave violations of human rights, such as torture, and prosecute such violations, thereby providing a firm basis for the rule of law,

Recalling its resolution 36/151 of 16 December 1981, in which it noted with deep concern that acts of torture took place in various countries, recognized the need to provide assistance to the victims in a purely humanitarian spirit and established the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture,

Recalling also the recommendation in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action that high priority should be given to providing the necessary resources to assist victims of torture and effective remedies for their physical, psychological and social rehabilitation, inter alia, through additional contributions to the Fund,

Noting with satisfaction the existence of a considerable international network of centres for the rehabilitation of victims of torture, which plays an important role in providing assistance to victims of torture, and the collaboration of the Fund with the centres,

Freedom of opinion and expression

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In January [E/CN.4/1999/64], the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, Abid Hussain (India), described his 1998 activities and discussed issues that he considered important for the development of the right, including the right to seek and receive information, national security laws, criminal libel, new information technologies, and women and freedom of expression. He summarized the texts of communications he had sent to 25 States and replies received.

The Special Rapporteur encouraged States that had not ratified the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, pp. 423 & 419], to do so. Governments were urged to review their national security laws and ordinary criminal laws that might infringe on the rights to freedom of opinion and expression and information, and were encouraged to ensure the right to access to information. He recommended that reasonable steps be taken to promote access to the Internet and that on-line expression be guided by international standards and be guaranteed the same protection as other forms of expression. Governments were urged to remove obstacles to the exercise by women of their right to freedom of expression. The Special Rapporteur invited Governments, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and specialized agencies to present submissions on the relationship between freedom of expression and violence against women, as he hoped to prepare a report with the Special Rapporteur on violence against women.

The Special Rapporteur visited the Sudan (20-26 September) [E/CN.4/2000/63/Add.1] where, owing to time constraints, his visit was confined to Khartoum. Thus, he was prevented from addressing the difficult situation in southern Sudan, where a state of emergency existed. The Special Rapporteur considered that the Government had made significant advances regarding political and civil rights in the past two years, particularly with the adoption of the new Constitution in 1998. However, the information he had received concerning the period following the Constitution's adoption, which was characterized by the violation of political freedoms and human rights abuses, failed to demonstrate a serious effort on the part of the Government to move in that direction. In addition, the Special Rapporteur noted that the majority of non-official persons he met did not have full confidence in the Government's intentions and considered the fundamental freedoms to be precarious. The Special Rapporteur was concerned at the State's monopoly and control of the national radio and television broadcasting system and of the major daily newspapers. Obstacles limited the use of satellite dishes and other restrictions hindered the circulation of information from abroad through the press or television. The Special Rapporteur was very disturbed by the number of cases of arbitrary detention, torture and harassment of persons who sought to express different opinions, especially journalists, political opponents, students and human rights advocates, and deplored the intimidation of journalists. Religious minorities continued to be discriminated against in law and practice. The Special Rapporteur welcomed some progress in the status of women but discriminatory legislation and practices against them remained in effect.

Recommendations to the Government included establishing an independent national human rights institution; accession to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 34/180 [YUN 1979, p. 895], and the two Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, adopted by the Assembly in resolutions 2200 A (XXI) and 44/128, respectively [YUN 1966, p. 423, & YUN 1989, p. 484] and ratification of the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment, contained in Assembly resolution 39/46 [YUN 1984, p. 813]; revising restrictive domestic laws; ensuring suppression of intimidation or harassment of persons who sought to exercise the right; removing unnecessary restrictions on freedom of expression and assembly; guaranteeing the independence of the media; avoiding restrictions on foreign newspapers and broadcasts; ending abuses against women committed by the security forces and militias; granting the media equal access to all parts of society, especially minorities and women; and wide dissemination of basic human rights instruments and information.

Regarding his visit to Ireland (18-22 October) [E/CN.4/2000/63/Add.2], the Special Rapporteur asserted that freedom of opinion and expression was widely apparent. However, he expressed concern at the use and implementation of certain laws to restrict the right. He was also concerned at the negative effects produced by libel and defamation suits, which could bring reluctance to report matters of public interest. The Freedom of Information Act, 1997, had been working well since it came into force in 1998. He noted with satisfaction that the Working Group on the Illegal and Harmful Use of the Internet recommended an approach of non-intervention by the State. The Government had made efforts to encourage women's participation in the political and public sectors and had taken measures to promote the right to freedom of opinion and expression of refugees and minorities. The Special Rapporteur recommended that journalists should not be compelled to reveal their sources except in the most limited and clearly defined circumstances. He also recommended the establishment of an independent press ombudsman and encouraged the preparation of a new Defamation Bill. The Government was urged to review or repeal the laws concerning the censorship of publications and of films and videos, and the adoption and implementation of the Equal Status Bill, 1999, to provide for temporary special measures to overcome systematic and indirect discrimination against women and members of the traveller community, were recommended.

The Special Rapporteur visited the United Kingdom (24-29 October) [E/CN.4/2000/63/Add.3], where he observed that freedom of opinion and expression was widely visible and that it was protected. However, he was concerned that the freedom had been hindered to some extent by certain laws. Emergency powers had eroded public confidence, not only in the criminal justice system but also in the free operation of the investigative press. The fact that anti-terrorism legislation had not been repealed was a matter of concern, as was the Government's decision to introduce permanent anti-terrorist legislation. The Special Rapporteur considered the use of the Official Secrets Act to prosecute journalists and writers, as well as the existence of the D-notice Committee, to be incompatible with media freedom. He noted with concern the attacks against the principle of the confidentiality of journalists' sources. The Special Rapporteur welcomed the appointment of a Police Ombudsman and the establishment of new institutions in Northern Ireland, especially the Human Rights Commission. He considered the enactment of the Human Rights Act, 1998, to be an important step. The Special Rapporteur urged the Government to amend certain restrictive domestic laws and to ensure that the law and practice governing public demonstrations complied with international standards. He called on the Government to disclose information to the victims of the conflict in Northern Ireland to the maximum extent, in order to restore confidence in the police system and to reinforce the peace process. Further efforts should be made to improve the media tone and attitude towards Northern Ireland.

In conclusions made following his visit to Tunisia (6-10 December) [E/CN.4/2000/63/Add.4], the Special Rapporteur noted that despite legislation to promote human rights, there existed a chasm between declaration of intent and reality. He expressed concern at the State's control of the national radio and television broadcasting system, and the major dailies. Government efforts to modernize the media and liberalize the right to information were inadequate in view of the censorship of the media and the fact that self-censorship was rooted in press organs and in the minds of journalists. The Government was encouraged to adopt additional measures to protect the right to freedom of opinion and expression, in particular by revising certain domestic laws, including the Press Code. It was urged to establish a press council, independent of State bodies and the judiciary, to which journalists and the public could submit complaints, request advice and obtain redress, and an independent body to deal with subjects of interest to the media. The Government was also urged to eliminate restrictions on foreign newspapers and broadcasts, abolish censorship, review cases of persons detained for exercising the right to freedom of expression, end alleged intimidation and harassment of persons who sought to exercise the right, and conduct an inquiry into the alleged cases of harassment of wives and kin of detained persons and persons suspected of unlawful political activities.

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 1999/36], the Commission expressed concern at the detention and extrajudicial killing, persecution and harassment of, as well as threats and acts of violence and discrimination directed at, persons who exercised the right to freedom of opinion and expression, the rights to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, of peaceful assembly and of association and the right to take part in the conduct of public affairs. It appealed to States to ensure respect and support for the rights of all persons who exercised those rights, to ensure that they were not discriminated against, and to cooperate with and assist the Special Rapporteur.

The Special Rapporteur was asked to draw the attention of the High Commissioner to situations of serious concern; to pay particular attention to the situation of women and the relationship between the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression and incidents of discrimination based on sex, in cooperation with the Special Rapporteur on violence against women; to cooperate with other UN human rights mechanisms and procedures; to develop further his commentary on the right to seek and receive information and to expand on his observations and recommendations arising from communications; and to provide his views on the advantages and challenges of new information technologies. The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for an additional three years and asked him to report in 2000. The Commission's decision on the mandate and request for a report were endorsed by the Economic and Social Council on 27 July in decision 1999/238.

Terrorism

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 27 to none, with 26 abstentions, the Commission, on 26 April [res. 1999/27], condemning incitement of ethnic hatred, violence and terrorism, as well as violations of the right to live free from fear and of the right to life, liberty and security, called on States to take measures, in conformity with international law, to prevent, combat and eliminate terrorism. The Subcommittee's Special Rapporteur on human rights and terrorism was asked, in her preliminary report, to give attention to the question of impunity.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In response to a 1998 Subcommittee request [YUN 1998, p. 670], Kalliopi K. Koufa (Greece), the Special Rapporteur appointed to conduct a study on human rights and terrorism, presented, in June [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/27], a preliminary report. The Special Rapporteur provided a historical background on the subject and examined the link between terrorism and human rights, issues of definition and terminology regarding terrorism, international human rights law and the accountability of the non-State actor, and recent trends. She proposed that the legal accountability of non-State actors involved in human rights violations through acts of terrorism should be discussed further during the study, with a view to contributing a more balanced approach to the major divergences of opinion regarding the proper standard of accountability. Other trends and issues mentioned in her 1997 working paper [YUN 1997, p. 658] needed to be addressed at subsequent stages of the study.

Subcommission action. On 26 August [res. 1999/26], the Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur by providing for visits to Geneva and New York and, in particular, the United Nations Centre for International Crime Prevention of the United Nations Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention in Vienna, to hold consultations and complement her research. It asked the Secretary-General to transmit the preliminary report to Governments, specialized agencies and concerned intergovernmental organizations and NGOs for comments, information and data relating to the study.

Report of Secretary-General. In October [A/54/439], the Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 52/133 [YUN 1997, p. 658], reported on the views expressed by Member States on the implications of terrorism for the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms. The report summarized the replies received from the Governments that had responded to his request for their views, namely, Azerbaijan, Egypt, Nepal, Pakistan, Turkey and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/164 by recorded vote (106-0-58) [agenda item 116 (b)].

Human rights and terrorism

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Recalling the Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations,

Recalling also the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, in which the Conference reaffirmed that terrorism is indeed aimed at the destruction of human rights, fundamental freedoms and democracy,

Recalling further its resolutions 48/122 of 20 December 1993, 49/185 of 23 December 1994, 50/186 of 22 December 1995 and 52/133 of 12 December 1997,

Recalling previous resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, taking note, in particular, of resolution 1999/27 of 26 April 1999, and recalling also the relevant resolutions of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights,

Alarmed that acts of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations aimed at the destruction of human rights have continued despite national and international efforts,

Bearing in mind that the essential and most basic human right is the right to life,

Bearing in mind also that terrorism creates an environment that destroys the right of people to live in freedom from fear,

Reiterating that all States have an obligation to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms and that every individual should strive to secure their universal and effective recognition and observance,

Seriously concerned about the gross violations of human rights perpetrated by terrorist groups,

Profoundly deploring the increasing number of innocent persons, including women, children and the elderly, killed, massacred and maimed by terrorists in indiscriminate and random acts of violence and terror, which cannot be justified under any circumstances,

Noting with great concern the growing connection between the terrorist groups and other criminal organizations engaged in the illegal traffic in arms and drugs at the national and international levels, as well as the consequent commission of serious crimes such as murder, extortion, kidnapping, assault, the taking of hostages and robbery,

Emphasizing the importance of Member States taking appropriate steps to deny safe haven to those who plan, finance or commit terrorist acts, by ensuring their apprehension and prosecution or extradition,

Mindful of the need to protect the human rights of and guarantees for the individual in accordance with the relevant human rights principles and instruments, in particular the right to life,

Reaffirming that all measures to counter terrorism must be in strict conformity with the relevant provisions of international law including international human rights standards,

1. Expresses its solidarity with the victims of terrorism;
2. Condemns the violations of the right to live free from fear and of the right to life, liberty and security;
3. Reiterates its unequivocal condemnation of the acts, methods and practices of terrorism, in all its forms and manifestations, as activities aimed at the destruction of human rights, fundamental freedoms and democracy, threatening the territorial integrity and security of States, destabilizing legitimately constituted Governments, undermining pluralistic civil society and having adverse consequences for the economic and social development of States;
4. Calls upon States to take all necessary and effective measures in accordance with relevant provisions of international law, including international human rights standards, to prevent, combat and eliminate terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, wherever and by whomever committed;

5. Urges the international community to enhance cooperation at the regional and international levels in the fight against terrorism, in accordance with relevant international instruments, including those relating to human rights, with the aim of its eradication;

6. Condemns the incitement of ethnic hatred, violence and terrorism;

7. Commends those Governments that have communicated their views on the implications of terrorism in response to the note verbale by the Secretary-General dated 16 August 1999;

8. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General, and requests him to continue to seek the views of Member States on the implications of terrorism, in all its forms and manifestations, for the full enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, with a view to incorporating them in his report;

9. Decides to consider this question at its fifty-sixth session, under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Hostage-taking

On 26 April [res. 1999/29], the Commission, condemning hostage-taking, demanded that all hostages be released immediately and without preconditions. States were called on to take measures to prevent, combat and punish hostage-taking, and thematic special rapporteurs and working groups were urged to address the consequences of such acts in their reports.

Freedom of movement

Mass exoduses

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/132 [YUN 1997, p. 661], the Secretary-General, in September [A/54/360], reported on human rights and mass exoduses, including UN efforts to avert new flows of refugees and to tackle the root causes of such flows. The Secretary-General said that much progress had been made regarding cooperation between the human rights and humanitarian communities in finding solutions to mass exoduses. However, more had to be done, including promoting accession to international law instruments; disseminating and advocating human rights and humanitarian principles to encourage compliance with prohibitions against arbitrary and forcible displacement and greater respect for the rights of those who fled; establishing mechanisms to ensure compliance with international law to end the culture of impunity; sharing responsibility with States that experienced the greatest political, economic and social impact of mass exoduses; improving security and access to humanitarian assistance; encouraging ratification of the 1994 Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 49/59 [YUN 1994, p. 1289], and training humanitarian personnel in security procedures; and ensuring that the Security Council was informed of the human rights and humanitarian situation in cases of potential or actual conflict. In addition, various coordination and streamlining measures were needed.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/180 without vote [agenda item 116 (b)].

Human rights and mass exoduses

The General Assembly,

Deeply disturbed by the scale and magnitude of exoduses and displacements of people in many regions of the world and by the human suffering of refugees and displaced persons, a high proportion of whom are women and children,

Recalling its previous relevant resolutions, as well as those of the Commission on Human Rights, in particular Commission resolution 1998/49 of 17 April 1998, and the conclusions of the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, which recognized that gross violations of human rights, persecution, political and ethnic conflicts, famine and economic insecurity, poverty and generalized violence are among the root causes leading to mass exodus and displacements of people, and also recalling the second open debate that was held in the Security Council on the protection of civilians in armed conflict on 16 and 17 September 1999,

Recalling with satisfaction its endorsement, in its resolution 41/70 of 3 December 1986, of the call upon all States to promote human rights and fundamental freedoms and to refrain from denying these to individuals in their population because of nationality, ethnicity, race, religion or language,

Recalling all relevant human rights standards, including the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the principles of international protection for refugees and the general conclusion of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on international protection and the fact that asylum applicants should have access to fair and expeditious status-determination procedures,

Stressing the importance of adherence to international humanitarian, human rights and refugee law in order to avert mass exoduses and to protect refugees and internally displaced persons, and expressing its deep concern at the lack of respect for those laws and principles, especially during armed conflict, including the denial of safe and unimpeded access to the displaced,

Noting, in this regard, the entry into force of the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel of 9 December 1994, urging States to consider ratifying or acceding to the Convention, and condemning attacks and the use of force against United Nations and associated personnel, as well as personnel of international humanitarian organizations,

Reaffirming the primary responsibility of States to ensure the protection of refugees and internally displaced persons,

Recognizing the contribution of the establishment of the International Criminal Court to ending impunity for perpetrators of certain crimes, as defined in the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, which lead to or result from mass exoduses,

Noting with satisfaction the efforts by the United Nations system to develop a comprehensive approach to addressing the root causes and effects of movements of refugees and other displaced persons and the strengthening of emergency preparedness and response mechanisms,

Recognizing that the human rights machinery of the United Nations, including the mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights and the human rights treaty bodies, has important capabilities to address human rights violations that cause movements of refugees and displaced persons or prevent durable solutions to their plight,

Recognizing also the complementarity between the systems for the protection of human rights and for humanitarian action, in particular the mandates of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, as well as the work of the representative of the Secretary-General on internally displaced persons and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict and that cooperation between them, in accordance with their respective mandates, as well as coordination between the human rights, political and security components of United Nations operations, make important contributions to the promotion and protection of human rights of persons forced into mass exodus and displacement,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Strongly deplores ethnic and other forms of intolerance as one of the major causes of forced migratory movements, and urges States to take all necessary steps to ensure respect for human rights, especially the rights of persons belonging to minorities;

3. Reaffirms the need for all Governments, intergovernmental bodies and concerned international organizations to intensify their cooperation and assistance in worldwide efforts to address human rights situations that lead to, as well as the serious problems that result from, mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons;

4. Emphasizes the responsibility of all States and international organizations to cooperate with those countries, in particular developing ones, affected by mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons, and calls upon Governments, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other relevant parts of the United Nations system to continue to respond to assistance needs of countries hosting large numbers of refugees until durable solutions are found;

5. Urges the Secretary-General to give high priority to and to allocate the necessary resources within the regular budget of the United Nations for the consolidation and strengthening of emergency preparedness and response mechanisms, including early warning activities in the humanitarian area, for the purpose of ensuring, inter alia, that effective action is taken to identify all human rights abuses that contribute to mass exoduses of persons;

6. Invites the special rapporteurs, special representatives and working groups of the Commission on Human Rights and the United Nations human rights treaty bodies, acting within their mandates, to seek information, where appropriate, on human rights problems that may result in mass exoduses of populations or impede their voluntary return home and, where appropriate, to include such information, together with recommendations thereon, in their reports and to bring such information to the attention of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights for appropriate action in fulfilment of her mandate, in consultation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

7. Requests all United Nations bodies, acting within their mandates, the specialized agencies and governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to cooperate fully with all mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights and, in particular, to provide them with all relevant information in their possession on the human rights situations creating or affecting refugees and displaced persons;

8. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in the exercise of her mandate, as set out in General Assembly resolution 48/141 of 20 December 1993, to coordinate human rights activities throughout the United Nations system and, in cooperation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to pay particular attention to situations that cause or threaten to cause mass exoduses or displacements and to contribute to efforts to address such situations effectively through promotion and protection measures, emergency preparedness and response mechanisms, early warning and information sharing, technical advice, expertise and cooperation in countries of origin as well as host countries;

9. Welcomes the efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to contribute to the creation of an environment viable for return in post-conflict societies through initiatives such as the rehabilitation of the justice system, the creation of national institutions capable of defending human rights and broad-based programmes of human rights education and the strengthening of local non-governmental organizations through field presences and programmes of advisory services and technical cooperation;

10. Welcomes with appreciation the ongoing contributions of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to the deliberations of the Commission on Human Rights and to other international human rights bodies and mechanisms, and also welcomes the invitation extended to her by the Commission to address the Commission at each of its future sessions;

11. Encourages States that have not already done so to consider acceding to the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees and to other relevant regional instruments concerning refugees, as applicable, and relevant international instruments of human rights and humanitarian law, and to take appropriate measures to disseminate and implement those instruments domestically to encourage compliance with provisions against arbitrary and forcible displacement and greater respect for the rights of those who flee;

12. Notes with appreciation that a number of States not parties to the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol continue to maintain a generous approach to asylum;

13. Encourages States parties to the 1951 Convention to provide information to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, in accordance with article 35 of the Convention;

14. Calls upon States to ensure effective protection of and assistance to refugees and internally displaced persons, consistent with international law, inter alia, by respecting the principle of non-refoulement, ensuring full, safe and unhindered access by humanitarian workers to displaced populations and ensuring the security and civilian and humanitarian nature of camps and settlements for refugees and internally displaced persons;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare and submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution as it pertains to all aspects of human rights and mass exoduses, including detailed information on the programmatic, institutional, administrative, financial and management efforts instituted to enhance the capacity of the United Nations to avert new flows of refugees and other displaced persons, to tackle the root causes of such flows, to protect those who have become displaced during mass exoduses and to facilitate their return and reintegration;

16. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its fifty-sixth session.

Internally displaced persons

Report of Secretary-General's Representative. In January [E/CN.4/1999/79], the Secretary-General's Representative, Francis M. Deng (Sudan), updated developments regarding the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement [YUN 1998, p. 675] and efforts to develop an institutional framework for internally displaced persons. He discussed country visits as a way to focus on specific situations of internal displacement. The Representative presented areas for further research, including strategies to approach the problem when it occurred in countries not acknowledging it, the issue of non-State actors, the needs of internally displaced women and children, and donor policies.

The Representative visited Colombia (20-27 May) [E/CN.4/2000/83/Add.1], where over a million persons were internally displaced, most of them uprooted from their homes because of the security situation. Displacement in Colombia was not merely incidental to the internal armed conflict but also a deliberate strategy of war. Overall, there appeared to be insufficient will on the part of the Government to put its laws into practice. Concerned by the deterioration of the situation of internal displacement, the Representative suggested components for a comprehensive strategy to clarify the role of the State and to integrate the work of intergovernmental and non-governmental actors.

Workshop. The Workshop on Implementing the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement (Bogota, Colombia, 27-29 May) [E/CN.4/2000/83/Add.2], sponsored by the Brookings Institution Project on Internal Displacement, the Grupo de Apoyo a Organizaciones de Desplazados and the United States Committee for Refugees, underlined the importance of enhanced coordination among the Government of Colombia, UN agencies and NGOs to improve protection of internally displaced persons and identified elements for successful return, resettlement or reintegration. The Workshop's Final Declaration reiterated the importance of applying the Guiding Principles to the situation, as well as to Colombian policies and legal norms.

Commission action. On 27 April [res. 1999/47], the Commission called on the High Commissioner to develop projects, in cooperation with Governments, international organizations and the Representative, to promote the human rights of internally displaced persons, as part of the programme of advisory services and technical cooperation (see p. 582), and to include in her report to the Commission information on their implementation. The Representative was asked to continue to report to the General Assembly and to the Commission, and the Secretary-General was asked to assist him.

On 27 September [E/1999/23/Add.1 (res. 1999/S-4/1)], the Commission asked the Secretary-General's Representative, among others, to carry out a mission to East Timor, to report to the Commission in 2000 and to submit an interim report to the Assembly in 1999 (see p. 711).

Subcommission action. On 25 August [dec. 1999/108], the Subcommission, recalling its 1998 resolution on housing and property restitution in the context of the return of refugees and internally displaced persons [YUN 1998, p. 675], decided to consider the item in 2000.

Report of Secretary-General's Representative. In a September report [A/54/409], the Representative stated that since the creation of his mandate in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 777], the international community's response to internal displacement had advanced. However, in view of the millions of internally displaced persons worldwide, there was a need to do much more in such areas as promoting the Guiding Principles, monitoring conditions on the ground, interceding on behalf of the internally displaced, and recommending collaborative action by the relevant agencies. For the mandate to address that challenge, it needed enhanced resources, which were currently dismally deficient.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/167 without vote [agenda item 116 (b)].

Protection of and assistance to internally displaced persons

The General Assembly,

Deeply disturbed by the alarmingly high numbers of internally displaced persons throughout the world who receive inadequate protection and assistance, and conscious of the serious problem this is creating for the international community,

Conscious of the human rights and the humanitarian dimensions of the problem of internally displaced persons and the responsibilities this poses for States and the international community to explore methods and means better to address their protection and assistance needs,

Recalling the relevant norms of international human rights instruments, international humanitarian law and analogous refugee law, and emphasizing the need for their better implementation with regard to internally displaced persons,

Recalling also the emphasis in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, on the need to develop global strategies to address the problem of internal displacement,

Deploing practices of forced displacement, in particular ethnic cleansing, and their negative consequences for the enjoyment of fundamental human rights by large groups of populations,

Noting the progress made thus far by the Representative of the Secretary-General on internally displaced persons in developing a legal framework, analysing institutional arrangements, undertaking dialogue with

Governments and issuing a series of reports on particular country situations, together with proposals for remedial measures,

Welcoming the cooperation established between the Representative of the Secretary-General and the United Nations and other international and regional organizations, in particular the participation of the Representative of the Secretary-General in the meetings of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee and its subsidiary bodies, and encouraging further strengthening of this collaboration in order to promote better assistance, protection and development strategies for internally displaced persons,

Welcoming also the publication and the wide dissemination of the compilation and analysis of legal norms prepared by the Representative of the Secretary-General, in particular the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement,

Recalling its resolution 52/130 of 12 December 1997,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Representative of the Secretary-General on internally displaced persons;

2. Commends the Representative of the Secretary-General for the activities undertaken so far, despite the limited resources available to him, and for the catalytic role he continues to play in raising the level of consciousness about the plight of internally displaced persons;

3. Encourages the Representative of the Secretary-General to continue his analysis of the causes of internal displacement, the needs of those displaced, measures of prevention and ways to increase protection, assistance and solutions for internally displaced persons, including their safe return;

4. Also encourages the Representative of the Secretary-General to continue to pay specific attention in his review to the protection and assistance needs of women and children, bearing in mind the relevant strategic objective in the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women;

5. Welcomes the study prepared by the Representative of the Secretary-General to promote a comprehensive strategy for better protection, assistance and development for internally displaced persons;

6. Notes the development by the Representative of the Secretary-General, on the basis of his compilation and analysis of legal norms, of a comprehensive framework for the protection of internally displaced persons, in particular the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement;

7. Welcomes the fact that the Representative of the Secretary-General has made use of the Guiding Principles in his dialogue with Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, and requests him to continue his efforts in that regard;

8. Notes with appreciation that the United Nations agencies, regional and non-governmental organizations are making use of the Guiding Principles in their work, and encourages the further dissemination and application of the Guiding Principles;

9. Calls upon all Governments to continue to facilitate the activities of the Representative of the Secretary-General, in particular Governments with situations of internal displacement, encourages them to give serious consideration to inviting the Representative to visit their countries so as to enable him to study and analyse more fully the issues involved, and thanks those Governments that have already done so;

10. Invites Governments to give due consideration, in dialogue with the Representative of the Secretary-General, to the recommendations and suggestions addressed to them, in accordance with his mandate, and to inform him of measures taken thereon;

11. Urges all relevant United Nations humanitarian assistance and development organizations concerned to enhance their collaboration with the Representative of the Secretary-General by developing frameworks of cooperation, especially through the Inter-Agency Standing Committee, to promote protection, assistance and development for internally displaced persons and to provide all possible assistance and support to him;

12. Welcomes the efforts to establish a global information system on internally displaced persons, as advocated by the Representative of the Secretary-General, and encourages the members of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee to continue to collaborate in those efforts;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Representative to carry out his mandate effectively;

14. Requests the Representative of the Secretary-General to prepare, for consideration by the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session, a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

15. Decides to continue its consideration of the question of protection of and assistance to internally displaced persons at its fifty-sixth session.

(For information on the situation of refugees and displaced person, see PART THREE, Chapter XII; see PART THREE, Chapter III for details on humanitarian assistance provided to internally displaced persons.)

Civilians in armed conflict

On 12 February [meeting 3977], the Security Council discussed the protection of civilians in armed conflict. On the same date [meeting 3978], its President made statement S/PRST/1999/6 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has considered the matter of protection of civilians in armed conflict.

The Council expresses its grave concern at the growing civilian toll of armed conflict and notes with distress that civilians now account for the vast majority of casualties in armed conflict and are increasingly directly targeted by combatants and armed elements. The Council condemns attacks or acts of violence in situations of armed conflict directed against civilians, especially women, children and other vulnerable groups, including also refugees and internally displaced persons, in violation of the relevant rules of international law, including those of international humanitarian and human rights law.

The Council is especially concerned about attacks on humanitarian workers, in violation of the rules of international law.

The Council notes that large-scale human suffering is a consequence and sometimes a contributing factor to instability and further conflict, whether due to displacement, violent assault or other atrocities. Bearing in mind its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, the Council affirms the need for the international community to assist and protect civilian populations affected by armed conflict. The Council calls upon all parties concerned to ensure the safety of civilians and guarantee the unimpeded and safe access of United Nations and other humanitarian personnel to those in need. In this regard, the Council recalls the statement by its President of 19 June 1997 and also recalls its resolution 1208(1998) of 19 November 1998 on the status and treatment of refugees.

The Council expresses particular concern at the harmful impact of armed conflict on children and, in this regard, recalls the statement by its President of 29 June 1998.

The Council calls upon all parties concerned to comply strictly with their obligations under international law, in particular their relevant obligations under the Hague Conventions, the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, and the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child of 1989, as well as with all decisions of the Council.

The Council strongly condemns the deliberate targeting by combatants of civilians in armed conflict and demands that all concerned put an end to such violations of international humanitarian and human rights law. The Council expresses its willingness to respond, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, to situations in which civilians, as such, have been targeted or humanitarian assistance to civilians has been deliberately obstructed.

The Council also condemns all attempts to incite violence against civilians in situations of armed conflict and calls upon States to fulfil their obligations to take action at the national level. The Council affirms the need to bring to justice, in an appropriate manner, individuals who incite or cause violence against civilians in situations of armed conflict or who otherwise violate international humanitarian and human rights law. In this regard, the Council reaffirms the importance of the work being done by the ad hoc Tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda and calls upon all States to cooperate with the Tribunals, in accordance with the relevant Council resolutions. The Council acknowledges the historic significance of the adoption of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court.

The Council notes the deleterious impact of the proliferation of arms, in particular small arms, on the security of civilians, including refugees and other vulnerable populations. In this regard, it recalls its resolution 1209(1998) of 19 November 1998 which, inter alia, stressed the importance of all Member States, and in particular States involved in manufacturing and marketing of weapons, restricting arms transfers which could provoke or prolong armed conflicts or aggravate existing tensions or armed conflicts in Africa, and which urged international collaboration in combating illegal arms flows in Africa.

The Council expresses concern over the widening gap between the rules of international humanitarian law and their application. The Council welcomes the commemorative events planned to mark the fiftieth anniversary of the Geneva Conventions and the centenary of the first International Peace Conference, held at The Hague in 1899. These occasions provide an opportunity for a further exploration of ways and means by which the international community may enhance the compliance of parties to an armed conflict with the relevant rules of international law, including those of international humanitarian law.

The Council welcomes the continuing contribution to the implementation of international humanitarian law of the International Committee of the Red Cross.

The Council considers that a comprehensive and coordinated approach by Member States and international organizations and agencies is required in order to address the problem of the protection of civilians in situations of armed conflicts. To this end, the Council requests the Secretary-General to submit a report containing concrete recommendations to the Council by September 1999 on ways the Council, acting within its sphere of responsibility, could improve the physical and legal protection of civilians in situations of armed conflict. The report should also identify contributions the Council could make towards effective implementation of existing humanitarian law. The report should examine whether there are any significant gaps in existing legal norms, through the review of recent reports in this regard. The Council encourages the Secretary-General to consult the Inter-Agency Standing Committee in formulating his recommendations.

The Council affirms its intention to review the recommendations of the Secretary-General in accordance with its responsibilities under the Charter.

The Council met again on 22 February to discuss the protection of civilians in armed conflict [meeting 3980].

Report of Secretary-General. As requested by the Security Council (see above), the Secretary-General, in September [S/1999/957], submitted a report with recommendations on how the Council could improve the physical and legal protection of civilians in situations of armed conflict.

The Secretary-General described threats and violence against civilians in armed conflict and the role of the Council in their protection. He made recommendations aimed at identifying ways in which the Council could promote full respect for international humanitarian, human rights and refugee law, by States and non-State actors, and particularly by parties to conflicts. The recommendations concerned Member States' ratification of the major instruments of international humanitarian, human rights and refugee law; accountability and enforcement measures for war crimes; gaps in international law on protection of internally displaced persons, and the minimum age of recruitment for the armed forces; the safety of humanitarian personnel; conflict prevention; confidence-building; humanitarian access; special measures for children and women; targeted sanctions; small arms and anti-personnel landmines; peacekeeping; the separation of combatants and armed elements from civilians in camps; disarmament and demobilization; humanitarian zones, security zones and safe corridors; and intervention in cases of systematic and widespread violations of international law. Other recommendations were intended to permanently strengthen the capacity of the Council and the United Nations to protect civilians in armed conflict by strengthening the Organization's capacity to plan and deploy rapidly and establishing a technical review mechanism of sanctions. Other recommendations called for Council action upon receipt of information indicating the imminent outbreak of violence aimed at civilians, and proposals intended to alleviate the suffering of civilians in situations where conflict had already broken out and where civilians were being targeted.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 and 17 September [meeting 4046], the Security Council discussed the Secretary-General's report. It unanimously adopted resolution 1265 (1999) on 17 September. The draft [S/1999/981] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling the statement by its President of 12 February 1999,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 8 September 1999 submitted to the Security Council in accordance with the above-mentioned statement,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa and on the protection for humanitarian assistance to refugees and others in conflict situations, of 13 April and 22 September 1998, respectively, in particular their analysis related to the protection of civilians,

Noting that civilians account for the vast majority of casualties in armed conflicts and are increasingly targeted by combatants and armed elements, gravely concerned by the hardships borne by civilians during armed conflict, in particular as a result of acts of violence directed against them, especially women, children and other vulnerable groups, including refugees and internally displaced persons, and recognizing the consequent impact this will have on durable peace, reconciliation and development,

Bearing in mind its primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security, and underlining the importance of taking measures aimed at conflict prevention and resolution,

Stressing the need to address the causes of armed conflict in a comprehensive manner in order to enhance the protection of civilians on a long-term basis, including by promoting economic growth, poverty eradication, sustainable development, national reconciliation, good governance, democracy, the rule of law and respect for and protection of human rights,

Expressing its deep concern at the erosion in respect for international humanitarian, human rights and refugee law and principles during armed conflict, in particular by deliberate acts of violence against all those protected under such law, and expressing its concern also at the denial of safe and unimpeded access to people in need,

Underlining the importance of the widest possible dissemination of international humanitarian, human rights and refugee law and of relevant training for, inter alia, civilian police, armed forces, members of the judicial and legal professions, civil society and personnel of international and regional organizations,

Recalling the statement by its President of 8 July 1999, and emphasizing its call for the inclusion, as appropriate, within specific peace agreements and, on a case-by-case basis, within United Nations peacekeeping mandates, of clear terms for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants, including the safe and timely disposal of arms and ammunition,

Mindful of the particular vulnerability of refugees and internally displaced persons, and reaffirming the primary responsibility of States to ensure their protection, in particular by maintaining the security and civilian character of camps for refugees and internally displaced persons,

Underlining the special rights and needs of children in situations of armed conflict, including those of the girl child,

Recognizing the direct and particular impact of armed conflict on women as referred to in paragraph 18 of the report of the Secretary-General, and in this regard welcoming the ongoing work within the United Nations system on the implementation of a gender perspective in humanitarian assistance and on violence against women,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 8 September 1999, and takes note of the comprehensive recommendations contained therein;

2. Strongly condemns the deliberate targeting of civilians in situations of armed conflict as well as attacks on objects protected under international law, and calls upon all parties to put an end to such practices;

3. Emphasizes the importance of preventing conflicts which could endanger international peace and security, and, in this context, highlights the importance of implementing appropriate preventive measures to resolve conflicts, including the use of United Nations and other dispute-settlement mechanisms and of preventive military and civilian deployments, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, resolutions of the Security Council and relevant international instruments;

4. Urges all parties concerned to comply strictly with their obligations under international humanitarian, human rights and refugee law, in particular those contained in the Hague Conventions of 1899 and 1907 and in the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, as well as with the decisions of the Security Council;

5. Calls upon States which have not already done so to consider ratifying the major instruments of international humanitarian, human rights and refugee law, and to take appropriate legislative, judicial and administrative measures to implement those instruments domestically, drawing on technical assistance, as appropriate, from relevant international organizations, including the International Committee of the Red Cross and United Nations bodies;

6. Emphasizes the responsibility of States to end impunity and to prosecute those responsible for genocide, crimes against humanity and serious violations of international humanitarian law, affirms the possibility, to this end, of using the International Fact-Finding Commission established by article 90 of Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions, reaffirms the importance of the work being done by the ad hoc Tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda, stresses the obligation of all States to cooperate fully with the Tribunals, and acknowledges the historic significance of the adoption of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court which is open for signature and ratification by States;

7. Underlines the importance of safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel to civilians in armed conflict, including refugees and internally displaced persons, and the protection of humanitarian assistance to them, and recalls in this regard the statements by its President of 19 June 1997 and 29 September 1998;

8. Emphasizes the need for combatants to ensure the safety, security and freedom of movement of United Nations and associated personnel, as well as personnel of international humanitarian organizations, and recalls in this regard the statements by its President of 12 March 1997 and 29 September 1998;

9. Takes note of the entry into force of the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel of 1994, recalls the relevant principles contained therein, urges all parties to armed conflicts to respect fully the status of United Nations and associated personnel, and in this regard condemns attacks and the use of force against United Nations and associated personnel, as well as personnel of international humanitarian organizations, and affirms the need to hold accountable those who commit such acts;

10. Expresses its willingness to respond to situations of armed conflict where civilians are being targeted or humanitarian assistance to civilians is being deliberately obstructed, including through the consideration of appropriate measures at the disposal of the Council in accordance with the Charter, and notes, in that regard, the relevant recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

11. Also expresses its willingness to consider how peacekeeping mandates might better address the negative impact of armed conflict on civilians;

12. Expresses its support for the inclusion, where appropriate, in peace agreements and mandates of United Nations peacekeeping missions, of specific and adequate measures for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants, with special attention given to the demobilization and reintegration of child soldiers, as well as clear and detailed arrangements for the destruction of surplus arms and ammunition, and in this regard recalls the statement by its President of 8 July 1999;

13. Notes the importance of including in the mandates of peacemaking, peacekeeping and peace-building operations special protection and assistance provisions for groups requiring particular attention, including women and children;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that United Nations personnel involved in peacemaking, peacekeeping and peace-building activities have appropriate training in international humanitarian, human rights and refugee law, including child and gender-related provisions, negotiation and communication skills, cultural awareness and civilian-military coordination, and urges States and relevant international and regional organizations to ensure that appropriate training is included in their programmes for personnel involved in similar activities;

15. Underlines the importance of civilian police as a component of peacekeeping operations, recognizes the role of police in assuring the safety and well-being of civilians, and in this regard acknowledges the need to enhance the capacity of the United Nations for the rapid deployment of qualified and well-trained civilian police;

16. Reaffirms its readiness, whenever measures are adopted under Article 41 of the Charter, to give consideration to their impact on the civilian population, bearing in mind the needs of children, in order to consider appropriate humanitarian exemptions;

17. Notes that the excessive accumulation and destabilizing effect of small arms and light weapons pose a considerable impediment to the provision of humanitarian assistance and have a potential to exacerbate and prolong conflicts, endanger the lives of civilians and undermine security and the confidence required for a return to peace and stability;

18. Takes note of the entry into force of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction, of 1997, and the amended Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices (Protocol II) annexed to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, of 1980, recalls the relevant provisions contained therein, and notes the beneficial effect that their implementation will have on the safety of civilians;

19. Reiterates its grave concern at the harmful and widespread impact of armed conflict on children, recalls its resolution 1261(1999) of 25 August 1999, and reaffirms the recommendations contained therein;

20. Stresses the importance of consultation and cooperation between the United Nations, the International Committee of the Red Cross and other relevant organizations, including regional organizations, on follow-up to the report of the Secretary-General, and encourages the Secretary-General to continue consultations on this subject and to take concrete actions aimed at enhancing the capacity of the United Nations to improve the protection of civilians in armed conflict;

21. Expresses its willingness to work in cooperation with regional organizations to examine how these bodies might better enhance the protection of civilians in armed conflict;

22. Decides to establish immediately an appropriate mechanism to review further the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General and to consider appropriate steps by April 2000 in accordance with its responsibilities under the Charter;

23. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Note by Council President. A November note [S/1999/1160] by the Council President stated that, pursuant to the Council's decision to establish a mechanism to review the recommendations contained in the Secretary-General's report, an informal 15-member working group had been established for a six-month period.

(For information on children in armed conflict, see p. 672.)

Weapons of mass destruction

A June note by the secretariat [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/26] stated that Clemencia Forero Ucos (Colombia) was unable to prepare a working paper assessing the utility, scope and structure of a study on weapons of mass destruction or with indiscriminate effect, or of a nature to cause superfluous injury or unnecessary suffering for the 1999 Subcommission session, as requested by the Subcommission in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 682].

Economic, social and cultural rights

Right to development

Reports of Secretary-General. As requested by the Commission on Human Rights in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 683], the Secretary-General presented replies received from four Governments [E/CN.4/1999/20] in response to his request for information on follow-up to the Declaration on the Right to Development, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 41/128 [YUN 1986, p. 717].

In accordance with a 1998 Subcommission request [YUN 1998, p. 683], the Secretary-General presented, in June [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/30], replies received from UN bodies on steps they had taken to promote international cooperation in the context of the United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006) (see PART THREE, Chapter I).

Pursuant to Assembly resolution 53/155 [YUN 1998, p. 684], which reaffirmed the importance of the right to development, the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/54/319] on the resolution's implementation. He described UN efforts to promote human rights and the right to development within intergovernmental institutions. A workshop (Geneva, 8 July), organized jointly by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, OHCHR and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, at the invitation of the UN Development Group Office of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), held technical discussions on the common country assessment and the United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) and their implementation (see also PART THREE, Chapter II). The programme for human rights strengthening, signed on 8 April by the High Commissioner for Human Rights and the UNDP Associate Administrator, provided for: support to five pilot countries in five regions to strengthen national capacity to promote, protect and realize human rights; support to five countries in five regions to design guidelines on mainstreaming human rights in UNDP sustainable human development country programmes; regional and subregional workshops to promote ratification of human rights instruments; a seminar on the impact of globalization on the enjoyment of human rights and issuing a publication thereon; and support to UNDP country office projects for human rights programming. OHCHR was preparing to participate in the pilot phase of a comprehensive development framework in sectors covering human rights issues, such as good governance, the justice system, social safety nets and programmes, education and health. OHCHR collaborated in the preparation of the Human Development Report 2000, which would be devoted to human rights.

Developments in the area of inter-agency coordination included the implementation of the Memorandum of Understanding signed in 1998 between OHCHR and UNDP [YUN 1998, p. 684]; completion of the first round of UNDAF; and the work of the ad hoc group on the right to development, which focused on preparing draft guidelines on human rights for resident coordinators and a training module on human rights for UN staff involved in the common country assessment/UNDAF process. An OHCHR workshop on the right to development (Geneva, 18-19 May) provided support to the study of the independent expert on the right to development (see next page). As part of the process of integrating human rights into the UN system, OHCHR and UNDP organized two training sessions (Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire, and Colombo, Sri Lanka) to provide more human rights exposure to UNDP staff, as well as to their government counterparts.

Report of High Commissioner. Pursuant to a 1998 Commission request [YUN 1998, p. 683], the High Commissioner for Human Rights described activities of her Office to implement the right to development. She also provided information related to the implementation of General Assembly and Commission resolutions and inter-agency coordination within the UN system to implement relevant Commission resolutions.

Commission action. On 28 April [E/1999/23 (res. 1999/790)], the Commission reaffirmed the importance of the right to development for everyone in all countries, particularly developing countries, and urged States to eliminate obstacles to development by pursuing the promotion and protection of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights and by implementing development programmes and promoting international co-operation. Welcoming Economic and Social Council decision 1998/269 [YUN 1998, p. 683], which authorized the Commission to establish a follow-up mechanism consisting of an open-ended working group and an independent expert, initially for a three-year period, the Commission invited the High Commissioner to report each year for the duration of the mechanism, to provide interim reports to the working group and to make the reports available to the independent expert. The Secretary-General was asked to report to the Assembly in 1999 and to the Commission in 2000.

Subcommission action. On 25 August [E/CN.4/2000/2 (res. 1999/9)], the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, taking note of the Secretary-General's June report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/30] (see p. 651), asked him to invite UN bodies and specialized agencies to step up their action to promote international co-operation for the realization of the right to development in the context of the United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006) and to transmit annually information received.

Working group activities. The open-ended working group on the right to development (Geneva, 13-14 September) [A/54/401] considered a report of independent expert Arjun Sengupta (India) on progress made in implementing the right. As his mandate called for developing a programme for realizing the right to development, he presented a preliminary plan for doing so, starting first with the right to food, primary health care and primary education, and combining international cooperation with the national obligations of States.

The group also considered an interim report of the High Commissioner on OHCHR activities to implement the right to development.

The group decided to suspend its deliberations and to resume again in Geneva from 13 to 17 December. However, it did not convene at that time and planned to meet early in 2000.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/175 by recorded vote (119-10-38) [agenda item 116 (b)].

The right to development

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles and purposes of the Charter of the United Nations, and expressing in particular the determination to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom as well as to employ international mechanisms for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Recalling its previous resolutions and those of the Commission on Human Rights relating to the right to development, including its resolution 53/155 of 9 December 1998, and taking note of Commission resolution 1999/79 of 28 April 1999,

Recalling also the Declaration on the Right to Development, and reaffirming the importance of its full implementation,

Reaffirming that the right to development, as established in the Declaration on the Right to Development, is universal and inalienable, and re-emphasizing that its promotion, protection and realization are an integral part of the promotion and protection of all human rights,

Noting that the human person is the central subject of development and that development policy should therefore make the human being the main participant in and beneficiary of development,

Stressing the importance of creating an economic, political, social, cultural and legal environment that will enable people to achieve social development at the national and international levels,

Emphasizing the fact that the realization of the right to development requires effective and efficient development policies at the national level, as well as equitable economic relations and a favourable economic environment at the international level,

Noting that sanctions often have a serious negative impact on the development capacity and activity of target countries, as well as third States, undermining their full realization of the right to development,

Recognizing that countries interact with the global economy from vastly different levels of development, and realizing that globalization affects all countries differently and makes them more susceptible to external developments, positive and negative, inter alia, in the field of human rights, in particular in the realization of the right to development,

Stressing the need for coordination and cooperation throughout the United Nations system for a more effective promotion and realization of the right to development,

Emphasizing that the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights has an important role to play in the promotion, protection and realization of the right to development, including through enhanced cooperation with the relevant bodies of the United Nations system for this purpose,

Affirming that developed countries have a major responsibility in the context of growing interdependence to create and sustain a global economic environment that is favourable to accelerated and sustainable development,

Emphasizing that measures should be taken to ensure that human rights are not exploited as a means of conditionality for loans, aid or trade, which then unduly results in the imposition of particular policies on recipient countries, thereby negatively affecting the full enjoyment of the right to development by the peoples of such countries,

Recognizing the importance of undertaking appropriate economic policies and creating an environment that is favourable and conducive to the enhancement of the realization of the right to development at the national and international levels,

Emphasizing the importance of strengthening good governance through the building of more effective and accountable institutions for promoting sustained growth and enabling all people to benefit equally from development,

Expressing its concern that the Declaration on the Right to Development is insufficiently disseminated, and noting that it should be taken into account, as appropriate, in bilateral and multilateral cooperation programmes, national development strategies and policies and activities of international organizations,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General prepared pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/155,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Reaffirms the importance of the right to development for every human person and all people in all countries, in particular the developing countries, as an integral part of their fundamental human rights, as well as the potential contribution that its realization could make to the full enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms;

3. Also reaffirms that democracy, development and respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the right to development, are interdependent and mutually reinforcing, and in this context affirms that:

(a) The existence of widespread poverty inhibits the full and effective enjoyment of all human rights and renders democracy and popular participation fragile;

(b) For peace and stability to endure, national and international action and cooperation are required to promote a better life for all in larger freedom, a critical element of which is the eradication of poverty;

(c) The full realization of the right to development must be addressed within a global context through a constructive, dialogue-based approach, with objectivity, respect for national sovereignty and territorial integrity, impartiality, non-selectivity and transparency as the guiding principles, taking into account the political, historical, social, religious and cultural characteristics of each country;

(d) Effective popular participation is an essential component of successful and sustainable development;

(e) The participation of developing countries in the international economic decision-making process needs to be broadened and strengthened through its democratization;

4. Expresses deep concern that the gap between the developed and developing countries remains unacceptably wide and that developing countries continue to face difficulties in participating in the globalization process and may risk being marginalized and effectively excluded from its benefits;

5. Notes with concern that the realization of the right to development of many developing countries has been negatively affected as a result of severe economic and financial crises in many regions of the world, and recognizes that the international trade and financial conditions that caused the crises persist;

6. Calls upon Member States to take, individually and collectively, all relevant measures and policies to prevent the marginalization of the weak or vulnerable economies of developing countries and of countries with economies in transition and to enable them to participate fully in globalization and liberalization with a view to their full integration into the world economy;

7. Calls upon States to refrain from taking any unilateral measures that are not in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations and that create obstacles to trade relations among States and impede the full realization of all human rights, including the right to development;

8. Urges States to eliminate all obstacles to development at all levels, inter alia, by pursuing the promotion and protection of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights and implementing comprehensive development programmes at the national level, integrating those rights into development activities and promoting effective international cooperation;

9. Reaffirms that international cooperation is a necessity deriving from the recognized mutual interest of all countries and, therefore, that such cooperation should be strengthened in order to support the efforts of developing countries to solve their social and economic problems and to fulfil their obligations to promote and protect all human rights;

10. Calls upon the international community to address the deepening technological, financial and productive gaps between the developed and some developing countries, and among some developing countries themselves, as well as the widening inequalities between the rich and the poor;

11. Affirms the need to apply a gender perspective in the implementation of the right to development, inter alia, by ensuring that women play an active role in the development process, and emphasizes that the empowerment of women and their full participation on a basis of equality in all spheres of society is fundamental for development;

12. Reaffirms that, in the full realization of the right to development, inter alia:

(a) The rights to food and clean water are fundamental human rights and their promotion constitutes a moral imperative both for national Governments and for the international community;

(b) The right to shelter is a basic human right, and in this regard the Assembly emphasizes the urgent need for national Governments and the international community to develop urgently, where necessary, and implement national and international strategies to provide this right;

(c) Health is essential for sustainable development, and the Assembly calls upon all Governments to take reasonable legislative and other measures within their available resources to achieve the progressive realization of the right to health-care services and urges the international community to support the efforts of Governments in this regard;

(d) Education is also an essential factor for the political, social, cultural and economic development of all people, and the Assembly recognizes that science and technology are important for ensuring growing levels of knowledge and must be put to use in the service of education;

13. Recommends proper consideration of the humanitarian effects of sanctions, in particular on women and children, which undermine and affect the right to development, with a view to minimizing those effects;

14. Stresses the need for the Secretary-General to continue to give high priority to the right to development, and urges all States to promote further the right to development, as a vital element in a balanced human rights programme;

15. Welcomes the high priority assigned by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to activities relating to the right to development, and urges the Office of the High Commissioner to continue to implement Commission on Human Rights resolution 1998/72 of 22 April 1998;

16. Invites the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to continue to follow and review progress made in the promotion and implementation of the right to development and to submit annual reports to the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights and to provide interim reports to the open-ended working group and the independent expert on the right to development containing details on:

(a) The activities of her Office relating to the implementation of the right to development, as contained in her mandate;

(b) The implementation of resolutions of the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights with regard to the right to development;

(c) The coordination among the relevant entities of the United Nations system, within their respective mandates, in the implementation of relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights in this regard;

17. Notes the efforts undertaken by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, within its mandate, with relevant entities of the United Nations system to promote the realization of the right to development, and stresses the need for the Office of the High Commissioner to keep Governments fully informed of and involve them in those initiatives, as appropriate;

18. Calls upon Member States and the Office of the High Commissioner to ensure that the open-ended working group on the right to development convenes its first session, as a matter of urgency, no later than 17 December 1999;

19. Urges Member States, the Secretary-General and the United Nations system, in particular the Office of the High Commissioner, fully to support the follow-up mechanism established for the implementation of the right to development;

20. Reaffirms the need for the Office of the High Commissioner to take appropriate measures aimed at promoting universal public awareness of the right to development through, inter alia, the dissemination of the Declaration on the Right to Development;

21. Invites the open-ended working group, inter alia, to consider the question of elaborating a convention on the right to development;

22. Calls upon the independent expert on the right to development to submit comprehensive reports to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session and the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-sixth session on, inter alia, the effects of poverty, structural adjustment, globalization, financial and trade liberalization and deregulation on the prospects of enjoyment of the right to development in developing countries;

23. Invites the open-ended working group to take note of the deliberations on the right to development held during the fifty-fourth session of the General Assembly;

24. Takes note of the report of the independent expert on the right to development, and encourages closer coordination with studies undertaken by other relevant experts established under the auspices of the Commission on Human Rights;

25. Recognizes the vital role of civil society, including non-governmental organizations and the private sector, in the implementation of the right to development, and in this regard encourages Member States and the United Nations system to foster partnerships and strengthen cooperation at the national level with civil society, as appropriate;

26. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to inform the Commission on Human Rights and the General Assembly of the activities of the organizations, funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system relating to the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development, as well as obstacles identified in the realization of the right to development;

27. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session and to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-sixth session a comprehensive report on the right to development, including obstacles identified in the realization of that right;

28. Decides to consider this question at its fifty-fifth session under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches to improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Globalization

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 30 to 2, with 20 abstentions, on 28 April [res. 1999/59], the Commission recognized that, while globalization, by its impact on the role of the State, might affect human rights, the promotion and protection of all human rights was the responsibility of the State. Underlining the need to analyse the consequences of globalization on the full enjoyment of all human rights, the Commission asked treaty bodies, special rapporteurs/representatives, independent experts and the Commission's working groups to take the issue into consideration in their reports. The Commission asked the Subcommission to undertake a study, based on those reports, for submission in 2001.

Subcommission action. On 25 August [res. 1999/8], the Subcommission decided to appoint Joseph Oloka-Onyango (Uganda) and Deepika Udagama (Sri Lanka) as Special Rapporteurs to prepare a study on globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of all human rights and asked them to submit a preliminary report in 2000.

On 26 August [res. 1999/29], the Subcommission, noting the Commission's April request, decided to entrust Mr. Oloka-Onyango with preparing the study for submission in 2001.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/165 by recorded vote (99-2-64) [agenda item 116 (b)].

Globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of all human rights

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and expressing in particular the need to achieve international cooperation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, as well as the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Recalling also the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Reaffirming the Declaration on the Right to Development, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 41/128 of 4 December 1986,

Recognizing that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that the international community must treat human rights globally in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing and with the same emphasis,

Realizing that globalization affects all countries differently and makes them more susceptible to external developments, positive as well as negative, including in the field of human rights,

Realizing also that globalization is not merely an economic process, but also has social, political, environmental, cultural and legal dimensions which have an impact on the full enjoyment of all human rights,

Recognizing that multilateral mechanisms have a unique role to play in meeting the challenges and taking the opportunities presented by globalization,

Noting that human beings strive for a world that is respectful of cultures, identities and human rights and that, in that regard, they work to ensure that all activities, including those affected by globalization, are consistent with those aims,

1. Recognizes that, while globalization, by its impact on, inter alia, the role of the State, may affect human rights, the promotion and protection of all human rights is, first and foremost, the responsibility of the State;

2. Underlines, therefore, the need to analyse the consequences of globalization for the full enjoyment of all human rights;

3. Takes note of the request by the Commission on Human Rights to the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights to undertake a study, based on the reports of the treaty bodies, special rapporteurs, independent experts and working groups of the Commission, on the issue of globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of all human rights, for the consideration of the Commission at its fifty-seventh session;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, taking into account the different views of Member States, to submit a comprehensive report on globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of all human rights to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session.

Trade and investment

In accordance with a 1998 Subcommission request [YUN 1998, p. 690], Mr. Oloka-Onyango and Ms. Udagama, in June [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/11], submitted a working paper on integrating human rights concerns in international and regional trade, investment and financial policies, agreements and practices, and on how the UN human rights mechanisms could play a central role in that regard. The paper called for the establishment of mechanisms to carry out human rights impact assessments of the effects of policy decisions made in multilateral and intergovernmental organizations. According to the paper, there was a need to make accessible to all States and non-State actors the processes by which policy on international trade, investment and finance was discussed. The Subcommission should proceed to a more in-depth study on aspects of the relationship between trade, investment and finance policy and practice and human rights, and a preliminary report should be submitted to the Subcommission in 2000, to be followed in 2001 by a progress report.

Subcommission action. By a vote of 18 to none, with 4 abstentions, the Subcommission, on 26 August [res. 1999/30], requested Governments and economic policy forums to take into account international human rights obligations and principles in formulating international economic policy. It called on them to undertake studies, in consultation with UN and regional human rights mechanisms and relevant civil society organizations, of the human rights and social impacts of economic liberalization programmes, policies and laws. The High Commissioner was asked to intensify efforts at dialogue with the World Trade Organization (WTO) and its members on the human rights dimensions of trade and investment liberalization, and to ensure that human rights were fully integrated into future WTO negotiations. The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development was asked to include in its work programme a focus on ways to incorporate human rights principles in the process of international trade policy formulation.

Effects of debt

By a roll-call vote of 30 to 15, with 8 abstentions, the Commission, on 23 April [res. 1999/22], affirmed that the permanent solution to the foreign debt problem lay in the establishment of a just and equitable international economic order, which guaranteed developing countries better market conditions and commodity prices, stabilization of exchange rates and interest rates, easier access to financial and capital markets, adequate flows of financial resources and easier access to developed countries' technology. It also emphasized the need for initiatives on foreign debt and for new financial flows to debtor developing countries from all sources. Governments, international financial institutions and the private sector were called on to cancel or reduce the debt of heavily indebted poor countries. The Special Rapporteur was asked to report annually on the effects of foreign debt on the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights, and the Secretary-General was asked to assist him.

Structural adjustment policies

Pursuant to a 1998 Commission decision [YUN 1998, p. 688], the independent expert appointed to study the effects of structural adjustment policies on economic, social and cultural rights, Fantu Cheru (United States), in a February report [E/CN.4/1999/50], examined the roots of the third world development crises which, he said, manifested as debt, represented a fraction of a much deeper and systemic problem of underdevelopment. He described the links between structural adjustment programmes and the realization of economic, social and cultural rights and presented basic principles for "adjustment with transformation", which would emphasize sustainable economic growth combined with social justice.

Proposals for action at the international level included debt cancellation for the heavily indebted poor countries; instituting human rights conditionality in future lending; establishing international mechanisms to retrieve money stolen by corrupt leaders; reforming international eco-conomic, financial and trade systems; and natural resource preservation. Action at the regional level should emphasize stronger cooperation regarding economic development. At the national level, structural adjustment should focus on economic growth oriented towards human development. In post-conflict countries, growth that was oriented towards human development was most easily achieved by increasing the capacity of existing productive assets, massive investment in people, reconstruction and rehabilitation of neglected infrastructure through public works employment programmes, and democratic governance.

Working group activities. The open-ended working group on structural adjustment programmes, at its second session (Geneva, 1-3 March) [E/CN.4/1999/51], reviewed the independent expert's report and made recommendations to the Commission, which the Commission adopted (see below).

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 33 to 15, with 4 abstentions, the Commission, on 26 April [dec. 1999/104], requested the Economic and Social Council to ask the Secretary-General to circulate the independent expert's report to and invite comments from Governments, UN bodies, academic institutions, NGOs and organizations representing disadvantaged and vulnerable groups. The Commission also asked the Council to take action regarding the work of the independent expert and of the working group, which were approved by the Council (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/1999/23], adopted decision 1999/251 by a roll-call vote of 25 to 17, with 4 abstentions [agenda item 14 (h)].

Effects of structural adjustment policies on the full enjoyment of human rights

At its 42nd plenary meeting, on 27 July 1999, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights decision 1999/104 of 26 April 1999, decided:

(a) To extend for one year the mandate of the independent expert on structural adjustment policies to: (i) assist the Working Group on structural adjustment policies and economic, social and cultural rights in the fulfilment of its mandate, in particular by elaborating draft basic policy guidelines on structural adjustment policies; and (ii) monitor new developments, including actions and initiatives being taken by international financial institutions, other United Nations bodies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations with respect to structural adjustment policies and human rights, and submit a revised report to the Working Group at its third session;

(b) To authorize the Working Group to meet for two weeks well in advance of, but at least four weeks prior to, the fifty-sixth session of the Commission with the mandate to: (i) consider the updated report of the independent expert and comments received thereon; (ii) elaborate basic policy guidelines on structural adjustment programmes and economic, social and cultural rights which could serve as a basis for a continued dialogue between human rights bodies and the international financial institutions; and (iii) report to the Commission at its fifty-sixth session.

ROLL-CALL VOTE IN COUNCIL AS FOLLOWS:

In favour: Algeria, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Cuba, Djibouti, El Salvador, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Oman, Pakistan, Republic of Korea, Saudi Arabia, Sri Lanka, Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, Viet Nam.

Against: Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, Czech Republic, Denmark, France, Germany, Iceland, Italy, Japan, Latvia, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Spain, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Belarus, Cape Verde, Russian Federation, Venezuela.

Income distribution

Commission action. On 27 April [res. 1999/53], the Commission decided that the Subcommission should further review the establishment of a forum on economic, social and cultural rights, to be called the Social Forum, with the following objectives: to exchange information on the enjoyment of those rights and its relationship to globalization; to follow up on the relationship between income distribution, the feminization of poverty and human rights; to follow up on situations of poverty; to discuss guidelines on violations of the rights; and to propose legal standards and initiatives, guidelines and recommendations for the consideration of the Commission, the open-ended working group on the right to development, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (see p. 575), the specialized agencies and other UN entities.

Subcommission action. On 25 August [res. 1999/10], the Subcommission decided to hold the Social Forum for three days during its session in 2000 with the agenda proposed by the Commission in resolution 1999/53 and with the participation of Subcommission members, government observers, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, international cooperation agencies, financial institutions, transnational corporations and other private international enterprises, and international labour associations and organizations. The Commission was asked to endorse the holding of the Social Forum in 2000 and to approve all Secretariat facilities for the preparation and servicing of the event.

OHCHR was asked to assemble a report including documents and studies on economic, social and cultural rights, and the High Commissioner was asked to issue invitations and an agenda, and publish the purpose of the meeting. The Sub-commission suggested that the inaugural session emphasize extreme poverty and human rights, and asked the Secretariat to request possible participants to share their experiences and studies on situations of poverty and destitution.

Transnational corporations

Subcommission action. In accordance with its 1998 resolution [YUN 1998, p. 689], the Subcommission, on 3 August [dec. 1999/101], decided to establish a sessional working group to examine the working methods and activities of transnational corporations (TNCs).

Working group activities. The sessional working group on the working methods and activities of TNCs, at its first session (Geneva, 3, 6 and 10 August) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/9], decided to consider developing a code of conduct for TNCs based on human rights standards. Subcommission member David Weissbrot (United States) volunteered to prepare a code in cooperation with relevant NGOs. The group also decided that, in its final report, it would identify a framework or definition of TNCs and the national and international legal standards applicable to them. A member of the group, Asbjørn Eide (Norway), volunteered to prepare a compilation and analysis of relevant human rights standards. The Chairman-Rapporteur proposed preparing a paper on the effects of TNC activities on the enjoyment of human rights, as well as on a draft mechanism for implementing the code of conduct. The group would address the issue of cultural rights and TNC activities in the context of globalization.

Coercive economic measures

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1998 Commission request [YUN 1998, p. 689], the Secretary-General presented the views of three Governments on the implications and negative effects of unilateral coercive measures on their populations [E/CN.4/1999/44 & Add.1,2].

Commission action. On 23 April [res. 1999/21], by a roll-call vote of 37 to 10, with 6 abstentions, the Commission urged States to refrain from adopting or implementing unilateral measures not in accordance with international law and the UN Charter, particularly those of a coercive nature with extraterritorial effects, that created obstacles to trade relations among States. It rejected the application of such measures as tools for political or economic pressure against any country, particularly against developing countries. The Commission asked the open-ended working group on the right to development to consider human rights and the negative impact of unilateral coercive measures. The Commission asked the High Commissioner to give urgent consideration to its resolution. It requested the Secretary-General to bring its resolution to the attention of Member States and to seek their views and information on the implications and negative effects of unilateral coercive measures on their populations and to report thereon in 2000.

Subcommission action. On 26 August [dec. 1999/111], the Subcommission asked Marc Bossuyt (Belgium) to prepare a working paper on the adverse consequences of economic sanctions on human rights for 2000.

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/141 [YUN 1998, p. 689], the Secretary-General, in an August report with later addendum [A/54/222 & Add.1], presented the replies of five Governments in response to his request for information on the implications and negative effects of unilateral coercive measures on their populations.

By decision 54/434 of 17 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/172 by recorded vote (109-48-7) [agenda item 116 (b)].

Human rights and unilateral coercive measures

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 51/103 of 12 December 1996, 52/120 of 12 December 1997 and 53/141 of 9 December 1998, as well as Commission on Human Rights resolution 1998/11 of 9 April 1998,

Reaffirming the pertinent principles and provisions contained in the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States proclaimed by the General Assembly in its resolution 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, in particular article 32 thereof, in which it declared that no State may use or encourage the use of economic, political or any other type of measures to coerce another State in order to obtain from it the subordination of the exercise of its sovereign rights,

Recalling the report submitted by the Secretary-General, pursuant to Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/45 of 3 March 1995, and the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 52/120,

Recognizing the universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated character of all human rights, and in this regard reaffirming the right to development as an integral part of all human rights,

Recalling that the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, called upon States to refrain from any unilateral coercive measure not in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations that creates obstacles to trade relations among States and impedes the full realization of all human rights,

Bearing in mind all the references to this question in the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development, adopted by the World Summit for Social Development on 12 March 1995, the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action, adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women on 15 September 1995, and the Istanbul Declaration on Human Settlements and the Habitat Agenda, adopted by the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) on 14 June 1996,

Deeply concerned that, despite the recommendations adopted on this question by the General Assembly and recent major United Nations conferences and contrary to general international law and the Charter of the United Nations, unilateral coercive measures continue to be promulgated and implemented with all their extraterritorial effects, inter alia, on the economic and social development of targeted countries and peoples and individuals under the jurisdiction of other States,

Bearing in mind all the extraterritorial effects of any unilateral legislative, administrative and economic measures, policies and practices of a coercive nature against the development process and the enhancement of human rights in developing countries, which create obstacles to the full realization of all human rights,

Noting the continuing efforts of the Working Group on the Right to Development of the Commission on Human Rights, and reaffirming in particular its criteria according to which unilateral coercive measures are one of the obstacles to the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development,

1. Urges all States to refrain from adopting or implementing any unilateral measures not in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations, in particular those of a coercive nature with all their extraterritorial effects, which create obstacles to trade relations among States, thus impeding the full realization of the rights set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other international human rights instruments, in particular the right of individuals and peoples to development;

2. Rejects unilateral coercive measures with all their extraterritorial effects as tools for political or economic pressure against any country, in particular against developing countries, because of their negative effects on the realization of all the human rights of vast sectors of their populations, in particular children, women and the elderly;

3. Calls upon Member States that have initiated such measures to commit themselves to their obligations and responsibilities arising from the international human rights instruments to which they are party by revoking such measures at the earliest time possible;

4. Reaffirms, in this context, the right of all peoples to self-determination, by virtue of which they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development;

5. Urges the Commission on Human Rights to take fully into account the negative impact of unilateral coercive measures, including the enactment of national laws and their extraterritorial application, in its task concerning the implementation of the right to development;

6. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in discharging her functions relating to the promotion, realization and protection of the right to development and bearing in mind the continuing impact of unilateral coercive measures on the population of developing countries, to give priority to the present resolution in her annual report to the General Assembly;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all Member States, to continue to collect their views and information on the implications and negative effects of unilateral coercive measures on their populations and to submit an analytical report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session, highlighting the practical and preventive measures in this respect;

8. Decides to examine this question on a priority basis at its fifty-fifth session under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Women and the right to development

On 25 August [res. 1999/15], the Subcommission urged Governments to amend or repeal laws and policies that inhibited women's economic rights and their right to development, and to promote the education of women, including education relating to their rights. International trade, investment and financial institutions were called on to take into account the human rights implications for women of their policies. The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (see p. 1102) was invited to pay special attention to women's economic rights and to explore the possibility of a general recommendation on the subject. The High Commissioner was asked to promote women's economic rights and the right to development, and the Secretary-General was invited to provide information on women and the right to development.

Extreme poverty

Report of independent expert. In response to a 1998 Commission request [YUN 1998, p. 691], the independent expert to evaluate the relationship between the promotion of human rights and extreme poverty, Anne-Marie Lizin (Belgium), in a January report [E/CN.4/1999/48], discussed extreme poverty as a violation of human rights and described UN action to eradicate the problem, case studies where efforts to combat poverty had had positive results (Bulgaria, Portugal, Yemen), proposals for technical cooperation programmes and the situation of women in extreme poverty.

The expert concluded that extreme poverty denied the enjoyment of human rights to 1.3 billion people worldwide, a majority of them women. Poverty was the most massive cause of human rights violations, striking at the principles of equal dignity of all human beings and of non-discrimination. She recommended universal ratification of relevant human rights instruments; minimum guaranteed income; 0.7 per cent of national budgets earmarked for official development assistance; development of local social welfare facilities; occupational reintegration programmes; development and distribution of human rights information and education components for the very poor; aid to the poorest of the poor in prisons; legal aid to those living in extreme poverty; training for social workers as human rights agents; making available to Governments technical assistance to ensure the rights of the poorest of the poor; combating corruption; and according priority in State social policy to refugees and internally displaced persons. Regarding a draft declaration on human rights and extreme poverty, the expert stated that it should call on States to base their anti-poverty policy on human rights that aimed at the eradication, rather than the reduction, of poverty.

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 1999/26], the Commission, reaffirming that extreme poverty and exclusion from society constituted a violation of human dignity and that urgent action was required to eliminate them, called on: the General Assembly, specialized agencies, UN bodies and intergovernmental organizations to take into account the contradiction between the existence of situations of extreme poverty and the duty to guarantee enjoyment of human rights; States, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to take into account the links between human rights and extreme poverty, as well as efforts to empower people living in poverty to participate in decision-making processes on policies that affected them; and the United Nations to strengthen poverty eradication as a priority throughout the UN system. Human rights treaty bodies were invited to take into account, when considering States parties' reports, the question of extreme poverty and human rights. The independent expert was asked to report in 2000, underlining the best practices observed during her country visits and making the report available to the Commission for Social Development and the Commission on the Status of Women (see PART THREE, Chapters IX and X, respectively); and to contribute to the Assembly's evaluation in 2000 of the 1995 World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113] by making her final report and conclusions available to the preparatory committee for the Assembly's 2000 special session devoted to that evaluation. The High Commissioner was requested to consider holding a workshop with the independent expert and Subcommission members in 1999 with a view to consultations also involving the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council on a possible draft declaration on human rights and extreme poverty. The Council approved the Commission's request to the High Commissioner in decision 1999/236 of 27 July.

Workshop. In accordance with the Commission's request, the Workshop on Human Rights and Extreme Poverty (Geneva, 30-31 August) [E/CN.4/2000/52/Add.1], attended by the independent expert, Subcommission experts, the Chairman of the Commission on Population and Development, UN bodies and NGOs, proposed elements for inclusion in a draft declaration. Recommendations included the convening of a second consultation on a draft text, with the participation of interested Governments, the Council's functional commissions, the specialized agencies and NGOs. The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and other interested human rights treaty bodies should be invited to participate in a future consultation. Due consideration should be given to the Council's global framework of initiatives on poverty eradication and the development of the declaration should be considered within the context of the United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006) (see p. 754).

Right to food

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 1999/24], the Commission reaffirmed that hunger constituted a violation of human dignity and considered it intolerable that some 800 million people did not have enough food to meet their basic nutritional needs. It stressed the need to mobilize and optimize technical and financial resources to reinforce national actions to implement sustainable food security policies. The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights was invited to draft and adopt a general comment as a contribution to the clarification of the rights related to food in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights [YUN 1966, p. 419] (see p. 575). The High Commissioner was asked to transmit the Commission's resolution to Governments, relevant specialized agencies and programmes, treaty bodies and NGOs, and invited them to present suggestions to develop the implementation of the rights related to food. She was asked to report in 2000.

Study on the right to food. In June [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/12], Asbjørn Eide (Norway) submitted the final version of his updated study on the right to food. The study was first presented in 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 773] and a progress report submitted in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 694].

The final report described the dimensions, consequences and emerging issues surrounding malnutrition and hunger. It discussed follow-up to commitments made at the 1996 World Food Summit [YUN 1996, p. 1129] and action for States to ensure freedom from hunger and to implement the right. The treatment of the right to food and nutrition by relevant treaty bodies, the Commission and its special rapporteurs was reviewed. Examination of the evolving roles of those bodies on the issue revealed increased support for a human rights approach. Globalization had created new challenges and dangers regarding the right to food, as well as new opportunities; action was needed to prevent negative consequences.

The report concluded that since 1987 there was a better and more widely shared understanding of the impact of hunger and malnutrition; there was a broader recognition of the rights to be free from hunger and to adequate food as human rights; and international institutions broadly endorsed the human rights approach. Recommendations were made to States, the High Commissioner, treaty bodies, the Commission, specialized agencies, NGOs, professional organizations and academic institutions, many of which were based on consultations convened by the High Commissioner [YUN 1998, p. 693] and on a symposium on a human rights approach to food policies and programmes, held in the context of the twenty-sixth session (Geneva, 12-15 April) of the Subcommittee on Nutrition of the Administrative Committee on Coordination [ACC/1999/9]. Among the recommendations, the High Commissioner was called on to develop a strategy to implement the right to food and nutrition as a human right; organize a consultation on a UN strategy to implement freedom from hunger and the enjoyment of the right to food; strengthen

OHCHR capacity to deal with the right; promote a coordinated approach in the UN system through UNDAF; organize a third expert consultation; prepare a study on the impact of globalization on the food and nutritional situation of vulnerable groups; organize a consultation involving treaty bodies, relevant agencies and humanitarian organizations and international financial and trade institutions; and initiate a study on the joint and separate responsibility of States in ensuring access to food for all in emergencies, especially during armed conflicts.

Subcommission action. On 25 August [res. 1999/12], the Subcommission endorsed the study's recommendation to the High Commissioner to organize a third expert consultation following those in 1997 and 1998, focusing on implementation mechanisms at the country level, inviting government experts to bring experiences from their countries as a contribution to the operationalization at the national level of the right to food, including the drawing up of a framework law. The Subcommission endorsed other recommendations made to her, including the organization of a consultation involving treaty body and relevant agency and humanitarian organization representatives and international financial and trade institutions. It asked the Commission to endorse the study's conclusions and recommendations.

Right to education

Reports of Special Rapporteur. The Commission considered a January report [E/CN.4/1999/49] of the Special Rapporteur on the right to education, Katarina Tomasevski (Croatia), covering the first four months of her work (August-December 1998). She provided an overview of UN efforts to enhance access to primary education, highlighting the financial obstacles, outlining strategies to achieve universal primary education, and stressing the need for data to monitor the right to education. She presented a scheme for governmental obligations corresponding to the right, denoting the four essential features that primary schools should exhibit: availability, accessibility, acceptability and adaptability (the 4-A scheme). The Special Rapporteur discussed compulsory education laws and provided a table of compulsory education categorizing countries in which primary education had been made compulsory according to its duration from 3 to 12 years.

The Special Rapporteur visited Uganda (26 June-2 July) [E/CN.4/2000/6/Add.1], at the invitation of the Government, to assess the realization of the right to education, especially experiences with universal primary education, introduced in 1997. Applying the 4-A scheme, she noted the huge challenge the country faced in ensuring the availability of schools and teachers. Securing access to school for girls had been prioritized, while the shift to inclusive education promised to improve access to school for children with disabilities. She highlighted aspects of the acceptability criterion, ranging from the absence of all internationally prohibited grounds of discrimination to school discipline, evidenced by corporal punishment or making pregnant schoolgirls leave school. Regarding adaptability, the Special Rapporteur emphasized the need for education to equip learners with income-generating abilities and thus contribute to poverty eradication. The Special Rapporteur was concerned about the absence of legislation that would specify rights and duties, freedoms and obligations in education. She recommended ensuring sustainability of primary education, formulating a human rights strategy based on Uganda's existing commitments, paying attention to the full recognition of teacher's trade union freedoms and soliciting the collective voice of teachers in educational planning and policy-making.

The Special Rapporteur visited the United Kingdom (18-22 October) [E/CN.4/2000/6/Add.2], inspired by the country's rights-based education, which had just been introduced. Following a review of educational changes from 1944 to 1996, the Special Rapporteur stated that she supported the Government's conceptual shift to rights-based education. However, that approach was promoted at the international level, while silence prevailed with regard to the right to education and rights in education at the domestic level. She was also concerned about the inherited legal status of the child as the object of a legally recognized relationship between the school and the child's parents, rather than the subject of the right to education and of human rights in education. Compulsory education left few categories of children without access to school, but closing the gap deserved priority, particularly with regard to children deprived of their liberty and traveller children. The Special Rapporteur was concerned about access to university education for those who could not afford it and urged the Government to prioritize its commitment to utilize funds generated within education to improve accessibility for disadvantaged categories. The cumulation of different grounds of discrimination, reinforced by class, required unravelling the causes and contributing factors at the structural rather than at only the individual level.

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 1999/25], the Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to report in 2000 and the Secretary-General to assist her. The High Commissioner was asked to consider organizing, in collaboration with relevant UN agencies, particularly the United Nations Children's Fund and UNESCO, a workshop to identify progressive developmental benchmarks and indicators related to the right to education that might be informative to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Committee on the Rights of the Child and other human rights treaty bodies and human rights mechanisms, UN specialized agencies, funds and programmes; by decision 1999/235 of 27 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's request to the High Commissioner. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to report in 2000.

Working paper. As requested by the Subcommission in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 694], Mustapha Mehedi (Algeria) presented, in July [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/10], a working paper on the realization of the right to education, including education in human rights. He analysed the objectives of education, as reflected in international and regional human rights instruments, and considered the expressions used in the instruments as a basis for the rights of each individual to receive education. Discussing responsibility for implementing the right, he provided information on the right to education as a social right, as a free and freedom-forming act and as a collective or solidarity right.

Subcommission action. On 25 August [res. 1999/11], the Subcommission asked Mr. Mehedi to prepare a final paper for 2000.

Scientific concerns

Human rights and the environment

In response to a 1997 Commission request [YUN 1997, p. 677], the Secretary-General submitted a report containing replies received from two UN bodies [E/CN.4/1999/89 & Add.1] in response to his request for comments on his 1996 and 1997 reports on human rights and the environment [YUN 1996, p. 652, & YUN 1997, p. 677]. The Secretary-General provided an analysis of subjects of common interest and concern in respect of human rights, environmental issues and sustainable development, as reflected in discussions at the General Assembly's 1997 special session on Agenda 21 [YUN 1997, p. 790].

Toxic wastes

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In January [E/CN.4/1999/46], the Special Rapporteur on the adverse effects of the illicit movement and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes on the enjoyment of human rights, Fatma-Zohra Ksentini (Algeria), described her activities in 1998 and summarized comments she had received from three countries, as well as information submitted by intergovernmental organizations. She reviewed five incidents of illicit movement and dumping of toxic wastes and presented replies from the Governments concerned.

The Special Rapporteur expressed concern that a number of confirmed cases of illegal traffic in toxic wastes had not been solved satisfactorily and recommended the provision of international assistance more rapidly and on a larger scale. She favoured the development of a legal instrument restricting trade in dangerous chemical substances, as well as the ratification and amendment of the 1989 Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and Their Disposal [YUN 1989, p. 420], which prohibited the export of dangerous wastes from industrialized to developing countries. Noting that the public at large, NGOs and local bodies responsible for environmental problems and human rights were not sufficiently familiar with her mandate, the Special Rapporteur asked OHCHR to publicize her mandate to a greater extent.

The Special Rapporteur visited Germany and the Netherlands (18-29 October) [E/CN.4/2000/507Add.1] to hold consultations, study their laws and learn more about their policies. She also wished to exchange views with the authorities regarding allegations of illicit exports of toxic and dangerous products to developing countries and intended to study national and regional measures to prevent and punish the illicit activities.

Government representatives of the two countries stressed their commitment to sustainable development and measures to counteract the illicit trade in toxic and dangerous products and wastes, which was backed by international obligations and specific national measures. Both Governments believed that the illicit trade was a diminishing problem of limited scale. Steps had been taken to enforce the principle of the return of unwanted products and wastes to the country of origin at the expense of the initial shipper. The Special Rapporteur recommended greater information-sharing and more focal points to enhance the early warning systems. She raised the legal, economic, social, human and environmental problems caused by the export of contaminated ships destined for scrap in developing countries. Both Governments regarded such ships as hazardous wastes as defined under the Basel Convention, and accordingly they intended to ban their export to countries not members of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development. She wished to see the issue examined in the relevant international forums to arrive at a satisfactory solution.

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 36 to 16, with 1 abstention, on 26 April [res. 1999/23], the Commission, reaffirming that illicit traffic and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes constituted a threat to the human rights to life, health and a sound environment, urged Governments to prevent the illegal trafficking. The Commission urged the Special Rapporteur to continue the study of existing problems of and solutions to the illicit trafficking, in particular in developing countries, with a view to making recommendations to control, reduce and eradicate the problem. The Special Rapporteur was asked to include in her reports information on persons killed or injured in developing countries through illicit movement and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes.

Water and sanitation services

Commission action. On 27 April [dec. 1999/108], the Commission, taking note of a 1998 Subcommission resolution and the working paper on the right of access of everyone to drinking-water supply and sanitation services, prepared by El Hadji Guissé (Senegal) [YUN 1998, p. 696], noted that the right remained undefined and therefore asked the Subcommission to consider that aspect in preparing a study on the realization and promotion of the right.

Subcommission action. On 25 August [dec. 1999/107], the Subcommission asked Mr. Guissé to supplement his 1998 working paper for submission in 2000.

Bioethics

In response to a 1997 Commission request [YUN 1997, p. 678], the Secretary-General, in a January report [E/CN.4/1999/90], described developments in international bioethics law. The UNESCO General Conference in 1997 had adopted the Universal Declaration on the Human Genome and Human Rights [YUN 1997, p. 1530], which contained human rights standards and established an ethical framework for activities in that area. The Declaration and the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Dignity of the Human Being with regard to the Application of Biology and Biomedicine, adopted in 1996 by the Council of Ministers of the Council of Europe, demonstrated that the rapid development of science and its technological applications had been accompanied by the emergence of specific international principles aimed at ensuring that scientific advances benefited human rights and protected human dignity. Based on information received from Governments, the Secretary-General concluded that a positive development at the national level was the establishment of ethics committees to supervise scientific activity, to foresee and prevent possible excesses, to alert authorities and public opinion, and to act in an advisory capacity to assist public authorities, as well as scientific researchers and their professional organizations. Further standards were likely to be developed and mechanisms established at the international level.

Commission action. On 28 April [res. 1999/63], the Commission invited UNESCO, the World Health Organization, OHCHR and other UN bodies and specialized agencies to report to the Secretary-General on activities to ensure that the principles in the 1997 Declaration were taken into account. Based on those contributions, the Secretary-General was asked to draw up proposals for consideration by the General Assembly in 1999 concerning ways to ensure the coordination of bioethics activities throughout the UN system. The High Commissioner was asked to pay due attention to the issue, and Governments were invited to consider establishing ethics committees. The Commission asked the Subcommission to consider the contribution it could make to the reflections of the International Bioethics Committee on the follow-up to the 1997 Declaration and to report in 2001. It also asked the Secretary-General to report in 2001.

Computerized files

Pursuant to a 1997 Commission request [YUN 1997, p. 678], the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.4/1999/88] containing information received from four UN entities and one NGO on follow-up to the guidelines for the regulation of computerized personal data files, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 45/95 [YUN 1990, p. 621].

Commission action. On 28 April [dec. 1999/109], the Commission decided to remove the item from its agenda, since the guidelines were being taken into consideration by States. It asked the Secretary-General to entrust the competent inspection bodies with ensuring the implementation of the guidelines by the concerned organizations of the UN system.

Slavery and related issues

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 36 to none, with 17 abstentions, the Commission, on 27 April [res. 1999/46], expressing grave concern at manifestations of contemporary forms of slavery, called on States to review, amend and enforce existing laws or enact new ones to prevent the use of the Internet for trafficking and sexual exploitation of women and children; protect particularly vulnerable groups against exploitation of the prostitution of others and other slavery-like practices; develop national plans of action taking into account the Programme of Action for the Prevention of the Traffic in Persons and the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others [YUN 1995, p. 766]; and ratify the relevant international instruments relating to slavery, the slave trade and slavery-like practices.

The Secretary-General was asked to designate the High Commissioner as the focal point to coordinate activities and disseminate information in the UN system on the suppression of contemporary forms of slavery; to reassign to the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery an OHCHR staff member to ensure continuity of the implementation of Commission and Subcommission resolutions; and to appeal to Governments for contributions to the United Nations Voluntary Trust Fund on Contemporary Forms of Slavery (see p. 666).

Working Group activities. The five-member Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, at its twenty-fourth session (Geneva, 23 June-2 July) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/17], reviewed developments in contemporary forms of slavery and measures to prevent and repress all its forms, including the economic exploitation of domestic and migrant workers, bonded labour, child labour, forced labour and the sexual exploitation of children. Other forms of exploitation examined were the illegal activities of certain religious and other sects, illegal and pseudo-legal adoptions aimed at exploiting children, traffic in human organs and tissues, and slavery-like practices in armed conflicts.

The Group concluded that despite the progress made in human rights protection and the preservation of human dignity, various forms of slavery still existed and new insidious forms were emerging. The Group made a series of recommendations on the issues it considered during the session.

Documents considered by the Group included May notes by the Secretary-General updating the status of the slavery conventions (1956 Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery [YUN 1956, p. 228] and the 1949 Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 317(IV) [YUN 1948-49, p. 613]) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.2/1999/2 & E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.2/

1999/3]; a June report of the Secretary-General containing proposals regarding the Group's future work received from Governments, UN bodies and intergovernmental organizations [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.2/1999/5]; and an executive summary of a working paper prepared by David Weissbrodt (United States) and Anti-Slavery International on a comprehensive review of existing treaty and customary law covering all the traditional and contemporary slavery-related practices and relevant monitoring mechanisms [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.2/1999/6].

Subcommission action. On 26 August [res. 1999/17], the Subcommission addressed the prevention of traffic in persons and exploitation of the prostitution of others; the prevention of transborder traffic in children; the role of corruption in perpetuating slavery and slavery-like practices; misuse of the Internet for sexual exploitation; implementation of the slavery conventions; migrant workers; child domestic workers; child labour; the eradication of bonded labour and elimination of child labour; and the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography.

The Subcommission recommended that the General Assembly declare a UN year against trafficking in persons and asked OHCHR to draft guidelines for developing national plans of action against such trafficking. The Subcommission decided to consider the extent of corruption and its relationship to slavery and slavery-like practices, as well as the role of international debt in perpetuating slavery. The Working Group was asked to focus each of its annual sessions on an important issue for the abolition of slavery and to designate that issue two years prior to the annual session. The Secretary-General was asked to invite States to inform the Group of measures adopted to implement the 1993 Programme of Action for the Elimination of the Exploitation of Child Labour [YUN 1993, p. 965] and to report thereon to the Subcommission and Commission in 2000. He was also asked to invite States to continue to inform the Group of measures adopted to implement the 1992 Programme of Action for the Prevention of the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography [YUN 1992, p. 814]. The Subcommission invited the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography and the Special Rapporteur on violence against women to address the problem of trafficking and related practices and to make recommendations to strengthen the regime against those practices. The Secretary-General was asked to designate OHCHR as the focal point for the coordination of activities and the dissemination of information within the UN system for the suppression of contemporary forms of slavery.

UNESCO action. By a June note [A/54/137], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a resolution adopted by the UNESCO General Conference, which proclaimed 23 August of every year International Day for the Remembrance of the Slave Trade and its Abolition.

Traffic in human organs and tissues

A January note by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/1999/75] stated that, pursuant to the Commission's 1997 request to the Secretary-General to continue to examine the reliability of allegations regarding the removal of organs and tissues of children and adults for commercial purposes [YUN 1997, p. 678], he had asked Governments, relevant UN agencies, the International Criminal Police Organization and relevant NGOs for information on the issue. As at 29 December 1998, no replies had been received.

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 36 to none, with 17 abstentions, the Commission, on 27 April [res. 1999/46], noting that the Secretary-General had not received any information, asked him again to seek information and to report in 2000.

Sexual exploitation during armed conflict

On 26 April [dec. 1999/105], the Commission, taking note of a 1998 Subcommission resolution [YUN 1998, p. 698], approved the Subcommission's decision to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices during armed conflict for an additional year, to enable her to submit an update of developments in 1999. The Commission recommended that the final report be transmitted to Governments, UN bodies, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations, the established international tribunals (see PART FOUR, Chapter II) and the secretariat of the Preparatory Commission for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court (see PART FOUR, Chapter III).

A June note by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/16] stated that the Special Rapporteur was not in a position to submit her written report in 1999, as requested by the Subcommission in 1998. She would report orally at the Subcommission's August 1999 session and the report would be available in 2000.

By decision 1999/252 of 27 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision to approve the extension of the Special Rapporteur's mandate.

On 16 August [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/SR.17], the Special Rapporteur, Gay J. McDougall (United States), informed the Subcommission that the most effective deterrent to the use of sexual violence during armed conflicts was to hold the perpetrators responsible for their crimes. In order to combat the atrocities still occurring, States should adopt legislation to allow for their prosecution of international crimes, and ensure that their legal systems conformed to internationally accepted norms and were capable of adjudicating international crimes without gender bias. Since the International Criminal Court and the established tribunals could address only a small fraction of the violations committed in armed conflicts, it was imperative that all perpetrators of sexual violence be prosecuted at the national level.

Subcommission action. By a vote of 15 to 2, with 5 abstentions, the Subcommission, on 26 August [res. 1999/16], called on States to enact and enforce legislation allowing for prosecution in national courts of sexual violence committed during armed conflict and to provide criminal penalties and compensation for unremedied violations in order to end the cycle of impunity. It also called on them to adopt instructions for and to train their armed forces; set up mechanisms to investigate and prosecute such offences committed by their armed forces; and seek technical assistance from the ICRC International Humanitarian Law Advisory Service. The Commission was asked to endorse in 2000 the principles contained in the Subcommission's resolution. The Subcommission called on the High Commissioner to monitor the implementation of its resolution and to report in 2000, and asked the Special Rapporteur to report in 2000.

1992 Programme of Action

In a June report with later addendum [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/15 & Add.1], the Secretary-General presented information received from two Governments on action they had taken to implement the 1992 Programme of Action for the Prevention of the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography [YUN 1992, p. 814]. A November note by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/2000/72] drew the Commission's attention to the Secretary-General's report.

Trust fund on slavery

Reports of Secretary-General. In September [A/54/348], the Secretary-General reported on the status of the United Nations Voluntary Trust Fund on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, established by the General Assembly in resolution 46/122 [YUN 1991, p. 563].

The Fund's Board of Trustees, at its fourth session (Geneva, 24-26 March), recommended 10 travel grants, amounting to $13,505, to enable NGO representatives to participate, during three working days, in the deliberations of the 1999 session of the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, and five humanitarian assistance project grants amounting to $27,000. Taking into consideration the fact that requests received in 1999 amounted to some $900,000, the Fund, in order to meet at least one third of requests expected in 2000, would need $300,000 in contributions, according to the Board. As at 31 August 1999, the contributions available to the Board in 2000 stood at approximately $38,000.

In December [E/CN.4/2000/80], the Secretary-General stated that, as at 26 November, the balance of funds available for 2000 amounted to $129,000.

Subcommission action. On 26 August [res. 1999/18], the Subcommission emphasized the need for regular contributions to enable the Board of Trustees to recommend grants to assist representatives of organizations to participate in the Working Group's deliberations in 2000 and to finance humanitarian assistance projects by NGOs.

Vulnerable groups

Women

Violence against women

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In March [E/CN.4/1999/68], the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, Radhika Coomaraswamy (Sri Lanka), reported on States' compliance with their international obligations with respect to domestic violence, specifically in terms of her 1996 report on violence in the family [YUN 1996, p. 654]. Information provided by States indicated that they were failing in their international obligations to prevent, investigate and prosecute violence against women in the family. While there were encouraging moves to implement new policies, procedures and laws, such violence did not appear to command Governments' attention. NGOs had the burden of pressuring Governments to fulfil their obligations. Annexed to the report was a table of States and their response mechanisms to domestic violence, covering the period 1995 to 1997. An addendum [E/CN.4/1999/68/Add.1] to the Special Rapporteur's report summarized 13 communications she had sent to Governments and five replies regarding cases of alleged violence against women.

A further addendum [E/CN.4/1999/687/Add.4] examined policies and practices that impacted women's reproductive rights and contributed to, caused or constituted violence against women. The Special Rapporteur pointed out that serious repercussions for women's reproductive health resulted from rape, domestic violence, trafficking and forced prostitution and cultural practices. State policies that diminished women's ability to make reproductive choices included forced abortions, forced sterilization, forced contraception or the provision of unsafe or inappropriate contraception methods and the denial of contraception.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that States ratify international human rights instruments; demonstrate respect for women's rights in reproductive health and family planning programmes; draw up specific laws to combat rape, domestic violence, trafficking and forced prostitution, female genital mutilation, sex-selective abortions and female infanticide; enforce a minimum legal age limit for marriage; eradicate discrimination and violence against women using public health-care services; provide increased education to health workers and ensure availability of information about the human rights implications of reproductive health; implement training programmes for those who worked in minority communities; monitor reproductive health services; support the creation of support groups, shelters, crisis centres and women-only police stations with trained workers and 24-hour hotlines; support research on the regulation of fertility, protection against sexually transmitted diseases (STDs) and confidential testing for STDs; and support organizations promoting women's reproductive and sexual health.

The Special Rapporteur visited Cuba (7-12 June) [E/CN.4/2000/68/Add.2], at the invitation of the Government, to study the situation of violence against women and its causes and consequences. She stated that it was hard to determine the scope and prevalence of violence against women in Cuba because of the lack of statistics. Efforts were being made to remedy the situation. As no specific domestic violence legislation existed, sentences were determined by the level of physical violence. The Penal Code provided for sanctions against rape and sexual abuse, although the law did not discriminate in cases of marital rape. Regarding sexual harassment, it was considered that adequate measures were in place and that specific legislation was not warranted. Most of the Special Rapporteur's interlocutors held that, as a result of the 1959 revolution, prostitution was virtually eliminated. However, she was informed that, with the increase of tourism, prostitution was on the rise, mostly in tourist destinations. Women who were found in prostitution repeatedly were committed by the judicial authorities to rehabilitation centres. The Federation of Cuban Women (FMC), the women's national umbrella organization working towards the full integration of women in economic, political, social and cultural life in conditions of equal opportunity, collaborated closely with government authorities. FMC had 175 "houses of family orientation" programmes to respond to the particular situation of women in a given community, which were managed with the participation of various professionals, including psychologists, social workers and health professionals. In addition to various assistance services, FMC disseminated information materials. As shelters did not exist, the Special Rapporteur urged FMC to establish them. The Special Rapporteur called on the Government to accede to human rights instruments to which it was not a party; urged it to invite thematic mechanisms of the Commission that had requested to visit Cuba; recommended that it cooperate with OHCHR; and called on the United States to terminate its economic embargo against Cuba, which had a negative impact on the economic and social conditions of women in Cuba. She also urged the Government to give FMC the maximum available resources; adopt domestic violence and sexual harassment legislation; sensitize its police, judiciary and prosecutors regarding violence against women; dismantle the special rehabilitation centres for prostitutes, as the centres violated their due process rights; permit organizations to monitor prison conditions regularly; and ensure the independence of the judiciary.

In a note verbale to OHCHR [E/CN.4/2000/131], Cuba presented its comments on the Special Rapporteur's report, stating, among other things, that the Special Rapporteur used sources that were poorly informed, or of doubtful credibility. Other comments related to alleged violations of civil and political rights of women in Cuba, and the alleged limitation on the independence of the judiciary. Cuba regarded her recommendations as unacceptable and did not feel obliged to comply with them. Annexed to the comments was a list of some women killed or disabled as a result of the United States policy against Cuba. In response, a note by the Secretariat stated that OHCHR maintained scrupulous objectivity regarding all Member States, including Cuba [E/CN.4/2000/151]. OHCHR had sought legal advice from the United Nations Office of Legal Affairs over the acquisition of internal correspondence.

Cuba, presenting its comments [E/CN.4/2000/165] on the note, stated that the Secretariat should be concerned about the principles of universality, objectivity and non-selectivity in the consideration of human rights issues. The legal advice being sought did not apply to Cuba, which was not subject to internal Secretariat regulations and had the right to defend itself.

The Special Rapporteur visited Haiti (14-17 June) [E/CN.4/2000/68/Add.3], where she focused on the situation of violence against women and the available response mechanisms, including the law enforcement and judicial institutions, and on the political rape committed against women during the military regime from 1991 to 1994. Most of her interlocutors characterized Haiti as an inherently and structurally violent society, in which violence against women was manifest in all its forms. The Minister for Social Affairs and Labour held that the root cause of the persisting violence against women was largely financial, and estimated that 90 per cent of Haitian women were victims of violence. Her Ministry had initiated workshops to increase women's independence. The Minister of Justice said that national legislation was discriminatory against women and that he was working with a commission on legal reform in general. The Ministry for the Status of Women had launched a radio/television campaign denouncing rape as a crime, and initiated a pilot project to provide legal assistance and representation to women victims. The Chief of Police recognized that, in addition to improved training courses on violence against women, the system for victims to lodge complaints needed revision. No special domestic violence legislation existed in Haiti and rape was not recognized as a serious crime. The Special Rapporteur expressed concern that recommendations made by the Truth and Justice Commission in the light of its factual and legal analysis of the acts of political rape had not been implemented. She was impressed by the work of NGOs and human rights organizations that had kept the issue of violence against women alive. Recommendations to Haiti included ratification of human rights instruments; taking steps to punish perpetrators and compensate victims; amending rape laws to meet international standards and introducing legislation on domestic violence and sexual harassment; strengthening the Ministry for the Status of Women; and establishing detention facilities where women would be held separately from men.

At the invitation of their Governments, the Special Rapporteur visited Pakistan and Afghanistan (1-13 September) [E/CN.4/2000/68/Add.4] to study the issue of violence against Afghan women. During the Special Rapporteur's visit, civil war and political instability continued unabated in Afghanistan (see p. 255). She found official, widespread and systematic violation of women's human rights in Taliban-controlled areas. Women were subjected to grave indignities in their physical security and the rights to education, health, freedom of movement and freedom of association. As a result of pressure from the international community and the local population, some minor changes had taken place since 1997; for example, there were primary schools for girls aged 6 to 10, and women were allowed to work in the health sector. An estimated 1.2 million Afghans were living in Pakistan, where the rise in violence against women among the refugee population, including child abuse, prostitution and trafficking, was cause for concern.

Recommendations included withholding international recognition of the Taliban until it met its international obligations regarding women's rights; halting the arms flow into Afghanistan; increasing humanitarian aid to the Afghan population and to refugees in Pakistan; ceasing non-humanitarian aid to Taliban-controlled areas; ending the human rights violations of women and girls; and involving women in the peace process. The Special Rapporteur urged UN agencies in Afghanistan and Pakistan to initiate and fund programmes to rehabilitate women. The United Nations and other international organizations should employ more female international staff and should employ educated Afghan women for their projects, where possible. The United Nations should lift its travel ban on United Kingdom and United States nationals as soon as the security situation permitted, and UN staff members had to be recognized as international civil servants.

(See p. 670 for additional information on the situation of women and girls in Afghanistan.)

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 1999/42], the Commission condemned all acts of gender-based violence against women, violence in the family and violations of the human rights of women in situations of armed conflict. Stressing the Special Rapporteur's conclusions that States had a duty to promote and protect women's human rights, the Commission called on them to ratify and implement relevant international human rights instruments; report on violence against women and measures taken to implement the 1993 Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 48/104 [YUN 1993, p. 1046], and the 1995 Beijing Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170]; condemn violence against women and not invoke custom, tradition or religious practices to avoid obligations to eliminate such violence; enact, reinforce or amend penal, civil, labour and administrative sanctions in domestic legislation to punish and redress the wrongs done to women and girls; investigate and punish perpetrators of violence against women; conduct information campaigns about the problem; establish relations with NGOs, community-based organizations, and public and private sector institutions; create, develop and fund training programmes for judicial, legal, medical, social, educational, police, correctional service, military, peacekeeping and immigration personnel; and sensitize persons to the causes and effects of violence against women and highlight men's role in its prevention. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Special Rapporteur and to ensure that her reports were brought to the attention of the Commission on the Status of Women and of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women.

On 27 September [E/1999/237/Add.1 (res. 1999/S-4/1)], the Commission asked the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, among others, to carry out a mission to East Timor, to report to the Commission in 2000 and to submit an interim report to the Assembly in 1999.

The Special Rapporteur visited East Timor from 4 to 10 November (see p. 711).

Traditional practices affecting the health of women and girls

Report of Special Rapporteur. In response to a 1998 Subcommission request [YUN 1998, p. 701], the Special Rapporteur on traditional practices affecting the health of women and the girl child, Halima Embarek Warzazi (Morocco), in her third report submitted in July [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/14], presented a brief survey of the subject and of action taken, nationally and internationally, to combat the practices. She noted the yearly increase in the numbers among the general public in countries particularly affected by the phenomenon who were taking an interest in it, welcomed the initiatives taken within the communities concerned and commended NGO efforts to combat such practices. The Special Rapporteur called on countries with large inflows of immigrants to develop and implement programmes to combat the practices, showing due respect for the cultural values of the migrant population groups. Annexed to the report was the Ouagadougou (Burkina Faso) Declaration, adopted at the regional workshop on the fight against female genital mutilation in the member countries of the West African Economic and Monetary Union (4-6 May).

Subcommission action. On 25 August [res. 1999/13], the Subcommission appealed to States to intensify public awareness of the harmful effects of female genital mutilation and to the international community to provide support to NGOs and groups working to eliminate the practice. It called on Governments to implement the 1994 Plan of Action on the practice [YUN 1994, p. 1123] and asked the Secretary-General to invite them to submit information regularly on the situation regarding the practice. The Subcommission proposed that three seminars be held, in Africa, Asia and Europe, to review progress achieved since 1985 and ways to overcome the obstacles encountered in implementing the Plan of Action.

Traffic in women and girls

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 1999/40], the Commission called on Governments of origin, transit and destination, and regional and international organizations, to implement the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women [YUN 1995, p. 1170] and the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action of the World Conference on Human Rights [YUN 1993, p. 908]. It also called on Governments to criminalize trafficking in women and girls and to condemn and penalize offenders, and encouraged them to strengthen cooperation to combat the problem and rehabilitate victims. OHCHR was encouraged to continue to include the issue of traffic in women and girls in its advisory, training and information activities. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 2000.

Mainstreaming women's rights

Reports of Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1998 Commission request [YUN 1998, p. 707], the Secretary-General, in January [E/CN.4/1999/67 & Add.1], summarized steps taken by OHCHR, human rights treaty-monitoring bodies and human rights mechanisms to integrate gender perspectives fully into the UN human rights system. He noted that progress had been made in implementing the recommendations of the 1995 expert group meeting on the development of guidelines for the integration of gender perspectives into human rights activities [YUN 1995, p. 767]. He recommended that Governments ratify the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 34/180 [YUN 1979, p. 895], and the Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted in resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 561]. Treaty bodies were urged to clarify State parties' obligations to protect and promote human rights; develop a gender analysis of each article of every treaty, cross-referenced to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, and develop gender-sensitive model questions for use in reviewing States parties' reports; ensure that attention was paid to gender dimensions in the consideration of States parties' reports; and incorporate a gender perspective in their concluding observations so that they delineated the strengths and weaknesses of each State party on women's enjoyment of the rights guaranteed by the treaty in question.

The Secretary-General presented to the Commission on the Status of Women in March [E/CN.6/1999/2] the joint work plan for the UN Division for the Advancement of Women and OHCHR for 1999. The plan emphasized continued cooperation between the Division and OHCHR on the work of treaty bodies; integrating a gender perspective in the work of the treaty bodies; support of the Special Rapporteurs on violence against women, on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, and on education; the issue of trafficking in women and girls; the development of a gender strategy for OHCHR; and national machineries for the advancement of women and national human rights institutions. The information exchange between the Division and OHCHR on planned and ongoing research and study projects would be improved. The two entities would hold a workshop as follow-up to the 1995 expert group meeting (see below).

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 1999/41], the Commission called for further strengthening of cooperation between the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on the Status of Women and between OHCHR and the Division for the Advancement of Women. It asked the human rights treaty bodies, special procedures and other human rights mechanisms of the Commission and Subcommission to take a gender perspective into account when implementing their mandates, and to include in their reports information on and qualitative analysis of women's and girls' human rights. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 2000.

Workshop. The workshop on gender integration into the human rights system (Geneva, 26-28 May), convened by OHCHR, the Division for the Advancement of Women and the United Nations Development Fund for Women, was organized as a follow-up to the 1995 expert group meeting. Sources of information available to independent experts, the particularities of different mandates, issues of normative clarity and consistency, and cooperation and coordination were identified as areas where further progress was needed.

The workshop adopted recommendations on the sources of information and methods of work of the treaty bodies and special procedures.

The girl child

On 28 April [res. 1999/80], the Commission approved the Subcommission's 1998 decision to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on traditional practices affecting the health of women and the girl child [YUN 1998, p. 701]. It called on States to institute legal reforms to ensure the enjoyment by girls of all human rights and fundamental freedoms; to eliminate discrimination against girls and the causes of son preference; and to eradicate traditional or customary practices, particularly female genital mutilation, that were harmful to or discriminatory against women and girls. States, international organizations and NGOs were asked to set goals and to develop and implement gender-sensitive strategies to address the rights and needs of children, especially the particular needs of girls in education, health and nutrition.

Women in Afghanistan

Commission action. On 23 April [res. 1999/9], the Commission, condemning the continuing grave human rights violations of women and girls in Afghanistan, particularly in Taliban-controlled areas, urged all Afghan parties, particularly the Taliban, to end those violations and to ensure: the repeal of measures that discriminated against women; women's participation in civil, cultural, economic, political and social life; respect for women's right to work; the right of women and girls to education without discrimination, and the admission of women and girls to all levels of education; respect for women's right to security of person and ensuring that those responsible for physical attacks on women were brought to justice; and respect for women's freedom of movement and equal access to facilities necessary to protect their right to physical and mental health.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to a 1998 Subcommission request [YUN 1998, p. 707], the Secretary-General, in July [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/13], reported on the situation of women and girls in Afghanistan, which, he stated was extremely serious, owing to the undeclared policy of gender discrimination. UN work to promote women's and girls' human rights had been reasonably successful. Nevertheless, opportunities for constructive engagement at the community level through community-level projects should be pursued. The Secretary-General made recommendations to all Afghan parties, particularly the Taliban.

He stated that the Special Rapporteur on violence against women should be invited to undertake a mission to Afghanistan (see p. 668).

The Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1999/14 of 28 July, condemned the grave violations of women's and girls' human rights in Afghanistan and urged States to continue to give special attention to the promotion and protection of women's human rights and to mainstream a gender perspective into all aspects of their policies and actions related to the country.

Subcommission action. On 25 August [res. 1999/14], the Subcommission, condemning all forms of discrimination and violation of the fundamental rights of women and girls in Afghanistan, considered it essential that the international community follow the situation very closely and bring maximum pressure to bear so that all restrictions imposed on women were removed.

Children

Sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In a January report [E/CN.4/1999/71], the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, Ofelia Calcetas-Santos (Philippines), focused on the sale and trafficking of children. A basic problem faced in addressing the situation, she stated, was the lack of clear definitions, which resulted in difficulty in drafting legislation and in weak enforcement mechanisms. Problems were further compounded by constantly changing recruitment strategies and varying modes of deception, coercion and force employed in the process. Most countries of destination lacked response mechanisms to extricate children from exploitative situations arising from sale or trafficking. There was no comprehensive gathering of data on the extent of sale and/or trafficking. The Special Rapporteur expressed support for actions of the Working Group on Trafficking in Women and Children [YUN 1998, p. 709] and recommended condemning those who engaged in the sale and trafficking of persons; setting international standards; monitoring hospitals, clinics and care institutions to reduce the risk of abduction, sale and trafficking from such places; establishing international and regional registers for children adopted internationally and for missing children; training for law enforcement agents, border police, customs and immigration officials and members of the judiciary in the countries affected; guaranteeing victims freedom from persecution or harassment by the authorities; prosecution of perpetrators by States; developing procedures to distinguish between victims of trafficking and illegal immigrants; sanctions to deter the sale and/or trafficking of children; victim and witness protection; disseminating information on the practice; and government identification and removal of corrupt public officials acting as accomplices.

The Special Rapporteur visited Guatemala (19-30 July) [E/CN.4/2000/73/Add.2], where the sale and/or trafficking of children out of the country mainly occurred for the purpose of intercountry adoption, but there were also reports of trafficking of children into Guatemala for prostitution. Guatemala had a very high rate of adoptions, of which 95 per cent were intercountry; it was reported that Guatemala was the fourth largest "exporter" of children in the world. According to information obtained, legal adoption appeared to be the exception rather than the rule. It appeared that international adoption involved criminal offences such as the buying and selling of children, falsifying documents, kidnapping children, and housing babies awaiting private adoption. As a result of armed conflict and the violence of the 1970s and 1980s, thousands of Guatemalan children were deprived of one or both parents, and many orphans had ended up in refugee camps or on the streets. Child prostitution was visible in Guatemala City, where police estimated that over 2,000 children were being exploited in over 600 brothels. Among the Special Rapporteur's recommendations were adopting an adoption law; carrying out adoptions only by State bodies; making education available to all children; monitoring places where street children congregated; addressing the problem of drug addiction; creating courts for minors; instituting rehabilitation programmes for child victims of sexual offences; establishing a focal point to eradicate the commercial sexual exploitation of children; and government commitment to eradicate the trafficking of children.

At the invitation of the Government of Fiji, the Special Rapporteur visited Suva and Nadi (11-16 October) [E/CN.4/2000/73/Add.3] and then travelled to Australia, where a large percentage of all tourists originated, for meetings on 18 October with government and NGO representatives. The Special Rapporteur had received allegations that Fiji was a popular destination for child sex tourists—adults who travelled to certain countries where they sexually abused children. Few incidents involving the sale of a child had been reported, other than for prostitution. The primary causes for children entering prostitution were attributed to family abuse, poverty and the availability of few recreational activities. In the absence of hard data and statistics, the Special Rapporteur cited strong indicators pointing to child exploitation, such as the escalating number of street children; drug, alcohol and substance abuse by children; sexual violence suffered by children; and a dependence on tourism. She recommended legislative reform and policies to protect children; mainstreaming child protection throughout government programmes and activities; educating the public about the Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 561]; providing children with wholesome recreational facilities; providing sex education in schools; police training; designating a national focal point for children; and enhanced co-operation between government agencies and NGOs concerned with children.

Expert meeting. UNESCO organized an expert meeting entitled "Sexual abuse of children, child pornography and paedophilia on the Internet: an international challenge" (Paris, 18-19 January) [E/CN.4/2000/73], which dealt with the promotion of the free flow of information in a manner that would not place children at greater risk of sexual exploitation; making the Internet safe for children to use; and the need for research, information-monitoring and sensitization of the public. Participants put forward a declaration and an action plan that proposed measures for UNESCO, Governments, international agencies, NGOs, industry, educators, parents, law enforcement agencies and the media. Subsequently, UNESCO set up "Innocence in danger", an international Internet education and safety programme.

Commission action. On 28 April [res. 1999/80], the Commission called on States to prevent the abduction of, the sale of, or traffic in children. States and UN bodies and agencies were called on to allocate resources for programmes to rehabilitate child victims of sale, trafficking, abduction and any form of sexual exploitation and abuse. The Commission welcomed the UNESCO expert meeting and its declaration and action plan, and encouraged follow-up in cooperation with the Special Rapporteur. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur to enable her to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1999 and a report to the Commission in 2000.

Interim report of Special Rapporteur. Pursuant to the Commission's request, the Special Rapporteur submitted, in September [A/54/411], an interim report updating developments relating to her mandate and country-specific and regional developments.

Child labour

Commission action. On 28 April [res. 1999/80], the Commission called on States to ratify the conventions of the International Labour Organization (ILO) relating to child labour; eliminate all forms of child labour contrary to accepted international standards; support an ILO convention and recommendation on the elimination of the worst forms of child labour (see p. 1388); assess and examine the nature and causes of the exploitation of child labour and develop strategies for combating such practices; promote education to prevent child labour; and strengthen international coordination and cooperation.

Children and armed conflict

Commission action. On 28 April [res. 1999/80], the Commission called on States and other parties to armed conflict to respect international humanitarian law; to end the use of child soldiers; to cooperate with the Secretary-General's Special Representative on the situation of children in armed conflict and to implement commitments they had undertaken; to provide training for armed forces and civilian police to address the needs of children in armed conflict; and to address the impact on children of the use of weapons in armed conflict. It decided to recommend that the Special Representative and relevant UN bodies develop a concerted approach on the rights, protection and welfare of children affected by armed conflict, and to increase co-operation among their respective mandates and with NGOs. It asked the Secretary-General to ensure support to the Special Representative and called on institutions and States to provide voluntary contributions to him. The Secretary-General was also asked, in cooperation with States, international organizations and relevant NGOs, to encourage regional training programmes for the armed forces relating to the protection of children and women during armed conflicts.

(For information on a draft optional protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict, see p. 579.)

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 August [meeting 4037], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1261(1999). The draft [S/1999/911] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling the statements by its President of 29 June 1998, 12 February 1999 and 8 July 1999,

Noting recent efforts to bring to an end the use of children as soldiers in violation of international law, in International Labour Organization Convention

No. 182 on the Prohibition and Immediate Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour, which prohibits forced or compulsory labour, including the forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict, and in the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, in which conscripting or enlisting children under the age of fifteen into national armed forces or using them to participate actively in hostilities is characterized as a war crime,

1. Expresses its grave concern at the harmful and widespread impact of armed conflict on children and the long-term consequences this has for durable peace, security and development;

2. Strongly condemns the targeting of children in situations of armed conflict, including killing and maiming, sexual violence, abduction and forced displacement, recruitment and use of children in armed conflict in violation of international law, and attacks on objects protected under international law, including places that usually have a significant presence of children, such as schools and hospitals, and calls on all parties concerned to put an end to such practices;

6. Supports the work of the open-ended inter-sessional working group of the Commission on Human Rights on a draft optional protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflicts, and expresses the hope that it will make further progress with a view to finalizing its work;

7. Urges all parties to armed conflicts to ensure that the protection, welfare and rights of children are taken into account during peace negotiations and throughout the process of consolidating peace in the aftermath of conflict;

8. Calls upon parties to armed conflicts to undertake feasible measures during armed conflicts to minimize the harm suffered by children, such as "days of tranquillity", to allow the delivery of basic necessary services, and further calls upon all parties to armed conflicts to promote, implement and respect such measures;

21. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Communication. At a 29 August meeting in Egilsstadir, Iceland, the Foreign Ministers of the five Nordic countries (Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden) signed the Declaration against the Use of Child Soldiers [A/54/419].

Report of Special Representative. In response to General Assembly resolution 53/128 [YUN 1998, p. 712], the Secretary-General's Special Representative, Olara A. Otunnu (Côte d'Ivoire), submitted, in October [A/54/430], his second annual report on the situation of children affected by armed conflict. He stated that currently over 20 million children were displaced by war and some 300,000 young persons under the age of 18 were being exploited as soldiers. Children were maimed and killed, uprooted from home and community, faced with survival issues, orphaned, separated from their parents, subjected to sexual abuse and exploitation, traumatized, deprived of their education and made perpetrators of violence when used as combatants.

The Special Representative described his field missions during the preceding year and initiatives for children in Rwanda (21-24 February), Burundi (24-28 February), the Sudan (2-9 March), Kosovo refugees in Albania and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM) (10-13 April), Mozambique (18-22 April), Colombia (30 May- 6 June) and Sierra Leone and Guinea (30 August-4 September).

Regarding Rwanda, the Special Representative said that among the estimated 800,000 people massacred during the genocide of 1994, 300,000 were children. Over 84 per cent of children had experienced death in their family and over 95 per cent had directly witnessed violence. An estimated 20 per cent of the child population was severely traumatized. In view of the estimated 45,000 households headed by children, 90 per cent of them girls, the Special Representative had urged the Government to adopt legislation allowing girls to inherit farms and other properties, which was passed and due to come into force. The Government announced a policy to demobilize all child soldiers; in that regard, the Special Representative urged the Government to raise the age limit for recruitment from 17 to 18. While in Rwanda, the Special Representative met with the chairman of the principal insurgency group in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, who accepted a temporary cessation of hostilities to immunize children against polio and deliver emergency food to malnourished children. The chairman accepted a proposal to adopt the age limit of 18 for recruitment, observe the Convention on the Rights of the Child and refrain from using the media and public rallies to incite ethnic and racial hatred.

During his visit to Burundi, the Government agreed to raise the minimum age for recruitment from 16 to 18 and include the protection and welfare of children in the Arusha peace process (see p. 98). The Special Representative obtained commitments from the Government of the Sudan and from the Sudan People's Liberation Movement (SPLM) regarding the use of landmines; placing the protection and welfare of children on the peace agenda; the abduction and kidnapping of children in southern Sudan; repatriation of abducted Ugandan children (see next page); access to the SPLM-held areas in the Nuba mountains; and support for a "neighbourhood initiative" that would bring together a group of eastern African countries linked by cross-border issues affecting children.

The Special Representative visited FYROM and Albania to assess the impact on children of the Kosovo crisis (see p. 333). Children, who were the most traumatized by the violence, constituted over 65 per cent of those expelled from Kosovo. The Special Representative put forward an agenda for action for the children of Kosovo, which included ensuring basic survival needs; reunification of families; trauma counselling; schooling for refugee children; support to host families of refugees; television and radio programmes devoted to the needs of refugee children; relocation to third countries; preventing recruitment and participation of children in hostilities; protection of young women against sexual exploitation; and access by the international community to children remaining in Kosovo.

The Special Representative visited Mozambique to assess the situation of children in the aftermath of the protracted armed conflict, which ended in 1992. He found that children seemed to have adjusted relatively well, although they still faced many problems. He called for such measures as including children's welfare on peace agendas and providing resources for post-conflict arrangements and demining.

In Colombia, the Special Representative assessed the impact of the conflict on children, who had suffered for over 40 years as victims, witnesses and perpetrators of violence. He was pleased that both the Government and the opposition had agreed to place the needs and protection of children as a high priority in the peace process. The Special Representative undertook a mission to Sierra Leone and Guinea to assess the conditions of children following the signing of the Lome Peace Agreement (see p. 152); to review progress since his 1998 visit [YUN 1998, p. 710]; to assess the situation of Sierra Leonean refugee children in Guinea; and to identify initiatives to ensure the protection, rights and welfare of children in the aftermath of the war. He put forward a special agenda for action for the children of Sierra Leone to ensure their rehabilitation and welfare, including a national commission for children's welfare, provisions for child protection in the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone, rehabilitation of amputees, a programme for sexually abused children, access to and release of abducted children, demobilization of child combatants, provision of basic education and medical services and a special fund for war victims.

The Special Representative made general recommendations regarding launching an era of application for international norms; promoting and strengthening local value systems; reinforcing commitments made by parties to a conflict; deepening the engagement of the Security Council; government protection of children as a feature of domestic and international policy; a voluntary code of conduct to be developed by the business community to monitor and control the flow of arms and the exploitation of natural resources in conflict areas; placing child protection and welfare on peace agendas; making child protection and welfare a central concern in post-conflict programmes; integrating child protection into UN peace operations; providing for children in periods of "imperfect peace"; providing protection and relief for internally displaced communities; signing and ratifying new international instruments; concluding work on an optional protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on involvement of children in armed conflict; protecting children from the impact of sanctions; building local capacities for protection and advocacy; and demonstrating equal concern for the plight of all children affected by armed conflict.

Abduction of children from northern Uganda

Report of Secretary-General. In January [E/CN.4/1999/69 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General summarized the situation of children abducted from northern Uganda and presented information received from the Sudan and Uganda, his Special Representative on the impact of armed conflict on children, and international and non-governmental sources. The Secretary-General stated that the armed conflict in Uganda had lasted for 12 years, with Gulu and Kitgum districts on the border with the Sudan being the worst affected. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and NGO sources stated that the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA), an armed opposition group, had abducted up to 10,000 children, mostly teenagers and more boys than girls, to carry military equipment and supplies to LRA camps in Uganda and southern Sudan. At the camps, the children were taught how to use weapons and were forced to fight. Smaller children might be given chores to do and girls as young as 12 were given to commanders as "wives". Children who disobeyed orders were beaten or killed, and other abducted children were often forced to do the killing. Uganda stated that, since the adoption of the Commission's 1998 resolution on the subject [YUN 1998, p. 712], it had continued to encourage a political solution to the conflict and it remained open to seeking bilateral negotiations with the Sudan. The Sudan stated that it would continue to honour its commitments as stipulated in the Convention on the Rights of the Child and any other obligations concerning the protection, safety and welfare of the child.

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 28 to 1, with 24 abstentions, the Commission, on 26 April [res. 1999/43], condemning all parties involved in the abduction, torture, killing, rape, enslavement and forceful recruitment of children in northern Uganda, particularly LRA, called for their unconditional release and safe return. It asked the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture (see p. 637) to assist victims and their families, and demanded that parties external to the conflict in northern Uganda supporting the continued abduction and detention of children by LRA cease all such assistance and collaboration. The Special Representative, UNICEF, UNHCR, OHCHR and other UN system entities were asked to address the situation as a matter of priority. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 2000.

Refugee and internally displaced children

On 28 April [res. 1999/80], the Commission called on States to increase protection of refugee and internally displaced children. While calling on States and other parties to armed conflicts to recognize the risks to which refugee and internally displaced children were exposed, the Commission called on Governments and UN bodies to give those situations urgent attention. States and UN bodies and agencies were asked to ensure the early identification and registration of unaccompanied refugee and internationally displaced children, to give priority to programmes for family tracing and reunification and to develop programmes for voluntary repatriation, local integration and resettlement.

Children with disabilities

The Commission, on 28 April [res. 1999/80], welcomed the establishment of a working group on children with disabilities aimed at developing a plan of action in respect of the recommendations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child (see p. 579). It called on States to adopt measures to ensure the enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms by children affected by disabilities and to develop and enforce anti-discriminatory legislation. States parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child were called on to report on the situation and the needs of children with disabilities.

Children's rights to health and education

On 28 April [res. 1999/80], the Commission called on States to adopt measures to ensure the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms by children affected by disease and malnutrition. States and UN bodies were called on to ensure training of health professionals in human rights and to pay attention to the development of sustainable health systems and social services to ensure the prevention of diseases, malnutrition, disabilities and infant and child mortality.

Regarding a child's right to education, the Commission called on States to make primary education compulsory and free of charge, and to ensure that education was directed, among other things, towards respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and to the preparation of the child for responsible life in a free society. It also called on them to make education accessible to children living in poverty, children living in remote areas, children with special education needs and children requiring special protection. States, educational institutions and the UN system were called on to develop and implement gender-sensitive strategies to address the particular needs of the girl child in education.

Juvenile justice

On 28 April [res. 1999/80], the Commission called on States to ensure compliance with the principle that depriving children of their liberty should be used only as a measure of last resort and to ensure that, if they were arrested, detained or imprisoned, children were separated from adults. It also asked them to ensure that no child detained was deprived of the access to and provision of health-care services, hygiene and environmental sanitation, education and basic instruction.

Street children

On 28 April [res. 1999/80], the Commission called on States to seek solutions to problems that caused children to work and/or live on the street; provide services for children to divert them from involvement in harmful, exploitative and abusive activity; and take urgent measures to prevent the killing of street children and combat torture and violence against them. States and the international community were called on to support the efforts of States to improve the situation of street children.

Rights of the child

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, following consideration of a broad range of issues relating to children's rights and acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/601], adopted resolution 54/149 without VOTE [agenda item 112].

The rights of the child

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 53/127 and 53/128 of 9 December 1998, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1999/80 of 28 April 1999,

Bearing in mind the Convention on the Rights of the Child, emphasizing that the provisions of the Convention and other relevant human rights instruments must constitute the standard in the promotion and protection of the rights of the child, and reaffirming that the best interest of the child shall be the primary consideration in all actions concerning children,

Reaffirming the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children and the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children in the 1990s adopted by the World Summit for Children, held in New York on 29 and 30 September 1990, notably the solemn commitment to give high priority to the rights of children, to their survival and to their protection and development, and reaffirming also the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, which, inter alia, states that national and international mechanisms and programmes for the defence and protection of children, in particular those in especially difficult circumstances, should be strengthened, including through effective measures to combat exploitation and abuse of children, such as female infanticide, harmful child labour, sale of children and organs, child prostitution and child pornography, and which reaffirms that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are universal.

Profoundly concerned that the situation of girls and boys in many parts of the world remains critical as a result of poverty, inadequate social and economic conditions in an increasingly globalized world economy, pandemics, natural disasters, armed conflict, displacement, exploitation, illiteracy, hunger, intolerance, discrimination and inadequate legal protection, and convinced that urgent and effective national and international action is called for,

Underlining the need for mainstreaming a gender perspective in all policies and programmes relating to children,

Recognizing the need for the realization of a standard of living adequate for the child's physical, mental, spiritual, moral and social development, as well as the provision of universal and equal access to primary education,

Recognizing also that partnership between Governments, international organizations and all sectors of civil society, in particular non-governmental organizations, is important to realizing the rights of the child,

Emphasizing the importance of the tenth anniversary of the Convention on the Rights of the Child for mobilizing and taking further action towards the full realization of the rights of the child,

Indigenous populations

Commission action. On 27 April [res. 1999/51], the Commission, urging the Subcommission's Working Group on Indigenous Populations to continue its review of developments and of the diverse situations of the world's indigenous people, recommended that the Economic and Social Council authorize the Group to meet for five working days prior to the Subcommission's 1999 session. It welcomed the Group's proposal to highlight specific themes of the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People (1995-2004), proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 48/163 [YUN 1993, p. 865], in its future sessions, including the theme of indigenous peoples and their relationship to land in 1999. The Commission invited the Group to continue to consider ways in which the expertise of indigenous people could contribute to its work. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Group and to transmit its reports to Governments, organizations of indigenous people, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs for comments and suggestions.

By decision 1999/241 of 27 July, the Council authorized the Working Group to meet for five days prior to the Subcommission's 1999 session and approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General.

Working Group activities. The Working Group on Indigenous Populations, at its seventeenth session (Geneva, 26-30 July) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/19], reviewed developments regarding the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous populations, giving attention to the evolution of standards concerning their rights. The Group also considered indigenous peoples and their relationship to land, together with information received thereon from indigenous organizations [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/1999/7], a permanent forum for indigenous people, indigenous peoples and health, the final report of the Special Rapporteur of the Subcommission on treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements between States and indigenous populations (see p. 686), the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People and the 2001 World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance (see p. 602).

The Group decided to highlight in 2000 the theme of indigenous children and youth. Regarding standard-setting activities, it invited OHCHR, in collaboration with ILO, WTO and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), to convene a workshop on indigenous peoples, private sector natural resource, energy and mining companies, and human rights. The Special Rapporteur on the study on treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements between States and indigenous populations was asked to submit his final report to the Commission in 2000. The Working Group recommended that the Subcommission ask OHCHR to organize, not later than June 2000, a seminar on treaties, agreements and other legal instruments between indigenous peoples and States, to discuss possible follow-up to the Special Rapporteur's study, and to explore ways of implementing the recommendations of his final report (see p. 686). The High Commissioner was encouraged to consider organizing a follow-up workshop to the UN workshop on research and higher education institutions and indigenous peoples (see next page). The Working Group proposed to the Subcommission and the Commission that a world conference on indigenous issues be held during the last year of the International Decade (2004). It recommended the appointment of a special rapporteur on indigenous issues to obtain information from Governments, indigenous peoples and NGOs relating to the promotion and protection of the human rights of indigenous peoples.

Subcommission action. On 26 August [res. 1999/20], the Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to transmit the Working Group's report on its 1999 session to the High Commissioner, indigenous organizations, Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs concerned, as well as to thematic rapporteurs, special representatives, independent experts and working groups, and make it available to the Commission in 2000. The High Commissioner was asked to encourage studies on the rights to food and adequate nutrition of indigenous peoples and indigenous peoples and poverty. The Subcommission recommended that the Group's Chairperson/Rapporteur prepare a working paper on indigenous peoples and racism and racial discrimination for consideration at the preparatory meetings for the 2001 World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance. It asked Miguel Alfonso-Martínez (Cuba) to submit in 2000 a working paper on principles and guidelines for private sector energy and mining concerns that might affect indigenous lands. The Subcommission recommended the appointment by the Commission of a special rapporteur on indigenous issues to obtain information from Governments, indigenous peoples, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs relating to indigenous peoples' human rights. The Commission was asked to request the Economic and Social Council to authorize the Group to meet for eight days prior to the Sub-commission's 2000 session. The Secretary-General was requested to prepare an annotated agenda for the Group's 2000 session.

Voluntary Fund

A June note by the secretariat [E/CN.4/Sub.2/ACA/1999/6] contained the recommendations adopted by the Board of Trustees of the UN Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations at its twelfth session (Geneva, 12-14 April). The recommendations were approved by the High Commissioner on the Secretary-General's behalf on 22 April. The Board recommended travel grants for 62 representatives of indigenous communities and organizations to allow them to attend meetings of the Working Group, for a total of some $ 192,640; travel grants to allow 14 representatives to attend the working group on the draft UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples, totalling some $56,000; and that sufficient funds be allocated for grants for up to 30 indigenous representatives to attend the second session of the working group on a permanent forum for indigenous peoples in February 2000. (See also p. 683.)

Subcommission action. On 26 August [res. 1999/20], the Subcommission asked the Working Group on Indigenous Populations to inform the Fund's Board of Trustees that the Working Group in 2000 would highlight indigenous children and youth. It appealed to Governments, organizations and individuals to contribute to the Fund.

Also on 26 August [res. 1999/19], the Subcommission recommended that the Coordinator for the Decade hold a fund-raising meeting to encourage financial contributions to the Voluntary Fund for the Decade (see next page) and the Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations.

International Decade of the World's Indigenous People

Commission action. On 27 April [res. 1999/51], the Commission asked the Working Group to continue its review of activities undertaken during the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People (1995-2004). The High Commissioner for Human Rights, in her capacity as coordinator of the Decade, was asked to update in 2000 her annual report on activities within the UN system under the Decade's programme of activities. The Commission also asked her to submit a mid-term report to the General Assembly and a preliminary report to the Economic and Social Council, and to ensure that the OHCHR indigenous people's unit was adequately staffed and resourced; it recommended that she give due regard to developing human rights training for indigenous people. The Working Group was asked to submit its views on the activities of the Decade to the High Commissioner.

UN financial and development institutions, operational programmes and specialized agencies were requested to: give increased priority and resources to improve the conditions of indigenous peoples; launch special projects to strengthen their community-level initiatives and facilitate the exchange of information and expertise among indigenous people and other relevant experts; and designate focal points or other mechanisms to coordinate with OHCHR activities relating to the Decade.

Workshop. In response to a 1997 Commission request [YUN 1997, p. 693], OHCHR and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Religion of Costa Rica supported the holding of the Workshop on Higher Education and Indigenous Peoples (San Jose, 28 June-2 July) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/1999/5]. Recommendations to indigenous peoples included encouraging the exchange of students, teachers and experience between their own higher education and research establishments, promoting models of education by setting up their own institutions and searching for a decolonized process and outcome within all teaching establishments. States should support the establishment of educational institutions run by indigenous peoples and finance them adequately, guarantee young indigenous persons the opportunity to study at all levels and in all disciplines and to work as qualified professionals in their communities, and support curricula that were relevant to indigenous peoples. The United Nations should transmit the conclusions and recommendations of the Workshop to the Special Rapporteur on the right to education and consider supporting the establishment of an international indigenous university. OHCHR should consider holding annual workshops and seminars relating to indigenous peoples and higher education and compile a list of experts and institutions for indigenous higher education and research. UNESCO should hold a meeting of indigenous peoples to draw up a code of ethics for research.

Subcommission action. On 26 August [res. 1999/19], the Subcommission recommended that the International Day of the World's Indigenous People be held on the fourth day of the Working Group's 2000 session to ensure as great a participation of indigenous peoples as possible. It also recommended that the coordinator of the Decade consider holding a fund-raising meeting to encourage financial contributions to the Voluntary Fund for the Decade and the Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations, as well as the appointment of qualified staff, including indigenous persons, to assist OHCHR in work relating to the indigenous programme. Governments, inter-governmental organizations, NGOs and individuals were urged to contribute to the Voluntary Fund for the Decade, as were indigenous organizations. The Subcommittee asked the High Commissioner to consider ways by which she might support the World Indigenous Nations Games, and recommended that she organize meetings and other activities in Africa and Asia in order to raise public awareness about indigenous issues. It also recommended that the High Commissioner organize a workshop, in collaboration with UNCTAD, ILO, WTO and other relevant organizations, on indigenous peoples, private sector natural resource, energy and mining companies and human rights. The Commission was invited to consider organizing a world conference on indigenous issues during the last year of the Decade (2004) to evaluate the Decade and consider future policies and programmes that would contribute to the reconciliation of Governments with indigenous peoples.

Report of Secretary-General. In October [A/54/487 & Add.1], the Secretary-General discussed action taken by the UN system to implement the programme of activities for the Decade, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 50/157 [YUN 1995, p. 774]. He observed that several UN organizations had specific programmes and projects that were being implemented during the Decade and that an increasing number of them were organizing consultations with indigenous peoples to help them as they developed internal guidelines on indigenous issues and outlined an overall strategy. The observance of the International Day of the World's Indigenous People on 9 August had become a well-attended and effective event in New York and Geneva. Preliminary work had been done to improve the flow of information about UN programmes to indigenous communities through the workshop on indigenous media [YUN 1998, p. 719] and its follow-up. Problems faced in implementing the Decade's activities were the limited human and financial resources available. Only a quarter of the UN organizations for which information was available had a designated focal point or unit for indigenous people or for the Decade. The Secretary-General recommended that Governments consider holding a meeting in 2000 to develop practical and realizable projects.

Report of High Commissioner. In December [E/CN.4/2000/85], the High Commissioner reviewed implementation of the programme of activities for the Decade. OHCHR had implemented the Indigenous Fellowship Programme for four candidates from 1 June to 30 November. Under the Voluntary Fund for the Decade, the Advisory Group held its fourth session in April and an inter-sessional consultation began in October to evaluate the Fellowship Programme and to select candidates for 2000. On the Group's recommendation, in the light of the few new contributions received in 1999, it had been possible to finance the Programme from within the regular OHCHR budget. The total cost of activities for 2000 amounted to some $530,000, whereas contributions available as at 23 November 1999 totalled $65,273.

The Board of Trustees of the UN Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations considered applications for travel grants from representatives of indigenous communities and organizations to enable them to participate in the second session of the open-ended inter-sessional ad hoc working group on a permanent forum (see p. 685). The Board recommended the allocation of 34 travel grants totalling $149,380. As at 25 November, contributions amounted to $71,054. The Fund needed an additional $500,000 to meet the increasing requests from indigenous populations. The coordinator of the Decade appealed for new contributions on 1 October.

The High Commissioner summarized information received from three Governments on action they had taken to implement the programme of activities for the Decade.

Voluntary Fund for International Decade

By a June note [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/1999/4], the Secretariat transmitted the report of the Advisory Group of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for the International Decade on its fourth session (Geneva, 15-16 April), including its recommendations for grants from the Fund that had been approved by the coordinator of the Decade. Contributions available to the Group as at 6 April totalled $125,377.

On 27 April [res. 1999/51], the Commission encouraged Governments to support the Decade by contributing to the Fund.

Draft declaration

Commission action. On 27 April [res. 1999/50], the Commission recommended that the working group to elaborate a draft UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples meet for 10 working days prior to the Commission's 2000 session, and asked the group to submit a progress report. It encouraged indigenous peoples' organizations to participate in the group.

By decision 1999/240 of 27 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the recommendation.

Subcommission action. On 26 August [res. 1999/19], the Subcommission recommended that, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/157 [YUN 1995, p. 772], the draft UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples be adopted as early as possible and not later than the end of the Decade. It appealed to the working group and others concerned to accelerate its preparation.

Working group activities. The working group established to consider a draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples, at its fifth session (Geneva, 18-29 October) [E/CN.4/2000/84], continued its discussion of articles 15 to 18. The articles related to the right to education, the right of indigenous peoples to establish their own media and rights established under labour law.

By decision 1999/216 of 7 May, the Economic and Social Council had approved the participation of two indigenous peoples' organizations not in consultative status with the Council to participate in the working group.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/602], adopted resolution 54/150 without vote [agenda item 113].

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Programme of activities of the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People".

Permanent forum for indigenous people

Working Group activities. In accordance with a 1998 Commission resolution [YUN 1998, p. 723], the ad hoc working group on a permanent forum for indigenous people in the UN system (Geneva, 15-19 February) [E/CN.4/1999/83] considered proposals for the establishment of such a forum in the UN system. The group discussed the forum's mandate, terms of reference, membership and participation. Participants expressed the view that the forum should be linked in some way to the Economic and Social Council, taking into account the responsibilities and views of other bodies and organs.

Commission action. On 27 April [res. 1999/52], the Commission decided to re-establish the open-ended inter-sessional ad hoc working group to meet for eight working days prior to the Commission's session in 2000, and asked the working group to submit proposals on the establishment of a permanent forum for the Commission's consideration. It asked the group's Chairman/Rapporteur to submit a working paper to Member States and other group participants containing suggestions and possible alternatives on all aspects of the matter. The Secretary-General was asked to transmit the group's report to Governments, UN organizations and bodies, specialized agencies, indigenous peoples' organizations and the Working Group on Indigenous Populations and to invite their comments.

By decision 1999/242 of 27 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision to re-establish the group and to request the group to submit proposals on the establishment of a permanent forum.

Subcommission action. On 26 August [res. 1999/19], the Subcommission recommended that the permanent forum be established as soon as possible in the course of the Decade with functions that did not duplicate those already conferred on the Working Group on Indigenous Populations. It endorsed the view expressed by indigenous participants at the Working Group's session in 1999 that the establishment of the permanent forum should not be understood as a justification for abolishing the Working Group.

Study on treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements

In June, the Special Rapporteur on the study on treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements between States and indigenous populations, Miguel Alfonso-Martinez (Cuba), submitted his final report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/20]. The Special Rapporteur stated that indigenous peoples who had entertained treaty relationships with non-indigenous settlers and their continuators strongly argued that those instruments not only continued to be valid and applicable to their current situation but were a key element for their survival as distinct peoples. Nonetheless, he had been able to ascertain a large number of serious violations of the legal obligations undertaken by State parties to those instruments. His research revealed that treaties, in particular those concluded with indigenous nations, had frequently played a negative role with respect to indigenous rights. He stated that, according to the evidence available to him, there was no acceptance by the affected indigenous parties of the obligations included in the provisions of, nor any participation by them in the implementation of, treaties between States affecting indigenous peoples as third parties. Regarding the situation of indigenous peoples who had never been formally recognized as nations by means of negotiated formal international juridical instruments with non-indigenous States, attention should be paid to the issue of whether or not they continued to retain their status as nations in the light of contemporary international law.

Recommendations included the establishment within States with a sizeable indigenous population of a new, special jurisdiction to deal exclusively with indigenous issues, and State application and construction of provisions of national legislation and international standards and instruments in the most favourable way for indigenous peoples. States should not take part in development projects that might impair the environment of indigenous lands and/or adversely affect their traditional economic activities, religious ceremonies or cultural heritage, without previously commissioning ecological studies. OHCHR should increase its staff assigned to indigenous affairs-related activities. A section within the United Nations Treaty Registry should be established to locate, compile, register, number and publish treaties concluded between indigenous peoples and States. Workshops should be convened on the establishment of an international conflict-resolution mechanism on indigenous issues, modalities for redressing the effects of the historical process of land dispossession suffered by indigenous peoples, and the implementation/observance of indigenous treaty rights. An Internet page should be created on indigenous issues and UN activities relating to indigenous interests.

Subcommission action. On 26 August [res. 1999/22], the Subcommission endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of the Special Rapporteur and requested him to submit, not later than 15 November 1999, any corrections and additions he might consider necessary to the English, French and Spanish versions of his final report, including addenda concerning organizations and individuals in Africa and Asia, as mentioned in the report of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/19]. It asked him to present to the Commission in 2000 the revised version of his final report. The High Commissioner was asked to organize, not later than June 2000, a seminar on treaties, agreements and other legal instruments between indigenous peoples and States to discuss follow-up to the study and explore ways to implement his recommendations. The Secretary-General was requested to transmit the final report to Governments, indigenous peoples and organizations, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs. The Working Group was asked to remain seized of the topic during its annual sessions for the remainder of the Decade.

Indigenous land rights

Commission action. On 27 April [dec. 1999/106], the Commission, taking note of a 1998 Subcommission resolution [YUN 1998, p. 723], decided to approve the Subcommission's request to the Secretary-General to transmit the Special Rapporteur's progress report on the working paper on indigenous people and their relationship to land [ibid.] and the preliminary working paper on the topic [YUN 1997, p. 698] to Governments, indigenous peoples, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs for their comments, data and suggestions, and to assist the Special Rapporteur.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In June, the Special Rapporteur on indigenous people and their relationship to land, Erica-Irene A. Daes (Greece), submitted a second progress report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/18] based on a working paper she had submitted in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 698] and the suggestions received from Governments, indigenous peoples, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs. She stated that the very survival of indigenous peoples was at risk owing to the continuing threats to their lands, territories and resources. States had failed to recognize the existence of indigenous land use, occupancy and ownership, and failed to accord legal status and legal rights to protect that use, occupancy or ownership. In countries with laws concerning indigenous peoples, problems arose because of discriminatory laws and legal doctrines applied to indigenous peoples, their lands and resources. In certain countries, claims processes were improper, grossly unfair or fraudulent for indigenous peoples.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that States enact legislation to recognize, demarcate and protect indigenous peoples' lands and resources. Governments should renounce discriminatory legal policies and consider impartial mechanisms to oversee and facilitate equitable resolution of indigenous land and resource claims and the implementation of land agreements. The United Nations should provide technical assistance to States and to indigenous peoples to resolve land claims and resource issues and assure the protection of indigenous peoples' cultural diversity, traditional values and ways of life. The High Commissioner should collect examples of indigenous land agreements to facilitate the promotion of technical cooperation in that area. Indigenous peoples should participate in decision-making and policy-making regarding land, resources and development.

Subcommission action. On 26 August [res. 1999/21], the Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to transmit the Special Rapporteur's second progress report to Governments, indigenous peoples, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs for their comments, data and suggestions. The Special Rapporteur was asked to submit her final working paper to the Working Group on Indigenous Populations and to the Subcommission in 2000. The Secretary-General was asked to assist her.

People with HIV/AIDS

Report of Secretary-General. In January [E/CN.4/1999/76], the Secretary-General, in response to the Commission's 1997 request [YUN 1997, p. 639], provided an overview of comments received from Governments, UN bodies, specialized agencies and NGOs on the Guidelines recommended by the experts participating in the Second International Consultation on HIV/AIDS and Human Rights [YUN 1996, p. 617], and their dissemination and implementation. The report also addressed the issue of technical cooperation for the promotion and protection of human rights in the context of HIV/AIDS.

Commission action. On 27 April [res. 1999/49], the Commission asked States to establish coordinated, participatory, transparent and accountable national policies and programmes for HIV/AIDS response and to translate national policies to district level and local action; develop and support services to educate people infected and affected by HIV/AIDS about their rights and to assist them in realizing their rights; combat discrimination and prejudice and ensure the full enjoyment of all rights by people with or affected by HIV/AIDS; ensure that codes of professional conduct, responsibility and practice respected human rights and dignity, including access to care for people with and affected by HIV/AIDS; and develop and support mechanisms to monitor and enforce HIV/AIDS-related human rights.

The Commission asked its special representatives, special rapporteurs and working groups, including the special rapporteurs on the right to education, on the promotion and protection of freedom of opinion and expression, on violence against women, its causes and consequences, and on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, to integrate the protection of HIV-related human rights within their mandates. The Secretary-General was asked to invite UN bodies and Member States to integrate HIV-related human rights into their policies, programmes and activities, and to involve NGOs and community-based organizations in all phases of development and implementation, to help ensure a system-wide approach, stressing the coordinating and catalytic role of the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) (see p. 1148). He was also asked to solicit comments from Governments, UN organs, programmes and specialized agencies, international organizations and NGOs on steps taken to promote and implement the Guidelines on HIV/AIDS and human rights, and to report in 2001.

Subcommission action. On 26 August [dec. 1999/112], the Subcommission decided to entrust Alberto Diaz Uribe (Colombia) with preparing a working paper, in consultation with UNAIDS, OHCHR, NGOs and other interested parties, on the implementation of the Guidelines, for submission in 2000.

Chapter III

Human rights violations

Alleged violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in a number of countries were examined in 1999 by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights and its Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights (formerly the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities), as well as by special rapporteurs, special representatives of the Secretary-General and independent experts appointed to examine the allegations. In September, the Commission held a special session to discuss the situation in East Timor.

General aspects

Under a procedure established by Economic and Social Council resolution 1503(XLVIII) [YUN 1970, p. 530] to deal with communications alleging denial or violation of human rights, the Working Group on Situations of the Commission on Human Rights, established by Council resolution 1990/41 [YUN 1990, p. 648], in closed meetings, considered the human rights situations in Chad, the Gambia, Nepal, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone and Yemen [E/1999/23]. The Commission discontinued consideration of the situations in the Gambia, Nepal, Saudi Arabia and Yemen and concluded consideration of the situations in Chad and Sierra Leone.

In a July note with a later addendum [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/4 & Add.1], the Secretariat, pursuant to a 1998 Subcommission request [YUN 1998, p. 726], provided information about the security situation of eight human rights defenders. In August [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/42], Indonesia presented information regarding one of those individuals, an Indonesian national who had left the country.

On 20 August [E/CN.4/2000/4 (res. 1999/3)], the Subcommission, by a secret ballot of 18 to 6, with 1 abstention, expressing deep concern at the increasing number of cases of which it had been informed concerning human rights defenders, strongly condemned the murders of 14 human rights activists and called on the Governments concerned to carry out investigations to identify the perpetrators and bring them to justice. It also called on them to ensure that the crimes committed against human rights defenders did not go unpunished, to allow and facilitate inquiry and to ensure judgement by a civil tribunal and punishment of the perpetrators, as well as compensation to victims' families. The United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights was asked to inquire about the security of 11 persons listed in an annex to the Subcommission's resolution and to report thereon in 2000. She was also asked to transmit the resolution to all States.

On the same date [res. 1999/2], the Subcommission, by a secret ballot of 15 to 7, with 3 abstentions, expressing concern at efforts to develop the concept of an alleged duty or right of certain States to carry out "humanitarian interventions", including through armed force, in situations unilaterally identified by themselves, called on States to step up measures to achieve international cooperation in search of peaceful solutions to international humanitarian problems. It also called on them to comply strictly with the basic principles and norms of general international law and standards of international human rights law and international humanitarian law, particularly those governing the main UN bodies, accountability for war crimes, the realization and protection of the rights of national or ethnic minorities, and the protection of civilian populations and installations in cases of military operations.

Africa

Burundi

Report of Special Rapporteur. A February note by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/1999/43] stated that during his last mission to Burundi [YUN 1998, p. 726], Special Rapporteur Paulo Sergio Pinheiro (Brazil) had had a serious car accident and would report only orally to the Commission in 1999.

On 1 April [E/CN.4/1999/SR.13], the Special Rapporteur noted the efforts made by authorities in Burundi to promote the peace process. The adoption of a constitutional act had made it possible to reduce hostility and restore a modicum of trust between the parties. The lifting of sanctions imposed on Burundi by nine East African countries would help alleviate the suffering of the bulk of the population. Agents of both the State and rebel groups had committed human rights violations, including massacres, summary executions, forced or involuntary disappearances, arbitrary detention, rape and other forms of sexual abuse, and mistreatment of prisoners. On 7 April [E/CN.4/1999/SR.20], the Special Rapporteur stated that, while the war continued with very serious violations of human rights and international humanitarian law, some degree of security had returned in large parts of the country. Improvements were occurring in the cost of living and in health services and education; however, a great deal remained to be done before a State based on the rule of law was established.

Commission action. On 23 April [E/1999/23 (res. 1999/10)], the Commission on Human Rights, expressing appreciation for the mediation efforts of the United Nations, the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the European Union (EU) (see PART ONE, Chapter II), noted progress in: security and public order in some areas; efforts by the Government to ensure respect for established legal safeguards for human rights and international human rights standards; and the struggle against impunity and for human rights promotion. It adjured the parties to the conflict in Burundi to abstain from action liable to hamper activities of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and other humanitarian assistance operations and to work constructively with international mediators in the search for a lasting peace.

The Commission urged all parties to the conflict to end the cycle of violence and killings and condemned the illegal sale and distribution of weapons and related materials. It asked States not to allow their territories to be used as bases for incursions or attacks against another State. The international community was urged to resume economic cooperation with Burundi and to provide humanitarian assistance needed by displaced persons and returnees in Burundi (see p. 832). The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for an additional year and asked him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1999 and a report to the Commission in 2000, giving his work a gender-specific dimension. By decision 1999/227 of 27 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision and its requests to the Special Rapporteur.

Following the resignation of the Special Rapporteur, the Commission appointed, in August, Marie-Therese Keita-Bocoum (Côte d'Ivoire).

Report of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur's first report, based on her visit to Burundi (8-22 October), covered the period from 15 August to 15 November [E/CN.4/2000/34].

The Special Rapporteur presented a brief analysis of the impact of history on the development of the conflict in Burundi, and of the current political and economic and social conditions, and examined the country's human rights situation. On the whole, the human rights situation had deteriorated, as shown by the increase in violations of the right to life and physical integrity, allegedly committed by State agents, armed rebel groups and unidentified gangs. The displacement of the population to regroupment camps not only took place under coercion, but also had led to gross violations of the rights to life, liberty and security of person, freedom of movement and residence, property ownership, housing, work and the free choice of employment, health, education, adequate food and a decent living. The civil war, large-scale displacements, the regroupment of persons and increasing poverty had led to the violation of children's rights, as provided for in the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 560]. Poverty had also affected the human rights situation.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the parties to the conflict end attacks on civilians and respect the lives of civilians and representatives of humanitarian organizations; participate fully in negotiations to reach a ceasefire; and resolve conflicts without resort to weapons and support the new facilitator of the peace negotiations in Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania. The Special Rapporteur launched an appeal to guarantee the safety and free access of representatives of humanitarian and human rights organizations to those in need. The authorities in Burundi were asked to suspend the policy of population displacement and guarantee human rights; combat poverty and insecurity; combat regional disparities and the exploitation of ethnic differences; disseminate and implement the new Code of Criminal Procedure; set up a police force separate from the armed forces; ensure the advancement and fulfilment of women; support efforts by civil society to improve the status of women; combat exclusion and impunity; and guarantee the safety of convoys and the persons delivering and distributing assistance in emergency situations. The international community was asked to assist the peace process in Arusha; provide access to microcredit and development assistance; take measures to combat impunity and irregularities in the judiciary; support human rights education and promotion; support women's programmes; increase resources to maintain security for emergency humanitarian assistance; step up efforts against the illicit traffic in weapons and munitions and ensure that refugee camps were kept strictly civilian; and bring about an end to human rights violations. The Special Rapporteur advocated the holding of an international conference on peace and security in the Great Lakes region.

Burundi suggested corrections to sections of the Special Rapporteur's report relating to the impact of history on the situation in the country [E/CN.A/ 2000/141].

Congo

Subcommission action. By a secret ballot of 20 to 3, with 2 abstentions, the Subcommission, on 20 August [res. 1999/1], called on the Government of the Republic of the Congo to ensure respect for human rights in the country and to ratify the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 39/46 [YUN 1984, p. 813], the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court [YUN 1998, p. 1209] and the draft optional protocol to the African Charter of Human and People's Rights, establishing the African Court on Human and People's Rights. The African Charter was adopted by OAU in 1981 [YUN 1981, p. 942]. The Subcommission asked all parties to the conflict to respect their obligations under international humanitarian law. It asked the Secretary-General to report on the situation of human rights in the Congo in 2000 and recommended that the Commission consider the matter in 2000.

Report of Secretary-General. In December [E/CN.4/2000/30], the Secretary-General summarized developments in the Congo during the period 1997-1999, mainly the wars of 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 112] and 1998, and described improvements in security conditions and the recent national reconciliation process. Currently, some 580,000 people were internally displaced; according to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), nearly 24,000 Congolese were still refugees in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and about 20,000 in Gabon. The Congo was host to refugees from the Cabinda enclave (21,000) and Rwanda (7,000) (see PART THREE, Chapter XII, for information on refugees). The main human rights violations, as communicated to the Secretary-General by non-governmental organizations (NGOs), were summary or extrajudicial executions; arbitrary arrest and detention; torture and rape; forced or involuntary disappearances; and violations of the freedom of expression, opinion and assembly.

The sources emphasized that most violations were allegedly committed for political or ethnic reasons by all parties to the conflict, and that those responsible had never been prosecuted or brought to justice following an inquiry ordered by the authorities.

On 3 September, the Special Rapporteur sent a communication to the Government regarding information received concerning 7 allegations of rape and 15 of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, said to have taken place between October 1997 and November 1998. On 12 November, the Government replied that it had no knowledge of any such events.

The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) had prepared a programme for the Congo which included training courses for NGOs on human rights; human rights teaching programmes at various school levels; and the provision of human rights documents to government authorities and NGOs. OHCHR wished to recruit a national human rights coordinator to implement the programme and collect information on human rights violations.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Communication. On 6 April [E/CN.4/1999/148], the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) submitted an overview of how human rights were promoted and protected in the country, and its response to the report of the Special Rapporteur in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 729].

Commission action. On 27 April [res. 1999/56], the Commission welcomed the commitment of the DRC to a process of democratization; the Government's intention to hold a national debate as a precursor to elections; the recognition by the authorities that massacres were committed against refugees and internally displaced persons in 1996 and 1997; the appointment of a Minister for Human Rights; the release of prisoners whose arrest was irregular or politically motivated, and improvements in the prison system; the Government's decision to establish a national commission of inquiry to investigate alleged human rights violations and breaches of international humanitarian law between 1996 and 1997; the Government's intention to ratify Additional Protocol II to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of war victims, adopted in 1977 [YUN 1977, p. 706]; and the setting up of human rights education programmes for the military and the police. It expressed concern at the human rights situation, particularly in the east of the country, and at the continuing violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms; at the large numbers of refugees and displaced persons in the DRC who disappeared between 1994 and 1997; and at arms trafficking in the region. The Commission welcomed the Secretary-General's appointment of his Special Envoy for the DRC peace process. It called on the DRC to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms; reform and restore the judiciary; implement its commitment to democratization and the rule of law; hold free and fair elections; remove restrictions on political parties; ensure respect for freedom of opinion and expression; and promote human rights awareness.

The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for an additional year and asked him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1999, to report to the Commission in 2000 and to maintain a gender perspective in seeking and analysing information. It also decided to ask the Special Rapporteurs on the situation of human rights in the DRC and on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and a member of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances to carry out, immediately after the signing of a ceasefire agreement or as soon as security considerations permitted, and, where appropriate, in cooperation with the National Commission of Inquiry, an investigation of alleged human rights violations and breaches of international humanitarian law in the DRC between 1996 and 1997, and a joint mission to investigate massacres carried out in the DRC, with a view to bringing to justice those responsible, and to report to the Assembly in 1999 and to the Commission in 2000. The Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decisions and requests to the Special Rapporteurs and the Working Group member by decision 1999/244 of 27 July. The Commission also asked the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the DRC and the joint mission, and asked the High Commissioner to provide technical expertise to the mission.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In September [A/54/361], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of Special Rapporteur Roberto Garreton (Chile), based on his visits to the DRC (16-23 February and 27 August-6 September).

A ceasefire of 10 July, agreed upon in Lusaka, Zambia, by representatives of the DRC, the Congo, Namibia, Rwanda, Uganda, Zimbabwe and Angola, was not signed by the rebel groups, Rassemblement congolais pour la démocratie (RCD) and the Mouvement de libération du Congo (MLC). The latter signed on 1 August and, on 31 August, RCD had it signed by 50 of its founding members, thereby revealing deep-seated internal differences.

The Special Rapporteur had transmitted to the Government two communications containing allegations of human rights violations of 2,375 individuals. He also sent 19 urgent actions on cases regarding 218 individuals. Government replies for the most part consisted of denials of the allegations and of accusations against the other side in the war.

In Government-controlled territory, the Special Rapporteur examined violations of the rights to life, physical and psychological integrity, security of person, liberty of person, due process, freedom of expression and opinion, a nationality, freedom of association, freedom of assembly, as well as economic, social and cultural rights, women's rights and children's rights. In territory controlled by RCD and MLC, similar violations had occurred. The principal violations of international humanitarian law by the Government were attacks on civilians in five locations and murders in Moba, where some 300 civilians were killed. RCD forces were responsible for attacks on civilians, property destruction, deportations, mutilation, and rape of women as a means of warfare.

The Special Rapporteur called for support to the work of the Ministry of Human Rights; restoration of human rights; support for human rights advocates and their organizations; respect for the human right to justice; abolition of the death penalty; an end to discretionary authority, impunity and illegal acts of the so-called security forces; observation of the peace agreements; trial and sentencing for war crimes and crimes against humanity; suspension of military assistance to all parties to the conflict; and an end to the recruitment of children. RCD had to stop viewing any dissident as a person guilty of acts of genocide or as an instigator of ethnic hatred.

In a later report describing human rights violations [E/CN.4/2000/42], the Special Rapporteur stated that the Government continued to apply the death penalty; the Military Court did not guarantee the rights of the accused; and the independent press continued to be attacked. The systematic use of torture, enforced disappearances and summary executions were also among the most serious violations. On the positive side, the Minister of Human Rights had tried to make some improvements and a solution was found to the problem of persons at risk—those of Tutsi appearance who needed protection to prevent reprisals by the population. In RCD-controlled territory, there reigned a climate of terror, humiliation and rejection of those in power. The right to life was constantly being violated, as were all the public liberties, such as the right to freedom of association, assembly, expression and opinion. There were no independent news media, and the few that did exist were banned. Any dissent or opposition was presented as attempted genocide. The deportation of prisoners to Rwanda and Uganda was a serious matter. One positive aspect was that the death penalty, which was provided for by law, was not being applied. The situation of human rights advocates was serious. There was no form of democracy under the Government as all powers were vested in the President, Laurent Desire Kabila, nor was there any right to democracy under RCD. The Special Rapporteur reiterated his previous recommendations.

Joint mission. A December note issued by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/2000/43] stated that, although a ceasefire agreement had been signed on 10 July, the insecurity prevailing in the DRC, and in the province of South Kivu in particular, had prevented the deployment of the joint mission of inquiry, as called for by the Commission in resolution 1999/56.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/54/605/Add.3], adopted resolution 54/179 by recorded vote (91-10-54) [agenda item 116 (c)].

Equatorial Guinea

Commission action. On 23 April [res. 1999/19], the Commission encouraged the Government of Equatorial Guinea and OHCHR, in conjunction and with the support of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), to develop a human rights technical assistance programme, and called on the international community to contribute to the fund for that purpose. It decided to appoint a special representative for one year and asked him to monitor the human rights situation and to report in 2000, keeping in mind a gender perspective in the reporting process. The Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision and the requests to the Special Representative by decision 1999/233 of 27 July. The Commission also asked the Special Representative to make recommendations on the implementation of the technical assistance programme, emphasizing human rights, the administration of justice and the legislative reforms and the strengthening of the capacity of NGOs, as well as other groups of civil society.

In August, the Commission appointed Gustavo Gallon (Colombia) as Special Representative.

Report of Special Representative. Special Representative Gallon submitted his first report based on his visit to the country (7-21 November) [E/CN.4/2000/40].

The Special Representative stated that the human rights situation in Equatorial Guinea was grave. There was no sustained rule of law; rather, power was concentrated in the hands of the executive, with the support of a government party that controlled employment in Government and private enterprise. The executive was also reinforced by the dominance of the military, which exercised jurisdiction over civilians. Violations of the rights to equality were seen in various forms of daily harassment against the Bubi ethnic group by the Fang majority, which held power. Press activity was almost non-existent and Government-controlled radio and television operated more as propaganda tools than as information carriers. During his visits to several prisons, the Special Representative observed ill-treatment of prisoners and deplorable sanitary conditions. Other violations of civil and political rights related to freedom of movement and the right to due process. The Special Representative observed that the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights was seriously limited to a minority of the population. The health-care system was inadequate, restrictions affected the right to work, no recognized trade union existed and only 1.8 per cent of the country's income was earmarked for education. The growing number of female dropouts from school was caused by the persistence of women's inferior role and discrimination within the family. There were high rates of infant mortality and child labour. Nevertheless, account should be taken of the progress made through accession to some international human rights conventions and acceptance, since 1992, of the legal existence of political parties other than the governing party.

Regarding human rights technical assistance, the Special Representative stated that in the last 20 years successive rapporteurs and experts had agreed on technical assistance activities to strengthen the capacity of the national authorities and the local population to protect human rights and prevent violations. Some progress had been achieved, but most of the repeated recommendations in the last 20 years had yet to be acted upon, including the suggestion that an OHCHR staff member be appointed to provide human rights technical assistance while living in Equatorial Guinea. The Special Representative outlined a cooperation strategy that would include immediate implementation of recommendations not requiring technical assistance; proof of the Government's willingness to implement the remaining recommendations; and preparation of a detailed programme of activities, defining how and when each recommendation would be put into practice. The resident official should have the capacity to provide technical assistance to organizations from civil society and the Commission and its Special Representative with technical support in monitoring the human rights situation; the strategy should be jointly coordinated by the Special Representative and the High Commissioner. Recommendations applied to civil rights, freedom of opinion, the principle of legality, the right to justice, equality of women, political rights and economic, social and cultural rights, many of which could be carried out directly by the Government without assistance. The Special Representative recommended that the Commission continue to monitor the human rights situation, concentrating on the implementation of the recommendations repeatedly made to the country.

Nigeria

On 23 April [res. 1999/11], the Commission, commending the Government of Nigeria for measures it had taken to promote, protect and enhance the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms, decided to conclude consideration of the situation of human rights in Nigeria. It asked OHCHR to respond positively to any request by the Government for human rights technical assistance and advisory services.

Rwanda

Report of Special Representative. Special Representative Michel Moussalli (Switzerland) visited Rwanda (11-23 January) [E/CN.4/1999/33], where he noted with satisfaction the adoption of a bill by the National Assembly establishing the National Human Rights Commission (NHRC), as provided for in the Arusha Accords [YUN 1993, p. 284] and as enshrined in the Basic Law of Rwanda. It was expected to enter into force in February. The security situation in Rwanda was complex and intertwined with the situation in the DRC, and was most fragile in the north-west along the border. Observers reported that the level of violence and human rights violations had abated since mid-1998, partly due to some punitive and preventive measures of the Government. At collective resettlement camps, the Government offered material assistance and protection from raiding forces. The Government estimated that at the end of 1998, the total number of persons in detention was just under 125,000 and the number of persons in communal detention centres was around 36,000. Those figures reflected a slight decrease in the total detainee population over the previous year. Conditions of detention remained deplorable. General progress in all areas of the justice sector had been recorded throughout 1998, with genocide and other trials progressing in all prefectures despite continued problems of insufficient resources for legal assistance, training and functioning of the courts. Regarding economic, social and cultural rights, the situation of women was of particular concern. Many were sexually abused and injured, or even killed. Many survivors contracted AIDS from rape; others lost their husbands and were left having to support many children. Children had also suffered immeasurably from the genocide.

In his conclusions and recommendations, the Special Representative regretted that it was not possible for an understanding to be reached in 1998 between the Government and OHCHR with respect to the mandate of the United Nations Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda, which was closed in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 737]. He urged the long-term provision of technical and material assistance to promote human rights; improvement in conditions in detention centres; strengthening the judicial system; alleviating the plight of survivors of the genocide; and provision of assistance by the international community in the area of housing. The international community was urged to promote a peaceful resolution of the conflict in the DRC, and to adopt a comprehensive approach to providing financial and technical assistance to Rwanda.

Commission action. On 23 April [res. 1999/20], the Commission, welcoming the efforts of the Government of Rwanda to build a State based on the rule of law and the guarantee of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, strongly condemned the crime of genocide and the crimes against humanity that were committed in Rwanda in 1994 and expressed concern at continued violations of human rights and international humanitarian law. Noting the efforts that the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR) (see p. 1221) had made to improve its performance, the Commission expressed concern over the effectiveness of the Tribunal's witness protection programme and called for improvements in that regard. It asked States to cooperate with ICTR.

The Commission decided to extend the Special Representative's mandate for a further year and asked him to report to the General Assembly in 1999 and to the Commission in 2000. The High Commissioner was asked to assist him. The Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision and approved its requests to the Special Representative and the High Commissioner by decision 1999/234 of 27 July. The Commission called for close regular consultation between the Special Representative, the Government and NHRC and other national institutions regarding the functions of NHRC.

Reports of Special Representative. In September [A/54/359], the Special Representative updated information on the human rights situation in Rwanda based on further missions he had taken to the country in April, June and August. He observed that Rwanda was stepping out of the shadow of genocide, as the Rwandan people were taking steps to ensure that it no longer impeded the development of their nation. Positive developments over the past year included: successful local elections; the establishment of two national commissions (on human rights and on unity and reconciliation); the first steps towards drafting a new constitution; a plan to professionalize the civilian police force; a revision of the press law; the adoption of a law allowing women to inherit property; a growing commitment to good governance; and a proposal to use traditional justice (gacaca) to speed up genocide trials. In spite of the progress, there was not yet a culture of human rights in Rwanda. Areas needing further improvement included prison administration and detention centre and prison conditions, freedom of movement, and freedom of opinion and expression. Efforts to eradicate ethnic tension needed to be increased. In addition, a lasting regional solution was needed to conflicts in the Great Lakes area. The Special Representative recommended improved and better coordinated human rights assistance from donors; assistance by the UN system; complementarity of the efforts of NHRC and the National Commission for Unity and Reconciliation; and assistance by the international community to the newly established Commissions.

In a later report [E/CN.4/2000/41], the Special Representative pointed out that as fighting diminished in the eastern part of the DRC in 1999, the number of incursions of armed infiltrators into north-west Rwanda diminished, which in turn led to a decline in alleged abuses by the Rwandan armed forces. The humanitarian emergency was receding as a result of good harvests and improved security. Bilateral donors discussed partnership rather than aid. In 1999, 32,087 Rwandans returned voluntarily from the DRC, and the number of Rwandans in exile had fallen from 3 million to less than 100,000. The reintegration of refugees inside the country had improved steadily. The National Assembly (parliament) had emerged as an independent body, and NHRC, which became operational in May, developed a work plan up to 2002. Although some 120,000 detainees were still crowded into jails five years into the transition (many without being charged), a new law on prisons had been drafted, and new prison regulations were scheduled for adoption. Regarding the genocide trials, by 30 November, 2,406 persons had been tried before a special genocide court, of the 121,500 in detention. Of those, 14.4 per cent (348) were sentenced to death, 30.3 per cent to life imprisonment, 34 per cent to jail terms between 1 and 20 years, and 19 per cent were acquitted. The Special Representative stated that efforts to improve justice and speed up trials would enter a new phase with the introduction of gacaca for genocide suspects. Trials would take place in public before the entire community. The most widely voiced concerns were that due legal process would be compromised and the rights of the defendants ignored, and that gacaca could be inconsistent with international standards. The Special Representative applauded the UNDP initiative to establish a Justice and Human Rights Unit in Kigali, but expressed concern that the unit remained severely underfunded and understaffed. He called for efforts in the area of economic and social rights, including protection for children from sexual violence and HIV/AIDS; land and settlement reform; and education. The Special Representative made a series of recommendations regarding prison conditions, the administration of justice, NGOs, the media, NHRC and bilateral donors. He appealed to all countries in the region, OAU and the United Nations to ensure that a lasting and comprehensive peace was agreed upon by all the affected countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.3], adopted resolution 54/188 without vote [agenda item 116 (c)].

Situation of human rights in Rwanda

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the International Bill of Human Rights, the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide and other applicable human rights and humanitarian law standards,

Recalling its resolution 53/156 of 9 December 1998 and previous relevant resolutions, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1999/20 of 23 April 1999,

Reaffirming that the promotion and protection of human rights are necessary for sustaining the process of national reconstruction and reconciliation in Rwanda,

Welcoming the commitment of the Government of Rwanda to promote and protect respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and to eliminate impunity, the progress made towards the development of a State governed on the basis of the rule of law and the efforts undertaken to consolidate peace and stability and promote unity and reconciliation,

Sierra Leone

Commission action. On 6 April [res. 1999/1], the Commission, appealing to all factions and forces in Sierra Leone to respect human rights and abide by applicable international humanitarian law, reminded them that hostage-taking, wilful killing and torture or inhuman treatment of persons taking no active part in the hostilities constituted grave breaches of international humanitarian law, and that all countries were obligated to bring persons alleged to have committed such grave breaches before their own courts. It decided to discontinue consideration of the human rights situation in Sierra Leone in closed meetings under Economic and Social Council resolution 1503(XLVIII) [YUN 1970, p. 530] and to consider the matter under the public procedure provided for by the Commission in 1967 [YUN 1967, p. 508] and by the Council in resolution 1235(XLII) [ibid., p. 512]. The High Commissioner was asked to apprise the Commission in 2000 of the reports of the Secretary-General about violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in Sierra Leone, including, to the extent possible, references contained in reports submitted to the Commission.

OHCHR activities. OHCHR, in cooperation with the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (see PART ONE, Chapter II) and the Sierra Leone authorities, was working to create a truth and reconciliation commission, a renewed National Human Rights Commission and a commission of inquiry [E/CN.4/2000/31]. OHCHR's work was inspired by the Human Rights Manifesto, a moral and political commitment signed by the High Commissioner, the Secretary-General's Special Representative in Sierra Leone, the President of the country and others during the High Commissioner's visit in June.

Sudan

Commission action. On 23 April [res. 1999/15], the Commission expressed deep concern at continued serious violations of human rights, fundamental freedoms and humanitarian law in the Sudan by all parties to the conflict (see PART ONE, Chapter II). It called on the Government to comply with applicable international human rights instruments; ensure the rule of law; bring its legislation into accord with the instruments to which the Sudan was a party; end acts of torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment and ensure that all accused persons were held in ordinary custody and received fair trials; investigate reports of the abduction of women and children; cease the indiscriminate aerial bombardment of civilian and humanitarian targets; ensure respect for freedom of opinion, expression, thought, conscience and religion, as well as freedom of association; and comply with the commitment made to the Secretary-General's Special Representative for children and armed conflict not to recruit children under the age of 18 as soldiers (see p. 674). Parties to the conflict were urged to respect and protect human rights, fundamental freedoms and international humanitarian law; stop the use of weapons against civilians; grant safe and unhindered access to international agencies and humanitarian organizations; cooperate with the peace efforts of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development; and not use children under the age of 18 as soldiers and refrain from forced conscription.

The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for an additional year and asked him to report to the General Assembly in 1999 and to the Commission in 2000, keeping a gender perspective in mind in the reporting process; the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision and approved its request to the Special Rapporteur by decision 1999/230 of 27 July. The Commission also asked the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur. OHCHR was asked to urgently consider requests for assistance by the Government, including with a view to establishing a permanent representation of the High Commissioner in Khartoum.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. Special Rapporteur Leonardo Franco (Argentina) visited the Sudan (13-24 February) [FyCN.4/i999/38/Add.1], where serious human rights violations continued to be committed, including summary executions, extrajudicial killings, arbitrary arrests, detention without due process of law, displacement of persons, systematic torture, and restriction or denial of the freedoms of religion, expression, association and peaceful assembly. In particular, his mission addressed human rights violations relating to the adoption in April 1998 of a new Constitution and the transition to democracy, respect for human rights and humanitarian law in the conflict, women's rights and the rights of the child, and other reported human rights violations, including arbitrary detention, the military trial of 27 southerners accused of participating in the Khartoum bombings, torture and extrajudicial killings, and the persecution of non-Muslims.

The Special Rapporteur noted that the new Constitution was not a product of a political consensus among the main political parties and, moreover, the procedure leading to its adoption was highly questionable. He regretted that the period following the Constitution's adoption was overshadowed by the violation of political freedoms and the perpetration of human rights abuses, such as the harassment or arbitrary arrest of human rights advocates and political, religious and student leaders; torture was inflicted on victims and arrests were conducted without due process of law. The Security Act, as well as other emergency laws, was being revised in conformity with the new Constitution, which the Special Rapporteur hoped would bring the executive and the various security organs under jurisdictional control. Violations of human rights and humanitarian law by the parties to the conflict were evident in forced displacement, killings, rape and abduction of women and children, and slavery. However, the Special Rapporteur was encouraged by developments promoting respect for human rights and humanitarian law during the conflict, the construction of peace, the improvement of humanitarian assistance, post-conflict national development and confidence-building. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government adopt the legal, political and administrative measures required to ensure the transition from an emergency regime to a political system based on the rule of law. All parties had to ensure that civilians were not targeted by military operations. He called for the punishment of transgressors for raids, burning and looting and physical attacks on civilians, as well as a ban on: reprisal against the unarmed population in response to military attacks; forced population displacement and arbitrary or discriminatory restriction of freedom of movement; recruiting child soldiers; hampering access to civilians by humanitarian aid workers and aid delivery; and the use of anti-personnel mines. The Government should ensure that raids by Murahaleen or other militia against civilians were prohibited and the perpetrators punished, and should cease aerial bombing of civilians and humanitarian sites. The Special Rapporteur outlined measures for the Government to end slavery-like practices and to prevent torture. He recommended that the Sudan consider accepting a UN human rights field presence.

In October [A/54/467], the Special Rapporteur reported a number of positive measures taken by the Government, including authorization for the United Nations to undertake a needs assessment mission to the Nuba Mountains; the creation of the Committee for the Eradication of Abduction of Women and Children; and the fielding of an OHCHR needs assessment mission to determine priority areas for human rights assistance. The 17-year conflict, however, had been aggravated during 1999 by developments in the oil zones. The economic, political and strategic implications of the oil zones had exacerbated the conflict, resulting in further deterioration of the human rights situation. Furthermore, government strategies for the control of oil production were causing tribal fragmentation. There were reports that government forces had attacked and burned villages to the ground in the oil-producing areas, causing civilian displacement. Other abuses against civilians, mostly by Matiep forces but with the government army allegedly playing a role, included abduction of young boys to use as soldiers, abduction of girls and women for sexual abuse, and a number of summary executions of women, never recorded prior to 1999. The Special Rapporteur concluded that the Government still needed to adopt the legal, political and administrative measures required to ensure the transition from an emergency regime to a political system based on the rule of law.

(For information on the visit to the Sudan by the Special Rapporteur on the right to freedom of opinion and expression, and by the Secretary-General's Special Representative on children and armed conflict regarding the abduction and kidnapping of children in southern Sudan, see pp. 640 and 674. For political details, see PART ONE, Chapter II.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.3], adopted resolution 54/182 by recorded vote (89-30-39) [agenda item 116 (c)].

Condemning the murder of four Sudanese relief workers in April 1999 while in the custody of the Sudanese People's Liberation Army,

Togo

A note by the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/8] stated that the Subcommission had before it a report issued on 5 May by Amnesty International on the human rights situation in Togo, based on a fact-finding mission conducted in November and December 1998. It told of torture and extrajudicial execution of several hundred victims in Togo in 1998 and of enforced disappearances, arrests, arbitrary detention, ill-treatment and deaths in detention caused by the poor conditions in which detainees were kept. The Subcommission Chairman, in a statement on 20 August, took note of the controversy as to whether, or the extent to which, those allegations were true, and welcomed Togo's proposal to agree to an international commission of inquiry, to be set up by the UN and OAU Secretaries-General.

Colombia

Report of High Commissioner. A report of the High Commissioner described the activities of OHCHR in Colombia in 1999 [E/CN.4/2000/11].

During the year, 1,376 complaints were received, 211 communications were sent to the authorities and many direct representations were made. OHCHR members visited various parts of the country, making 56 on-site visits outside of Bogota. The Office increased its legal advisory activities and attended many working meetings of committees and other bodies in order to promote the investigation of violations of human rights and international humanitarian law and to identify action to protect such rights. Regarding advisory and technical assistance activities, OHCHR intensified talks with Colombian institutions responsible for human rights promotion and protection, as well as with NGOs and academic institutions.

Serious violations of civil and political rights occurred in 1999 throughout the territory, including violations of the right to life, personal integrity, liberty and security of person, freedom of movement and residence, and due process. The main concerns of OHCHR were the seriousness of internal displacement, the problem of impunity and the weakening of government agencies. The armed conflict worsened and had serious consequences for civilians as the paramilitary groups intensified their activities by killing civilians and the guerrillas increased hostage-taking, at times on a large scale. The Government had not prioritized human rights, and none of the parties to the hostilities had made any obvious effort to respect minimum humanitarian standards that would alleviate the suffering of civilians. The State bore responsibility for the complexity of the paramilitary problem, and had taken insufficient action on displacement. The problem of impunity persisted, and no changes had been made in the context of economic, social and cultural rights that would encourage their equitable exercise. The High Commissioner urged parties to the armed conflict to respect international humanitarian law, and encouraged government efforts to achieve a negotiated solution to the armed conflict. Colombia was urged to combat paramilitarism, to respond adequately to the serious problem of displacement and to assume responsibility for protecting the life and integrity of prosecutors, judges, judicial police officials, victims and witnesses, without violating the fundamental rights of the accused. Other recommendations dealt with impunity, the new Military Penal Code, the right of habeas corpus, reform of the prison system and improved conditions of detention, bringing domestic legislation into line with the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 560], the adoption of domestic legislation on racial discrimination, and freedom of association and protection of the right to organize.

Communications. Colombia submitted its comments [E/CN.4/2000/117] on the High Commissioner's report. Regarding the ongoing peace process, Colombia claimed that the report understated the high degree of political will that had been mobilized and sustained, with a view to building a climate of confidence between the parties. There was also no mention of the countrywide popular movement calling for peace and an end to the crimes committed by irregular armed groups. Other comments referred to the lack of information on the impact of drug trafficking and the illicit drug economy, the report's description of self-defence groups and its appraisal of the legal status of such groups.

In April [E/CN.4/1999/141], Colombia had submitted comments on the High Commissioner's report describing activities in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 739].

Commission action. On 27 April [E/1999/23], the Chairperson, on behalf of the Commission, welcomed the renewal of the agreement between the Government of Colombia and the High Commissioner to extend the mandate of the permanent office in Bogota until 30 April 2000. The Commission acknowledged the steps taken by the Government for the application of humanitarian standards in the conflict. It deplored the fact that its recommendations, as well as those made by thematic mechanisms and other UN bodies, had not been fully implemented. It also deplored the prolonged occurrence of serious and massive violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law, condemned the high rates of judicial impunity in cases of serious crime and expressed profound concern over the attacks against human rights defenders. The High Commissioner was asked to report in 2000 on OHCHR activities in Colombia.

(See pp. 646 and 675 for information regarding the visit to Colombia of the Secretary-General's representative on internally displaced persons and of the Secretary-General's Special Representative on children and armed conflict.)

Cuba

Commission action. On 23 April [res. 1999/8], by a roll-call vote of 21 to 20, with 12 abstentions, the Commission called on Cuba to ensure respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, and to guarantee the rule of law through democratic institutions and the independence of the judicial system. It expressed concern about the repression of political opposition members and the detention of dissidents, most recently the four members of the Internal Dissidence Working Group (see communication below), and called on the Government to release those imprisoned for peacefully expressing their political, religious and social views and for exercising their rights to full and equal participation in public affairs. Cuba was called on to consider acceding to human rights instruments to which it was not a party and to cooperate with other mechanisms of the Commission. The Commission welcomed steps that the Government had taken to open society for religious institutions and expected that citizens would be granted the right to freedom of religion and belief. It recommended that the Government take advantage of the technical cooperation programmes under OHCHR auspices (see pp. 582-590).

Communication. On 19 March [A/53/872], the EU regretted that its repeated appeals for the unconditional release of the four members of the Internal Dissidence Working Group had been ignored. The EU stated that the group had exercised the freedom of expression and could not accept that citizens who did so were criminalized by State authorities. It expressed concern about the events surrounding the trial of the four and disappointment that neither diplomats nor international media representatives were allowed to attend the trial.

(See pp. 623 and 667 for information on the visit to Cuba by the Special Rapporteur to examine the question of the use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination and by the Special Rapporteur on violence against women.)

Mexico

On 25 August [E/CN.4/2000/2], the Subcommission welcomed positive developments in Mexico in the past year, including the ratification of the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of their Families, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 45/158 [YUN 1990, p. 594], as well as ratification of the Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment and Eradication of Violence against Women and the establishment of the National Programme for the Defence and Promotion of Human Rights. The Subcommission noted that on 6 June the Federal Congress approved a constitutional amendment providing for the complete autonomy of the National Commission of Human Rights, but expressed concern over the persistent allegations of torture, extrajudicial executions (see p. 633) and disappearances, as well as violations perpetrated against indigenous communities. The Government was asked to implement urgently the National Programme for the Defence and Promotion of Human Rights, as well as to investigate human rights violations and to take steps to bring the perpetrators to justice.

Asia and the Pacific

Afghanistan

Report of Special Rapporteur. Special Rapporteur Kamal Hossain (Bangladesh) visited Afghanistan (16-18 March) [E/CN.4/1999/40] to examine the human rights situation in the country. He also visited Pakistan on 15, 16 and 18-20 March.

The Special Rapporteur noted the continuation of the armed conflict (see p. 255). A daunting challenge was presented by the economic and social factors and the political realities on the ground. The economic and social factors included widespread loss of life, destruction of social and economic infrastructure, environmental degradation, food insecurity and malnutrition, high unemployment and poverty, and further increases in illicit drug production (see p. 1174). The political context was defined by a lull in the fighting as possibilities of a transition towards a negotiated peace were explored. The Special Rapporteur outlined a strategy to enable the international community to meet the urgent humanitarian needs of the Afghan people, while adhering to the commitment to establish a framework for peace based on a realization of the human rights of all Afghans.

Commission action. On 23 April [res. 1999/9], the Commission condemned the widespread violations and abuses of human rights and humanitarian law, the continuing grave human rights violations of women and girls (see pp. 670 and 1094) and the frequent practice of arbitrary arrest and detention and of summary trials, which had resulted in summary executions. It urged all Afghan parties to cease hostilities, reaffirm publicly their commitment to international human rights and principles, protect civilians, provide remedies to victims of grave violations of human rights and accepted humanitarian rules and bring perpetrators to trial, provide ICRC access to prisoners, and repeal discriminatory legislation and other measures against women. The Commission asked the parties to continue to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur. The High Commissioner was asked to ensure a human rights presence in Afghanistan to provide advice and human rights training to all the parties, as well as to intergovernmental organizations and NGOs.

The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for another year, and asked him to report to the General Assembly in 1999 and to the Commission in 2000.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/1999/23], adopted decision 1999/226 without vote [agenda item 14 (h)].

Situation of human rights in Afghanistan

At its 42nd plenary meeting, on 27 July 1999, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1999/9 of 23 April 1999:

- (a) Approved the Commission's invitation to the Secretary-General:
 - (i) To implement promptly, security conditions permitting, the decision to investigate fully reports of mass killings of prisoners of war and civilians, rape and other cruel treatment in Afghanistan;
 - (ii) To ensure that the deployment of the civilian affairs observers in Afghanistan took place as soon as possible, security conditions permitting, and that gender issues were fully incorporated into their mission;
- (b) Also approved the Commission's request to the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to ensure a human rights presence in the context of the United Nations activities in Afghanistan in order to provide advice and training in the field of human rights to all the Afghan parties, as well as to the intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations active in the field;
- (c) Endorsed the Commission's decision to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan for one year, and to request the Special Rapporteur to report on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session and to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-sixth session.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur visited Pakistan and Afghanistan in May and from 8 to 13 September [A/54/422].

In reaction to an uprising by the local population, Taliban forces, on 28 March, reportedly destroyed and burned houses and villages located on the road between Shiber and Bamian city (Bamian city had been the stronghold of Hezb-e-Wahdat forces up to September 1998). They also burned houses in Surkh Qul and other villages located in the Kalu valley. Hezb-e-Wahdat forces secured control of Bamian for three weeks, and the Taliban retook the city on 9 May. Following the receipt of allegations of serious human rights violations in the central highlands of Afghanistan, particularly in Bamian, the Special Rapporteur decided to seek first-hand information through interviews with newly arrived refugees from Hazarajat. Credible eyewitnesses described human rights violations, including forced displacement of civilians; deliberate burning of houses; summary executions of non-combatants, including women and children; arbitrary detentions; and forced labour. On 23 May, the Special Rapporteur met with the Special Adviser to the Taliban leadership to review with him the allegations, which were recorded in an aide-memoire, with the request that the Taliban take action to halt the pattern of violations described therein. The text of the aide-memoire and a letter dated 8 June received in response, as well as a series of letters of the Special Rapporteur, were appended to the Special Rapporteur's report. On 28 July, a large-scale offensive was launched by the Taliban across the Shomali Plains (see p. 261), resulting in massive displacement of civilians. Reports indicated that there were house and crop burnings, forced deportations, family separations, the separation and deportation of women, and arbitrary killings in southern Shamali. Officials in Kabul denied reports that the Taliban had systematically destroyed property and agriculture.

In September, together with the Special Rapporteur on violence against women (see preceding chapter), the Special Rapporteur visited Kabul. In discussions with the Taliban, the Special Rapporteur covered two areas: ending the externally supported military conflict and establishing a broad-based, multi-ethnic and fully representative Government; and compliance with international human rights norms, particularly with regard to women's and girls' access to education, health and employment, and measures to prevent human rights abuses, such as deliberate and arbitrary killing, abduction, torture, infliction of inhuman and degrading punishment and breaches of humanitarian law. The Special Rapporteur recommended that a human rights-based programme of humanitarian assistance should be given the highest priority to meet the basic needs essential for survival and the right to life. In that regard, he outlined a number of principles to develop and implement such a programme.

In a later report [E/CN.4/2000/33], the Special Rapporteur described actions taken in 1999 to promote the peace process, the armed conflict between the United Front and the Taliban from August to November, and grave breaches of international humanitarian law resulting from resumption of the conflict. Internally displaced persons reported that the right to the freedom of movement of women continued to be severely curtailed, with little access to employment or education; women were imprisoned without official reason in various regions; women and girls were abducted and kidnapped; and women entered into forced marriages to Taliban members. There were also reports of non-Afghans involved in the fighting; the forcible evacuation of Shia and Tajik families from Kandahar and surrounding areas; and the separation of families from central Afghanistan (Tajiks and Hazaras) and the Shomali Plains. The Special Rapporteur concluded that Afghanistan should be restored to all of its people, through reviving and sustaining a peace process, a process to fill the constitutional and political vacuum in which externally supported armed groups had imposed arbitrary rule without the consent or participation of the Afghan people, violating their human rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.3], adopted resolution 54/185 without vote [agenda item 116 (c)].

Question of human rights in Afghanistan

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and accepted humanitarian rules, as set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have freely undertaken under the various international instruments,

Recalling that Afghanistan is a party to the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War and that it has signed the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan and of the conclusions and recommendations contained therein;

2. Strongly condemns the mass killings and systematic human rights violations against civilians and prisoners of war, including in the areas of Mazar-e Sharif and Bamian, and notes with alarm the resumption by the Taliban of the wider conflict during the past summer, especially in the Shamali Valley, resulting in the massive, forced displacement of the civilian population, in particular of women and children;

4. Reiterates its condemnation of the killings of Iranian diplomats and the correspondent of the Islamic Republic News Agency by the Taliban, which constituted flagrant violations of established international law, as well as of the attacks on and killing of United Nations personnel in Taliban-held territories of Afghanistan, and calls upon the Taliban to fulfil their stated commitment to cooperate in urgent investigations of these heinous crimes with a view to bringing those responsible to justice;

(a) The persisting pattern of human rights violations in Afghanistan;

(b) The continuing and substantiated reports of human rights violations against women and girls, including all forms of discrimination against them, notably in areas under the control of the Taliban;

(d) The continued displacement of millions of Afghan refugees to the Islamic Republic of Iran, Pakistan and other countries;

(e) The lack of major reconstruction in Afghanistan;

6. Also notes with deep concern the sharp deterioration of the humanitarian situation in several areas of Afghanistan, in particular in the Shamali and Panjshir valleys, and calls for the full implementation of the agreement on the security of United Nations personnel in Afghanistan;

Bhutan-Nepal

In a statement by its Chairman, the Subcommittee, on 27 August [E/CN.4/2000/2], regretted that no progress had been made in the resolution of the human rights situation of persons mainly of Nepalese ethnicity who had claimed to be refugees from Bhutan and who, during the past seven or eight years, had been living in camps in Nepal administered by UNHCR. It expressed satisfaction that negotiations between the two Governments were scheduled to take place in September to seek a solution to the problem. It suggested that the two Governments avail themselves of technical assistance from OHCHR and UNHCR.

Cambodia

For information on the human rights situation in Cambodia, see p. 584.

China

On 23 April [E/1999/23], China made a motion that no action be taken on a draft text introduced in the Commission by the United States, which, among other things, called on China to ensure the observance of all human rights, improve the impartial administration of the rule of law, release political prisoners, preserve and protect the cultural, ethnic, linguistic and religious identity of Tibetans and others, and cooperate with the Commission's thematic special rapporteurs and working groups and engage in a dialogue with the High Commissioner. A roll-call vote on the motion was carried by 22 to 17, with 14 abstentions.

East Timor

On the basis of the Agreement between Indonesia and Portugal on the question of East Timor of 5 May 1999 (the General Agreement) and the Agreements between the United Nations and the Governments of Indonesia and Portugal of the same date regarding the modalities for the popular consultation of the East Timorese through a direct ballot and on security arrangements [A/53/951-S/1999/513], the people of East Timor participated in a popular consultation on the future of the territory on 30 August. The agreements stressed that the responsibility for ensuring a secure environment devoid of violence or other forms of intimidation would rest with the appropriate Indonesian security authorities. Further, they underscored that the absolute neutrality of the Indonesian Armed Forces (TNI) and the Indonesian Police would be essential. On 11 June, the United Nations Mission in East Timor (UNAMET) was established to organize and conduct the popular consultation. Despite several incidents, particularly violence and threats at the time of voter registration, the preparations prior to the consultation, as well as the voting itself, proceeded satisfactorily. In announcing the results of the ballot, in which over 78 per cent of voters opted for an independent East Timor, the Secretary-General asked all parties to bring an end to the violence that, for 24 years, had caused untold suffering to East Timor and to begin a process of dialogue and reconciliation through the East Timor Consultative Commission. His call, however, was not heeded and violence by different militia groups, in which elements of the security forces were also involved, targeting those who supported independence, as well as UN and other international staff, led to grave human rights violations. Thousands of East Timorese were expelled or fled the territory, many were killed and property was destroyed.

(For political details, see PART ONE, Chapters IV and VIII, and for information on humanitarian assistance and on refugees and displaced persons, see PART THREE, Chapters III and XII, respectively.)

Report of Secretary-General. In March [E/CN.4/1999/28], the Secretary-General stated that in the preceding year significant progress had been achieved, through the good offices of the Secretary-General, towards a solution to the question of East Timor. Agreement had been reached between Indonesia and Portugal to consult the East Timorese people to determine whether they would accept a proposed plan to give East Timor an autonomous status within the unitary State of Indonesia or opt for a transition to independence. In February, in response to the Secretary-General's repeated appeals for the release of the East Timorese resistance leader, Xanana Gusmao, who was serving a 20-year prison term in Jakarta, the Government of Indonesia transferred him to a residence in Jakarta, with a view to facilitating his participation in the efforts to resolve the question of East Timor. The Secretary-General described relevant actions taken by the Commission's thematic special rapporteurs and working groups, notably a visit in 1999 to Indonesia by the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention (see p. 626) and a visit in 1998 by the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences [YUN 1998, p. 700]. Annexed to the report was information on human rights issues in East Timor provided by Indonesia and by Portugal.

Subcommission action. On 25 August [E/CN.4/2000/2], the Subcommission Chairman stated that the Subcommission was encouraged by significant improvements towards the protection of human rights in Indonesia, but remained concerned at the persistent reports of human rights violations.

Commission action. The Commission on Human Rights held its fourth special session in Geneva on 23, 24 and 27 September [E/1999/23/Add.1], pursuant to a request by Portugal and agreement by the majority of Commission members to convene to discuss the situation in East Timor.

On 27 September [res. 1999/S-4/1], the Commission welcomed Indonesia's decision to allow the exercise by the East Timorese of their right of self-determination and their participation in the free and fair popular consultation of 30 August, as well as Indonesia's announcement on 4 September of its intention to honour the result of the popular consultation. It also welcomed the Secretary-General's efforts to promote the consultation and to implement the General Agreement; Indonesia's invitation for an international force in East Timor; the High Commissioner's efforts to address the situation, including her visit to Darwin, Australia, and Jakarta (see below); the assurances by the Indonesian authorities that displaced persons had the freedom to exercise their right to return voluntarily, assurances regarding the activities of UNHCR and other international humanitarian organizations, including the security of UNHCR personnel, and further assurances regarding free access to all displaced persons, particularly in West Timor; the humanitarian response to the current crisis (see p. 840); and the establishment on 22 September of the independent Fact-Finding Commission for Post-Ballot Human Rights Violations in East Timor by the Indonesian National Commission on Human Rights (NCHR).

The Commission condemned the widespread, systematic and gross violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in East Timor; widespread violations and abuses of the right to life, personal security, physical integrity and the right to property; and the activities of the militias in terrorizing the population. Expressing deep concern at the widespread forced removal and dislocation of persons to West Timor and other nearby areas, the serious humanitarian situation of the displaced East Timorese, the violence and intimidation directed against international agencies, as well as the independent media, and the lack of effective measures to prevent militia violence and the reported collusion between the militias and members of the Indonesian armed forces and police in East Timor, the Commission called on Indonesia to: ensure, in co-operation with NCHR, that the persons responsible for acts of violence and systematic human rights violations were brought to justice; ensure full respect for human rights and international humanitarian law regarding all persons within its jurisdiction or under its control; continue to implement its obligations under the General Agreement; guarantee the voluntary return of all refugees and displaced persons, including those forcibly displaced to camps in West Timor; ensure immediate access by humanitarian agencies to displaced persons, and guarantee the security and free movement of international personnel; continue to allow the deployment of emergency humanitarian assistance; and cooperate fully with the High Commissioner and the Commission's special procedures and with OHCHR in Jakarta.

The Secretary-General was called on to establish an international commission of inquiry, with adequate representation of Asian experts, in cooperation with NCHR and thematic rapporteurs, in order to gather and compile information on possible human rights violations and acts that might constitute breaches of international humanitarian law committed in East Timor since the announcement in January 1999 of the consultation and to provide the Secretary-General with its conclusions in order for him to make recommendations, and to report to the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Commission in 2000. The Commission decided to request the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, the Representative of the Secretary-General on internally displaced persons, the Special Rapporteur on the question of torture, the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, and the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances to carry out missions to East Timor and report to the Commission in 2000 and, on an interim basis, to the Assembly in 1999. It also decided to ask the High Commissioner to facilitate the activities of the mechanism of the Commission, to prepare a comprehensive programme of human rights technical cooperation, in cooperation with other UN activities, focusing on capacity-building and reconciliation with a view to a durable solution to the problems in East Timor, and to keep the Commission informed of developments.

In previous action, on 23 April [E/1999/23], the Commission Chairperson, on behalf of the Commission, expressed concern at the serious human rights situation and at the outbreaks of violence in East Timor and asked the Secretary-General to report in 2000.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL ACTION

On 15 November, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/1999/23/Add.1], adopted decision 1999/293 by recorded vote (27-10-11) [agenda item 14 (h)].

Situation of human rights in East Timor

At its 50th plenary meeting, on 15 November 1999, the Economic and Social Council:

(a) Took note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1999/S-4/1 of 27 September 1999, and endorsed the Commission's call upon the Secretary-General to establish an international commission of inquiry, with adequate representation of Asian experts, in order, in cooperation with the Indonesian National Commission on Human Rights and thematic rapporteurs, to gather and compile systematically information on possible violations of human rights and acts that might constitute breaches of international humanitarian law committed in East Timor since the announcement in January 1999 of the vote and to provide the Secretary-General with its conclusions with a view to enabling him to make recommendations on future actions, and to make the report of the commission of inquiry available to the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-sixth session;

(b) Also took note of the decision of the Commission to request the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, the Representative of the Secretary-General on internally displaced persons, the Special Rapporteur on the question of torture, the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, and the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances to carry out missions to East Timor and report on their findings to the Commission at its fifty-sixth session and, on an interim basis, to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session, and to request the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to prepare a comprehensive programme of technical cooperation in the field of human rights, in cooperation with other United Nations activities, focusing especially on capacity-building and reconciliation with a view to a durable solution to the problems in East Timor.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 1999/293:

In favour: Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Cape Verde, Chile, Colombia, Czech Republic, Denmark, El Salvador, France, Germany, Guinea-Bissau, Honduras, Iceland, Italy, Latvia, Lesotho, Mauritius, Mozambique, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Spain, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: China, India, Indonesia, Oman, Pakistan, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Sri Lanka, Syrian Arab Republic, Viet Nam.

Abstaining: Algeria, Belarus, Cuba, Djibouti, Japan, Mexico, Morocco, Republic of Korea, Sierra Leone, Turkey, Venezuela.

Report of High Commissioner. The High Commissioner visited Darwin and Jakarta from 10 to 13 September, to assess the situation in East Timor, discuss with the authorities involved actions necessary to protect the human rights of civilians and gather information that might assist the Commission, the Secretary-General, the Security Council and others [E/CN.4/2000/44].

Since the results of the popular consultation were announced on 3 September 1999, there was a breakdown of law and order. Martial law, declared on 7 September, did not stabilize the situation. Armed members of pro-integration militias had erected roadblocks throughout the capital, Dili, and controlled the streets, and militia members terrorized and murdered unarmed civilians, burned houses, displaced large numbers of people, and intimidated, threatened and attacked personnel of international organizations. UN staff in East Timor witnessed militia members perpetrating acts of violence in full view of heavily armed police and military personnel, who either stood by and watched or actively assisted the militias. Many pro-independence activists and other community leaders, including the clergy, were reported to have been killed for their support of independence. There were also reports of mass killings at various locations, including in Dili, where 15 Catholic priests and the director of a humanitarian organization, Caritas, together with many of his staff, had reportedly been summarily executed. In an attack at the residence of Nobel Peace Prize laureate Bishop Carlos Belo, militiamen reportedly hacked to death some 40 persons in the courtyard while TNI soldiers fired into the bishop's residence from the street. On 30 August, a UNAMET local staff member was killed in Atsabe, and on 1 September, at least two persons were killed while seeking refuge in UNAMET headquarters. Journalists and international humanitarian workers, as well as displaced persons, had reportedly been assaulted at displaced person camps, possibly by militia members. On 8 September, the Chairman-Rapporteur of the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, the Representative of the Secretary-General on internally displaced persons, the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and the Special Rapporteur on the question of torture sent an urgent appeal to the Government of Indonesia following information received concerning attacks by regular and irregular armed elements, which had resulted in over 100 individuals being killed.

Reports were received that 120,000 to 200,000 persons had been forcibly displaced—nearly one fourth of the entire population. Plans for systematic attacks on villages and the forced displacement of East Timorese were said to have been leaked as early as July. Those reports were denied by the authorities. On 6 September, UNAMET was forced to evacuate all eight of its regional offices and to evacuate a large number of international staff from its headquarters in Dili. Also on 6 September, armed militiamen carried out attacks against the ICRC office in Dili where some 2,000 displaced people had sought refuge. ICRC evacuated its expatriate staff to Darwin. According to reports from Kalyanamitra, women were raped and sexually harassed by militia and Indonesian military in Dili between 7 and 10 September. Sexual violence also allegedly occurred during the forced movement of people to West Timor. OHCHR received reports of thousands of involuntary or enforced disappearances. UNHCR was alarmed by cases of men being separated from their women and children. Media reports indicated that the militia were preventing men from leaving East Timor. Those displaced by the violence, in both East Timor and West Timor, faced the threat of malnutrition and disease as domestic and international humanitarian efforts were hampered by militia and military activity that blocked access to camps for displaced persons. They had no access to food, water, urgently needed medicine, shelter, sanitation and human security. Many were barely surviving on roots and leaves.

In West Timor, armed militia were reportedly operating with official support. Many of those displaced into West Timor stated that their identification documents were confiscated by the militia. The Indonesian military and police had reportedly prevented international aid workers, journalists and observers from visiting camps in West Timor and from interviewing East Timorese. UNHCR staff were assaulted and foreign aid workers sustained injuries after being stoned in the Nolebake camp. In Dili, reliable sources said that hundreds of houses had been burned, the entire business district completely destroyed and almost all houses emptied of their valuable contents. In all cases, those involved had acted with impunity and been given protection by the Indonesian police and military. Journalists and observers were reportedly forced at gunpoint by Indonesian police to evacuate their hotels and residences in East Timor and West Timor on 5 and 6 September and were driven to the airport. A small number of journalists refused to leave and took refuge at UNAMET headquarters.

The High Commissioner condemned those responsible in the strongest possible terms. She urged the Indonesian authorities to cooperate in the establishment of an international commission of inquiry into the violations so that those responsible were brought to justice. A multinational force to assist in restoring peace and security in East Timor was vital to protect the human rights of East Timorese. It would help stop systematic killings, displacement, destruction of property and intimidation carried out by militia groups and elements of the security forces. The High Commissioner also recommended that the Indonesian authorities should facilitate the immediate access of aid agencies to those in need; secure conditions to ensure the safety of humanitarian aid workers; and airdrops should be deployed to assist the displaced. The cooperation of Indonesia with the United Nations was vital to ensure human rights protection for the East Timorese during the transition process to the implementation of the agreements of 5 May 1999. The High Commissioner intended to keep the Commission informed of developments and efforts to bring the perpetrators of gross violations to justice.

Joint mission. Pursuant to Commission resolution 1999/S-4/1 (see p. 708), the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, Asma Jahangir (Pakistan), the Special Rapporteur on the question of torture, Nigel Rodley (United Kingdom), and the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, Radhika Coomaraswamy (Sri Lanka), visited East Timor (4-10 November) [A/54/660]. The report on the mission focused on human rights abuses committed since January 1999. Many of the observations presented were not conclusive and were aimed at highlighting issues that required further attention, including criminal and forensic investigation.

The Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions stated that, according to information provided by the International Force, East Timor (INTERFET)—an international intervention force deployed on 20 September to provide security, facilitate the distribution of humanitarian aid and re-establish law and order in East Timor—extrajudicial killings up to 10 November 1999 totalled 1,093 persons. NGOs had received information of killings of over 1,500 people. As more than 400,000 people had been displaced and many had lost contact with relatives in the process, it was difficult to ascertain the number of missing persons. There were reports of continuing abuses by militia elements directed against displaced East Timorese civilians in camps in West Timor. INTERFET military police and UN civilian police officers in charge of investigating alleged crimes and human rights violations complained of the lack of forensic and other facilities for investigating crime scenes and exhuming bodies of persons alleged to have been extrajudicially killed.

The Special Rapporteur on the question of torture observed that the bulk of allegations of torture and ill-treatment related to such treatment either as a prelude to murder or as taking the form of sexual violence. He had received numerous allegations from NGOs that in early 1999 persons were seized by militia groups, sometimes acting in collaboration with TNI, and subjected to torture, such as beatings and woundings with sticks, machetes, spears, knives and rifle butts. The Special Rapporteur found the allegations sufficiently substantiated and consistent to transmit them to Indonesia for its observations.

The Special Rapporteur on violence against women received many reports of such violence, allegedly committed by the Indonesian armed forces in East Timor. Relatives of political opponents were raped by the military as a form of revenge or to force their relatives out of hiding. At the time of the Special Rapporteur's visit, rape of Timorese women reportedly continued; however, the Regional Army Commander in Dili assured the Special Rapporteur that he would not tolerate violence against women by the armed forces. There were cases of sexual slavery, sexual violence as a means of intimidation and sexual violence as a result of the climate of impunity, as well as reports of violence against women in refugee camps in West Timor. The Special Rapporteur was concerned that INTERFET did not include any expertise in cases of sexual violence.

As to State responsibility, the joint mission concluded that, while most of the atrocities in East Timor were attributable to pro-integration militias, there was evidence of the direct and indirect involvement of TNI and police in supporting, planning, assisting and organizing the pro-integration militia groups, thus incurring the responsibility of the Indonesian Government. Credible information received during the joint mission indicated that, as at the end of 1998, at least 22 new militia groups had been formed in East Timor, reportedly armed and paid by Indonesian army intelligence to unleash terror and violence in East Timor. Under the 5 May agreements, the Government of Indonesia assumed responsibility for maintaining peace and security in East Timor to ensure that the popular consultation was carried out in an atmosphere free from intimidation, violence or interference. The Government had not disclosed any security arrangements, despite widespread reports of violence by militia groups acting in collusion with TNI and the police.

The Special Rapporteurs recommended that Indonesia secure unimpeded access of UNHCR to the camps in West Timor and comply with the call of NCHR to disband the militias. The most pressing needs of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor (UNTAET), established by the Security Council on 25 October to support the Territory's transition to independence (see p. 293), should be met. Those needs included expertise in forensic anthropology and pathology, autopsy facilities, medical professionals, criminal investigation and relevant staff for an effective information storage and retrieval system. They also recommended: making available psychiatric services, counselling and rehabilitation to victims of human rights violations; UNTAET efforts to involve the East Timorese in institution-building and governance, including economic development; Security Council action to establish an international criminal tribunal to bring perpetrators of the atrocities to justice; investigation of State, institutional and individual responsibility for the crimes over the past year; support by the international community to UNTAET; and special attention by UNTAET and the international community to support NGOs and other civil society institutions.

International Commission of Inquiry. In accordance with Commission resolution 1999/S-4/1 (see p. 708), the Secretary-General transmitted the report of the International Commission of Inquiry on East Timor (ICI) [A/54/726-S/2000/59], established by him to compile information on possible human rights violations and acts that might have constituted breaches of international humanitarian law committed since January 1999.

The five-member Commission convened its first meetings (Geneva, 18-20 November) to meet with the High Commissioner and hold briefings with the ICI secretariat. On 23 and 24 November, ICI met in Darwin to finalize its working methods and to meet with the former Special Representative of the Secretary-General, the UNAMET Commissioner of Police and representatives of the Indonesian National Commission of Inquiry on East Timor.

ICI visited East Timor from 25 November to 3 December where, over the nine-day period, it received detailed testimonies from 170 victims and witnesses. As the number of victims who wished to testify became overwhelming, the Commission was unable to interview them all. ICI also considered the reports of experts, information provided by the United Nations in East Timor and INTERFET, reports of other organizations, as well as information and views provided by the Government of Indonesia and by the Indonesian Commission of Inquiry.

The evidence gathered clearly demonstrated a pattern of serious violations of fundamental human rights and humanitarian law in East Timor, which took the form of systematic intimidation and terror, destruction of property, violence against women and displacement of people. Intimidation and terror, particularly aimed at pro-independence groups and individuals, prevented people from freely exercising their political choice. There was evidence of threats of violence, violence resulting in injuries and brutal killings in large numbers. Because men fled to the mountains, the women were targeted for sexual assault in a cruel and systematic way. UNAMET and other agencies' staff, as well as journalists and others, were evacuated, apparently to prevent them from witnessing violent acts and destruction of property. Prior to the popular consultation, the destruction of property was selective, involving properties of individuals known to support independence, but, following the announcement of the results, the destruction became widespread and systematic, with damage to property ranging from 60 to 80 per cent in the whole country. Most hospitals, health centres and school buildings were destroyed, and public utilities damaged.

Before the popular consultation ballot, intimidation and terror, including killings in places of refuge, denial of access to humanitarian agencies, and denial of necessities, such as water, resulted in internal displacement. Following the popular consultation, thousands of people were forcibly assembled and moved to camps in West Timor, where they were subjected to intimidation and terror, including abduction of children. There was a systematic attempt to destroy evidence, including removal of corpses from the sites of killings. Evidence showed that militia groups were responsible for the intimidation and terror before and after the popular consultation, and that the policy of engaging militias was implemented by the Kopassus (Special Forces Command of TNI) and other units of the Indonesian army. In certain cases, Indonesian army personnel, in addition to directing the militias, were involved in acts of intimidation and terror. The Indonesian police, who were responsible for security under the 5 May agreement, appeared to have been involved in those acts as well.

ICI called for the rapid return of displaced persons; the disarming of militias in West Timor to enable the East Timorese to return home safely and the demobilization of all non-regular forces in East Timor; and respect for victims' basic human rights to justice, compensation and the truth. As the actions violating human rights and international humanitarian law in East Timor were directed against a decision of the Security Council (see PART ONE, Chapter IV) and were contrary to agreements reached by Indonesia with the United Nations to carry out that decision, a specific international response was required. The United Nations had a vested interest in participating in the process of investigation, establishing responsibility and punishing those responsible, and in promoting reconciliation. ICI recommended that the United Nations establish an independent investigation and prosecution body to: conduct further investigations of violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law in East Timor from January 1999; identify those responsible for the violations; ensure reparations for the violations from those responsible; prosecute those guilty of serious human rights violations; and consider the issues of truth and reconciliation. In addition, the United Nations should establish an international human rights tribunal consisting of UN-appointed judges, preferably with the participation of members from East Timor and Indonesia. The tribunal would sit in Indonesia, East Timor and any other relevant territory to receive the complaints and to try and sentence those accused.

Communication. In response to the ICI report, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Indonesia stated that, having rejected Commission resolution 1999/S-4/1 (see p. 708), which established ICI, Indonesia was bound neither by the resolution nor by the ICI conclusions and recommendations [A/54/727-S/2000/65]. In its view, the ICI report consisted of uncorroborated allegations and was one-sided. The report concentrated on violations allegedly perpetrated by pro-integration groups without cross-checking with members of those groups. Indonesia asserted that the pro-integration groups also suffered many human rights violations, and outlined reasons why the recommendation to establish an international human rights tribunal was unacceptable. It welcomed the establishment by NCHR of the National Commission of Inquiry on Human Rights Violations in East Timor (KPP-HAM). KPP-HAM had sent a fact-finding mission to East Timor, which was expected to submit a report on its findings and recommendations. The report would be transmitted to the Attorney-General to decide on legal action to be taken through the national judicial mechanism. Indonesia placed utmost confidence in the independence, credibility and competence of KPP-HAM members in accomplishing their mission.

Iran

Commission action. On 23 April [res. 1999/13], the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 23 to 16, with 14 abstentions, noted positive statements by the Government of Iran about the need to review discriminatory measures against women, the reported elimination of discrimination against Baha'i youth in education, the increasing focus of the Islamic Human Rights Commission on the human rights situation in the country and the beginnings of a public discussion on the appropriateness of the death penalty for drug-related offences. However, it expressed concern at the continued human rights violations in Iran as reported by the Special Representative on the human rights situation in Iran [YUN 1998, p. 745]. It called on the Government, among other things, to continue its positive efforts to consolidate respect for the rule of law and to abide by its obligations under international human rights instruments; ensure that capital punishment would not be imposed for other than the most serious crimes; end discrimination against the Baha'is and other minority religious groups; end the use of torture; end discriminatory measures against women; and make use of human rights technical cooperation programmes.

The Commission decided to extend the Special Representative's mandate for a further year and asked him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1999 and to report to the Commission in 2000, keeping in mind a gender perspective. The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1999/228 of 27 July, endorsed the Commission's decision.

Reports of Special Representative. In September [A/54/365], Special Representative Maurice Copithorne (Canada) reported on the human rights situation in Iran, based on information from the Government of Iran, other Governments, the UN system, NGOs, individuals and media reports.

Tension increased markedly in July and August in the aftermath of a series of brutal murders of intellectuals and political dissidents that had occurred in November and December 1998. Efforts to consolidate freedom of expression were being challenged more vigorously, culminating in the closure of prominent reformist newspapers and the introduction of new repressive press legislation. Those and other developments played a large part in the peaceful student-initiated demonstrations that subsequently turned violent, resulting in the arrests of some 1,200 persons. As there had been little change with regard to women's rights, the Special Representative called on the Government to introduce changes in law and in practice affecting the status of women. The reform of the legal system remained an urgent matter, and the Special Representative recommended that the Government publish statistics on executions by category of offence and ensure that punishment was in accordance with international standards, as well as the laws of Iran. The status of religious minorities remained precarious and, in that regard, the Special Representative recommended that the Government address the matter of the Baha'is. Terrorism by Iranians against Iranians was on the rise within and outside the country. There continued to be progress in the development of democracy in Iran; the arrangements made to ensure open and fair elections for the sixth Majlis (Islamic Consultative Assembly) in February 2000 would be critical in that regard.

In a later report [E/CN.4/2000/35], the Special Representative covered developments that occurred between 1 July and 15 December.

Although there were improvements in the human rights situation in Iran, by international standards serious human rights violations continued to occur, particularly regarding the judiciary and the law enforcement agencies. There had been significant progress in the area of freedom of expression, except with respect to the press, where reformist-minded newspapers were susceptible to arbitrary discipline by various tribunals. The situation of women had improved in education, health and the integration of a gender dimension into government planning. However, little progress was made regarding remaining systemic barriers to equality. The Special Representative, concluding that there was insufficient political will to accord priority to the status of minorities, recommended that the Government publicly acknowledge the need for change and commit itself to addressing the human rights problems in that area. The machinery to address other areas, such as disappearance and suspicious deaths and student demonstrations, seemed inadequate. The Special Representative recommended that the announced reform of the legal system be prioritized.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.3], adopted resolution 54/177 by recorded vote (61-47-51) [agenda item 116 (c)].

Iraq

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 35 to none, with 18 abstentions, the Commission, on 23 April [res. 1999/14], strongly condemned the systematic, widespread and extremely grave violations of human rights and international humanitarian law by the Government of Iraq, which had resulted in an all-pervasive repression and oppression sustained by broad-based discrimination and widespread terror. It called on the Government to: abide by its obligations under international human rights treaties and international humanitarian law; conform its military and security forces to standards of international law; cooperate with UN human rights mechanisms; establish the independence of the judiciary and abrogate laws granting impunity; ensure that torture and cruel punishment and treatment no longer occurred; abrogate laws and procedures that penalized free expression; cease repressive practices aimed at ethnic and religious groups; cooperate to resolve the fate of missing persons, including victims of the Iraqi occupation of Kuwait; release detained Kuwaitis and other nationals; cooperate with aid agencies and NGOs to provide humanitarian assistance; facilitate the work of UN humanitarian personnel; ensure equitable distribution of humanitarian supplies purchased with the proceeds of Iraqi oil; and cooperate in identifying minefields in the country.

The Commission decided to: extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for another year; ask him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1999 and to report to the Commission in 2000; and request the Secretary-General to approve the allocation of resources to send human rights monitors to locations that would facilitate improved information on the human rights situation in Iraq. By decision 1999/229 of 27 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision.

Subcommission action. On 26 August [dec. 1999/109], the Subcommission appealed to the international community, and to the Security Council in particular, for the embargo provisions affecting the humanitarian situation of the Iraqi population to be lifted and urged the international community and all Governments, including that of Iraq, to alleviate the suffering of Iraqis, particularly by facilitating the delivery of food, medical supplies and the wherewithal to meet their basic needs.

In other action, the Subcommission circulated, at Iraq's request, a study on the economic sanctions imposed on Iraq [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/33] and another on the use of depleted uranium and its impact on man and the environment in Iraq [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1999/32].

Report of Special Rapporteur. In October [A/54/466], Special Rapporteur Max van der Stoep (Netherlands) presented information on the human rights situation in Iraq based on information he had received up until 20 September. He had received persistent allegations of: violations of the right to life; arbitrary arrest; detention; torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; disappearances; and violations of the rights to due process of law and freedom of movement. According to reports and testimonies, the allegations related to governmental tactics, including indiscriminate bombardment of civilian settlements and arbitrary killings; arbitrary arrest and detention of suspected traitors and criminals; and forced displacement. The situation regarding economic, social and cultural rights continued to deteriorate, as all available resources had not been used to ensure the enjoyment of those rights. The Special Rapporteur concluded that the political-legal order in the country was not compatible with respect for human rights but entailed systematic and systemic violations throughout the country, affecting the whole population. The President exercised executive and legislative power, with judges and magistrates answerable to him; the armed forces, the police and Ba'ath Party agents were in the service of the President. The courts were subject to the executive branch; political parties were banned, except for the Ba'ath Party, which was identified with the State; and there was neither freedom of speech or action nor freedom of information on radio or television. Regarding Iraq's failure to resolve the outstanding cases of the over 600 persons of Kuwaiti and third-country nationality who disappeared during or subsequent to Iraq's illegal occupation of Kuwait and who were still missing, the Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government release all those being held, reveal the names of those who had died in its custody and review the outstanding case files of the missing. He reiterated his proposal that a human rights monitoring mechanism composed of UN staff be established throughout Iraq.

Following the resignation of the Special Rapporteur, the Commission, on 22 December, appointed Andreas Mavrommatis (Cyprus) as Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Iraq.

(For political details, see PART ONE, Chapter IV.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.3], adopted resolution 54/178 by recorded vote (100-3-53) [agenda item 116 (c)].

Human rights situation in Iraq

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, and other human rights instruments,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Mindful that Iraq is a party to the International Covenants on Human Rights, to other international human rights instruments and to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of victims of war,

Recalling its previous resolutions and those of the Commission on Human Rights on the subject, and taking note of the most recent, Commission resolution 1999/14 of 23 April 1999,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 686(1991) of 2 March 1991, in which the Council called upon Iraq to release all Kuwaitis and nationals of other States who might still be held in detention, Council resolutions 687(1991) of 3 April 1991, 688(1991) of 5 April 1991, in which the Council demanded an end to repression of the Iraqi civilian population and insisted that Iraq co-operate with humanitarian organizations and that the human rights of all Iraqi citizens be respected, and Council resolutions 986(1995) of 14 April 1995, 1111(1997) of 4 June 1997, 1129(1997) of 12 September 1997, 1143(1997) of 4 December 1997, 1153(1998) of 20 February 1998, 1175(1998) of 19 June 1998, 1210(1998) of 24 November 1998, 1242(1999) of 21 May 1999 and 1266(1999) of 4 October 1999, by which the Council authorized States to permit imports of Iraqi oil in order to allow Iraq to purchase humanitarian supplies,

Taking note of the concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Committee on the Rights of the Child on the recent reports submitted to them by Iraq, in which these treaty-monitoring bodies point to a wide range of human rights problems and hold the view that the Government of Iraq remains bound by its treaty obligations, while pointing to the adverse effect of sanctions on the daily life of the population, including children,

Taking note also of the reports of the Secretary-General concerning the implementation of Security Council resolutions 986(1995), 1111(1997), 1143(1997), 1175(1998), 1210(1998), 1242(1999) and, in particular, his report of 19 August 1999 concerning the implementation of Council resolution 1242(1999),

Reaffirming that it is the responsibility of the Government of Iraq to ensure the well-being of its entire population and the full enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, concerned about the dire humanitarian situation in Iraq, which particularly affects certain vulnerable groups, such as children, inter alia, as stated in the reports of several United Nations human rights treaty bodies, and appealing to all concerned to fulfil their mutual obligations in the management of the humanitarian programme established by the Security Council in its resolution 986(1995),

1. Welcomes the interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Iraq and the observations, conclusions and recommendations contained therein, and notes with dismay that there has been no improvement in the situation of human rights in the country;

2. Strongly condemns:

(a) The systematic, widespread and extremely grave violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law by the Government of Iraq, resulting in an all-pervasive repression and oppression sustained by broad-based discrimination and widespread terror;

(b) The suppression of freedom of thought, expression, information, association, assembly and movement through fear of arrest, imprisonment, executions and other sanctions;

(c) The widespread use of the death penalty in disregard of the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the United Nations safeguards;

(d) Summary and arbitrary executions, including political killings and the continued, so-called clean-out of prisons, as well as enforced or involuntary disappearances, routinely practised arbitrary arrests and detention, and consistent and routine failure to respect due process and the rule of law, for example, in the execution of delinquents for minor property offences and customs violations;

(e) Widespread, systematic torture and the enactment and implementation of decrees prescribing cruel and inhuman punishment as a penalty for offences;

3. Calls upon the Government of Iraq:

(a) To abide by its freely undertaken obligations under international human rights treaties and international humanitarian law and to respect and ensure the rights of all individuals, irrespective of their origin, ethnicity, gender or religion, within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction;

(b) To bring the actions of its military and security forces into conformity with the standards of international law, in particular those of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

(c) To cooperate with United Nations human rights mechanisms, in particular by receiving a return visit by the Special Rapporteur to Iraq and allowing the stationing of human rights monitors throughout Iraq pursuant to the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights;

(d) To establish independence of the judiciary and abrogate all laws granting impunity to specified forces or persons killing or injuring individuals for any purpose beyond the administration of justice under the rule of law as prescribed by international standards;

(e) To abrogate all decrees that prescribe cruel and inhuman punishment or treatment, including mutilation, and to ensure that torture and cruel punishment and treatment no longer occur;

(f) To abrogate all laws and procedures, including Revolution Command Council Decree No. 840 of 4 November 1986, that penalize free expression, and to ensure that the genuine will of the people shall be the basis of authority of the State;

(g) To respect the rights of all ethnic and religious groups and to cease immediately its repressive practices aimed at the Iraqi Kurds, Assyrians and Turkmen, in particular their deportation from the regions of Kirkuk and Khanaqin, and at the population of the southern marsh areas, where drainage projects have provoked environmental destruction and a deterioration of the situation of the civilian population, and to ensure the personal integrity and freedom, including the full freedom of belief, of the Shi'a and their religious establishment;

(h) To cooperate with the Tripartite Commission and its Technical Subcommittee to establish the whereabouts and resolve the fate of the remaining several hundred missing persons, including prisoners of war, Kuwaiti nationals and third-country nationals, victims of the illegal Iraqi occupation of Kuwait, to cooperate with the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances of the Commission on Human Rights for that purpose, and to pay compensation to the families of those who died or disappeared in the custody of the Iraqi authorities, through the mechanism established by the Security Council in its resolution 692(1991) of 20 May 1991, and to release immediately all Kuwaitis and nationals of other States who may still be held in detention;

(i) To cooperate fully with international aid agencies and non-governmental organizations in providing humanitarian assistance and monitoring in the northern and southern areas of the country;

(j) To continue to cooperate in the implementation of Security Council resolutions 986(1995), 1111(1997), 1143(1997), 1153(1998), 1210(1998), 1242(1999) and 1266(1999) so as to ensure fully the equitable distribution, without discrimination, to the Iraqi population, including members of the population in remote areas, of the humanitarian supplies purchased under the oil for food programme and to continue to facilitate the work of United Nations humanitarian personnel in Iraq by ensuring the free and unobstructed movement of observers throughout the country;

(k) To cooperate in the identification of minefields existing throughout Iraq with a view to facilitating their marking and eventual clearing;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all necessary assistance in carrying out his mandate, and decides to continue the examination of the situation of human rights in Iraq at its fifty-fifth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions", in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights.

Myanmar

Commission action. On 23 April [res. 1999/17], the Commission welcomed the accession by Myanmar to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 34/180 [YUN 1979, p. 895]; the pardoning and release of two political prisoners, noting at the same time an increase in the number of political prisoners during 1998; and the efforts being made by the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General to visit the country [YUN 1998, p. 751]. It expressed grave concern at the continued closure of higher education institutions for political reasons; that the National Convention did not permit members of Parliament-elect or representatives of ethnic minorities to express their views freely; at the use of forced labour; and that the Government had not yet agreed to a visit by the Special Rapporteur. The Commission deplored the continued human rights violations in Myanmar; disrespect for the rule of law; violations of the rights of minorities, women and children; the persecution of the democratic opposition; and severe restrictions on the freedoms of opinion, expression, assembly and association and on freedom of movement. It called on Myanmar to establish a constructive dialogue with the UN system; to continue to cooperate with the Secretary-

General or his representative; and to consider becoming a party to human rights instruments. The Government was urged to implement the Special Rapporteur's recommendations; ensure full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms; ensure the establishment of democracy; allow all citizens to participate freely in the political process; release political detainees; improve conditions of detention; ensure the well-being of all political leaders; fulfil its obligations under the Convention on the Rights of the Child, contained in Assembly resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 560], and under the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women; end forced labour and allow freedom of association; cease laying landmines; end enforced displacement of persons; and end impunity.

The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for a further year and asked him to report to the Assembly in 1999 and to the Commission in 2000; the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision on 27 July (decision 1999/231). The Commission also asked the Secretary-General to ensure that the Special Rapporteur would be authorized to visit Myanmar, and to continue his discussions with the Government and others who could assist in implementing Assembly resolution 53/162 [YUN 1998, p. 752], as well as its current resolution. It also asked the High Commissioner to cooperate with the Director-General of the International Labour Organization in identifying ways in which their offices might collaborate to improve the human rights situation in Myanmar.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 1999/231, the Secretary-General transmitted, in October [A/54/440], the interim report of Special Rapporteur Rajsoomer Lallah (Mauritius) on the human rights situation in Myanmar as at 30 August. He reported that there had been no progress in the human rights situation, except for the resumption of work by ICRC and the co-operation of the Government in that regard. Repression of civil and political rights continued. The rule of law did not exist, as the judicial system was subject to a military regime and served only as handmaiden to a policy of repression. No effective measures had been taken to restrain forced labour. Regarding ethnic issues, the policy of establishing absolute political and administrative control resulted in killings, brutality, rape and other human rights violations. The Special Rapporteur renewed his previous recommendations [YUN 1998, p. 752].

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/162 [YUN 1998, p. 752], the Secretary-General, in October, submitted a report on the progress of discussions on the human rights situation in Myanmar and the restoration of democracy [A/54/499]. His Special Envoy, Alvaro de Soto, had visited the country (14-18 October), where he had held consultations with high-level government officials, leaders of political parties (the National League for Democracy (NLD) and the Shan Nationalities League for Democracy) and representatives of minority groups. Discussions with the Government focused on the restoration of democracy and human rights; a dialogue involving the Government, political parties—particularly NLD—and ethnic groups; freedom for political parties to conduct normal political activities; the release of political prisoners; a visit of the Special Rapporteur; access to prisoners by ICRC; and forced labour practices. In a departure from previous missions, an official of the World Bank accompanied the Special Envoy to explain the cooperation that might be available to Myanmar from international financial institutions. The Secretary-General welcomed ICRC visits to prisons and places of detention but reported no other progress.

Communications. On 15 March [E/CN.4/1999/129], Myanmar submitted to the Commission a memorandum concerning the human rights situation in the country, in the hope that Commission members would judge the situation objectively and understand the challenges the Government faced in preserving the unity and perpetuation of the nation, and in building a democratic State.

A similar memorandum to the General Assembly in October [A/C.3/54/4] concerned Assembly resolution 53/162, which, Myanmar claimed, had totally ignored the steps that the Government had taken to improve the country's situation. It stated that the Government was committed to establishing a democratic political system and to improving the overall situation in the country in the face of various obstacles and undue political pressures.

Report of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur reported on the human rights situation in Myanmar based on information received up to 15 December [E/CN.4/2000/38]. No concrete progress was reported on the general situation of human rights. Repression of political and civil rights continued, comprising summary or arbitrary executions, abuse of women and children by soldiers and the imposition of oppressive measures directed at ethnic and religious minorities, including the continued use of forced labour and relocation. Persecution of the democratic opposition continued, including long prison sentences and the use of intimidation and harassment.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.3], adopted resolution 54/186 without vote [agenda item 116 (c)].

Situation of human rights in Myanmar

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms as stated in the Charter of the United Nations and elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable human rights instruments,

Aware that, in accordance with its Charter, the United Nations promotes and encourages respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states that the will of the people shall be the basis of the authority of government, and therefore expressing its grave concern that the Government of Myanmar still has not implemented its commitment to take all necessary steps towards democracy in the light of the results of the elections held in 1990,

Recalling its resolution 53/162 of 9 December 1998,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/58 of 3 March 1992, in which the Commission, inter alia, decided to nominate a special rapporteur with a given mandate, and taking note of Commission resolution 1999/17 of 23 April 1999, in which the Commission decided to extend for one year the mandate of its Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Myanmar,

Recalling further the observation made by the Special Rapporteur that the absence of respect for the rights pertaining to democratic governance is at the root of all major violations of human rights in Myanmar,

Gravely concerned at the continuing and intensified repression of civil and political rights in Myanmar, as reported by the Special Rapporteur,

Deeply regretting the failure of the Government of Myanmar to cooperate fully with the relevant United Nations mechanisms, in particular the Special Rapporteur, while noting the recent increased contacts between the Government of Myanmar and the international community,

Noting that the Government of Myanmar, as a State party to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, has submitted its initial report to the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women for its consideration,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Myanmar for his interim report, and calls upon the Government of Myanmar to implement fully the recommendations made by the Special Rapporteur;

2. Urges the Government of Myanmar to cooperate fully and without further delay with the Special Rapporteur and to allow him, without preconditions, to conduct a field mission and to establish direct contacts with the Government and all other relevant sectors of society, thus enabling him fully to discharge his mandate, and, in this context, notes with interest that the Government has expressed its willingness to give serious consideration to a visit by the Special Rapporteur;

3. Welcomes the resumption of cooperation with the International Committee of the Red Cross, allowing the Committee to communicate with and visit prisoners in accordance with its standard working rules, and encourages continued cooperation in that regard;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report, and notes with deep concern his conclusion that he is unable to report concrete progress, with the exception of the visit by the International Committee of the Red Cross, on issues that the international community has raised time and again in successive resolutions of the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights;

5. Deplores the continuing violations of human rights in Myanmar, including extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, enforced disappearances, rape, torture, inhuman treatment, mass arrests, forced labour, including the use of children, forced relocation and denial of freedom of assembly, association, expression and movement, as reported by the Special Rapporteur;

6. Expresses its grave concern at the increased repression of any form of public political activity and the arbitrary detention and arrest of those exercising their rights to freedom of thought, expression, assembly and association, as well as the harassment of their families;

7. Strongly urges the Government of Myanmar to release immediately and unconditionally detained political leaders and all political prisoners, to ensure their physical integrity and to permit them to participate in the process of national reconciliation;

8. Expresses its grave concern at the escalation in the persecution of the democratic opposition, notably over the past year, in particular members and supporters of the National League for Democracy, at the harsh long-term prison sentences imposed and the use by the Government of intimidatory measures against elected representatives and members of the National League for Democracy, which forced them to resign from their positions and to dissolve their party offices;

9. Expresses its concern that the composition and working procedures of the National Convention do not permit either members of Parliament-elect or representatives of the ethnic minorities to express their views freely, and urges the Government of Myanmar to seek new and constructive means to promote national reconciliation;

10. Strongly urges the Government of Myanmar, taking into account the assurances it has given on various occasions, to take all necessary steps towards the restoration of democracy in accordance with the will of the people as expressed in the democratic elections held in 1990 and, to this end and without delay, to engage in a substantive political dialogue with political leaders, including Aung San Suu Kyi, and representatives of ethnic groups, and, in this context, notes the existence of the Committee representing the People's Parliament;

11. Notes with grave concern that the Government of Myanmar has failed to review its legislation, to cease to inflict the practice of forced labour on its people and to punish those exacting forced labour, which has forced the International Labour Conference to exclude further cooperation with the Government until such time as it has implemented the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry of the International Labour Organization regarding the implementation of the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, Convention No. 29, of the International Labour Organization;

12. Strongly urges the Government of Myanmar to cease the widespread and systematic use of forced labour and to implement the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry, while noting the order by the Government of Myanmar issued in May 1999 directing that the power to requisition forced labour under the Towns Act and the Village Act not be exercised, as well as the invitation to visit addressed to the International Labour Organization in October 1999;

13. Deplores the continued violations of human rights, in particular those directed against persons belonging to ethnic and religious minorities, including summary executions, rape, torture, forced labour, forced portering, forced relocations, destruction of crops and fields and dispossession of land and property, which deprives those persons of all means of subsistence;

14. Also deplores the continuing violations of the human rights of women, especially women who are refugees, are internally displaced or belong to ethnic minorities or the political opposition, in particular forced labour, sexual violence and exploitation, including rape, as reported by the Special Rapporteur;

15. Strongly urges the Government of Myanmar to ensure full respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including economic and social rights, to fulfil its obligation to end the impunity of perpetrators of human rights violations, including members of the military, and to investigate and prosecute alleged violations committed by government agents in all circumstances;

16. Urges the Government of Myanmar to end the enforced displacement of persons and other causes of refugee flows to neighbouring countries and to create conditions conducive to their voluntary return and full reintegration in conditions of safety and dignity;

17. Notes with interest the recent visit to Myanmar by the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for the purpose of holding discussions with the Government and with political leaders, including Aung San Suu Kyi and representatives of some ethnic minority groups, and calls upon the Government of Myanmar to enter into a constructive dialogue with the Secretary-General in order to make better use of his good offices;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his discussions on the situation of human rights and the restoration of democracy with the Government of Myanmar, to submit additional reports to the General Assembly during its fifty-fourth session on the progress of those discussions and to report to the Assembly at its fifty-fifth session and to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-sixth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution;

19. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its fifty-fifth session.

Europe and the Mediterranean

Belarus

On 20 August [E/CN.4/2000/2], a draft text regarding Belarus, sponsored by 13 members, was withdrawn from the Subcommission. By the draft, the Subcommission would have expressed its concern at alleged reports that authorities continued to harass Belarusian political leaders, journalists and human rights defenders; at the concentration of legislative power in the executive branch of government and a weak judiciary, such that the rule of law had not been preserved; and at the lack of meaningful democratic process.

Based on a statement by Belarus following the withdrawal of the draft text, the Subcommission Chairman made a statement that was adopted by consensus [ibid.]. It was the Chairman's understanding that the Government would invite the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers and the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention to visit the country, and that one of the visits would take place prior to the Subcommission's session in 2000. In addition, the Government would make efforts to join the Council of Europe and sign and ratify the 1950 Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms; to withdraw its reservation to article 20 of the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (see p. 578) prior to the Subcommission's 2000 session; to undertake legislative reforms to improve human rights protection and democracy; and to report in 2000 to the Subcommission on the steps it had taken.

In view of the Chairman's statement, the Subcommission, on 20 August [dec. 1999/105], decided to adjourn the debate on the draft resolution on the human rights situation in Belarus.

Cyprus

As requested by the Commission on Human Rights in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 754], the Secretary-General, in a March report on the question of human rights in Cyprus [E/CN.4/1999/25], described activities taken under his good offices mission, the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus and the Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus (see p. 387).

On 23 April [dec. 1999/103], the Commission decided to retain the item on its agenda, on the understanding that action required by previous resolutions would continue to remain operative, including its request to the Secretary-General to report on their implementation.

The former Yugoslavia

Kosovo province of FRY

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 44 to 1, with 6 abstentions, the Commission, on 13 April [res. 1999/2], strongly condemned the widespread and systematic practice of ethnic cleansing perpetrated by the Belgrade and Serbian authorities against the Kosovars, and the risk of destabilization of neighbouring countries. It demanded an immediate halt to repressive actions in Kosovo by the Serbian authorities, which had led to further ethnic cleansing and massive criminal violations of international human rights and humanitarian law inflicted against the Kosovars, and that the Serbian authorities immediately sign and implement the Rambouillet Accords (see PART ONE, Chapter V). The Commission called on the international community and the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY) (see PART FOUR, Chapter U) to bring to justice the perpetrators of international war crimes and crimes against humanity, and appealed to the international community, including UNHCR, to extend urgently humanitarian assistance to refugees from Kosovo and those internally displaced. Welcoming the High Commissioner's decision to dispatch human rights monitors to the region to assess the human rights and humanitarian crisis, the Commission asked her to report urgently on the human rights situation and the humanitarian crisis relating to Kosovo and on the implementation of its current resolution.

On 23 April [res. 1999/18], by a roll-call vote of 46 to 1, with 6 abstentions, the Commission condemned the grave, horrendous and ongoing war crimes and human rights abuses in Kosovo, including violent repression of the non-violent expression of political views, systematic terrorization of ethnic Albanians and others, torture, deaths in detention, summary executions and widespread destruction of homes and property. It also condemned the escalation of the Serbian military offensive against civilians in Kosovo in recent weeks and abuses by elements of the Kosovo Liberation Army (KLA), in particular killings, enforced disappearances and the abduction of Serbian police and Serb and Albanian civilians. It called on the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) (FRY) to stop all military action and end the violence and repression against civilians; ensure the withdrawal from Kosovo of all military, Ministry of Interior police and paramilitary forces; agree to the stationing of an international military peacekeeping presence; agree to the voluntary, unconditional return of internally displaced persons and refugees and to provide unhindered access to them by humanitarian aid organizations; and to work, on the basis of the Rambouillet Accords, on establishing a political framework agreement for Kosovo, in conformity with international law and the UN Charter. The Commission insisted that the FRY authorities and the ethnic Albanian leadership in Kosovo condemn acts of terrorism, refrain from violence, encourage the pursuit of political ends through peaceful means, act with respect for the rights of minorities, and respect international human rights standards and international humanitarian law. It also insisted that FRY implement a ceasefire; demilitarize the province; respect the democratic process; ensure all residents were guaranteed equal treatment and protection; release political detainees; guarantee the right to voluntary return in safety and dignity of all refugees and displaced persons to Kosovo and respect fully all human rights and fundamental freedoms; allow the establishment of democratic institutions in Kosovo; abide by its obligations under the 1949 Geneva Conventions for the protection of victims of war; and cooperate with international humanitarian organizations regarding missing persons in Kosovo and ensure that NGOs could cooperate freely.

Communication. On 16 April [E/CN.4/1999/155], FRY claimed that the Commission's resolution of 13 April was an example of politicization of the Commission's work. It stated that the sole goal of those who suggested its adoption was to justify and get further support for the barbaric North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) aggression against FRY. Similarly, on 26 April [E/CN.4/1999/159], FRY stated that the Commission's resolution of 23 April was based on falsehoods and deliberately launched disinformation to justify what it called the barbarian aggression against FRY by NATO.

Following air strikes by NATO in FRY, which began on 24 March, FRY transmitted to the Commission on Human Rights a series of communications denouncing them.

Reports of High Commissioner. On 16 April [E/CN.4/1999/SR.39], the High Commissioner updated the Commission on developments in the Kosovo crisis over the past week. Over half a million people had fled Kosovo. The number of internally displaced persons within Kosovo was estimated at several hundred thousand. Detailed accounts of serious human rights violations, allegedly perpetrated by Serbian police and paramilitary forces, continued to be received. Over the past few days, there had been alarming reports of large-scale summary executions of ethnic Albanians in Djakovica, Orahovac, Ljubenic and Kotlina. There was widespread reporting of the separation of family members, particularly young males, who had not subsequently been traced. A significant number of civilians had been killed in the course of military action. The High Commissioner called on FRY authorities and on the international community to take steps to end the human rights violations against the people of Kosovo.

On 19 April [E/CN.4/1999/164], FRY stated that the High Commissioner's report was based solely on media reports from countries that were taking part in what it called the brutal aggression against it, including NATO, Pentagon (United States), and Foreign and Commonwealth Office (United Kingdom) briefings. It put forward a list of events and consequences related to the NATO bombings launched against FRY on 24 March, on which the High Commissioner, in its view, should have based the report in order to make it credible and impartial.

In May [E/CN.4/2000/7], the High Commissioner presented information gathered by the OHCHR Kosovo Emergency Operation (KEO) and information she had obtained during her mission to the region (2-13 May). The objectives of KEO were to establish a human rights presence as close as possible to the actual developments in Kosovo; to interview refugees and seek impartial verification about alleged human rights violations; to seek to identify patterns and trends in human rights violations; to consult and help coordinate among international partners the assembling and analysis of information relating to human rights violations in Kosovo; to assemble information in reports to the High Commissioner, the Special Rapporteur and other UN mechanisms, including ICTY; and to explore opportunities for technical cooperation. Nine additional human rights officers had been deployed to Tirana, Albania, and to Skopje, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM), to join OHCHR staff there. Two data-processing experts had initiated a database to manage information gathered by the three OHCHR field presences in Tirana, Skopje and Montenegro (FRY).

Accounts received by the High Commissioner and OHCHR staff in those locations provided substantial evidence of gross human rights violations committed in Kosovo, including summary executions, forcible displacement, rape, physical abuse and the destruction of property and identity documents. As at 20 May, more than 750,000 Kosovars were refugees or displaced persons, while an unknown, reportedly large number of internally displaced persons remained in the region. OHCHR had documented cases of persons who had been taken away by Serbian authorities and whose whereabouts were unknown. Refugees had witnessed or confirmed accounts of summary executions, while others reported having seen mass graves. Women had experienced and witnessed the same violations as men, such as forced expulsion from their homes and ill-treatment by the paramilitary and police. Refugees also had experienced ill-treatment (beatings, shootings, mutilation, rape, threats) by Serbian paramilitary and police. Newly arrived refugees had reported that ethnic Albanians were being used as human shields to protect military convoys from NATO air strikes. The High Commissioner described the impact of the armed conflict on civilians, noting that, according to the Serbian authorities, more than 1,200 civilians had died in FRY as a result of the NATO air strikes and some 4,500 had been seriously injured. In addition, bridges had been damaged and communications disrupted, and schools, hospitals and places of worship had been destroyed or damaged. The air strikes had caused serious environmental damage, and the destruction of petrochemical installations and the bombing of warehouses storing chemical products raised serious health concerns. The destruction of private radio and television stations had seriously impeded freedom of expression and freedom of information. The use of graphite bombs by NATO had caused short circuits on power lines, leaving areas without water and electricity. NATO was also using cluster bombs, which could leave unexploded ordnance across wide areas, capable of detonation on contact.

Regarding the humanitarian situation, Albania estimated that, as at 20 May, it was hosting more than 400,000 Kosovo refugees. Security for refugees was an increasing concern; major issues included trafficking and prostitution, abduction of children, recruitment and training for KLA and illegal immigration. According to government sources, FYROM harboured more than 200,000 Kosovo refugees, who were at risk due to poor hygiene, inadequate medical attention and overcrowding. There was also concern about the presence of KLA members in the camps and the possible forced recruitment of refugees into KLA. Montenegro hosted more than 60,000 internally displaced persons from Kosovo; a blockade by the federal authorities on humanitarian assistance arriving through the port of Bar had placed their well-being at risk. In Serbia, according to the findings of the United Nations Needs Assessment Mission (see p. 350), which travelled throughout FRY from 16 to 28 May, the situation was so grave that in each republic and province, people, regardless of their ethnicity, political affiliation, socio-economic status, gender or age, feared for their survival.

The High Commissioner called on the FRY authorities to end human rights violations. She urged the Government to withdraw immediately and unconditionally all army and police units from Kosovo, as well as federal police and paramilitary forces responsible for gross human rights violations, and called on it to allow humanitarian agencies to bring aid to internally displaced persons in FRY. NATO was called on to respect the principles of international humanitarian law, including the principle of proportionality, in its military actions against FRY. She advocated the inclusion of a key human rights component in any future UN presence in Kosovo to monitor and promote respect for human rights and the rule of law; follow up individual cases of violations and determine patterns of continuing violations; investigate complaints of human rights abuses, in cooperation with international civilian police; and provide support to UN human rights mechanisms. The High Commissioner stressed the need to strengthen democracy and the rule of law, economic and social development and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms throughout the region.

In September [E/CN.4/2000/10], the High Commissioner provided an update of the findings of KEO. She described the displacement and deportation of more than 1 million ethnic Albanians from Kosovo, including from the municipalities of Pristina, Podujevo, Mitrovica, Oraovac, Lipjan, Urosevac, Suva Reka, Glogovac, Srbica, Kacanik and Djakovica. The High Commissioner presented information regarding killings and executions, violence against women and children, arbitrary arrest and detention, torture and mistreatment, the destruction and confiscation of property, the role played by KLA during the NATO campaign and the impact of the armed conflict on civilians. Following confirmation on 10 June by NATO of the withdrawal of FRY security forces from Kosovo and the subsequent suspension of NATO air operations against FRY, the Security Council authorized the Secretary-General to establish an international civil presence in Kosovo in order to provide an interim administration and the establishment of an international security presence. Following those developments, and in the light of the return of refugees to Kosovo, KEO was terminated and OHCHR-FRY staff returned to Kosovo with the advance team of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK) (see p. 357). In June and July, the High Commissioner convened two informal meetings of international organizations to discuss long-term strategies to promote and protect human rights in the region; met in Pristina with the commander of the international security force in Kosovo (KFOR), the acting Special Representative of the Secretary-General and other UN representatives; and chaired a meeting there with representatives of the Council for the Defence of Human Rights and Freedoms and the Centre for the Protection of Women and Children. As at 24 August, OHCHR had 12 international officers in Pristina and had reopened offices in Belgrade and Podgorica.

The High Commissioner chronicled the human rights situation in Kosovo following the establishment of UNMIK. According to UNHCR, as at 24 August, more than 761,000 Kosovars had returned to Kosovo while 6,800 remained in Albania, 19,000 in FYROM, 8,000 in Montenegro and 11,400 in Bosnia and Herzegovina. It estimated that some 50,000 refugees in the region were awaiting repatriation. Yugoslav sources estimated that as many as 165,000 Serbs and Montenegrins had left Kosovo since the arrival of the international force, while more than half of Kosovo's estimated 120,000 to 150,000 Roma population had fled since mid-June. UNHCR reported that, as at mid-August, there were only 50,000 non-Albanians left in Kosovo. The exodus was rooted in fear, killings, kidnapping, looting, evictions, widespread burning of villages, as well as cultural, historical and religious monuments, and other forms of intimidation. In Kosovo, minority ethnic groups had become victims of human rights abuses, including murders, which KFOR, as at 14 August, confirmed at 280 since 15 June; eviction of Kosovar Serbs and other minorities; rape; and kidnapping, primarily of ethnic Serbs and some Roma. Reports were received daily by KFOR, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE), UNHCR and ICRC of discovered bodies. In response to the arrest and detention of persons by KFOR, and in the absence of a functioning judiciary in Kosovo, the Secretary-General's Special Representative issued emergency decrees establishing a Joint Advisory Council on Provisional Judicial Appointments (JAC). The Council was composed of four national judges, including two Albanians, one Serb and one Turk, and three international lawyers. JAC advised the Special Representative on the provisional appointment of judges, judicial personnel and prosecutors in order to re-establish an independent and multi-ethnic judiciary. As at mid-August, the judges and prosecutors had conducted hearings in 144 cases involving 263 individuals, 120 of whom had been released. Allegedly, some 5,000 detainees were held by Serbian authorities on terrorism charges. In July, the Government of Serbia provided the names of over 2,000 individuals who had been transferred from Kosovo prisons to prisons in Serbia. Family members in Kosovo had difficulty visiting detainees in Serbia given the fears for the security of Albanians in some parts of Serbia.

The High Commissioner concluded that Serb forces committed shocking crimes during the NATO air campaign. Following the withdrawal of Serb forces, gross violations of human rights continued to take place at an alarming rate, particularly targeting the non-Albanians (Serb, Roma and other communities) in Kosovo. The High Commissioner urged Member States to support ICTY, and called on ICTY, ICRC and OSCE to continue to investigate the fate and whereabouts of missing persons. She recommended the rapid deployment of UN police; the re-establishment of customs control at borders; support by the international community for UNHCR and other agencies engaged in assisting the estimated 500,000 Kosovars without adequate housing before the onset of winter; investigation of allegations of KLA detention centres, killings, rape, torture, arson, expulsion, looting, theft and other violations of the rights of Kosovo inhabitants; and the complete demilitarization and disarmament of KLA by UNMIK. The High Commissioner called on the Government of Serbia to provide a list of all detainees transferred from Kosovo, specifying the charges under which they were held, and to guarantee their families access to them. She also called on the Kosovo population to refrain from violence and end attacks against minority groups, and on Albanian leaders to condemn the violence. She invited KLA to cooperate with UNMIK and KFOR in investigating the crimes.

In a later report [E/CN.4/2000/32], the High Commissioner stated that in September a Senior Human Rights Adviser was appointed in the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in Pristina to ensure a proactive approach on human rights in all UNMIK activities and the compatibility of UNMIK regulations with human rights standards. The deployment of the large international presence in Kosovo was followed by the resumed activities of OHCHR-FRY. In September, the Special Representative appointed OHCHR-FRY to organize and chair the Commission on Prisoners and Detainees. It was important, the High Commissioner said, to recognize the role of the Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe, established in June (see p. 397), which represented the collective effort of the EU, the Group of Eight industrialized countries (G-8), the countries of the region and key international organizations to address the challenges of the region in a coordinated and strategic manner.
