Foreword

THE YEAR 1999 was a tumultuous time for the United Nations. New conflicts erupted in several parts of the world, and several long-running ones continued to defy peacemaking efforts. In the wake of horrific violence and gross human rights violations in East Timor and Kosovo, the Organization was charged with the responsibility of helping to rebuild shattered societies almost from scratch.

Although peacekeeping and post-conflict peace-building commanded a large share of the attention and resources of the United Nations during the year, the Organization also faced growing humanitarian, economic and social challenges, such as natural disasters, refugee flows, AIDS and the changes wrought by globalization. As the new millennium approached, the United Nations took further steps to ensure that its work and objectives could respond to the needs of the twenty-first century. This included expanded partnerships with civil society and the private sector. Meanwhile, with the admission of Kiribati, Nauru and Tonga, United Nations membership rose to 188 States and our global constituency grew to 6 billion people.

I trust that this volume of the Yearbook of the United Nations will contribute to a better understanding of the Organization's work to build peace and a better future for the world's peoples, in a rapidly changing and globalizing world.

About the 1999 edition of the Yearbook

This volume of the YEARBOOK OF THE UNITED NATIONS continues the tradition of providing the most comprehensive coverage of the activities of the United Nations. It is an indispensable reference tool for the research community, diplomats, government officials and the general public seeking readily available information on the UN system and its related organizations.

Efforts by the Department of Public Information to achieve a more timely publication have resulted in having to rely on provisional documentation and other materials to prepare the relevant articles. Largely, Security Council resolutions and presidential statements, Economic and Social Council resolutions and some other texts in the present volume are provisional.

Structure and scope of articles

The Yearbook is subject-oriented and divided into six parts covering political and security questions; human rights issues; economic and social questions; legal questions; institutional, administrative and budgetary questions; and intergovernmental organizations related to the United Nations. Chapters and topical headings present summaries of pertinent UN activities, including those of intergovernmental and expert bodies, major reports, Secretariat activities and, in selected cases, the views of States in written communications.

Activities of United Nations bodies. All resolutions, decisions and other major activities of the principal organs and, on a selective basis, those of subsidiary bodies are either reproduced or summarized in the appropriate chapter. The texts of all resolutions and decisions of substantive nature adopted in 1999 by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council are reproduced or summarized under the relevant topic. These texts are preceded by procedural details giving date of adoption, meeting number and vote totals (in favour-against-abstaining) if any; and information on their approval by a sessional or subsidiary body prior to final adoption. The texts are followed by details of any recorded or roll-call vote on the resolution/decision as a whole.

Major reports. Most reports of the Secretary-General, in 1999, along with selected reports from other UN sources, such as seminars and working groups, are summarized briefly.

Secretariat activities. The operational activities of the United Nations for development and humanitarian assistance are described under the relevant topics. For major activities financed outside the UN regular budget, selected information is given on contributions and expenditures.

Views of States. Written communications sent to the United Nations by Member States and circulated as documents of the principal organs have been summarized in selected cases, under the relevant topics. Substantive actions by the Security Council have been analysed and brief reviews of the Council's deliberations given, particularly in cases where an issue was taken up but no resolution was adopted.

Related organizations. The Yearbook also briefly describes the 1999 activities of the specialized agencies and other related organizations of the UN system.

Multilateral treaties. Information on signatories and parties to multilateral treaties and conventions is taken from Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General: Status as at 31 December 1999 (ST/LEG/SER.E/18 (vols. I & II)), Sales No. E.00.V.2.

Terminology

Formal titles of bodies, organizational units, conventions, declarations and officials are given in full on first mention in an article or sequence of articles. They are also used in resolution/decision texts, and in the SUBJECT INDEX under the key word of the title. Short titles may be used in subsequent references.

How to find information in the Yearbook

The user may locate information on the United Nations activities contained in this volume by the use of the Table of Contents, the Subject Index, the Index of Resolutions and Decisions and the Index of Security Council Presidential Statements. The volume also has five appendices: Appendix I comprises a roster of Member States; Appendix II reproduces the Charter of the United Nations, including the Statute of the International Court of Justice; Appendix III gives the structure of the principal organs of the United Nations; Appendix IV provides the agenda for each session of the principal organs in 1999; and Appendix V gives the addresses of the United Nations information centres and services worldwide.

EXPLANATORY NOTE ON DOCUMENTS

References in square brackets in each chapter of Parts One to Five of this volume give the symbols of the main documents issued in 1999 on the topic. The following is a guide to the principal document symbols:

A/- refers to documents of the General Assembly, numbered in separate series by session. Thus, A/54/- refers to documents issued for consideration at the fifty-fourth session, beginning with A/54/1. Documents of special and emergency special sessions are identified as A/S- and A/ES-, followed by the session number.

A/C.- refers to documents of the Assembly's Main Committees, e.g. A/C.1/- is a document of the First Committee, A/C.6/-, a document of the Sixth Committee. A/BUR/- refers to documents of the General Committee. A/AC.- documents are those of the Assembly's ad hoc bodies and A/CN.-, of its commissions; e.g. A/AC.105/- identifies documents of the Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, A/CN.4/-, of its International Law Commission. Assembly resolutions and decisions since the thirty-first (1976) session have been identified by two arabic numerals; the first indicates the session of adoption; the second, the sequential number in the series. Resolutions are numbered consecutively from 1 at each session. Decisions of regular sessions are numbered consecutively, from 301 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 401 for all other decisions. Decisions of special and emergency special sessions are numbered consecutively, from 11 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 21 for all other decisions.

E/- refers to documents of the Economic and Social Council, numbered in separate series by year. Thus, E/1999/- refers to documents issued for consideration by the Council at its 1999 sessions, beginning with E/1999/1. E/AC.-, E/C.- and E/CN.-, followed by identifying numbers, refer to documents of the Council's subsidiary ad hoc bodies, committees and commissions. For example, E/CN.5/- refers to documents of the Council's Commission for Social Development, E/C.2/-, to documents of its Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations. E/ICEF/- documents are those of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). Symbols for the Council's resolutions and decisions, since 1978, consist of two arabic numerals: the first indicates the year of adoption and the second, the sequential number in the series. There are two series: one for resolutions, beginning with 1 (resolution 1999/1); and one for decisions, beginning with 201 (decision 1999/201).

S/- refers to documents of the Security Council. Its resolutions are identified by consecutive numbers followed by the year of adoption in parentheses, beginning with resolution 1(1946).

ST/-, followed by symbols representing the issuing department or office, refers to documents of the United Nations Secretariat.

Documents of certain bodies bear special symbols, including the following:

ACC/-	Administrative Committee on Coordination
CD/-	Conference on Disarmament
CERD/-	Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination
DC/-	Disarmament Commission
DP/-	United Nations Development Programme
HS/-	Commission on Human Settlements
ITC/-	International Trade Centre
TD/-	United Nations Conference on Trade and Development
UNEP/-	United Nations Environment Programme

Many documents of the regional commissions bear special symbols. These are sometimes preceded by the following:

E/ECA/-	Economic Commission for Africa
E/ECE/-	Economic Commission for Europe
E/ECLAC/-	Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean
E/ESCAP/-	Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific
E/ESCWA/-	Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia

"L" in a symbol refers to documents of limited distribution, such as draft resolutions; "CONF." to documents of a conference; "INF." to those of general information. Summary records are designated by "SR.", verbatim records by "PV.", each followed by the meeting number.

United Nations sales publications each carry a sales number with the following components separated by periods: a capital letter indicating the language(s) of the publication; two arabic numerals indicating the year; a Roman numeral indicating the subject category; a capital letter indicating a subdivision of the category, if any; and an arabic numeral indicating the number of the publication within the category. Examples: E.99.II.A.2; E/F/R.99.II.E.7; E.99.X.1.

Report of the Secretary-General

Report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization

Following is the Secretary-General's report on the work of the Organization, submitted to the General Assembly and dated 31 August 1999. The Assembly took note of it on 11 October (decision 54/408).

Introduction

Facing the humanitarian challenge

1. Confronting the horrors of war and natural disasters, the United Nations has long argued that prevention is better than cure; that we must address the root causes, not merely their symptoms. Our aspiration has yet to be matched by effective action, however. As a consequence the international community today confronts unprecedented humanitarian challenges.

2. The year 1998 was the worst on record for weather-related natural disasters. Floods and storms killed tens of thousands of people worldwide and displaced millions more. When the victims of earthquakes are included, some 50,000 lives were lost last year to natural disasters. Meanwhile what had seemed a gradual but hopeful trend towards a world with fewer and less deadly wars may have halted. Armed conflicts broke out or erupted anew in Angola, Guinea-Bissau, Kashmir and Kosovo, and between Eritrea and Ethiopia. Other long-established wars, notably that in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, ground on largely unreported by the global media. Moreover, the impact of wars on civilians has worsened because internal wars, now the most frequent type of armed conflict, typically take a heavier toll on civilians than inter-State wars, and because combatants increasingly have made targeting civilians a strategic objective. This brutal disregard for humanitarian norms—and for the Geneva Conventions on the rules of war, whose fiftieth anniversary we recently commemorated—also extends to treatment of humanitarian workers, who are all too frequently denied access to victims in conflict zones or are themselves attacked.

3. Confronted with renewed armed conflict and the rapidly escalating human and financial costs of natural disasters, our task is twofold. On the one hand, we must strengthen our capacity to bring relief to victims; chapter III of the present report, together with my report to the Security Council on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, addresses in detail how our humanitarian response strategies can be improved. On the other hand, we must devise more effective strategies to prevent emergencies from arising in the first place. The case for better and more cost-effective prevention strategies is my central theme in this introduction.

The scope of the challenge

4. The world has experienced three times as many great natural disasters in the 1990s as in the 1960s, while emergency aid funds have declined by 40 per cent in the past five years alone, according to the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies.

5. In the Caribbean, hurricanes Georges and Mitch killed more than 13,000 people in 1998, Mitch being the deadliest Atlantic storm in 200 years. A much less publicized June cyclone in India caused damage comparable to Mitch and an estimated 10,000 deaths.

6. Major floods hit Bangladesh, India, Nepal and much of East Asia, with thousands killed. Two thirds of Bangladesh was inundated for months, making millions homeless. More than 3,000 died in China's catastrophic Yangtze flood, millions were displaced, and the financial cost is estimated to have been an astonishing $30 billion. Fires ravaged tens of thousands of square kilometres of forest in Brazil, Indonesia and Siberia, with devastating consequences for human health and local economies. In Afghanistan, earthquakes killed more than 9,000 people. In August 1999, Turkey suffered one of the most devastating earthquakes in recent history.

7. In terms of violent conflicts, the most worrying development in 1998 was a significant increase in the number of wars. This is particularly troubling because the incidence and severity of global warfare had been declining since 1992—by a third or more according to some researchers.

8. The humanitarian challenge is heightened by the fact that the international community does not respond in a consistent way to humanitarian emergencies. Media attention is part of the problem. The crisis in Kosovo, for example, received saturation coverage. The more protracted and deadly war between Eritrea and Ethiopia, and the resumption of Angola's savage civil war, received very little. Other wars went almost entirely unreported. Partly for that reason, responses to appeals for humanitarian and security assistance have been similarly skewed. Such assistance should not be allocated on the basis of media coverage, politics or geography. Its sole criterion should be human need.

9. I am particularly alarmed by the international community's poor response to the needs of victims of war and natural disasters in Africa. Where needs are pressing, if we are not true to our most basic principles of multilateralism and humanitarian ethics, we will be accused of inconsistency at best, hypocrisy at worst.

*Understanding causes:
the first step to successful prevention*

10. Devising preventive strategies that work requires that we first have a clear understanding of underlying causes. With respect to disasters the answers are relatively straightforward; war is a more complicated story.

11. Human communities will always face natural hazards—floods, droughts, storms or earthquakes; but today's disasters are sometimes man-made, and human action—or inaction—exacerbates virtually all of them. The term "natural disaster" has become an increasingly anachronistic misnomer. In reality, human behaviour transforms natural hazards into what should really be called unnatural disasters.

12. Poverty and population pressures increase the costs of natural hazards because more and more people have been forced to live in harm's way—on flood plains, earthquake-prone zones and unstable hillsides. It is no accident that more than 90 per cent of all disaster victims worldwide live in developing countries.

13. Unsustainable development practices also contribute to the ever greater impact of natural hazards. Massive logging operations reduce the soil's capacity to absorb heavy rainfall, making erosion and flooding more likely. The destruction of wetlands reduces the ability of the land to soak up run-off, which in turn increases the risk of flooding. In 1998, an estimated 25 million people were driven off their lands into overcrowded and often disaster-prone cities by these and related forms of environmental malpractice.

14. While the earth has always experienced natural cycles of warming and cooling, the 14 hottest years since measurements first began in the 1860s have occurred in the past two decades, and 1998 was the hottest year on record. Although still contested in some quarters, the evidence is steadily accumulating that the current wave of warming and the extreme climatic events associated with it are the product of increased carbon emissions, a large fraction of which is generated by human activity.

15. The causes of war are inherently more difficult to explain than those of natural events. Social behaviour is not subject to physical laws in the same way as cyclones or earthquakes; people make their own history, often violently and sometimes inexplicably. Causality is therefore complex and multidimensional, and it differs, often fundamentally, from war to war.

16. We can, however, identify some conditions that increase the probability of war. In recent years poor countries have been far more likely to become embroiled in armed conflicts than rich ones. Yet poverty per se appears not to be the decisive factor; most poor countries live in peace most of the time.

17. A study recently completed by the United Nations University shows that countries that are afflicted by war typically also suffer from inequality among domestic social groups. It is this, rather than poverty, that seems to be the critical factor. The inequality may be based on ethnicity, religion, national identity or economic class, but it tends to be reflected in unequal access to political power that too often forecloses paths to peaceful change.

18. Economic decline is also strongly associated with violent conflict, not least because the politics of a shrinking economy are inherently more conflictual than those of economic growth. In some instances the impact of radical market-oriented economic reforms and structural adjustment programmes imposed without compensating social policies can undermine political stability. More generally, weak Governments—and, of course, so-called failed States—have little capacity to stop the eruption and spread of violence that better organized and more legitimate Governments could have prevented or contained.

19. The shift from war-proneness to war itself can be triggered by the deliberate mobilization of grievances, and by ethnic, religious or nationalist myth mongering and the promotion of dehu-manizing ideologies, all of them too often propagated by hate media. The widespread rise of what is sometimes called identity politics, coupled with the fact that fewer than 20 per cent of all States are ethnically homogeneous, means that political demagogues have little difficulty finding targets of opportunity and mobilizing support for chauvinist causes. The upsurge of "ethnic cleansing" in the 1990s provides stark evidence of the appalling human costs that this vicious exploitation of identity politics can generate.

20. In other cases armed conflict has less to do with ethnic, national or other enmities than the struggle to control economic resources. The pursuit of diamonds, drugs, timber concessions and other valuable commodities drives a number of today's internal wars. In some countries, the capacity of the State to extract resources from society and to allocate patronage to cronies or political allies is the prize to be fought over. In others, rebel groups and their backers command most of the resources—and the patronage that goes with them.

Strategies for prevention

21. Taking prevention more seriously will help to ensure that there are fewer wars and less consequential disasters to cope with in the first place. There is a clear financial incentive for doing so. In the 1960s natural disasters caused some $52 billion in damage; in the 1990s the cost has already reached $479 billion. The costs of armed conflict are equally sobering. The Carnegie Commission on Preventing Deadly Conflict estimates that the cost to the international community of the seven major wars in the 1990s, not including Kosovo, was $199 billion. This was in addition to the costs to the countries actually at war. The Carnegie researchers argued that most of these costs could have been saved if greater attention had been paid to prevention.

22. More effective prevention strategies would not only save tens of billions of dollars, but hundreds of thousands of lives as well. Funds currently spent on intervention and relief could be devoted to enhancing equitable and sustainable development instead, which would further reduce the risks of war and disaster.

23. Building a culture of prevention is not easy, however. While the costs of prevention have to be paid in the present, its benefits lie in the distant future. Moreover, the benefits are not tangible; they are the wars and disasters that do not happen. So we should not be surprised that preventive policies receive support that is more often rhetorical than substantive.

24. This is not all. History tells us that single-cause explanations of either war or natural disaster are invariably too simplistic. This means that no simple, all-embracing, solutions are possible either. To address complex causes we need complex, interdisciplinary solutions. The fundamental point is that implementing prevention strategies—for wars or disasters—requires cooperation across a broad range of different agencies and departments.

25. Unfortunately, international and national bureaucracies have yet to remove the institutional barriers to building the cross-sector cooperation that is a prerequisite of successful prevention. For example, in national Governments as well as international agencies, departments that are responsible for security policy tend to have little knowledge of development and governance policies, while those responsible for the latter rarely think of them in security terms. Overcoming the barriers posed by organizational division requires dedicated leadership and a strong commitment to creating "horizontal" interdisciplinary policy networks that include our partners in international civil society.

Disaster prevention

26. Disaster prevention seeks to reduce the vulnerability of societies to the effects of disasters and also to address their man-made causes. Early warning is especially important for short-term prevention. Advance warning of famine facilitates relief operations; advance warning of storms and floods allows people to move out of harm's way in time. Improvements in wide-area satellite surveillance technologies are revolutionizing the collection of early warning data relevant to disaster prevention.

27. United Nations agencies are playing an increasingly important early warning role. For example, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) provides vital warning on impending famines, while the World Meteorological Organization provides support for tropical cyclone forecasting and drought monitoring. The Internet is facilitating the real-time dissemination of satellite-derived and other warning data.

28. Greater efforts are also being put into contingency planning and other preparedness measures for disaster-prone countries, while major improvements in risk-assessment and loss-estimation methodologies have been identified through the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction. As a result of these and other innovations, national Governments are increasingly aware of the dangers and costs imposed by inappropriate land use and environmental practices.

29. There is also growing consensus on what must be done. Stricter limits should be placed on residential and commercial development in hazardous areas—vulnerable flood plains, hillsides prone to slippage, or fault zones. Construction codes should ensure more resilient buildings as well as infrastructure that can maintain essential services when disaster does strike. Sounder environmental practices are also necessary, particularly with respect to deforestation of hillsides and the protection of wetlands. Moreover, because poverty rather than choice drives people to live in disaster-prone areas, disaster prevention strategies, to be truly effective, should be integrated into overall development policies.

30. The experience of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction shows that a key to successful longer-term prevention strategies is broad-based cross-sectoral and interdisciplinary cooperation. The campaign to reduce carbon emissions and slow global warming illustrates what can be achieved with such cooperation. Working closely together and guided by the expert consensus that evolved in the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, the scientific community and national and local Governments, together with non-governmental organizations, have been highly successful in alerting the international community to the threats posed by global warming.

31. Here too, we have ample evidence for the benefits of prevention. As severe as last year's floods in China were, the death toll would have been far higher without the extensive disaster prevention efforts China has undertaken over the years. Floods on a similar scale in 1931 and 1954 claimed more than 140,000 and 33,000 lives respectively—in contrast to 3,000 in 1998. Likewise, hurricane Mitch claimed between 150 and 200 lives in one Honduran village, but none in an equally exposed village nearby, where a disaster reduction pilot programme had been in operation for some time.

32. We should not underestimate the challenges, however. In some areas, we still lack a broad scientific consensus on core issues and many questions remain unanswered. The problem often lies not so much in achieving consensus among scientists as in persuading Governments to resist pressures from vested interests opposed to change.

33. Resources are a pervasive concern. Some Governments, particularly in the poorest developing countries, simply lack the funds for major risk-reduction and disaster-prevention programmes. International assistance is critical here; and, because preparedness and prevention programmes can radically reduce the future need for humanitarian aid and reconstruction costs, such assistance is highly cost-effective.

34. Education is essential, and not just in schools. Many national Governments and local communities have long pursued appropriate and successful indigenous risk-reduction and mitigation strategies. Finding ways to share that knowledge, and to couple it with the expertise of the scientific community and the practical experience of non-governmental organizations, should be encouraged.

35. For all of these reasons it is essential that the pioneering work carried out during the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction be continued. In July 1999, the programme forum on the Decade set out a strategy for the new millennium, "A safer world in the twenty-first century: risk and disaster reduction". It has my full support.

Preventing war

36. For the United Nations, there is no higher goal, no deeper commitment and no greater ambition than preventing armed conflict. The main short- and medium-term strategies for preventing non-violent conflicts from escalating into war, and preventing earlier wars from erupting again, are preventive diplomacy, preventive deployment and preventive disarmament. "Post-conflict peace-building" is a broad policy approach that embraces all of these as well as other initiatives. Longer-term prevention strategies address the root causes of armed conflict.

37. Whether it takes the form of mediation, conciliation or negotiation, preventive diplomacy is normally non-coercive, low-key and confidential in its approach. Its quiet achievements are mostly unheralded; indeed it suffers from the irony that when it does succeed, nothing happens. Sometimes, the need for confidentiality means that success stories can never be told. As former Secretary-General U Thant once remarked, "the perfect good offices operation is one which is not heard of until it is successfully concluded or even never heard of at all". It is not surprising, therefore, that preventive diplomacy is so often unappreciated by the public at large.

38. In some trouble spots, the mere presence of a skilled and trusted Special Representative of the Secretary-General can prevent the escalation of tensions; in others more proactive engagement may be needed. In September and October 1998, interventions by my Special Envoy for Afghanistan prevented escalating tensions between Iran and Afghanistan from erupting into war. That vital mission received little publicity, yet its cost was minimal and it succeeded in averting what could have been a massive loss of life.

39. Preventive diplomacy is not restricted to officials. Private individuals as well as national and international civil society organizations have played an increasingly active role in conflict prevention, management and resolution. So-called "citizen diplomacy" sometimes paves the way for subsequent official agreements. For example, former United States President Jimmy Carter's visit to Pyongyang in June 1994 helped to resolve a crisis over the nuclear weapons programme of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and set in motion a process that led directly to an agreement in October that year between that country and the United States of America. In the Middle East peace process, it was a small Norwegian research institute that played the critical initial role in paving the way for the 1993 Oslo Agreement.

40. In addressing volatile situations that could lead to violent confrontation, Governments are increasingly working in partnership with civil society organizations to defuse tensions and seek creative resolutions to what are often deep-seated problems. In Fiji, for example, collaboration between non-governmental organizations and government officials, aided by quiet diplomacy on the part of regional States, resulted in the promulgation of a new constitution and forestalled what many observers believed was a real possibility of violent conflict.

41. Early warning is also an essential component of preventive strategy and we have steadily improved our capacity to provide it, often in partnership with regional organizations, such as the Organization of African Unity. The failures of the international community to intervene effectively in Rwanda and elsewhere were not due to a lack of warning, however. In the case of Rwanda, what was missing was the political willingness to use force in response to genocide. The key factors here were the reluctance of Member States to place their forces in harm's way in a conflict where no perceived vital interests were at stake, a concern over cost, and doubts—in the wake of Somalia—that intervention could succeed.

42. Complementing preventive diplomacy are preventive deployment and preventive disarmament. Like peacekeeping, preventive deployment is intended to provide a "thin blue line" to help contain conflicts by building confidence in areas of tension or between highly polarized communities. To date, the only specific instance of the former has been the United Nations mission to the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. Such deployments have been considered in other conflicts and remain an underutilized but potentially valuable preventive option.

43. Preventive disarmament seeks to reduce the number of small arms and light weapons in conflict-prone regions. In El Salvador, Mozambique and elsewhere this has entailed demobilizing combat forces as well as collecting and destroying their weapons as part of the implementation of an overall peace agreement. Destroying yesterday's weapons prevents their being used in tomorrow's wars.

44. Preventive disarmament efforts are also increasingly directed towards slowing small arms and light weapons trafficking, the only weapons used in most of today's armed conflicts. These weapons do not cause wars, but they can dramatically increase both their lethality and their duration. I firmly support the various initiatives to curtail this lethal trade that are currently being pursued within the United Nations, at the regional level and by non-governmental organization coalitions.

45. What has come to be known as post-conflict peace-building is a major and relatively recent innovation in preventive strategy. During the 1990s, the United Nations developed a more holistic approach to implementing the comprehensive peace agreements it negotiated. From Namibia to Guatemala, post-conflict peace-building has involved inter-agency teams working alongside non-governmental organizations and local citizens' groups to help provide emergency relief, demobilize combatants, clear mines, run elections, build impartial police forces and set in motion longer-term development efforts. The premise of this broad strategy is that human security, good governance, equitable development and respect for human rights are interdependent and mutually reinforcing.

46. Post-conflict peace-building is important not least because there are far more peace agreements to be implemented today than there were in the past. In fact, three times as many agreements have been signed in the 1990s as in the previous three decades. Some agreements have failed, often amid great publicity, but most have held.

47. Long-term prevention strategies, in addressing the root causes of conflict, seek to prevent destructive conflicts from arising in the first place. They embrace the same holistic approach to prevention that characterizes post-conflict peace-building. Their approach is reflected in the recent United Nations University study that found that inclusive government is the best guarantor against internal violent conflicts. Inclusiveness requires that all the major groups in a society participate in its major institutions—government, administration, police and the military.

48. These conclusions are consistent with the so-called "democratic peace thesis", which states that democracies rarely go to war against each other, and that they have low levels of internal violence compared with non-democracies. The former proposition is still the subject of lively debate among academic experts—in part because of the changing meanings of "democracy" across time and geography. The latter proposition is less controversial: in essence, democracy is a non-violent form of internal conflict management.

49. Long-term prevention embraces far too many strategies to be considered in detail in this essay. Here, I will simply highlight three that are worthy of consideration but have thus far received relatively little attention in the international community.

50. First, the international community should do more to encourage policies that enhance people-centred security in conflict-prone States. Equitable and sustainable development is a necessary condition for security, but minimum standards of security are also a precondition for development. Pursuing one in isolation from the other makes little sense. Security from organized violence is a priority concern of people everywhere, and ensuring democratic accountability and transparency in the security sector should receive greater support and encouragement from donor States and the international financial institutions. Moreover, since the overwhelming majority of today's armed conflicts take place within, not between, States, it makes good security sense in many cases to shift some of the resources allocated to expensive external defence programmes to relatively low-cost initiatives that enhance human—and hence national—security.

51. Second, greater effort should be put into ensuring that development policies do not exacerbate the risks of conflict—by increasing inequality between social groups, for example. In this context, the idea of "conflict impact assessments" should be explored further. Such assessments seek, via consultation with a broad range of stakeholders, to ensure that particular development or governance policies at the very least do not undermine security and at best enhance it. The model here is the well-established environmental impact assessment process, which accompanies major development and extractive industry projects in many countries.

52. Third, the changing realities of the global economy mean new challenges—and new opportunities. During the past decade, development assistance has continued to decline, while private capital flows to the developing world have risen significantly. This has reduced the relative influence of donor States and international institutions in developing countries, while increasing the presence of international corporations. The private sector and security are linked in many ways, most obviously because thriving markets and human security go hand in hand. Global corporations can do more than simply endorse the virtues of the market, however. Their active support for better governance policies can help create environments in which both markets and human security flourish.

53. The common thread running through almost all conflict prevention policies is the need to pursue what we in the United Nations refer to as good governance. In practice, good governance involves promoting the rule of law, tolerance of minority and opposition groups, transparent political processes, an independent judiciary, an impartial police force, a military that is strictly subject to civilian control, a free press and vibrant civil society institutions as well as meaningful elections. Above all, good governance means respect for human rights.

54. We should not delude ourselves, however, into thinking that prevention is a panacea, or that even the best-resourced prevention policies will guarantee peace. Prevention philosophy is predicated on the assumption of good faith, the belief that Governments will seek to place the welfare of the people as a whole over narrow sectional interests. Sadly, we know that this is often not the case. Indeed, many of the requirements of good governance that are central to prevention stand in stark contradiction to the survival strategies of some of the most conflict-prone Governments.

55. While providing incentives for progressive change can sometimes help, it is not something that the international community does often or particularly well. The prospect of closer association with the European Union has served as a powerful tool for promoting tolerance and institutional reforms in several East and Central European countries, but few if any counterparts exist at the global level.

56. The fact that even the best prevention strategies can fail means that we can never completely escape the scourge of war. It follows that, for the foreseeable future, the international community must remain prepared to engage politically—and if necessary militarily—to contain, manage and ultimately resolve conflicts that have got out of hand. This will require a better functioning collective security system than exists at the moment. It will require, above all, a greater willingness to intervene to prevent gross violations of human rights.

57. Demonstrable willingness to act in such circumstances will in turn serve the goal of prevention by enhancing deterrence. Even the most repressive leaders watch to see what they can get away with, how far they can tear the fabric of human conscience before triggering an outraged external response. The more the international community succeeds in altering their destructive calculus, the more lives can be saved.

58. Collective security in the international system is, of course, the responsibility of the Security Council and responding to crises and emergencies will always be a major focus of its activity. Article 1 of the Charter reminds us that one of the purposes of the United Nations is to take "effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace". Yet reaction, not prevention, has been the dominant Security Council approach to dealing with conflict over the years. Recently, however, the Council has shown increased interest in tackling prevention issues. This has been evident in the Council's extensive debate on post-conflict peace-building and in its response to my report on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa, which endorsed a range of conflict prevention measures.

59. I greatly welcome these developments. During the coming year, I intend to continue the dialogue on prevention with the members of the Council, which started with the first Security Council retreat I convened in June 1999.

60. Today, no one disputes that prevention is better, and cheaper, than reacting to crises after the fact. Yet our political and organizational cultures and practices remain oriented far more towards reaction than prevention. In the words of the ancient proverb, it is difficult to find money for medicine, but easy to find it for a coffin.

61. The transition from a culture of reaction to a culture of prevention will not be easy for the reasons I have outlined, but the difficulty of our task does not make it any less imperative. War and natural disasters remain the major threats to the security of individuals and human communities worldwide. Our solemn duty to future generations is to reduce these threats. We know what needs to be done. What is now needed is the foresight and political will to do it.

Chapter I

Achieving peace and security

Introduction

62. During the 1990s, we have witnessed major changes in the patterns of global conflict and in the international community's responses to them. Today, more than 90 per cent of armed conflicts take place within, rather than between, States. With relatively few inter-State wars, traditional rationales for intervention have become decreasingly relevant, while humanitarian and human rights principles have increasingly been invoked to justify the use of force in internal wars, not always with the authorization of the Security Council. Sanctions have been used far more frequently in the 1990s than ever before, but with results that are ambiguous at best.

63. One of the more encouraging developments of the last decade has been an increase in the number of conflicts settled by negotiation. Three times as many peace agreements were signed in the 1990s as in the previous three decades, reflecting a more than 30 per cent decline in the overall number and intensity of armed conflicts around the world from 1992 to 1997. With the sharp upturn in the number of wars in 1998, however, it seems doubtful that the positive trend of the previous five years will be sustained.

64. Comprehensive peace agreements have led to complex implementation processes involving many different agencies. While some traditional peacekeeping operations remain, peacekeepers throughout this decade have been involved in the broader post-conflict peace-building processes associated with the implementation of peace agreements. Post-conflict peace-building involves the return and reintegration of refugees and internally displaced persons, reconciliation, rebuilding judicial systems, strengthening the promotion and protection of human rights, electoral assistance and assistance in rebuilding war-torn political, economic and social infrastructures, as well as more traditional peacekeeping tasks.

65. In response to the changing international normative climate, the number of legal instruments, particularly relating to humanitarian and human rights law, has increased considerably. Growing public concern about gross human rights violations provided much of the political impetus for the creation of the International Criminal Court; concern about the humanitarian costs of landmines fuelled the successful campaign to ban them.

66. The past decade has also been a period of tension and difficulty for the United Nations as it has sought to fulfil its collective security mandate. Earlier this year, the Security Council was precluded from intervening in the Kosovo crisis by profound disagreements between Council members over whether such an intervention was legitimate. Differences within the Council reflected the lack of consensus in the wider international community. Defenders of traditional in-interpretations of international law stressed the inviolability of State sovereignty; others stressed the moral imperative to act forcefully in the face of gross violations of human rights. The moral rights and wrongs of this complex and contentious issue will be the subject of debate for years to come, but what is clear is that enforcement actions without Security Council authorization threaten the very core of the international security system founded on the Charter of the United Nations. Only the Charter provides a universally accepted legal basis for the use of force.

67. Disagreements about sovereignty are not the only impediments to Security Council action in the face of complex humanitarian emergencies. Confronted by gross violations of human rights in Rwanda and elsewhere, the failure to intervene was driven more by the reluctance of Member States to pay the human and other costs of intervention, and by doubts that the use of force would be successful, than by concerns about sovereignty.

Preventive diplomacy and peacemaking

68. Early warning is now universally agreed to be a necessary condition for effective preventive diplomacy. It is not, unfortunately, a sufficient condition, as the tragedy in Kosovo has demonstrated. As the crisis unfolded, I twice addressed the Security Council in the hope that consensus could be achieved for effective preventive action. Regrettably, diplomatic efforts failed, and the destructive logic of developments on the ground prevailed.

69. What lessons should be drawn from this and other recent failures in conflict prevention? First, that if the primacy of the Security Council with respect to the maintenance of international peace and security is rejected, the very foundations of international law as represented by the Charter will be brought into question. No other universally accepted legal basis for constraining wanton acts of violence exists. Second, that conflict prevention, peacekeeping and peacemaking must not become an area of competition between the United Nations and regional organizations. We work together best when we respect each other's prerogatives and sensitivities. Third, that prevention can only succeed with strong political commitment from Member States and if the provision of resources is adequate.

70. Healing the wounds of a war-torn society is never an easy task. It presents a particularly difficult challenge in Kosovo, which remains embedded in the complicated and contentious political fabric of the Balkans. We recognize the real potential for further disruption of the fragile ethnic equilibrium in a number of the surrounding countries.

71. While the crisis in Kosovo has dominated global media headlines during the past year, equally or more serious crises in other parts of the world have been largely ignored. If this neglect were restricted to the media it would not be of great consequence, but media inattention reflects the attitude of much of the international community, as has become evident in the decline in support for humanitarian appeals for Africa.

72. Security developments in Africa continue to cause the gravest concern. In West and Central Africa in particular, the threat that internal conflicts will spread and lead to armed confrontations between sovereign African States is an especially worrying development.

73. This risk is perhaps best illustrated by the ongoing hostilities in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in which a large number of African countries have become involved. My Special Envoy, Moustapha Niasse, whom I dispatched to the region in the spring, has been working in support of the diplomatic solution put forward by President Frederick Chiluba, on behalf of the Southern African Development Community. President Chiluba's efforts have the support of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the United Nations.

74. The prospects for peace in the Democratic Republic of the Congo have improved. On 10 July, all the belligerents except the Rassemblement congolais pour la démocratie signed a ceasefire agreement in Lusaka. The Security Council welcomed the agreement and authorized the deployment of United Nations military and civilian personnel in the region to facilitate the implementation of the ceasefire. After concerted efforts by South Africa, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and others, the disagreement between the Kisangani and Goma factions of the Rassemblement congolais pour la démocratie over who should sign the ceasefire agreement appears to have been resolved. Once the agreement is signed, the United Nations will dispatch a multidisciplinary technical survey team to the region to assess the security and infrastructure of the areas provisionally identified for future deployments.

75. The peace process in Burundi has also shown some progress, with the Arusha negotiations, under the leadership of former President Julius Nyerere, having reached a crucial stage.

76. In Sierra Leone, whose people have been the victims of one of the most brutal conflicts of recent times, the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone (UNOMSIL) has worked assiduously to help facilitate a negotiated solution.

In close cooperation with the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), its Monitoring Group (ECOMOG) and other interested Member States, UNOMSIL actively supported the process of negotiations between the Government and the Revolutionary United Front, which led to the signing on 7 July 1999 of the Lome Peace Agreement. Following the signing of the Peace Agreement, the Security Council authorized an expansion of UNOMSIL. Recognizing the close relationship between the promotion of human rights and sustainable peace, UNOMSIL, in collaboration with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, continues to monitor and report on human rights abuses in Sierra Leone with a view to ending further violations.

77. The outbreak of war between Eritrea and Ethiopia in May 1998 was also a cause of profound disquiet. I immediately contacted the leaders of both parties, urging restraint and offering assistance in resolving the conflict peacefully. I have maintained contacts with both sides. I also requested Ambassador Mohammed Sahnoun to assist the mediation efforts of OAU as my Special Envoy. Ambassador Sahnoun participated in various meetings organized by OAU and visited the Eritrean and Ethiopian capitals to press for the acceptance of the peace plan, the OAU Framework Agreement.

78. The conflict between Eritrea and Ethiopia has also had a tragic regional impact, particularly with regard to the conflict in Somalia. The United Nations Political Office for Somalia continues to assist regional efforts at peacemaking in Somalia that are led by the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD). However, a lack of consensus on the mode of power-sharing among the various factions has precluded settlement of the conflict. The main challenge in the year ahead will be to strengthen international peacemaking efforts and to identify initiatives that can be supported by all the relevant actors.

79. I have also been closely following the continuing complex humanitarian emergency in the Sudan, where developments again highlight the need to address the root causes of the conflict in order to speed the search for a political solution. In 1998, I visited the area and reiterated my offer of good offices to the parties and the mediators. Following a number of internal and external consultations, we have taken further steps to support and invigorate the IGAD peace initiative on the Sudan. Assisting this process, which sadly has not been sustained, remains our primary objective in the quest to help the parties achieve a just and lasting settlement.

80. The United Nations has been involved for many years in Western Sahara, where recent consultations with the Government of Morocco and the Frente POLISARIO have finally resolved a longstanding impasse over a referendum for self-determination. A new date, 31 July 2000, has been set for the referendum.

81. Africa is not, of course, the only area of security concern for the United Nations. Relations with Iraq took a turn for the worse during the year, despite a brief period of compliance with the Memorandum of Understanding signed by Deputy Prime Minister Tariq Aziz and myself in February 1998. In the face of continuing Iraqi non-compliance, the use of force by two Member States and the division in the Security Council that followed it was predictable. Our principal demands remain unchanged, however: Iraq must fully comply with all relevant Security Council resolutions; the international community must be assured that Iraq no longer has the capacity to develop or use weapons of mass destruction; missing Kuwaiti and third country nationals must be accounted for; and Kuwait's irreplaceable archives must be returned. Meanwhile, the people of Iraq continue to suffer the effects of sanctions, although since December 1996 the Oil-for-food programme has helped to alleviate some of the suffering by allowing the delivery of humanitarian goods to the country.

82. The overall situation in the Middle East remains troubling. The international community has expressed its strong support for a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East based on relevant Security Council resolutions and the principle of land for peace. The recent resumption of the peace process and indications of a real commitment to achieving a settlement by the key protagonists are grounds for cautious optimism.

83. In some conflicts, however, hostility is so intense, and distrust so pervasive, that progress becomes extraordinarily difficult to achieve. This is still the case in Afghanistan. My Special Envoy for Afghanistan, Lakhdar Brahimi, visited the region in October 1998 and late in February this year for talks with the authorities of neighbouring countries, as well as with the Taliban and the United Front. In July of this year, the "six plus two" group held a meeting in Tashkent following which my Special Envoy again visited the region. The United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan succeeded in convening two rounds of intra-Afghan talks in Ashgabat in February and March 1999. The parties managed to reach an agreement in principle on the sharing of government institutions. Unfortunately, in mid-spring, the Taliban leadership announced that it would not resume the negotiations started under United Nations auspices. In July, the Taliban launched an offensive against the United Front but failed to gain a decisive advantage. In August, severe fighting continued with grave humanitarian consequences. Notwithstanding these setbacks, I intend continuing my efforts to persuade both sides to resume consultations and to draw in interested Member States and the Organization of the Islamic Conference, where this may be helpful, in order to explore the prospects for an eventual peace agreement.

84. The recent upsurge of fighting along and across the line of control in Kashmir, especially in the Kargil area, is a reminder of the fragility of the situation in this region. The process initiated in Lahore needs to be put back on track as there are serious grounds for concern, not least because of the dangers of an unintended escalation in a subcontinent in which nuclear devices have been tested.

85. On 5 May 1999, after intensive diplomatic efforts, Indonesia, Portugal and the United Nations concluded a set of agreements calling for the United Nations to conduct a popular consultation of the East Timorese people on whether they would accept the special autonomy status offered by Indonesia. Rejection of autonomy would lead to East Timor's separation from Indonesia and transition, under United Nations authority, to independent statehood. The United Nations Mission in East Timor (UNAMET) was established by the Security Council on 11 June 1999. A region-wide structure established by the Mission's Electoral Unit completed a successful registration process despite adverse security conditions. UNAMET also organized and conducted a comprehensive voter education campaign, worked with local authorities and East Timorese groups to foster reconciliation, and deployed civilian police and military liaison officers to advise local police and liaise with the Indonesian military on security issues. Following the successful consultation on 30 August, the United Nations will remain in East Timor to assist in implementing the result.

86. The situation in Myanmar is of continuing concern. My Special Envoy, Alvaro de Soto, visited Myanmar in October 1998 to hold consultations with the Myanmar authorities, as well as with other political actors, including Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, General Secretary of the National League for Democracy. Despite our concerted efforts, I am unfortunately unable to report on any genuine, substantive response by the Government of Myanmar to the appeals made to it, in successive resolutions, by the General Assembly.

87. The United Nations Political Office in Bougainville, which was established in August 1998, has played a critical role in facilitating the search for a peaceful resolution of the crisis in Bougainville, Papua New Guinea. The National Government of Papua New Guinea and the Bougainville parties have asked the Office to supervise the process of disarmament, which will allow implementation of the programme of rehabilitation and reconstruction of the island to begin as soon as possible. The new Government of Papua New Guinea has stressed that the continuation of the peace process is one of its most important objectives.

88. There have been a number of encouraging signs of improved security relations in Latin America over the past year. The Governments of Ecuador and Peru finally took the steps needed to bring their long-standing border dispute to an end, while Argentina and Chile have also agreed to settle the dispute over their frontier.

Peacekeeping

89. The past year has been a tumultuous one for United Nations peacekeeping. We are facing major new challenges with the creation of the large-scale, and in many ways unprecedented, operation in Kosovo, with preparations for a complex new mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the expansion of the mission in Sierra Leone, the strong likelihood of a new operation in Eritrea and Ethiopia, the continuing evolution of the situation in Timor, and the recent agreement by the Government of Angola for a continued United Nations presence in that country.

90. The closure of two major missions, the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola and the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force, and the completion of a follow-on operation, the United Nations Police Support Group in Croatia, have brought the current number of peacekeeping operations to 16.

91. A sudden deterioration in the security situation led to the evacuation of the United Nations Observation Mission in Sierra Leone in January 1999. The restoration of security in Freetown allowed UNOMSIL to return in March to help in supporting the peace process, which culminated in the signing of the Lomé Peace Agreement on 7 July. The implementation of that Agreement will involve an expanded peacekeeping presence, which we are currently examining with ECOWAS.

92. The volatility and danger of the environments in which the United Nations operates are underlined by the number of casualties suffered by United Nations peacekeepers. From 1 January 1998 to 19 August 1999, 34 United Nations personnel gave their lives in peacekeeping operations. We owe them a debt of gratitude that can never be repaid.

93. Perhaps the most disturbing trend has been the growing contempt for international norms. In addition to the savage attacks on civilians, peacekeepers have also been targeted, or used as pawns to manipulate international public opinion. In this context, I warmly welcome the entry into force of the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel and I would strongly encourage further ratifications by Member States. In response to these developments, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations is undertaking a systematic review of the problem of violence against peacekeepers. I look forward to informing Member States of its findings as this work progresses.

94. Just as the year was tumultuous for peacekeeping, it was similarly testing for the Department of Peacekeeping Operations. In accordance with the wishes of the General Assembly, gratis personnel were phased out by the end of February. As a consequence, the Department as a whole has been reduced by almost 20 per cent during the past year. In order to adjust to the new realities, while continuing to perform its mandated functions, the Department underwent a significant restructuring. The creation or expansion of several missions, the closure and liquidation of others, and mandated planning for possible future operations have occurred in this context. Ironically, the logistics and communications area—vital for the deployment of new missions as well as the liquidation of old ones—was hardest hit by the reduction of staff.

95. This experience shows once again that preparedness requires capacities beyond those needed for current activities. The demand for peacekeeping and other field operations is, by its very nature, difficult to predict and such operations must often be established at short notice. The credibility and effectiveness of any new operation is affected by the promptness with which it is deployed. Delays provide an opportunity for those who oppose the peace process, or the terms of a settlement, to seize the initiative before United Nations personnel arrive. In determining resource requirements for the Organization, including its Headquarters staff, I trust that Member States will bear this in mind.

challenges concurrently: helping to maintain ceasefires and to disarm and demobilize combatants; assisting the parties to build or strengthen vital institutions and processes and respect for human rights, so that all concerned can pursue their interests through legitimate channels rather than on the battlefield; providing humanitarian assistance to relieve immediate suffering; and laying the groundwork for longer-term economic growth and development on the understanding that no post-conflict system can long endure if it fails to improve the lot of impoverished people. The Organization is continuing to develop the methods to coordinate these diverse activities more effectively.

97. I have previously reported on ways in which the United Nations programmes, funds and agencies are brought together by my appointed Special Representatives in support of integrated security and development strategies. Additional innovations this year have included our work with the World Bank in the Central African Republic, where the United Nations responsibilities in security, elections and institutional reform have been matched by the Bank's efforts to assist with economic stabilization and to promote longer-term growth. The United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic (MINURCA) played an important supportive role that enabled the peaceful and successful conduct of legislative elections in November/December 1998. MINURCA is to provide support for the presidential elections scheduled for September 1999. Unfortunately, funding for MINURCA is suffering from a worrying lack of enthusiasm among donors, and lack of funding will undoubtedly hamper the efforts of MINURCA to support and observe the elections.

98. Similarly, in Tajikistan, there was initially a very low donor response to appeals for funds to support demobilization projects, an important aspect of the mandate of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan. The resulting delays again point to the drawbacks of funding essential elements of a mandate through voluntary contributions, rather than through assessed contributions as is normally the case in peacekeeping operations. There has nevertheless been significant progress in advancing the peace process, and we are cautiously optimistic that the Mission's mandate will be fulfilled.

99. The case of Kosovo is the latest in a series of innovations in peacekeeping and post-conflict peace-building that have been pursued in the 1990s in cooperation with regional and subregional organizations. In Kosovo, we are cooperating with the European Union in reconstruction and rehabilitation programmes, and with the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe in institution-building. Both of those organizations operate under the authority of my Special Representative. We are also working closely with the international military forces responsible for security in Kosovo to ensure unity of civilian and military efforts.

100. In 1999 the Secretariat, in collaboration with the International Committee of the Red Cross, finalized principles and rules on the observance of international humanitarian law by peacekeepers; these rules have been issued as a Secretary-General's bulletin. I hope that the promulgation of that bulletin will help to clarify the scope of the application of international humanitarian law to United Nations forces and operations and ensure that the required standards are observed.

Post-conflict peace-building

101. Post-conflict peace-building seeks to prevent the resurgence of conflict and to create the conditions necessary for a sustainable peace in war-torn societies. It is a holistic process involving broad-based inter-agency cooperation across a wide range of issues. It encompasses activities as diverse as traditional peacekeeping and electoral assistance.

102. Achieving the necessary coordination and complementarity between agencies in conflict and fragile post-conflict situations continues to present a major challenge to the United Nations and its partners. Recognizing the scope of this challenge, in 1997 I designated the Department of Political Affairs, in its capacity as convenor of the Executive Committee on Peace and Security, as the focal point for post-conflict peace-building.

103. The past year has seen a number of developments in United Nations post-conflict peace-building operations. Activities in the field include forward planning for a future United Nations presence in the Central African Republic when the mandate of MINURCA expires; establishing a new office dedicated to peace-building in Guinea-Bissau; sustaining the major United Nations presence in Guatemala and consolidating long-standing peace processes in Cambodia and El Salvador and elsewhere.

104. After a year of divisive and destructive conflict in Guinea-Bissau, prospects for a return to normality have improved, albeit gradually. The United Nations Peace-building Support Office is working with the Government and people to coordinate an integrated response to the challenges of peace-building. In Liberia, the United Nations Peace-building Support Office is about to complete its second year of operation. Despite limited financial resources, the Office has supported a number of projects dealing with national reconciliation and rebuilding respect for the rule of law and human rights.

105. The United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala is mandated by the General Assembly to carry out a range of post-conflict peace-building activities in addition to verifying the peace agreements, providing good offices and undertaking advisory and public information activities. Since 1997, considerable emphasis has been placed on human rights, particularly indigenous rights; social investment; decentralization of State activities; rural development; fiscal and judicial reforms; and the reform of public security and national defence. In 1998, these initiatives provided the basis for a constitutional reform package, which was approved by Congress but which the people failed to ratify in a national referendum in May 1999. As presidential and legislative elections approach in November 1999, continuing commitment to the peace agenda will be crucial to its sustainability.

106. In neighbouring El Salvador, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) is responsible for assisting the Government with peace accord issues that remain unresolved. UNDP works in close coordination with the Department of Political Affairs, which retains responsibility for good offices. One of the greatest challenges facing the newly inaugurated Government is consolidation of the institutions that were created, or reformed, as part of the peace process, particularly those responsible for dealing with the country's public security crisis and the protection and promotion of human rights.

107. Institution-building, particularly of the judicial sector, and the protection and promotion of human rights are the key tasks of the International Civilian Mission in Haiti (MICIVIH). As in previous years, there remains much to be done to strengthen State institutions and civil society organizations. The reduced participation of the Organization of American States in MICIVIH, as from 1 July 1999, will necessarily affect our continued role, although core functions will continue to be performed. Meanwhile, the United Nations and the international community have pledged to support the holding of legislative and local government elections by the end of 1999—a crucial requirement for Haiti's future progress.

108. During the past year, there have been welcome developments in Cambodia. With the establishment of a new Government and the collapse of the Khmer Rouge movement, the country is finally at peace and able to devote its attention to reconstruction. My Personal Representative in Cambodia and the United Nations agencies in the country remain committed to assisting the Government in its nation-building efforts, including the strengthening of democratic institutions and assistance in the promotion and protection of human rights.

Electoral assistance

109. In the late 1980s and early 1990s, the implementation of comprehensive peace agreements in Angola, Cambodia, El Salvador, Mozambique and Nicaragua required the presence of major United Nations electoral missions to help organize the mandated elections. Often viewed as the final step in a long-term peace-making process, elections symbolize the re-establishment of national authority in a new multi-party system of government. Experience has demonstrated, however, that the relationship of elections to the long-term process of peace-building is highly complex. As the "age of democratization" has entered into a new phase, the Organization has shifted its electoral assistance strategy to encompass a broader understanding of post-conflict peace-building. Elections that have in the past served predominantly as an exit strategy out of conflict situations are now seen as providing an opportunity for institution-building and the introduction of programmes for good governance.

110. Elections are a necessary, but not sufficient, condition for creating viable democracies. That requires the establishment or strengthening of democratic infrastructures such as electoral commissions, electoral laws and election administration structures and the promotion of a sense of citizenship and its attendant rights and responsibilities. The recent experience of the United Nations in Nigeria shows how a partnership in electoral assistance can build a base for long-term post-electoral assistance activities.

111. The United Nations wealth of experience in electoral assistance allows the Organization to tailor its programmes to meet the particular demands of its Member States with great efficacy.

The United Nations, regional organizations and security

112. During the 1990s, regional organizations have played an increasingly active role in regional security affairs, not only in the realms of preventive diplomacy, peacekeeping and confidence-building, but also with respect to peace enforcement. The relationship between the United Nations and regional organizations is complex, usually fruitful, but sometimes difficult. Several lessons have emerged from recent experience.

113. First, it is imperative that regional security operations be mandated by the Security Council if the legal basis of the international security system is to be maintained. Frequently, such operations will also need the wider political support that only the United Nations can provide, and peace settlements will often require United Nations involvement under Security Council authority.

114. Second, security policies that work in one region may not in others. Most regions do not have organizations with the capacity to carry out major peacekeeping or peace enforcement operations. Some regional organizations—most notably OAU—would like to develop a peacekeeping capacity and it is important for the international community to assist them. This is a long-term undertaking, however, and one in which the parties can count on the United Nations to play an active supporting role.

115. Third, today's complex humanitarian emergencies require equally complex multidisciplinary responses, which only the United Nations has the qualifications and experience to provide. Whether responding to crises or implementing comprehensive peace agreements, the United Nations has an unparalleled ability to coordinate action across a wide range of sectors and disciplines.

116. I support moves towards greater cooperation with regional organizations. However, as multilateral activity expands, both the Secretariat and Member States are finding that the human and financial resources allotted for new operations have not kept pace with increased demands, and are at times barely adequate. It is crucial that this situation be addressed with energy and resolve if the United Nations is to avoid a cycle in which expectations exceed capacity, bringing inevitable disappointment and a decline in confidence in the potential of the Organization.

Disarmament

117. During the past year, existing disarmament agreements were threatened by a number of developments which are likely not only to undermine global security but also to cause an increase in global military expenditures. The disarmament machinery in the United Nations was not fully utilized during the year, and no consensus was reached on the convening of a fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, which could set universal goals for the immediate future. However, the United Nations has remained committed to upholding existing norms and to facilitating the necessary political will among Member States to establish new agreements to achieve global security at the lowest level of armaments commensurate with legitimate self-defence and security requirements.

118. The development of longer-range missiles and their testing by several countries, together with the development of missile defences and the fact that large numbers of missiles are ready to be launched on warning, seriously threaten peace and security. Multilaterally negotiated norms against the spread of ballistic missile technology for military purposes and restraint in missile development would considerably reduce the threat posed by ballistic missiles, whether armed with conventional weapons or capable of delivering weapons of mass destruction. Furthermore, they would substantially improve prospects for progress on bilateral and multilateral disarmament and arms control negotiations, including the prevention of an arms race in outer space.

119. The systematic and progressive reduction of nuclear weapons, with the ultimate goal of their complete elimination, will remain one of the priority tasks of the international community. Little was achieved in this area in the past year, however. Long-standing differences over how to tackle questions of nuclear disarmament continued to prevent the start of negotiations on a treaty banning the production of fissile material, which, in the autumn of 1998, had seemed possible. Meanwhile, we have continued to support ongoing negotiations on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Central Asia, and a text of the treaty is evolving.

120. Efforts to promote entry into force of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty continue, and a conference to consider the issue is scheduled for the autumn. It is crucial that the three nuclear-weapon States that have not yet ratified the Treaty, as well as those States whose ratification is required for its entry into force, deposit their instruments promptly. The path to the 2000 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons will be smoother if there has been tangible progress in this and other areas of nuclear disarmament.

121. Disarmament activity—in the form of treaties, components of peacekeeping mandates or confidence-building measures—both supports, and is supported by, progress in social and economic development. Promotion of mine awareness, progress in mine clearance, and the provision of medical, psychological and technical assistance to mine victims, who are mainly women and children, sustain the process of socio-economic reconstruction and development in countries emerging from conflict. In May, the worldwide efforts to abolish landmines took a major step forward with the convening of the First Meeting of the States Parties to the Ottawa

Convention, which bans anti-personnel mines and mandates their destruction. A further step towards reducing the devastation wrought by landmines will be taken in December, when the parties to Amended Protocol II of the Convention on Certain Conventional Weapons, which constitutes a partial prohibition on landmines, will hold their first annual conference.

122. Other practical disarmament measures, such as the collection and destruction of small arms and light weapons, can reduce the potential for violence and enhance stability, thus facilitating the development process. The reduction of military budgets, especially in post-conflict countries, will increase the resources available for development. The latter issue will, we hope, be considered in depth by the re-established high-level Steering Group on Disarmament and Development.

123. The failure of the Conference on Disarmament, for the third year in succession, to agree on a programme of work and the lack of consensus on holding a special session of the General Assembly on disarmament are a source of grave and ongoing concern.

Sanctions

124. It is increasingly accepted that the design and implementation of sanctions mandated by the Security Council need to be improved, and their humanitarian costs to civilian populations reduced as far as possible. This can be achieved by more selective targeting of sanctions, as proponents of so-called "smart sanctions" have urged, or by incorporating appropriate and carefully thought through humanitarian exceptions directly in Security Council resolutions. I support both approaches.

125. Intense debate continues, both within and outside the United Nations, on how effective the existing sanctions regimes have been, whether comprehensive, like those against Iraq, or more targeted, as in the case of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. Questions remain on how best to address the problems arising from their application.

126. Since 1997, the Government of Switzerland has facilitated a dialogue between sanctions practitioners and experts, known as "the Interlaken process". Its goal has been to explore the potential effectiveness of targeted financial sanctions, which may include freezing the financial assets and blocking the financial transactions of targeted entities or individuals. Although their efficacy remains to be tested, and several issues require resolution, the technical feasibility of such sanctions has now been established, as reflected in a report submitted to the Security Council in June 1999.

Chapter II

Cooperating for development

Overview

127. In an increasingly interdependent world, the challenges of development can be met only through well-planned, coordinated and adequately funded international action. The United Nations and its partners have extraordinary capacities in the development field. The challenge is to use them more effectively and synergistically. In the reform programme I initiated in 1997, the United Nations Development Group was created to help meet this challenge. During the past year, the Group has been developing and implementing the new modes of collaboration necessary to meet our development goals.

Reform tools: common country assessment and United Nations Development Assistance Framework

128. Through the common country assessment and the United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF), the United Nations has for the first time the tools needed to provide strategic and coordinated support for the development goals of national Governments. The common country assessment provides a common analysis for use by the United Nations, donors and other institutions, so that all have a shared understanding of the challenges and potential risks they face. The United Nations Development Assistance Framework is the planning and programming mechanism that coordinates the United Nations response to meeting these challenges.

129. We are also taking steps to ensure that those United Nations programmes, funds and agencies, including the regional commissions, that do not have a presence in the field are fully involved in the preparation and implementation of United Nations Development Assistance Frameworks and common country assessments. Since 1997, some 60 countries have initiated common country assessments; 18 countries participated in the UNDAF pilot project started in 1997, and 19 more are expected to commence an UNDAF before the end of 1999.

Strengthening leadership: the resident coordinator system

130. Throughout the last year, the United Nations Development Group has intensified efforts to improve the resident coordinator system. These have included new selection procedures for resident coordinators to broaden the basis for recruitment and improve the gender balance; performance appraisals of resident coordinators and country teams; improved annual reporting procedures for resident coordinators and a review of lessons learned; and greater support from Headquarters, including better training for resident coordinators and country teams.

Maximizing resources: harmonization and United Nations Houses

131. In response to a call by the General Assembly for greater harmonization and simplification of the policies and procedures used by United Nations bodies, 100 country teams have now planned to have their individual programming cycles begin at the same time, and all country programmes will have harmonized cycles by 2004.

132. The housing of United Nations entities in common premises (United Nations Houses) will foster a greater sense of community and common purpose. To date, some 36 United Nations Houses have been designated around the world; the establishment of 20 more is being considered in 1999. In a number of countries, we are promoting "virtual" United Nations Houses that will connect separate offices via an in-country intranet and thus improve the sharing of information, practices and expertise.

Improving impact: inter-agency support

133. The United Nations Development Group has set up a number of inter-agency groups to provide support to country teams. The Working Group on the Right to Development reviewed the provisional UNDAF guidelines and made specific proposals on how better to incorporate respect for human rights. The Working Group prepared a guidance note for all resident coordinators and will develop a human rights training module. The Group will also disseminate examples of good practice to help country teams learn from each other.

134. The Sub-Group on Gender, formed in June 1998, reviewed the pilot United Nations Development Assistance Frameworks and made recommendations for more effective incorporation of gender perspectives into the core indicators of the common country assessments and the final UNDAF guidelines.

135. Ad hoc task forces and working groups have pooled knowledge gained by the United Nations Development Group on specific topics for the benefit of country teams. In 1998/99, these included the Working Groups on poverty and girls' education, and the Task Forces on globalization, sector programmes and collaboration with the Bretton Woods institutions.

Working together: building partnerships for development

136. During the past year, the United Nations placed greater emphasis on communicating its research, publications and debates to its various partners—nationally, regionally and internationally. This has contributed to greater understanding and awareness of key development issues and to more innovative development thinking. In addition, a database set up jointly by the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) and UNDP has deepened mutual understanding and provided valuable input for civil society organizations. A survey carried out by the World Food Programme (WFP) in 1998 found that WFP is collaborating with more than 1,100 non-governmental organizations worldwide, of which three quarters are national and local groups.

137. In response to my statement to business leaders at the World Economic Forum at Davos in 1999, the United Nations Development Group has explored private sector partnerships on a range of development issues. UNDP, for example, has joined with Internet giant Cisco Systems in creating NetAid, a multi-city concert to be broadcast over the Internet to raise public awareness and generate financial support for reducing poverty in developing countries. UNICEF's partnerships with the private sector include a global campaign that has succeeded in eliminating polio in many parts of the world.

138. The United Nations has also made concerted efforts to increase collaboration with the international financial institutions. In February 1999, the Economic and Social Council held a high-level meeting with the Executive Board members of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund (IMF). Top World Bank officials, including President Wolfensohn and 11 Vice-Presidents, have participated in other exchanges, in the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and various open meetings. Discussions have also been held with World Bank officials on the Comprehensive Development Framework and other areas for cooperation, such as the common country assessment and UNDAF. Within the United Nations, including the specialized agencies, there have been a number of discussions on how to make United Nations engagement with the World Bank more effective. The United Nations has also collaborated actively with the regional development banks, particularly in regard to the financial crises in East Asia and elsewhere. Similarly, there has been practical collaboration at the country level and in following up UNDAF/Country Assistance Strategy pilots in Mali and Viet Nam.

139. The United Nations has continued to stress that governance grounded in democracy, the rule of law and respect for human rights is the best foundation for sustainable development. Cooperation has increased markedly between the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, UNDP, the international financial institutions and the specialized agencies on integrating human rights norms into the development process. The next stage will be to draw upon the practical experiences of Governments throughout the world to identify where, and what sort of, assistance is most needed.

The link between relief and development

140. Inter-agency task forces engaged in post-conflict peace-building have become increasingly common in the 1990s as the number of comprehensive peace agreements has grown. This development has highlighted the need to ensure that emergency relief and recovery assistance programmes are linked effectively to longer-term development initiatives. Recognizing the importance of this linkage, we have initiated a dialogue between the principal actors in the humanitarian, human rights, security and development fields; its goal is to facilitate more effective interdepartmental and inter-agency cooperation. The first meeting of the Executive Committees on Peace and Security, Political Affairs and the United Nations Development Group in November 1998 was an important step in this process.

Capacity-building in statistics

141. In May 1998, the Economic and Social Council, recognizing the importance of statistics and indicators, requested the United Nations Secretariat, bilateral funding agencies and the Bretton Woods institutions to work together to provide support for national statistical capacity-building in Member States. The Department of Economic and Social Affairs, in collaboration with UNFPA, has undertaken various initiatives to implement the 2000 world population and housing census. The Department has also supported regional approaches for census-taking in Central Asia, the Southern African Development Community and the Pacific. Intraregional cooperation among organizations responsible for collecting national and regional statistics is also being supported.

Eradication of poverty

142. Despite improvements over the past 50 years in nutrition, health, education and life expectancy and in reducing material poverty, we still have far to travel: over 1.5 billion people live on less than $1 a day; almost 1 billion adults—a majority of them women—are unable to read or write; 830 million people are malnourished; and 750 million people have no access to adequate shelter or health care. Gender inequalities continue to hamper economic growth and well-being.

143. Increased natural disasters, the hangover from the East Asian economic crisis, the continuing economic decline of the former Soviet Union, the growing toll of AIDS, especially in Africa, and new outbreaks of war have exacerbated poverty in many parts of the world in 1998.

144. The eradication of poverty is one of the central goals of the United Nations and its agencies, but its achievement remains elusive. While declining aid flows are part of the problem, increasing aid is not a panacea. In some cases, aid has made a real difference in reducing poverty; in others, it has made little or no impact. What makes the difference is how the aid is used. Where foreign assistance is misused, it is of little benefit to those in need.

145. The United Nations has long recognized that development policy is about more than economics narrowly defined. Development cannot occur in a vacuum. It requires that minimal levels of human security are met and that there is inclusive political participation and respect for human rights. As the only international organization with a mandate that embraces security, development and human rights, the United Nations is uniquely well placed to tackle the eradication of poverty in a holistic manner. This requires broad inter-agency cooperation, which is increasingly common practice in today's United Nations. For example, work carried out jointly by the International Labour Organization (ILO), the Department of Economic and Social Affairs, UNDP, the World Bank and IMF formed the basis for my report to the Economic and Social Council in July 1999 on the role of employment and work in poverty eradication: the empowerment and advancement of women.

146. Better poverty eradication policy requires improved risk assessment and early warning strategies—as have been developed jointly by the International Fund for Agricultural Development, FAO and WFP. More generally over the past year, the United Nations has been working with its partners to produce more holistic development policies. The Administrative Committee on Coordination sent an action plan, entitled "Freedom from poverty", and based on its statement on poverty of March 1998, to all United Nations resident coordinators and country teams in October 1998. The plan forms the basis for a new initiative, led by the United Nations Development Group, to help programme countries to meet the goal of halving absolute poverty by 2015.

147. In December 1998, the United Nations Development Group developed an action plan for country-level responses to the challenges of globalization and the financial crisis in East Asia. Seventy-eight countries have either developed a separate strategy for poverty reduction (43 countries) or dedicated part of their overall development plan to poverty reduction (35 countries). United Nations country teams have established inter-agency thematic working groups on gender (in 58 countries), food security (in 48 countries) and a range of other issues related to poverty eradication. In 1998, the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA), drawing on studies carried out in 1996/97, began to develop poverty alleviation policies.

148. By the end of 1998, the Poverty Strategies Initiative of UNDP had provided support to over 100 countries in the area of poverty analysis, mapping and monitoring and developing national poverty reduction strategies. This initiative involved extensive collaboration at the country level with the World Bank, the regional commissions, ILO, UNICEF, the Department of Economic and Social Affairs and UNFPA.

149. The United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) and UNDP initiated a global knowledge network designed to help produce effective pro-poor budgets that were also sensitive to gender and environmental concerns. WFP assisted almost 75 million people, more than half of them women and children, helping to build sustainable food security assets for the poor and responding to their needs in emergency situations. A UNFPA study in South-East Asia on the effects of the financial crisis revealed increasing poverty in the region, and recommended specific policy responses.

150. In May 1999, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) and the World Bank launched the Cities Alliance to coordinate their support for cities in the developing world. The Alliance focuses in particular on urban squatters, upgrading slums and improving urban governance and management systems. UNDP, with support from Habitat, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), launched the World Alliance of Cities against Poverty as follow-up to the Habitat II process.

151. The United Nations International Drug Control Programme has helped Governments in Latin America and Asia develop "business plans" to reduce incentives for the cultivation of illicit drugs and promote alternative development activities. Meanwhile, United Nations agencies have continued their collaboration with civil society organizations with a view to achieving one of the goals of the Microcredit Summit, namely, to provide 100 million of the poorest families with access to credit and other financial services.

Social development

152. One of the most significant achievements of the international conferences on social development issues convened by the United Nations during the 1990s has been the consensus on the need for people-centred approaches to both social and economic problems. In 1999, the five-year review of the International Conference on Population and Development, held at Cairo in 1994, was conducted in New York. Preparatory work also began for the five-year reviews, to be held in 2000, of the Fourth World Conference on Women and the World Summit for Social Development, and of Habitat U, which will occur in 2001.

153. The review process of the Cairo Conference culminated in a special session of the General Assembly, held from 30 June to 2 July 1999, at which the Assembly adopted key actions for the further implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development. This drew on reports prepared by the Department of Economic and Social Affairs on the basis of several technical workshops and symposia, and an on-the-ground assessment of progress made in 114 developing countries and 18 developed countries since the Cairo Conference. The document adopted by the General Assembly focused on population and development concerns; gender equity and the empowerment of women; reproductive health and rights; partnerships and collaborations. It also called for a greater effort by all countries to address the shortfall in resources needed to implement the commitments made at Cairo.

154. At the country level, inter-agency working groups have been established to assist with the integrated follow-up to the conferences. The 1998 annual reports of resident coordinators indicated that 573 thematic groups were functioning around the world. Many of these groups deal with social development concerns, such as basic social services (16 groups), health and nutrition (29), education (24), population and development (7), reproductive health (5), drugs (6) and human rights (15).

155. The use of new information technologies has assisted public information outreach on social development issues. For example, in March 1999 the UNIFEM inter-agency global videoconference, A World Free of Violence against Women, linked Member States, United Nations bodies and activists around the world.

156. In addition, ESCWA is implementing a project to provide an integrated regional follow-up by the Arab States to the United Nations conferences, which was launched in October 1998. The project addresses issues related to the themes of the major conferences, including women, population, human settlements and social development. The project also builds on the experiences of UNICEF, UNFPA and UNIFEM.

157. Four particular areas of activity are highlighted below.

A new initiative for girls' education

158. Led by UNICEF, the United Nations Development Group is planning to launch a new 10-year initiative for girls' education. The initiative will bring together a broad coalition of actors, including those outside the United Nations system, to support enhanced provision of girls' education at country level. The Conferences on Population and Development and on Women, and the Social Summit, have demonstrated widespread recognition of the benefits that enhancing the education of girls confers, including increased family incomes, later marriages and reduced fertility rates, reduced infant and maternal mortality rates, better nourished and healthier children, greater opportunities and choices for more women, and greater participation of women in development and in political and economic decision-making.

Focus on youth

159. Contributing to young people's development has important implications for human development and human rights, including strengthening democratic processes and decreasing gender and ethnic discrimination and disparities. The United Nations has continued to build partnerships and strengthen its commitment to supporting young people around the world. In 10 United Nations country teams, inter-agency working groups have been established on children, youth and adolescents.

160. The United Nations International Drug Control Programme sponsored a Youth Vision Drug Abuse Forum bringing together young people from around the world to exchange ideas on tackling drug-related problems. The General Assembly at its special session on the world drug problem agreed on the importance of reducing the demand for drugs as well as cutting off the supply. The World AIDS Campaign focused on young people in both 1998 and 1999.

161. UNIFEM, UNFPA, UNDP and UNESCO, in partnership with civil society organizations, sponsored the Global Meeting of Generations initiative that fosters dialogue between generations to further human development in the twenty-first century. UNICEF, with the support of the Rockefeller Foundation and the United Nations Foundation, collaborated with a number of United Nations and non-governmental organization partners to develop and support inter-regional dialogues aimed at formulating policies and programmes which take account of the needs of young people. UNFPA continued to foster regional and national cooperation in adolescent reproductive health by sponsoring a number of events in the Caribbean, sub-Saharan Africa, Asia and the Arab States.

Advocating higher and more focused social spending

162. The 20/20 initiative, by which recipient countries agree to dedicate 20 per cent of their national budgets—and donors give 20 per cent of their development assistance—to social development spending, has drawn attention to the need to increase spending on social development priorities and has stimulated debate on donor and in-country policies. UNICEF, UNDP, UNFPA and the World Bank collaborated both at the international level and in specific countries on this issue over the past year, building on work begun after the Social Summit.

163. Thirty-five social sector expenditure reviews have been completed to date. In October 1998, at the second international meeting on the 20/20 initiative, representatives from 48 countries adopted the Hanoi consensus, which emphasizes the need for increased investment in social services.

164. The challenge posed by the global AIDS epidemic is growing increasingly serious. By the end of 1998, over 30 million people were infected by HIV/AIDS and almost 14 million had succumbed to the disease. Half of the 6 million new cases of HIV infection in 1998 were young people aged 15 to 24. According to the World Health Report 1999, AIDS is now the most deadly infectious disease in the world, killing even more people than tuberculosis.

165. In a number of poor countries, HIV/AIDS is having a major negative impact on progress towards achieving social development goals. For example, according to a report produced by the Department of Economic and Social Affairs in 1998, the nine countries most affected by AIDS will have experienced a 10-year reduction in life expectancy by the year 2000, and a 16-year reduction by 2010-2015. By 2005-2010, infant mortality in the most affected countries could be 28 per cent higher than it would have been in the absence of AIDS, and mortality under age 5 could be 51 per cent higher. Social and economic losses create a downward spiral, reversing hard-won development gains and depriving those infected of any chance of a decent livelihood.

166. In 1998, the United Nations International Drug Control Programme became the seventh sponsor of the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS), joining UNICEF, UNDP, UNFPA, UNESCO, the World Health Organization (WHO) and the World Bank. UNAIDS achievements include the production of a series of guides to the strategic planning process for national responses to HIV/AIDS (with UNAIDS support, 13 countries in Asia and Africa have now completed their strategic plans); the publication of over 100 guides to best practices, which include advocacy material, technical updates and case studies; preparations for a new International Partnership against HIV/AIDS in Africa; the establishment of an inter-agency working group on HIV/AIDS with the participation of 115 United Nations country teams; and the launch of a joint initiative by UNAIDS, UNIFEM and UNFPA to build the capacity of women's organizations and Governments to address the challenges of HIV/AIDS.

Sustainable development

167. The seventh session of the Commission on Sustainable Development in 1999 attracted a record number of ministerial participants, confirming the role of the Commission as the main high-level intergovernmental forum on sustainable development. Participants agreed to address the most pressing problems of sustainable development and management of the world's oceans and seas; to promote sustainable development in tourism; and to encourage further action to achieve more sustainable production and consumption. In addition, the five-year review of progress on the Barbados Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, which represent more than one fifth of the membership of the United Nations, will be held in September 1999.

168. The United Nations Development Group and other bodies in the United Nations system have continued to work together on sustainable development and environmental issues. In January 1999, the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and Habitat, in collaboration with UNDP and the World Bank, launched a joint regional initiative to improve water management in African cities. The Office to Combat Desertification and Drought continues to provide assistance to a number of countries. To date, 49 countries have benefited.

169. The United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration promoted environment-friendly mining activities in Mozambique and Suriname and distributed guidebooks on CD-ROM to over 50 countries. In 1998, UNDP completed 75 conversion projects in 19 countries under the Montreal Protocol, which supports the conversion of contaminated industrial sites into usable, safe land. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and WFP together identified sustainable environmental management practices in areas hosting large numbers of refugees. ESCWA continued to work towards developing environmental indicators for the Arab region.

170. In 1998, the Department of Economic and Social Affairs, the World Energy Council and UNDP jointly launched the world energy assessment to provide background scientific and technical data for bodies involved in furthering the work of Agenda 21. Through their partnership in the Global Environment Facility (GEF), UNDP, UNEP and the World Bank have helped 138 countries to prepare national strategies to implement their commitments under the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and the Convention on Biological Diversity.

171. Reform of the United Nations Secretariat has improved user access to the analytical and technical work of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs. This in turn will help ensure that the results of policy deliberations in inter-governmental forums, particularly the Commission on Sustainable Development, contribute more effectively to United Nations support for national sustainable development policies.

Africa

172. Working with national and regional partners to improve the lives of people in Africa remains a priority for the United Nations Development Group. The challenges are clear. An estimated 44 per cent of Africans, and 51 per cent of those in sub-Saharan Africa, are living in absolute poverty. Of the 30 million people infected by HIV/AIDS in the world, 23 million live in sub-Saharan Africa; 91 per cent of all AIDS deaths in the world have occurred in 34 countries—29 of which are in Africa. If Africa is to reach the Social Summit's target of halving absolute poverty by 2015, annual GDP must rise by at least 7 per cent until 2015. Growth is currently around 3 per cent and is expected to reach 3.5 per cent in 2000. Africa's debt burden increased from $344 billion in 1997 to $350 billion in 1998, a sum equivalent to 300 per cent of exports of goods and services. Africa received less than $5 billion in foreign direct investment, a mere 3 per cent of global flows.

Enhancing United Nations collaboration for the development of Africa

173. I presented my report on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1999. It highlighted the need for substantial and sustained economic growth and social development to meet the challenges faced by African countries. Against this background, the United Nations Development Group, with some of the Executive Committees, has developed an action plan to identify common activities and the most appropriate contributions from individual agencies.

174. The Administrative Committee on Coordination continues to stress the need to tie United Nations initiatives in Africa—the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s and its implementing arm, the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative—into other development undertakings, such as the Tokyo International Conference on African Development, the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative, the Alliance for African Industrialization and the coordinated follow-up to the United Nations conferences. The first annual regional coordination meeting of the United Nations system in Africa was held at Nairobi, in March 1999, chaired by the Deputy Secretary-General. It adopted the System-wide Special Initiative and the New Agenda as the framework for coordinating the United Nations approach to the development of Africa.

175. Under the auspices of the United Nations Development Group, 10 African countries have participated in the UNDAF pilot phase. Ten more UNDAFs are expected in Africa by the end of 1999 in preparation for the programme cycles beginning in 2001.

Tackling the challenges of poverty in Africa

176. The Jobs for Africa programme is an integral part of the System-wide Special Initiative and meets commitments made at the Social Summit. It aims to develop and strengthen the capacity of national and regional institutions and networks in 10 participating countries to combat poverty by generating productive employment. Following up on the Summit and taking on the fight against poverty was also the topic for a subregional meeting organized by the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) in March 1999.

177. The United Nations Development Programme has sponsored a number of long-term national studies to enable Governments to define objectives for poverty eradication, taking into account the effects of globalization and investment flows. A regional decision-making information system was set up in Zimbabwe in 1999 with outreach to other African countries. The programme has benefited 14 countries to date, and another 30 have made formal requests for support.

178. The Africa 2000 initiative of UNDP, providing support to rural women in Africa for sustainable development activities, had sponsored over 700 projects by the end of 1998. At a cost of $1.5 billion, WFP is providing assistance to approximately 21 million people in Africa through 100 projects. In southern Africa, WFP has been working with national partners through its vulnerability analysis and mapping units to promote the use of vulnerability monitoring and analysis to develop contingency plans for tackling regional natural disasters.

179. The United Nations Centre for Human Settlements established the African Forum on Urban Poverty in September 1998. Its Urban Management Programme, supported by UNDP and the World Bank, already covers 26 African countries. The Sustainable Cities Programme, implemented jointly with UNEP, operates in eight African countries.

Focusing on health and education for Africa

180. Led by UNESCO, UNICEF and the World Bank, education activities under the Special Initiative focused during the year on improving primary education in 16 countries where primary school enrolment is low. United Nations agencies were also involved in improving the quality of education in Cameroon, Cote d'Ivoire, Ethiopia, Madagascar, Malawi, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania.

181. UNAIDS, together with its sponsors (UNICEF, UNDP, UNFPA, UNESCO, WHO, the World Bank and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme), intensified its campaign against HIV and AIDS in Africa. Seeking as broad a base as possible for its campaign, UNAIDS has brought together Governments, regional bodies, bilateral development agencies, multilateral organizations and the corporate sector, with commitments from large pharmaceutical corporations, the entertainment industry and the Global Business Council on AIDS, as well as civil society organizations.

182. Africa, whose peoples are major victims of malaria, is a principal beneficiary of the WHO-led Roll Back Malaria campaign, which aims to cut deaths from malaria by 50 per cent by 2010 and 75 per cent by 2015. Other United Nations initiatives, such as National Immunization Days, have also helped women and children in many African countries.

183. The work of UNFPA in assisting countries in Africa to implement the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development has led to concrete improvement in reproductive health care in 19 countries. Four countries have introduced legislation outlawing the practice of female genital mutilation.

184. A major focus of the development activities of WFP is on enhancing women's capacity to increase household food security.

Building national capacity for good governance and trade

185. Collaboration with national, regional and international partners in Africa is central to the United Nations efforts to strengthen national capacity for good governance and trade. The Special Initiative governance group established the Africa Governance Forum and is creating comprehensive databases to analyse government practices. The Forum met in June 1999 in Mali to examine the link between governance and conflict management. In addition, UNIFEM's programme on governance and leadership is promoting greater gender balance in decision-making by voters, candidates and elected representatives in Africa.

186. UNDP, together with UNCTAD, UNIDO, UNESCO, the World Trade Organization (WTO), the African Development Bank, OAU and ECA, organized a forum in March 1999 to consider how to create a positive environment for investment and to enhance competitiveness.

187. The Special Initiative trade group, led by UNCTAD in collaboration with WTO and the International Trade Centre, has developed an integrated framework for trade-related technical assistance. The UNCTAD Asia-Africa Business Networking Forum (March 1999) is itself an example of the United Nations continuing support for South-South cooperation.

United Nations Fund for International Partnerships

188. Since the establishment of the United Nations Fund for International Partnerships in March 1998, four funding rounds have been completed and almost $140 million awarded to 79 projects covering population and women (33 projects), children's health (15 projects), environment (20 projects) and selected United Nations causes (11 projects) which include the provision of support to the Secretary-General's reform programme. Funds have also been earmarked for emergency assistance relief efforts to the Kosovo region.

189. At the beginning of 1999, a more streamlined and efficient funding process was launched. Separate "programme framework groups" were established to provide guidance for the preparation of specific projects. The groups include population and women, focusing particularly on adolescent girls and the quality of reproductive health services; children's health, focusing particularly on decreasing childhood mortality and reducing smoking; and the environment, focusing particularly on biodiversity and energy and climate change.

Chapter III

Meeting humanitarian commitments

190. The past year was fraught with humanitarian disasters. The extraordinary rise in the number and scale of natural disasters was particularly striking. New armed conflicts broke out with enormous loss of life, massive forced displacement and human suffering in Eritrea, Ethiopia and the southern Balkans, while protracted emergencies continued in Afghanistan, Angola, Sierra Leone, the Sudan and elsewhere.

191. Timely humanitarian action in many countries continued to be compromised by the deliberate targeting of civilians and humanitarian workers and denial of access to humanitarian assistance. Responding to this unacceptable flouting of humanitarian norms, the Security Council initiated a series of open debates on the protection of civilians in armed conflict.

Coordinating humanitarian action

192. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs has continued to strengthen its three core functions: coordination of humanitarian action, policy development and humanitarian advocacy.

193. Coordination efforts focused on improving the environment for humanitarian action in a number of ways, including negotiation with parties to conflicts over access and security; reinforcement of the principles of humanitarian action; and advocacy with the Security Council and other bodies. The need for greater respect for, adherence to, and application of, international laws and norms relating to the rights of civilians has been a central focus in this year of the fiftieth anniversary of the Geneva Conventions. In January and February 1999, the Security Council held two open sessions on this issue. The resulting presidential statement requested that I submit a report on the protection of civilians to the Security Council in September 1999, identifying innovative ways in which the Council, acting within its mandate, could strengthen its capacity to ensure the protection of civilians in conflict.

194. For the first time, the consolidated inter-agency appeals were launched simultaneously (in December 1998 for 1999). As at 31 July, the response to the appeals was about 49 per cent of the amount sought. Excluding south-eastern Europe, however, the response was 31.6 per cent, only marginally better than in 1998. The geographical and sectoral commitment of funds has been extremely uneven, meaning that not even minimum levels of assistance could be guaranteed in certain sectors and that some countries were left critically underfunded. The poor response to crises in Africa, at a time when many donor countries are enjoying a period of prolonged prosperity, was particularly distressing.

195. Effective coordination is particularly important in designing the inter-agency response to the needs of internally displaced persons, since there is no single international lead agency. Work carried out jointly by my Special Representative for internally displaced persons, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs has formed the basis for a policy paper of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee, which will soon be finalized, on protection of internally displaced persons. It identifies ways of ensuring that protection responsibilities are discharged effectively and sets out a system that can rapidly assign responsibilities to different agencies in emergency situations. Other initiatives during the past year included the undertaking of a review of country situations affected by internal displacement, the preparation of a compendium of good field practice and the development of a global database of internally displaced persons.

196. As the number of major natural and environmental disasters has increased, efforts to enhance the coordination of United Nations responses to them have included the launch of three major inter-agency appeals—for hurricane Mitch and for the floods in Bangladesh and China. In addition, 17 United Nations disaster assessment and coordination teams were dispatched during the year. Situation reports on over 60 natural disasters were disseminated. Twenty-eight international appeals were launched, and over $1 billion was raised. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and UNDP jointly organized an international disaster management workshop in Beijing in June 1999 to examine ways of enhancing response-preparedness and capacity-building and bridging the gap between emergency relief and early recovery. Regional workshops and seminars were also held. These focused on the development of contingency plans and the strengthening of disaster assessment and coordination teams in disaster-prone regions.

197. A series of thematic events and regional conferences was organized to mark the end of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction. This culminated in a programme forum, held at Geneva in July 1999 and involving all partners in the Framework of Action for the Decade. A comprehensive disaster reduction strategy for the twenty-first century was adopted by the forum, and reviewed by the Economic and Social Council. The latter evaluated the achievements of the Decade and adopted a resolution to ensure continuation of United Nations multisectoral and concerted disaster reduction activities in the future.

198. The Executive Committee on Humanitarian Affairs, under the chairmanship of the Emergency Relief Coordinator, has achieved greater synergy in dealing with issues that have strong security, peacekeeping and political implications for humanitarian assistance. FAO and WHO have recently been invited to participate in the meetings of the Executive Committee. The Inter-Agency Standing Committee remained the principal forum for inter-agency coordination, consultation and decision-making on humanitarian issues.

199. The Inter-Agency Standing Committee has set up working groups on a number of issues. These include natural disasters, improving the consolidated appeal process, human rights and humanitarian action, internally displaced persons, gender and humanitarian response, training, small arms, assistance to countries in the Commonwealth of Independent States, post-conflict reintegration and millennium initiatives. The admission of the World Bank as a member in March 1999 has further strengthened the effectiveness of the Committee. Major priority has also been given to strengthening the systems for coordination in the field, particularly the capacity of humanitarian coordinators, through, for example, the joint consultation of resident and humanitarian coordinators that was held in December 1998. Generic guidelines for strategic frameworks have also been developed from work piloted in Afghanistan.

Delivering humanitarian services

200. In the past year, the United Nations assisted countries and regions affected by over 60 natural disasters, as well as by man-made emergencies. These included Afghanistan, Angola, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Burundi, the Republic of the Congo, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Georgia, Guinea-Bissau, Liberia, the Russian Federation, Rwanda, Sierra Leone, Somalia, the Sudan, Tajikistan, Uganda, the former Yugoslavia and the Great Lakes region of Africa. This assistance has often involved innovative joint initiatives. Some examples are the collaboration on health issues between the Pan American Health Organization and UNICEF against cholera in Central America; initiatives undertaken by UNHCR and UNICEF in West Africa on child soldiers and unaccompanied children; and initiatives on gender by UNICEF and WFP.

201. Attacks on humanitarian personnel continued to pose major problems. In 1998, 22 United Nations staff members and many more local and international personnel from non-governmental organizations involved in complex emergencies lost their lives. The loss of humanitarian personnel in several direct attacks in Angola and Somalia illustrated the growing extent of this problem. The World Food Programme lost 12 staff members in 1998. As a result, it has sought to improve staff security by providing at least three days of basic security awareness training for all agency personnel and making key improvements in the security of field facilities.

202. Disbursements of food aid increased in 1998. WFP assisted nearly 75 million people, with contributions amounting to $ 1.7 billion in 1998, a 33 per cent increase over 1997. In recognition of the challenges posed by its increased involvement in relief assistance, WFP established the Protracted Relief and Recovery Operation, a programme aimed at ensuring a seamless transition from emergency relief and life-saving activities to post-crisis recovery.

203. The health assistance programmes of WHO focused on assessing the health needs of those affected by emergencies and disasters, providing health information, assisting in health sector coordination and planning and implementing priority programmes in areas such as mental health, control of epidemics, immunization, pharmaceuticals and nutrition. Priority was given to strengthening the coordination between national health authorities and the international community, as well as to bridging the gap between recovery, rehabilitation and health development activities. Special efforts were made to eradicate polio and to control malaria in countries affected by emergencies, to improve health systems in the Palestinian self-rule areas, and to observe the equitable distribution of commodities imported under Security Council resolution 986 (1995) and the rehabilitation of health services in Iraq.

204. Humanitarian conventions are increasingly flouted in modern warfare, and children are major victims. In addressing the needs of children in conflict, UNICEF has continued to press for commitments from Governments and military bodies to act more effectively to protect children. It has urged an end to the use of child soldiers and the universal adoption of the global ban on anti-personnel landmines. Its in-country programmes to protect children in conflict zones have included mine-awareness programmes, and the negotiation of ceasefire agreements to allow the provision of food or immunization to those in need.

205. My Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict has been working to increase global awareness of the impact of conflict on children and to mobilize the political support of both Governments and civil society to strengthen the protection, rights and welfare of children in armed conflict and its aftermath. At the country level, he undertook a series of visits to countries in, or affected by, armed conflict and sought to obtain commitments from the parties to conflicts and other key actors to providing better protection and welfare for children. Efforts are also under way to promote the inclusion of the protection and needs of children in peace processes, targeting several countries that are undergoing peace-building efforts. In August 1999, the Security Council adopted a resolution stressing the need for greater and more effective efforts to protect children in armed conflicts.

206. In recognizing children and women as bearers of rights who may play a central role in peace-building efforts, UNICEF has contributed to developing and conducting children's rights and gender awareness training for peacekeeping forces. As disasters and crises can affect women and men differently, the Inter-Agency Standing Committee has also developed a common policy on the integration of a gender perspective into humanitarian assistance programmes.

207. The majority of those affected by disasters live in the countryside. Here, FAO has played an important role in assessing damage to local production capacities, providing early warning of impending food emergencies, producing information on crop and food supplies and rendering technical advice to the numerous actors involved in agricultural emergency assistance. FAO has also provided considerable support to disaster-stricken farmers, helping to bridge the gap between relief and rehabilitation.

208. Many of today's gravest humanitarian crises are exacerbated by the use of mines, which in many areas continue to pose deadly threats to civilians long after hostilities have ceased. Responding to the threats posed by landmines, the Mine Action Service of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations has coordinated a number of inter-agency assessment missions, which have defined the problems and challenges facing individual countries and communities and proposed common and comprehensive responses. In addition, it has worked with its partners to develop and implement programmes in mine awareness, victim assistance, mine clearance and advocacy. These and other activities have been strongly supported by Member States, both through contributions to the Voluntary Trust Fund for Mine Action and through the many ratifications of the Ottawa Convention, which allowed it to enter into force on 1 March 1999.

209. The humanitarian community increasingly recognizes that it is part of its responsibility to ensure that relief programmes pave the way for sustainable development. UNDP and humanitarian agencies are working together to ensure that a concern for long-term sustainable human development informs relief operations. Programmes for the demobilization of former combatants, comprehensive mine action, the return and reintegration of refugees and internally displaced persons and the restoration of the institutions of good governance reflect this concern.

210. The United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) combines humanitarian and development objectives in providing relief and social services to approximately 3.6 million Palestine refugees. A special feature of the Agency's operations has been its ability to maintain essential services, often on an emergency basis, in war and conflict situations. However, the Agency's continuing financial deficit, which reached $70 million against its 1999 budget of $322 million, has inevitably had a negative effect on the level and standard of services.

Assisting refugees

211. By the end of 1998, there were 21.4 million refugees and persons of concern to UNHCR compared with 22.3 million in 1997. Just over half (11.4 million) were refugees; the remainder comprised internally displaced persons, returnees, asylum-seekers and stateless people. The vast majority of refugees and persons of concern were in Africa, Asia and Europe.

212. In contrast to previous years, there were no large refugee movements in 1998 or in the beginning of 1999. Though numerous, the emergencies the humanitarian community dealt with were relatively small in size and of low visibility. This pattern changed dramatically in the last week of March 1999. From then, over the next three months, 850,000 Kosovar Albanians were forced from their homes—one of the largest and most rapid refugee exoduses of modern times. UNHCR and its partners, with the logistical support of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, mounted a huge relief operation to assist those who streamed into Albania, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Montenegro. More than 90,000 refugees were moved to countries in Europe and beyond under the auspices of the humanitarian evacuation programme. When peace was restored to Kosovo, the refugees returned almost as suddenly and in as large numbers as they had left. In just two weeks, more than 400,000 refugees crossed back into Kosovo.

213. The Kosovo crisis provides a graphic example of the close relationship between human rights abuses, war and refugee flows. The humanitarian and human rights communities both increasingly accept that responses to humanitarian crises must also tackle human rights failings. In Kosovo, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights broke new ground by dispatching envoys to gather information about human rights violations and establishing field offices expressly for this purpose.

214. Africa provides many more tragic examples. The crises in Guinea-Bissau and Sierra Leone forced hundreds of thousands to flee their homes. Renewed fighting in the Democratic Republic of the Congo not only provoked new movements of refugees and displaced persons, but also made it extremely hazardous for humanitarian agencies to continue to provide relief. Late in 1998, the armed conflict between Eritrea and Ethiopia led to a new spate of displacement and mass expulsions in the Horn of Africa, while the internal war in the Republic of the Congo impelled 25,000 Congolese refugees from the Pool region to cross into Bas-Congo in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

215. There was only limited voluntary repatriation in 1998. Ethiopian refugees were able to return from the Sudan; refugees returned from Ethiopia to north-west Somalia, indicating the restoration of some degree of peace and stability to at least parts of the Horn of Africa. In West Africa, the repatriation of Tuareg refugees to Mali and the Niger was completed, while sizeable numbers of Liberians returned home, either spontaneously (160,000 refugees) or with UNHCR assistance (110,000 since 1997). In Central America, long-standing Guatemalan refugee problems moved towards a successful conclusion thanks to a combination of voluntary repatriation and local integration in Mexico.

216. In other situations, however, continuing violence or a breakdown in political negotiations disrupted plans for refugees to return, leading in extreme cases to further exoduses. This was notably the case in Angola, where renewed hostilities caused a new wave of refugees and generated even greater numbers of internally displaced persons, forcing UNHCR to suspend its repatriation programme. Armed conflict in southern Sudan ruled out plans for the voluntary repatriation of some 240,000 refugees from Ethiopia and Uganda; some 124,000 Somali refugees in Kenya were likewise unable to return to their country of origin; around 120,000 Sahrawi refugees continued to live in exile, waiting for a successful conclusion to negotiations on Western Sahara; refugees from Burundi, numbering some 270,000, had to remain in the United Republic of Tanzania, where their presence was a major source of tension between the two States.

217. Solutions proved equally elusive in other parts of the world. In May 1998, internal conflict again broke out in Georgia, prompting 40,000 people to flee from the Gali area. Many were being displaced for the second time. The repatriation of Afghan refugees from Pakistan and the Islamic Republic of Iran was impeded by continuing instability in Afghanistan, where the reintegration and rehabilitation activities of UNHCR came to a virtual halt. The repatriation of hundreds of thousands of Tamil refugees to Sri Lanka from India proved impossible as a result of the intensity of the Sri Lankan civil war. UNHCR urged the Governments of Bangladesh and Myanmar to accelerate the voluntary repatriation of the estimated 20,000 Muslim refugees who remain in Cox's Bazar, Bangladesh. The repatriation programme resumed in November 1998.

218. The challenges facing UNHCR in these volatile and often stalemated situations are compounded by the fact that safe refuge in neighbouring States, or in countries further afield, is becoming increasingly difficult to secure for victims of war or human rights abuses. Countries in both the developing and the industrialized world are increasingly reluctant to accept the basic obligations of refugee protection. Poor countries argue that they have had to bear a disproportionate burden of the global refugee problem for too long.

219. Responding to these and other concerns, UNHCR has intensified its efforts under its protection mandate, giving prominence to advocacy activities such as the global campaign to promote States' accession to international instruments for the protection of refugees and to the conventions on statelessness. At the same time, it has taken steps to ensure that protection needs are better integrated into assistance programmes.

Chapter IV

Engaging with globalization

220. Globalization is a summary term for the increasingly complex interactions between individuals, enterprises, institutions and markets across national borders. The manifold challenges it poses, challenges that cannot successfully be addressed by nation States acting on their own, provide the most immediate and obvious reason for strengthening multilateral cooperation. Globalization is manifest in the growth in trade, technology and financial flows; in the continuing growth and increasing influence of international civil society actors; in the global operations of transnational corporations; in the vast increase in transboundary communication and information exchanges, most notably via the Internet; in transboundary transmission of disease and ecological impact; and in the increased internationalization of certain types of criminal activity. Its benefits and risks are distributed unequally, and the growth and prosperity it provides for many is offset by the increasing vulnerability and marginalization of others—and by the growth of "uncivil society". During the past year, the United Nations has been examining the various dimensions of globalization—economic, social, environmental and gender—in some detail.

Economic and social dimensions

221. Only a year ago, a worldwide global recession was seen as a distinct possibility. Fortunately, such an outcome has thus far been avoided. Two years of crisis-induced international financial turbulence have nonetheless reduced global economic growth substantially. Other than Japan, the developed economies—conventionally viewed as the engines of growth in the world economy—have barely been affected, but the vast majority of developing and transition economies have experienced at the very least a slowdown—and in some cases a reversal—in economic growth, with its concomitant setbacks in social progress. The more favourable trends of the pre-crisis era may well be restored, but this will take time, and the losses of 1998 and 1999 can never be made up.

Meanwhile, the world remains vulnerable to similar disruptions in the future, underlining the need for action to prevent such a possibility.

222. In the majority of countries, growth for the foreseeable future will fall short of what is necessary to reduce the number of people living in poverty. In developing countries as a whole, 1.5 billion people continue to live on less than $ 1 per day. Unfortunately the commitment of the international community to the eradication of poverty has yet to produce results.

223. During the year, the United Nations provided a valuable platform for dialogue on the financial crisis, the persistence of poverty, the marginalization of Africa and the least developed countries and other dimensions of globalization.

224. At the intergovernmental level, the General Assembly is increasingly engaged with globalization issues. In September 1998, the Assembly held a two-day high-level dialogue on the theme of the social and economic impact of globalization. This innovative process, which involved ministerial round tables and panels, drew together perspectives from Governments, civil society, the private sector and the United Nations system and demonstrated the United Nations unique ability to engage a broad range of stakeholders on issues of critical importance to the international community.

225. Recognizing both the challenges and opportunities that today's globalized financial markets present, particularly for developing and transition economies, the General Assembly decided in 1997 to consider convening a high-level international intergovernmental forum on financing for development, not later than 2001. In the first half of 1999, the Working Group of the General Assembly on Financing for Development agreed that the forum would address national, international and systemic issues relating to financing for development in a holistic manner in the context of globalization and interdependence. The Working Group proposed that the forum involve all relevant stakeholders, including IMF and the World Bank. In this regard, the Economic and Social Council has recommended setting up a joint task force of United Nations and Bretton Woods institutions to facilitate the further involvement of those institutions in the finance for development process launched by the General Assembly.

226. The Economic and Social Council conducted a number of internal debates on the socio-economic dimensions of globalization during the year, and is working more and more with its counterparts in the Bretton Woods institutions in tackling these broad issues. The second special high-level meeting of the Economic and Social Council with the Bretton Woods institutions was held in 1999 and was complemented by a number of exchanges between the Council and the Executive Directors of the World Bank and IMF. A further visit to the Council in the autumn of 1999 by the Executive Directors of the Bank and IMF, following their annual meetings, is being arranged. The Development Committee recommended that the United Nations further refine the principles and good practice in social policy prepared by the World Bank as follow-up to the World Summit for Social Development.

227. The functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council—those addressing social development, the advancement of women and population and development—continued their work on the follow-up to United Nations conferences. Each of these broad issues is profoundly affected by globalization. Major achievements were the finalization of the optional protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the five-year review of the International Conference on Population and Development, conducted at a special session of the General Assembly in June/July 1999. At its substantive session of 1999 the Economic and Social Council focused on the related issues of poverty, employment and gender equality, and the development of Africa.

228. The impact of globalization on gender in the world of work is both important and complex. It is the focus of a major study, the 1999 World Survey on the Role of Women in Development, which has involved ILO, UNCTAD, the Department of Economic and Social Affairs and the World Bank, and which I will submit to the General Assembly.

229. The Commission for Social Development considered the impact of globalization on access to social services and recommended greater international coordination in the planning and financing of such services. The Commission on Population and Development considered the relationship between population growth, structure and distribution and sustained economic growth and sustainable development. The deliberations of that Commission highlighted how demographic challenges are affected by globalization, particularly with respect to the international movement of people and the spread of infectious diseases such as HIV.

230. The Commission on Sustainable Development dealt with a number of important challenges posed by globalization, including the management of the oceans, tourism, which is one of the fastest growing industries in the world economy, and the development challenges confronting small island developing States. It has proposed, among other ideas, steps for strengthening the work of the General Assembly on ocean affairs and policy guidelines for sustainable tourism. It also looked at the Barbados Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States for the review which is to take place in the General Assembly in September 1999.

231. The Commission on Human Rights, recognizing that the driving forces of globalization can have major implications for human rights, particularly in developing countries, requested all treaty bodies, special rapporteurs, independent experts and working groups to address the impact of globalization on human rights within their respective mandates. The Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights was asked to submit a comprehensive study on this issue to the Commission at its next session.

232. At Headquarters, the new management arrangements and other reforms have enabled the Secretariat and other bodies to contribute more effectively to the ongoing dialogue on globalization. The Deputy Secretary-General leads a task force of senior officials which is coordinating the United Nations response to a range of globalization issues. The Executive Committee on Economic and Social Affairs has issued reports on the need for the reform of the global financial architecture and on the debt problems of developing countries. New reports are being prepared on development finance and the social dimensions of macroeconomic policy as a contribution to the debate on socio-economic questions related to globalization.

233. One of the consequences of globalization has been the reaffirmation of regional identity. Addressing regional issues and enhancing cooperation with regional institutions via the regional commissions remains central to the work of the Organization. During the past year, the regional commissions have provided the vehicle for in-depth consultations involving Governments and civil society on the agenda of the Millennium Assembly. Globalization has also become a major research focus for the regionally dispersed campuses of the United Nations University and many of the other United Nations research institutes around the world.

234. The challenges of globalization are too great for Governments and international organizations to deal with on their own. Meeting in October 1998, the Administrative Committee on Coordination placed the challenges arising from globalization and the adverse effects of the financial crisis centrally on its agenda. Following that meeting, the United Nations Development Group was requested to develop an action plan for United Nations country teams to work together with national partners in response to the challenges of globalization and the financial crisis in East Asia. Drawing on existing strategies, the plan presented a range of specific options under four broad areas of activity: (1) monitoring the impact of the crisis, particularly on vulnerable groups; (2) assisting individual countries to carry out the necessary structural and institutional reforms; (3) helping to strengthen and build basic social services and safety nets for the least fortunate; and (4) forging closer links with the World Bank.

235. At the first regular session of 1999 of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, in April, the members concluded that, to meet the challenges of globalization, the United Nations system needed to cooperate more effectively with the private sector and civil society, as well as with Governments. Cooperation can be deepened through partnerships, and it was for this reason that I proposed at Davos that the power and reach of the corporate sector be engaged to further the goals of the Organization. At the second regular session, in October 1999, the members of the Committee will endeavour to reach some overall conclusions on the capacity of the United Nations system to respond flexibly and effectively to the challenges of globalization in the next century.

236. Despite the need to involve all stakeholders in devising responses to globalization, much of the responsibility for addressing its negative consequences rests with the world's most advanced economies. That is why I wrote to the leaders of the G-8 prior to their summit in Cologne in June 1999, urging them to act to prevent the majority of the world's population being left on the margins of the global economy. I urged them to boost their own economic growth, to provide additional official development assistance and debt relief and to bring the representatives of the developing countries and economies in transition into the deliberations on a new international financial system. Although some progress has been made in these areas, far more needs to be done.

237. Progress was made at the Cologne summit on the issue of relieving the debt burden of the heavily indebted poor countries. However, financial and operational details still need to be discussed by the Ministers of Finance at the next session of the Interim Committee, and in the Economic and Social Council this year emphasis was placed on ensuring adequate financing for the full implementation of the G-7 decisions at Cologne. With regard to official development assistance the picture is bleak, however. Between 1990 and 1998, the share of GDP devoted to official development assistance in the developed economies fell from 0.33 per cent to 0.23 per cent.

238. Countries enter the global trading system from very different starting points, and globalization and liberalization affect them unevenly. There have been notable developing country successes where domestic reforms have provided increased dynamism to international trade and investment. Yet problems of access to markets, capital and technology remain pervasive, and many developing countries find it extremely difficult to make the institutional transformations necessary for a beneficial integration into the world economy. In November 1999, the third session of the Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization will be held at Seattle, and it now seems likely that the Conference will launch a new round of multilateral trade negotiations. In the Economic and Social Council this year, the idea of making this round into a "development round" enjoyed considerable support. A new trade and development round could provide major opportunities for developing countries to negotiate their integration into the world economic system on the basis of a positive agenda. UNDP and UNCTAD are joining forces to help developing countries to formulate negotiating positions for the Conference.

Globalization and the environment

239. Changes in the global environment do not respect national boundaries and represent one of the most critical challenges of globalization. Nowhere is this more evident than in the threats posed to the world's population by global warming. These threats can only be addressed by far-reaching multilateral agreement, but the political consensus necessary to achieve this has not been easy to obtain. The fourth session of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change was held in Buenos Aires in November 1998 to begin the process of deciding the rules for implementation of the mechanisms agreed in Kyoto in 1997 and to adopt a two-year plan of action.

240. The Tenth Meeting of the Parties to the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer was held at Cairo in November 1998. Its agenda focused on strengthening international efforts to reverse the destruction of the Earth's protective ozone layer. For the first time, it took up the challenge of making policies to protect the ozone layer consistent with the ongoing efforts to reduce emissions of the greenhouse gases that cause climate change.

241. In February 1999, at Cartagena, the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity examined the risks that biotechnology may pose for biological diversity and human health, its socio-economic implications for developing countries and the relevance of biosafety concerns in developing a precautionary approach to risk prevention. The international community is pursuing a protocol on biosafety that, among other aims, seeks to ensure that living modified organisms are transported into countries only with their prior informed consent.

242. Headway continues to be made in the global chemical safety agenda. International consensus was finally reached on the need for a legally binding treaty to promote chemical safety by preventing unwanted trade in hazardous chemicals and pesticides. In this regard, the Rotterdam Convention on the Prior Informed Consent Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade was opened for signature in September 1998. In January 1999, at the second negotiating session, solid progress was made in the drafting of a global treaty to reduce and eliminate environmental emissions and discharges of persistent organic pollutants. The Criteria Expert Group has now met. The third negotiating session will be held at Geneva in September 1999, and a series of regional workshops are planned.

243. The Global International Water Assessment, a major initiative led by UNEP and financed by the Global Environment Fund, was launched to assess key issues and problems facing the aquatic environment over the next four years. The Assessment focuses on the problems of shared, transboundary waters. It is designed not only to analyse current problems but also to develop scenarios for the future condition of the world's water resources. Policy options will be analysed with a view to providing sound scientific advice for decision makers and managers concerned with water resources.

244. At the European regional level, the third Ministerial Conference on Environment and Health was held in London in June 1999. The Protocol on Water and Health, attached to the United Nations/Economic Commission for Europe Convention on the Protection and Use of Transboundary Watercourses and International Lakes, was signed by 35 countries, including 16 countries in transition. The Conference built on foundations laid at previous environment and health conferences (Frankfurt, 1989, and Helsinki, 1994). It marked a new commitment to improving the environment and health in the twenty-first century in view of the need for international cooperation to deal with transboundary problems, such as air pollution, the continuing lack of access to safe water and sanitation, and transport, where solutions have yet to be found to the adverse effects of increasing traffic levels on health and the environment.

245. Achieving effective, legally binding agreements to safeguard the environment remains a major challenge, particularly with respect to creating environmentally sensitive international trade regimes. UNEP, together with UNCTAD, is analysing the social and environmental impact of the economic trends associated with globalization. It is focusing in particular on clarifying potential areas of conflict and convergence between the global trade and environmental agendas. It is also assessing the value of using economic instruments to help to implement environmental agreements.

246. UNEP has pursued my call at the World Economic Forum at Davos for engagement with the private sector, for example through the adoption of the International Declaration on Cleaner Production. There has also been substantial progress in the work of UNEP with the financial services industry and the telecommunication and tourism sectors, including through a new initiative with tour operators.

"Uncivil society"

247. Globalization has brought many benefits but it has also been associated with the unrelenting growth of cross-border illegal activities, which have created a netherworld economy, running into the hundreds of billions of dollars, which threatens the institutions of the State and civil society in many countries. Production, trafficking and abuse of illicit drugs and the spread of transnational organized crime are the main challenges faced by the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention, which consists of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the Centre for International Crime Prevention, in confronting "uncivil society".

248. At the twentieth special session of the General Assembly, Member States made a historic commitment to eliminate, or significantly reduce, the illicit cultivation of the opium poppy, coca bush and cannabis by 2008. The critical importance of demand reduction in the campaign to curtail drug consumption within 10 years was also highlighted.

249. On the supply side, the United Nations International Drug Control Programme is playing a catalytic role in developing an overall strategy for eliminating illicit crops and drug trafficking. This strategy is predicated on the assumption that the drug problem needs to be addressed holistically, which in turn requires close cooperation between the Programme and its national and international partners, as well as the international financial institutions. Reducing incentives to cultivate illegal crops requires improving the overall quality of life in rural communities; this in turn means that greater attention must be paid to providing farmers with legal economic alternatives, including basic health, education and social services. On the demand side, the Programme has launched a new initiative to assist Governments in establishing an epidemiological database that will inform officials about the extent and type of drug abuse occurring within their borders. This will help them to develop more effective prevention, treatment and rehabilitation policies.

250. The Centre for International Crime Prevention has continued to promote efforts to address the growing challenges of transnational crime. In March 1999, it launched three global programmes against transnational organized crime, trafficking in human beings and corruption. The Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime has made considerable headway in drafting the convention and its three protocols on trafficking in human beings, migrants and firearms.

251. The rapid expansion of the global financial system and the Internet has increased the challenges posed by money-laundering. In response, the global programme against money-laundering of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention is currently designing a global initiative, the United Nations Offshore Forum, to be launched early in 2000, to prevent the misuse of the offshore financial sector for the laundering of criminal proceeds. The wider objectives of this initiative are to improve transparency in international transactions and to stimulate greater international cooperation in dealing with transnational criminal activity involving offshore financial centres. The global programme against money-laundering will also continue to help Governments to meet the commitment they made at the twentieth special session of the General Assembly to adopt national money-laundering legislation and programmes by 2003.

Implications of globalization for security

252. Globalization has a number of implications for global and national security, some positive, some negative. Global market forces can generate wealth and spread prosperity, but where development is uneven the result can be increased political tensions and risks of instability—as we have recently witnessed following the East Asian financial crisis. Ironically, the same crisis reduced defence spending in the region, checking what some had characterized as a regional arms race. In Western Europe, the logic of market forces has deepened European integration, giving all parties a clear vested interest in the peaceful resolution of inter-State disputes.

253. Many commentators see an important association between the spread of economic liberalism, which is one of the hallmarks of globalization, and the expansion of political liberalism. More than 60 per cent of the world's States now have some form of democratic government. Proponents of what has been called the "democratic peace thesis" point out that democracies almost never fight each other and have far lower levels of internal armed conflict than non-democracies. They argue that insofar as the expansion of market forces facilitates the emergence of democracy, globalization has a positive impact on global security.

254. Globalization also has a dark side. Global demand for particular commodities, such as timber, diamonds and drugs, has provided the funds that have allowed warring factions to sustain fighting over many years. The same Internet that has facilitated the spread of human rights and good governance norms has also been a conduit for propagating intolerance and has diffused information necessary for building weapons of terror.

255. Rising levels of industrial development also mean that more and more States have access to the basic technologies needed to make weapons of mass destruction, while the increasingly open global market makes controlling traffic in the precursors of weapons of mass destruction increasingly difficult.

Chapter V

The international legal order and human rights

Introduction

256. As the nineteenth century gave way to the twentieth, Peace Conferences held at The Hague in 1899 and 1907 sought to humanize our world and to introduce rules to mitigate human suffering during armed conflict. The quest for the peaceful settlement of disputes had as its raison d'être the reduction of human suffering wrought by war. The efforts of the League of Nations and the United Nations to codify and progressively develop international law have seen their greatest vindication in the twentieth century in the international legal regime for the protection of human rights.

257. Today, declarations, conventions, treaties, bodies of principles and codes of conduct cover almost every conceivable aspect of the relationship between the individual and the State. Legal instruments exist to protect the rights of the child, to protect the rights of women to equality of treatment, to spell out the duties of Governments in respect of the observance of civil and political rights and economic, social and cultural rights, to proscribe racial discrimination, to prevent torture, to protect minorities and to promote and protect cultural diversity. We enter the new millennium with an international code of human rights that is one of the great accomplishments of the twentieth century.

258. Alas, human rights are flouted wantonly across the globe. Genocide, mass killings, arbitrary and summary executions, torture, disappearances, enslavement, discrimination, widespread debilitating poverty and the persecution of minorities still have to be stamped out. Institutions and mechanisms have been established at the United Nations to eradicate these blights on our civilization. They include the working groups and special rapporteurs of the Commission on Human Rights, the institutions and mechanisms established to promote the realization of economic, social and cultural rights and the right to development, and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights.

259. When we face egregious violations of human rights, documenting and exposing them has been, and will remain, of the utmost importance. In the future, it is our hope that the International Criminal Court, building on the examples set by the International Tribunals already established, will not only bring criminal despots and tyrants to justice but also act as a deterrent against gross violations of human rights everywhere.

260. The agreement reached to establish the International Criminal Court is a watershed in the history of international cooperation for the promotion of human welfare and for the universal realization of human rights. Developments in this area are of such great potential import for the international legal order that they warrant detailed attention.

The International Criminal Court

261. Eighty-four States have now signed the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court. Four have ratified the statute, which will enter into force after ratification by 60 States. At the request of the General Assembly in December 1998, I convened the Preparatory Commission for the International Criminal Court established by the Rome Conference. The Commission held its first session in February 1999 and its second in July-August. A third session will be held in November-December.

262. The Preparatory Commission has made some progress in drafting the Rules of Procedure and Evidence and the Elements of Crimes for the future Court, but much remains to be done if the deadline of 30 June 2000 set by the Rome Conference is to be met. In the meantime, I urge Member States to ratify the statute and take the necessary steps for its implementation.

The International Tribunals

263. At the request of the General Assembly in December 1998, I appointed five independent experts to review all aspects of the functioning of the two International Tribunals. The review is general in scope but will focus on judicial management, especially case management in the pre-trial phase. Its aim will be to ascertain whether resources can be deployed more efficiently. The review team is to report to the General Assembly towards the end of 1999.

264. The judgements of the two Tribunals have continued to clarify key aspects of international humanitarian law. These include the scope of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 1949; the application of, and the distinction between, the concepts of international and non-international armed conflict; the rules of international humanitarian law which are applicable in armed conflict of a non-international character; the meaning and scope of crimes against humanity, including their relation to armed conflict; the definition of torture in international humanitarian law; the definition of rape in international criminal law; the criminality of the planning and preparation of violations of international humanitarian law; the meaning and scope of command responsibility; the legitimacy of duress as a defence against charges of war crimes and crimes against humanity; and elements of the offence of aiding and abetting in the planning, preparation or execution of a crime under international law.

265. Two main challenges confront the Tribunals. First, further steps must be taken to reduce the time the accused are held in custody awaiting trial and the time taken to conduct the trials themselves. Second, the Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia faces the additional, and immense, task of investigating crimes committed in Kosovo.

International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia

266. In the past year, the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia issued four indictments against nine individuals including, most notably, Slobodan Milosevic, President of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. Since its incep-don, the Tribunal has issued 27 public indictments against 90 individuals.

267. At the time this report was being prepared, the Tribunal was holding 30 people in custody. Five of those were awaiting appeals; 10 were being tried; 15 were awaiting trial. During the past year, the trials of eight accused were commenced, while judgements were handed down in respect of six accused, bringing the total of those subjected to judgement to seven. Five of the accused were found guilty of at least some of the charges against them; the other was found not guilty on all counts. In addition, the appeal of one accused against conviction and sentence was rejected by the Appeals Chamber, which at the same time allowed appeals by the Prosecutor against his acquittal on certain counts.

268. During the year, the President of the Tribunal wrote four times to the President of the Security Council protesting at the failure of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to cooperate with the Tribunal, its continuing failure to arrest and transfer three persons indicted by the Tribunal and its persistent refusal to permit the Prosecutor and her investigators to enter Kosovo.

269. As a consequence of events in Kosovo, the Office of the Prosecutor established temporary operational bases in Albania and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. The Prosecutor also received my authorization to recruit up to 300 type-II gratis personnel from Member States to undertake specialized forensic work in Kosovo as soon as international forces were deployed. To date, 11 States have finalized agreements with the Organization to provide experts for this purpose.

270. Austria and Sweden concluded agreements on enforcing the sentences of the Tribunal, bringing to five the number of those agreements concluded to date. Negotiations are under way with other States to secure similar agreements.

271. On 16 October 1998, the General Assembly elected three judges to staff a new, third Trial Chamber. They took up their duties on 16 November 1998. Judge Gabrielle Kirk McDonald announced her resignation from the Tribunal, with effect from 17 November 1999. Following consultations with the Presidents of the Security Council and the General Assembly, I appointed Patricia McGowan Wald, a national of the United States of America, to serve out the remainder of Judge McDonald's term of office, which ends in November 2001. The Prosecutor of the two Tribunals, Louise Arbour, announced her resignation with effect from 15 September 1999. On 11 August 1999, the Security Council appointed my nominee, Carla Del Ponte, a national of Switzerland, as Prosecutor of both Tribunals, effective 15 September 1999.

International Tribunal for Rwanda

272. During the past year, the International Tribunal for Rwanda issued two indictments against five individuals. Since its inception, it has served 28 indictments on 48 people. Thirty-eight people are currently in custody under the authority of the Tribunal; 5 accused are waiting for appeals to be heard; 3 are being tried; and 30 are awaiting trial. Five accused have already been found, or pleaded, guilty on counts involving genocide. All five have been sentenced. Appeals are pending from all of these judgements or sentences.

273. Mali became the first State to conclude an agreement on enforcing the sentences of the Tribunal. Negotiations are under way with other States for the conclusion of further such agreements.

274. On 3 November 1998, the General Assembly elected nine judges to the Tribunal's Trial Chambers. At the Tribunal's plenary session in June 1999, Judge Navanethem Pillay was elected President of the Tribunal, replacing Judge Laïty Kama, who was ineligible for re-election to that post.

The way forward

275. Throughout this report, I have sought to emphasize that peace, development and human rights are interrelated. I have also noted that the combination of underdevelopment, globalization and rapid change poses particular challenges to the international human rights regime. This makes it doubly important that we insist on the responsibility of Governments to uphold human rights regardless of their political, economic, social or cultural systems and notwithstanding their economic and social situation. Stated simply: the pursuit of development, the engagement with globalization, and the management of change must all yield to human rights imperatives rather than the reverse.

276. Respect for human rights, as proclaimed in the international instruments, is central to our mandate. If we lose sight of this fundamental truth, all else will fail.

Chapter VI

Managing change

Creating a culture of communication

277. The creation of a new culture of communication within the United Nations is central to our preparations for meeting the challenges of the twenty-first century. In pursuing this goal, the Department of Public Information is implementing a new outreach strategy, in partnership with organizations in civil society throughout the world. The aim is to find new ways to publicize United Nations activities and to highlight our successes. In support of this aim, the Department has worked during the year to promote greater openness and transparency by making more information more widely available, and by improving contact between United Nations officials and the world's media. At the same time, the United Nations programme for broadcasters and journalists from developing countries, which the Department sponsors and runs each year, is engaging younger generations of practitioners and helping to build networks of media professionals who can raise awareness of the work of the United Nations around the world.

278. The Department plans to improve the speed of delivery of United Nations news by initiating a Web-based United Nations News Service which will use e-mail to alert journalists to important news stories emanating from the Organization. Wherever possible, such news alerts will be tailored to the journalists' interests and will be linked to a United Nations News Centre on the home page which will provide greater details about each story outlined in the news alert. Tele- and videoconferencing press briefings by senior United Nations officials from Headquarters and other news-making sites will also help to bring United Nations news to the desks of reporters around the world. United Nations information centres will play a key role by gathering supplementary information from regional centres and monitoring domestic media coverage.

279. The Department has overall responsibility for the United Nations Internet web site, which is undergoing constant refinement. In 1999, a new audio-visual home page was created on the site. United Nations radio and television programmes are now available almost immediately to Internet users around the globe. The United Nations home page (www.un.org) is accessed 3 million times a week, from 133 countries. Use has increased dramatically over the past three years: from 11.5 million hits in 1996 to 98.5 million in 1998, and a projected 150 million in 1999. Intergovernmental support will be vital to sustain the web site in all United Nations languages and keep it up to date, both in content and in the light of technological advances.

280. More than 800,000 schools from over 100 countries have accessed the Department's Cyberschoolbus (www.un.org/cyberschoolbus), an on-line interactive education project which brings together diverse communities of students and educators to learn about the work of the United Nations. The Schools Demining Schools project, for example, raised funds from school-children in donor countries to help to clear mines around schools in war-torn countries. It also helped raise awareness about mines among students who corresponded by e-mail with mine-clearance teams in Afghanistan and Mozambique.

281. During the year, the Department presented a wide range of exhibitions and special events at Headquarters in New York and elsewhere in collaboration with United Nations agencies and outside partners, such as the Walt Disney Company, the American Foundation for AIDS Research (AmFAR) and the Freedom Forum. The Department has received a record number of requests for assistance for projects to mark the year 2000.

282. Among its services to the general public, the Department continues to target young people both through direct, face-to-face contact—such as guided tours, briefings and special events—and workshops for students and teachers. In December 1998, almost 400 young people from 125 schools in 7 countries attended a student conference on human rights at Headquarters. Videoconferencing is also an increasingly important means of connecting young audiences everywhere with the United Nations. In addition, a special effort is being made to involve young people from around the world in the global communications strategy for the Millennium Assembly.

283. To communicate effectively, the United Nations has to be able to get its message across to citizens of Member States as well as Governments. The United Nations information centres play a vital role here by organizing events and disseminating information in local languages that demonstrate how the work of the United Nations is relevant to the daily lives of people everywhere. Their presence on the ground and familiarity with local conditions allow the centres to deliver the Organization's message more effectively to domestic audiences. The United Nations global vision finds a local voice through the relationships that the centres develop with the local community.

284. During the past year, the information centres, in cooperation with Governments and non-governmental organizations, have focused on educational and youth activities, such as model United Nations conferences, after-school educational programmes and community service projects.

285. The Dag Hammarskjöld Library has further increased its "virtual library" capacity by using the Internet to link to United Nations depository libraries and other major libraries around the world. An increasing number of documents are now posted in Arabic, Chinese, French, Russian and Spanish, as well as English, while a new search engine guides users to major reference sources and the most frequently requested United Nations reports. A newsletter is distributed electronically to more than 330 depository libraries around the world, drawing their attention to newly released United Nations documents. The Library is offering on-line training courses and, as part of its outreach to civil society, particularly in developing countries, is conducting regional training programmes to draw attention to the availability of on-line information at the United Nations.

Administration and management

286. A new vision for management is central to my programme for the reform of the Organization. The strategy which is implementing that vision seeks to create simplified structures and a leaner and more efficient Secretariat run by empowered managers who are committed to managerial excellence and accountability. With the support of staff and management, we are making steady progress towards meeting our goals of streamlining procedures across a range of areas.

287. The Management Policy Office has established an ongoing dialogue with programme managers regarding the implementation of productivity measures that will improve the delivery of mandated programmes while containing, or reducing, costs. It is my intent that efficiency savings will be deposited in a new Development Account and made available for additional projects.

288. Advanced information technologies have improved communication with staff and encouraged discussion on reform throughout the Organization. The Change Management Forum is the leading vehicle for debate, while the UN21 Awards have continued to recognize staff for innovative ideas. The establishment of a Human Resources Cyber Forum has allowed an on-line exchange of views on reform issues. The Ideas Data Bank, set up to encourage staff to offer ideas for management improvements, now contains almost 100 proposals.

289. We are committed to continue improving management practices, notably in reporting and monitoring systems and in enhancing management capacity and accountability.

Human resources management

290. The strategy for human resources management adopted by the General Assembly in 1994 was reconfirmed and expanded in 1996 and 1998. Implementation of the strategy is progressing steadily, with managerial delegation, empowerment and accountability being pursued on an incremental basis making use of a variety of monitoring mechanisms and the strengthening of specific methods of accountability.

291. An electronically accessible performance assessment system is now in place. It aligns performance appraisal more closely with results, identifies staff development needs and holds managers accountable for both managing and staff development. The streamlining of recruitment, placement and promotion procedures is under way and in its initial phase will halve the time needed for each. A recently installed tracking capability will monitor progress.

292. We are building the managerial resources of the Secretariat through an integrated series of staff development and career support programmes. The introduction of a human resources review programme, which will culminate in action plans agreed with individual programme managers, has added a new dimension to human resources planning.

Financial management

293. The Department has continued to develop its results-based approach to financial budgeting. In line with this, current budget proposals include a parallel set of performance indicators, which will highlight the expected outcome for the resources committed. These will form the basis for a prototype budget to be submitted for review to the General Assembly by the autumn of 1999.

294. As in the past, we have provided Member States with regular updates on the financial situation of the Organization. This remains critical. Despite the fact that 117 Member States—a record high—met in full their regular budget assessments for 1998 and all prior years, as at mid-1999 the United Nations was still owed $2.5 billion. As a result, there has been no reduction in the debt to Member States for troops and equipment used in peacekeeping operations. This debt remains at almost $900 million—the same level as for the past three years. Unless there is a significant payment of arrears by Member States, we do not envisage paying off any of this debt in 1999. The United Nations therefore has little, if any, financial flexibility, and those Member States waiting for payment face few prospects for relief.

295. Concerns have recently grown over the added burden of some humanitarian and peacekeeping activities where the additional financing has not been forthcoming as promptly as required, or where the Organization has been asked to meet costs from funds already allocated for its regular programme of work.

Information technology

296. Upgrades to the Secretariat's information technology infrastructure have improved our ability to disseminate information internally and to Member States. Major achievements have included the replacement of more than 4,000 personal computers, the upgrading of the local area network, a rolling programme to install the latest industry-standard office automation software packages, and improvements to the satellite communication system, which can now support increased traffic from the main duty stations and peacekeeping missions. At the same time, the provision of electronic mail, greater technical support and the decision to host web pages of permanent missions in New York have revolutionized communications with Member States.

297. We have continued our programme to develop and install an up-to-date integrated management information system (IMIS) at all duty stations. We are now testing the last elements of this system. At present, eight major duty stations use the system for personnel matters. All Headquarters financial management needs are also now met through the system; away from Headquarters, capability will be in place by the end of 2000. The new payroll capacity of the system will also be deployed by the end of 2000. Further technological advances will allow those working in the field to have remote access to the integrated management system. The system has become ever more versatile, and other United Nations agencies are installing it or those component features which are responsive to their needs.

298. We have made concerted efforts in the past year to ensure Y2K compliance. The Year 2000 Management Group identified core operations for the Organization as a whole and oversaw the drawing up of contingency plans in the event of breakdown of mission-critical operations. In addition, the Administrative Committee on Coordination reviewed the preparedness of members of the United Nations system and identified lead agencies to coordinate work in each location.

Facilities management

299. During the past year, we have given particular attention to the maintenance and renovation of the Headquarters complex of buildings, which has now been in constant use for almost 50 years. In response to growing overhaul and maintenance needs, we are drawing up a programme of long-term capital investment for the refurbishment of Headquarters. Coupled with our commitment to energy conservation programmes, this should help to improve the working environment for our staff and others who use our facilities.

Legal affairsLegislative assistance

300. A number of bodies involved in the legislative process, in particular the International Law Commission and the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL), benefited from the legal research services of the Office of Legal Affairs during the year. The Office also provided legal advice to law-making bodies to assist their deliberations and promote the successful conduct of their negotiations, including the International Law Commission; UNCITRAL; the Sixth Committee of the General Assembly and its working groups; the Ad Hoc Committee established by General Assembly resolution 51/210 of 17 December 1996; the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization; the Preparatory Commission for the International Criminal Court; and the First Meeting of the States Parties to the Ottawa Convention.

301. The Office of Legal Affairs also provided assistance in running conferences convened for the negotiation and adoption of a number of important multilateral agreements and provided support to the institutions created by the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea (the Meeting of States Parties, the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf, the International Seabed Authority and the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea). Other international organizations sought advice from the Office in developing regulations, rules and standards in their respective areas of competence, for example, in the field of maritime law.

302. The Office participated in the drafting of several legal instruments, including my bulletin on fundamental principles and rules of international humanitarian law applicable to United Nations forces in situations of armed conflict.

303. The Office also provided guidance to States in taking measures for the implementation of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea and offered technical assistance to States engaged in commercial law reform, targeting in particular those States considering the adoption of texts prepared by UNCITRAL.

Legal advice

304. The Office assisted in the preparation and drafting of agreements between the United Nations and a number of other international organizations. This assistance included helping to prepare a draft relationship agreement with the Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization. It also assisted in preparing and drafting agreements between the United Nations and individual States—most notably, status-of-mission agreements and agreements with States for the enforcement of the sentences of the two International Tribunals. The Office also provided legal assistance for the negotiation of contracts, leases and other legal transactions in which the Organization was involved.

305. Legal advice on a range of peacekeeping operations was provided, including the preparation of agreements between Indonesia and Portugal on the status of East Timor; between the United Nations and the International Organization for Migration and between the United Nations and Australia on the conduct of the popular consultation for East Timorese living outside East Timor; and on the status of the United Nations Mission in East Timor. It drafted appeals procedures and operational directives for the Identification Commission of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara and prepared the legislative instruments necessary for the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK) to commence operations and gave advice on a range of complex legal issues arising from that Mission's administration of Kosovo.

306. It followed up on the report of the Group of Experts for Cambodia and developed a proposal for a tribunal for the prosecution of Khmer Rouge leaders.

307. The Office of Legal Affairs also provided legal advice, assistance and representation in relation to the resolution of a number of disputes around the world. The Office represented the United Nations in suits brought by the Organization or against it, including a large number of commercial claims arising from peacekeeping missions. It acted to secure respect for the United Nations privileges and immunities by representing me before the International Court of Justice in the advisory proceedings concerning a Difference Relating to Immunity from Legal Process of a Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights. It also acted for the Organization before the two International Tribunals and drew up general guidance for the Secretariat on how to respond to requests from the Tribunals for access to United Nations documentation and for testimony from force commanders and other United Nations personnel.

308. The Office assisted the Member States concerned in the resolution of legal issues related to the implementation of Security Council resolution 1192(1998), and other Council resolutions concerning the bombing of Pan Am flight 103. In addition, it was charged with the task of preparing for, and effecting, the transfer of the two persons suspected of the bombing from the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to the Netherlands.

309. General guidance was provided to the Secretariat on the conduct of its business, and advice was given to political organs on questions of procedure, participation, representation and membership arising from their work. Legal advice was offered on questions relating to the enforcement of sanctions imposed by the Security Council and on implementing the Oil-for-food programme.

310. The Office served as a focal point for contacts between the legal advisers of the United Nations system of organizations and promoted coordination between them on matters of legal policy.

International treaty system

311. The Office discharged my functions as depositary of 508 multilateral treaties. In the past year, the Office handled over 1,800 separate actions in connection with those treaties, considering and addressing the many legal questions arising. The Office discharged the Secretariat's function under the Charter of registering treaties and international agreements entered into by Member States, processing over 2,500 registration submissions during the past year.

Information outreach

312. A range of activities were undertaken during the year to improve the dissemination of information on international law and the work of United Nations legal bodies. In particular, the Office continued to implement a new programme aimed at promoting understanding of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea and ensuring its consistent and effective application.

313. The Office made significant improvements to its publications programme. It reduced the backlog in the production of the Treaty Series and introduced measures that should eliminate it completely by 2001. It also increased efforts to address the backlog in the preparation of the Repertory of Practice of United Nations Organs. It set up an electronic database for production of the monthly Statement of Treaties and International Agreements Registered or Filed and Recorded with the Secretariat and Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General and initiated measures to post all printed volumes of the Treaty Series on the Internet by 2001. It improved and updated its web sites on the Organization's treaty collection, the International Law Commission, the International Criminal Court and the codification, development and promotion of international law.

314. The international law audio-visual library was expanded to facilitate loans of audio-visual material to Governments and educational institutions; and training seminars and briefing sessions on uniform commercial law were organized to promote awareness of texts prepared by UNCITRAL and encourage States to adopt them.

Challenges

315. In the year ahead, the Office anticipates major challenges in addressing the complex legal issues arising from the implementation of the mandate of UNMIK in Kosovo, and in assisting Member States in their preparations for the establishment of the International Criminal Court. Additional challenges are emerging from the upsurge of activity around the world aimed at reforming and modernizing commercial law and the concomitant need to harmonize and unify the laws of international trade.

Project services

316. The United Nations Office for Project Services, the only entirely self-financing entity in the United Nations system, executes projects on behalf of United Nations agencies and other organizations around the world. Among the many services it provides are project management, loan administration, procurement of goods and services and recruitment of project personnel. The Office combines corporate and public values, putting private sector practices at the service of the ideals of the Charter of the United Nations.

317. In 1998, the total project portfolio of the Office for Project Services reached $3.5 billion, and new business acquisitions exceeded $1 billion for the first time. Actual delivery amounted to $713 million. This represents the value of all inputs—goods, services and consultants—contracted by the Office to execute projects entrusted to it by its clientele. It also includes the authorization of $175 million in loan disbursements for projects that the Office is supervising for the International Fund for Agricultural Development.

318. The Office for Project Services continued to work on behalf of UNDP in such traditional areas as environmental management, governance and the eradication of poverty. It also worked with new partners, including the Department of Political Affairs, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, in areas outside the strict purview of development.

319. Several milestones in 1999 highlighted the benefits of new partnerships with other entities of the United Nations system. On behalf of the Department of Political Affairs for example, support was provided to the Commission for Historical Clarification in investigating and documenting human rights abuses in Guatemala. The Office established the Commission's infrastructure, comprising 14 local offices in nine regions of the country, hired the interviewers who documented the country's long history of political violence, contracted services locally and internationally, procured equipment and provided training. The Commission presented its final report to me in February 1999.

320. The Office for Project Services also assisted the Electoral Assistance Division of the Department of Political Affairs, UNDP and the Government of Mexico in the production of a state-of-the-art CD-ROM, which provided guidelines on electoral assistance and was released in Mexico City in March 1999.

321. In June 1999, the Office's Mine Action Unit responded to the request of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations for assistance in laying the groundwork for United Nations mine-clearance operations in Kosovo—a prerequisite for the large-scale return of refugees. The Unit is setting up a Mine Action Coordination Centre in Pristina, hiring a manager and key personnel, and procuring equipment as needed. The Geneva Office, home of the Rehabilitation and Social Sustainability Unit, is well placed to provide management services to United Nations organizations engaged in the reconstruction of Kosovo.

322. The Office for Project Services has made client diversification a top priority so as to broaden its financial base and better serve the needs of the international community. In 1999, as part of its move towards decentralization, the Office signed an agreement with FAO and opened a regional office in FAO headquarters in Rome. The Office hopes that its presence there will encourage new alliances with other United Nations partners as well as bilateral and multilateral development organizations.

323. In keeping with its innovative approach, the Office for Project Services seeks where possible to turn challenges into opportunities. Its own work on Y2K compliance, for example, has translated into new projects in several countries to help Governments deal with the challenges posed by the "millennium bug". Relocation to new offices in autumn 1999 has led to the development of a new expertise in architectural and construction management that can be tapped by other members of the United Nations system. The Office now has teams for business and project development that can design services to match the changing needs of its many partners.

324. As the United Nations embarks on a new relationship with the private sector, it can benefit from the experience of the Office for Project Services in outsourcing from, and working with, business to adopt best corporate practice while remaining faithful to the principles of the Charter.

Accountability and oversight

325. In its fifth year of existence, the Office of Internal Oversight Services has continued to strive for increased management accountability within the Organization. During this period, a culture of internal oversight has become accepted and strengthened, and the working methods of the Office have become well established.

326. The Office of Internal Oversight Services has developed a number of mechanisms for enhancing internal oversight of separately administered organs. It has concluded memoranda of understanding for the provision of internal audit services with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Trade Centre UNCTAD/WTO and the United Nations Compensation Commission. Audit services are also provided to the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund. These arrangements have operated for several years and reflect the commitment of the Office to promoting sound management and accountability throughout the United Nations system.

327. The Fifth Committee of the General Assembly and the Committee for Programme and Coordination have taken an increasing interest in the work of the Office for Internal Oversight Services. The number of reports published by the Office has increased each year, more than 50 per cent being in response to mandates from the General Assembly.

328. In 1999, the Office for Internal Oversight Services has looked in particular at peacekeeping operations, humanitarian and other field-related activities, as well as the progress achieved in the Secretariat and its overseas offices in preparing information technology systems for the year 2000. Special emphasis was given to monitoring the progress of implementing United Nations reform, particularly in human resources management and other support services.

Audit and management consulting

329. During the past year, the Audit and Management Consulting Division of the Office for Internal Oversight Services conducted audits of various Secretariat activities, including administrative support, peacekeeping missions and technical cooperation projects; the United Nations Offices at Geneva, Nairobi and Vienna; the Office of the Humanitarian Coordinator in Iraq; the field operation in Rwanda of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights; the United Nations International Drug Control Programme projects in China, Thailand and the Netherlands Antilles; the Centre for International Crime Prevention and its International Scientific and Professional Advisory Council; UNEP and its Regional Office for West Asia and Regional Coordination Unit for East Asian Seas; the Fukuoka and Rio de Janeiro offices of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat); the United Nations Compensation Commission; and the International Tribunals for the Former Yugoslavia and Rwanda. Audits were also conducted at the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia, the secretariat of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean and its subregional headquarters for the Caribbean, the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe.

330. Peacekeeping operations and other field activities continued to receive priority. The Audit and Management Consulting Division conducted audits of peacekeeping missions in Angola, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Eastern Slavonia, Haiti, Israel, Lebanon, and the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy. In addition, the Division has assigned resident auditors to the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola and the Office of the Humanitarian Coordinator in Iraq.

331. The UNHCR Section of the Division audited UNHCR field operations in 20 countries. These audits, which also covered implementing partners, including government agencies and local and international non-governmental organizations, have contributed to improved internal controls and financial reporting. The Section paid particular attention to procurement to ensure that this was fair and transparent, even under emergency conditions.

332. Recognizing the need to make the United Nations computer system Y2K compliant, the Audit and Management Consulting Division participated as an ex officio member of the Headquarters year 2000 implementation team. It also conducted a major campaign to raise awareness at offices outside Headquarters by sending year 2000 questionnaires and follow-up reports to 22 offices, programmes and regional commissions around the world. The Division also conducted information technology audits of the United Nations Office at Nairobi and the International Tribunals for Rwanda and the former Yugoslavia, and undertook a special consultancy to assist the International Computing Centre at Geneva in assessing the adequacy, timeliness and completeness of its planning and preparations for meeting the year 2000 problem.

333. The Office of Internal Oversight Services submitted the results of several audits and reviews to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session, including those of the United Nations health insurance programme, the employment of retirees, the increase in costs of the development contract for the Integrated Management Information System, and the review of procurement-related arbitration cases.

Evaluation

334. The Office of Internal Oversight Services reviewed the support given by the Department for Disarmament Affairs to international disarmament bodies, namely, the First Committee of the General Assembly, the Disarmament Commission and the Conference on Disarmament. The Office found that delegations were generally satisfied with the level of support provided by the Department to multilateral bodies. The evaluation did however identify a number of shortcomings related to the activities of the regional centres; the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme; technical information provided to Member States; cooperation with regional organizations; and development of contacts with specialized agencies, research bodies and non-governmental institutions.

335. The Office of Internal Oversight Services assessed the achievements of the United Nations electoral assistance programme from 1992 to 1998. The final report focused on (a) the role of the Electoral Assistance Division of the Department of Political Affairs in the context of the changing nature of the electoral assistance network, and international norms and codes of practice; (b) overlapping roles and responsibilities in the area of electoral assistance among units and organizations of the United Nations system; (c) internal and external assessments of the Electoral Assistance Division's major activities; and (d) the adequacy of existing standard operating procedures and lessons learned processes.

336. The Office of Internal Oversight Services also conducted triennial reviews of the implementation of the recommendations made by the Committee for Programme and Coordination at its thirty-sixth session on the evaluation of the Department of Public Information and of the termination phase of peacekeeping operations. The review of the Department of Public Information found that the Department was acting on a number of the Committee's recommendations: it was using traditional media, such as radio, and new electronic media more actively, and it was developing a more effective news-gathering and delivery system. However, progress was uneven and the effect of measures adopted in 1997 and 1998—following the reorientation of United Nations public information activities—will have to be reviewed again later.

337. The review of peacekeeping operations found that the Department of Peacekeeping Operations has made significant advances in learning lessons from past experience, in collaborating with the Department of Public Information on the information aspects of peacekeeping missions, and in closing down missions. However, there was little progress on establishing an indexed archive of standard operating procedures developed by completed missions. The Office will keep this issue under review.

Inspection and monitoring

338. In response to concerns raised by the Committee for Programme and Coordination at its thirty-eighth session on the need to place more emphasis on qualitative analysis in future programme assessments, the Office prepared a report on ways in which the full implementation and the quality of mandated programmes and activities could be ensured and could be better assessed by and reported to Member States. Three options were proposed, which were considered by the Committee at its thirty-ninth session. The Committee requested me further to explore ways in which the full implementation of mandates could be ensured and better assessed, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 53/207, and to report on this matter to the Committee at its fortieth session.

339. Progress in building up the provision of common services, and improving the efficiency of support services in New York, Geneva and Vienna in the areas identified in the programme for reform was also reviewed during the past year. The review revealed that the reform process had provided new impetus to improve cost-effectiveness through the expansion of common services. In its inspection report, the Office of Internal Oversight Services recommended measures to enhance central support services, and to remove barriers to the expansion of common services, such as distrust, "turf" protection and the lack of communication among heads of organizations. It also stressed the need for Member States to support fully the strengthening of common services.

Investigations

340. The Investigations Section of the Office of Internal Oversight Services, based in New York and Nairobi, continued to promote the principle of accountability by recommending that staff and contractors be held responsible for violations of United Nations rules and criminal acts perpetrated against the Organization. As provided by its mandate, the Section was involved in a range of inquiries. In 1999, the Section investigated allegations of corruption, examined partnerships with the private sector and completed its first investigation at a regional commission. The Section also worked with national law enforcement agencies to help bring before the courts those who had committed criminal acts against the Organization. One case involved the theft of $400,000 worth of United Nations property by a contractor to a peacekeeping mission. Another involved fraudulent travel expenses in a peacekeeping mission amounting to an estimated $1.2 million.

341. The Section investigated allegations of corruption in a major programme's field office. The investigation concluded that the evidence did not support the allegations. However, the Section recommended that the programme's management establish policies and procedures for investigating allegations impartially, expeditiously and transparently. This case represented a major step in the Organization's determination to enforce high ethical and legal standards in its commercial dealings with outside entities.

342. Following reports of the illegal export and improper retention of intellectual property by those associated with another programme's project, the Section examined United Nations/private sector partnerships involving electronic commerce. The investigation uncovered extensive solicitations of funds and unauthorized commercial agreements between United Nations staff and private individuals and companies. It also uncovered private sector interests in a United Nations-sponsored programme providing technical assistance to economically disadvantaged countries. The Office of Internal Oversight Services made recommendations to remedy these abuses and for tighter controls on private sector partnerships. The Senior Management Group has now formally taken up this question.

343. A review, conducted jointly with the Audit and Management Consulting Division, of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia disclosed that the three organs of the Tribunal—the Chambers, the Office of the Prosecutor, and the Registry—were generally managed in an efficient and effective manner. The review recommended improvements in some key administrative and financial areas, however. A report has been submitted to the General Assembly.

344. The Investigations Section also conducted proactive investigations throughout the Organization examining the potential for fraud and made recommendations to combat this. The investigations focused on staff entitlements, such as education and security grants, which are susceptible to abuse.

PART ONE

Political and security questions

Chapter I

International peace and security

The year 1999 was a tumultuous one for United Nations peacekeeping as it faced new challenges with the creation of large-scale, and in many ways unprecedented, operations, while it worked to maintain ongoing operations worldwide in pursuit of its Charter objective of maintaining and promoting international peace and security. The Security Council, in November, reaffirmed its responsibility under the Charter to take action in that regard and expressed its readiness to consider appropriate preventive action in response to matters likely to threaten international peace and security. The Council expressed concern that the destabilizing accumulation of small arms had contributed to the duration and intensity of armed conflict and called for measures to discourage arms flows to countries engaged in or emerging from armed conflict. It welcomed the convening in 2001 of an international conference on the illicit arms trade. The Council also suggested practical measures to promote the success of the process of peace-building.

During the year, the United Nations deployed 21 peacekeeping operations worldwide, with some 18,410 military personnel and civilian police serving under UN command as at 31 December 1999. The year began with 16 operations in place. Four missions ended during the year, one in Europe, two in Africa and one in Asia; and five new ones were established, one in Europe, two in Africa and two in Asia. The total number of missions in place at the end of the year stood at 17.

Besides its peacekeeping operations, the United Nations addressed conflict situations in other areas through a number of political and human rights missions and the deployment of the Secretary-General's Special Representatives in Afghanistan, Angola, Burundi, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Guatemala, Guinea-Bissau, Liberia, Papua New Guinea and Somalia.

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, the body responsible for reviewing UN peacekeeping operations in all their aspects, and its open-ended Working Group made proposals and recommendations to guide the principles, definitions and implementation of mandates, on enhancing the capacity of UN peacekeeping and on cooperation with regional arrangements. It also reviewed its own relationship with the General Assembly and recommended procedures for enhancing that relationship.

The cost of UN peacekeeping operations amounted to $837.8 million for the 12-month period ending 30 June 1999, compared with $879.3 million for the previous 12-month period, while unpaid assessed contributions from Member States to peacekeeping budgets amounted to $1,687.6 million as at June 1999, compared to $1,739.9 million in 1998.

The Assembly considered various aspects of peacekeeping financing, including the apportionment of costs, financial performance and proposed budgets, peacekeeping support accounts and the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund. It also reviewed implementation of the new procedures for the reimbursement of contingent-owned equipment and the management of peacekeeping assets, including the operation of the United Nations Logistics Base in Brindisi, Italy.

Prevention of armed conflicts and peace-buildingPreventive diplomacy and peacemaking

In his report on the work of the Organization [A/54/1], the Secretary-General stated that it was universally agreed that early warning was to be a necessary condition for effective preventive diplomacy. However, it was not a sufficient condition, as the tragedy in Kosovo in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) demonstrated (see PART ONE, Chapter V). The lessons to be drawn from that and other recent failures in conflict prevention were: if the primacy of the Security Council with respect to the maintenance of international peace and security was rejected, the foundations of international law as represented by the Charter would be brought into question since no other universally accepted legal basis for constraining wanton acts of violence existed; conflict prevention, peacekeeping and peacemaking should not become an area of competition between the United Nations and regional organizations; and prevention could succeed only with strong political commitment from Member States, together with the provision of adequate resources.

The Secretary-General drew attention to three long-term prevention strategies that deserved further consideration. First, the international community should do more to encourage policies that enhanced people-centred security in conflict-prone States. Second, greater effort should be put into ensuring that development policies did not exacerbate the risks of conflict, such as increasing inequality between social groups. In that context, the idea of "conflict impact assessments"—consultation with a broad range of stakeholders to ensure that particular development or governance policies did not undermine security—should be explored further. Third, the changing realities of the global economy had meant new challenges and opportunities. In addition, development assistance had declined while private capital flows to the developing world had risen significantly. In that regard, the active support of global corporations for better governance policies could help create environments in which both markets and human security flourished.

The common thread running through almost all conflict prevention policies, said the Secretary-General, was the need to pursue good governance, which, above all, meant respect for human rights. Prevention philosophy was predicated on the assumption of good faith, the belief that Governments would seek to place the welfare of the people as a whole over narrow sectional interests. However, many of the requirements of good governance that were central to prevention stood in stark contradiction to the survival strategies of some of the most conflict-prone Governments. The fact that even the best prevention strategies could fail meant that the scourge of war could never be escaped completely. Therefore, for the foreseeable future, the international community had to remain prepared to engage politically, and if necessary militarily, to contain, manage and ultimately resolve conflicts that had got out of hand.

The Secretary-General observed that collective security in the international system was the responsibility of the Security Council and responding to crises and emergencies would always be a major focus of its activity. On the other hand, the Charter stated that one of the purposes of the United Nations was to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace. Yet reaction, not prevention, had been the dominant Council approach to dealing with conflict over the years. Recently, however, the Council had shown increased interest in tackling prevention issues.

That was evident in the extensive debates on post-conflict peace-building and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa. Nevertheless, UN political and organizational cultures and practices remained oriented far more towards reaction than prevention. The transition from a culture of reaction to a culture of prevention would not be easy, but the difficulty of the task did not make it any less imperative, said the Secretary-General.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 and 30 November [meetings 4072 & 4073], the Security Council discussed its role in the prevention of armed conflicts. On 30 November [meeting 4073], following consultations among Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/1999/34 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has considered, within its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, its role in the prevention of armed conflicts. The Council emphasizes the need fully to respect and implement the principles and provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and norms of international law, in particular, in this context, those related to prevention of armed conflicts and settlement of disputes by peaceful means. It affirms its commitment to the principles of the political independence, sovereign equality and territorial integrity of all States. The Council also affirms the need for respect for human rights and the rule of law. It will give special attention to the humanitarian consequences of armed conflicts. The Council recognizes the importance of building a culture of prevention of armed conflicts and the need for a contribution from all principal organs of the United Nations in that regard.

The Council stresses the importance of a coordinated international response to economic, social, cultural or humanitarian problems, which are often the root causes of armed conflicts. Recognizing the need for the development of effective long-term strategies, it emphasizes the need for all United Nations organs and agencies to pursue preventive strategies and to take action within their respective areas of competence to assist Member States to eradicate poverty, strengthen development cooperation and assistance and promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms.

The Council recognizes that early warning, preventive diplomacy, preventive deployment, preventive disarmament and post-conflict peace-building are interdependent and complementary components of a comprehensive conflict-prevention strategy. The Council emphasizes its continuing commitment to addressing the prevention of armed conflicts in all regions of the world.

The Council is aware of the importance of its early consideration of situations which might deteriorate into armed conflicts. In this context, it underlines the importance of the settlement of disputes by peaceful means, in accordance with Chapter VI of the Charter of the United Nations. The Council recalls that parties to any dispute, the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, have an obligation to seek peaceful means of settlement.

The Council reaffirms its responsibility under the Charter to take action on its own initiative in order to maintain international peace and security. The results of the Council's mission to Jakarta and Dili from 6 to 12 September 1999 demonstrate that such missions undertaken with the consent of the host country and with clear goals can be useful if dispatched in a timely and appropriate manner. The Council expresses its intention to support, with appropriate follow-up action, efforts by the Secretary-General to prevent conflict through such areas as fact-finding missions, good offices and other activities requiring action by his envoys and Special Representatives.

The Council emphasizes the important role of the Secretary-General in the prevention of armed conflicts. The Council expresses its readiness to consider appropriate preventive action in response to the matters brought to its attention by States or the Secretary-General and which it deems likely to threaten international peace and security. It invites the Secretary-General to present to the members of the Council periodic reports on such disputes, including, as appropriate, early warnings and proposals for preventive measures. In this regard the Council encourages the Secretary-General to improve further his capacity to identify potential threats to international peace and security and invites him to indicate any requirements to fulfil that capacity, including the development of the expertise and resources of the Secretariat.

The Council recalls that the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force, as the first United Nations preventive deployment mission, has prevented the spillover of conflict and tensions from the region to the host country. The Council will continue to consider the establishment of such preventive missions in appropriate circumstances.

The Council will also consider other preventive measures such as the establishment of demilitarized zones and preventive disarmament. While fully conscious of the responsibilities of other United Nations organs, it emphasizes the crucial importance of disarmament and the non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and the means of their delivery for the maintenance of international peace and security. In particular, progress in preventing and combating the excessive and destabilizing accumulation of and illicit trafficking in small arms and light weapons is of vital importance to the prevention of armed conflicts. The Council will also take appropriate measures in situations of post-conflict peace-building aimed at preventing the recurrence of armed conflicts, including through adequate programmes for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants. The Council acknowledges the increasingly important role of the civilian components of multifunctional peacekeeping operations and will look towards their playing a greater role in wider preventive efforts.

The Council recalls the provisions of Article 39 of the Charter concerning measures to prevent armed conflicts. Such measures may include targeted sanctions, in particular arms embargoes and other enforcement measures. In imposing such measures the Council will pay special attention to their likely effectiveness in achieving clearly defined objectives, while avoiding negative humanitarian consequences as much as possible.

The Council recognizes the link between the prevention of armed conflicts, the facilitation of the peaceful settlement of disputes and the promotion of security for the civilian population, in particular the protection of human life. Furthermore, the Council underlines the fact that the existing international criminal tribunals represent useful instruments to combat impunity and can, by helping to deter crimes against humanity, contribute to the prevention of armed conflicts. In this context, the Council acknowledges the historic significance of the adoption of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court.

The Council recognizes the important role that regional organizations and arrangements are playing in the prevention of armed conflicts, including through the development of confidence- and security-building measures. The Council also emphasizes the importance of supporting and improving regional capacities for early warning. It emphasizes the importance of cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations in preventive activities in accordance with Chapter VIII of the Charter. The Council welcomes meetings between the United Nations, including the Security Council, and regional organizations, and encourages participants to continue to keep those meetings focused on issues related to prevention of armed conflicts.

The Council will continue to review its activities and strategies for the prevention of armed conflicts. It will consider the possibility of holding further orientation debates and strengthening its cooperation with the Economic and Social Council. The Council will also consider the possibility of a meeting at the level of Ministers for Foreign Affairs on the issue of prevention of armed conflicts during the Millennium Assembly.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Small arms and conflict prevention

On 24 September [meeting 4048], the Security Council held a ministerial meeting on the question of small arms in the context of the challenges facing the international community in that regard.

Addressing the Council, the Secretary-General said that he was pleased to join its effort to tackle one of the key challenges in preventing conflict in the next century. Small arms and light weapons were primary tools of violence in many conflicts and their proliferation had also aggravated the violence associated with terrorism and organized crime. Even in societies not beset by civil war, the easy availability of small arms had in many cases contributed to violence and political instability, he said. There was probably no single tool of conflict so widespread, so easily available and so difficult to restrict as small arms, which survived from conflict to conflict, perpetuating the cycle of violence.

The Secretary-General stated that the United Nations had played a leading role in putting the issue of small arms firmly on the international agenda (see also PART ONE, Chapter VII). The General Assembly, in resolution 53/77 E [YUN 1998, p. 525], had decided to convene a conference on all aspects of illicit arms trafficking no later than 2001.

The Secretary-General drew attention to his report to the Council on the protection of civilians in armed conflict [S/1999/957], in which he stated that controlling the easy availability of small arms was a prerequisite for a successful peace-building process, as it was for conflict prevention. In that report, he appealed to the Council to devote greater attention to conflict prevention and to provide effective leadership in that area. He stressed the importance of including in peace agreements and mandates of all UN peacekeeping operations specific measures for disarmament and demobilization.

The Secretary-General mentioned some positive developments in the struggle against small arms proliferation, and particularly illicit arms trafficking, including: the declaration by the Economic Community of West African States of a moratorium on the production and transfer of small arms, covering 16 countries, and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) assistance in implementing that moratorium; the holding by the Organization of African Unity of a regional conference on small arms in preparation for the international conference on illicit arms trafficking; and joint action by the European Union in preventing and combating illicit trafficking in conventional arms. More specifically, in Albania, UNDP, in close collaboration with the Department for Disarmament Affairs, had been engaged in a "Weapons for Development" project. In the Americas, the Organization of American States had adopted in November 1997 the Inter-American Convention against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Ammunition, Explosives and Other Related Materials [YUN 1997, p. 519].

The momentum for combating small arms proliferation had also come from civil society. The establishment early in 1999 of the International Action Network on Small Arms had helped to gain the public support necessary for success in curbing the spread of small arms.

UN efforts to promote peace and security, whether through conflict prevention, development, diplomacy or intervention, depended to a great extent on how it tackled the smaller, more specific challenges of limiting the tools of war and violence.

The Secretary-General also addressed the issue of small arms in his progress report on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa [S/1999/1008] (see next chapter).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council President, following consultations among Council members, made statement S/PRST/1999/28 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council recalls its primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security, in view of which its attention is drawn inevitably to small arms and light weapons as the most frequently used weapons in the majority of recent armed conflicts.

The Council notes with grave concern that the destabilizing accumulation of small arms has contributed to the intensity and duration of armed conflicts. The Council also notes that the easy availability of small arms can be a contributing factor to undermining peace agreements, complicating peace-building efforts and impeding political, economic and social development. In this regard, the Council acknowledges that the challenge posed by small arms is multifaceted and involves security, humanitarian and development dimensions.

The Council is deeply concerned that countries involved in, emerging from, or close to protracted armed conflicts are particularly vulnerable to violence resulting from the indiscriminate use of small arms in armed conflict. In this regard, the Council recalls the report of the Secretary-General of 8 September 1999 on the protection of civilians in armed conflict and its resolution 1265(1999) of 17 September 1999.

The Council emphasizes that the right of individual and collective self-defence recognized in Article 51 of the Charter and the legitimate security demands of all countries should be fully taken into account. The Council recognizes that small arms are traded globally for legitimate security and commercial considerations. Bearing in mind the considerable volume of this trade, the Council underlines the vital importance of effective national regulations and controls on small arms transfers. The Council also encourages the Governments of arms-exporting countries to exercise the highest degree of responsibility in these transactions.

The Council emphasizes that the prevention of illicit trafficking is of immediate concern in the global search for ways and means to curb the wrongful use of small arms, including their use by terrorists.

The Council welcomes the various initiatives that are currently under way, globally and regionally, to address the issue. These initiatives at the regional level include the moratorium of the Economic Community of West African States on the production and trade in small arms, the Inter-American Convention Against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Ammunition, Explosives, and Other Related Materials, the European Union Joint Action on Small Arms, and the European Union Code of Conduct on Arms Exports. At the global level, the Council welcomes the negotiation process on the elaboration of an international convention against transnational organized crime, including a draft protocol against the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, ammunition and other related materials.

The Council emphasizes the importance of regional cooperation in tackling the issue of illicit trafficking in small arms. Initiatives, such as the work done by the Southern African Development Community and the Southern African Regional Police Commissioners Coordinating Organization, illustrate how regional cooperation can be harnessed to tackle small arms proliferation. The Council recognizes that while regions may sometimes benefit from the experiences of others, one region's experience cannot be extended to others without taking into account their different characteristics.

The Council also welcomes and encourages efforts to prevent and combat the excessive and destabilizing accumulation of and illicit trafficking in small arms, and invites Member States to involve civil society in these efforts.

The Council notes with satisfaction the growing attention paid within the United Nations system to the problems associated with the destabilizing accumulation of small arms. The Council welcomes the initiative by the Secretary-General for Coordinated Action on Small Arms, designed to ensure a coherent and coordinated approach to the small arms issue within the United Nations system.

The Council notes that although the humanitarian impact of small arms in a conflict situation is verifiably serious, a detailed analysis is not available. The Council therefore requests the Secretary-General to include specifically the humanitarian and socio-economic implications of the excessive and destabilizing accumulation and transfer of small arms and light weapons, including their illicit production and trade, in relevant studies he is currently undertaking.

The Council calls for effective implementation of arms embargoes, imposed by the Council in its relevant resolutions. The Council encourages Member States to provide the sanctions committees with available information on alleged violations of arms embargoes and recommends that the chairmen of the sanctions committees invite relevant persons from organs, organizations and committees of the United Nations system, as well as other intergovernmental and regional organizations and other parties concerned, to provide information on issues relating to the implementation and enforcement of arms embargoes.

The Council also calls for measures to discourage arms flows to countries or regions engaged in or emerging from armed conflicts. The Council encourages Member States to establish and abide by voluntary national or regional moratoria on arms transfers with a view to facilitating the process of reconciliation in these countries or regions. The Council recalls the precedents for such moratoria and the international support extended for their implementation.

The Council recognizes the importance of incorporating, as appropriate, within specific peace agreements, with the consent of the parties, and on a case-by-case basis within United Nations peacekeeping mandates, clear terms for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants, including the safe and timely disposal of arms and ammunition. The Council requests the Secretary-General to provide the negotiators of peace accords with a record of best practice based upon experience in the field.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to develop a reference manual for use in the field on ecologically safe methods of weapons destruction in order better to enable Member States to ensure the disposal of weapons voluntarily surrendered by civilians or retrieved from former combatants. The Council invites Member States to facilitate the preparation of such a manual.

The Council welcomes the recommendations of the Group of Governmental Experts on Small Arms (A/54/258), including the convening of an international conference on the illicit arms trade in all its aspects no later than 2001, noting the offer by Switzerland to host the conference. The Council encourages Member States to participate actively and constructively in the conference and any preparatory meetings, taking into account the recommendations contained in this statement, with a view to ensuring that the conference makes a meaningful and lasting contribution to reducing the incidence of illicit arms trafficking.

Post-conflict peace-building was a major and relatively recent innovation in the preventive strategy, said the Secretary-General in his report on the work of the Organization [A/54/1]. The issue was important, not least because there were far more peace agreements to be implemented than in the past. In fact, three times as many agreements were signed in the 1990s as in the previous three decades, and the United Nations had developed a more holistic approach to implementing the comprehensive peace agreements it had negotiated.

From Namibia to Guatemala, post-conflict peace-building had involved inter-agency teams working with non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and local citizens' groups to help provide emergency relief, demobilize combatants, clear mines, run elections, build impartial police forces and set in motion longer-term development efforts. Achieving the necessary coordination and complementarity between agencies in conflict and fragile post-conflict situations continued to present a major challenge to the United Nations and its partners. The preceding year had seen a number of developments in UN post-conflict peace-building operations, including forward planning for a future presence in the Central African Republic when the mandate of the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic (MINURCA) expired; establishing a new office dedicated to peace-building in Guinea-Bissau; sustaining the major UN presence in Guatemala; and consolidating long-standing peace processes in Cambodia and El Salvador and elsewhere. In Guinea-Bissau, the United Nations Peace-building Support Office was working with the Government and people to coordinate an integrated response to the challenges of peace-building. In Liberia, the United Nations Peace-building Support Office was about to complete its second year of operation, supporting projects dealing with national reconciliation and rebuilding respect for the rule of law and human rights.

In his progress report on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa [S/1999/1008] (see next chapter), the Secretary-General said that he had written to the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the World Bank to encourage them to give greater financial and organizational support to post-conflict peace-building efforts. He suggested the establishment of a group comprising IMF, the World Bank and the United Nations to study how best they could support countries emerging from conflict or assist countries that became flooded with refugees as a result of instability in the region.

ACC consideration. The Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC), at its first regular session of 1999 (Geneva, 9-10 April) [ACC/1999/4], was informed that guidelines were being finalized for the strategic framework process in peace-building, launched in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 38], and that it was proposed that the strategic framework be applied next to Sierra Leone. The design of such a framework would be undertaken in consultation with ACC members, drawing on and learning from the experience gained in connection with the strategic framework for Afghanistan [YUN 1998, p. 35].

On 8 July [meeting 4021], the Security Council met to consider the maintenance of peace and security and post-conflict peace-building, focusing on the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants in a peacekeeping environment. The President, following consultations among Council members, made statement S/PRST/1999/21 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council recalls its primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security. The Council also recalls the statements made by its President in relation to activities of the United Nations in preventive diplomacy, peacemaking, peacekeeping and post-conflict peace-building.

The Council has considered the matter of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants in a peacekeeping environment as part of its overall and continuing effort to contribute to enhancing the effectiveness of United Nations peacekeeping and peace-building activities in conflict situations around the world.

The Council is seriously concerned that in a number of conflicts, armed fighting among various parties or factions continues despite the conclusion of peace agreements by the warring parties and the presence of United Nations peacekeeping missions on the ground. It recognizes that a major contributory factor to such a situation has been the continued availability of large amounts of armaments, in particular small arms and light weapons, to conflicting parties. The Council emphasizes that in order to achieve settlement, parties to a conflict must work towards the successful disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants, including child soldiers whose special needs should be seriously addressed.

The Council recognizes that disarmament, demobilization and reintegration cannot be seen in isolation, but rather as a continuous process which is rooted in and feeds into a broader search for peace, stability and development. Effective disarmament of ex-combatants represents an important indicator of progress towards post-conflict peace-building and normalization of the situation. The demobilization effort is only possible when there is some level of disarmament and its success can only be achieved when there is effective rehabilitation and reintegration into society of ex-combatants. Disarmament and demobilization must take place in a secure and safe environment, which will give ex-combatants the confidence to lay down their arms. Taking into account the fact that the process is closely linked to economic and social issues, the question must be addressed comprehensively so as to facilitate a smooth transition from peacekeeping to peace-building.

The Council emphasizes that for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration to be successful, there must be political will and a clear commitment by the parties concerned to achieve peace and stability. At the same time, it is vital that such commitment by the parties be reinforced by political will and consistent, effective and determined support from the international community to guarantee the achievement of sustainable peace, including through its contributions of long-term assistance for development and trade.

The Council affirms its commitment to the principles of the political independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States in conducting peace-building activities, and the need for States to comply with their obligations under international law. Bearing this in mind, the Council stresses the need for the implementation, with the consent of the parties, of practical measures to promote the success of the process which, inter alia, may include the following:

(a) The inclusion, as appropriate, within specific peace agreements and, on a case-by-case basis, within United Nations peacekeeping mandates, of clear terms for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants, including the safe and timely disposal of arms and ammunition;

(b) The establishment by Governments contributing to peacekeeping operations of databases of experts on disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants. In this context, training in disarmament and demobilization could be a useful component of national programmes for the preparation of peacekeeping troops;

(c) The prevention and reduction of the excessive and destabilizing flow, accumulation and illegitimate use of small arms and light weapons. In this context, the relevant Security Council resolutions and existing United Nations arms embargoes should be strictly implemented.

The Council is of the view that techniques for executing and coordinating programmes related to the process of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants and the problems associated with it should be given in-depth consideration. It takes note with appreciation of the efforts by the Secretary-General, United Nations bodies, Member States and international and regional organizations aimed at developing general principles and practical guidelines for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants in a peacekeeping environment.

The Council underlines the need to address this issue on a regular basis and, in this regard, requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council, within a period of six months, a report containing his analysis, observations and recommendations, in particular those relating to principles and guidelines as well as practices, experiences and lessons learned to facilitate its further consideration of the matter. The report should pay special attention to the problems of disarmament and demobilization of child soldiers and their reintegration into society.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Peacekeeping operations

General aspects

In his August 1999 report on the work of the Organization [A/54/1], the Secretary-General stated that the preceding year had been a tumultuous one for United Nations peacekeeping. New challenges included the creation of the large-scale, and in many ways unprecedented, operation in Kosovo, preparations for a complex new mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the expansion of the mission in Sierra Leone, the strong likelihood of a new operation in Eritrea and Ethiopia, the continuing evolution of the situation in East Timor and the agreement for a continued UN presence in Angola. The volatility and danger of the environments in which the United Nations operated were underlined by the number of casualties suffered by its peacekeepers. Between January 1998 and August 1999, 34 UN personnel had lost their lives in peacekeeping operations. However, the most disturbing trend was the growing contempt for international norms, as civilians and peacekeepers were targeted or used as pawns to manipulate international public opinion. In response, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) was undertaking a systematic review of the problem of violence against peacekeepers. The year was also testing for DPKO as it underwent significant restructuring due to its reduction by almost 20 per cent as a result of the phasing out of gratis personnel, while continuing to perform its mandated functions. The logistics and communications area, which was vital for both the deployment of new missions and the liquidation of old ones, was hardest hit by the staff reductions. That experience showed again that preparedness required capacities beyond those needed for current activities. The Secretary-General hoped that, in determining resource requirements for the Organization, Member States would bear that in mind.

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/54/87], whose mandate was to review the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects, held an organizational meeting on 24 March. It held a general debate from 24 to 26 March and its open-ended Working Group met between 30 March and 23 April.

Standby arrangements and rapid deployment

In 1999 [A/54/87], the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations welcomed the increased commitment by Member States in providing specialized units to the UN standby arrangements system. It noted that the system should be further developed to enhance rapid deployment capabilities, including broadening the base of Member States making resources available, especially specialized capabilities and working with the Secretariat to improve deployment response times. Where critical mission start-up materiel and services were subject to extended procurement lead times, the Special Committee encouraged the Secretariat to maintain a minimum stock of such items on hand and recommended that the appropriate General Assembly bodies explore additional contracting authority mechanisms to permit accelerated procurement for such items.

The Special Committee stressed the importance of the Organization being able to respond and deploy rapidly to a peacekeeping operation upon the adoption of a Security Council mandate. To enhance that capability, it called for the full establishment of the Rapidly Deployable Mission Headquarters by adding the requisite military expertise. DPKO was encouraged to identify key staff for temporary field assignment, especially in the case of new operations.

The Special Committee emphasized that the contingent-owned equipment concept was vital to mission and mission support planning and mission budgeting, on the part of the United Nations and the Member State concerned. It was also an indispensable element in an effective UN rapid deployment capability. The Special Committee supported linking the concept to the standby arrangements system to realize its full rapid deployment capability potential. Member States that had subscribed to the standby arrangements system were called on to initiate, in collaboration with the Secretariat, development of applicable contingent-owned equipment memoranda of understanding.

Reports of Secretary-General. In a 30 March report [S/1999/361], the Secretary-General presented information on the number of Member States that had indicated their willingness to provide resources to the standby arrangements system in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 40]. He noted that much still remained to be done, both to widen the involvement of Member States in the standby arrangements system and to improve the availability and utilization of the resources pledged by them.

In a later report [S/2000/194], the Secretary-General stated that six Member States had joined the system during the year, bringing the number of participants to 87 as at 31 December 1999 and a total of 147,500 personnel. Information on specific capabilities they were prepared to offer had been provided by 65 States, 43 of which were able to complete the standby arrangements planning data sheet with detailed technical information on their contributions. Formalization of standby contributions by the signing of a memorandum of understanding had been completed by 10 more States (Chad, Chile, France, Mongolia, Pakistan, Paraguay, Spain, Tunisia, United Kingdom, Zimbabwe), bringing the total number to 31. Some 60 per cent of the confirmed standby resources had a response time for deployment of up to 30 days; 20 per cent had a response time of 30 to 60 days; 15 per cent had a response time of between 60 and 90 days; and the remaining 5 per cent had a response time of more than 90 days or had not stated a response time.

The DPKO Standby Arrangements Unit continued to promote the system among African Member States. Common briefings and bilateral consultations involving Benin, Burkina Faso, Cote d'Ivoire, Mali, the Niger and Togo assisted those States to draw up lists of capabilities. It was expected that those countries would be in a better position to prepare planning data and ultimately sign the relevant memorandum of understanding. Special emphasis would be put on increasing civilian police and support capacity as contributions from those States. Efforts were also made to increase the participation of civilian police in the standby arrangements system, including the holding of a civilian police workshop (New York, 30 July) on the theme "Enhancing representation of police in the standby arrangements system".

In relation to improving response time, the Secretary-General reported that the goal was to get a better balance of resources with a response time of not more than 30 days. The planning element of the Multinational Standby Forces High Readiness Brigade had been established and operated out of Denmark. The Brigade, while not a UN formation, was established by small and medium-sized Member States already participating in the standby arrangements system in order to meet the criteria for rapid deployment and training and compatibility of command and control procedures and equipment. The Brigade would be available at high readiness for peacekeeping operations where rapid response was important, including humanitarian tasks. The response time should be 15 to 30 days. At the ninth meeting of the Brigade Steering Committee (Stockholm, Sweden, 7-8 October), participating Member States decided that the mechanism had reached the level of readiness required to declare it available to the United Nations as from the end of January 2000.

The Secretary-General observed that the system of standby arrangements had proved its ability to expedite planning and had begun to demonstrate its usefulness as a tool to shorten the time required for the finalization of the memorandum of understanding in support of peacekeeping operations. While the United Nations still did not have a true rapid reaction capability, the standby arrangements were a positive step.

In a report on implementation of the recommendations of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/AC.121/43], the Secretary-General stated that Member States had increased their commitment to the standby arrangements system of specialized units, including engineering and medical units. In view of the ongoing need for such capacity, the Secretariat would continue to emphasize development of those elements. A concerted effort was also made to enlist more African Member States in the standby arrangements system; the number of African States in the database had almost doubled and stood at 22 as at February 1999.

Consultations with troop contributors

At its 1999 session [A/54/87], the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations encouraged the Security Council to continue to take more formal steps to ensure the rigorous, timely and systematic implementation of the arrangements for consultations with troop contributors, set out in the Council President's statement S/PRST/1996/713 [YUN 1996, p. 18] and amplified in a 1998 note by the Council President [YUN 1998, p. 1333]. The Special Committee stressed the need, in the case of upcoming operations or the expansion of existing operations, to invite prospective troop contributors to consultations at the earliest possible stage to provide them with access to information required and to enable them to make an informed decision on participation. It stated that the consultations on mandates and those on operational questions were chaired by the Council President and by the Secretariat, respectively, and encouraged the Secretary-General to ensure that his reports were made available to the troop contributors in a timely fashion prior to any consultations.

The Special Committee requested that the weekly situation reports distributed to Council members be made available to all troop contributors, including those that had expressed an interest in contributing to peacekeeping operations. The Secretariat should consider ways to inform troop contributors more frequently of the situation on the ground and ensure the availability of the monthly peacekeeping strength reports. The Special Committee drew the Secretariat's attention to the fact that its policies directly affecting the participation of Member States in peacekeeping operations had not always benefited from full transparency and consultation. It called on the Secretariat to ensure that the Special Committee was consulted when developing policy on issues affecting peacekeeping personnel.

The Special Committee emphasized that consultation with the Member State concerned was necessary when mission authorities took any action, including repatriation or investigation in the event of misconduct by peacekeeping personnel. It stressed that national contingent commanders had the sole authority for any disciplinary actions in respect of misconduct by a member of their contingent. However, national legislation might preclude a Member State from taking any disciplinary action following repatriation of its involved personnel if mission authorities had already taken in-theatre action. Noting that the Secretariat had undertaken several measures to strengthen the United Nations ability to address misconduct by peacekeeping personnel, the Committee requested the Secretariat to develop, in consultation with Member States, guidelines governing action to be taken in such instances.

The Special Committee noted that the arrangements regarding consultations with troop-contributing countries were not exhaustive and did not preclude a variety of forms of consultation, including between the Council President (or its members) and contributors, countries especially affected by the conflict situation under discussion and other countries from the region concerned. The Special Committee encouraged the Council to be mindful of that point.

Civilian police

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations encouraged efforts by the Secretariat to hold a follow-up meeting to the 1998 civilian police seminar [YUN 1998, p. 41] and to coordinate further initiatives in that area. It reiterated the need to strengthen the DPKO Civilian Police Unit, as well as to enhance the role of the Civilian Police Advisor, and noted the Secretariat's failure to fill all posts in the Unit, despite General Assembly authorization, contained in resolution 52/248 [YUN 1998, p. 51], thereby jeopardizing the Unit's ability to maintain its progress on civilian police issues. It requested the Secretariat to explain and clarify the staffing procedures for recruiting and selecting seconded personnel to the Unit.

The Special Committee reiterated that the Secretariat should develop draft guidelines on general principles regarding the role of civilian police as soon as possible and provide an update in the next progress report. It welcomed the completion of a draft set of standard operating procedures for civilian police operations, including a detailed code of conduct, the publication of selection and training standards and the extraction of lessons learned from previous civilian police operations.

The Special Committee said that care should be taken to ensure that police and military tasks were clearly differentiated. It emphasized that the Training Unit's activities should take into account the increased requirements of civilian police in peacekeeping operations and called for enhanced cooperation between Member States in training civilian police personnel for UN peacekeeping operations. The Secretary-General was asked to provide an update on the training workshops being conducted by DPKO in his next progress report.

Safety and security

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations expressed grave concern at the growing number of attacks and acts of violence against UN and associated personnel. Recalling statement S/PRST/1997/13 by the Security Council President on the subject [YUN 1997, p. 1473], the Special Committee took note of progress achieved in the legal protection of the security of UN and associated personnel, including the entry into force of the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel [YUN 1994, p. 1289]. It urged those States that had not done so to consider becoming parties to the Convention as soon as possible, and took note of the need to explore the scope of further ensuring the safety and security of UN and associated personnel.

Reaffirming that safety and security constituted integral elements of the planning and conduct of peacekeeping operations, the Special Committee stressed the need for peacekeeping forces to be properly configured and discrepancies between mandates and resources avoided. It recognized that elaboration of a comprehensive security plan at the commencement of a peacekeeping operation was essential and noted DPKO's initiative to conduct a comprehensive review of security requirements. In response to the Secretary-General's requests for assistance, the Committee encouraged the Secretariat to seek the views of Member States in an open-ended working group or seminar on safety and security of UN personnel in peacekeeping operations. It stressed the need for adequate budgetary provisions to ensure the security of peacekeeping personnel and noted the Secretariat's development of the conceptual approach over the Composite Observation and Monitoring Force.

The Special Committee encouraged the Secretariat to ensure an efficient and continuous flow of information to Member States in all phases of peacekeeping operations, especially prior to evacuation, in the immediate wake of tragic developments or in periods of crisis. When a crisis affected the safety of peacekeeping personnel, the Secretariat should make full information immediately available to the permanent missions concerned. It should also review continuously the safety of flight operations and, in the event of a tragic occurrence, share without delay the results of any subsequent investigation with all contributors to the mission. The Special Committee recommended that the DPKO Situation Centre coordinate fully with other relevant UN departments and agencies with a view to becoming the main point of contact for permanent missions in such circumstances.

Status-of-forces agreements

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations expressed disappointment that the compendium of instances in which the Organization was due restitution, as a result of non-compliance with status-of-forces agreements or other agreements, was still not completed. It reiterated the need for the Secretary-General to fulfil the 1996 request [YUN 1996, p. 36] of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) to provide the compendium and to withhold claims submitted by Member States concerned until the matter of expenditures was resolved.

Noting that a draft version of the model status-of-forces agreement had been prepared, the Special Committee urged its early finalization and promulgation and recommended that the Secretariat ensure that it contained specific and practical measures to reinforce and guarantee the responsibility of host Governments to ensure the physical security of UN and associated personnel employed in peacekeeping operations.

Training

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, acknowledging the work accomplished by the DPKO Training Unit, remained concerned that training materials were not available in all the UN official languages. It encouraged the Secretariat to continue its efforts in that regard and to include information on the matter in the next progress report.

The Special Committee welcomed the publication of selection and training standards for military observers and civilian police, as well as the use of current technology in providing a directory of current UN publications on CD-ROM. It requested the Secretary-General to seek appropriate staffing levels to ensure that the Training Unit was able to maintain its current programmes, including the United Nations Training Assistance Teams programme and other essential capacities, such as the planning and conduct of regional peacekeeping training programmes and the maintenance of the peacekeeping databases. The Secretariat should continue to find innovative means to supplement the current departmental training capacity, in collaboration with Member States.

The Special Committee, noting the increasingly close and direct contact between UN peacekeeping personnel and local populations during peacekeeping operations, stressed the importance of participants in such operations being given specific training that addressed local cultural sensitivities, including gender-sensitivity training; it encouraged the Secretariat, as well as Member States, to include and develop that aspect in their efforts to promote training norms for UN peacekeeping personnel.

Comprehensive review of peacekeeping

Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 53/58 [YUN 1998, p. 44], the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations continued its comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects [A/54/87]. The Committee, which met between 24 March and 23 April, had before it the Secretary-General's report on the implementation of its recommendations [A/AC.121/43].

The Special Committee stressed that peacekeeping operations should strictly observe the principles and purposes enshrined in the United Nations Charter and emphasized that respect for the principles of sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of States, as well as non-intervention in matters within domestic jurisdiction were crucial to efforts, including peacekeeping operations, to promote international peace and security. Respect for the basic principles of peacekeeping, such as the consent of the parties, impartiality and the non-use of force in self-defence, was essential to its success. The Special Committee was of the view that peacekeeping operations should not be used as a substitute for addressing the root causes of conflict, which should be addressed in a coherent, well-planned, coordinated and comprehensive manner with political, social and developmental instruments. Consideration should be given to ways in which those efforts could continue without interruption after the departure of a peacekeeping operation to ensure a smooth transition to lasting peace and security.

The Special Committee noted statement S/PRST/1998/38 by the Security Council President [YUN 1998, p. 37] with regard to the inclusion of peace-building elements in the mandates of peacekeeping operations, with a view to ensuring a smooth transition to a successful post-conflict phase, and stressed the importance of those elements being explicitly defined and clearly identified before being incorporated into the mandates of peacekeeping operations. The Committee emphasized the role of the General Assembly in the formulation of post-conflict peace-building activities.

The Special Committee stressed the importance of providing peacekeeping operations with clearly defined mandates, objectives and command structures, as well as secure financing, and the need to ensure, in the formulation and implementation of mandates, congruity between mandates, resources and objectives. Changes in mandates should be accompanied by commensurate adjustments in the resources available to the peacekeeping operation to carry out its new mandate and should be based on a thorough and timely reassessment by the Security Council, including military advice, of the implications on the ground. The need to ensure the unity of command of UN peacekeeping operations was stressed.

The Special Committee also stressed the need for greater coordination to avoid overlap and duplication of efforts within the UN system and encouraged the Secretariat to continue developing effective administrative and logistics mechanisms and procedures. The Secretariat should pursue more actively structural changes that enhanced the Organization's capacity for the effective planning, conduct and support of peacekeeping operations. The Secretary-General was urged to review the structures in DPKO in consultation with UN oversight bodies and report on the outcome of the review to the Special Committee. Consideration should be given to all offers by Member States to participate in peacekeeping operations and the Member States concerned should be advised of the reasons underlying DPKO's decision not to accept their offered contribution.

The Special Committee called on the Secretariat to work closely with the international criminal tribunals (see PART FOUR, Chapter II) on matters relating to testimony by UN peacekeepers and keep Member States continuously apprised of all developments in that regard.

The Secretariat's intention to consult with the Special Committee prior to finalizing the sample rules of engagement was welcomed, and the Special Committee called on the Secretary-General to consult with Member States, through the Special Committee, prior to making any significant changes to those rules, and with both current and prospective personnel contributors prior to any similar changes to mission rules of engagement.

Concerning organization, planning and coordination of peacekeeping operations, the Special Committee noted the proposed structural changes to DPKO and requested the Secretary-General to include an assessment of that new structure in his next progress report. It emphasized the need to strengthen working-level consultations among UN departments and agencies to avoid duplication and overlap and to improve effectiveness. The Secretariat should promulgate a policy on the use of the standby arrangements system, including procedures for the selection of troop contributors for new missions and for replacements in established missions. It should consult first with contributors to the system and other Member States regarding necessary capabilities to overcome deficiencies referred to by the Secretary-General in his 30 March report (see p. 52). The Special Committee welcomed the progress made to improve the coordination of military and civilian components of peacekeeping operations and encouraged the Secretariat to continue its integrated approach at Headquarters and field levels.

Also welcoming the progress in developing a flexible and comprehensive logistic strategy to accommodate a wide range in variety and complexity of peacekeeping operations, the Special Committee noted the list of outputs that the Secretariat intended to pursue over the next year and supported the intended structure of the Operational Support Manual, especially plans to harmonize it with other related manuals.

The Special Committee recommended the speedy implementation of the field assets control system to more missions so that an assessment could be completed. It requested that an update on the review of the contents of the start-up kits and the status of implementing the field assets control system be included in the next progress report.

Stressing that the norms of international humanitarian law should be strictly observed by all personnel associated with UN-mandated peacekeeping operations, the Special Committee urged that the guidelines for peacekeepers be finalized as soon as possible in consultation with the Special Committee. It emphasized the need to differentiate between peacekeeping operations and humanitarian assistance. However, if the protection of humanitarian assistance was a mandated task of a UN peacekeeping operation, both should be coordinated to ensure that they were not working at cross purposes and that humanitarian assistance was impartial. The Special Committee emphasized that the conduct of peacekeeping operations and humanitarian activities did not absolve host Governments and parties to the conflicts from their responsibility towards the victims of a conflict among populations.

The Special Committee endorsed the role that effective public information could play in enhancing personnel safety and security, and encouraged the Secretariat to incorporate that feature into its public information policy for peacekeeping operations. It encouraged Member States to contribute to the Trust Fund to support public information and related efforts in UN peacekeeping operations and the incorporation of public information planning and the identification of resources into the earliest possible phases of mission planning. The Special Committee endorsed the inclusion of a public information authority from host Governments in the status-of-forces agreements/status-of-mission agreements and urged the enhancement of a public information capability at the mission level by widening public access to reliable and objective information.

The activities of the Lessons Learned Unit during the preceding year and its objectives for the coming year were noted. The Special Committee invited the Secretariat to consider the validation of conclusions drawn by the Unit and requested the Unit to consider how it might enhance the relevance of its work at the tactical and field levels.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee [A/54/577], adopted resolution 54/81 A without vote [agenda item 90].

Review of evaluation of peacekeeping operations: termination phase

OIOS report. At its thirty-ninth session (New York, 7 June-2 July) [A/54/16], the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) had before it an April note by the Secretary-General [E/AC.51/1999/5] transmitting the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) triennial review of the implementation of the 1996 CPC recommendations on the evaluation of peacekeeping operations' termination phase [YUN 1996, p. 40].

The report stated that DPKO had made a concerted effort to follow through on the CPC recommendations. Significant progress was reported in connection with learning lessons of experience, the collaboration between DPKO and the Department of Public Information on the information aspects of peacekeeping missions and the liquidation of missions. However, little progress was made in establishing an indexed archive of standard operating procedures developed in completed missions.

On 8 June, CPC noted that DPKO had substantially improved its management of the termination phase of peacekeeping operations and endorsed the conclusions of the triennial review.

Operations in 1999

On 1 January 1999, 16 UN peacekeeping operations were in place—3 in Africa, 1 in the Americas, 3 in Asia, 6 in Europe and 3 in the Middle East. During the year, 4 operations ended and 5 were launched. The total number of operations deployed in 1999 was 21; the number in place at the end of the year was 17.

Africa

In Africa, two new peacekeeping operations became active in 1999. The Security Council established the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL) on 22 October for an initial period of six months to assist in the implementation of the Peace Agreement signed in Lomé, Togo, on 7 July, thereby ending the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone (UNOMSIL). In November, the Council established the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) to help implement the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement (see next chapter). On 26 February, the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola (MONUA) expired.

The United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) continued to monitor the ceasefire and otherwise conduct peacekeeping tasks. In December, the Council extended its mandate until 29 February 2000.

Americas

In the Americas, the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti (MIPONUH) continued its task of helping to professionalize the Haitian police force. In November, the Security Council decided to continue MIPONUH to ensure a phased transition to an International Civilian Support Mission in Haiti by 15 March 2000 (see PART ONE, Chapter III).

Asia

In Asia, the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM) continued to monitor the demilitarized zone along the border between the two countries. In November, the Security Council extended the mandate of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan (UNMOT) until 15 May 2000. Elsewhere in Asia, the United Nations Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan (UNMOGIP), established in 1949, remained in place to monitor the ceasefire in Jammu and Kashmir (see PART ONE, Chapter IV). In June, the Council established the United Nations Mission in East Timor (UNAMET), initially to organize and conduct a popular consultation on East Timor's constitutional future and to implement its results. UNAMET's mandate ended on 25 October with the establishment of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor (UNTAET), responsible for the Territory's overall administration (see PART ONE, Chapters IV and VIII).

Europe

In Europe, the mandate of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP), established by Security Council resolution 983(1995)[YUN 1995, p. 597] to monitor the border areas of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, ended on 28 February 1999. The Council extended the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH), which included the International Police Task Force (IPTF), until 21 June 2000; the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG) until 31 January 2000; and the mandate of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka (UNMOP) until 15 January 2000. The United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo, Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) (Serbia and Montenegro), was established on 10 June to provide an interim administration for Kosovo, while establishing and overseeing the development of provisional democratic self-governing institutions to ensure conditions for a peaceful and normal life for the inhabitants. In the Mediterranean, the mandate of the 35-year-old United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) was extended to 15 June 2000.

Middle East

Three long-standing operations continued in the Middle East: the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO), the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) (see PART ONE, Chapter VI).

Other missions

In addition to peacekeeping, the United Nations continued to support a number of political and human rights missions worldwide. With regard to the African region, the Security Council supported the Secretary-General's decision to establish a post-conflict Peace-building Support

Office in Guinea-Bissau to harmonize and integrate the activities of the UN system in Guinea-Bissau leading up to elections and to facilitate implementation of the 1998 Abuja Agreement[YUN 1998, p. 153]. The Council in October authorized the establishment until 15 April 2000 of the United Nations Office in Angola to explore effective measures for restoring peace and to assist the Angolan people in capacity-building, humanitarian assistance and the promotion of human rights. The Council also welcomed the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General and the United Nations Political Office for Somalia (UNPOS), located in Nairobi, Kenya. It encouraged the Secretary-General to review the UN role in Somalia, as a prelude for an enhanced role there, including the possible relocation of UNPOS and other programmes to Somalia. The Council also concurred with the Secretary-General's decision to upgrade the United Nations Office in Burundi, in the light of the critical stage the current peace process had reached. It noted the Secretary-General's intention to extend the mandate of the United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Liberia until the end of December 2000. (See next chapter for further details on those missions.) In August, the Council, prior to the establishment in November of its mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, authorized the deployment of up to 90 UN military liaison personnel, together with civilian, political and humanitarian staff, to the capitals of the States signatories to the Ceasefire Agreement of 1 August 1999 and the provisional headquarters of the Joint Military Commission (see next chapter).

In Europe, the Council authorized Member States and relevant international organizations to establish an international security presence in Kosovo, FRY, to, among other things, deter renewed hostilities, demilitarize armed groups and establish a secure environment for the return of refugees and displaced persons.

As to Asia and the Pacific, the Security Council established a new monitoring mission in Iraq—the United Nations Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission (UNMOVIC)—to replace the United Nations Special Commission (UNSCOM). UNMOVIC would continue to monitor Iraq's compliance with Security Council resolutions on its disarmament (see PART ONE, Chapter IV).

With regard to the Americas, the General Assembly renewed the mandate of the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala (MINUGUA) until 31 December 2000. Also, the Assembly, consequent upon its decision to establish an International Civilian Support Mission in Haiti (MICAH), decided that the mandate of the International Civilian Mission in Haiti (MICIVIH), conducted jointly with the Organization of American States, would continue until the commencement of MICAH. The Security Council requested the Secretary-General to coordinate and expedite the transition from MICIVIH to MICAH.

The Assembly welcomed the establishment of the Civil Affairs Unit within the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan. It supported the Secretary-General's intention to strengthen the Mission with a view to assuring its primary role in conducting UN peacemaking activities in Afghanistan, including the progressive moving of its head office to Kabul.

In November, the Council noted the Secretary-General's intention to extend the mandate of the United Nations Political Office in Bougainville, Papua New Guinea, for a further 12 months to continue to assist in the promotion of political dialogue among parties to the Lincoln Agreement [YUN 1998, p. 319] (see PART ONE, Chapter IV). The United Nations Command continued to implement the maintenance of the 1953 Korean Armistice Agreement [YUN 1953, p. 136].

During the year, the Security Council authorized two missions by multinational forces, one in East Timor and one in the Kosovo province of FRY.

Financial and administrative aspects of peacekeeping operations

General aspects

Expenditures for peacekeeping activities amounted to $837.8 million for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, compared to $879.3 million during the previous 12-month period.

The financial situation of UN peacekeeping operations continued to be affected by serious cash shortages, necessitating borrowing from and among peacekeeping funds, while substantial amounts of obligations for reimbursement to Member States for troop costs and contingent-owned equipment remained unpaid.

As at 30 June 1999, the total unpaid assessed contributions for peacekeeping operations amounted to $1,687.6 million, compared with $1,739.9 million in 1998. Available cash for all operations totalled $668.9 million, while total liabilities were about twice as high, at $1,363.6 million.

Notes of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 49/233 A [YUN 1994, p. 1338], the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee a February note [A/C.5/53/50] updating the budgetary information on requirements for all peacekeeping operations from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 and reflecting the appropriations provided to date by the Assembly for those operations for that period, inclusive of support account requirements. The updated level of requirements of $843,819,800 represented an increase of $17,862,300 over the initial estimated budgetary requirements of $825,957,500.

In May [A/C.5/53/60], the Secretary-General submitted proposed budgetary requirements for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 of $644,199,100, including $182,937,000 for military personnel costs and $264,945,400 for civilian personnel costs.

By decision 54/462 A of 23 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the sub-item on the financing of United Nations peacekeeping operations at its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session. On the same date, the Assembly decided that the agenda item "Administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of the United Nations peacekeeping operations" should remain for consideration during its fifty-fourth session (decision 54/465).

Review exercise

In its June report [A/54/87], the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations stressed that all Member States should pay their assessed contributions in full, on time and without conditions. The delay in reimbursements to troop contributors, which caused hardship to all troop and equipment-contributing countries, especially developing countries, remained a concern for the Special Committee. It encouraged the Secretary-General to sensitize all departments involved in the peacekeeping reimbursement process to the need to resolve current delays as soon as funds were available. The Secretariat should continue to expedite the processing of all claims, especially the backlog claims. It should also address the medical aspects of peacekeeping operations, such as the identification of medically high-risk areas, pre-deployment immunization costs and costs incurred for necessary post-repatriation treatment of peacekeeping personnel, and refine the mission start-up budgeting mechanism, which should include provisions for the enhancement of the security of UN and associated personnel, as well as the resources to allow the United Nations to discharge its obligation to contributing Member States in accordance with negotiated contingent-owned equipment memorandum agreements or understandings.

The Special Committee requested the Secretary-General, as a matter of priority, to address the operational and financial liquidation of completed operations, to take steps for the timely and efficient disbursement from trust funds on urgent UN-authorized peacekeeping operational activities, to identify clearly those trust funds and their impact on peacekeeping operations and to advise the Committee of the steps taken to ensure their timely disbursement. He was also asked to keep the Committee informed of the terms of reference of any trust fund that might be established in the future for peacekeeping operations.

Apportionment of costs

In 1999, the General Assembly again considered the question of the placement of Member States into groups for the apportionment of peacekeeping expenses. First specified in resolution 3101(XXVIII) [YUN 1973, p. 222], the groups were subsequently adjusted several times, most recently by resolution 52/230 [YUN 1998, p. 49].

The original four groups were: (A) permanent members of the Security Council; (B) specifically named economically developed Member States not permanent members of the Council; (C) economically less developed Member States; and (D) economically less developed Member States that were specifically named.

In a 23 June note verbale [A/53/1009], South Africa requested relocation from group B to group C. It stated that it had been placed in group B since 1973 because of the policy of the then Government to project South Africa as an economically developed Member State. However, South Africa was a developing country with an average per capita gross national product of $3,400 per annum, which was lower than that of some countries placed in group C, and it was the only less developed Member State to be placed in group B. Facing the dilemma of redressing the poverty and suffering brought about by years of apartheid rule, the country could ill afford the added burden of its allocation in group B.

On 29 September [A/54/233], South Africa requested the inclusion of a sub-item entitled "Relocation of South Africa to the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (c) of General Assembly resolution 43/232" [YUN 1989, p. 793] under agenda item 151 of the Assembly's fifty-fourth session. In an explanatory memorandum, South Africa reiterated the reasons set out in its June note verbale.

The Assembly, by decision 54/462 A of 23 December, decided that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the sub-item at its resumed (2000) fifty-fourth session. By the same decision, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should also continue consideration of the sub-item "Relocation of Ukraine to the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (c) of General Assembly resolution 43/232".

Also on 23 December, the Assembly decided that, as an ad hoc arrangement, Kiribati (decision 54/456), Nauru (decision 54/457) and Tonga (decision 54/458) should be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (d) of resolution 43/232 for the apportionment of peacekeeping appropriations.

Arrears of Belarus and Ukraine

On 23 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/684], adopted resolution 54/242 without vote [agenda item 151].

Administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of the United Nations peacekeeping operations

Recalling its decision 49/470 of 23 December 1994,*

1. Decides that, from the date of adoption of the present resolution and without prejudice to the relevant financial regulations and rules of the United Nations, all financial contributions of Belarus and Ukraine to the Organization, including those for which assessments were issued prior to 1996, shall be taken into account when determining whether the amount of their arrears, as calculated in accordance with decision 49/470, equals or exceeds the amount of the contributions due from Belarus and Ukraine for the preceding two full years in accordance with Article 19 of the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Emphasizes that this decision shall not exempt Belarus and Ukraine from their obligation to pay all outstanding contributions, and calls upon Belarus and Ukraine to make proposals for the treatment of their arrears concerning the financing of peacekeeping operations;

3. Decides to keep this matter under review.

Financial performance and proposed budgets

In April [A/53/895 & Add.1-8], ACABQ considered the financial performance reports for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 and the proposed budgets for 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 of UNDOF, UNIFIL, UNIKOM, UNFICYP, UNOMIG, UNMOT, UNMIBH, including the liaison offices in Belgrade and Zagreb and UNMOP, the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti (UNSMIH), the United Nations Transition Mission in Haiti (UNTMIH), MIPONUH and the United Nations Logistics Base in Brindisi, Italy. It also considered the financial performance reports for the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia (UNOMIL) for the periods 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 [YUN 1998, p. 156] and 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 [A/53/802]; the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES) and the Civilian Police Support Group for the period 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 [A/53/742] and the final disposition of the assets of those operations [A/53/838 & Corr.1]; the Military Observer Group of MINUGUA for the period 15 February to 31 May 1997 [A/53/775]; and the revised estimates for MIPONUH for the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 [A/53/789 & Add.1].

ACABQ, noting that $1.8 billion of assessed contributions from Member States remained unpaid as at 30 June 1998, recommended that the Secretariat draw the attention of the General Assembly to the latest information on the status of contributions for each peacekeeping operation at the time it took up the budgets of the missions. It believed that further attempts should be made to standardize the presentation and full disclosure of contributions from host Governments, made under status-of-forces agreements and on a voluntary basis, as well as from other sources. All peacekeeping budgets should disclose the estimated income from staff assessment and other sources, and budget reports should include for each mission a clear explanation of the method of reimbursement for contingent-owned equipment and details of the relevant mission factors employed. Salary and common staff cost adjustments should also be implemented in all budgets where mission appointees were a significant percentage of the international staff.

ACABQ noted that additional requirements were incurred in a number of missions as a result of cancellation by a contractor unable to provide services stipulated in the initial contract. It recommended that contracts entered into with vendors should include penalty clauses or an escrow arrangement to protect the mission in case of breach of contract. There was a need also to improve planning so that estimates for procurement could be more accurate. Concerning savings in respect of air operations, ACABQ recommended that missions include aircrew subsistence allowance in contracts for air operations and requested the Secretariat to report on the question in future budgets. The Secretary-General should look into the possibility of negotiating the inclusion of spare parts, as the next step to the global system contract for the purchase of vehicles. The recording and accounting for support services provided to other entities of the UN system in the mission area, including those provided to non-UN bodies, needed to be improved. The return of contingent-owned equipment to troop-contributing countries, even if it was obsolete and in a condition to be written off, should be reviewed with a view to devising a more practical and economical procedure, and measures should be taken to control the sharp increases in mission vehicle insurance costs, by stricter safety and security measures in the missions and through negotiation of rates with insurance providers.

In addition to carrying out a review of the return of contingent-owned equipment (see p. 66), ACABQ recommended that the Secretary-General provide information on the guidelines that had been developed for the liquidation of peacekeeping missions. Also, in view of the new procedures for settling claims relating to contingent-owned equipment and death and disability, the Secretariat should review the need to continue the suspension of financial regulations 4.3 and 4.4 and report to the Assembly at its fifty-fourth session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 June [meeting 101], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee

[A/53/522/Add.3], adopted resolution 53/237 without vote [agenda item 143 (a)].

(b) Also requests the Secretary-General to include in his next report on the support account information on the implications of the implementation of the review recommended in paragraph 48 of the report of the Advisory Committee.

Accounts and auditing

At its resumed fifty-third session, the General Assembly considered the financial report and audited financial statements for UN peacekeeping operations for the 12-month period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 [A/53/5, vol. II]. The question of peacekeeping financing had been deferred in 1998 by decision 53/458 [YUN 1998, p. 48].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, by decision 53/473 of 8 June, deferred consideration, until the main part of its fifty-fourth session in 1999, of the financial report and the audited financial statements for UN peacekeeping operations and the report of the Board of Auditors, the April report of the Secretary-General on implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors concerning peacekeeping operations for the period ended 30 June 1998 [A/53/932], and the related report of ACABQ [A/53/940].

On 29 October [meeting 43], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/506], adopted resolution 54/13 A without vote [agenda item 117 (a)].

2. Decides to consider the recommendations of the Board of Auditors on contingent-owned equipment and the recommendation contained in paragraph 70 of its report under sub-item (a), entitled "Financing of the United Nations peacekeeping operations", of agenda item 151, entitled "Administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of the United Nations peacekeeping operations".

The Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly in December a report [A/54/140/Add.2] on implementation of recommendations of the Board of Auditors concerning peacekeeping operations [A/53/5, vol. II], which, according to his April report [A/53/932], had not been fully implemented.

Peacekeeping support account

The Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 52/248 [YUN 1998, p. 51], submitted a March report on the support account for peacekeeping operations for the period 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 [A/53/854]. The financial performance report showed that of the authorized amount of $32,426,500 for post and non-post requirements, expenditures totalled $28,560,700, resulting in an unutilized balance of $3,865,800.

In an addendum of the same date [A/53/854/Add.1], the Secretary-General submitted support account proposals for the period 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 estimated at $36,065,600, which provided for a staffing establishment of 406 posts, including six new ones.

ACABQ report. ACABQ, in April [A/53/901], recommended that the Assembly approve the overall staffing of 400 temporary posts and total staffing and non-staffing requirements of $34,887,100 for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000. The unencumbered balance of $3,865,800 from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 should be applied to the resources required for the period 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000.

4. Notes that the backstopping activities for peacekeeping operations require ongoing reviews which should take into account the overall evolution of peacekeeping trends;

5. Affirms the need for adequate funding for the backstopping of peacekeeping operations;

6. Reaffirms that the expenses of the Organization, including the backstopping of peacekeeping operations, shall be borne by Member States and, to that effect, that the Secretary-General should request adequate funding to maintain the capacity of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the Secretariat;

7. Approves sixty-seven additional support account-funded temporary posts for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000;

8. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments not exceeding 3,501,600 United States dollars for the additional staff costs, and requests the Secretary-General to report thereon to the General Assembly in the context of the performance report for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000.

Peacekeeping Reserve Fund

In April [A/53/912], the Secretary-General provided information on the status of the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund, established by General Assembly resolution 47/217 [YUN 1992, p. 1022] as a cash flow mechanism to ensure the Organization's rapid response to the needs of peacekeeping operations; its level was set at $150 million. As at 31 December 1998, the Fund had an available balance of $103.7 million. Total receipts to the Fund amounted to $112.4 million. An annex to the report provided information on the utilization of the Fund by month from April 1996 to December 1998.

In May [A/53/961], ACABQ, in its comments on the Secretary-General's report, recalled that in its report on UN peacekeeping operations [A/53/940] it had stated that, in view of the substantial decrease in the level of peacekeeping operations, the current level of the Fund, at $150 million, should be reconsidered by the Assembly.

The Assembly, by decision 53/479 of 8 June, took note of the Secretary-General's report and the related report of ACABQ and concurred with ACABQ's recommendations and observations.

Reimbursement issues

Equipment

Audit of contingent-owned equipment

ACABQ, in its May report on UN peacekeeping operations [A/53/940], stated that the Board of Auditors, at ACABQ's request [YUN 1998, p. 55], had conducted a special audit of contingent-owned equipment [A/53/5, vol. II], which confirmed many of the observations made in ACABQ's previous reports, in particular that the capacity of the Secretariat to manage the new contingent-owned equipment arrangements was lacking.

ACABQ was particularly concerned by the implication of applying the new contingent-owned equipment procedures retroactively to missions whose mandates had terminated before July 1996. It reiterated its view that the potential existed for double payment with respect to services provided by the United Nations to contingents, which might overlap with services of self-sustenance. With respect to the Board of Auditors' recommendation that the Administration review the retroactive application of the new arrangements for reimbursement of contingent-owned equipment, ACABQ pointed out that issues related to the retroactive application of the new arrangements were temporary as they related to the transition from the old to the new system of reimbursement. It was doubtful whether the results of the review would affect retroactive payments already agreed to between troop-contributing countries and the United Nations. ACABQ did not therefore see any merit in conducting a review.

Concerning the Board's recommendation that DPKO review the generic fair market value of major equipment as set out in the policies and procedures manual and submit proposals to the General Assembly for revision, ACABQ recommended that the United Nations supplement its in-house expertise with the assistance of independent outside expertise in the review and assessment of the generic fair market value of equipment, and that the review be undertaken in 2000 for the results to be included in the peacekeeping budgets for the period 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002.

Implementation of reformed reimbursement procedures

ACABQ, in May [A/53/944 & Corr.1], considered the 1998 report of the Secretary-General [YUN 1998, p. 55] on the first full year of implementation of the reformed procedures for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment, as recommended by the Phase IV Working Group on the subject [ibid., p. 54]. ACABQ paid particular attention to those elements on which the Secretary-General and the Working Group differed. They related to the legally binding aspects of the memorandum of understanding; levels of reimbursement for loss or damage in cases of hostile action or forced abandonment; UN responsibility for loss or damage during transportation; universality of missions factors; establishing dates for applying procedures in current missions; retroactive implementation; review of major equipment standards; office supplies; laundry and cleaning; tentage and accommodation; liability of the United Nations under the lease system; a revised manual of policies and procedures; and expertise in the review and assessment of the generic fair market value of equipment.

ACABQ reiterated the importance of including in memoranda of understanding clear information on the obligations of Member States, including the five-year period for submission of claims. It requested that future peacekeeping budgets should include complete information on reimbursement arrangements for troop-contributing countries and that performance reports should provide data on actual amounts paid or to be paid as compared with initial estimates.

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/54/87] called for the timely implementation of the recommendations of the Phase IV Working Group on Reimbursement of Contingent-owned Equipment. It regretted the delay of the Secretary-General's report on the first year of implementation of those recommendations and called on him to convene the Phase V Working Group as soon as possible.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, by decision 53/480 of 8 June, requested the Secretary-General to convene the Phase V Working Group and decided to continue consideration of the question of reformed procedures for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment at its fifty-fourth session.

In October, the Assembly considered the Secretary-General's 1998 report on the first full year of implementation of the reformed procedures [YUN 1998, p. 55]. It also had before it the related report of ACABQ (see above). On 29 October [meeting 43], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/509], adopted resolution 54/19 A without vote [agenda item 151 (a)].

Reformed procedures for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 45/248 B, section VI, of 21 December 1990 and rule 153 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly,

Recalling also its resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994,

Reaffirming its resolutions 50/222 of 11 April 1996 and 51/218 E of 17 June 1997,

Having considered the report of the Phase IV Working Group on Reimbursement of Contingent-owned Equipment as transmitted by the Chairman of the Working Group to the Chairman of the Fifth Committee, the report of the Secretary-General on the first full year of implementation of the reformed procedures for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Reaffirms that the Fifth Committee is the appropriate Main Committee of the General Assembly entrusted with responsibilities for administrative and budgetary matters;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, while implementing the approved reformed procedures for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment, to avoid any double payment;

3. Approves a general policy whereby the United Nations should only assume financial responsibilities in accordance with the decisions of the General Assembly;

4. Emphasizes that the intent of the new procedures on reimbursement of contingent-owned equipment is to ensure equitable reimbursement to the troop-contributing countries while ensuring the interests of Member States and the United Nations;

5. Endorses the recommendations of the Phase IV Working Group on Reimbursement of Contingent-owned Equipment, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

6. Also endorses the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in its report, with the exception of the following proposals, relating to:

(a) The levels of reimbursement for loss or damage to contingent-owned equipment in cases of hostile action or forced abandonment, as contained in paragraph 15;

(b) The review regarding United Nations responsibility for loss or damage during transportation, as contained in paragraph 16;

(c) Tentage and accommodation, as contained in paragraph 27;

(d) The use of independent outside expertise in the review and assessment of the generic fair market value of equipment, as contained in paragraph 31;

7. Reaffirms that, with regard to all new missions activated since 1 July 1996, only the reformed procedures for reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment are applicable;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to ensure the full participation of delegations in the work of the Phase V Working Group;

9. Emphasizes that the revision of the contingent-owned equipment manual should be a continuous process, and requests the Secretary-General to revise the manual only after the completion of the work of the Phase V Working Group, in order to incorporate recommendations made by the Phase II, III, IV and V Working Groups, as approved by the General Assembly;

10. Requests the Board of Auditors to continue to audit the implementation of the reformed procedures for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment and to report thereon in the context of its annual report to the General Assembly.

Management of peacekeeping assets

Liquidation of missions

ACABQ, in its April report on financing of UN peacekeeping missions [A/53/895], considered notes by the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Operation in Somalia [A/C.5/53/52]; the United Nations Mission in Haiti [A/C.5/53/55]; the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia, UNPREDEP and the United Nations Peace Forces headquarters [A/C.5/53/56]; and the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda [A/C.5/53/57].

The purpose of the notes was to inform the General Assembly about the status of the liquidation of those missions and the reasons for delays, and to indicate what remained to be done before final reports were submitted.

ACABQ recommended that, in conjunction with the submission of the final reports on those missions, the Secretary-General should provide information on the guidelines developed for the liquidation of UN peacekeeping missions and on what further steps would be taken by the Secretariat and the Assembly to increase the efficiency and timely liquidation of missions. In view of the new procedures for the settlement of claims relating to contingent-owned equipment and death and disability, the Secretariat should review the need to continue the suspension of regulations 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations and report to the Assembly at its fifty-fourth session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 June, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/990], adopted decision 53/477 without vote [agenda items 127, 128, 132 & 134].

Financing of the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia, the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and the United Nations Peace Forces headquarters; financing of the United Nations Operation in Somalia II; financing of the United Nations Mission in Haiti; and financing of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda

At its 101st plenary meeting, on 8 June 1999, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee:

(a) Took note of the notes by the Secretary-General and the relevant section of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

(b) Requested the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to address the outstanding issues in connection with the preparation of the related final performance information;

(c) Approved, on an exceptional basis, the special arrangements for the United Nations Operation in Somalia II with regard to the application of article IV of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, whereby appropriations required in respect of obligations owed to Governments providing contingents and/or logistic support for the Operation shall be retained beyond the period stipulated under financial regulations 4.3 and 4.4, as set out in the annex to the present decision;

(d) Decided to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the items entitled "Financing of the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia, the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and the United Nations Peace Forces headquarters", "Financing of the United Nations Operation in Somalia II", "Financing of the United Nations Mission in Haiti" and "Financing of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda".

ANNEX

Special arrangements with regard to the application of article IV of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations

2. (a) Any other unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question owed to Governments for goods supplied and services rendered, as well as other obligations owed to Governments, for which required claims have not yet been received, shall remain valid for an additional period of four years following the end of the twelve-month period provided for in financial regulation 4.3;

(b) Claims received during this four-year period shall be treated as provided for under paragraph 1 of the present annex, if appropriate;

(c) At the end of the additional four-year period, any unliquidated obligations shall be cancelled and the then remaining balance of any appropriations retained therefor shall be surrendered.

OIOS report. In September, the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly the OIOS report on the audit of the liquidation of peacekeeping missions [A/54/394 & Corr.1].

The report analysed the main findings and recommendations of audits carried out by OIOS between 1996 and 1999 of the liquidation of eight peacekeeping missions with combined asset acquisition costs of over $900 million. The audits showed that the liquidation process could be streamlined further by developing standard operating procedures in key areas, planning and organizing the liquidation process more efficiently and ensuring adequate staff resources.

Good management during the operational period of a mission was also crucial to successfully completing the liquidation in a timely manner.

The audits' major findings included: provisional guidelines for the liquidation of field missions, issued in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 39], needed to be updated and further developed; DPKO had not established a formal mechanism to consolidate lessons learned into the operations of new and ongoing missions; DPKO needed to resolve several issues relating to the disposal of UN-owned equipment, including the installation of the field asset control system in all missions and development of standard systems and procedures to control receipt, movement and disposal of UN-owned equipment, the transfer by liquidating missions of expendable items to other missions where they often could not be used, the uneconomical transfer of low-value assets to the UN Logistics Base for upgrading, and the use of depreciated values rather than fair market values in determining the cost-effectiveness of transferring UN-owned equipment; no delegation of authority had been granted to missions to assess mission personnel for the loss or damage of UN-owned equipment; financial management problems often delayed completion of the liquidation; property sales documents for the transfer of UN-owned equipment to third parties often did not provide adequate legal protection to the Organization; the frequent rotation of chief procurement officers sometimes led to delays in providing essential services; failure to ensure full staffing levels often hindered the efficiency of critical areas; and DPKO's draft field administration manual did not provide sufficient guidance to missions to establish board of inquiry procedures, leading to unnecessary processing of cases and delayed processing of other cases.

OIOS made a number of recommendations to DPKO, including that it should: finalize and regularly update the provisional liquidation guidelines to include areas not currently covered, expand on those areas inadequately covered and delete outdated information and instructions; designate a focal point to be responsible for ensuring that administrative aspects of lessons learned were incorporated into standard operating procedures for missions; ensure adequate resources to implement the field asset control system in all missions, to develop standard operating procedures for the receipt, movement within the mission and disposal of assets and for Headquarters to monitor the implementation of the system, and provide field asset control system procedures for the proper segregation of duties between the property control and inventory unit and the account holders; develop standard operating procedures for disposing of assets by direct commercial sale and auction; request that the Controller delegate limited authority to peacekeeping missions for assessing mission personnel for the loss or damage of UN-owned equipment resulting from negligence; ensure that mission vacancies were promptly filled, in particular in key areas; and revise the provisions of the draft field administration manual dealing with boards of inquiry procedures.

Procurement

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/54/87] stressed the importance of timely, efficient, transparent and cost-effective procurement of goods and services in support of peacekeeping operations and was disappointed at the delays in fully implementing the United Nations Common Supplier Database. It welcomed the Secretariat's efforts to make procurement information available to prospective vendors and encouraged further innovative, accessible and user-friendly approaches for accelerated dissemination of accurate procurement information in a timely manner. The Special Committee requested the Secretary-General to implement fully and expeditiously General Assembly resolution 52/226 A [YUN 1998, p. 1254].

The Special Committee recognized that shortened procurement times were required for the United Nations to react swiftly to conflicts and to deploy rapidly. It requested the Secretary-General to undertake a comprehensive review of the procurement process and to include in his annual report on procurement reform a section addressing field procurement, with particular emphasis on a more flexible and timely contracting mechanism for new missions, including local procurement, where applicable.

On the issue of transparency, the Special Committee noted with dissatisfaction that little further work was anticipated in promoting the level of detail in which the United Nations Common Supplier Database could report on procurement activity. It noted the Secretariat's assurances that, if requested, details of each and every item would be made accessible to any Member State. It encouraged interested Member States to contribute in cash or in kind to the programme for providing procurement information via video and CD-ROM.

Contract management

In July, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly an OIOS report on the investigation into the award of a fresh rations contract in a UN peacekeeping operation [A/54/169].

The investigation, which concerned the actions of the operation's Chief Administrative and Chief Financial Officers, indicated mismanagement and abuse of authority, including violations of UN procurement policy and financial rules. The financial damage to the Organization was in the range of $17,000. OIOS recommended the filing of disciplinary charges against the two officers, that the contractor be given no further contracts without demonstrating that he could meet all the specifications and that company "A" should be monitored.

The Secretary-General concurred with the OIOS recommendations.

In September, the Secretary-General transmitted a further OIOS report on the audit of the management of service and ration contracts in peacekeeping missions [A/54/335]. In 1998, OIOS performed an audit of service and ration contract management at five peacekeeping missions—MONUA, the United Nations Mission in Haiti, UNIFIL, UNDOF and UNFICYP—comprising contracts with an annual contract value of $37 million. The objectives were to: ascertain the role of the missions, DPKO and the Procurement Division in the management of contracts; assess the effectiveness of service and ration contract management in missions; and determine steps to improve the contract management process.

OIOS found that there was a general trend in peacekeeping operations to move towards large-scale contracts for the provision of support services and rations; that was an economical and efficient way of providing support to missions. However, most of the missions reviewed did not have a contract management unit, which resulted in an uncoordinated approach to managing complex contracts; standard systems had not been developed for missions to track ration deliveries against contractual provisions; no comprehensive programmes had been established by DPKO to train personnel in contract management techniques; and inadequate monitoring of invoice payments could result in loss of early payment discounts and disputes with vendors leading to arbitration.

OIOS made the following recommendations. DPKO, in consultation with the Procurement Division, should: review the time frames required for the procurement of service and ration contracts and take steps to shorten the time involved; complete the project for development of clear contract specifications for all categories of rations; develop standard operating procedures for managing service and ration contracts that should include guidelines for evaluating performance of contractors; establish a contract management function within new missions; formulate a plan, with implementation time frames, for developing a ration management receiving and inspection system and test the system before implementation; assess training requirements of mission contract management personnel and develop a programme to enable them to manage complex service and ration contracts successfully; establish procedures to review cost proposals that were significantly lower than others to determine their reasonableness and validity; and negotiate prompt payment discount terms in future service and ration contracts that missions could realistically meet.

In its response, DPKO stated that the recent surge in peacekeeping activities was overstretching the resources of the Field Administration and Logistics Division to such an extent that it was barely able to address the immediate operational problems of missions. It would, therefore, create the systems and procedures recommended by the auditors when resources were available. OIOS agreed that it was essential that adequate resources be available to implement the long-overdue procedures recommended in its report. DPKO should, therefore, request additional funds to enable it to develop the procedures on a timely basis.

Property losses

ACABQ, in its May report on UN peacekeeping operations [A/53/940], expressed concern at what appeared to be a very cumbersome and involved process of reporting property losses and observed that there was a need to improve considerably the coordination between the various units involved in handling those losses. The functioning of Property Survey Boards appeared inefficient, involved and lengthy. ACABQ recommended that urgent steps be taken by the Secretariat to correct weaknesses identified by the Board of Auditors [A/53/5, vol. II], including staff training and temporary deployment of qualified staff to clear any existing backlog.

In June, the General Assembly considered the issue of property losses in connection with the Secretary-General's reports on the financing and liquidation of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia [YUN 1998, p. 317] and the financing of the Military Observer Group of MINUGUA [A/53/775]. The Assembly, in resolutions 53/230 (see PART ONE, Chapter IV) and 53/235 (see PART ONE, Chapter III) of 8 June, requested the Secretary-General to provide an updated report on losses of UN property in peacekeeping operations at its fifty-fourth session.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to that request, the Secretary-General, in December [A/54/669 & Con.1], submitted a report on the subject, which provided data on property losses for all peacekeeping missions operational or under liquidation during 1996-1997, except the United Nations Assistance Mission in Rwanda. Data on losses at the UN Logistics Base in Brindisi were also included.

Information showed that 7,728 items belonging to UN missions, excluding the United Nations Peace Forces (UNPF), were lost during that period due to accidents, negligence, acts of hostility, theft and other reasons, with an inventory value of $11,458,097 and a residual value of $3,312,948. Data for UNPF, presented in a separate annex because of the vast size of its property holdings, showed losses of 11,117 items, with an inventory value of $37,961,668 and a residual value of $21,590,143.

The Secretary-General said that the Secretariat had made progress in its efforts to safeguard UN property. To provide an auditable chain of accountability, the field asset control system was developed to ensure that UN property was properly recorded, accounted for and controlled, and that appropriate decisions were made on the procurement, delivery, redistribution, replenishment, storage, write-off and disposal of mission equipment. The system, which was expected to be fully operational in all missions by the end of 1999, could account for all non-expendable assets valued at $1,500 or more per unit at the time of purchase and with a serviceable life of five years or more, as well as items of lesser value, but not those valued below $500.

However, the system was not sufficient to ensure adequate protection of UN property; it was crucial that missions be provided with sufficient experienced personnel, particularly during their early and final phases. Nevertheless, losses due to heightened insecurity in mission areas and acts of war or hostilities were unavoidable. Experience showed that the commitment of host Governments to ensuring the protection of mission personnel and assets was also a crucial factor in terms of facilitating security.

With regard to the accountability procedures to deter loss of or damage to UN assets, all personnel were subject to UN financial and personnel regulations and rules, were regularly reminded to take care of the property assigned to them, and were made aware of the consequences if found responsible for the loss or damage.

However, the Secretariat considered that an efficient recovery mechanism was one of the best means to ensure accountability of those responsible for losses. In that connection, prompt action by the Property Survey Boards in the missions and at Headquarters was essential. The Secretariat was reviewing a proposal to amend the delegation of authority to the field that would permit local property survey boards to assess UN personnel up to $500. With regard to the accountability of UN military and civilian police observers, in a number of cases the amounts retained under the current practice of withholding two weeks of mission subsistence allowance entitlements prior to the departure of those concerned, in respect of cases in which they were involved, pending the taking of a decision by the Headquarters Property Survey Board, had proved to be insufficient to compensate the Organization. Since contingent personnel and members of formed police units did not serve in an individual capacity, cases of loss or damage to UN property by those categories of personnel were handled directly with the Governments involved.

The Secretariat was preparing a follow-up to the report of the Secretary-General on management irregularities causing financial losses to the Organization [A/53/849]. In preparing the report, the Secretary-General had been asked to take into account, among other related financial issues, measures to improve internal control and accountability. (See PART FIVE, Chapter II, for further details.)

UN Logistics Base

Reports of Secretary-General. In a January report [A/53/815], the Secretary-General presented the proposed budget for the period 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 for the maintenance of the United Nations Logistics Base in Brindisi, which amounted to $7,783,800. That represented a 9 per cent increase in total resources in relation to the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, which reflected a 14.6 per cent increase in civilian personnel costs and a 2.3 per cent increase in operational costs. The increase was partially offset by a 20 per cent decrease under other programmes. The budget provided for a staffing establishment of 20 international and 28 locally recruited staff. In addition, 55 posts were funded under general temporary assistance, which the Secretary-General proposed should be regularized, bringing the number of locally recruited staff to 83.

In May [A/C.5/53/62 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General submitted to the Fifth Committee the amounts to be apportioned in respect of each peacekeeping mission, including the prorated share of the support account and of the Logistics Base.

ACABQ report. In an April report [A/53/895/Add.8], ACABQ provided its comments on the financial performance report of the Logistics Base for the period 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 59] and on the proposed budget.

ACABQ recommended: inclusion of information on miscellaneous income in future performance reports and proposed budgets; acceptance of the Secretary-General's proposal to apply the unencumbered balance of $1,373,600 to the resources required for the period 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000; and approval of his proposed cost estimates for that period after a reduction of $327,300 relating to general temporary assistance. In that regard, ACABQ did not find justification for the 12 additional general temporary assistance staff requested and recommended that, should any surges in activity arise, related costs should be charged to the missions concerned. Also, commencing with the budget for the 2000-2001 biennium, the standard procedures for dealing with staff assessment should be applied to the Base.

In relation to the cost-benefit analysis contained in the budget report for the Base for the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 [YUN 1998, p. 58], ACABQ concurred with the Secretary-General's conclusion that the Base would continue to provide an effective level of cost-utility for the support of new peacekeeping operations for the foreseeable future.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 June [meeting 101], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/522/Add.3], adopted resolution 53/236 without vote [agenda item 143 (a)].

Financing of the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy

The General Assembly,
Recalling section XIV of its resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994,

Recalling also its decision 50/500 of 17 September 1996 on the financing of the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 52/1 B of 26 June 1998,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the Logistics Base and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Stressing the importance of establishing an accurate inventory of assets,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in the context of the next budget submission, to indicate clearly, as recommended by the Advisory Committee, the resources required for the Logistics Base to perform its basic functions;

7. Encourages the Secretary-General to take additional steps with a view to wider use of the Logistics Base by the specialized agencies and programmes of the United Nations system, taking into account the observations of the Advisory Committee contained in paragraphs 12 and 34 of its report;

10. Authorizes the Secretary-General to provide for a civilian establishment consisting of ten Professional, ten Field Service and eighty-three locally recruited staff;

11. Decides to consider during its fifty-fourth session the question of the financing of the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi.

Personnel matters

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/54/87] recommended that active-duty military and civilian police personnel should be adequately represented in DPKO and actively involved in its work. Member States should be given sufficient time to select and nominate their officers, preferably no less than 90 days, upon issuance of vacancy announcements. The Special Committee noted that the phasing out of Type II gratis personnel in DPKO had been completed, but expressed concern at the lack of an effective transition plan with respect to staff recruitment to minimize disruption, loss of continuity and expertise. It welcomed the Secretariat's assurances that vacancies would be announced to Member States in a more timely fashion, as well as the plan to implement a three-year cyclical recruitment/rotation programme. It encouraged the development and implementation of innovative strategies to further the participation of female personnel in all aspects of peacekeeping operations and recommended that an analysis of the effectiveness of such strategies be included in the Secretary-General's reports on peacekeeping operations.

The Special Committee stressed the importance of having senior military commanders, police commissioners and key staff personnel well selected and prepared prior to their deployment to a peacekeeping operation, and recommended a more thorough review of candidates. It reiterated its request to the Secretary-General for improvement of the current method by which senior military commanders and police commissioners were selected, and that he consider the feasibility of mandatory interviews. The criteria for selection should include professional experience and other personal qualities, such as good judgement, common sense and an ability to work in a multinational peacekeeping environment.

The Special Committee was encouraged by the establishment of the three-month training programme for potential chief administrative officer/senior management candidates. Recruitment of highly qualified chief administrative officers remained a concern as peacekeeping operations and their administration became increasingly complex. It noted the Secretariat's assurance that there were no plans to engage outside commercial firms in recruiting chief administrative officers and encouraged the Secretariat to include in the training programme the role of the chief administrative officer in the preparation of mission budgets.

Death and disability benefits

Reports of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 51/239 A [YUN 1997, p. 50], the Secretary-General submitted his sixth quarterly report on death and disability benefits [A/C.5/53/51]. As at 31 December 1998, 208 claims were awaiting processing, of which 63 were part of the backlog. A total of 104 claims were received by the Secretariat during the period 1 September to 31 December 1998.

The Assembly, by decision 53/461 B of 7 April, took note of the report.

The Secretary-General submitted his seventh quarterly report [A/C.5/53/58], which showed that, as at 31 March 1999, the number of claims awaiting processing had increased to 222, of which 47 were part of the backlog. During the period 1 January to 31 March 1999, 195 claims were received by the Secretariat, of which 181 were processed.

The Assembly, by decision 53/461 C of 8 June, took note of the seventh quarterly report.

In August and October, the Secretary-General submitted his eighth [A/C.5/53/66] and ninth [A/C.5/54/13] quarterly reports. As at 30 June, the number of claims awaiting processing had further increased to 285, as a result of the receipt of 113 new claims. A total of 47 claims represented part of the backlog. Only 50 claims were processed from 1 April to 30 June. As at 30 September, the number of claims awaiting processing had reached 317. Ninety-nine new claims were received and 67 were processed. The number of backlog claims had been reduced to nine.

The Assembly, by decision 54/459 A of 23 December, took note of the Secretary-General's eighth and ninth reports and of the progress made in clearing the backlog.

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/54/87] requested the Secretariat, in order to alleviate the hardship of affected families, promptly to settle compensation claims on account of death and disability suffered while in service with UN peacekeeping operations. Claims filed prior to 1 July 1997 should be settled expeditiously. Recognizing that, in certain cases, the long treatment period of a disability might prevent a State from filing a claim in a timely manner, the Special Committee requested the Secretariat to accept preliminary notification from the concerned Member State to that effect and the disability claim at a later stage on the basis of such notification. The Secretariat should also monitor, in cooperation with the Member State concerned, disability cases, preferably on a semi-annual basis, from the date of occurrence through medical certification, until the Government presented the claim, or for a maximum of five years to maintain contact with the situation and to support the affected persons morally.

Other peacekeeping matters

Demining

The Secretary-General, in his February report on the implementation of the recommendations of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/AC.121/43], said that during 1998 the United Nations Mine Action Service (UNMAS) had coordinated and fielded six assessment missions and was mounting a Level I Survey programme to measure the impact of mine contamination on specific communities in affected countries. It continued to serve as the point of contact with all mine action programmes in the field. An Inter-Agency Coordination Group was established at Headquarters and UNMAS had established a Steering Committee to serve as a vehicle for identifying priority issues and areas, the coordination of missions and programmes and the development of a unified policy.

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/54/87], recognizing the role of UNMAS as the focal point for coordinating mine action, welcomed the progress reported by the Secretary-General and encouraged continued coordination between UN departments, funds and programmes in that respect. It also encouraged Member States to contribute and make pledges to the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Action. The Special Committee reiterated its request that the Secretary-General provide an update on the experiences of the United Nations in demining in peacekeeping operations, taking into account inputs from those involved in such activities.

Cooperation with regional arrangements

Enhancing African peacekeeping capacity

The Secretary-General, responding to a request from the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [YUN 1997, p. 63; YUN 1998, p. 62], submitted a February report on the enhancement of African peacekeeping capacity [A/54/63-S/1999/171]. He said that the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and subregional African organizations were playing an increasing role in the management of conflicts on the continent and in contributing to the maintenance of international peace and security. The reinforcement of the capacity of African countries to participate in peacekeeping missions remained a key priority, whether through a UN peacekeeping mission or one authorized by the Security Council, but conducted by a regional organization or group of States. The United Nations continued to work closely with regional and subregional organizations in specific peacekeeping and peacemaking efforts in Africa. It had established a political liaison office with OAU in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, and was collaborating with OAU in enhancing its capacity to address conflict. The United Nations was prepared to facilitate development of expertise for the creation of the OAU Situation Room; OAU could also send some of its staff members to UN Headquarters for familiarization with its methods of operation. The Secretariat was also ready to deploy liaison officers to peacekeeping operations of OAU and of subregional organizations in Africa that the Security Council had authorized and at the headquarters of those organizations.

The Secretariat had also focused on enhancing awareness among African States of the functions of the standby arrangements system, and of the potential benefits of participation. It was reviewing the possibility of dispatching a standby arrangements team to Africa for further briefings and discussion. On 21 January 1999, the Secretariat, in cooperation with OAU, convened in New York a third meeting of African and non-African countries on the enhancement of African peacekeeping capacity. The meeting approved a training strategy and arrangements for information exchange proposed by the United Nations and endorsed, in principle, the establishment of a working group of those States directly involved in training assistance. The Secretariat intended to develop further its cooperation with OAU and the donor community in strengthening African peacekeeping capacity. DPKO, in coordination with OAU, had undertaken to serve as the focal point for the collection and dissemination of information on African capacity for peacekeeping. Over the preceding two years, the United Nations had conducted a number of training activities through its training assistance team and train-the-trainers programmes.

The Secretary-General said that resources to support the Secretariat's efforts to enhance African peacekeeping capacity were provided on a small scale and on a case-by-case basis. The United Nations Trust Fund for Improving Preparedness for Conflict Prevention and Peacekeeping in Africa, established to assist those efforts, had to date received only one contribution, from the United Kingdom. He strongly encouraged Member States to contribute to the Fund and drew the attention of donors to the OAU Peace Fund.

The Secretary-General proposed additional steps to enhance African peacekeeping capacity, including the provision of funding to allow African military officers to participate in short-term exchanges with UN peacekeeping staff; deployment of UN liaison officers to regional organizations; promotion of further cooperation by African States within the UN standby arrangements system and further use of the system to match needs with resources; and establishment of a special peacekeeping programme for African police officers.

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/54/87], reaffirming the important contribution that regional arrangements and agencies could make to peacekeeping, emphasized that no enforcement action should be taken under regional arrangements or regional agencies without the Security Council's authorization. It urged the strengthening of cooperation between the United Nations and relevant regional arrangements and agencies to enhance the capabilities of the international community in the maintenance of international peace and security and encouraged the Secretary-General to take steps towards that end. The Committee noted the successful experience of cooperation between the United Nations and a number of regional and subregional arrangements and agencies.

The Special Committee noted the Secretary-General's report on enhancement of African peacekeeping capacity and the recommendations contained therein, and asked Member States to establish the proposed working group on training assistance to African countries in the field of peacekeeping.

The Special Committee was of the view that efforts to enhance the capacity of African countries in the various aspects of peacekeeping were complementary to the obligations of all Member States under the Charter and were not intended to replace or reduce engagement of non-African countries in peacekeeping operations in the continent. International efforts to enhance the collective capacity of African countries to participate in peacekeeping operations should focus on enhancing OAU's institutional capacity, in particular its Mechanism for the Prevention, Management and Resolution of Conflicts, through the provision of financial and technical assistance. In that connection, the Special Committee underlined the relevance and importance of the OAU Peace Fund and urged Member States to contribute to it. It encouraged Member States to contribute to current efforts to enhance the participation of African countries in peacekeeping operations and reiterated its view that the United Nations, in consultation with OAU and with the cooperation of Member States, should play an active role, especially in coordinating all those efforts. It urged Member States to contribute to the Trust Fund established by the Secretary-General for that purpose. It also encouraged Member States to provide financial and other support to current peacekeeping operations conducted by African subregional organizations.

The Special Committee noted that the DPKO Lessons Learned Unit was finalizing its study on cooperation between the United Nations and regional arrangements and agencies, and urged that the study be made available to Member States and regional arrangements and agencies as soon as possible.

Chapter II

Africa

Countries in Africa that had experienced serious political problems in 1998 continued to do so in 1999, although in some cases the situation improved slightly during the year. The political problems of the continent, mostly brought about by ethnic conflict, were mitigated by some successful efforts by the United Nations, as well as by regional organizations and others, to negotiate settlements between warring factions. Advances were made in the search for negotiated solutions in Sierra Leone and the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) and between Ethiopia and Eritrea, opening a possible path towards sustainable peace in those troubled areas. Despite the progress that generated cautious optimism about the future, tensions remained high and warfare continued in a number of countries.

During 1999, the Secretary-General reported on action taken with regard to his 1998 recommendations on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa. He stated that progress had been made in the areas of democratic elections, good governance, accountability, transparency and the rule of law. Problems that continued to need attention included conflict, corruption, debt burdens, trade barriers and the AIDS epidemic. Massive investment was required to accomplish such goals as improving education, providing health care, improving infrastructure, reducing poverty, establishing good governance and reintegrating refugees and displaced persons, and he appealed to States for assistance.

In the Great Lakes region, the situation in the DRC was complicated by the presence of foreign troops supporting the opposing parties—the Government, assisted by Angola, Chad, Namibia, the Sudan and Zimbabwe, and the armed militias reportedly supported by Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda. The conflict in the eastern part of the country continued and was accompanied by serious violations of international humanitarian law, including murders and attacks on the civilian population. Following efforts to find a negotiated settlement, the DRC, one of the two main rebel movements and five regional States signed the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement in July. The Agreement provided for a ceasefire to be monitored by the United Nations, the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and Zambia; withdrawal of foreign forces; and re-establishment of the State administration throughout the country. In the light of the Agreement, the Security Council, acting on the recommendation of the Secretary-General, established the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC), at a strength of 90 military personnel, to help implement the terms. However, fighting and troop mobilization resumed after the Agreement was reached, and the commitments were not implemented by the end of the year.

Rwanda, in general, experienced diminished tension and improved security in 1999. Steps were taken towards building democracy and reconciliation between ethnic groups, including successful local elections and the establishment of commissions on human rights and on national unity and reconciliation. Despite the positive moves, the National Assembly of Rwanda extended the period of transition to democracy by another four years on the grounds that more time was needed to promote reconciliation and to draft a new constitution.

The peace process for Burundi continued in early 1999, with the all-party peace negotiations taking place in Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania. The Seventh Regional Summit on Burundi in January expressed satisfaction over the progress achieved by the negotiations and decided to suspend the remaining sanctions imposed by the countries of the Great Lakes on Burundi. In July, the peace process resumed at a meeting among the numerous Burundi parties, under the chairmanship of the Facilitator of the peace process, Julius K. Nyerere. After extended talks, Mr. Nyerere criticized the Burundi parties for the lack of progress. The killing of civilians, murder of UN officials and the Government's policy of forced removal of civilians brought the peace process to a near standstill by the end of the year.

In Angola, hostilities resumed at the beginning of the year between the government forces and those of the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA). The Government led a successful military campaign that resulted in a significant change in the political situation in September. State authority was re-established in much of the territory previously occupied by UNITA, bringing a measure of stability to those areas. The Security Council reiterated its view that the primary cause of the crisis was the refusal of UNITA to comply with its obligations under the 1994 Lusaka Protocol and relevant Council resolutions. The United Nations Observer Mission in Angola (MONUA) was withdrawn and, in its place, a UN office was established to explore ways for restoring peace and assisting in development.

The situation in Sierra Leone improved considerably towards the end of the year, which began with an inauspicious event—an attack by rebel forces on the capital, Freetown, which left many killed and mutilated and much destruction. The rebels were repelled after two weeks by forces of the Monitoring Group (ECOMOG) of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS). Following diplomatic efforts led by ECOWAS and the United Nations, the Lome Peace Agreement was signed in July, by which the parties agreed to form a Government of National Unity. In August, the Security Council authorized the expansion of its mission in Sierra Leone, with a new mandate to work together with ECOMOG troops in implementing the Agreement. In late 1999, the leaders of the two main rebel factions returned to Freetown, a new Government of National Unity was formed that included members of the main opposition parties, and a disarmament programme was launched. Nevertheless, the situation remained precarious as ceasefire violations and human rights abuses continued. When ECOWAS indicated its intention to withdraw its troops from Sierra Leone, the Secretary-General recommended another expansion of the UN mission there.

The 1998 border dispute between Eritrea and Ethiopia escalated into a full-scale war in 1999. The Security Council condemned the use of force by both parties and demanded an immediate halt in the hostilities and protection for the civilian population. OAU took the lead in the search for a negotiated settlement, with the support of the United Nations, among others. Although both sides accepted the terms of the OAU Framework Agreement, they disagreed on how it should be applied. Experts from OAU, the United Nations, Algeria and the United States met in Algeria to work out technical arrangements for its implementation.

In the Central African Republic, progress was made towards implementing the Bangui Agreements with the holding of the presidential elections in September. The Security Council twice extended the mandate of the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic (MINURCA) at the request of the Government. However, the transition to a new government was impeded by the tense political climate and the opposition's challenge to the outcome of the elections. The Secretary-General recommended a gradual transition from UN peacekeeping involvement to post-conflict peace-building, with MINURCA gradually handing over its security functions to local security and law enforcement forces.

Progress was made in implementing the Abuja Agreement on Guinea-Bissau, signed in 1998 by President Joao Bernardo Vieira and his former Chief of Staff, General Ansoumane Mane, to end fighting between forces supporting the two parties. In early January 1999, an interim Government of National Unity was appointed, following which an ECOWAS interposition force was deployed. The Secretary-General established the United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Guinea-Bissau to promote national reconciliation and assist with the organization of elections. When President Vieira was forcibly removed from office by the military junta led by General Mane in May, ECOWAS withdrew its force. Nevertheless, presidential and legislative elections were held, as scheduled, in November.

The United Nations continued its efforts to hold a referendum in Western Sahara for the self-determination of its people, as agreed in 1990 by Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (POLISARIO). The identification of voters and the initiation of the appeals process were implemented as planned, but the identification of members of certain tribes caused delays. At the end of the year, the Secretary-General observed that it appeared unlikely that a referendum could be held earlier than 2002.

The Security Council suspended the 1992 sanctions imposed on the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya after the Secretary-General reported on the arrival in the Netherlands of the two suspects charged with the 1988 Pan Am flight 103 bombing. They were to be tried by a Scottish court sitting in the Netherlands. However, by the end of the year, the sanctions had not been lifted.

The political, military and humanitarian situation in Somalia deteriorated in 1999, despite peace initiatives by regional and international organizations. Somalia remained a country with no functioning central government.

Promotion of peace in Africa

tions made by the Secretary-General in his 1998 report on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa [YUN 1998, p. 66]. In that report, the Secretary-General stated that the Organization's cardinal mission was the lasting prevention of conflict as the means to achieve human security and development, stressing the importance of early warning capabilities, early action through peacekeeping deployment and/or humanitarian intervention, post-conflict peace-building efforts, promoting economic growth and strengthening good governance. The development-related aspects of the Secretary-General's report were considered by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly (see PART THREE, Chapter III). The Secretary-General submitted a September report to the Security Council, in which he concentrated on his recommendations regarding peace and security in Africa (see below).

Communications. On 28 April [A/53/931-S/1999/491], Germany requested circulation to the General Assembly and the Security Council of the conclusions of the Council of the European Union (EU) on the Secretary-General's 1998 report. Welcoming the report and its follow-up as contributing to raising the international community's awareness of the need to promote durable peace and sustainable development in Africa, the EU expressed its commitment to participating in the follow-up process and commended the Secretary-General's efforts to mobilize the international community in support of Africa through the UN system, within a coordinated framework. As the most important donor to African countries, the EU said, it would continue to contribute to the creation of durable peace and sustainable development, in particular through efforts to assist in creating a stable and democratic environment, eradicating poverty and integrating African countries into the world economy. It would continue to support conflict prevention and resolution under UN auspices, also considering that increased attention should be given to illicit arms flows to and in Africa, as well as to safeguarding the civilian and humanitarian character of refugee camps and settlements.

By a 2 August letter [A/54/209-S/1999/859], Cameroon transmitted the report of the Subregional High-level Seminar on the Examination and Implementation of the Recommendations Contained in the Report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations on the Causes of Conflict and the Promotion of Durable Peace and Sustainable Development in Africa (Yaounde, 19-21 July), which was part of the programme of activities of the UN Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa. The seminar covered subjects related to resolution of conflicts and crises, including peacemaking, peacekeeping and peace-building measures and promotion of humanitarian law, good governance and sustainable development. It recommended a number of measures for African countries to take in the areas of inclusive democracy, peaceful settlement of disputes, illicit trafficking in light weapons and cooperation in defence and security, among others.

Report of Secretary-General. In a September report [S/1999/1008], the Secretary-General described progress in implementing recommendations contained in his 1998 report, including the activities of the Security Council's ad hoc Working Group to review the recommendations pertaining to peace and security. The Working Group had developed concrete proposals for action: support for regional and subregional initiatives in the areas of conflict prevention and maintenance of peace; establishment of an international mechanism to assist host Governments in maintaining the security and neutrality of refugee camps; strengthening of Africa's peacekeeping capacity; strengthening the effectiveness of arms sanctions regimes imposed by the Council; addressing urgently the question of arms flows; and enhancing the Council's ability to monitor activities authorized by it but carried out by Member States or a coalition of States. The Secretary-General also described action being taken by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

In the area of peacemaking, the Secretary-General had appointed special envoys and representatives who had been actively involved in negotiations initiated by regional organizations to help resolve conflicts in Burundi, the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), Ethiopia-Eritrea and Sierra Leone. Noting that the proliferation of initiatives had complicated and at times frustrated UN peacemaking efforts, the Secretary-General said he had consulted closely with the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and subregional organizations to avoid rival mediation efforts and to concentrate the resources and comparative advantage of all involved in conflict prevention and resolution. In that context, he had, in the case of Somalia, established a forum that grouped together all Security Council members and the countries and regional organizations that had undertaken peacemaking initiatives. Another useful mechanism was the establishment of "Friends of the Secretary-General" or "Friends of (country)" (for example, the Group of Friends of Guinea-Bissau) to bring together countries and organizations with particular interest and influence or a contribution to make in peacemaking efforts in a given country. He had also made use of contact groups and special conferences, such as the Special Consultation on Guinea and the Special Conference on Sierra Leone.

Other efforts being considered to respond to situations of conflict included targeting sanctions (rendering Council sanctions a more effective and less blunt instrument); criminalizing violations of Council arms embargoes; reducing the purchase of arms and munitions to below 1.5 per cent of gross domestic product; addressing the problem of illicit arms flows and small arms; and identifying international arms merchants.

With regard to supporting African peacekeeping, the Secretariat convened a special meeting in coordination with OAU on 21 January to discuss ways of implementing the recommendations on enhancing African peacekeeping capacity. The 51 participants broadly supported the UN proposals for training and information exchange and considered the establishment of a regular forum for strengthening coordination, better utilization of resources and follow-up action. The United Nations and OAU were also working on a staff exchange programme. The Secretariat undertook to serve as a clearing house for the collection and dissemination of information on enhancing African capacity for peacekeeping, and its database was posted on the Internet. The Secretariat also provided expert advice, through the United Nations Training Assistance Team, to various bilateral and multilateral training activities in Africa and train-the-trainer courses. In 1998 and 1999, the Secretariat participated in the conduct and organization of some 15 multinational peacekeeping training programmes, most of which were held in Africa. Increased focus was also given to the training and organization of civilian police for peacekeeping. In coordination with the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), the Secretariat participated in June in the organizational seminar of a newly established regional peacekeeping centre in Cote d'Ivoire. It also participated in the preparatory seminar for the Central African regional peacekeeping exercise planned for 2000. The United Nations Standby Arrangement (SBA) System teams visited six southern African States and provided briefings in New York to 18 other African countries; as a result, 11 additional African States joined SBA, bringing the number of African members to 23. The United Nations Trust Fund for Improving Preparedness for Conflict Prevention and Peacekeeping in Africa had been used over the preceding two years for training in such areas as mission management and logistics. In February, the Secretary-General submitted a related report to the General Assembly and the Security Council on enhancement of African peacekeeping capacity [A/54/63-S/1999/171] (see preceding chapter).

As to humanitarian assistance, the Secretary-General described the coordination of those efforts in Africa (see PART THREE, Chapter III), including aid to refugees and displaced persons (see PART THREE, Chapter XII).

Post-conflict peace-building was the focus of a number of UN activities. For example, the United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Guinea-Bissau, established in 1999, was mandated to help restore and consolidate peace and democracy by supporting national reconciliation efforts, organizing elections and seeking the commitment of the Government and other parties to adopting a programme of voluntary arms collection. The United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Liberia contributed to the consolidation of peace by facilitating negotiations between ECOWAS and the Government, conducting training courses for members of the police, encouraging the Government to ratify human rights conventions and assisting in the destruction of weapons. The United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic (MINURCA) assisted in the conduct of presidential elections. The work of the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone (UNOMSIL) included disarmament, demobilization, human rights promotion and humanitarian assistance.

As part of its efforts to build a durable peace and promote economic growth, the United Nations focused on securing respect for human rights and the rule of law, promoting transparency and accountability in public administration, enhancing Governments' administrative capacity and strengthening democratic governance.

Sustainable development was promoted through UN activities aimed at creating a positive environment for investment, investing in human resources, establishing public health priorities, focusing on social justice, eliminating all forms of discrimination against women, restructuring international aid, reducing debt burdens, opening international markets and supporting regional cooperation and integration.

The Secretary-General observed that Africa, on the eve of the new millennium, revealed a remarkable combination of accomplishments and unresolved problems, of opportunities seized and chances missed. There were places in Africa, he noted, where problems persisted, such as arms trading, conflicts, poor governance, silence and inaction regarding AIDS, corruption, crushing debt burdens, trade barriers and declining aid, which made it extremely hard for nations to attract investment and stave off further marginalization from the global economy. However, there were also places—many more than was commonly recognized—where dramatic changes for the better were taking place. Citing the examples of Nigeria and South Africa in particular, the Secretary-General noted that democratic elections were gradually becoming the norm in Africa, and good governance, accountability, transparency and the rule of law were gaining ground. Many African nations were liberalizing trade and exchange controls, privatizing moribund State industries, building up communications infrastructures and reforming their legal and regulatory frameworks.

Through the sustained diplomatic efforts of African countries themselves, important breakthroughs had been made in the search for negotiated solutions in some of the protracted conflicts—for example, the Lome Agreement for Sierra Leone and the Lusaka accords for the DRC. Significant progress had also been made in efforts to negotiate peace in the conflict between Ethiopia and Eritrea (see p. 130).

Although a beginning had been made in strengthening cooperation between the United Nations and African regional organizations and for the enhancement of African peacekeeping capacity, the necessary resources had not been made available. The Secretary-General appealed to Member States to be generous, bilaterally, multilaterally and to the UN and OAU trust funds. Increased official development assistance (ODA) remained necessary and action on debt was urgent. With the will and wherewithal on the part of both Africa and the international community, peace and development in Africa could be given decisive new momentum, he stated.

Security Council consideration. The Security Council, on 29 and 30 September [meeting 4049], discussed the situation in Africa, specifically the Secretary-General's September report. Opening the debate, the Secretary-General said that political and military engagement, both African and international, was needed to bring stability and to address the root causes of the upheavals on the continent. He called on States to do what was reasonable and doable—to provide more resources for humanitarian assistance and post-conflict peace-building, to act more decisively on debt, to increase ODA, to contribute training and technology and to become politically engaged.

In his statement to the Council, the OAU Secretary-General welcomed recent developments in the DRC and Sierra Leone leading towards a peaceful resolution of the conflicts there. He noted, however, that a number of countries remained a source of concern—conflicts in Angola and between Ethiopia and Eritrea, and the situations in Burundi, the Comoros, the Republic of the Congo and Liberia. In almost all those conflicts, Africans had been at the forefront in seeking solutions and the United Nations had been OAU's main peace partner. The Secretary-General cautioned that the signing of a peace agreement, even though significant, was but the beginning of a long and arduous path to peace, with the potential for renewed conflict if the components for peacemaking and peacekeeping were not adequate, timely and appropriate. OAU lacked the necessary and adequate resources to ensure the full and successful implementation of the agreements that had so far been signed, much less those yet to be agreed by the parties to the conflicts. Africa was undertaking a process of political, economic and social reform and renewal, but for the process to remain sustainable, it needed the active support of the international community, he concluded.

At the end of the discussion on the Secretary-General's progress report, the President announced that the Council had concluded the current stage of its consideration of the agenda item. The Council took no further action on the item during the remainder of the year.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/234 on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on that topic would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session (decision 54/465).

In related action, the Assembly adopted resolution 54/55 A concerning the activities of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa (see PART ONE, Chapter VII).

Great Lakes region

The United Nations, in cooperation with regional organizations, continued its peacemaking efforts in the Great Lakes region of Africa, which continued to suffer from political and military turmoil in 1999. While progress was made in negotiations on the situations in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) and Burundi, fighting continued sporadically in both countries between government troops and armed militias. Rwanda, on the other hand, enjoyed a period of diminished combat and positive steps were made towards democracy and reconciliation between armed groups. The situation in the region was complicated by the movement of militias, armies and refugees across borders.

The DRC, in particular, remained volatile despite a mid-year respite from the fighting between political and ethnic factions. The year opened with a continuation of the war in the eastern part of the country, begun in 1998 by the Congolese Rally for Democracy party, which was supported by the armies of Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda. As the fighting escalated and foreign forces became involved, the Government sought military assistance from five other countries—Angola, Chad, Namibia, the Sudan and Zimbabwe. Following regional negotiations, a ceasefire agreement was signed in July in Lusaka, Zambia, by the DRC and the five regional States, which called for a UN peacekeeping force to ensure implementation of the agreement. However, the agreed ceasefire provisions were not observed by the armed groups and fighting resumed. As a result of the agreement, the Security Council in August authorized the deployment of up to 90 military liaison personnel to assist in developing modalities for implementing the provisions, and later established the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo to carry out that function. The Secretary-General appointed Moustapha Niasse as his Special Envoy to pursue the peace process with a possible UN role in negotiating a settlement.

In Burundi, signs of progress towards a peaceful settlement between the many armed factions were seen in early 1999, as the series of all-party peace negotiations, begun in 1998, continued in Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania. The Seventh Regional Summit on Burundi in January welcomed the progress achieved by those negotiations and decided to suspend the remaining sanctions imposed by the regional countries on Burundi. However, fighting broke out again and, despite renewed attempts at negotiations, the prospects for success were clouded by the killing of civilians and UN officials, the forced removal of civilians by the Government, and the influx of Burundian and Rwandan rebels from neighbouring countries.

Rwanda experienced a period of reduced fighting and tensions eased in 1999, particularly when compared with the previous five years. Furthermore, it made initial moves towards democracy through such steps as holding local elections, establishing commissions on human rights and on national reconciliation, and better supervision by parliament over aspects of government.

The Secretary-General in December appointed Berhanu Dinka as his Special Representative for the Great Lakes Region.

Peacemaking efforts

On 29 December [S/1999/1296], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his decision to appoint Berhanu Dinka as his Special Representative for the Great Lakes Region. In that capacity, he would sound out the views of countries in the region regarding the proposed organization of an international conference on the Great Lakes; represent the Secretary-General at meetings and deliberations under the Arusha peace process on Burundi; and address the regional dimensions of the conflict in the DRC through, among other things, close interaction with the Special Representative in the DRC. The Council took note of the decision on 30 December [S/1999/1297].

In an April resolution on the DRC (resolution 1234(1999)), the Security Council reaffirmed the importance of holding, at the appropriate time, an international conference on peace, security and stability in the Great Lakes region under the auspices of the United Nations and OAU, with the participation of the Governments of the region and all others concerned. The Council, in a June statement by its President (S/PRST/1999/17), encouraged the international community to help facilitate such a conference.

Communication. The EU, in a statement transmitted to the Security Council by Germany on 21 June [S/1999/700], expressed concern about the flow of arms and military equipment and personnel to and within the Great Lakes region, which, it said, was fuelling conflicts in the Great Lakes and Central Africa, as well as in other parts of the continent, and was mostly financed through the trafficking of diamonds, gold and other precious materials, and other illicit activities. The EU believed that a search for a long-term solution should give high priority to measures to curb arms supplies, their illicit circulation and the illicit trafficking that financed them.

Throughout 1999, the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) was afflicted by the war in the eastern part of the country, which flared up in August 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 79]. The war escalated as several Congolese rebel movements received support from the armies of Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda. In the light of that situation, the DRC Government requested help from the armies of five other countries: Angola, Chad, Namibia, the Sudan and Zimbabwe. The presence of those armies, in addition to the involvement of various militias such as the Interhamwe, the Mai-Mai, the former Rwandan Armed Forces, the Front pour la défense de la démocratie and the Lord's Resistance Army, created a climate of great insecurity, which was complicated by serious violations of international humanitarian law, such as murders and attacks on the civilian population (see PART TWO, Chapter III).

Following many attempts to end the conflict in the DRC, the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement was signed on 10 July by the DRC and the five other regional States. Later, the Agreement was signed by one rebel group, the Movement for the Liberation of the Congo, but not by the Congolese Rally for Democracy. Under the Agreement, which contained both military and political provisions and called for observer participation by one country (Zambia) and two organizations (the United Nations and OAU), the parties agreed to seek a UN peacekeeping force in the DRC to ensure implementation. However, the ceasefire provisions were not observed by the armed groups, fighting and troop mobilization continued, the militias were not disarmed and massacres were carried out by armed elements. Many of the commitments outlined in the Agreement (including withdrawal of foreign forces, facilitation of humanitarian assistance, equal rights for all ethnic groups and re-establishment of the State administration throughout the country) were not implemented by year's end. In particular, the Government of President Laurent Desiré Kabila refused to hold an all-inclusive national dialogue (inter-Congolese political negotiations) on the future of the country with the participation of political parties and civil society, preferring instead a "national debate" limited to the issues it was prepared to discuss.

Following the signing of the Agreement, the Secretary-General made recommendations on a peacekeeping force to the Security Council, which in August authorized the deployment of up to 90 UN military liaison personnel, together with the necessary civilian, political, humanitarian and administrative staff, to assist in developing modalities for implementing the Agreement, among other things. In November, the Council, recognizing the Lusaka Agreement as the most viable basis for a resolution of the conflict, established the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC), composed of those staff already authorized. The Council encouraged all Congolese to participate in the national dialogue to be organized on the future government.

While some progress was made in the implementation of the Ceasefire Agreement, a number of setbacks also occurred and the military and security situation deteriorated in November and December. In addition to lack of security and freedom of movement for peacekeeping personnel, fighting continued in some parts of the country.

The Secretary-General appointed Moustapha Niasse (Senegal) as his Special Envoy for the DRC peace process. Mr. Niasse's mandate was to pursue the peace process, including through a possible UN role in promoting a negotiated settlement.

Political and military developments

The DRC, in the early months of 1999, addressed several letters to the Security Council to inform the members of the situation in the country and the reported involvement of foreign troops and militias. It initially named Rwanda and Uganda as the countries sending troops into the DRC and later added Burundi.

By a 6 January letter [S/1999/13], the DRC informed the Council of a massacre of some 500 civilians, including many women, children and elderly people, allegedly committed by troops of a Rwandan-Ugandan coalition, in the south-east of the DRC. The killings were a sequel to reprisals against Mai-Mai warriors who were reported to have attacked enemy positions in South Kivu province the day before. According to reports, the massacres, which lasted from 30 December 1998 to 1 January 1999, were perpetrated by soldiers of the Rwandan-Ugandan coalition, and more specifically by soldiers of the Rwandan Patriotic Army, and the victims were Christian members of the indigenous population. The DRC urged the Council to condemn the invasion of Congolese territory by Rwandan and Ugandan troops, to call on the two countries to withdraw their troops and halt all atrocities against the Congolese population and to initiate an inquiry into the massacres. In April [S/1999/493], the DRC revised the figure of murdered Congolese civilians to 814.

Despite the difficulties raised by the war, said the DRC in a letter of 15 January [S/1999/46], the Government had made progress towards the restoration and democratization of the political system. In the political arena, efforts were made to establish structures to prepare for free, democratic elections at all political levels of Congolese society. With regard to the economy, measures were taken to control inflation and halt the currency depreciation. In the legal and human rights field, a Ministry of Human Rights was established to promote respect for human rights and efforts were made to improve the legal system. In the same letter, the DRC expressed concern about the border security situation, noting that the country was located in a conflict zone that had for decades undergone crises, including the Rwandan genocide of 1994. The DRC claimed that the Great Lakes region had been destabilized because armed bands used the territories of host countries to attack their enemies and States violated the national sovereignty of other countries on the pretext of their own national security.

By a 24 February letter [S/1999/205], the DRC transmitted to the Council a document entitled "White paper on massive violations of human rights and of the basic rules of international humanitarian law by the aggressor countries (Uganda, Rwanda and Burundi) in the eastern part of the DRC", which covered the period from 2 August to 5 November 1998. It transmitted a second document on 28 June [S/1999/733], covering the period from 6 November 1998 to 15 April 1999. The DRC acknowledged the support of Angola, Chad, Namibia and Zimbabwe in its efforts to repulse foreign aggression and regain its territorial integrity but noted that it had spared no effort at the diplomatic level to find an acceptable solution. The DRC stated that the Security Council was doing nothing to promote international peace and security by indiscriminately calling for the withdrawal of all foreign forces without distinction between aggressors and those aiding the legitimate Government.

The DRC, in a 15 March letter [S/1999/276], claimed that on 5 March Rwandan elements of the Rwandan-Ugandan coalition troops had massacred 100 civilians in the town of Kamituga, South Kivu province. The Government urged the Council to expedite an international inquiry into the recent massacres in South Kivu.

Concerning a related development in the border region, Uganda and the DRC commented on who was responsible for the murder on 1 March of 12 people, including 8 tourists, in a national park in Uganda. Uganda, on 8 March [S/1999/252], transmitted the comments of its President, who said the criminals were the Interahamwes (Hutus living in the DRC). On 3 March [S/1999/229], the DRC condemned the act and denied all responsibility for those events. It expressed concern at the attempt to destabilize the Great Lakes region and called for an international investigation.

Security Council consideration. By a 4 March letter [S/1999/278], the DRC requested the Security Council to hold an open debate on the question of a peaceful settlement of the conflict in the DRC. The Council considered the situation on 19 March [meeting 3987].

Addressing the Council, the DRC said that the sole obstacle to a peaceful solution to the Congolese crisis was Rwanda's determination to remain on Congolese territory. Negotiations were continuing at the regional level within OAU, but, as a result of the impasse in the negotiating process, the DRC felt it timely to appeal to the international community to induce the aggressors to engage in negotiations to ensure regional peace and stability. The DRC believed that resolution of the crisis required a regional conference of the Great Lakes countries that would bring together leaders and their respective opposition forces under the auspices of OAU and the United Nations. The DRC's concern was to end the martyrdom of the population in the eastern and Kivu provinces, which remained under the occupation of the regular armed forces of Rwanda and Uganda. The DRC agreed to sign a ceasefire agreement, to be followed by the deployment of a buffer force along its borders with Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda, and a timetable for the withdrawal of the aggressor troops. Until the international community took additional steps to bring peace to the entire Great Lakes region, the DRC expected the Council to recognize that the DRC was the victim of armed aggression; to condemn that aggression; to demand respect by the aggressors for international humanitarian law; to demand withdrawal of the troops of aggression; to deploy an interposing force along common borders; and to convene an international conference on restoring peace in the Great Lakes region.

Rwanda believed that the peace process, particularly the Lusaka process, was well under way and that the Council should continue to support it. Rwanda's security had been affected by the presence in the DRC of large numbers of armed elements of Rwandan nationality, including former government forces and militia responsible for the 1994 genocide. Their ability to reorganize and rearm on Congolese territory, with the support of the Congolese Government, was a destabilizing factor for Rwanda. In Rwanda's view, a comprehensive resolution of the DRC crisis should be reached through dealing with the governance and leadership crisis there, through the neutralization and dismantling of the non-State armies operating in the DRC, and through the isolation of those embracing genocide in the region. Rwanda called on the DRC to dismantle the dozen non-State armies that were being used in aggression against the territorial integrity of neighbouring States.

Uganda said it was committed to a diplomatic solution to the conflict in the DRC and stated that it had neither territorial ambitions nor economic interests beyond normal trade relations. According to Uganda, the crisis in the DRC had a regional dimension that originated with the 1994 genocide in Rwanda. Former Rwandan forces and militias had crossed into the DRC and had launched attacks against Uganda from Congolese territory. Uganda had responded in self-defence by recapturing its territory and following its attackers into Zairian (currently DRC) territory in hot pursuit. Furthermore, in 1998 DRC President Kabila had invited Uganda to deploy its forces inside the DRC to flush out the Allied Democratic Forces, a rebel group that had been infiltrated into his country by the Sudan. Zimbabwe, Angola and Namibia, later joined by Chad and the Sudan, had provided foreign military assistance at Mr. Kabila's request, on the pretext that the DRC had been invaded by Uganda and Rwanda. The DRC Government had committed itself to the principle of a national conference to determine the political future of the country involving all political stakeholders, although the question of whether the rebels should participate directly or through proximity talks had not been settled.

Namibia said that on 18 January it had hosted a summit of the countries that were involved in the fighting in the DRC. That meeting resolved that a ceasefire should be signed without delay; however, what followed were continued attacks on government and allied forces. In its view, the Security Council needed to become actively involved.

Most speakers warned of the implications for the region of the ongoing conflict in the DRC and supported the regional mediation efforts currently under way, particularly those led by the Southern African Development Community (SADC) known as the Lusaka process, and those of OAU and the United Nations. Several countries supported the call for an international conference on peace and security in the Great Lakes region, while others called for an African approach. The United States, expressing concern about the ethnicization of the conflict, said it would consider supporting a peacekeeping operation in the DRC if there were a comprehensive agreement among the belligerents to end the conflict and to observe a ceasefire, and the mandate would be to observe and monitor, not to enforce the peace or maintain the security of the borders. Burkina Faso and the United Kingdom also supported a peacekeeping force.

Appointment of Special Envoy. The Secretary-General informed the Security Council on 1 April [S/1999/379] of his appointment of Moustapha Niasse (Senegal) as his Special Envoy for the DRC peace process. Mr. Niasse's mandate would be to: demonstrate to the leaders concerned the Secretary-General's commitment to regional efforts to restore peace; assess progress made in the Lusaka process; identify obstacles to signing the ceasefire agreement; have contacts with Congolese political and civil leaders with the aim of assessing the prospects for broader political participation and national reconciliation; sound out African leaders on a possible UN role in promoting a negotiated settlement; ascertain possible material and financial support for a settlement from non-African countries; and report to the Secretary-General on his mission, with recommendations on practical measures that the United Nations could take to assist the peace process. Mr. Niasse, who was expected to visit the area in April, would be assisted by the Secretary-General's Special Representative for the Great Lakes Region, Berhanu Dinka. On 5 April [S/1999/380], the Council agreed with the Secretary-General's decision to appoint a Special Envoy.

Communications. The EU, by a 17 February declaration on peace efforts in the DRC [S/1999/176], noted some positive signals with regard to a possible ceasefire agreement. It welcomed President Kabila's preparedness to enter into negotiations with all parties to the conflict, including the rebel movement. It stated its readiness to consider a rehabilitation programme for the DRC in the event of cessation of hostilities and internal progress on peace, democracy and respect for human rights.

On 25 March [S/1999/329], the DRC stated that Rwandan, Burundian and Ugandan aggressors had massacred more than 250 Congolese civilians in the occupied territory in eastern DRC during March. It called for an investigation into violations of international humanitarian law with a view to prosecuting the guilty parties. On 7 April [S/1999/396], the DRC forwarded a joint statement issued on the occasion of the visit by President Kabila to Kenya. Kenyan President Daniel arap Moi and President Kabila agreed that the subject of national debate in the DRC should include the process of acceding to power through popular elections, the question of a new constitutional dispensation and the formulation of laws to govern the formation and operation of political parties. President arap Moi offered Nairobi as the venue for the all-inclusive talks and agreed to consult with all parties with a view to inviting the DRC Government and all Congolese groups that were stakeholders to attend.

Sirte peace agreement

On 20 April [S/1999/450], the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya transmitted to the Security Council the text of the Peace Agreement for the Great Lakes Region, signed in Sirte, Libya, on 18 April by the Presidents of Chad, the DRC, Eritrea and Uganda, and the head of State of Libya, Colonel Muammar Al-Qadhafi, who was coordinator of the peace process in the Great Lakes region.

By that agreement, the signatories affirmed the security and integrity of the borders of all States; decided to cease hostilities in order to pave the way for dialogue and a peaceful solution; agreed to deploy a neutral African peace-keeping force in the area inside the DRC where Burundian, Rwandan and Ugandan troops were situated and that all foreign forces in the DRC would be withdrawn as soon as a peace agreement was reached; and agreed that the withdrawal of Rwandan and Ugandan troops would be timed with the arrival of the African peace forces. The signatories condemned all acts of violence and mass murder and affirmed the need to punish and disarm those responsible. They encouraged the DRC to initiate a national dialogue for all parties. In addition, they pledged to refrain from taking actions to overthrow the DRC Government and stressed the continuity of the role of the peace coordinator in creating the climate and mechanism for accelerating the peace process. Libya affirmed that it had been decided to deploy ceasefire monitors from Liberia, Libya and Zambia.

Uganda also forwarded the text of the Sirte agreement to the Council on 21 May [S/1999/623]. It added that the agreement was linked to the Lusaka peace process and described it as a declaration of commitment to the ongoing regional peace process under the facilitation of President Frederick Chiluba of Zambia. A ceasefire agreement would have to be negotiated and finalized by all the belligerents in the DRC to enable the cessation of hostilities, the putting in place of an interposition force, the enhancement of internal dialogue and the withdrawal of all foreign troops. Uganda called on Colonel Qadhafi to liaise with President Chiluba.

In a 29 April letter [S/1999/493], the DRC recalled the agreement signed in Sirte, reiterated its request that the Council demand that Rwanda and Uganda adhere strictly to resolution 1234(1999) (see above), particularly to those paragraphs demanding an immediate halt to the hostilities and calling on those two States to end their military presence in the DRC. The DRC urged the Council to demand that Rwanda and Uganda conclude a ceasefire agreement with the DRC, to create the conditions for a peaceful settlement, including the withdrawal of their troops, and to refrain from action that might aggravate the situation.

Communiqués and statements

The Presidents of Rwanda, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania issued a communique on the DRC on 5 May [A/54/95-S/1999/551]. At a meeting in Dodoma, United Republic of Tanzania, on 4 and 5 May, the leaders focused on finding a solution to the conflict in the framework of the SADC Lusaka peace initiative and process. They took note of the Sirte peace agreement as a contribution to the Lusaka peace process and urged the parties to the conflict to arrange a ceasefire agreement. The leaders reaffirmed the need for an all-inclusive national dialogue to discuss the new political dispensation in the DRC and welcomed President Kabila's expressed readiness to hold direct talks with the rebels.

Following the visit of a delegation from the DRC to Uganda (28 May-1 June), the two countries issued a joint communique [S/1999/635] expressing their commitment to implementing the broad principles stipulated in the Sirte peace agreement. They concurred that sustainable peace, security and stability could be achieved only through real democracy in all the countries of the region, and welcomed the DRC efforts to open a national dialogue.

On 4 June [S/1999/654], Uganda transmitted the joint communique issued at the conclusion of a meeting in Dar-es-Salaam between the Presidents of Rwanda, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania. They welcomed the commitment made by the DRC and Uganda towards achieving a peaceful solution to the conflict in the DRC. They also welcomed the unilateral cessation of hostilities declared by Rwanda, which they said would enhance the chances for a negotiated and comprehensive ceasefire agreement in accordance with the Lusaka peace process.

In a 2 June statement [S/1999/683], the EU Presidency called on the warring parties in the DRC to abide by the terms of resolution 1234(1999) and urged them to reach a ceasefire, to operate an orderly withdrawal of forces and to prepare for the deployment of a multinational peacekeeping force, which would be followed by an international conference on the Great Lakes region. The EU would be prepared to consider financial assistance to the DRC if its plan for a "national debate", as proposed by President Kabila, was organized by an independent authority, if all parties were allowed to take part and if its agenda was approved by all participants and enabled a dialogue on the institutions and conditions for establishing civil peace, the rule of law and democracy.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 June [meeting 4015], the President of the Security Council, following consultations among Council members, made statement S/PRST/1999/17 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council recalls the statements by its President of 31 August 1998 and 11 December 1998. It reaffirms its resolution 1234(1999) of 9 April 1999 on the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and calls on all parties to comply with this resolution. It expresses its continued concern at the continuing conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Council reaffirms its commitment to preserving the national unity, sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and all other States in the region. It further reaffirms its support for the regional mediation process facilitated by the President of the Republic of Zambia on behalf of the Southern African Development Community in cooperation with the Organization of African Unity and with support from the United Nations to find a peaceful settlement to the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Council takes note of the constructive efforts being made to promote a peaceful settlement of the conflict in the context of the above-mentioned regional mediation process, including the meeting and agreement signed at Sirte, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, on 18 April 1999. It calls on all parties to demonstrate commitment to the peace process and to participate with a constructive and flexible spirit in the forthcoming summit in Lusaka scheduled for 26 June 1999. In this context, the Council calls upon the parties immediately to sign a ceasefire agreement which includes the appropriate modalities and mechanisms for its implementation.

The Council reaffirms its readiness to consider the active involvement of the United Nations, in coordination with the Organization of African Unity, including through concrete sustainable and effective measures, to assist in the implementation of an effective ceasefire agreement and in an agreed process for political settlement of the conflict.

The Council emphasizes the need for a peaceful settlement of the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo in order to permit the economic reconstruction of the country, so as to enhance development and foster national reconciliation.

The Council stresses the need for a continuing process of genuine national reconciliation and democratization in all States of the Great Lakes region. It reaffirms the importance of holding, at the appropriate time, an international conference on peace, security and stability in the Great Lakes region and encourages the international community to help facilitate such a conference.

The Council expresses its appreciation and full support for the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Envoy for the peace process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement

On 10 July, Angola, the DRC, Namibia, Rwanda, Uganda and Zimbabwe signed in Lusaka, Zambia, the Ceasefire Agreement on the DRC [S/1999/815]. Under the Agreement, which was witnessed by Zambia, OAU, SADC and the United Nations, the six regional leaders agreed to the cessation of hostilities between the belligerent forces in the DRC. The Agreement stipulated that all air, land and sea attacks would cease within 24 hours of the signing, as well as the movement of military forces and all acts of violence against the civilian population. Other provisions concerned the release of prisoners of war, the immediate disengagement of forces where they were in direct contact, the facilitation of humanitarian assistance by opening up humanitarian corridors, equal rights for all ethnic groups and nationalities in the DRC, and control of illicit trafficking of arms and the infiltration of armed groups.

Under the terms of the Agreement and upon conclusion of the inter-Congolese political negotiations, State administration would be re-established throughout the DRC. The DRC Government and the opposition would enter into an open national dialogue under a neutral facilitator to be agreed upon by the Congolese parties. There would be a mechanism for the formation of a national, restructured and integrated army, including the forces of the Congolese parties who were signatories to the Agreement. A mechanism would also be established for disarming militias and armed groups. In that connection, the parties committed themselves to locating, identifying, disarming and assembling all members of armed groups in the DRC. The final withdrawal of all foreign forces from DRC territory would be carried out in accordance with a schedule in an annex to the Agreement, and a withdrawal schedule to be prepared by the United Nations, OAU and the Joint Military Commission (JMC) to be set up by the parties as a peacekeeping force until the deployment of UN forces. The parties agreed to request the Security Council to deploy a peacekeeping force in the DRC to ensure implementation of the Agreement and mandate the force to track down all armed groups in the DRC.

Another annex described modalities for the implementation of the Ceasefire Agreement and covered the cessation of hostilities, disengagement of forces, release of hostages, withdrawal of foreign forces, national dialogue and reconciliation, re-establishment of the State administration, the JMC mandate, the proposed UN peacekeeping mandate, disarmament of armed groups, formation of a national army, redeployment of forces of the parties to defensive positions in conflict zones, and normalization of the security situation along the DRC borders.

In a 9 July statement [S/1999/787], the EU Presidency said that the EU supported the Agreement; it appealed to the parties to implement it as soon as possible.

Deployment of UN personnel

Report of Secretary-General. Following the signing of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement, the Secretary-General submitted a 15 July report [S/1999/790] to the Security Council on its implications for the United Nations and made recommendations concerning possible preliminary UN action. Noting that the Congolese Rally for Democracy and the Movement for the Liberation of the Congo had declined to sign the Agreement, he expressed the hope that the rebels would sign it without further delay and that it could be implemented promptly and in full.

The Secretary-General reviewed the tasks proposed for a UN force: working with JMC and OAU in implementation of the Agreement; observing and monitoring the cessation of hostilities; investigating violations of the ceasefire and ensuring compliance; supervising the disengagement of forces; supervising the redeployment of forces to defensive positions; providing humanitarian assistance to and protecting displaced persons, refugees and others; informing the parties of its peacekeeping operations; collecting weapons from civilians; supervising the withdrawal of foreign forces; and verifying all information relating to military forces of the parties. The Agreement also envisaged a number of peace enforcement operations, including the "tracking down" and disarming of armed groups; screening mass killers, perpetrators of crimes against humanity and others; handing over suspected genocidaires to the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda; and repatriation. The armed groups were identified as the former Rwandan government forces and Interahamwe militia, the Allied Democratic Front, the Lord's Resistance Army, the Forces for the Defence of Democracy of Burundi, the Former Uganda National Army, the Uganda National Rescue Front II, the West Nile Bank Front and the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola.

The Secretary-General stated that the conflict in the DRC had inflicted further terrible suffering on a country already burdened with poverty and neglect. An estimated 700,000 persons were displaced within the country, in addition to some 300,000 refugees located on its territory, and the United Nations had received harrowing accounts of famine and epidemics. The conflict had also been characterized by appalling, widespread and systematic human rights violations, including mass killings, ethnic cleansing, rape and destruction of property. The Secretary-General stated that the peace agreement could be viewed as a first step towards an eventual recovery.

In order to be effective, any UN peacekeeping mission would have to be large and expensive, requiring the deployment of thousands of troops and civilian personnel. In the light of the numerous difficulties envisaged, the Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council immediately authorize the deployment of up to 90 military personnel, together with the necessary civilian, political, humanitarian and administrative staff, to the capitals of the States signatories to the Lusaka Agreement and the provisional headquarters of JMC. As a second stage, he would then recommend a further deployment of up to 500 military observers whose functions would be to establish contacts with the parties; liaise with JMC; assist JMC in investigating ceasefire violations; make a security assessment of the country; obtain from the parties guarantees of cooperation; determine the locations of the forces of all parties; observe the ceasefire and disengagement of the forces; facilitate the provision of humanitarian assistance; and assist the Department of Peacekeeping Operations in refining its concept of operations for subsequent deployments.

The Secretary-General noted that in due course he would appoint a Special Representative to lead the observer mission, which he proposed calling the United Nations Observer Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. He had also ordered the dispatch of a small advance team to the region to clarify the role to be played by the United Nations, to be followed by a technical survey team to the DRC to pave the way for deployments and assess the logistical capacity in the mission area. In the meantime, the Congolese parties needed to proceed with their national debate in order to work towards national reconciliation. The Secretary-General could foresee the need for a well-funded, well-planned and long-term programme for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration into society of former combatants, as well as measures to address the human rights violations that had characterized the conflict. The necessary first step would be the signing of the Agreement by the two rebel groups that had not done so.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

On 6 August [meeting 4032], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1258(1999). The draft text [S/1999/852] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 1234(1999) of 9 April 1999, and recalling the statements by its President of 31 August 1998, 11 December 1998, and 24 June 1999,

Bearing in mind the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and the primary responsibility of the Security Council for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Reaffirming the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and all States in the region,

Determined to resolve with all parties concerned the grave humanitarian situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo in particular, and in the region as a whole, and to provide for the safe and free return of all refugees and displaced persons to their homes,

Recognizing that the current situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo demands an urgent response by the parties to the conflict with support from the international community,

Recalling the relevant principles contained in the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel adopted on 9 December 1994,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 15 July 1999 on the United Nations preliminary deployment in the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

1. Welcomes the signing of the Ceasefire Agreement on the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo by the States concerned, in Lusaka on 10 July 1999, which represents a viable basis for a resolution of the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

2. Also welcomes the signing of the Ceasefire Agreement on 1 August 1999 by the Movement for the Liberation of the Congo, expresses deep concern that the Congolese Rally for Democracy has not signed the Agreement, and calls upon the latter to sign the Agreement without delay in order to bring about national reconciliation and lasting peace in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

3. Commends the Organization of African Unity and the Southern African Development Community for their efforts to find a peaceful settlement of the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and commends in particular the President of the Republic of Zambia, and also the Secretary-General, the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for the peace process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Representative of the Secretary-General to the Great Lakes Region and all those who contributed to the peace process;

4. Calls upon all parties to the conflict, in particular the rebel movements, to cease hostilities, to implement fully and without delay the provisions of the Ceasefire Agreement, to cooperate fully with the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations in the implementation of the Agreement and to desist from any act that may further exacerbate the situation;

5. Stresses the need for a continuing process of genuine national reconciliation, and encourages all Congolese to participate in the national debate to be organized in accordance with the provisions of the Ceasefire Agreement;

6. Stresses also the need to create an environment conducive to the return in safety and dignity of all refugees and displaced persons;

7. Notes with satisfaction the prompt establishment of the Political Committee and the Joint Military Commission by the States signatories to the Ceasefire Agreement as part of their collective effort to implement the Agreement;

8. Authorizes the deployment of up to ninety United Nations military liaison personnel, together with the necessary civilian, political, humanitarian and administrative staff, to the capitals of the States signatories to the Ceasefire Agreement and the provisional headquarters of the Joint Military Commission, and, as security conditions permit, to the rear military headquarters of the main belligerents in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and, as appropriate, to other areas the Secretary-General may deem necessary, for a period of three months, with the following mandate:

-To establish contacts and maintain liaison with the Joint Military Commission and all parties to the Agreement;

-To assist the Joint Military Commission and the parties in developing modalities for the implementation of the Agreement;

-To provide technical assistance, as requested, to the Joint Military Commission;

-To provide information to the Secretary-General regarding the situation on the ground, and to assist in refining a concept of operations for a possible further role of the United Nations in the implementation of the Agreement once it is signed by all parties;

-To secure from the parties guarantees of cooperation and assurances of security for the possible deployment in-country of military observers;

9. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to appoint a Special Representative to serve as the head of the United Nations presence in the subregion relating to the peace process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and to provide assistance in the implementation of the Ceasefire Agreement, and invites him to do so as soon as possible;

10. Calls upon all States and parties concerned to ensure the freedom of movement, security and safety of United Nations personnel in their territory;

11. Calls for safe and unhindered access for humanitarian assistance to those in need in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and urges all parties to the conflict to guarantee the safety and security of all humanitarian personnel and to respect strictly the relevant provisions of international humanitarian law;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to keep it regularly informed of developments in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and to report at the appropriate time on the future presence of the United Nations in the Democratic Republic of the Congo in support of the peace process;

13. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

On 24 August [S/1999/920], the Secretary-General proposed that 26 countries be included in the list of countries contributing military personnel to the preliminary deployment of UN liaison officers to the DRC and other countries of the subregion. In a response of 27 August [S/1999/921], the Council President informed the Secretary-General that the members agreed with his proposal.

Communications (August-October). In several letters to the Security Council, the DRC stated that, despite the signing of the Lusaka Agreement, foreign troops on its territory were responsible for renewed fighting. In a 14 August communication [S/1999/898], the DRC said that 41 Congolese had been burned alive in Kasala and called on the Council to take measures to enforce its call for the withdrawal of foreign forces. On 16 August [S/1999/881], the DRC said that armed forces of the Rwandan-Ugandan coalition had attacked the city of Kisangani in eastern DRC. It requested the Council to adopt sanctions against those two countries. On 23 August [S/1999/913], the DRC requested the Council to authorize the Secretary-General to designate special envoys in Rwanda and Uganda with a mandate to secure their commitment to the ceasefire agreement. On 1 October [S/1999/1029], the DRC transmitted a document in which it described alleged violations of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement and Council resolution 1234(1999) (see p. 85) during August. The DRC claimed that armed confrontations between Rwanda and Uganda on its territory attested to the gravity of the war of aggression being waged against the DRC by the Rwandan-Ugandan-Burundian coalition. The document described massacres at several locations and an armed clash between Rwandans and Ugandans that had impeded the national vaccination campaign and listed violations of human rights.

On 30 August [S/1999/930], Rwanda transmitted a press release issued by its Vice-President stating that its Government looked forward to the speedy implementation of the Lusaka Agreement, aspects of which addressed both Rwanda's security concerns and the wider problems of the DRC. The Vice President said that, despite the recent clashes in Kisangani between the Rwandese Patriotic Army and the Uganda People's Defence Force in August, relations between Rwanda and Uganda had been and were still good. The Vice President noted that talks on 16 and 17 August had achieved a speedy resolution and demonstrated the good relations. He also observed that divisions within the Congolese Rally for Democracy were contrary to Rwanda's advice to the DRC opposition to form a united front.

Finland forwarded several statements by the EU Presidency regarding the situation in the DRC. On 3 September [A/54/331-S/1999/959], the EU affirmed its support for the Lusaka Agreement, provided that all the parties implemented it in accordance with its terms. The EU was ready to support national reconciliation, rehabilitation and democratization in the DRC and the process of reintegration of displaced people in the Great Lakes region into their countries of origin. On 22 September [S/1999/1005], the Presidency expressed concern about the delays in implementation and the continued military activities and hostile propaganda. The EU called on the United Nations and OAU to support implementation and expressed its willingness to support various components of the Agreement, such as UN and OAU peacekeeping operations, JMC and the national dialogue. Reiterating that willingness on 11 October [A/54/482-S/1999/1076], the EU stated that it remained concerned at the slow pace at which the main provisions of the Agreement were being applied and at which the main bodies for implementing it were being established. It welcomed the fact that the first JMC meeting was scheduled for 11 October. The EU was considering supporting JMC financially.

Report of Secretary-General (November). In November [S/1999/1116 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General, pursuant to Security Council resolution 1258(1999) (see p. 89), reported on the preliminary UN deployment in the DRC. He noted that the two opposition parties that had not signed the Ceasefire Agreement at the time it was concluded—the Movement for the Liberation of the Congo and the Congolese Rally for Democracy—had done so by the end of August. The Political Committee established by the Agreement met on 3 September and agreed that the United Nations and OAU should be full participants in its work and in that of JMC. On 11 and 12 October, JMC met in Kampala, Uganda, with the participation of all the signatories to the Agreement, as well as the United Nations and OAU. It decided to deploy observers at four sites within the DRC to verify the parties' positions and to investigate ceasefire violations. At the invitation of the UN representatives, all the parties, with the exception of Angola and the DRC, provided guarantees in writing that they would safeguard the personal security of UN military and civilian personnel deployed in the mission. The JMC meeting was followed by another meeting of the Political Committee (15 October, Lusaka), which expressed concern about the slow pace at which the United Nations was handling the request for the deployment of peacekeepers in the DRC. It called on the Congolese parties to expedite consultations on the appointment of a neutral facilitator for the inter-Congolese negotiations so that the national dialogue could start.

The Secretary-General noted that there had been accusations and counter-accusations of ceasefire violations by the parties and troop movements were said to be continuing. Some reports also indicated a build-up of foreign troops around Mbuji-Mayi and Kisangani and a serious confrontation took place between Rwandan and Ugandan troops in Kisangani in August/September. The presence of former Rwandan government forces (ex-FAR) and Interahamwe militia elements in the region underscored the intricate and interconnected nature of the peace process in the Great Lakes region, he stated.

The UN advance team had been sent to the subregion to make contact with Governments participating in the ceasefire process so that it could make recommendations for the initial deployment of UN personnel. Having established a military headquarters and liaison presence in Kinshasa with a total of 39 staff members, it was prepared to deploy officers to other parts of the DRC, as well as to dispatch a technical survey team to assess the security conditions and infrastructure in 13 proposed deployment locations. The deployment of UN liaison officers in the country could proceed once the Government had provided the United Nations with acceptable security guarantees. Military liaison officers had also been sent to Harare, Kampala, Kigali and Windhoek, the capitals of the State signatories to the Lusaka Agreement. Officers were also sent to Bujumbura and to Lusaka, the provisional seat of JMC.

Despite the agreed ceasefire, insecurity remained a major obstacle to humanitarian operations and hampered access to the internally displaced—over 800,000 people. More than 180,000 DRC citizens had fled to neighbouring countries and over 250,000 were refugees in the DRC. Inter-ethnic fighting in the north-east had forced over 100,000 people to flee their homes. The major constraint for the humanitarian community was that priority life-saving operations were severely underfunded.

Proper implementation of the Lusaka Agreement required close coordination between the United Nations, the parties, JMC and OAU. Two UN liaison officers had been dispatched to OAU headquarters for consultations in that regard. To support the peace process and help mobilize the necessary resources for JMC, the United Nations had established a trust fund.

As outlined in his earlier report, the Secretary-General planned to deploy up to 500 military observers. In addition to military personnel and their logistical support, the humanitarian and human rights aspects of the conflict required deployment of civilian personnel, including political, humanitarian, human rights and child protection officers, as well as administrative personnel, led by a Special Representative.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Council extend the mandate of the UN personnel already in the DRC until 15 January 2000. By then, on the basis of the conclusions of the technical survey team, he expected to be able to provide details on the possible establishment of a UN peacekeeping operation. He requested that the Council authorize him to set up a UN observer mission in the DRC and the deployment of up to 500 military observers with the necessary logistical and personnel support. He called on the parties to cooperate with the UN mission and stressed that the provision of an acceptable security guarantee and the acceptance by the DRC Government of the need for UN deployment throughout the country were preconditions to the mission's ability to function effectively. JMC had a central role to play in the peace process under the terms of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement, and the deployment of four UN military liaison officers, initially in Lusaka, was intended to provide support for that body. He proposed that the United Nations provide JMC with the necessary logistical and other operational support and called on Governments and other donors to do likewise.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (5 November)

On 5 November [meeting 4060], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1273 (1999). The draft text [S/1999/1130] was prepared during prior consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1234(1999) of 9 April 1999 and 1258(1999) of 6 August 1999 and the statements by its President of 31 August 1998, 11 December 1998 and 24 June 1999,

Reaffirming the sovereignty, territorial integrity, and political independence of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and all States in the region,

Appointment of Special Representative. By a 13 November letter [S/1999/1171], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his intention to appoint Kamel Morjane (Tunisia) as his Special Representative for the DRC, with immediate effect. On 16 November [S/1999/1172], the Council took note of the appointment.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (30 November)

On 30 November [meeting 4076], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1279

(1999). The draft text [S/1999/1207] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1234(1999) of 9 April 1999, 1258(1999) of 6 August 1999 and 1273(1999) of 5 November 1999 and the statements by its President of 31 August 1998, 11 December 1998 and 24 June 1999,

Bearing in mind the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and the primary responsibility of the Security Council for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Reaffirming the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and all States in the region,

Reaffirming also that the Ceasefire Agreement signed at Lusaka on 10 July 1999 represents the most viable basis for a resolution of the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and noting the role it requests the United Nations to play in the implementation of the ceasefire,

Expressing its concern at the alleged violations of the Ceasefire Agreement, and urging all parties to refrain from any declarations or action that could jeopardize the peace process,

Stressing the responsibilities of the signatories for the implementation of the Ceasefire Agreement, and calling on them to permit and facilitate the full deployment of United Nations military liaison officers and other personnel necessary for the fulfilment of their mandate throughout the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Welcoming the pledges of support made to the Joint Military Commission by States and organizations, and calling upon others to contribute, together with the signatories to the Ceasefire Agreement, to the funding of the body,

Noting with concern the humanitarian situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and calling upon all Member States to contribute to current and future consolidated humanitarian appeals,

Expressing its concern at the severe consequences of the conflict for the security and well-being of the civilian population throughout the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Expressing its concern also at the adverse impact of the conflict on the human rights situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, particularly in the eastern parts of the country, and the continuing violations of human rights and international humanitarian law committed throughout the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Having considered the recommendations of the Secretary-General contained in his report of 1 November 1999,

Reiterating the importance of the successful completion of the mission of the technical assessment team dispatched to the Democratic Republic of the Congo to assess conditions and to prepare for possible subsequent United Nations deployment in the country as well as to obtain firm guarantees from the parties to the conflict over the safety, security and freedom of movement of United Nations and associated personnel,

Recalling the relevant principles contained in the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel adopted on 9 December 1994,

Underlining the importance of the full deployment of the United Nations military liaison personnel as provided for by resolution 1258(1999),

1. Calls upon all parties to the conflict to cease hostilities, to implement fully the provisions of the Ceasefire Agreement signed at Lusaka, and to use the Joint Military Commission to resolve disputes over military issues;

2. Stresses the need for a continuing process of genuine national reconciliation, encourages all Congolese to participate in the national dialogue to be organized in coordination with the Organization of African Unity, and calls upon all Congolese parties and the Organization of African Unity to finalize agreement on the facilitator for the national dialogue;

3. Welcomes the appointment by the Secretary-General of his Special Representative for the Democratic Republic of the Congo to serve as the head of the United Nations presence in the subregion relating to the peace process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and to provide assistance in the implementation of the Ceasefire Agreement;

4. Decides that the personnel authorized under its resolutions 1258(1999) and 1273(1999), including a multidisciplinary staff of personnel in the fields of human rights, humanitarian affairs, public information, medical support, child protection, political affairs and administrative support, which will assist the Special Representative, shall constitute the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo until 1 March 2000;

5. Decides also that the Mission, led by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, consistent with resolutions 1258(1999) and 1273(1999), shall carry out the following ongoing tasks:

(a) Establish contacts with the signatories to the Ceasefire Agreement at their headquarters levels, as well as in the capitals of the States signatories;

(b) Liaise with the Joint Military Commission and provide technical assistance in the implementation of its functions under the Ceasefire Agreement, including in the investigation of ceasefire violations;

(c) Provide information on security conditions in all areas of its operation, with emphasis on local conditions affecting future decisions on the introduction of United Nations personnel;

(d) Plan for the observation of the ceasefire and disengagement of forces;

(e) Maintain liaison with all parties to the Ceasefire Agreement to facilitate the delivery of humanitarian assistance to displaced persons, refugees, children, and other affected persons, and assist in the protection of human rights, including the rights of children;

6. Underlines the fact that the phased deployment of United Nations military observers with the necessary support and protection elements in the Democratic Republic of the Congo will be subject to its further decision, and expresses its intention to take such a decision promptly on the basis of further recommendations of the Secretary-General, taking into account the findings of the technical assessment team;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to accelerate the development of a concept of operations based on assessed conditions of security, access and freedom of movement and cooperation on the part of the signatories to the Ceasefire Agreement;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to keep it regularly informed and to report to it as soon as possible on the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and submit his recommendations on further deployment of United Nations personnel in the country and on their protection;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, with immediate effect, to take the administrative steps necessary for the equipping of up to 500 United Nations military observers with a view to facilitating future rapid United Nations deployments as authorized by the Council;

10. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Communications (December). On 3 December [S/1999/1217], Finland transmitted a 26 November statement by the Presidency of the EU expressing support for the ceasefire measures in the DRC, in particular those decided by JMC. EU members declared their readiness to augment their financial and practical assistance to the Commission. The EU stressed the need to ensure a peaceful disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of the militia groups in the region and respect for human rights. In particular, it underlined that members of the ex-FAR/Interahamwe accused of genocide should be brought to justice. It affirmed its support for an eventual international conference on security and cooperation in the Great Lakes region.

On 14 December [S/1999/1251], Namibia forwarded a press release on the SADC regional summit on the DRC held in Windhoek on 12 December, which was attended by the heads of State of the DRC, Namibia and Zimbabwe and the Defence Minister of Angola. The summit welcomed the inauguration of JMC and the deployment of regional joint military commissions in some locations in the DRC to verify ceasefire implementation. The summit noted with concern that there had been violations of the ceasefire, particularly in the area of Ikela and Basankusu by Rwandan- and Ugandan-sponsored rebel groups. The participants called on the Security Council to authorize an early deployment of the UN peacekeeping forces to expedite the implementation of the Ceasefire Agreement. The summit welcomed the deployment of OAU military observers in the DRC and commended the efforts by the OAU Secretary-General to assist the Congolese people to identify a neutral facilitator for the national dialogue.

Later developments. In early December [S/2000/30], JMC adopted for approval by the Political Committee papers submitted by its four working groups on the following questions: determination of humanitarian corridors, release of hostages, exchange of prisoners of war and working relations with the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and the International Committee of the Red Cross; working out mechanisms and budget estimates for disarming, tracking down and quartering of armed groups, as well as procedures for handing over mass killers and other war criminals; drafting mechanisms and procedures for the disengagement of forces; and working out mechanisms, procedures and a calendar for the withdrawal of foreign forces.

JMC adopted a proposal for the peaceful resolution of the situation at Ikela, where a force of about 700 Congolese, Namibian and Zimbabwean troops had been encircled by rebel forces.

On 15 December, the OAU Secretary-General, following consultations with the parties, announced that agreement was reached on the selection of former President Ketumile Masire of Botswana as facilitator for the inter-Congolese political negotiations.

Despite such political advances, the military and security situation in the DRC deteriorated towards the end of the year. In November, the Government launched an offensive from Mbandaka into rebel-held territory. Heightened military activity by some of the "armed groups" identified in the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement was also reported in eastern DRC. They included ex-FAR and Interahamwe militia, Burundian rebels and various Mai-Mai groups. Rebel sources also reported that the armed groups had acquired new equipment. Reports from South Kivu suggested the danger of large-scale violence among different ethnic groups there. The Government, at a press conference on 29 December and in a letter to the Security Council dated 22 December [S/1999/1275], charged that rebels had buried alive 15 women in Kivu province. An alleged massacre of 23 women and three children was reported near the town of Kalima, allegedly by rebels, on 14 December.

The United Nations continued its efforts to support implementation of the Agreement. On 11 December, the Special Representative assumed his duties in Kinshasa. The preliminary UN deployment in the DRC continued to encounter difficulties in positioning military liaison officers in key locations relating primarily to security needs and freedom of movement to inspect locations and to assess the military, political, logistics and infrastructure situations. By the end of the year, teams of UN military liaison officers were positioned at eight locations, but were not granted approval to go to other locations. On the basis of information sent back from deployment locations and data available in neighbouring capitals and in Kinshasa, MONUC had built up a picture of the military, logistical and humanitarian situation of many locations considered important to UN deployment.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By a 7 September note verbale [A/53/1048], the DRC requested that the Secretary-General keep the item "Armed aggression against the Democratic Republic of the Congo" of the General Assembly's fifty-third session on the agenda of the fifty-fourth (1999) session, and that the question be debated in plenary session without being referred to a Main Committee. On 13 September [A/54/349], Uganda called on the Secretary-General to reject that request in view of the Ceasefire Agreement and the fact that the peace process had already been launched and UN military liaison officers had been deployed. Rwanda, on 14 September [A/54/369], requested that the item be removed from the agenda of the fifty-fourth session.

By decision 53/488 of 13 September, the Assembly decided to include in the draft agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item on armed aggression against the DRC. The Assembly did not consider the item at the fifty-fourth session in 1999; on 23 December, it decided that the item would remain for consideration during the resumed part of the session in 2000 (decision 54/465).

On 8 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 54/96 B on special assistance for the economic recovery and reconstruction of the DRC (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

Rwanda

In 1999, Rwanda showed signs of improved security and positive developments which indicated a movement towards democracy and reconciliation among ethnic groups [E/CN/4/2000/41]. The security situation improved noticeably in the north-west of the country, the site of armed conflict in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 88], resulting in a corresponding decline in alleged abuses by the Rwandan armed forces. Fighting diminished in eastern DRC in 1999, resulting in fewer incursions of armed infiltrators into north-west Rwanda. Steps towards democracy included successful local elections; the establishment of two new commissions (on human rights and on national unity and reconciliation); steps towards drafting a new constitution; a new law to professionalize the civilian police force; a revision of the 1991 press law; and more effective supervision by parliament over all aspects of government. Despite the positive moves, however, the National Assembly of Rwanda extended the period of transition from genocide to democracy by another four years on the grounds that more time was needed to promote reconciliation and complete drafting of a new constitution.

An exception to the generally diminished tension occurred on 23 December, when armed Interahamwe crossed from the DRC and attacked the resettlement site of Tamira, killing 29 persons and wounding 40. The attack was apparently planned and the victims carefully selected.

The humanitarian situation remained precarious in Rwanda despite several good harvests. Some 150,000 people remained vulnerable owing to lack of services, and approximately 32,000 refugees returned from the DRC during the year.

Inquiry into UN response to 1994 genocide

The Secretary-General, in an 18 March letter [S/1999/3391], informed the Security Council of his intention to set up an independent inquiry into the actions taken by the United Nations at the time of the 1994 genocide in Rwanda [YUN 1994, p. 282]. In view of the enormity of the genocide, he stated, questions continued to surround the actions of the United Nations immediately before and during the period of the crisis. The primary purpose of the inquiry would be to establish the facts and to draw conclusions as to the UN response to the tragedy. The President of the Council stated on 26 March [S/1999/340] that the members supported the Secretary-General's proposed course of action.

The Independent Inquiry, which was chaired by Ingvar Carlsson, former Prime Minister of Sweden, and included Han Sung-Joo, former Foreign Minister of the Republic of Korea, and Lieutenant-General Rufus M. Kupolati of Nigeria, submitted its report to the Secretary-General on 15 December [S/1999/1257]. On the same date, the Secretary-General forwarded the report to the Council. The Inquiry's terms of reference were to establish a chronology of key events pertaining to UN involvement in Rwanda from October 1993 to July 1994; to evaluate the mandate and resources of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda (UNAMIR) and how they affected the UN response to the events relating to the massacres; and to draw conclusions and identify the lessons to be learned from the tragedy. The Inquiry had unrestricted access to all UN documentation and persons involved.

The report stated that approximately 800,000 people were killed during the 1994 genocide in Rwanda. The systematic slaughter of men, women and children took place over the course of about 100 days between April and July 1994, during which atrocities were committed by militia and the armed forces, but also by civilians against other civilians. The international community did not prevent the genocide, nor did it stop the killing once the genocide had begun. The failure by the United Nations to prevent and subsequently to stop the genocide was a failure by the UN system as a whole. The fundamental failure was the lack of resources and political commitment devoted to the situation in Rwanda and to the UN presence there. There was a persistent lack of political will by Member States to act, or to act with enough assertiveness, thus affecting the response by the Secretariat and decision-making by the Security Council; it was also evident in the difficulties in obtaining sufficient troops for UNAMIR. Despite the Mission's chronic lack of resources and political priority, serious mistakes were made with the resources that were at the disposal of the United Nations.

The Inquiry noted that the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide [YUN 1948-49, p. 959] established the criteria for determining genocide and the Security Council had used the same criteria in outlining the mandate of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (see PART FOUR, Chapter II), which had determined that the mass killings of Tutsi in Rwanda in 1994 constituted genocide. The Inquiry concluded that the genocide was planned and incited by Hutu extremists against the Tutsi.

The Inquiry found that the UN response before and during the genocide failed in a number of respects. The responsibility for the failure to prevent and stop the genocide lay with a number of different actors, in particular the Secretary-General, the Secretariat, the Security Council, UNAMIR and the broader membership of the United Nations. The Organization and Member States concerned owed a clear apology to the Rwandan people. In addition, efforts should be made to bring to justice those Rwandans who planned, incited and carried out the genocide against their countrymen. The overriding failure in the UN response before and during the genocide was summarized by the Inquiry as a lack of resources and a lack of will. UNAMIR, the main component of the UN presence in Rwanda, was not planned, dimensioned, deployed or instructed in a way that provided for a proactive and assertive role in dealing with a peace process in serious trouble. The Mission's mandate was based on an analysis of the peace process that proved erroneous and that was never corrected, despite significant warning signs that the original mandate had become inadequate. In the time of deepest crisis, the Mission experienced a lack of political leadership, lack of military capacity, severe problems of command and control and lack of coordination and discipline. Despite facing a deteriorating security situation that should have motivated a more assertive and preventive UN role, no steps were taken to adjust the mandate to the reality of the needs in Rwanda.

The Inquiry addressed the matter of the 11 January 1994 cable sent by UNAMIR Force Commander Brigadier-General Romeo A. Dallaire to the Secretary-General's Military Adviser, Major-General Maurice Baril, stating that Dallaire had received information regarding a strategy to provoke the killing of Belgian soldiers and the Belgian battalion's withdrawal from Rwanda. He had also been informed that trained men were scattered throughout Kigali, that all Tutsi in Kigali were to be registered, probably for their extermination, and that there was a major arms cache for that purpose. In response to Dallaire's request to take military action, senior Secretariat officials responded that such an operation went beyond UNAMIR's mandate. The Inquiry believed that serious mistakes were made in dealing with the cable, both in UNAMIR and in the Secretariat. The leadership of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations did not brief the Secretary-General and the Security Council was not informed. The Inquiry also found it incomprehensible that more was not done to follow up on the information received. However, it saw no reason to criticize the Secretariat's decision on the mandate issue but felt that the matter should have been raised with the Council. Further, the threat against the Belgian contingent should have been followed up more clearly.

Regarding failure to respond to the genocide, the Inquiry noted that UNAMIR was in disarray. It was also under rules of engagement not to use force except in self-defence. The operation was prevented from performing its political mandate, incapable of protecting the civilian population or civilian UN staff and at risk itself. Further, UNAMIR was sidelined in relation to the national evacuation operations conducted by Belgium, France, Italy and the United States. The responsibility for that situation, said the Inquiry, had to be shared between the leadership of UNAMIR, the Secretariat and troop-contributing countries.

As to the withdrawal of the Belgian contingent following the killing of 10 of its members, the Inquiry believed it was essential to preserve the unity of UN command and control and that troop-contributing countries, despite domestic political pressures, should refrain from unilateral withdrawal to the detriment and even risk of ongoing peacekeeping operations. The subsequent Council decision to reduce UNAMIR to a minimal force rather than make every effort to muster the political will to stop the killing led to widespread bitterness in Rwanda; it was a decision that the Inquiry found difficult to justify and it felt that the Council bore a responsibility for its lack of political will to do more.

Rwanda was to prove a turning point in UN peacekeeping, and came to symbolize a lack of will to commit to peacekeeping and, above all, to take risks in the field, said the Inquiry. From its inception, UNAMIR suffered from a lack of resources and logistics. During the massacres, the Mission and the Secretariat continued to focus on achieving a ceasefire and too little attention was given to the massacres. Furthermore, there was a weakness in the capacity for political analysis, in particular within UNAMIR but also at Headquarters. The Mission also failed to protect civilians, political leaders and Rwandan UN staff members who expected or sought protection.

The Inquiry believed that there were institutional lessons to be learned from the Rwandan crisis with regard to the capacity and willingness of the United Nations to conduct peacekeeping operations, and there were lessons to be learned relating to the relationship between the United Nations and Rwanda. The aftermath of the genocide was still a reality—in the suffering, in the efforts to build reconciliation, in bringing those responsible to justice, and in the continued problems of those displaced and the needs of the survivors. It was also a reality in the continued existence of the Interahamwe as an armed force in the Great Lakes region, and in the continued instability in that region.

The Inquiry made a number of recommendations for future peacekeeping efforts: (1) the Secretary-General should initiate an action plan to prevent genocide involving the whole UN system; (2) efforts should be made to improve UN peacekeeping capacity, including the availability of resources and clarity as to which rules of engagement should apply; (3) the United Nations—and in particular the Security Council and troop-contributing countries—should be prepared to prevent acts of genocide or gross violations of human rights; (4) the UN early warning capacity should be improved, both with outside actors and within the Secretariat; (5) protection of civilians in conflict situations should be improved; (6) the security of UN and associated personnel, including local staff, needed to be improved; (7) cooperation between officials responsible for the security of different categories of staff in the field needed to be ensured; (8) an effective flow of information needed to be ensured; (9) improvements should be made in the flow of information to the Council; (10) the flow of information on human rights issues should be improved; (11) national evacuation operations should be coordinated with UN missions on the ground; (12) further study should be given to suspending participation of a Member State on the Security Council in exceptional circumstances, such as the Rwandan crisis; (13) the international community should support efforts in Rwanda to rebuild the society; and (14) the United Nations should acknowledge its part of the responsibility for not having done enough to prevent or stop the genocide in Rwanda.

International Commission of Inquiry

The Sudan, in a 14 January letter to the Security Council [S/1999/66], referred to the November 1998 report of the International Commission of Inquiry [YUN 1998, p. 91] mandated to collect information on the supply of arms to former Rwandan government forces in the Great Lakes region in violation of Security Council resolutions 918(1994) [YUN 1994, p. 285], 997(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 386] and 1011 (1995) [ibid., p. 380]. The Sudan denied the allegations that between 5,000 and 8,000 ex-FAR and Interahamwe were located in southern Sudan and training at three locations. It said that the allegations were derived from suspect sources and that they were attempts to drag the Sudan into the conflict in the DRC. The allegations, in the Sudan's view, demonstrated that the Commission had exceeded its mandate.

Sanctions Committee

On 29 December [S/1999/1292], the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 918(1994) concerning the arms embargo against Rwanda [YUN 1994, p. 285] submitted to the Council a report on its 1999 activities. The Committee was mandated to seek information regarding the implementation of the embargo, consider information concerning violations and make recommendations for strengthening it. The Committee recalled that it had no specific monitoring mechanism to ensure implementation and that it relied solely on the cooperation of States and organizations to provide pertinent information. During the year, no violations were brought to the attention of the Committee.

UNAMIR financing

In February [A/C.5/53/57], the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a note providing information on the status of unfinished work related to the financial liquidation of UNAMIR. With the withdrawal of the military component of UNAMIR from Rwanda completed in April 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 62], most of the Mission's administrative staff were also compelled to leave at that time. From 20 April to 31 December 1996, the liquidation continued from administrative offices in Nairobi; thereafter, a small liquidation team was assembled at UN Headquarters until 31 December 1997.

As at 30 June 1998, combined expenditures for the period since the inception of the United Nations Observer Mission Uganda-Rwanda, established in 1993 and integrated within UNAMIR later that year, amounted to $445,735,700 gross, inclusive of unliquidated obligations of $29,303,000, after taking into account savings arising from unutilized obligations pertaining to prior periods and other adjustments. The resulting unencumbered balance amounted to $16,694,700. A number of outstanding issues remained to be finalized, in particular the reconciliation of outgoing shipments with inventory data of missions to which, according to UNAMIR records, equipment had been transferred. In addition, action had yet to be taken on government claims for the contingent-owned equipment reported as lost, stolen or abandoned in Rwanda in April 1994, for which no provision had been made in UNAMIR budgets. Resolution of the outstanding issues was essential to establish the actual resource requirements of the Mission. Accordingly, it was anticipated that final performance information, together with the final report on the disposition of assets, could be prepared and submitted to the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) and the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee during the fifty-fourth (1999) session of the Assembly.

On 8 June, the Assembly, by decision 53/477, included in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item on UNAMIR financing. On 23 December, it decided that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the item at its resumed fifty-fourth session in 2000 (decision 54/462 A). On the same date, the Assembly decided that the agenda item would remain for consideration during its fifty-fourth session (decision 54/465).

Burundi

Although 1999 started on a positive note with progress continuing during the January peace negotiations among the numerous disputing Burundi factions, renewed outbreaks of armed violence during the crucial phase of the peace process indicated the potential difficulties of the political situation of Burundi.

The joint communique of the Seventh Regional Summit on the Conflict in Burundi, in January, expressed its satisfaction over the progress achieved by the peace negotiations and decided to suspend all the remaining sanctions imposed by the countries of the Great Lakes region on Burundi. The lifting of the embargo was subject to review and depended on progress in the peace process. However, at the fifth session of the Arusha peace process in July, the Facilitator, Mwalimu Julius K. Nyerere, expressed deep dissatisfaction at the lack of progress. In August, there was renewed fighting between the Burundian army and the rebels, resulting also in the deaths of many civilians. In October, two UN officials and other civilians on a humanitarian mission were killed near the border with the United Republic of Tanzania.

Mr. Nyerere died on 14 October. The participants in the peace talks expressed their determination to continue outside negotiations, and consultations began immediately with a view to appointing a new mediator. In December, former President of South Africa Nelson Mandela was appointed to replace Mr. Nyerere.

Political situation

Although the Arusha peace process continued throughout 1999, no concrete progress was made on the crucial questions of security and democracy [E/CN.4/2000/34]. Following rebel attacks on Bujumbura, a few political parties within Burundi demanded the suspension of the Arusha process and threatened to pull out of the negotiations. Following the July Lusaka Agreement on the DRC (see p. 87), local media reported cross-border movements of rebels from the DRC into Burundi in an apparent attempt to avoid disarmament. At a September meeting in Vienna, donors confirmed the resumption of bilateral aid conditional on the results of the Arusha talks. They did, however, maintain expanded humanitarian assistance.

In a statement to the General Assembly in October, the Burundian Minister for Foreign Affairs and Cooperation said that the ending of hostilities was a condition for the signing of a peace agreement in the framework of the peace negotiations. He also called on the rebel movements to take part in the talks and said that the Government was prepared to hold discussions with all the groups, even outside the framework of the Arusha process. Despite their exclusion from the Arusha talks, the Forces pour la defense de la democratie, the armed wing of the Conseil national pour la defense de la democratie (CNDD), and the Forces nationales pour la liberation, the armed wing of the Parti pour la liberation du peuple hutu, reaffirmed their willingness to negotiate, but also their determination to continue the armed struggle. Although the international community and the Secretary-General expressed concern about the forced displacement and regroupment of the population, Burundi justified its policy by the need to protect the civilian population from the fighting. The suspension of the embargo in January was not followed up by sufficient development assistance and had no positive effects on the country's economy.

Communications (January). Burundi's National Assembly President, Leonce Ngendakumana, in a 12 January statement [S/1999/53], informed the Security Council that a comprehensive peace process had been designed on two fronts: one internal, the other external. The internal process had resulted in a domestic political partnership for peace involving the National Transition Assembly and the Government in the process of national reconstruction. The partnership took concrete shape with the agreement on the political platform of the transition regime, signed on 6 June 1998, and the Constitutional Act of Transition, issued on that day [YUN 1998, p. 98]. On the external front, the comprehensive peace negotiations, which began in June 1998 in Arusha [ibid., p. 99], were proceeding smoothly. Burundi appealed to the international community to support the comprehensive peace process to ensure that war and violence ceased, economic sanctions were lifted, and bilateral and multilateral cooperation, as well as external financing, were resumed.

In a statement delivered at the donor conference for Burundi in New York on 11 and 12 January [S/1999/54], sponsored by the Department of Political Affairs, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the Canadian Government, Burundi noted that it had made significant progress along the path to peace with the third session of the Arusha negotiations held in October 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 99]. There were, however, three constraints on the negotiating environment: the economic sanctions imposed by the subregion, continued violence and the freeze on bilateral and multilateral cooperation. Because of those constraints, Burundi's current situation was extremely precarious and there were major threats both to the survival of its population and to the Government's efforts to achieve lasting peace. An added constraint was the external debt burden, which in 1997 was equivalent to over 130 per cent of Burundi's gross domestic product. The weight of that burden had been exacerbated by the freeze in financial assistance by a large number of Burundi's partners. Therefore, Burundi called on its partners to convince the countries of the subregion immediately to lift the embargo against it; convince the Facilitator of the peace process that the effective participation of the armed groups of the rebellion was absolutely necessary; support Burundi's efforts to seek a resolution of the crisis through political negotiations; and resume bilateral and multilateral co-operation without delay.

Seventh Regional Summit

The Seventh Regional Summit on the Conflict in Burundi, which was held in Arusha on 23 January, was attended by the Presidents of Kenya, Rwanda, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania, the Prime Minister of Ethiopia and representatives of the DRC and Zambia, with the participation of the OAU Secretary-General and the Facilitator of the peace process, Mr. Nyerere. The Summit was also briefed by the Burundi President, Major Pierre Buyoya. In a joint communique [A/53/804-S/1999/74, S/1999/83], the Summit expressed its satisfaction over the progress achieved so far in the peace negotiations and decided to suspend all the remaining sanctions imposed by the countries of the Great Lakes region on Burundi. The Summit called on all parties to sustain the momentum of the peace negotiations until the conclusion of a final peace accord that would guarantee the restoration of lasting peace, genuine democracy and security for all. The countries of the region would monitor closely the progress of the negotiations. The Summit decided that the suspension of the sanctions would be subject to review, based on the progress made.

In a 1 February letter [S/1999/106], Burundi informed the Security Council President of the lifting of the economic sanctions imposed on Burundi since 31 July 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 84].

Communications (February/March). By a 25 February letter [S/1999/207], Burundi informed the Council President of the visits of its Minister for External Relations and Cooperation to Kenya, Rwanda, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania. The Minister expressed Burundi's gratitude to those countries for supporting the lifting of sanctions and officially requested their support for Burundi's membership in the future East African Community.

In a 19 March statement [S/1999/299], the Presidency of the EU welcomed the continuing talks within the Arusha peace process to find a peaceful solution to the conflict in Burundi. The EU took note of Burundi's resolve to conclude negotiations successfully in 1999 and encouraged all parties to contribute constructively to that goal. It also noted that the suspension of the embargo by regional States signalled their support for the talks. However, the EU was deeply concerned about reports of continuing violence by rebel groups and security forces and appealed to both sides to cease their acts of violence immediately. It urged the parties to organize the talks in a way that would help to achieve the desired result as soon as possible; it was willing to consider further financial support and appealed to other donors to act likewise. The EU was also willing to provide long-term assistance to Burundi's socio-economic rehabilitation and reconstruction, but emphasized that such support was linked to a successful pursuance and accomplishment of the peace process.

Peace negotiations

The fifth session of the peace negotiations took place in Arusha from 5 to 17 July under the mediation of the Facilitator, Mwalimu Julius K. Nyerere. In a 21 July statement [S/1999/816], Burundi noted that Mr. Nyerere had made serious charges against the Burundian Government, which it categorically rejected, including that the Government was responsible for the deadlock in Arusha. It stated that the continuation of hostilities made the peace process totally meaningless and the exclusion of certain armed bands from the negotiations was an impediment. The Government reported that rebel groups were using extreme violence against the Burundian population and that its role was not to organize armed bands but to protect the population against such violence. It appealed to all the partners in the peace process to work for peace seriously and realistically.

On 16 August [S/1999/883], the United Republic of Tanzania transmitted to the Council President the concluding remarks by Mr. Nyerere made at the plenary closing meeting of the fifth session, noting that, although the Facilitator was distressed at the lack of progress made at the negotiations, he did not single out any party. The Facilitator stated that some delegations had attempted to block any kind of progress, using the excuse of the continued violence in Burundi, which continued despite the Facilitator's insistence that the Government and armed groups suspend hostilities during the period of negotiations. Another problem concerned armed groups that were not party to the agreement to suspend hostilities but were requested to participate in the negotiations. In that regard, the issue of Jean-Bosco, representing a breakaway group from CNDD, was discussed. Mr. Nyerere had made suggestions to facilitate his attendance and all of them were rejected by the Government. In an effort to involve everybody in the negotiations, he had asked for other suggestions. Before the next session, scheduled for 6 September,

Mr. Nyerere would carry out consultations to speed up the work.

Burundi, on 23 July [S/1999/8171], forwarded to the Council President the text of a note verbale it had sent to the United Republic of Tanzania concerning serious threats to security on the common border. Burundi drew attention to the intensification of attacks inside its territory and preparations by Burundian rebels to infiltrate from Tanzania. Burundi requested Tanzania to take all necessary measures to stop the upsurge in infiltrations by Burundian rebels and the arrival in Tanzania of a new influx of rebel combatants, troops and former members of the Rwandan armed forces, who were dreading the approaching ceasefire in the DRC and would like to disrupt security in Burundi at a time when the Arusha negotiations were reaching a crucial phase. Burundi called for an urgent security meeting between the Ministers of Defence of the two countries.

Renewed violence

In a 27 August statement [A/54/302], the EU Presidency deplored recent clashes between the army and the rebels in Burundi, which had resulted in many civilian victims. It called on the Government to work in close collaboration with observers from the UN Human Rights Office, and to set up an internal inquiry to establish any responsibility of the members of the army involved and to bring the latter to justice. The EU drew the attention of the Government to the fragility of the final phases of the Arusha peace process and to the dangers that such incidents represented.

On 3 September [A/54/330-S/1999/958], the EU condemned the 28 August killings of civilians by rebels in Bujumbura and urged all parties to refrain from any violence and fully respect human rights. It called on all Burundians to preserve the ongoing process of national reconciliation, in particular the Arusha negotiations, which were entering a critical phase. The EU stressed to all Burundians that peace and stability could be achieved only through a negotiated political settlement and encouraged all Burundians to support the negotiations.

In an 8 October statement [S/1999/1060], the EU strongly deplored the renewed outbreak of violence and internal conflict in Burundi, mainly in the southern part of the country and around Bujumbura. It was particularly concerned about the forced removals by the Burundi army of some 260,000 civilians in the countryside around Bujumbura. The EU called on the Government to stop the policy of forced removals and to allow the people to return to their property as quickly as possible. In the meantime, the Government was urged to provide the people with improved sanitary conditions and temporary accommodations. The EU noted that the Government had assured UN representatives and international non-governmental organizations (NGOs) free access to all of the camps concerned to enable them to provide humanitarian assistance. It asked the authorities to afford the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights in Burundi and its observers the same access. It hoped that all Burundi rebel movements would join the Arusha peace process and that all the parties to the Burundi conflict would choose the path of negotiation rather than that of violence and conflict.

Murder of UN staff. Burundi, on 13 October [A/54/460], informed the Secretary-General of the murder on 12 October of several members of a humanitarian assistance mission in Rutana province. Among them were Luis Manuel Zuniga of the United Nations Children's Fund and Saskia Louis Von Meijenfeldt of the World Food Programme. The Government condemned the acts perpetrated by terrorists and urged humanitarian and international cooperation agencies operating in Burundi not to give way to intimidation, adding that it would make every effort to protect all personnel working for humanitarian organizations. It reiterated its urgent request for regional cooperation, in particular with the United Republic of Tanzania, in tracking down and eliminating such terrorism. The Government would conduct all the necessary investigations and would bring the full force of the law and justice to bear against all perpetrators of the crimes.

On 18 October [A/54/493-S/1999/1085], the EU Presidency strongly condemned the attack and called for the perpetrators of the massacre to be brought to justice. It appealed to all the Burundian parties to put an end without delay to all acts of violence and to reach an early agreement on the terms of a ceasefire and a return to civil peace, reconciliation and democracy.

Burundi, on 2 November [S/1999/1118], transmitted to the Council President a preliminary report on the investigation of the attack in Rutana province. The witnesses reported that the attack was carried out by genocidal professional terrorists and lasted only 10 minutes, after which the attackers withdrew towards Tanzania, the direction from which they had come. The report concluded that the preparation for the investigation mission was inadequate and both the delegation and the local authorities underestimated the danger. A judicial brief would be prepared indicting persons unknown.

On 9 November [S/1999/1151], the United Republic of Tanzania condemned the cold-blooded murder of the UN personnel and innocent Burundian civilians. It rejected allegations by Burundi that the perpetrators came from Tanzania. However, it reiterated its commitment to support Burundi in the search for a peaceful settlement to its political problems.

UN Office in Burundi

On 12 April [S/1999/425], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that he had decided to upgrade the level of the United Nations Office in Burundi (UNOB) by appointing Cheikh Tidiane Sy (Senegal), the current head of the Office, as the Representative of the Secretary-General in Burundi.

On 15 April [S/1999/426], the Council President informed the Secretary-General that the Council members took note of his decision.

The Secretary-General, on 2 November [S/1999/1136], informed the Council of his intention to extend the mandate of UNOB until the end of 2000. It seemed unlikely that the peace process would culminate in the conclusion of a general peace agreement in Arusha by the end of 1999 and peace efforts would probably continue in the year 2000. Once the peace agreement was reached, there would be a need for UNOB to undertake responsibilities in the post-conflict peace-building phase to help in the consolidation of peace and security. That would entail assisting in the implementation of the peace agreement and the establishment of new institutions, as well as providing support for the various reforms envisaged in the agreement.

On 5 November [S/1999/1137], the Council took note of the Secretary-General's intention.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (12 November)

On 12 November [meeting 4068], the Security Council President made statement S/PRST/1999/32 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council notes with concern the recent outbreaks of violence in Burundi and the delays in the peace process. It calls upon all the parties to put an end to this violence and pursue negotiations towards the peaceful resolution of Burundi's ongoing crisis.

The Council reiterates its support for the Arusha peace process and for the efforts to build an internal political partnership in Burundi. It notes with great sadness the death of Mwalimu Julius Nyerere, while at the same time rededicating its efforts to the cause of peace he served. The Council firmly believes that the process chaired by the late Mwalimu Nyerere offers the best hope for peace in Burundi and should be the foundation for all-party talks leading to the conclusion of a peace agreement. The States of the region, in close consultation with the United Nations, need to act quickly to appoint a new mediation team that is acceptable to the Burundian parties to the negotiations.

The Council commends those Burundian parties, including the Government, that demonstrated their commitment to continue negotiations, calls on those parties that remain outside the process to cease hostilities and calls for their full participation in Burundi's inclusive peace process.

The Council condemns the murder of United Nations personnel in Burundi in October. It calls on the Government to undertake and cooperate with investigations, and for the perpetrators to be brought to justice. The Council urges all parties to ensure the safe and unhindered access of humanitarian assistance to those in need in Burundi and to guarantee fully the security and freedom of movement of United Nations and humanitarian personnel. The Council recognizes the important role of the States of the region, in particular the United Republic of Tanzania, which is host to hundreds of thousands of Burundian refugees and home to the Julius Nyerere Foundation, which has provided outstanding support to the talks.

The Council calls upon States of the region to ensure the neutrality and civilian character of refugee camps and to prevent the use of their territory by armed insurgents. It also calls on the Government of Burundi to halt the policy of forced regroupment and to allow the affected people to return to their homes, with full and unhindered humanitarian access throughout the process. It condemns the attacks by armed groups against civilians and calls for an end to these unacceptable incidents.

The Council recognizes Burundi's dire economic and social conditions and affirms the need for the donor community to expand assistance for Burundi.

Peace process Facilitator

The Facilitator of the Burundi peace process, Mwalimu Julius K. Nyerere, died on 14 October.

In a 17 October note verbale to the Secretary-General [S/1999/1068], Burundi paid tribute to Mr. Nyerere for the enormous amount of work he accomplished in pursuit of peace and national reconciliation in Burundi. Burundi stated that it was essential to capitalize on the work already achieved in the Arusha process but it was important to correct the weaknesses in methodology and management. It was necessary for a new Facilitator to be appointed without delay, said Burundi. Presenting some criteria to guide the search for the new Facilitator, Burundi added that it was up to the international community to propose a new Facilitator and that it had no objection to that person utilizing the means of the former facilitation team if they had proved their effectiveness.

The former President of South Africa, Nelson Mandela, was appointed Facilitator of the Burundi peace process in December.

UN Adviser to peace process

The Secretary-General, on 2 November [S/1999/1138], informed the Security Council President of his decision to extend until June 2000 the appointment of Ayité Jean-Claude Kpakpo (Benin) as Senior UN Adviser to the Facilitator of the Burundi peace process.

On 5 November [S/1999/1139], the President informed the Secretary-General that his decision had been brought to the attention of the Council members.

Angola

At the beginning of the year, the situation in Angola continued to deteriorate as hostilities resumed between government forces and the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA). As a result of the successful military campaign launched by the Government in September, a major change in the political situation took place with the re-establishment of State authority in the vast territory previously occupied by UNITA. By the end of the year, government forces had gained control of a number of key UNITA areas, including its strongholds in the central highlands, bringing a measure of stability to some regions. The protracted conflict and the risks of spillover into neighbouring countries remained a concern for the international community. The hostilities caused immense suffering for the Angolan people and at the end of the year there were an estimated 2 million internally displaced persons. In January, the Security Council condemned the downing, under suspicious circumstances, of aircraft chartered by the United Nations.

Implementation of the 1994 Lusaka Protocol [YUN 1994, p. 348], the agreement signed by the two sides by which the State administration would be extended throughout the country, came to a virtual standstill. The Government maintained that it did not consider Jonas Savimbi, the UNITA leader, a credible partner for dialogue, given his record of not implementing his previous undertakings in good faith. Nevertheless, President Jose Eduardo dos Santos affirmed in November that the Protocol was still a valid basis for the peace process, and he outlined a programme of action, without any timetable, that would culminate in the holding of legislative and presidential elections. The Security Council reiterated that the primary cause of the crisis in Angola was UNITA's refusal to comply with its obligations under the Lusaka Protocol and relevant Council resolutions, and stressed that lasting peace could be achieved only through a political settlement.

The United Nations Observer Mission in Angola (MONUA) was gradually withdrawn during the year after its mandate expired at the end of February; the United Nations and the Government of Angola established a joint commission to oversee the liquidation of the Mission. The United Nations Office in Angola was established in its place to liaise with the political, military, police and other civilian authorities, with a view to exploring measures for restoring peace and assisting in capacity-building, humanitarian assistance and the promotion of human rights.

The Committee established pursuant to Council resolution 864(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 256] assessed the implementation of sanctions against UNITA and made recommendations on ways to strengthen their effectiveness. In line with the Committee's recommendations, the Council established expert panels to make recommendations on strengthening sanctions, particularly with respect to restricting the flow of arms, petroleum and petroleum products, diamonds and funds to and from UNITA.

Political and military developments

The situation in Angola in 1999 continued the downward spiral that began the previous year. The conflict between government and UNITA forces widened and all progress towards implementation of the 1994 Lusaka Protocol [YUN 1994, p. 348], signed by President dos Santos and Jonas Savimbi, halted. That agreement covered, among other things, the withdrawal, quartering and demilitarization of all UNITA forces; the disarming of civilians; integration of forces into a national military; police functions; the electoral process; and national reconciliation. A major change in the overall situation occurred late in the year following the successful military campaign by the Government. As a result, the Government was able to re-establish its authority in much of the area previously occupied by UNITA. The hostilities continued to cause suffering for the Angolan people and the destruction of much of the country's infrastructure.

With the resumption of hostilities and the determination by the Angolan Government that the MONUA mandate should be ended, the Security Council did not renew the Mission's mandate when it expired on 26 February.

Report of Secretary-General (January). The Secretary-General, in response to Security Council resolution 1213(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 118], reported on 17 January on the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola (MONUA) [S/1999/49].

Since his previous report in October 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 115], said the Secretary-General, the overall situation in Angola had taken a turn towards a military confrontation with serious humanitarian consequences. The peace process had collapsed and Angola was in a state of war. The dialogue between the Government and Jonas Savimbi, which was interrupted in June 1998 after UNITA refused the extension of State administration in its strongholds, was non-existent. Several statements made by the parties, together with the intensifying hostilities, effectively ended any hope for the resumption of the implementation of the provisions of the Protocol in the foreseeable future. Although Mr. Savimbi had reaffirmed, in a letter of 3 December 1998, his commitment to the Protocol, his subsequent messages to the Secretary-General and his Special Representative, Issa B. Y. Diallo, gave no indication that UNITA intended to resume its obligations under the Protocol. However, Mr. Savimbi indicated his wish to meet with Mr. Diallo, as well as the need for the presence of international observers in Angola to serve as "useful witnesses". For his part, President dos Santos, speaking to the Fourth Congress of the Movimento Popular da Libertação de Angola (MPLA) in December 1998, said that the only path to lasting peace was the total isolation of Mr. Savimbi and his group. The President called for the early conclusion of the implementation of the Protocol and the termination of the MONUA mandate. At the same time, he indicated the need to begin preparations for the next legislative and presidential elections, to be held within two to three years. In his end-of-year address, the President again rejected any dialogue with Mr. Savimbi. Public statements by both parties indicated their apparent intention to continue and escalate the fighting. The Special Representative, in collaboration with representatives of the three observer States (Portugal, the Russian Federation and the United States), continued to maintain contacts with the parties, including the newly established UNITA Restoration Committee (UNITA-Renovada) and UNITA deputies to the National Assembly. Because of the Angolan Government's position, the Special Representative had not been able to meet directly with Mr. Savimbi or any of his senior representatives.

Government and military officials, as well as representatives from MPLA and UNITA-Renovada, had made claims that the United Nations was responsible for the deterioration of the security situation and for the failure to demilitarize UNITA forces. The negative public atmosphere created by the Angola media campaign against the United Nations was compounded by incidents of harassment and non-cooperation with MONUA. The exposure of UN personnel in Angola to grave security risks was demonstrated by the presumed shooting down near Huambo, an area of active military operations, of two UN aircraft, with a total of 15 passengers and eight crew members, on 26 December 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 120] and 2 January 1999. The two parties denied any responsibility for those incidents and initially denied the United Nations access to search the areas where the aircraft had gone down. The Secretary-General described the incidents as crimes apparently intended to intimidate the United Nations and force it to curtail its operations. In response to those developments, it was decided to limit air operations in Angola and to expedite the withdrawal of all UN personnel to Luanda, as also requested by the Government, ending all humanitarian air operations. By some accounts, Angola was on the verge of a humanitarian catastrophe.

The military situation in Angola had deteriorated since early December 1998 with the commencement of a large-scale military operation in the central highlands, the Secretary-General reported. The widening hostilities had had a negative impact on the general law and order situation in the country, and the attitude of local officials had prevented civilian police observers and human rights monitors from carrying out patrols and visits to prisons or detention centres. MONUA reported grave human rights violations against the civilian population as a result of the escalation of hostilities. At the beginning of 1999, the total number of new internally displaced persons had risen to 500,000 from 4,000 in April 1998.

In response to Security Council resolutions 1202(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 116] and 1213(1998) [ibid., p. 118], the Secretary-General included in his report recommendations regarding ways for Member States to improve the implementation of sanctions against UNITA (see p. 111), as called for by Council resolution 864(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 256]. For example, he suggested that Member States, particularly those neighbouring Angola, provide regular information necessary to enable the Sanctions Committee to investigate violations of the mandatory measures; Angola and neighbouring States could monitor major border crossings and airports to prevent illegal movement across the border; and an expert study could be commissioned on ways to trace violations of the measures regarding arms trafficking, oil supply and the diamond trade, as well as the movement of UNITA funds.

In the light of the deteriorating security situation and the inability of MONUA to carry out its mandate, it had become clear that the conditions for a meaningful UN peacekeeping role in Angola had ceased to exist. The Government had informed the United Nations, and announced in the media, that it did not intend to support the extension of MONUA beyond its current mandate. As for UNITA, although it had made statements in favour of a continued UN presence, it had not taken any initiative to restore meaningful contacts with the United Nations or to resume implementation of the Lusaka Protocol. The United Nations had brought four years of relative peace to Angola, the longest such period Angola had enjoyed since its independence, but it could not play an effective role without the parties' cooperation. In the circumstances, the Secretary-General found that MONUA had no other option but to continue to reduce its presence within Angola and proceed with repatriation of UN personnel and property. Upon the expiration of MONUA's mandate on 26 February, the United Nations would proceed with its technical liquidation, which would last four to six months. However, the United Nations should remain actively involved in finding a possible resolution of the fratricidal conflict which had lasted longer than any other in Africa, the Secretary-General stated. He therefore intended to designate a senior official to serve as his Special Envoy for Angola, who would be based in New York. The human rights work of the United Nations in Angola should continue, as should humanitarian assistance to the Angolan people. However, the United Nations could not carry out those tasks without guarantees of access and assurances for the safety and security of humanitarian personnel and operations. The Secretary-General called on the two parties to provide such guarantees and cooperate fully with the humanitarian organizations working in Angola.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

The Security Council, in January, adopted a resolution and issued a presidential statement on the situation in Angola.

On 12 January [meeting 3965], the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1221(1999). The draft [S/1999/27] was submitted by Brazil, Canada, France, Gabon, Malaysia, Namibia, Portugal and the Russian Federation.

10. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

On 21 January [meeting 3969], following consideration of the Secretary-General's 17 January report (see p. 102), the Council President made statement S/PRST/1999/3 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council expresses its alarm at the serious deterioration in the political and military situation in Angola. It reaffirms its belief that lasting peace and national reconciliation cannot be achieved through military means, and urges the Government of Angola and especially the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola to resume a constructive dialogue on the basis of the "Acordos de Paz", the Lusaka Protocol and relevant Council resolutions in order to seek a peaceful resolution of the conflict and spare the Angolan people further war and suffering. In this context, it reaffirms that the primary cause of the crisis in Angola is the refusal by the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola to comply with the basic provisions of the Lusaka Protocol and reiterates its demand that the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola comply with its obligations to demilitarize and to permit the extension of State administration to territories it controls.

The Council shares the assessment and judgments of the Secretary-General on the political and military situation in Angola contained in his report of 17 January 1999. It underscores the contribution of the United Nations to the past four years of relative peace in Angola. It expresses its deep regret that the present political and security situation in the country and the lack of cooperation with the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola, especially by the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola, have prevented the Mission from carrying out its mandated role fully.

The Council underlines the great importance it attaches to a continued multidisciplinary presence of the United Nations under the direction of a representative of the Secretary-General in Angola. It recognizes that such a continued presence depends on the safety of United Nations personnel and requires the agreement of the Government of Angola and the cooperation of all concerned. In this context, it appeals to the Government of Angola to provide such agreement and to the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola to cooperate fully. It welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to consult urgently with the Government of Angola on such a United Nations presence and to report to the Council in this regard.

The Council again calls upon Member States to support the peace process in Angola through full and immediate implementation of the measures against the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola contained in resolutions 864(1993) of 15 September 1993, 1127(1997) of 28 August 1997 and 1173(1998) of 12 June 1998, and reiterates its readiness to take steps to reinforce the implementation of those measures on the basis of the recommendations contained in section IV of the report of the Secretary-General of 17 January 1999.

The Council expresses its profound concern at the humanitarian impact of the conflict on the Angolan people. It urges the international community to support the Government of Angola in fulfilling its primary responsibility for the humanitarian needs of the Angolan people and, in this regard, urges Member States to fund generously the 1999 United Nations Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Angola. It calls upon all concerned to concur and cooperate with United Nations humanitarian assistance activities on the basis of the principles of neutrality and non-discrimination, to guarantee the security and freedom of movement of humanitarian personnel, and to ensure necessary, adequate and safe access and logistics by land and air. It urges all concerned to cooperate with the human rights activities of the United Nations, which help to lay a basis for lasting peace and national reconciliation.

The Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Communications (January/February). Angola, on 21 January [S/1999/65], forwarded to the Security Council a note verbale of 20 January from Higinio Carneiro, Angola's Vice-Minister of Territorial Administration, to the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in Angola, concerning the 2 January crash of the UN-chartered aircraft in Bailundo. Mr. Carneiro was responding to a request that a UN team be allowed to visit Bailundo, with guarantees for its security. He informed Mr. Diallo that contacts had been established with the Command of the Northern Centre (Huambo) so as to coordinate all actions for security guarantees. The visit would have to take place between 20 and 23 January.

On 28 January [S/1999/86], Zambia transmitted to the Council a press release issued the day before by its Foreign Ministry. Zambia was responding to allegations by Angola that Zambian authorities were involved in sending logistic and military support to Mr. Savimbi. Zambia stated that it had no evidence or reason to believe the existence or credibility of such information. Zambia, on 20 February [S/1999/182], transmitted a press statement of 17 February by its Foreign Minister on the Angolan claims of Zambian support for Mr. Savimbi. In 1998, the Minister said, several international verification teams had investigated the claims and had cleared Zambia of the allegations. Zambia stated that it had complied with the Council resolutions against UNITA and had communicated that information to the United Nations.

Expiration of MONUA mandate

Communication. President dos Santos of Angola, in an 11 February letter to the Secretary-General [S/1999/166], said his Government considered that conditions for maintaining MONUA's presence in Angola had ceased to exist. Mr. Savimbi had withdrawn from the Lusaka Protocol process to restart and spread the war on a large scale throughout the country beginning in December 1998. Angola claimed that Mr. Savimbi had been removed from the UNITA leadership and therefore it would continue discussions with the new leaders elected at a recent party congress. Angola also indicated that it was not opposed to the idea of the appointment of a special representative who, from New York, could maintain contact with the Government in monitoring the situation in Angola.

Report of Secretary-General (February). On 24 February, the Secretary-General submitted a report on MONUA [S/1999/202] to the Security Council, as the Council had requested in its statement of 21 January (see p. 105). The situation in Angola remained grave, he said, with a marked escalation in fighting between government and UNITA forces.

On 27 January, the National Assembly of Angola adopted a resolution accusing the international community of acquiescence, complacency and bias and of making it easy for Mr. Savimbi to rearm and prepare for war. The Assembly reiterated its view that MONUA's mandate should end. In another resolution, the Assembly declared Mr. Savimbi a war criminal and called for his arrest. The new Angolan Minister of Defence warned seven neighbouring countries that had allegedly provided Mr. Savimbi with material and logistical support that Angola reserved the right of retaliation and hot pursuit. One of those countries, Zambia, had publicly denied those allegations.

The Government and UNITA-Renovada held a joint meeting in Luanda on 18 February [S/1999/268 & Corr.1] to review the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol and agreed that the presidential elections, required under the terms of that document, would be cancelled. The Government informed the Special Representative that, in its view, a continued UN presence in Angola was not necessary (see above), but that the United Nations should continue its activities through the specialized agencies, under the coordination of UNDP.

The United Nations, through the Special Representative, continued to make efforts to maintain contacts with all parties concerned. In a letter to the Secretary-General, Mr. Savimbi claimed that the war was the exclusive responsibility of the Government and the UNITA leadership maintained its position that MONUA should continue in its original format as a facilitator of rapprochement between the parties.

The fighting increased on 26 January when UNITA launched an unexpected offensive, threatening oil fields on the western coast. In the central highlands, the Angolan Armed Forces (FAA) were reported to have made substantial gains. UNITA forces continued to shell Malange and captured the Capenda hydroelectric project south-west of the town. There were large numbers of civilian casualties in Malange, which was overwhelmed by the influx of almost 100,000 internally displaced persons (IDPs). UNITA announced that its forces had captured two diamond mines in the north-east of the country. The presence of troops from the DRC, who were reportedly being trained by FAA, had been confirmed in the Lubango and Matala areas.

After extensive negotiations, on 25 January a UN investigation team, with a UNITA escort, reached the site of the crash of the UN flight that went down on 2 January. The team, which had only an hour at the location, found bullet holes in the tail section and determined that it was unlikely that any of those on board could have survived the crash.

The escalation of hostilities contributed to the dramatic deterioration in the human rights situation, with the civilian population bearing the full brunt of the warfare. Indiscriminate UNITA shelling of Malange killed at least several dozen persons in early January and injured many more. The number of abuses committed against members of the Roman Catholic Church increased, with mission property and personnel being targeted for harassment, torture and killings. The humanitarian situation had shown no sign of improvement, and indications pointed to a further deterioration of the condition of vulnerable populations. The effects of the conflict had led to further displacements of the civilian population during February, with the total number of confirmed IDPs having reached over 550,000 persons. Moreover, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) reported that 19,000 Angolan refugees had recently arrived in the DRC, fleeing the fighting. In spite of the deteriorating security situation, UN agencies and programmes resumed their air operations to most provincial capitals in mid-January, but the ability of the humanitarian community to operate in Angola had been seriously affected by the constraints on access.

The Secretary-General reported that all UN team sites and regional headquarters were relocated to Luanda by 23 February. Since the beginning of 1999, 325 MONUA military and civilian police observers had been repatriated. As at 20 February, MONUA military and police personnel numbered 654. It was estimated that 260 troops would be needed to provide the necessary protection for UN property during the liquidation phase following the expiration of MONUA's mandate. The Secretary-General trusted that the Angolan Government, in accordance with the status-of-forces agreement, would continue to ensure the security of UN personnel. The technical liquidation of MONUA and its predecessors, whose combined presence in Angola spanned 10 years, was estimated to take six months to complete and would require administrative, logistical and other personnel. The Secretary-General would continue consultations with the Government concerning the modalities of the future UN presence.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (February)

On 26 February [meeting 3983], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1229 (1999). The draft text [S/1999/203] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 696(1991) of 30 May 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 864(1993) of 15 September 1993, 1127(1997) of 28 August 1997 and 1173(1998) of 12 June 1998, as well as resolutions 1219(1998) of 31 December 1998 and 1221(1999) of 12 January 1999,

Recalling the statements by its President of 23 December 1998 and of 21 January 1999,

Reaffirming its commitment to preserve the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola,

Reiterating that the primary cause of the present situation in Angola is the failure of the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola, under the leadership of Mr. Jonas Savimbi, to comply with its obligations under the "Acordos de Paz", the Lusaka Protocol and relevant Security Council resolutions,

Expressing its concern at the humanitarian effects of the present situation on the civilian population of Angola,

Reiterating that lasting peace and national reconciliation can be achieved only through peaceful means, and in this regard reaffirming the importance of the "Acordos de Paz", the Lusaka Protocol and relevant Security Council resolutions,

Underscoring the contribution of the United Nations to the past four years of relative peace in Angola, and expressing its deep regret that the present political and security situation in the country has prevented the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola from carrying out its mandated role fully,

Taking note of the letter dated 11 February 1999 from the President of the Republic of Angola to the Secretary-General,

Reaffirming its view that a continued presence of the United Nations in Angola can contribute greatly to national reconciliation, and noting the ongoing consultations with the Government of Angola to obtain its agreement regarding the practical arrangements for this presence,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 24 February 1999,

1. Takes note that the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola expires on 26 February 1999;

2. Endorses the recommendations contained in paragraphs 32 and 33 of the report of the Secretary-General of 24 February 1999 regarding the technical liquidation of the Mission;

3. Affirms that notwithstanding the expiration of the mandate of the Mission, the status-of-forces agreement applicable to the Mission remains in force, pursuant to relevant provisions thereof, until the departure of the final elements of the Mission from Angola;

4. Decides that the human rights component of the Mission shall continue its current activities during the liquidation period;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to designate a channel to liaise with the Government of Angola pending the conclusion of the consultations with the Government of Angola regarding the follow-up configuration of the United Nations presence in Angola;

6. Calls upon all concerned to cooperate with the United Nations humanitarian assistance activities throughout the national territory of Angola on the basis of the principles of neutrality and non-discrimination and to guarantee the security and freedom of movement of humanitarian personnel;

7. Expresses its deep concern at the lack of progress in investigating the downing of the two aircraft chartered by the United Nations and the loss under suspicious circumstances of other commercial aircraft over areas controlled by the Uniao Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola, and reiterates its call upon all concerned, especially the Uniao Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola, to cooperate fully with and to facilitate an immediate and objective international investigation of those incidents;

8. Endorses the recommendations contained in the report of 12 February 1999 of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 864 (1993), reiterates its readiness to take steps to reinforce the measures against the Uniao Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola contained in resolutions 864(1993), 1127(1997) and 1173(1998), and calls upon all Member States to implement those measures fully;

9. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Downing of commercial aircraft

The Foreign Ministry of the Russian Federation, in a 20 May statement [S/1999/593], transmitted to the Secretary-General, said a Russian civilian aircraft, chartered by an Angolan company to transport food and other civilian cargo on domestic Angolan routes, was shot down on 12 May in Lunda Norte province. According to Russia, UNITA captured the Russian flight crew and took responsibility for shooting the aircraft down. The Ministry demanded the immediate and unconditional release of all Russian citizens captured by UNITA and held illegally.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 19 May [meeting 4007], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/1999/14 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council strongly condemns the criminal act by the Uniao Nacional para a Independencia Total de Angola against commercial aircraft, namely the shooting down of an Antonov-26 aircraft on 12 May 1999 near Luzamba and the taking of its Russian crew hostage, while the fate of its Angolan passengers remains unknown.

The Council expresses its grave concern at the fate of those who were on board the downed aircraft, demands the immediate and unconditional release of the Russian crew members and all other foreign nationals that may be held hostage in Angola by the Uniao Nacional para a Independencia Total de Angola and also demands information on the fate of the Angolan passengers. It stresses that the Uniao Nacional para a Independencia Total de Angola and its leader, Mr. Jonas Savimbi, carry full responsibility for their security.

The Council calls upon the Government of Angola and all other concerned parties to cooperate in obtaining the release of the Russian crew members as well as in ascertaining the fate of passengers and crew members of other commercial aircraft lost under suspicious circumstances over territory controlled by the Uniao Nacional para a Independencia Total de Angola.

The Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

In resolution 1237(1999) (see p. 112), the Council condemned the continued attacks by UNITA and called on Member States to enforce measures imposed against UNITA since 1993.

Communications (June-August). On 9 June [S/1999/684], Germany forwarded to the Council an 8 June statement by the EU Presidency supporting the Council's condemnation of the shooting down of the Russian commercial aircraft. It noted that the fate of neither the Russian crew nor the Angolan passengers had been cleared up, nor could the investigation into the shooting down of other aircraft over UNITA-controlled territory, including the downings of two UN aircraft, be concluded. The EU appealed to UNITA to release the hostages and called on the Government and, in particular, UNITA to cooperate with the United Nations.

Finland forwarded a 22 July statement on Angola by the EU Presidency [S/1999/821]. The EU deplored the resumption of civil war in Angola, for which the responsibility lay primarily with UNITA, and reiterated its commitment to maintaining pressure on UNITA through the implementation of UN sanctions. UNITA was urged to resume dialogue with the Government of Angola, with a view to the demilitarization of UNITA and the extension of State administration throughout the country.

The Central Organ of the OAU Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution issued a communique, forwarded to the Council on 10 May [S/1999/533], on the recent visit of the OAU Secretary-General to Angola. The Central Organ requested him to continue his efforts to address the political and humanitarian aspects of the conflict in Angola and appealed to States to implement UN sanctions against UNITA.

Angola, in its capacity as Coordinator of the Council of Ministers of the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries, transmitted a 22 July statement by the Council on the subject of Angola on 3 August [S/1999/847]. The Ministers reiterated their solidarity with the Government of Angola, condemned the attacks against civilians by UNITA military forces, and noted with pleasure UN humanitarian assistance efforts in Angola.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

On 24 August [meeting 4036], following consultations among Security Council members, the Council President made statement S/PRST/1999/26 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council expresses its deep concern at the deteriorating political, military and humanitarian situation in Angola, at the suffering of the people and at the dramatic increase in the number of internally displaced persons, which has now reached well over two million people, not including the unknown number of internally displaced persons in areas which are currently inaccessible to humanitarian agencies.

The Council reiterates that the primary cause of the current crisis in Angola is the failure by the leadership of the Uniao Nacional para a Independencia Total de Angola to comply with its obligations under the Lusaka Protocol, and it again demands that the Uniao Nacional para a Independencia Total de Angola comply immediately and without conditions with its obligations to demilitarize and permit the extension of state administration to areas under its control. It reaffirms its belief that lasting peace and national reconciliation can only be achieved through political dialogue.

The Council expresses its concern at the critical condition of the internally displaced persons who suffer from lack of food, medicines, shelter, arable land and other necessities. The Council further expresses its grave concern at the number of malnourished children and at the outbreak of diseases such as polio and meningitis due to the lack of access to clean water and hygiene. In this regard the Council commends the excellent work by the Government of Angola and the United Nations system in their efforts towards the eradication of diseases in Angola. The Council also expresses its concern at the plight of those vulnerable groups, such as children, women, the elderly and the handicapped, who are particularly at risk and in need of special assistance.

The Council expresses its concern that the continuing conflict in Angola has increased the cost of humanitarian assistance. It notes the insufficient level of contributions to the 1999 United Nations Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Angola and reiterates its appeal to the donor community to contribute generously, financially and in kind, to the humanitarian appeal to enable the agencies to address effectively the plight of the internally displaced persons. The Council welcomes the announcement by the Government of Angola of an emergency plan for humanitarian assistance.

The Council also expresses its concern that the continuing conflict and lack of access jeopardize the ability of the agencies to continue to deliver assistance to those in need. The Council urges the Government of Angola and particularly the Uniao Nacional para a Independencia Total de Angola to provide access to all internally displaced persons in Angola and to facilitate the mechanisms necessary for the delivery of humanitarian assistance to all populations in need throughout the country. The Council urges both parties, particularly the Uniao Nacional para a Independencia Total de Angola, to guarantee the safety and security and freedom of movement of humanitarian personnel, including United Nations and associated personnel, providing assistance to internally displaced persons. The Council strongly urges respect for the principle of neutrality and impartiality in the delivery of assistance. The Council commends the determination and courage of those working to relieve human suffering in Angola, including the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, the World Food Programme and the United Nations Children's Fund and other agencies.

The Council urges both parties to ensure full respect for human rights and international humanitarian law. In this connection, the Council urges the Uniao Nacional para a Independencia Total de Angola to cease committing atrocities, including killing civilians and attacking humanitarian aid workers, and demands the release of all foreign citizens, including the Russian aircrews, held by the Uniao Nacional para a Independencia Total de Angola. It expresses its concern at reports of re-mining activities as well as the laying of mines in new areas in the country.

The Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Establishment of UN Office in Angola

In response to statement S/PRST/1999/3, the Secretary-General, in an 11 August letter [S/1999/871], reported on the status of his consultations with Angola on a continued UN multidisciplinary presence in that country. Following a positive response from Angola, the Secretary-General expressed his intention to proceed with the establishment of the United Nations Office in Angola (UNOA). Practical arrangements would be made for the earliest establishment of the office and the conclusion with Angola of a status-of-mission agreement. The staff of the office would liaise with the political, military, police and other civilian authorities, with a view to exploring ways to restore peace and assist the Angolan people in the area of human rights. The United Nations Humanitarian Assistance Coordination Unit would continue to operate in its existing configuration.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

On 15 October [meeting 4052], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1268(1999). The draft text [S/1999/1061] was prepared during the Council's prior consultations.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 696(1991) of 30 May 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 1229(1999) of 26 February 1999 and 1237(1999) of 7 May 1999,

Recalling the statements by its President of 21 January 1999 and 24 August 1999,

Reaffirming its commitment to preserve the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola,

Reiterating that the primary cause of the present situation in Angola is the failure of the Uniao Nacional para a Independencia Total de Angola, under the leadership of Mr. Jonas Savimbi, to comply with its obligations under the "Acordos de Paz", the Lusaka Protocol and relevant Security Council resolutions,

Reiterating also that lasting peace and national reconciliation can only be achieved through peaceful means, and in this regard reaffirming the importance of the "Acordos de Paz", the Lusaka Protocol and relevant Security Council resolutions,

Expressing its concern at the humanitarian effects of the present situation on the civilian population in Angola,

Welcoming the letter from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council dated 11 August 1999, and the letters referred to therein from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Angola to the Secretary-General dated 26 July 1999 and from the Secretary-General to the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Angola dated 2 August 1999,

Reaffirming its view that a continued United Nations presence in Angola can contribute greatly to the promotion of peace, national reconciliation, human rights and regional security,

1. Authorizes the establishment, for an initial period of six months until 15 April 2000, of the United Nations Office in Angola staffed with the personnel necessary to liaise with the political, military, police and other civilian authorities, with a view to exploring effective measures for restoring peace, assisting the Angolan people in the area of capacity-building, humanitarian assistance and the promotion of human rights, and coordinating other activities;

2. Decides that, pending further consultations between the United Nations and the Government of Angola, the United Nations Office in Angola shall consist of up to thirty substantive professional staff, as well as the necessary administrative and other support personnel;

3. Stresses that the United Nations Humanitarian Assistance Coordination Unit will continue to operate and to be funded in its present configuration;

4. Calls upon all parties concerned and in particular the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola to ensure the safety, security and freedom of movement of the United Nations and associated personnel and to respect fully their status;

5. Calls upon the Government of Angola and the Secretary-General to conclude as soon as possible a status-of-mission agreement;

6. Expresses its readiness to review the configuration and mandate of the United Nations presence in Angola upon the recommendation of the Secretary-General in consultation with the Government of Angola;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to provide every three months a report on developments in Angola, including his recommendations about additional measures the Council might consider to promote the peace process in Angola;

8. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

The Government of Angola informed the Secretary-General on 18 October [S/1999/1099] that it consented to the installation of a UN office in the country. Angola reiterated that, under current circumstances, a UN presence could be of great use only if its activity was restricted to the area of humanitarian assistance and capacity-building and strengthening of government institutions in the field of human rights. Angola reaffirmed its position that the UNOA mandate should be to serve as a liaison between the Government and the Secretary-General, with a view to ensuring follow-up to the situation in Angola by the Security Council on those matters. As to the Humanitarian Assistance Coordination Unit, Angola supported its role and had no objection to its current configuration, i.e., independent from UNOA. Concerning public information questions, the Government believed that, given the nature and scope of the mission, the installation of a broadcasting station and the allocation of a special space in the media would not be required. Angola concluded that the necessary conditions for the conclusion and signing of the headquarters agreement were in place.

In an 11 November reply, the Secretary-General took note of the Government's position and stressed that the substantive staff of the new office would perform the functions outlined in Council resolution 1268(1999).

Later developments. In late 1999 [S/2000/23], the situation in Angola underwent a major change following the successful military campaign launched by the Government in September, resulting in the re-establishment of State authority in the territory previously occupied by UNITA in the central, northern and eastern regions. The Government maintained that it did not consider Mr. Savimbi a credible partner for dialogue, given his record of not implementing his previous undertakings in good faith. At the same time, President dos Santos stated on 11 November that all Mr. Savimbi's supporters who surrendered to government forces would be allowed to carry out political activities. He also stressed that the Lusaka Protocol was still a valid basis for the peace process in Angola and outlined a programme of action that would culminate in the holding of legislative and presidential elections. However, no dates for elections were announced. In the meantime, the Government reinforced its military action on the ground and continued a campaign aimed at the political isolation of UNITA. To that effect, consultations were conducted by the Government with various countries, particularly those in the subregion, in an attempt to deny Mr. Savimbi lines of communication and logistic support. In that context, meetings were held with representatives of the Congo, the DRC, Namibia and Zambia on issues related to security along Angola's border, and some bilateral understandings were reportedly reached in that regard. UNITA-Renovada remained active, calling for the termination of the conflict by Mr. Savimbi's group and urging the Government to resume the demobilization of UNITA fighters to be incorporated in the proposed "fourth branch" of FAA.

The Human Rights Division of MONUA pursued its activities in cooperation with the Government, State institutions and civil society. By the end of the year, several capacity-building projects had been developed, focusing on the training of prosecutors and judges, improving infrastructure, public access to law and court proceedings, and the need for law reform. A UN police training project awaited approval by the authorities. Since the relocation of all MONUA personnel to Luanda in early 1999, the Division had had to discontinue its activities outside the Angolan capital, except in Benguela province where it had set up human rights centres.

The humanitarian situation in the country remained precarious as a result of continued military activities, with disruptions in the rehabilitation of social and economic structures and services. The war-affected civilian population was estimated at 3.7 million people, of whom nearly 2 million were IDPs. The security situation had seriously constrained international humanitarian work.

The United Nations and the Angolan Government cooperated on administrative aspects of the liquidation of MONUA through a joint commission. After lengthy negotiations, the Government on 11 November offered the United Nations $8.3 million to purchase the Mission's assets and the sale was expected to be completed by the end of January 2000. With regard to the two UN aircraft that were shot down in central Angola in December 1998 and January 1999, MONUA representatives and Angolan military authorities met in December 1999 to coordinate the return of UN teams to the crash sites.

In the Secretary-General's view, the protracted conflict in Angola and the risks of spillover into neighbouring countries remained a source of major concern for the international community. UNITA bore the primary responsibility for the current state of affairs. Its refusal to comply with obligations under the Lusaka Protocol, in particular its failure to demilitarize its forces and to allow State administration to be extended throughout the country, had precipitated the resumption of widespread hostilities.

Other matters

Sanctions Committee

During 1999, the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 256] to monitor sanctions against UNITA explored ways to ensure the implementation of the mandatory measures. In resolutions 1221(1999) and 1229(1999), the Council stressed the obligation of Member States to comply with the measures imposed against UNITA in 1993 and strengthened in resolutions 1127(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 106] and 1173(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 108] and expressed its readiness to consider additional measures.

In response to the Council's request in resolution 1221(1999), the Chairman of the Committee, in a 12 February report [S/1999/147], reviewed and supported recommendations made by the Secretary-General in his January report [S/1999/49] to improve the implementation of the sanctions. They included: Member States should provide information on the implementation of those measures; the Council and the Committee should review the implementation process with a view to identifying and eliminating gaps; Member States should provide the Committee with information necessary for it to investigate possible violations; Angola and neighbouring States should monitor all major border crossings and airports to prevent illegal movement across the border; and an expert study should focus on ways to trace violations of the measures. In addition, the Committee proposed that States consider enacting legislation making violations of the sanctions a criminal offence; prohibit logistical assistance and military services to UNITA; obtain information on transfer of military equipment to UNITA and activities involving illicit diamond trade with UNITA; and track the financial flows of UNITA and its officials. The Committee also suggested that Member States, particularly those neighbouring Angola, provide information on illegal arms flows to Angola, the illicit trade in diamonds, the supply of petroleum products to UNITA, and proposals for tightening the embargo. By a note of 18 February [S/1999/168], the President stated that the Council had approved the report of the Committee and endorsed its recommendations.

Angola, in a 9 March letter to the Chairman of the Committee [S/1999/267], said that some African countries had compromised efforts to stem the flow of political and material support to the militarist wing of Mr. Savimbi. It pointed to Zambia and gave examples of evidence of such support. It alleged that Zambian enterprises and some individuals were involved in the sale and purchase of lethal materials and food for UNITA and that the Zambian Government had provided direct support for UNITA. Zambia responded to the charges on 19 March [S/1999/306]. It rebutted the allegations after having conducted investigations of the reported evidence.

Establishment of expert panels

On 4 May [S/1999/509], the Sanctions Committee Chairman transmitted to the Council a conceptual framework for the expert studies to be undertaken to trace violations in arms trafficking, oil supplies and the diamond trade, as well as the movement of UNITA funds, as proposed by the Committee [S/1999/147] and endorsed by the Council in resolution 1229(1999). It was proposed that the expert studies be conducted in two parts—one panel, on the sources of revenue, funding and petroleum supplies of UNITA, would focus on the resources that enabled UNITA to operate, and the other panel, on the sources of military support to UNITA, would study violations of Council-imposed sanctions on the sale and supply to UNITA of arms, materiel and military assistance, including mercenaries. The expert panels would have a mandate to collect information on the sources and methods of violations of sanctions and to recommend measures to end those violations and improve the implementation of sanctions. Each panel would have a mandate of six months and the Committee Chairman would provide oversight of the studies. The panels would be supported as an expense of the Organization and through a UN trust fund established for that purpose.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 7 May [meeting 3999], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1237(1999). The draft text [S/1999/521] was sponsored by Canada, Portugal, the Russian Federation and the United States.

The Security Council,

Reports of Sanctions Committee Chairman.

The Chairman of the Sanctions Committee, Robert R. Fowler (Canada), visited Southern and Central Africa, Europe and Algeria in mid-1999 to assess the implementation of the sanctions imposed against UNITA.

In May, the Chairman travelled to Angola, Botswana, the DRC, Namibia, South Africa, Zambia and Zimbabwe to discuss ways to improve the sanctions [S/1999/644]. He described Angola as a country of extraordinary potential wealth, including an anticipated level of petroleum production unequalled in Africa, but a country troubled by an impending humanitarian catastrophe. The number of IDPs in Angola had reached 1.6 million out of a population of some 11 million. Of those, more than 800,000 had been displaced since fighting resumed in December 1998. More than 1 million Angolans had lost their lives in more than 20 years of civil war. In his meetings with heads of State and other high officials in Angola and neighbouring States, the Chairman said widespread concern was expressed at the likelihood of continuing warfare. Those with whom he met expressed willingness to consider practical measures to decrease the revenue available to UNITA, principally from diamond sales, and to increase its costs in acquiring petroleum, armaments and other supplies.

A number of Southern African States were alleged to be involved in the violation of sanctions, but, in most cases, that was believed to be the consequence of private interests acting without the knowledge of their Governments. Countries outside the region, including in particular several in Central and West Africa and Eastern Europe, were also widely rumoured to be implicated in systematic violation of the sanctions. The Chairman made a number of recommendations on ways to determine whether and, if so, how sanctions were being violated, including deploying UN sanctions monitors in the region, requesting Member States with intelligence-gathering capacities to provide information on violations; air surveillance and interdiction of UNITA supply flights; collaboration between the Committee and the Southern African Development Community (SADC) members on sanctions; and collaboration between the Committee and the International Criminal Police Organization (Interpol) on application of sanctions.

Diamond revenues constituted the essential component of UNITA's capacity to wage war, bringing in approximately $200 million in revenue in 1998, according to some reports. Having met with government officials responsible for the diamond industries in Botswana, Namibia and South Africa and representatives of De Beers Consolidated Mines Limited and other companies, the Chairman recommended that the licensed foreign diamond buyers in Angola, the major diamond mining companies active there and the industry councils in the major diamond-cutting centres liaise with the Committee in devising practical measures to limit UNITA's access to legitimate diamond markets. The expert panels should make recommendations on the feasibility of the appointment of expert monitors at the major diamond exchanges, to identify and confiscate UNITA diamonds illegally brought to market. Their objective was not to inflict any collateral damage on the legitimate diamond trade.

With regard to the application of sanctions, the Chairman noted that several Member States in the region had not enacted legislation giving force to the Council's sanctions and he recommended that they do so, making violations a criminal offence with specific legal penalties. He suggested further that the Secretary-General and the President of the Council brief all Member States on the application of the sanctions, to outline the obligation of Member States and advise them on how that obligation might best be acquitted. The Chairman also proposed that the expert panels be empowered to commission background studies by bodies with expertise useful to their work. They should identify "best practices", such as procedural or legal measures, for applying sanctions. Furthermore, the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the question of the use of mercenaries should be invited to contribute to their work.

Following his visit to Europe and participation in the OAU Council of Ministers meeting (Algiers, Algeria, 9 July), the Chairman, in a July report to the Council [S/1999/829], made further recommendations regarding the sanctions against UNITA. He travelled to Algeria, Belgium, France, Ukraine and the United Kingdom to identify measures to improve the sanctions' effectiveness and to request Member States, companies and individuals to provide the Committee with information on violations. The Chairman recommended that donor States be encouraged to provide financial and material assistance to SADC in support of its efforts to enhance regional capacity for the implementation and monitoring of sanctions. The North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) and the EU were urged to reaffirm their inclusion of compliance with Security Council decisions, including sanctions against UNITA, among criteria for accession by new members. Further recommendations included collaboration between the World Customs Organization and the Committee and its expert panels in the implementation of the sanctions, and the establishment of a working group consisting of Interpol representatives and members of the expert panels. After meeting with representatives of the diamond industry in several countries, the Chairman recommended that interested Member States, including in particular those that exported or imported diamonds, work together to harmonize procedures and documentation for the import and export of rough diamonds, possibly through the World Customs Organization, in consultation with the diamond industry and drawing on any advice of the expert panels.

At the conclusion of both reports, the Chairman affirmed that the Committee and the Council would continue to review UNITA's willingness to engage in political dialogue and calibrate Council-imposed sanctions accordingly.

The Security Council was briefed on 29 July [meeting 4027] by the Chairman of the Committee. The aim of the Sanctions Committee, he said, was to limit UNITA's capacity to wage war by diminishing its revenues derived from the sale of diamonds and to increase the cost of its arms procurement. The Committee's work was premised on the belief that the war could be ended only through political dialogue and it intended to limit the ability of UNITA to pursue the war option. The sanctions invoked against UNITA were focused, as opposed to broad, pervasive, comprehensive sanctions that could cause collateral damage. In applying sanctions, it was necessary to apply triage or prioritization so that the Council's efforts were expended mainly in areas with the fastest return. The responsibility for enforcing sanctions was that of individual Member States, whether through legislation, regulation or decree.

Expert panel meetings. By a 30 July letter and later addendum [S/1999/837 & Add.1], the Chairman transmitted to the Council a list of 10 experts appointed to the expert panels established by resolution 1237(1999). In order to facilitate the sharing of information and expertise, it was decided that the two original panels (one dealing with arms and the other with UNITA resources) would as a practical matter function as one panel. The panel met on 26 and 27 August in New York and on 24 and 25 September in Geneva and issued an interim report on 30 September [S/1999/1016]. The members agreed on a plan of work and considered how best to prioritize their work within the five categories established by the Council, namely, diamonds, finances, petroleum products, representation and travel, and weapons. The panel decided to establish a base in southern Africa and arrangements for the office were expected to be completed by October. The panel agreed to establish an information database and a web site and to undertake visits to a number of countries.

Summarizing the Sanctions Committee's activities during the year [S/2000/83], the Chairman remarked that public awareness of the sanctions increased substantially in 1999 and the effectiveness of the measures appeared to have been enhanced. The work of the expert panel in identifying the sources and methods of violations of the sanctions and in offering practical recommendations for further action could render them still more effective and thus further impair the ability of UNITA to pursue its objectives through military means.

Communications. Ukraine, in a 17 August press statement [S/1999/900], stated that it had repeatedly denied as groundless the allegations implicating Ukraine in violations of Council sanctions, including those against UNITA. Ukraine remained concerned that such allegations still occasionally appeared in the media. In that regard, the Chairman of the Sanctions Committee, during his visit to Europe in July (see p. 114), had discussed the allegations [S/1999/829], and senior officials said they were without foundation. The authorities of Ukraine offered to submit to the Committee information on the results of their investigations into specific alleged violations of the sanctions against UNITA [S/2000/83]. That information was subsequently provided to the Chairman.

The Chairman forwarded to the Council communications dealing with action taken by the diamond industry in regard to sanctions—a letter from the Managing Director of De Beers Consolidated Mines Limited [S/1999/1048] and a press release issued by the International Diamond Manufacturers Association in Antwerp, Belgium [S/1999/1163].

The Managing Director, Gary Ralfe, said that De Beers had never bought diamonds from UNITA and, since the promulgation of resolution 1173(1998), it had not bought Angolan diamonds without the requisite certificate of origin. The company had decided to take additional action: to suspend buying anywhere in the world any parcels of Angolan diamonds, with one exception where it had a contractual arrangement; to withdraw from the Codiam joint venture in Angola and thereby have no further interest in diamond buying offices in Angola; and to review its other buying operations in Central and West Africa, namely the DRC and Guinea, with a view to withdrawal. De Beers issued a press release on 5 October on its decision, which was motivated by its concern for the situation in Angola.

The International Diamond Manufacturers Association affirmed its readiness to work with the United Nations to achieve greater compliance with sanctions. It was also working within the diamond community to ensure zero tolerance in respect of any violation of the sanctions.

Financing of UN missions in Angola

In April [A/53/908], the Secretary-General presented the financial performance report of MONUA for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998. Expenditures for the period totalled $170,428,100 gross ($166,466,100 net), as compared with an appropriation of $175,000,000 gross ($170,741,200 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $4,571,900 gross ($4,275,100 net), attributable primarily to reduced requirements under civilian personnel, premises/accommodation, transport and air operations, other equipment and air and surface freight, which were offset in part by additional requirements under communications, supplies and services and the absorption of the cost of the financing of the United Nations Logistics Base in Brindisi, Italy.

The financing of MONUA was also the subject of a May report [A/53/937] containing the proposed budget for 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, amounting to $7,000,000 gross ($6,642,300 net). The proposed budget would cover the liquidation of the mission for the 12-month period. The estimated requirements were $122,875,600 less than the approved budget of $130,431,600 gross for the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999.

Commenting on the MONUA financial reports in May [A/53/957], ACABQ considered that the overall monitoring of expenditures for the Mission had been weak. It noted the similar findings of the Board of Auditors in its 1998 report on UN peacekeeping operations and of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the audits of the procurement process at the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM) [YUN 1998, p. 123], which became MONUA in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 104]. In regard to the unencumbered balance, ACABQ recommended that it be applied to the next budget period, from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000. ACABQ recommended that the General Assembly appropriate $7,000,000 gross

($6,642,300 net) for 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 and that it take into account the unencumbered balance of $4,571,900 gross ($4,275,100 net) from the MONUA budget and the unencumbered balance of $149,720 gross ($49,625 net) in respect of UNAVEM and UNAVEM II mentioned in the Secretary-General's May report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 June [meeting 101], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/745/Add.1], adopted resolution 53/228 without vote [agenda item 123].

Financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission and the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 626(1988) of 20 December 1988, by which the Council established the United Nations Angola Verification Mission, 696(1991) of 30 May 1991, by which the Council decided to entrust a new mandate to the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (thenceforth called the United Nations Angola Verification Mission II), 976(1995) of 8 February 1995, by which the Council authorized the establishment of a peacekeeping operation (thenceforth called the United Nations Angola Verification Mission III), 1118(1997) of 30 June 1997, by which the Council decided to establish, as from 1 July 1997, the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola, and its subsequent resolutions, the latest of which was resolution 1229(1999) of 26 February 1999,

Recalling its resolution 43/231 of 16 February 1989 on the financing of the Verification Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, and resolution 53/211 of 18 December 1998 on the financing of the Observer Mission,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Observer Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Observer Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Observer Mission,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Observer Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Angola Verification Mission and the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola as at 30 April 1999, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 144.9 million United States dollars, representing 12 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Verification Mission to the period ending 30 June 1997 and from the inception of the Observer Mission to the period ending 30 June 1999, notes that some 6 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Verification Mission and the Observer Mission in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the liquidation of the Observer Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

Procurement procedures

The Secretary-General, in a June report [A/53/1018] submitted in response to General Assembly resolutions 52/8 C [YUN 1998, p. 123] and 53/211 [ibid., p. 125], commented on measures taken by the United Nations to address the issues, observations and recommendations contained in a 1998 OIOS report on audits of the procurement process in UNAVEM [ibid., p. 123].

The Secretary-General concurred with the OIOS findings that there were serious management deficiencies and apparent breaches of financial regulations and rules, as well as improprieties and irregularities in the procurement process, which in some cases resulted in significant losses to the Organization and might have fostered fraud and financial abuse. Nevertheless, no evidence of fraud or financial abuse had been established in the ensuing investigations. As a result of the investigations, the procurement section of the Mission was reorganized and personnel replaced and all peacekeeping missions were given guidance on reviewing requisitions. The Procurement Manual was updated and made available to the field missions on the Internet. More training of procurement officers was offered, with emphasis on the need to strengthen internal controls over the procurement and finance processes in the field.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 October [meeting 43], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/504], adopted resolution 54/17 A without vote [agenda item 129].

Financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission and the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/8 A of 31 October 1997, 52/8 C of 26 June 1998, 53/211 of 18 December 1998 and 53/228 of 8 June 1999,

Regretting the delay in the submission of the report of the Secretary-General requested in the aforementioned resolutions,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the findings, observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on the audits of the procurement process in the United Nations Angola Verification Mission;

2. Notes with concern that one of the recommendations of the Office of Internal Oversight Services was based on incomplete information provided to the Office;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to examine carefully the internal audit recommendations before taking remedial action;

4. Expresses concern over the lack of a consistent policy for the implementation of audit recommendations in respect of cases of fraud and financial abuse;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that audit recommendations in respect of cases of fraud and financial abuse are implemented in a consistent manner throughout the Secretariat;

6. Calls for further efforts to provide proper training and guidance to procurement officers in the field, especially in view of the expansion of United Nations peacekeeping activities;

7. Looks forward to the report of the Secretary-General on the procurement of goods for quartering areas of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission;

8. Calls upon the Secretary-General to provide additional information on the measures being taken by the Secretariat further to improve procurement activities in the field and to enhance control and accountability, within the context of the report on management irregularities causing financial losses to the Organization, as requested by the General Assembly in its resolution 53/225 of 8 June 1999, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly, prior to the second part of its resumed fifty-fourth session, providing a concrete plan to correct procurement-related problems in peacekeeping operations, which should include the following:

(a) All remedial measures taken to address problems identified with regard to the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola and other peacekeeping operations;

(b) Standardization of the corrective measures that have already been taken for all existing and future peacekeeping operations;

(c) A description of how accountability was pursued in the cases of individuals who were found to have engaged in fraud, mismanagement or abuse, and how accountability measures will be applied in the future.

The Assembly, on 23 December, decided that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the agenda item on the financing of UNAVEM and MONUA at the Assembly's resumed fifty-fourth session in 2000 (decision 54/462 A).

By decision 54/465 of the same date, the Assembly decided that the agenda item would remain for consideration during its fifty-fourth session.

OIOS report. In November [A/54/548], OIOS issued a report on the investigation into the procurement of quartering area goods in UNAVEM. A $6.9 million contract was awarded to a local trading company, based on a four-week delivery schedule. The award was part of a tender exercise conducted in May 1995, in which six other vendors were also awarded smaller contracts. The investigation determined that planning for the tender exercise was inadequate, and that the procurement processes of the Mission were flawed. In addition, the local trading company failed repeatedly to meet crucial deadlines, objected to provisions that would hold it accountable, and provided goods, most notably tents, that failed to meet specifications and required additional material and work to make them usable. The quartering area project was a critical component of the peace process under the Lusaka Protocol, which called for the establishment of quartering areas in Angola for the purpose of demobilization of combatants. Problems encountered were a lack of a budget for eight months after the signing of the Protocol, limited planning, non-implementation of recommendations of the Headquarters Committee on Contracts, deficiencies in the invitation to bid and the selection process, and the delayed decision over whether the procurement would be at UN

Headquarters or at the Mission site. Despite delays, the demobilization did occur through the efforts of Mission staff. The evidence did not support a finding that Mission staff personally benefited or sought to wilfully mislead UN Headquarters, or that there was actual financial loss.

In the light of its findings, OIOS made the following recommendations, with which the Secretary-General concurred: (1) when exigent procurement was required, such procurement action could and should be initiated, even in the absence of budgetary provision, to an extent just short of that which financially obligated the Organization; (2) institutionally sanctioned mechanisms should be developed to avoid procurement problems, including special procedures for procurement under emergency situations; (3) the Office of Legal Affairs should review the UNAVEM case to determine if the local trading company or others managed by its directors should be precluded from conducting business with the United Nations; and (4) legal advisers in missions should be consulted for complicated and expensive procurement action.

Central African Republic

During 1999, the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic (MINURCA) made a significant contribution towards restoring and consolidating peace in the country. Progress towards implementing the 1997 Bangui Agreements [YUN 1997, p.91] was achieved with the holding of the presidential elections in September. In January, President Ange-Félix Patassé requested the extension of MINURCA until after the presidential elections. On the recommendation of the Secretary-General, the Security Council extended MINURCA's mandate in February and again in October until 15 February 2000.

Various aspects of the situation in the Central African Republic complicated the transition to post-conflict peace-building, including the tense political climate, challenges regarding the results of the presidential elections, accusations of acquisition of weapons and recruitment of militias by political leaders, the condition of the military, which was still capable of destabilizing the political and security environment, the need for economic and social reform, and the security situation in the region. The Secretary-General, in October, recommended a short but gradual transition from UN peacekeeping involvement to post-conflict peace-building. During the transition period, MINURCA would continue to discharge its security functions in Bangui, which it would gradually hand over to local security and law enforcement forces. At the end of the year, the Secretary-General proposed the establishment of the United Nations Peace-Building Support Office in the Central African Republic. That small political office would be established after the end of the political presence of MINURCA on 15 February 2000 with an initial duration of one year.

Political situation and MINURCA

Throughout 1999, the Secretary-General reported regularly to the Security Council on the activities of MINURCA and on the political situation in the country. Established by Council resolution 1159(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 134], MINURCA took over the functions of the Inter-African Mission to Monitor the Implementation of the Bangui Agreements (MISAB). The 1997 Bangui Agreements [YUN 1997, p. 91] aimed to bring about a comprehensive settlement of a crisis in the Central African Republic, which stemmed from an army rebellion that broke out in 1996, resulting in a large supply of weapons remaining in the hands of the ex-rebels and the militia.

Report of Secretary-General (January). In his fourth (29 January) report on MINURCA [S/1999/98], the Secretary-General described developments in the Central African Republic since his third report [YUN 1998, p. 140]. With regard to the legislative elections held on 22 November and 13 December 1998, he stated that the Mouvement présidentielle had won 54 seats, while the coalition of opposition parties won 55. However, following the formal proclamation of the results by the Constitutional Court, one opposition legislator announced his support for the Mouvement présidentielle, which then claimed a majority in the Assembly and the right to the presidency and other key positions. In response to that development, the opposition parties walked out of the Assembly shortly after it convened on 4 January 1999. Roadblocks and barricades were set up in parts of Bangui, and MINURCA was placed on alert and increased its patrols until calm was restored. Despite intensive consultations with the parties conducted by the Secretary-General's Special Representative, Oluyemi Adeniji, the impasse persisted. In the meantime, President Patassé had nominated a Prime Minister and the Assembly had elected its President. Although the President initially announced the creation of a Government comprising 23 members, including four from the opposition, three of the opposition members had left the Government and were replaced by persons chosen by the President.

With regard to economic and financial reforms, the Secretary-General noted that the Government has not been able to meet a number of important obligations, including the regular payment of salaries, pensions and student bourses; the privatization of public enterprises, including the oil company PETROCA; and the maintenance of government revenues at an acceptable level. As a result, the International Monetary Fund (IMF) was not in a position to recommend the release of the second allocation of 6 billion CFA francs under the enhanced structural adjustment facility agreement.

In his third report to the Council, the Secretary-General had invited the Council to consider extending MINURCA's mandate until the presidential elections scheduled for the latter half of 1999. In order to address certain concerns raised by Council members and to assess more closely the situation on the ground, the Secretary-General sent Hedi Annabi, Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, as his Personal Envoy to the Central African Republic from 19 to 23 January 1999. Mr. Annabi was asked to make the following points to the Government: the impasse regarding the composition of the Bureau of the National Assembly should be resolved in a manner consistent with the Bangui Agreements; every effort should be made to implement the remaining provisions of those Agreements by moving forward with the restructuring of the armed forces; the Government should comply with the provision of its agreements with the international financial institutions, ensuring the regular payment of salaries and other commitments; and the country should on no account allow itself to be drawn into the conflict in the neighbouring DRC. Mr. Annabi made it clear to his interlocutors in the Central African Republic that the Council's response to the Secretary-General's proposal to extend MINURCA's mandate until the presidential elections would depend on concrete action to address those concerns. The President and other senior officials, stressing that they strongly supported MINURCA's continued presence, stated that the Government had tried to reach agreement with the opposition parties on the formation of a government; the restructuring of the armed forces was highly desirable but lack of funds had made it difficult to achieve; the Prime Minister would ensure that the Government met the obligations incumbent upon it with regard to the international financial institutions; and the Government had no intention of becoming involved in the Congolese conflict.

Annexed to the Secretary-General's report was a 23 January letter from President Patassé, in which he made a number of commitments in line with the concerns expressed by the Personal Envoy and the international financial institutions.

The Secretary-General observed that MINURCA remained a source of much-needed stability, both in the Central African Republic and in the subregion as a whole. He therefore remained convinced that MINURCA should stay in the Central African Republic until the presidential elections and indeed assist the Government in preparing and establishing a secure environment for those elections and monitor and verify their conduct. To that end, MINURCA's military component should be retained at its current strength of 1,350 military personnel and 25 civilian police advisers, supported by 179 international and local staff. The Secretary-General suggested that the Council decide on an initial extension for six months, until 31 August, subject to a further determination that the Government had made acceptable progress in carrying out the reforms outlined in President Patassé's letter.

Communications. The Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council a letter of 8 December 1998 from the President of the Central African Republic requesting the extension of the MINURCA mandate until the presidential elections [S/1999/116].

On 4 February [S/1999/121], he transmitted a letter from James D. Wolfensohn, President of the World Bank, in which he provided an assessment of the prospects of the Central African Republic's financial consolidation and economic reform programme being implemented with the Bretton Woods institutions and the link between the programme and the peacekeeping arrangements. He noted that security had improved, the first round of legislative elections had passed peacefully and the economic situation had stabilized. Should MINURCA forces withdraw, however, the prospects for continued economic improvement and security would weaken, especially when the task of restructuring the armed forces remained incomplete. He stated that the premature withdrawal of international support in any of the key areas could easily undermine and even reverse the fragile progress made so far. He asked the Secretary-General to consider those factors when preparing his recommendations to the Security Council.

In a 9 February letter [S/1999/132], the President of the Central African Republic requested the Council to extend MINURCA's mandate until the presidential elections. He described the state of the Government at the executive, jurisdictional and judicial and legislative levels. Enclosed with the letter were a press release on the National Assembly special session, held from 4 to 18 January, a list of parliamentary committees and their membership and a note on the progress of the structural adjustment programme.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (18 February)

On 18 February [meeting 3979], the Security Council, following consultations among its members, authorized the President to make statement S/PRST/1999/7 on its behalf:

The Security Council, noting the letter dated 9 February 1999 from the President of the Central African Republic to the President of the Council, notes with satisfaction the commitment expressed by the President of the Central African Republic to maintain peace in the Central African Republic through dialogue and consultation. In this context, it strongly reaffirms that the complete implementation of the Bangui Agreements and of the National Reconciliation Pact is essential to peace and national reconciliation in the Central African Republic.

The Council calls upon the Government of the Central African Republic to continue to take concrete steps to implement political, economic, social and security reforms as referred to in the report of the Secretary-General of 23 February 1998 and to fulfil the commitments expressed in the letters dated 8 January 1998 and of 23 January 1999 from the President of the Central African Republic to the Secretary-General. It recalls that the success, the future mandate and the ongoing presence of the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic are closely linked to the fulfilment of these commitments, in particular the immediate resumption of a constructive political dialogue.

The Council expresses its concern about the consequences that the current political tensions have for the stability and the functioning of the institutions of the Central African Republic. It reaffirms that the Government, the political leaders and the people of the Central African Republic bear the primary responsibility for national reconciliation, the maintenance of a stable and secure environment and the reconstruction of their country. It emphasizes the importance of continuing efforts in the Central African Republic to settle outstanding contentious issues peacefully and democratically in accordance with the Bangui Agreements. It stresses the need for both the "mouvance présidentielle" and the opposition parties to cooperate closely and work actively with the aim of achieving the political consensus indispensable to stability in the Central African Republic.

The Council considers that a smooth preparation of free and fair presidential elections, for which proper steps should be taken as soon as possible, requires a certain level of political consensus and the opening of a genuine dialogue between all the constituent parties of the National Assembly. It also considers that consensual preparation for the presidential elections can only reinforce the legitimacy of the next President of the Republic and also secure a sustainable civil peace. It fully supports the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in his call to the Central African political leaders and authorities to resolve the political impasse so the country can move forward, and welcomes the current efforts undertaken to this end.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Communication. By a 24 February letter [S/1999/200], the Central African Republic transmitted to the Security Council a press release issued the day before by the National Political Council of the Mouvement de liberation du peuple centrafricain, in which it stated its willingness to work with the opposition to ease the political tensions. It appealed to the opposition deputies to return to the hall of the National Assembly and to the Security Council to renew the mandate of MINURCA so that it could supervise the presidential elections.

On 26 February [meeting 3984], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1230 (1999). The draft text [S/1999/122] was submitted by Canada, Cote d'Ivoire, Egypt, France, Gabon, Japan, Kenya, Senegal, Togo and the United States.

Report of Secretary-General (April). In response to Security Council resolution 1230 (1999), the Secretary-General, on 14 April, submitted his fifth report on MINURCA and on developments in the Central African Republic [S/1999/416]. He stated that the opposition legislators had returned to the National Assembly on 2 March and their participation in the Assembly's seven standing commissions had helped to reduce tensions somewhat. Since then, the opposition had actively participated in elaborating several draft laws fundamental to the reform process. However, although some of the reforms the Government had pledged to make were being carried out, progress was slow.

Some of the reforms outlined in his report of 29 January that had been partially achieved were: the participation of the opposition in the National Assembly; the submission for adoption by the Assembly of draft laws on the restructuring of the armed forces; and some progress towards privatization. He urged further action to bring those issues to a satisfactory conclusion, especially the early adoption and speedy implementation of the draft laws on restructuring and the conclusion of the nationalization process in respect of the State oil company.

In response to the request made by the Council in its resolution 1230(1999), the Secretary-General noted the withdrawal of units of the presidential guard (Special Defence Force of the Republican Institutions (FORSDIR)) from road-block duties. However, complaints of their transgressions were still being received. He called on the Government to ensure the exclusion of FORSDIR from all police and law-and-order functions, which should be performed by the police. The latter were receiving human rights and other training from the civilian police component of MINURCA. MINURCA would also accelerate the selection of suitable personnel from the Central African armed forces and their training for election-related duties.

Some progress was made with respect to the presidential elections scheduled for August/September. The streamlined membership of the Mixed and Independent Electoral Commission (CEMI) was a positive development. However, the late start in inaugurating the new CEMI delayed decisions on funding, revision of the electoral register and practical and logistical preparations. The Secretary-General stated that there was urgent need for the Government and CEMI to advance their electoral plans as soon as possible, while ensuring full transparency. Objections had been expressed by the opposition concerning local control of CEMI by sous-préfets, who were considered loyal to the President.

In the economic sphere, the Secretary-General noted the steps taken towards the privatization of some State-run enterprises, the reorganization of the Finance Ministry, the restructuring of the banking sector and the efforts being made to improve the Government's revenue position in order to ensure the timely payment of wages and debt servicing. The World Bank and IMF would continue to monitor progress made and, pending the fulfilment of several conditions, would continue to offer support for economic programmes.

Report of Secretary-General (May). On 28 May, the Secretary-General submitted his sixth report [S/1999/621], pursuant to the Security Council's request in resolution 1230(1999) to review every 45 days MINURCA's mandate in the light of progress achieved towards implementation of commitments made by the President of the Central African Republic in his 23 January letter [S/1999/98].

Despite the impasse over the distribution of posts in its Bureau, the National Assembly had been functioning normally since the Secretary-General's April report and had taken action on the modification of the electoral code and the reform of the armed forces and the economy.

The political activity focused on the establishment, functioning and membership of CEMI, the inauguration of which had been seriously delayed as a result of a series of disagreements between the Mouvance présidentielle and the opposition. CEMI comprised 27 members, including 9 members each from the Mouvance présidentielle and the opposition, with other members representing government ministries and independents. Following objections by the opposition concerning the President's decision to entrust CEMI's administration in the provinces to the sous-préfets and interventions by MINURCA and the donor community in that regard, the President issued a decree establishing a control mechanism designed to ensure the impartial functioning of CEMI.

With regard to a UN presence in the Central African Republic following the withdrawal of MINURCA, the Secretary-General recommended, in general terms and subject to the results of the presidential election, the establishment of a small political office in Bangui to continue the work of post-conflict peace-building. The Secretary-General felt that it was premature to submit detailed recommendations but suggested that the possible functions of such an office could include: facilitating continued dialogue and reconciliation; supporting the strengthening of the democratization process; and mobilizing support for economic, social and security reforms.

With regard to the UN role in the presidential elections, the Secretary-General described plans made by MINURCA, including the re-establishment of its electoral unit with a staff of three. The Mission expected to establish eight permanent observation sites and two temporary sites throughout the country as bases for monitoring activities. The minimum number of long-term electoral observers required was 30. The deployment of 200 short-term observers was planned for an intensive observation of the polling period. The civilian observers would be deployed once the observation sites had been prepared and their security ensured. Additional specialists in logistics and communications were to be provided by Canada and Egypt. The Secretary-General envisaged that the existing authorized force structure of MINURCA of 1,350 military personnel would accommodate the additional specialists. However, he stated that he would not hesitate to request additional troops to restore the security of the Mission if he considered it to be at risk.

The Secretary-General observed that the security situation in the Central African Republic remained calm. However, following the agreement reached in Sirte, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, on 18 April, Chad had begun to withdraw its 2,000 troops from the northern part of the DRC. The withdrawal was closely monitored by MINURCA. As the Chadians withdrew, the Congolese rebels could advance directly across the river from Bangui and MINURCA was keeping a close eye on that situation.

The Secretary-General noted that, since his April report, the economic reform programme of the country had made major progress in several areas. The National Assembly had adopted a series of laws designed to promote economic and social reforms, particularly the law for the privatization of PETROCA. In the light of the overall improved performance in programme implementation, external support from the Bretton Woods institutions, the African Development Bank, the EU and other bilateral donors could follow. Nevertheless, efforts were needed to improve revenue collection.

Report of Secretary-General (July). On 15 July, the Secretary-General presented his seventh report [S/1999/788] on MINURCA's mandate in the light of progress achieved towards implementing the commitments made by the President of the Central African Republic in January. The report also provided an update on the presidential electoral preparations. The President had set the first round for 29 August; the second round, if necessary, would be held on 19 September.

The Secretary-General stated that there had been armed clashes and unrest in Bangui in June involving Chadian nationals. Following the intervention by elements of FORSDIR in an altercation in a cattle market between Chadian cattle herdsman and Central African citizens, at least five Chadians and one FORSDIR member were killed. Later, Central African students at the University of Bangui attacked Chadian students. There was also a riot when a Central African tried to rob a Chadian merchant. MINURCA troops were deployed to assist in those incidents. The Secretary-General's Special Representative raised with the Prime Minister and the President the issue of the President's commitment to restrict FORSDIR to its mandate, which did not include the maintenance of law and order. He called on the President to withdraw FORSDIR from Bangui airport and from border posts, and to prevent FORSDIR from performing law and order duties. President Patassé stated that he could not take any of those measures except at risk to his own safety.

As to electoral preparations, the Secretary-General said that CEMI had adopted a budget of 1.9 billion CFA francs (CFAF) (approximately $3 million). The Government had budgeted a sum of CFAF 1 billion, of which CFAF 500 million had been deposited into an escrow account from which CEMI could draw. UNDP had coordinated several meetings of donors at which the following pledges were made: Japan, CFAF 187 million (paid in full); United States, $120,000 (paid in full); EU, CFAF 450 million; UNDP, $200,000; and France, CFAF 300 million. Egypt donated two computers. The Secretary-General observed that there had been delays in CEMI's operations and that the election dates set could be met only if further delays were avoided.

The Secretary-General expressed concern at the sudden upsurge in tension in Bangui arising from the incidents involving the Chadian community and at the fact that parties preparing for the elections had begun to exchange mutual accusations and amass arms. Bearing in mind security considerations, including the flight of thousands of Congolese government troops into the country, the Secretary-General recommended increasing the strength of MINURCA through the deployment of an additional 148 troops, bringing the authorized total of the military component to 1,498 all ranks. That figure included the additional communications and logistical personnel essential to support the elections.

Regarding the restructuring of the armed forces, the Secretary-General noted that there were delays, as the legal aspects of the programme had still not been promulgated. There had been a lack of progress in confining FORSDIR to its statutory duties and the Secretary-General proposed that the Security Council consider additional steps to encourage President Patassé to fulfil the commitments he had made in that regard.

The Secretary-General welcomed the IMF decision to make available to the Central African Republic an additional 8.24 million special drawing rights (SDR) in the context of the mid-term review of the first annual enhanced structural adjustment facility (ESAF) arrangement. However, IMF's favourable review of the economic situation in the country had to be set against the additional arrears accumulated by the Government and the delays in implementing reforms.

Presidential elections

The first round of presidential elections was held on 19 September and the results were announced on 3 October. President Patassé received an absolute majority of 51.63 per cent of the vote, making it unnecessary to hold a second round of voting.

Report of the Secretary-General (October).

On 7 October, the Secretary-General submitted his eighth report on MINURCA and the situation in the Central African Republic [S/1999/1038]. He noted that the report's submission had been delayed due to the postponement of the first round of the presidential election to 19 September and the announcement of the results on 3 October, as well as the overall political and security situation in the country.

The Secretary-General stated that, since his previous report, events were dominated by the preparations for the presidential elections by CEMI, assisted by MINURCA, the electoral campaign and the elections themselves on 19 September. The postponements in the elections were due to defective lists of voters, lack of printed ballots and disruptions from opposition candidates. As the election date drew near, the political situation grew increasingly charged. Unsubstantiated accusations that MINURCA and the international community were less than impartial grew louder and MINURCA staff came under threat. Several clashes took place among militants of some political parties. Several opposition candidates campaigned for a further postponement of the elections and some stated that they would not accept a victory by President Patassé and would call for mass protests were he to be declared the winner. On 29 August, 10 candidates were duly registered and the election campaign took place over a two-week period, throughout which MINURCA provided technical advice, guarded sensitive electoral materials and maintained security at electoral sites. MINURCA was assisted by 360 Central African armed forces soldiers, made available by the Government with financial support from France. The concept of operations with regard to the deployment of long-term and short-term electoral observers described by the Secretary-General in his sixth report was followed. MINURCA also deployed the essential additional military personnel and equipment to support the elections. Canada provided 31 communications personnel and Egypt sent 91 logistic and medical personnel and 15 armoured personnel carriers.

MINURCA stepped up its information activities ahead of the election in order to sensitize the population to the electoral process and to explain the UN role in supporting CEMI. Radio MINURCA broadcast programmes on civil education and the role of the population in the election. Statements by the Secretary-General and the Security Council President were widely circulated before the elections.

Voter turnout on 19 September was estimated at close to 60 per cent. There were some technical problems owing to the shortage of ballot papers in Bangui and some provincial towns. MINURCA assisted CEMI in resupplying the ballot papers in the provincial towns concerned, where voting was extended to 22 and 23 September. There were a few isolated attempts to intimidate voters and disrupt the electoral process, which were quickly dealt with by local authorities. On 22 September, MINURCA observers and those of the Francophonie and the EU issued separate statements in which, while acknowledging some irregularities, they declared that the election had been conducted in a peaceful, transparent and credible atmosphere. On the same day, a group of local NGOs, which had also monitored the election, released a statement concurring with the positive conclusions of the international observers.

On 3 October, the President of the Constitutional Court announced the official results of the election, according to which President Patassé received an absolute majority of 51.63 per cent of the vote. He pronounced that President Patassé had been re-elected as President with a mandate of six years and that no second round of voting would be held. The Court did not accept the results from the extension of voting to 22 and 23 September that had occurred in a few areas. Overall turnout was 56.4 per cent.

With regard to human rights, MINURCA continued to receive reports of arbitrary detentions and ill-treatment of prisoners, and religious and ethnic tensions continued to surface. Some incidents of intimidation and harassment against the Muslim community were also reported. MINURCA implemented a broad programme of human rights training for 180 new police recruits. It also completed a specialized programme of training for 383 police officials.

The situation of refugees remained a matter of serious concern. More than 52,000 refugees of various nationalities were in the country, of whom more than 13,000 were from the DRC. Following the fall of Gbadolite to Congolese rebels, thousands of civilian and military refugees from the DRC started crossing to the Central African Republic and another influx occurred when Zongo, across the river from Bangui, fell to rebels on 30 July. The total influx into the Central African Republic reached about 20,000, including some 7,000 Congolese government troops. The presence of the refugees, particularly the soldiers, created burdens for the limited infrastructure and social amenities and also created fears that the election campaigns would be hampered. However, logistic support provided by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya enabled the repatriation of all Congolese military personnel to Kinshasa.

Regarding the economic situation, IMF approved the release of the second allocation of CFAF 7 billion under the ESAF agreement. In addition, China and Nigeria provided bilateral budget support to enable the Government to meet some of its obligations, such as its contractual payments to the Bretton Woods institutions, the payment of some salary arrears and payments to retiring soldiers. Although the Government did not lack the political will to institute the much-needed economic reforms, there was a need for further rigorous measures for greater transparency in the conduct of government operations. Prospective investors were waiting to make a proper evaluation of the political terrain before entering into economic cooperation. Progress was made in the area of privatization of government-owned enterprises: PETROCA had been liquidated and the privatization of the Union bancaire en Afrique centrale was proceeding well.

Regarding the restructuring and demobilization of the armed forces, the four bills that were adopted by the National Assembly were not promulgated into law by the President. He referred them to the Constitutional Court, which advised that several provisions in each of the laws violated the Constitution. A committee was established to incorporate the observations of the Court into amended draft bills for the consideration of the National Assembly. The Government, however, had begun to take first steps in the restructuring of the armed forces. It had earmarked funds to pay the salary arrears and other benefits of some 630 soldiers to be retired. To date, donors had made no commitments to provide the much-needed $3.1 million for the demobilization and reintegration of members of the armed forces. With regard to FORSDIR, there had been no change in its functions, despite several interventions by the Special Representative.

In response to resolution 1230(1999), the Secretary-General described various aspects of the situation in the Central African Republic that needed to be borne in mind in the context of a transition to post-conflict peace-building, including the tense political climate; the continuing challenge to the results of the presidential elections; accusations of acquisition of weapons and recruitment of militias by political leaders; the condition of the military, which was still capable of destabilizing the political and security environment; the need for economic and social reform; and the security situation in the region. He therefore recommended a short but gradual transition from UN peacekeeping involvement to post-conflict peace-building. During the transition period, MINURCA would continue to assist in the implementation of major reforms and promote national reconciliation. It would also facilitate, in coordination with relevant UN agencies and programmes and the Bretton Woods institutions, a smooth transformation from the current international involvement to post-conflict peace-building. The MINURCA military component would continue to discharge its security functions in Bangui, which it would gradually hand over to local security and law enforcement forces. The proposed transition would also allow MINURCA to complete a six-month training course for 180 local police.

During the transition, MINURCA would gradually reduce its military strength. A first batch of three infantry companies would depart in mid-December, with a second batch of two infantry companies and a logistic support element departing in January 2000. A third group, consisting of an infantry company, a light tank company and a medical unit, would then depart by 15 February 2000, leaving an element of 185 military personnel, which would be needed to provide security for UN personnel and protect its assets during the liquidation of MINURCA. During the transition period, the Mission's substantive and administrative personnel would also be reduced gradually, taking into account any requirements by a post-conflict peace-building presence. The Secretary-General intended to dispatch a small multidisciplinary mission to Bangui to finalize the possible mandate and requirements of a post-conflict peace-building presence of the United Nations in the country. The presence would take the form of a small political office, to be established after the end of the political presence of MINURCA on 15 February 2000.

The Secretary-General noted that the General Assembly, in resolution 53/238 (see p. 129), had appropriated $33.4 million for the operation of MINURCA for the period from 1 July to 15 November 1999 and its subsequent liquidation and administrative closing until 30 June 2000. He had obtained authorization from ACABQ to enter into commitments to incur additional expenditure in the amount of $6.7 million for the estimated costs associated with the supportive role that MINURCA played in the conduct of the presidential elections. As at 15 September, unpaid assessed contributions to the MINURCA special account amounted to $67.6 million. With regard to the trust fund for the support of activities of MINURCA, contributions as at 30 September totalled $0.87 million, with expenditures authorized in the full amount of contributions received.

Extension of Mission (October)

On 22 October [meeting 4056], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1271(1999). The draft [S/1999/1078] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic until 15 February 2000 with a view to ensuring a short and gradual transition from United Nations peacekeeping involvement in the Central African Republic to a post-conflict peace-building presence with the aid of the relevant United Nations agencies and programmes and of the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development;

9. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Later developments. Despite the confirmation by national and international observers that the 19 September presidential election in the Central African Republic was transparent and credible, the opposition lodged a petition with the Constitutional Court challenging the results. However, since the Court did not hand down a decision within 60 days of the filing of the petition, it seemed that the issues raised regarding the election could be regarded as closed [S/2000/24]. On 25 November, the National Assembly voted for the Government's programme of action, which included the restructuring of the security forces; creation of a multi-ethnic national security institution; expansion in the economic sector, particularly in agriculture, mining and tourism; and fiscal reforms, particularly in the area of revenue generation. In the spirit of national unity, the Prime Minister appointed several cabinet members from civil society and opposition parties. A number of provisions of the National Reconciliation Pact had been implemented, including the Family Code, the establishment of a National Population Commission, the independence of the judiciary and the privatization of public enterprises.

By mid-December, the first four UN infantry companies were repatriated from Bangui and, on 29 December, elements of the Central African gendarmerie, police and armed forces began to take over the duties previously carried out by MINURCA military contingents. The government authorities created a Mixed General Command comprising the police, gendarmerie and army elements to facilitate the transfer of security functions and to coordinate with MINURCA on relevant matters.

In the economic area, the World Bank approved a fiscal consolidation of SDR 144 million based on the progress in privatization and on the strong commitment to revenue generation.

Proposed mandate for BONUCA

In a 3 December letter [S/1999/1235], the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council, in response to resolution 1271(1999), his proposals regarding the maintenance of a UN presence in the Central African Republic following the withdrawal of MINURCA on 15 February 2000. His recommendations were based on the observations of the small multidisciplinary mission that visited Bangui from 15 to 19 November.

The primary mission of the post-MINURCA presence would be to support the Government's efforts to consolidate peace and national reconciliation, strengthen democratic institutions, and facilitate the mobilization of international political support and resources for national reconstruction and economic recovery.

The Secretary-General proposed the establishment of the United Nations Peace-Building Support Office in the Central African Republic (BONUCA). That Office, whose duration would initially be for one year, would be headed by a Representative of the Secretary-General at the D-2 level. In drawing up the budget for BONUCA, the Secretary-General intended to include provisions that would enable the Office to make modest contributions towards the development and implementation of some of the post-conflict peace-building functions under its purview, including those related to disarmament and the consolidation of the rule of law. Every effort would be made to ensure that BONUCA was operational on 15 February 2000.

On 10 December [S/1999/1236], the Security Council informed the Secretary-General that his proposal to establish BONUCA had been brought to the attention of its members.

Financing of MINURCA

The Secretary-General, in January [A/53/791], submitted to the General Assembly the financial performance report of MINURCA from 27 March to 30 June 1998. By resolution 52/249 [YUN 1998, p. 143], the Assembly had appropriated an amount of $18,560,600 gross ($18,335,500 net) for that period. Expenditures totalled $16,667,600 gross ($16,543,700 net), exclusive of budgeted voluntary contributions in kind in the amount of $916,900, which resulted in an unencumbered balance of $1,893,000 gross ($1,791,800 net). The unencumbered balance was attributable to delays in deploying military contingents and civilian police, international civilian vacancies and reduced requirements under operational costs.

In a May report [A/53/939], the Secretary-General presented the revised budget for MINURCA for the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, amounting to $65,863,850 gross ($64,678,250 net), inclusive of budgeted voluntary contributions in kind of $2,448,200, an increase of some 36 per cent in gross terms over resources provided for the period from 1 July 1998 to 28 February 1999. The proposed budget for the period 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 amounted to $32,167,200 gross ($31,372,000 net), inclusive of budgeted voluntary contributions in kind of $784,400.

Having considered those reports, ACABQ, in May [A/53/971], recommended that the Assembly appropriate and assess an additional amount of $31,382,800 gross ($30,587,600 net) for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 June [meeting 101], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/989], adopted resolution 53/238 without vote [agenda item 161].

Financing of the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1159(1998) of 27 March 1998, by which the Council decided to establish the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission, the latest of which was resolution 1230(1999) of 26 February 1999,

Recalling its resolution 52/249 of 26 June 1998 on the financing of the Mission,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic as at 30 April 1999, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 15.9 million United States dollars, representing 34 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Mission to the period ending 30 November 1998, notes that some 26 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

8. Approves, on an exceptional basis, the special arrangements for the Mission with regard to the application of article IV of the financial regulations of the United Nations, whereby appropriations required in respect of obligations owed to Governments providing contingents and/or logistic support for the Mission shall be retained beyond the period stipulated under financial regulations 4.3 and 4.4, as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

9. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic the amount of 34,309,800 dollars gross (33,860,700 dollars net) for the operation of the Mission in respect of the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, in addition to the amount of 29,105,850 dollars gross (28,369,350 dollars net) already appropriated under the terms of General Assembly resolution 52/249 and inclusive of the amount of 18,111,200 dollars gross (17,728,700 dollars net) authorized by the Advisory Committee under the terms of section IV of Assembly resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994;

10. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, taking into account the amount of 29,105,850 gross (28,369,350 dollars net) already apportioned under the terms of General Assembly resolution 52/249, to apportion among Member States the additional amount of 34,309,800 dollars gross (33,860,700 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of its resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1998 and 1999, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997;

Eritrea-Ethiopia

In 1999, the border dispute between Eritrea and Ethiopia, which broke out in May 1998, escalated into a full-scale war. Both countries accused each other of aggression and of violating an air strike moratorium.

The Security Council, in February, condemned the use of force by both parties and demanded an immediate halt in the hostilities, particularly air strikes. It urged all States to end immediately all arms sales to Eritrea and Ethiopia. OAU continued to take the lead in finding a solution to the conflict, with the support of the United Nations, the EU and the international community. In February, Eritrea accepted as the viable solution to the conflict the OAU Framework Agreement, which provided for the withdrawal of Eritrea from Badme and the restoration of Ethiopian civilian administration to the area. Ethiopia had already accepted the Agreement in 1998. Nevertheless, hostilities between the two countries continued throughout the year. The Security Council received frequent briefings on the situation in Eritrea and Ethiopia and OAU continued its peacemaking efforts.

Border dispute

Communications (January). In a 1 January press release transmitted to the Security Council President [S/1999/5], Ethiopia stated that since the Eritrean troops invaded Ethiopia in May 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 145], 338,318 persons had been forced from their homes. Ethiopia recalled that it had shown its commitment to find a peaceful resolution to the conflict and had accepted the proposals for a Framework Agreement put forward by OAU in November 1998 [ibid., p. 149] and endorsed by the United Nations and the EU, calling for the withdrawal of Eritrean forces from Badme, to the positions held before 6 May 1998. Eritrea had not accepted the Agreement but had proposed amendments that were not even discussed by OAU. On 6 January [S/1999/11], Ethiopia transmitted to the Council a statement by its Foreign Minister to members of the diplomatic community in Addis Ababa on Eritrea's aggression and rejection of the OAU peace proposal. He stated that the OAU Ambassadorial Committee formed to investigate the origins of the crisis had found Eritrea to be the aggressor. He accused Eritrea of two types of crime: invasion and occupation of Ethiopian territory on 12 May 1998; and disdain towards peacemaking efforts. He called on Eritrea to withdraw from occupied Ethiopian territories and for the restoration of the status quo ante and on the international community to put pressure on Eritrea so that the peace process might succeed.

Eritrea, in an 8 January press release [S/1999/21], addressed the Ethiopian Foreign Minister's allegations, stating that it had sought clarifications on a number of issues in the Framework Agreement but had not rejected it. Ethiopia had not accepted the Agreement in toto but an amended version or its own interpretation of key clauses. Eritrea denied that the OAU Ambassadorial Committee had proved Eritrean aggression or that Eritrea wanted to stop OAU from investigating who had administered Badme before 12 May 1998. Eritrea's reservations concerned the singular focus on Badme and the incidents of 6-12 May to the exclusion of preceding incidents of Ethiopian aggression and occupation. Eritrea accused Ethiopia of repeated acts of aggression against it; violation of basic principles of international law through illegal expulsion of Eritreans and confiscation of property; the detention in special concentration camps of thousands of Eritrean youths on the basis of their ethnicity; the use of force as a means of settling the border dispute; and the rejection of immediate cessation of hostilities.

Eritrea, in 12 and 15 January statements [S/1999/32, S/1999/43], reported on Ethiopia's alleged preparations for war and the death of Eritreans in Ethiopian detention camps. Eritrea stated that a binding agreement was needed on a cessation of all hostilities, including a total ban on air strikes. However, Ethiopia was opposed to such an agreement and had repeatedly declared its intent to launch war. Although Eritrea did not consider war as an option, it reserved its right to self-defence.

In a 13 January press release [S/1999/36], Ethiopia refuted Eritrea's allegation that Ethiopia was planning an attack. It noted that Eritrea was resorting to gimmicks to avoid responding to the OAU peace proposal and to the OAU request to withdraw from Ethiopian territory. Ethiopia accused Eritrea of embarking on a wave of shelling, specifically as the OAU Central Organ meeting in December 1998 approached, to provoke Ethiopia to a reaction.

Germany forwarded a 15 January statement by the EU Presidency [S/1999/63] reiterating its full support for OAU's Framework Agreement and for OAU's ongoing commitment to mediate in the conflict between Eritrea and Ethiopia. The EU urged both countries to cooperate fully with the OAU mediation and renew their efforts to achieve a peaceful negotiated settlement. Both parties were called on to refrain from any military action and to work for a de-escalation of the conflict, including measures to improve the humanitarian situation.

In a 25 January press release [S/1999/70], Ethiopia stated that it found encouraging the latest efforts by the international community to put pressure on Eritrea to implement the OAU peace proposal. However, the issue was Eritrea's withdrawal from Ethiopian territory. It stated that Eritrea was not awaiting clarification on the OAU proposal but was preparing, under the pretext of an allegedly Ethiopian-initiated resumption of the war, to continue as aggressor in the conflict. Ethiopia called for the international community to apply pressure on Eritrea in the political, diplomatic and economic areas.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 January [meeting 3973], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1226(1999). The draft text [S/1999/90] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 1177(1998) of 26 June 1998,

Expressing grave concern over the risk of armed conflict between Ethiopia and Eritrea and the escalating arms build-up along the common border between the two countries,

Noting that armed conflict between Ethiopia and Eritrea would have a devastating effect on the peoples of the two countries and the region as a whole,

Recognizing that the rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts of both the Ethiopian and Eritrean Governments during the last eight years have given hope to the rest of the continent, all of which would be put at risk by armed conflict,

Commending the efforts of concerned countries and regional bodies aimed at facilitating a peaceful solution to the border dispute between Ethiopia and Eritrea,

1. Expresses its strong support for the mediation efforts of the Organization of African Unity and for the Framework Agreement as approved on 17 December 1998 by the Summit of the Central Organ of the Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution of the Organization of African Unity, and affirms that the Framework Agreement provides the best hope for peace between the two parties;

2. Endorses the decision by the Secretary-General to send his Special Envoy for Africa to the region in support of the efforts of the Organization of African Unity;

3. Stresses that it is of primary importance that the Framework Agreement be accepted, and calls for cooperation with the Organization of African Unity and full implementation of the Framework Agreement without delay;

4. Welcomes the acceptance by Ethiopia of the Framework Agreement;

5. Welcomes Eritrea's engagement in the process undertaken by the Organization of African Unity, notes the fact that the Organization of African Unity has responded to Eritrea's request for clarifications of the Framework Agreement, and in this regard strongly urges Eritrea to accept the Framework Agreement as the basis for a peaceful resolution of the border dispute between Ethiopia and Eritrea without delay;

6. Calls upon both parties to work for a reduction in tensions by adopting policies leading to the restoration of confidence between the Governments and peoples of Ethiopia and Eritrea, including urgent measures to improve the humanitarian situation and respect for human rights;

7. Strongly urges Ethiopia and Eritrea to maintain their commitment to a peaceful resolution of the border dispute, and calls upon them in the strongest terms to exercise maximum restraint and to refrain from taking any military action;

8. Welcomes the Secretary-General's continued engagement in support of the peace process undertaken by the Organization of African Unity;

9. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Also on 29 January [S/1999/97], Eritrea transmitted a statement to the Council President regarding resolution 1226(1999). It accused Ethiopia not only of declaring war but of continuing to operate through a policy of threats of launching the war, diplomatic intimidation and engaging in a concerted campaign to solicit international blessing for the war that it intended to unleash. Eritrea reiterated that it did not believe in the logic of force or in the diplomacy of intimidation and renewed its call for the cessation of hostilities. It expressed dismay at the Council's disregard of the crimes of mass deportation, incarceration and expropriation of Eritreans and Ethiopians of Eritrean origin by Ethiopia, which had been corroborated by independent witnesses such as Amnesty International.

In a 29 January letter to the Security Council [S/1999/1021] and a 2 February press statement [S/1999/104], Ethiopia commented on resolution 1226(1999). It was encouraged by the Council's adoption of the resolution, which left no room for misinterpretation and did not reward aggression. Ethiopia was waiting for Eritrea's acceptance of the OAU peace proposal to ensure its implementation. It viewed the resolution as a step in the right direction for strengthening OAU's hand so that it could implement the peace proposal.

Outbreak of hostilities

In a 4 February press statement [S/1999/115], Ethiopia reported shelling by Eritrea at the Badme/Sheraro front within days of Eritrean President Isaias Afwerki's statement in which he insisted that Eritrea would not fire the first bullet. It accused Eritrea of renewing hostilities just as the international community was starting to apply increased pressure on the Government to accept the OAU Framework Agreement. It also stated that Eritrea was engaging in a propaganda campaign alleging that Ethiopia was launching an attack. Ethiopia urged the international community to see Eritrea's actions for what they were and apply more tangible pressure so that there might be a peaceful resolution to the conflict.

On 5 February [S/1999/119], Ethiopia issued a press release alleging that Eritrea had carried out an aerial bombing of a fuel depot and its surroundings in Adigrat, which, it stated, was a violation of the 1998 moratorium on air strikes brokered by the United States and agreed to by Eritrea and Ethiopia [YUN 1998, p. 146]. Eritrea's bombing of Adigrat, especially during the time the UN Special Envoy was in the region to support OAU's peace proposal, showed that it did not have any intention of pursuing a peaceful resolution to the conflict.

In a press statement of the same date [S/1999/117], Eritrea denied Ethiopia's charges that Eritrea had launched an air attack and stated that Ethiopia was concocting stories as it was planning to launch a full-scale war against Eritrea. It countered that Ethiopia had opened a new front in central Eritrea by deploying 55,000 troops, while claiming that Eritrea had deployed troops on the Tsorona front. Eritrea stated that Ethiopia, rather than informing the United States as broker of the air strikes moratorium of its real intention, preferred to fabricate a story. Eritrea remained on record as calling for an immediate cessation of all hostilities.

Burkina Faso transmitted to the Security Council a 6 February statement by OAU's current Chairman [S/1999/126] expressing deep concern about the deterioration in the situation along the borders of Ethiopia and Eritrea. The Chairman observed that it would be extremely unfortunate if the situation were to get out of control while OAU, with the assistance of the United Nations and the international community, was pursuing efforts to find a peaceful settlement. The Chairman reiterated to both parties the appeal that the fourth summit meeting of the Central Organ made to them in Ouagadougou in December 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 149] to continue to cooperate with the OAU High-level Delegation and create the necessary conditions for the rapid implementation of the Framework Agreement and to continue to exercise restraint. Both countries were urged to put an immediate and unconditional end to the hostilities that had resumed along their borders.

Eritrea, on 8 February [S/1999/128], expressed disappointment about what it called the international impunity that was encouraging Ethiopia to indulge in dangerous military adventures. It claimed that Ethiopia continued to use force to violate Eritrean sovereignty and grab Eritrean territory. It reported that Ethiopia, after a long lull, had launched a renewed offensive on 5 February; had issued a new map of a "greater Tigray", illegally redrawing the international boundary between Eritrea and Ethiopia that was based on established colonial treaties; resorted to the repeated use of force; escalated the conflict by launching the first air strike on 5 June 1998; continued to perpetrate unparalleled violations of the human rights of innocent Eritreans; announced its intention of solving the dispute militarily; unleashed the war that it had been threatening all along; and violated the air moratorium by employing its air force in its ongoing offensive. Eritrea accused the international community of maintaining an unbalanced stance. To expedite an early resolution to the conflict, it called on the international community to abandon its double standard by condemning Ethiopia for its continued use of force.

Ethiopia transmitted to the Council an 8 February statement by the OAU Secretary-General [S/1999/131], in which he reiterated his deep concern at the escalation of the conflict and urged both Eritrea and Ethiopia immediately to put an end to the fighting and recommit themselves to a peaceful solution to the dispute. He emphasized that the Framework Agreement, endorsed by the OAU Central Organ and supported by the United Nations and the international community, remained a viable and sound framework for a peaceful solution. He repeated that OAU and its High-level Delegation remained available to engage the parties to the dispute and awaited Eritrea's response to the clarifications OAU had provided on elements of the Agreement.

In a 10 February statement [S/1999/134], Ethiopia stated that it had always cooperated with the third parties that had made their good offices available in order to avert escalation of the crisis between it and Eritrea. Ethiopia had accepted the peace plan put forward by the United States and Rwanda in June 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 147] and the OAU Framework Agreement, while Eritrea had always rejected them. It alleged that the final Eritrean response to the OAU peace plan came on 6 February 1999 after it had violated the air strike moratorium, when it mounted a large-scale military offensive on the Badme-Shiraro front, imposing war on Ethiopia. Thus, Ethiopia had only one option, which was to exercise its right of self-defence under Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations. Ethiopia called on the international community to prevail upon Eritrea to accept and implement the OAU Framework Agreement.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 10 February [meeting 3975], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1227 (1999). The draft [S/1999/133] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 1177(1998) of 26 June 1998 and 1226(1999) of 29 January 1999,

Expressing its grave concern regarding the border conflict between Ethiopia and Eritrea and the resumption of hostilities between the parties,

Recalling the commitment of Ethiopia and Eritrea to a moratorium on the threat of and use of air strikes,

Stressing that the situation between Ethiopia and Eritrea constitutes a threat to peace and security,

1. Condemns the recourse to the use of force by Ethiopia and Eritrea;

2. Demands an immediate halt to the hostilities, in particular the use of air strikes;

3. Also demands that Ethiopia and Eritrea resume diplomatic efforts to find a peaceful resolution to the conflict;

4. Stresses that the Framework Agreement as approved on 17 December 1998 by the Summit of the Central Organ of the Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution of the Organization of African Unity remains a viable and sound basis for a peaceful resolution of the conflict;

5. Expresses its full support for the efforts of the Organization of African Unity, the Secretary-General and his Special Envoy for Africa, and concerned Member States to find a peaceful resolution to the present hostilities;

6. Calls upon Ethiopia and Eritrea to ensure the safety of the civilian population and respect for human rights and international humanitarian law;

7. Strongly urges all States to end immediately all sales of arms and munitions to Ethiopia and Eritrea;

8. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Both Eritrea and Ethiopia made statements to the Council, which they transmitted by letter to the Council President.

In its statement [S/1999/140], Eritrea alleged that Ethiopia broke the de facto truce that had existed since June 1998 and restarted an all-out offensive against Eritrea. Eritrea summarized independent eyewitness reports stating that Ethiopia had expended an estimated $300 million on arms in order to retake the disputed border area of Badme. Eritrea expressed regret that the Council had not condemned Ethiopia for its irresponsible resort to force to solve a border conflict and allowed Ethiopia to wage war with impunity. It stated that Ethiopia alone bore full responsibility for the start and escalation of the conflict to a full-scale war and urged the Council to take note of that fact and to act appropriately.

Ethiopia, in its statement [S/1999/162], said that Eritrea had never engaged constructively in resolving the crisis peacefully but had carried out provocative military actions to create an atmosphere of general crisis and to divert the attention of the international community from addressing the core issue, namely, Eritrean withdrawal from Ethiopian territory. The Ethiopian Government had no option but to exercise its legitimate right of self-defence in the light of those developments. Ethiopia placed on record its strong reservation in respect of paragraph 7 of resolution 1227(1999).

Communications. On 11 February [S/1999/143], Eritrea reaffirmed its commitment not to start war but it would exercise its legitimate right of self-defence in the face of aggression. It further stated that it had not conducted any air strikes violating the moratorium, nor had it committed any human rights violations. It was disappointed that the Security Council had not addressed the human rights issue. Eritrea also expressed astonishment that the Council had taken the unprecedented step of embargoing the sales of arms in this case, as it had never embargoed the sale of arms to States that were a cause of regional instability and insecurity.

In a 15 February press release [S/1999/154], Ethiopia expressed disappointment at the Council's double standard as reflected in paragraph 7 of resolution 1227(1999). It emphasized that the aggressor in the conflict was Eritrea and that the Council's adoption of the resolution was a sudden turnaround that signalled denial to the victim of the aggression of its rights of self-defence.

The EU, in an 11 February statement [S/1999/159], noted with dismay the recent outbreak of open war between Ethiopia and Eritrea, condemned the use of force by the two countries and urged them to respect the air strike moratorium. It expressed its support for resolution 1227(1999), particularly paragraph 7, and called on the two sides to agree unilaterally to a cessation of hostilities. The EU stood ready to provide assistance and dispatch a special troika mission to promote a rapid solution to the conflict based on the OAU Framework Agreement.

On 16 February [S/1999/157], Eritrea asserted that the Ethiopian regime opposed an arms embargo because of its desire to occupy Eritrean territory by force and purchase weapons. Over the preceding eight months, Ethiopia had spent an estimated $400 million on weapons, even as it was soliciting food aid from the World Food Programme (WFP) in the amount of $100 million. Eritrea accused Ethiopia of further attacks on 14 and 15 February on the Burie front, on which Ethiopia had no territorial claims.

In other communications to the Council in February, Eritrea [S/1999/188] and Ethiopia [S/1999/192] again exchanged charges, each accusing the other of aggression and pursuing the escalation of the conflict.

Eritrean acceptance of Framework Agreement

In identical letters of 27 February to the Secretary-General and the Security Council [S/1999/215], Eritrea indicated its acceptance of the OAU Framework Agreement. It called on the Council to condemn Ethiopia's territorial ambitions and aggression, ensure the implementation of its relevant resolutions and ensure that observers were sent to verify facts on the ground and facilitate demarcation of the border.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council, on 27 February [meeting 3985], following consultations among its members, authorized its President to make statement S/PRST/1999/9 on its behalf:

The Security Council reaffirms its resolutions 1177(1998) of 26 June 1998, 1226(1999) of 29 January 1999 and 1227(1999) of 10 February 1999, which called upon Ethiopia and Eritrea to refrain from armed conflict and to accept and implement the Framework Agreement as approved on 17 December 1998 by the Summit of the Central Organ of the Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution of the Organization of African Unity.

The Council demands an immediate halt to all hostilities and calls upon the parties to refrain from the further use of force.

The Council welcomes the acceptance by Eritrea, at the level of head of State, of the Framework Agreement and recalls the prior acceptance of the Agreement by Ethiopia. The Framework Agreement remains a viable and sound basis for a peaceful resolution of the conflict.

The Council reaffirms the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Ethiopia and Eritrea.

The Council expresses its willingness to consider all appropriate support to implement a peace agreement between the two parties.

The Council expresses its continuing support for the efforts of the Organization of African Unity, the Secretary-General and his Special Envoy, Mr. Mohammed Sahnoun, and concerned Member States to find a peaceful resolution to the border dispute.

The Council remains actively seized of the matter.

In a 28 February letter [S/1999/221], the OAU Chairman and its Secretary-General welcomed Eritrea's acceptance of the Framework Agreement, which, they felt, presented a fair, balanced and sound basis to end the dispute. They urged an immediate end to the fighting so that the modalities for a peaceful resolution in accordance with the Framework Agreement could be pursued.

In a 2 March statement [S/1999/239], the EU also welcomed Eritrea's acceptance of the Framework Agreement and considered the OAU proposal to be the only basis for a peaceful solution, as the EU ministerial troika that visited Addis Ababa and Asmara on 19 and 20 February had concluded. The EU urged both parties immediately to cease hostilities on all fronts, to refrain from any further use of violence and to implement the Framework Agreement without any further delay.

On 5 March [S/1999/241], during discussions with an OAU delegation, Eritrea reaffirmed its acceptance of the Framework Agreement; committed itself to an immediate ceasefire and cessation of hostilities; and stated that it had established a high-level body fully mandated to initiate and finalize the implementation of the Agreement's provisions.

Communications (March-May). On 1 March [S/1999/226], Ethiopia transmitted to the Security Council a resolution adopted by the House of People's Representatives on the war of aggression by Eritrea against Ethiopia and on Council resolution 1227(1999). Expressing its deep anguish at that resolution, particularly paragraph 7, the House appealed to the Council to redress the injustice done to Ethiopia and take appropriate measures against Eritrea.

In a 6 March statement marking 300 days of Eritrean occupation [S/1999/249], Ethiopia said that, although it had pushed the Eritrean military out of Badme, Eritrean troops continued to occupy Ethiopian territory in the Zalambessa-Aiga, Bada-Bure and Egala regions.

Also on 6 March [S/1999/246], Ethiopia's Prime Minister, Meles Zenawi, expressed his frustration regarding the treatment Ethiopia had received from the Council, which had, it said, placed the victim of aggression and the aggressor on the same footing. After continuous pleadings to the Council to ensure the withdrawal of Eritrean troops from its territory, Ethiopia had itself liberated the Badme area from Eritrean occupation. The Eritrean acceptance of the Framework Agreement was a tactical ploy to buy time, he charged. Large chunks of Ethiopian territory still remained under Eritrean occupation. The Prime Minister asked the Council to condemn the Eritrean aggression, call on Eritrean occupying forces to withdraw from all remaining occupied Ethiopian territory, and affirm that Eritrea bore full responsibility for the loss of lives, the humanitarian crisis and the destruction of property.

On 12 March [S/1999/274], Eritrea transmitted to the Security Council OAU's written clarification to the issues it had raised on 12 December 1998 regarding the Framework Agreement, prior to the meeting of the OAU Central Organ. While it was studying the clarifications, received on 26 January, the process was cut short by Ethiopia's launch of an all-out offensive on 6 February. Eritrea drew the Council's attention to the clarity of OAU's answers to the issues of the "environs" of Badme and redeployment, and concluded that, since Ethiopia had not raised any questions about the clarifications, it was in agreement with them.

In further communications during March [S/1999/247, 250, 258, 259, 260, 269, 273], Eritrea and Ethiopia continued to exchange charges, each accusing the other of prevaricating on the acceptance and implementation of the OAU Framework Agreement and the violation of Security Council resolutions.

On 15 April [S/1999/427], Eritrea forwarded a press release to the Council on the Ethiopian bombing of the town of Adi-Kaieh, the environs of Mendefera and the village of Forto, during which a school had been hit and children wounded.

In a 26 April press release [S/1999/482], Eritrea reaffirmed its strict adherence to the Framework Agreement and its readiness to implement it. Eritrea had informed the Secretary-General's Special Envoy, Mohamed Sahnoun, that the Government stood ready to play its role within the Follow-up Committee to be established by OAU, with the active participation and assistance of the United Nations.

In a 12 May press release [S/1999/550], Eritrea stated that it had reiterated to the OAU High-level Delegation that visited Asmara on 11 May its adherence to the Framework Agreement. Eritrea called for both parties to sign formal and binding agreements, confirming acceptance of the Agreement, concerning the "mechanisms" and "technicalities" of implementation, and on a ceasefire so as to create a climate conducive for implementation. Eritrea also urged the OAU delegation to ensure that Ethiopia's illegal expulsion of Eritrea's Ambassador to OAU would be rectified.

In a 14 May statement [S/1999/561], Ethiopia said that it had reiterated to the OAU High-level Delegation that visited Addis Ababa on 13 May its commitment to the Framework Agreement, which called on Eritrea to withdraw from all occupied Ethiopian territories.

Security Council press statement (19 May). Following informal consultations on 19 May, the members of the Security Council issued a press statement in which they welcomed Mr. Sahnoun's recent visit to the region and reaffirmed their support for the Secretary-General's efforts, in coordination with OAU, to promote a peaceful solution to the conflict. They urged both parties to comply immediately and in full with resolution 1227(1999) and appealed to them for an end to inflammatory rhetoric. They also expressed concern about the humanitarian situation.

Communications (June). In a 14 June letter [S/1999/678], the Ethiopian Minister for Foreign Affairs expressed his fear that the Security Council and the international community had missed an important opportunity to contribute towards the fair settlement of the conflict. The reasons were lack of political support for the OAU High-level Delegation; the differing interpretations of the Framework Agreement, particularly what was meant by "Badme and its environs"; the absence of resolve to call on Eritrea to withdraw from all the territories it occupied by force, not only Badme; the lack of readiness of the Eritrean regime to reverse its aggression; and the Council's complete abdication of responsibility and attempts to appease Eritrea. Ethiopia particularly deplored the fact that the 19 May press statement was devoid of any reference to the need for Eritrea to heed the voice of OAU and concluded that the Framework Agreement was a peace document to which only lip service was given.

Responding on 17 June [S/1999/696], the Eritrean Minister for Foreign Affairs stated that Ethiopia had reneged on its earlier commitment to the Framework Agreement by putting forth new preconditions. Not only was that Agreement unambiguous in terms of redeployment of troops, it also provided for the determination of the origin of the crisis "through an investigation that will be carried out on the incidents of 6 May 1998 and on any other incident prior to that date . . . including the incidents of July-August 1997". Eritrea charged Ethiopia with wanting to be exonerated from the acts of aggression that it had perpetrated in the preceding years and to legitimize the Eritrean territories that it had occupied in the process. It stated that, with regard to international law, the status quo in Africa was anchored in the respect of the boundaries inherited from colonial rule, the sacrosanct OAU principle governing the behaviour of neighbouring countries, and Ethiopia violated that principle. Eritrea also accused Ethiopia not only of violating the moratorium on air strikes but also of deporting about 60,000 Eritreans and Ethiopians of Eritrean origin in the most inhuman manner and of confiscating their lifelong earnings.

Security Council press statement (23 June). Following consultations on 23 June, the Security Council members issued a press statement on the conflict between Ethiopia and Eritrea, in which they deplored the continuing hostilities and demanded that both parties immediately and unconditionally agree to a ceasefire. The parties were called on to cooperate with the OAU High-level Delegation in implementing the Framework Agreement. The Council expressed concern that both parties continued to purchase weapons when a large number of their populations faced famine and urged all States to halt immediately the sale of arms and munitions to Ethiopia and Eritrea. To permit the provision of assistance to the local population, the Council requested both countries to grant humanitarian access to areas of military conflict.

On 24 June [S/1999/712], Eritrea, in response to the Council's press statement, emphasized that it had not initiated the hostilities with Ethiopia and again announced its readiness to implement the Framework Agreement. Ethiopia, on 29 June [S/1999/731], stated that it had been disappointed for some time by the Council's reaction to Eritrean aggression, which had failed to reflect any sympathy for the victim. The Council now chose to remind Ethiopia of its responsibility for feeding its people.

Communication (July). In a 3 July press release [A/53/1012-S/1999/755], Eritrea accused Ethiopia of violating the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations [YUN 1961, p. 512] and the various agreements between OAU and Ethiopia as host country. It said Ethiopia had expelled all Eritrean diplomatic and technical staff in June 1998; deported all local staff; denied the Eritrean Ambassador and his deputy freedom of movement; declared Eritrea's Permanent Representative to OAU persona non grata, ordered him to leave the country within 24 hours and confiscated documents of the mission; and sent to the Ambassador's residence armed agents who ransacked it and took Embassy employees away.

Modalities for implementation of Framework Agreement

In a 15 July statement [S/1999/789], Ethiopia stated that the thirty-fifth session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU (Algiers, Algeria, 12-14 July) had unanimously endorsed the Modalities for the Implementation of the OAU Framework Agreement. The substance of the Modalities was the call for the return to the status quo ante that had prevailed until 6 May 1998. Ethiopia accused Eritrea of removing the substance of the proposal by trying to amend it and then saying that it accepted it. Eritrea had told the Algiers summit that it had a different cut-off date for return to the status quo ante—not 6 May 1998 but July 1997—and claimed that facts to corroborate its position had been submitted to the High-level Delegation. Another amendment was a demand for compensation for an alleged 56 villages that had been uprooted and for Eritrean urban deportees. Those amendments were presented after the Modalities had been endorsed by the summit by acclamation. Ethiopia concluded that Eritrea had not accepted the Modalities and called on the international community not to tolerate Eritrea's prevarications.

On 16 July [S/1999/794], Eritrea transmitted to the Security Council its President's speech to the Algiers summit on 14 July, its President's letter to the OAU Chairman formally accepting the Modalities, and the Modalities.

On 23 July [S/1999/820], Finland transmitted to the Secretary-General a 21 July statement in which the EU welcomed the decision of the Algiers summit to approve the Modalities and reiterated its support to the Framework Agreement and the Modalities. The EU also urged Ethiopia and Eritrea to subscribe immediately to the Modalities, end all hostilities, proceed to the signature of a ceasefire agreement and fully implement the Framework Agreement.

Eritrea, in an 8 August press release [S/1999/857], officially accepted the OAU proposal on Technical Arrangements, which were worked out by technical experts from OAU, the United Nations, Algeria and the United States. On 6 September [S/1999/948], Eritrea reported that Ethiopia had formally rejected the Technical Arrangements.

Ethiopia transmitted to the Security Council a 4 September statement by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs [S/1999/949], which claimed that the Technical Arrangements were inconsistent with the Framework Agreement and its Modalities. Ethiopia stated that new provisions related to a peacekeeping mission were contained in the Technical Arrangements, and matters involving sovereignty and governance in the areas of redeployment indicated that the return to the status quo ante was not fully assured. It sought clarifications from OAU.

In statements of 14 September and 11 and 30 October [S/1999/973, S/1999/1045, S/1999/1108], Ethiopia stated that it was the victim of aggression and, if the return of all its territories and a full and unequivocal return to the status quo ante were guaranteed, it would be ready to fulfil its obligations on the basis of the OAU peace proposals. However, it also stated that the Technical Arrangements failed to guarantee its fundamental principle, which was the unequivocal return to the status quo ante.

In a 5 November press release [S/1999/1140], Eritrea maintained that the restoration of the status quo ante was nothing more than respect of, and a reversion to, the colonial boundaries that the Ethiopian regime had violated. The primary aim of the OAU peace package was to ensure respect of colonial boundaries and hence restoration of the stable status quo ante through demarcation. Ethiopia was obstructing that by refusing to contemplate demarcation of the boundary in accordance with inherited and sacrosanct colonial boundaries. Interim redeployment of troops of both countries was not going to restore the status quo ante, but was necessary to create a climate conducive for demarcation. The peace package had detailed provisions for restoring the status quo ante by securing the cessation of hostilities and the placement of a peacekeeping mission to monitor interim redeployment of troops to guarantee the demarcation of the boundary.

In response, Ethiopia, on 9 November [S/1999/1147], asserted that the return to the status quo ante meant the redeployment of troops to the positions they occupied prior to 6 May 1998. The final status of the territories would later be determined through delimitation and demarcation (based on colonial treaties and applicable international law), processes that were completely separate from the restoration of the status quo ante.

In an 8 December press release [S/1999/1228], Eritrea reported that Ethiopia had formally rejected the peace package in its entirety, demanding that Eritrea declare its recognition of Ethiopian sovereignty over the "contested territories". Eritrea charged that the demand contravened the fundamental tenets of the Framework Agreement and the Modalities, which stated that the status of those territories should be determined through demarcation. In a 16 December statement [S/1999/1256], Eritrea said that Ethiopia would never contemplate peace unless it was arbitrarily awarded, prior to demarcation, all the sovereign Eritrean territories that it claimed.

Special Envoy

On 2 November [S/1999/1132], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that he had decided to extend the appointment of his Special Envoy in Africa, Mohamed Sahnoun (Algeria), who had been actively engaged in efforts to help resolve the conflict between Eritrea and Ethiopia. He had also decided to ask Mr.

Sahnoun to follow developments in other countries in the Horn of Africa, especially Somalia and the Sudan, and to represent him in meetings on the two countries of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development and its Partners Forum. On 5 November [S/1999/1133], the Council informed the Secretary-General that it took note of his decision.

Security in Horn of Africa

In a 14 May letter [S/1999/563], Ethiopia drew the Security Council's attention to eyewitness accounts of a large-scale military activity of destabilization by Eritrea in Somalia in support of one of the warring factions through shipments by air and sea of arms in violation of resolution 733(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 199]. It stated that Eritrea was organizing anti-Ethiopian terrorist groups from around the world for deployment in Somalia and along the common border between Ethiopia and Somalia. The Council was asked to condemn Eritrea's activities in Somalia and its violation of the embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Somalia.

In response, Eritrea, on 26 May [S/1999/611], said that it had no vested interest in destabilizing Somalia where it was working to promote national reconciliation without partiality towards selected factions. Eritrea charged Ethiopia with acts of aggression, human rights violations and incursions against neighbouring countries and with accusing its victims for the very transgressions that it was guilty of. It accused Ethiopia of several incursions into Somalia and of training and arming different warring factions under the pretext of containing "the threat from terrorist groups". Eritrea cited Ethiopian shipments of arms to Somalia in 1997, 1998 and 1999, with a policy of creating clan-based mini-States so that it could manipulate a weak and divided Somalia.

Djibouti, in a 24 May letter [S/1999/600], referred to reported and corroborated accounts of Eritrean weapons and personnel involvement in Somalia. It accused Eritrea of destabilizing neighbouring countries in general and Ethiopia in particular and of violating Council resolutions concerning the complete embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Somalia. It called on the Council to take urgent measures to thwart Eritrea's provocative and destabilizing activities in the region. In a 28 May letter [S/1999/622], Eritrea stated that its 26 May statement was an appropriate response to Djibouti's unfounded accusations, which echoed those of Ethiopia.

Germany transmitted to the Secretary-General an 18 June statement by the EU Presidency [S/1999/701] regarding the Ethiopian/

Eritrean intervention in Somalia. It expressed concern at the illicit delivery of weapons, military equipment and military assistance to factions and other groups in Somalia in violation of the arms embargo imposed by the Security Council. Aware of the security implications of the situation in Somalia for the countries in the region, the EU called on Ethiopia and Eritrea to stop military intervention in Somalia.

In response to the EU statement, Ethiopia, on 24 June [S/1999/713], asserted that the EU, rather than calling on Eritrea to withdraw its troops, preferred to put pressure on the victim of aggression, slowing down development cooperation and taking unprecedented positions at international financial forums to punish Ethiopia, which for many years had been striving to draw attention to the growing crisis in Somalia. It stated that it was public knowledge that Eritrea was supplying arms to a faction directly linked to terrorist groups based in Somalia. Ethiopia called on the EU to re-examine its position so as to make a constructive contribution to promoting peace in the Horn of Africa.

Human rights situation

Communications. Eritrea transmitted to the Secretary-General a 9 January press release concerning the deaths of Eritreans in Ethiopian detention camps [A/53/793-S/1999/34]. The press release also drew attention to the deportation of over 48,000 Eritreans from Ethiopia on the basis of their ethnicity and the confiscation of their property.

In a 14 February press release [A/53/839-S/1999/184], Eritrea claimed that Ethiopia had released 38 Eritrean exchange students who had been in prison camps for eight months. Some 1,500 Eritrean civilians remained in the camps and their death toll continued to rise.

In communications submitted to the Security Council and General Assembly in May, June, July and October [A/53/966-S/1999/578, A/53/997-S/1999/660, A/53/1013-S/1999/756, A/54/489-S/1999/1084], Eritrea accused Ethiopia of human rights violations of Eritreans and Ethiopians of Eritrean origin.

Independent investigations. On 29 January [A/53/814-S/1999/95], Eritrea transmitted to the Secretary-General an Amnesty International report concerning gross violations of the human rights of Eritreans and Ethiopians of Eritrean origin by the Ethiopian Government. Amnesty International representatives had visited Ethiopia in October 1998 and Eritrea in January 1999 to examine allegations from both sides of human rights abuses arising from the May 1998 conflict.

They had met government officials and interviewed returnees from both countries. The report stated that Ethiopia's policy of deporting people of Eritrean origin, which began after war broke out in May 1998, had developed into a systematic, country-wide operation to arrest and deport anyone of full or part Eritrean descent. A total of 52,000 Eritreans had been deported from Ethiopia since May 1998, 6,300 in January 1999. Ethiopia's Prime Minister had stated that the deportees posed a threat to national security and that they had forfeited their Ethiopian citizenship by voting in Eritrea's independence referendum in 1993.

At least 22,000 Ethiopians had returned to Ethiopia from Eritrea since May 1998. No evidence was found to support Ethiopia's allegations that 40,000 of its citizens had been seriously ill-treated and forcibly deported. Amnesty International reiterated its appeal to the Ethiopian Government to put an end to the deportations, ill-treatment of deportees and arbitrary detentions of thousands of Eritreans.

An International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) press release, transmitted to the Council by Ethiopia on 13 May [S/1999/558], reported that ICRC delegates had visited some 300 Eritrean prisoners of war between 17 and 19 April, registered them and interviewed them in private. ICRC continued regular visits to Bilate camp in Ethiopia to verify that living conditions were in keeping with international humanitarian law. It was still pursuing efforts to gain access to Ethiopian prisoners in Eritrea.

Guinea-Bissau

In 1999, further progress was made in the implementation of the 1998 Abuja Agreement on Guinea-Bissau, which ended an armed conflict between forces supporting President Joao Bernardo Vieira and his former Army Chief of Staff, General Ansoumane Mane.

On 8 January 1999, an interim Government of National Unity led by Prime Minister Francisco Fadul was appointed but, largely due to logistical and financial difficulties, the date of the elections was postponed to 28 November. Following a resumption of fighting on 31 January, President Vieira and General Mane, on 3 February in Bissau, signed a new ceasefire agreement. Subsequently, foreign troops were withdrawn and the interposition force of the ECOWAS Monitoring Group (ECOMOG) was deployed. To assist Guinea-Bissau in its peace-building efforts, the Secretary-General, at the request of the interim Government, established in March the United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Guinea-Bissau, the main tasks of which were to promote national reconciliation and assist with the organization of the elections.

The peace process suffered a setback on 7 May when President Vieira was forcibly removed from office by the military junta led by General Mane and ECOWAS withdrew the interposition force. Nevertheless, legislative and presidential elections were held, as scheduled, on 28 November. The United Nations provided electoral assistance and coordinated international observation of the elections. As the first round of the presidential elections was inconclusive, the second round was scheduled for 16 January 2000.

Implementation of Abuja Agreement

Throughout the year, the Secretary-General reported on the situation in Guinea-Bissau, as requested by the Security Council, in particular on the implementation of the Abuja Agreement signed on 1 November 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 153] by President Vieira and General Mane.

The fighting had begun as a result of the President's dismissal of General Mane over allegations relating to arms smuggling to separatist rebels in Senegal. During the 1998 uprising, at President Vieira's request, Guinea and Senegal had sent troops to Guinea-Bissau to support the President's forces. Under the terms of the Abuja Agreement, the two sides agreed to uphold a ceasefire; withdraw all foreign troops from Guinea-Bissau; deploy an interpositional force of ECOWAS to guarantee security along the Guinea-Bissau/Senegal border and to keep the warring parties apart; form a Government of national unity; and hold general and presidential elections by March 1999.

Report of Secretary-General (March). In response to Security Council resolution 1216(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 154], the Secretary-General submitted a 17 March report [S/1999/294] on developments in Guinea-Bissau since the signing of the Abuja Agreement and the Additional Protocol of 15 December 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 154], which dealt with the composition of the new Government. On 8 January 1999, in conformity with the formula outlined in the Additional Protocol, members of the transitional Government of National Unity were appointed, some nominated by President Vieira and the remainder by the self-proclaimed junta led by General Mane. Despite the announcement that the new Government would be sworn in on 22 January, Prime Minister Fadul was reported to have stated that the Government would begin functioning only after foreign troops invited by President Vieira had left Guinea-Bissau. The resumption of fighting on 31 January further delayed the installation of the Government.

Immediately following the renewed fighting, President Gnassingbe Eyadema of Togo, the current Chairman of ECOWAS, launched efforts to secure a new ceasefire, an agreement for which President Vieira and General Mane signed on 3 February. At a meeting with President Eyadema on 17 February, both leaders, in their final communiqué later forwarded to the Security Council [S/1999/173], undertook never again to resort to arms and agreed that the Government of National Unity should be inaugurated as soon as possible. Three days later, that Government was formally inaugurated in Bissau. However, the functioning of the Government was hampered by a lack of adequate facilities, staff and other resources, and the disruption of the economic and monetary system.

Deployment of ECOMOG troops took place between 26 December 1998 and 2 January 1999. By mid-March, the ECOMOG interposition force stood at 600 troops, composed of contingents from Benin, the Gambia, the Niger and Togo, and the withdrawal of foreign troops was nearly complete. ECOMOG established its headquarters in Bissau, from where its troops were dispatched for patrol and reconnaissance operations. ECOMOG forces provided security at the seaport, which had reopened, and at the airport, reopened for humanitarian flights but not for commercial traffic. With some 100,000 people displaced throughout the country, ECOMOG helped ensure access for humanitarian supplies to reach the affected populations. ECOMOG also began disarming the forces of the two ex-belligerents and launched a demining programme. As for deployment along the Guinea-Bissau/Senegal border, ECOMOG indicated that the task, as called for under the Abuja Agreement, would require more troops.

Owing to delays in implementing the peace accords, it had become clear that it was not possible to hold elections by March, as called for in the Abuja Agreement. Both parties had expressed their interest in holding elections as soon as possible and requested UN assistance in that regard, specifically the coordination of international assistance, the provision of technical assistance to electoral authorities and the coordination of international observation of the polls.

The Secretary-General observed that the post-conflict situation in Guinea-Bissau remained very fragile. The economy, basic social services and State institutions needed to be rebuilt virtually from scratch. The significant action taken so far towards implementing the Abuja Agreement were steps in the right direction. The Secretary-General was heartened by the undertaking made by President Vieira and General Mane, in the presence of President Eyadema, never to resort to arms again.

Establishment of UNOGBIS

The Secretary-General, in a letter to the Security Council of 26 February [S/1999/232], proposed that a United Nations Peace-building Support Office (UNOGBIS) be established in Guinea-Bissau to help create an environment for restoring peace, democracy and the rule of law and for the organization of elections; to facilitate the implementation of the Abuja Agreement; to seek the parties' commitment to disarmament; and to integrate UN activities in the country. The Office would be headed by a representative of the Secretary-General, assisted by several political affairs and human rights officers, an electoral officer, a military adviser and support staff. The Council, on 3 March [S/1999/233], welcomed the proposal. On 26 April [S/1999/494], the Secretary-General informed the Council of his decision to appoint Samuel Nana-Sinkam (Cameroon) as his representative in Guinea-Bissau. The Council took note of the decision on 30 April [S/1999/495].

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 6 April [meeting 3991], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1233(1999). The draft [S/1999/369] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

ECOWAS reports. On 16 April [S/1999/432], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council the report on Guinea-Bissau prepared by the ECOWAS Executive Secretary pursuant to Council resolution 1216(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 154]. The report covered the period from the date of the deployment of ECOMOG in Guinea-Bissau and described the status of implementation of the Abuja Agreement, as well as the political, military, social and humanitarian situation. The report noted that, despite the significant progress in the disarmament process through the cooperation of the parties and the professionalism of ECOMOG troops, the situation on the ground remained precarious. Priority needed to be given to strengthening the ECOMOG force by deploying an additional battalion of 850 soldiers, and any assistance that could be provided to ECOWAS to effect that deployment would be appreciated.

On 19 April [S/1999/445], Togo forwarded to the Council the text of the agreement defining the operations, composition and status of ECOMOG in Guinea-Bissau, signed on 22 March by representatives of ECOWAS and the two parties to the conflict.

Resumed fighting and coup d'etat

On 7 May, following resumed fighting in Guinea-Bissau, President Vieira was removed from office by the forces of the self-proclaimed junta. Towards the end of May, ECOMOG withdrew from the country and it was generally recognized that the Abuja Agreement was no longer applicable.

Communications. In May, several countries and international organizations addressed letters to the Security Council expressing concern over the seizure of power in Guinea-Bissau by the self-proclaimed military junta.

Burkina Faso, on 10 May [S/1999/533], forwarded a communique issued by the Central Organ of the OAU Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution, in which it condemned the coup d'etat at a time when ECOWAS and the international community were trying to find a durable solution to the conflict, and it demanded the immediate restoration of constitutional legality and respect for the interim agreement negotiated between the parties under ECOWAS auspices. On 12 May [S/1999/552], Togo forwarded a communique of 7 May issued by President Eyadema, current ECOWAS Chairman, condemning the violation of the Abuja Agreement and the Additional Protocol. He further deplored the fact that the parties to the conflict had not exercised restraint, which would have made it possible to continue the process of reconciliation for which the Government of National Unity had been formed. Similarly, Mali, on 9 May [S/1999/569], condemned the hostilities and demanded that the provisions of the Abuja Agreement and the Additional Protocol be respected so that elections could be held. Germany, on 18 May [S/1999/581], forwarded a statement by the EU Presidency, in which it appealed to the military junta, the Government and the other authorities of Guinea-Bissau to renew efforts to promote national reconciliation and development. On 25 May [S/1999/606], Cape Verde transmitted an 18 May communique issued by the members of the Community of Portuguese Speaking Countries (CPLP). Noting the commitments undertaken by the interim President of Guinea-Bissau, the military junta and the Government of National Unity to respect democracy, human rights and the rule of law, CPLP underlined the importance of holding free and fair elections.

The final communique of the meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of ECOWAS (Lome, 24-25 May) was forwarded to the Council by Togo on 26 May [S/1999/613]. Stressing that the coup d'etat was contrary to the Abuja Agreement, the meeting agreed that ECOMOG be withdrawn from Guinea-Bissau. It also agreed on the need to monitor the situation closely.

Report of Secretary-General (July). In response to resolution 1233(1999), the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council on the situation in Guinea-Bissau on 1 July [S/1999/741]. Prior to the overthrow of the President, a round-table conference, sponsored by UNDP, was convened on 4 May in Geneva to assist the Government of Guinea-Bissau in its reconciliation and reconstruction efforts. Pledges amounting to some $200 million were made to cover activities in the areas of consolidation of peace and democracy, elections, demobilization and reinsertion of ex-combatants into civilian life, mine clearance and reunification of the armed forces.

Following President Vieira's ouster on 7 May, Prime Minister Fadul confirmed that legislative and presidential elections would proceed on 28 November, as announced by President Vieira before his removal from office. An interim President, the Speaker of the National Assembly, Malam Bacai Sanha, was inaugurated pending elections. To address the changed circumstances in Guinea-Bissau, ECOWAS, at a meeting in Lome on 24 and 25 May (see above), condemned the coup d'etat and agreed that ECOMOG troops would be withdrawn, despite the request of the Government of National Unity to the contrary.

Although it was generally recognized that the Abuja Agreement was no longer applicable, all parties concerned reaffirmed their commitment to holding elections as scheduled and preparations continued. In view of the situation, the Secretary-General stated that the mandate of UNOGBIS should be revised. In addition to its original mandate, UNOGBIS would support national efforts towards national reconciliation, particularly during the transitional period, and encourage initiatives to build confidence and maintain friendly relations between Guinea-Bissau, its neighbours and its international partners. In a letter to the Council of 28 June [S/1999/737], the Secretary-General described the revised mandate, which, he said, took into account the new realities on the ground and would enable UNOGBIS to contribute to restoring peace and sustainable development. The Council took note of that information on 30 June [S/1999/738].

The post-conflict situation in Guinea-Bissau remained complex as the events of 7 May had altered the pace and nature of the peace process, and the killings and destruction that accompanied that turn of events had created bitterness, the Secretary-General said. However, he was encouraged by the stated commitment of the transitional authorities to restore peace based on national reconciliation, respect for the rule of law and the return to constitutional order. He intended to set up a trust fund in support of UNOGBIS activities.

UNOGBIS activities and other developments

The Security Council, having discussed the Secretary-General's July report (above), issued a press statement on 6 July expressing support for his decision to establish UNOGBIS with its revised mandate and to create a trust fund for the Office. Meanwhile, in Guinea-Bissau, the situation stabilized by the end of September, despite some sporadic acts of violence.

Report of Secretary-General (September). In response to Security Council resolution 1233(1999), the Secretary-General submitted a 29 September report on developments in Guinea-Bissau and on UNOGBIS activities [S/1999/1015]. The internal political climate had stabilized by that time and the country continued to move in an orderly fashion towards the legislative and presidential elections scheduled for 28 November. The interim President had increasingly assumed the role defined by the Constitution and the day-to-day administration of the country was in the hands of the interim Prime Minister, while the National Assembly was carrying out its legislative functions. The military hierarchy had reaffirmed its commitment to stay out of politics and reorient the armed forces into a more professional service subordinate to civilian authorities. Notwithstanding those positive developments, the internal political situation remained fragile and the hold of the interim administration on political power was somewhat tenuous.

In keeping with the UNOGBIS mandate, the Secretary-General's Representative was cooperating with the transitional authorities to help ensure that the elections were held as scheduled, in an orderly, fair and transparent manner. At the request of the Government, the United Nations was providing, through UNDP, technical assistance for the electoral process and would be coordinating the observation of the elections. Experts were provided in the fields of electoral informatics, logistics, registration and civic education. By late September, 14 political parties were registered by the interim Government for participation in the elections, and some of them had nominated their candidates. The general census and voter registration began on 22 August and was completed on 2 September. The National Electoral Commission was active and Presidents of provincial electoral commissions had been appointed. Donor countries had already provided $3.5 million of the estimated $4.5 million electoral expenses.

Members of the interim Government expressed commitment to the national reconciliation process and, in that regard, UNOGBIS helped to launch a number of initiatives, including a National Conference on Reconciliation on 13 and 14 August, which brought together representatives of the interim administration, the military establishment, women and youth organizations, trade unions and the diaspora. The internal security situation was calm but somewhat tense due to the circulation of small arms among the civilian population and the omnipresence of the military, manning checkpoints and roadblocks. The disarmament and mobilization programme had not been revived. UNOGBIS, in cooperation with other UN bodies, was developing a programme of incentives to encourage civilians to surrender arms. Externally, the tenuous stability along the border with Senegal, in the wake of the recent upsurge of fighting in the Casamance region, was a major concern for the transitional Government. Another concern was the reported large presence, across the border in Guinea, of armed elements believed to be supporters of former President Vieira. Faced with those concerns, the Government asked the United Nations to consider deploying international military observers to monitor the situation along the borders with Guinea and Senegal and provide a measure of confidence among the population during the electoral process. In response, the Secretary-General sent a small mission to Guinea-Bissau to assess the situation and make recommendations.

The human rights situation in Guinea-Bissau continued to improve during the reporting period. To promote human rights and the rule of law, UNOGBIS worked with civil society groups and the offices of the Attorney General and other judicial officials. The Judiciary had been speeding up hearings of the 600 political and military prisoners in detention. The humanitarian situation was also improving. Refugees were returning from neighbouring States and an estimated 50,000 internally displaced persons had decided to settle with host families. Some $4.4 million of humanitarian assistance was required to resettle the returnees. Poverty was a concern, owing to the difficulties prevailing in health, education, water supply, energy and housing.

The Secretary-General said that progress had been made since his last report but that the transition process was still encountering difficulties. Although the internal security situation remained relatively stable, concerns about subregional instability persisted. UNOGBIS had been able to pursue its mandate. Its further success would depend not only on the political will of the Government and the political forces in the country, but also on the availability of resources. The Secretary-General had established a trust fund for that purpose. He hoped that elections would encourage the international community to resume cooperation with Guinea-Bissau and contribute to reconstruction. In view of the situation and in order to assist Guinea-Bissau in the post-electoral period, the transitional Government had requested that the UNOGBIS mandate be extended for one year after its expiry on 31 December 1999. The Secretary-General would revert to the Council on that issue after the elections and consultations with the new Government.

Mission report. On 13 October [S/1999/1091], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that he had received the report of the small mission he had sent to Guinea-Bissau and neighbouring countries, namely the Gambia, Guinea and Senegal, to look into the transitional Government's request for international military observers along the borders with Guinea and Senegal. The mission found that the situation along those borders was tenuous and recommended the deployment of approximately 200 military observers to monitor developments. The Secretary-General concluded that it would be preferable to take the following measures, while keeping the option of deploying military observers under review: to send his Representative to visit those countries and ECOWAS headquarters to brief them on the report and to encourage Guinea, Guinea-Bissau and Senegal to set up joint monitoring mechanisms along their borders; to develop a programme of visits by his Representative, the UN country team and the diplomatic community to towns and villages in Guinea-Bissau during the weeks prior to the elections; and to encourage Member States to send electoral observers. Such measures would provide some confidence among the population during the electoral process and indicate that the international community would be watching that process. On 26 October [S/1999/1092], the Security Council took note of the interim proposals.

Presidential and legislative elections

Following the elections in Guinea-Bissau on 28 November, the Secretary-General, on 9 December [S/1999/1252], informed the Council that, since none of the contending presidential candidates received the required majority of the vote, a second round was expected to be held in January 2000. Following consultations with the transitional Government, he proposed that the UNOGBIS mandate be extended for three months, until 31 March 2000. He would revert to the Council again following the second round of voting. The Council on 14 December [S/1999/1253] took note of the proposal.

Report of Secretary-General (December). In response to Security Council resolution 1233(1999), the Secretary-General, on 23 December [S/1999/1276], issued a further report on the situation in Guinea-Bissau, covering developments since his report of 29 September, a period dominated by preparations for and the holding of elections. During the preparations, the principal leaders in the country, including the interim President, the Prime Minister, the leaders of political parties and the military establishment, reaffirmed their commitment to holding elections as scheduled. In addition to supporting the ongoing peace process, the military authorities also committed themselves to transforming the armed forces into a republican army subordinate to civilian authorities following the elections. The political and military leaders reaffirmed the supremacy of the Constitution, which provided for the rule of law. Meanwhile, relations between Guinea-Bissau and its neighbours continued to improve, strengthened by the efforts of the Secretary-General's Representative who visited Guinea and Senegal in November. Internally, there was a relaxation in the political climate. Newspapers resumed publication, new journals emerged and private radio stations began broadcasting again.

Twelve presidential candidates contested the office of the presidency. In the legislative elections, candidates from 13 political parties contested 102 seats in the National Assembly. The National Electoral Commission was responsible for the organization and conduct of the elections. The United Nations, through UNDP, provided technical assistance in many areas, including developing an operational plan, which entailed the procurement, delivery and collection of polling station materials, computerization of the voters' lists, identification of polling stations and the training and deployment of poll workers. To support the process, the international community provided financial resources and in-kind contributions. The Commission registered 502,678 voters, representing 91.2 per cent of the eligible voting population, and initiated a civic education campaign on the electoral process. A televised round-table discussion was held on 26 November during which the presidential candidates addressed the electorate and answered questions. UNOGBIS, in collaboration with UNDP and the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), organized a seminar to promote the participation of women in political life on 19 and 20 November. On the eve of the elections, the Secretary-General issued a statement calling on all concerned parties, including the military, to ensure that the elections were conducted in a free, fair and transparent manner and without interference. He also affirmed the readiness of the United Nations to support the new Government in building a climate for peace and reconciliation. UNOGBIS coordinated the international observation of the elections, with the participation of 88 observers.

Over 80 per cent of eligible voters participated in the elections, which, in general, proceeded in an orderly manner despite some minor delays. On 30 November, international observers declared that the voting had taken place in a climate of "civility, serenity, transparency and sincerity" and in accordance with the electoral laws.

On 9 December, the Commission published the official results, which showed that the Party for Social Renewal, headed by Kumba Yala, had won the largest share (38) of the 102 seats in the Assembly. Guinea-Bissau Resistance came next with 28 seats. The remainder were shared by six parties. In the presidential elections, Kumba Yala obtained 38.81 per cent of the vote, followed by interim President Sanha with 23.37 per cent. Consequently, a second round of voting was scheduled for 16 January 2000.

By the end of the year, the military still maintained a high visible presence and continued to perform routine police functions. A World Bank mission visited Guinea-Bissau and carried out a comprehensive feasibility study, and a United Nations Secretariat team worked on a plan for disarmament and demobilization.

As part of its efforts to promote human rights, UNOGBIS carried out joint visits with the Government to detention facilities and encouraged the acceleration of trial proceedings. It also provided assistance for the training of 20 magistrates to help speed up the judicial process. On 13 December, the authorities announced the release of 59 of the estimated 600 prisoners detained since the events of 7 May.

By the end of the year, the country was in a transitional phase from humanitarian relief to reconstruction and rehabilitation. UN organizations, in particular the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and WFP, provided assistance to vulnerable groups, with FAO concentrating on the agricultural sector and WFP on the needs of hospitals, nutritional centres and school canteens. Other UN assistance was provided for rebuilding infrastructure damaged by the fighting. The voluntary repatriation of Bissau Guinean refugees from neighbouring countries continued under UNHCR auspices and assistance was provided for some 6,000 refugees from neighbouring countries, mainly Senegalese from the Casamance region.

The Secretary-General observed that the holding of the legislative and presidential elections in an open, fair and transparent manner was an important step forward in the transition to democracy and the restoration of peace and normalcy in Guinea-Bissau. Since no candidate had won the presidential elections, the formation of a new Government was not expected before February 2000 following the second round of elections. Therefore, as an interim measure and following consultations with the current interim Government and with the Council, it was agreed to extend the UNOGBIS mandate for three months, until 31 March 2000.

Liberia

During 1999, the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in Liberia (UNOL) continued to work towards the consolidation of peace and democracy in close cooperation with the Liberian Government and ECOWAS. Efforts to destroy all weapons began on 26 July and ended on 18 October, during which time a total of 19,296 arms and 3,164,849 rounds of ammunition of all sizes were destroyed.

ECOWAS met twice to consider issues relating to regional peace and security, particularly the situation prevailing at the border zone between Guinea and Liberia.

In July, following a one-day visit to Liberia, the Secretary-General requested the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) to assist in coordinating activities for the resuscitation of the Mano River Union linking Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone.

UNOL

In a 12 October letter to the Security Council President [S/1999/1064], the Secretary-General stated that, during 1999, UNOL had continued to assist the Liberian Government in facilitating communication with the United Nations on matters relating to peace-building and in providing political support to efforts to mobilize international assistance for reconstruction. It had provided political and technical assistance in the destruction of the large quantities of weapons and ammunition that had been collected during Liberia's civil war and had been active in reducing tension between Liberia and its neighbours, particularly Guinea and Sierra Leone. UNOL, in co-operation with the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone and ECA, had joined efforts with ECOWAS to support initiatives to resuscitate the Mano River Union, a mechanism for subregional cooperation among Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone. It had also worked in support of subregional efforts to achieve a political settlement of the Sierra Leone crisis and facilitated the implementation of the Lome Peace Agreement (see below, under "Sierra Leone").

In view of UNOL's catalytic contributions to Liberia's post-conflict peace-building efforts, the Liberian Government had asked that its mandate be extended to the end of December 2000. The Secretary-General stated his intention to agree to the extension. On 15 October [S/1999/1065], the Council took note of that intention.

Sanctions Committee

The Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 985(1995). [YUN 1995, p. 355] to monitor sanctions against Liberia, issued a report on 31 December [S/1999/1301], covering its activities in 1999. The arms embargo was imposed by the Council by resolution 788(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 192].

The Committee observed that it did not have any specific monitoring mechanism to ensure the effective implementation of the arms embargo and thus relied solely on the cooperation of States and organizations in a position to provide pertinent information. In 1999, communications from Ukraine and the United Kingdom on alleged violations of the arms embargo were discussed by the Committee. The Chairman, on behalf of the Committee, addressed letters to Burkina Faso, Liberia and Ukraine concerning the alleged shipment of arms from Ukraine to Sierra Leone via Burkina Faso and Liberia and informed them of their possible violation of Council resolutions 1132(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 135] and 985(1995). The Committee received a reply from Ukraine but not from Burkina Faso and Liberia.

UNOMIL financing

In January [A/53/802], the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly the financial performance report of the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia (UNOMIL) for the period 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998. UNOMIL's mandate came to an end in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 123]. Resources of $12,226,700 gross ($11,667,900 net) were made available to UNOMIL for the period. Expenditures amounted to $10,027,600 gross ($9,514,600 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $2,199,100 gross ($2,153,300 net). Regarding the amount of $8,952,900 gross ($8,434,900 net) appropriated by General Assembly decision 52/407 [ibid., p. 127] for the administrative closing and liquidation of UNOMIL, expenditures totalled $8,798,700 gross ($8,303,100 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $154,200 gross ($131,800 net).

The Assembly also had before it related reports of ACABQ [A/53/895, A/53/896].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 June [meeting 101], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/984], which had before it reports of the Secretary-General on UNOMIL financing submitted in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 156], adopted decision 53/478 without vote [agenda item 133].

Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia

lars net) in respect of the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, in accordance with the scheme set out in paragraph 7 of resolution 51/3 C, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1997, as set out in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995, and the scale of assessments for the year 1998, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997;

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the question of UNOMIL financing at its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session (decision 54/462 A).

Liberia-Guinea

On 11 August [S/1999/876], Liberia reported to the Secretary-General that an armed incursion into Liberian territory from Guinea, in the Foya District of Lofa County, had taken place on 10 August. Liberia had submitted a note of protest to Guinea and demanded that it take the necessary measures to bring the situation under control. Liberia stated that the incident was the second incursion from Guinea, the first having occurred on 21 April.

ECOWAS action

By a 30 August letter to the President of the Security Council [S/1999/929], Togo informed the Security Council President that a meeting of the ECOWAS ad hoc Committee of Ministers for Foreign Affairs was held in Lome on 26 August. The Ministers condemned the attack by Liberian dissidents from Guinea, which threatened the peace and security of Liberia and could destabilize the subregion and mar relations between Guinea and Liberia. They agreed to establish a commission comprising ECOWAS, Guinea and Liberia, in order to find a solution to common security problems threatening the peace and stability of the two countries. The Ministers called on Guinea and Liberia to observe the relevant provisions of the ECOWAS Treaty and the Protocol on Non-Aggression, signed in Lagos, Nigeria, on 22 April 1978.

On 20 September [S/1999/992], Togo transmitted to the Council President the Declaration of the Ad Hoc Committee of Heads of State and Government of ECOWAS, signed in Abuja, Nigeria, on 16 September. The Ad Hoc Committee strongly condemned the attacks on Guinea and Liberia, which threatened the peace and security of both countries and could also destabilize the region and mar the relations between the two ECOWAS member States. The Committee, in accordance with the Mano River Union Treaty, agreed that: the three countries of the Union, namely Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone, should exchange among themselves the list of persons suspected of involvement in subversive activities against their respective countries, with a view to their expulsion; a Joint Security Committee would be established by the three countries to monitor and ensure the security of their common borders; the three countries would reactivate the Mano River Union with the participation of the ECOWAS secretariat as an observer and hold their summit in Freetown, Sierra Leone, during the first week of November; and the heads of State of Guinea and Liberia should establish early a direct line of communication to facilitate regular consultation.

Liberia-Sierra Leone

A joint communique was issued on the occasion of a visit to Togo by Charles Ghankay Taylor, President of Liberia (Kara, 4-5 June) [S/1999/656]. President Taylor assured Gnassingbe Eyadema, President of Togo and current Chairman of ECOWAS, of his support for negotiations to achieve lasting peace and reconciliation in Sierra Leone. Both Presidents welcomed the signing, on 18 May in Lome, of the ceasefire agreement between the Government of Sierra Leone and the Revolutionary United Front of Sierra Leone and appealed to States to refrain from supplying the parties with arms, ammunition, mercenaries or other forms of logistical support (see below, under "Sierra Leone").

Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

On 5 April, the Security Council suspended, but did not lift, the sanctions imposed on the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya under resolution 748(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 55] and strengthened under resolution 883(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 101]. That action was taken on receipt of the Secretary-General's report on the arrival in the Netherlands of the two Libyan suspects charged with the 1988 bombing of Pan Am flight 103. As agreed among the parties concerned—Libya, the United Kingdom and the United States—the two suspects were to face trial under a Scottish court sitting in the Netherlands. The sanctions covered air links with, provisions of military supplies to, restrictions on diplomatic and consular personnel of, and restrictions on suspected terrorist nationals of Libya. On 30 July, the Secretary-General reported to the Council that Libya had complied with the requirements of resolutions 731(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 53] and 748(1992). Despite that confirmation and notwithstanding the efforts of the League of Arab States (LAS), the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, the sanctions had not been lifted by the end of the year.

Arrangements for trial of Pan Am 103 bombing suspects

On 19 March [S/1999/311], the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a letter of the same date from Libya stating its agreement that the two Libyan nationals suspected of bombing Pan Am flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland, in 1988 would be available for the Secretary-General to take custody of them on or before 6 April. The points of agreement were: a Scottish court would be convened in the Netherlands to try the two suspects in accordance with Scottish law, in the presence of international observers appointed by the Secretary-General and in consultation with Saudi Arabia and South Africa; if the suspects were found guilty, they would serve their sentence in Scotland, under the supervision of the United Nations and the auspices of the Libyan Consulate in Scotland; and the sanctions imposed on Libya would be suspended on the arrival of the two suspects in the Netherlands and would be lifted definitively after the Secretary-General had submitted to the Security Council within 90 days a report stating that Libya had complied with the Council's resolutions.

On 23 March [S/1999/312], the Council President made a statement to the press welcoming Libya's letter. The Council members reaffirmed existing Council resolutions as the basis for bringing about a full and final resolution of the situation. They looked forward to the implementation of that handover, taking into account the information provided by the French authorities regarding the 1989 bombing of Union de transports aériens (UTA) flight 772 [YUN 1997, p. 160], and to the immediate suspension of sanctions with a view to lifting them as soon as circumstances permitted, in accordance with relevant Council resolutions.

Suspension of sanctions

Report of Secretary-General (April). On 5 April [S/1999/378], the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council that, as requested in Council resolution 1192(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 161], the two Libyan nationals charged with the bombing of Pan Am flight 103 had arrived safely in the Netherlands on board a UN aircraft. The accused were detained by the Dutch authorities pending their transfer for the purpose of trial before the Scottish court sitting in the Netherlands. He also reported that he had been informed by the French authorities that, regarding the bombing of UTA flight 772, the conditions set forth in resolution 1192(1998) had been met, without prejudice to the other requests concerning the bombing of Pan Am flight 103. Concerning the reaffirmation in that resolution of paragraph 16 of resolution 883(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 101], which requested the Secretary-General to report within 90 days of the date of the suspension of the sanctions on Libya's compliance with the remaining provisions of Council resolution 748(1992), the Secretary-General stated that, following the suspension of the measures, he would proceed with the preparation of that report. Libya had already provided information and assurances on the matter.

Also on 5 April, the Security Council issued a press release welcoming the Secretary-General's report on the arrival of the two suspects and the cooperation of the Libyan Government with the French authorities regarding flight UTA 772. The Council noted that the conditions for the immediate suspension of sanctions had been fulfilled and the sanctions were therefore effectively suspended.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

On 8 April [meeting 3992], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/1999/10 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council recalls its resolutions 731(1992) of 21 January 1992, 748(1992) of 31 March 1992, 883(1993) of 11 November 1993 and 1192(1998) of 27 August 1998.

The Council welcomes the letter dated 5 April 1999 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council, reporting that the two persons accused of the bombing of Pan Am flight 103 have arrived in the Netherlands for the purpose of trial before the court described in paragraph 2 of resolution 1192(1998) and that, with regard to the bombing of UTA 772, the French authorities had informed the Secretary-General that he might indicate, in reporting to the Council under paragraph 8 of resolution 1192(1998), that the conditions set forth in resolution 1192(1998) had been met, without prejudice to the other requests concerning the bombing of Pan Am flight 103.

The Council expresses its deep appreciation to the Secretary-General, the Governments of the Republic of South Africa and the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia and other countries for their commitment towards reaching a satisfactory conclusion relating to Pan Am flight 103.

The Council further notes the role played by the League of Arab States, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the Organization of African Unity and the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries in this regard.

The Council notes that, with the letter from the Secretary-General dated 5 April 1999, the conditions set forth in paragraph 8 of resolution 1192(1998) for the immediate suspension of the measures set forth in resolutions 748(1992) and 883(1993) have been fulfilled. In this regard, the Council recalls that, in accordance with resolution 1192(1998), the measures set forth in resolutions 748(1992) and 883(1993) were immediately suspended upon receipt of the letter of the Secretary-General on 5 April 1999 at 1400 hours eastern standard time. This development was immediately acknowledged through a statement of the President of the Security Council to the press on 5 April 1999 following consultations of the whole.

The Council remains seized of the matter.

Communications (April). In an 8 April letter to the President of the Security Council [S/1999/397], LAS welcomed the suspension of the measures imposed on Libya and emphasized the importance of the Council adopting a resolution confirming the suspension and the need to lift the measures as soon as possible, within not more than 90 days, as provided for in Council resolution 883(1993) and confirmed in resolution 1192(1998). LAS invited the Council to call on all States that had taken measures and decisions to implement resolutions 748(1992) and 883(1993) to announce their suspension.

Also on 8 April [S/1999/407], Germany drew the Secretary-General's attention to a statement by the EU Presidency, which welcomed Libya's transfer to the Netherlands of the two bombing suspects, as well as its cooperation with the French authorities in the case of UTA flight 772, thus bringing about the suspension of UN and EU Lockerbie-related sanctions against Libya. The EU stressed that full compliance with the provisions of the relevant Council resolutions would enable Libya to regain its position as a full member of the international community.

On 22 April [S/1999/466], the Islamic Group at the United Nations expressed the view that the suspension of sanctions should have been embodied in a Council resolution so as to place the question in its correct legal framework and requested the Council to adopt a resolution definitively lifting the sanctions imposed on Libya. The Islamic Group also stated that, as the legal process had gone before the Scottish court as agreed to by all parties concerned, all parties should comply with whatever verdict was reached by that court.

Report of Secretary-General (June). On 30 June [S/1999/726], the Secretary-General presented his report to the Security Council regarding the suspension and lifting of sanctions against Libya. He summarized the international response from the EU, LAS, the Group of African States at the United Nations, the Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the Islamic Group at the United Nations to the events of 5 April, when the conditions set forth in resolutions 1192(1998), 883(1993) and 748(1992) had been fulfilled.

With respect to the investigation of the bombing of UTA flight 772, the French authorities informed him that their requests had, on the whole, been satisfied and that they expected Libya to abide by the obligations that followed from the judgement handed down by French courts: on 10 March, six Libyan nationals had been convicted of that crime in absentia; and on 31 March, 17 decisions were issued regarding payment of indemnities to the plaintiffs. It was thus concluded that Libya had complied with the relevant requirements of Council resolutions 731 (1992) and 748(1992).

Regarding the bombing of Pan Am flight 103, the first issue was Libya's cooperation with the Scottish court sitting in the Netherlands to try the two bombing suspects. On 7 June, the Scottish court granted a request by the defence lawyers to delay the trial for six months. The trial was scheduled to start on or before 4 February 2000. Since Libya was only expected to comply with requirements regarding access to witnesses, relevant documents and other material evidence during the trial, the Secretary-General pointed out that he was not in a position to provide any factual information on compliance. However, Libyan authorities had provided assurances that they would cooperate with the Scottish court. Regarding the requirement concerning the payment of compensation, Libya was not expected to pay compensation to the families of the Pan Am 103 victims before the trial was completed. However, Libya had publicly stated on several occasions that it would comply with the conclusions of the Scottish court and, if required, would pay the necessary compensation. As to the issue of Libya's renunciation of terrorism, Libya had stated on numerous occasions that it was opposed to terrorism in all its forms and had condemned all terrorist acts. The Secretary-General recalled that Libya, in a number of letters to the Security Council, had pledged to sever relations with all groups involved in international terrorism of any kind and affirmed that there were no terrorist training camps in its territory.

The Secretary-General observed that his report did not provide a comprehensive view of all the events and developments related to the bombings of the two civilian aircraft but rather a limited picture in line with the Council's mandate.

The Secretary-General reported that on 11 June he had hosted a tripartite meeting between Libya, the United Kingdom and the United States to assist them in clarifying their positions regarding the requirements of the relevant resolutions for the lifting of measures imposed against Libya. The Secretary-General hoped that further contacts between the parties would help to develop a constructive dialogue and eventually lead to the normalization of relations among them.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 9 July [meeting 4022], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/1999/22 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council recalls its resolutions 731(1992) of 21 January 1992, 748(1992) of 31 March 1992, 883(1993) of 11 November 1993 and 1192(1998) of 27 August 1998 and the statement by its President of 8 April 1999.

The Council welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 30 June 1999 submitted in fulfilment of the request contained in paragraph 16 of resolution 883(1993).

The Council welcomes the positive developments identified in the report and the fact that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya has made significant progress in compliance with the relevant resolutions. It welcomes also the commitment given by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to implement further the relevant resolutions by continuing cooperation in order to meet all the requirements contained therein. It encourages all parties concerned to maintain their spirit of cooperation. The Council recalls that the measures set forth in resolutions 748(1992) and 883(1993) have been suspended, and reaffirms its intention to lift those measures as soon as possible, in conformity with the relevant resolutions.

The Council expresses its gratitude to the Secretary-General for his continued efforts in his role as set out in paragraph 4 of resolution 731(1992) and paragraph 6 of resolution 1192(1998), and requests him to follow developments regarding this matter closely and to report to the Council accordingly.

The Council remains actively seized of the matter.

Communications (July and November). By a 6 July letter to the Security Council President [S/1999/752], Libya stated that, following the Secretary-General's June report and according to its resolutions 883(1993) and 1192(1998), the Council was obliged to lift the sanctions imposed on Libya. It asserted that matters of a bilateral nature could be dealt with at the bilateral level and should not be linked to Council resolutions or the sanctions imposed by the Council. Libya again expressed its willingness to engage in a dialogue with any State on any bilateral matters and urged the Council not to allow itself to be used by anyone for the purpose of achieving certain political goals.

By a 9 July letter [S/1999/770], South Africa, on behalf of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, requested the Council to consider adopting a resolution reflecting the decision of the Twelfth Summit of Heads of State or Government of the Movement (Durban, 2-3 September 1998) that sanctions against Libya should be totally terminated once the suspects had appeared for trial.

On 27 July [S/1999/827], Libya transmitted to the Council President a decision adopted by the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government at its thirty-fifth ordinary session (Algiers, 12-14 July) on the crisis between Libya and the United States and the United Kingdom. The Assembly called on the Council immediately and permanently to lift the sanctions against Libya and requested the OAU Chairman to request the Secretary-General and the Council President to take appropriate measures to ensure the speedy and permanent lifting of sanctions.

In an 18 November letter to the Council [S/1999/1183], Libya expressed its readiness to cooperate with the other parties involved in establishing the truth and identifying those responsible for blowing up Pan Am flight 103 over Lockerbie in 1988. It stated that the Council should have rescinded the measures imposed on Libya 90 days after the arrival of the suspects in the Netherlands and on receipt of a report from the Secretary-General. Although that period of time had elapsed and the Council had received the Secretary-General's report, the Council had been unable to rescind the measures because of a threat by the United States to use its veto against any such resolution. Libya urged the other parties to abide by the undertakings they had given and to discharge the obligations imposed on them by the relevant Council resolutions with respect to cooperation with the Scottish court in the Netherlands. It again called on the Council to rescind, fully and immediately, the measures imposed on Libya under resolutions 748(1992) and 883(1993).

Sanctions Committee

The Committee established pursuant to Security Council resolution 748(1992) concerning the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya (Sanctions Committee) issued a report on 31 December covering its activities in 1999 [S/1999/1299]. During the year, the Committee held two meetings and handled over 50 incoming communications relating to various aspects of the implementation of the mandatory sanctions, as well as a comparable number of replies.

The Committee approved 25 medical emergency evacuation flights in 1999, compared to 91 in 1998. It also approved procedures for the travel of Libyan pilgrims to the Hajj and for humanitarian flights.

On 26 January, the Committee considered communications from the United States and UN sources concerning numerous alleged flight violations of the sanctions regime on Libya. The Committee requested its Chairman to address letters to Chad, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Eritrea, Libya, the Niger, the Sudan and Uganda in order to seek additional information regarding that issue. The Committee also sent letters to Chad and the Gambia, which had confirmed violations, noting that the flights in question were unacceptable breaches of the sanctions regime.

1986 attack against Libya

In a 15 April letter to the Security Council President [S/1999/457], Libya stated that the families of the victims continued to seek justice and the punishment of those responsible for the American aggression against Libya on 15 April 1986 [YUN 1986, p. 247]. It enclosed an indictment issued by a Libyan court against a number of American officials who planned and executed the aggression, a list of names of the dead and wounded and an account of the damage done to private and public property. Libya expected the Council to take measures, as provided for in the Charter, to impel the United States authorities to respond to the notice served on the officials responsible through the Belgian Embassy in Libya and to the verbal notification sent to the Office of the United States Secretary of State through the Foreign Ministry of the United Arab Emirates, and to do everything to bring about the appearance of the United States citizens concerned before the Libyan courts in the two cases brought against them.

The General Assembly, on 9 December (decision 54/424), deferred consideration of the agenda item "Declaration of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity on the aerial and naval military attack against the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya by the present United States Administration in April 1986" and included it in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth (2000) session.

Sierra Leone

In 1999, the civil war in Sierra Leone that had resumed at the end of 1998 intensified as rebel forces of the former junta, the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC) and the Revolutionary United Front (RUF), attacked Freetown on 6 January, overrunning much of the capital. Fierce fighting resulted in thousands killed, and many civilians were severely mutilated by the rebel forces. Those forces were repelled after two weeks by a counter-attack of the forces of the ECOWAS Monitoring Group (ECOMOG). At the time of the attack, most of the international staff of the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone (UNOMSIL) and UN agencies had already been evacuated due to the deteriorating security situation. Following the incursion, diplomatic efforts by the Government, the United Nations and ECOWAS to find a peaceful resolution of the eight-year civil conflict intensified. Negotiations between the Government and RUF, which began in May in Lome, Togo, resulted in the signing of a ceasefire agreement on 18 May, followed by the signing of the Lome Peace Agreement on 7 July.

In August, the Security Council authorized an expansion of UNOMSIL, and, in October, gave the mission a new mandate, renaming it the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL). The authorized size of the force was set at 6,000 military personnel, including 260 military observers. The UN force was mandated to work together with ECOMOG troops to help in the implementation of the Lome Peace Agreement and to cooperate with the Government and other parties in that regard. It was also to assist the Government in implementing the disarmament plan, ensure freedom of movement of UN personnel, monitor the ceasefire and facilitate the delivery of humanitarian aid.

The return of RUF leader Foday Sankoh and AFRC leader Johnny Paul Koroma to Freetown in October gave impetus to the implementation of the Agreement. That was followed by President Ahmad Tejan Kabbah's announcement of the composition of the new Government of National Unity, which included members of AFRC/RUF.

By the end of the year, progress had been achieved in implementing the Agreement, but the overall situation in the country remained precarious as ceasefire violations, human rights abuses and movement of rebel forces continued. When ECOMOG announced its intention to withdraw its forces from Sierra Leone, the Secretary-General sought the Council's approval to expand UNAMSIL to approximately 10,000 military personnel.

Renewed conflict

A serious situation prevailed in Sierra Leone in the early days of 1999. Rebel attacks, which began in late December 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 180], resulted in heavy casualties among civilians, as well as looting and destruction of property, sending thousands of people fleeing towards Freetown. ECOMOG, which was obliged to fall back from its positions in the east, brought in reinforcements over the new year, and UNOMSIL withdrew most of its personnel from Freetown to Conakry, Guinea, leaving a small core team led by the Secretary-General's Special Representative, Francis G. Okelo.

The border with Liberia was also a source of tension. President Charles Taylor of Liberia, having announced the closure of the border between Liberia and Sierra Leone [YUN 1998, p. 181], claimed that an attack was being planned against Liberian territory by Liberian factions based inside Sierra Leone. Both the Force Commander of ECOMOG and the Foreign Minister of Sierra Leone accused Liberia of providing military support to the rebels, which Liberia denied in a 6 January letter to the Security Council [S/1999/17]. Liberia also renewed its request to the United Nations to deploy observers on its border with Sierra Leone.

Report of Secretary-General (January). In view of the serious developments in Sierra Leone, the Secretary-General submitted a special report on the situation on 7 January [S/1999/20]. He stated that the situation had deteriorated markedly on 6 January when rebels penetrated to the centre of Freetown and UNOMSIL completed its evacuation of the city. On 7 January [S/1999/18], the President of Togo and current Chairman of ECOWAS, Gnassingbe Eyadema, appealed to the President of Sierra Leone and the leader of the rebel forces to order a halt to the fighting.

Rebel attacks in the east and west involved the killing of civilians, the destruction of homes and abductions. Overland access to the interior was cut, and the capacity to provide humanitarian assistance was sharply reduced as all expatriate staff of most humanitarian organizations were relocated outside the country. Rebel advances were preceded by the displacement of large numbers of civilians fleeing the violence.

The Secretary-General endorsed the conclusions of the 28 December 1998 meeting of the ECOWAS Committee of Six on Sierra Leone (Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, Guinea, Liberia, Nigeria, Togo) [YUN 1998, p. 181], which included an appeal to the rebels to cease fighting and to recognize the Government of President Kabbah. The Secretary-General urged ECOWAS to meet at summit level to consider how it could best support the legitimate Government of Sierra Leone. As for UNOMSIL, its future was less clear than at the time of his December 1998 report [YUN 1998, p. 177]. It could still facilitate discussions; help reactivate the programme to disarm and demobilize former Sierra Leone fighters; continue to support initiatives for the reconstitution of a national army and reform of the national police; and continue to monitor the human rights situation. Therefore, the Secretary-General recommended that UNOMSIL's mandate be extended for two months, until 13 March. He intended to reduce the number of military observers, retaining in Conakry a small number to return to Sierra Leone when conditions permitted, along with the necessary civilian substantive and logistical support staff under the leadership of his Special Representative.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

On 7 January [meeting 3963], following consultations among Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/1999/1 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council expresses its grave concern at the attacks by armed rebels of the former junta and Revolutionary United Front in the capital of Sierra Leone and at the resulting suffering and loss of life. It condemns the unacceptable attempt by the rebels to overthrow by violence the democratically elected Government of Sierra Leone. The Council also condemns the continued campaign by the rebels to terrorize the population of Sierra Leone and, especially, the atrocities committed against women and children. The Council demands that the rebels lay down their arms immediately and cease all violence. The Council reiterates once more its firm support for the legitimate and democratically elected Government of President Ahmad Tejan Kabbah.

The Council strongly condemns all those who have afforded support, including through the supply of arms and mercenaries, to the rebels in Sierra Leone. In this context, it expresses its grave concern at reports that such support to the rebels is being afforded in particular from the territory of Liberia. It reaffirms the obligation of all Member States to comply strictly with existing arms embargoes. In that context, the Council urges the Committee established pursuant to resolution 985(1995) and the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1132 (1997) to pursue active measures to investigate violations of the embargoes and to report to the Council, with recommendations as appropriate.

The Council stresses the importance of dialogue and national reconciliation for the restoration of lasting peace and stability to Sierra Leone. The Council welcomes the efforts to resolve the conflict being undertaken by the Government of President Kabbah, and further endorses the approach set out in the final communique of the meeting of the Committee of Six on Sierra Leone of the Economic Community of West African States, held in Abidjan on 28 December 1998. It welcomes the offers made by leaders in the region aimed at resolving the conflict and, in that context, urges them, including the Economic Community of West African States Committee of Six, to facilitate the peace process. It also calls upon the Secretary-General to do all he can to assist in these efforts, including through his Special Representative.

The Council also expresses its concern at the serious humanitarian consequences of the escalating fighting in Sierra Leone. It calls upon all States and international organizations to provide appropriate humanitarian assistance and upon all parties in Sierra Leone to afford humanitarian access. The Council notes that United Nations agencies are working with the increasing numbers of refugees in neighbouring countries and calls upon all States to ensure that the humanitarian agencies are adequately resourced to meet the additional demand.

The Council commends the forces of the Monitoring Group of the Economic Community of West African States in Sierra Leone for the courage and determination they have demonstrated over the last year in their efforts to maintain security in Sierra Leone. It also commends the key contribution of the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in efforts to restore stability in the country. The Council urges all States urgently to provide resources, including logistical and other support, to help maintain an effective peacekeeping presence in Sierra Leone.

The Council expresses its intention to continue to monitor the situation closely and to consider urgently any further action which may be necessary.

The Council again took up the question of Sierra Leone on 12 January [meeting 3964]. It had before it the Secretary-General's December 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 177] and January 1999 (see p. 152) reports. The Council adopted resolution 1220 (1999) unanimously. The draft text [S/1999/26] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 1181(1998) of 13 July 1998 and the statement by its President of 7 January 1999,

Expressing its deep concern over the recent deterioration of the situation in Sierra Leone, and encouraging all efforts aimed at resolving the conflict and restoring lasting peace and stability,

Having considered the third progress report of the Secretary-General of 16 December 1998 on the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone and his special report on the Mission of 7 January 1999, and noting the recommendations contained therein,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone until 13 March 1999;

2. Takes note of the intention of the Secretary-General, as expressed in paragraph 37 of his special report, to reduce the number of military observers in the Mission and to retain in Conakry a small number who would return to Sierra Leone when conditions permit, together with the necessary civilian substantive and logistical support staff under the leadership of his Special Representative;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council closely informed on the situation in Sierra Leone and to submit a further report to the Council with recommendations on the future deployment of the Mission and the implementation of its mandate by 5 March 1999;

4. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Communications (January/February). Germany forwarded to the Secretary-General a 12 January statement by the EU Presidency [S/1999/47], in which it condemned the latest attempt to overthrow the democratically elected Government of Sierra Leone and reiterated its support for President Kabbah and his Government. It expressed its concern at reports that arms and personnel were being supplied, in particular from the territory of Liberia, and called on all States to comply with existing arms embargoes (see p. 170). It endorsed the approach of the ECOWAS Committee of Six.

Ukraine, on 15 January [S/1999/44], also expressed concern over the situation and condemned those who had given assistance, including the supply of arms and mercenaries, to the rebels. Ukraine expressed alarm that some mercenaries in Sierra Leone had been identified as nationals of Ukraine. Ukraine had no evidence to that effect and refuted the allegations.

Sierra Leone forwarded to the Council on 21 January [S/1999/68] a 16 January statement by the Government describing the situation in the country and the background to the conflict. The Government said that ECOMOG had regained control of Freetown and life there was returning to normal. It restated its willingness to enter into a dialogue with RUF. Sierra Leone again accused Liberia of being involved in the Sierra Leone conflict. Those charges had also been made in a letter to the Secretary-General of 5 January [S/1999/73], in which President Kabbah said that there was evidence that the rebel offensive in Sierra Leone had been initiated and sustained by the Government of Liberia, despite denials by President Taylor. Sierra Leone reported that it had proof that arms, personnel and logistics for the rebels were supplied by Liberia with the intent to destabilize Sierra Leone, and that mercenaries had entered Sierra Leone from Liberia. The rebels had provided diamonds from Sierra Leone to President Taylor to finance their activities. Citing the risk that an escalated conflict would lead to destabilization of the subregion, Sierra Leone called on the Security Council to take action to arrest the deteriorating situation.

Liberia, in a statement of 19 February [S/1999/193], addressed the concerns expressed regarding its alleged complicity in the Sierra Leonean crisis. Affirming its support of the democratically elected Government of President Kabbah, Liberia said that its citizens had been used as mercenaries in the conflict by successive Governments of Sierra Leone, RUF/AFRC, the Kamajors and ECOMOG. It appealed to all parties to abolish the use of Liberians as mercenaries and called for their repatriation. It requested the United Nations to assist Sierra Leone and Liberia in identifying, documenting and processing Liberians fighting in Sierra Leone for repatriation. Liberia called for the appointment of members of the Joint Security Liaison Committee provided for in the Mano River Union Non-Aggression and Security Cooperation Treaty between Liberia, Sierra Leone and Guinea. It also renewed its requests that Sierra Leone accept the joint patrol and monitoring of the Liberian/Sierra Leonean border and that the Security Council send UN monitors to join ECOMOG forces at that border. President Taylor repeated that request in a letter to the Secretary-General dated 23 February [S/1999/213].

On 10 and 23 February [S/1999/138, S/1999/186], Sierra Leone transmitted statements of 7 and 21 February by President Kabbah to the nation, in which he reiterated his willingness to meet with RUF leaders to facilitate the peace process and called on the Council to consider further action, not excluding the threat of force, against the rebels and their supporters, in order to give effect to its previous demands that the rebels cease all violence and seek dialogue for peace.

Report of Secretary-General (March). The Secretary-General, in response to resolution 1220(1999), reported on 4 March [S/1999/237] on the aftermath of the rebel attack on Freetown on 6 January. After four days, the rebels were forced to withdraw by a counter-attack. The fighting resulted in the deaths of between 3,000 and 5,000 persons, including rebel fighters, ECOMOG soldiers, members of the Civil Defence Force defending the capital and civilians. Many civilians were severely mutilated by the rebels. Up to 150,000 people were displaced in and around Freetown and many buildings were destroyed.

President Kabbah had indicated his readiness to engage in a dialogue with the rebel leaders and to allow Foday Sankoh, the leader of RUF who was being tried by the courts, to meet other RUF leaders, provided that RUF accepted the legitimacy of the Government. In a national broadcast on 28 February, the President agreed that Mr. Sankoh and RUF members could hold their internal consultations in Lome or Bamako (Mali). He stressed that, following those consultations, the RUF leader should be returned to Freetown to resume his appeal against his conviction for treason and related offences. In his broadcast statement, circulated to the Security Council on 1 March [S/1999/224], the President called for the immediate release of all civilians being held by the rebels, including children and women whom the rebels had abducted during the attack on Freetown.

The United Nations participated in diplomatic efforts aimed at strengthening ECOMOG, while opening up dialogue with the rebels. Those efforts culminated in a 29 January meeting in Conakry of the heads of State of the three troop-contributing countries of ECOMOG—Ghana, Guinea and Nigeria. At that meeting, Presidents Rawlings, Conte and Abubakar agreed on the need to convene an ECOWAS summit on Sierra Leone, to be followed by a visit by representatives of the ECOWAS Committee of Six on Sierra Leone to New York to brief the Security Council. That Committee comprised those three countries, as well as Cote d'Ivoire, Liberia and Togo. The Secretary-General's Special Representative met with RUF representatives on 21 February in Abidjan, Cote d'Ivoire, to ascertain the RUF commitment to the peace process.

UNOMSIL human rights officers visited Freetown in January and February to assess the situation. They found that the ultimate responsibility for the fighting, for most of the civilian casualties and for the related humanitarian emergency in Freetown rested with the rebel forces. According to medical sources, many hundreds of civilians were treated for the amputation of limbs or other mutilations, and there were reports of widespread rape and other forms of sexual abuse by rebel elements. The humanitarian situation had deteriorated drastically following the fighting and the number of refugees in neighbouring countries was estimated at 450,000 and internally displaced persons at 700,000. The suffering of vulnerable civilian populations was exacerbated by increasing levels of malnutrition, appalling sanitation conditions and inadequate health care. Humanitarian aid was reaching some parts of the country, but delivery was impaired by the ongoing hostilities outside Freetown. Though ECOMOG had driven the rebels from Freetown and restored order in its immediate vicinity, the capital was still threatened by rebel forces in the peninsula.

The Secretary-General condemned the merciless murders, inhuman mutilations and other human rights violations and widespread property damage inflicted by the rebels. He urged the international community to continue to support ECOMOG, which was to be congratulated on its success in repelling the rebels, and to consider bilateral assistance to Sierra Leone. He intended to pursue further with President Taylor some of Liberia's suggestions. As he had indicated earlier, UNOMSIL had been scaled back since its relocation to Conakry and comprised only a small core of essential personnel, but in the light of the discussions on the start of a dialogue, UNOMSIL should remain in a position to render further assistance to the peace process. He therefore recommended the extension of UNOMSIL's mandate for three months, until 13 June. The Secretary-General's intention was to re-establish UNOMSIL in Freetown as soon as possible. He would begin by increasing the current number of military observers from 8 to 14 and redeploy the necessary staff to support the relocation.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

On 11 March [meeting 3986], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1231(1999). The draft text [S/1999/262] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1181(1998) of 13 July 1998 and 1220(1999) of 12 January 1999 and the statement by its President of 7 January 1999,

Expressing its continued concern over the fragile situation in Sierra Leone,

10. Commends the efforts of the Monitoring Group towards the restoration of peace, security and stability in Sierra Leone, and calls upon all Member States to provide the Monitoring Group with financial and logistical support and to consider the provision of prompt bilateral assistance to the Government of Sierra Leone in the creation of a new Sierra Leonean army to defend the country;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council closely informed on the situation in Sierra

Leone and, in this regard, to submit an additional report to the Council with recommendations on the future deployment of the Mission and on the implementation of its mandate by 5 June 1999;

Peacemaking efforts

The Sierra Leone Government's initiatives to meet with leaders of the rebel forces, supported by diplomatic activity in the subregion, particularly within ECOWAS, led to the signing of a ceasefire agreement on 18 May and the start of a dialogue between the Government and RUF on 25 May.

Internal RUF talks

On the occasion of the thirty-eighth anniversary of the independence of Sierra Leone on 27 April, President Kabbah, in a public address later circulated to the Security Council [S/1999/508], said that the internal RUF talks taking place in Lomé (26 April-10 May) provided an opportunity to open a new chapter in Sierra Leone's history by launching a peaceful transition to national reconstruction.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 15 May [meeting 4005], following consultations among Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/1999/13 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council stresses that an overall political settlement and national reconciliation are essential to achieving the peaceful resolution of the conflict in Sierra Leone. In this context, it welcomes the recent holding of internal talks by a rebel delegation in Lomé, and urges the Government of Sierra Leone and rebel representatives to ensure that there are no further obstacles to a start of direct talks without delay.

The Council calls upon all concerned to remain committed to the process of negotiation and to demonstrate flexibility in their approach to the process. In this context, the Council underlines its strong support for the mediation efforts of the United Nations within the Lomé process, in particular the work of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General to facilitate dialogue, and for the key role being played by the President of Togo.

The Council commends, once again, the continued efforts of the Government of Sierra Leone and the Monitoring Group of the Economic Community of West African States towards the restoration of peace, security and stability in Sierra Leone, and calls for sustained support for the Monitoring Group from the international community.

The Council condemns the recent killings, atrocities, destruction of property and other violations of human rights and international humanitarian law perpetrated on civilians by the rebels in recent attacks, in particular at Masiaka and Port Loko. It calls upon the rebels to cease such actions immediately and urges the rebel leadership to release all hostages and abductees without delay.

The Council urges both parties to commit themselves to a cessation of hostilities for the duration of the Lome talks, to ensure that this is fully respected on the ground and to work constructively and in good faith for a ceasefire agreement. It calls upon both sides to refrain from any hostile or aggressive act which could undermine the talks process.

The Council welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to increase, as security conditions permit, the presence on the ground of the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone within currently authorized levels, in anticipation of a cessation of hostilities. The Council also welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to send an assessment team to Sierra Leone to examine how an expanded Mission with a revised mandate and concept of operations might contribute to the implementation of a ceasefire and peace agreement in the event of a successful outcome to the negotiations between the Government of Sierra Leone and the rebels, and expresses its readiness to consider recommendations from the Secretary-General to that end.

The Council stresses, however, that it will be prepared to consider deploying monitors throughout Sierra Leone only when a credible ceasefire is in place and is being respected by all sides and there is a commitment by all parties to a framework peace agreement.

The Council underlines the importance, in the context of a lasting solution to the conflict in Sierra Leone, of a plan for the internationally supervised disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants, including child soldiers. It also draws attention to the need for the secure and timely disposal of collected arms, in accordance with any peace agreement reached.

The Council reaffirms the obligation of all States to comply strictly with the provisions of the embargo on the sale or supply of arms and related materiel imposed by its resolution 1171 (1998) of 5 June 1998.

The Council reiterates its grave concern at the humanitarian situation in Sierra Leone and urges all parties, in particular the rebel leadership, to guarantee safe and unhindered humanitarian access to all those in need.

The Council reiterates that a peaceful and lasting solution to the conflict in Sierra Leone remains the responsibility of the Government and people of Sierra Leone, but again emphasizes the strong commitment of the international community to support a sustainable peace settlement.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Ceasefire agreement

On 18 May, President Kabbah and Mr. Sankoh signed a ceasefire agreement, the text of which was forwarded to the Security Council by Togo [S/1999/585]. The two sides agreed to a ceasefire as from 24 May, and decided that the dialogue between the Government of Sierra Leone and RUF would commence on 25 May. The ceasefire agreement provided for guarantees of safe and unhindered humanitarian access to populations in need and the immediate release of all prisoners of war and non-combatants. The parties also agreed to request the United Nations to deploy military observers as soon as possible to observe compliance with the agreement by the Government forces (ECOMOG and Civil Defence Forces) and RUF, including former AFRC forces.

The ECOWAS meeting of Foreign Ministers (Lome, 24-25 May) [S/1999/613] observed that the developments in Sierra Leone were generally positive and expressed satisfaction that a ceasefire agreement had been signed. The Ministers called on the parties to find a peaceful solution to the crisis and to create an environment conducive to the observance of the ceasefire so as to facilitate the deployment of additional UN observers. To that end, they expressed their appreciation to the Secretary-General for having dispatched a team to assess the logistical support needed for the deployment of the additional observers. The meeting noted the recent incursion of Sierra Leonean rebels into Guinean territory, where numerous atrocities were perpetrated and property destroyed. The Ministers appealed to the international community to provide ECOWAS with the necessary material and financial assistance to facilitate rapid resolution of the crisis in Sierra Leone.

In a 24 May communiqué [S/1999/599], the OAU Acting Chairman welcomed the ceasefire agreement and invited the parties to bring their negotiations to a satisfactory conclusion. Presidents Taylor of Liberia and Eyadema of Togo, on the occasion of a visit on 4 and 5 June of the former to Togo, issued a joint communiqué [S/1999/656] in which they praised ECOWAS efforts to find a solution to the crisis in Sierra Leone, welcomed the signing of the ceasefire agreement and expressed satisfaction at the launching on 25 May of a dialogue among Sierra Leoneans. The two Presidents appealed to States to refrain from supplying the parties to the conflict with arms or other logistical support and commended the neighbouring States for taking in hundreds of thousands of refugees from Sierra Leone.

Report of Secretary-General (June). The Secretary-General described the peace process in a 4 June report to the Security Council [S/1999/645], noting significant progress in the signing of the ceasefire agreement and the start of dialogue between the Government and RUF in Lome on 25 May. To a large extent, those steps reflected the outcome of initiatives undertaken by the Government, which were accompanied by diplomatic activity by the current ECOWAS Chairman, President Eyadema; the ECOMOG troop-contributing countries, namely, Ghana, Guinea, Mali and Nigeria; the Governments of the United Kingdom and the United States and the United States Presidential Special Envoy, Jesse Jackson; and the Secretary-General's Special Representative for Sierra Leone, Francis G. Okelo. Although Mr. Sankoh was still pursuing his appeal against his conviction and sentence to death for treason, the Government had granted him judicial leave to pursue the dialogue process. On 29 May, the Government and RUF reached an understanding on his status. The Government undertook to take legal steps to grant him an absolute and free pardon and Mr. Sankoh said that his delegation would proceed with the dialogue.

The internal RUF talks (see p. 156) resulted in a position paper reflecting the RUF/AFRC demands: an amnesty for all members of RUF and AFRC, the rebel groups that had organized the coup d'etat in Sierra Leone in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 132]; and the establishment of a four-year transitional Government. The main functions of that Government would include: the drafting of a new constitution; the reform of the national security forces and civil service; the encampment, disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of all combatants; and the establishment of a national electoral commission. RUF demanded the departure from Sierra Leone of all foreign troops and mercenaries and the termination of the status-of-forces agreement between Sierra Leone and Nigeria. It stipulated that a neutral peace-monitoring group should be deployed. In response, the Government said that the proposal for an amnesty would be examined with a view to achieving peace, while taking into account gross human rights violations. It endorsed the importance of the transformation of RUF into a political party. On 2 June, the two sides asked UNOMSIL to establish a committee to effect the release of prisoners of war and non-combatants.

In response to Council resolution 1231(1999), the Secretary-General had begun to explore with ECOWAS the possibility of deploying UN monitors, along with ECOMOG forces, on the Sierra Leone/Liberia border.

The military and security situation in Sierra Leone remained fluid and complex. ECOMOG had opened the roads between Freetown and various western and north-western towns, but RUF/AFRC continued to dominate many areas, particularly in the northern and eastern provinces and the Kono diamond mining region. They had also carried out raids both before and after 24 May when the ceasefire took effect. Meanwhile, the two sides accused each other of ceasefire violations. The Government made efforts to restructure the Civil Defence Forces and reform the police force. The disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme had been at a near standstill, but a pilot phase of a re-adjusted programme was resumed. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) was providing services, in cooperation with ECOMOG and UNOMSIL, to children who had been released by RUF/AFRC.

The reporting period (5 March-4 June) was marked by a resurgence of rebel atrocities against civilians, mostly in the towns of Masiaka and Port Loko. They included summary executions, mutilations, limb amputations, abductions and sexual abuse, as well as large-scale destruction of property. The Special Representative expressed to RUF/AFRC the deep concerns of the United Nations over the reported abuses of human rights and violations of international humanitarian law. There were a few reports of ill-treatment of the civilian population by ECOMOG and government troops, as well as reports of widespread recruitment of children by the Civil Defence Forces in some provinces. President Kabbah announced the establishment of a new Human Rights Commission for Sierra Leone.

Since the Secretary-General's previous report, the already desperate humanitarian situation had worsened. Rebel gains had increased the number of needy people while limiting aid workers' access to affected areas. It was estimated that well over 1 million civilians countrywide required some form of humanitarian assistance. Humanitarian aid was provided in government-controlled areas to about 370,000 individuals.

At the beginning of June, UNOMSIL consisted of 24 military observers, as well as 29 international and 24 national staff members. The planned deployment in June of a further 16 observers would restore the Mission's military capacity to its December 1998 level. The security situation permitting, the Secretary-General expressed his intention of deploying up to the authorized limit of 70 military personnel, with an additional 15 medical personnel. In view of the likelihood of UN involvement with the peace talks, he intended to increase the civilian staff by two political officers and to restore the human rights section to its previous level of five persons. With its restored strength, the military component would monitor the ceasefire within the limits of its resources. It would continue to establish, maintain and improve contacts with local RUF commanders with a view to establishing joint military commissions. The functions of those commissions would be to identify and locate forces on the ground; obtain written assurances from rebel commanders of their commitment to the ceasefire and guarantees of security for UN personnel; and build confidence, facilitate contacts and resolve disputes.

To determine the activities that might be carried out by an enlarged UNOMSIL, the Secretary-General had dispatched a military assessment and planning team to Sierra Leone at the end of May to develop a revised concept of operations. His recommendations on the size, mandate and configuration of an eventual expanded mission would depend on the provisions of any peace agreement and on considerations on the ground, notably security. One important consideration in redefining UNOMSIL's mandate would be the future strength, activities and state of deployment of ECOMOG. The Secretary-General envisaged the need for UNOMSIL to ensure the security of UN personnel if it were to assist in the implementation of an eventual peace agreement, which would require a sizeable number of infantry and additional observers, along with the necessary equipment and logistical support. The new mandate would likely include: monitoring and supervising the ceasefire; supervising, monitoring and assisting in the encampment, disarmament and demobilization of former combatants; providing security to UN personnel; providing assistance to humanitarian efforts; and providing planning and logistical support for an eventual election. The Secretary-General would revert to the Council with detailed proposals for a revised mandate and concept of operations as soon as a peace agreement was signed.

The Secretary-General said that it appeared that a political settlement might be within reach to break the cycle of violence that had held the country in its grip since 1991, and he called on all parties to adhere strictly to the terms of the ceasefire agreement. He also pointed to the need for the international community to support ECOMOG, for the process of disarmament to be resumed and for an end to recruitment of children as soldiers. He called on all States to comply with the arms embargo to non-governmental forces in Sierra Leone imposed by the Security Council in resolution 1171(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 169]. Given the current situation, including the signing of the ceasefire agreement and the start of the dialogue, the Secretary-General recommended the extension of UNOMSIL for another six months, until 13 December 1999.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 11 June [meeting 4012], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1245(1999). The draft text [S/1999/664] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1181(1998) of 13 July 1998, 1220(1999) of 12 January 1999 and 1231(1999) of 11 March 1999 and the statements by its President of 7 January and 15 May 1999,

Acknowledging the cooperation provided by the Economic Community of West African States and its Monitoring Group,

Expressing its continued concern over the fragile situation in Sierra Leone,

Affirming the commitment of all States to respect the sovereignty, political independence and territorial integrity of Sierra Leone,

Having considered the sixth report of the Secretary-General of 4 June 1999 on the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone, and noting the recommendations contained therein,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone until 13 December 1999;

2. Stresses that an overall political settlement and national reconciliation are essential to achieving a peaceful resolution of the conflict in Sierra Leone, and welcomes the holding of talks in Lome between the Government of Sierra Leone and rebel representatives;

3. Calls upon all concerned to remain committed to the process of negotiation and to demonstrate flexibility in their approach to the process, underlines its strong support for all those involved in the mediation efforts of the United Nations within the Lome process, in particular the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in his work to facilitate dialogue, and for the key role being played by the President of Togo as current Chairman of the Economic Community of West African States, and emphasizes the strong commitment of the international community to support a sustainable peace settlement;

4. Takes note of the intention of the Secretary-General, as expressed in paragraphs 52 to 57 of his report, to revert to the Council with recommendations on an expanded Mission presence in Sierra Leone with a revised mandate and concept of operations in the event of a successful outcome to the negotiations between the Government of Sierra Leone and rebel representatives in Lome, and underlines the fact that further eventual deployment of the Mission should be considered, taking into account security conditions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council closely informed on the situation in Sierra Leone;

6. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Lome Peace Agreement

Following two weeks of intense negotiations in Lome under the auspices of the current ECOWAS Chairman, President Eyadema of Togo, the Government of Sierra Leone and RUF signed a peace agreement on 7 July. The text of the Peace Agreement [S/1999/777] and of the final communiqué on the peace talks [S/1999/769] were forwarded to the Security Council by Togo.

The Agreement provided for, among other things: an immediate ceasefire to be monitored by Ceasefire Monitoring Committees at the dis-strict level and, at the national level, through a Joint Monitoring Committee chaired by UNOMSIL; the immediate release of Mr. Sankoh; liberation of prisoners of war and non-combatants; transformation of RUF into a political party and its access to public office; amnesty to be granted to Mr. Sankoh and to conflict-related combatants, exiles and other RUF members; establishment of commissions for reconciliation, implementation of the Agreement, review of the 1991 Constitution, preparation of general elections and management of resources; adaptation of the ECOMOG and UNOMSIL mandates to the new exigencies of peace and national reconciliation; security guarantees; encampment, disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of combatants; restructuring and training of the armed forces of Sierra Leone; withdrawal of mercenaries; and protection of civil and political human rights.

Communications (July). On 16 July [S/1999/792], Sierra Leone forwarded to the Council an address made by President Kabbah when the Lome Peace Agreement was submitted for ratification. Noting that the Agreement was the second such agreement that the Government had signed with RUF, the first being the 1996 Abidjan Peace Accord [YUN 1996, p. 123], President Kabbah stated that the Lome Agreement was more likely to succeed because other nations were involved in the negotiation process, the international community would be involved in monitoring its implementation and security guarantees were included.

Also on 16 July [S/1999/795], Finland forwarded a statement by the EU Presidency welcoming the signature of the Peace Agreement and commending the role of those involved. The EU emphasized that the accountability of individual perpetrators of grave human rights violations was important in ensuring a fair justice system and, ultimately, reconciliation and stability in Sierra Leone.

Report of Secretary-General (July). In a 30 July report [S/1999/836], the Secretary-General described the main provisions of the Lome Peace Agreement and made recommendations for immediate measures to strengthen UNOMSIL. Following consultations with all interested parties, he would submit additional recommendations to the Council. The Secretary-General visited Freetown on 5 July, immediately following the signing of the Agreement, and expressed hope for its implementation.

The Parliament of Sierra Leone unanimously ratified the Peace Agreement on 15 July and later adopted the legislation necessary for its implementation. Mr. Sankoh indicated that he was ready to come to Freetown, pending arrangements for accommodation and security. The military and security situation had improved significantly since the ceasefire agreement took effect, despite some minor violations. RUF and AFRC continued to dominate much of the northern and eastern provinces and ECOMOG remained in control of the Freetown peninsula. For the first time in years, the delivery of humanitarian assistance seemed within grasp.

The signing of the Agreement required UNOMSIL to perform new and significantly expanded tasks in coordination with ECOMOG, whose presence, at that juncture, remained indispensable. Revised mandates needed to be worked out and to include the division of labour between the United Nations and ECOWAS, the need to provide a credible level of security throughout the country, the appropriate size and composition of the peacekeeping force, the deployment of units to various regions of the country and arrangements for logistical support. In the interim, the Secretary-General proposed to deploy additional UN military observers, increasing their number from 50 to 210, along with the necessary equipment and administrative support. The expanded UNOMSIL military observer component would be mandated to: strengthen contacts between UNOMSIL and RUF troops in the countryside; extend its ceasefire activities to a wider geographical area; assist ceasefire-monitoring mechanisms; monitor the military and security situation in the country; assist and monitor the disarmament and demobilization of combatants; work closely with humanitarian organizations with a view to ensuring the widest possible access for humanitarian assistance; work closely with human rights officers; coordinate with ECOMOG; and assist in preparing plans for deployment of neutral peacekeeping troops.

The Lome Peace Agreement called for an expanded role for UNOMSIL, which would require additional human and administrative resources, including political affairs, civil affairs, human rights, legal affairs and information officers. They would be involved in monitoring and supporting implementation of the Agreement through such activities as liaising with government bodies at the district level; and liaising on and monitoring matters relating to political reform, economic reconstruction and investment, human rights, refugees and displaced persons, elections, education and health.

The signing of the Agreement was a great step forward for Sierra Leone, the Secretary-General stated, and provided an opportunity for the people to bring an end to the conflict. He noted that some of the terms of the Agreement, in particular the provisions on amnesty, were difficult to reconcile with the goal of ending the culture of impunity, which had inspired the creation of UN Tribunals for Rwanda and the former Yugoslavia, and the future International Criminal Court. Hence he had instructed the Special Representative to enter a reservation when he signed the Peace Agreement stating that, for the United Nations, the amnesty could not cover international crimes of genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and other serious violations of international humanitarian law. The international community and the United Nations had an important responsibility to assist Sierra Leone and to ensure that momentum was maintained in the peace process. He therefore recommended that the Council approve, as an immediate step, the provisional expansion of UNOMSIL.

In an 11 August addendum to his report [S/1999/836/Add.1], the Secretary-General informed the Council that the full cost of the provisional expansion of UNOMSIL was estimated at $24.3 million for a 10-month period ending 30 June 2000. That provided for the gradual phasing in of an additional 140 military observers, the establishment of a second-line medical capability with 35 medical personnel, the expansion of the Mission by 59 international civilian and 21 local staff, and logistical support. The projected cost of UNOMSIL for the 1999-2000 financial period would amount to $40.7 million, excluding additional requirements to be determined when the Secretary-General's recommendations for the mandate and structure of the enhanced UN peacekeeping presence in Sierra Leone were finalized.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

On 20 August [meeting 4035], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1260(1999). The draft text [S/1999/874] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1171(1998) of 5 June 1998, 1181(1998) of 13 July 1998, 1231(1999) of 11 March 1999 and other relevant resolutions as well as the statement by its President of 15 May 1999,

Recalling also that in accordance with its resolution 1245(1999) of 11 June 1999 the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone extends until 13 December 1999,

Affirming the commitment of all States to respect the sovereignty, political independence and territorial integrity of Sierra Leone,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 30 July 1999,

1. Welcomes the signing of the Peace Agreement between the Government of Sierra Leone and the Revolutionary United Front of Sierra Leone in Lome on 7 July 1999, and commends the President of Togo, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, the Economic Community of West African States and all those involved in facilitating the negotiations in Lome on their contribution to this achievement;

2. Commends the Government of Sierra Leone for its courageous efforts to achieve peace, including through legislative and other measures already taken towards implementation of the Peace Agreement, commends also the leadership of the Revolutionary United Front for taking this decisive step towards peace, and calls upon them both to ensure that the provisions of the Agreement are fully implemented;

3. Commends also the Monitoring Group of the Economic Community of West African States on the outstanding contribution it has made to the restoration of security and stability in Sierra Leone, the protection of civilians and the promotion of a peaceful settlement of the conflict, and urges all States to continue to provide technical, logistical and financial support to the Monitoring Group to help it to maintain its critical presence and continue to perform its role in Sierra Leone, including through the United Nations trust fund established to support peacekeeping and related activities in Sierra Leone;

4. Authorizes the provisional expansion of the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone to up to 210 military observers along with the necessary equipment and administrative and medical support to perform the tasks set out in paragraph 38 of the report of the Secretary-General, and decides that these additional military observers shall be deployed as security conditions permit and shall operate for the time being under security provided by the Monitoring Group as indicated in paragraph 39 of the report;

5. Underscores the importance of the safety, security and freedom of movement of United Nations and associated personnel, notes that the Government of Sierra Leone and the Revolutionary United Front have agreed in the Peace Agreement to provide guarantees in this regard, and urges all parties in Sierra Leone to respect fully the status of United Nations and associated personnel;

6. Authorizes the strengthening of the political, civil affairs, information, human rights and child protection elements of the Mission as set out in paragraphs 40 to 51 of the report of the Secretary-General, including through the appointment of a deputy Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the expansion of the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General;

7. Encourages the ongoing consultations among the parties concerned on future peacekeeping arrangements in Sierra Leone, including the respective tasks, strength and mandates of the Monitoring Group and the United Nations, and welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to revert to the Council with comprehensive proposals concerning a new mandate and concept of operations for the Mission;

8. Calls upon the Revolutionary United Front of Sierra Leone and all other armed groups in Sierra Leone to begin immediately to disband and give up their arms in accordance with the provisions of the Peace Agreement, and to participate fully in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme in Sierra Leone;

9. Urges all States and international organizations to provide resources to help ensure the successful conduct of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, in particular through the trust fund established by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development for this purpose;

10. Stresses the urgent need to promote peace and national reconciliation and to foster accountability and respect for human rights in Sierra Leone, and in this context takes note of the views expressed in paragraph 54 of the report of the Secretary-General, welcomes the provisions in the Peace Agreement on the establishment of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission and the Human Rights Commission in Sierra Leone, and calls upon the Government of Sierra Leone and the Revolutionary United Front to ensure that those Commissions are established promptly within the time frame provided for in the Peace Agreement;

11. Welcomes the adoption of the Human Rights Manifesto by the parties concerned in Sierra Leone and stresses the need for international assistance to address the human rights issues in Sierra Leone as a step towards accountability in the country, as referred to in paragraph 20 of the report of the Secretary-General;

12. Stresses the need for the international community and the Government of Sierra Leone to design and implement programmes to address the special needs of war victims, in particular those who have suffered maiming mutilation, and, in this regard, welcomes the commitment of the Government of Sierra Leone as set out in article XXIX of the Peace Agreement to establish a special fund for this purpose;

13. Stresses the urgent and substantial need for humanitarian assistance to the people of Sierra Leone, in particular in the large proportion of the country hitherto inaccessible to relief agencies, and urges all States and international organizations to provide such assistance as a priority, in response to the revised consolidated inter-agency appeal issued in July 1999;

14. Calls upon all parties to ensure the safe and unhindered access of humanitarian assistance to those in need in Sierra Leone, to guarantee the safety and security of humanitarian personnel and to respect strictly the relevant provisions of international humanitarian law;

15. Stresses the need for sustained and generous assistance for the longer term tasks of reconstruction, economic and social recovery and development in Sierra Leone, and urges all States and international organizations to participate in and contribute actively to these efforts;

16. Welcomes the commitment of the Government of Sierra Leone to work with the United Nations Children's Fund and the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict and other international agencies to give particular attention to the long-term rehabilitation of child combatants in Sierra Leone, and encourages those involved also to address the special needs of all children affected by the conflict in Sierra Leone, including through the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme and the Truth and Reconciliation Commission and through support to child victims of mutilation, sexual exploitation and abduction, to the rehabilitation of health and education services, and to the recovery of traumatized children and the protection of unaccompanied children;

17. Welcomes the decision of the Secretary-General, as indicated in paragraph 44 of his report, that the United Nations should develop a strategic framework approach for Sierra Leone in consultation with national and international partners;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council closely informed on the situation in Sierra Leone and to submit an additional report to the Council as soon as possible, including recommendations for the mandate and structure of the enhanced United Nations peacekeeping presence that may be required in the country;

19. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

The Secretary-General, in a 24 August letter [S/1999/918] to the Council concerning resolution 1260(1999), proposed that 11 countries be added to the 13 already contributing military observers to UNOMSIL. On 27 August [S/1999/919], the Council agreed with the proposal.

ECOMOG revised mandate

At a meeting in Lome on 25 August, ECOWAS adopted a new mandate for ECOMOG in Sierra Leone, which was transmitted to the Security Council on 19 October by Togo [S/1999/1073]. Under the new mandate, ECOMOG would: maintain the peace and security of Sierra Leone; provide protection for UNOMSIL and the personnel working in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme; provide security for UNOMSIL military observers, human rights monitors, humanitarian aid workers and the staff of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme; disarm all fighters of RUF, the Civil Defence Force, former Sierra Leone armed forces and paramilitary groups, in conjunction with UNOMSIL; conduct cordon and search operations to recover hidden arms; establish checkpoints to monitor movement of arms and prevent illegal movement of arms into or out of the country; provide protection and escort duties to government officials, UN officials and NGO personnel involved in humanitarian relief activities; deploy troops in all disarmament centres and arms collection sites and provide security to encamped ex-combatants; establish safe corridors and locations for the settlement of refugees and the distribution of humanitarian relief materials; provide security for the weapons and ammunition retrieved during disarmament and demobilization; assist in the destruction of recovered arms and ammunition; conduct security patrols, including the guarding of key points; monitor and investigate ceasefire violations; and clear landmines.

Report of Secretary-General (September). In a 28 September report on UNOMSIL and the situation in Sierra Leone, the Secretary-General described the state of implementation of the Lome Peace Agreement and made recommendations for the mandate and structure of the enhanced UN peacekeeping presence that would be needed. Since his previous report, both the Government and RUF had reaffirmed their commitment to the peace process. President Kabbah had maintained close contact with Mr. Sankoh and had established contact with Johnny Paul Koroma, the AFRC leader. On 7 August, the first meeting of the Joint Implementation Committee established under the Agreement took place in Freetown under the chairmanship of the Foreign Minister of Togo, representing the ECOWAS Chairman. The Committee welcomed the steps taken towards implementation, including the removal of legal impediments to enabling RUF to participate in the governance of Sierra Leone; the submission of all nominations for cabinet and other positions; and the consultations between UNOMSIL and ECOMOG on their cooperation under the Agreement.

A number of incidents had occurred that threatened the security of UNOMSIL and ECOMOG personnel and revealed a serious rift between RUF and AFRC, including the detention of such personnel by AFRC supporters at Occra Hills; the detention of RUF leaders by the same group; a brief detention of a UNOMSIL helicopter by RUF; and the detention of an NGO member. The subsequent issuance by Mr. Koroma of a list of grievances about the Peace Agreement had further revealed the existing problems between RUF and AFRC. The delay in the start of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme was another cause for concern, as was the continuing absence of Mr. Sankoh and Mr. Koroma from Sierra Leone and their failure to take up their duties in implementing the Peace Agreement. In order to move the process forward, the Secretary-General said, those two personalities should take up their positions in the Government of National Unity and encourage their supporters to participate in the disarmament programme.

The security situation remained rather tense during the reporting period, though the ceasefire was generally holding, apart from minor incidents. The Committee on the Release of Prisoners of War and Non-Combatants, chaired by UNOMSIL, met regularly. The Government of Sierra Leone, ECOMOG and the Civil Defence Force had assured UNOMSIL that they had released all persons detained by them; however, compliance by RUF and AFRC was still awaited. It was believed that the rebel groups were holding several thousand civilians, including 3,000 children reported missing since the rebel incursion into Freetown in January. Some progress was made with regard to the human rights provisions of the Peace Agreement. UNOMSIL had assisted the Sierra Leone Human Rights Committee in monitoring implementation. However, the human rights institutions and mechanisms provided for in the Agreement had not been established. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights was advising national institutions on preliminary steps. The Secretary-General's Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict, Olara Otunnu, visited Sierra Leone from 30 August to 3 September to assess the conditions of children; he outlined an agenda for action, aimed at ensuring the rehabilitation and welfare of children in the aftermath of the war.

The humanitarian needs of more than 2.6 million Sierra Leoneans in the RUF/AFRC-controlled northern and eastern regions of the country remained largely unmet. In the immediate wake of the 3 June statement on allowing access throughout the country for humanitarian delivery, the humanitarian community was able to assess and in some cases launch limited humanitarian operations and food distribution in several key towns in rebel-controlled areas, revealing high levels of malnutrition in both children and adults. Malaria, respiratory infections and nutrition-related illnesses were rampant. Severe malnutrition also persisted in the southern and eastern provinces. In response, aid agencies had increased food, medical, agriculture, child protection, water and sanitation activities. Friction between armed groups had jeopardized humanitarian operations in some areas. Humanitarian assistance needs were expected to triple concurrently with the increase of access to previously closed areas. The inter-agency consolidated appeal, which was requesting donors to provide $22 million, had received only 27 per cent of that amount (see also PART THREE, Chapter III).

In August, the Government of Sierra Leone, in cooperation with the World Bank, the United Kingdom and UNOMSIL, developed an operational plan for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration into society of an estimated 45,000 fighters. The plan was to be executed by the Government in cooperation with ECOMOG, UNOMSIL and UN agencies. Under the plan, each ex-combatant would surrender his weapons and receive a cash payment. ECOMOG, under UN supervision, would collect, register, disable and destroy the weapons at the designated reception centres. Figures varied, but the strength of RUF was estimated at 15,000, approximately the same size as the Civil Defence Force. AFRC comprised some 6,000 men, slightly fewer than the armed forces of Sierra Leone, which had a nominal roll of 7,000. Some 2,000 fighters were thought to belong to various paramilitary groups. UNICEF estimated that about 12 per cent of all groups were children.

In view of the expressed intent of the Peace Agreement that a neutral peacekeeping force should comprise both ECOMOG and UNOMSIL, the Secretary-General, in a letter to President Olusegun Obasanjo of Nigeria, proposed a division of labour. Mr. Obasanjo informed the Secretary-General of his intention to withdraw, between August and December, 10,000 troops from ECOMOG. At that time, the great majority of the 12,000 ECOMOG troops were Nigerian. The President agreed, however, to the Secretary-General's proposal to deploy a UN peacekeeping force to include some Nigerian and other ECOWAS troops. The withdrawal of Nigerian troops began on 31 August, but was then suspended following a meeting between President Obasanjo and President Kabbah. Nigeria indicated that the withdrawal would resume in October. Nevertheless, it appeared that, even as it drew down its forces in Sierra Leone, ECOMOG would be ready to continue to provide security for the areas where it was located, particularly around Freetown and Lungi, and to proceed with disarmament and demobilization. As a result of further meetings with Nigerian officials, during which they clarified their plans in Sierra Leone, the Secretary-General said that it seemed appropriate to proceed on the basis that a robust UN peacekeeping force should be deployed to ensure implementation of the Peace Agreement. It would be an advantage if a substantial element of the UN force was contributed by Governments already participating in ECOMOG, thereby providing troops familiar with the conditions on the ground.

Revised mandate of UNOMSIL (UNAMSIL)

In view of the need for an enhanced UN peacekeeping role in Sierra Leone, the Secretary-General, in his September report [S/1999/1003], said that the main purpose of the force would be to assist the Government in carrying out its programme to disarm and demobilize all former combatants and thereafter to help create the conditions of confidence and stability required for the smooth implementation of the peace process. The tasks of ensuring the security of Freetown and the international airport at Lungi, protection for the Government and operations against rogue elements unwilling to participate in the peace process would remain ECOMOG's responsibility. As the situation remained volatile, the UN force should be large and capable and should operate on the basis of robust rules of engagement. The Secretary-General envisaged the following mandate for such a force: assisting the Government in implementing the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration plan; establishing a presence at key locations, including at disarmament/reception centres and demobilization centres; ensuring the security and freedom of movement of UN personnel; monitoring the ceasefire; encouraging the parties to create confidence-building mechanisms; facilitating delivery of humanitarian assistance; supporting the operations of UN civilian officials; and providing support to the elections.

The UN military force would require some 6,000 personnel and the number of civilian administrative personnel would have to be increased accordingly. The concept of operations for the force was predicated on ECOMOG remaining in Sierra Leone. In the eventuality of the withdrawal of Nigerian troops, a reassessment would be required of the security conditions, and, in the eventuality of a full ECOMOG withdrawal, a much stronger UN force of about 10 infantry battalions would be required. In addition to the military personnel, the Secretary-General intended to redeploy to Sierra Leone up to six civilian police to advise the Government and local police officials on police practice, training, re-equipment and recruitment.

The Secretary-General, having received the concurrence of ACABQ for financing the mission from July to October in the amount of $5.5 million, sought an additional $6.3 million to provide for the Mission's deployment of additional personnel and equipment. More contributions were needed to finance the long processes of demobilization and reintegration.

The Secretary-General observed that Sierra Leone was in urgent need of security in order for it to carry out the programme of disarming and demobilizing approximately 45,000 ex-combatants, many of them children. In order to restore confidence, some steps had to be taken immediately, among them the return of Mr. Sankoh and Mr. Koroma to assume their functions within the Government. The United Nations could play its part in bolstering security in Sierra Leone by the swift deployment of a robust force as proposed. The Secretary-General therefore recommended to the Security Council that it authorize the deployment of the UN force, which, together with the UNOMSIL military observers and civilian components, would be known as the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL).

Communication. On 6 October [S/1999/1030], Liberia informed the Council that a delegation headed by Mr. Sankoh and Mr. Koroma, the leaders of RUF and AFRC, respectively, arrived in Freetown from Monrovia on 3 October. They had held consultations, facilitated by President Taylor, on implementation of the Lome Peace Agreement.

Appointment of Special Representative and UNAMSIL Commander

On 16 November [S/1999/1186], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his intention to appoint Oluyemi Adeniji (Nigeria) as his Special Representative for Sierra Leone and Head of UNAMSIL. The Council took note of the appointment on 19 November [S/1999/1187]. Similarly, the Secretary-General on 22 November [S/1999/1199] informed the Council of his intention to appoint Major-General Vijay Kumar Jetley (India) as Force Commander of UNAMSIL, and the Council took note of his intention on 26 November [S/1999/1200].

Further developments

Report of Secretary-General (December). On 6 December [S/1999/1223], the Secretary-General reported that some progress had been made in the implementation of the Lome Agreement, but the overall situation in the country remained precarious. He noted that the military and security situation had deteriorated in October and November as a result of an increase in ceasefire violations and human rights abuses by rebel elements.

Following their return to Freetown on 3 October, the leaders of RUF and AFRC held a series of meetings with combatants to inform them of the Lome Agreement and the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme. On 20 October, President Kabbah announced the composition of the Government of National Unity, comprising 20 ministers (including four members of RUF/AFRC), five ministers of State and 13 deputy ministers (including four members of RUF/AFRC). Also on 20 October, President Kabbah appointed Mr. Sankoh as the Chairman of the Commission for the Management of Strategic Resources, National Reconstruction and Development, and Mr. Koroma as the Chairman of the Commission for the Consolidation of Peace. RUF was registered provisionally as a political party on 22 November as the Revolutionary United Front Party (RUF); the registration would become official when RUF had met the remaining criteria—having a constitution and party premises.

Despite those political steps forward, ceasefire violations continued, including fighting between RUF and AFRC, extensive movement of troops and weapons by the former and the targeting of humanitarian personnel. ECOMOG troops were fired on by some rebels and on two occasions UNAMSIL troops were detained briefly. UNAMSIL and ECOMOG worked together in monitoring the situation and in the implementation of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme. That programme began when four new demobilization centres were opened on 4 November (one already existed in Lungi). Several reception sites were set up to disarm combatants before their transfer to the demobilization centres. As at 2 December, of an estimated total of 45,000 combatants, the number of registered ex-combatants at the official sites was 4,217. The process continued to suffer because of several security and organizational problems.

The human rights situation in Sierra Leone also deteriorated markedly towards the end of the year, with an escalation of attacks on civilians by former rebel elements in some areas, frequently involving rape, abduction and harassment, in addition to looting and destruction of property. Both RUF and AFRC had shown a reluctance to release adult and child abductees. Deteriorating security conditions throughout the country reversed gains in access for humanitarian assistance.

Meanwhile, the United Nations proceeded with plans to deploy the mandated 6,000 troops. A UN technical team was dispatched to Sierra Leone in late October to assist in deployment plans.

The Secretary-General stated that the continued violence against the people of Sierra Leone and international personnel was unacceptable and perpetrators should expect to be held accountable for their actions. While the United Nations was expediting the deployment of its troops, ECOMOG was expected to continue to provide national security functions and assist in the disarmament process, requiring a force of several thousand troops.

The Security Council discussed the Secretary-General's report on 10 December [meeting 4078].

Communication and further report. By a 23 December letter [S/1999/1285], the Secretary-General provided the Council with an update on UNAMSIL, which was expected to be fully deployed in January 2000. The Secretariat had expedited the deployment, and a substantial number of UNAMSIL troops, in particular from Ghana, Kenya and India, were already in Sierra Leone. The full deployment of 6,000 troops was predicated on the continuing presence of ECOMOG and the Secretary-General contacted leaders from the region to impress on them the need to maintain a sizeable ECOMOG presence in Sierra Leone. On 7 December, President Obasanjo of Nigeria notified the Secretary-General of his intention to withdraw all Nigerian forces from ECOMOG. Later, he confirmed that Nigeria would gradually withdraw its troops from ECOMOG, first by deploying the two battalions it had pledged to contribute to UNAMSIL and then repatriating two of its battalions serving with ECOMOG in early January 2000. By the end of January, two other Nigerian battalions would be withdrawn. The remaining contributors to ECOMOG, Ghana and Guinea, were also preparing to withdraw their troops, which would make ECOMOG unable to continue performing its vital functions of providing security at Freetown and the international airport at Lungi, and protecting the Government. UNAMSIL had neither the mandate nor the means to perform those tasks.

The Secretary-General was concerned that the repatriation of ECOMOG troops would create a dangerous security gap. He therefore recommended the expansion of UNAMSIL with the addition of up to four infantry battalions and necessary military support elements, to approximately 10,000 military personnel. The mandate should be broadened to enable it to assume those functions currently performed by ECOMOG, in particular the provision of security at Lungi airport and at key installations, buildings and institutions in and around Freetown. In order to be able to deter any attempt to derail the peace process, the additional troops would have to be robustly equipped, including the necessary force multipliers.

At informal consultations on 29 December [S/2000/13], the Council discussed the Secretary-General's recommendations and requested the Secretariat to provide it with more information. During the last week of December, ECOMOG continued to withdraw from several key locations in the provinces and RUF challenged the implementation of some of the aspects of the peace process.

On 29 December in Freetown, Mr. Sankoh issued a position paper on alleged violations of the Lome Peace Agreement. RUF criticized the Government and the international community for not providing the financial resources necessary to allow its participation in various ceasefire monitoring mechanisms or the transformation of RUF into a political party. RUF stated that it would not allow the deployment of UNAMSIL in areas under its control until the district-level ceasefire monitoring committees were in place. On 31 December, the National Committee on Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration decided that UNAMSIL deployment should proceed immediately and that the Government would find a way to establish ceasefire monitoring committees in various parts of the country and to allow the participation of RUF representatives in them.

UNOMSIL/UNAMSIL financing

The Secretary-General, in February [A/53/454/Add.1], presented to the General Assembly the proposed budget for 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 for the maintenance of UNOMSIL, which amounted to $16,412,400 gross ($15,560,400 net). In October [A/54/455], he submitted a revised budget for the same period amounting to $34,382,400 gross ($32,870,100 net). It incorporated additional requirements for the provisional expansion of UNOMSIL, which was authorized by the Security Council in resolution 1260(1999) of 20 August. Also in October [A/54/490], ACABQ considered the proposed budget and recommended approval of the appropriation and assessment proposed by the Secretary-General.

Following the Security Council's establishment of UNAMSIL, the Secretary-General submitted a November report [A/54/633] on its financing. It set out additional requirements for the establishment and maintenance of UNAMSIL, which took over the substantive civilian and military components of UNOMSIL, for the 1999/2000 financial period, estimated at $174,138,000 gross ($173,257,800 net). The full proposed budget for UN operations in Sierra Leone amounted to $208,520,400 gross ($206,127,900 net) and incorporated the proposed budget of $34,382,400 gross for the provisional expansion of UNOMSIL (see above). It included total commitment authorities amounting to $52,971,600 gross ($52,687,600 net) already granted by ACABQ.

In December [A/54/647], ACABQ recommended that the Assembly appropriate and assess the amount of $200 million gross for the maintenance and provisional expansion of UNOMSIL and the establishment and maintenance of UNAMSIL for 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/686], adopted resolution 54/241 A without vote [agenda items 150 & 172].

Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone and financing of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone and the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 1181(1998) of 13 July 1998, by which the Council established the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone, 1260(1999) of 20 August 1999, by which the Council authorized the provisional expansion of the Observer Mission, and 1270(1999) of 22 October 1999, by which the Council established the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone for an initial period of six months,

Recalling its resolution 53/29 of 20 November 1998 on the financing of the Observer Mission,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Observer Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations, and recognizing that the costs of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone are also to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter,

Recalling its previous decision concerning the Observer Mission, and recognizing that, with regard to the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Observer Mission and the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone,

On the same date, the Assembly decided that the agenda items on UNOMSIL and UNAMSIL financing would remain for consideration during its fifty-fourth session (decision 54/465).

Security Council Committee

By a series of letters issued during the year [S/1999/111, S/1999/350, S/1999/381, S/1999/1013, S/1999/1026], the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1132(1997)[YUN 1997, p. 135], which imposed sanctions against Sierra Leone, reported on notifications received from States on the export of arms and related materiel to Sierra Leone. The Committee had received notifications from Ukraine and the United Kingdom on the export of certain logistical equipment for peacekeeping purposes and use in Sierra Leone by ECOMOG and/or the Government, including vehicles, satellite telephones, personnel carrier trucks, arms, radio handsets and radio communications equipment. The Committee also received a notification from Sierra Leone [S/1999/174] that it had decided to import two helicopter gunships and arms to be used for peacekeeping purposes.

The Committee, on 31 December [S/1999/1300 & Corr.1], transmitted to the Council an account of its 1999 activities. During the year, the Committee held six meetings and one informal consultation at the expert level. The Committee reaffirmed the need for cooperation with ECOWAS and UNOMSIL in reporting on compliance with the arms embargo and other aspects of the sanctions regime. In an effort to improve compliance with the travel ban in effect under that regime, the Committee agreed to request additional information from the Permanent Mission of Sierra Leone to the United Nations to update the list of members of the former military junta and RUF who were banned from entering other States. On 16 April, the Committee approved a request from the Government for an exemption from the travel ban in order to permit the travel to Togo of Mr. Sankoh and a delegation of AFRC/RUF in order to facilitate the peace process. Other exemptions were made for delegations to attend international conferences. In May, the Committee considered reports of alleged violations of the sanctions regime, involving shipment of arms from Ukraine, via Burkina Faso, to Liberia, then to rebel forces in Sierra Leone. It sought additional information from those countries (see above, under "Liberia").

The Committee agreed that it should consider ways to improve the monitoring and implementation of the sanctions against Sierra Leone. Reports from ECOMOG and/or UNAMSIL could strengthen the effectiveness of the arms embargo by assisting the Committee in its efforts.

Somalia

Despite peacemaking efforts by regional and international organizations, the political, military and humanitarian situation in Somalia deteriorated in 1999. Reports of illicit delivery of weapons and military equipment exacerbated the divisions among the warlords, while the United Nations Political Office for Somalia (UNPOS) did not have the mandate or the capacity to verify the reports. Because of the absence of law and order, criminals and terrorists were attracted to Somalia, a country with no functioning central government, and used it as a transit point for the trafficking of narcotic drugs.

In August, the Secretary-General reported that, although a negotiated settlement of the crisis continued to be elusive, he believed that the United Nations should play an enhanced role in Somalia. He proposed that the Organization work with the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD) for national reconciliation, that a general review be made of the UN role in Somalia and that a trust fund be established to support the emerging process. In September, Djibouti introduced an initiative for the international community to assume a more active role in Somalia and proposed bold, decisive measures against the warlords.

In December, the General Assembly, in resolution 54/96 D, called on the international community to provide assistance in response to the United Nations Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance for Somalia (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

Alleged external involvement

Communications (May). In a 14 May letter to the Security Council [S/1999/563], Ethiopia drew the Council's attention to dangerous developments in Somalia, allegedly caused by Eritrea involving itself in the internal conflict by embarking on a large-scale military activity of destabilization. On 24 May [S/1999/600], Djibouti also expressed to the Council its apprehension regarding accounts of Eritrean weapons and personnel being involved in the situation in Somalia. Eritrea responded to the accusations in a 26 May statement [S/1999/611] (see above, under "Eritrea-Ethiopia").

Deteriorating situation

At informal consultations on 27 May, the Security Council received a briefing by the Secretariat on the latest developments in Somalia, in particular the political, security and humanitarian situation. On the same date [meeting 4010], the President made statement S/PRST/1999/16 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council expresses its alarm at the serious deterioration in the political, military and humanitarian situation in Somalia and concern at the reports of increasing external interference in Somalia.

The Council reaffirms its commitment to a comprehensive and lasting settlement of the situation in Somalia, bearing in mind respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence and unity of Somalia, in accordance with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations. It reiterates that full responsibility for achieving national reconciliation and for restoring peace rests with the Somali people.

The Council expresses its support for the activities of the Standing Committee on Somalia and calls upon all Somali factions to cease all hostilities immediately and to cooperate with the regional and other efforts to achieve peace and reconciliation.

The Council is deeply concerned at recent reports of the illicit delivery of weapons and military equipment to Somalia, in violation of the arms embargo imposed by resolution 733(1992) of 23 January 1992, which could exacerbate the crisis in Somalia and endanger the peace and security of the region as a whole.

The Council reiterates its call upon States to observe the arms embargo and to refrain from any actions which might exacerbate the situation in Somalia. It further requests Member States having information about violations of the provisions of resolution 733(1992) to provide this information to the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 751(1992) of 24 April 1992.

The Council expresses its deep concern at the humanitarian impact of the long-lasting crisis and, in particular, condemns attacks or acts of violence against civilians, especially women, children and other vulnerable groups, including internally displaced persons. It also condemns attacks on humanitarian workers, in violation of the rules of international law.

The Council calls upon the Somali factions to cooperate on the basis of the principles of neutrality and non-discrimination with the United Nations agencies and other organizations carrying out humanitarian activities. The Council urges all parties to guarantee the security and the freedom of movement of humanitarian personnel and to ensure unhindered access to those in need of assistance. In this regard, it also commends the existing coordination of all efforts of the international community to meet the humanitarian needs of the Somali people, undertaken by the Somali Aid Coordination Body, comprising donors, United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations.

The Council urges all States to contribute generously to the appeal of the United Nations to ensure continued relief and rehabilitation efforts in all regions of Somalia, including those aimed at the strengthening of civil society.

The Council welcomes the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General and the United Nations Political Office for Somalia in Nairobi.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to submit periodic reports on the situation in Somalia.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Peace initiatives

Report of Secretary-General (August). In a 16 August report [S/1999/882], the Secretary-General, in response to the request in Security Council statement S/PRST/1999/16, reported on developments in Somalia since his last report in September 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 143]. He stated that peacemaking efforts by some Somali political leaders, the IGAD Partners Forum, OAU and the League of Arab States (LAS) continued throughout the reporting period.

In June 1999, the Secretary-General reported, ministers of the EU and some African, Caribbean and Pacific countries met in Brussels. They expressed the view that only a process leading to a Somali-driven national reconciliation conference inclusive of all geographic areas and all segments of Somali society could lead to national and international acceptance of a transitional government. They reaffirmed that European Development Fund resources would be made available to Somalia once it adhered to the Lome IV Convention, an update of the 1975 trade pact between the European Economic Community and the African, Caribbean and Pacific countries [YUN 1975, p. 330].

Describing the internal situation in Somalia, the Secretary-General stated that north-west Somalia/Somaliland continued to enjoy relative peace. In March, Mohamed Ibrahim Egal, leader of Somaliland, proposed that it should assist the clans in the south in reaching peace and subsequently enter into negotiations on an appropriate formula for reuniting the country. In other regions, including Mogadishu, efforts to establish regional administrations led to inconclusive results.

Regarding reports of arms and/or fighters being shipped into Somalia by Eritrea and Ethiopia, both countries had denied any involvement. UNPOS, located in Nairobi, Kenya, had neither the mandate nor the capacity to verify those reports.

A common strand in discussions by UN officials with Somali interlocutors was a strong feeling that the days of the "warlords" were over, said the Secretary-General, and most of them called for a renewed UN effort to disarm militia members in the country. Through his representative, the Secretary-General had emphasized his continued interest in finding a solution to the Somali problem. However, he had stressed that the onus for peace rested with Somalis themselves and that members of the international community could only assist them in those efforts.

As outlined in the Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Somalia 1999 (see PART THREE, Chapter III), the main UN objective was to prevent the current situation in the south from developing into famine and to continue the groundwork for establishing stability, self-reliance and security in the north. To meet those goals, the United Nations had adopted a number of sectoral interventions in the areas of food security, health and nutrition, water and sanitation, education and public administration, as well as cross-cutting interventions to ensure programme coherence and protection of civilian populations, promotion and protection of human rights and inter-agency planning and coordination.

The effects of the continuing internal armed conflict on the population had been compounded by extensive flooding in the southern regions followed by drought in most areas of Somalia. The security of those providing humanitarian aid to Somalia continued to be a grave cause for concern due to murders, robbery and kidnapping of international staff.

The Secretary-General observed that little or no development had taken place in Somalia for 10 years and it ranked among the poorest and most deprived countries in the world. It continued to have no functioning central government to provide basic services, such as the police, judiciary, civil service, postal service, communications and electricity. The economy was in dire straits. Somalia had been attracting criminals and subversives and was being used as a transit point for the trafficking of narcotic drugs and as a haven for terrorists. The country was divided on clan lines, with each clan fearful of the incursions of others. The violence, where it was not simple banditry, was mainly defensive in nature. The missing ingredient was trust and without it there could be no peace or security in Somalia and no central government could be re-established.

While a negotiated settlement of Somalia's crisis had continued to be elusive, some important steps forward had been made. Djibouti, in its capacity as Chairman of IGAD, had proposed a number of ideas to speed up the IGAD process that were worthy of serious consideration. The Somalis themselves, tired of violence, were increasingly taking political initiatives through regional conferences organized by traditional leaders and attended by civil society, women's groups in particular. There was also increased criticism of the role of the Somali faction leaders. Approximately half of Somali territory was peaceful. While struggles continued over control of some key southern towns, the violence was criminal rather than political in origin. Many Somali leaders had informed UNPOS that they were willing to join a national meeting. However, several leaders believed that no progress was possible while Eritrea and Ethiopia continued to be at war and involved faction leaders in that war. The task of re-establishing a functioning state in Somalia would require not only an enormous effort of political will on the part of the Somali people and their leaders, but a massive rebuilding operation would also be a necessary accompaniment of any peace process. The two processes would have to be carefully coordinated, with international support being carefully calibrated to reinforce those tendencies in Somali society that were working constructively together.

The Secretary-General believed that the stage had been reached for the United Nations to play an enhanced role in Somalia. He proposed that consideration be given to action on two fronts. First, the United Nations, working impartially and objectively with interested Member States, especially with the IGAD process, should do more to help bring about national unity and the restoration of a national government. He proposed a general review of the UN role in Somalia, including possible relocation of some programmes and agencies, and the establishment of a trust fund for Somalia to provide financial support for the emerging process. In addition, consideration might be given to whether, in advance of political agreements on the formation of a national government, action could be taken by the international community to assist Somalia to recover its sovereignty in certain limited fields, for example the protection of offshore natural resources. Efforts could also be made to limit the introduction of illegal arms and weapons into the country. The Secretary-General urged international financial institutions such as the World Bank and the European Development Fund, in administering the Lome IV Convention, to allow financial assistance to flow into Somalia even before a formal central government and other institutions were re-established.

Communications. By a 23 September letter [S/1999/1007], the President of Djibouti transmitted to the Security Council the portion of his statement in the General Assembly the day before, in which he discussed Somalia. He said the challenge in Somalia was to establish an authority to fill the vacuum that was continuously exploited by the warlords and announced a set of proposals to achieve that goal: a reconciliation conference with representatives from civil society, jointly with the warlords, should agree on steps towards national harmony, including acceptance of the principle that the Somali people were free to exercise their democratic right to choose their own regional and national leaders, in accordance with an agreed time frame; the warlords had to agree to convert their factions into political parties that would compete in elections, commit to disarmament, submit to the primacy of law, and respect the creation of a Somali police force; and the United Nations, as in Guinea-Bissau, should establish a post-conflict peace-building office in Somalia to initiate projects in support of the process, including coordinating and monitoring legislative and presidential elections. If those proposals were spurned by the warlords, they would be charged with crimes against humanity and made accountable for their actions. Sanctions would be imposed on warlords not agreeing to the demands of the international community, including confinement to their area, bans on travel abroad and on foreign support or any type of assistance, and a freeze on their assets. If those measures failed to accomplish the objectives, the alternative would be for regional organizations to which Somalia belonged—principally OAU and LAS, with support of the United Nations—to redress the situation under "all necessary means".

On 2 November [S/1999/1134], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that he intended to extend UNPOS into the biennium 2000-2001, given that its role was very important and useful and that the Council had expressed support for continued UN involvement in the search for peace in Somalia. He also advised that the activities of UNPOS would be expanded and its staff strengthened.

On 5 November [S/1999/1135], the Council took note of the Secretary-General's decision.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 12 November [meeting 4066], following consultations among Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/1999/31 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council recalls the report of the Secretary-General of 16 August 1999 on the situation in Somalia.

The Council reaffirms its commitment to a comprehensive and lasting settlement of the situation in Somalia, bearing in mind respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence and unity of Somalia, in accordance with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations.

The Council expresses its grave concern at the increasingly evident effects of the lack of a functioning central government in Somalia. It regrets the fact that most children receive no health care and that two generations have had no access to formal education. It is concerned that some Somali natural resources are being exploited, mainly by foreigners, without regulation and monitoring. It expresses its deep distress over reports that the absence of law and order in the country risks creating a haven for criminals of all kinds.

The Council welcomes the progress that has been made in the development of a greater uniformity of approach on the part of the international community in addressing the crisis in Somalia. It recognizes that the Standing Committee on Somalia, created a year ago, has been instrumental in monitoring the evolution of the Somali situation and working for a greater coordination of efforts by the various external actors, in order to avoid contrasting influences and to give weight to common actions. It calls for the strengthening of the coordination of these efforts aimed at securing peace and stability in Somalia.

The Council expresses its full support for the efforts exerted by the Intergovernmental Authority on Development to find a political solution to the crisis in Somalia. In this context, it welcomes the initiative of the President of Djibouti aimed at restoring peace and stability in Somalia, which was outlined in his letter of 23 September 1999 to the President of the Security Council. It endorses the call made by the President of Djibouti to the warlords to recognize fully and accept the principle that the Somali people are free to exercise their democratic right to choose their own regional and national leaders. The Council looks forward to the finalization of the proposals of the President of Djibouti at the forthcoming summit of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development and stands ready to work with the Intergovernmental Authority and the Standing Committee to help bring about national unity and the restoration of a national government in Somalia. It calls upon the leaders of the Somali factions and all others concerned to cooperate constructively and in good faith in the efforts to resolve the crisis.

The Council strongly calls upon all States to observe and improve the effectiveness of the arms embargo imposed by resolution 733(1992) of 23 January 1992 and to refrain from any actions which might exacerbate the situation in Somalia. It urges Member States having information about violations of the provisions of resolution 733(1992) to provide this information to the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 751(1992) of 24 April 1992, with a view to supporting the work of the Committee.

The Council expresses its grave concern at the continuing deterioration of the humanitarian situation in Somalia. It urges all States to contribute generously to the appeals of the United Nations to ensure continued relief and rehabilitation efforts in all regions of Somalia, including those aimed at the strengthening of civil society. In this context, it encourages enhancement of the operational capacity of humanitarian agencies in Somalia through donor support.

The Council expresses its appreciation for all United Nations agencies, other organizations and individuals carrying out humanitarian activities in all regions of Somalia. It calls upon the Somali factions to ensure the safety and freedom of movement of all humanitarian personnel and to facilitate the delivery of humanitarian relief. In this context, it strongly condemns attacks and acts of violence against, and the murder of, humanitarian workers in Somalia, and reiterates its position that those responsible for these acts should be brought to justice.

The Council expresses its satisfaction that despite all the difficulties, approximately half of Somali territory continues to enjoy relative peace. In this context, it notes that local administrations in some parts of the country are beginning to provide some basic services to the people of Somalia.

The Council welcomes the efforts of civil society in Somalia. It is encouraged by the political initiatives of Somalis, through regional conferences, often organized by traditional leaders and informal cross-clan contacts, to find a peaceful solution to the crisis. In this context, it underlines the active role of Somali women's groups.

The Council welcomes the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General and the United Nations Political Office for Somalia in Nairobi.

The Council encourages the Secretary-General to review the role of the United Nations in Somalia, as a prelude to the United Nations playing an enhanced role, aimed at achieving a comprehensive and lasting settlement of the situation in Somalia. This review would include the possible relocation of some United Nations programmes and agencies, as well as the United Nations Political Office, to Somalia. The review should also consider the security situation carefully, as well as the resources that would be necessary to provide a secure environment for United Nations operations in Somalia.

The Council takes note of the recommendation in the report of the Secretary-General of 16 August 1999 that the international community should consider establishing mechanisms which would allow financial assistance to flow into secure and stable areas of Somalia even before a formal central government and other institutions are re-established, with a view to promoting the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence and unity of Somalia.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Communications. By a 29 November letter to the Security Council [S/1999/1206], Djibouti transmitted the declaration of the seventh Summit of Heads of State and Government of IGAD (Djibouti, 26 November) and the resolution on the Somali peace initiative and proposals of the President of Djibouti adopted at the Summit. The heads of State and Government stated that those in Somalia who had so far sought to promote peace in their respective regions should be encouraged, and called for the early realization of the UN trust fund for Somalia. They agreed on the speedy working out of the detailed implementation mechanism of the new initiative in cooperation with other members of IGAD. They condemned the third parties who had chosen to exacerbate the crisis in Somalia. They recommended further elaboration of the proposals made by the President of Djibouti to the General Assembly in September and urged the international community to support them.

In a 3 December statement transmitted to the Secretary-General [S/1999/1259], the EU Presidency welcomed the IGAD decision to endorse the Djibouti President's proposals. The EU looked forward to examining the detailed proposals and the mechanism for their implementation that IGAD would produce in collaboration with the Standing Committee on Somalia. The EU support would be considered in the light of the conclusions of the meeting of the Committee on Somalia of the IGAD Partners Forum held in Rome on 19 and 20 October.

Arms embargo

On 28 December [S/1999/1283], the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 751(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 202] concerning Somalia transmitted to the Council President the Committee's report covering its activities in 1999. The Committee had been established to monitor the military and weapons embargo against Somalia imposed by resolution 733(1992) [ibid., p. 199].

On 12 May, the Committee approved, on a no-objection basis, a request from Denmark regarding importation of explosives for a humanitarian demining project in north-west Somalia.

In the light of reports of the illicit delivery of weapons and military equipment to Somalia and the call by the Council for States to observe the arms embargo and its request to Member States to provide the Committee with information on violations, the Committee held a meeting on 20 December to exchange ideas on effective implementation of the arms embargo and on strengthening its work, especially in the light of the Djibouti initiative (see above).

The Committee observed that it had no specific monitoring mechanism to ensure the effective implementation of the arms embargo and recalled that it relied solely on the cooperation of States and organizations to provide information on violations.

UNOSOM II financing

The Secretary-General, in February [A/C.5/53/52], reported to the General Assembly on the financing of the United Nations Operation in Somalia (UNOSOM and UNOSOM II). UNOSOM was established by the Security Council by resolution 751(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 202], and its mandate was last extended by resolution 954(1994) [YUN 1994, p. 325]. The force was withdrawn from Somalia in March 1995. The February financial report provided information on the status of unfinished work related to the financial liquidation of UNOSOM and UNOSOM II. As at 31 December 1998, unliquidated obligations retained in the special account amounted to $134.2 million, compared with $213.3 million in 1997. As at the same date, from the total amount of $1,645.9 million assessed on Member States since the Operation's inception, $284.5 million remained uncollected. Owing to an acute cash deficit in the Operation's special account, reimbursement to troop contributors for certified claims totalling $69.2 million for equipment, supplies and services provided by them to the Operation had been put on hold pending receipt of assessed contributions.

Owing to the difficulties experienced by the UNOSOM administration during the life of the Operation, the originally envisaged time frame for the completion of its liquidation process proved unrealistic. The following outstanding issues remained: completion of the analysis and reconciliation of accounts recoverable locally; processing of inter-office transactions and write-off actions; review and finalization of contingent-owned equipment reimbursement cases and of government claims for supplies, goods, and services provided to UNOSOM; and preparation and processing of the pending Property Survey Board cases for the contingent-owned equipment. Resolution of the outstanding issues by the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and the Office of Programme Planning, Budgeting and Accounts was essential to establish authoritatively the actual resource requirements of the Operation and to facilitate the determination by the General Assembly of the appropriate course of action.

On 8 June, by decision 53/477, the General Assembly approved the Fifth Committee's recommendation on the financing of UNOSOM II (see preceding chapter). By decision 54/462 A of 23 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the financing of UNOSOM II at the resumed fifty-fourth session in 2000.

Sudan

The Sudan's relations with neighbouring States improved somewhat in 1999. In May, the Sudan and Eritrea committed themselves to restoring diplomatic relations and, in December, the Sudan and Uganda agreed to re-establish relations and promote peace in the region.

With regard to the civil conflict, the Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement (SPLM) agreed to the extension of the ceasefire that was due to expire on 15 July. A UN humanitarian assessment mission to the SPLM-controlled areas in the Nuba Mountains took place in late June with the full cooperation of both parties (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

In resolution 54/96 J of 17 December, the General Assembly called on the international community to continue to contribute generously to the emergency needs, recovery and development of the Sudan and urged all parties involved to offer all feasible assistance to guarantee the success of Operation Lifeline Sudan.

Internal conflict

Communications. In a 14 January statement [S/1999/62], the EU Presidency strongly requested the Sudanese Government and all other parties concerned in the internal armed conflict to extend indefinitely the ceasefire in the Bahr al-Ghazal area in southern Sudan, agreed to in October 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 185], which would expire on 15 January, to facilitate humanitarian assistance to the suffering people in that region. The EU stated that it supported the IGAD Partners Forum's mission to the Sudan, which was scheduled for the end of January.

In a statement of 21 October [A/54/527-S/1999/1125], the EU welcomed the decision of the Sudanese Government and SPLM to extend the ceasefire in southern Sudan for three more months, thereby securing humanitarian aid to war-torn areas. It reiterated its appeal to both parties to proceed to a permanent and comprehensive humanitarian ceasefire and to resume peace negotiations in Nairobi, as called for by the IGAD peace process initiated in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 837].

Sudan-Uganda

On 18 February [S/1999/169], the Sudan informed the Security Council that Uganda continued to interfere in its internal affairs by hosting a conference of the so-called Sudanese armed opposition (Kampala, 8-12 February) to overthrow the Sudanese Government. The conference, in which terrorist groups allegedly participated, published a final declaration reaffirming the need to continue the policy of violence to destabilize the country. The Sudan called on the Council to put an end to Uganda's interference in its internal affairs, not only to preserve the stability of the Sudan but also peace throughout the region.

In a 20 December letter [S/1999/1270], Uganda informed the Council of the agreement signed by President Yoweri Museveni of Uganda and President Omar al-Bashir of the Sudan to re-establish relations between their two countries and promote peace in the region. The talks leading to the agreement were organized by the Carter Center, an NGO that promoted peace and health worldwide. According to the agreement, both countries committed themselves to renounce the use of force; prevent acts of terrorism; not support rebel groups, opposition groups or hostile elements from each other's territory; and refrain from hostile propaganda campaigns against each other. They condemned the abuse of innocent civilians and offered amnesty and reintegration assistance to all former combatants who renounced the use of force. They agreed to open offices in Kampala and Khartoum and restore full diplomatic relations by the end of February 2000.

Sudan-Eritrea

By a 3 May letter [S/1999/504], Eritrea transmitted to the Security Council an agreement reached between Eritrea and the Sudan. In response to the mediation of Qatar, a summit meeting was held in Doha on 2 May attended by President Issaias Afewerki of Eritrea and President Omar al-Bashir of the Sudan. The two countries agreed to: restore diplomatic relations; respect international laws regulating peaceful coexistence; respect political choices; refrain from hosting conferences threatening the security of neighbouring countries; work to resolve differences; and establish joint committees to examine remaining issues.

Sudan-United States

In letters of 15 April [S/1999/424] and 23 September [S/1999/997], the League of Arab States (LAS) transmitted to the Security Council resolutions adopted by the LAS Council condemning the August 1998 United States bombing of the Shifa pharmaceutical plant in Khartoum [YUN 1998, p. 185] and the alleged threat of renewed aggression against the Sudan by the United States. The LAS Council asked the Secretary-General to take the necessary action with regard to the follow-up mechanism and cooperate with the relevant organizations, primarily the Security Council and the United Nations, for the implementation of resolutions adopted by the LAS Council.

Western Sahara

ple of Western Sahara to choose, freely and democratically, between independence and integration with Morocco, as outlined in the 1990 settlement plan approved by the Security Council in resolution 658(1990) [YUN 1990, p. 920]. The plan, agreed to by both Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (POLISARIO), set out the conditions for the referendum. To implement the plan, the Security Council, by resolution 690(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 794], had established the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO), composed of civilian, military and police units. In October 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 195], the Secretary-General had proposed a package of measures to move forward the identification, appeals and repatriation of refugees process.

At the beginning of the year, informal consultations between the United Nations and Morocco and POLISARIO continued to address the concerns of the parties, clarify points of the Secretary-General's 1998 package of measures to move the various processes forward and facilitate the signing of protocols. Following intensive discussions among the parties, amended protocols and operational directives were provided to them by the United Nations. In June, with the cooperation of both parties, the identification process and the initiation of the appeals process resumed as planned. However, in August, two issues caused delays in the identification operation for certain tribes in group H61, namely the appointment of sheikhs and that of their advisers. Other delays were caused by the staggered opening of the appeals centres and difficulties in meeting staff requirements, which affected parts of the timetable for the referendum process.

The appeals process, launched by the Identification Commission in July, included 84,251 names in the first provisional voting list out of the 147,249 identified during the first two phases of the process. In November, the overall total of those identified to vote by the Commission since 1994 reached 190,023.

During the early part of the year, the Moroccan authorities agreed to formalize the presence in the Territory of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR). UNHCR, in close coordination with MINURSO, continued its preparatory work for the repatriation of Saharan refugees as provided for under the settlement plan. Morocco and POLISARIO agreed, in principle, to the draft plan of action for the cross-border confidence-building measures submitted by UNHCR in May, pursuant to Security Council resolution 1238(1999).

At the end of the year, the Secretary-General observed that the prospect of holding a referendum in Western Sahara was becoming very distant. The problem posed by the number of appeals and the opposing positions taken by both parties on the issue of admissibility did not allow for the referendum to be held earlier than 2002.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

During informal consultations on 21 January, the Security Council received a briefing from the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations on MINURSO's activities and on modalities for the implementation of the Secretary-General's proposals of October 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 195].

On 28 January [meeting 3971], the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1224(1999). The draft text [S/1999/78] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the question of Western Sahara,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara until 11 February 1999;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council informed of all significant developments in the implementation of the settlement plan and the agreements reached between the parties, and, as appropriate, on the continuing viability of the mandate of the Mission;

3. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (January). In response to Security Council resolution 1215(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 198], the Secretary-General submitted a 28 January progress report [S/1999/88] on the implementation of the 1990 settlement plan. He recalled that in December 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 197] POLISARIO had formally accepted the package of measures in the settlement plan, while the Government of Morocco had expressed concerns and sought clarifications about voter identification and the appeals procedure. The consultations between the United Nations and the Moroccan authorities that began in late December 1998 intensified in January 1999 and continued in Rabat and New York. In reply to Morocco's memorandum containing the Government's formal response to the draft protocols and concerns on several key elements of the proposed package, the Secretary-General, on 13 January, addressed those concerns and provided clarifications on all points raised in the memorandum. The Secretary-General's Special Representative, Charles F. Dunbar, the Chairman of the Identification Commission, Robin Kinloch, and UNHCR remained in close contact with the two parties in order to finalize the various draft protocols as soon as possible. Following a meeting with the Moroccan Minister of the Interior in Rabat on 18 January, Mr. Dunbar and Mr. Kinloch began a series of daily consultations on 21 January with a Moroccan delegation to discuss the draft protocols on voter identification and the appeals procedures contained in the proposed package. Meanwhile, MINURSO provided extensive clarifications on the package of measures.

As at 26 January, the strength of the military component of MINURSO was 316, including 60 members of the engineering support unit from Pakistan. That unit commenced repatriation on 22 January and was scheduled to complete the process by the first week of February. The Secretary-General intended to retain two Pakistani officers with the Mission as military observers, to continue to provide the necessary technical guidance and expertise on matters related to mines and unexploded ordnance. MINURSO's civilian police component stood at 26, of an authorized establishment of 81 officers.

The Moroccan authorities indicated that they were finalizing their response to the draft status-of-forces agreement, which was an indispensable condition for the full and timely deployment of MINURSO's formed military units. In order to provide further clarification of certain provisions of the agreement and to assist in bringing about its prompt signature, a UN legal officer, accompanied by MINURSO representatives, held discussions in Rabat and New York. As a result, all issues except one were settled.

During the reporting period, UNHCR continued its preparatory activities in the camps in Tindouf, Algeria, including construction of its operational base and enlargement of its field office. The resumption of the pre-registration exercise in the two remaining camps in Tindouf continued to be subject to the implementation of the other measures in the package of proposals. UNHCR maintained an active presence in the Tindouf refugee camps in order to understand better the needs of the refugees and to promote confidence-building, for which it continued to receive the required cooperation from POLISARIO. On 7 and 8 January, in Geneva, Morocco confirmed its decision to formalize the UNHCR presence in the Territory. Preliminary discussions were held between the Moroccan delegation and UNHCR on the draft protocol for the repatriation of refugees, which was submitted to Morocco, POLISARIO, Algeria and Mauritania early in November 1998. UNHCR informed the Moroccan authorities that it was ready to discuss the protocol once a working group was established. POLISARIO and Algeria submitted their respective proposals for amendments to the draft protocol on 12 January.

The Secretary-General recommended that MINURSO's mandate be extended until 28 February 1999, in the hope that ongoing discussions would lead to a full and detailed agreement in order to reactivate the referendum process and move towards the transition period. However, should the prospects remain elusive, the Secretary-General would ask his Personal Envoy to reassess the situation and the viability of the MINURSO mandate.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (February)

At informal consultations on 2, 9 and 10 February, the Security Council considered the Secretary-General's January report on Western Sahara and received briefings from the Under-Secretary-General and the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations on the negotiations on the package of measures proposed by the Secretary-General in December 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 197] and on the status-of-forces agreement.

On 11 February [meeting 3976], the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1228(1999). The draft text [S/1999/130] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the question of Western Sahara, and reaffirming in particular resolutions 1204(1998) of 30 October 1998 and 1215(1998) of 17 December 1998,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 28 January 1999 and the observations and recommendations contained therein,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara until 31 March 1999 to allow for consultations in the hope and expectation of agreement on the protocols on identification, appeals and repatriation planning activities, as well as on the essential issue of the implementation calendar, without undermining the integrity of the Secretary-General's proposed package of measures or calling into question its main elements, for the prompt resumption of voter identification and initiation of the appeals process;

2. Requests both parties to take concrete action to enable the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to carry out the necessary preparatory work for the repatriation of Saharan refugees eligible to vote, and their immediate families, according to the settlement plan;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council by 22 March 1999 on the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Supports the intention of the Secretary-General to ask his Personal Envoy to reassess the viability of the mandate of the Mission should the prospects for putting the package of measures into effect remain elusive at the time of submission of the next report of the Secretary-General;

5. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (March). In a 22 March report [S/1999/307], submitted in response to resolution 1228(1999), the Secretary-General stated that during the reporting period his Special Representative, the Chairman of the Identification Commission and other Commission officers continued discussions with the Moroccan authorities on the package outlined in December 1998. During those discussions, the Moroccan authorities asked that the modalities for organizing the identification and appeals be consistent with the objective of holding the referendum by March 2000; that the appeals procedure be launched no later than one month after the date of resumption of identification; and that the provisional list of potential voters, from among the applicants identified so far, be published on that date. On 22 March, Morocco accepted, in principle, the proposed package on the understanding that certain amendments would be incorporated in the identification and appeals protocols and that operational directives, together with a revised timetable, would be provided to the parties. The United Nations also held informal consultations on the developments with POLISARIO. MINURSO expected to provide, at the end of March, the revised texts of the identification and appeals protocols, which would incorporate necessary amendments, including revised dates. It would also provide to the parties detailed operational directives and a revised timetable for the implementation of the protocols.

As at 15 March, the strength of the MINURSO military component was 230. The status-of-forces agreement between the United Nations and Morocco was signed on 11 February. An arrangement regarding the implementation of the provisions on the carriage of weapons was expected to be elaborated in the near future. A military agreement between MINURSO and the Royal Moroccan Army was signed in March regarding exchange of information on mines and unexploded ordnance. MINURSO was engaged in efforts to reach a similar agreement with POLISARIO. In February, communications equipment was stolen from a MINURSO station east of the defensive sand-wall (berm). The Mission conducted an inquiry but did not succeed in recovering it.

UNHCR made progress in establishing itself in the Territory and in preparing the ground in order to complete its preparatory work for the repatriation of Saharan refugees. However, UNHCR was unable to resume the pre-registration exercise in the remaining two refugee camps in Tindouf since POLISARIO maintained its earlier position that the exercise remained subject to the implementation of the other measures in the package of proposals.

The Secretary-General designated Robin Kinloch, Chairman of the Identification Commission, as Acting Special Representative, effective 1 April, in the light of the resignation of Charles F. Dunbar.

The Secretary-General recommended that MINURSO's mandate be extended until 30 April 1999.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

On 30 March [meeting 3990], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1232(1999). The draft text [S/1999/354] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the question of Western Sahara,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 22 March 1999 and the observations and recommendations contained therein,

Welcoming also the agreement in principle to the Secretary-General's package of measures by the Government of Morocco, and recalling its acceptance by the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara until 30 April 1999 to allow for an understanding to be reached among all concerned on detailed modalities for the implementation of the identification and appeals protocols, including a revised implementation schedule, in a manner that would preserve the integrity of the Secretary-General's package of measures;

2. Requests both parties to move ahead with the necessary discussions to reach an agreement on the refugee repatriation protocol, so that all aspects of the work needed to prepare the way for the repatriation of refugees may begin, including confidence-building measures, and in that regard welcomes the decision of the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro to allow the resumption of pre-registration activities of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in Tindouf;

3. Welcomes the signature, by the Government of Morocco and the Force Commander of the Mission, of the agreement on mines and unexploded ordnance mentioned in paragraph 13 of the report of the Secretary-General, and urges the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro to engage in a similar effort;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council by 23 April 1999 on the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (April). In a 27 April report on the latest developments in Western Sahara [S/1999/483], submitted in response to resolution 1232(1999), the Secretary-General stated that during the reporting period his Acting Special Representative held consultations on the package to accelerate the referendum process with the Coordinator for POLISARIO and with the Moroccan Minister of the Interior and other officials. The amended protocols on identification and appeals, together with detailed operational directives for their implementation, were communicated to the parties on 9 April. Following intensive discussions between the United Nations and the two parties in New York, those documents and the outline calendar were finalized and transmitted to the parties on 26 April. The amended protocols and the operational directives provided for the resumption of identification work on 1 June and its completion (subject to later confirmation by Morocco that it would provide two sheikhs for the identification of H61 Ait Ousa tribe applicants) in November, and for the start of the appeals process on 1 July and its completion by February 2000. In the revised outline calendar for the referendum process, the transition period would begin in February 2000, with a view to holding the referendum in July 2000.

As at 23 April, MINURSO's military component stood at 203 and the civilian police component was 22. Following the 12 March military agreement between MINURSO and the Royal Moroccan Army for the marking and destruction of mines and unexploded ordnance in the Mission area, the first clearance operation was successfully completed. A similar military agreement was concluded by MINURSO with POLISARIO on 5 April. With regard to the communications equipment stolen from MINURSO in February, POLISARIO and the Algerian authorities offered to assist in the investigation.

Pending the establishment of a UNHCR/Morocco formal working group, a UNHCR mission was dispatched to Rabat to discuss with the Ministry of the Interior the amendments provided verbally by the latter to the refugee repatriation protocol. A UNHCR mission also visited Tindouf in April to discuss with POLISARIO the resumption of the pre-registration exercise in the two remaining camps.

The Secretary-General observed that the timely implementation of the revised calendar was predicated upon many critical assumptions, including authorization by the Security Council to begin preparations in July for the full deployment of MINURSO troops; the total cooperation of the parties in the identification of individual applicants from groups H41, H61 and J51/52 so as to maintain a rigorous programme without the delays and interruptions experienced in the past; the expectation that the appeals process would not be turned into a second round of identification for all applicants found ineligible; the completion by the end of 1999 of planning arrangements for repatriation; the deployment of formed military units, additional military observers and civilian police by January 2000; the reduction and confinement of troops on both sides; the demining of repatriation routes; the proclamation of a general amnesty; and a repatriation process that would be completed within 16 weeks. The Secretary-General recommended that, should the parties agree to the proposed protocols and operational directives, the Council consider extending MINURSO's mandate for a period of six months, until 30 October 1999.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

On 30 April [meeting 3994], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1235(1999). The draft text [S/1999/489] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the question of Western Sahara,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 27 April 1999 and the observations and recommendations contained therein,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara until 14 May 1999;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council informed of all significant developments in the implementation of the settlement plan and the agreements reached between the parties, and, as appropriate, on the continuing viability of the mandate of the Mission;

3. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Communications (April/May). In May, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council letters from POLISARIO and Morocco commenting on the five documents (see below) that he had transmitted to them following discussions between their representatives and the United Nations in New York from 12 to 26 April.

In a 28 April letter [S/1999/555], the POLISARIO Secretary-General reminded the UN Secretary-General that POLISARIO had made a major concession regarding the identification of the disputed tribal groupings. It did so on the understanding that the agreement meant that the identification of tribal groupings H41, H61 and J51/52 and the appeal procedures would take place simultaneously and under conditions of complete strictness, impartiality and transparency. He stated that major changes to the original texts, particularly the protocol on appeal procedures, as well as new procedures were included in the version transmitted to both parties on 8 April. During later discussions, POLISARIO put forward amendments concerning the methods of proof recognized by the Identification Commission and, in particular, by the appeals sections. It indicated strong reservations concerning the oral testimony accorded to every individual, whereas the settlement plan authorized only the sheikhs to make use of it. It expressed fears that the change would lead to the sections being inundated with an endless number of appeals, resulting ultimately in repeat identifications and a forced reappraisal of the work already done. Nevertheless, POLISARIO formally accepted the 26 April version of the proposed package on the understanding that: the appeal and identification operations for the disputed tribal groupings would be carried out under conditions of exemplary strictness, transparency and fairness; and the Identification Commission would continue to carry out its mission demonstrating its authority, independence and impartiality as in the past. The success of the entire process depended on that demand, which remained the keystone of the entire structure.

In a 7 May letter [S/1999/554], Morocco's Minister for Foreign Affairs and Cooperation stated that Morocco agreed to the timetable and the measures proposed by the Secretary-General, which were linked to the resumption of the identification operation on 1 June and the start of the appeal procedures on 1 July. However, he also expressed reservations to the relevant protocols and operational guidelines: the admissibility procedure had not reflected the possibility of each applicant making use of all the possible guarantees for ensuring a fair re-examination of his case, which might eliminate thousands of applicants who considered that they had been unjustifiably or unfairly eliminated from the electorate and desired to have their right restored; the provision related to the periodic communication of partial results of identification, which did not indicate that the next identification stage, which essentially concerned Morocco, would be carried out within a strictly limited period of time. In that regard, there was a need to prevent a recurrence of practices such as the "revision" of the identification results and the use of corroborating testimony as a condition for the eligibility of applicants not included in the Spanish census of 1974. The Foreign Minister therefore proposed that future identification operations be accompanied by every possible guarantee for fairness and that the communication of the results be on a weekly basis to ensure better monitoring and greater transparency.

Report of Secretary-General (May). In a 13 May addendum to his April report [S/1999/483/Add.1], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council the text of the five documents he had sent to Morocco and POLISARIO following the discussions between their representatives and the United Nations (New York, 12-26 April), namely: the protocol on the identification of the remaining individual applications from candidates belonging to tribal groupings H41, H61 and J51/52; operational directives for the identification of the remaining individual applications from candidates belonging to those tribal groupings; the appeals process for the referendum in Western Sahara; operational directives for the implementation of the appeals process; and the time frame for the implementation of the settlement plan. The Secretary-General drew the Council's attention to the positions of Morocco and POLISARIO contained in their letters to him (see above). He intended to carry out preparations to resume the identification operation on 15 June and to begin the appeals process on 15 July.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 14 May [meeting 4002], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1238(1999). The draft text [S/1999/556] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the question of Western Sahara,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 27 April 1999 and the observations and recommendations contained therein,

Welcoming also the acceptance by the Government of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro of the detailed modalities for the implementation of the Secretary-General's package of measures relating to the identification of voters, the appeals process and the revised implementation timetable as a good foundation for the completion of this phase of the settlement plan and taking note of their respective letters,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara until 14 September 1999 in order to resume the identification process, start the appeals process and conclude all outstanding agreements needed to implement the settlement plan, and reaffirms the rights of the applicants, with an expectation that the appeals process will not be turned into a second round of identification;

2. Supports the proposed increase in staff of the Identification Commission from twenty-five to thirty members, and the proposed increase also in the necessary support activities, in order to strengthen the Commission and enable it to continue working with full authority and independence, in accordance with its mandate as authorized by the Security Council, and to accomplish its tasks expeditiously;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report every forty-five days on significant developments in the implementation of the settlement plan, in particular on the following issues which will form, inter alia, the basis of its consideration of a further extension of the mandate of the Mission: full and unequivocal cooperation of the parties during the resumption of voter identification and during the start of the appeals process; agreement by the Government of Morocco on the modalities for implementing paragraph 42 of the status-of-forces agreement; agreement of the parties on the protocol relating to refugees; and confirmation that the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees is fully operational in the region;

4. Also requests the Office of the High Commissioner to provide the Security Council with recommendations for confidence-building measures and time lines for their implementation;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council a revised timetable and financial implications for the holding of the referendum for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara in accordance with the settlement plan and the agreements with the parties for its implementation;

6. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Appointment. On 18 May [S/1999/590], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that he had appointed William Eagleton (United States) as his Special Representative for Western Sahara. The Council took note of the appointment on 21 May [S/1999/591].

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples considered the question of Western Sahara on 22 June [A/54/23]. The Committee granted a request for a hearing to Moulud Said of POLISARIO and reviewed a June working paper on developments concerning the Territory over the previous year [A/AC.109/1999/11]. The paper summarized the activities of the good offices of the Secretary-General and action taken by the Security Council and the General Assembly. It stated that, on 23 April, the Commission on Human Rights adopted a resolution, in which it took note with satisfaction of the agreements reached between the parties and urged them to implement the agreements fully and in good faith (see PART TWO, Chapter II).

Communication. In a 21 June statement [A/54/151-S/1999/718], the EU reiterated its full support for the settlement plan proposed by the Secretary-General and welcomed the agreements reached concerning further steps to implement it. It hoped that the proposals could be implemented without further delay in line with the deadlines set out in the Secretary-General's 28 April report. The EU called on both parties to cooperate fully throughout the voter identification and the appeals process.

Reports of Secretary-General (June, August and September). In a 25 June report on the Western Sahara situation [S/1999/721], the Secretary-General stated that his Special Representative, Mr. Eagleton, and his Deputy Special Representative, Mr. Kinloch, had met with the senior officials of Morocco, POLISARIO, Mauritania and Algeria to discuss their commitment to the implementation of the settlement plan. The newly appointed Chairman of the Identification Commission, Eduardo Vetere, participated in the visits to Nouakchott and Algiers and took up his functions in Laayoune.

The final programme of identification for the remaining individual applicants from tribal groupings H41, H61 and J51/52 was issued on 1 June and the identification operation resumed on schedule on 15 June at one centre in the Territory and another in the Tindouf area. Two more centres were opened on 21 June in southern Morocco. As at 24 June, 2,328 persons had been interviewed by the Identification Commission since 15 June, bringing the total number identified since 28 August 1994 to 149,577. Special efforts would be made to increase the staffing of the Commission to required levels by mid-July. A training centre for former and new Identification Commission staff opened in Agadir on 15 June, with a basic one-week staff training course. Trainees would also spend a week in the Tindouf area for additional training.

As at 25 June, the military component of MINURSO was 230 military observers and the strength of the civilian police component had increased to 52. Consultations with Moroccan authorities were initiated to formalize an agreement regarding the carriage of weapons. Both parties continued to extend their full support to military agreements on the marking and destruction of unexploded ordnance and exchange of related information, with 60 per cent of tasks west of the berm and 20 per cent east of the berm completed.

An agreement was reached with the Moroccan Government on 21 May to undertake a joint reconnaissance visit to the Territory to gather relevant information for planning the return of refugees, including on existing infrastructure, such as schools, hospitals, housing facilities and transit centres. The pre-registration exercise resumed in the Tindouf refugee camps on 24 May. A total of 12,798 refugees (constituting 1,672 families) had been pre-registered by UNHCR in Camp El-Aiun. Pending conditions conducive to safe return, the majority of the refugees expressed reservations about repatriation to the Territory west of the berm, owing to fear of their security and safety. UNHCR provided refugees with information on its mandate and on repatriation operations and conducted a refugee-needs assessment. The pre-registration exercise was scheduled to resume in Nouadhibou and Zouerate in northern Mauritania in mid-July, at the same time as MINURSO was scheduled to start the identification process at those locations. UNHCR prepared a draft plan of action for its cross-border confidence-building measures aimed at creating confidence and trust within the refugee camps and in the Territory.

The Secretary-General observed that the agreements with the two parties on the resumption of the identification process and the initiation of the appeals process were being implemented as planned, with the cooperation of both parties. It was important that both parties stay the course, particularly with regard to the launching of the appeals process on 15 July, in conjunction with the publication of the first part of the provisional voters list. All efforts would be made to meet the staffing requirements for the process.

In a 12 August report [S/1999/875], the Secretary-General stated that the reporting period was marked by the death of His Majesty King Hassan II of Morocco on 23 July. At the King's funeral, the Secretary-General met His Majesty King Mohammed VI and senior Moroccan government officials, as well as President Abdelaziz Bouteflika of Algeria. King Mohammed renewed his commitment to Morocco's territorial integrity through the holding of a "confirmative" referendum under the auspices of the United Nations. President Bouteflika reiterated that the Western Sahara issue should be dealt with by the United Nations within the framework of the 1997 Houston agreements [YUN 1997, p. 149], while the issue of Algeria's bilateral relations with Morocco would be addressed between the two countries. On 31 July, Morocco's Minister of the Interior expressed concern regarding the results of the second phase of the identification operation and what he considered to be its restrictive terms for eligibility.

During the reporting period, identification operations continued in Laayoune and in Tan Tan and Goulimine in southern Morocco. Two new identification centres were opened in Assa in southern Morocco and in Nouadhibou in Mauritania. As at 23 July, 9,674 individual applicants from tribal groupings H41, H61 and J51/52 had been interviewed since the resumption of identification on 15 June, which brought the total to 155,923.

On 9 July, Morocco's Interior Minister reiterated his concern about several thousand applicants eliminated during the identification process. The Secretary-General replied that those applicants would have a full opportunity to seek and obtain redress through the appeals process if it was concluded that they were withdrawn without valid reason.

The appeals process was launched by the Identification Commission on 15 July, when the first part of the provisional list of persons authorized to vote was communicated to the two parties by the Special Representative and made public. The first part included 84,251 names of applicants found eligible to vote, out of 147,249 identified during the first two phases of the process from 28 August 1994 to 22 December 1995 and from 3 December 1997 to 3 September 1998. For the sake of transparency, the Commission provided the parties with the list of reviewed cases. On 4 August, Morocco again expressed concern about the review issue. Additional appeals centres were opened in Morocco, Mauritania and the Territory and a second mobile centre was also opened in the Tindouf area to cover the El-Aiun, Dakhla and Awsard camps. As at 11 August, 18,914 persons had presented themselves to the centres and submitted 22,159 requests for file transcripts; 520 asked to consult their own original files and 1,999 appeals were filed.

On 20 and 21 July, the Interior Minister visited Laayoune and met with sheikhs, Moroccan observers and other officials. He addressed the public and noted that the provisional list contained 46,255 voters from Morocco (and the Territory), 33,786 from the Tindouf camps and 4,210 from Mauritania. He alleged bias by certain members of the Identification Commission.

Two issues caused delays in the identification operation for certain tribes in group H61, namely, the appointment of sheikhs and that of their advisers. Under the identification protocol, the parties were to appoint two sheikhs each for the identification of applicants from the Ait Ousa tribe, the first pair before 1 June and the second pair before 1 August. Morocco's appointment of the latter was awaited. With regard to the advisers to the sheikhs, the issue pertained only to the group of 13 tribes listed in the protocol. Morocco objected that the advisers designated by POLISARIO were not members of the tribes concerned. The Commission and the UN Secretariat were of the opinion that, under the protocol, the adviser who could be designated for each of the 13 tribes did not necessarily have to be a member of the tribe concerned. The identification of applicants from the group of tribes had to be postponed pending a resolution of the issue.

The Commission decided, with the consent of both parties, to deploy all available staff to the appeals process and to suspend identification operations for three weeks, starting on 2 August, because of the shortage of staff and the persisting problems in connection with the identification operations.

As at 9 August, the MINURSO military component stood at 230, while the civilian police component stood at 78. A draft proposal on the carriage of weapons prepared by MINURSO was under review by the UN Secretariat. Satisfactory progress was made in implementing the military agreements between MINURSO and each party on the marking and disposal of unexploded ordnance and related exchange of information.

A UNHCR mission visited Laayoune to discuss with MINURSO outstanding political issues, logistics planning, confidence-building measures and administrative matters. They both agreed on the need for a common approach and decided to hold a joint follow-up workshop in Laayoune in September. Morocco's Interior Minister expressed the Government's full support to enable UNHCR to complete its work for the return of refugees, as provided for in the settlement plan. The Special Representative, together with UNHCR, visited Tindouf and met with POLISARIO senior officials to review planning for the repatriation of refugees and other issues. The draft plan of action on confidence-building measures presented to the Security Council in June was submitted to the parties to secure their cooperation on implementation procedures and a time frame. The draft plan would be discussed with both parties in late August. Joint MINURSO-UNHCR road reconnaissance trips were carried out east and west of the berm. By early-August, 22,656 individuals (3,075 families) had been pre-registered in Camp El-Aiun. The pre-registration also resumed in Nouadhibou and Zouerate in northern Mauritania, where 548 individuals (121 families) were pre-registered.

The Secretary-General observed that it should be recognized that delays in solving certain issues in the identification operation, and the staggered opening of the appeals centres, compounded by difficulties in meeting staffing requirements, had affected parts of the timetable for the referendum process.

In an 8 September report [S/1999/954], the Secretary-General stated that his Special Representative had held consultations with both parties to secure the continuation of the appeals process and the simultaneous identification of the remaining applicants from tribal groupings H41, H61 and J51/52, as well as preparatory work for the repatriation of refugees and other Saharans residing outside the Territory who were eligible to vote. The consultations settled two outstanding issues in the identification process—the appointment by each side of a second Ait Ousa sheikh and the designation of advisers to the H61 sheikhs—which led to the resumption of identification operations. Identification Commission staff deployed to appeals centres in July and August were reassigned to identification operations after the closing of five appeals centres. As at 3 September, 47,796 appeals had been received by MINURSO and 14,750 applicants had accessed their identification files. The Commission provided 34,243 file transcripts to applicants. The majority of appeals received were against non-inclusion in the first part of the provisional list of persons eligible to vote. In accordance with the six-week period allotted, the Commission closed the receipt of appeals at the centres. At the same time, it continued the preparations for hearings on admissibility and substance of appeals. Shortage of qualified staff remained a major constraint and staffing requirements would be evaluated once the total number of appeals was known. In the meantime, OAU increased the strength of its observer delegation to MINURSO.

The strength of MINURSO's military component remained at 230, while the civilian police component stood at 80. An additional 25 police officers had been requested to assist the Commission. At the request of POLISARIO, due to its annual congress, the UNHCR pre-registration exercise in the Tindouf camps was suspended but was expected to resume on 10 September. The UNHCR plan of action for confidence-building measures was under discussion with the parties, as was the draft repatriation planning protocol. Discussions between MINURSO and the Moroccan authorities were in progress on modalities for implementing the status-of-forces agreement concerning the carriage of weapons by MINURSO troops.

As Emmanuel Roucounas (Greece), the Independent Jurist for Western Sahara since 1995, would no longer be able to serve in that capacity, the Secretary-General would appoint a new Independent Jurist in due course.

Given the delays that had occurred in the identification operations, the Secretary-General stated that he was not yet in a position to submit a revised timetable and financial implications, including recommendations that the Security Council authorize preparations for MINURSO's full deployment. In the meantime, he recommended that the Council consider extending MINURSO's mandate until 14 December 1999.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

The Security Council acted on the Secretary-General's recommendation to extend MINURSO's mandate by unanimously adopting, on 13 September [meeting 4044], resolution 1263(1999). The draft [S/1999/964] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,
Recalling all its previous resolutions on Western Sahara,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 8 September 1999 and the observations and recommendations contained therein,

Welcoming also the resumption of the identification of voters and the commencement of the appeals process,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara until 14 December 1999 in order to complete the identification of voters as envisaged in paragraph 21 of the report of the Secretary-General, to implement confidence-building measures and conclude all outstanding agreements needed to implement the settlement plan, and to continue with the appeals process, and reaffirms the rights of the applicants, with the expectation that the appeals process will not be turned into a second round of identification;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report every forty-five days on significant developments in the implementation of the settlement plan;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Security Council before the end of the current mandate a comprehensive assessment of steps taken towards the completion of the appeals process, and of staffing requirements as outlined in the report, as well as preparations for the repatriation of refugees and the start of the transitional period;

4. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Reports of Secretary-General (October and December). The Secretary-General, on 28 October [S/1999/1098], reported that his Special Representative continued to consult with both parties regarding the appeals process and the simultaneous identification of remaining applicants from "contested" tribal groupings and the preparatory work for the repatriation of refugees. The Secretary-General met with Morocco's Foreign Minister and POLISARIO's Coordinator with MINURSO at Headquarters on 29 September and 28 October, respectively. The number of applicants interviewed by the Identification Commission as at 22 October totalled 177,067. By the closing date for the submission of appeals on 18 September, MINURSO had received 79,125 appeals (a preliminary figure). Preliminary statistical analysis of the appeals showed that the overwhelming majority (65,072) were against exclusion from the first part of the provisional list of persons eligible to vote. An estimated 36 additional members of the Commission would be required, above the 30 authorized, to handle 80,000 appeals over a period of 10 to 12 months, which did not include eventual appeals from the individual applicants of the "contested" tribal groupings.

The number of refugees pre-registered in the Tindouf camps totalled 68,556 since the exercise began in 1998. The refugees continued to express their doubts of the UN ability to guarantee their safety and security during the transitional period under the settlement plan.

The Secretary-General observed that, with the large number of appeals submitted, there would be a lengthy appeals process involving almost all applicants rejected in the first instance, as well as a large number of applicants whose inclusion in the provisional voter list had been challenged. Depending on the results of MINURSO's analysis of the admissibility of those appeals, a thorough consideration would be needed of all relevant consequences relating to the application of the appeals procedures, to the staff, financial and other resources required, and to the timetable for holding the referendum.

In a 6 December report [S/1999/1219], the Secretary-General stated that his Special Representative met with Mauritania's President Maaouya Ould Sid'Ahmed Taya, POLISARIO Secretary-General Mohamed Abdelaziz, Algeria's Prime Minister and Foreign Minister and Morocco's King Mohammed VI, Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs and the new Minister of the Interior. All of them declared support for the settlement plan and Algeria, Mauritania and POLISARIO expressed concern about the prospect of delays caused by the large number of appeals. POLISARIO maintained that a large number of appeals could be eliminated by adhering strictly to the provisions concerning their admissibility. The Moroccan authorities invoked Security Council resolution 1263(1999), which reaffirmed the rights of the applicants to appeal. The Special Representative was continuing discussions with the Moroccan authorities on the appeals issue as well as on a new round of appeals after the issuance of the second provisional voter list.

Identification operations since 15 June 1999 from the tribal groupings H41, H61 and J51/52 had identified 42,774 applicants. A relatively small percentage of applicants from those groupings had been found eligible. On 30 November, the overall total of those identified since 1994 reached 190,023. MINURSO's preliminary analysis of the 79,000 appeals filed by applicants following the publication of the first part of the provisional voter list on 15 July indicated that: appeals were filed by almost all the applicants who did not meet the criteria; the great majority of the appeals filed indicated the names of witnesses who purportedly would provide, at the appeals hearings, new facts to support the applicants' claim for inclusion; the Commission was constrained in handling the appeals by the parties' radically opposed interpretations of the procedures regarding grounds for appeals and admissibility of applications; and the Special Representative had not received any indication that either party would change its view on the issue. The second part of the provisional list of the tribal groupings was expected in mid-January 2000 and could evoke a high number of appeals. Hearings on such numerous appeals posed serious logistical and organizational strains on the Commission.

On 23 November, POLISARIO's Secretary-General presented the Special Representative with a list of 191 Moroccan prisoners of war who had been freed that day on humanitarian grounds, from among those taken prisoner during the 1975-1989 Western Sahara armed conflict. The list was forwarded to the Government of Morocco and to the ICRC, which was available to organize their repatriation.

As at 2 December, MINURSO's military strength remained at 230 and the civilian police component stood at 81.

UNHCR held meetings with senior officials of Algeria, POLISARIO and Morocco concerning the repatriation of Saharan refugees. During the meetings, the parties reiterated their agreement, in principle, to the draft plan of action for the cross-border confidence-building measures pursuant to Security Council resolution 1238(1999). The number of refugees pre-registered in the camps since the beginning of the exercise in 1998 totalled 87,860. Regarding the draft refugee repatriation protocol, submitted to the parties pursuant to Security Council resolution 1204(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 196], UNHCR was not in a position to finalize such a document because of the absence of a solution to the outstanding issues.

The Secretary-General observed that the prospect of holding the referendum within a reasonable period of time was becoming more distant. The problems posed by the number of appeals and the opposing positions taken by the parties on the issue of admissibility seemed to allow little possibility of holding the referendum before 2002. He recommended that MINURSO's mandate be extended to 29 February 2000.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 14 December [meeting 4080], the Security Council adopted by vote (14-0-1) resolution 1282(1999). The draft text [S/1999/1239] was submitted by France, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on Western Sahara, in particular resolutions 1238(1999) of 14 May 1999 and 1263(1999) of 13 September 1999,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 6 December 1999 and the observations and recommendations contained therein,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara until 29 February 2000 in order to complete the identification of voters, issue a second provisional voters list, and initiate appeals for tribal groupings H41, H61 and J51/52;

2. Welcomes the reiteration by the parties of their agreement in principle to the draft plan of action for cross-border confidence-building measures, including person-to-person contacts, submitted pursuant to resolution 1238(1999), and calls on them to cooperate with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Mission for the initiation of these measures without further delay;

3. Takes note of the concern that the problems posed by the current number of candidates who have exercised their right of appeal and the opposing positions taken by the parties on the issue of admissibility seem to allow little possibility for holding the referendum before 2002 or even beyond, and supports the intention of the Secretary-General to instruct his Special Representative to continue his consultations with the parties on these issues, seeking a reconciliation of their opposing views regarding the appeals process, the repatriation of refugees and other crucial aspects of the United Nations settlement plan;

4. Takes note also of the assessment by the Secretary-General, however, that difficulties may be encountered in reconciling the opposing views of the parties, and therefore requests the Secretary-General to report before the end of the present mandate on prospects for progress in implementing the settlement plan within a reasonable period of time;

5. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

VOTE ON RESOLUTION 1282(1999):

In favour: Argentina, Bahrain, Brazil, Canada, China, France, Gabon, Gambia, Malaysia, Netherlands, Russian Federation, Slovenia, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Namibia.

Speaking before the vote, Namibia stated that it did not consider the text to represent faithfully the Secretary-General's December report. The text ignored crucial concerns expressed previously by the Council, the most obvious of which was that the appeals process should not be turned into a new round of identification. In addition, the text painted a negative picture that would send a wrong message to the international community.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, having considered the Secretary-General's report [A/54/337] summarizing developments in Western Sahara from 30 September 1998 to 31 August 1999, on the recommendation of the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee [A/54/584], adopted resolution 54/87 without vote [agenda item 18].

Further developments. The identification of applicants from the H41, H61 and J51/52 tribal groupings, which began on 15 June, was completed by MINURSO on 30 December as scheduled [S/2000/131].

UN Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara

The United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) reported that the situation remained calm during 1999 and that there had been no indications that either side intended to resume hostilities. Its military component's strength remained at 230 for most of the year. Under the command of Brigadier-General Claude Buze (Belgium), who was appointed Force Commander on 1 November [S/1999/1109, S/1999/1110], the military component continued to monitor the ceasefire between the Royal Moroccan Army and the POLISARIO forces, which came into effect on 6 September 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 7961. The strength of the civilian police component stood at 81 at the end of the year, under the command of Inspector General Om Prakash Rathor (India), who assumed his functions as the new Police Commissioner for MINURSO on 5 November. The civilian police continued to assist the Identification Commission at the identification centres.

Financing of MINURSO

In January [A/53/810], the Secretary-General reported on MINURSO's financial performance for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998. Expenditures totalled $40,878,900 gross ($39,062,500 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $6,523,200 gross ($5,357,200 net), attributable to the delayed deployment of contingent personnel and initial delays in the deployment of civilian personnel.

In a February report [A/53/820], the Secretary-General presented the proposed budget to maintain MINURSO for the 12-month period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, which amounted to $49,023,000 gross ($45,071,400 net). In a May report [A/53/943], ACABQ recommended that the General Assembly appropriate the requested amount subject to the Security Council's extension of MINURSO's mandate beyond 14 May 1999.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 June [meeting 101], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/544/Add.1], adopted resolution 53/18 B without vote [agenda item 125].

Financing of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 690(1991) of 29 April 1991, by which the Council decided to establish the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission, the latest of which was resolution 1238(1999) of 14 May 1999,

Recalling its resolution 45/266 of 17 May 1991 on the financing of the Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 53/18 A of 2 November 1998,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara as at 30 April 1999, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 59.3 million United States dollars, representing 17 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Mission to the period ending 31 March 1999, notes that some 6 per cent of the membership has paid its assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission in full and on time;

5. Takes note of the observations, and endorses the recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

8. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara the amount of 52,124,911 dollars gross (48,173,311 dollars net) for the operation of the Mission for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, inclusive of the amount of 2,593,381 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations and the amount of 508,530 dollars for the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy;

9. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion among Member States the amount of 10,714,566 dollars gross (9,902,291 dollars net) for the period from 1 July to 14 September 1999, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1999, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997;

10. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 812,275 dollars approved for the period from 1 July to 14 September 1999;

11. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion among Member States the amount of 41,410,345 dollars gross (38,271,020 dollars net) for the period from 15 September 1999 to 30 June 2000, at a monthly rate of 4,343,743 dollars gross (4,014,443 dollars net), in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution and the scale of assessments for the years 1999 and 2000, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A, and subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Mission beyond 14 September 1999;

12. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 11 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 3,139,325 dollars approved for the period from 15 September 1999 to 30 June 2000;

13. Decides further that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, there shall be set off against their apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 6,523,200 dollars gross (5,357,200 dollars net) in respect of the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998;

14. Decides that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, their share of the unencumbered balance of 6,523,200 dollars gross (5,357,200 dollars net) in respect of the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

15. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the agenda item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara".

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item on MINURSO financing remained for consideration at its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session (decision 54/465) and that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the item at that time (decision 54/462 A).

Other questions

Comoros

The Inter-Comorian Conference, convened by OAU in Antananarivo, Madagascar (19-23 April), resulted in the signing of the Antananarivo Agreement by all the Comorian parties with the exception of the Anjouanese side. The Agreement provided a framework for a lasting solution to the crisis in the Comoros, which began in 1997 with the announcement by the islands of Anjouan (Nzwani) and Mohéli (Mwali) of their secession, by establishing unity and territorial integrity. However, while efforts were being made to implement the Agreement, a coup d'etat took place in the Comoros on 30 April.

Communications. In a statement of 30 April [S/1999/568], Mali condemned the coup and appealed for the restoration of legitimacy, constitutional order, democratic institutions and the rule of law. It reiterated its support for OAU efforts to establish peace in the Comoros and implement the Addis Ababa Agreement [YUN 1998, p. 206] and the Antananarivo process. Mali called on all the Comorian parties to work together for the return of peace and national reconciliation.

On 10 May [S/1999/533], OAU transmitted to the Security Council a communique on the situation in the Comoros. OAU reiterated its unequivocal condemnation of the coup d'etat; reaffirmed its support for the Antananarivo Agreement; renewed its request to the Anjouanese Party to sign the Agreement; decided to withdraw the military component of the OAU Observer Mission in the Comoros; and called on all OAU member States and the international community to withhold any cooperation with the Comorian military authorities.

In a 2 July letter [S/1999/763], the Comoros updated the Security Council on the social and political developments since the intervention of the Comorian armed forces in April. It stated that its armed forces had gained the support of all sectors of the Comorian population, as well as the majority of the local political parties, and that dialogues and consultations that the new authorities undertook with the various sectors, including political parties, trade unions, village communities and civil society, had resulted in progress towards national reconciliation. The new national authorities reaffirmed their intention to respect the spirit of the Antananarivo Agreement as the guarantor of the peaceful co-existence of all Comorians. In a resolution, signed by a majority of political parties in the Comoros, OAU was requested to convene as early as possible the committee for the follow-up of the Agreement.

By decision 53/490 of 13 September, the General Assembly included in the draft agenda of its fifty-fourth (1999) session the item on the question of the Comorian island of Mayotte. On 17 December, the Assembly decided to defer consideration of the item and include it in the agenda of its fifty-fifth (2000) session (decision 54/439).

Cote d'Ivoire

On 25 December [S/1999/1288], Mali condemned the military coup d'etat that took place in Cote d'Ivoire on 24 December. It called on those responsible to return to constitutional legality, reiterated its strong solidarity with the people of Cote d'Ivoire and expressed its determination to support efforts to establish democratic legality in the country.

In identical 30 December letters to the Secretary-General and the Security Council [S/1999/1303], Mali transmitted the final communique of the first meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs members of the Mediation and Security Council of ECOWAS (Bamako, 29 December), which was devoted to the situation in Cote d'Ivoire and its implications for the subregion. The Ministers strongly condemned the military coup d'etat and urged the Ivorian Committee of National Salvation: to set up an independent structure to revise the Constitution and electoral code; to put in place a transition Government; to release all political detainees; and to respect and guarantee human rights throughout the country. The Ministers invited the military junta to ensure the safety of all ECOWAS citizens and foreigners resident in Cote d'Ivoire.

Mozambique

In accordance with decision 53/458 [YUN 1998, p. 206], the General Assembly retained on its agenda in 1999 the item on financing of the United Nations Operation in Mozambique (ONUMOZ). ONUMOZ began operations in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 196] and was liquidated in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 368].

On 13 September, the Assembly decided to include the item in the draft agenda of its fifty-fourth session (decision 53/495).

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session (decision 54/465) and that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the item at that session (decision 54/462 A).

Niger

On 9 April, a coup d'etat took place in the Niger during which the President, Ibrahim Mainassara Baré, was assassinated.

Communications. In a 12 April declaration [S/1999/418], Mali expressed its indignation regarding President Baré's assassination, which it condemned. Mali hoped that an inquiry would be opened on the circumstances of the assassination and appealed to Niger's political circles to uphold the Republic's legality and foster respect for democratic principles.

In a 14 April statement [S/1999/434], the EU condemned the coup d'etat and deplored the suspension of the 1996 Constitution and the dissolution of the elected Parliament and of the Government. It called on the military leadership to set a timetable for a return to democracy as quickly as possible. The EU was forced, in view of the major setback in the Niger's democratic development, to re-examine its cooperation with that country, in compliance with the mechanisms laid down by the Lome IV Convention (an updated trade pact between the European Economic Community and the African, Caribbean and Pacific Group [YUN 1975, p. 330]).

Cooperation between OAU and the UN system

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/91 [YUN 1998, p. 207], the Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/54/484] on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity (OAU). Since 1997, the Secretaries-General of the two organizations had carried out regular exchanges of information and mutual briefings on key African questions and had held meetings twice a year, along with their senior advisers. In 1999, such meetings were held during the OAU summit in Algiers in July and in New York in September to discuss priority areas of cooperation and coordination.

The Secretary-General summarized the cooperation of the two organizations in the areas of peace and security, involving the Department of Political Affairs, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights. He also reviewed cooperation in economic and social development, involving the Department of Economic and Social Affairs, the Economic Commission for Africa, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Population Fund, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the International Labour Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the World Intellectual Property Organization, the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization. The Universal Postal Union and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme were also cooperating with OAU.

On 29 September [A/54/424], Algeria transmitted to the Secretary-General the declarations and decisions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU during its summit in July.

On 17 November [A/54/621], the Chairman of the Group of African States at the United Nations transmitted to the Secretary-General the Sirte Declaration, adopted by OAU in September, which aimed to strengthen the unity of the African continent and its peoples.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/94 [draft: A/54/L.38 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 31].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, to which contains the Declaration on the Enhancement of Cooperation between the United Nations and Regional Arrangements or Agencies in the Maintenance of International Peace and Security,

Recalling also the agreement of 15 November 1965 on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity as updated and signed on 9 October 1990 by the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity,

Recalling further all its resolutions on the enhancement of cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, including resolution 53/91 of 7 December 1998,

Recalling that, in its resolutions 46/20 of 26 November 1991, 47/148 of 18 December 1992 and 48/25 of 29 November 1993, it, inter alia, urged the Secretary-General and the relevant agencies of the United Nations system to continue to extend their support for the establishment of the African Economic Community,

Deeply concerned that, despite the policies of reform being implemented by African countries, their economic situation remains critical and African recovery and development continue to be severely hindered by, inter alia, the persistence of lower commodity prices and the heavy debt burden, and they are substantially affected by the levels of official development assistance and foreign direct investment, as well as the ongoing conflicts in some regions of the continent,

Aware of the efforts being made by the Organization of African Unity and its member States in the area of economic integration and of the need to accelerate the process of implementation of the Treaty establishing the African Economic Community,

Recalling the convening of the Organization of African Unity Ministerial Conference on Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Africa at Khartoum, on 13 and 14 December 1998,

Regional cooperation

By a 28 January letter to the Security Council [S/1999/89], Uganda transmitted the text of the joint communique of the East African heads of State summit (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 22 January) on African regional cooperation.

On 24 November [A/54/636-S/1999/1201], Gabon transmitted to the Secretary-General the final communique of the summit of heads of State, Government and delegation of the Gulf of Guinea (Libreville, 19 November). The participants agreed to establish a consultation framework for cooperation among and the development of the countries of the Gulf of Guinea for the prevention, management and settlement of conflicts among them, to be known as the Commission of the Gulf of Guinea.

On 29 November [S/1999/1206], the Intergovernmental Authority on Development transmitted to the Security Council a declaration on subregional cooperation, trust-building among members States and the resolution of conflicts in the subregion (Djibouti, 26 November).

Chapter III

Americas

During 1999, the United Nations continued to advance the cause of lasting peace, human rights, sustainable development and the rule of law in the Americas. The Organization monitored the political and security situation in Central America; with the exception of Haiti, progress had been made in the consolidation of stability and greater democratization throughout the sub-region.

The United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala (MINUGUA), established in 1994, continued to fulfil its mandate by verifying compliance with the implementation of the peace accords signed in 1996 between the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca. In December, the General Assembly extended the mandate of MINUGUA until 31 December 2000. The Commission for Historical Clarification submitted its report on the human rights violations that had been committed during the 34-year internal armed conflict. General elections, held in November and December, culminated with the election of Alfonso Portillo as President.

Haiti continued to experience a serious political and institutional crisis, which stalled the implementation of structural reforms and contributed to a worsening of the human rights situation. General elections, scheduled for November, were postponed to March 2000. In view of the situation, the United Nations continued its cooperation in 1999 with the Organization of American States through the jointly fielded International Civilian Mission to Haiti (MICIVIH), established in 1993 to monitor the human rights situation. The United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti (MIPONUH), established in 1997, supervised, supported and trained the Haitian National Police. In December, the General Assembly established the International Civilian Support Mission in Haiti (MICAH) to consolidate the responsibilities of MIPONUH and MICIVIH into one mission. In view of the fact that MIPONUH's mandate was to expire on 30 November 1999, the Security Council decided to continue the Mission to ensure a phased transition to MICAH by 15 March 2000. The Assembly also decided that MICIVIH's mandate would terminate with the commencement of MICAH.

Throughout the year, the UN system actively participated in the reconstruction process following the devastation brought about by hurricane Mitch, which struck the region in late 1998 (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

In November 1999, the General Assembly again called on States to refrain from promulgating laws and measures such as the ongoing United States economic embargo against Cuba.

Central America

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 53/94 [YUN 1998, p. 212], the Secretary-General submitted a September 1999 report on the situation in Central America [A/54/311], covering progress achieved by Central American countries in the areas of peace, freedom, democracy and development since August 1998. The report focused on the five signatories to the Esquipulas II process [YUN 1987, p. 188] (Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua). In accordance with the new Central American agenda and the composition of Central American summit meetings, reference was also made to the situation in Belize and Panama.

The Secretary-General said that, in spite of challenges to stability, including the devastation caused by hurricane Mitch in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 876], increasingly plural and democratic political processes continued to develop in the region. New Governments were democratically elected in Belize (26 August 1998), El Salvador (7 March 1999) and Panama (2 May 1999). In Guatemala, a national referendum on constitutional reform was peacefully and transparently conducted on 16 May. High participation in the Panamanian elections (76 per cent) continued to be an exception, however, and it was hoped that national and regional attention would focus increasingly on mechanisms to broaden citizen participation in the electoral process, particularly with regard to women and indigenous people. The vitality and inclusiveness of democratic governance in Central America was a fundamental counterpart to ongoing efforts to achieve economic growth, stability and equity, added the Secretary-General.

Public security in the region was threatened by the continued escalation in the rate of common crime and social violence, compounded by regional and international criminal networks. Irregularities and long delays in the processing of accused persons undermined public confidence in the judicial process. Attacks by vigilante groups on persons suspected of common crimes were reported. Violence against women continued to be an acute problem, although institutions had been created or strengthened to protect women's security and rights. Civilian police forces with limited resources had struggled to respond adequately to the public security crisis and had suffered increasing losses of officers in the line of duty, particularly in El Salvador. In spite of those trends, advances had been made in bringing public security forces under civilian control. To that end, in El Salvador, the Government had sought to strengthen prevention policy and to affirm the role of the National Council for Public Security. In Honduras, the National Assembly had ratified reforms that consolidated the transition to civilian command of the armed forces. With regard to Guatemala, the process of strengthening the capacity and expanding the deployment of the new National Civil Police continued, while constitutional reforms aimed at redefining the role of the military were still pending.

Regional and extraregional cooperation on a range of shared security and human rights issues, including illegal drug trafficking, migration, anti-personnel landmines and arms trafficking, had been recurring themes addressed through the presidential and ministerial summit process, including a meeting with the Presidents of the United States (March), the European Union (EU) (May/June) and the Organization of American States (OAS) (June). In January, the Secretary-General of the Central American Integration System (SICA) signed an agreement of cooperation with the International Organization for Migration, which called for joint action in several areas, including regional norms development and the human rights of the migrant population, with a focus on women and children.

Across the region there were indications of a growing gap in human development between zones of relative affluence in the capitals and principal cities and the extreme poverty of marginalized rural and urban areas. Related patterns of social inequality and exclusion between social groups were reflected in regional data on distribution of income and access to employment, health and education. Indigenous peoples, representing 20 per cent of the Central American population (80 per cent of whom lived in Guatemala), and women in particular suffered high rates of socio-economic and political exclusion. The Central American Governments also had to contend with regional disparities among their countries in terms of human development, economic performance and their respective political and legal frameworks, all of which were obstacles to achieving integrated and sustainable arrangements for economic growth and stable political processes.

The reconstruction and transformation process following hurricane Mitch, the worst natural disaster to strike the region in over a century, dominated the regional agenda during the year. A report by the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) revealed that the hurricane had left more than 9,000 dead and affected 24 per cent of the regional population, or almost 7 million people, including 77 per cent of the population of Honduras and 19 per cent of the Nicaraguan people, resulting in the displacement and migration of victims, principally to Costa Rica and the United States.

At the first meeting of the Consultative Group on Reconstruction and Transformation (Washington, D.C., 10-11 December 1998), convened by the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB), the international community pledged $6 billion in disaster relief, reconstruction assistance and debt forgiveness. At the follow-up meeting of the Consultative Group (Stockholm, Sweden, 25-28 May), pledges for $9 billion were made, including $5.3 billion from the World Bank and IDB, and the remainder in the form of bilateral assistance. In addition to national proposals, the Central American countries presented a joint reconstruction plan within the framework of SICA that focused on reducing environmental, economic and social vulnerabilities and on deepening the Central American integration process. Participants at the meeting expressed, through the Stockholm Declaration, the shared commitments to reduce the social and ecological vulnerability of the peoples of the region; reconstruct and transform Central America on the basis of an integrated focus on transparency and governance; consolidate democracy and good governance; promote human rights; coordinate donor activities; and renew efforts to reduce the external debt of countries in the region. Special meetings of the Central American Presidents were held in February and March. The latter summit, which took place in Antigua, Guatemala, resulted in the Antigua Declaration, which, among other things, recognized the impact of hurricane Mitch. (See also PART THREE, Chapter III.)

the gross national product (GNP) of the region grew by 4.4 per cent compared with 4.3 per cent in 1997. The slight improvement was due to the growth of external demand, capital inflows and a sustained effort to increase capital investment. The capacity of Governments to transform underlying structural problems in order to permit sustainable economic growth depended in particular on reducing external debt. In June, the Group of Eight countries (Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States) made commitments of substantial relief, particularly for Honduras and Nicaragua, which were also being considered for inclusion in the International Monetary Fund/World Bank Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative.

On 28 and 29 May, Mexico hosted the thirteenth summit of the Rio Group, with heads of State from Latin America and the Caribbean. Global financial turbulence, the acute socioeconomic situation of the Central American countries and rapid multilateral disaster response for Central America dominated the agenda. The Rio Group met with EU representatives (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 28-29 June) and adopted the Rio Declaration, which confirmed shared principles and goals regarding trade integration, as well as mutual commitment to the preservation of democratic institutions and to free, just and open electoral processes. The Central American Governments maintained their commitments to the agenda set forth in the Santiago Declaration of April 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 211], in order to establish a free trade area of the Americas by 2005.

Regional institution-building efforts continued with further consolidation in the role of SICA, the Central American Economic Integration Secretariat and the Central American Economic Integration Bank. The system of regional institutions was further expanded to include the Central American Court of Justice. The Presidents agreed to meet at least once a year to make strategic and political decisions on integration, while a Council of Ministers had operated as the main decision-making body on the integration of foreign affairs, economy, social affairs and the environment.

At the twenty-ninth regular session of OAS (Guatemala City, 6-8 June), participants adopted, among other things, a resolution regarding the ongoing mine-clearing programme in Central America, noting the setback to operations as a result of hurricane Mitch. That objective had also been given renewed support with OAS participation in the Joint Declaration on the Elimination of Anti-personnel Landmines, signed at a meeting of the Central American Ministers of External Relations (Managua, Nicaragua, 12-13 April).

As for UN efforts in Central America, the Secretary-General stated that the United Nations remained committed to the process of peace-building. In El Salvador, he continued to entrust the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) with following up on the implementation of outstanding commitments of the 1992 Peace Agreement [YUN 1992, p. 222] and to assist the Government to that end.

In Guatemala, the United Nations continued to verify compliance with the 1996 Agreement on a Firm and Lasting Peace [YUN 1996, p. 168]. UNDP worked with distinct sectors of society to promote democratic governance, sustainable human development and capacity-building at the regional level, while at the national level it continued to support the consolidation of peace and consensus-building in El Salvador, Guatemala and Nicaragua. It also played an important role in preventing or minimizing future social conflict by facilitating the demobilization and integration of ex-combatants and by strengthening the civilian police force. In Guatemala and Nicaragua, UNDP promoted pilot projects for the creation of "judicial centres" where citizens could find the police, the local judge and magistrates and legal assistance (including informal means of conflict resolution) in a single, highly visible location. Regarding hurricane Mitch, in January and February the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Assistance, UNDP, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the World Health Organization and the Pan American Health Organization undertook an inter-agency evaluation mission to analyse, along with Governments, donors, disaster managers and UN system partners, action taken during the emergency and to formulate guidelines to enhance preparedness for future natural disasters. Consultations between SICA and the United Nations focused on launching a new phase of more intense collaboration, building on previous experiences and including the development of new national and regional initiatives. UN agencies continued to assist Governments in achieving diverse objectives that contributed to lasting peace and sustainable development. The World Bank hosted the fourth annual Conference on Development in Latin America and the Caribbean (El Salvador, June). The Bank confirmed that structural adjustment policies had not been sufficient to diminish poverty and improve the quality of life in the region; those policies needed to be complemented by further institutional reform, including the areas of justice and education.

The Secretary-General observed that, although Governments and their peoples continued to advance the cause of lasting peace, human rights, sustainable development and the rule of law, Governments still faced difficulties, particularly in reconciling the imperatives of economic growth, stability and equity. Successfully balancing those needs was at the root of lasting peace. The Secretary-General hoped that the alarming levels of social and criminal violence would continue to be addressed by Governments through strengthened civilian police, more efficient judicial systems, independent ombudsmen and permanent respect for human rights and the rule of law. He supported the efforts of the international community to reduce external debt significantly and to provide emergency and long-term aid.

Communication. On 17 November [A/54/630], Belize, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama transmitted the Declaration of Guatemala II, signed by them in Guatemala City on 19 October. They agreed to adopt the Strategic Framework for the Reduction of Vulnerability and Disasters in Central America and to establish the Central American Five-Year Plan for the Reduction of Vulnerability to and the Impact of Disasters (2000-2004). They also agreed to support foreign debt relief for Honduras and Nicaragua. The Declaration, among other things, expressed support for the full transfer of control of the Panama Canal to the Government of Panama, scheduled to take place on 31 December 1999, and for an effective mechanism to settle trade and investment disputes in an institutional framework.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 80], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/118 [draft: A/54/L.24/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 47].

The situation in Central America: procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace and progress in fashioning a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development

The General Assembly,

Considering the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, particularly resolution 637(1989) of 27 July 1989, and its own resolutions, particularly resolution 43/24 of 15 November 1988, in which it requests the Secretary-General to continue his good offices and to afford the fullest possible support to the Central American Governments in their efforts to achieve the objectives of peace, reconciliation, democracy, development and justice established in the agreement on "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America" of 7 August 1987,

Reaffirming its resolutions in which it recognizes and stresses the importance of international economic, financial and technical cooperation and assistance, both bilateral and multilateral, aimed at promoting economic and social development in the region with a view to furthering and supplementing the efforts of the Central American peoples and Governments to achieve peace and democratization, particularly resolution 52/169 G of 16 December 1997, concerning international assistance to and cooperation with the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America, as well as its resolution 53/1 C of 2 November 1998, concerning emergency assistance to Central America, owing to the destruction caused by hurricane Mitch,

Emphasizing the importance of the development of the Central American Integration System, which has as its main objective the promotion of the integration process; the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America as the integrated programme for national and regional development, which contains the commitments and priorities of the countries of the area for the promotion of sustainable development; the establishment of the subsystem and of the regional social policy; the model of democratic Central American security; and the implementation of other agreements adopted at the presidential summit meetings, which taken together constitute the global frame of reference for consolidating peace, freedom, democracy and development and the basis for the promotion of mutually advantageous relations between Central America and the international community,

Recognizing the progress made in the fulfilment of the commitments contained in the Guatemala Peace Agreements, implementation of which is being verified by the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala, including the submission of the report of the Commission for Historical Clarification, the finalization of the programme for the repatriation of the Guatemalan refugees in Mexico, the compliance with the expenditure ceilings contained in the Agreements, the expansion of the deployment of the new National Civil Police, the approval by the Congress of the new Land Act and the establishment of the Office for the Defence of Indigenous Women,

Taking note with satisfaction of the successful implementation of the Peace Agreements and of the consolidation of the process of democratization in El Salvador, as a result of the efforts of the country's people and Government,

Recognizing with satisfaction the role played by the peacekeeping operations and observer and monitoring missions of the United Nations, which carried out successfully their mandate in Central America pursuant to the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly, respectively,

Welcoming the changes and progress made by the Central American peoples, whose efforts have brought about, inter alia, the strengthening of civil society and authority, the creation of new political forms, the holding of free and pluralistic elections, the creation of mechanisms for the protection and promotion of human rights, freedom of expression, the strengthening of democratic institutions and of the rule of law, judicial reform processes and the adoption of a fairer development model providing greater opportunities for the Central American peoples,

Emphasizing the importance of the end of a critical period in Central American history and the start of a new phase free from armed conflict, with freely elected Governments in each country and with political, economic, social and other changes which can create a climate conducive to the promotion of economic growth and further progress towards the consolidation and further development of democratic, just and equitable societies,

Reaffirming that firm and lasting peace and democracy in Central America are a dynamic and ongoing process that faces serious structural challenges, whose continuation and consolidation are closely related to progress in human development, especially the alleviation of extreme poverty, the promotion of economic and social justice, judicial reform, the safeguarding of human rights and fundamental freedoms, respect for minorities and the satisfaction of the basic needs of the most vulnerable groups among the peoples of the region, issues which have been a primary source of tension and conflict and which deserve to be discussed with the same urgency and dedication as was the case in the settlement of armed conflicts,

Deeply concerned by the devastating effects of hurricane Mitch and other natural disasters on the population and economies of the region's countries and by the possible consequences of a significant setback as regards the efforts of the Central American peoples and the international community to overcome the aftermath of the armed conflicts and as regards the progress made with respect to political stability, democratization and sustainable development,

Emphasizing the solidarity of the international community with the victims of hurricane Mitch, as demonstrated by friendly States' generous response to the emergency situation and in particular by the meetings of the Consultative Group for the Reconstruction and Transformation of Central America, held in Washington, D.C., in December 1998 and in Stockholm in May 1998, resulting in the Stockholm Declaration, in which the objectives and principles of reconstruction and transformation were established, and of which five countries agreed to initiate the follow-up process,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Commends the efforts of the peoples and the Governments of the Central American countries to re-establish peace and democracy throughout the region and promote sustainable development by implementing the commitments adopted at the summit meetings, and supports the decision of the presidents that Central America should become a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development;

3. Recognizes the need to continue to follow closely the situation in Central America according to the objectives and principles established in the Stockholm Declaration in order to support national and regional efforts to overcome the underlying causes that have led to armed conflicts, avoid setbacks and consolidate peace and democratization in the area and promote the objectives of the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America, especially in the transitional period for overcoming the devastating effects of hurricane Mitch and other natural disasters, which entail extraordinary efforts for the reconstruction and transformation of the worst affected countries in the region, in particular Honduras and Nicaragua;

4. Emphasizes the importance of the global frame of reference and the establishment of national and regional development priorities as the basis for promoting the effective, consistent and sustainable progress of the Central American peoples, and for providing international cooperation in accordance with the new circumstances in and outside the region;

5. Welcomes the progress achieved in implementing the Guatemala Peace Agreements, calls upon all parties to take further measures to implement the commitments in the Peace Agreements, and urges all sectors of society to combine efforts and work with courage and determination to consolidate peace;

6. Also welcomes the efforts made by the people and the Government of El Salvador to fulfil the commitments set forth in the Peace Agreements, thus contributing substantially to the strengthening of the democratization process in the country;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, the bodies and programmes of the United Nations system and the international community to continue to support and verify in Guatemala the implementation of all the peace agreements signed under United Nations auspices, compliance with which is an essential condition for a firm and lasting peace in that country;

8. Recognizes the importance of the Central American Integration System as the body set up to coordinate and harmonize efforts to achieve integration, a process aimed at establishing, gradually and progressively, the Central American Union, and calls upon the international community, the United Nations system and other international organizations, both governmental and non-governmental, to extend generous and effective cooperation with a view to improving the competence and efficiency of the Central American Integration System in the fulfilment of its mandate;

9. Encourages the Central American Governments to continue to carry out their historic responsibilities by fully implementing the commitments they have assumed under national, regional or international agreements, especially the commitments to implement the social programme to overcome poverty and unemployment, establish a more just and equitable society, improve public safety, strengthen the judiciary, consolidate a modern and transparent public administration and eliminate corruption, impunity, acts of terrorism and drug and arms trafficking, all of which are necessary and urgent measures for establishing a firm and lasting peace in the region;

10. Reiterates its deep appreciation to the Secretary-General, his special representatives, the groups of countries for the peace processes in El Salvador (Colombia, Mexico, Spain, United States of America and Venezuela), and Guatemala (Colombia, Mexico, Norway, Spain, United States of America and Venezuela), to the Support Group for Nicaragua (Canada, Mexico, Netherlands, Spain and Sweden), to the European Union and to other countries that have contributed significantly and to the international community in general for its support and solidarity in the building of peace, democracy and development in Central America;

11. Reaffirms the importance of international cooperation, in particular cooperation with the bodies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system, and the donor community in the new stage of consolidating peace and democracy in Central America, and urges them to continue to support Central American efforts to achieve those goals, bearing in mind the global framework of the new regional development strategy, which is in keeping with the collective aspirations and needs of the Central American peoples;

12. Notes with appreciation the demonstrations of international solidarity and support for the region's reconstruction and transformation efforts following the severe damage caused by hurricane Mitch, which will enable the region to attain normality and continue its efforts to consolidate democracy and attain sustainable development;

13. Reaffirms the need to maintain sustained assistance to the region in order to create the conditions needed for balance between the challenges of reconstruction, economic growth and equitable social development that will ensure firm and lasting peace in the region, and stresses the need to improve preparedness and the integration of natural disaster reduction components into development planning;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to lend his full support to the initiatives and activities of the Central American Governments, particularly their efforts to consolidate peace and democracy through the implementation of a new, comprehensive sustainable development programme and the initiative to establish the Central American Union, emphasizing, inter alia, the potential repercussions of natural disasters, in particular of hurricane Mitch, for the peace processes and the vulnerable economies of the region, and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "The situation in Central America: procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace and progress in fashioning a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development".

On 23 December, the Assembly, by decision 54/465, decided that the agenda item on the situation in Central America remained for consideration during its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session.

Guatemala

In 1999, the peace process in Guatemala continued to be implemented and gained greater support and acceptance throughout all sectors of society, despite delays and setbacks in fiscal, judicial and military reforms and a worsening human rights situation. The year also witnessed two major events as far as reconciliation and parliamentary representation were concerned: the presentation of the report of the Commission for Historical Clarification, established in 1994 to clarify the human rights violations and acts of violence connected with the armed conflict [YUN 1994, p. 407], and the holding of general elections.

The United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala (MINUGUA) continued to verify the implementation of the 1996 Agreement on a Firm and Lasting Peace [YUN 1996, p. 168] and the 1996 Agreement on the Implementation, Compliance and Verification Timetable for the Peace Agreements (the Timetable Agreement) [YUN 1997, p. 176], signed by the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca (URNG). The Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly reports by the MINUGUA Director covering the Mission's activities throughout 1999. The Assembly renewed the mandate of the Mission until 31 December 2000.

Commission for Historical Clarification

On 23 April, the Secretary-General transmitted the executive summary, conclusions and recommendations of the report of the Commission for Historical Clarification (CEH), "Guatemala: Memory of Silence" [A/53/928]. The report contained the results of the investigation carried out by CEH on human rights violations and acts of violence that had been committed during the 34-year civil war. The Commission registered a total of 42,275 victims, of whom 23,671 were victims of arbitrary execution and 6,159 of forced disappearance. Eighty-three per cent of the victims were identified as Mayan and 17 per cent were Ladino. Together with the results of other studies of political violence in Guatemala, CEH estimated that the number of persons killed or disappeared reached over 200,000. Human rights violations and acts of violence attributable to State actions represented 93 per cent of those registered by CEH, and were especially severe from 1978 to 1984, a period during which 91 per cent of the CEH documented violations were committed. Eighty-five per cent of the violations and acts registered by CEH were attributable to the Army alone and 18 per cent to the Civil Patrols, which were organized by the armed forces. Acts of violence attributable to the guerrillas represented 3 per cent of the registered violations. Human rights violations committed by the State included massacres of the Mayan people, forced disappearances, arbitrary executions, rape of women, the use of death squads, the denial of justice and forced and discriminatory military recruitment. CEH concluded that State agents, within the framework of counter-insurgency operations carried out between 1981 and 1983, committed acts of genocide against groups of Mayan people. Guerrilla groups had carried out arbitrary executions, massacres, forced disappearances and kidnapping and forced recruitment. Private individuals also committed acts of violence in defence of their own interests and were generally economically powerful people at either the national or local level.

CEH presented a series of recommendations relating to reparatory measures, including the creation of a national reparation programme for the victims and their relatives, a search for the disappeared and an active exhumation policy; measures to foster a culture of mutual respect and observance of human rights; measures to strengthen the democratic process; and the promotion of peace and national harmony. In order to fulfil its recommendations, CEH recommended that the Guatemalan Congress establish a body responsible for implementing and monitoring its recommendations under the name of "Foundation for Peace and Harmony". It presented the Foundation's mandate, composition, appointment procedure, constitution, installation, period of operation, human and material resources and financing. CEH asked the Secretary-General to lend his support, through MINUGUA, so that its recommendations might be implemented. It also asked him to appoint the Foundation's independent member and to establish an international mechanism to provide the Foundation with technical support and to channel donations from the international community.

The Secretary-General stated in November that human rights organizations, a large part of organized civil society and URNG had endorsed the report [A/54/526]. The Government, although it appreciated the Commission's work, disagreed with the recommendation to establish a commission to purify the armed forces and a foundation to follow up the implementation of CEH recommendations, on the grounds that their mandates would duplicate the mandates of other entities involved in the peace process. With regard to the Foundation, the Government later stated that it was open to other options involving the participation of representatives of organized social sectors. On 9 April, under the auspices of the Council for Human Rights, a large group of organizations of civil society agreed to form the Multi-institutional Forum for Peace and Harmony, to advance the implementation of the Commission's recommendations and, especially, the establishment of a Foundation for Peace and Harmony.

Regarding the Commission's request to the Secretary-General, MINUGUA had helped disseminate the report and had used its good offices to secure an agreement between the Government and organizations of civil society on setting up the Foundation. The Secretary-General expressed his intention to appoint the independent member and establish the international technical support mechanism once the Foundation's rules of procedure had been determined. He was of the opinion that it was essential to establish a forum made up of State bodies and organizations of civil society to assume jointly the task of reconciliation. The forum could give priority to actions recommended by CEH, including promotion of and support for historical research; the search for the disappeared; measures to honour and preserve the memory of the victims; compensation for the victims; the initiation of a policy of exhumation; the promotion of a culture of mutual respect; and the formulation and promotion of a legislative agenda based on the CEH report.

MINUGUA

The mandate of MINUGUA, which was extended to 31 December 1999 by General Assembly resolution 53/93 [YUN 1998, p. 221], included verification of all agreements signed by the Government of Guatemala and URNG covering human rights, the parties' compliance with the ceasefire, separation and concentration of the respective forces, and disarmament and demobilization of former URNG combatants. The Mission's functions also comprised good offices, advisory and support services and public information. The parties to the agreements had requested that the duration of the mandate of MINUGUA be the same as that of the implementation timetable, namely four years, up to 31 December 2000.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 53/93, the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/54/355] covering the state of implementation of the peace agreements (see p. 201) and the structure and staffing of MINUGUA. He said that the Mission's configuration was well suited to the multiple and varied tasks with which it was charged, and, therefore, he proposed that only a modest change in its regional structure be made in 2000. The change, which would contemplate a geographical redeployment of the Mission's regional structure and not a change in geographical coverage, would result in a more flexible distribution of resources. Accordingly, the Mission would close three sub-offices and increase its capacity for flexibility by introducing an additional (third) mobile office. The number of coordinators and political affairs officers (8 and 25, respectively) would remain unchanged. The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly authorize the renewal of MINUGUA's mandate for a further period of one year, until 31 December 2000. He noted that the financial requirements, inclusive of support staff and operational costs for the period from 1 January to 31 December 2000, were estimated at $31.4 million.

Verification of compliance

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/93, the Secretary-General, in November, submitted his fourth report [A/54/526] on the verification of compliance with the agreements signed by the Government of Guatemala and URNG [YUN 1996, p. 168].

The implementation of the commitments entered into by the two parties was governed by the Timetable Agreement [YUN 1997, p. 176], which divided the period from 1997 to 2000 into three phases. The report covered part of the third phase (1998-2000), from 1 August 1998 to 31 August 1999, which coincided with the last year in office of the Government of President Alvaro Arzú, the signatory of most of the peace agreements, and with the period leading up to the general elections of 7 November 1999. In the light of those circumstances, the Secretary-General not only reviewed the verification results for the reporting period, but also included general conclusions on compliance with each agreement and recommendations on the outstanding peace agenda. At the beginning of the year, the Commission to Follow up the Implementation of the Peace Agreements had established seven priorities for 1999 that included the commitments to give sustainability to the reconstruction effort undertaken in the wake of hurricane Mitch (see PART THREE, Chapter III), the preparation of various legislative bills related to the constitutional reform adopted by the Congress in October 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 218], fiscal matters, rural development, compensation, civic participation and coordination and consultation, including monitoring the work of the commissions set up under the peace agreements.

Compliance with the 1994 Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights [YUN 1994, p. 407] included the institution on 12 April 1999 of a National Programme of Compensation for and/or Assistance to the Victims of Human Rights Violations during the Armed Conflict to provide compensation and/or assistance through civic, socio-economic and moral reparation programmes and projects. Pilot projects initiated prior to the formulation of the Programme confirmed that compensation was a complex matter for a country emerging from almost four decades of armed conflict, with a toll of some 200,000 dead and disappeared persons. Nonetheless, the Secretary-General said the State had a legal and moral duty towards the victims and, therefore, it was important to extend the Compensation Programme through the year 2000 and subsequent years as a continuing, long-term effort.

Regarding compliance with the 1994 Agreement on Resettlement of the Population Groups Uprooted by the Armed Conflict [YUN 1994, p. 407], during the period under review 5,853 Guatemalan refugees were repatriated. The process of organized return of the Guatemalan refugees in Mexico ended on 30 June 1999. Some 43,000 refugees had been repatriated during the past 15 years, while 22,000 who were still living in Mexico had chosen to remain there. Access to land and legal security of tenure were priority issues for the uprooted population and key areas in the implementation of the Agreement. As to the internally displaced population, 1,500 families had applied for assistance in the purchase of 23 estates; as at 31 October, two estates had been purchased. A number of factors continued to imperil the resettlement process, including the absence of land management and micro-regional development plans. There were worrisome delays in implementing commitments on productive integration in the context of regional policies of sustainable development and strengthening the system of development councils.

As to the 1994 Agreement on the Establishment of the Commission to Clarify Past Human Rights Violations and Acts of Violence That Have Caused the Guatemalan Population to Suffer [YUN 1994, p. 407], the Secretary-General, on 25 February, received and made public the CEH report entitled "Guatemala: Memory of Silence" (see p. 199).

Under the 1995 Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples [YUN 1995, p. 432], priority was given to the continuation of consultations between the Government and indigenous organizations on the Agreement's implementation. The Joint Commission on Land Rights reached agreement on a preliminary bill establishing the Land Trust Fund, which was approved by the Congress on 13 May. The Act established the principal mechanism for facilitating access to land ownership for peasants who possessed no land or insufficient land. The Office for the Defence of Indigenous Women's Rights was established within the Presidential Commission for Coordinating Executive Policy in the Field of Human Rights. The Office would have administrative, technical and financial management capacities and the power to promote and develop, together with governmental entities, proposals for public policy and plans and programmes for the prevention of, protection against and eradication of all forms of violence and discrimination against indigenous women.

Commitments to ensure the sustainability of the reconstruction activities undertaken in the wake of hurricane Mitch were emphasized under the 1996 Agreement on Social and Economic Aspects and the Agrarian Situation [YUN 1996, p. 165]. A Fiscal Pact Preparatory Commission was established in March 1999 as part of the fiscal pact process, which was responsible, among other things, for preventing a decline in tax collection. The Secretary-General said that a decision on ending the prolonged fiscal stalemate could not be delayed any longer without serious consequences for social and institutional development and, therefore, for governability.

Among positive aspects of government action in the area of rural development were the definition by the Ministry of Agriculture, Livestock and Food of areas for long-term strategic action and of priorities for 1999 based on the key elements of the peace agreements; the submission of a document on national agrarian policy which contained components for the definition of a rural development strategy; the modernization of the Ministry; the adoption by the Congress of the Land Trust Fund Act; the increase in public investment in rural areas; the beginning of the process of regulating public land; the execution of pilot land registry plans; the expansion of forestry incentives; and the continuation of consultations between the Government and indigenous organizations within the Joint Commission on Rights relating to Indigenous Peoples' Land. Scant progress was made in launching comprehensive land management plans in both urban and rural areas which took into account multiculturalism and indigenous communities' forms of land ownership. That situation was a matter of concern since a substantial part of the damage caused by hurricane Mitch occurred because of the absence of such plans. The land registry process had made limited progress and was extremely weak, owing to its excessive dependence on external resources and the very limited allocation of national funds.

In the health sector, progress had been made in the commitment to allocate a higher percentage of spending to preventive health, which had improved the health infrastructure and had expanded the coverage of health services, especially in rural areas, despite the fact that there was still a need to reduce the rate of infant mortality. The results achieved were due in large measure to the creation of the Integrated Health Care System (SIAS), which, in less than two years, had provided services throughout the country to low-income people. At times, though, the quality of the SIAS services was somewhat deficient, due to a shortage of medicines, equipment and basic supplies and a lack of training on the part of its rank-and-file workers. Accordingly, the Secretary-General called on SIAS to consolidate its institutions, learn to do without the voluntary work of community staff, overcome its dependence on cooperation workers from Cuba, and improve its agreements with non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in terms of time frame, payments, monitoring and supervision.

In the education sector, the goal of increasing the amount of public spending actually disbursed was achieved in 1998 and progress had been made in reducing illiteracy, in educational support programmes and in increasing educational coverage, especially in rural areas. Nevertheless, progress had been hindered because the target of access for all those between the ages of 7 and 12 to at least three years of schooling by the year 2000 had not been achieved; although there was an overall reduction in illiteracy, the rates for the indigenous population remained higher than for the rest of the population; and little progress had been made in fulfilling other commitments, such as the execution of a national programme of civic education and providing out-of-school education and training. The National Programme for Educational Self-Management provided support for over 175,000 children in 1998, mainly in rural areas, thereby narrowing the traditional gap between urban and rural educational coverage. The Secretary-General stressed that the urgency of instituting educational reform required greater efforts by all sectors involved.

With regard to housing, coverage had increased and the commitment to allocate 1.5 per cent of annual tax revenues to that sector had been fulfilled, although the quality of the service provided was very poor. The Secretary-General noted that there was a need to reformulate completely the policy for access to low-income housing, since the current regulatory framework did not include the components established in the peace agreements. The Government had implemented an emergency agenda for the post-hurricane Mitch reconstruction period that had helped repair the damage to the economic infrastructure and to solve some of the most pressing social problems in the areas affected, including health, loss of jobs and temporary housing. However, important components of the reconstruction effort had been carried out without respect for the provisions of the peace agreements. As regards participation, once the immediate emergency was over, the implementation of reconstruction activities became over-centralized and the failure to involve regional and municipal forums precluded the participation of organized sectors of the population in designing and planning those activities. In the case of housing, the relocation and reconstruction programme was carried out without considering such factors as coordination between central and local government agencies, land management, urban planning and environmental protection. In addition, as at July, the food-for-work programme put in place by the Ministry of Labour had not covered women workers. As wage conditions enjoyed by workers prior to hurricane Mitch had deteriorated noticeably and had not improved a year after the emergency, the Secretary-General called for improved labour conditions in the country.

Under the 1996 Agreement on the Strengthening of Civilian Power and on the Role of the Armed Forces in a Democratic Society [YUN1996, p. 167], the commitment to increase the judiciary's budget by 50 per cent in relation to 1995 was implemented. Other positive developments included the establishment of the ad hoc commission to follow up the recommendations of the Commission on the Strengthening of the Justice System, and the leading role assumed by that Commission, particularly during the process of selecting members of the new Supreme Court of Justice and the Courts of Appeal. The judiciary had continued to implement its modernization plan; however, it was proceeding slowly and had not had the impact necessary to meet the population's demands for justice. The deployment of the National Civil Police (PNC), a central element of the peace agreements, was extended throughout the country, despite constraints on the infrastructure and equipment of the units that had been deployed. The slow deployment and weak structure of the Criminal Investigation Service were not consistent with the importance that the Agreement attached to criminal investigation in developing the new PNC structure.

The restructuring of the armed forces in accordance with the provisions of the peace agreements had been carried out from a quantitative standpoint, in the reduction in the size and budget of the military. The qualitative restructuring remained to be carried out due, in part, to the delays in the discussion of the constitutional reform. In addition, MINUGUA reported that the military, which had 104 units before the signing of the peace agreements, still had 95 units deployed in the same geographical locations as during the armed conflict, even in areas where extremely serious human rights violations had occurred. In view of the situation, the Mission had conducted verification of the deployment to identify the functions carried out by each unit. The Secretary-General said that the qualitative implementation of the commitments and the ambiguities of the current deployment demonstrated the urgency of adopting a new military doctrine to define the military's functions in a democratic, peaceful society. He called on the Government to comply in 1999 with the commitment to disband the Presidential General Staff and replace it with a civilian unit responsible for the security of the President and Vice-President.

As far as the 1996 Agreement on Constitutional Reforms and the Electoral Regime [YUN 1997, p. 178] was concerned, a reform package—comprising 50 amendments to the Constitution—was submitted for ratification in a referendum held on 16 May 1999. Although the vast majority of political forces came out in favour of the reform, the outcome of the referendum was negative, raising serious legal difficulties as to the alteration of the mandate of the armed forces, the reform of the career judicial service and official recognition of indigenous languages. Despite that setback, the Secretary-General said that there was a conviction among the main political parties and many elements of civil society that the outcome of the referendum had not diminished the legitimacy and validity of the peace agreements.

Some aspects of the 1996 Agreement on the Basis for the Legal Integration of the URNG [YUN 1996, p. 169] were implemented with the launching of most of the subprogrammes for the initial integration of demobilized combatants. However, serious difficulties remained, due to, among other things, limited progress made in other peace agreements linked to the integration process and delays in the implementation of production projects for some two thirds of all demobilized combatants.

The Secretary-General observed that 1999 was the last year in office of the Government that had signed the majority of the peace agreements. The general elections would bring changes in the executive branch, the Legislative Assembly and the local governments. The current Government and the new authorities would have to implement electoral, fiscal, judicial and military reforms. According to the Secretary-General's Chef de Cabinet, there was a broad consensus among diverse sectors of Guatemalan society as to the need to continue and expand implementation of the peace agenda.

In a later report [A/55/175], the Secretary-General stated that the first general elections since the signing of the 1996 Agreement on a Firm and Lasting Peace took place on 7 November. Alfonso Portillo, the candidate of the Frente Republicano Guatemalteco (FRG), was elected President after winning the second round of presidential elections on 26 December. URNG participated for the first time as a political party in the elections, winning nine congressional seats and 13 mayoral posts as a member of the Alianza Nueva Nación. FRG won 63 of the 113 congressional seats.

On 15 November, with regard to the 1994 Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights, the Follow-up Commission submitted to the President of the Congress the preliminary draft of a bill setting up a commission for peace and harmony, the text of which had been agreed on with civil society organizations, based on a preliminary draft prepared by the Multi-institutional Forum for Peace and Harmony and in keeping with the Mission's recommendations. The bill was presented to the full Congress on the last day of its regular session and was referred to the Congressional Committee for Peace and Mine Clearance, which issued a favourable ruling. However, it could not be voted on by the full Congress because the special December session did not have a quorum.

The Judicial Civil Service Act, an important landmark in the modernization of the judiciary, was adopted on 30 November, and, in December, the Ad Hoc Commission, which had taken over from the Commission on the Strengthening of the Justice System, completed its work.

The proposed "doctrinal manual of the Guatemalan armed forces", submitted in late 1999 by the previous Government, focused almost exclusively on military aspects, and therefore did not meet expectations of fulfilling the commitment of a new military doctrine. The newly elected Government had taken over the manual, which it viewed as a working draft, and expressed its willingness to include more sectors in its discussion.

Human rights

In December [A/54/688], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the MINUGUA head's tenth report on human rights, which described the Mission's activities between 1 January and 30 November 1999.

One of the most significant events that took place was the verification of political rights in the context of the first round of general elections on 7 November. The Mission monitored a registration plan launched in June by the Supreme Electoral Tribunal and provided logistical support specifically aimed at the most inaccessible areas. Overall, MINUGUA investigated over 200 complaints and incidents during the electoral period, though, in many cases, the complainants failed to provide the minimum information needed to determine plausibility. Threats or intimidation against members of political parties, candidates and officials of the Supreme Electoral Tribunal were reported. On election day, the Mission was present throughout Guatemala, serving as a deterrent to potential conflicts. It also toured 286 of the country's 330 municipalities and visited 750 polling stations. The Mission's observations suggested that in nearly 80 per cent of the municipalities visited, political rights were exercised under normal conditions, while minor problems occurred in just under 20 per cent of the municipalities.

During the first nine months of 1999, the Mission admitted 316 complaints, compared with 219 during the previous reporting period [YUN 1998, p. 218]. The increase was partly due to the fact that 66.12 per cent of all violations of the State's legal obligation to prevent, investigate and punish stemmed from cases admitted during previous periods, regarding massacres and disappearances. Verifications of the violations indicated an increase in the practice of torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, as well as an increase in violations of the right to individual liberty, due process of law, political rights and the right to freedom of association and assembly. The Mission stressed that greater efforts were needed to promote a culture of independence within the judiciary branch, as well as greater professionalism among judges and prosecutors. A fact-finding mission to Guatemala was carried out by the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the independence of judges and lawyers (see PART TWO, Chapter II).

The weaknesses of the judiciary and the Public Prosecutor's Office were compounded by the fact that some institutions of the executive branch had interfered and, at times, refused to cooperate with the justice system. In the case of the assassination of Monsignor Juan Jose Gerardi Conedera [YUN 1998, p. 219], the lack of cooperation or interference had been blatant. In fact, evidence pointed to a parallel investigation in the Gerardi case that was carried out without the participation of intelligence services without the knowledge of the judicial authorities. Parallel investigations were carried out in other cases, disrupting and confusing the work of the Public Prosecutor's Office, thereby perpetuating impunity for the crime. The Mission recommended that the Government should enforce the prohibition contained in the peace agreements against the involvement of military intelligence organizations in civilian matters, particularly in judicial investigations.

During the reporting period, the deterioration in the human rights situation was also due to the actions of PNC. However, MINUGUA noted improvements in its performance, particularly a more active policy to combat the phenomenon of lynching. It also noted a reduction in violations stemming from the excessive use of force in eviction or similar operations resulting in large numbers of victims. At the same time, cases of torture associated with the investigation of crimes and offences had been reported.

The worsening human rights situation, three years after the signing of the peace agreements, was cause for concern. Despite MINUGUA's recommendations, no progress had been made towards fulfilling the commitment to perfect the norms and mechanisms to protect human rights through the ratification or signing of new instruments. The Mission therefore urged the Government to deposit with the UN Secretary-General its instrument of ratification of the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights [YUN1966,p.431] and to recognize the competence of the Committee against Torture and the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, so that the respective Committees could receive communications from individuals. The Mission once more stressed the need for the Government to complete the process of ratification of the 1994 Inter-American Convention on Forced Disappearance of Persons, by depositing the relevant instruments with OAS, as an effective means of fostering in the international community recognition of enforced disappearance as a crime against humanity. As to the ownership, use and bearing of firearms by individuals, the Mission called on the State to develop effective and reliable mechanisms of control, given the indiscriminate proliferation of that type of weapon and its widespread marketing.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/99 [draft: A/54/L.27 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 47].

United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/93 of 1 December 1998, in which it decided to authorize the renewal of the mandate of the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala from 1 January to 31 December 1999,

Taking into account the ninth report on human rights of the Mission,

Taking into account also the report of the Commission for Historical Clarification,

Stressing the role played by the Mission in support of the Guatemala peace process, and emphasizing the need for the Mission to continue to enjoy the support of all parties,

Taking into account the fact that the parties have expressed their interest in the continued presence of the Mission in Guatemala,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Mission and the recommendations therein, which are aimed at ensuring that the Mission can respond adequately to the demands of the peace process until 31 December 2000,

1. Welcomes the ninth report on human rights of the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala;

2. Also welcomes the report of the Commission for Historical Clarification and its recommendations;

3. Takes note with satisfaction of progress made in the implementation of the peace agreements, in particular the finalization of the programme for the repatriation of Guatemalan refugees in Mexico, compliance with the spending targets included in the agreements, increased deployment of the new National Civil Police, the approval by Congress of the new Land Trust Fund and the establishment of the Office for the Defence of Indigenous Women;

4. Also takes note with satisfaction of the ongoing efforts at consensus-building carried out within the commissions created under the peace agreements, as well as of the contribution of the Women's Forum;

5. Underscores the fact that, as pointed out by the Commission to Follow up the Implementation of the Peace Agreements, key reforms remain outstanding, including the fiscal, judicial, military and electoral reforms, and therefore stresses the critical importance of continued compliance with the peace agreements in 2000;

6. Encourages the Government to implement its decision to adopt a new military doctrine and disband the current Presidential Military Staff, in keeping with the peace agreements;

7. Underscores the fact that meeting the tax revenue targets set in the Agreement on Social and Economic Aspects and the Agrarian Situation is essential to the sustainability of the implementation of the peace agreements;

8. Notes that, while significant achievements have been registered in the implementation of the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights, important shortcomings persist, and calls upon the Government to redouble its efforts in the promotion of human rights, taking into account the recommendations contained in the reports on human rights of the Mission, and to do its utmost to assist in the investigation of the murder of Monsignor Juan Jose Gerardi Conedera;

9. Calls upon the Government to follow up on the recommendations of the Commission for Historical Clarification, with a view to promoting national reconciliation, upholding the right to truth and providing redress, in accordance with Guatemalan law, for the victims of human rights abuses and violence committed during the thirty-six-year armed conflict;

10. Welcomes the commitment to the implementation of the peace agreements made by the presidential candidates of the major political parties and their support for the extension of the mandate of the Mission;

11. Encourages the parties and all sectors of Guatemalan society to continue efforts to achieve the goals of the peace agreements, in particular the observance of human rights, including the rights of indigenous peoples, equitable development, participation and national reconciliation;

12. Invites the international community and, in particular, the agencies, programmes and funds of the United Nations, to continue to take the implementation of the peace agreements as the framework for their technical and financial assistance programmes and projects, and stresses the continued importance of close cooperation among them;

13. Stresses the role of the Mission as a key instrument in the consolidation of peace, promotion of the observance of human rights and building of confidence in the implementation of the peace agreements;

14. Decides to authorize the renewal of the mandate of the Mission from 1 January to 31 December 2000;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to submit, as early as possible, an updated report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session, with his assessment and recommendations with regard to the peace process after 31 December 2000;

16. Also requests the Secretary-General to keep the General Assembly fully informed of the implementation of the present resolution.

Financing of Military Observer Group

In April [A/53/898], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) presented its comments on a 1998 report [YUN 1998, p. 221] on the financing of the Military Observer Group of MINUGUA for the period from 15 February to 31 May 1997. The Military Observer Group had been deployed for three months—from 3 March to 27 May 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 172]—to verify the Agreement on the Definitive Ceasefire of 4 December 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 168] between the Government of Guatemala and URNG.

The Committee recommended that Member States be credited their share of the unencumbered balance of $184,200 gross ($140,500 net) for the financing period. Regarding the treatment of interest ($38,653) and miscellaneous income ($68,983), totalling $ 107,636, it advised the General Assembly either to credit that amount, along with any surplus from the eventual liquidation of the remaining obligations in the Special Account for the Military Observer Group, to the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund, or to credit Member States their respective share. As to obligations owed to Governments that provided contingents and/or logistic support that had been retained beyond the period stipulated under the financial regulations of the United Nations, ACABQ recommended approval of the special arrangements under article IV of the regulations, similar to those annexed to General Assembly resolution 52/240 [YUN 1998, p. 205].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 June [meeting 101], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/53/981], adopted resolution 53/235 without vote [agenda item 142].

Financing of the Military Observer Group of the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the Military Observer Group of the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 1094(1997) of 20 January 1997, in which the Council authorized the attachment to the United Nations Mission for the Verification of Human Rights and of Compliance with the Commitments of the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights in Guatemala of a group of one hundred and fifty-five military observers and requisite medical personnel for a period of three months,

Recalling also its resolution 51/228 of 3 April 1997 on the financing of the Observer Group,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Observer Group are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Observer Group, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to continue to provide the account for the Observer Group with the necessary financial resources to enable it to meet its outstanding liabilities,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the Military Observer Group of the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala as at 30 April 1999, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 298,613 United States dollars, representing 7 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Observer Group to the period ending 31 May 1997, notes that some 55 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Observer Group in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

6. Approves, on an exceptional basis, the special arrangements for the Observer Group with regard to the application of article IV of the financial regulations of the United Nations, whereby appropriations required in respect of obligations owed to Governments which provided contingents and/or logistic support for the Observer Group shall be retained beyond the period stipulated under financial regulations 4.3 and 4.4, as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

7. Decides that Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Observer Group shall be credited their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 184,200 dollars gross (140,500 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 31 May 1997 and their respective share of the miscellaneous income of 68,983 dollars and interest income of 38,653 dollars;

8. Decides also that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Observer Group, their share in the unencumbered balance of 184,200 dollars gross (140,500 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 31 May 1997 and their respective share of the miscellaneous income of 68,983 dollars and interest income of 38,653 dollars shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

9. Decides further to transfer to the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund any surplus arising from the eventual liquidation of the remaining obligations in the Special Account for the Military Observer Group of the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala;

10. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the disposition of assets of the Observer Group;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the safety of United Nations assets and that there are accountability procedures in place to deter and penalize those responsible for the losses of the United Nations property and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session;

12. Notes with concern that the provisions of its decision 52/485 of 26 June 1998 have not been complied with, and reiterates that all reports on the final disposition of assets should contain detailed information on and justification for items written off and lost;

13. Requests the Board of Auditors to conduct an audit of the final disposition of assets of the Observer Group, in particular of assets sold and written off, and include its recommendations in the audit report for the period July 1998 to June 1999.

ANNEX

Special arrangements with regard to the application of article IV of the financial regulations of the United Nations

1. At the end of the twelve-month period provided for in financial regulation 4.3, any unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question relating to goods supplied and services rendered by Governments for which claims have been received or which are covered by established reimbursement rates shall be transferred to accounts payable; such accounts payable shall remain recorded in the Special Account for the Military Observer Group of the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala until payment is effected.

2. (a) Any other unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question owed to Governments for goods supplied and services rendered, as well as other obligations owed to Governments, for which required claims have not yet been received shall remain valid for an additional period of four years following the end of the twelve-month period provided for in financial regulation 4.3;

(b) Claims received during this four-year period shall be treated as provided for under paragraph 1 of the present annex, if appropriate;

(c) At the end of the additional four-year period, any unliquidated obligations shall be cancelled and the then remaining balance of any appropriations retained therefor shall be surrendered.

Pursuant to resolution 53/235, the Secretary-General submitted a December report [A/54/669 & Corr.1] that provided statistics on losses of UN property in peacekeeping operations from 1 January 1996 to 31 December 1997, including those pertaining to MINUGUA.

On 23 December, the Assembly, by decision 54/465, decided that the item on the financing of the Military Observer Group of MINUGUA remained for consideration during its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session.

On the same date, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the item at the resumed session (decision 54/462 A).

Nicaragua

In a report on international assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Nicaragua [A/55/125-E/2000/91] (see PART THREE, Chapter III), the Secretary-General noted that in June the National Assembly elected the Attorney for the Defence of Human Rights and his deputy. The election led to the installation of the Attorney's Office for the Defence of Human Rights, created by law in 1996 as an independent State institution. At the Government's request, UNDP initiated a project, with the support of the Nordic countries, to create the necessary conditions for it to function, providing office space and equipment, communication facilities, technical assistance and managerial and organizational support. In November, the Special Attorney for Children and Adolescents took up his post. The most significant change in government policy towards children's rights had been the approval by the National Assembly (May 1998) and entry into force (November 1998) of the Code for Children and Adolescents. While the Code had yet to demonstrate its impact on the situation of Nicaraguan children, the preparatory work for its approval, strongly supported by UNICEF, visibly increased the presence of the subject of children and adolescent rights on the Government's agenda, in the media and as an issue for debate among the public in general. The promotion of public sensitivity about the problem of child labour advanced. The Ministry of Labour supported the implementation of national legislation prohibiting labour for children under 14 years of age.

A comprehensive programme that had assisted governmental efforts to return properties confiscated by the Sandinist Government between 1979 and 1990 to their former owners or at least to compensate them had entered a second phase in 1998 with support from Sweden, UNDP and Nicaragua. While much remained to be done, the programme had decreased significantly the problem of property conflicts.

Governance, democratization and consolidation of the rule of law had been set as priorities by the Nicaraguan Government. The need to reform the judicial system led to the formulation of a national programme to modernize justice, implemented by the Government with financial support from a wide range of Governments and organizations. Under the umbrella of the programme, various initiatives were carried out, such as the modernization of laws and codes, the restructuring of the Supreme Court of Justice and the Attorney-General's Office, the installation of the Institute of Forensic Medicine and the integrated reform of the penitentiary system. In December 1999, the Justice Commission of the National Assembly presented a project for a new penal code.

In recent years, a range of projects for ex-combatants, comprising productive reintegration, capacity-building, construction of family habitats and legal support for the set-up of multiple service cooperatives, had benefited more than 15,000 persons. Since November 1998, the Institute for Rural Development, with contributions from UNDP and France, had been implementing the second phase of a programme which provided assistance in the process of the consolidation of peace and the creation of a basis for productive and social development. The first stage of the project responded to the needs of more than 6,000 families of former combatants in over 40 municipalities. In the early 1990s, the Nicaraguan Government sought the support of the International Organization for Migration to create a programme to allow Nicaraguan professionals to return and reintegrate fully into Nicaraguan society. The qualified Nicaraguan professionals return programme, which was supported by the EU, ended in August 1999, having transferred 466 professionals and their dependants to Nicaragua, thereby reintegrating a total of more than 1,500 persons.

Communications. In response to a 1998 letter submitted by Nicaragua [YUN 1998, p. 223], Costa Rica, on 13 January [A/53/795], demanded respect for the Jérez-Cañas Treaty, the Cleveland Award and the Judgement of 30 September 1916 of the Central American Court of Justice, which, it said, stipulated that Costa Rica had a real, perpetual and immutable right of use in relation to navigation on the San Juan River. On 23 March [A/53/882], Nicaragua said that there was no dispute between it and Costa Rica concerning matters of territorial sovereignty over the San Juan River [YUN 1998, p. 224] or any other matter. By a reply of 9 April [A/53/905], Costa Rica also declared that no dispute existed between it and Nicaragua regarding territorial sovereignty.

On 3 December [A/54/652], Nicaragua informed the Secretary-General that Honduras had ratified on 30 November the Maritime Delimitation Treaty (the Ramírez-López Treaty), an agreement which Honduras had negotiated with Colombia in 1986. According to Nicaragua, the Treaty's ratification by Honduras breached the provisions of a ruling issued by the Central American Court of Justice on 30 November 1999. Nicaragua was not a party to the Treaty, which, it maintained, would deprive it of 30,000 square kilometres of continental shelf off its Atlantic coast.

In order to reduce tensions between the two countries, OAS had appointed a special envoy who had been instrumental in arranging confidence-building measures, such as a pull-back of forces, joint naval patrols and the demilitarization of the border. On 30 December [A/54/696], by a joint communique issued in Miami (United States), Nicaragua and Honduras undertook to adopt measures designed to avoid the occurrence of violent actions that endangered peace, security and stability in the Central American region and reaffirmed their desire to resolve their differences through peaceful means.

Haiti

During 1999, Haiti continued to experience a serious political and institutional crisis, which stalled the implementation of essential structural reforms and contributed to a worsening of the human rights situation. General elections, which were scheduled to take place in November 1999, were postponed to March 2000. Improvements were reported in the restructuring and functioning of the Haitian National Police (HNP), though major structural weaknesses in the justice system undermined the rule of law and civil liberties.

The United Nations continued to support Haiti in its difficult transition process towards greater democracy and development. The United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti (MIPONUH) monitored and assisted HNP, while the joint UN/OAS International Civilian Mission to Haiti (MICIVIH) provided institutional assistance, helped in the promotion and protection of human rights and verified observance of individual rights and fundamental freedoms.

In December, following a request for continued UN assistance by Haiti's President René Préval and within the UN framework of developing a long-term strategy of support for the Haitian people, the General Assembly established the International Civilian Support Mission in Haiti (MICAHA) to consolidate the results, as well as some of the activities, of MIPONUH and MICIVIH. Since MIPONUH's mandate was to expire on 30 November 1999, the Security Council decided to continue the Mission to ensure a phased transition to MICAHA by 15 March 2000. MICIVIH's mandate was also extended until the commencement of MICAHA.

Civilian Police Mission

Reports of Secretary-General (February and May). On 19 February [S/1999/181], the Secretary-General updated the activities of MIPONUH and developments in the mission area since his November 1998 report [YUN 1998, p. 228]. The Mission had been established by Security Council resolution 1141(1997) of 28 November 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 193] to assist the Government of Haiti by supporting and contributing to the professionalization of HNP in close cooperation with MICIVIH.

The Secretary-General said that there had been disturbing developments in the political situation in Haiti, raising renewed concerns about the country's stability and its transition to democracy. On 11 January, President Préval, following failure to complete the ratification process of his nominee for the position of Prime Minister [YUN 1998, p. 229], declared that the terms of all deputies, one third of the senators and all the local authorities had expired. Noting that he lacked the legal authority to either dissolve Parliament or extend its mandate, he appealed to all sectors of society to find a constitutional solution to the crisis. On 20 January, the Council of Ministers adopted a resolution calling for the relevant authorities to freeze the bank accounts of the National Assembly and withhold the salaries of parliamentarians, cancel their diplomatic passports and confiscate their firearms. Certain parties characterized the declaration as a coup d'état and as a step towards totalitarianism.

Following a briefing to the Security Council on 19 January by the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Bernard Miyet, the President of the Council made a statement to the press, in which he urged a negotiated solution to the crisis and broad agreement on the formation of a credible Provisional Electoral Council (CEP). On 26 January [A/53/830-S/1999/156], the Government responded by pointing out that President Préval had not dissolved Parliament; it was still sitting with nine senators whose terms would expire in 2001, and there had been no untimely interruption of the democratic process, as the President had not vested himself with dictatorial powers.

Concerned about the deepening political crisis, the Secretary-General requested his Representative, Julian Harston, and MICIVIH's Executive Director, Colin Granderson, to meet for consultations in New York from 20 to 22 January with the "Friends of the Secretary-General for Haiti". At the meeting, the participants agreed to engage jointly in parallel discussions with the President, the Prime Minister and political parties to assist in resolving the situation, while using the statement of the Security Council President as a basis for joint and individual initiatives. President Préval initiated a dialogue with opposition leaders in order to achieve consensus on the establishment of CEP and the holding of elections. On 3 February, after having had a further briefing on the situation in Haiti, the President of the Security Council, in a press statement, urged Haiti's political leaders to overcome their differences and to create the basis for free and fair elections.

As at 15 February, MIPONUH was composed of 282 civilian police officers (CIVPOL) from 10 countries, including a 140-strong special police unit deployed along with the necessary support personnel. The substantive police element remained deployed in Port-au-Prince and in all nine départements, while the special police unit was based in the capital. Among other activities, MIPONUH conducted weekly training on administration, arrest procedures, community relations, crowd control, data processing, judiciary-police relations, record keeping and report writing to enhance the competence and effectiveness of HNP. The Mission continued to coordinate its activities closely with those of UNDP and bilateral programmes, such as those of Canada, France and the United States. Following a deterioration in the security situation after 11 January, the MIPONUH special police unit provided assistance to MIPONUH personnel and increased its activities in the protection of Mission property.

The Secretary-General noted that HNP, which numbered 6,100, had performed in an efficient and exemplary manner since 11 January and had remained politically neutral. The overall human rights record of HNP had improved and reports of ill-treatment during arrests and interrogations had decreased. However, individual acts of abuse and misconduct by some officers remained a problem.

Developments in the justice system were uneven. The Ministry of Justice had failed to take steps to implement the short- and long-range plan of reform submitted by the Preparatory Commission on Legal and Judicial Reform in July 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 227]. With a view to strengthening the Office of the Ombudsman, UNDP had financed training of its personnel, human rights seminars for HNP and publications to inform the public on the role of the Ombudsman. However, financial difficulties impeded the capacity of the Office to fulfil its mandate.

The performance of the Haitian economy was encouraging throughout 1998, with a 3.1 per cent growth in GNP in real terms, and the national currency, the gourde, was stabilized. For the first time in years, agricultural production increased significantly, inflation was reduced to 8 per cent and the budget deficit was kept to 1.3 per cent of GNP. Improvements in tax collection and the launching of a voluntary early retirement programme for civil servants also inspired optimism. On the downside, hurricane Georges, which struck the island in September 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 875], and—as a result of the institutional crisis—unratified loan agreements with major donors had a negative impact on the economy. The report of the resident coordinator of January 1999 emphasized that the United Nations was able to provide assistance according to national priorities, through the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) (see PART THREE, Chapter XIII), hurricane-related disaster relief, the police project, and measures to enhance the participation of the public in local government, environmental protection and the promotion of equality, health and advocacy. Development activities of the UN system included, among other programmes, an advocacy campaign on violence against women by all UN agencies; a United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization workshop on the culture of peace; a rights of the child and justice for minors programme by UNICEF; the finalization of the UNDP-assisted national environment plan; and sensitization of the public on reproductive health sponsored by the United Nations Population Fund.

The Secretary-General observed that there had been an increasing polarization in Haiti and new risks to the consolidation of democracy. The absence of a functioning Parliament had created a serious institutional vacuum. The political crisis was affecting adversely social and economic development. Without a functioning government and legislature, it was becoming increasingly difficult to utilize international assistance or to implement developmental projects. The Secretary-General expressed concern over the lack of real progress in implementing the reform of the judicial system and called on the international community to provide assistance to the Office of the Ombudsman.

On 19 May [S/1999/579], the Secretary-General described the activities of MIPONUH and developments in the mission area since February. He also proposed initial recommendations on a viable transition to other forms of international assistance for Security Council consideration.

The Secretary-General said that encouraging steps had been taken towards resolving the protracted political crisis in Haiti. President Préval had held talks with leaders of a coalition of opposition parties—the so-called Espace de concertation—as well as with popular, business and labour organizations. UN officials, "Friends of Haiti" representatives and former President of Costa Rica Oscar Arias also endeavoured to establish common ground between all parties concerned. In February, the Cour de cassation (Supreme Court) dismissed an action by members of Parliament challenging President Préval's declaration on the expiration of their mandate by deciding that the Court did not have the legal authority to rule on the dispute between the legislative and executive branches of government. On 6 March, President Préval and the representatives of the Espace de concertation reached agreement on the principles for the establishment of a new CEP and a new government. On 16 March, the President appointed the nine members of CEP; on 25 March, the Prime Minister, Jacques-Edouard Alexis, announced his new Cabinet. The Prime Minister, who also held the portfolio of Minister of Interior, called his Administration transitional and said that its top priority would be to organize legislative and local elections. The newly appointed CEP held talks with a number of political parties on the promulgation of a new electoral decree, in the hope of holding the first round of elections before the end of the year. Following a request from CEP for UN technical assistance, a member of the Department of Political Affairs visited Haiti on an electoral assessment mission from 27 to 30 April. As a result of his recommendations, UNDP decided to provide electoral advisers and assistance to CEP. A monitoring committee and a technical task force had been established by the Secretary-General's Representative.

Increased insecurity was reflected in a number of high-profile murders and attempted murders, while other disquieting developments included demonstrations, blockades, strikes and other violent incidents. The unrest was due to tensions among the different political forces, as well as economic desperation and political frustration on the part of the population.

MIPONUH continued to provide HNP with training in its day-to-day work, while technical advice was given to the leadership of the police force at the supervisory level. Close links had developed between HNP's crowd-control unit and the UN special police unit. CIVPOL provided border-monitoring training to those police officers stationed near the frontier with the Dominican Republic. On 14 March, a helicopter carrying six members of the Argentine National Gendarmerie and seven members of the International Charter Incorporated helicopter company was involved in an accident in which all 13 people on board were killed. A UN inquiry was to follow.

The Secretary-General said that the HNP continued to perform in a professional and neutral manner, despite the increased number of demonstrations and violent protests that had occurred throughout the country since February. HNP had been the target of attacks from some political forces in what appeared to be a campaign to destabilize and undermine the police service. Although HNP had made considerable progress, a top priority remained combating police involvement in drug trafficking and other criminal activities.

Structural weaknesses in the judicial system continued to undermine the rule of law and civil liberties and remained the most significant obstacle to the effective protection of human rights. The newly appointed Minister of Justice noted that real judicial reform could not take place without the election of a new Parliament.

It was expected that a common country assessment, a key step under the Secretary-General's reform programme for the creation of a United Nations Development Assistance Framework, would be completed at year's end, thus providing UN agencies with the elements to define a long-term assistance programme and to harmonize their interventions. The UN Disaster Management Team held meetings to prepare for the hurricane season. UNDP finalized four preparatory projects in the areas of governance, protection of the environment, productive employment and the prevention and management of disasters. Other UN-sponsored activities included the launching by UNICEF of a national programme for salt iodization; the signing of an agreement between the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the Government to promote sustainable agriculture and soil and water conservation; and the development of a programme funded by UNAIDS that focused on the transmission of AIDS from mother to child.

The Secretary-General said CEP would face a number of challenges in organizing the parliamentary and local elections before the end of 1999. A secure and stable environment was a precondition for a free and fair electoral campaign. In view of Security Council resolution 1212(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 229], which had expressed the Council's intention not to extend MIPONUH's mandate beyond 30 November 1999 and had called on the Secretary-General to present recommendations on a viable transition to other forms of international assistance, the Government would have to assume full responsibility for the further strengthening and effective functioning of HNP. In consultation with the Secretary-General's Representative, HNP was developing a two-year technical assistance programme designed to provide the police service with the expertise to carry out training and institution-building and to ensure the necessary continuity to the efforts of MIPONUH following its termination.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 February [E/1999/7-S/1999/170], the President of the Economic and Social Council (ESC) sought advice from the President of the Security Council on the interpretation of paragraph 8 of resolution 1212(1998), by which the Council invited UN bodies and agencies, especially ESC, to contribute to designing a long-term programme of support for Haiti. On 7 April [E/1999/12-S/1999/403], the Council confirmed that, through resolution 1212(1998), it had invited ESC to contribute to designing a programme of support.

On 7 May, ESC, by resolution 1999/4, created an Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti and asked it to submit its recommendations on how to ensure that adequate, coherent, well-coordinated and effective assistance could be provided by the international community to Haiti in order to achieve sustainable development (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

On 31 July [E/1999/115-S/1999/865], the ESC President informed the Security Council that, on 27 July, ESC, on the basis of a report presented by the Ad Hoc Advisory Group, adopted resolution 1999/11, by which it called on the Secretary-General to take steps to develop on a priority basis a long-term strategy and programme of support for Haiti. It also called on the General Assembly to review all aspects of the mandate and operations of MICIVIH, and to consider devising a UN special training and technical assistance programme for HNP. Also on 31 July [A/54/274-E/1999/116], a similar letter was submitted by the ESC President to the General Assembly.

On 20 August [E/1999/117-S/1999/905], the President of the Security Council informed the ESC President that, in order to ensure sustainable development in Haiti, the effort of the international community had to be geared towards supporting the Government in addressing the capacity-building of its governmental institutions.

Report of Secretary-General (August). On 24 August [S/1999/908], the Secretary-General described the activities of MIPONUH and developments in the mission area since May and presented recommendations on a possible transition to other forms of international assistance to HNP following the expiration of MIPONUH's mandate, as requested by the Security Council in resolution 1212(1998).

The period under review was marked by continuing negotiations, interrupted by repeated discord, and slow progress between the political parties and the Government on how to continue to provide essential services, such as police and customs services, and how to further the cause of democracy through the organization of legislative and municipal elections. No agreement had been reached on how to alleviate the legislators' loss of power, the result of President Préval's 11 January declaration on the expiration of their mandate (see p. 209). On 24 May, Prime Minister Alexis presented his Government Action Plan, outlining in detail the priorities and resource allocations for each of the 15 government ministries. The plan was well received by some political parties.

Since May, a few highly visible developments and incidents had heightened the perception of an increase in public insecurity. On 28 May, police officers allegedly killed 11 detainees in Port-au-Prince. The Secretary-General's Representative called for the immediate suspension of any officer suspected of involvement. The authorities arrested four police officers and a special commission was established to investigate the crime further. A number of violent street demonstrations had also taken place.

The newly established CEP conducted in-depth consultations to organize local and legislative elections. On 11 June, CEP announced that it had drafted an electoral text to replace the Electoral Law of 1995. Although that action had elicited favourable comments from a large number of political parties, President Préval expressed reservations about it. On 16 July, the President and the Prime Minister, on behalf of the Government, signed an electoral law, which CEP had modified to reflect the President's concerns. The tentative date for the first round of elections was set for mid-December 1999, although it was later changed to March 2000 (see p. 213). Donor countries had pledged to assist with the election costs.

Police training procedures were designed to facilitate the transition to the post-MIPONUH era. As part of that process, and in order to enable HNP to pursue its professionalization without interruption, efforts were made to install technical advisers as counterparts to key police officers before the expiration of the Mission's mandate. A draft schedule by the MIPONUH civilian police Commissioner proposing the deployment of advisers (32 from the United Nations, 17 from the Canadian International Development Agency, 12 from the United States International Criminal Investigative Training Assistance Programme, and 1 from the French bilateral programme) was reviewed by donor representatives during a coordination meeting on 13 July and was being considered by the Director-General of HNP and other participants in police training in Haiti.

HNP continued to be the target of criticism from a number of political actors, who had called for the resignation of high-ranking security officials. Numerous demonstrations had dramatized calls for changes in the police hierarchy. In addition to accusations of involvement in extrajudicial killings and reports of ill-treatment during arrests and interrogations, HNP addressed allegations of involvement in drug trafficking.

Developments in the justice system were uneven. On 21 May, a Court for Minors was inaugurated, which constituted an important element in judicial institution-building. Conditions had improved at the National Penitentiary but overcrowding and poor infrastructure were reported in the majority of prisons. A considerable number of detainees continued to be held in prolonged pre-trial detention in violation of international treaties ratified by Haiti. The prison administration continued to receive technical assistance from UNDP. The Office of the Ombudsman had indicated that, to the extent permitted by its budgetary and human resources, it would strive to carry out some of the services previously provided by MICIVIH. In June, the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women visited Haiti (see PART TWO, Chapter II).

UNDP launched, in June 1999, a technical assistance project to assist CEP in organizing the local and legislative elections. An inter-agency meeting (Barahona, Dominican Republic, 20-21 May), attended by UN country teams from Haiti and the Dominican Republic, discussed operational arrangements for a more coordinated intervention on both sides of the border, with a focus on migration and human rights.

Within the context of devising a post-MIPONUH support programme, HNP continued to develop a two-year technical assistance programme that foresaw the recruitment of international police advisers to work throughout Haiti with HNP. Subject to the availability of resources, police advisers would continue to assist the Government with the training and professionalization of HNP. The Secretary-General said that it would appear appropriate to review the extent to which some of the functions exercised by MIPONUH and MICIVIH could be combined in one integrated mission. He added that the new mission could discharge responsibilities in the areas of human rights monitoring and institution-building to provide support to both the justice sector and HNP. The Economic and Social Council recommended the continued presence in Haiti of an office of a representative of the Secretary-General to continue his good offices and to manage any new civilian mission mandated by the United Nations. Following the expiration of MIPONUH's mandate, such an office could help the Government with the transition from the Security Council-mandated assistance to a new model of police development in the context of the continuing consolidation of democracy. In addition, the office would manage any new UN civilian mission, facilitate continuing dialogue among key actors in Haiti and the international community, support the democratization process, help to mobilize international political and financial support for Haiti and provide the political framework and focal point for integrating and coordinating the activities of the international community.

The Secretary-General observed that the international community should support CEP's aspiration to have a new legislature in place by 10

January 2000, even though it was unlikely that both rounds of elections could be held before the end of 1999. At the same time, the security situation in Haiti remained a matter of concern. In order to avoid further deterioration in the months leading to the elections, a coordinated effort by the Government, the police service and Haiti's political and civil leaders was required.

Communications (September). On 10 September [S/1999/969], the Secretary-General informed the President of the Security Council that following consultations he intended to appoint Alfredo Lopes Cabral (Guinea-Bissau) to succeed Julian Harston (United Kingdom) as his Representative in Haiti and head of MIPONUH. On 14 September [S/1999/970], the Council took note of the Secretary-General's intention.

Further reports of Secretary-General. On 18 November [S/1999/1184], the Secretary-General described the activities of MIPONUH and developments in the mission area since his August report. He stated that preparations for the next legislative and local elections had continued to lag, violent crime had not diminished and HNP had been the target of renewed attacks. On 29 September, despite an initial proposal by CEP to hold the elections in November and December 1999, the Government, following discussions between President Préval and CEP, announced 19 March 2000 as the date for the first round of legislative elections. In the official electoral timetable published on 6 October, CEP set 30 April 2000 as the date for the second round of elections, which would make it impossible for a new Parliament to be in place by the second week of January, as stipulated in the Constitution. A new electoral alliance of right-wing parties, the Front civico-politique haïtien, was formed on 15 September, while the Espace de concertation formally presented itself as an electoral alliance on 20 September. The security situation was characterized by continuing demonstrations, blockades and incidents of violence, some of which were related to discontent over the country's dire economic situation and difficult living conditions.

In the area of police training, MIPONUH had attained the objectives established for it by the Director-General of HNP. In view of the planned departure of the Mission at the end of November, the emphasis had shifted to the training of the trainers to prepare HNP for the post-MIPONUH period. CIVPOL had similarly continued to discharge its mentoring responsibilities, which focused on the fight against capital crimes and drug trafficking, as well as on the maintenance of law and order and logistics and administration.

Seven working groups were established in September by the Ministry of Justice and Public Security to work on judicial reform and draft legislation. Despite financial limitations, the Office of the Ombudsman opened its first regional office on 5 November and announced that its second one would open at the beginning of January 2000. The Office reported that, from its inception in November 1997 to the end of 1998, it had received almost 300 complaints, including 35 concerning HNP and 35 related to the judicial system. The Ombudsman observed that the institution was not well known among the population and recommended a more active presence in the field to reinforce its activities.

As to the formulation of a long-term programme of development and assistance for Haiti, the first step in implementing Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/11 was the launching of a common country assessment to conduct an in-depth analysis of the country's strategic development sectors and to identify priorities for social and economic development. New activities by resident agencies intensified and UNDP continued to support developing co-operation efforts. Regarding support to Haiti after 30 November, the Government had taken the lead in exploring possible modalities for the strengthening and effective functioning of HNP. Senior police officials had presided over a series of meetings with representatives of the international donor community to develop a strategy for Government-donor cooperation built on the concept of a core of police advisers to be provided by the United Nations and bilateral donors. Parallel to those efforts, a needs assessment mission visited Haiti (11-15 October) to prepare the ground for the future UN presence (see below). Consultations between the Government, the Friends of Haiti, the Secretary-General's Representative, the UN resident coordinator and the MICIVIH Executive Director, as well as an Economic and Social Council delegation that visited Haiti, had facilitated planning for the new and integrated mission. An 8 November letter from President Préval to the Secretary-General, requesting an institutional support mission, whose members would be neither uniformed nor armed, to support democracy, strengthen the judiciary and professionalize HNP, was annexed to the report.

The Secretary-General observed that challenges in planning the next elections, including registering some 4 million eligible voters, conducting effective civic education programmes and distributing electoral materials, required the active support of CEP by the Government and the international community. Responsibility for ensuring a peaceful and secure environment prior to and during the elections rested with the Haitian authorities, in particular the political leaders and HNP.

The Secretary-General said that, in pursuance of Security Council resolution 1212(1998), he was preparing to withdraw MIPONUH following the expiration of its mandate on 30 November, unless the Council decided otherwise. An appropriate repatriation schedule for the civilian police contingent was being prepared. He stressed that the assistance of the international community in the process of democratization, professionalization of the police and reinforcement of the justice system would continue to be necessary.

In a later report [S/2000/150], the Secretary-General stated that the Security Council, by resolution 1277(1999) (see p. 215), had decided to continue MIPONUH in order to ensure a phased transition to an International Civilian Support Mission in Haiti (MICAH) by 15 March 2000. The Secretary-General had been requested to coordinate and expedite the transition from MIPONUH and MICIVIH to MICAH.

The period from mid-November to early December was marked by the expulsion of more than 20,000 migrant workers of Haitian nationality or descent from the Dominican Republic. The situation stirred up public sentiment and led to some calls for the restoration of the Haitian armed forces. Negotiations between the two countries led to the signature on 2 December of an accord providing, among other things, for the humane treatment of repatriates and requiring the Government of the Dominican Republic to give advance notification of any future expulsion plans to their Haitian counterparts. The pre-electoral registration process started on 15 November and was completed on 12 December.

In December 1999, jury trials were held in several jurisdictions in the country after a long period of interruption, thereby suggesting an increased commitment by the authorities to restoring the credibility and confidence of the people in the judicial system.

Needs assessment mission. A needs assessment mission, led by the UN Department of Political Affairs in cooperation with the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, visited Haiti (11-15 October) [A/54/629]. The mission envisaged the establishment of a new integrated UN mission that would combine some of the functions of MIPONUH and MICIVIH to assist the Government of Haiti in the areas of human rights monitoring and institution-building.

The assessment mission proposed main objectives and plans of action, as well as activities, for improving the climate of respect for human rights and reinforcing the institutional effectiveness of the police and the judiciary. The implementation of the mission's recommendations would require resources estimated at approximately $24 million, of which $10 million would need to be funded from the regular budget and $14 million from voluntary contributions, the latter in respect of the technical assistance component of the programme.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 November [meeting 4074], the Security Council adopted resolution 1277(1999) by vote (14-0-1). The draft [S/1999/1202] was sponsored by Argentina, Brazil, Canada, France, the United States and Venezuela.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, in particular resolution 1212(1998) of 25 November 1998, and those adopted by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of the letter dated 8 November 1999 from the President of the Republic of Haiti to the Secretary-General, requesting the establishment of an international civilian support mission in Haiti,

Taking note also of the reports of the Secretary-General of 24 August and 18 November 1999,

Commending the valuable contributions of the Representative of the Secretary-General, the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti, the International Civilian Mission in Haiti and the technical assistance programmes of the United Nations Development Programme and bilateral donors, in assisting the Government of Haiti by supporting and contributing to the professionalization of the Haitian National Police Force as an integral element of the consolidation of Haiti's system of justice, as well as by their efforts in developing national institutions,

Recognizing that the people and Government of Haiti bear the ultimate responsibility for national reconciliation, the maintenance of a secure and stable environment, the administration of justice and the reconstruction of their country, and that the Government of Haiti bears particular responsibility for the further strengthening and effective functioning of the Haitian National Police Force and the justice system,

1. Decides to continue the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti in order to ensure a phased transition to an International Civilian Support Mission in Haiti by 15 March 2000;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to coordinate and expedite the transition from the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti and the International Civilian Mission in Haiti to the International Civilian Support Mission in Haiti and to report to the Security Council on the implementation of the present resolution by 1 March 2000;

3. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

VOTE ON RESOLUTION 1277(1999):

In favour: Argentina, Bahrain, Brazil, Canada, China, France, Gabon, Gambia, Malaysia, Namibia, Netherlands, Slovenia, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Russian Federation.

The Russian Federation stated that it would abstain from voting on the draft because the Council was in breach of its own decision by extending the Mission's mandate. The fact that in the text the words "to continue" were used instead of "to extend the mandate" did not change the essence of the matter. In addition, President Preval, on 8 November [S/1999/1184], had thanked the United Nations for the work of MIPONUH and had expressed the desire that the new mission be established whose members would be neither uniformed nor armed. That approach was at variance with the draft.

International Civilian Mission to Haiti

On 10 May [A/53/950], the Secretary-General reviewed the situation of human rights and democracy in Haiti and updated the activities of MICIVIH since his November 1998 report [YUN 1998, p. 231]. The Mission continued to cooperate with MIPONUH, which in turn provided MICIVIH with logistical and administrative support. MICIVIH, a joint UN/OAS Mission, was established in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 338] to verify full observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms, provide institution-building and support the development of a programme to promote and protect human rights.

Monitoring the human rights dimension of police conduct continued to be one of the most important activities of the Mission. The police had met the challenges of the political crisis—a concerted campaign of denigration against HNP leadership, numerous demonstrations and spates of armed crimes—in a professional manner. Police authorities had yet to take broad, effective action to reduce beatings and other forms of ill-treatment. Statistics regarding such allegations fluctuated, though figures for 1998 (423) showed a marked increase, compared to 1997 (284). Inquiries by the General Inspectorate and by HNP's General Directorate led to the dismissal of 288 police officers by the end of 1998. Forty-one police officers were being detained on drug-trafficking charges as of the beginning of April 1999. By and large, the judiciary was slow to prosecute complaints of human rights violations allegedly committed by police officers, though there had been a few exceptions. Self-appointed vigilante brigades and other informal police aides had been operating in the capital and in some rural areas. At the same time, MICIVIH, in coordination with MIPONUH, continued to train police officers on human rights and conflict resolution.

As of March, MICIVIH had recorded a total prison population of some 3,665 detainees, which resulted in overcrowding and poor infrastructure in some detention facilities. A code of conduct for prison guards and a set of internal regulations that had been pending since 1997 had still not been approved or implemented, though some steps had been taken to hold prison guards accountable for abuses. The Mission strengthened its working ties with the unit which supervised those legal assistants assigned to identify cases of illegal detention, prolonged pre-trial detention, miscalculation of prison sentences and other serious irregularities in prison dossiers, with a view to seeking solutions.

Though the period under review revealed no signs of overall progress in the judicial system, MICIVIH continued its monitoring and technical support activities. The Justice Minister had requested MICIVIH's assistance on matters related to impunity and compensation and the defining of short-term priorities. In response to the latter request, MICIVIH transmitted a document calling for, among other things, the development of the Ecole de la magistrature into a proper training school for judges; the development of a police and judicial criminal investigation capacity; the implementation of the 1998 strategic plan for judicial reform [YUN 1998, p. 227]; and the establishment of a functioning judicial inspectorate to closely supervise judicial work as one of the fundamental steps towards improving judicial performances.

The Mission's human rights promotion programmes were greatly reduced, pending the start of a new budget year and a review of its activities. MICIVIH, nevertheless, continued to distribute information through documentaries and a monthly bulletin. A major focus had been the development of a pilot programme of seminars on human rights, women's rights and civic education with the State Secretariat for Literacy. The Mission continued to work with local human rights organizations, mainly in terms of training, to assist in strengthening their capacity for human rights monitoring. The consolidation of a network of committees set up, with MICIVIH assistance, to monitor prisons and police custody cells remained a priority, particularly in the light of the Mission's eventual departure.

The Secretary-General concluded that, given the adverse consequences of the protracted crisis in Haiti, it was apparent that much still remained to be accomplished prior to the Mission's withdrawal with regard to the strengthening of State institutions and civil society organizations.

On 6 August [A/54/211], the Secretary-General updated the General Assembly on developments concerning MICIVIH. He said that the OAS Secretary-General on 4 June had informed him that, owing to financial constraints, a reduction of the OAS component of MICIVIH was necessary. As at 1 July, OAS had withdrawn 34 members of its personnel and only one OAS contracted staff, the Executive Director, remained. As a result, five of MICIVIH's nine regional offices had been closed since that date. Discussions between the United Nations and OAS focused on the payment by OAS of its share of the joint expenses incurred up to the time of the reduction of OAS personnel, and the new modalities of cooperation, including financial arrangements, for the remaining period of the MICIVIH mandate, on the basis of a significantly reduced OAS component. The United Nations and OAS nevertheless agreed to continue their cooperation in MICIVIH as a joint mission. The UN Secretary-General believed that the joint mission would be able to carry out its core activities at a meaningful, though reduced, level. It was therefore envisaged that the UN component of MICIVIH would remain at the same authorized level for the duration of its mandate. Since much remained to be accomplished in Haiti with regard to the strengthening of State institutions and civil society organizations, the Secretary-General called on the Assembly to renew the mandate of the UN component of the Mission.

On 22 November [A/54/625], the Secretary-General reviewed the activities of MICIVIH since May.

The milieu in which HNP operated during the period was marked by violent street demonstrations, armed crime and public pressure to act against criminals, as well as political pressures, threats and attacks against police officers. Against that background, the human rights situation deteriorated sharply. HNP remained a fragile institution, weakened by internal shortcomings (administrative, disciplinary and operational) and external pressures (ebbing public support and an aggressive campaign by the political movement Fanmi Lavalas against its leadership). The sudden resignation of the Secretary of State for Public Security in early October and the assassination of the person rumoured to replace him brought to the forefront questions about the capacity of HNP to provide effective security during the election period. The credibility and reputation of HNP were damaged by accusations that it was allegedly responsible for the summary execution of 11 individuals arrested in the Carrefour-Feuilles area in the outskirts of Port-au-Prince on 28 May. Following initial investigations, seven policemen were detained in connection with that crime. The executions were among 50 killings allegedly caused by the police between April and early June 1999, more than the total for the whole of 1998.

The shortcomings and systemic weaknesses that plagued the functioning of the judicial system were most apparent in the areas of respect for judicial procedures and in the preparation of cases for trial. In order to address those problems, in August MICIVIH presented updated lists of detainees held in pre-trial detention since 1995 and 1996. The Mission's suggestion to establish a commission to study the long-outstanding cases was adopted by the Minister of Justice. In other action, MICIVIH helped prepare a draft agreement under which an institution for juveniles run by a priest and the Ministries of Justice and of Social Affairs would work together on literacy and trade training programmes for women and juveniles.

On 28 September, MICIVIH published its report on impunity and compensation, which analysed legal proceedings related to the prosecution of human rights abuses that had occurred during the coup d'etat period (September 1991 to October 1994), looked at initiatives by the Government, civil society organizations and the international community in response to the issue of impunity and compensation and concluded with a wide range of recommendations. The Government announced that it would create a commission of judges to investigate serious human rights violations, in particular three massacres with strong symbolic value attributed to security forces.

MICIVIH's programme of human rights promotion and advocacy was severely disrupted by the downsizing of the Mission, as a consequence of which many of its training and seminar programmes were suspended. As the reduced Mission moved closer to the end of its mandate, its work focused increasingly on developing and carrying out projects in partnership with government ministries, organizing training-of-trainer courses, reinforcing the capacity of local NGOs and working with a network of committees set up to monitor prisons and police custody. Some 40 members of human rights organizations from throughout the country took part in a seminar from 8 to 13 November, organized by MICIVIH on behalf of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the aim of which was to deepen the participants' theoretical and practical knowledge of national and international human rights mechanisms, recourses and themes. One of the Mission's major projects was the completion of a video documentary, entitled A Work in Progress: Human Rights in Haiti, the Creole version of which was launched on 30 September.

The Secretary-General observed that Haiti had reached a critical juncture, with a political and security climate that was far from conducive to launching the electoral process. The persistent professional and ethical shortcomings of a yet to be reformed judicial system continued to be a source of endemic due process violations, as well as an obstacle to the police's performance in the area of law and order. Despite improvements in the penal system and the conditions of detention, formidable obstacles remained. New State institutions, such as the Office of the Ombudsman, remained embryonic and required the support of the State and of the international community with regard to their unmet resource needs and institutional development. MICIVIH had helped put in place some of the essential building blocks of the rule of law through its activities. However, Haiti was still in the early stages of transition towards a full-fledged democracy. There remained a number of areas in which the United Nations could continue to provide support in response to the request of Haitian authorities for assistance in strengthening institutions and civil society. The Secretary-General called on the General Assembly to consider the establishment of a new mission to consolidate the gains achieved by the Haitians with the support of MIPONUH and MICIVIH. By resolution 54/193 (see p. 218), the Assembly approved the establishment of the new mission, the International Civilian Support Mission in Haiti, to consolidate the results achieved by MIPONUH, MICIVIH and previous UN missions.

International Civilian Support Mission in Haiti

In November [A/C.5/54/38], the Secretary-General submitted the programme budget implications for the extension of the MICIVIH mandate for the first part of 2000 and the subsequent establishment of the International Civilian Support Mission in Haiti (MICAH) until 6 February 2001. He recalled General Assembly resolution 53/206 [YUN 1998, p. 1284], which had decided that a provision of $86,200,000 should be reflected in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 2000-2001 for special political missions. Accordingly, should the Assembly decide to extend MICIVIH's mandate and establish MICAH, the estimated requirements from the UN regular budget of $10,353,200 ($9,173,100 for MICAH and $1,180,100 for MICIVIH) would be charged against the $86,200,000 provision. It was also estimated that $14,734,200 from extrabudgetary resources would be required to support the technical assistance component.

In December [A/54/659], ACABQ said that the total estimated resource requirements to be funded from the regular budget and from extrabudgetary resources might not be sufficient to cover all the potential requirements identified in the report of the needs assessment mission (see p.215).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 84], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/193 [draft: A/54/L.36] without vote [agenda item 48].

Financing of missions

In January [A/53/789], the Secretary-General submitted the revised budget for the maintenance of MIPONUH for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, amounting to $29,994,700 gross ($28,562,700 net), excluding budgetary voluntary contributions in kind totalling $3,428,400. Of that amount, $12,290,015 gross ($11,603,615 net) represented the additional requirements resulting from the continuation of the Mission's mandate and for some transportation, data-processing and other equipment that was not included previously.

In February [A/53/846], ACABQ recommended that the General Assembly approve the appropriation and assessment of $12,264,015 gross ($11,577,615 net) for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, in addition to $17,704,685 gross ($16,959,085 net) that had been appropriated and assessed under Assembly resolution 52/246 [YUN 1998, p. 234]. In a letter of 9 February, annexed to the report, ACABQ's Chairman authorized the Secretary-General to enter into additional commitments in the amount of $3,000,000 for MIPONUH's maintenance for the same period.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (April)

On 7 April [meeting 97], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/873], adopted resolution 53/222 A without vote [agenda item 141].

Financing of the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti, the United Nations Transition Mission in Haiti and the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti, the United Nations Transition Mission in Haiti and the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 1063(1996) of 28 June 1996, by which the Council established the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti, and 1086(1996) of 5 December 1996, by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission until 31 July 1997,

Bearing in mind also Security Council resolution 1123(1997) of 30 July 1997, by which the Council established the United Nations Transition Mission in Haiti for a single four-month period,

Bearing in mind further Security Council resolutions 1141(1997) of 28 November 1997, by which the Council established the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti, and 1212(1998) of 25 November 1998, by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission until 30 November 1999,

Recalling its resolution 51/15 A of 4 November 1996 on the financing of the Support Mission and its subsequent decisions and resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 52/246 of 26 June 1998,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Missions are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Missions, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Missions by certain Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Missions with the necessary financial resources to enable them to fulfil their responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti, the United Nations Transition Mission in Haiti and the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti as at 28 February 1999, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 17.9 million United States dollars, representing 20 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Support Mission to the period ending 30 June 1999, notes that some 37 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation of the Organization, in particular with regard to reimbursements to troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Missions in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Civilian Police Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Civilian Police Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

8. Decides to appropriate the amount of 12,264,015 dollars gross (11,577,615 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Civilian Police Mission for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, in addition to the amount of 17,704,685 dollars gross (16,959,085 dollars net) already appropriated under the terms of General Assembly resolution 52/246 and inclusive of the amount of 3 million dollars gross and net authorized by the Advisory Committee under the terms of section IV of Assembly resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994;

9. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, and taking into account the amount of 17,704,685 dollars gross (16,959,085 dollars net) already apportioned in accordance with its resolution 52/246, to apportion among Member States the additional amount of 12,264,015 dollars gross (11,577,615 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1998 and 1999, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997;

10. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated additional staff assessment income of 686,400 dollars approved for the Civilian Police Mission for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999;

11. Invites voluntary contributions to the Civilian Police Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

12. Decides to keep under review during its fifty-third session the agenda item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti, the United Nations Transition Mission in Haiti and the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti".

In January [A/53/789/Add.1], the Secretary-General presented the proposed budget for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 for the maintenance of MIPONUH from 1 July to 30 November 1999 and for the liquidation of the Mission from 1 December 1999 to 30 June 2000, which amounted to $19,246,400 gross ($18,223,200 net), including budgeted voluntary contributions in kind amounting to $1,714,200.

In April [A/53/895/Add.7], ACABQ recommended, with regard to the Secretary-General's 1998 report on the financing of the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti (UNSMIH), the United Nations Transition Mission in Haiti (UNTMH) and MIPONUH [YUN 1998, p. 235], that the unencumbered balance of $906,800 gross ($865,200 net) for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 be credited to Member States in a manner to be determined by the Assembly. In addition, it recommended that the special arrangements for the application of article IV of the financial regulations of the United Nations, approved for UNSMIH in Assembly resolution 51/15 B [YUN 1997, p. 188], be applied to UNTMH and MIPONUH. With regard to the Secretary-General's report on the financing of MIPONUH from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, the Committee recommended that the Assembly approve the proposed appropriation and assessment of $17,532,200 gross ($16,509,000 net) for the maintenance and liquidation of the Mission.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (June and December)

On 8 June [meeting 101], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/873/Add.1, adopted resolution 53/222 B without vote [agenda item 141].

Cuba-United States

Report of Secretary-General. In August [A/54/259], the Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 53/4 [YUN 1998, p. 236], submitted information received from 58 States, the EU and eight UN organs and specialized agencies on the implementation of the resolution, by which the Assembly had called on States to refrain from unilateral application of economic and trade measures against States, and urged them to repeal or invalidate such measures. The preamble to resolution 53/4 had made particular reference to the Helms-Burton Act, promulgated by the United States in 1996, which had strengthened sanctions against Cuba.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 9 November [meeting 50], adopted resolution 54/21 [draft: A/54/L.H] by recorded vote (155-2-8) [agenda item 33].

Necessity of ending the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States of America against Cuba

The General Assembly,

Determined to encourage strict compliance with the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming, among other principles, the sovereign equality of States, non-intervention and non-interference in their internal affairs and freedom of international trade and navigation, which are also enshrined in many international legal instruments,

Recalling the statements of the heads of State or Government at the Ibero-American Summits concerning the need to eliminate the unilateral application of economic and trade measures by one State against another that affect the free flow of international trade,

Concerned about the continued promulgation and application by Member States of laws and regulations, such as that promulgated on 12 March 1996 known as the "Helms-Burton Act", the extraterritorial effects of which affect the sovereignty of other States, the legiti-mate interests of entities or persons under their jurisdiction and the freedom of trade and navigation.

Taking note of declarations and resolutions of different intergovernmental forums, bodies and Governments that express the rejection by the international community and public opinion of the promulgation and application of regulations of the kind referred to above,

Recalling its resolutions 47/19 of 24 November 1992, 48/16 of 3 November 1993, 49/9 of 26 October 1994, 50/10 of 2 November 1995, 51/17 of 12 November 1996, 52/10 of 5 November 1997 and 53/4 of 4 October 1998,

Concerned that, since the adoption of its resolutions 47/19, 48/16, 49/9, 50/10, 51/17, 52/10 and 53/4, further measures of that nature aimed at strengthening and extending the economic, commercial and financial embargo against Cuba continue to be promulgated and applied, and concerned also about the adverse effects of such measures on the Cuban people and on Cuban nationals living in other countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 53/4;

2. Reiterates its call on all States to refrain from promulgating and applying laws and measures of the kind referred to in the preamble to the present resolution in conformity with their obligations under the Charter of the United Nations and international law, which, inter alia, reaffirm the freedom of trade and navigation;

3. Once again urges States that have and continue to apply such laws and measures to take the necessary steps to repeal or invalidate them as soon as possible in accordance with their legal regime;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the appropriate organs and agencies of the United Nations system, to prepare a report on the implementation of the present resolution in the light of the purposes and principles of the Charter and international law and to submit it to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Necessity of ending the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States of America against Cuba".

Chapter IV

Asia and the Pacific

An overriding concern of the United Nations in the Asia and Pacific region in 1999 was securing Iraq's compliance with its unmet obligations under Security Council resolution 687(1991). Since the cessation of UN disarmament inspections and long-term monitoring operations in Iraq, following the withdrawal from that country in December 1998 of the United Nations Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), and the ensuing military strikes against it by the United States and the United Kingdom, Iraq had not allowed the UN inspectors to return. In December 1999, the Council, following consideration of the recommendations of three panels on Iraq that it created in January, adopted, albeit not unanimously, a resolution that preserved disarmament standards for Iraq, with a series of steps to terminate sanctions; established a new reinforced monitoring and verification arrangement in the form of the United Nations Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission to address the remaining disarmament tasks; reiterated Iraq's obligation to cooperate in accounting for missing persons and to return properties it had seized from Kuwait; and provided for Iraq's humanitarian concerns resulting from the sanctions, including lifting the ceiling on its oil production and export capacities under the oil-for-food formula on which the 1995 humanitarian programme for the Iraqi people was based. In the meantime, the Council extended the humanitarian programme thrice during the year, the last time until 8 June 2000.

In Afghanistan, where a long-standing war continued to rage, the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan succeeded early in the year in bringing the two warring parties together in two rounds of talks. In April, however, the Taliban, the party with significant territorial and military advantage, declined to continue the talks and thereafter mounted a major offensive intended finally to defeat the United Front, the other party to the conflict. In the waves of fighting that followed, without decisive result, tens of thousands of civilians were forcibly displaced. Concluding that the shuttle missions of his Special Envoy for Afghanistan between the warring parties and the countries bordering Afghanistan had limited impact, the Secretary-General and the Special Envoy agreed to shift the latter's activities to the Special Mission. In October, the Council demanded, under penalty of sanctions, that the Taliban turn over Usama bin Laden, a Saudi Arabian national indicted by the United States for terrorist activities, to appropriate authorities to face trial. As the Taliban failed to comply, the sanctions took effect on 14 November.

In Tajikistan, the Commission on National Reconciliation, the joint implementing body of the Government, and the United Tajik Opposition (UTO), the two parties to the 1997 General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan, reached several milestones towards its goal of national reconciliation and democratization. They included UTO's official declaration in August of the disbandment of its armed forces, paving the way for the Supreme Court's lifting in that month of the 1993 ban on political parties; and the September referendum that approved the amendments to the Constitution, leading to presidential elections in November. Preparations were under way for the parliamentary elections—the last major step to be achieved under the General Agreement—scheduled to take place before February 2000. The Secretary-General observed that those achievements were due in no small measure to the extraordinary efforts of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan, with the active support of the Contact Group of Guarantor States and International Organizations, and of the Mission in Tajikistan of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe. To prepare for and monitor the parliamentary elections, the Council extended the Mission's mandate until 15 May 2000.

On the Korean peninsula, the United Nations Command continued to discharge its responsibilities relating to the 1953 Armistice Agreement. In view of the continued report by IAEA that the cooperation of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) with it remained limited, the General Assembly, in November, reiterated its call on the DPRK to cooperate fully in the fulfilment of its nuclear safeguards agreement with IAEA.

The Secretary-General dispatched a Group of Experts to Cambodia to assist it in addressing the issue of bringing to justice those responsible for past serious violations of Cambodian and international law. Following a review of the Group's report, the Prime Minister decided that the perpetrators should be tried by a Cambodian court, rather than by an international tribunal, as recommended by the Group. The Assembly, in December, appealed to the Government to ensure that those most responsible be brought to account in accordance with international standards of justice, fairness and due process of law.

In a popular consultation held on 30 August, the people of the Non-Self-Governing Territory of East Timor voted overwhelmingly against the offer of special autonomy within Indonesia in favour of transition to independence. The offer, embodied in one of the 5 May Agreements concluded under the Secretary-General's good offices between Indonesia and Portugal (the administering Power) and with the UN Secretariat, called for the consultation under UN auspices, for which the Council created the United Nations Mission in East Timor. Following the announcement of the consultation result, the already serious security situation prevailing before the consultation erupted into violence unleashed by rampaging anti-independence militias, with the alleged acquiescence of the Indonesian military and police, resulting in numerous deaths, the displacement of hundreds of thousands of East Timorese and a grave humanitarian situation. As conditions deteriorated into chaos, the Council, in September, authorized an international force led by Australia to restore law and order and pave the way for an orderly transition of authority in East Timor under UN administration. For that purpose, the Council, in October, established the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor for an initial three-month period until 31 January 2000.

The United Nations Political Office in Bougainville (UNPOB), Papua New Guinea, continued to monitor and report on the implementation of the 1998 Lincoln Agreement on Peace, Security and Development on Bougainville by the parties to that Agreement, as well as by the Peace Monitoring Group composed of Australia, Fiji, New Zealand and Vanuatu. At the request of the Government, the Secretary-General, with the concurrence of the Council, extended UNPOB's mandate for a further 12-month period to 31 December 2000.

Among other matters brought to the attention of the United Nations were the long-standing dispute between India and Pakistan over Jammu and Kashmir, violations reported by Iran and Iraq of their 1987 ceasefire agreement and of the area of separation between them, as well as the continued occupation by Iran of Greater Tunb, Lesser Tunb and Abu Musa, three islands claimed by the United Arab Emirates.

Iraq

Throughout 1999, relations between the Security Council and Iraq were marked by a stalemate precipitated by the withdrawal on 16 December 1998 of the United Nations Special Commission (UNSCOM) and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)—both mandated by the Council's ceasefire resolution 687(1991)[YUN 1991, p. 172] to disarm Iraq of its weapons of mass destruction and to ensure that it did not reconstitute or reacquire them—and the military strike that ensued against Iraq by the United States and the United Kingdom. Although UNSCOM and IAEA ceased operations in Iraq, they each submitted to the Council, in addition to the required biannual reports, a comprehensive report on the status of the disarmament of Iraq and of the monitoring and verification activities in that country for which each was responsible.

To assist in its consideration of options for the full implementation of resolution 687(1991) and all other related resolutions regarding Iraq, the Council, in January, set up three panels to deal with the unresolved issues concerning disarmament in the context of the established ongoing monitoring and verification (OMV) systems, Iraq's humanitarian situation, and prisoners of war (POWs) and Kuwaiti property.

In December, drawing on the recommendations of the three panels, the Council, by resolution 1284(1999), created the United Nations Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission (UNMOVIC) to replace UNSCOM, assume the latter's responsibilities connected with verifying Iraq's compliance with its weapons-related obligations under resolution 687(1991) and other relevant resolutions, and establish and operate a reinforced OMV system and address unresolved disarmament issues within that framework. The resolution retained the linkage between compliance by Iraq and lifting of the sanctions against it, but introduced the principle of their suspension commensurate with compliance achieved. It also removed the ceiling for Iraqi oil exports, exempted from travel restrictions those Hajj pilgrimage flights that were not also transporting cargo into or out of Iraq, and asked an expert group to recommend alternatives for increasing Iraq's production and export capacity.

Before the resolution was adopted, Iraq categorically rejected the draft text, insisting that, since it had honoured its fundamental obligations under the relevant resolutions, it was incumbent on the Council to adopt forthwith a resolution providing for the complete and unconditional lifting of the sanctions. It could not accept the new and arbitrary conditions to be imposed on Iraq, as they constituted a threat to its sovereignty and national interests.

In view of the continuing sanctions, the Council extended the humanitarian programme for three 180-day periods (26 November 1998-24 May 1999; 25 May-20 November 1999, later extended to 4 and then to 11 December; and 11 December 1999-8 June 2000).

On 23 December, the General Assembly decided that the agenda item on the financing of the activities arising from Security Council resolution 687(1991) would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session (decision 54/465) and that the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee should continue consideration of the item at the resumed session (decision 54/462 A).

By decisions 54/425 and 54/426 of 9 December, the Assembly deferred consideration of, respectively, Israel's armed aggression against Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system on the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security; and the consequences of Iraq's occupation of and aggression against Kuwait. It included both items in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth (2000) session.

UN Special Commission and IAEA post-withdrawal activities

UN Special Commission

UNSCOM remained in being until 17 December 1999, when the Security Council replaced it with a new body (see p. 229). Richard Butler (Australia) remained as Executive Chairman until the end of his two-year tenure on 30 June. Thereafter, the Deputy Executive Chairman, Charles Duelfer (United States), acted as Officer-in-Charge until the successor body was created.

Report of UNSCOM (January). The Executive Chairman forwarded to the Security Council on 25 January two UNSCOM reports [S/1999/94]: one on the current status of the disarmament of Iraq's proscribed missile, chemical and biological weapons and the other on the status of the OMV operations in Iraq to ensure that it did not reconstitute or retain prohibited chemical and biological weapons and missiles with a range greater than 150 kilometres.

The first report contained a comprehensive record of those disarmament issues for which UNSCOM was responsible: a description of UNSCOM's mandate, the methodology for its execution, and the impact of its working environment on its accounting for proscribed weapons; the outstanding priority issues in each weapons area, as summarized in the Executive Chairman's 1998 consolidated biannual reports [YUN 1998, p. 247]; three appendices on the current status of the material balances of proscribed operational weapons and capabilities in each weapons area, with tabulated records of, among others, items in question, declared quantities and disposal status, UNSCOM's comments and accounting status; and an appendix describing Iraqi actions to obstruct disarmament. In the biological weapons area, each element of Iraq's full, final and complete disclosure (FFCD), submitted in three versions but without significant new information—the first rejected by UNSCOM as incomplete and the third declared by international experts as deficient in all areas—was dealt with in detail, with the tabulated record of UNSCOM's assessment and comments. A summary of biological disarmament efforts from 1991 to 1998 was also provided.

The second report, on the status of OMV operations in Iraq, gave an overview of the system, underscoring the key elements for its effectivity and credibility, namely, Iraq's adherence to its obligations and cooperation with monitoring activities, UNSCOM's unhindered access to sites and information, and resources available to it for implementing its mandate.

Attention was drawn to the shortcomings of the OMV operations in terms of funding and availability of experts. Suggestions for the system's improvement were put forward, among them a specialized training programme for inspection teams and the creation of two monitoring sub-centres or operational bases, in Mosul in the north and Basrah in the south, to enable access to practically all of the sites designated for monitoring within two hours.

The report pointed out that the UNSCOM OMV system was based on the assumption that the mandated objective of the full verification and disposal of Iraq's proscribed weapons would be achieved. It stated that the current review took account of the possibility that that would prove not to be the case, but that UNSCOM might nevertheless be required to operate its OMV system under the shadow of Iraq possibly retaining prohibited materials; and that, once sanctions were reduced or lifted, UNSCOM would face a considerable increase in its OMV work.

Further reports (April and October). As called for by Security Council resolution 1051(1996) [YUN 1996, p.218], UNSCOM submitted to the Council, through the Secretary-General, two biannual reports, on 9 April [S/1999/401] and 8 October [S/1999/1037]. The April report, covering the period 6 October 1998-11 April 1999, outlined developments in 1998 that had led to the suspension of UNSCOM's activities, its withdrawal from Iraq and subsequent resumption of activities, its final withdrawal in December and the ensuing military action against that country. It briefly described UNSCOM's disarmament and OMV activities until then. The report recorded that neither the declarations on Iraq's activities, facilities, materials and other items that might be used for prohibited purposes, due on 15 January 1999, nor any notifications on national implementation measures, had been received. Moreover, after 15 December 1998, Iraq ceased to provide the notification forms on its import of notifiable items. The report concluded that, not having received the cooperation required of Iraq, UNSCOM remained unable to give the Council the assurances it required regarding the final disposition of Iraq's proscribed weapons programmes and their possible reconstitution.

The October report covered the period 12 April-11 October 1999, during which UNSCOM focused on facilitating an eventual resumption of UN disarmament and monitoring operations in Iraq. To that end, it continued to organize, analyse and computerize the large store of data accumulated during its operations to make them more readily usable. It prepared recommendations for a reconstituted OMV system, including steps for its implementation. Notifications received from Governments on the supply to Iraq of dual-use materials were analysed and registered. At the Council's request, UNSCOM provided written information and oral briefings on various matters at informal Council consultations. It settled some of its liabilities, including reimbursing Chile for expenditures for helicopter support, France for a camera system and Germany for aerial support between April 1995 and September 1996. In the light of discussions with Bahrain, the Secretary-General and the IAEA Director General proposed, on 29 September, an interim arrangement to hold the field office in that country (relocated to Manama in July) in caretaker status to enable the quick resumption of work when conditions allowed.

Communications from Iraq. On 28 July [S/1999/831], Iraq protested the destruction of seven specimens of VX nerve gas at UNSCOM's premises (Canal Hotel) in Baghdad by a team directed to do so by the Executive Chairman. It claimed that the existence of those specimens, revealed only after the team's arrival in Baghdad, supported its suspicion that the specimens had been deliberately used to contaminate the warhead remnants sent to the United States for analysis in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 249] so as to result in findings of VX traces. Iraq demanded an inventory by an impartial body of all items at UNSCOM's premises in Baghdad to bring out facts that would vindicate Iraq. It repeated that demand on 16 August [S/1999/897], in the light of a 5 August report of the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW) on the work of its special team for Iraq, which included an inventory of materials in the two UNSCOM laboratories at the Baghdad Monitoring and Verification Centre (BMVC). The inventory referred to five bottles identified as "Iraq GD-hexane", a toxic agent Iraq claimed it never submitted to UNSCOM, and to seven comparison samples of VX nerve agent, marked to be kept in a container designed to ensure the secure transportation of dangerous materials, such as explosives. Iraq took the reference to imply the presence of explosives in the UNSCOM wing of the BMVC, a claim denied by the former Executive Chairman. Iraq said the references, as well as opposition by the United States and the United Kingdom to submitting those VX samples to analysis, made clear that the Canal Hotel VX samples were destroyed, not for the danger they posed, but to get rid of proof of UNSCOM's illegitimate activities.

On 1 August [A/54/202], Iraq took exception to the Secretary-General's statement in his report to the General Assembly on the role of the United Nations in the field of verification [A/54/166], namely, that UNSCOM activities to verify Iraq's compliance with relevant Security Council resolutions ceased on 16 December 1998, without stating why or how those activities were conducted. Iraq claimed that UNSCOM had exceeded its mandate and significantly deviated from its original course, that the former Executive Chairman, on orders from United States officials and without the Council's or the Secretary-General's authorization, withdrew UNSCOM personnel from Iraq in November and December, and that, in consultation with such officials, he prepared a report that provided grounds for the 16 December military strike on Iraq.

Earlier, on 27 February [S/1999/219], Iraq claimed that efforts to contain the spread of foot-and-mouth disease in a number of governorates were severely hampered by the shortage of vaccine owing to UNSCOM's destruction of equipment in the laboratory devoted to producing it.

That statement, the Executive Chairman asserted on 11 March [S/1999/285], did not accord with the pertinent facts. The Daura facility for the production of vaccines was, by Iraq's admission in 1995, not a purely civilian facility, but had been used for biological-warfare-agent production, research and development. The installations, facilities and 28 pieces of equipment used for those purposes were destroyed in 1996 and special air-handling equipment was disabled. Some 40 major pieces originally imported for the production of foot-and-mouth disease vaccine remained, as UNSCOM could not establish their use in Iraq's biological warfare programme. Iraq unilaterally halted vaccine production in September 1992.

IAEA

IAEA report (February). In connection with the establishment of the disarmament and OMV panel on Iraq [S/1999/100], the IAEA Director General transmitted to the Security Council a report on 8 February 1999 [S/1999/127], summarizing the status of the implementation of the Agency's mandate in Iraq up to its withdrawal on 16 December 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 267], which could facilitate that panel's work. The summary incorporated information provided in the 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 225] and 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 264] six-monthly reports.

The report identified and examined the three areas where questions and concerns remained: the lack of certain technical documentation relating to engineering drawings of centrifuge and nuclear-weapon mechanical designs, and Iraq's inability to provide further information regarding the identification and location of a foreign national alleged to have offered assistance to its clandestine nuclear weapons programme, as well as documentary evidence of the timing and modalities of the abandonment of the programme. However, the uncertainties those created presented no technical impediment to the full implementation of the IAEA OMV plan, which took them into account. Provided IAEA was allowed full and free access in Iraq, it would be able to proceed with that implementation, and to investigate further the remaining questions and concerns and any other aspect of Iraq's clandestine nuclear programme arising out of new information acquired by IAEA. The scope of the activities to be carried out was based on the technically coherent picture of Iraq's clandestine nuclear programme derived from IAEA's intensive verification activities since 1991; the remaining uncertainties were compensated for by prudent assumptions regarding Iraq's nuclear capabilities.

Direct annual implementation costs were estimated at about $10 million, not including substantial logistical costs and other assistance provided through UNSCOM.

Further report (April) and communications. Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1051(1996), IAEA submitted its consolidated six-monthly report for the period 1 October 1998 to 1 April 1999 [S/1999/393 & Corr.1].

According to the report, the BMVC-based Nuclear Monitoring Group, since its establishment in August 1994 until IAEA's withdrawal from Iraq in 1998, carried out some 1,625 OMV inspections, the majority without prior notice and some in cooperation with UNSCOM. The results of the analyses of the environmental samples taken in connection with the 1998 visits to Iraq's presidential sites [YUN 1998, p. 266], received and evaluated during the reporting period, did not indicate the presence of proscribed materials or of proscribed activities at any of those sites. Seven of eight requests for the release or relocation of equipment and materials, or for the change of use of monitored facilities, were approved, as were the intended export to Iraq of items under some 30 transactions, for which notifications were received under the export/import mechanism jointly administered with UNSCOM. In addition, the report included excerpts from IAEA's February report on the status of its verification activities.

In lieu of its second six-monthly report, IAEA recorded in a 6 October letter [S/1999/1035] that it had not received the semi-annual declarations required of Iraq regarding changes in its use of facilities, installations and sites, as well as the inventory and location of materials, equipment and isotopes that were under IAEA monitoring. The declarations were due on 15 January and 15 July. IAEA indicated that it maintained an operational plan for resuming OMV operations in Iraq on short notice. For the full implementation of its mandate, however, retention of its right to unrestricted access was essential, as provided for in relevant Council resolutions and in the IAEA OMV plan.

On 10 December [S/2000/120], IAEA notified the Council that, in keeping with the safeguards agreement between Iraq and IAEA pursuant to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2373(XXII) [YUN 1968, p. 17], it needed to carry out a physical inventory verification by 14 December of the nuclear material subject to safeguards in Iraq to ensure that it remained accounted for, unaltered and under IAEA seal. Required under the safeguards system once a year, or not less than every 14 months, that task was subsumed under the more comprehensive and intrusive disarmament and OMV activities mandated by Council resolution 687(1991) and related resolutions. The last inventory verification took place on 14 October 1998. IAEA stressed that the dispatch of the safeguards mission did not in any way obviate the need to resume OMV operations and clarification of outstanding disarmament questions as soon as possible.

By resolution 54/26 of 15 November (see p. 962), the General Assembly stressed the need for the resumption without delay of IAEA's OMV activities in Iraq.

Transitional arrangements

UN Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission

The Security Council President, on 30 January [S/1999/100], announced that the Council, while continuing discussions on options for the full implementation of all of its resolutions regarding Iraq, would establish three panels on that country. The first panel, on disarmament and current and future OMV issues, would involve the participation and expertise of UNSCOM, IAEA, the UN Secretariat and others. It would assess all information, including OMV data, relating to the state of disarmament in Iraq and make recommendations on how to re-establish an effective disarmament/OMV regime in that country. The second panel, on humanitarian issues, would involve the participation and expertise of the United Nations Office of the Iraq Programme, the secretariat of the Sanctions Committee for Iraq and the UN Secretariat. It would assess Iraq's current humanitarian situation and recommend measures for its improvement. The third panel, on POWs and Kuwaiti property, including archives, and involving the participation and expertise of the Secretariat and any other relevant expertise, would assess Iraq's compliance relating to POWs and Kuwaiti property, as stipulated by relevant Council resolutions. The panels would submit their recommendations to the Council no later than 15 April. The current Council President, Celso L. N. Amorim (Brazil), would chair each panel.

Report of disarmament/OMV panel. On 27 and 30 March [S/1999/356], the Chairman of the panels transmitted the report of the panel on disarmament and OMV issues, as well as those of the panels on humanitarian issues (see p. 251) and on POWs and Kuwaiti property (see p. 235). Composed of 20 experts, the first panel met in New York from 23 to 27 February and from 22 to 27 March to consider information on the OMV regime; the export/import monitoring mechanism; the nuclear, missile, chemical and biological weapons areas; and overhead imagery. The panel's mandate reflected the Council's assessment that the presence of inspectors on the ground remained the most effective way to provide assurance that Iraq did not retain, reacquire or rebuild its proscribed weapons programmes. Bearing in mind the need to ensure full implementation of all relevant Council resolutions regarding Iraq, particularly resolutions 687(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 172], 707(1991) [ibid., p. 188], 715(1991) [ibid., p. 194] and 1051(1996) [YUN 1996, p. 218], the panel needed to answer the fundamental question of whether it was feasible to address the remaining disarmament issues and areas of uncertainty through their integration into a reinforced OMV regime developed to its full potential.

The panel heard briefings by UNSCOM and IAEA on the current status of disarmament and OMV in the four proscribed weapons areas, which concentrated on specific, outstanding priority issues. It also considered Iraqi documentation containing its views on the subject. The briefings indicated that, despite the well-known difficult circumstances, both bodies had effectively uncovered and eliminated the bulk of Iraq's proscribed weapons programmes: IAEA was able to evolve a technically coherent picture of Iraq's nuclear weapons programme and UNSCOM achieved considerable progress in establishing material balances of Iraq's proscribed weapons. As to the disarmament issues still to be resolved, reference was made to a possible "point of impasse" in further investigating those issues under current procedures.

The briefings demonstrated that it was technically possible to pursue resolution of the remaining issues within the OMV framework, provided adequate arrangements were established to ensure the full exercise of the rights contemplated in the UNSCOM and IAEA OMV plans. An adequate legal framework for implementing a rigorous and effective OMV system, integrating into it the investigation of unresolved issues relating to proscribed weapons programmes, was provided for in those plans. From a legal perspective, specific operations aimed at clarifying certain questions and detecting the retention of proscribed items that escaped being destroyed, removed or rendered harmless were fully guaranteed. The reinforced OMV system should make maximum use of synergies, cross-checks and cross-fertilizations between the activities of the four disciplines (nuclear, missile, chemical, biological) and the export/import monitoring mechanism. Such an integrated approach could enable rapid and effective work towards confirming Iraq's disarmament status. The BMVC, which might be strengthened further, would continue to play a pivotal role.

The panel advanced some parameters under which unresolved or not sufficiently resolved disarmament issues could be integrated into OMV. It insisted that Iraq should confirm the rights and privileges of UNSCOM and IAEA inspectors and support staff and, consistent with past experience, confirm that their health and safety would be protected at all times within its territory.

To achieve its objectives, the reinforced OMV system would require Iraq to provide immediate and unobstructed access to all sites, as well as documentation to determine the legitimacy of activities under monitoring. It should ensure access to information and materials related to past proscribed activities and to the Iraqi personnel involved for interviews without interference. It should not conceal, remove or destroy relevant evidence, or interfere with monitoring equipment. It should adopt national legislation for the implementation of its obligations under Council resolutions.

The panel suggested the possibility of restructuring UNSCOM as a collegiate body, comprising a core of technical experts, including from IAEA and OPCW, Security Council members, the Under-Secretary-General for Disarmament Affairs and other Secretariat representatives, which could provide independent advice, guidance and general oversight, at the expert and diplomatic levels, on OMV activities and problems. Its functions could include consideration of matters relating to the execution of the OMV plan; reports from the Executive Chairman on the conduct of operations; issues submitted for resolution or recommendation to the Council; Iraqi complaints regarding the conduct of inspections; developing rosters of monitoring experts; and advising on personnel policy. The collegiate body should meet at least every three months, possibly with a non-permanent Council member presiding. The restructured UNSCOM should ensure a clear UN identity and be guided by the principles of full independence, rigour and transparency to ensure the effectiveness of its work and credibility of its results. Weight should be given to training aimed at developing and reinforcing core inspection skills, with emphasis on understanding national sensitivities during inspections. OMV information, whether provided by Iraq or other Member States or generated by inspections, should be held confidential and assessed strictly in terms of its credibility and relevance to the mandate. Difficulties encountered in the past, including instances of obstruction and/or deception, should be taken into account; at the same time, unnecessary confrontation or disproportionate reactions should be avoided. Confidentiality should also be maintained during all stages of the planning and execution phases. There should be a single point of contact with the press and public comment by the verification entity should be restricted to the factual, leaving to the Council evaluations or comments with obvious political implications.

The panel concluded that a reinforced OMV system, integrating intrusive inspections and investigation of relevant elements of past proscribed activities, was viable. It was in fact the same system as conceived in the plans approved by resolution 715(1991), developed to its full potential.

The panel observed that, the longer inspection and monitoring activities remained suspended, the more difficult the comprehensive implementation of Council resolutions would become. The current absence of inspectors had exponentially increased the risk of compromising the already achieved level of assurance regarding Iraq's compliance with its weapons-related obligations, given the difficulty of re-establishing the necessary OMV baseline. The panel considered the status quo as not a practical alternative and recommended that an effective, rigorous and credible international inspection regime be restored in Iraq. The reinforced OMV would be more intrusive than the one so far practised, and the Council had to devise ways to ensure Iraq's acceptance of it.

On 13 April [S/1999/415], the Council President circulated the personal remarks of the panels' Chairman at the 7 April Council consultations of the whole, strongly urging the Council to give due consideration to the disarmament/OMV panel's suggestions, in spite of the cautious diplomatic but by no means opaque language in which they were couched.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 4084], the Security Council adopted resolution 1284(1999) by vote (11-0-4), based on a draft by the United Kingdom [S/1999/1232].

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous relevant resolutions, including its resolutions 661(1990) of 6 August 1990, 687(1991) of 3 April 1991, 699(1991) of 17 June 1991, 707(1991) of 15 August 1991, 715(1991) of 11 October 1991, 986(1995) of 14 April 1995, 1051(1996) of 27 March 1996, 1153(1998) of 20 February 1998, 1175(1998) of 19 June 1998, 1242(1999) of 21 May 1999 and 1266(1999) of 4 October 1999,

Recalling the approval by the Council in its resolution 715(1991) of the plans for future ongoing monitoring and verification submitted by the Secretary-General and the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency in pursuance of paragraphs 10 and 13 of resolution 687(1991),

Welcoming the reports of the three panels on Iraq, and having undertaken a comprehensive consideration of those reports and the recommendations contained in them,

Stressing the importance of a comprehensive approach to the full implementation of all relevant Security Council resolutions regarding Iraq and the need for Iraqi compliance with those resolutions,

Recalling the goal of establishing in the Middle East a zone free from weapons of mass destruction and all missiles for their delivery and the objective of a global ban on chemical weapons as referred to in paragraph 14 of resolution 687(1991),

Concerned at the humanitarian situation in Iraq, and determined to improve that situation,

Recalling with concern that the repatriation and return of all Kuwaiti and third-country nationals or their remains, present in Iraq on or after 2 August 1990, pursuant to paragraph 2 (c) of resolution 686(1991) of 2 March 1991 and paragraph 30 of resolution 687(1991), have not yet been fully carried out by Iraq,

Recalling that in its resolutions 686(1991) and 687(1991) the Council demanded that Iraq return in the shortest possible time all Kuwaiti property it had seized, and noting with regret that Iraq has still not complied fully with that demand,

Acknowledging the progress made by Iraq towards compliance with the provisions of resolution 687(1991), but noting that, as a result of its failure to implement the relevant Council resolutions fully, the conditions do not exist which would enable the Council to take a decision pursuant to resolution 687(1991) to lift the prohibitions referred to in that resolution,

Reiterating the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of Kuwait, Iraq and the neighbouring States,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, and taking into account the fact that operative provisions of the present resolution relate to previous resolutions adopted under Chapter VU of the Charter,

VOTE ON RESOLUTION 1284(1999):

In favour Argentina, Bahrain, Brazil, Canada, Gabon, Gambia, Namibia, Netherlands, Slovenia, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: None.

Abstaining: China, France, Malaysia, Russian Federation.

China pointed out that implementation of the resolution was highly questionable without Iraqi cooperation. China had always believed that Iraq was obligated to implement the relevant Council resolutions; however, the Council also had to assess objectively Iraq's implementation and gradually lift or at least suspend the sanctions accordingly. It said a draft put to the vote on which there was no consensus, even if adopted, would not help resolve the long-standing issue of Iraq.

France said two matters were regrettable: the refusal to break the isolation of the Iraqi population and, in that connection, to permit the resumption of civil aviation; and the lack of a real exception to the sanctions for religious activities, such as the Hajj and the Omra pilgrimage, since everything remained in the hands of the Sanctions Committee. The resolution did not include the specifics for the financial mechanism to be applicable during the period of sanctions suspension. The criteria for the suspension and lifting of sanctions were ambiguous and thus subject to interpretation difficulties. Its abstention notwithstanding, France would plead for wisdom to prevail in the interpretation of paragraphs 33 and 34 so that a reasonable financial mechanism could be adopted.

The Russian Federation stated that, while it could not support the resolution, it would not hinder its adoption since, at its insistence, serious changes offering an opportunity to break the Iraqi stalemate had been introduced into the text. That should not be taken to mean that Russia was obliged to play along with attempts to enforce implementation. It agreed that Iraq had to fulfil its obligations, but that the Council had to act in an unbiased manner and not allow its work to be politicized. Russia was not trying to shield Iraq, but a repetition of the previous situation under UNSCOM was unacceptable.

Malaysia said the resolution was driven by political rather than humanitarian considerations and left out the important issue of financial modalities. It established no definite benchmark or time frame for the final lifting of sanctions and persisted in effecting stringent controls that impacted negatively on innocent civilians. Its formulation on the Hajj issue was such as not to resolve the problems occurring every Hajj season. Malaysia regretted that its proposal to hear Iraq's views before acting on the draft was not accommodated. While there was broad agreement on continued monitoring and on the urgency to resolve the key remaining disarmament issues, any reinforced OMV system should take account of Iraq's dignity as a sovereign State, as well as of the religious and cultural sensitivities of its people.

Communication from Iraq. Prior to the resolution's adoption, Iraq, on 5 December [S/1999/1218], categorically rejected the draft text as a "malicious and biased rewriting" of existing Council resolutions, saying that, since it had honoured its fundamental obligations under those resolutions, it was incumbent on the Council to follow suit and adopt forthwith a resolution providing for the complete and unconditional lifting of the sanctions against Iraq. It could not accept the "new and arbitrary conditions" that the draft sought to impose on Iraq as they constituted "a threat to its sovereignty and national interests".

Iraq-Kuwait

Kuwait, on 14 January [S/1999/40], drew attention to an article in the 10 January Iraqi paper Al-Thawrah by Iraq's Deputy Prime Minister, maintaining that Kuwait was created by the United Kingdom to contain Iraq and deny it access to its coasts, which historically had always been part of Iraqi territory. The article went on to say that Iraq's overtures to settle the demarcation of the boundaries between it and Kuwait had been met with delays and obstacles, while Kuwait continued to construct oil-production facilities and military installations and to create farm settlements on what was Iraqi territory.

Kuwait called the article a distortion of internationally recognized historical facts, namely, that Kuwait was a State with recognized boundaries before Iraq was established as a political entity in 1921. More seriously, the article constituted a complete repudiation of Security Council resolution 687(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 172], setting forth Iraq's obligations in the aftermath of its aggression against Kuwait, and resolution 833(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 400] on the completion of demarcating for the first time the precise coordinates of the international boundary between Iraq and Kuwait.

POWs and Kuwaiti property

Report of POW/Kuwaiti property panel. The Chairman of the three panels on Iraq, established pursuant to the Security Council President's note of 30 January (see p. 229), transmitted the report of the panel on POWs and Kuwaiti property to the Council on 30 March [S/1999/356]. The panel, composed of UN Secretariat officials, agreed to base its assessment on briefings and written submissions of those with first-hand information, including those directly concerned, and not to engage in any investigative work of its own. The panel met on 18 February and on 3, 4 and 9 March to consider information from a variety of sources.

POWs

For its work on POWs, the panel considered written submissions from the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and from Max van der Stoep, Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Iraq; a non-paper by Iraq; and oral briefings from the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General in Baghdad, the Permanent Representative of Kuwait to the United Nations, the Vice-Chairman of the Kuwaiti National Committee on Missing Persons and Prisoner of War Affairs, the Chairman of the Committee for Saudi Prisoners of War in Iraq, and the French, United Kingdom and United States representatives in the Tripartite Commission, formally created by the 1991 Riyadh Agreement (see p. 236) to ascertain the fate of missing military personnel and civilians.

In assessing Iraqi compliance relating to POWs as stipulated by Council resolutions, the panel took as the legal framework for its own work the relevant Council resolutions and international humanitarian law provisions, as well as other pertinent international agreements.

The panel noted that, at the end of the Gulf War, ICRC arranged for the global repatriation of more than 70,000 Iraqi and 4,000 Kuwaiti and allied POWs, and over 1,300 civilian internees and detained civilians of Kuwaiti or third-State nationality. Others reportedly returned to Kuwait after the 1991 insurrection in southern Iraq. Although the efforts of the Tripartite Commission, which, under the chairmanship of ICRC had held 23 meetings by September 1998, had yielded limited results, it was deemed the most appropriate mechanism to deal with the issue of missing persons. Its Technical Subcommittee (TSC), set up in 1994 to expedite the search for all persons for whom inquiry files had been opened, met monthly in the demilitarized zone on the Iraq-Kuwait border, holding its thirty-sixth meeting on 2 December 1998. Iraq notified ICRC, however, that it would not participate in the next scheduled 1999 meeting of either the Commission or TSC. ICRC was unable to obtain Iraq's agreement to grant it access to those detained in Iraq.

According to ICRC, individual files for persons not accounted for submitted by the July 1996 deadline set by the Commission numbered 608 from Kuwait (including 7 files for Saudi nationals), 17 from Saudi Arabia and 789 from Iraq. Three Kuwaiti files had since been closed, leaving 605 open, relating to 570 Kuwaiti nationals and 35 third-State nationals legally in Kuwait at the time of its occupation by Iraq. According to Saudi Arabia, 24 of its nationals (21 of them civilians) remained unaccounted for; approximately 5,300 Iraqis, in that country as refugees under the auspices of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), refused repatriation to Iraq after the Gulf War.

Iraq held that there were no POWs or detainees in its territory and that the issue was one of missing persons. Of the 126 cases to which it had responded, 121 were arrested and sent to detention centres in southern Iraq, but their fate could not be established after their escape from detention during the unrest in the area; five cases were identified as those of persons killed in Kuwait or in combat, one of whose remains was returned, thus closing that file. Eight other cases were solved or withdrawn by Kuwait. As for the rest of the files, Iraq claimed that all documents that could provide a basis for a search had been destroyed, burned or lost in the riots in the south. While reaffirming that it held no POWs, Iraq said it was not possible to reach agreement with ICRC on the question of visits to detention sites, for it was under no obligation to accept proposals that would extend the scope and duration of the search for the missing.

The panel observed that, were Iraq's compliance with its obligations to be assessed in the light of current circumstances, the status of the remaining 605 persons unaccounted for, whether POWs, civilian detainees or missing persons, would be crucial, as each of those categories of individuals entailed for the detaining Power different obligations under the relevant legal instruments. Given the limitation of not being able to investigate the facts, the panel found itself unable to make a definitive determination. The absence of a direct legal link between the Council resolutions and 1991 agreements concluded by Iraq and the coalition forces in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia (the Riyadh Agreements), did not exonerate Iraq from its obligation to cooperate with the Tripartite Commission under those agreements. The panel thus urged Iraq to reconsider its decision not to participate in the Commission and TSC. In reaffirming the humanitarian character of the issues, it stressed the need to avoid politicizing them and the imperative to provide information to the families of the missing. Although progress had been below the level expected and desired by the international community, the Tripartite Commission and TSC offered the best chance of progress for the issue; it was therefore the responsibility of all involved to cooperate fully with them. The panel recommended that, since the Council had addressed the POW issue in its resolutions, the Secretary-General should keep it informed of progress on the situation through a semi-annual or annual report, based on information collected by the Secretariat from Iraq, Kuwait and the Commission. The panel believed that, for progress to be achieved, it was fundamental to show good will in ascertaining the fate of the missing by transparency and openness.

Kuwaiti property

For its assessment of Iraqi compliance relating to Kuwaiti property, including archives, the panel took as its legal framework those provisions of Security Council resolutions 686(1991) and 687(1991) requiring Iraq immediately to begin to return all Kuwaiti property it had seized, the return to be completed in the shortest possible period. Considered as part of that framework were relevant provisions of the Hague Regulations Concerning the Laws and Custom of War on Land, annexed to the 1907 IV Hague Convention, generally recognized as part of customary international law, in so far as they related to respect for property and the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War.

The panel outlined the actions taken relating to the return of Kuwaiti property in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 195], 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 476] and 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 234]. It noted that in June 1997 and December 1998, Iraq's Permanent Representative to the United Nations informed the Coordinator for the return of Kuwaiti property that several small items identified by markings as belonging to Kuwait had been found in local markets but not returned due to the absence in Iraq of a field representative of the Coordinator. The matter of the missing archives and military equipment previously reported to the United Nations was again brought to the attention of Iraq in October 1997 and March 1998.

In his oral presentation, the Secretary-General's Special Envoy in Baghdad said he had raised the missing-property issue in December 1998 as an important one to be resolved; Iraq's Deputy Prime Minister replied that it could be easily settled in the context of the comprehensive review of Iraq's disarmament compliance that was shortly to have been undertaken by the Council [YUN 1998, p. 259]. The panel also heard from Kuwait's Permanent Representative that no private property had been returned but for which compensation claims had been presented to the United Nations Compensation Commission; that, while much of the outstanding property could be subject to claims, the return of the archives was essential—no compensation could be paid for them, nor for museum objects, being unique items; and that Kuwaiti anti-aircraft weapons were intact and emplaced around Baghdad and at other Iraqi sites. Documentation provided by the Compensation Commission indicated that, since the Commission had no enforcement mechanism, it could do nothing for claimants seeking compensation for loss of irreplaceable objects and other tangible properties stolen by Iraq. It had also rejected some other Kuwaiti claims for lack of supporting evidence. The panel recognized the difficulty in providing such evidence, given the destruction or loss of documentation during Iraq's occupation of and departure from Kuwait.

Given Kuwait's emphasis on the return of irreplaceable items, especially the archives and military equipment, besides the still unaccounted-for items of the Islamic and National Museums of Kuwait, the panel encouraged Iraq to exert additional efforts to find Kuwaiti property in its territory and to continue to return those found through the Secretariat. Since no mechanism existed to foster the return of property, progress could be achieved through periodic reports by the parties to a Secretariat focal point, who would maintain an updated list of items yet to be returned, together with supporting evidence. On the basis of such data, the Secretary-General would submit an annual progress report to the Council. A field representative of the Coordinator should be appointed as soon as possible to facilitate the handover of any property found by Iraq. The panel suggested that the Compensation Commission could consider making settlements, even for claims submitted beyond the deadline, for replaceable items claimed to have been lost in Iraqi possession. Kuwait should submit an updated list of items whose return need not be pursued, provided compensation was arranged.

The panel asserted that Iraq was under obligation to return the missing archives of the Emir, the Prime Minister, the Cabinet and the Foreign Ministry and had also to respond to Kuwait's repeated claims that there was still military equipment to be returned. The absence of a credible explanation from Iraq on the missing archives and military material, the panel observed, did not allow it to conclude that Iraq was in full compliance with its obligation to implement paragraph 2 of resolution 686(1991).

By section B of resolution 1284(1999), the Council reiterated Iraq's obligation and commitment to repatriate all Kuwaiti and third-country nationals or return their remains, as well as to return all Kuwaiti property, including archives, it had seized; it asked the Secretary-General to report on Iraq's compliance and to appoint a high-level coordinator for those issues.

UN Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission

The United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM), established by Security Council resolution 687(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 172], continued in 1999 to discharge its functions in accordance with its terms of reference, as expanded by resolution 806(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 406].

UNIKOM operations involved surveillance, control, investigation and liaison. Surveillance of the demilitarized zone (DMZ), an area about 200 to 240 kilometres long and extending 10 kilometres into Iraq and 5 kilometres into Kuwait, was based on ground and air patrols and observation points. Control operations included static checkpoints, random checks and maintenance of a mobile reserve force. For operational purposes, the DMZ was divided into the northern and southern sectors, with 10 and 7 patrol/observation bases, respectively. Investigation teams were stationed in those sectors and at UNIKOM headquarters. Continuous liaison was maintained with Iraqi and Kuwaiti authorities at all levels.

The military observers were responsible for patrol, observation, investigation and liaison activities. The infantry battalion, deployed at Camp Khor, Kuwait, at a company camp in Al-Abdali, at platoon camps in the two DMZ sectors, and in the easternmost patrol/observation base on the DMZ's Iraqi side, conducted armed patrols within those areas and manned checkpoints at border-crossing sites, making random checks in co-operation with Iraqi and Kuwaiti liaison officers. It also provided security for UNIKOM personnel and installations.

UNIKOM maintained headquarters at Umm Qasr in Iraq, liaison offices in Baghdad and Kuwait City and a support centre at Camp Khor.

Reports of Secretary-General (March and September). UNIKOM's activities were described in two reports by the Secretary-General, covering the periods 24 September 1998 to 23 March 1999 [S/1999/330] and 24 March to 23 September 1999 [S/1999/1006 & Corr.1].

The reports noted that the situation in the DMZ remained generally calm. However, the military strike against Iraq in December 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 262] and the subsequent skirmishes over the no-fly zones in the north and south of the country affected some operational aspects of the Mission. UNIKOM flights by fixed-wing aircraft in Iraq and by helicopter on the DMZ's Iraqi side remained suspended since December 1998, when Iraqi authorities informed UNIKOM that they could not guarantee the safety of such flights due to Iraq's conflict with the United States and the United Kingdom regarding the no-fly zones. For security reasons, therefore, deployment of military observers from those countries had since been restricted to patrol and observation bases on the Kuwaiti side of the DMZ and to UNIKOM headquarters.

DMZ violations increased to 122 during the first period but dropped to 49 during the second period. The ground and maritime violations were mostly by Iraqi police or military personnel and civilians, while the air violations were by aircraft generally flying too high to be identified. UNIKOM received six official complaints, five from Kuwait and one from Iraq; none could be verified as the complaints were received long after the alleged incidents occurred. Twenty-one other incidents in the DMZ were recorded during the second period. UNIKOM also provided security and logistic support for ICRC humanitarian activities.

The Secretary-General observed that UNIKOM received the cooperation of the Iraqi and Kuwaiti authorities in the performance of its tasks and recommended that it be maintained in view of its continued contribution to the maintenance of calm and stability in the DMZ.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council informed the Secretary-General on 6 April [S/1999/384] and on 6 October [S/1999/1033] that, in the light of his reports, it had reviewed the question of the termination or continuation of UNIKOM and its modalities of operation and concurred with his recommendation that UNIKOM be maintained. The Council would review the question again by 6 April 2000.

Composition

As at 1 September, UNIKOM, under the command of Major-General Esa Kalervo Tarvainen (Finland), had an overall strength of 1,299, comprising 193 military observers from 32 Member States; an infantry battalion of 767 from Bangladesh; 133 support personnel, including a 50-member engineering unit and a 34-member logistic unit from Argentina, a helicopter unit of 35 from Bangladesh and a medical unit of 14 from Germany; plus a civilian staff of 205, of whom 57 were recruited internationally.

On 5 November [S/1999/1154], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his intention to appoint General John Augustine Vize (Ireland) to succeed Major-General Tarvainen, who was to relinquish his post on 30 November; the Council agreed to the appointment on 10 November [S/1999/1155]. General Vize assumed the post of Force Commander on 1 December.

Financing

On 8 June [meeting 101], the General Assembly considered the Secretary-General's reports on the financial performance of UNIKOM for the period 1 July 1997-30 June 1998 [A/53/782] and its proposed budget for 1 July 1999-30 June 2000 [A/53/817], together with related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) [A/53/895 & Add.2]. On the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/987], the Assembly adopted resolution 53/229 without vote [agenda item 124 (a)].

Financing of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 687(1991) of 3 April 1991 and 689(1991) of 9 April 1991, by which the Council decided to establish the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission and to review the question of its termination or continuation every six months,

Recalling also its resolution 45/260 of 3 May 1991 on the financing of the Observation Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 52/238 of 26 June 1998,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Observation Mission that are not covered by voluntary contributions are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Observation Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Expressing its appreciation for the substantial voluntary contributions made to the Observation Mission by the Government of Kuwait and the contributions of other Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Observation Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission as at 30 April 1999, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 9.8 million United States dollars, representing some 4 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Mission to the period ending 30 April 1999, notes that some 21 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses its continued appreciation of the decision of the Government of Kuwait to defray two thirds of the cost of the Observation Mission, effective 1 November 1993;

3. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

4. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

5. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Observation Mission in full and on time;

6. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Observation Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Observation Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

9. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission the amount of 53,991,024 dollars gross (51,996,124 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Observation Mission for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, inclusive of the amount of 2,686,445 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations and the amount of 526,779 dollars for the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, a two-thirds share of this amount, equivalent to 34,664,080 dollars, to be funded through voluntary contributions from the Government of Kuwait, subject to the review by the Security Council with regard to the question of termination or continuation of the Mission;

10. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, taking into consideration the funding through voluntary contributions from the Government of Kuwait of the two-thirds share of the cost of the Observation Mission, equivalent to 34,664,080 dollars, to apportion among Member States the amount of 19,326,944 dollars gross (17,332,044 dollars net), representing one third of the cost of the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, the said amount to be apportioned at a monthly rate of 1,610,579 dollars gross (1,444,337 dollars net), in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1999 and 2000, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997, subject to the review by the Security Council with regard to the question of termination or continuation of the Mission;

11. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 10 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 1,994,900 dollars approved for the Observation Mission for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000;

12. Decides that, taking into consideration the funding through voluntary contributions from the Government of Kuwait of the two-thirds share of the cost of the Observation Mission, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 10 above, their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 1,339,300 dollars gross (1,028,100 dollars net), representing one third of the unencumbered balance of 3,395,500 dollars gross (3,084,300 dollars net) in respect of the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998;

13. Decides also that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Observation Mission, their share of the unencumbered balance of 1,339,300 dollars gross (1,028,100 dollars net) in respect of the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

14. Decides further that two thirds of the net unencumbered balance of 3,084,300 dollars, equivalent to 2,056,200 dollars, shall be returned to the Government of Kuwait;

15. Expresses concern that the Secretary-General did not submit to the General Assembly during the main part of its fifty-third session the separate report on developments relating to the issue of overpayment of mission subsistence allowance and compensatory time off, including measures taken with respect to those responsible for the overpayment on the basis of the conclusion of the inquiry, as requested in paragraph 18 of Assembly resolution 52/238, and requests the Secretary-General to submit that report to the Assembly no later than 30 June 1999;

16. Invites voluntary contributions to the Observation Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

17. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session, under the item entitled "Financing of the activities arising from Security Council resolution 687(1991)", the sub-item entitled "United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission".

On 29 October [meeting 43], the Assembly considered the Secretary-General's report on the results of efforts to recover overpayment of mission subsistence allowance in UNIKOM [A/53/1023], together with the related ACABQ report [A/54/418]. On the Fifth Committee's recommendation [A/54/510], the Assembly adopted resolution 54/18 A without vote [agenda item 130 (a)].

Financing of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/238 of 26 June 1998 and 53/229 of 8 June 1999,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Notes with deep concern the mishandling of this matter by the Administration, as observed by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in paragraph 4 of its report;

2. Requests the Board of Auditors to undertake a comprehensive audit of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission, in particular the question of the payment of mission subsistence allowance, as a matter of priority;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report on this question within a period not exceeding three months following the adoption of the present resolution, for consideration during the first part of its resumed fifty-fourth session;

4. Decides to continue its consideration of this question during the first part of its resumed fifty-fourth session in the light of the reports of the Board of Auditors and the Secretary-General, and decides that, pending its decision, all actions on this question should remain in abeyance.

By decision 54/462 A of 23 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the item on the financing of UNIKOM at the resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session.

Arms and related sanctions

The Security Council's yearly reviews of the sanctions provisions against Iraq, pursuant to its resolution 687(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 172], remained suspended in 1999, in accordance with resolution 1194(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 257]. As it later reaffirmed in resolution 1205(1998) [ibid., p. 258], the Council would act in accordance with the relevant provisions of resolution 687(1991) on the duration of the prohibitions referred to in that resolution.

Communications from Iraq. By a 14 January statement [S/1999/41], Iraq called for the immediate lifting of the embargo against it, based on what had been achieved to disarm it of weapons of mass destruction, which should be considered as meeting in full Iraq's weapons-related obligations under resolution 687(1991).

On 8 November [S/1999/1170], the Speaker of Iraq's National Assembly drew attention to the grave consequences of the unjust embargo imposed on Iraq, which was entering its ninth year, and to continued United States and United Kingdom military assaults on Iraq under the so-called aerial exclusion (also no-fly) zones, which were destroying vital infrastructure and basic utilities. The Speaker urged an immediate halt to the "daily" attacks by the United States and the United Kingdom and pleaded for the lifting of the embargo that was inflicting untold suffering on the Iraqi people.

Sanctions Committee activities

The Security Council Committee established by resolution 661(1990) [YUN 1990, p. 192] (Sanctions Committee for Iraq), in its annual report [S/2000/133], described its activities from 1 August 1998 to 20 November 1999. In addition to its implementation activities under Council resolutions 986(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 475], and 1175(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 274] relating to the humanitarian programme for the Iraqi people (see p. 251), the Committee processed 6,070 notifications and applications from States and international organizations to send humanitarian goods to Iraq under resolutions 661(1990) and 687(1991). Of that total, 98 for foodstuffs and 46 for medical supplies were acknowledged. The remaining 5,926 applications, for the supply of other categories of goods, were processed under the no-objection procedure, of which 2,654, estimated at $4,413,446,701, were approved; 427, valued at $7,623,378,005, were placed on hold for further information or clarification; 2,823, valued at $24,892,308,758, were blocked; and 22, valued at $6,715,325, were withdrawn or nullified.

Pursuant to resolution 1153(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 271], the Committee Chairman discussed with the Permanent Representatives of Iraq and of Saudi Arabia suggested arrangements to facilitate the participation of Iraqi pilgrims in the Hajj, possibly involving third parties to assist in those arrangements. The Chairman was informed, however, of Iraq's insistence that funds for the Hajj be made directly to Iraq, regarding which the Committee reached no consensus. Iraq's representative confirmed in March that, as Iraq did not agree with the Committee's suggestions, it would not communicate further on the matter.

The Committee received seven requests for humanitarian flights to Iraq: one for medical evacuation (United Kingdom), four for sending humanitarian supplies (Cyprus, Russian Federation, United Arab Emirates) and two for transporting other personnel to Iraq (Austria, Venezuela). The first five requests were approved and letter exchanges were in progress on the remaining two. On the United Arab Emirates request for weekly flights to Baghdad, the Committee reiterated its inability to grant blanket approvals for regular flights to Iraq.

The Committee considered several financial matters. It did not approve a request by Lebanon that the funds held by Lebanese nationals and companies at the Rafidain Bank in Beirut be released to their depositors. Concerning a request from the Danish Agency for Trade and Industry inquiring whether Iraq's frozen account in a Danish bank could be reactivated to cover the administrative expenses of Iraq's Embassy in Stockholm, Sweden, the Committee responded that it was not in a position to authorize the unfreezing of Iraqi accounts as such. Following its own request for clarification as to why the funds had to be moved from Denmark to Sweden, the inquiry was withdrawn. The Committee granted permission to a Danish company to invest in a project in which Iraq had a 5 per cent minority share, provided the profits generated were placed in a frozen account. It did not object to a request from Bahrain for the release of funds of Yemeni citizens with Al-Rafadeen Bank, provided the funds released were not made available directly or indirectly to any Iraqi citizens or entities.

The Committee continued discussions on air travel to and from Baghdad for diplomats and their families with the Dean of the Diplomatic Corps in that city, who submitted a new proposal on the question. It approved the United Arab Emirates request to include private vehicles as "personal effects" in its passenger shipping service to and from Iraq, denied Iraq's request to have its deteriorating vessel Al-Bahr al-Ambi towed out of the territorial waters of the United Arab Emirates to the port of Umm Qasr, and approved the operation of a ferry service to transport pilgrims from Bahrain to Iraq.

Other matters considered, but on which no decisions were reached, included a request from Turkey, first introduced in 1996, to resume importing petroleum and petroleum products from Iraq for domestic purposes, and another from Iraq for access to the Committee's summary records and for participation in its formal meetings on matters on which Iraq's opinion might be needed. In May, the Committee approved IAEA's request to implement seven new technical projects in Iraq, provided they were implemented together with appropriate monitoring mechanisms. It also advised IAEA, in August, that its query as to whether it could send a fact-finding mission to Iraq, at the latter's request, was not within the Committee's purview. The Committee agreed in principle to the 1999 aerial pesticide campaign of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), provided the campaign complied with procedures established for that purpose and the related dual-use items to be shipped to Iraq were submitted for the Committee's consideration on a case-by-case basis.

In addition, the Committee raised with Iran the smuggling of Iraqi oil through Iranian waters, as reported by the Multinational Interception Force operating in the Gulf region, and was awaiting a reply. It informed Saudi Arabia that it reached no consensus on that country's request for advice on an Iraqi aircraft transporting Iraqi Hajj pilgrims to Jeddah on 17 March, which Saudi Arabia detained at the Jeddah airport but would allow it to return to Iraq without its passengers, unless an immediate response was received from the Committee.

During the year, the Committee issued four reports on the implementation of arms and related sanctions against Iraq, in accordance with the guidelines [YUN 1991, p. 198] approved by Council resolution 700(1991) [ibid.] for facilitating full international implementation of resolution 687(1991). The reports were transmitted to the Council on 3 February [S/1999/110], 4 May [S/1999/519], 2 August [S/1999/848] and 29 October [S/1999/1113].

Each report indicated that, during the period under review, no State had brought to the Committee's attention any information relating to possible violations of the arms and related sanctions against Iraq committed by other States or foreign nationals; no State or international organization had consulted the Committee on whether certain items fell within the provisions of paragraph 24 of resolution 687(1991), or on cases relating to dual-use or multiple-use items; and no international organization had reported any relevant information requested under the guidelines.

Communication. On 21 October [S/1999/1088], Iraq accused the United States of circulating to the Committee, at its 12 October meeting, a document entitled "Saddam Hussein's Iraq", containing information on Iraq's policy of expulsion, destruction of homes, threats to its neighbours and failure to comply with Security Council resolutions, intended to influence the Committee's work and deflect it from the exercise of its proper mandate.

Oil-for-food programme

In accordance with Security Council resolutions 1210(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 279] and 1242(1999) (see p. 246), each extending for a 180-day period the provisions of resolution 986(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 475], which authorized States to import Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products as a temporary measure to finance a humanitarian programme to alleviate the adverse consequence of the sancdons regime on the Iraqi people (also known as the oil-for-food programme) [YUN 1996, p. 225], the Secretary-General and the Sanctions Committee for Iraq separately submitted a report 90 days after entry into force of each resolution and again before the end of the next 90 days. The 180-day periods under the first and second resolutions were extended, respectively, from 26 November 1998 to 24 May 1999 (phase V) and from 25 May to 20 November (phase VI). The latter period was subsequently extended until 4 December by resolution 1275(1999) and until 11 December by resolution 1280(1999) (see pp. 249 and 250).

The reports described progress in implementing the arrangements specified by the resolutions, taking account of the provisions of the 1996 Memorandum of Understanding between the UN Secretariat and the Government of Iraq [YUN 1996, p. 226] and the procedures established by the Sanctions Committee for the resolutions' implementation [ibid., p. 228]. They also described the distribution of humanitarian relief, on behalf of the Government, in the three northern governorates of Arbil, Dihouk and Suleimaniyeh under the United Nations Inter-Agency Humanitarian Programme, to complement government distribution in central and southern Iraq, thereby ensuring equitable distribution to all segments of the Iraqi population.

The provisions of resolution 986(1995) were extended for a further 180-day period beginning on 12 December by resolution 1281(1999) (see p. 250), inaugurating phase VII of the programme. Shortly thereafter, by section C of resolution 1284(1999) (see p. 230), the Council authorized a series of measures, including removal of the ceiling for the export of Iraqi oil, to secure additional funds for the programme and speed up its implementation, on the basis of the report of a panel created to review the humanitarian situation in Iraq and make recommendations for its improvement.

Programme review

On 28 April 1999 [S/1999/481], the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council on the results of a comprehensive review and assessment of the humanitarian programme's implementation and of Iraq's overall humanitarian situation. Undertaken by the Office of the Iraq Programme (OIP), with the participation of the UN agencies and programmes involved and the United Nations Office of the Humanitarian Coordinator in Iraq acting as focal point, the review covered the period from the programme's inception, which began with phase I on 10 December 1996, through phase IV, which ended on 25 November 1998.

Highlighted were the programme's development and incremental enhancement by encompassing, in addition to Iraq's priority humanitarian requirements, a range of additional sectors and support activities; the consequent raising, by Council resolution 1153(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 271], of the oil sales ceiling to $5.256 billion during a given 180-day period and authorization of the export of oil-production spare parts and equipment to enable Iraq to produce oil up to that ceiling; and the Secretary-General's recommendations to improve procedures for contracting, processing and approving applications, the procurement and shipment of humanitarian supplies and their timely distribution, as well financial and banking arrangements.

The report pointed out, however, that, regardless of improvements to the programme's scope and implementation, the humanitarian needs were of a magnitude that could not be met within the parameters set by resolution 986(1995) and succeeding resolutions, particularly 1153(1998). The enhanced programme's objectives could not be fully achieved due primarily to revenue shortfalls. Of the $3.436 billion funding level envisaged by the Secretary-General's 1998 supplementary report [YUN 1998, p. 270] and authorized by resolution 1153(1998), only $1.9 billion (including $300 million for oil spare parts and equipment) could be made available for the enhanced distribution plan under phase IV—an amount not much greater than that provided for each of the previous three phases. Thus, with the exception of the agriculture and electricity sectors, none of the additional projects set out in the supplementary report could be implemented.

The Secretary-General again asked the Sanctions Committee to endeavour to reduce the number of applications placed on hold; review the distribution plan's annexes at the outset so as to identify those items likely to be put on hold, or to require further information and end-use verification, and to so inform the applicants concerned in writing within 48 hours; endorse the 11 February OIP proposal to improve the current reimbursement system from the 13 per cent account (the account for the three northern governorates) to the 53 per cent account (the account for the 15 central and southern governorates); expedite applications for oil spare parts and equipment to enable sustained oil production; recognize the technical complexity of rehabilitation projects in such sectors as electricity, and promptly approve complementary spare parts and equipment when their linkage to those projects was appropriately explained by Iraq; authorize OIP, in case of a fund shortfall during a given phase, to transfer approved but unfunded applications from that phase to the next without resubmitting them to the Committee; and exercise flexibility in response to unforeseen events, such as epidemics and natural disasters.

The Secretary-General also recommended that Iraq, in developing its distribution plan, which was central to the entire system of procurement, approval and distribution of humanitarian supplies, should adopt a genuinely multisectoral approach towards improving the population's nutrition and health. It should urgently address the growing imbalance between the procurement of pharmaceuticals and equipment with a view to establishing a pragmatic basis for procurement decisions in the health sector, utilize excess supplies currently in storage, and set up a comprehensive infrastructure and equipment inventory to serve as a basis for procurement decisions. It should also review difficulties relating to the late submission of health-sector applications, including contracts for the targeted nutrition programme.

Phase V

Referring to the exception he had made to Iraq's telecommunications requirements set out in annex VII to the phase V distribution plan [YUN 1998, p. 280], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council on 13 May [S/1999/559] that he had that day approved the revised part seven of the plan's executive summary and revised annex VII, submitted by Iraq following a joint technical review of those requirements by experts from the International Telecommunication Union and relevant Iraqi ministries. Approval was given on the understanding that the implementation of the revised plan for telecommunications would be governed by resolutions 986(1995) and 1210(1998) and the 1996 Memorandum of Understanding between the UN Secretariat and Iraq, and without prejudice to the Sanctions Committee procedures.

Reports of Secretary-General (February and May). Pursuant to resolution 1210(1998), the Secretary-General issued two progress reports covering the two 90-day periods under phase V, which began on 26 November 1998. The first, issued on 22 February 1999 [S/1999/187], and the second, on 18 May [S/1999/573 & Corr.2], provided information on all implementation aspects up to 31 January and 31 March, respectively.

The February report drew attention, as had previous others, to certain constraints preventing full implementation of the approved distribution plan for the current phase, the most serious being the growing revenue shortfall, projected to reach some $950 million. Consequently, Iraq was asked to revise the plan's fund allocations in line with resolutions 1153(1998) and 1210(1998) and promptly to submit costed annexes and projects. By 31 January, a reimbursable sum of $111 million for food under phases II to IV remained to be transferred from the 13 per cent account to the 53 per cent account.

Drawn to Iraq's urgent attention were the slow distribution of medicine and medical supplies from central to governorate warehouses and thence to health facilities, resulting in the accumulation in warehouses of some $275 million worth of such items; the bulk of applications for targeted nutrition inputs under phases IV and V, which had yet to be submitted to the Secretariat; and the need for intersectoral linkages and coordinated planning, as well as timely submission of applications and delivery of supplies to make for effective programme management in the central and southern governorates.

The report noted the severe disruption of UN observation activities due to events in Iraq in November and December 1998, as well as the Secretary-General's 4 February 1999 decision to withdraw from Iraq UN personnel of British and United States nationality in the absence of government assurances for their security and safety.

In his May report, the Secretary-General reiterated his observations and recommendations resulting from the review and assessment of the overall humanitarian programme (see p. 242). Annex I to the report, detailing the status of the UN Iraq Account established under resolution 867(1995), recorded that, by 15 April, of the $5.256 billion authorized under resolution 1210(1998), $1,606.4 million had been deposited into that account, bringing total oil sales since inception to $10,993.2 million. The cumulative amounts allocated from that sum to the seven different accounts specified in paragraph 8 of resolution 986(1995) included $5,508 million for the purchase of humanitarian supplies by Iraq for the 15 central and southern governorates and $1,350.2 million for similar purchases for distribution to the three northern governorates by the United Nations Inter-Agency Humanitarian Programme.

Sanctions Committee reports (March and May). The Sanctions Committee reports for the first and second 90-day periods of phase V were transmitted to the Council on 15 March [S/1999/279] and 19 May [S/1999/582], respectively. They noted that the export of petroleum from Iraq had proceeded smoothly, with excellent cooperation among the oil overseers, the independent inspection agents (contracted through Saybolt Nederland BV), Iraq's State Oil Marketing Organization and the national oil purchasers. The overseers continued to advise the Committee on oil pricing mechanisms, oil contract approval and modifications, management of the revenue objective and other pertinent questions related to export and monitoring. They continued to work closely with the Saybolt inspection agents monitoring oil loadings and transfers to ensure the effective monitoring of the relevant oil installations and liftings. For the third consecutive year, both had received Iraq's full cooperation. The reports stressed that the Committee continued to attach high priority to the processing of contracts to supply humanitarian goods to Iraq under the expanded programme.

The March report noted that, in view of projections that phase IV revenues would not be sufficient to fund all applications received, at Iraq's request 132 phase IV applications worth some $358,938,878 had been transferred to phase V by 24 February. Of those, 34 food-sector applications valued at $179,607,075 had received Committee approval. Due to projected phase V revenue shortfalls, circulation to the Committee of 98 phase IV applications for other sectors, valued at $179,331,803 and rolled over to phase V, was being held in abeyance pending Iraq's submission of the requested adjustment to phase V sectoral allocations. In addition, 112 applications, valued at $213,730,123 and already evaluated by the Secretariat, remained in phase IV due to insufficient revenues.

Confirmation of the arrival of goods at the four entry points to Iraq (Al-Walid, Trebil, Umm Qasr and Zakho) by the UN independent inspection agents—performed by Lloyd's Register Inspection Ltd. and, from 1 February, by Cotecna Inspection S.A.—went according to plan, except for an interruption during the military strike against Iraq in December 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 262]. As in previous phases, the inspection agents enjoyed Iraq's full cooperation.

According to the reports, the level of oil exports increased during the second 90-day period, with more crude oil being exported from the southern terminal at Mina al-Bakr—an imbalance the Committee wanted corrected without delay through the maximum use of the northern Kirkuk-Yumurtalik pipeline. The reports recorded, as at 10 May, a total of 178 oil contracts approved under phase V, corresponding to about 671 million barrels of oil; and 374 liftings completed, amounting to 485.4 million barrels valued at $2,808 million. At current prices, total phase V revenues were estimated to approximate $3.9 billion (including $180 million in pipeline fees).

Applications received, as at 14 May, for the export of humanitarian supplies to Iraq totalled 1,071. Of the 786 of them circulated to the Committee, 674 were found eligible for payment from the UN Iraq Account, in the amount of $1,654 million. Consignments of humanitarian supplies from previous phases confirmed as having arrived in Iraq in total or in partial shipments totalled 2,514 in the first half of phase V and 3,161 in the second half.

Since Council resolution 1175(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 274] authorized the export to Iraq of oil-production parts and equipment, up to 14 May 1999, the number of applications to ship such items had reached 792, with a value of $434,633,918. Of those, 80 were returned for clarification, 14 were declared null and void, 7 were under review by Committee experts, and 638 were circulated to the Committee. Of the latter, 481, valued at $264,526,444, were approved; 134, valued at $53,915,885, were placed on hold; and 23 were pending under the no-objection procedure. As at 14 May, a total of 54 full or partial shipments of parts and equipment had arrived in Iraq.

Issues considered by the Committee included: a February proposal by OIP regarding the reimbursement from the 13 per cent account to the 53 per cent account for government bulk purchases of food and medicines; the transfer of 1 per cent of oil sales proceeds from the UN Iraq Account for the payment envisaged in paragraph 6 of resolution 778(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 320], concerning which the Under-Secretary-General for Management was advised that the amount agreed upon by the Committee for that purpose should be $10 million every 90 days, as specified by paragraph 8 (g) of resolution 986(1995); options to resolve the financial issue relating to the Hajj pursuant to paragraph 3 of resolution 1210(1998); and the stock of pharmaceuticals and medical supplies and equipment accumulating in Iraq's warehouses, currently valued at $291 million.

Communications. A number of communications on various subjects were received from Iraq during phase V. On 4 January [S/1999/9], it questioned the amount of $29,140,708 withheld from the proceeds of oil sales under phase IV, as not consistent with paragraph 8 (g) of resolution 986(1995). Iraq asked that the excess amounts withheld be returned to the UN Iraq Account and that the Iraqi Central Bank be provided with the financial statements relating to the Account's operations.

On 23 February [S/1999/199], Iraq sought the Secretary-General's intervention with the Sanctions Committee for the release of 102 spare-parts contracts currently on hold at the instigation of the United States and the United Kingdom, under the usual pretext of requiring more information or time for their technical evaluation. Iraq repeated that request on 18 April [S/1999/442] for similar contracts on hold for as long as six months. It spoke of a deliberate obstruction focused on contracts pertaining to the southern oil companies, including for Mina al-Amiq, a terminal being readied to supplement Mina al-Bakr, on the grounds that that terminal was not covered by the export plan.

On 29 April [S/1999/500], Iraq urged a reconsideration of the amount of oil revenue to be transferred from the UN Iraq Account to the United Nations Compensation Fund, namely, not more than 30 per cent of the annual value of Iraq's export of petroleum and petroleum products. Since oil revenues continued to fall short of meeting Iraq's most basic humanitarian needs, Iraq called for a stop to such fund transfers. It reiterated that demand on 11 June [S/1999/674], especially since resolution 687(1991) on the Gulf War ceasefire [YUN 1991, p. 172] had asked that in determining the appropriate level of the amount to be withheld, account should be taken of the Iraqi people's requirements, Iraq's payment capacity, its external debt service and the needs of the Iraqi economy. Iraq referred to the allocation of $125.4 million to cover the Compensation Commission's operating expenses, and queried the whereabouts of $427.4 million unaccounted for by the status report on the UN Iraq Account as at 15 April 1999 [S/1999/573 & Corr.2]. Besides inquiring into the disposition of that amount, Iraq called for a halt to the withholding of amounts for compensation payments and for a review of that Commission's budget.

On 11 May [S/1999/549], Iraq set out in detail the setbacks suffered during the implementation of phases I to V, confirming the humanitarian programme's failure just when the humanitarian situation in Iraq was worsening. It called on the Secretary-General to announce that the programme had not and could not mitigate the suffering of the Iraqi people; and that the only way to do that was for the Council to lift the sanctions on Iraq without further conditions. Iraq's National Assembly on 26 June [S/1999/742] further called for an immediate lifting of the sanctions in view of their cumulative catastrophic effects since 1990, as well as of the inability of the humanitarian programme significantly to alleviate the Iraqi people's suffering.

In reply to the OIP Executive Director's press statement that in just over two years some $570 million worth of medicines and medical supplies had arrived in Iraq, but that only 48 per cent had been distributed, Iraq, on 16 May [S/1999/572], said the sum allocated to the health sector under phases I-V was $1,029 million; delivery of more than 42 per cent of items ordered were still being awaited.

To a United States allegation that Iraq was re-exporting infant dried milk powder imported under the humanitarian programme, Iraq replied on 22 August [S/1999/910] that the shipment in question consisted, not of infant powdered milk, which Iraq had never imported under the programme, but of 75 cartons of baby's talcum powder and 25 cartons of teats and infant feeding bottles, which were being returned to the supplier as not in conformity with standard specifications. On 1 October [S/1999/1017] and again on 29 December [S/1999/1298], Iraq protested interceptions and time-consuming inspections by United States naval forces of civilian vessels in the Persian Gulf carrying humanitarian goods for Iraq under duly documented bills of lading, thus delaying delivery of those urgently needed goods.

Other related communications. Iraq, on 28 February [S/1999/220], drew attention to the United States bombing of a radio relay station that was a key component of the operational control system for the Kirkuk-Yumurtalik pipeline, 40 kilometres south-west of Mosul, within the so-called air-exclusion (no-fly) zone in northern Iraq illegally imposed by the United Kingdom and the United States. The attack killed one and injured three others. Iraq stressed that no air defence or other installations were in the area for kilometres around. By identical letters of 2 March to the Security Council [S/1999/225] and the Secretary-General [S/1999/228], Iraq reported that two later raids, on a residential complex for the North Oil Company's Ayn Zalah oilfield, 55 kilometres north-west of Mosul, that killed one and injured nine others, had completely halted the flow of crude oil through the northern pipeline. That meant a daily loss of 1 million barrels of oil, or $9 million in revenues, over and above the human and material losses. Iraq said the action was at odds with the Sanction Committee's insistence that more than half of oil produced had to be exported through the Kirkuk-Yumurtalik pipeline.

By identical letters, dated 2 April, to the Secretary-General [S/1999/373] and the Council [S/1999/374], Iraq called on them to take a clear and unambiguous position on the repeated acts of aggression against Iraq in the face of another bombing by United States and United Kingdom warplanes, this time on the main oil pumping station serving the Mina al-Bakr terminal in Hamdan, in the southern governorate of Basrah. On the same date [S/1999/370], Iraq said it awaited measures which the Council might deem fit to take in response to that aggression.

On 15 March [S/1999/281], Iraq reported that on 23 February customs authorities found a staff member of FAO smuggling rugs out of the country in violation of Iraqi laws. On 5 July [S/1999/757], Iraq protested against an alleged sabotage by an employee of an Australian company contracted for by the United Nations to clear mines in the northern governorates. The employee allegedly buried a number of boxes in areas contiguous to Khanaqin district villages, which, it was later revealed, contained locusts' eggs intended to be unleashed on Khanaqin and other central and southern governorates. Iraq demanded an investigation and the termination of the Australian company's contract.

Iraq, on 11 April [S/1999/411], had also appealed for an urgent supply of vaccine in sufficient quantities to halt an epidemic of foot-and-mouth disease that threatened the large-scale destruction of livestock, which would exacerbate the suffering of the Iraqis.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 May [meeting 4008], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1242(1999). The draft [S/1999/588] was sponsored by Argentina, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous relevant resolutions, in particular its resolutions 986(1995) of 14 April 1995, 1111(1997) of 4 June 1997, 1129(1997) of 12 September 1997, 1143(1997) of 4 December 1997, 1153(1998) of 20 February 1998, 1175(1998) of 19 June 1998 and 1210(1998) of 24 November 1998,

Convinced of the need as a temporary measure to continue to provide for the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi people until the fulfilment by the Government of Iraq of the relevant resolutions, including notably resolution 687(1991) of 3 April 1991, allows the Council to take further action with regard to the prohibitions referred to in resolution 661(1990) of 6 August 1990, in accordance with the provisions of those resolutions,

Convinced also of the need for equitable distribution of humanitarian supplies to all segments of the Iraqi population throughout the country,

Determined to improve the humanitarian situation in Iraq,

Reaffirming the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Iraq,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that the provisions of resolution 986(1995), except those contained in paragraphs 4, 11 and 12, shall remain in force for a new period of 180 days beginning at 0001 hours eastern standard time on 25 May 1999;

2. Also decides that paragraph 2 of resolution 1153(1998) shall remain in force and shall apply to the 180-day period referred to in paragraph 1 above;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take the actions necessary to ensure the effective and efficient implementation of the present resolution, and to continue to enhance as necessary the United Nations observation process in Iraq in such a way as to provide the required assurance to the Council that the goods produced in accordance with the present resolution are distributed equitably and that all supplies authorized for procurement, including dual-usage items and spare parts, are utilized for the purpose for which they have been authorized;

4. Notes that the Security Council Committee established by resolution 661(1990) is reviewing various options, in particular the proposal made by the Secretary-General, as requested by paragraph 4 of resolution 1210(1998), to resolve the difficulties encountered in the financial process, referred to in his report of 19 November 1998;

5. Decides to conduct a thorough review of all aspects of the implementation of the present resolution 90 days after the entry into force of paragraph 1 above and again prior to the end of the 180-day period, upon receipt of the reports referred to in paragraphs 6 and 10 below, and expresses its intention, prior to the end of the 180-day period, to consider favourably renewal of the provisions of the present resolution as appropriate, provided that the said reports indicate that those provisions are being satisfactorily implemented;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council 90 days after the date of entry into force of paragraph 1 above and again prior to the end of the 180-day period, on the basis of observations of United Nations personnel in Iraq, and of consultations with the Government of Iraq, on whether Iraq has ensured the equitable distribution of medicine, health supplies, foodstuffs, and materials and supplies for essential civilian needs, financed in accordance with paragraph 8 (a) of resolution 986(1995), including in his reports any observations he may have on the adequacy of the revenues to meet Iraq's humanitarian needs, and on Iraq's capacity to export sufficient quantities of petroleum and petroleum products to produce the sum referred to in paragraph 2 of resolution 1153(1998);

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council if Iraq is unable to export petroleum and petroleum products sufficient to produce the total sum provided for by paragraph 2 above and, following consultations with relevant United Nations agencies and the Iraqi authorities, make recommendations for the expenditure of the sum expected to be available, consistent with the priorities established in paragraph 2 of resolution 1153(1998) and with the distribution plan referred to in paragraph 5 of resolution 1175(1998);

8. Decides that paragraphs 1, 2, 3 and 4 of resolution 1175(1998) shall remain in force and shall apply to the new 180-day period referred to in paragraph 1 above;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Government of Iraq, to submit to the Council, by 30 June 1999, a detailed list of parts and equipment necessary for the purpose described in paragraph 1 of resolution 1175(1998);

10. Requests the Committee established by resolution 661(1990), in close coordination with the Secretary-General, to report to the Council 90 days after the entry into force of paragraph 1 above, and again prior to the end of the 180-day period, on the implementation of the arrangements in paragraphs 1, 2, 6, 8, 9 and 10 of resolution 986(1995);

11. Urges all States, and in particular the Government of Iraq, to provide their full cooperation in the effective implementation of the present resolution;

12. Appeals to all States to continue to cooperate in the timely submission of applications and the expeditious issue of export licences, facilitating the transit of humanitarian supplies authorized by the Committee established by resolution 661(1990), and to take all other appropriate measures within their competence in order to ensure that urgently required humanitarian supplies reach the Iraqi people as rapidly as possible;

13. Stresses the need to continue to ensure respect for the security and safety of all persons directly involved in the implementation of the present resolution in Iraq;

14. Decides to keep these arrangements under review, including, in particular, those in paragraph 2 above, to ensure the uninterrupted flow of humanitarian supplies into Iraq, and expresses its willingness to review the relevant recommendations of the report of the panel established to review humanitarian issues as appropriate with regard to the 180-day period referred to in paragraph 1 above;

15. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Communications from Secretary-General. In the light of the foregoing resolution, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Council a 24 May exchange of letters [S/1999/601] between the UN Secretariat and Iraq constituting their agreement to extend for the new 180-day period the provisions of the 1996 Memorandum of Understanding between them on the implementation of Council resolution 986(1995).

Responding to paragraph 9 of the resolution, the Secretary-General, on 2 July [S/1999/746 & Add.1], transmitted Iraq's detailed list of spare parts and equipment necessary for Iraq to produce oil exports up to the sum of $5.256 billion set by resolution 1153(1998). Examined by a Saybolt expert group during its visit to Iraq (6-12 June) to review the situation on the ground, the list was valued at twice the amount approved by the resolution, but deemed commensurate with the production levels achieved and stated targets, in barrels per day: 3 million by December 1999, 3.2 million by March 2000 and 3.5 million by December 2000. The expert group observed that the spare-parts-and-equipment distribution plan under phase VI aimed to stabilize and, where possible, to increase crude oil production while undertaking prudent repair and maintenance; to enhance operational efficiency; and to undertake projects to improve product quality and address environmental and safety issues.

Phase VI

Pursuant to paragraph 1 of Security Council resolution 1242(1999) (see p. 246), the new 180-day extension (phase VI) of the humanitarian programme established by resolution 986(1995) began on 25 May. The corresponding distribution plan was approved by the Secretary-General on 11 June [S/1999/671], on the understanding that, should total revenues generated exceed the $5.256 billion target authorized in resolution 1242(1999), he would invite Iraq to submit proposals for utilizing the excess revenue and make recommendations to the Council. The accompanying list of supplies and goods was made available to the Sanctions Committee, which concluded that, based on the limited information in the annexes, no prohibited items could be identified.

Report of Secretary-General (August). In a report of 19 August [S/1999/896 & Corr.1] on the first 90-day period of phase VI, the Secretary-General described developments in the programme's implementation up to 31 July. He reported a steady increase in the price of crude oil since the phase began, rising by about $5 in June and $2.50 in July, to $17 a barrel. Were prices to remain at that level, estimated revenues from contracts approved and under review would reach $6.3 billion (including pipeline fees). While exceeding the authorized target of $5.256 billion for phase VI, it was still insufficient to cover the shortfall of about $3.1 billion under phases IV and V. In anticipation of the Security Council's review pursuant to paragraph 14 of resolution 1242(1999), Iraq was invited to submit proposals for utilizing the additional revenue for the Secretary-General's consideration and recommendation to the Council.

The findings detailed in the report led the Secretary-General to appeal to the Council and the Sanctions Committee to expedite approval of the applications for oil spare parts and equipment submitted under phases IV to VI and the appointment of additional oil overseers; to review further all applications placed on hold, including those related to the current drought; and to resolve the difficulties in the current system of reimbursement for Iraq's bulk purchases of humanitarian supplies from the 13 per cent account to the 53 per cent account. Based on a report by a UN team sent to the Mina al-Bakr oil-loading site in April, in response to a complaint about the deteriorating working conditions there, the Secretary-General asked Iraq urgently to ensure a safe working environment for Saybolt's oil inspection agents and local staff at the site.

In welcoming the World Food Programme (WFP) and Iraqi initiatives to ensure a mechanism for more timely and equitable food distribution to the three northern governorates, the Secretary-General asked Iraq to procure better quality commodities through more reputable contractors. Based on a July survey of child and maternal mortality conducted by the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the Government, Iraq should expedite the implementation of and increase funding for the targeted nutrition programmes in the 15 central and southern governorates, as provided for in the distribution plans for phases IV to VI.

Communication. On 11 September [S/1999/968], Iraq criticized the Secretary-General's report for a number of reasons, among them that it was wanting in objectivity in a number of respects and was not prepared in consultation with the Government of Iraq, as required by resolution 986(1995); its report on the UN Iraq Account did not include information on how, when and on what basis expenditures were made from the programme's various accounts; it made no assessment of OIP's activities and said nothing of the hundreds of applications languishing in its filing cabinets; it made no reference to the fundamental reasons why the humanitarian programme had not been satisfactorily implemented; and it was silent on the impact of the use of depleted uranium by the United States and the United Kingdom on the health of Iraqis. Iraq took exception to being asked to deal with more reputable contractors. The programme should support Iraq's suggestion that contracts should contain a clause safeguarding Iraq's rights and ensure that the goods supplied met specifications.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 4 October [meeting 4050], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1266(1999). The draft [S/1999/1020] was sponsored by the Netherlands.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 986(1995) of 14 April 1995, 1111(1997) of 4 June 1997, 1129(1997) of 12 September 1997, 1143(1997) of 4 December 1997, 1153(1998) of 20 February 1998, 1175(1998) of 19 June 1998, 1210(1998) of 24 November 1998 and 1242(1999) of 21 May 1999,

Recalling also the report of the Secretary-General of 19 August 1999, in particular paragraphs 4 and 94 thereof,

Determined to improve the humanitarian situation in Iraq,

Reaffirming the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Iraq,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that paragraph 2 of resolution 1153(1998), as extended by resolution 1242(1999), shall be modified to the extent necessary to authorize States to permit the import of petroleum and petroleum products originating in Iraq, including financial and other essential transactions directly related thereto, sufficient to produce an additional sum, beyond that provided for by resolution 1242(1999), equivalent to the total shortfall of revenues authorized but not generated under resolutions 1153(1998) and 1210(1998), 3.04 billion United States dollars, within the period of 180 days from 0001 hours eastern standard time on 25 May 1999;

2. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Communication from Secretary-General. On 12 October [S/1999/1053], the Secretary-General informed the Council that he had approved the proposed adjustments to the allocations in the phase VI distribution plan submitted by Iraq, as it appeared likely that increased oil revenues would exceed the $3.04 billion required for that plan's implementation. Recalling his report that Iraq's oil industry continued to be in a lamentable state, the Secretary-General recommended approval of the additional $300 million for oil spare parts and equipment, bringing that sector's adjusted allocation to $600 million. The adjustments were approved with the understanding that the food-and-nutrition and health sectors received priority, the food basket was increased to the approved 2,300 kilocalories per person per day, and the allocation for the targeted nutrition programme was increased to provide adequate warehousing, transportation and related infrastructure. Acceptance of the revised sectoral allocations did not imply endorsement of those for either the housing construction programme or banking equipment and supplies. The availability of phase VI revenues to fund the full extent of new contracts arising from Iraq's plan to use the revenue increases, as authorized by resolution 1266(1999), would need to be considered vis-a-vis the transfer of some $510 million phase IV-approved applications and the yet to be determined transfers from phase V.

Report of Secretary-General (November). In a 12 November report on the second 90-day period of phase VI [S/1999/1162 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General gave an account of implementation activities up to 31 October. As at that date, of the $8.3 billion authorized by Council resolutions 1242(1999) and 1266(1999), $4,807.6 million had been deposited to the UN Iraq Account for phase VI, bringing total oil sales since the programme's inception to $18,141.5 million. The cumulative amounts allocated from that total to the seven different accounts specified in paragraph 8 of resolution 986(1995) included Iraq's purchases of humanitarian supplies totalling $9,242.3 million for its 15 central and southern governorates and $2,247.5 million for its three northern governorates. The sum of $239.6 million was due for reimbursement for Iraq's bulk purchases for the northern governorates.

The programme had delivered 12 million tonnes of food and related items, which continued to be distributed efficiently through the rationing system, and health-sector supplies worth over $729 million. Owing to increased contractual volume and higher oil prices, phase VI revenues were projected to reach $7.2 billion, including pipeline fees, but which were still $1.3 billion short of the revenue target authorized by resolution 1266(1999). In the current favourable revenue situation, the Secretary-General reiterated that Iraq provide a food basket of 2,300 kilocalories minimum per person per day countrywide, in line with its undertaking in the enhanced distribution plan, and that funding for targeted nutrition programmes be increased.

In view of the programme's sizeable expansion, the Secretary-General urged the further streamlining of the applications approval process by every means possible, an increase in OIP staff commensurate with its growing workload, and the expeditious appointment of additional oil overseers. He reiterated his recommendation for Council approval of Iraq's request for an additional $300 million for oil spare parts and equipment, and called for an early decision on each application currently on hold, to facilitate which he also urged Iraq and its suppliers to provide timely technical specifications and end-user information. He asked the Council to consider widening the programme's scope to include end-user training so as to maximize the use of programme resources. In noting the disruption of UN observation activities due to lack of Iraqi escorts, the Secretary-General called on Iraq to ensure freedom of movement and to rescind its new regulations requiring travel permits for UN staff.

Communication. On 29 November [S/1999/1209], Iraq commented that the Secretary-General's report did not refer to the adverse impact that the holds on contracts by the United States and the United Kingdom had on the implementation of the humanitarian programme; that the programme's exorbitant administrative expenses and other extravagant deductions from the oil revenues were depriving Iraq of funds for its humanitarian needs; and that the report neglected to mention the Sanctions Committee's inability to improve its procedures so that long processing delays had led to the accumulation of more than $5 billion in the UN Iraq Account, instead of being used immediately for the purchase of humanitarian items. Iraq set out its detailed observations on all sectors encompassed by the programme.

Sanctions Committee reports (August and November). The Sanctions Committee reports for the first and second 90-day periods of phase VI, respectively dated 24 August [S/1999/907] and 17 November [S/1999/1177], noted a continuing trend of increased oil export levels, largely from Mina al-Bakr. They recorded, as at 10 November, a total of 158 contracts approved under phase VI for the export of some 762 million barrels of oil and 389 liftings completed, equivalent to 506.9 million barrels worth $9,157 million.

Data on the export of humanitarian supplies indicated that phase VI applications received totalled 942. Of that number, 623 were circulated to the Committee, which found 452 eligible for payment, in the amount of $1,124 million, from the UN Iraq Account. Meanwhile, 2,395 phase V applications were also received: 2,071 were circulated to the Committee, of which 1,165 were eligible for payment in the amount of $2.9 billion. Consignments of humanitarian supplies from previous phases confirmed as having arrived in Iraq in full or in part numbered 4,012 during the first half of phase VI and 4,850 during the second half from the current and previous phases. Circulation of an increasing number of applications was being delayed because they contained payment mechanisms inconsistent with Committee guidelines and procedures.

As for the export of oil-production spare parts and equipment to Iraq, 1,108 applications had been circulated to the Committee, of which 783, worth $396.5 million, were approved; 385 such shipments had arrived in Iraq in full or in part.

The Committee affirmed its commitment to reach a solution to filling the overseer vacancies. It discussed the absence of audit reports on the operations of UN agencies in northern Iraq, contracts containing payment-mechanism clauses, the reimbursement from the 13 per cent account to the 53 per cent account, the need to increase oil revenues (authorized for phase IV) and the impact of holds on contracts for, as well as monitoring in Iraq of, oil-production spare parts and equipment.

Communication from Secretary-General. On 22 October [S/1999/1086], the Secretary-General transmitted a note from the OIP Executive Director drawing attention to the growing number of applications placed on hold, which, by 12 October, made up 23.7 per cent of applications circulated under phase V, and saying the Sanctions Committee was also taking longer (34 days on average) to review such applications. Moreover, specific activities or projects could not be completed because of holds on interrelated or complementary applications. The Secretary-General therefore asked the Committee to undertake an early review of all applications currently on hold and expedite a decision, as appropriate, in each case.

The foregoing was preceded by Iraq's 23 August communication [S/1999/902] complaining about the large number of contracts blocked or on hold. Iraq subsequently wrote that, as at 30 December, contracts on hold numbered 778, with a total value of $1.27 billion [S/2000/2].

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 November [meeting 4070], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1275

(1999). The draft [S/1999/1180] was prepared during prior Council consultations.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1242(1999) of 21 May 1999 and 1266(1999) of 4 October 1999,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides to extend the period referred to in paragraphs 1, 2 and 8 of resolution 1242(1999) and in paragraph 1 of 1266(1999) until 4 December 1999;

2. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

On 3 December [meeting 4077], the Council adopted resolution 1280(1999) by vote (11-0-3), based on a draft [S/1999/1215] sponsored by the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1242(1999) of 21 May 1999, 1266(1999) of 4 October 1999 and 1275(1999) of 19 November 1999,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides to extend the period referred to in paragraphs 1, 2 and 8 of resolution 1242(1999) and in paragraph 1 of resolution 1266(1999) until 11 December 1999;

2. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

VOTE ON RESOLUTION 1280(1999):

In favour: Argentina, Bahrain, Brazil, Canada, Gabon, Gambia, Namibia, Netherlands, Slovenia, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: None.

Abstaining: China, Malaysia, Russian Federation.

Not Participating: France.

China explained that extending phase VI for one week would neither help to improve Iraq's humanitarian situation nor advance consultations among the permanent Council members on an omnibus text on Iraq currently being drafted. China's appeals, which had not received due attention, were for the parties to seek common ground, while reserving differences and avoiding confrontation, in devising a roll-over programme that best met the needs of Iraqi civilians. The Russian Federation, which felt that the one-week extension was not in keeping with the realities of the grave humanitarian situation in Iraq, was unable to support the resolution as it took no account of the logical amendment proposed by France for a longer "technical" rollover, which would have allowed the programme to remain in operation.

France said it did not participate in the voting because the measure proposed could not be realized within so short an extension.

Communication. Iraq, on 5 December [S/1999/1218], refused to comply with resolutions 1275(1999) and 1280(1999). Given the implementation experience during the humanitarian programme's six phases, the successive extensions of phase VI for two weeks and one week authorized by those resolutions were impractical and farcical. Iraq was willing to cooperate in a six-month extension, however, and hoped to see improvements in the programme, as proposed by the Secretary-General and some Council members.

Phase VII

On 10 December [meeting 4079], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1281(1999). The draft [S/1999/1230] was sponsored by the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 986(1995) of 14 April 1995, 1111(1997) of 4 June 1997, 1129(1997) of 12 September 1997, 1143(1997) of 4 December 1997, 1153(1998) of 20 February 1998, 1175(1998) of 19 June 1998, 1210(1998) of 24 November 1998, 1242(1999) of 21 May 1999, 1266(1999) of 4 October 1999, 1275(1999) of 19 November 1999 and 1280(1999) of 3 December 1999,

Convinced of the need as a temporary measure to continue to provide for the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi people until the fulfilment by the Government of Iraq of the relevant resolutions, including notably resolution 687(1991) of 3 April 1991, allows the Council to take further action with regard to the prohibitions referred to in resolution 661 (1990) of 6 August 1990, in accordance with the provisions of those resolutions,

Convinced also of the need for equitable distribution of humanitarian supplies to all segments of the Iraqi population throughout the country,

Determined to improve the humanitarian situation in Iraq,

Reaffirming the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Iraq,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that the provisions of resolution 986 (1995), except those contained in paragraphs 4, 11 and 12, shall remain in force for a new period of 180 days beginning at 0001 hours eastern standard time on 12 December 1999;

2. Also decides that paragraph 2 of resolution 1153(1998) shall remain in force and shall apply to the 180-day period referred to in paragraph 1 above;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take the actions necessary to ensure the effective and efficient implementation of the present resolution and to continue to enhance as necessary the United Nations observation process in Iraq in such a way as to provide the required assurance to the Council that the goods produced in accordance with the present resolution are distributed equitably and that all supplies authorized for procurement, including dual-use items and spare parts, are utilized for the purpose for which they have been authorized;

4. Decides to conduct a thorough review of all aspects of the implementation of the present resolution 90 days after the entry into force of paragraph 1 above, and again prior to the end of the 180-day period, upon receipt of the reports referred to in paragraphs 5 and 10 below, and expresses its intention, prior to the end of the 180-day period, to consider favourably renewal of the provisions of the present resolution, as appropriate, provided that the said reports indicate that those provisions are being satisfactorily implemented;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council 90 days after the date of entry into force of paragraph 1 above and again prior to the end of the 180-day period, on the basis of observations of United Nations personnel in Iraq, and of consultations with the Government of Iraq, on whether Iraq has ensured the equitable distribution of medicine, health supplies, foodstuffs, and materials and supplies for essential civilian needs, financed in accordance with paragraph 8 (a) of resolution 986(1995), including in his reports any observations he may have on the adequacy of the revenues to meet Iraq's humanitarian needs and on Iraq's capacity to export sufficient quantities of petroleum and petroleum products to produce the sum referred to in paragraph 2 of resolution 1153(1998);

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council if Iraq is unable to export petroleum and petroleum products sufficient to produce the total sum provided for by paragraph 2 above and, following consultations with the relevant United Nations agencies and the Iraqi authorities, make recommendations for the expenditure of sums expected to be available, consistent with the priorities established in paragraph 2 of resolution 1153(1998) and with the distribution plan referred to in paragraph 5 of resolution 1175(1998);

7. Decides that paragraph 3 of resolution 1210(1998) shall apply to the new 180-day period referred to in paragraph 1 above;

8. Also decides that paragraphs 1, 2, 3 and 4 of resolution 1175(1998) shall remain in force and shall apply to the new 180-day period referred to in paragraph 1 above;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Government of Iraq, to submit to the Council no later than 15 January 2000 a detailed list of parts and equipment necessary for the purpose described in paragraph 1 of resolution 1175(1998);

10. Requests the Security Council Committee established by resolution 661(1990), in close coordination with the Secretary-General, to report to the Council 90 days after the entry into force of paragraph 1 above, and again prior to the end of the 180-day period, on the implementation of the arrangements in paragraphs 1, 2, 6, 8, 9 and 10 of resolution 986(1995);

11. Urges all States, and in particular the Government of Iraq, to provide their full cooperation in the effective implementation of the present resolution;

12. Appeals to all States to continue to cooperate in the timely submission of applications and the expeditious issue of export licences, facilitating the transit of humanitarian supplies authorized by the Committee established by resolution 661(1990), and to take all other appropriate measures within their competence in order to ensure that urgently needed humanitarian supplies reach the Iraqi people as rapidly as possible;

13. Stresses the need to continue to ensure respect for the security and safety of all persons directly involved in the implementation of the present resolution in Iraq;

14. Decides to keep these arrangements under review, including in particular those in paragraph 2 above, to ensure the uninterrupted flow of humanitarian supplies into Iraq, and expresses its determination to act without delay to address the recommendations of the report of the panel established to review humanitarian and other issues in Iraq in a further, comprehensive resolution;

15. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

In the light of the new 180-day extension of the humanitarian programme (phase VII) from 12 December, the UN Secretariat and Iraq, by an 11 December exchange of letters [S/1999/1241], agreed to extend for the same period the provisions of the 1996 Memorandum of Understanding between them on the implementation of resolution 986(1995).

Panel on humanitarian issues

Panel report. In accordance with the Security Council President's note of 30 January, which established three panels on Iraq (see p. 229), the Chairman of those panels on 30 March [S/1999/356] transmitted the report of the panel mandated to assess the current humanitarian situation in Iraq and recommend measures for its improvement. The panel, which was composed of four senior UN Secretariat officials, met between 19 February and 29 March.

In addition to reports and data from OIP, the panel considered written submissions from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), UNICEF, the United Nations Population Fund, UNHCR, the United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS), WFP, the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Iraq, FAO, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, ICRC, the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, the European Community Humanitarian Office and the Middle East Council of Churches. The panel heard briefings by the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Iraq, representatives of several UN offices, bodies and agencies, the UN independent oil monitors (Saybolt Nederland BV) and the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States.

The report provided a comparative analysis between the current situation and that which prevailed before the events leading to the Gulf War (1990-1991). It noted that the Iran-Iraq war (1980-1988) had already taken a heavy toll on Iraqi society. Nonetheless, towards the end of the 1980s, Iraq's social and economic indicators were generally above the regional and developing country averages.

Data provided to the panel on conditions in Iraq under the effects of war and sanctions pointed to a continuing degradation of the economy, with an acute deterioration in the living conditions of the population and severe strains on its social fabric. As summed up by UNDP, the country had experienced a shift from relative affluence to massive poverty. Iraqi infant mortality rates were currently among the highest in the world. Low birth weight affected at least 23 per cent of all births, and chronic malnutrition affected every fourth child under five years old. Only 41 per cent of the population had regular access to clean water. Eighty-three per cent of all schools were in need of substantial repairs. Communicable diseases, which had been under control, returned on an epidemic scale in 1993 and had become part of the endemic pattern of the precarious health situation.

Regardless of improvements that might be brought about in the implementation of the current humanitarian programme, including speedier approval procedures, better government performance and higher funding levels, the magnitude of Iraq's humanitarian needs could not be met within the parameters of resolution 986(1995) and succeeding resolutions, in particular 1153(1998). Nor was the programme intended to meet all of the Iraqi people's needs. In the light of Iraq's near absolute dependence on oil exports to generate foreign exchange, the precarious state of the oil industry infrastructure, if allowed to deteriorate further, would have disastrous effects on the country's ability to cover the costs of basic humanitarian needs. That those were being met through handouts did not contribute to stimulating the economy and had a negative impact on agriculture, while increasing State control over a population whose private initiative was already under severe internal and external constraints.

The gravity of the humanitarian situation of the Iraqi people was indisputable and could not be overstated. Data and qualitative assessments of bona fide observers and sheer common-sense analysis of economic variables converged to corroborate that evaluation.

The panel made a series of recommendations that it believed might lead to incremental improvements. Those on the paramount question of securing additional funds for the purchase of urgently needed humanitarian supplies included: lifting the ceiling of allowable oil exports from Iraq and facilitating the speedy provision of oil-production parts and equipment; authorizing bilateral production-sharing agreements between Iraq and foreign oil companies that would supply maintenance and related equipment, thereby freeing the $300 million earmarked for parts and equipment; authorizing private investment flows into the oil industry and other seconddary export industries, as well as into agriculture; encouraging the international community to provide supplementary funding within and outside the oil-for-food programme, either bilaterally or through multilateral organizations and non-governmental organizations (NGOs); temporarily reducing, by an agreed percentage, the revenue allocated to the United Nations Compensation Commission, or borrowing from it; temporarily suspending the implementation of paragraph 8 (g) of resolution 986(1995), which provided for the transfer of up to $10 million every 90 days from the UN Iraq Account to the escrow account for the purpose envisaged in paragraph 6 of resolution 778(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 320]; authorizing, at the request of States holding frozen Iraqi assets, the release of such assets to the UN Iraq Account or to another mechanism; minimizing the costs of the UN activities associated with implementing resolution 986(1995); and, as a confidence-building measure, furnishing Iraq with a daily statement of the status of the UN Iraq Account.

Foodstuffs, pharmaceuticals and medical supplies, as well as basic or standard medical and agricultural equipment and educational items, included in the pre-approved list of humanitarian supplies, could be contracted for and procured directly by the Government without notification to or approval by the Sanctions Committee. Dual-use items should be processed under the export/import mechanism in accordance with resolution 1051(1996) [YUN 1996, p. 218] and submitted to the Sanctions Committee for approval under the no-objection procedure. The export of other goods to Iraq should be authorized by the Committee within two business days upon receipt of the application indicating the goods, the agreed price and the estimated time of arrival.

Other recommendations called on Iraq to ensure the timely distribution of humanitarian goods, particularly medical supplies, and to clear the unjustifiable bottlenecks at its warehouses; to address the needs of vulnerable groups (street children, the disabled, elderly and mentally ill) in central and southern Iraq and allow UN agencies and bona fide NGOs freer access to restricted areas and sections of the population to evaluate their nutritional and general humanitarian condition; to refine its list of priorities in terms of packaging contracts through the humanitarian programme; to ensure adequate humanitarian assistance for the involuntarily displaced without their having to demonstrate the required six-month residence in their current domicile; and to extend full cooperation to the mine-clearance programme in northern Iraq, facilitate the work of UNOPS, and consider initiating demining efforts in other areas of the country.

The panel reiterated its understanding that the humanitarian situation in Iraq would continue to be a dire one in the absence of a sustained revival of the Iraqi economy, which in turn could not be achieved solely through remedial humanitarian efforts.

On 17 December, the Security Council incorporated the panel's main recommendations into section C of resolution 1284(1999).

UN Compensation Commission and Fund

The United Nations Compensation Commission, established in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 195] for the resolution and payment through the United Nations Compensation Fund, established at the same time, of claims against Iraq for losses and damage resulting from its 1990 invasion and occupation of Kuwait [YUN 1990, p. 189], continued in 1999 to expedite the prompt settlement of claims. The Commission was headquartered in Geneva, where its Governing Council held all of its sessions.

Governing Council. The Commission's Governing Council held four regular sessions during the year (thirty-first (15-18 March) [S/1999/470], thirty-second (22-24 June) [S/1999/856], thirty-third (28-30 September) [S/2000/68] and thirty-fourth (7-9 December) [S/2000/69]) at which it considered the reports and recommendations of the Panels of Commissioners appointed to review specific instalments of various categories of claims. Each report described in detail the measures taken by the Panel to determine whether a given claim fell within the Commission's jurisdiction, to verify its validity, to evaluate compensable losses and to arrive at the compensation amounts to be recommended. The Governing Council also acted on the Executive Secretary's report submitted at each session, which, in addition to providing a summary of the previous period's activities, covered corrections to approved claim awards, claim withdrawals, the processing and payment of approved claims, the appointment of Commissioners and the 1999 progress report on the Commission's 1997-2003 work programme.

In March, the Council considered Panel reports on specific instalments of corporate claims under category E, grouped as follows: one on tourism and non-tourism claims (E2), four on construction and engineering claims (E3) and one on Kuwaiti private-sector claims (E4). Also considered was a Panel report on the third instalment of F1 claims filed by 14 Governments on behalf of national entities or nationals for losses related to departure and evacuation costs or damage to physical property. The session report tabulated those groups of claims, together with the total amounts of compensation claimed and amounts recommended for award, as approved by the Council. Discussions continued on priority of payment and payment mechanisms for the second payment phase due to begin on completion of the first phase, in July 1999. In keeping with Council decision 17 [YUN 1994, p. 478], each individual claimant in categories A (for departure from Iraq or Kuwait during 2 August 1990-2 March 1991), B (for serious personal injury or death) and C (for damages up to $ 100,000) had been accorded priority in the first phase and paid an initial amount of up to $2,500 each.

Considered at the June session were: a special Panel report concerning 636 unresolved category A claims from Pakistan; four Panel reports and recommendations on the seventh instalment of C, the third instalment of D (individual claims for damages above $ 100,000) and the second and third instalments of E1 (oil-sector claims by corporations, other private legal entities and public-sector enterprises) categories of claims; as well as the Executive Secretary's report on corrections to approved awards to Governments and international organizations on behalf of 10,757 category A claimants. The session noted that the Panel report on the category C claims marked the completion of the processing of such claims. The Council approved the Panel's recommendations on the groups of claims mentioned. Each of those decisions, as well as those taken at the following two sessions, included: a table indicating the countries or organizations concerned, the numbers of claims recommended and not recommended for payment, the compensation amounts claimed and recommended, and a request that a copy of the Panel report be provided to the Secretary-General, Iraq, and the respective Governments and international organizations. The Council also adopted a decision concerning the priority of payment and mechanisms for the second payment phase.

The September session examined five reports and recommendations by the Panels for the fourth, eighth and ninth instalments of E3 non-Kuwaiti construction and engineering claims; and for the second and fourth instalments of E4 private-sector Kuwaiti claims. The Council approved the recommendations for those groups and categories of claims. It also corrected additional approved category A awards, based on the Executive Secretary's report, and approved awards in the first three instalments of category D claims, in accordance with the relevant Panel's recommended adjustments. The Council further decided that, where previously undistributed funds were returned to Governments for payment to claimants who had since been located, each Government should distribute those funds to claimants within four months and report thereon to the Commission within two additional months. In the light of increased income received by the Compensation Fund, the Council decided that its working group should begin discussing the mechanism for the third payment phase. In addition, the Council appointed a new Commissioner, on the Secretary-General's nomination, and changed the chairmen of two Panels.

The December session considered four reports with recommendations by Panels for the fourth instalment of category D claims; the third instalment of E2 non-Kuwaiti corporate transport-sector claims; and the first instalments of F2 and F3 claims filed by Jordan and Kuwait, respectively, on behalf of their government ministries and other entities. Also considered was the Executive Secretary's report recommending corrections to the approved awards in the fifth and sixth instalments of category A claims and to those in the first to the seventh instalments of C claims. The Council approved the Panels' and Executive Secretary's recommendations. It noted that the Committee on Administrative Matters, at its 18 November meeting, approved the proposed budget for the 2000-2001 biennium in the amount of $99,629,600.

Communications from Iraq. Between February and December, Iraq drew to the Secretary-General's attention examples of illegal and arbitrary measures applied by the Compensation Commission in processing what it said were unjustified claims and asked his intervention to ensure the Commission's compliance with international law and principles of justice. In that regard, Iraq complained of neither having been given detailed information nor the opportunity to present its views on the following: a large and complex Kuwaiti E claim referred to in the Commission's procedural order No. 8 [S/1999/112]; 15 category E1 oil-sector claims [S/1999/180]; 20 category F claims filed by Jordan on behalf of government ministries and entities [S/1999/113] and 25 similar claims filed by Saudi Arabia [S/1999/1243], although Iraq had received the corresponding procedural orders for both groups of F claims. Iraq insisted that it be provided with details of the Jordanian claims [S/1999/570].

Other matters

Iraqi complaints

Iraq asserted on 15 January [S/1999/45] that the continued forceful imposition of the northern and southern air-exclusion (no-fly) zones over

Iraqi territory by the United States and the United Kingdom—and also by France initially—were illegal and violated UN resolutions and international law regarding sovereignty. Iraq claimed that, with its official acceptance of the provisions of Security Council resolution 687(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 172], a formal ceasefire to the Gulf War became effective and brought to an end the authorizations of military intervention implicit in resolution 678(1990) [YUN 1990, p. 204]. Furthermore, the pretext of humanitarian protection for the Kurds in the north and the Shia in the south, which had demarked the no-fly zones, was based on claims about human rights violations. The refusal of China and the Russian Federation to condone the zones and France's withdrawal from their unilateral enforcement underscored the lack of Council support for the illegal imposition of the zones and incursions by the United States and the United Kingdom.

Affirming its absolute rejection of the no-fly zones, Iraq regarded as violations of its airspace the zone-enforcement sorties by United States and United Kingdom aircraft based in Kuwait, Saudi Arabia and Turkey, all of which Iraq tracked throughout 1999 and reported regularly through identical letters to the Secretary-General and the Council. Alleged wanton military attacks in the process, causing civilian deaths and injuries, as well as destruction to private and public property, were recorded in a number of additional communications [S/1999/101, S/1999/447, S/1999/819, S/1999/880, S/1999/893, S/1999/901, S/1999/978, S/1999/1009, S/1999/1149, S/1999/1208]. Iraq warned of the dangerous repercussions for international peace and security stemming from UN silence in the face of such brutal acts of aggression [S/1999/153], adding that, as the aggressors were permanent Council members, their actions were conducive to the collapse of the collective security regime enshrined in the UN Charter [S/1999/842].

Iraq also alleged violations of its territorial waters by Kuwait [S/1999/364, S/1999/467, S/1999/540, S/1999/553, S/1999/931, S/1999/1077], whose patrols increasingly subjected Iraqi fishing boats and other marine craft to searches, confiscations of fishing permits, even detention and torture of Iraqi fishermen. Kuwait denied certain of those allegations as fabrications [S/1999/616] and, in turn, claimed the incursion into its territorial waters by two Iraqi naval units, necessitating the crews' detention and interrogation [S/1999/784], and by an Iraqi boat allegedly exporting oil-for-food humanitarian goods out of Iraq [S/1999/885].

In the light of the admission by the United States Department of Defense that the United States and the United Kingdom had fired more than 1 million depleted uranium rounds weighing 315 tons during the Gulf War, Iraq reaffirmed its previously announced position that it held those States responsible for the environmental and health-related consequences of such use [A/54/75-S/1999/345]. In that connection, Iraq submitted several reports [S/1999/195, S/1999/410, S/1999/6G8, S/1999/891, S/1999/1039, S/1999/1254] concerning its disposal of unexploded ordnance—left behind by what it called the 1991 30-Power aggression against it—which continued to be found in large quantities in the country.

Also during 1999, Iraq protested against the increasing land and air incursions into its northern territory by Turkey, which maintained that the object was to pursue and root out terrorist groups posing a threat to its national security. Iraq rejected that as a legitimate reason for Turkey's open violation of its sovereignty and territorial integrity and drew attention to several large-scale incursions between April and November [S/1999/560, S/1999/580, S/1999/778, S/1999/1028, S/1999/1222, S/1999/1225], which, it claimed, left in their wake serious losses of Iraqi lives and property.

In other communications, Iraq protested against the illegal entry, through Turkey, into northern Iraq of a United States official at the head of a British and Turkish delegation [S/1999/103]; the so-called Iraq Liberation Act passed by the United States Congress to finance and arm terrorist groups seeking to undermine Iraq's stability and challenge its unity [S/1999/651]; and United States use of UN agencies working in northern Iraq as covers for its agents to carry out acts of espionage and sabotage [S/1999/690], as well as its sponsorship of military training for opponents of President Saddam Hussein [S/1999/1129].

Afghanistan

The war in Afghanistan between the Taliban and the United Front (UF), which was fuelled by ever-increasing numbers of foreign-supplied arms and combatants, as well as by revenue from opium production that reached record levels during the year, continued throughout 1999. The Taliban, holding significant military and territorial advantage, attempted to prosecute the war to victory, while UF defended its hold on the remaining territories outside Taliban control. Although the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan (UNSM) and certain neighbouring countries succeeded in bringing the parties together in two rounds of talks in February and March, the Taliban, in April, declined to continue the talks unless UF accepted to join the "Islamic Emirate of Afghanistan". Only nine days after the "six plus two" group—the six countries bordering Afghanistan: China, Iran, Pakistan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan; plus the Russian Federation and the United States—issued a 19 July declaration calling for a resumption of the talks and agreeing not to give military support to any Afghan party, the Taliban mounted a major offensive intended decisively to defeat UF. The waves of fighting, which saw-sawed without significant gains on either side, left in their wake more death and destruction and tens of thousands of civilians forcibly displaced.

In view of the limited impact of the activities of the Special Envoy for Afghanistan, Lakhdar Brahimi (Algeria), on the military and political situation, he and the Secretary-General decided to freeze his activities until conditions warranted his renewed intervention. To improve the Organization's political effectiveness, the Secretary-General proposed to strengthen UNSMA to enable it to assume the primary role of UN peacemaking and to deploy its offices to facilitate regular liaison with belligerents and non-belligerents alike, proposals which the General Assembly supported in December.

Acting on evidence that the Taliban provided training and sanctuary for international terrorists, notably Usama bin Laden, a Saudi national indicted by the United States for terrorist activities and intentions against the United States and its nationals, the Security Council, in October, demanded that the Taliban turn Mr. bin Laden over to appropriate authorities for trial. Council sanctions on the Taliban for failure to comply with that demand went into effect on 14 November.

Meanwhile, UN agencies, in cooperation with international humanitarian organizations and NGOs, attempted to provide emergency relief to the neediest of war victims, especially the forcibly displaced, as well as to victims of an earthquake in February. The Mine Action Programme of the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) recorded the successful clearance of some 400 square kilometres of mined areas since its inception. UNHCR helped in the orderly repatriation of large numbers of Afghan refugees from Pakistan and Iran. As to the year's record levels of opium cultivation and production, the Secretary-General instructed the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to coordinate response to it, in cooperation with the Secretariat's Department of Political Affairs and UNSMA.

Situation in Afghanistan

Reports of Secretary-General (March, June and September). The situation in Afghanistan during 1999 was described by the Secretary-General in four progress reports, submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 53/203 A [YUN 1998, p. 289]. The first three were quarterly, issued on 31 March [A/53/889-S/1999/362], 21 June [A/53/1002-S/1999/698] and 21 September [A/54/378-S/1999/994]; the fourth was an annual report, issued in the last quarter of the year (see p. 258). The reports gave accounts of the political and military developments in the country; the peacemaking activities of the Special Envoy, of UNSMA and at UN Headquarters in New York; UN assistance and programmes to alleviate the progressively deteriorating humanitarian and human rights situations of the war victims; and UN efforts to curb terrorism within and from Afghanistan, as well as to reduce the illicit cultivation, production and trafficking of drugs.

The September report underscored the adoption, by the high-level meeting of the "six plus two" group (Tashkent, Uzbekistan, 19-20 July)—attended also by the Taliban and UF—of the Tashkent Declaration on Fundamental Principles for a Peaceful Settlement of the Conflict in Afghanistan [A/54/174-S/1999/812]. By the Declaration, the group urged the resumption of political negotiations under UN auspices aimed at establishing a broad-based, multi-ethnic and fully representative Government; agreed not to provide military support to any Afghan party and to prevent the use of its members' territories for that purpose so as to help bring about a cessation of hostilities; and outlined two stages for the negotiations: the first stage to agree on an immediate ceasefire without preconditions and to engage in confidence-building measures, including prisoner-of-war (POW) exchanges and lifting blockades to enable reciprocal trade and delivery of humanitarian assistance; the second to draw up basic principles for Afghanistan's future State structure. The Declaration further urged the Afghan parties, particularly the Taliban, to cease providing refuge and training to international terrorists and called on the international community to respond to the 1999 Inter-Agency Consolidated Appeal for Emergency Humanitarian and Rehabilitation Assistance for Afghanistan (see p. 837).

However, immediately following that hopeful event, the Taliban launched a major offensive on 28 July in northern Afghanistan, aimed at capturing the remaining part of the country outside their control. Besides noting the involvement of thousands of non-Afghan nationals and boy soldiers, mainly on the side of the Taliban forces, and the external supply of materiel to both warring parties, the report spoke of brutalities inflicted on civilians, as had occurred during past Taliban offensives, and the deteriorating humanitarian situation.

Communications. Among a series of identical letters addressed to the Secretary-General and the Security Council, Afghanistan, on 10 March [A/53/860-S/1999/261], forwarded a declaration reiterating its conviction that genuine intra-Afghan dialogue was the only solution to the Afghan turmoil, its resolve to defend Afghanistan's national unity, political independence and territorial integrity should the Taliban and its sponsors continue to reject a peaceful solution, its calls on Pakistan to stop supporting the Taliban, and its condemnation of the Taliban's massacre of civilians in the north-western provinces and support of terrorism and narcotics trafficking.

On 12 April [A/53/906-S/1999/409], Afghanistan reported that, during arrangements for the second (March) round of talks, the Taliban was preparing for a massive assault on government positions, towards which Pakistan had been contributing arms and ammunition shipments throughout March, in addition to dispatching a regiment of paramilitary force to the western suburbs of Kabul.

On 24 July [A/53/1027-S/1999/824], Afghanistan quoted a 22 July Pakistani news report that 5,000 armed Pakistani "students" had been dispatched to help in the "decisive offensive" against anti-Taliban fighters, that from 3,000 to 5,000 Pakistani militants from a number of Islamic fundamentalist parties had arrived in Kabul and that a brigade of some 400 Arab Islamic militants from the Middle East, under the control of the Saudi terrorist Usama bin Laden, had taken up positions along Kabul's front line. Afghanistan also set out the main points of its statement to the "six plus two" Tashkent meeting, including the imperative to unite the nation through a broad-based Government representing all of the country's ethnic groups and extending equal rights to all, its rejection of continued foreign military intervention, its opposition to terrorism and its commitment to fight the illicit drug production.

President Burhanuddin Rabbani of Afghanistan, on 1 August [S/1999/838], expanded on Pakistan's support of the Taliban, adding that he expected the Security Council to address the issue and adopt measures against Pakistan. On 17 August [A/53/1038-S/1999/884], he called for immediate and adequate UN assistance for the victims of the Pakistan/Taliban campaign of ethnic cleansing and forcible deportation in the Shomali Plains and in Parwan and Kapisa provinces. On 5 November [A/54/532-S/1999/1142 & Corr.1], Afghanistan forwarded a 3 November Afghan Online Press editorial urging the United Nations to be wary about offering diplomatic recognition to the Taliban and to remain tough in its dealings with it, along with a report in The Guardian (London) of 20 October stating that the Taliban, in the course of its July offensive, drove some 130,000 people from their homes and caused immense human and physical wreckage.

In August, Uzbekistan appealed to the "six plus two" group to observe its commitment not to render military assistance to any Afghan party [A/54/203-S/1999/849]; the European Union (EU) called on Afghanistan's neighbouring States to prevent the flow of arms and personnel from and through their territories, and to use their influence with Afghan factions to support UN peace efforts [S/1999/886]; and Iran, on the anniversary of the still unresolved 1998 murder of its consular staff and journalist in Mazar-e-Sharif [YUN 1998, p. 294], pursued its demand that the Taliban apprehend and bring the perpetrators to justice, calling on the Council to implement its decisions in that regard so as to underscore the inviolability of diplomatic premises and dispel the Taliban's notion that it could disregard international law and UN resolutions with impunity [A/54/204-S/1999/851, S/1999/855].

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 October [meeting, 4055], the Security Council President made statement S/PRST/1999/29 on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 21 September 1999 concerning the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security.

The Council reiterates its grave concern at the continued Afghan conflict, which is a serious and growing threat to regional and international peace and security. It strongly condemns the Taliban for the launching in July 1999, only one week after the meeting of the "six plus two" group in Tashkent, of a new offensive, despite the repeated demands by the Council to cease fighting. This has undermined international efforts to facilitate the restoration of peace in Afghanistan. The fighting following the offensive has resulted in enormous suffering to the civilian population of Afghanistan. The Taliban has a primary responsibility for this.

The Council reiterates that there is no military solution to the conflict in Afghanistan and that only a negotiated political settlement aimed at the establishment of a broad-based, multi-ethnic and fully representative government acceptable to all Afghans can lead to peace and reconciliation. It recalls its demand that the parties to the conflict, especially the Taliban, resume negotiations under United Nations auspices without delay and preconditions in full compliance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Council. The Council notes that the United Front of Afghanistan has repeatedly made clear that it is willing to talk with the Taliban in order to reach a solution to the country's problems.

The Council reiterates that outside interference in the internal affairs of Afghanistan, including the involvement of foreign combatants and military personnel and the supply of weapons and other materials used in the conflict, should cease immediately. It calls upon all States to take resolute measures to prohibit their military personnel from planning and participating in combat operations in Afghanistan, and immediately to withdraw their personnel and to assure that the supply of ammunition and other war-making materials is halted. The Council expresses its deep distress over reports indicating the involvement in the fighting in Afghanistan, on the side of the Taliban forces, of thousands of non-Afghan nationals, mostly from religious schools and some of whom are below the age of fourteen.

The Council reaffirms its full support for the efforts of the United Nations, in particular the activities of the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan and those of the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan, in facilitating the political process towards the goals of national reconciliation and a lasting political settlement with the participation of all parties to the conflict and all segments of Afghan society, and reiterates its position that the United Nations must continue to play its central and impartial role in international efforts towards a peaceful resolution of the Afghan conflict.

The Council expresses its grave concern at the seriously deteriorating humanitarian situation in Afghanistan. It calls upon all Afghan parties, and in particular the Taliban, to take the necessary steps to secure the uninterrupted supply of humanitarian aid to all in need of it and in this connection not to create impediments to the activities of the United Nations humanitarian agencies and international humanitarian organizations.

The Council once again urges all Afghan factions to cooperate fully with the Special Mission and international humanitarian organizations, and calls upon them, in particular the Taliban, to take the necessary steps to ensure the safety and freedom of movement of such personnel.

The Council welcomes the Tashkent Declaration on Fundamental Principles for a Peaceful Settlement of the Conflict in Afghanistan, adopted by the "six plus two" group on 19 July 1999, particularly the agreement of members of the group not to provide military support to any Afghan party and to prevent the use of their territories for such purposes. It urges the members of the group and the Afghan factions to implement these principles in support of the efforts of the United Nations towards a peaceful resolution of the Afghan conflict.

The Council strongly condemns the continuing use of Afghan territory, especially areas controlled by the Taliban, for the sheltering and training of terrorists and planning of terrorist acts, and reaffirms its conviction that the suppression of international terrorism is essential for the maintenance of international peace and security. It insists that the Taliban cease the provision of sanctuary and training for international terrorists and their organizations, take effective measures to ensure that the territory under its control is not used for terrorist installations and camps or for the preparation or organization of terrorist acts against other States or their citizens, and cooperate with efforts to bring indicted terrorists to justice. The Council demands once again that the Taliban turn over indicted terrorist Usama bin Laden to appropriate authorities as set out in its resolution 1267(1999) of 15 October 1999. It reaffirms its decision to implement on 14 November 1999 the measures contained in that resolution, unless the Secretary-General reports that the Taliban has fully complied with the obligation set out in paragraph 2 of that resolution.

The Council is deeply disturbed also by a significant increase in the cultivation, production and trafficking of drugs in Afghanistan, especially in areas controlled by the Taliban, which will contribute to the war-making capabilities of the Afghans and will have even more serious international consequences. It demands that the Taliban, as well as others, halt all illegal drug activities. The Council calls upon Member States, in particular those neighbouring Afghanistan, and all others concerned to undertake concerted measures to stop the trafficking of illegal drugs from Afghanistan.

The Council deplores the worsening human rights situation in Afghanistan. It expresses particular alarm at the continuing disregard by the Taliban of the concerns expressed by the international community. The Council underlines the unacceptability of the forced displacement of the civilian population, in particular that conducted by the Taliban during their recent offensive, summary executions, the deliberate abuse and arbitrary detentions of civilians, violence and continuing discrimination against women and girls, the separation of men from their families, the use of child soldiers, the widespread burning of crops and destruction of homes, the indiscriminate bombing and other violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in Afghanistan. It calls upon all Afghan parties, especially the Taliban, to put an end to such practices, to adhere to the international norms and standards in this sphere, to take urgent measures to improve the human rights situation and, as an immediate first step, to ensure the protection of civilians.

The Council reiterates that the capture by the Taliban of the Consulate-General of the Islamic Republic of Iran and the murder of the Iranian diplomats and a journalist in Mazar-e-Sharif constitute flagrant violations of international law. It demands that the Taliban cooperate fully with the United Nations in investigating these crimes with a view to prosecuting those responsible.

The Council looks forward to the next report of the Secretary-General on the situation in Afghanistan, and encourages him to review options for the Council and the General Assembly.

The Council deplores the failure of the leadership of the Taliban to take measures to comply with the demands made in its previous resolutions, especially to conclude a ceasefire and to resume negotiations, and in this context reaffirms its readiness to consider the imposition of measures, in accordance with its responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations, with the aim of achieving the full implementation of its relevant resolutions.

Further report of Secretary-General (November). The Secretary-General's fourth progress report, dated 16 November [A/54/536-S/199971145] (see p. 261), summarized developments since the issuance of his 23 November 1998 annual report [YUN 1998, p. 289].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 84], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/189 A [draft: A/54/L.58] without vote [agenda items 20 (f) & 50].

The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 50/88 B of 19 December 1995, 51/195 B of 17 December 1996, 52/211 B of 19 December 1997 and 53/203 A of 18 December 1998,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 1193(1998) of 28 August 1998, 1214(1998) of 8 December 1998 and 1267(1999) of 15 October 1999 and all statements of the President of the Security Council on the situation in Afghanistan,

Noting all recent declarations by participants of regional international meetings and by international organizations on the situation in Afghanistan,

Reaffirming its strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Afghanistan, and respecting its multicultural, multi-ethnic and historical heritage,

Convinced that there is no military solution to the Afghan conflict and that only a political settlement aimed at the establishment of a broad-based, multi-ethnic and fully representative government acceptable to the Afghan people can lead to peace and reconciliation,

Stressing the importance of non-intervention and non-interference in the internal affairs of Afghanistan, and deeply concerned at all forms of continued external support, which is causing the prolongation and intensification of the conflict,

Expressing its grave concern at the failure of all Afghan parties, in particular the Taliban, to put an end to the conflict, which seriously threatens stability and peace in the region, and welcoming the willingness of the United Front to talk to the Taliban in order to find a solution to the country's problems,

Deeply concerned by the increasingly ethnic nature of the conflict, by reports of persecution on the grounds of ethnic origin and religious persuasion and by the threat this poses to the unity of the Afghan State,

Strongly condemning the sharp escalation of the conflict, in particular after the launching of a new offensive by the Taliban in July 1999, only one week after the meeting of the "six plus two" group in Tashkent, despite the repeated demands by the Security Council and continuing attempts by the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan to avert the Taliban offensive,

Noting with concern the resulting exacerbation of the enormous suffering of the Afghan people, including the massive loss of human life, summary executions, deliberate abuse and arbitrary detention of civilians, refugee flows, use of child soldiers, harassment, forcible displacement of innocent civilians and extensive destruction,

Expressing its grave concern at persistent violations of human rights and at breaches of international humanitarian law in Afghanistan, as exemplified by reports of mass killings and atrocities committed by combatants against civilians and prisoners of war, including the finding in the report of the United Nations investigation team for Afghanistan, submitted by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, that serious violations of human rights and international humanitarian law took place in Afghanistan in 1997 and 1998,

Noting with alarm the massive displacement by the Taliban of the civilian population and, in particular, of women and children, in the Shomali Plains, as well as the indiscriminate destruction of their homes and agricultural land, thereby eliminating their source of income,

Expressing its grave concern at the continuing and substantiated reports of systematic human rights violations against women and girls, including all forms of discrimination against them, notably in areas under the control of the Taliban,

Strongly condemning the capture by Taliban militia of the Consulate-General of the Islamic Republic of Iran and the murder of Iranian diplomats and a journalist in Mazar-e Sharif, and stressing that these unacceptable acts, which constitute flagrant violations of established international law, must not go unpunished,

Deeply disturbed by the continuing use of Afghan territory, especially areas controlled by the Taliban, for the recruitment, sheltering and training of terrorists, including international terrorists, and the planning of terrorist acts within and outside Afghanistan,

Deeply disturbed also by the continuing use of Afghan territory, especially areas controlled by the Taliban, for the increasing cultivation and trafficking of drugs, as well as by the significant rise in the illicit production of opium, which contribute to the war-making capabilities of the Afghans and have dangerous repercussions reaching Afghanistan's neighbours and far beyond,

Reiterating that the United Nations, as a universally recognized and impartial intermediary, must continue to play the central role in international efforts towards a peaceful resolution of the Afghan conflict,

Expressing its appreciation for the efforts made in this regard by the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan and by the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan, and noting with concern that, following years of continuing negotiation, insufficient cooperation with the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General by the parties to the conflict has led to the freezing of his activities,

Noting and welcoming the meeting of the "six plus two" group under the auspices of the United Nations, with the participation of representatives of the warring Afghan parties, held in Tashkent on 19 and 20 July

1999, and the Tashkent Declaration on Fundamental Principles for a Peaceful Settlement of the Conflict in Afghanistan adopted on 19 July 1999, as well as the working meeting of the "six plus two" group at the level of foreign ministers, held in New York in September 1999,

Regretting recent reports by the Secretary-General indicating that the "six plus two" group has not yet had the desired impact on the warring parties in Afghanistan,

Welcoming the contacts between the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan and various non-warring Afghan parties and personalities, and supporting calls by these independent Afghans for an end to the fighting and any proposals that might advance the cause of peace, including the meeting, held in Rome from 22 to 25 November 1999, of a group of Afghan personalities aimed at the convening of a genuine loya Jirgah to promote a political settlement,

By decision 54/465 of 23 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session.

Military and political developments

In his November report [A/54/536-S/1999/1145], the Secretary-General stated that fighting between the Taliban and UF ebbed and flowed during the year, with both ending roughly at the same positions they held in late 1998. The Taliban offensive of 28 July resulted only in further loss of lives, massive civilian displacement and suffering, and extensive physical destruction. Believed to have been reinforced by between 2,000 and 5,000 recruits from religious schools within Pakistan, including many non-Afghans and some under age 14, the offensive quickly overran most of the Shomali Plains, north of Kabul, up to the Panjshir Valley's entrance and areas near the Amu Darya (Oxus) River. A UF counter-attack, however, recaptured virtually all on 5 August.

On 11 August, the Taliban opened a new front line 50 kilometres north of Kabul that traversed the Kohi Safi Mountains to the vicinity of Nijrab. Through a similar move in the south-eastern region, UF made minor territorial gains. In Kandahar on 24 August, a large truck-bomb exploded outside the residential compound of the Taliban supreme leader, Mullah Mohammad Omar, killing at least 10 persons, including some of his close relatives. In September, the Taliban stepped up pressure on UF positions north of Kunduz and to the east of Khanabad in Takhar Province, while UF kept up diversionary attacks in the north-west and south-east. In a fresh offensive, the Taliban retook the territory lost to UF on 5 August, but by late October UF had once again driven the Taliban back to its starting positions. Intermittent fighting continued in the west. In early November, UF claimed to have made further advances in the northern provinces of Samangan and Sar-e-Pul.

Several events marked the political situation, starting with two rounds of intra-Afghan talks in Ashkabad, Turkmenistan, under UN auspices: the first (10-11 February) was held without a fixed agenda; the second (11-14 March) led to a framework agreement to form, in principle, a shared executive, legislature and judiciary. Shortly thereafter, however, the two sides lapsed into mutual recriminations. On 10 April, Mullah Omar suspended further talks, making clear they could be resumed only if UF accepted to join in a system of governance under an "Islamic Emirate of Afghanistan". That condition was unacceptable to President Rabbani's administration, which maintained that the Taliban had no popular or legal mandate to govern or impose an emirate system. The talks remained stalled, despite intense UN and diplomatic efforts to revive them, including President Rabbani's proposal to meet Mr. Omar under UN, Organization of the Islamic Conference, or "six plus two" group auspices.

Apart from the July Tashkent Declaration (see p. 256), Pakistan, responding to the President's personal appeal, undertook several rounds of shuttle diplomacy between the parties in August and September, an initiative rejected by UF on the grounds that Pakistan's military and political support for the Taliban prevented it from acting as an honest broker. Another peace initiative, proposed on 29 April by the former King of Afghanistan, Zahir Shah, was to convene an emergency loya Jirgah (grand assembly) as the most effective mechanism for resolving the Afghan conflict. Two preparatory meetings (Rome, 25 June and 22-25 November) were held for that purpose. Also in November, a parallel meeting with the same objective was held in Tehran, Iran.

In other developments, UF consolidated the anti-Taliban forces under a single command and established a 40-member Leadership Council, as well as a Supreme Military Council. It also announced the formation of a 10-member Political Committee and a ministerial cabinet reshuffle aimed at a broader representation of Afghanistan's four major ethnic groups: the Pashtun, Tajik, Hazara and Uzbek. On the Taliban side, Mr. Omar reshuffled his administration, appointing new foreign, interior and information ministers and replacing most of the governors and corps commanders. The Taliban continued to seek improved relations with certain regional States, including Kazakhstan, Pakistan, Turkmenistan and the United Arab Emirates, in addition to meeting representatives of the "six plus two" group at the Tashkent meeting. In February, senior Taliban and Iranian representatives met in Dubai, United Arab Emirates, which failed to satisfy Iran's continuing demand that the Taliban apprehend and bring to justice those responsible for the 1998 murder of its consular officials in Mazar-e Sharif.

Special Envoy

The Secretary-General's Special Envoy for Afghanistan and head of UNSMA, Lakhdar Brahimi, undertook two missions to the region in 1999, in February and March visiting, in addition to Afghanistan, Saudi Arabia, Pakistan, Iran, the Russian Federation, Uzbekistan, Tajikistan and Turkmenistan. He met with the Taliban supreme leader in Kandahar and twice with the Taliban leadership in Kabul. He also held two meetings with UF Commander Ahmad Shah Massoud in Dushanbe (Tajikistan) and Taloqan (northern Afghanistan). He urged the parties to settle their differences by peaceful means through the resumption of the intra-Afghan talks. To facilitate those talks, he suggested that the parties pursue confidence-building measures, including agreement on a permanent ceasefire, the exchange of POWs and appointment of military liaison officers. He repeatedly underlined the importance for Afghanistan's neighbours, Iran and Pakistan in particular, to discuss their concerns more candidly and seriously.

The Special Envoy visited the region for the second time in July to represent the United Nations at the Tashkent meeting of the "six plus two" group, where he reiterated his confidence-building proposals to the Taliban and UF and helped bring them together in a private meeting. In a 22 July meeting with the Taliban in Kabul, he warned that its planned military offensive would prove costly to the Afghan people, negatively affect UN and international community efforts to broker peace, and never bring about lasting peace. He added that the hostile attitude of non-Afghan youths arriving from Pakistan in alarmingly large numbers posed a potential danger to the aid community in Kabul. In a last-minute attempt to avert the imminent offensive, he pleaded with Pakistani political, military and other leaders on his return to Islamabad on 25 July to exert their influence on the Taliban; no serious, sustained efforts were made to that end, however. The Special Envoy further pleaded with Afghanistan's neighbouring States for their constructive engagement, through the mechanism of the "six plus two" group, and made clear his disappointment at the continuous influx into Afghanistan of materiel and thousands of non-Afghan fighters, a trend contrary to their stated wish that the Afghans should resolve their own problems without outside interference.

Following a careful review of those developments, the Secretary-General and the Special Envoy concluded that, given the lack of progress so far, the Special Envoy's activities should be frozen until such time as circumstances justified his renewed intervention.

UN Special Mission to Afghanistan

Throughout 1999, the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan performed its mandated tasks: to support the Special Envoy in promoting peace through contact with the two warring parties and with the wider Afghan political and civil community; to monitor and report political and military developments in the country; and to coordinate activities with UNOCHA and with the indigenous and international humanitarian assistance community. UNSMA's mediation efforts early in the year with the Taliban and UF leaderships contributed greatly to the two rounds of talks between them in Ashkabad. Despite the Taliban's suspension of those talks, UNSMA endeavoured to promote confidence between the parties through a range of military, political and humanitarian measures, such as the establishment of an embryonic conflict-resolution centre, in addition to those suggested by the Special Envoy.

Although UNSMA's political and military monitoring were heavily circumscribed by the lack of security and cooperation from the Taliban military, it had maintained since March a rotational presence of a military officer in Kabul and visits by political officers to locations elsewhere in Afghanistan.

Establishment of the Civil Affairs Unit within UNSMA, proposed in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 297], was set in motion by the dispatch of an assessment mission to Afghanistan in late April/early May. Following the agreement of both parties to the Unit's operation in the country, recruitment of the initial personnel began.

Reorganization

In his November report [A/54/536-S/199971145], the Secretary-General indicated that, in view of the freezing of the Special Envoy's activities, UNSMA would assume the primary role in conducting UN peacemaking activities in Afghanistan. To that end, he would appoint a substantive head of Mission at the Assistant Secretary-General level, to be assisted by a deputy director and four political affairs officers. The number of military advisers would be reduced from four to two owing to difficulties in fulfilling their monitoring and advisory functions. To increase the Organization's political effectiveness, UNSMA would progressively move its head office from Islamabad to Kabul, starting with the stationing of political affairs officers in Kabul and Kandahar when security conditions permitted. The closer proximity to both belligerents and non-belligerents should afford UNSMA more frequent contact with them. A sub-office would be opened in Tehran in early 2000 to increase regular contact with neighbouring States and with Afghan factions and individuals. Arrangements would be made to ensure effective liaison with representatives of Afghan factions in Dushanbe.

UNSMA would redouble efforts to bring about a durable and equitable political settlement. It would seek to persuade the two parties to agree to a ceasefire and resume dialogue while strengthening its links with Afghan civil society, and would closely monitor and encourage the various peace initiatives of non-UN actors, notably from within the Afghan diaspora, while continuing to work closely with the countries willing to help find a peaceful solution to the Afghan conflict, including those not represented in the "six plus two" group.

The new UNSMA Civil Affairs Unit, expected to be operational in early 2000, would work within Afghanistan primarily to promote respect for minimum humanitarian standards and deter massive and systematic violations of human rights.

Financing

Following the General Assembly's endorsement, in resolution 54/189 A, of the proposed reorganization of UNSMA as described above, the financial implications on the proposed programme budget for the 2000-2001 biennium, estimated by the Secretary-General at $3,407,600 [A/C.5/54/41], were considered by the Assembly. Based on the related ACABQ report [A/54/667] and the Fifth Committee's recommendation [A/54/671], that amount was to be charged against the $90,387,200 provided for in Assembly resolution 54/251, section VIII, on special political missions, of 23 December.

Humanitarian assistance

As presented in the 1999 Consolidated Appeal for Afghanistan, the common programme of humanitarian assistance undertaken in Afghanistan by UN agencies and the assistance community as a whole represented a significant step towards greater coherence and effectiveness (see also p. 837). The programme benefited from the Afghanistan Programming Body, which provided a forum for policy discussion and consensus-building on the direction of humanitarian activities, as well as from the biannual high-level policy discussions of the Afghanistan Support Group of donors. With the limited and phased return to the country of UN international staff in March 1999, the momentum of assistance increased from its restricted level stemming from their absence since 21 August 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 296]. Assistance delivery continued to be hampered, however, by security and access constraints arising from the fighting, as well as by the uneven receipt of funding against the Consolidated Appeal.

In 1999, UN programmes and agencies mounted emergency relief assistance jointly with ICRC, the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, the American Red Cross Society and NGOs for some 16,000 families victims of an earthquake on 11 February (see p. 838). Assistance was also being provided for over 30,000 households affected by the waves of fighting across the Hazarajat region in the central highlands, especially in Bamian, Shiber and Yakaolang. Of the estimated 65,000 displaced people who escaped to the Panjshir Valley from the July fighting in the Shomali Plains, where widespread burning of crops and destruction of homes reportedly occurred, about 50,000 were found to need food aid. A further 60,000 people forcibly displaced from the Shomali Plains were in Kabul, where, since August, WFP and NGOs had been providing food assistance for some 12,000 people housed in the former Soviet embassy compound, 90 per cent of whom were women and children.

With UNHCR assistance, 82,000 Afghan refugees voluntarily returned to Afghanistan from Pakistan and Iran between 1 January and 30 September. During the same period, some 70,000 Afghans were forcibly returned from Iran. Negotiations were under way between UNHCR and Iran for the orderly and voluntary return of refugees from that country.

Since its inception, the UNOCHA Mine Action Programme had cleared almost 400 square kilometres of mined areas, with a further 55 square kilometres already marked and surveyed for future clearance.

Human rights violations

Reported human rights violations in Afghanistan, largely attributable to the continuing war, had worsened, especially for civilians trapped in front-line areas. Abuses against civilians during the April/May fighting in the central highlands included the summary execution of women and children, forced displacement, looting and burning of homes, arbitrary detention and forced labour. Added to the same abuses perpetrated during the Taliban's July offensive in the Shomali Plains were the separation of men from families, the abduction and disappearance of women, the destruction and burning of agricultural assets and use of boy soldiers.

Report of UN investigation team. On 23 November [A/54/626], the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a summary of the report of the UN investigation team for Afghanistan, submitted by the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights. Prepared in response to Assembly resolution 52/211 B [YUN 1997, p. 262] and Security Council presidential statement S/PRST/1997/55 [ibid., p. 261] and resolution 1193(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 296], the report summarized the results of an investigation into allegations of serious violations of international human rights or humanitarian law, including reported mass killings of POWs and civilians, incidents of rape in northern Afghanistan in 1997, and reports of atrocities alleged to have taken place in Mazar-e Sharif and Bamian in August 1998 [ibid., p. 301] in the wake of the Taliban conquests of those cities.

According to the findings, little information was forthcoming from the warring parties and neither extended meaningful cooperation, information provided by others and persons interviewed was patchy, site evidence was inconclusive and allegations against both parties were made at different times. Clearly, killings of civilians and serious violations of international humanitarian law and human rights had taken place, but for the foregoing reasons, the investigation team was unable to reach definitive conclusions.

(For the human rights situation in Afghanistan, see p. 704; for the situation of women and girls in Afghanistan, see pp. 670 and 1094.)

Communications. In a statement of 29 January [S/1999/109], Afghanistan described the inhumane and brutal conditions under which the detainees it visited, through facilitation by ICRC, in Taliban detention centres in Kandahar (15-20 January) and Kabul (21-23 January) were held, among whom were civilians detained on the basis of ethnicity and religion. By contrast, the Taliban detainees by Afghanistan were treated humanely. Afghanistan appealed to the international community to urge the Taliban to respect the human dignity of detainees held by it and to end the suffering of those individuals.

Drug control

The annual survey by the United Nations International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP) estimated that opium production in Afghanistan would reach a record level of 4,600 metric tons in 1999, potentially convertible into 460 metric tons of heroin; an estimated 90,983-hectares were under opium poppy cultivation, representing a 43 per cent increase over 1998, with cultivation having spread from 73 to 104 districts. Those statistics put Afghanistan as the world's largest illicit producer of opium in 1999, with its output reaching up to 75 per cent of all illicit opium worldwide.

Such a large increase in available opium and heroin would weigh heavily on States bordering Afghanistan, which would have to counter the threat to their internal security from massive cross-border illicit-drug trafficking and associated criminal activity. To bolster their inadequate and under-resourced border security systems, Iran, Pakistan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan agreed with UNDCP to implement border control and law enforcement programmes.

UNDCP approved two such programmes and concluded memoranda of understanding with all Central Asian countries for the improvement of coordination among their border control and law enforcement authorities. The UNDCP Executive Director was instructed by the Secretary-General to coordinate response to the growing drug problem in cooperation with the Department of Political Affairs and UNSMA. (See also PART THREE, Chapter XIV.)

Counter-terrorism measures

In his November report, the Secretary-General drew attention to the growing concern that Afghanistan was becoming a breeding ground for religious extremism and sectarian violence, as well as various types of international terrorism, whose scope far exceeded Afghanistan's boundaries. He pointed to a 7 October press conference at which Pakistan's former Prime Minister, Nawaz Sharif, claimed that Pakistan had evidence of the existence in Afghanistan of terrorist training camps, which had trained persons involved in terrorist activities in Pakistan. Most of Afghanistan's neighbours and other States beyond had made similar allegations.

The United States had earlier, on 5 July, imposed unilateral financial and economic sanctions against the Taliban until such time as Saudi national Usama bin Laden—whom it indicted for the 1998 bombings of its embassies in Nairobi, Kenya, and Dar es Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania, and for conspiring to kill United States nationals outside their country—was either expelled from Afghanistan or extradited to a country where he would be brought to justice. In August, the assets of Ariana Afghan Airlines held in United States banks were frozen. In September, India terminated the air link between Amritsar and Kabul, leaving the United Arab Emirates as that airline's only destination outside Afghanistan.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 15 October [meeting 4051], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1267(1999). The draft [S/1999/1054] was sponsored by Canada, the Netherlands, the Russian Federation, Slovenia, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 1189(1998) of 13 August 1998, 1193(1998) of 28 August 1998 and 1214(1998) of 8 December 1998, and the statements by its President on the situation in Afghanistan,

Reaffirming its strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Afghanistan, and its respect for Afghanistan's cultural and historical heritage, Reiterating its deep concern over the continuing violations of international humanitarian law and of human rights, particularly discrimination against women and girls, and over the significant rise in the illicit production of opium, and stressing that the capture by the Taliban of the Consulate-General of the Islamic Republic of Iran and the murder of Iranian diplomats and a journalist in Mazar-e-Sharif constituted flagrant violations of established international law,

Recalling the relevant international counter-terrorism conventions and in particular the obligations of parties to those conventions to extradite or prosecute terrorists,

Strongly condemning the continuing use of Afghan territory, especially areas controlled by the Taliban, for the sheltering and training of terrorists and planning of terrorist acts, and reaffirming its conviction that the suppression of international terrorism is essential for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Deploing the fact that the Taliban continues to provide safe haven to Usama bin Laden and to allow him and others associated with him to operate a network of terrorist training camps from Taliban-controlled territory and to use Afghanistan as a base from which to sponsor international terrorist operations,

Noting the indictment of Usama bin Laden and his associates by the United States of America for, inter alia, the 7 August 1998 bombings of the United States embassies in Nairobi and Dar es Salaam and for conspiring to kill American nationals outside the United States, and noting also the request of the United States to the Taliban to surrender them for trial,

Determining that the failure of the Taliban authorities to respond to the demands in paragraph 13 of resolution 1214(1998) constitutes a threat to international peace and security,

Stressing its determination to ensure respect for its resolutions,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Insists that the Afghan faction known as the Taliban, which also calls itself the Islamic Emirate of Afghanistan, comply promptly with its previous resolutions and in particular cease the provision of sanctuary and training for international terrorists and their organizations, take appropriate effective measures to ensure that the territory under its control is not used for terrorist installations and camps, or for the preparation or organization of terrorist acts against other States or their citizens, and cooperate with efforts to bring indicted terrorists to justice;

2. Demands that the Taliban turn over Usama bin Laden without further delay to appropriate authorities in a country where he has been indicted, or to appropriate authorities in a country where he will be returned to such a country, or to appropriate authorities in a country where he will be arrested and effectively brought to justice;

3. Decides that on 14 November 1999 all States shall impose the measures set out in paragraph 4 below, unless the Council has previously decided, on the basis of a report of the Secretary-General, that the Taliban has fully complied with the obligation set out in paragraph 2 above;

4. Decides also that, in order to enforce paragraph 2 above, all States shall:

(a) Deny permission for any aircraft to take off from or land in their territory if it is owned, leased or operated by or on behalf of the Taliban as designated by the Committee established by paragraph 6 below, unless the particular flight has been approved in advance by the Committee on the grounds of humanitarian need, including religious obligation such as the performance of the Hajj;

(b) Freeze funds and other financial resources, including funds derived or generated from property owned or controlled directly or indirectly by the Taliban, or by any undertaking owned or controlled by the Taliban, as designated by the Committee established by paragraph 6 below, and ensure that neither they nor any other funds or financial resources so designated are made available, by their nationals or by any persons within their territory, to or for the benefit of the Taliban or any undertaking owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by the Taliban, except as may be authorized by the Committee on a case-by-case basis on the grounds of humanitarian need;

5. Urges all States to cooperate with efforts to fulfil the demand in paragraph 2 above, and to consider further measures against Usama bin Laden and his associates;

6. Decides to establish, in accordance with rule 28 of its provisional rules of procedure, a Committee of the Security Council consisting of all the members of the Council to undertake the following tasks and to report on its work to the Council with its observations and recommendations:

(a) To seek from all States further information regarding the action taken by them with a view to effectively implementing the measures imposed by paragraph 4 above;

(b) To consider information brought to its attention by States concerning violations of the measures imposed by paragraph 4 above and to recommend appropriate measures in response thereto;

(c) To make periodic reports to the Council on the impact, including the humanitarian implications, of the measures imposed by paragraph 4 above;

(d) To make periodic reports to the Council on information submitted to it regarding alleged violations of the measures imposed by paragraph 4 above, identifying where possible persons or entities reported to be engaged in such violations;

(e) To designate the aircraft and funds or other financial resources referred to in paragraph 4 above in order to facilitate the implementation of the measures imposed by that paragraph;

(f) To consider requests for exemptions from the measures imposed by paragraph 4 above as provided for in that paragraph, and to decide on the granting of an exemption to these measures in respect of the payment by the International Air Transport Association to the aeronautical authority of Afghanistan on behalf of international airlines for air traffic control

(g) To examine the reports submitted pursuant to paragraph 10 below;

7. Calls upon all States to act strictly in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution, notwithstanding the existence of any rights or obligations conferred or imposed by any international agreement or any contract entered into or any licence or permit granted prior to the date of coming into force of the measures imposed by paragraph 4 above;

8. Calls upon States to bring proceedings against persons and entities within their jurisdiction that violate the measures imposed by paragraph 4 above and to impose appropriate penalties;

9. Calls upon all States to cooperate fully with the Committee established by paragraph 6 above in the fulfilment of its tasks, including supplying such information as may be required by the Committee in pursuance of the present resolution;

10. Requests all States to report to the Committee established by paragraph 6 above within thirty days of the coming into force of the measures imposed by paragraph 4 above on the steps they have taken with a view to effectively implementing paragraph 4 above;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the Committee established by paragraph 6 above and to make the necessary arrangements in the Secretariat for this purpose;

12. Requests the Committee established by paragraph 6 above to determine appropriate arrangements, on the basis of recommendations of the Secretariat, with competent international organizations, neighbouring and other States, and parties concerned with a view to improving the monitoring of the implementation of the measures imposed by paragraph 4 above;

13. Requests the Secretariat to submit for consideration by the Committee established by paragraph 6 above information received from Governments and public sources on possible violations of the measures imposed by paragraph 4 above;

14. Decides to terminate the measures imposed by paragraph 4 above once the Secretary-General reports to the Security Council that the Taliban has fulfilled the obligation set out in paragraph 2 above;

15. Expresses its readiness to consider the imposition of further measures, in accordance with its responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations, with the aim of achieving the full implementation of the present resolution;

16. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

As the Taliban failed to comply with the Council's demand in paragraph 2 of the foregoing resolution, its sanctions provisions went into effect on 14 November. Ariana's flights to its only destination were discontinued, Afghan bank branches in Pakistan were closed and Taliban accounts were frozen. The Taliban, who had made some attempts to resolve the question, had earlier announced that the case against Mr. bin Laden had been closed for lack of evidence and that, as a guest of the Afghan people, he could not be forced to leave the country and, in any case, was prevented from acting on Afghan soil against any country.

Tajikistan

Implementation of the 1997 General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan (the General Agreement) [YUN 1997, p. 264] by the two parties to the Agreement, the Government and the United Tajik Opposition (UTO) was marked by two major achievements in 1999 that moved Tajikistan closer to its goal of national reconciliation and democratization: the proposed amendments to the Constitution were finally approved by referendum on 6 September; and the presidential elections were conducted without incident on 6 November, with the incumbent President, Emomali S. Rakhmonov, elected for a single seven-year term in accordance with the new Constitution. Those achievements were due in no small measure, the Secretary-General observed, to the extraordinary efforts of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan (UNMOT), with the active support of the Contact Group of Guarantor States and International Organizations (Contact Group), as well as of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) mission in Tajikistan. Following the presidential elections, preparations were under way for the forthcoming parliamentary elections.

On the recommendation of the Secretary-General, who deemed that international involvement in Tajikistan remained essential, the Security Council extended UNMOT's mandate twice during the year, the second time until 15 May 2000. UN system humanitarian operations involved mainly UNHCR, which assisted in the voluntary repatriation of Tajik refugees from neighbouring countries, the World Bank and UNDP, which were providing assistance to facilitate the reintegration into civilian life of former UTO combatants.

UN Mission of Observers in Tajikistan

The United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan, established by Security Council resolution 968(1994) [YUN 1994, p. 596], continued to promote peace and national reconciliation and to assist in the implementation of the 1997 General Agreement. Its mandated tasks were to provide good offices and expert advice as stipulated in the General Agreement; cooperate with the joint Commission on National Reconciliation (CNR), the main implementation body, and its subcommissions, as well as with the Central Commission on Elections and Referendums (CCER); participate in the work of the Contact Group and serve as its coordinator; investigate reports of ceasefire violations and report on them to the United Nations and CNR; monitor the assembly of UTO fighters and their reintegration, disarmament and demobilization; assist ex-combatants in their reintegration into governmental power structures or in demobilization; coordinate UN assistance to Tajikistan during the transition period; and maintain close contacts with the parties, as well as cooperative liaison with the collective peacekeeping forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS), the Russian border forces and the OSCE mission in Tajikistan.

UNMOT, which had suspended its field activities following the July 1998 shooting of four members of its team in Garm [YUN 1998, p. 303], reopened its field offices in Khorog and Khujand on 1 and 21 June 1999, respectively. The three men accused of killing the four UNMOT personnel were found guilty of murder and related charges and sentenced to death by Tajikistan's Supreme Court on 26 March. The Secretary-General appealed to the President to consider commuting the sentence.

UNMOT maintained its headquarters in Dushanbe and three field offices: Kurgan-Tyube and the two reopened in June.

During the year, UNMOT continued to cooperate with OSCE on constitutional reform, democratization and elections. It maintained contact with the CIS collective peacekeeping forces regarding maintenance of the ceasefire and security, as well as with the Russian border forces on matters of mutual concern.

Composition

UNMOT was headed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Tajikistan, Jan Kubis (Slovakia), until 21 June. He was succeeded by Ivo Petrov (Bulgaria), who was appointed by the Secretary-General with effect from 20 September through an exchange of letters with the Security Council on 13 and 17 September [S/1999/985, S/1999/986].

UNMOT's military component was under the command of the Chief Military Observer, Brigadier-General Tengku Ariffin Bin Tengku Mohammed (Malaysia), until 4 April. He was succeeded by Brigadier-General John Hvidegaard (Denmark), also appointed by the Secretary-General through an exchange of letters with the Council on 5 and 9 March [S/1999/254, S/1999/255].

As at October, UNMOT comprised 37 military observers from 13 contributing countries and 167 civilian staff (including 2 civilian police, four medical staff and 3 UN Volunteers), of whom 50 were internationally recruited.

UNMOT's mandate, which expired on 15 May, was extended by the Council for two six-month periods: the first ended on 15 November; the second was to end on 15 May 2000.

Financing

On 8 June 1999 [meeting 101], the General Assembly considered the Secretary-General's February reports on UNMOT's proposed budget for the 12-month period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 [A/53/816] and financial performance from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 [A/53/784], together with ACABQ's related reports [A/53/895 & Add.5]. On the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/545/Add.i], the Assembly adopted resolution 53/19 B without vote [agenda item 136].

Financing of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 968(1994) of 16 December 1994, by which the Council established the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission of Observers, the latest of which was resolution 1240(1999) of 15 May 1999,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 1138(1997) of 14 November 1997, by which the Council authorized the Secretary-General to expand the size of the Mission of Observers,

Recalling further its resolution 49/240 of 31 March 1995 on the financing of the Mission of Observers and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 53/19 A of 2 November 1998,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission of Observers are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission of Observers, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission of Observers,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission of Observers with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan as at 30 April 1999, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 37 million United States dollars, representing some 7 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Mission of Observers to the period ending 15 May 1999, notes that some 15 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission of Observers in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission of Observers is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Mission of Observers against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

8. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan the amount of 18,708,926 dollars gross (17,475,926 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Mission of Observers for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, inclusive of the amount of 930,639 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations and the amount of 182,487 dollars for the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, to be apportioned, as an ad hoc arrangement, among Member States at a monthly rate of 1,559,077 dollars gross (1,456,327 dollars net) in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1999 and 2000, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Mission of Observers beyond 30 June 1999;

9. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 8 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 1,233,000 dollars approved for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000;

10. Decides further that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission of Observers, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 8 above, their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 2,408,400 dollars gross (2,048,400 dollars net) in respect of the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998;

11. Decides that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission of Observers, their share of the unencumbered balance of 2,408,400 dollars gross (2,048,400 dollars net) in respect of the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

12. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission of Observers in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan".

By decision 54/462 A of 23 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the agenda item on the financing of UNMOT at its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session. By decision 54/465 of the same date, the Assembly decided that the same item would remain for consideration during that session.

Activities

During the year, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council four reports bringing up to date the record of developments in Tajikistan and activities of UNMOT: the first two pursuant to Council resolution 1206(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 312] and the next two pursuant to resolution 1240(1999) (see p. 271).

Reports of Secretary-General (February and May). In his 8 February interim report [S/1999/124], the Secretary-General observed that progress in implementing the General Agreement remained slow. The first two stages foreseen in the military protocol had not been completed, as reflected in a 5 January CNR resolution, which acknowledged that UTO had not fully complied with the protocol's provisions and urged all UTO fighters, therefore, to return to their assembly sites and place their weapons in the designated storage areas, as well as stricter control over the carrying of weapons outside assembly sites. The Joint Central Review Commission, set up under stage III of the protocol, had so far reviewed only 225 fighters in Gorno-Badakshan and 1,084 in Kofarnikhon, Leninsky and Dushanbe, in addition to personnel of various government power structures.

At the beginning of the year, President Rakhmonov publicly announced the Government's intention to hold, in addition to a referendum on amendments to the Constitution, parliamentary and presidential elections in 1999, as his five-year term would end in November 1999 and the current Parliament's term in February 2000. Constitutional issues were still being debated, however, with the most contentious issue, namely, the retention of the constitutional provision describing the character of the State as "secular", held in abeyance. The Secretary-General, noting that, at the current stage, the referendum and elections remained uncertain, warned of the risk inherent in the slow pace, namely, the growing restlessness among the groups not direct parties to the General Agreement and to its power-sharing arrangements, as well as among UTO fighters awaiting demobilization or reintegration into the national army.

The Secretary-General remained concerned by the precarious security situation, characterized by an increase in crime, especially drug-related crime, and numerous violent incidents with possible political background. UNMOT thus continued to limit its activities to Dushanbe and to observe strict security precautions.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (February)

On 23 February [meeting 3981], the Security Council President made statement S/PRST/1999/8 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 8 February 1999 on the situation in Tajikistan, submitted pursuant to paragraph U of its resolution 1206(1998) of 12 November 1998.

The Council welcomes the regular contacts between the President of the Republic of Tajikistan and the leader of the United Tajik Opposition and the work of the Commission on National Reconciliation aimed at achieving further progress in the peace process. It regrets that progress has remained slow during the last three months and underlines the necessity for the parties to speed up the full and sequential implementation of the General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan, especially the protocol on military issues. The Council calls upon the parties to intensify their efforts to create conditions for the holding in 1999 of a constitutional referendum and presidential elections, as well as for the timely holding of parliamentary elections.

The Council notes with appreciation the work of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and of all the personnel of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan and encourages them to continue assisting the parties in the implementation of the General Agreement. It underlines the importance of the Mission playing a full and active role in the implementation of the General Agreement and requests the Secretary-General to continue to consider means of achieving this, taking into account the security situation.

The Council welcomes the continued contribution made by the collective peacekeeping forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States in assisting the parties in the implementation of the General Agreement in coordination with all concerned.

The Council welcomes also the contribution of the Contact Group of Guarantor States and International Organizations to the peace process and, in this context, considers that the holding of a meeting of the Contact Group at the level of Ministers for Foreign Affairs, in support of the peace process, could indeed be useful, if properly prepared.

The Council welcomes further the activities of various international organizations and humanitarian workers related to the implementation of the General Agreement and addressing the humanitarian, rehabilitation and development needs of Tajikistan. It calls upon Member States and others concerned to respond promptly and generously to the consolidated appeal for Tajikistan for 1999 launched in Geneva in December 1998.

The Council reiterates its concern that the security situation in some parts of Tajikistan remains precarious. It reiterates the importance of a full investigation into the murder in July 1998 of four members of the Mission and notes with appreciation the efforts of the Government of Tajikistan in this regard. The Council calls upon the United Tajik Opposition to contribute more effectively to the investigation in order to bring those responsible to justice. It acknowledges the efforts of the Government of Tajikistan to enhance the protection of international personnel and calls upon the parties to cooperate further in ensuring the security and freedom of movement of the personnel of the United Nations, the collective peacekeeping forces and other international personnel. The Council reminds both parties that the ability of the international community to mobilize and to continue assistance for Tajikistan is linked to the security of the personnel of the Mission and international organizations, and of humanitarian workers.

According to the Secretary-General's May report [S/1999/514], President Rakhmonov instructed his Cabinet and CNR on 2 March to expedite outstanding military and political issues, among them the pending UTO amnesty cases and nominations to high-level posts and incorporation of UTO representatives into regional governmental structures, discussion on constitutional amendments, reinstatement of UTO members and sympathizers to their former positions in the Government, as well as in the so-called power structures (army, police, security), the attestation process in Garm, Tajikabad and Jirgital, and the appointment of the Government's choice for the defence portfolio.

The CNR compromise proposals for constitutional reforms, hammered out after 14 months, were forwarded to the President, who rejected most of them, the notable exception being the proposed professional, bicameral parliament. Underlying much of the debate on constitutional reform was a dispute over the sequence of the forthcoming elections. The Government wanted the presidential election to take precedence, to ensure that a constitutionally elected executive was in place, bearing in mind that UTO retained its military capacity, whereas UTO wanted parliamentary elections first out of concern that an elected president might be emboldened to regard the power-sharing agreement as superseded.

Meanwhile the United Nations and OSCE had agreed on a joint effort to encourage preparations for holding credible elections acceptable to all. The Contact Group recommended that the media improve their credibility by including the views of every legitimately interested party and urged the inclusion of other parties in the political process to strengthen civil accord, in accordance with CNR's commitment to engage in a broad dialogue with all elements of the political spectrum.

The report provided CNR figures illustrating progress achieved in the demobilization and reintegration of ex-UTO fighters, noting at the same time that delays in that process and lack of support for the ex-fighters were creating discontent among them and their field commanders. To the two parties' request for international assistance for the fighters, the United Nations explained that, since UNMOT had exhausted its limited food and other assistance (meant to bridge only the first two of the six months envisaged for the quartering, registration and disarmament of the UTO fighters), it would renew efforts to obtain funds for reconstruction and other projects, such as food-for-work, food-for-training and land-lease projects, designed to create jobs and enable former fighters to return to civilian life.

On 5 May, the CNR Chairman and UTO leader wrote to the Special Representative, expressing the widespread dissatisfaction within UTO over the many unresolved problems, notably the President's rejection of the proposed constitutional amendments, the failure to grant amnesty to former UTO fighters and supporters, and the slow pace of power-sharing, including the Government's unwillingness to appoint a UTO representative to the defence portfolio.

Although security improved during the reporting period, the situation remained tense. Between March and April, a Parliament member was killed, a police post in Yavan, some 40 kilometres south-east of Dushanbe, was attacked, with six policemen taken hostage, and an NGO employee was stopped between Komsomolobad (Darband) and Obi-Garm by an armed group who threatened to kill all international persons entering the area. A ban on movement there remained in effect for all UN and related personnel.

Regarding UN humanitarian activities, at the time of reporting 1,800 housing units had been rebuilt or repaired, benefiting 15,000 refugees who had returned since the 1997 General Agreement. The World Bank earmarked $95 million for structural reforms, enhancement of the Government's organizational capabilities, educational reform, rehabilitation of private farms and disaster relief. UNDP, in conjunction with the World Bank, financed a survey of living conditions to enable the Government to review its poverty strategy and better focus on vulnerable groups. The 1999 consolidated inter-agency appeal for Tajikistan had so far generated only $617,045, or 2.5 per cent of the target funding (see also p. 841).

The Secretary-General stated that the peace process in Tajikistan continued to require direct international attention and support. He therefore recommended that UNMOT's mandate be extended for another six months, until 15 November.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 15 May [meeting 4004], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1240(1999). The draft [S/1999/557] was prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions and the statements by its President,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 6 May 1999 on the situation in Tajikistan,

Reaffirming its commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Tajikistan and to the inviolability of its borders,

Welcoming progress in the peace process in Tajikistan and the effective maintenance of the ceasefire between the Government of Tajikistan and the United Tajik Opposition, while underlining the fact that more needs to be done to translate agreements and decisions into concrete actions and to deal with the many pending issues,

Welcoming also the renewed efforts of the President of the Republic of Tajikistan and the leadership of the Commission on National Reconciliation to advance and to expedite the implementation of the General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan, which have helped to achieve movement on both military and political issues,

Welcoming further the maintenance of close contact by the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan with the parties, as well as its cooperative liaison with the collective peacekeeping forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States, the Russian border forces and the mission in Tajikistan of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe,

Noting with appreciation the continued contribution of the Contact Group of Guarantor States and International Organizations to the peace process, in particular through periodic joint plenary meetings with the Commission on National Reconciliation to review progress in the implementation of the General Agreement,

Welcoming the fact that the general situation in Tajikistan has remained relatively calm with better security than in earlier periods, while noting that the situation in some parts of the country has remained tense,

Recognizing that comprehensive international support remains crucial for achieving a positive outcome of the peace process in Tajikistan,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 6 May 1999;

2. Calls upon the parties to speed up the full and sequential implementation, in a balanced manner, of the General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan, especially the protocol on military issues, and to create conditions for the holding in 1999 of a constitutional referendum, as well as for the timely holding of presidential and parliamentary elections, and encourages the Commission on National Reconciliation to intensify its efforts aimed at the institution of a broad dialogue among the various political forces in the country in the interests of the restoration and strengthening of civil accord in Tajikistan;

3. Notes with appreciation the work of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and of all the personnel of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan, encourages them to continue assisting the parties in the implementation of the General Agreement, notes that the reopening of field offices should strengthen the Mission in this regard, underlines the need for the Mission to have the necessary personnel and financial support, and requests the Secretary-General to continue to consider means of ensuring a full and active role for the Mission in the implementation of the General Agreement;

4. Encourages the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe to continue its close cooperation with the United Nations on matters relating to constitutional reform, democratization and elections, as requested under the General Agreement;

5. Supports the active political work of the Contact Group of Guarantor States and International Organizations in promoting the implementation of the General Agreement, and considers that a meeting of the Contact Group at the level of Ministers for Foreign Affairs could lend further impetus to the peace process;

6. Welcomes the continued contribution made by the collective peacekeeping forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States in assisting the parties in the implementation of the General Agreement, in coordination with all concerned;

7. Calls upon the parties to cooperate further in ensuring the security and freedom of movement of the personnel of the United Nations, the collective peacekeeping forces and other international personnel, and reminds the parties that the ability of the international community to mobilize and to continue assistance for Tajikistan is linked to the security of those personnel;

8. Calls upon Member States and others concerned to make voluntary contributions to launch projects for demobilization and to provide support for the elections, and to respond promptly and generously to the consolidated inter-agency appeal for Tajikistan for 1999;

9. Decides to extend the mandate of the Mission for a period of six months until 15 November 1999;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council informed of all significant developments, and also requests him to report within three months of the adoption of the present resolution on its implementation;

11. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

By a 25 May statement [S/1999/614], the Government of Tajikistan, while appreciating UTO's role in advancing the peace process, objected to UTO's unwarranted demands and ultimatums, as well as its focus on securing posts and portfolios. Moreover, UTO had yet to honour fully its commitments under the military protocol. The Government said it was necessary to refrain from mutual recriminations and issuing ultimatums. It reaffirmed its determination to speed up the peace process as defined by the General Agreement but it had to proceed in strict compliance with the Constitution.

Reports of Secretary-General (August and November). The Secretary-General's August (interim) report [S/1999/872] recorded significant progress in the General Agreement's implementation, including agreement between the Government and UTO on the proposed amendments to the Constitution and the Parliament's 30 June decision to hold a referendum on the amendments on 26 September. On 3 August, UTO officially declared the disbandment of its armed forces; it was endorsed by a CNR resolution the same day, thus completing the second stage of the military protocol and opening the way for the legalization of the UTO political parties banned in 1993 and their participation in the political process.

On 14 May, Parliament adopted an Amnesty Act granting amnesty to over 5,000 UTO fighters registered in 1998 and subject to investigation for acts committed during the civil war. However, the new Act, which complemented the 1997 Law on Amnesty, did not meet UTO's demand for the amnesty of 93 UTO supporters imprisoned on criminal charges. UTO subsequently suspended its participation in CNR. Following the Contact Group's intervention, resulting in the signing of a formal protocol on 17 June on the completion of outstanding tasks within a specific time frame, CNR resumed its work with full UTO participation.

Progress was made thereafter on a number of key issues, including agreement on six constitutional amendments: replacement of the unicameral Parliament by a two-chamber one; the lower chamber members to be elected on the basis of equal, direct and secret vote and 75 per cent of upper chamber members to be elected by indirect vote through the local parliaments, with the remaining 25 per cent to be appointed by the President; the establishment of a judicial council; a clause permitting the functioning of religion-based political parties; and a single seven-year term for the President.

Twelve UTO members were appointed to government posts, bringing such appointments to 33. On 30 June, Parliament elevated the Committee on Emergency Situations to a full ministry. Appointed to head it was the UTO military chief of staff and commander of the Tavildara district, thus removing one of the most contentious appointment issues and paving the way for the completion, shortly thereafter, of the attestation and integration of opposition fighters in Tavildara and Darband (Komsomolobad).

In accordance with the 30 per cent quota and with the parties' agreement initially to allocate 22 towns and districts to UTO, the President appointed 11 UTO candidates as district chairmen. A two-member CNR panel, set up to review 58 of the 93 cases of UTO supporters in prison under criminal charges, recommended amnesty for 47. On 30 June, Parliament approved the nomination of four UTO candidates to CCER, in accordance with the 25 per cent quota stipulated in the General Agreement.

The previously reported dispute over the election's sequence was resolved with UTO's acceptance of holding the presidential before the parliamentary elections.

The CNR military Subcommission chairman reported that 2,400 former opposition fighters had decided to return to civilian life, while 4,275 were being integrated into the armed forces and the police and security forces.

During the reporting period, UNOPS launched job-creation projects for ex-UTO fighters in six districts of the Karategin Valley: Darband, Tavildara, Garm, Tajikabad, Hoit and Jirgatal. Expansion of the projects into other areas was foreseen.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

On 19 August [meeting 4034], the Security Council President made statement S/PRST/1999/25 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 12 August 1999 on the situation in Tajikistan, submitted pursuant to paragraph 10 of its resolution 1240(1999) of 15 May 1999.

The Council welcomes significant progress in the implementation of the General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan, achieved to a great extent owing to the renewed efforts of the President of the Republic of Tajikistan and the leadership of the Commission on National Reconciliation. It particularly welcomes the official declaration by the United Tajik Opposition of the disbandment of its armed units and the decision by the Supreme Court of Tajikistan lifting the bans and restrictions on activities by the political parties and movements of the United Tajik Opposition as important steps contributing to the democratic development of Tajik society. The Council reiterates its encouragement to the Commission on National Reconciliation to intensify its efforts aimed at the institution of a broad dialogue among the various political forces in the country in the interests of the restoration and strengthening of civil accord in Tajikistan.

The Council encourages the parties to undertake further concerted measures to ensure the full and sequential implementation, in a balanced manner, of the General Agreement, especially all the provisions of the protocol on military issues, including those related to the reintegration of former opposition fighters. It also encourages them to continue their active work in creating conditions for the timely holding of a constitutional referendum and presidential and parliamentary elections, underlines the importance of the involvement of the United Nations in this process, in continued close cooperation with the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, and welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to approach Member States with concrete proposals on voluntary contributions to support such involvement.

The Council notes with appreciation the work of the outgoing Special Representative of the Secretary-General, Mr. Jan Kubis, and of all the personnel of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan, and encourages the Mission to continue assisting the parties in the implementation of the General Agreement. It underlines the need for the Mission to operate throughout Tajikistan and to have the necessary personnel and financial support, and requests the Secretary-General to continue to consider means of ensuring a full and active role for the Mission in the implementation of the General Agreement up to the strength authorized by its resolution 1138(1997) of 14 November 1997, while continuing to observe stringent security measures. The Council urges the Secretary-General to appoint a successor to Mr. Kubis as the Special Representative as soon as possible.

The Council supports the continued active involvement of the Contact Group of Guarantor States and International Organizations in the peace process.

The Council welcomes the continued contribution made by the collective peacekeeping forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States in assisting the parties in the implementation of the General Agreement in coordination with all concerned.

The Council expresses its concern at the precarious humanitarian situation in Tajikistan. It welcomes the activities of various international organizations and humanitarian workers related to the implementation of the General Agreement and addressing the humanitarian, rehabilitation and development needs of Tajikistan. The Council calls upon Member States and others concerned to respond promptly and generously to the mid-year review of the consolidated inter-agency appeal for Tajikistan for 1999.

The Secretary-General's November report [S/1999/1127] noted that the General Agreement's implementation reached two important benchmarks during the reporting period. The first was the Supreme Court's lifting, on 13 August, of the 1993 ban on UTO political parties, and the second was the referendum held on 26 September on the six amendments to the Constitution as outlined in the Secretary-General's August report [S/1999/872], which were approved by 72 per cent of votes cast.

Controversy arose, however, over the registration of candidates for the presidential election, prompting UTO to suspend again its participation in CNR on 18 October, and to threaten to boycott the election. Of the four presidential candidates—incumbent President Rakhmonov of the People's Democratic Party, Saifiddin Turayev of the Party of Justice in Tajikistan, Sulton Kuvvatov of the Democratic Party of Tajikistan (Tehran Platform) and Davlat Usmon of the Islamic Revival Party, representing UTO—only President Rakhmonov met the signatures requirement to be registered with CCER. Acting on the complaint by the other three candidates that they had been prevented from gathering the necessary signatures by intimidation from local-level officials, CCER, at a meeting with those candidates, attended by the Special Representative and the head of the OSCE mission in Tajikistan, extended the registration deadline to 11 October. Having failed again to collect the necessary signatures, the candidates could not be registered and appealed their case with the Supreme Court, which directed them to address their grievance to the local courts. The Court, however, ruled that CCER should allow the registration of UTO's candidate.

As scheduled, the presidential election took place on 6 November, with UTO participation. President Rakhmonov was re-elected for the new single seven-year term. On the eve of the election, the President and Abdullo Nuri, the UTO leader and CNR Chairman, signed a 22-point protocol on political guarantees during the preparation for and holding of the elections to the Majlis-i Oli (parliament) of Tajikistan. The text was transmitted to the Secretary-General on 11 November [S/1999/1159].

CNR, in which UTO resumed participation on 8 November, then took up the draft electoral law. The two most contentious issues were the number of seats in Parliament's lower house and the timing of the local elections, which had an impact on the composition of the upper house. On 3 December, the President and Mr. Nuri agreed that the Assembly of Representatives (lower house) would comprise 63 seats and the National Assembly (upper house) 33 seats; and that the local elections would be held simultaneously with the elections for the Assembly of Representatives. On 10 December, Parliament adopted the new electoral law.

A UN/OSCE assessment mission visited Tajikistan (14-17 December) to determine whether the overall legislative, administrative and political framework for the election met standards to allow both organizations to observe the election. The mission found a number of shortcomings in the electoral law, but concluded that a level of political pluralism existed to allow the election to be contested by several political groups. The mission thus recommended that, despite the shortcomings, both organizations would deploy a joint observation mission.

Progress in the areas of amnesty, power-sharing and reintegration of former fighters were also recorded. During the reporting period, 40 of the 47 UTO supporters previously recommended for release from prison were granted amnesty; of the remaining 7, 3 were found ineligible for amnesty, 2 died before the amnesty decrees were issued and 2 were executed. Two UTO representatives were appointed to posts at the district and city levels, bringing such appointments to 14. CNR indicated that 2,309 former fighters had been integrated into the armed forces and police and security forces; another 2,370 had been demobilized. A nation-wide disarmament campaign (5-25 August), conducted after the official disarmament and disbandment of UTO, had disappointing results. It was believed that the majority of usable weapons remained in the hands of former UTO fighters and the population at large; none of the artillery pieces and weapons brought back by a UTO group from Afghanistan in 1998 were handed in. The job-creation projects for former fighters carried out by UNOPS in the Karategin Valley districts increased to 52, employing some 1,130 persons. Grants allocated through UNDP for those projects totalled $2 million ($350,000 from Canada, $500,000 from Norway and $1,150,000 from the United States).

Since January, UNHCR, in cooperation with the CNR Subcommission on Refugees, had assisted in the voluntary repatriation of 4,119 Tajik refugees from Afghanistan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan and Turkmenistan. The humanitarian operations of the UN system included life-saving interventions and programmes aimed at stabilizing populations at risk, complementing the job-creation projects for former fighters. In August and September, UNDP entered into final discussions with the Asian Development Bank and Tajikistan concerning the role of UNOPS as implementing partner of a $20 million social-sector grant to the Government.

Observing that close international involvement remained essential to see Tajikistan through the last steps towards national reconciliation and democratization, the Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council extend UNMOT's mandate for another six months, until 15 May 2000.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

On 12 November [meeting 4064], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1274 (1999). The draft [S/199971158] was prepared during prior Council consultations.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions and the statements by its President,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 4 November 1999 on the situation in Tajikistan,

Reaffirming its commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Tajikistan and to the inviolability of its borders,

Welcoming significant progress made in the peace process in Tajikistan, particularly the holding of the constitutional referendum which followed the official declaration by the United Tajik Opposition of the disbandment of its armed units and the decision by the Supreme Court of Tajikistan lifting the bans and restrictions on activities by the political parties and movements of the United Tajik Opposition, and noting with satisfaction that these developments have set Tajikistan on the course of national reconciliation and democratization,

Welcoming also the renewed efforts of the President of the Republic of Tajikistan and the leadership of the Commission on National Reconciliation to advance and to expedite the implementation of the General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan, which have helped to contain emerging controversies and to reach the important milestones envisaged in the General Agreement,

Acknowledging the holding of the presidential elections on 6 November 1999 as a necessary and important step towards durable peace in Tajikistan,

Welcoming the maintenance of close contact by the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan with the parties, as well as its cooperative liaison with the collective peacekeeping forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States, the Russian border forces and the mission in Tajikistan of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe,

Noting with appreciation the continued contribution of the Contact Group of Guarantor States and International Organizations to the peace process, in particular through periodic joint plenary meetings with the Commission on National Reconciliation to review progress and to help to overcome difficulties in the implementation of the General Agreement,

Welcoming the fact that the general situation in Tajikistan has remained relatively calm, with better security than in earlier periods, while noting that the situation in some parts of the country has remained tense,

Recognizing that comprehensive international support remains crucial for achieving a positive outcome of the peace process in Tajikistan,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 4 November 1999;

2. Calls upon the parties to undertake further concerted measures to implement fully the General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan, especially all the provisions of the protocol on military issues, and to create conditions for the timely holding of parliamentary elections, underlines the necessity for the full resumption of the work of the Commission on National Reconciliation, and reiterates its encouragement to the Commission to intensify its efforts to broaden a dialogue among the various political forces in the country in the interests of the restoration and strengthening of civil accord in Tajikistan;

3. Welcomes the signing on 5 November 1999 by the President of Tajikistan and the Chairman of the Commission on National Reconciliation of the protocol on political guarantees during the preparation for and holding of the elections to the Majlis-i Oli (the Parliament) of the Republic of Tajikistan, and, bearing in mind concerns expressed by the Secretary-General in his report, regards the strict implementation of the protocol as essential for the successful holding of free, fair and democratic parliamentary elections under international monitoring as foreseen in the General Agreement;

4. Notes with appreciation the work of the new Special Representative of the Secretary-General and of all the personnel of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan, encourages them to continue assisting the parties in the implementation of the General Agreement, reiterates the need for the Mission to operate throughout Tajikistan and to have the necessary personnel and financial support, and requests the Secretary-General to continue to consider means of ensuring a full and active role for the Mission in the implementation of the General Agreement;

5. Reiterates the importance of the involvement of the United Nations, in continued close cooperation with the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, in the preparations for and monitoring of the parliamentary elections in Tajikistan, which will be the last major event of the transitional period envisaged in the General Agreement;

6. Supports the continued active involvement of the Contact Group of Guarantor States and International Organizations in the peace process;

7. Welcomes the continued contribution made by the collective peacekeeping forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States in assisting the parties in the implementation of the General Agreement, in coordination with all concerned;

8. Calls upon the parties to cooperate further in ensuring the security and freedom of movement of the personnel of the United Nations, the collective peacekeeping forces and other international personnel, and reminds the parties that the ability of the international community to mobilize and to continue assistance for Tajikistan is linked to the security of those personnel;

9. Expresses its deep concern at the precarious humanitarian situation in Tajikistan, and welcomes the assistance provided by Member States, international organizations and humanitarian workers towards the implementation of the General Agreement and in addressing the humanitarian, rehabilitation and development needs of Tajikistan;

10. Calls upon Member States and others concerned to make voluntary contributions to launch projects for demobilization and reintegration and to provide support for the elections, and to continue to respond promptly and generously to the consolidated inter-agency appeal for Tajikistan for 1999, and welcomes the preparation of a new appeal for 2000 as a strategic document that will guide a gradual transition to a more development-oriented focus;

11. Decides to extend the mandate of the Mission for a period of six months until 15 May 2000;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council informed of all significant developments, also requests him to submit after the parliamentary elections and within four months of the adoption of the present resolution an interim report on its implementation, and supports his intention to outline in that report the future political role for the United Nations in assisting Tajikistan to continue on the path of peace and national reconciliation and in contributing to the democratic development of Tajik society after the mandate of the Mission is concluded;

13. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

In a 16 November statement [S/1999/1191], the EU expressed its deep concern about the undemocratic events and procedures connected with the presidential elections, saying they were not compatible with democratic principles and values. It urged the Government to adopt and implement democratic rules and procedures for the upcoming parliamentary elections to ensure that they were fully free and fair. The EU strongly supported the peace process and linked it to the future development of contractual relations between it and Tajikistan.

Korea question

In Korea in 1999, the United Nations Command (UNC) continued to discharge its responsibilities in the maintenance of the 1953 Korean Armistice Agreement, thereby contributing to a stable environment conducive to the North-South dialogue and the ultimate goal of a durable peace on the Korean peninsula. The Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK), however, did not comply with its obligations under that Agreement and continued to call for the dismantling of UNC. Nonetheless, it maintained its cooperation with the United States on the joint remains-recovery operation for Korean War and UNC soldiers.

DPRK cooperation with IAEA in respect of its obligations under its nuclear safeguards agreement remained limited and linked to its perception of progress in the implementation of the 1994 Agreed Framework between the DPRK and the United States.

Communications. The DPRK, in communications to the Security Council on its concept of national reconciliation and unity between it and the Republic of Korea, urged the latter to reject its dependence on foreign forces and ally itself with the North [S/1999/35]. It reaffirmed the agreed three principles of national reunification [YUN 1998, p. 313] and reiterated its five-point charter of national unity: to maintain national independence, achieve unity under the banner of patriotism, improve North-South relations, fight domination of foreign forces and promote visits, contacts and dialogue between them [S/1999/765]. It labelled as anti-reunification the so-called sunshine policy espoused by the Republic of Korea as a peaceful transition strategy towards reunification [S/1999/892].

In a 26 March statement [S/1999/486], the EU underlined its support for the policy of engagement pursued by the Republic of Korea, regarded the results of the recent DPRK-United States talks (New York, 27 February-15 March) as a reaffirmation of their commitment to the 1994 Agreed Framework (see p. 277), drew attention to the European Commission's agreement to provide the DPRK with a food aid and agricultural rehabilitation programme worth 30 million euro in 1999, and underscored its willingness to consider a second round of political dialogue subject to progress on the Korean peninsula.

Armistice Agreement

The United States, on behalf of the Unified Command established pursuant to Security Council resolution 84(1950) [YUN 1950, p. 230], submitted to the Council the UNC annual report [S/2000/1070] concerning the maintenance in 1998 of the 1953 Armistice Agreement contained in General Assembly resolution 725(VIII) [YUN 1953, p. 136]. Of the original 16 UN Member States represented in UNC, 9 remained: Australia, Canada, Colombia, France, New Zealand, the Philippines, Thailand, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The report noted that, in 1998, the Korean People's Army (KPA) continued to reject joint investigations of reported Agreement violations through the Military Armistice Commission, the joint body created to supervise the implementation of the Agreement and to settle violations of it through negotiations. KPA also routinely rejected meetings called by UNC on Agreement-related issues, meeting with it only selectively and informally. The Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission (NNSC), created to conduct independent inspections and investigations of Armistice Agreement violations outside the demilitarized zone (DMZ), continued to be represented by only two neutral nations in residence: Sweden and Switzerland. NNSC held weekly meetings in the DMZ's joint security area, commonly known as Panmunjom. The Polish member, forced to leave Panmunjom in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 464], returned quarterly from Warsaw for meetings with the resident members, to demonstrate Poland's continuing support for NNSC and maintenance of the Armistice.

The 4-kilometre-wide DMZ that separated the North and the South and ran 151 miles across the entire width of the Korean peninsula remained relatively quiet throughout 1998. On 65 occasions, UNC dispatched joint observer/special investigative teams to its guard and observation posts along the DMZ to monitor Armistice compliance, as well as seven teams to investigate alleged violations. In addition to numerous sightings of KPA soldiers carrying unauthorized weapons within the DMZ and without the required distinctive civil police markings, UNC reported six major KPA incidents, including the defection of a KPA guard and infiltration into the Republic of Korea by a DPRK submarine and an armed agent [YUN 1998, p. 313].

A joint United States-KPA team conducted five separate recovery operations for Korean War remains in the DPRK, which resulted in the return of the remains of 22 UNC soldiers. UNC also returned to KPA the remains of the crew of nine recovered from the infiltrating submarine and of a drowned KPA soldier whose body had drifted into the South.

Communications. The DPRK continued to reiterate that UNC was not a UN organ but an instrument of the United States, stressing that country's refusal to consider replacing the Armistice Agreement with a DPRK-United States peace agreement [S/1999/167]. Claiming the United States maintained UNC for the purpose of igniting a second Korean war, preparations for which it said were under way through its annual joint military exercises with the South under the recently revised "Operation Plan 5027-98" [S/1999/677], the DPRK called on the United Nations to dismantle UNC [S/1999/1242].

In connection with the joint military exercises in June, the DPRK accused the Republic of Korea of having encroached on its territorial waters below the Northern Limit Line, which it claimed the United States and the Republic of Korea unilaterally established in violation of the Armistice Agreement [S/1999/6931]. The Republic of Korea, on the other hand, protested against the repeated intrusion into its territorial waters by DPRK ships crossing the Northern Limit Line, asserting that that Line had been recognized by the North and the South since 1953 as a practical separation line off the peninsula's east and west coasts and reaffirmed by the 1992 South-North Basic Agreement; it warned that the unprovoked use of force against its vessels would be met with appropriate countermeasures [S/1999/695]. To resolve the issue, the DPRK proposed a redrawing of the maritime demarcation line based on the Armistice Agreement [S/1999/925]. Subsequently, the Republic of Korea categorically rejected a 2 September declaration by the DPRK military authority unilaterally to set up the so-called North Korean Military Demarcation Line in the West Sea (Yellow Sea) [S/1999/952].

The DPRK also transmitted its observations in connection with a recently published book entitled The United States and Biological Warfare: Secrets from the Early Cold War and Korea [S/1999/251].

IAEA safeguards inspections

Pursuant to the agreement between IAEA and the DPRK for the application of safeguards in connection with the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2373(XXII) [YUN 1968, p. 17], which remained binding and in force since 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 73], IAEA continued to dispatch to the DPRK inspection teams from Vienna, in addition to two IAEA inspectors continuously present in Nyongbyon to monitor the freeze instituted by the DPRK in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 442] of its graphite-moderated reactors and facilities. The IAEA Director General's yearly report on the safeguards implementation to the IAEA General Conference through its Board of Governors was also communicated to the Security Council through the Secretary-General.

In his report, transmitted to the Council on 20 December 1999 [S/1999/1268], the Director General repeated that the DPRK continued to accept IAEA monitoring activities solely within the context of the 1994 Agreed Framework [YUN 1994, p. 442] between the DPRK and the United States and not under its safeguards agreement with IAEA. He stated that, at the twelfth (Pyongyang, 10-12 March) and thirteenth (Vienna, 13-16 December) rounds of technical discussions with the DPRK, no progress was made on the long-standing issue related to the preservation of information necessary to verify the accuracy and completeness of the DPRK's initial, 1992 declaration [YUN 1992, p. 73] on its nuclear-material inventory or to methods for preserving such information in a verifiable manner to enable future verification of safeguards compliance—a requirement to be fulfilled under the Agreed Framework before any key nuclear components of the light-water reactors, foreseen in that document, could be delivered. Nor was there progress on the day-to-day activities related to monitoring of the freeze, including the DPRK's refusal to accept certain safeguards measures at its reprocessing plant and limitations on inspector access to technical support buildings at the 5-MW(e) Experimental Power Reactor.

The Director General reported again that the DPRK did not accept all the measures required, only ad hoc and routine inspections at facilities not subject to the freeze, and therefore was not in compliance with its safeguards agreement. He also concluded once again that its cooperation with IAEA was limited and remained linked to its perception of progress in the Agreed Framework's implementation.

In a 1 October resolution, the IAEA General Conference urged the DPRK to cooperate fully in the implementation of the safeguards agreement and to take the steps necessary to preserve all information relevant to verifying the accuracy and completeness of its initial nuclear declaration.

By resolution 54/26 of 15 November (see p. 962), the General Assembly called on the DPRK to comply with the safeguards agreement and to cooperate fully with IAEA.

Cambodia

In response to a 1997 General Assembly request, the Secretary-General in 1999 dispatched a Group of Experts to Cambodia to evaluate existing evidence of past serious violations of Cambodian and international law and to propose measures to enable Cambodia to address that issue. Following its review of the Group's report, the Government decided to bring the top Khmer Rouge leaders to justice before Cambodia's court, rather than before an international court to be established for the purpose, as recommended by the Group, and welcomed the assistance of outside legal experts.

In December, the Assembly, in reaffirming that the most serious human rights violations in Cambodia in recent history had been committed by the Khmer Rouge, appealed to the Government to ensure that those responsible for the most serious violations were brought to account in accordance with international standards of justice, fairness and due process of law. It encouraged the Government to continue to cooperate with the United Nations in that regard.

(For the situation of human rights in Cambodia, see p. 584.)

Trial of Khmer Rouge leaders

Cambodia's Prime Minister, Samdech Hun Sen, in a 21 January aide-memoire [A/53/801-S/1999/67] transmitted to the Secretary-General and the Security Council, discussed the matter of working out a formula to bring top Khmer Rouge leaders to trial for crimes committed during Cambodia's civil war. Stating that the trial should mark the last stage of national reconciliation in Cambodia, the Prime Minister laid out the questions to be answered as to the appropriate court of law to conduct the trial, national, international or both, and the chargeable offences committed during the three distinct periods in the long conflict in Cambodia, namely, 1970 to 1975, 1975 to 1979 and 1979 to 1998. He said account should also be taken of the 1970 verdicts by the Martial Court of the former Khmer Republic, as well as the 1979 verdict of the Kampuchean People's Revolutionary Court.

Report of Group of Experts for Cambodia.

On 15 March [A/53/850-S/1999/231], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly and the Council the report of the Group of Experts for Cambodia, established pursuant to Assembly resolution 52/135 [YUN 1997, p. 613]. The Group visited Cambodia and Thailand from 14 to 24 November 1998. On the basis of a review of the material and documents made available to it, the Group concluded that the evidence testified to serious crimes punishable by international and Cambodian laws and that existing physical and witness evidence were sufficient to justify legal proceedings against the Khmer Rouge leaders for crimes committed during 1975-1979, including those against humanity, genocide, war crimes, forced labour, torture and crimes against internationally protected persons, as well as crimes under Cambodian law. The Group analysed tribunal options to bring those leaders to justice: a Cambodian tribunal or an ad hoc international tribunal established by the Council or the Assembly; a Cambodian tribunal under UN administration; or an international tribunal established by multilateral treaty to conduct trials in third States. The Group further concluded that the Government had the ability to apprehend those leaders who were in known locations within Cambodia and were not physically protected from arrest. The Governments of Cambodia and Thailand expressed readiness to do so once formal charges were made.

The Group recommended that the Assembly or the Council should establish an ad hoc international tribunal to try Khmer Rouge officials for crimes against humanity and genocide committed from 17 April 1975 to 7 January 1979; and that the United Nations, in cooperation with the Government and non-governmental sector, should encourage a process of national reflection to determine the desirability of a truth-telling mechanism to provide a fuller picture of the Democratic Kampuchea atrocities.

The Secretary-General stated that the Prime Minister, having reviewed the report, cautioned on 3 March [A/53/851-S/1999/230] that any decision to bring Khmer Rouge leaders to justice had to take account of Cambodia's need for peace and national reconciliation and that, if improperly conducted, the trials would create panic among other former Khmer Rouge officers and rank and file and lead to a renewed guerrilla war. Cambodia's Foreign Minister conveyed to the Secretary-General, at their 12 March meeting, the Government's view that, on the basis of article 6 of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, contained in Assembly resolution 260 A (III) [YUN 1948-49, p. 959] and article 33 of the Cambodian Constitution, the national courts were fully competent to conduct the trials and had therefore decided to put on trial Ta Mok, the former Khmer Rouge military commander of the south-west region and a Standing Committee member, before a Cambodian court but would accept foreign assistance and expertise to that end. The Secretary-General reminded the Foreign Minister that the Group of Experts had concluded that the Cambodian judiciary, in its current state, was unlikely to meet minimal international standards of justice, even with external assistance.

The Secretary-General expressed confidence that the Assembly and the Council would take the Group's report fully into account in their determination of how to accommodate the principles of justice and national reconciliation in Cambodia. It was his view, however, that the trial of a single Khmer Rouge military leader that would leave the entire political leadership unpunished would not serve the cause of justice and accountability. Hence, the leaders responsible for the most serious crimes should be tried before a tribunal meeting the international standards of justice, fairness and due process of law; impunity was unacceptable in the face of genocide and other crimes against humanity. The Secretary-General stood ready to assist the Assembly or the Council and the Government in bringing about a process of judicial accountability, which alone could provide the basis for peace, reconciliation and development.

Communications. Cambodia, in a 12 March aide-memoire [A/53/866-S/1999/295] on the report of the Group of Experts, quoted the country's Constitution, which stipulated that Cambodian nationals should not, among other prohibitions, be exiled or arrested and extradited to any foreign country unless there was mutual agreement to do so. Cambodia reaffirmed on 19 March [A/53/867-S/1999/298] and 24 March [A/53/875-S/1999/324] that the existing national court would be responsible for the investigation, prosecution and trial of Khmer Rouge leader Ta Mok, as well as for the trial of other Khmer Rouge leaders charged with genocide, and welcomed assistance, including legal experts from various countries, in response to the concern that the national court did not meet international standards of justice. The Prime Minister, in an 18 April statement [A/53/916, S/1999/443] on his meeting with United States Senator John Kerry, affirmed that, to meet international standards, Cambodia would enact legislation to allow foreign judges and prosecutors to participate in the domestic trials, over which the judicial branch had sole competence and to which the Government could not give orders.

By resolution 54/171, the Assembly took note of the steps taken by the Cambodian Government to bring to justice the Khmer Rouge leaders responsible for the most serious human rights violations (see p. 585).

Office of Secretary-General's Personal Representative in Cambodia

On 31 December 1999, the political mandate of the Office of the Personal Representative of the Secretary-General in Cambodia, set up in Phnom Penh in March 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 450], ended and with it the term of Lakhan L. Mehrotra (India), who had served as Personal Representative since 8 June 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 284].

UNTAC financing and liquidation

In keeping with General Assembly decision 52/485 [YUN 1998, p. 325] on the combined financing of UN peacekeeping operations, the Assembly considered at its resumed fifty-third (1999) session a comprehensive analysis [ibid., p. 317] of the types and causes of UN asset losses during the period 1 January 1993-31 December 1995, in peacekeeping operations, among them the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC), terminated in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 371], as well as steps taken to prevent such losses.

The related ACABQ report [A/53/895] was also before the Assembly. On the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/988], the Assembly, on 8 June [meeting 101], adopted resolution 53/230 without vote [agenda item 126].

Financing and liquidation of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/239 of 26 June 1998,

Recalling also its decision 52/485 of 26 June 1998,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing and liquidation of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Notes with concern that the provisions of its decision 52/485 have not been complied with, and reiterates that all reports on the final disposition of assets should contain detailed information on and justification of items written off and lost;

2. Expresses its deep concern regarding the losses of the United Nations property in this mission;

3. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General relating to the losses of United Nations assets in peacekeeping operations;

4. Endorses the observations and recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions contained in paragraphs 49 to 55 of its report;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide an updated report in respect of the period 1 January 1996 to 31 December 1997 on losses of United Nations property in peacekeeping operations to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure the safety of United Nations assets and the need to have accountability procedures in place to deter and penalize those responsible for the losses of United Nations property and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session.

As requested, the Secretary-General submitted, in December, a report [A/54/669 & Corr.1] updating information on property losses in UN peacekeeping operations (see p. 71).

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on the financing of UNTAC would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session (decision 54/465), and that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the item at that session (decision 54/462A).

East Timor

Negotiations on the political status of the Non-Self-Governing Territory (NSGT) of East Timor among Indonesia, Portugal (the administering Power) and East Timorese representatives, begun in 1982 under the Secretary-General's good offices, led to the signing on 5 May 1999 of an overall Agreement offering a constitutional framework for a special autonomy of East Timor within Indonesia. To ascertain its acceptance or rejection by the East Timorese, the Agreement called on the United Nations to conduct a popular consultation by direct ballot, the modalities and security arrangements for which were separately provided for in two supplementary Agreements concluded by the parties and the United Nations, also on 5 May.

The consultation, conducted on 30 August by the United Nations Mission in East Timor (UNAMET), created by the Security Council on 11 June for that purpose, resulted in the overwhelming rejection of the offer of autonomy in favour of a transition towards independence. Violence was immediately unleashed by those who refused to accept that choice, killing and forcibly displacing hundreds of thousands of people and engulfing East Timor in destruction and humanitarian disaster. That led the Council on 15 September to authorize the establishment of an international force under the unified command of Australia to restore law and order and support UNAMET in the continued discharge of the functions entrusted to it.

With the gradual normalization of conditions in the Territory and on the Secretary-General's recommendation, the Council, on 25 October, created the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor (UNTAET), for an initial period until 31 January 2000. Sergio Vieira de Mello, appointed Special Representative of the Secretary-General and Head of UNTAET, assumed that office on 16 November and began working for the orderly transition of East Timor towards independence, expected to take two to three years.

(For the consideration of the question of East Timor by the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration of the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, see PART ONE, Chapter VIII, under "Territories under review".)

Popular consultation on autonomy

Autonomy agreements

Tripartite negotiations among Indonesia, Portugal and East Timorese representatives to find an internationally acceptable solution to the question of the political status of East Timor, initiated by the Secretary-General as requested in General Assembly resolution 37/30 [YUN 1982, p. 1349], made rapid progress between January and April 1999. They culminated in the signing, in New York on 5 May, of an overall Agreement between Indonesia and Portugal. Appended to the Agreement was a proposed constitutional framework, based on a 1998 UN draft [YUN 1998, p. 572], which provided for a special autonomy for East Timor within the Republic of Indonesia. The Agreement entrusted the Secretary-General with organizing and conducting a popular consultation to ascertain the acceptance or rejection of the proposed framework by the East Timorese. It stipulated that, in case of its acceptance, Indonesia would initiate constitutional measures to implement the autonomy framework, while Portugal would initiate procedures for East Timor's removal from the list of NSGTs. In case of the proposal's rejection, Indonesia would take constitutional steps to terminate its links with East Timor, thus restoring its status prior to 17 July 1976; Indonesia and Portugal and the Secretary-General would agree on arrangements for a peaceful and orderly transfer of authority in East Timor to the United Nations, enabling East Timor to begin a process of transition to independence.

Two supplementary Agreements were also signed by the parties and the Secretary-General: one on the modalities for the consultation of the East Timorese through a direct ballot scheduled for 8 August, in and outside East Timor, and the other on security arrangements.

On 5 May [A/53/951-S/1999/513], the Secretary-General transmitted the Agreements to the Assembly and the Security Council. He also described the negotiations leading up to them and noted that, to enable him to proceed with the establishment of a UN presence in East Timor to execute the consultation, he had set up a trust fund to which Member States might channel voluntary contributions.

East Timor, which was added to the Assembly's list of NSGTs by General Assembly resolution 1542(XV) [YUN 1960, p. 513], was administered by Portugal, which, in 1974, sought to establish a provisional government and a popular assembly that would determine its status. Civil war broke out in 1975 [YUN 1975, p. 857], however, between those favouring independence and those advocating integration with Indonesia. Unable to control the situation, the Portuguese authorities in East Timor withdrew; Indonesia intervened militarily, abruptly altering the course of the decolonization process. Assembly resolution 3485(XXX) [ibid., p. 865] and Council resolution 384(1975) [ibid., p. 866] called for Indonesia's withdrawal from the Territory. Indonesia informed the Secretary-General that on 17 July 1976 [YUN 1976, p. 732] it had taken legislative action to integrate East Timor as Indonesia's twenty-seventh province. Indonesia had since reiterated to the Assembly that the people of East Timor had completed the decolonization process by exercising their right to self-determination and choosing integration with Indonesia [YUN 1977, p. 868; YUN 1982, p. 1348; YUN 1998, p. 571]. That integration was never recognized by either the United Nations or Portugal.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council, on 7 May [meeting 3998], unanimously adopted resolution 1236(1999). The draft [S/1999/520] was prepared during prior Council consultations.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the situation in East Timor,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, 1541 (XV) of 15 December 1960 and 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970 and Assembly resolutions on the question of East Timor, in particular resolution 37/30 of 23 November 1982,

Bearing in mind the sustained efforts of the Governments of Indonesia and Portugal since July 1983, through the good offices of the Secretary-General, to find a just, comprehensive and internationally acceptable solution to the question of East Timor,

Welcoming the progress made at the last round of talks between the Governments of Portugal and Indonesia, under the auspices of the Secretary-General, leading to the conclusion of a series of agreements in New York on 5 May 1999,

Commending in particular the efforts of the Personal Representative of the Secretary-General in this regard,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Taking note also of the concerns expressed in the report of the Secretary-General regarding the security situation in East Timor,

1. Welcomes the concluding of the Agreement between Indonesia and Portugal on 5 May 1999 on the question of East Timor (the General Agreement);

2. Welcomes also the concluding of the Agreements between the United Nations and the Governments of Indonesia and Portugal also on 5 May 1999 regarding security arrangements and the modalities for the popular consultation of the East Timorese through a direct ballot;

3. Welcomes further the intention of the Secretary-General to establish as soon as practicable a United Nations presence in East Timor, with a view to assisting in the implementation of those Agreements, in particular by:

(a) Conducting a popular consultation of the East Timorese people on the acceptance or rejection of a constitutional framework for an autonomy for East Timor, scheduled for 8 August 1999, in accordance with the General Agreement;

(b) Making available a number of civilian police officers to act as advisers to the Indonesian Police in the discharge of their duties in East Timor and, at the time of the consultation, to supervise the escorting of ballot papers and boxes to and from the polling sites;

4. Stresses the importance of the requests made to the Secretary-General in the General Agreement to report the result of the popular consultation to the Security Council and the General Assembly, as well as to the Governments of Indonesia and Portugal and the East Timorese people, and, during the interim period between the conclusion of the popular consultation and the start of the implementation of either option, an autonomy within Indonesia or transition to independence, to maintain an adequate United Nations presence in East Timor;

5. Stresses also the responsibility of the Government of Indonesia to maintain peace and security in East Timor in order to ensure that the consultation is carried out in a fair and peaceful way and in an atmosphere free of intimidation, violence or interference from any side and to ensure the safety and security of United Nations and other international staff and observers in East Timor;

6. Stresses further the importance of the assistance of the Government of Indonesia in ensuring that the United Nations is able to carry out all the tasks entrusted to it for the implementation of the agreements;

7. Welcomes the establishment by the Secretary-General of a trust fund to enable Member States to make voluntary contributions to assist in the financing of the United Nations presence in East Timor, and urges all Member States in a position to do so to contribute without delay;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council closely informed of the situation in East Timor, to report to it as soon as possible, and in any event by 24 May 1999, on the implementation of the present resolution and of the agreements referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2 above, inter alia, specifying the detailed modalities of the consultation process, to make detailed recommendations to the Council for decision on the mandate, size, structure and budget of the United Nations mission, including civilian police officers envisaged in paragraph 3 above, and to report to the Council thereafter every fourteen days;

9. Expresses its intention to take a prompt decision on the establishment of a United Nations mission on the basis of the report referred to in paragraph 8 above;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the Council prior to the start of voter registration on whether, on the basis of the objective evaluation of the United Nations mission, the necessary security situation exists for the peaceful implementation of the consultation process;

11. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

UN Mission in East Timor

Report and communication by Secretary-General (May). Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1236(1999), the Secretary-General provided a detailed report in May [S/1999/595] on his proposal for a United Nations Mission in East Timor to organize and conduct the popular consultation called for by the 5 May General Agreement. In laying out the particulars of UNAMET's organization and the modalities for implementing the consultation, the Secretary-General pointed out that, to be effective, it was essential for UNAMET to have the confidence and backing of the Council, full cooperation of the Indonesian authorities and the required resources.

UNAMET would include political, electoral, civilian police, information and administrative/financial components, whose heads would report to the Special Representative for the East Timor Popular Consultation and Head of UNAMET. The political component would monitor the fairness of the political environment, ensure the freedom of all political and non-governmental organizations to carry out their activities and advise the Special Representative on all matters having political implications.

The electoral component would be responsible for all activities related to registration and voting under the direction of a Chief Electoral Officer. The external polling called for in the Agreements would be conducted on behalf of the United Nations by the Australian Election Commission and the International Organization for Migration (IOM), and coordinated through the IOM field coordinator, the UN Secretariat's Electoral Assistance Division and UNAMET's electoral component. An independent Electoral Commission of three eminent international experts, to be appointed by the Secretary-General, would be responsible for the overall assessment of the consultation process and for adjudicating complaints, challenges or disputes. It would have final decision-making authority. A status-of-mission agreement would be concluded between the United Nations and Indonesia.

Instructions and procedures on all aspects of the consultation process, including registration directives, documentation, appeals, codes of conduct, external polling and counting, were being drafted by the Electoral Assistance Division of the Secretariat's Department of Political Affairs.

UNAMET's civilian police component, to be headed by a Civilian Police Commissioner, would advise the Indonesian Police (responsible, under the security agreement, for maintaining law and order) and supervise the escort of ballot papers and boxes to and from the polling sites. Up to 280 experienced civilian police would be required for deployment in Dili, in the eight districts where electoral offices were to be set up and at the 200 registration/polling centres.

The information component would conduct a media campaign, with the cooperation of local media providers, to explain to the East Timorese the terms of the General Agreement and the proposed autonomy framework, the implications of a vote for or against the proposal and the voting procedure. The campaign would last for the duration of the Mission and be conducted in the Tetum, Bahasa Indonesia and Portuguese languages.

The Secretary-General was deeply concerned to learn from an assessment team that visited East Timor from 4 to 15 May that the situation there remained extremely tense and volatile. He underscored the measures required of the Indonesian authorities to ensure a free and secure environment for the peaceful implementation of the consultation process, namely, to bring armed civilian groups under strict control, arrest and prosecute those inciting or threatening to use violence, ban rallies by armed groups while ensuring freedom of association and expression of all political parties, redeploy Indonesian military forces and institute a process for disarming all armed groups well in advance of the holding of the ballot. He recommended that the Commission on Peace and Stability be brought into operation. Established on the recommendation of the Secretary-General's Personal Representative on 21 April, during the negotiations leading to the 5 May Agreements, the Commission was to elaborate a code of conduct governing the laying down of arms and to ensure the disarmament of both pro- and anti-integration groups, as envisaged in the supplementary Agreement on security.

The Secretary-General informed the Council on 21 May [S/1999/602] that preparations for establishing UNAMET had begun in earnest and that, following the necessary consultations, he had decided to appoint Ian Martin (United Kingdom) as his Special Representative for the East Timor Popular Consultation and Head of UNAMET. The Council took note of that decision on 25 May [S/1999/603].

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (11 June)

The Security Council met on 11 June [meeting 4013] to consider the Secretary-General's May report. It also had before it Indonesia's letter of 27 May [S/1999/612] objecting to the report's imbalanced depiction of the situation prevailing in East Timor, pointing to the fact that both pro- and anti-integration groups had perpetrated acts of violence and intimidation; to the unsubstantiated allegation that elements of the Indonesian army acquiesced in such acts; and, in view of the Government's support for a reconciliation meeting among all segments of East Timorese society, to the misleading portrayal of the inability of anti-integration groups to participate freely in the Commission on Peace and Stability. The Council also considered Portugal's 7 June letter [S/1999/652] advising of its appointment of the Reverend Victor Melícias as Portuguese Commissioner to coordinate Portugal's actions in the consultation process and in the transition towards self-determination for East Timor.

The Council unanimously adopted resolution 1246(1999). The draft [S/1999/6661] was prepared during prior Council consultations.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the situation in East Timor, in particular resolution 1236(1999) of 7 May 1999,

Recalling the Agreement between Indonesia and Portugal of 5 May 1999 on the question of East Timor (the General Agreement) and the Agreements between the United Nations and the Governments of Indonesia and Portugal, of the same date, regarding the modalities for the popular consultation of the East Timorese through a direct ballot and regarding security arrangements (the Security Agreement),

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 22 May 1999 on the question of East Timor,

Noting with concern the assessment by the Secretary-General in that report that the security situation in East Timor remains "extremely tense and volatile",

Taking note of the pressing need for reconciliation between the various competing factions within East Timor,

Welcoming the fruitful cooperation of the Government of Indonesia and the local authorities in East Timor with the United Nations,

Taking note of the letter dated 7 June 1999 from the Permanent Representative of Portugal to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council,

Welcoming the conclusion of consultations between the Government of Indonesia and the United Nations on the deployment of military liaison officers within the mission established by paragraph 1 below,

Bearing in mind the sustained efforts of the Governments of Indonesia and Portugal since July 1983, through the good offices of the Secretary-General, to find a just, comprehensive and internationally acceptable solution to the question of East Timor,

Welcoming the appointment of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the East Timor Popular Consultation, and reiterating its support for the efforts of the Personal Representative of the Secretary-General for East Timor,

1. Decides to establish until 31 August 1999 the United Nations Mission in East Timor to organize and conduct a popular consultation, scheduled for 8 August 1999, on the basis of a direct, secret and universal ballot, in order to ascertain whether the East Timorese people accept the proposed constitutional framework providing for a special autonomy for East Timor within the unitary Republic of Indonesia or reject the proposed special autonomy for East Timor, leading to East Timor's separation from Indonesia, in accordance with the General Agreement and to enable the Secretary-General to discharge his responsibility under paragraph 3 of the Security Agreement;

2. Authorizes until 31 August 1999 the deployment within the Mission of up to 280 civilian police officers to act as advisers to the Indonesian Police in the discharge of their duties and, at the time of the consultation, to supervise the escorting of ballot papers and boxes to and from the polling sites;

3. Also authorizes until 31 August 1999 the deployment within the Mission of fifty military liaison officers to maintain contact with the Indonesian Armed Forces in order to allow the Secretary-General to discharge his responsibilities under the General Agreement and the Security Agreement;

4. Endorses the proposal of the Secretary-General that the Mission should also incorporate the following components:

(a) A political component responsible for monitoring the fairness of the political environment, for ensuring the freedom of all political and other non-governmental organizations to carry out their activities freely and for monitoring and advising the Special Representative on all matters with political implications;

(b) An electoral component responsible for all activities related to registration and voting;

(c) An information component responsible for explaining to the East Timorese people, in an objective and impartial manner without prejudice to any position or outcome, the terms of the General Agreement and the proposed autonomy framework, for providing information on the process and procedure of the vote, and for explaining the implications of a vote in favour or against the proposal;

5. Notes the intention of the Governments of Indonesia and Portugal to send an equal number of representatives to observe all the operational phases of the consultation process both inside and outside East Timor;

6. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to conclude with the Government of Indonesia, as soon as possible, a status-of-mission agreement, and urges the early conclusion of negotiations with a view to the full and timely deployment of the Mission;

7. Calls upon all parties to cooperate with the Mission in the implementation of its mandate, and to ensure the security and freedom of movement of its staff in carrying out that mandate in all areas of East Timor;

8. Approves the modalities for the implementation of the popular consultation process scheduled for 8 August 1999 as set out in paragraphs 15 to 18 of the report of the Secretary-General of 22 May 1999;

9. Stresses once again the responsibility of the Government of Indonesia to maintain peace and security in East Timor, in particular in the present security situation referred to in the report of the Secretary-General, in order to ensure that the popular consultation is carried out in a fair and peaceful way and in an atmosphere free of intimidation, violence or interference from any side and to ensure the safety and security of United Nations and other international staff and observers in East Timor;

10. Welcomes in this regard the decision taken by the Government of Indonesia to establish a ministerial team to monitor and ensure the security of the popular consultation in accordance with article 3 of the General Agreement and paragraph 1 of the Security Agreement;

11. Condemns all acts of violence from whatever quarter, and calls for an end to such acts and the laying down of arms by all armed groups in East Timor, for the necessary steps to achieve disarmament and for further steps in order to ensure a secure environment devoid of violence or other forms of intimidation, which is a prerequisite for the holding of a free and fair ballot in East Timor;

12. Requests all parties to ensure that conditions exist for the comprehensive implementation of the popular consultation, with the full participation of the East Timorese people;

13. Urges that every effort be made to make the Commission on Peace and Stability operative, and in particular stresses the need for the Indonesian authorities to provide security and personal protection for members of the Commission in cooperation with the Mission;

14. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council closely informed of the situation, and to continue to report to it every fourteen days on the implementation of its resolutions and of the tripartite Agreements and on the security situation in East Timor;

15. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (June). The Secretary-General reported on 22 June [S/1999/705] that UNAMET's deployment had progressed markedly since his May report. By 15 June, four of the eight regional electoral offices were operational and the Chief Electoral Officer, Jeffrey Fischer, had arrived in Dili to lead the core electoral team already in place. The first United Nations Volunteers group to serve as field electoral officers were in training in Darwin, Australia. The Civilian Police Commissioner, Alan James Mills (Australia), appointed by a 15 June exchange of letters [S/1999/679, S/1999/680] between the Secretary-General and the Security Council, began working with the local police and with an advance team of 41 UN civilian police on 12 and 21 June, respectively. Indonesia had agreed to the deployment of 50 UN military liaison officers, to begin almost immediately. The public information campaign had been launched with the radio broadcast of the Secretary-General's statement outlining UNAMET's purpose and objectives and pointing to its impartiality with respect to the consultation's outcome, emphasizing the secrecy of the ballot and calling on all East Timorese to refrain from violence.

The Secretary-General noted that the relative calm in Dili and Baucau had not extended to the rest of the Territory, with the situation in the western districts remaining very serious. He highlighted the activities by pro-integration militias, believed by observers to be acting with the acquiescence of members of the Indonesian army, which continued to have a constricting effect on political freedom, silencing pro-independence activists and their supporters and forcing them into hiding. Militias involved in violence against civilians were reportedly being presented by some officials as civil defence forces. Complaints from pro-integration leaders of violent activity by the Armed Forces for the National Liberation of East Timor (Falintil) were also lodged with UNAMET, which was looking into the incidents cited.

Given the serious security situation throughout much of East Timor and the absence of a level playing field, which did not yet permit certification that the necessary conditions existed for the operational phases of the consultation process to begin, and in order to allow UNAMET to reach full deployment, the Secretary-General decided to postpone registration to 13 July (a three-week delay from the original starting date of 22 June), which in turn meant postponement of the ballot date.

Statement by Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in a 29 June statement [SG/SM/7052], deplored in the strongest terms that day's attack on UNAMET's Maliana regional office by some 100 reportedly pro-integration militia. Several East Timorese taking refuge there were injured, a UNAMET staff member was hurt and the office was extensively damaged. He called on the Indonesian Police to investigate the incident and bring the perpetrators to justice.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (29 June)

On 29 June [meeting 4019], the Security Council President made statement S/PRST/1999/20 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 22 June 1999 on the question of East Timor.

The Council notes with understanding the decision of the Secretary-General to postpone for three weeks his determination, which he will base on the main elements identified in his report of 5 May 1999, of whether the necessary security situation exists for the start of the operational phases of the consultation process in accordance with the Agreement between the United Nations and the Governments of Indonesia and Portugal. The Council also endorses his intention not to start the operational phases of the popular consultation until the United Nations Mission in East Timor is fully deployed, and his decision to postpone the ballot date for two weeks.

The Council emphasizes that a popular consultation of the East Timorese people through a direct, secret and universal ballot represents an historic opportunity to resolve the question of East Timor peacefully. It concurs with the Secretary-General's assessment that this process must be transparent and that all parties must have the opportunity to express themselves freely.

In this regard, the Council expresses serious concern that the Secretary-General, in his assessment, concludes that the necessary conditions do not yet exist to begin the operational phases of the consultation process, given the security situation throughout much of East Timor and the absence of a "level playing field". It is especially concerned that the militias and other armed groups have carried out acts of violence against the local population and exercise an intimidating influence over them, and that these activities continue to constrict political freedom in East Timor, thus jeopardizing the necessary openness of the consultation process. The Council notes the Secretary-General's assessment that while the security situation has severely limited the opportunity for public expression by pro-independence activists, pro-autonomy campaigning has been actively pursued.

The Council stresses the need for all sides to put an end to all kinds of violence and for utmost restraint before, during and after the consultation. It calls upon the Mission to follow up reports of violent activity by both the pro-integration militias and Falintil (the Armed Forces for the National Liberation of East Timor). In this regard, it expresses grave concern at the attack on the Mission office in Maliana, East Timor, on 29 June 1999. The Council demands that the incident be thoroughly investigated and the perpetrators be brought to justice. The Council also demands that all parties respect the safety and security of Mission personnel. The Council supports the statement of the spokesman for the Secretary-General of 29 June 1999 and requests the Secretary-General to report further.

The Council welcomes the positive developments identified by the Secretary-General. The Council warmly welcomes the excellent channels of communication between the Mission and the Indonesian authorities, which have been facilitated by the establishment of a high-level Indonesian task force in Dili. The Council warmly welcomes the opening of the DARE II talks in Jakarta with representatives of all sides in East Timor, and the progress towards making the Commission on Peace and Stability operative.

The Council stresses once again the responsibility of the Government of Indonesia to maintain peace and security in East Timor. The Council emphasizes that all local officials in East Timor must abide by the provisions of the tripartite Agreements, in particular as regards the designated campaign period, the use of public funds for campaign purposes and the need to campaign only in their private capacity, without recourse to the pressure of office.

The Council is particularly concerned at the situation of internally displaced persons in East Timor and the implications which this may have for the universality of the consultation. It calls upon all concerned to grant full access and freedom of movement to humanitarian organizations for the delivery of humanitarian assistance, to cease immediately activities which may cause further displacement and to allow all internally displaced persons who wish to do so to return home.

The Council notes that full deployment of the Mission will not be possible before 10 July 1999. It urges the Secretary-General to take all necessary steps to ensure full deployment by that time, and urges all parties to cooperate fully with the Mission. It stresses the importance of allowing complete freedom of movement for the Mission within East Timor in order to carry out its tasks.

The Council urges the Indonesian Government and the pro-integration and pro-independence groups to continue to enhance cooperation with the Mission, to allow the popular consultation to go ahead in a timely manner.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Communications. In letter exchanges with the Security Council between 21 June and 6 July, the Secretary-General appointed Brigadier Rezaqui Haider (Bangladesh) as Chief Military Liaison Officer [S/1999/709, S/1999/710], who assumed his functions on 8 July; and named the 27 countries contributing civilian police personnel [S/1999/735, S/1999/736] and the 13 States contributing military liaison personnel [S/1999/750, S/1999/751].

On 10 July [S/1999/773], the Secretary-General informed the Council that preparations had been completed for UNAMET to begin registration on 13 July but that the security situation remained serious. Incidents at Maliana (29 June), Viqueque (30 June) and Liquica (3-4 July) involving UNAMET personnel highlighted the larger, continuing problem which militia impunity posed to a free consultation process. He thus shared with the Government a list of specific criteria towards which there should be meaningful, visible progress in security conditions to enable him to make a determination to proceed with the consultation process. To allow concrete steps to be taken by the Government, which reaffirmed its resolve to address the situation by the dispatch of a high-level government delegation to the Territory on 12 July, the Secretary-General, for a second time, rescheduled the start of the registration process, from 13 to 16 July. To set the record straight, Indonesia, on 9 July [S/1999/782], detailed what it claimed were the facts surrounding the incidents cited by the Secretary-General.

Although the security situation in the Territory as a whole continued to preclude a determination that the conditions existed for the peaceful implementation of the consultation, the Secretary-General wrote on 14 July [S/1999/786] that, in view of the assurances by the Indonesian authorities that they would take steps in the immediate future to fulfil the criteria he had provided, as well as of the need to adhere to the shortest possible time frame, the registration could begin on 16 July. He would make another assessment of conditions halfway through the registration period, based on UNAMET's objective evaluation. Indonesia replied on 16 July [S/1999/791] that it was obliged to draw attention to recent facts that would give the Council a more complete appreciation of the true situation on the ground.

On 26 July [S/1999/822], the Secretary-General reported that the 200 registration centres throughout East Timor had opened during the first 10 days of registration. In that period, 239,893 East Timorese had registered: 233,716 in East Timor itself, and the remainder at external registration centres. Security conditions remained inadequate, however. Intimidation by armed militia groups were particularly prevalent in the western districts, resulting in the continuing inability of tens of thousands of internally displaced persons to return to their homes in safety.

Voter registration and polling

Report and communication of Secretary-General (July). The Secretary-General reported on 20 July [S/1999/803] that voter registration which began on 16 July proceeded relatively peacefully, with a strong turnout. As called for by the Agreements, Indonesia and Portugal agreed to deploy up to 50 official observers at each registration and polling site in and outside East Timor, with more than 200 observers already accredited. UNAMET had arranged for the computerization of worldwide registration data in Australia. The three international electoral experts comprising the independent Electoral Commission, Patrick Bradley (United Kingdom), Johan Kriegler (South Africa) and Sohn Bong-Scuk (Republic of Korea), had assumed their responsibilities.

UNAMET was fully operational by the reporting date and the deployment of international personnel was virtually complete. By 19 July, 243 civilian police personnel and 47 military liaison officers were on duty, and the political affairs section was fully deployed. The public information component had intensified dissemination of information on the Agreements and of explanatory material to help voters understand the consultation process.

Noting no further attacks or serious threats against UNAMET, the Secretary-General stated that the serious efforts by the Indonesian authorities to provide the necessary security for UNAMET to discharge its responsibilities had contributed to that positive trend. Much remained to be done, however, to realize the Government's assurances on the ground. Militia activities, which had led to the displacement of many East Timorese and denied them basic security and freedom, with the clear intention of influencing political choice, continued to pose a fundamental challenge to a credible consultation process. Violent activities by Falintil also continued to be reported by Indonesian authorities.

The thousands of internally displaced persons, forcibly relocated or intimidated into fleeing their homes, remained a major concern. Besides its humanitarian dimensions, the problem had a direct bearing on the prospects for holding a free and fair ballot. According to some observers, a considerable number of such persons were either under militia control, in sanctuary in church compounds or in hiding in the Territory's remote areas. UNAMET was developing plans to assist them to participate in the consultation process.

The Secretary-General reported encouraging progress in bridging the deep divisions between the East Timorese parties. They included an agreement to end hostilities signed in Jakarta on 18 June between pro-independence and pro-integration leaders under the auspices of the Commission on Peace and Stability; an understanding, in principle, providing for a ceasefire and the cantonment of the pro-independence Falintil forces, pro-integration armed groups and members of the Indonesian army, as well as for movement towards disarmament; and the reconciliation efforts of the Bishops of Dili and Baucau, which resulted in the Dare II Conference (Jakarta, 25-30 June) of leaders from inside and outside East Timor. The Conference issued a series of "points of convergence", including agreement to accept the outcome of the popular consultation. A meeting of senior Indonesian and Portuguese officials was also held under the Personal Representative's chairmanship (New York, 15-16 July) to begin discussions on arrangements for the period between the ballot and the implementation of its result.

The Secretary-General said he remained confident that Indonesia would take further determined measures to improve the security situation, in keeping with its undertakings under the 5 May Agreements.

On 28 July [S/1999/830], the Secretary-General informed the Council that, on UNAMET's advice, he had decided to postpone the popular consultation to 30 August to give UNAMET time to collate and to publicize adequately the list of voters, and to allow for a proper appeals procedure. Consequently, he requested the Council to extend UNAMET's mandate by one month, to 30 September.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 3 August [meeting 4031] and unanimously adopted resolution 1257 (1999). The draft [S/1999/843] was prepared during prior Council consultations.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the situation in East Timor, in particular resolution 1246(1999) of 11 June 1999,

Taking note of the letter dated 28 July 1999 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council which informs the Council of his decision to postpone the popular consultation in East Timor until 30 August 1999 and requests the authorization of a one-month extension to the mandate of the United Nations Mission in East Timor,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission in East Timor until 30 September 1999;
2. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (August). In a 9 August report [S/1999/862], the Secretary-General outlined modifications to UNAMET's composition and tasks in the interim phase between the conclusion of the popular consultation and the start of the implementation of its result, whether it was acceptance or rejection of the proposed autonomy. During that interim phase, UN efforts would focus on building confidence, fostering stability and reassuring all groups, particularly those in the minority in the ballot, that they had a role to play in East Timor's future political life.

Modifications would include reducing the electoral component to a unit that would plan and prepare for the monitoring of elections to the Regional Council, as foreseen in the autonomy plan, or for elections in case autonomy was rejected; increasing the civilian police to 460, including 50 to train a new East Timorese police force, and the military liaison personnel to 300, who would be deployed in all 13 districts to liaise with the Indonesian Armed Forces, the pro-integration militias and the pro-independence Falintil; replacing the political component with a civil affairs one to assist the Special Representative to foster reconciliation, help form a Representative Council, promote respect for the rule of law and human rights and coordinate humanitarian assistance; and maintaining the public information component to keep the East Timorese and the international community abreast of progress in the implementation of the consultation's outcome.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Council promptly consider and authorize the proposed adjustments to UNAMET and extend its mandate for a further three months, from 30 August until 30 November.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 August [meeting 4038], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1262(1999). The draft [S/1999/904] was prepared during prior Council consultations.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the situation in East Timor, in particular resolutions 1246(1999) of 11 June 1999 and 1257(1999) of 3 August 1999,

Recalling the Agreement between Indonesia and Portugal of 5 May 1999 on the question of East Timor and the Agreements between the United Nations and the Governments of Indonesia and Portugal of the same date regarding the modalities for the popular consultation of the East Timorese through a direct ballot and security arrangements,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 9 August 1999,

Taking note of the need for the United Nations to pursue its efforts in East Timor in the period following the ballot to build confidence and support stability and to reassure all groups, in particular those in the minority in the ballot, that they have a role to play in the future political life of East Timor,

Welcoming the proposal of the Secretary-General that the United Nations Mission in East Timor continue its operations in the interim phase between the conclusion of the popular consultation and the start of the implementation of its result and that its tasks and structure be adjusted accordingly,

Commending the Mission for the impartial and effective implementation of its mandate, and welcoming the confirmation in the report of the Secretary-General that the Mission will continue to do its utmost to fulfil its responsibility in this manner,

Welcoming the fruitful cooperation of the Government of Indonesia in East Timor with the United Nations,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission in East Timor until 30 November 1999, and endorses the proposal of the Secretary-General that in the interim phase the Mission should incorporate the following components:

(a) An electoral unit as set out in the report of the Secretary-General;

(b) A civilian police component of up to 460 personnel to continue to advise the Indonesian Police and to prepare for the recruitment and training of the new East Timorese police force;

(c) A military liaison component of up to 300 personnel as set out in the report of the Secretary-General to undertake the necessary military liaison functions, to continue to be involved in the work of the East Timorese bodies established to promote peace, stability and reconciliation, and to provide advice to the Special Representative for the East Timor Popular Consultation on security matters as required, pursuant to the implementation of the Agreements of 5 May 1999;

(d) A civil affairs component to advise the Special Representative for the East Timor Popular Consultation in monitoring the implementation of the Agreements of 5 May 1999, as set out in the report of the Secretary-General;

(e) A public information component to provide information on progress made towards implementation of the outcome of the ballot, and to disseminate a message promoting reconciliation, confidence, peace and stability;

2. Calls upon all parties to cooperate with the Mission in the implementation of its mandate, and to ensure the security and freedom of movement of its staff in carrying out that mandate in all areas of East Timor;

3. Recalls the continuing responsibility of Indonesia to maintain peace and security in East Timor in the interim phase;

4. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Following the resolution's adoption, the President made a statement affirming, on the eve of the ballot, the Council's view, as set out in S/PRST/1999/20 (see p. 284), that the popular consultation on 30 August represented a historic opportunity to resolve the East Timor question peacefully. In adopting the resolution mandating the UN presence until 30 November, the Council was demonstrating its readiness to continue to support the East Timorese after they had made their decision.

Consultation result

On 3 September [S/1999/944], the Secretary-General informed the Council that UNAMET had completed the popular consultation on the proposed autonomy. The ballot result, duly certified by the Electoral Commission, was 94,388 votes in favour and 344,580 against (or 21.5 per cent and 78.5 per cent, respectively, of total votes cast). The people of East Timor had thus rejected the proposed special autonomy and expressed their wish to begin a process of transition towards independence.

The Secretary-General observed that the orderly and peaceful transfer of authority in East Timor to the United Nations, called for by article 6 of the 5 May Agreement, would be complex and difficult, given the current insecurity in the Territory.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met twice on 3 September [meetings 4041 & 4042]. At the second meeting, the President made statement S/PRST/1999/27 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the successful popular consultation of the East Timorese people on 30 August 1999 and the letter dated 3 September 1999 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council announcing the ballot result. The Council expresses its support for the courage of those who turned out in record numbers to express their views. It regards the popular consultation as an accurate reflection of the views of the East Timorese people.

The Council pays tribute to the extraordinary work of the Personal Representative of the Secretary-General. It also commends the courage and dedication of the Special Representative for the East Timor Popular Consultation and of the staff of the United Nations Mission in East Timor in organizing and conducting the popular consultation in extremely difficult conditions.

The Council calls on all parties, both inside and outside East Timor, to respect the result of the popular consultation. The Council urges the East Timorese people to work together to implement their decision as freely and democratically expressed in the ballot and to cooperate in the building of peace and prosperity in the territory. The Council now looks to the Indonesian Government to take the necessary constitutional steps to implement the result of the ballot, in accordance with the Agreements of 5 May 1999.

The Council recognizes that the Agreements of 5 May 1999 which led to the popular consultation of the East Timorese people would not have been possible without the timely initiative of the Government of Indonesia and the constructive attitude of the Government of Portugal. It commends the sustained efforts of the Governments of Indonesia and Portugal, through the good offices of the Secretary-General, to find a just, comprehensive and internationally acceptable solution to the question of East Timor, and expresses its appreciation to the Government of Indonesia for its cooperation with the United Nations in the process.

The Council condemns the violence in East Timor which both preceded and followed the ballot of 30 August 1999. It expresses its condolences to the families of United Nations local staff and others so tragically killed. It underlines the need for the result to be implemented in an atmosphere of peace and security without further violence and intimidation. In accordance with its responsibility for maintaining peace and security under the Agreements of 5 May 1999, it is for the Government of Indonesia to take steps to prevent further violence. It also looks to the Government of Indonesia to guarantee the security of Mission personnel and premises. The Council is ready to consider sympathetically any proposal from the Secretary-General to ensure the peaceful implementation of the popular consultation process.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to report as soon as possible on the implementation of the ballot result, including recommendations on the mandate, size and structure of the United Nations presence in East Timor in the implementation phase (phase III).

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

On 17 December, the General Assembly, by resolution 54/194, also welcomed the successful conduct of the popular consultation (see p. 535).

Post-consultation violence

In reports of 4 October [S/1999/1024] and 13 December [A/54/654], the Secretary-General recorded that, following announcement of the result of the 30 August consultation, pro-integration militias unleashed a campaign of violence, including killing, looting and arson, throughout most of the Territory. UNAMET local staff were targeted, killing at least four. Foreign observers, international relief workers and journalists were evacuated to Darwin, Australia, as were the majority of UNAMET personnel. Many East Timorese were killed and hundreds of thousands were displaced, often by force.

In the wake of the violence, most UNAMET facilities were found heavily damaged or destroyed. A UN inter-agency assessment team estimated that over 500,000 persons were displaced, including 150,000 to West Timor. Hardly any building in Dili was left undamaged. The towns of Ainaro and Cassa were completely destroyed, while about 70 per cent of Atsabe, Gleno, Lospalus, Maliana, Manatuto and Oecusoe was burned down or levelled, as was 20 per cent of Vineque. Suai and Liquica also sustained extensive damage. The Secretary-General was informed by the Indonesian authorities that the Indonesian Armed Forces had reduced their strength to about 1,200, all reportedly deployed in Dili. The withdrawing soldiers were observed by UNAMET setting fire to buildings and equipment, including their own facilities, and destroying infrastructure. The Indonesian Police also withdrew, leaving only a token presence in Dili, and the judicial and detention systems had ceased operating.

With the early departure of the Indonesian civil authorities, civil administration no longer functioned. The judiciary and court systems ceased to exist. Essential services, including water and electricity, were on the brink of collapse. Security conditions, which had begun to improve, remained precarious, with militia activity continuing to be reported throughout the Territory.

Subsequently, Indonesia lifted martial law (24 September) and the Indonesian Deputy Governor returned to Dili with a small staff (27 September), who informed UNAMET that Foreign Affairs officials would arrive shortly to oversee the transition on the Government's behalf. At a tripartite meeting (28 September) of the Secretariat and the Indonesian and Portuguese Foreign Ministers, it was agreed that ad hoc measures were required to fill the gap created by the early departure of Indonesian civil authorities. The two Governments reiterated their agreement for the transfer of authority in East Timor to the United Nations, in accordance with the 5 May Agreement.

UNAMET, which had operated with a skeleton staff of 12 at the former Australian consulate throughout the crisis period, re-established its headquarters in Dili on 28 September. By 4 October, its redeployed staff totalled 84, including 36 military liaison officers, 16 civilian police and 32 international staff. UNAMET resumed patrolling in Dili, overflying all districts and visiting all Falintil cantonments with the multinational force (INTERFET) (see p. 290). It accompanied multinational force-protected convoys to Manatuto and Baucau. Two military liaison officers were co-located with the INTERFET deployment in Baucau.

Communications. At the height of the violence in East Timor, Ireland wrote that, should Indonesia be unable to maintain security, it would support the deployment of an agreed peacekeeping force [S/1999/950]. Portugal requested an urgent meeting of the Council [S/1999/955], which it reiterated in view of Indonesia's inability to restore order and security to the Territory [S/1999/963]. Brazil also requested a Council meeting to debate the situation [S/1999/961], while Angola transmitted a declaration by the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries calling on the international community and the Council, in particular, to do everything for the rapid re-establishment of security, including the deployment of peacekeeping forces [S/1999/956].

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council, on 5 September [S/1999/946], informed the Secretary-General that it was dispatching a mission to Indonesia to discuss steps for the peaceful implementation of the ballot result in East Timor. The mission would be composed of the Permanent Representatives to the United Nations of Malaysia, Namibia (head of mission), Slovenia and the United Kingdom; the Deputy Permanent Representative of the Netherlands; and the Secretary-General's Deputy Personal Representative for East Timor [S/1999/972].

In view of the urgency of the situation, the Council requested that arrangements be made for the mission's departure for Indonesia on the evening of 6 September.

Security Council mission report. On 14 September [S/1999/976 & Corr.1], the Security Council mission reported on the results of its meetings in Jakarta and Dili from 8 to 12 September.

The mission concluded that government accounts of events in East Timor and of Indonesia's action to carry out its responsibilities under the 5 May Agreement tallied neither with the briefings provided by UN staff and senior diplomats in Jakarta and Dili, nor with the mission's observations on the ground. The involvement of large elements of the Indonesian military and police in organizing and backing the actions of the militias was acknowledged publicly by the Defence Minister on 11 September. The repeated failure of the defence forces to carry out the Government's obligations to provide security to UNAMET, international organizations and the population as a whole meant that the Indonesian authorities were either unable or unwilling to provide the proper environment for the peaceful implementation of the 5 May Agreement. The introduction of martial law on 7 September did not alter that state of affairs, nor did it adequately respond to the humanitarian crisis in East Timor, despite the authorities' assurances that that had been one of its aims. The humanitarian situation of the majority of the population in East Timor and of the refugee population in West Timor was extremely grave and needed to be addressed urgently. There was strong prima facie evidence of abuses of international humanitarian law committed since the announcement on 4 September of the ballot result. In that regard, the annexed UNAMET report on widespread destruction, forced displacement of the population and selective execution of students, intellectuals and activists was relevant.

In its recommendations, the mission called on the Council to welcome the Indonesian President's decision to invite an international peacekeeping force to cooperate with Indonesia in restoring peace and security in East Timor and to adopt a resolution providing a framework for its implementation; to authorize an advance party of the international security presence to undertake essential tasks in and around Dili related to UNAMET and to the delivery of humanitarian supplies; to hold Indonesia to its obligations under phase II of the 5 May Agreement, before and after the arrival of the international security presence, and insist on the proper care of internally displaced persons and on curtailing the role of the militias and preventing any clashes between them and Falintil; and to institute the investigation of apparent abuses of international humanitarian law in East and West Timor since 4 September.

The mission further called on the United Nations to give top priority to the grave humanitarian crisis in East Timor and insist on the Government's provision of access and security to UN and international humanitarian organizations. It called on the Secretary-General to reduce to a minimum or, if necessary, evacuate UNAMET staff from Dili before the arrival of an international security presence and to submit plans for the advance preparation of UN action in phase III so as to contribute to the effective implementation of phase II under the new circumstances. In the meantime, in response to the urgent calls for a meeting by Portugal and Brazil (see p. 289), the Council met on 11 September [meeting 4043] to debate the situation.

Deployment of International Force

On 4 October [S/1999/1024], the Secretary-General noted that, in addition to the activities of the Security Council mission above, numerous efforts were made on the diplomatic front to halt the violence in East Timor. He himself spoke directly with Indonesian President Habibie on several occasions. Given the failure of martial law to resolve the security situation, the Government, on 12 September, agreed to accept the offer of assistance from the international community to restore peace and security and to implement the consultation's result.

Following Indonesia's agreement and in response to a request from the Secretary-General, Australia, on 14 September [S/1999/975], indicated its willingness to accept the leadership of the proposed multinational force in East Timor, anticipated to be mandated by the Security Council.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 15 September [meeting 4045], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1264 (1999). The draft [S/1999/977] was prepared during prior Council consultations.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions and the statements by its President on the situation in East Timor,

Recalling also the Agreement between Indonesia and Portugal of 5 May 1999 on the question of East Timor and the Agreements between the United Nations and the Governments of Indonesia and Portugal, of the same date, regarding the modalities for the popular consultation of the East Timorese through a direct ballot and security arrangements,

Welcoming the statement by the President of Indonesia on 12 September 1999 in which he expressed the readiness of Indonesia to accept an international peacekeeping force through the United Nations in East Timor,

Welcoming also the letter dated 14 September 1999 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Australia to the Secretary-General,

Reaffirming respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Indonesia,

Expressing its concern at reports indicating that systematic, widespread and flagrant violations of international humanitarian and human rights law have been committed in East Timor, and stressing that persons committing such violations bear individual responsibility,

Determining that the present situation in East Timor constitutes a threat to peace and security,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Condemns all acts of violence in East Timor, calls for their immediate end, and demands that those responsible for such acts be brought to justice;

2. Emphasizes the urgent need for coordinated humanitarian assistance and the importance of allowing full, safe and unimpeded access by humanitarian organizations, and calls upon all parties to cooperate with such organizations so as to ensure the protection of civilians at risk, the safe return of refugees and displaced persons and the effective delivery of humanitarian aid;

3. Authorizes the establishment of a multinational force under a unified command structure, pursuant to the request of the Government of Indonesia conveyed to the Secretary-General on 12 September 1999, with the following tasks: to restore peace and security in East Timor, to protect and support the United Nations Mission in East Timor in carrying out its tasks and, within force capabilities, to facilitate humanitarian assistance operations, and authorizes the States participating in the multinational force to take all necessary measures to fulfil this mandate;

6. Welcomes the offers by Member States to organize, lead and contribute to the multinational force in East Timor, calls upon Member States to make further contributions of personnel, equipment and other resources, and invites Member States in a position to contribute to inform the leadership of the multinational force and the Secretary-General;

7. Stresses that it is the responsibility of the Indonesian authorities to take immediate and effective measures to ensure the safe return of refugees to East Timor;

8. Notes that article 6 of the Agreement of 5 May 1999 states that the Governments of Indonesia and Portugal and the Secretary-General shall agree on arrangements for a peaceful and orderly transfer of authority in East Timor to the United Nations, and requests the leadership of the multinational force to cooperate closely with the United Nations to assist and support those arrangements;

9. Stresses that the expenses for the force will be borne by the participating Member States concerned, and requests the Secretary-General to establish a trust fund through which contributions could be channelled to the States or operations concerned;

10. Agrees that the multinational force should collectively be deployed in East Timor until replaced as soon as possible by a United Nations peacekeeping operation, and invites the Secretary-General to make prompt recommendations on a peacekeeping operation to the Security Council;

11. Invites the Secretary-General to plan and prepare for a United Nations transitional administration in East Timor, incorporating a United Nations peacekeeping operation, to be deployed in the implementation phase of the popular consultation (phase III) and to make recommendations as soon as possible to the Security Council;

12. Requests the leadership of the multinational force to provide periodic reports on progress towards the implementation of its mandate through the Secretary-General to the Council, the first such report to be made within fourteen days of the adoption of the present resolution;

13. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

The International Force, East Timor (INTERFET) began deployment on 20 September under the command of Major-General Peter Cosgrove (Australia). By 4 October, it consisted of 14 troop-contributing countries and expected to reach a troop strength of 8,000. The Indonesian Armed Forces undertook to cooperate with INTERFET in the implementation of Council resolution 1264(1999) through a Joint Consultative Security Group established in Dili, with UNAMET participation.

INTERFET reports and communications. In five periodic reports [S/1999/1025, S/1999/1072, S/1999/1106, S/1999/1169, S/1999/1248] submitted to the Security Council through the Secretary-General, INTERFET described its operations covering the 12-week period from inception to 9 December. In that time, it played a significant role in helping to establish peace and security through a credible and deterrent security presence throughout the Territory; to prevent armed violence by any group, including the militia; to develop, in cooperation with Indonesia, agreed procedures for border management along the border between East and West Timor; to create conditions and provide escort support for large numbers of displaced persons to return to their homes; to facilitate the transition from UNAMET to the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor (see p. 292); and to facilitate the conduct of humanitarian operations of increasing size and effectiveness across East Timor.

In addition, the reports noted that, by 10 November, INTERFET had a strength of over 9,400 troops (of whom some 5,300 were Australians) from 17 countries. It had marginalized the militias and their capacity to threaten the safety of the East Timorese. It had progressively established security to allow the return to Dili of 58 UNAMET staff and the re-establishment of UNAMET's offices in Baucau by 12 October. By 9 December, it had helped UNHCR repatriate more than 110,000 displaced persons.

By identical letters of 12 October [S/1999/1052] to the Secretary-General and the Security Council, Indonesia strongly deplored an incident on 10 October in the border village of Mato Ain in West Timor in which an exchange of fire between INTERFET and Indonesian military and police manning a border crossing point between East and West Timor resulted in three casualties on the Indonesian side. Also by identical letters of 13 October [S/1999/1055], Australia stated that the incident had occurred within East Timor's territory and that weapons were fired first by the Indonesian forces. On 8 November [S/1999/1146], Australia submitted the results of the joint investigation by INTERFET and the Indonesian Armed Forces, which found that the incident was attributable, at least in part, to conflicting maps.

UN Transitional Administration for East Timor

Reports of Secretary-General (October and December). Responding to Security Council resolution 1264(1999), the Secretary-General, on 4 October [S/1999/1024], set out his recommendations for a UN transitional administration in East Timor, incorporating a UN peacekeeping operation for deployment in the implementation phase (phase III) of the popular consultation. The United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor (UNTAET), with overall responsibility for the administration of the Territory during its transition to independence, expected to take two to three years, would operate under the Council's authority, vested in the Secretary-General and exercised by the Special Representative, who would be responsible for all aspects of UN work in East Timor.

Under its mandate, UNTAET would provide security and maintain law and order throughout the Territory, establish an effective administration, assist in developing civil and social services, ensure coordination and delivery of humanitarian, rehabilitation and development assistance, support capacity-building for self-government, and assist in the establishment of conditions for sustainable development. That mandate was to be implemented in pursuit of a series of specific objectives, for which regular dialogue with representatives of East Timor was essential.

The Special Representative would establish advisory bodies at all levels to ensure East Timorese participation in the Territory's governance and administration.

UNTAET would have three main components: governance and public administration; humanitarian assistance and emergency rehabilitation; and military (including a UN force and a military observer group). The Special Representative, as the Transitional Administrator, would be responsible for all political, managerial and representational functions. He would be assisted by an Executive Committee composed of two Deputy Special Representatives, a Chief of Staff and the Force Commander and advised by offices for political, legal, constitutional and electoral and human rights affairs. He would facilitate the creation of an independent East Timorese human rights institution to investigate alleged violations of human rights, conduct public inquiries, provide guidance and assistance to nascent local governing institutions and develop curricula for human rights education. UNTAET would include a public information office and maintain liaison offices in Jakarta, Kupang (West Timor), Lisbon (Portugal) and Darwin.

UNTAET would continue to apply the existing law of East Timor to the extent of its compatibility with UNTAET's mandate and consistency with international human rights standards. It would be entrusted with rebuilding a structure of governance and administration capable of providing basic public services and a fully functioning administration of justice. It would focus on building local capacity to enable East Timorese to assume responsibility for their own governance. The United Nations would conclude such international agreements with States and international organizations as might be necessary for UNTAET to discharge its functions. UNTAET would also establish a mechanism for consultation with Portugal, given its special responsibilities.

The Secretary-General recommended Council approval of his recommendations and authorization for the timely deployment of UNTAET.

In his 13 December report [A/54/654], the Secretary-General stated that he had been informed by the Indonesian President that the Indonesian People's Consultative Assembly, at its meeting on 19 October, officially recognized the consultation result and revoked the law integrating East Timor within the Republic of Indonesia.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 October [meeting 4057], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1272(1999). The draft [S/1999/1083] was sponsored by Brazil, Canada, France, Namibia, the Netherlands, Portugal, Slovenia, the United Kingdom and the United States.

Reaffirming respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Indonesia,

Expressing its concern at reports indicating that systematic, widespread and flagrant violations of international humanitarian and human rights law have been committed in East Timor, stressing that persons committing such violations bear individual responsibility, and calling on all parties to cooperate with investigations into these reports,

Recalling the relevant principles contained in the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel adopted on 9 December 1994,

Determining that the continuing situation in East Timor constitutes a threat to peace and security,

9. Requests the Transitional Administration and the multinational force deployed pursuant to resolution 1264(1999) to cooperate closely with each other, with a view also to the replacement as soon as possible of the multinational force by the military component of the Transitional Administration, as notified by the Secretary-General following consultations with the leadership of the multinational force, taking into account conditions on the ground;

12. Stresses that it is the responsibility of the Indonesian authorities to take immediate and effective measures to ensure the safe return of refugees in West Timor and other parts of Indonesia to East Timor, the security of refugees, and the civilian and humanitarian character of refugee camps and settlements, in particular by curbing the violent and intimidatory activities of the militias there;

13. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to establish a trust fund to be available for, inter alia, the rehabilitation of essential infrastructure, including the building of basic institutions, the functioning of public services and utilities, and the salaries of local civil servants;

17. Decides to establish the Transitional Administration for an initial period until 31 January 2001;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council closely and regularly informed of progress towards the implementation of the present resolution, including, in particular, with regard to the deployment of the Transitional Administration and possible future reductions of its military component if the situation in East Timor improves, and to submit a report within three months of the date of adoption of this resolution and every six months thereafter;

19. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

By two exchanges of letters with the Security Council, on 25 and 26 October [S/1999/1093, S/1999/1094] and on 29 and 30 December [S/1999/1294, S/1999/1295], the Secretary-General made known his intention to appoint Sergio Vieira de Mello as his Special Representative and Head of UNTAET and Major-General Jaime de los Santos (Philippines) as Force Commander, who was to be promoted to the rank of Lieutenant-General for that assignment.

Further report of Secretary-General. In his first progress report [S/2000/53] on developments since UNTAET was established, the Secretary-General stated that UNTAET had begun to set up operations throughout East Timor, developed consultative mechanisms with the East Timorese at all levels and established the basic elements of its administrative structure. In consultation with the East Timorese, it adopted a number of legislative measures (see below). At the initial stage, the Special Representative for the East Timor Popular Consultation and Head of UNAMET served as acting head of UNTAET until the arrival of the Transitional Administrator on 16 November. INTERFET assumed the functions of policing and justice, while the National Council of Timorese Resistance (CNRT), a coalition of pro-independence groups, and Falintil moved to fill the vacuum of local administrative authority and in some places asserted a security role. The situation improved as Jose Alexandre (Xanana) Gusmao, President of CNRT, who returned to East Timor on 22 October, began to play an effective leadership role.

Based on discussions with Mr. Gusmao and other East Timorese personalities, the Transitional Administrator established the National Consultative Council of East Timor (NCC) on 2 December through which the East Timorese could participate in the decision-making process. Composed of 15 members (7 from CNRT, 3 from political groups outside CNRT, 1 from the Catholic Church and 4 from UNTAET, including the Transitional Administrator who served as Chairman), NCC was authorized to create joint sectoral committees of East Timorese and international experts to provide advice on various areas of administration. The inclusion of pro-autonomy groups in NCC was an important step towards reconciliation. So was CNRT's meeting (Jakarta, 27 November-1 December) with President Abdurrahman Wahid (President since 20 October) and other senior government officials, who declared their determination to help ensure East Timor's stability, assist in the repatriation of East Timorese refugees in West Timor and control the militia there, release the remaining political prisoners, and assist post-secondary students to resume their studies at Indonesian institutions. A further step was Mr. Gusmao's meeting (12 December) with the principal commander of the pro-autonomy militias, who announced his intention to disband his militia in West Timor. Talks were under way towards concluding practical arrangements necessary for UNTAET, acting on East Timor's behalf, to replace Indonesia in treaty institutions.

The Secretary-General noted that the Transitional Administrator, in a meeting with President Wahid and other officials (Jakarta, 12-14 December), discussed official Indonesian representation in East Timor, UNTAET liaison arrangements in West Timor, resumption of air service to East Timor by Indonesian carriers, future commercial links and cooperation on banking and financial services, and measures to accelerate the return of refugees from West Timor and for the settlement in Indonesia of those choosing not to return.

Following five border incidents in October between INTERFET soldiers and armed militia groups, UN military observers deployed border liaison teams to West Timor for cross-border liaison and confidence-building. On 25 November, the Indonesian Armed Forces and INTERFET signed a memorandum on border management calling for the establishment of a joint border commission and of secure checkpoints for refugee border crossings.

UN humanitarian agencies, which maintained a small presence in Dili throughout the crisis, returned with NGOs to East Timor in late September to lay the groundwork for a comprehensive response. WFP and its NGO implementing partners distributed more than 10,500 metric tons of food to some 610,000 displaced persons. The return of refugees from West Timor and elsewhere in Indonesia was proceeding under UNHCR. However, pro-autonomy East Timorese militias had established control over the refugee camps in West Timor, impeding UN access to and free movement within the camps. UNTAET worked closely with three special rapporteurs of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to facilitate their mission in East Timor (4-10 November) and that of the International Commission of Inquiry on East Timor (25 November-8 December).

(For human rights violations in East Timor, see PART TWO, Chapter III; for assistance for humanitarian relief, rehabilitation and development for East Timor, see PART THREE, Chapter III.)

In a later addendum [S/2000/53/Add.1] to his report, the Secretary-General transmitted the texts of four regulations promulgated by the Transitional Administrator during 1999. The first laid down the scope of the Transitional Administrator's authority in East Timor; the second established NCC, defined its functions, membership and methods of work, and prescribed the text of the oath to be taken by appointees; the third established a Transitional Judicial Service Commission; and the fourth established the Official Gazette of East Timor to include: publication of all UNTAET regulations and directives; general and other acts of organs and institutions of East Timor, as required by law; and acts of public interest requiring public notification.

Financing of UN operations

UNAMET

The financing of UNAMET was considered by the General Assembly at its resumed fifty-third session under agenda item 113, entitled "Programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999". At the Secretary-General's request [A/54/231], it was included in the agenda of the Assembly's fifty-fourth (1999) session and allocated to the Fifth Committee.

Security Council resolution 1236(1999) (see p. 281), which welcomed the intention of the Secretary-General to establish a UN presence in East Timor as soon as practicable to conduct the consultation process, resulted in his need to enter into related commitments exceeding $10 million for the operation's initial requirements. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/223 [YUN 1997, p. 1438], he presented for the Assembly's consideration, at its resumed fifty-third session, his report [A/C.5/53/61] requesting commitment authority for the estimated requirements of the operation and annexing a budget for the period 5 May-31 August 1999.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In May, following its consideration of the Secretary-General's request and of the related ACABQ report [A/53/7/Add.13], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/485/Add.3], adopted decision 53/472 without vote [agenda item 113].

Question of East Timor

At its 100th plenary meeting, on 25 May 1999, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee:

(a) Authorized the Secretary-General to enter into commitments up to 35 million United States dollars, from all sources of funds, for the initial requirements of United Nations activities related to East Timor, pending further action by the Security Council and the submission of a revised budget by the Secretary-General;

(b) Reaffirmed, in accordance with its resolution 45/248 B, section VI, of 21 December 1990, that the Fifth Committee is the appropriate Main Committee of the General Assembly entrusted with responsibilities for administrative and budgetary matters, and expressed its concern at the tendency of its substantive Committees and other intergovernmental bodies to involve themselves in administrative and budgetary matters.

Following Council resolution 1246(1999) establishing UNAMET until 31 August and in accordance with the Assembly decision above, the Secretary-General submitted a revised report on the 5 May-31 August 1999 budget for UNAMET [A/C.5/53/63], with a request for an increase in the existing commitment authority. Based on that report and ACABQ's related comments [A/53/7/Add.14], the Assembly, on 29 June [meeting 103], on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/485/Add.5], adopted resolution 53/240 without vote [agenda item 113].

5. Expresses its appreciation to all those Member States which have made voluntary contributions to the Mission;

6. Decides to appropriate an amount of 52,531,100 dollars for the Mission, and requests the Secretary-General to establish a special account for the Mission;

7. Decides also that the amount to be assessed will be determined after the review of the report which the Secretary-General will submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session, taking into account voluntary contributions received;

8. Decides further that such assessments as will be necessary shall be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1999, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997.

In the light of Security Council resolutions 1257(1999) and 1262(1999), extending UNAMET's mandate until 30 September (phase I) and 30 November (phase II), respectively, the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly a report [A/54/380] on a revised proposed budget for phase I for the period 5 May-30 September 1999 and a preliminary estimate of requirements for phase II to implement resolution 1262(1999). On 29 October [meeting 43], following its consideration of that report and ACABQ's related observations [A/54/406], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/505], adopted resolution 54/20 A without vote [agenda item 169].

would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session (decision 54/465) and that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the item at that session (decision 54/462 A).

UNTAET

In a 29 November addendum [A/54/236/Add.1] to his note, the Secretary-General requested commitment authority with assessment for an amount of $205.4 million to cover the most immediate requirements for UNTAET, pending submission of detailed cost estimates to the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 88], following its consideration of the Secretary-General's request and of the related ACABQ report [A/54/653], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/687], adopted resolution 54/246 A without vote [agenda item 173].

Financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1272(1999) of 25 October 1999 regarding the establishment of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor,

Recognizing that the costs of the Transitional Administration are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing also that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Transitional Administration, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the trust fund for the multinational force,

Inviting voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund for the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Transitional Administration with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

2. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor in full and on time;

3. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

4. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

5. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Transitional Administration, and for this purpose requests the Secretary-General to speed up the implementation of the asset management system at all peacekeeping missions in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/1 of 15 October 1997;

7. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Transitional Administration is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to employ locally recruited staff for the Transitional Administration against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Transitional Administration;

10. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments in an amount not exceeding 200 million United States dollars, inclusive of the amount of 50 million dollars authorized by the Advisory Committee, for the Transitional Administration under the terms of section IV of General Assembly resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994, and requests the Secretary-General to establish a special account for the Transitional Administration;

11. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 200 million dollars among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989,

45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993, 50/451 B of 23 December 1995 and 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1999 and 2000, as set out in its resolutions 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 and 54/237 A of 23 December 1999;

12. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

13. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Transitional Administration;

14. Invites voluntary contributions to the Transitional Administration in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, as a matter of priority, a comprehensive report on the financing of the Transitional Administration, including full budget estimates and information on the utilization of resources until the time of the submission of the report, to enable the Assembly to take action on it at the first part of its resumed fifty-fourth session;

16. Decides to keep under review during its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor".

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on the financing of UNTAET would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session (decision 54/465), and that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the item at that session (decision 54/462 A).

Papua New Guinea

Bougainville

During 1999, Bougainville, a province of the South-East Asian country of Papua New Guinea, continued to implement the 1998 Lincoln Agreement on Peace, Security and Development on Bougainville (the Lincoln Agreement) [YUN 1998, p. 319], concluded between the Government of Papua New Guinea and the four Bougainville parties involved in the nine-year conflict that ended in the 1997 Burnham Truce [ibid.]. A UN presence in the form of the United Nations Political Office in Bougainville, requested under the terms of the Lincoln Agreement, continued to monitor and report on the Agreement's implementation by the parties and by the Peace Monitoring Group (Australia, Fiji, New Zealand and Vanuatu), which was also requested under the Agreement. The Bougainville People's Congress, the main body representing the Bougainville parties, elected Joseph Kabui as Congress President in April.

With Parliament's election in mid-July of Sir Mekere Morauta to the office of Prime Minister, left vacant by the previous incumbent's resignation the week before, a new Government was formed, which committed itself to pursuing a progressive political settlement. On 26 November, Papua New Guinea's Supreme Court reinstated the previously suspended Bougainville Provincial Government, following which John Momis, Member of Parliament, became Governor of Bougainville. On 14 December, the Congress President and the newly appointed Governor agreed jointly to negotiate Bougainville's political future with the Government.

UN Political Office in Bougainville

The Arawa-based United Nations Political Office in Bougainville (UNPOB), established in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 320] in response to requests from the parties to the Lincoln Agreement and with the concurrence of the Security Council, continued to discharge its mandate as spelled out in the Agreement. Noel Sinclair (Guyana) remained Director of UNPOB.

Communication from Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, on 28 October [S/1999/1152], indicated to the Council that Papua New Guinea's new Government was committed to making the settlement of the Bougainville crisis a priority and that the Foreign Minister had reiterated the importance to the peace process of a continued UN presence in Bougainville. The Secretary-General stated that all the Bougainville parties had expressed their support for UNPOB's efforts to move the peace process forward. It was therefore his intention to extend UNPOB's mandate, due to expire on 31 December, by a further 12 months. The Council took note of the Secretary-General's intention on 10 November [S/1999/1153].

Financing

The costs associated with UNPOB's extension to December 2000 were estimated by the Secretary-General at $1,337,400 [A/C.5/54/39]. ACABQ recommended that the total requirements of $9,964,500 for eight political missions, including the estimate for UNPOB, should be charged against the provision for special political missions requested under section 3 (Political affairs) of the proposed programme budget for the 2000-2001 biennium [A/54/7/Add.io].

Other matters

India-Pakistan

The United Nations Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan (UNMOGIP) continued in 1999 to monitor the situation in Jammu and Kashmir. As at 31 December, UNMOGIP had a strength of 45 military observers under the command of Major-General Jozsef Bali (Hungary), appointed by an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the Security Council on 9 and 12 February [S/1999/148, S/1999/149]. UNMOGIP headquarters alternated between Srinagar, Kashmir, in the summer and Rawalpindi, Pakistan, in the winter.

Communications. On 27 May [A/54/118-S/1999/633], Pakistan drew attention to the recent sharp escalation of violations of the line of control in the Kargil and Drass sectors in Jammu and Kashmir, noting that, for the first time since the 1971 war [YUN 1971, p. 137], India had resorted to using its air force, in addition to long-range and heavy artillery. Pakistan urged the Secretary-General to initiate meaningful dialogue between the two countries to defuse the current situation. On 25 May, the Secretary-General expressed concern over the two-week-long heavy exchange of fire along the line of control and called on the parties to cease the fighting. On 28 May, he stated that he was encouraged by the direct contacts that had taken place between the Prime Ministers and other officials of the two parties and by their willingness to pursue dialogue on a number of issues, including Kashmir.

A 24 June statement by the EU Presidency [S/1999/732] reiterated the EU's deep concern over the continuing military confrontation and infiltration of armed intruders in violation of the line of control in the Kargil region.

Pakistan reported that, on the morning of 10 August [A/54/214-S/1999/867], Indian military aircraft shot down an unarmed Pakistan navy aircraft on a routine training flight inside Pakistani airspace, east of Karachi, killing all 16 persons aboard. The Secretary-General promptly issued a statement expressing his increasing concern at repeated incidents between the two countries and his hope for an early resumption of the bilateral dialogue. Pakistan, on 30 August [S/1999/937], stated that India admitted shooting down the aircraft but claimed the incident occurred over Indian airspace. To support that assertion, Pakistan alleged, Indian helicopters flew to the site of the wreckage 2 kilometres within Pakistani territory and removed parts of it to the Indian side of the border. Pakistan asked the Secretary-General to send a UN fact-finding mission to establish the truth of the incident and demanded appropriate compensation from India.

Iran complaints

In continued protest against violations of its territorial integrity, Iran on 11 May [S/1999/544] transmitted to the Secretary-General four notes verbales of 3 October and 7 December 1998 and 2 January and 2 February 1999 from its Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the Embassy of Afghanistan in Tehran, protesting numerous land and airspace intrusions from Afghanistan, as well as incidents of firings at Iranian sentry posts by light to heavy weapons, attacks on border guards, abduction of villagers by bandits—all resulting in injuries and some deaths—as well as damage to Iranian border installations. Iran expected the Embassy to take every possible measure to ensure respect for its territorial integrity.

On 21 December [S/1999/1274], Iran transmitted a recent note verbale to the United States Department of State protesting the intrusion into Iranian territorial waters by a United States warship, which, in disregard of Iran's warnings and radio communications, chased an Iranian commercial vessel. Iran demanded an end to such illegal actions.

Iran-Iraq

Throughout 1999, Iran and Iraq continued to communicate to the Secretary-General allegations of repeated violations of their 1988 ceasefire agreement [YUN 1988, p. 193] and of their 1991 Tehran agreements [YUN 1991, p. 163] concerning the area of separation between them. They also alleged cross-border attacks and terrorist activities in each other's territory.

Iran's communications covered previously unreported ceasefire violations for the periods 29 May-30 December 1997 [S/1999/265] and 21 January-3 July 1998 [S/1999/877]. Others concerned two separate 1998 incidents involving an Iraqi attack on an Iranian motorboat and theft of a fishing boat [S/1999/81], allegations rejected by Iraq as false [S/1999/280]; the seizure in September 1999 of an Iranian cargo boat and its crew of 11 by Iraqi forces [S/1999/125]; the interception and looting of Iranian commercial launches en route to Kuwait [S/2000/82]; and the seizure in September of 33 fishing boats and infiltration into Iranian territory by armed Iraqi bandits [S/2000/79].

Iran further protested against the assassination in April of the Deputy Chief of the Joint Staff Command of the Armed Forces of Iran by the Iraq-based terrorist group known as Mujahedin Khalq Organization (MKO) (also referred to as the People's Mujahedin Organization), claiming it could not have been accomplished without the involvement of Iraqi authorities [A/54/78-S/1999/420, A/54/81]. Iraq denied the accusation [A/54/90] and asserted that it was not responsible for MKO's actions [S/1999/455]. Iran also recalled drawing to the attention of the United Nations various 1994 incidents of transboundary terrorist activities by MKO [S/1999/536]. It reported that, on 25 November, four Iranian border guards, dispatched to the border to prevent the recurrence of a recent MKO infiltration into Iranian territory, were abducted by Iraqi forces and taken to Basrah [S/2000/78].

Iraq's communications on ceasefire violations by Iran covered the periods 22 June-7 December 1998 [S/1999/31], 11 April-28 July 1999 [S/1999/926], 23 June-4 October 1999 [S/1999/1101] and 5 October-27 November 1999 [S/1999/1271]. Iraq also requested the retention on the Security Council's agenda of its complaint concerning incidents on its frontier with Iran [S/1999/144]. In June, it reported that Iran fired three long-range ground-to-ground missiles at the MKO base camp, preceded by a bomb explosion that killed six MKO members along with several innocent Iraqis [S/1999/673]. Iran replied that MKO was responsible for many terrorist attacks and activities launched from Iraq, which could not take place without that country's collaboration and support. By providing sanctuary to MKO, Iraq was in violation of its obligations under the principles of international law [S/1999/781].

Saudi Arabia-Iraq

Saudi Arabia informed the Security Council on 4 January 1999 [S/1999/3] that, on 12 December 1998, an Iraqi patrol crossed the Saudi border and opened fire on a Saudi patrol, wounding one of them in the head, from which he later died. Replying on 9 January [S/1999/29], Iraq explained that the incident took place when three Saudi armoured cars, observed in the restricted area between two control posts 1 kilometre inside Iraqi territory, opened fire on the Iraqi patrol, which was obliged to return fire in self-defence. Saudi Arabia insisted on 1 March [S/1999/217] that the incident took place inside its borders and that the fire from the Iraqi patrol did not draw any return fire from the Saudi patrol.

In identical letters of 18 March to the Secretary-General and the Council [S/1999/297], Saudi Arabia protested the violation of its airspace on 16 and 17 March by Iraqi aircraft headed for Jeddah. While the authorities overlooked the earlier violation, as they had a similar 1997 violation, the 17 March aircraft ignored Saudi warnings and proceeded to land at the Jeddah international airport. Saudi Arabia warned that should an aircraft of any kind land illegally in its territory, it would be compelled to seize the aircraft and hand it and its crew over to the United Nations. (The 17 March incident was reported to the Sanctions Committee for Iraq; see p. 240.)

United Arab Emirates-Iran

Greater Tunb, Lesser Tunb and Abu Musa

The United Arab Emirates, on 5 January [S/1999/10] and again on 21 December [S/1999/1273], requested the Security Council to retain on its agenda the question of Iran's occupation of the Greater Tunb, Lesser Tunb and Abu Musa, three islands belonging to the United Arab Emirates. In a 7 February note verbale to the Embassy of Iran in Abu Dhabi, transmitted to the Secretary-General on 23 February [S/1999/191], the United Arab Emirates protested Iran's opening of a municipal office and an educational institution on Abu Musa to perpetuate its occupation of the island. That protest was rejected by Iran as interference in its internal affairs [S/1999/235], [S/1999/498]. On 17 March

[S/1999/296], Iran transmitted eight notes verbales in response to complaints by the United Arab Emirates of 1996 and 1997 incidents relating to Abu Musa and to Iran's alleged interception of fishing boats belonging to the United Arab Emirates, all of which Iran said could be resolved through bilateral dialogue.

Additionally, the United Arab Emirates transmitted for circulation the March communique [S/1999/236] and press release [S/1999/305] issued by the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) rejecting Iran's occupation of the three islands; a September press communique by the GCC Ministerial Council [S/1999/974], which reviewed, among other matters, the work of the committee entrusted with promoting direct negotiations between the two countries on the issue of the islands' occupation; and an excerpt from the statement by the United Arab Emirates to the June/July session of the Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers calling for a peaceful solution to that issue [S/1999/802].

A resolution adopted by the Council of the League of Arab States on 18 March denounced the measures taken by Iran to strengthen its occupation of the three islands, condemned Iran's military manoeuvres that extended to the occupied islands, called on Iran to end that occupation, and drew to the attention of the United Nations the importance of retaining the issue on its agenda until the United Arab Emirates regained its full sovereignty over the three islands [S/1999/395].

Chapter V

Europe and the Mediterranean

Peace and security in Europe were once again seriously jeopardized by the complicated and contentious political situation in the Balkans, as the crisis in the Kosovo province of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) (FRY) reached critical proportions. That crisis and the air campaign by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) against FRY dominated international attention for most of 1999, overshadowing the progress in reconciliation and reconstruction in other parts of the former Yugoslavia (Bosnia and Herzegovina, and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia).

In Bosnia and Herzegovina, some progress was made towards implementing the pledges made at the Madrid Peace Implementation Conference in December 1998, but implementation of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina (also known as the Dayton-Paris Peace Agreement) and those pledges was affected by the events in Kosovo. In September, the members of the Presidency of Bosnia and Herzegovina adopted the New York Declaration, reaffirming their commitment to the Peace Agreement and pledging themselves to facing the remaining challenges. The Security Council, in June, extended the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina until June 2000.

No progress was made in the bilateral negotiations between Croatia and FRY regarding the disputed Prevlaka peninsula, although the parties responded positively to a package of confidence-building recommendations proposed by the Secretary-General following the cessation of NATO action against FRY.

In FRY, the conflict in Kosovo, characterized by gross human rights abuses on the part of the FRY forces and those of the Kosovo Liberation Army, intensified early in the year leading to a worsening humanitarian situation. Negotiations organized by the Contact Group on the Former Yugoslavia, which were held in Rambouillet, France, in February and continued in Paris in March, resulted in the Kosovo Albanian delegation signing the Rambouillet Accords: Interim Agreement for Peace and Self-Government in Kosovo. However, FRY did not sign and on 24 March NATO launched an air campaign against FRY. It was not until June that FRY accepted a peace plan proposed by the European Union and the principles set out by the Group of eight highly industrialized countries (G-8) Foreign Ministers to end the violence, which led to a cessation of the NATO air campaign. Subsequently, the Council on 10 June authorized the deployment in Kosovo, under UN auspices, of international civil and security presences—the international security force (KFOR) and the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo. However, a resurgence of violence later in the year, directed mainly against Serbs and other non-Albanian minorities in Kosovo, again heightened tension and security concerns in the province.

In the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, the mandate of the United Nations Protection Force ended in February and was not renewed, despite concerns about the possible spillover effects from neighbouring Kosovo.

In other parts of Europe, despite the continued efforts of the Secretary-General's Special Representative, the Russian Federation and the Friends of the Secretary-General (France, Germany, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States), the Abkhaz/Georgian peace process remained at an impasse at the end of 1999. The situation was further complicated by the holding by the Abkhaz side of "presidential elections", which were condemned as unacceptable and illegitimate by the Security Council. Georgia also held parliamentary elections on 31 October. The United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia continued to carry out its mandate, contributing to a lessening of tension and providing a climate in which negotiations could take place at the political level.

Armenia and Azerbaijan were also no nearer to settling the armed conflict between them over the Nagorny Karabakh region in Azerbaijan, despite continued efforts by the Minsk Group of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe to reach a settlement.

However, a comprehensive settlement of the Cyprus issue took a small step forward in 1999 when Glafcos Clerides, President of Cyprus, and Rauf R. Denktas, leader of the Turkish Cypriot community, accepted the Secretary-General's 30 September invitation to enter into negotiations without preconditions and in a spirit of compromise. The first round of those proximity talks were held from 3 to 14 December in New York.

The United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus continued to assist in the restoration of normal conditions and in humanitarian functions. The Security Council twice extended its mandate, the second time until 15 June 2000.

The former Yugoslavia

UN operations

The United Nations continued its efforts in 1999 to restore peace and stability in the countries of the former Yugoslavia (Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) (FRY) and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM)) through its peacekeeping missions: the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP), whose mandate ended on 28 February; the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH); the United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka (UNMOP), which continued to monitor the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula; and the United Nations Transitional Administration in the FRY province of Kosovo, established on 10 June to oversee the development of provisional democratic self-governing institutions. The Security Council extended the mandates of UNMIBH, which included the International Police Task Force, until 21 June 2000 and UNMOP to 15 January 2000.

Financing

In accordance with General Assembly decision 52/485 [YUN 1998, p. 325], the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, at the resumed fifty-third session, again considered the treatment of the unencumbered balance for the period 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 for the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR), the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia (UNCRO) and UNPREDEP—known collectively as the United Nations Peace Forces (UNPF)—and UNPF headquarters (UNPF-HQ). Consideration had been deferred in 1998 pending the submission of the final performance report. In a February note [A/C.5/53/56], the Secretary-General stated that the performance report was not expected to be issued until the Assembly's fifty-fourth (1999) session, owing to various pending items. It was anticipated that the report would include a request to the Assembly for additional funds to settle amounts owed to Governments.

In April [A/53/895], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) postponed consideration of the financial performance report for UNPREDEP for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 and the proposed budget for 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000.

The Assembly, by decision 53/477 of 8 June, took note of the Secretary-General's note and the relevant section of ACABQ's report. It requested the Secretary-General to address outstanding issues in connection with the preparation of the final performance report and included the item on the financing of UNPROFOR, UNCRO, UNPREDEP and UNPF-HQ in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session.

The Assembly, on 23 December, decided that the item on the financing of UNPROFOR, UNCRO, UNPREDEP and UNPF-HQ would remain for consideration at the resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session (decision 54/465). It also decided that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the item at the resumed session (decision 54/462 A).

(Details of the financing of the respective peacekeeping operations in the former Yugoslavia are described in the relevant sections below.)

UNTAES and UN Civilian Police Support Group

In a February report [A/53/838 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General provided information on the final disposition of the assets of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES), whose mandate ended in January 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 347], and the UN Civilian Police Support Group, whose mandate ended in October of that year [ibid., p. 353]. As at 30 November 1998, the inventory of the two missions totalled $76.6 million, 67 per cent of which had been transferred to other peacekeeping operations or to the United Nations Logistics Base in Brindisi, Italy, for temporary storage.

ACABQ, in April [A/53/897], submitted its comments on the financial performance report for the two missions for the period 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 350] and on the disposition of their assets.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 June [meeting 101], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/986], adopted resolution 53/234 without vote [agenda item 139].

Financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium and the Civilian Police Support Group

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium and the Civilian Police Support Group and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 1037(1996) of 15 January 1996, by which the Council established the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium for an initial period of twelve months, and resolution 1145(1997) of 19 December 1997, in which the Council noted the termination of the Transitional Administration on 15 January 1998 and established, with effect from 16 January 1998, the Civilian Police Support Group for a single period of up to nine months,

Recalling also its decision 50/481 of 11 April 1996 on the financing of the Transitional Administration and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 52/244 of 26 June 1998,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Transitional Administration and the Support Group are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Transitional Administration and the Support Group, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Transitional Administration,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to continue to provide the account of the mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to meet its outstanding liabilities,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium and the Civilian Police Support Group as at 30 April 1999, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 36.3 million United States dollars, representing 7 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Transitional Administration to the period ending 30 November 1998, notes that some 41 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the mission in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Decides that, on an exceptional basis, the special arrangements approved by General Assembly resolution 51/153 B of 13 June 1997 for the Transitional Administration with regard to the application of article IV of the financial regulations of the United Nations, whereby appropriations required in respect of obligations owed to Governments providing contingents and/or logistic support to the Transitional Administration shall be retained beyond the period stipulated under financial regulations 4.3 and 4.4, as set out in the annex to the present resolution, shall be applied to the Support Group;

7. Decides also to authorize the Secretary-General to utilize an amount of 601,200 dollars gross (541,500 dollars net) from the resources provided for the period ending 30 June 1998 in order to meet the cost of completing the liquidation of the mission as well as the final audit, inclusive of the amount of 553,400 dollars gross (493,700 dollars net) related to liquidation activities with which the Advisory Committee has already concurred;

8. Decides further that Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Transitional Administration and the Support Group shall be credited their respective share of the remaining unencumbered balance of 14,646,100 dollars gross (13,906,700 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 1998;

9. Decides that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their obligations to the Transitional Administration and the Support Group, their share of the remaining unencumbered balance of 14,646,100 dollars gross (13,906,700 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 1998 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

10. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the final disposition of the assets of the Transitional Administration and the Support Group;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium and the Civilian Police Support Group".

ANNEX

Special arrangements with regard to the application of article IV of the financial regulations of the United Nations

1. At the end of the twelve-month period provided for in financial regulation 4.3, any unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question relating to goods supplied and services rendered by Governments for which claims have been received or which are covered by established reimbursement rates shall be transferred to accounts payable; such accounts shall remain recorded in the Special Account for the Civilian Police Support Group until payment is effected.

2. (a) Any other unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question owed to Governments for goods supplied and services rendered, as well as other obligations owed to Governments, for which required claims have not yet been received shall remain valid for an additional period of four years following the end of the twelve-month period provided for in regulation 4.3;

(b) Claims received during this four-year period shall be treated as provided for under paragraph 1 of the present annex, if appropriate;

(c) At the end of the additional four-year period, any unliquidated obligations shall be cancelled and the then remaining balance of any appropriations retained therefor shall be surrendered.

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item on the financing of UNTAES and the Civilian Police Support Group would remain for consideration during the resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session (decision 54/465), and that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the item at that session (decision 54/462 A).

State succession issues

As part of ongoing efforts to search for an agreement on State succession issues regarding the five successor States of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (SFRY) (Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, FRY, FYROM and Slovenia), the Special Negotiator on succession issues of the Office of the High Representative held bilateral meetings in Brussels, Belgium, in January, stated the High Representative in his May report [S/1999/524]. The meetings focused on a new, simplified approach, which emphasized the distribution of SFRY assets among the five States that were already in their respective territories or held abroad. Further discussions with the five States on such a "broad" settlement, which offered a more pragmatic way forward, were necessary, but were impractical in the current political circumstances.

Communications. On 22 November [A/54/638], FRY said that Croatia's Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs had blamed FRY, during the General Assembly's general debate on 25 September [A/54/PV.15], for the delay in finding a solution to the succession issues. FRY presented information to counter the charge, stating that the head of the Yugoslav Expert Group on Succession had asked the Special Negotiator for an explanation of the state of negotiations to remove blame from FRY; the head of the Expert Group had expressed surprise that there was no initiative to continue the negotiations since FRY had accepted, in principle, the Special Negotiator's last draft agreement on succession and the four other entities had not rejected it and had requested only additional explanations. The Yugoslav side had proposed that the Special Negotiator host the next meeting of the Working Group on Succession Issues if he considered that the last draft agreement necessitated a more specific declaration of other participants; and the head of the Expert Group had insisted that the Peace Implementation Council (PIC) give its opinion on the causes of the delay.

On 13 December [S/1999/1245], FRY said that the division of assets and liabilities was the subject of separate negotiations conducted in the framework of PIC, with the mediation of the Special Negotiator. FRY, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and FYROM had agreed to resolve the issue by agreement on the basis of the rules of international law on succession of States. FRY had assessed that the last draft agreement on succession proposed by the Special Negotiator was acceptable in principle and hoped that an agreement between the five States on that basis could be concluded quickly. Towards that end, the head of the Yugoslav Expert Group had proposed that negotiations continue.

UN status of FRY

Communications. Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Slovenia and FYROM, on 5 February [S/1999/120], drew attention to a 1 February statement by the FRY Minister for Foreign Affairs, in which he referred to FRY as a "State Member of the United Nations" [S/1999/107]. Citing Security Council resolution 777(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 138] and General Assembly resolution 47/1 [ibid., p. 139], they reiterated their common position that all five States that had emerged following the dissolution of SFRY were equal successor States, and until FRY was admitted to the United Nations in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter, it could not be considered a Member State.

In response, FRY, on 12 February [S/1999/152], explained that its current status in the United Nations was determined by General Assembly resolution 47/1, which, although it did not allow FRY to participate in the Assembly's work, did not, as advised by the United Nations Legal Counsel [YUN 1992, p. 139], terminate or suspend its membership in the Organization. Furthermore, FRY's Permanent Missions to the United Nations in New York and Geneva continued to function, FRY contributed to the UN regular budget and the Secretariat treated FRY as a Member State.

Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Slovenia and FYROM, on 25 February [S/1999/209], countered that the Legal Counsel's opinion dealt with practical, temporary arrangements for the United Nations to communicate with FRY as a party to disputes with which the United Nations was seized. The Legal Counsel had also concluded that the problem addressed in his opinion would be resolved after a new Yugoslavia was admitted to the United Nations, in accordance with the Charter. Therefore, FRY should submit an application for membership, as had been done by the other four equally legitimate successor States of SFRY. Their position was supported by the Organization of the Islamic Conference Contact Group [S/1999/266]. The four States, on 27 May [A/53/992], referring to a 25 April depositary notification to the International Court of Justice (ICJ) by FRY, by which FRY recognized the jurisdiction ipso facto of the Court, requested the Secretary-General to bring the issue to the attention of the ICJ Registry so that it could clarify in its Yearbook that the reference to Yugoslavia (original Member) in the list of United Nations Member States entitled to appear before the Court referred to the former SFRY and not to any of its successor States. On 3 June, they drew the Security Council President's attention to two instances in which FRY asserted that it was a current and founding UN Member State [S/1999/639].

On 15 December, the General Assembly postponed consideration of a draft text [A/54/L.62], by which the Assembly would have considered that SFRY had ceased to exist and that none of its five successor States could continue its membership.

FRY, on 27 December [S/1999/1282], said that the so-called Croatian initiative to challenge its UN membership contradicted the agreements on normalization of relations and the need for good-neighbourly relations and stabilization of the situation in the region, and ran counter to the principles of the Charter and international law. The initiative had failed and the position of a large number of countries had helped to protect FRY's rights and reaffirmed its international reputation and position.

FRY treaty status

Communications. On 27 May [A/53/975-S/1999/615], Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Slovenia and FYROM drew the Secretary-General's attention to a resolution adopted in May by the contracting parties to the 1971 Convention on Wetlands of International Importance especially as Waterfowl Habitat (the Ramsar Convention). The resolution, while noting that successor States in general continued to be bound by the treaty obligations of the predecessor State, called on Bosnia and Herzegovina and FRY to submit to the depositary (the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization) a notification of succession to the Convention as the other successor States had done. The four States asked the Secretary-General as depositary of international treaties to consider the position of the parties to the Convention on the status of the five successor States to a treaty to which that State had been a party before it was dissolved and ceased to exist.

FRY, on 6 August [A/53/1033-S/1999/858], said that it considered the resolution null and void and with no legal effect since the contracting parties had no authority to make a decision regarding its status in the Convention. FRY participated as a member in conferences of contracting parties and regularly paid its financial contributions. The Secretary-General had no authority to make decisions on the States' membership in international conventions.

Prevlaka peninsula

The United Nations continued in 1999 to assist Croatia and FRY in their search for a permanent solution to the disputed issue of the Prevlaka peninsula. The United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka (UNMOP) continued to monitor the demilitarization of the peninsula and neighbouring areas in Croatia and FRY. The Security Council renewed its mandate until 15 January 2000.

During the year, both parties reiterated their commitment to a negotiated solution, in accordance with the Agreement on Normalization of Relations between them, signed in Belgrade in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 340].

Pursuant to their 1998 agreement [YUN 1998, p. 358] to realize their commitments on delimitation and arranging their borders under the 1996 Agreement, the fourth meeting of the bilateral negotiations took place in May at the expert level but no substantive progress was made towards a settlement. Further meetings were affected by the events in the FRY province of Kosovo (see p. 333). However, the Secretary-General reported that the situation in the region remained stable and free of significant tension. In October, he proposed a package of confidence-building measures. One of those measures—the demilitarization of the demilitarized zone—was completed in December and discussions began on a regime for limited access to the UN-controlled zone.

Bilateral negotiations

The Secretary-General, in a 6 January report to the Security Council on UNMOP [S/1999/16], said that, despite three rounds of talks on the disputed issue of Prevlaka, the last of which was in December 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 358], FRY and Croatia had not made substantive progress on a settlement. They had, however, expressed their intention to continue their discussions through further meetings of their expert teams and other bilateral contacts. The Secretary-General urged the parties to take full advantage of the currently favourable conditions for progress on the issue and to pursue their negotiations towards securing a mutually acceptable and lasting solution. To enable him to keep the Council regularly informed of progress, he proposed that the Council request the parties to report their assessment of the negotiations to the Secretary-General on a monthly or bimonthly basis. If no substantial progress was made within the next six months, he suggested that the Council might wish to consider alternative mechanisms, such as international mediation or arbitration.

The Council, in resolution 1222(1999) of 15 January (see p. 309), requested that the parties report at least bimonthly and asked the Secretary-General to report by 15 April.

Communications. In a 7 January letter to the Council President [S/1999/19 & Corr.1], Croatia referred to FRY's negotiating position on Prevlaka, as stated in a memorandum to the December 1998 meeting of the negotiating teams [S/1998/1225]. FRY had stated that it considered Prevlaka its territory on the basis of the principle of uti possidetis defacto, adding that the fact that no delimitation in the disputed region had ever been carried out proved that Croatia's claim that FRY wished to change the international borders was not true. Croatia wished to demonstrate that FRY had not given up its territorial pretensions and was unwilling to engage in meaningful bilateral negotiations. FRY's claim of de facto control over Prevlaka was nothing more than a request for a change in the existing international borders, which were reconfirmed by the Arbitration Commission (established in 1991 by the European Community in the context of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia [YUN 1991, p. 214]) and by Council decisions. Croatia hoped that the Council would prevent UNMOP from being used by FRY as a mechanism for postponing full reintegration of the last part of Croatian territory and unequivocally state that Prevlaka was an integral part of Croatia. It should also press FRY to engage in constructive negotiations.

In accordance with Council resolution 1222(1999), Croatia and FRY submitted bimonthly reports to the Secretary-General in March. On 15 March [S/1999/291], Croatia reported that delegations from the two sides held their fourth meeting on 9 March in Belgrade. However, apart from establishing the rules of procedure and exchanging position papers, no substantive progress was made in the negotiations. Under the circumstances, Croatia's Foreign Minister had requested an urgent meeting with the FRY Foreign Minister to streamline and accelerate the negotiations. FRY, in its 23 March report [S/1999/313], informed the Secretary-General that at the 9 March meeting the two sides presented their ideas and arguments regarding where the inter-State border should extend. According to FRY, Croatia presented no arguments to negate the legal foundation of the Yugoslav arguments and demonstrated a lack of readiness for serious negotiations as testified by its proposal to call off the negotiations at that level and resume them at a higher one.

In a 25 June letter [S/1999/719], Croatia regretted that no progress had been made in bilateral negotiations and said that a recent letter of the FRY President presented a distorted picture of the current state of the negotiations. The Croatian delegation had submitted to the Yugoslav side clear evidence that Prevlaka lay within Croatia's international borders. Croatia remained prepared and willing to negotiate demilitarization in the Prevlaka area, as well as delimitation at sea, but could not tolerate any pretension towards its territory. Croatia was resolved to negotiate a permanent solution for Prevlaka's security and it was essential to build upon the results achieved so far at the local level.

However, on 27 April [S/1999/480], FRY had informed the Council President that to defend itself from the NATO aggression, it had declared a state of war and would resume the talks once NATO's criminal aggression against it had ceased (see p. 342). Croatia, on 3 May [S/1999/501], said it found that position disturbing, and the unilateral cessation of bilateral negotiations contravened Council resolutions. In response, FRY, on 10 May [S/1999/546], accused Croatia of taking a hostile position towards it by ceding its airspace to NATO for the aerial bombardment of FRY.

On 7 July [S/1999/760], FRY forwarded to the Council President a memorandum, which, it said, contained the facts to support its position that the Prevlaka peninsula was an integral part of Boka Kotorska Bay, an inalienable part of FRY territory. Croatia, on 13 July [S/1999/783 & Corr.1], stated that the intent of the FRY memorandum was to extend artificially the duration of its quest for a change of international borders in south-east Europe, and its selective approach to history did not deserve elaborate comment. The fact was that the borderline between the then Socialist Republics of Croatia and Montenegro in the Prevlaka area not only existed but was well known and recognized when Croatia proclaimed independence in June 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 214]. Croatia also drew attention to the official FRY map posted on the Yugoslav Government's official web site, showing the Croatian Prevlaka within the existing Croatian international borders. Croatia said that the Council should implement the decisions of the Arbitration Commission on the inviolability of international borders and other applicable international law.

On 19 July [S/1999/799], FRY informed the Council President that with the cessation of NATO's aggression impediments to the continuation of negotiations on a solution to the Prevlaka issue had been removed; it expressed its readiness to continue the negotiations without delay in Zagreb, Croatia.

On 4 October [S/1999/1027], FRY said that although Croatia had proposed that the next meeting be held in September, an invitation had not been received. The Yugoslav side expected that, at the fifth meeting, they would consider the arguments already exchanged. FRY had communicated to UNMOP on 15 September its readiness to resume negotiations and rejected Croatia's accusations of aggression and territorial aspirations before the General Assembly [A/54/PV.15]. Concerning Croatia's suggestion that UNMOP's mandate be terminated, FRY declared that any change to the 1996 Agreement on the Normalization of Relations would be a serious violation of the international obligations of both sides.

Croatia confirmed on 12 October [S/1999/1049] that it had proposed that the next meeting be held in Zagreb in September. However, that had been affected by FRY's delay in verifying the authenticity of the signatures of its former Prime Minister and the Head of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to a 1992 letter and map, indicating where the existing international border between Croatia and FRY existed and confirming FRY's intention to honour existing borders. The scheduling of the meeting was also affected by the absence of Montenegrin representatives from that delegation, which rendered the legitimacy of any outcome doubtful, and by the legacy of the Kosovo crisis.

FRY, in two letters of 24 December [S/1999/1278, S/1999/1280], maintained that Croatia had still not extended a concrete invitation to the fifth meeting of experts in Zagreb. To further the process and overcome objections raised in the Secretary-General's April report [S/1999/404], FRY had decided to replace the Yugoslav army units in the north-western part of the area (Bjelotina) with police as a goodwill gesture and a contribution to a speedier solution of the disputed issue. FRY expected UNMOP to abide by its mandate and that the Croatian side would carry out its obligations relative to the maintenance of the regimes of the "Yellow Zone" (a DMZ) and the "Blue Zone" (a UN-controlled zone), in particular the regime that Croatia had been violating. FRY pointed out that the Croatian side could not request that the status of the "Blue Zone" be modified or that UNMOP be withdrawn since that would be contrary to the Agreement on Normalization of Relations. Any change in UNMOP's regime without agreement on both sides would be contrary to the Agreement and would aggravate and complicate the negotiation process.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in a 31 December report on UNMOP [S/1999/1302], noted that 10 months had elapsed since the holding of the last round of bilateral negotiations between the parties in Belgrade. He expected the negotiations to resume as soon as possible, given the positive developments on the ground (see p. 312). However, the current pre-election period in Croatia might not be conducive to substantive negotiations, which he hoped could be held as soon as the elections were over.

UN Mission of Observers in Prevlaka (UNMOP)

During 1999, the United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka, which became a separate mission in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 330], continued to monitor the demilitarization of the disputed Prevlaka peninsula and of the neighbouring areas in Croatia and FRY by carrying out patrols on both sides of the border. The Mission, which comprised 27 military observers for most of the year, under the command of Chief Military Observer Colonel Graeme Williams (New Zealand), also maintained contacts with local authorities to strengthen liaison, reduce tension, improve safety and security, and promote confidence between the parties. UNMOP's area of responsibility consisted of two UN-designated zones: a DMZ (Yellow Zone) and a UN-controlled zone (Blue Zone). In the first quarter of the year, UNMOP headquarters was relocated from Dubrovnik, where the UN presence had been based since 1992, to Cavtat.

The Council authorized a six-month extension of UNMOP until 15 July and a further six-month extension until 15 January 2000.

Although an independent mission, UNMOP was treated for administrative and budgetary purposes as part of UNMIBH. (For details on the financing of UNMOP, see p. 320.)

Report of Secretary-General (January). The Secretary-General, in a January report on UNMOP [S/1999/16], stated that the most significant violation in the DMZ was the continued presence of Yugoslav troops in the north-eastern part. UNMOP remained unable to ascertain the exact strength and armament of those units because of constraints imposed by the Yugoslav authorities on the movement of UN military observers. The long-standing violations of the demilitarized regime in the UN-controlled zone continued, with some 30 Croatian Special Police located at three positions and one checkpoint and some 10 Yugoslav (Montenegrin) Border Police at one position and one checkpoint. The Croatian authorities continued to allow unauthorized access to the UN zone by civilians, and the waters continued to be violated by Croatian and Yugoslav fishing boats and occasionally by Croatian police boats. The opening for the holiday period on 23 December 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 360] of the crossing point between Croatia and FRY (Montenegro) at Debeli Brijeg, in the DMZ, resulted in considerable civilian traffic in both directions; it was scheduled to remain open until 15 January 1999.

The Secretary-General said that the UNMOP area of operations remained stable and free of significant tension. The number of serious incidents had decreased and cooperation between the parties and the UN military observers had improved. He recommended a further six-month extension of UNMOP's mandate, until 15 July.

Communication. Croatia, on 7 January [S/1999/19], said that, following six extensions, the continuation of UNMOP's mandate without decisive impetus from the Security Council would be pointless, and appealed to the Council to provide the much-needed incentive. Otherwise, the Council would witness further needless use of UN resources, since the situation in Prevlaka was neither a threat to international peace and security nor a source of concern. By reducing the number of observers and indicating an impending end to the mandate, the Council would press FRY to engage in constructive negotiations.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

On 15 January [meeting 3966], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1222(1999). The draft [S/1999/39] was submitted by Canada, France, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its earlier relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 779(1992) of 6 October 1992, 981(1995) of 31 March 1995, 1147(1998) of 13 January 1998 and 1183(1998) of 15 July 1998,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 6 January 1999 on the United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka,

Recalling the letter dated 24 December 1998 from the Prime Minister of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the letter dated 7 January 1999 from the Permanent Representative of Croatia to the United Nations, concerning the disputed issue of Prevlaka,

Reaffirming once again its commitment to the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Croatia within its internationally recognized borders,

Taking note once again of the Joint Declaration signed at Geneva on 30 September 1992 by the Presidents of the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, in particular articles 1 and 3, the latter reaffirming their agreement concerning the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula,

Noting with concern, however, that long-standing violations of the demilitarization regime by both parties continue, including the standing presence of Yugoslav military personnel and the occasional presence of Croatian military elements in the demilitarized zone, and limitations placed on the free movement of United Nations military observers by both parties,

Welcoming, in this regard, the recent lifting of certain restrictions on access for the Mission by Croatia, as well as the recent steps taken by the Croatian authorities to improve communication and coordination with the Mission to allow it to monitor more effectively the situation in its area of responsibility,

Welcoming also the Croatian willingness to open crossing points between Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Montenegro) in the demilitarized zone, which has led to considerable civilian traffic in both directions and which represents a significant confidence-building measure in the normalization of relations between the two parties, and expressing the hope that further such openings will help to increase such civilian traffic,

Noting with approval the continuing bilateral negotiations between the parties pursuant to the Agreement on Normalization of Relations between the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia of 23 August 1996, but expressing serious concern that such negotiations have not yet resulted in any substantive progress towards a settlement of the disputed issue of Prevlaka,

Reiterating its call upon the parties urgently to put in place a comprehensive demining programme,

Noting that the presence of the United Nations military observers continues to be essential to maintain conditions that are conducive to a negotiated settlement of the disputed issue of Prevlaka,

1. Authorizes the United Nations military observers to continue monitoring the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula, in accordance with resolutions 779(1992) and 981(1995) and paragraphs 19 and 20 of the report of the Secretary-General of 13 December 1995, until 15 July 1999;

2. Welcomes the improvement in cooperation between the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the United Nations military observers and the decrease in the number of serious incidents, and reiterates its calls upon the parties to cease all violations of the demilitarization regime in the United Nations designated zones, to take steps further to reduce tension and improve safety and security in the area, to cooperate fully with the United Nations military observers and to ensure their safety and full and unrestricted freedom of movement;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in the light of the improved cooperation and reduction in tensions in Prevlaka as described in his report, to consider possible reductions, without prejudice to the main operational activities of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka, focusing on the possibility of reducing the number of military observers to as few as twenty-two, in line with the reconsideration of the concept of operations of the Mission and the existing security regime and the desirability of closing the Mission when appropriate;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report by 15 April 1999 on the progress of bilateral negotiations between the parties, as well as on possible ways to facilitate a negotiated settlement, should the parties require such assistance, and to this end requests the parties to report at least bimonthly to the Secretary-General on the status of the negotiations;

5. Urges once again that the parties abide by their mutual commitments and implement fully the Agreement on Normalization of Relations, and stresses in particular the urgent need for them to fulfil rapidly and in good faith their commitment to reach a negotiated resolution of the disputed issue of Prevlaka in accordance with article 4 of the Agreement;

6. Requests the United Nations military observers and the multinational Stabilization Force authorized by the Council in resolution 1088(1996) of 12 December 1996 and extended by resolution 1174(1998) of 15 June 1998 to cooperate fully with each other;

7. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Communications. On 15 January [S/1999/42], Croatia informed the Council President of its decision to keep the border crossing points at Debeli Brijeg and Konfin between Croatia and FRY open permanently. FRY, on 27 January [S/1999/84], stated its opposition to the unilateral opening of any border crossing, since that presumed the existence of a joint agreement designating the location and regime of such crossings. In the absence of such an agreement with respect to Sector South, land border crossings could not legally be opened. FRY said that, on 20 January, Croatia had proposed that the 1997 agreement between FRY and Croatia designating border crossings [YUN 1997, p. 328] be amended to allow for the opening of border crossings in Sector South. Although FRY believed that the opening of land border crossings had to be resolved by bilateral agreement, it rejected the Croatian proposal because Croatia's attempt to open two border crossings, one of which was located on disputed territory, was tantamount to prejudging the solution of the disputed Prevlaka question and the outcome of ongoing negotiations.

Croatia, on 15 March [S/1999/291], said the two border crossing points had been opened permanently, in agreement with Montenegro, and were operational. In view of the approaching tourist season, it was essential to allow free movement of civilians and thus take another important step towards full normalization of relations.

Report of Secretary-General (April). The Secretary-General, in an April report [S/1999/404], said that, since 24 March, the commencement of NATO military action against FRY (see p. 342), tension had risen in the Prevlaka area, particularly in Montenegro. In the light of the security concerns arising from that action, UNMOP military observers in Herceg Novi were temporarily located to the Croatian side, but continued to carry out limited patrolling on the Yugoslav side. However, UNMOP had been unable to patrol the north-eastern part of the DMZ. An anti-aircraft gun was observed at Debeli Brijeg in violation of the UN security regime. In the northern part of the DMZ, Croatia prevented UNMOP from patrolling on two separate occasions. The Secretary-General said that, while the opening of the crossing point at Debeli Brijeg was not a violation of the DMZ, opening one in the UN-controlled zone on Cape Kobila constituted a violation of the security regime and seemed to be politically motivated. Croatia, as well as Montenegrin authorities, permitted civilians to enter the UN-controlled area and Croatia had established a manned checkpoint near the existing Montenegrin checkpoint. Both checkpoints were in violation of the security regime.

The Secretary-General urged the two countries to regularize the issue of the opening of the Debeli Brijeg crossing point in the context of their continuing bilateral negotiations or through other contacts. To resolve the issue of the crossing point on Cape Kobila, Croatia and FRY could conclude a bilateral agreement to redefine the security regime so that the opening of a crossing point in the UN-controlled zone did not result in a violation of the existing regime. The crossing point should therefore be closed until such an agreement had been reached.

Communications. On 20 April [S/1999/444], Croatia informed the Council President that, on that day, 200 to 300 FRY soldiers had entered the DMZ in the area of the border crossing points opened in agreement with Montenegro. That action nullified progress in establishing and maintaining security and stability in the Prevlaka area, and might affect international humanitarian assistance to the displaced populations of the FRY province of Kosovo. Croatia called on FRY to withdraw its forces immediately and on the Council to ensure strict compliance with its resolutions pertaining to Prevlaka.

FRY, on 22 April [S/1999/471], said that the Secretary-General's April report downplayed Croatia's continued violation of the UN-mandated regime of the DMZ, taking no account of data from the UNMOP Chief Military Observer's internal report, which contained some of the most evident instances of the violation, such as the construction of fortifications and bunkers and the presence of civilian vehicles and boats. Conversely, the report had singled out the presence of Yugoslav Army troops in the north-eastern part of the zone at Bjelotina as "the most significant violation of the demilitarized zone". Similarly, the presence of 25 Croatian Special Police in the Blue Zone was not condemned, nor was their withdrawal requested. The report did not mention that Croatia had blocked access to UN military observers to the area north of Dubravka, nor the statement in the internal report to the effect that FRY documents showed that Croatia had recognized in the past the Montenegrin jurisdiction in part of the disputed area and that Croatia had submitted only a copy of the 1992 UN map with the boundaries of the Blue Zone as proof of the extension of the border. In the light of NATO's aggression against FRY, openly supported by Croatia, the request that the anti-aircraft gun at Debeli Brijeg in FRY be removed was unacceptable.

On 27 April [S/1999/480], FRY informed the Council President that, to defend itself from NATO aggression, its Army had set up a checkpoint manned by 20 men in the Yellow Zone. The checkpoint did not threaten UNMOP members or any other person. Once the aggression against FRY ceased, the need for the checkpoint would also cease to exist. The Commander of the Yugoslav Army had advised the Chief Military Observer on 23 April of the checkpoint, and UNMOP's request that its office at Herceg Novi continue to work was positively resolved. The Yugoslav authorities agreed to establish a direct permanent connection between its Army command and UNMOP. Croatia's 20 April protest was therefore groundless and calculated to use NATO's aggression against FRY to achieve its own goals.

In response, Croatia stated on 3 May [S/1999/501] that FRY's proclaimed need to have a military checkpoint in the DMZ was disturbing; the Council should send a clear message to FRY that it would not tolerate Yugoslav Army checkpoints there, nor any other violations of the DMZ or its resolutions. Croatia rejected the assertion that it was using the current situation in the region to advance its own goals and expressed its continued support for NATO's humanitarian intervention in FRY. Croatia also brought to the Council's attention the fate of a journalist, Antun Masle, who had been apprehended by FRY military authorities. It called on the Council to demand Mr. Masle's immediate release.

Report of Secretary-General (July). In July [S/1999/764], the Secretary-General reported that the Yugoslav authorities had indicated that the restrictions that had applied to the movement of UN military observers in the northern part of the DMZ since 24 March had been lifted. However, since that date, heavier weapons, which had been introduced to the southern part of the zone by Yugoslav (Montenegrin) Border Police, remained there despite the suspension of NATO military action against FRY. Croatia had not completely removed restrictions placed on UNMOP's movements in the north-western part of the zone, requiring 24 hours' notice for foot patrols. In the southern DMZ, UNMOP was refused access to one position on two occasions. The DMZ and the UN-controlled zone were also violated by NATO during its military activity against FRY.

The Secretary-General said that, given the importance of ensuring that the situation on the ground remained stable and as free of tension as possible, and for political negotiations to have the greatest possible chance of success, UNMOP's mandate should be extended until 15 January 2000.

Communications. In view of the forthcoming Security Council consideration of the UNMOP mandate, Croatia and FRY transmitted communications to the Council President. FRY, on 18 June [S/1999/697], expressed its readiness to resume negotiations on Prevlaka without delay and requested the Council to extend UNMOP's mandate for another six months. Croatia, on 25 June [S/1999/719], conveyed its gratitude for UNMOP's contribution to the strengthening of peace and stability in the Prevlaka area during the preceding six months, during which time further progress was achieved in normalizing the situation. The permanent opening of the Debeli Brijeg and Konfin border crossing points had significantly contributed to confidence-building with the local population on both sides of the international border, as well as to lasting stability in the post-conflict period. UNMOP's presence also helped to deter attempts aimed at thwarting those practical measures. However, no progress had been made in bilateral negotiations on the Prevlaka issue.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 15 July [meeting 4023], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1252(1999). The draft [S/1999/785] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its earlier relevant resolutions, in particular its resolutions 779(1992) of 6 October 1992, 981(1995) of 31 March 1995, 1147(1998) of 13 January 1998, 1183(1998) of 15 July 1998 and 1222(1999) of 15 January 1999,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 8 July 1999 on the United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka,

Recalling the letter to the President of the Security Council dated 18 June 1999 from the Chargé d'affaires a.i. of the Permanent Mission of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to the United Nations and the letter dated 25 June 1999 from the Permanent Representative of Croatia to the United Nations, concerning the disputed issue of Prevlaka,

Reaffirming once again its commitment to the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Croatia within its internationally recognized borders,

Noting once again the Joint Declaration signed at Geneva on 30 September 1992 by the Presidents of the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, in particular articles 1 and 3, the latter reaffirming their agreement concerning the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula,

Reiterating its concern that long-standing violations of the demilitarization regime by both parties continue, including the standing presence of military personnel of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the occasional presence of Croatian military elements in the demilitarized zone, and limitations placed on the free movement of United Nations military observers by both parties,

Expressing its concern about more recent, additional violations of the demilitarized zone, in particular the presence there of troops of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia,

Noting with satisfaction that the opening of crossing points between Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Montenegro) in the demilitarized zones continues to facilitate civilian and commercial traffic in both directions without security incidents and continue to represent a significant confidence-building measure in the normalization of relations between the two parties, and urging the parties to utilize these openings as a basis for further confidence-building measures to achieve the normalization of relations between them,

Reiterating its serious concerns about the lack of substantive progress towards a settlement of the disputed issue of Prevlaka in the continuing bilateral negotiations between the parties pursuant to the Agreement on Normalization of Relations between the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia of 23 August 1996, and calling upon the parties to resume discussions,

Reiterating its call upon the parties urgently to put in place a comprehensive demining programme,

Commending the role played by the Mission, and noting also that the presence of the United Nations military observers continues to be essential to maintain conditions that are conducive to a negotiated settlement of the disputed issue of Prevlaka,

1. Authorizes the United Nations military observers to continue monitoring the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula, in accordance with resolutions 779(1992) and 981(1995) and paragraphs 19 and 20 of the report of the Secretary-General of 13 December 1995, until 15 January 2000;

2. Reiterates its calls upon the parties to cease all violations of the demilitarization regime in the United Nations designated zones, to take steps further to reduce tension and to improve safety and security in the area, to cooperate fully with the United Nations military observers and to ensure their safety and full and unrestricted freedom of movement;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report by 15 October 1999 with recommendations and options further to develop confidence-building measures between the parties aimed, inter alia, at further facilitating freedom of movement of the civilian population;

4. Urges once again that the parties abide by their mutual commitments and implement fully the Agreement on Normalization of Relations, and stresses in particular the urgent need for them to fulfil rapidly and in good faith their commitment to reach a negotiated resolution of the disputed issue of Prevlaka in accordance with article 4 of the Agreement;

5. Requests the parties to continue to report at least bimonthly to the Secretary-General on the status of their bilateral negotiations;

6. Requests the United Nations military observers and the multinational Stabilization Force authorized by the Council in resolution 1088(1996) of 12 December 1996 and extended by resolution 1247(1999) of 18 June 1999 to cooperate fully with each other;

7. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Further communication. On 16 July [S/1999/796], FRY, commenting on the Secretary-General's July report, stated that it had never accepted that the northern part of the area extending to the three-border junction between Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia (Bjelovina) and FRY did not belong to the DMZ, although it had allowed the area to be monitored as an expression of goodwill. That area therefore could not be the subject of a Secretary-General's report, in particular not as an area in which an alleged violation of the UN security system took place. FRY had always called for the preservation of the original concept of the UN security system in Prevlaka, on which the two sides had agreed in the Agreement on the Normalization of Relations [YUN 1996, p. 340].

Reports of Secretary-General (October and December). In October [S/1999/1051], the Secretary-General observed that a significant practical step that the parties could take in support of a peaceful solution to their dispute over Prevlaka would be to demonstrate full respect for the UN-monitored security regime. The DMZ was currently stable and free of heavy weapons. The parties had been provided, at his request, with a package of recommendations and options to develop confidence-building measures aimed at further facilitating the freedom of movement of the civilian population and covering basic elements of the disputed issue.

In December [S/1999/1302], the Secretary-General stated that the Yugoslav authorities had informed UNMOP in November of their intention to withdraw their Army units that had been in violation of the UN security regime from the DMZ. UNMOP confirmed that the withdrawal was completed on 11 December and that the zone was free of formed military units and heavy weapons for the first time since October 1992. Subsequently, FRY removed all restrictions on the movement of UN military observers. However, Croatia continued to impose restrictions in the north-western part of the DMZ.

The Secretary-General observed that the fact that one of the confidence-building measures proposed in his package of recommendations—the demilitarization of the DMZ—had been implemented was an important step forward. It was now important to address the remaining permanent violations. FRY had indicated its willingness formally to demarcate the northern part of the border with Croatia, up to a point south of Debeli Brijeg, and to regularize the operation of the Debeli Brijeg crossing point. The Montenegrin authorities had also indicated that they would withdraw their Border Police from the UN-controlled zone if Croatia withdrew its Special Police simultaneously. Croatia had expressed an interest in a controlled access regime for local civilians wishing to enter that zone. Preliminary discussions on practical implementation had commenced.

The Secretary-General said that there were other elements of the October options package that had not been taken up by the parties and which, if implemented, could create a climate conducive to a peaceful resolution of the disputed Prevlaka issue. He urged the parties to study them further and devise an implementation strategy, including the regularization of the Debeli Brijeg crossing point, introduction of a limited access regime for local civilians to the UN-controlled zone and replacement of the Cape Kobila crossing point by that regime. The Secretary-General recommended that UNMOP's mandate be extended until 15 July 2000.

Bosnia and Herzegovina

The United Nations continued in 1999 to support efforts towards the full implementation of the 1995 General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina (the Peace Agreement) [YUN 1995, p. 544] through the Office of the High Representative responsible for the Agreement's civilian aspects [YUN 1996, p. 293] and the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH) [ibid., p. 294], the key components of which were the International Police Task Force (IPTF) and the Mine Action Centre (MAC). Both those entities worked in cooperation with the multinational Stabilization Force (SFOR), led by NATO, which was responsible for the Agreement's military aspects.

The Steering Board of the Peace Implementation Council (PIC) continued to review the Peace Agreement's implementation, which was somewhat affected by events in the FRY province of Kosovo (see p. 333).

In November, the three members of the Joint Presidency of Bosnia and Herzegovina adopted the New York Declaration, in which they reaffirmed their commitment to the Agreement, noted the progress made and pledged themselves to facing the remaining challenges. They agreed that the future of Bosnia and Herzegovina—which consisted of two multi-ethnic entities, the Federation and Republika Srpska—was as a part of Europe.

The Security Council, in June, extended UNMIBH's mandate until June 2000.

Implementation of Peace Agreement

Progress in implementing the General Framework Agreement was reviewed by the PIC Steering Board, which met regularly at the level of political directors during the year in Brussels, Belgium (1 February, 11 May, 15 June, 12 July, 17 September and 30 November), and Sarajevo (17-18 March and 20 October). The Board, established in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 511], comprised Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom, the United States, the European Union (EU) and the Organization of the Islamic Conference.

At its February meeting, the Steering Board focused on the handling of the situation in Republika Srpska and reviewed implementation of the Refugee and Reconstruction Task Force return plan for 1999, the functioning of common institutions and progress on the draft permanent election law. In March, it discussed the work of the Office of the High Representative relating to property legislation, the dismantling of parallel institutions and the conditions to be met before a donors' conference could be held. In May, it decided to proceed with the donors' conference, to extend the validity of Bosnia and Herzegovina passports until 30 September 1999 and to support the policy of refraining from any political action in Republika Srpska that might aggravate the situation there during the Kosovo crisis. In June, the Board decided to defer municipal elections and discussed the need for budgetary support to Republika Srpska, the creation of an economic space within Bosnia and Herzegovina and progress on the draft permanent election law. That law was approved at the Board's October meeting. At the September meeting, the new High Representative, Wolfgang Petritsch, outlined his overall strategy for his term.

The High Representative met with PIC Steering Board Ministers in New York on 22 September, when they endorsed his strategic concept of "ownership" for Bosnia and Herzegovina, whereby its citizens would become increasingly responsible for their own affairs.

New York Declaration

On 15 November [meeting 4069], the Security Council met to consider the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, during which it was briefed by Ante Jelavic, current Chair of the Presidency of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and Alija Izetbegovic and Zivko Radisic, members of the Presidency who also responded to questions from Council members.

During their appearance before the Council, on the eve of the fourth anniversary of the Peace Agreement, the members of the Presidency announced the adoption of the New York Declaration [S/1999/1179], in which they reaffirmed their commitment to the Agreement, noted the progress made towards fulfilling its goals and pledged themselves to facing the remaining challenges. The Presidency agreed that the future of Bosnia and Herzegovina was as a part of Europe, requiring full integration into European institutions and the creation of strong, functioning common institutions. The three Presidents agreed: to the establishment of a State Border Service; to the creation of a Permanent Secretariat for the Joint Presidency; that full funding of the State ministries should be a top priority for Bosnia and Herzegovina; and that the structure of the Council of Ministers should be rectified in an accelerated fashion in accordance with the Bosnia and Herzegovina Constituent Court decision and the Madrid decisions [YUN 1998, p. 329]. They agreed to secure full funding by 1 March 2000 of the Ministries of Foreign Affairs, Foreign Trade and Economic Relations, and Civil Affairs and Communications. They reaffirmed their support for the adoption of the permanent election law and expressed their intention to seek improved inter-entity military cooperation, including through the creation of joint units to participate in UN peacekeeping operations. The Presidents also agreed that the return of displaced persons and refugees should be the Government's highest priority and to press the Federation and Republika Srpska to provide additional staffing, funding and proper facilities to their ministries for refugees to accelerate urban returns. They endorsed the harmonized property laws announced by the High Representative in October and committed themselves to advocating strongly for their expeditious implementation. They agreed to create a joint commission of entities to establish refugee return priorities to urban areas and to report to the Security Council on progress made by 1 March 2000; that the State Government would serve as the central database and managing authority for Bosnia and Herzegovina passports and to propose to the Parliament the creation of a single national passport; and to support aggressive steps to combat corruption and lack of transparency. Annexed to the Declaration were Principles on the Establishment of a State Border Service.

Civilian aspects

The civilian aspects of the 1995 Peace Agreement [YUN 1995, p. 544] entailed a wider range of activities, including humanitarian aid, infrastructure rehabilitation, establishment of political and constitutional institutions, promotion of respect for human rights and the holding of free and fair elections. The High Representative, who chaired the PIC Steering Board and other key implementation bodies, was the final authority with regard to implementing the civilian aspects. UNMIBH, which comprised a UN civilian office, IPTF and MAC, reported to the Secretary-General through the United Nations Coordinator.

Appointment of High Representative. On 12 July, the PIC Steering Board designated Wolfgang Petritsch (Austria) as High Representative to succeed Carlos Westendorp (Spain).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 3 August [meeting 4030], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1256(1999). The draft [S/1999/834] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1031(1995) of 15 December 1995, 1088(1996) of 12 December 1996 and 1112(1997) of 12 June 1997,

Recalling also the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement") and the conclusions of the Peace Implementation Conferences held in Bonn on 9 and 10 December 1997 and Madrid on 15 and 16 December 1998,

1. Welcomes and agrees to the designation by the Steering Board of the Peace Implementation Council on 12 July 1999 of Mr. Wolfgang Petritsch as High Representative in succession to Mr. Carlos Westendorp;

2. Pays tribute to the efforts of Mr. Westendorp in his work as High Representative;

3. Reaffirms the importance it attaches to the role of the High Representative in pursuing the implementation of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement") and giving guidance to and coordinating the activities of the civilian organizations and agencies involved in assisting the parties to implement the Peace Agreement;

4. Reaffirms also the final authority of the High Representative in theatre regarding the interpretation of annex 10 on civilian implementation of the Peace Agreement.

Reports of High Representative. The High Representative reported on the implementation process during the year, covering the periods January to March [S/1999/524], April to June [S/1999/798] and June to October [S/1999/1115]. A later report [S/2000/376] covered activities during the remainder of the year. He described progress in the civilian implementation of the Peace Agreement, which he had been mandated to monitor, mobilize and coordinate. (For details, see below under specific subjects.)

In addition to the regular PIC Steering Board meetings at the political director level (see p. 313), the High Representative convened weekly meetings at the ambassadorial level in Sarajevo.

UN Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH)

Special Representative and Coordinator. On 2 August, Jacques Paul Klein (United States) succeeded Elisabeth Rehn (Finland) as the Secretary-General's Special Representative and Coordinator of United Nations Operations in Bosnia and Herzegovina [S/1999/774, S/1999/775]. On 6 April, Brigadier-General Detlef Buwitt (Germany) succeeded Richard Monk (United Kingdom) as Commissioner of IPTF [S/1999/287, S/1999/288].

Reports of Secretary-General (March and June). On 16 March [S/1999/284], the Secretary-General reported that IPTF continued efforts to restructure and reform the police services in the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina (the Federation). Progress was slow in Ljubuski and Livno cantons, where the inauguration of the police had still not taken place. UNMIBH made progress towards achieving minority quotas in the Federation. The cantonal working groups on minority police recruitment and return had identified and screened over 700 minority applicants and had begun to identify experienced minority officers for transfer within the Federation police service and between the two entities. In Republika Srpska, progress in police restructuring and reform was slow but significant. UNMIBH and Ministry of the Interior officials met weekly to ensure that the deadlines contained in the Framework Agreement on Police Restructuring, Reform and Democratization [YUN 1998, p. 333] were met. IPTF continued to expand its programme of co-location in the Federation and Republika Srpska with the goal of comprehensive coverage down to middle-management levels of the police administrations. Its advisers were deployed at police stations in both entities and in all nine public security centres in Republika Srpska and in the Federation's 10 cantonal Ministries of the Interior. An inter-entity advisory team on automobile theft was formed, as was an inter-entity planning effort to address organized crime along the inter-entity boundary line. In the area of police certification and training, UNMIBH established a Drug Control Unit, an Organized Crime Unit and a Public Order and Critical Incident Management Unit. It also assisted Federation authorities to assume greater responsibility and control over the police academy and was seeking funding to expand the academy's capacity from 120 to 500 places in each class. In Republika Srpska, it was working with the authorities to identify a site for a new police academy and was pursuing funding projects for its construction.

The Secretary-General observed that further progress in police reform would require tangible material support for the modernization of the country's police infrastructure from a donor community, whose support for police restructuring and reform had been relatively modest.

The Secretary-General noted that the establishment of self-sustaining political institutions continued to present a major challenge, and the prospects remained bleak for the return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes on any meaningful scale. It also appeared that the most significant progress came most frequently from initiatives by the High Representative, rather than from officials in the country itself. The continuing close cooperation of UNMIBH with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), SFOR, the Office of the High Representative and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) would be necessary to address those impediments to a sustainable peace. The Secretary-General emphasized that the support of SFOR would remain essential in providing adequate security arrangements for the successful implementation of UNMIBH's mandate. He appealed to Security Council members to extend their full diplomatic support to UNMIBH efforts to implement its core mandate of creating professional, multi-ethnic police services in the Federation and Republika Srpska.

In June [S/1999/670], the Secretary-General said that there was progress towards completing the provisional certification and training of existing officers by 31 December. A model identification card was agreed upon for issue to Republika Srpska officers upon their registration, and the Ministry of the Interior had created a division for the investigation of citizens' allegations of police misconduct and had drafted a code of ethics for police. However, the vacuum caused by the killing on 16 March of the Bosnian-Croat Deputy Minister of the Interior halted the reorganization of the Federation Ministry and impeded police restructuring throughout the Federation. Nevertheless, UNMIBH made progress in establishing a multi-ethnic police force in the Croat-majority community of Zepce and towards achieving minority quotas. Following reports of unregistered police officers in the Federation, IPTF acted to ensure that all 10,627 police officers serving in each canton were duly registered. A total of 10,808 officers in the Federation had completed human dignity training and 9,573 had completed transitional training, as well as 6,846 and 3,269, respectively, in Republika Srpska. In areas where training in the two basic courses was complete, IPTF training shifted to more specialized subjects, such as drug awareness and community policing. IPTF continued to implement its non-compliance policy, receiving between 28 February and 26 May some 90 reports of non-compliance of law enforcement agents with their obligations. During the reporting period, the IPTF Non-Compliance Unit recommended the decertification of 18 individuals responsible for 35 instances of non-compliance. Another 11 were recommended for decertification for human rights violations and six more were recommended following background checks by the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia. UNMIBH was developing methods to compel authorities in the Federation and Republika Srpska to dismiss decertified officials promptly. IPTF worked with the UNMIBH Human Rights Office and Civil Affairs Unit, SFOR and UNHCR to establish a monitoring programme for incoming refugees from FRY.

Political developments in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in the wider region continued to challenge the establishment of the rule of law, the Secretary-General stated. Progress was difficult in Republika Srpska due to continuing opposition to multi-ethnic police among a significant part of the political forces there. There was also increasing insecurity associated with the popular response against the establishment of the Brcko District and the dismissal of Republika Srpska President Poplasen, as well as increasing tension and economic deprivation following the NATO air strikes in FRY. Progress in developing self-sustaining institutions in the Federation was complicated by the killing of the Deputy Minister of the Interior, by disappointing progress in sustaining the returns of minorities and by the possibility of revising fundamental principles of the Peace Agreement. On the other hand, broad sectors of the population were willing to use the mechanisms of integration, in particular the common licence plate and the common currency, to establish and deepen contacts between the two entities.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 18 June [meeting 4014], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1247(1999). The draft [S/1999/688] was sponsored by Canada, France, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions concerning the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, including resolutions 1031(1995) of 15 December 1995, 1035(1995) of 21 December 1995, 1088(1996) of 12 December 1996, 1144(1997) of 19 December 1997, 1168(1998) of 21 May 1998, 1174(1998) of 15 June 1998 and 1184(1998) of 16 July 1998,

Reaffirming its commitment to the political settlement of the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, preserving the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States there within their internationally recognized borders,

Underlining its commitment to supporting implementation of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement"),

Emphasizing its appreciation to the High Representative, the Commander and personnel of the multinational Stabilization Force, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the personnel of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including the Commissioner and personnel of the International Police Task Force, and the personnel of other international organizations and agencies in Bosnia and Herzegovina for their contributions to the implementation of the Peace Agreement,

Noting that the States in the region must play a constructive role in the successful development of the peace process in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and noting especially the obligations of the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in this regard as signatories to the Peace Agreement,

Emphasizing that a comprehensive and coordinated return of refugees and displaced persons throughout the region continues to be crucial to lasting peace,

Taking note of the declaration of the Ministerial Meeting of the Peace Implementation Council in Madrid on 16 December 1998 and the conclusions of its previous meetings,

Noting the reports of the High Representative, including his latest report of 5 May 1999,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 11 June 1999,

Determining that the situation in the region continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security,

Determined to promote the peaceful resolution of the conflicts in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter,

I

1. Reaffirms once again its support for the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement"), as well as for the Dayton Agreement on implementing the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina of 10 November 1995, calls upon the parties to comply strictly with their obligations under those Agreements, and expresses its intention to keep the implementation of the Peace Agreement, and the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, under review;

2. Reiterates that the primary responsibility for the further successful implementation of the Peace Agreement lies with the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina themselves and that the continued willingness of the international community and major donors to assume the political, military and economic burden of implementation and reconstruction efforts will be determined by the compliance and active participation by all the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina in implementing the Peace Agreement and rebuilding a civil society, in particular in full cooperation with the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, in strengthening joint institutions and in facilitating returns of refugees and displaced persons;

3. Reminds the parties once again that, in accordance with the Peace Agreement, they have committed themselves to cooperate fully with all entities involved in the implementation of this peace settlement, as described in the Peace Agreement, or which are otherwise authorized by the Security Council, including the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, as it carries out its responsibilities for dispensing justice impartially, and underlines the fact that full cooperation by States and entities with the International Tribunal includes the surrender for trial of all persons indicted by the Tribunal and provision of information to assist in Tribunal investigations;

4. Emphasizes its full support for the continued role of the High Representative in monitoring the implementation of the Peace Agreement and giving guidance to and coordinating the activities of the civilian organizations and agencies involved in assisting the parties to implement the Peace Agreement, and reaffirms that the High Representative is the final authority in theatre regarding the interpretation of annex 10 on civilian implementation of the Peace Agreement and that in case of dispute he may give his interpretation and make recommendations, and make binding decisions as he judges necessary on issues as elaborated by the Peace Implementation Council in Bonn on 9 and 10 December 1997;

5. Expresses its support for the declaration of the Ministerial Meeting of the Peace Implementation Council in Madrid on 16 December 1998;

6. Recognizes that the parties have authorized the multinational force referred to in paragraph 10 below to take such actions as required, including the use of necessary force, to ensure compliance with annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement;

7. Reaffirms its intention to keep the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina under close review, taking into account the reports submitted pursuant to paragraphs 18 and 25 below, and any recommendations those reports might include, and its readiness to consider the imposition of measures if any party fails significantly to meet its obligations under the Peace Agreement;

II

8. Pays tribute to those Member States which participated in the multinational Stabilization Force established in accordance with its resolution 1088(1996), and welcomes their willingness to assist the parties to the Peace Agreement by continuing to deploy a multinational Stabilization Force;

10. Authorizes the Member States acting through or in cooperation with the organization referred to in annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement to continue for a further planned period of twelve months the Stabilization Force as established in accordance with its resolution 1088(1996) under unified command and control in order to fulfil the role specified in annexes 1-A and 2 of the Peace Agreement, and expresses its intention to review the situation with a view to extending this authorization further as necessary in the light of developments in the implementation of the Peace Agreement and the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

11. Authorizes the Member States acting under paragraph 10 above to take all necessary measures to effect the implementation of and to ensure compliance with annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement, stresses that the parties shall continue to be held equally responsible for compliance with that annex and shall be equally subject to such enforcement action by the Stabilization Force as may be necessary to ensure implementation of that annex and the protection of the Force, and takes note that the parties have consented to the Force taking such measures;

12. Authorizes Member States to take all necessary measures, at the request of the Stabilization Force, either in defence of the Force or to assist the Force in carrying out its mission, and recognizes the right of the Force to take all necessary measures to defend itself from attack or threat of attack;

13. Authorizes the Member States acting under paragraph 10 above, in accordance with annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement, to take all necessary measures to ensure compliance with the rules and procedures established by the Commander of the Stabilization Force, governing command and control of airspace over Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all civilian and military air traffic;

14. Requests the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina to cooperate with the Commander of the Stabilization Force to ensure the effective management of the airports of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in the light of the responsibilities conferred on the Force by annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement with regard to the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

III

19. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina, which includes the International Police Task Force, for an additional period terminating on 21 June 2000, and also decides that the Task Force shall continue to be entrusted with the tasks set out in annex 11 of the Peace Agreement, including the tasks referred to in the conclusions of the Peace Implementation Conferences held in London on 4 and 5 December 1996, Bonn on 9 and 10 December 1997, Luxembourg on 9 June 1998 and Madrid on 15 and 16 December 1998, and agreed by the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council regularly informed on the work of the International Police Task Force and its progress in assisting the restructuring of law enforcement agencies and the progress of the Mission in monitoring and assessing the court system, and to report every three months on the implementation of the mandate of the Mission as a whole;

21. Reiterates that the successful implementation of the tasks of the International Police Task Force rests on the quality, experience and professional skills of its personnel, and once again urges Member States, with the support of the Secretary-General, to ensure the provision of such qualified personnel;

22. Reaffirms the responsibility of the parties to cooperate fully with, and to instruct their respective responsible officials and authorities to provide their full support to, the International Police Task Force on all relevant matters;

23. Reiterates its call upon all concerned to ensure the closest possible coordination between the High Representative, the Stabilization Force, the Mission and the relevant civilian organizations and agencies so as to ensure the successful implementation of the Peace Agreement and of the priority objectives of the civilian consolidation plan, as well as the security of personnel of the International Police Task Force;

24. Urges Member States, in response to demonstrable progress by the parties in restructuring their law enforcement institutions, to intensify their efforts to provide, on a voluntary-funded basis and in coordination with the International Police Task Force, training, equipment and related assistance for local police forces in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to submit to the Council reports from the High Representative, in accordance with annex 10 of the Peace Agreement and the conclusions of the Peace Implementation Conference held in London, and later Peace Implementation Conferences, on the implementation of the Peace

Agreement and in particular on compliance by the parties with their commitments under that Agreement;

26. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Reports of Secretary-General (September and December).

In September [S/1999/989], the Secretary-General reported that the return of normal security conditions in Bosnia and Herzegovina following the Kosovo crisis (see p. 333) had enabled progress in the implementation of UNMIBH's mandate. As of mid-September, UNMIBH resumed activities in all parts of Republika Srpska. Minority recruitment outside Brcko began in earnest when the Republika Srpska police academy was provisionally opened in July. The Republika Srpska police force still had only 182 minority officers, 110 of whom were in Brcko, well short of the first benchmark set by the Peace Agreement. In the Federation, the cantons and the Ministry of the Interior had yet to work out durable arrangements on cost sharing and employment contracts for minority officers. However, steps were taken to promote the establishment of cohesive police forces, particularly in cantons with substantial mixed populations, primarily in Central Bosnia and Mostar. The Anti-Terrorist Unit of the Federation Ministry of the Interior was still undergoing IPTF special training and selection procedures. However, no progress was made in the unification of the Unit, which remained ethnically divided. The size of the Unit was to be reduced from 242 to 123, but those efforts were contingent upon the reorganization and reallocation of positions within the Federation Ministry. IPTF and the UNMIBH judicial assessment programme instituted a Federation-wide court police force of 351 officers. UNMIBH intended to ensure that the force provided security for the court system, as confidence in the impartiality of the regular police forces was still open to question. The Secretary-General also reported that, with the phasing out of the IPTF-administered basic training, the training for cadets would increasingly be taken over by the Federation and Republika Srpska police academies, and efforts were under way to increase their capacity. UNMIBH was streamlining and concentrating support for the local police in Bosnia and Herzegovina to avoid duplication and parallel efforts by donors, and was completing the standardization of equipment.

The Secretary-General noted that, despite the progress achieved, in both entities the leadership of each of the ethnic communities continued to demonstrate a serious lack of political will to improve the functioning of the police and judiciary in line with international standards. UNMIBH faced constant difficulties in recruiting minority police officers and experienced inordinate delays due to the parties' failure to agree on and display neutral insignia. The difficulties posed by political obstructionism were compounded by a lack of employment and economic development opportunities in many areas, in particular with respect to areas of potential minority returns. During a time of increased calls for international resources for Kosovo and other parts of the world and when donor fatigue for Bosnia and Herzegovina was very real, the continued unwillingness of substantial parts of the local leadership to create conditions conducive to returns and to the integral implementation of the Peace Agreement could not be tolerated, the Secretary-General said. He reminded the leadership of each community that international economic and reconstruction support depended on compliance with their obligations and commitments, and they needed to reconfirm those commitments and pursue them more vigorously.

In December [S/1999/1260], the Secretary-General stated that intensified efforts in police registration, minority recruitment, exposing parallel police structures and the establishment of common institutions, such as the State Border Service, had begun to bear fruit. In November, UNMIBH commenced the establishment of the Law Enforcement Personnel Registry, which was expected to take at least two years and would result in the first-ever authoritative, comprehensive and transparent register of the approximately 20,000 authorized police officers in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The process would also assist in identifying parallel police structures by registering and checking any other personnel who currently had regular and free access to Interior Ministry facilities.

Despite limited space and facilities, the two recently established police academies commenced their second intakes of minority recruits. UNMIBH was pursuing several methods to accelerate the establishment of multi-ethnic police forces, including encouraging refugee former police officers to return to Bosnia and Herzegovina with the assistance of the International Organization for Migration, recruiting displaced former police officers and assisting them to return to their homes of origin, and arranging for the exchange of officers between Republika Srpska and the Federation.

Comprehensive and intrusive inspections and audits of police facilities continued to reveal grave deficiencies in supposedly unified police structures in ethnically mixed cantons of the Federation, further confirming the existence of parallel budgets and personnel systems, undeclared police personnel, separate crime databases and shortcomings in the chain of command that constituted major impediments to professional and democratic policing. UNMIBH was intensifying its use of intrusive audits and micro-audit mechanisms to examine, analyse and compare specific aspects of policing in different police administrations. It also expanded its co-location policy to enable closer scrutiny of police behaviour and provide on-the-job advice and training. In addition, civil affairs advisers were assigned to the Ministries of the Interior of both entities and of Mostar.

UNMIBH had begun to develop a more effective system of reporting on non-compliance and a more robust policy of decertification. Of particular concern was the refusal of several Bosnian Croat police administrations and judicial institutions to comply with the High Representative's decision on the removal of non-neutral and offensive insignia in the Federation. In cooperation with the High Representative, UNMIBH was pursuing a policy of targeted pressure to overcome political obstruction from the leaderships of certain cantons.

The Secretary-General stated that, during his visit to Bosnia and Herzegovina from 11 to 13 October, he noted that the substantial progress in physical reconstruction had not been matched by progress in political integration, social reconciliation and economic development. He had emphasized to the leaders of the country that they should make stronger efforts to breathe life into their common institutions and fully support the rule of law and the return of refugees and displaced persons. He therefore welcomed the November New York Declaration (see p. 314). However, in view of subsequent statements made by some members of the Joint Presidency, which appeared to detract from the Declaration and other commitments, the Secretary-General suggested that the Council might wish to reinforce the message that the people of Bosnia and Herzegovina expected their leaders to meet their responsibilities and commitments in full.

UNMIBH had made steady progress in laying the foundations for effective rule-of-law institutions. The gradual decline in the high national crime rate and an increased willingness of rank-and-file police officers and many judicial officials to perform their work in a professional manner were encouraging signs of new attitudes. They had to be supported by the people of Bosnia and Herzegovina and by the international community in order to overcome entrenched opposition from extremist political interests and criminals, the Secretary-General stated.

UNMIBH financing

The Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly in January [A/53/800] the proposed budget for the maintenance of UNMIBH, including UNMOP (see p. 308) and the United Nations liaison offices in Belgrade and Zagreb, for the period 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000. He proposed a total of $168,234,000 gross ($158,196,000 net) for the period.

ACABQ, in April [A/53/895/Add.6], made recommendations on the Secretary-General's proposed budget and on UNMIBH's financial performance for the period 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 335]. The Committee was of the opinion that the budget for 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 should not exceed $167.6 million gross.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 June [meeting 101], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/985], adopted resolution 53/233 without vote [agenda item 138].

Financing of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 1035(1995) of 21 December 1995, by which the Council established the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina for an initial period of one year, and Council resolution 1174(1998) of 15 June 1998, by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission until 21 June 1999,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 1222(1999) of 15 January 1999, in which the Council authorized the United Nations military observers to continue to monitor the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula until 15 July 1999,

Recalling further its decision 50/481 of 11 April 1996 on the financing of the Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 52/243 of 26 June 1998,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina as at 30 April 1999, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 38 million United States dollars, representing 8 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Mission to the period ending 21 June 1999, notes that some 42 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

8. Takes note of the fact that the amount of 10,608,000 dollars gross (9,987,600 dollars net) authorized by its decision 52/437 of 18 December 1997 was not utilized and, therefore, no appropriation or apportionment of this amount is required;

9. Decides to appropriate the amount of 178,204,381 dollars gross (168,191,981 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, inclusive of the amount of 8,865,888 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations and the amount of 1,738,493 dollars for the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, to be apportioned, as an ad hoc arrangement, among Member States at a monthly rate of 14,850,365 dollars gross (14,015,998 dollars net) in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1999 and 2000, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Mission beyond 30 June 1999;

10. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 10,012,400 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000;

11. Decides further that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 21,752,900 dollars gross (19,524,600 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 1998;

12. Decides that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, their share of the unencumbered balance of 21,752,900 dollars gross (19,524,600 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 1998 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

13. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina".

The Assembly, on 23 December, decided that the agenda item on the financing of UNMIBH should remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session (decision 54/465) and that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the item at that session (decision 54/462 A).

OIOS report. In December [A/54/683], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the investigation into allegations of fraud in travel at UNMIBH, which caused the Organization to suffer an estimated loss of $800,000. Criminal prosecution of the officer involved was initiated in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York and the investigation was proceeding in Croatia to secure the prosecution of the accomplices. The Department of Peacekeeping Operations concurred with the OIOS findings and recommendations, in particular the recommendation that the report be included in the Lessons Learned programmes, especially for the training of new Chief Administrative Officers and Chiefs of General Services, Finance and Travel before being sent on mission assignments.

International Police Task Force (IPTF)

During 1999, the authorized strength of UNMIBH's International Police Task Force remained at 2,057. However, its actual strength was reduced during the year, mainly due to redeployment to the United Nations Interim Administration in Kosovo (see p. 357). In December, IPTF's strength stood at 1,795.

IPTF continued to restructure and reform the police services in the Federation and Republika Srpska and to monitor the local police. Together with more specialized monitoring, such as co-location and support for local investigations, basic monitoring continued to be the core task of the majority of its officers. The training and certification programme continued to help promote the principles and practices of democratic policing and the depoliticization of the police. IPTF also continued, with SFOR support, to conduct weapons inspections in police facilities, which led to the confiscation of hidden weapons.

Following an incident in Foca in January, in which a crowd became violent and damaged the IPTF station, equipment and two vehicles and injured four IPTF monitors, UNMIBH began a Mission-wide assessment of the vulnerability of IPTF stations and was conducting threat assessments, as well as a review of communications equipment and training.

IPTF pursued its advisory programme rigorously through co-location at all command and functional levels in the Federation and the Republika Srpska police structures, identifying 800 co-location positions to provide advice on management, operational and specialized issues to the local police. It continued specialized training in traffic control, public order and major incident management, organized crime, drug control and dog handling. (See also p. 315 for further information on IPTF activities.)

Mine clearance

The High Representative reported that more than 500 houses, 1.8 million square metres of agricultural land and 26,000 square metres in urban areas were demined in 1999 [S/2000/376]. Nevertheless, he stated in his November report [S/1999/1115] that some 750,000 mines remained unaccounted for in Bosnia and Herzegovina and he estimated that it would take 25 to 30 years to clear most minefields, even if the current level of funding was maintained.

Through the Mine Action Centre and local civil defence organizations, UNHCR recruited six demining teams to survey and mark minefields and undertake demining in priority return areas, the Secretary-General reported in September [S/1999/989]. The Mine Action Board of Donors for Bosnia and Herzegovina concluded a comprehensive review of the entire framework for mine action in the country and made recommendations to strengthen mine action structures and reduce costs. Further financial support would be required to provide capacity-building and technical assistance to the local Demining Commission and mine-action centres, as recommended by the review team, the Secretary-General said.

Civil affairs

In his March report [S/1999/284], the Secretary-General stated that UNMIBH's Civil Affairs Unit had intensified efforts in support of the Mission's core tasks of police and judicial reform by participating in minority recruitment working groups and cooperating with IPTF advisers to cantonal ministries and public security centres. It represented UNMIBH in inter-agency and inter-regional working groups established to address common problems in the Travnik, Mostar, Ljubuski and Livno cantons and worked closely with IPTF and the judicial system assessment programme in developing the weekly report. Two officers were assigned to work wholly on implementation of the Republika Srpska restructuring agreement. The Civil Affairs Training Unit expanded its orientation programme to include all civilian staff and IPTF officials. In June [S/1999/670], the Secretary-General reported that the Civil Affairs Unit had worked closely with IPTF in monitoring border crossings during the recent influx of refugees from FRY. The Civil Affairs Project Unit worked with IPTF on the development of a multi-ethnic border service, minority police recruitment and community policing. It had begun to identify donors to win commitments for assistance in the retraining and employment of demobilized soldiers. Officers were increasingly assisting the UNMIBH judicial system assessment project as it focused on political interference in the judiciary and the monitoring of trials involving accusations of corruption among senior politicians.

Federation issues

The High Representative reported in May [S/1999/524] that the political scene in the Federation was dominated by increasing Croat complaints regarding the situation of the Bosnian Croat people within the Federation and by a deteriorating budget situation. The murder of the Deputy Minister of the Interior in March was a severe blow to the confidence, especially of the Bosnian Croat community. In early February, Bosnian Croat war veterans' organizations launched a campaign against the international community and promoted the concept of a Bosnian Croat "third entity".

In July [S/1999/798], the High Representative reported that the "third entity" discussion had disappeared from the agenda, although the distribution of leaflets in Mostar immediately after the start of the air strikes against FRY (see p. 342) was a sign that it could resurface at any time. Nevertheless, the Croat member of the Presidency, Ante Jelavic, was doing his best to demonstrate moderate behaviour. The Special Relations Agreement between Croatia and the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina was approved by the Federation Parliament on 7 May. Significant progress was achieved in developing the annexes to the Agreement, two of which had been signed by both parties, while the remaining proposed annexes had been exchanged and negotiations were nearing completion.

The functioning of the Federation's institutions continued to be a matter of concern. The obstructive behaviour of the Bosnian Croat hardliners in the Federation House of Peoples halted the work of Parliament for almost a month. A main issue in the Federation was corruption. The High Representative said he had taken action to accelerate anti-fraud activities, including the dismissal of the Tuzla canton Minister of the Interior for failure to act. Implementation of the Federation property laws continued to be slow and difficult. The administrative bodies responsible for resolving property claims were still subject to political pressure, often refusing to issue decisions or order the eviction of the current occupants of claimed housing. Only small numbers of double-occupancy cases were being resolved and there was little indication, outside Sarajevo canton, that the legal and administrative mechanisms for return could function without heavy international pressure. Creating conditions for sustainable returns continued to be a major challenge, requiring considerable effort and resources. Municipal authorities took little or no responsibility for providing basic services to returnees, particularly in Croat municipalities in Herzegovina. High-level non-implementation in the mixed cantons was a serious problem. In particular, the problem of filling positions in the Ministry of the Interior in Travnik canton had not been resolved. The situation in Mostar had not seen any significant improvement either, due to obstruction on both sides. Since early April, phase I returns (to empty and damaged private property) and assessment visits involving Bosniacs and Serbs had gathered pace, but Croats still showed a marked reluctance to return. Resolving double occupancy, which was particularly bad in the Mostar area and endemic in West Mostar, was the major stumbling block to the return process. While the legal framework to resolve double occupancy was in place, political obstruction and ineffective municipal housing offices made the issue a particularly difficult one to resolve.

In November [S/1999/1115], the High Representative said that the overall situation remained difficult and complicated. The Federation House of Peoples often found its work delayed by the inability of the Bosniac and Croat representatives to work together. The security situation remained stable, albeit with occasional incidents. In October, Radio Mostar's operations were suspended for three months after broadcasting calls for Bosnian Croat war veterans to mass during an SFOR operation seeking information on alleged illegal activities. Tensions in Drvar rose following Serb returns to the town, resulting in the duly-elected Serb mayor being unable to carry out his duties. The High Representative and the head of the OSCE mission replaced him and the Croat deputy mayor who had been a source of obstruction. Recognizing that the Drvar problem reflected much broader political circumstances, the High Representative also removed the cantonal Minister of Justice from office and strongly warned the cantonal Minister of the Interior that further obstruction of returns would lead to his dismissal also. On 20 July, the mayor of Sanski Most was suspended pending investigations into corruption charges. Mostar remained in serious deadlock; the persistent refusal of the Croats and Bosniacs to work together at the cantonal level reduced any possibility of a functional city administration and embodied the general dysfunction in the Federation structures.

In September, the education issue returned to the forefront. With more returns in the Federation, there were more minority communities that needed to provide education for their children and who could not or would not attend a local school run by another constituent people. The issue cut across all constituent peoples and had not been handled well by any of the municipalities. The Office of the High Representative was working with international experts to resolve the problem on a Federation-wide basis.

In a later report [S/2000/376], the High Representative said that, on 29 November, he and the OSCE head of mission had dismissed 22 public officials throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina for serious and persistent obstruction of the Peace Agreement; those officials were also barred by the Provisional Election Commission from running in future elections.

Republika Srpska issues

The High Representative reported during 1999 on issues related specifically to Republika Srpska, the entity of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina where primarily Bosnian Serbs resided.

Reports of High Representative (February and May). In his February report [S/1999/139], the High Representative expressed concern that, over four months after the elections [YUN 1998, p. 339], the new President, Nikola Poplasen, had failed to nominate a candidate for Prime Minister who could command a majority in the National Assembly. The Assembly deputies had clearly expressed their support for the current Prime Minister, Milorad Dodik, but President Poplasen refused to nominate him, violating normal democratic procedures and damaging the process of implementation of the Peace Agreement.

In May [S/1999/524], the High Representative reported that, on 5 March, he had removed Mr. Poplasen from office because he had abused his power and blocked the will of the people by hindering the implementation of the election results, refusing to abide by the National Assembly's decisions, consistently impeding the formation of a legitimate government and attempting to trigger instability in Republika Srpska, putting peace at risk. That decision coincided with the Arbitral Tribunal's decision on Brcko (see p. 324). The NATO air campaign in FRY had a significant impact on implementation in Republika Srpska, bringing it to a standstill. Most international staff had to withdraw temporarily from the territory, and the buildings of several embassy offices, international organizations and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) were damaged or destroyed. Mr. Poplasen and other hardliners attempted to exploit the strength of feeling on the Brcko decision and the NATO action to reinforce their positions. The High Representative had urged a freeze on all major political developments, a policy supported by almost all political parties. The National Assembly adopted the Law on Amnesty, which the then-President Poplasen had refused to sign into law.

Communications. In a 5 March statement [S/1999/253], FRY declared Mr. Poplasen's removal an illegitimate and arbitrary act and a gross violation of the Peace Agreement and the Constitutions of Republika Srpska and Bosnia and Herzegovina. The High Representative's action should be considered null and void, as the legally elected President of Republika Srpska could be removed from office only by its citizens and not by international officers. On 11 March [A/53/861-S/1999/270], FRY said that the decisions dismissing President Poplasen and on the Brcko Arbitral Tribunal (see below) seriously devalued and threatened the stabilization of the peace process and the results and progress achieved in the establishment of Bosnia and Herzegovina. It called on the Steering Board to convene an emergency session of PIC to reverse those decisions and re-establish the situation in compliance with the Peace Agreement and the Constitutions of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Republika Srpska.

Reports of High Representative (July and November). In July [S/1999/798], the High Representative reported that although the NATO campaign against FRY had provoked a strong negative reaction, it did not destabilize Republika Srpska. All parties, except former President Poplasen's Radical Party, honoured the agreement to maintain the status quo, allowing the Dodik caretaker Government to continue to function. International assistance mitigated the economic impact of the crisis in FRY, which had done serious damage to Republika Srpska's economic and social situation. The process of return continued, despite the effect of the NATO campaign and concern about the security of returnees in Republika Srpska. There was a small but significant number of returns in eastern Republika Srpska.

The position of President remained vacant as Vice-President Sarovic remained reluctant to take over the office of President unless Mr. Poplasen resigned of his own accord. In the absence of a President capable of nominating a new Prime Minister, the Dodik Government would stay in power until a compromise could be reached. In order to speed up the legislative process in Republika Srpska, the High Representative decided that during the vacuum in the Presidency, the signature of the President would not be required for the publication of adopted laws in the official gazette.

In November [S/1999/1115], the High Representative reported on a number of important developments: the Revised Annex to the Brcko Final Award was announced on 18 August; there was increased pressure from the Federation-based coalition, KCD, on the SLOGA coalition (the three Serb government parties) to participate in the Republika Srpska Government; the Supreme Chief of the Armed Forces, General Talic, was arrested for alleged war crimes (see p. 1215); and deposed President Poplasen tried but failed to dismiss the National Assembly. Despite those events, and a generally unstable political situation, Republika Srpska remained calm. The SLOGA Government distanced itself from the Milosevic regime in FRY and radical notions of a "Greater Serbia". Vice-President Sarovic hinted his willingness to assume the Presidency, but the High Representative did not believe that that would serve the interests of Republika Srpska or political stability in Bosnia and Herzegovina in general. Failure of the two Serb parties to comply with requirements for certification for the April 2000 municipal elections by the 22 October deadline resulted in their not being allowed to participate in those elections.

Brcko and the inter-entity boundary line

Final Arbitral Award

On 5 March [S/1999/524], the Presiding Arbitrator for the Brcko Arbitral Tribunal announced the Final Award on Brcko, which stipulated that the pre-war Brcko municipality (or opstina), which the 1995 Peace Agreement [YUN 1995, p. 544] left divided between the two entities, would be re-assembled as a self-governing "neutral district". While most Bosniac and Croat political leaders accepted the Final Award's provisions, virtually all Serb leaders resisted them. The Republika Srpska National Assembly passed a resolution denouncing the Final Award and Serb political parties held protest rallies in Brcko.

FRY, on 6 March [S/1999/243], pointed out that the decision of the Presiding Arbitrator to declare Brcko a district under the sovereignty of Bosnia and Herzegovina had no grounds under the Peace Agreement. FRY considered that the Tribunal's decisions might only refer to the disputed part of the inter-entity boundary line in the area of Brcko, and not to the status of the "Brcko opstina", which was not mentioned anywhere in the Agreement. The decision created in Bosnia and Herzegovina a de facto third entity and represented a flagrant violation of the Agreement and law in general. FRY said that the decision should be reconsidered to ensure unprejudiced deliberations and to bring back the proceedings within the framework of the mandate established by the Peace Agreement.

On 5 March [S/1999/263], the EU issued a statement, in which it welcomed the Arbitral Tribunal's decision and called on the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in neighbouring countries to live up to their commitment and seize the opportunity to build a self-sustaining peace.

On 11 March [A/53/861-S/1999/270], the FRY Federal Minister for Foreign Affairs called on the members of the Steering Board to convene an emergency session of PIC to reverse the decision.

On 18 August [S/1999/1115], following consultations between the Presiding Arbitrator and interested parties, the Revised Annex to the Brcko Final Award was issued, drawing to a close the arbitration process, which began in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 293]. NATO air strikes over FRY delayed the Brcko Supervisor's plans to implement the Final Award for over four months because the Bosnian Serbs refused to cooperate while the air campaign continued. However, as of mid-summer there seemed to be a growing acceptance of the Award among the Bosnian Serb inhabitants of the municipality, but the Bosnian Serb political parties continued to be grudging in their support.

On 7 December [S/2000/376], the Statute of the Brcko District of Bosnia and Herzegovina was made public.

Returns

Minority returns in Bosnia and Herzegovina took place in much greater numbers in 1999 (an estimated 80,000 to 90,000) compared to 1998 (35,000 to 40,000). Many of the returns were spontaneous and in defiance of political obstruction [S/2000/376]. The Property Law Implementation Plan, launched on 27 October, imposed harmonized property legislation in both entities and there was a marked increase in property repossession across the country. Progress was steady in the Bosniac areas of the Federation and in much of Republika Srpska. That progress was in large part due to concerted efforts by the key international agencies to systematize and depoliticize the process. However, obstruction remained at all levels. Problems of administrative integration following return remained, including reconnection to basic utilities, access to documentation, pensions, schooling or prior employment. The Refugee and Reconstruction Task Force would, as a priority, be working with the Economic Task Force to develop economic opportunities for sustaining minority returns.

The return of the displaced within Bosnia and Herzegovina remained inextricably linked to refugee movements elsewhere in the Balkans, particularly Croatia and FRY. Croatian Serbs in Republika Srpska, many of whom wished to return to Croatia and whose movement would free space for Bosniac and Croat return, were of particular concern. However, the procedures for return to Croatia remained obstructive and a complete overhaul was required to enable Croatian Serb refugees to exercise their right to return and instill confidence in the return process.

Human rights

In May [S/1999/524], the High Representative reported an increase in the number of assessment visits by potential returnees, which passed without incident across Bosnia and Herzegovina, but incidents of return-related violence continued to be reported. Attacks on representatives of the international community and minority returnees to Republika Srpska, particularly in Prijedor and Modrica, followed the commencement of NATO air strikes over FRY. IPTF, in January, placed all members of the Stolac Police Administration on three-month probation due to its inadequate response to more than 70 incidents of returnee-related violence and intimidation. IPTF also continued to monitor the investigation of the cantonal police into the murder by bombing of Bosnian Croat police officers in the Travnik area.

In July [S/1999/798], the High Representative reported improvements in the implementation of decisions of the Human Rights Chamber and recommendations of the Ombudsperson. The Federation and the Office of the High Representative agreed on legislative changes to eliminate human rights violations associated with military apartments. Investigation into the events surrounding the Mostar incident in February 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 307] finally took place, and the report of the investigation was transferred to the local prosecutor for action. Difficulties were anticipated in the implementation of decisions requiring the eviction of current occupants of previously abandoned accommodation.

On 1 July [S/1999/1115], the High Representative imposed certain amendments on the Federation's Law on Sale of Apartments with Occupancy Rights in order to implement the decisions of the Human Rights Chamber concerning former Yugoslav National Army apartments.

Implementation of the Textbook Review Project [YUN 1998, p. 340] progressed slowly. The Ministers of Education of both entities agreed to instruct their experts to draw up guidelines regarding the resolution of disputes over basic terminology and the removal of generally offensive material. By the autumn of 1999, the first phase of the textbook review had achieved mixed results. The best level of compliance with the terms of the Textbook Review Agreement was achieved in the Bosniac part of the Federation, followed by the Croat part and finally by Republika Srpska.

The High Representative was concerned by reports of persistent discrimination in economic and social rights. His Office established a Coordinating Group on Economic and Social Rights, which was considering, among many crucial issues, ways to address discrimination in employment.

Judicial reform

In March [S/1999/284], the Secretary-General reported that officers of the UNMIBH judicial system assessment programme, approved by Security Council resolution 1184(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 342], had been deployed to all seven UNMIBH regions to examine institutional, technical and political aspects of the judiciary, paying special attention to the application of new criminal legislation. The programme worked closely with the UNMIBH Human Rights Office and IPTF in developing a strategy on trial monitoring, improving the enforcement of court judgements and developing non-compliance procedures for judicial officials. The programme also developed a database on the Bosnia and Herzegovina judiciary and made proposals to the Office of the High Representative for strengthening the budgeting system, for enhancing administrative law and procedure, and for a pilot study on land registry in the Mostar area.

By June [S/1999/670], the programme's emphasis had changed to issues of special importance, including enforcement of court orders, the security of judges and witnesses, the early phase of the criminal process, planning the implementation of the Final Award on Brcko (see p. 324) and operational involvement in trial monitoring. The report on the first three months of the programme concluded that there were substantial institutional deficiencies, and although further legislative change was required, that alone would not remove the main impediments to the rule of law, which were rooted in the political environment of the court system. Following the completion of the first phase, the programme began to look at the broad, problematic areas of discrimination, the independence of the judiciary, inter-entity cooperation, delays in court proceedings and enforcement of court orders.

The Secretary-General stated in September [S/1999/989] that assessments by the programme had made local judicial officials sensitive to political factors affecting judicial performance, and its work had produced immediate and direct results in judicial administrative and institutional matters.

By December [S/1999/1260], UNMIBH had completed baseline assessments of the functioning of most of the judicial system in Bosnia and Herzegovina, which indicated a grave lack of judicial independence, overt political interference and intimidation of judicial officials and substantial court inefficiencies, all of which undermined public confidence and impeded the return of minorities to their pre-war homes of origin. UNMIBH experts were instrumental in improving court efficiency and practice in areas such as the appointment of judicial officials to long-vacant posts; helping to organize the first inter-entity judiciary meetings since the war to resolve some of the backlog of cases related to property and employment; supporting the prosecution of terrorism and corruption cases; improving the ethnic composition of courts in ethnically mixed cantons; promoting the transfer of the jurisdiction of minor offence courts to the appropriate level; and assisting with the drafting of laws and codes on criminal procedure, courts, and judicial and prosecutorial services.

The High Representative, in November [S/1999/1115], reported that the working groups in both entities responsible for proposing draft laws had completed the drafting of laws to establish an independent judiciary. The Federation Law on Judicial and Prosecutorial Service had been accepted by the Government and was pending action in Parliament. In Republika Srpska, the Law on Courts and Court Service was being reviewed by Council of Europe experts, following which it would be submitted to the National Assembly. The comprehensive judicial reform strategy was completed and presented to the PIC Steering Board in July. It was the road map to the international community's future efforts in judicial reform. In August, laws imposed by the Office of the High Representative regarding the investigation and prosecution of serious crime in the Federation came into effect. Those laws enhanced the authority of the Federation prosecutor in prosecuting Federation-level crimes and in directing and taking charge of prosecutions in cantonal courts.

Economic reform and reconstruction

In May [S/1999/524], the High Representative stated that despite the NATO strikes against FRY, donor commitment in Bosnia and Herzegovina had not faltered. Ongoing projects continued, although at a slower pace in Republika Srpska due to travel restrictions and the closure of international offices. Many reform initiatives and negotiations virtually came to a standstill in early March due to events in Republika Srpska and the Croatian moratorium following the death of the Federation Deputy Minister of the Interior (see p. 322). The reconstruction effort continued at a steady pace, with important projects under implementation in the transport, energy, water and housing sectors.

In July [S/1999/798], the High Representative reported that the Republika Srpska Government had estimated that, as a result of the NATO air strikes, some 30,000 jobs had been put at risk, principally by the disruption of Republika Srpska exports to FRY, its key trading partner before the crisis. The decline in production and trade affected public revenues and social services. Direct budgetary support (from the United States in particular, but also Denmark) had minimized the effects of the air strikes on the overall political and social situation, but the effect of the crisis would be difficult to overcome in the short term. The fifth donors' conference (Brussels, 20-21 May) pledged $1,052 million and met the target of $5.1 billion, under the Priority Reconstruction Programme. The funding requirement excluded the cost of the impact of the Kosovo crisis, estimated to be $90 million for both entities. On 21 June, the Central Bank of Bosnia and Herzegovina celebrated the first anniversary of the KonvertibleMarka (KM). Increased use of the KM had expanded internal trade and bolstered economic activities. On 3 June, the Federation adopted amendments to the Law on the Internal Payment System, intended to abolish the monopoly position of the Payment Bureaux over domestic payment transactions. A team of experts developed a strategic plan for the transfer of the Payment Bureaux functions to the appropriate governmental institutions and commercial banks. As of 15 May, the customs policy of Bosnia and Herzegovina was being uniformly applied throughout the country. From 22 April, both entities ceased applying preferential customs treatment to imports from Croatia to the Federation and from FRY to Republika Srpska. A major step forward was the agreement on the harmonization of excise tax rates, signed by the entities on 8 June.

In November [S/1999/1115], the High Representative said that the International Monetary Fund had extended the standby arrangement for Bosnia and Herzegovina, increasing it by a further $23 million to assist the country in dealing with the economic repercussions of the Kosovo crisis. The World Bank approved two balance-of-payments support operations: the second public finance structural adjustment credit for $72 million; and the enterprise and bank privatization credit for $50 million.

The Secretary-General reported in June [S/1999/670] that the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) continued to focus on capacity-building, mobilization of resources and implementation of projects for mine clearance, area-based reconstruction and development and short-term employment generation. UNDP was also implementing village employment and environmental programmes. It fielded a team of consultants to formulate an integrated recovery programme for Brcko, in support of the implementation of the Final Award (see p. 324).

Media issues

The High Representative reported in November [S/1999/1115] that, in response to the continued failure of the Bosnia and Herzegovina authorities to address deficiencies in the advancement of freedom of expression, he had issued on 30 July a decision on restructuring the public broadcasting system. It established a legal framework for public radio and television to serve the needs of all citizens and created a new Public Broadcasting Service to succeed the existing Radio and Television of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The High Representative also imposed the Law on the Radio-Television of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, based on the version of the law forwarded by the Federation Government.

A decision on freedom of information and decriminalization of libel and defamation, which sought to ensure full respect for freedom of expression, promote media freedom and allow citizens access to information about the work of governmental bodies, was also issued on 30 July. It required that, by the end of 1999, both entities adopt new legislation treating libel and defamation as civil offences. On 31 August, a decision was issued to ensure that the publicly funded radio and television served the interests of the citizens of Republika Srpska by amending the relevant law and requiring the National Assembly to adopt a new comprehensive law on the entity public broadcaster by February 2000.

Srebrenica

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/35 [YUN 1998, p. 343], the Secretary-General submitted a comprehensive report [A/54/549] on the events dating from the establishment of the safe area of Srebrenica on 16 April 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 451] until the endorsement of the Peace Agreement by the Security Council in resolution 1031(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 548].

The Secretary-General said the tragedy that occurred after the fall of Srebrenica was shocking for the magnitude of the crimes committed and because the enclave's inhabitants believed that the Council's authority, the presence of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) peacekeepers and the might of NATO's air power would ensure their safety. Instead, the Bosnian Serb forces ignored the Council, pushed aside UNPROFOR troops and overran the safe area of Srebrenica, assessing correctly that air power would not be used against them. They proceeded to depopulate the territory within 48 hours and executed and buried thousands of men and boys within a matter of days, while their leaders negotiated with the international community.

The Secretary-General said that many of the errors the United Nations made flowed from its well-intentioned effort to keep the peace and apply the rules of peacekeeping when there was no peace to keep. Knowing that any other course of action would jeopardize the lives of the troops, the Council and Member States tried to create or imagine an environment in which the tenets of peacekeeping could be upheld, to stabilize the situation on the ground through ceasefire agreements and to eschew the use of force, except in self-defence. The international community's response to the war in Bosnia and Herzegovina, comprising an arms embargo, humanitarian aid and the deployment of a peacekeeping force, was a poor substitute for more decisive and forceful action to prevent the unfolding horror, the Secretary-General stated. None of the conditions for the deployment of peacekeepers had been met: there was no peace agreement, not even a functioning ceasefire, and there was no clear will to peace and no clear consent by the belligerents. It had become clear that the ability to adapt mandates to the reality on the ground was of critical importance to ensuring that the appropriate force under the appropriate structure was deployed. None of that flexibility was present in the management of UNPROFOR.

There was neither the will to use decisive air power against Serb attacks on the safe areas, nor the means on the ground to repulse them. Two of the safe areas, Srebrenica and Zepa, were demilitarized to a far greater extent than any of the others. However, instead of enhancing their security, it only made them easier targets for the Serbs. The failure to fully comprehend the extent of the Serb war aims might explain in part why the Secretariat and the peacekeeping mission did not react more quickly and decisively when the Serbs initiated their attack on Srebrenica. In fact, the Council was given the impression that the situation was under control and many believed that to be the case. Some instances of incomplete and inaccurate information being given to the Council could be attributed to problems with reporting from the field, but in other instances the reporting might have been illustrative of a more general tendency to assume that the parties were equally responsible for the transgressions that occurred. It was not clear, in any event, that the provision of more fully accurate information to the Council would have led to appreciably different results. In the end, the Bosnian Serb war aims were repulsed on the battlefield and not at the negotiating table, yet the Secretariat had convinced itself that the broader use of force by the international community was beyond its mandate and undesirable.

The fall of Srebrenica was replete with lessons for the Organization and its Member States: when peacekeeping operations were used as a substitute for political consensus they were likely to fail; and peacekeepers should never be deployed where there was no ceasefire or peace agreement, or told to use their peacekeeping tools—lightly armed soldiers in scattered positions—to impose the ill-defined wishes of the international community by military means. If the necessary resources were not provided, and the political, military and moral judgements were not made, the job simply could not be done. Protected zones and safe areas should be demilitarized and established by the agreement of the belligerents, as in the case of the "protected zones" and "safe havens" recognized by international humanitarian law, or they should be truly safe areas, fully defended by a credible military deterrent.

The responsibility for allowing that tragic course of events by its prolonged refusal to use force in the early stages of the war was shared by the Council, the Contact Group and other Governments, which contributed to that delay, as well as by the Secretariat and the mission in the field. Clearly, however, the primary and most direct responsibility lay with the architects and implementers of the attempted genocide in Bosnia. The cardinal lesson of Srebrenica was that a deliberate and systematic attempt to terrorize, expel or murder an entire people should be met decisively with all necessary means, and with the political will to carry the policy through to its logical conclusion.

The Secretary-General concluded that through error, misjudgement and an inability to recognize the scope of the evil, the United Nations failed to help save the people of Srebrenica from the Serb campaign of mass murder, crystallizing a truth understood only too late by the United Nations and the world at large: that Bosnia was as much a moral cause as a military conflict.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/119 [draft: A/54/L.63/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 42].

thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement"), signed in Paris on 14 December 1995,

Also welcoming the efforts for the respect, promotion and protection of human rights and the strengthening of the rule of law in all of Bosnia and Herzegovina and for the development of the common institutions that will ensure that Bosnia and Herzegovina functions as an integrated modern State, accountable to its citizens,

Supporting those institutions and organizations of Bosnia and Herzegovina which are engaged in the implementation of the Peace Agreement and the process of reconciliation and reintegration, and noting, however, the insufficient progress by the common institutions of Bosnia and Herzegovina reported in the assessment of the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina before the Security Council on 1 November 1999,

Concerned by the continuing obstructions faced by refugees and displaced persons wishing to return to their pre-war homes, in particular in areas where they would be an ethnic minority, emphasizing the need for all parties and the relevant States and international organizations to create the conditions necessary to facilitate a secure and dignified return, particularly in urban areas such as Sarajevo, Banja Luka and Mostar, and stressing the need for a regional approach to the issue of refugees and displaced persons,

Supporting fully the efforts of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, stressing the importance and urgency of the work of the International Tribunal as an element of the process of reconciliation and as a factor contributing to the maintenance of international peace and security in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in the region as a whole, demanding that States and parties to the Peace Agreement meet their obligations to cooperate fully with the Tribunal, as required by Security Council resolutions 827(1993) of 25 May 1993, 1022(1995) of 22 November 1995 and 1207(1998) of 17 November 1998, including with respect to surrendering persons sought by the Tribunal, and welcoming the efforts to secure compliance with the orders of the Tribunal, consistent with the Security Council mandate,

Having considered the sixth annual report of the International Tribunal, gravely concerned over the continued obstructionism of certain States and entities in the region with respect to execution of the Tribunal's orders and compliance with obligations under international law, as noted in the report, noting that thirty-five individuals named in public indictments still remain at large, most of them in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, and welcoming the efforts of the High Representative and the Commander of the multinational Stabilization Force in implementing the provisions of the Peace Agreement,

Welcoming the mutual recognition among all the successor States of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia within their internationally recognized borders, and stressing the importance of full normalization of relations, including the unconditional establishment of diplomatic relations among those States in accordance with the Peace Agreement and the settlement of all issues relating to the succession of the former Yugoslavia, in order to contribute to the achievement of lasting peace and stability in the area,

Also welcoming the successful summit meeting of heads of State and Government to launch the Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe in Sarajevo on 29 and 30 July 1999, and stressing that the Stability Pact offers a broad regional framework for further progress in Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Noting that democratization in the region will enhance the prospects for a lasting peace and help to guarantee full respect for human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in the region,

Stressing the importance of full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for the success of the peace efforts for the region, and calling upon the Governments and authorities in the region, as well as the relevant international organizations, to facilitate such full respect,

Welcoming the finalization of a draft of the permanent electoral law, expressing support for early adoption of the draft electoral law by the Parliament, noting that such adoption is a prerequisite for membership of the Council of Europe, and reaffirming the importance of genuine democratic representation of all three constituent peoples in all common institutions,

Stressing that the provision of reconstruction aid and financial assistance is conditional upon the parties meeting their obligations under the Peace Agreement,

Recognizing the importance of demining for the normalization of life and for the return of refugees and internally displaced persons,

Encouraging the efforts at reducing the military assets in line with the Agreement on Subregional Arms Control,

Welcoming the important efforts of the European Union and bilateral and other donors to provide humanitarian and economic assistance for reconstruction,

1. Expresses its full support for the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement"), which constitute the key mechanism for the achievement of a durable and just peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina, leading to stability and cooperation in the region and the reintegration of Bosnia and Herzegovina at all levels;

19. Reaffirms once again its support for the principle that all statements and commitments made under duress, in particular those regarding land and property, are wholly null and void, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Peace Agreement, and supports the effective engagement of the Commission for Real Property Claims of Displaced Persons and Refugees in compliance with its mandate;

20. Endorses the package of property law reforms imposed by the High Representative on 27 October 1999 aimed at harmonizing the laws in the two entities in order to enable refugees and displaced persons to return to their pre-war homes, as well as the subsequent action by the High Representative to ensure full implementation of the property implementation package, and calls upon the entity Parliaments to adopt those laws formally and to contribute actively to their speedy implementation;

Military aspects of Agreement

Stabilization Force

During 1999, the NATO Secretary-General reported 10 times to the Security Council, in accordance with resolution 1088(1996) [YUN 1996, p. 310], on the activities of SFOR, also known as Operation Joint Guard [S/1999/48, S/1999/212, S/1999/290, S/1999/419, S/1999/538, S/1999/642, S/1999/768, S/1999/864, S/1999/1041, S/1999/1237]. The strength of the Force, which operated under NATO's leadership, fell from 32,000 in January to 27,000 in December. The troops, which were deployed in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in Croatia, were contributed by all NATO members and 15 non-NATO countries. The Security Council, by resolution 1247(1999) of 18 June, authorized NATO member States to continue SFOR for a further period of 12 months (see p. 316). The SFOR Commander, in line with an October decision of the North Atlantic Council, began to implement the SFOR restructuring plan, which called for a gradual reduction in the size, role and profile of the Force. Military presence would be provided in critical areas and identified and emerging hot spots, and focused military support would be provided in areas critical to civil implementation. The restructuring would be accomplished in the spring of 2000.

During the year, SFOR continued to conduct surveillance and reconnaissance by ground and air patrols, and to monitor entity compliance with Security Council resolution 1160(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 369], prohibiting the transport of weapons and the movement of controlled petroleum products into FRY. It also supported IPTF by providing security for its inspection of local police stations and in conducting prison inspections, and provided assistance to international institutions in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including the Office of the High Representative.

In July, the Standing Committee on Military Matters (SCMM) agreed to establish a permanent secretariat for the Committee and two working groups to consider proposals for reducing the Republika Srpska and the Federation armed forces by 15 per cent by the end of the year, and to draw up proposals on a common security policy for Bosnia and Herzegovina. Final plans were announced in December for achieving the 15 per cent defence reduction. The weapons held by the 30 battalions to be disbanded would be stored centrally and subjected to joint monitoring and inspection by SFOR and the entity armed forces.

A working group was established to verify the reductions and to agree on plans for storage of weapons. It would also initiate work on a further round of defence reductions for 2000. Concerning the development of a common security policy, the final release of the document agreed to at the 8 December meeting of SCMM was pending.

Communications. FRY, on 4 April [S/1999/372], informed the Council President that SFOR had dynamited the section of the Belgrade-Bar railroad passing through Republika Srpska. It requested an emergency meeting of the Council to condemn the use of SFOR in the aggression against FRY. In letters of 29 May [S/1999/626] and 30 May [S/1999/629], FRY informed the Council of the violations of its border by SFOR and asked the Council to take measures to prevent a repetition of the violation of its sovereignty and territorial integrity. On 7 May [S/1999/531], Bosnia and Herzegovina forwarded to the Council President a letter from Zivko Radisic, Chair of the Presidency of Bosnia and Herzegovina, alleging that NATO was using its territory for operations directed at FRY, and a letter from Alija Izetbegovic, a member of the Presidency, disputing that allegation. Also attached was a letter from the High Representative to Mr. Radisic, noting that it was incumbent upon political leaders to behave within the spirit and the letter of the law.

Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY)

The situation in Kosovo, the southern province of the Republic of Serbia in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) (FRY), deteriorated rapidly in early 1999 as the warring parties—the forces of FRY and those of the Kosovo Liberation Army (KLA)—failed to implement the agreements reached in 1998 for ending the conflict. Following negotiations in Rambouillet and Paris, France, convened by the Contact Group on the Former Yugoslavia, the Kosovo Albanian delegation signed an Interim Agreement for Peace and Self-Government on 18 March. However, FRY did not sign, claiming that it had not been discussed and agreed to between the parties, and further efforts to persuade FRY President Slobodan Milosevic to accept a cease-fire and a political solution also failed.

On 24 March, NATO launched an air campaign against FRY, an action that sparked a debate as to its validity, as several countries felt that the NATO countries had embarked on a course of action without Security Council authorization.

As the humanitarian situation deteriorated dramatically, the Secretary-General reported that the scale of the disaster was beyond the capacity of the United Nations. The Security Council, on 14 May, invited UNHCR and other international humanitarian relief organizations to extend assistance to all parts of FRY.

In June, FRY accepted a peace plan, proposed by the EU, and the principles set out by the G-8 Foreign Ministers to end the violence. That led to the Council on 10 June authorizing the deployment in Kosovo, under UN auspices, of international civil and security presences. The international security presence (KFOR), with substantial NATO participation, and the United Nations Interim Administration in Kosovo (UNMIK) assumed responsibility for creating and maintaining a secure environment and for the province's civil administration, rehabilitation and economic recovery. On the certification that FRY had complied with resolution 1244(1999) and the military-technical agreement, including withdrawal of its forces, NATO terminated its air campaign. UNMIK and the various UN agencies, together with other international organizations and NGOs, worked to put Kosovo back on a firm footing.

However, a resurgence of violence, directed mainly against Serbs and other non-Albanian minorities in Kosovo, again heightened tension and security concerns as the year progressed.

Situation in Kosovo

Communications. On 2 January [S/1999/2], FRY said that it was important that the Secretary-General's latest report on the situation in Kosovo [YUN 1998, p. 386] had noted the improvement in the humanitarian situation and the unhindered access of humanitarian agencies to the province. However, it did not mention the situation of the Serbian civilians who were under tremendous KLA pressure not to return to their homes. FRY objected to the reference to KLA as "paramilitary units", and said that terrorists calling themselves "the Kosovo Liberation Army" had not been, nor could they be, a military or political factor, that was to say any party to any conflict, since international law had accorded no terrorists any status whatsoever. FRY expected UN Member States to abide by Security Council resolution 1160(1998) [ibid., p. 369] and cut off all forms of assistance, especially financial, to terrorists in Kosovo and Metohija. Accusations about FRY's excessive use of force were unsubstantiated. FRY continued to implement the Holbrooke-Milosevic agreement [ibid., p. 380] and the agreement with OSCE [ibid.,

p. 381]. It had demonstrated its commitment to solving Kosovo's and Metohija's problems through political means by calling for an immediate and unconditional resumption of dialogue on many occasions. However, the Albanian political parties continued to obstruct all such efforts. It was therefore not appropriate to apportion equal blame for the impasse in the political dialogue.

Albania, on 12 January [S/1999/55], stated that the Holbrooke-Milosevic agreement was far from being implemented. The strong Serb military and police presence in Kosovo was a source of insecurity and of incidents that were of growing concern. The Belgrade authorities were trying to impose a pax serba, which was demonstrated by their punitive operations and the continuation of the scorched-earth policy. Albania was facing increasingly aggressive acts of the FRY military, especially at its border with FRY. That, together with FRY's allegations of the existence of terrorists' training camps in Albania, bore the danger of intensifying Serb violence and the potential spreading of the conflict into Albania.

FRY, on 9 January [S/1999/24], reported that the previous day terrorists had ambushed a police patrol near the village of Suva Reka, killing three officers and wounding four. On the same day, eight unarmed Yugoslav Army members were abducted by KLA, north-west of Kosovska Mitrovica, and continued to be held hostage. Those attacks, confirmed by the OSCE Kosovo Verification Mission (KVM), represented a rising aggressiveness of terrorists in recent months aimed at blocking a political solution, provoking retaliation and creating an excuse for foreign intervention. FRY requested the Council to condemn the terrorist acts and call on Member States to treat KLA as a terrorist organization and to take measures immediately to stop any external support to it.

Reports of Secretary-General (January and March). The Secretary-General, reporting on 30 January [S/1999/99], said that the humanitarian and human rights situation in Kosovo remained grave. The October 1998 ceasefire [YUN 1998, p. 380] had reduced the number of internally displaced persons and civilian casualties, the use of heavy weaponry and the destruction of property and means of livelihood. However, violence, including violations of the ceasefire, continued and the human rights situation had further deteriorated, culminating in the massacre of Kosovo Albanians in Racak (see p. 334). The most disturbing new elements were the spread and transformation of the nature of that violence. Calculated acts of violence followed by retaliatory measures now occurred frequently in cities that had been notably exempt from violence. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) had observed that the transformation of the nature of the violence had reduced the geographic area of perceived safety. Assaultants selectively fired directly on urban sidewalks and cafes, as well as civilian passenger vehicles, and influential individuals and localities known for open-mindedness and flexibility in community relations were also surgically targeted. The responsibility for targeted killings was increasingly a matter of attribution by one side or another, and the perpetrators had not been brought to justice, suggesting that acts were committed with impunity. The Secretary-General cited a number of incidents between 2 and 13 January, directed mostly at Kosovo Albanians, and the 15 January Racak massacre. He also reported that the 8 January attack on a Yugoslav Army convoy north-east of Kosovska Mitrovica by Kosovo Albanian paramilitary units led to the largest build-up of infantry, armour and artillery since KVM's deployment in October 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 381].

Reports of arbitrary detention and systematic ill-treatment of persons in police detention and under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Justice continued, said the Secretary-General. OHCHR continued to monitor court proceedings on criminal charges of alleged terrorist and anti-State activity.

As to the humanitarian situation, UNHCR estimated that, as at 20 January, some 190,000 civilians remained displaced within Kosovo, the vast majority of whom were Kosovo Albanians, including some 5,000 displaced in late 1998. At least 20,000 were thought to have been moved to other parts of Serbia, and there were indications that the figure might be higher. Some 25,000 displaced were in the FRY Republic of Montenegro, 22,000 in Albania, 10,000 in Bosnia and Herzegovina, 3,000 in FYROM and an estimated 93,890 persons from FRY had sought asylum in other European countries, of whom 85 to 90 per cent were Kosovo Albanians.

The Secretary-General observed that violence since 24 December 1998, and in particular the Racak massacre on 15 January and subsequent events, had been a major setback for the humanitarian operation, just when KVM was beginning to help create and consolidate conditions for return of the internally displaced. Fear of fighting between the security forces and Kosovo Albanian paramilitary units and continued violence against civilians were the overriding obstacle to return and to its sustainability. He urged those in positions of public authority to put an end to the spiral of violence and seek the path of constructive dialogue.

In March [S/1999/293], the Secretary-General reported that, since 20 January, OHCHR had registered more than 65 cases of violent death, including one in custody. While clashes between Serbian security forces and Kosovo Albanian paramilitary units continued at a relatively lower level, civilians in Kosovo were increasingly becoming the main target of violent acts. Most violent incidents remained unclaimed, contributing to the climate of fear and insecurity, causing deep distrust among communities and adding to the humanitarian and social problems. Targeted violence against civilians was taking new and even more dangerous forms, such as increased terrorist acts against Serb and Albanian establishments in urban areas. The Secretary-General outlined major incidents occurring between 18 January and 17 February, including abductions.

Concerning detentions and trials, according to information released by the Serbian Public Prosecutor, 2,007 persons in Kosovo had been charged with criminal offences of terrorism, endangering the country's territorial integrity and seditious activity. Of those, 1,060 were in detention and 824 were under indictment.

The resumption of hostilities in January and February resulted in new displacements of population. Clashes in the Podujevo area prevented the return of some 15,000 displaced from about 17 villages. Serb and Albanian homes along the main Pristina-Podujevo road remained deserted, as intermittent fighting occurred 3 kilometres away, while in Drenica, Suva Reka, Stimlje, Prizren and Vucitrn, similar clashes led to new displacements of population. February was also marked by the continuing departure of the Serbian population from areas where they were in the minority or where clashes had occurred. According to information provided by the Serbian Commissioner for Refugees, 90 villages in central and western Kosovo had lost their entire Serbian population in recent months, while other towns had seen a reduction. Kosovo Albanians without identity documents were afraid to move from their villages for fear of harassment by the security forces. UNHCR was seeking to prevent further displacements.

Racak massacre

The Secretary-General, in his January report [S/1999/99], said that, between 15 and 18 January, fighting occurred in and around the village of Racak. On 15 January, Serb police and paramilitary units entered the village. On 16 January, KVM reported that the bodies of 45 Kosovo civilians, including three women, at least one child and several elderly men, were found. Many of the dead appeared to have been summarily executed, shot at close range in the head and neck.

On attempting to enter FRY to investigate the Racak deaths, the Chief Prosecutor of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY), Louise Arbour, was turned back at the border on 18 January. The FRY authorities continued to deny the Chief Prosecutor entry to Kosovo (seep. 336).

On 18 January, some autopsies were performed in the presence of KVM monitors. On 21 January, a Finnish forensic team performed autopsies on the remaining bodies and examined the autopsies done by Serb authorities before its arrival.

Communications. Responding to a statement by KVM head, William Walker, the Serbian President, in a 16 January statement [S/1999/51], said that when police attempted to arrest terrorists who had killed a police officer in the vicinity of Racak, terrorists attacked them with automatic weapons, portable launchers and mortars and the police responded. OSCE was immediately informed and an investigating team arrived at the scene but terrorists opened fire and prevented the on-site investigation. On 16 January, Mr. Walker, accompanied by foreign journalists and those from Albanian separatist newspapers, visited the scene and, in the absence of judicial and other State authorities, made a statement containing falsehoods and personal assessments that were totally baseless. The Serbian President accused Mr. Walker of deceiving world public opinion with fabrications to divert attention from terrorists, murderers and kidnappers and to once again protect them as he had been doing all along. It was another example not only of a one-sided approach but of protecting terrorism and the self-proclaimed terrorist KLA.

Albania, on 16 January [S/1999/52], said the incident showed Belgrade's unwillingness to cooperate with the international community. It was the latest in the chain of Serb carnages and was a well-planned and -executed policy of scorched land and ethnic cleansing. On the same date [S/1999/50], Albania requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider the massacre.

On 18 January [S/1999/56], FRY informed the Secretary-General that it had declared Mr. Walker persona non grata and ordered him to leave the country within 48 hours. FRY said it had done so because of Mr. Walker's unacceptable, unprincipled and insulting behaviour towards the Yugoslav State and authorities. It was determined to continue cooperation with KVM in accordance with the October 1998 agreement [YUN 1998, p. 380]. Annexed to the letter were details regarding the police search and arrest operations in Racak on 15 January. Mr. Walker's expulsion was later unconditionally frozen.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 January [meeting 3967], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/1999/2 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council strongly condemns the massacre of Kosovo Albanians in the village of Racak in southern Kosovo, Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, on 15 January 1999, as reported by the Kosovo Verification Mission of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe. It notes with deep concern that the report of the Mission states that the victims were civilians, including women and at least one child. The Council also takes note of the statement by the head of the Mission that the responsibility for the massacre lay with security forces of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, and that uniformed members of both the armed forces of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and Serbian special police had been involved. The Council emphasizes the need for an urgent and full investigation of the facts and urgently calls upon the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to work with the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 and the Mission to ensure that those responsible are brought to justice.

The Council deplores the decision by Belgrade to declare the head of the Mission, William Walker, persona non grata, and reaffirms its full support for Mr. Walker and the efforts of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe to facilitate a peaceful settlement. It calls upon Belgrade to rescind this decision and to cooperate fully with Mr. Walker and the Mission.

The Council deplores the decision by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to refuse access to the Prosecutor of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, and calls upon the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to cooperate fully with the International Tribunal in carrying out an investigation in Kosovo, in line with the call for cooperation with the Tribunal in Council resolutions 1160(1998) of 31 March 1998, 1199(1998) of 23 September 1998 and 1203(1998) of 24 October 1998.

The Council notes that, against the clear advice of the Mission, Serb forces returned to Racak on 17 January 1999 and that fighting broke out.

The Council considers that the events in Racak constitute the latest in a series of threats to the efforts to settle this conflict through negotiation and peaceful means.

The Council condemns the shooting of Mission personnel on 15 January 1999 and all actions endangering Mission and international personnel. It reaffirms its full commitment to the safety and security of the Mission personnel. It reiterates its demands that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the Kosovo Albanians cooperate fully with the Mission.

The Council calls upon the parties to cease immediately all acts of violence and to engage in talks on a lasting settlement.

The Council also strongly warns the Kosovo Liberation Army against actions which are contributing to tensions.

The Council considers all of these events to be violations of its resolutions and of relevant agreements and commitments calling for restraint. It calls upon all parties to respect fully their commitments under the relevant resolutions and affirms once again its full support for international efforts to facilitate a peaceful settlement on the basis of equality for all citizens and ethnic communities in Kosovo. The Council reaffirms its commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

The Council takes note with concern of the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees that five-and-a-half-thousand civilians fled the Racak area following the massacre, showing how rapidly a humanitarian crisis could again develop if steps are not taken by the parties to reduce tensions.

The Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Further communications. Qatar, in its capacity as Chairman of the Islamic Group at the United Nations, conveyed to the Council and the General Assembly on 26 January [S/1999/76, A/53/807] the Group's condemnation of the massacre of innocent Muslim civilians at Racak and the ongoing Serbian policy of ethnic cleansing in Kosovo.

On 16 March [S/1999/383], the ICTY President reported continuing and additional instances of FRY's refusal to permit the ICTY Prosecutor to enter Kosovo to investigate alleged crimes committed in that territory pursuant to Council resolution 1160(1998), in particular its failure on 18 January to permit the entry of the Prosecutor and her team of investigators to investigate alleged criminal activity in Racak. The Prosecutor had requested the Tribunal President to notify the Council of FRY's failure to comply with its obligations under article 29 of the Tribunal's Statute [YUN 1993, p. 439]. The Tribunal President reported that, on 12 February, he had invited FRY to respond no later than 26 February, but had received no such response. He urged the Council to take measures to bring FRY into compliance with its obligations under international law.

Monitoring activities

Arms embargo

In its March report [S/1999/216], the Security Council Committee established pursuant to Council resolution 1160(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 369], which imposed an arms embargo on FRY, including Kosovo, expressed concern at the serious violations of the embargo, which had resulted in continuing military resupply and reinforcement of Kosovar Albanian armed groups. It also recognized that, owing to the lack of a comprehensive monitoring mechanism, its information was limited. It urged States, particularly those neighbouring FRY, to make every effort to prevent the sale or supply to FRY, including Kosovo, of arms and related materiel and to prevent the arming, training and financing of terrorist activities there. The Committee was apprised of the interception of arms and munitions worth $1 million at the end of December 1998 by Croatia. Switzerland had also informed the Committee that blocks on the Kosovo Foundation bank accounts were withdrawn, and Germany reported that, while making efforts to curb dubious fundraising activities by Kosovar Albanians living in Germany, it had been unable to establish that the funds were intended to arm or train terrorists in Kosovo or to purchase weapons. Sweden informed the Committee that it was investigating mass media reports of the financing of KLA activities from Swedish territory.

The Secretary-General, in his March report on the situation in Kosovo [S/1999/293], recalled that he had stated in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 387] that the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP) (see p. 370) would contribute towards providing a useful framework for reporting on violations and for assisting the Committee. However, the termination of UNPREDEP's mandate would affect efforts to monitor implementation of resolution 1160(1998). Accordingly, the Council might wish to reconsider the modalities for the monitoring regime.

OSCE/NATO Verification Missions

On 26 February, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council the report [S/1999/214] of the OSCE Chairman-in-Office on the situation in Kosovo, covering mid-January to mid-February and submitted pursuant to Council resolutions 1160(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 369] and 1203(1998) [ibid., p. 382]. OSCE reported that the main areas of military tension remained the same: the Podujevo region in northern Kosovo, the Decani region in the west of the province and the area around Stimlje, south of Pristina. While the level of military conflict was reduced in February, KLA attacks on Serb police, isolated clashes and sporadic exchange of gunfire continued. Among the incidents reported by OSCE were serious breaches of the ceasefire towards the end of January in the Podujevo area. The continued KLA and security force stand-off in that area, with both sides digging trenches and preparing positions, had been a particular concern, and, though the fighting had subsided, neither side had withdrawn. On 29 January, 25 Kosovo Albanians and one Serb policeman were killed in the village of Rogovo. FRY authorities had agreed to a joint investigation of the incident by their specialists and the Finnish forensic team. Reports were received of KLA "policing" the Albanian community and administering punishments to those charged as collaborators with the Serbs. Several people said to be loyal to the Serbs were murdered in separate incidents in the area of Pec.

The OSCE presence in Albania, the OSCE Spillover Mission to Skopje, FYROM, and the OSCE Missions to Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia continued to follow closely the Kosovo conflict spillover potential. By mid-January, as the situation deteriorated in Kosovo, the activities of the Yugoslav forces along the border increased. Military planes and helicopters continuously patrolled the area, border posts and installations were reinforced and mines continued to be laid. Low KLA activity continued to take place in Albanian territory and crossing attempts by KLA units were reported, some of them resulting in deaths. There was little refugee movement across the border between Albania and FRY, although some cases of internal resettlement still occurred.

Albania had denied that it housed KLA bases and OSCE border monitoring confirmed lower levels of KLA presence, compared to the summer period. The FYROM northern border with FRY remained stable.

KVM continued to monitor the situation throughout Kosovo, verifying the maintenance of the ceasefire regime and investigating reports of violations, emplacement of roadblocks and checkpoints for purposes other than traffic control. It was also involved in activities to reduce tension, negotiating the release of hostages and engaging in confidence-building measures.

In March [S/1999/315], OSCE reported that the situation on the ground remained grave with localized clashes between KLA and Serb security forces. Unprovoked KLA attacks against the police continued and the number of casualties sustained by the security forces increased. A new area of military tension emerged at the border with FYROM. Military operations affecting the civilian population intensified in mid-March. Indiscriminate urban terrorist attacks against civilians continued and the number of security incidents involving OSCE personnel increased significantly. OSCE's ability to fulfil its task was seriously eroded. Intensive movement of Yugoslav Army convoys, including tanks and armoured personnel carriers, was observed within Kosovo since mid-February. The Yugoslav Army strengthened its positions in border areas and upgraded its defensive capabilities. KLA activity was also noted in certain areas of Kosovo. Due to the deteriorating security situation, the OSCE Chairman-in-Office, on 19 March, decided to temporarily withdraw the Mission from Kosovo to FYROM.

UNHCR reported that some 30,000 persons had fled their homes since 23 February and military operations in Prizren, Vucitrn and southern border areas had caused the displacement of as many as 18,000 people. There were at least 230,000 persons displaced within Kosovo, and the departure of Serbs and other minorities from Kosovo continued. The number of refugees from Kosovo had increased significantly; UNHCR and the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) had registered 4,000 people since the beginning of March.

The NATO Secretary-General, in a January report to the UN Secretary-General [S/1999/99, annex II], said that NATO senior military authorities visited President Milosevic on 19 January to underline its concern and reinforce the need for him to honour his obligations. Regrettably, he had failed to do so. The North Atlantic Council was accordingly assessing the situation and considering how best to help the international community achieve a political solution to the crisis. NATO also provided an assessment of compliance trends, which showed that neither side in the conflict had respected the ceasefire and there had been a number of kidnappings and attacks by KLA elements. The response of the Yugoslav Army and Special Police was disproportionate and excessive, particularly the operations conducted from 10 to 16 January.

On 23 March [S/1999/338], the NATO Secretary-General reported that, following the withdrawal of KVM on 20 March, FRY had increased its military activities and was using excessive and wholly disproportionate force, thereby creating a further humanitarian catastrophe. He provided a further list of violations of Security Council resolutions 1199(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 377] and 1203(1998) [ibid., p. 382] during the period 16 January to 22 March 1999.

FRY, on 31 March [S/1999/367], said that the NATO Secretary-General's data citing instances of FRY's alleged non-compliance with Council resolutions were inaccurate, biased and malicious, and made no mention of the numerous instances of killings, kidnapping, mistreatment and other terrorist acts committed by the so-called KLA against civilians and members of the Yugoslav Army and security forces. KVM was withdrawn unilaterally. FRY had invested its best efforts to provide conditions for unhampered work by the Mission and had fulfilled its obligation towards it, including guarantees of full safety to its members.

Proposed framework for political settlement

Russian Federation/United States statement.
On 26 January, the Russian Federation's Minister for Foreign Affairs, Igor S. Ivanov, and the United States Secretary of State, Madeleine K. Albright, following their meeting in Moscow, issued a statement [S/1999/77] urging the two sides in the Kosovo conflict to work harder to achieve an interim political settlement providing substantial autonomy for Kosovo and to engage in meaningful negotiations for that purpose. Such a settlement should respect FRY's territorial integrity and sovereignty. Backing the efforts of Christopher Hill (United States) and Wolfgang Petritsch (Austria) [YUN 1998, p. 386], they said that they would continue to press the two sides to agree on such a political settlement, and would collaborate in the Contact Group (see below) towards that end.

Secretary Albright and Foreign Minister Ivanov expressed their complete commitment to the unimpeded functioning of KVM under Mr. Walker's leadership. All attacks on and threats against KVM should cease immediately, and FRY authorities and the media should create a supportive atmosphere for the activities of KVM and its head.

FRY should comply fully with Security Council resolutions, particularly with regard to police and military units, and its agreements with OSCE and other international entities without delay. Its authorities should cooperate fully with ICTY and conduct a full investigation of the Racak events with the Tribunal's participation. Judge Louise Arbour and the Tribunal's investigators should be allowed to enter and work in Kosovo and participate in that investigation.

The United States and the Russian Federation urged the Kosovo Albanians to fulfil all their obligations and commitments. Noting that KLA provocations had contributed significantly to the renewed deep tensions in Kosovo, they condemned such provocations and demanded that they end immediately and that measures be developed to discourage such activity. They called on the Serbian authorities to carry out the commitments in their statement of principles of a political settlement [YUN 1998, p. 381], in particular to mitigate the sentences of persons detained in connection with the Kosovo conflict and to provide due process to all detainees. The two sides should avoid actions that affected the civilian population and facilitate the work of international organizations and NGOs providing humanitarian assistance.

Contact Group meeting (29 January). The Ministers of the Contact Group on the Former Yugoslavia (France, Germany, Italy, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States) (London, 29 January) issued a statement [S/1999/96], in which they called on both sides to commit themselves to negotiation of a political settlement. To that end, they insisted that the parties accept that the basis for a fair settlement should include the principles set out by the Contact Group; considered that the proposals drafted by the negotiators contained the elements for substantial autonomy for Kosovo, which should be refined further to serve as the framework for agreement between the parties; and recognized that the negotiators had identified those points requiring final negotiation between the parties. The Contact Group agreed to summon representatives from the Federal Yugoslav and Serbian Governments and the Kosovo Albanians to Rambouillet, France, by 6 February to begin negotiations. It recognized the legitimate rights of other communities within Kosovo and would ensure that their interests were fully reflected in a settlement. It agreed that the participants should work to conclude negotiations within seven days, after which the negotiators would report to Contact Group Ministers, who would assess whether the progress made justified a further period of less than one week to bring the negotiations to a successful conclusion.

In the meantime, the Contact Group demanded that FRY: stop all offensive actions/repression in Kosovo; comply fully with the OSCE/FRY and the NATO/FRY agreements and relevant Council resolutions; promote the safe return of all those forced to flee their homes; cooperate fully with OSCE and permit KVM and its Chief of Mission to continue to carry out their responsibilities unhindered; cooperate fully with ICTY; conduct a full investigation of the Racak massacre with ICTY participation, allowing the Chief Prosecutor and Tribunal investigators to enter and work in Kosovo; identify and suspend the Yugoslav Army/Serbian Special Police officers operating in Racak at the time of the massacre until the results of the investigation became available; and mitigate the sentences of those imprisoned in connection with the conflict and provide due process to all detainees.

The Contact Group emphasized that compliance with the Council's relevant resolutions applied equally to the Kosovo Albanians, condemned all KLA provocations and insisted that all hostages be released. The Group believed that its framework met the legitimate aspirations of the Kosovo Albanians and demanded that their leaders rally behind negotiations to reach a settlement and end provocative actions. It asked the United Kingdom Foreign Minister to transmit those messages to Belgrade and Pristina. Negotiations on a political settlement should be completed within 21 days.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 January [meeting 3974], following consultations among members, the Security Council President made statement S/PRST/1999/5 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council expresses its deep concern at the escalating violence in Kosovo, Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. It underlines the risk of a further deterioration in the humanitarian situation if steps are not taken by the parties to reduce tensions. The Council reiterates its concern at attacks on civilians and underlines the need for a full and unhindered investigation of such actions. It calls once again upon the parties to respect fully their obligations under the relevant resolutions and to cease immediately all acts of violence and provocation.

The Council welcomes and supports the decisions of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of France, Germany, Italy, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America (the Contact Group), following their meeting in London on 29 January 1999, which aim at reaching a political settlement between the parties and establishing a framework and timetable for that purpose. The Council demands that the parties accept their responsibilities and comply fully with these decisions and requirements, as with its relevant resolutions.

The Council reiterates its full support for international efforts, including those of the Contact Group and the Kosovo Verification Mission of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, to reduce tensions in Kosovo and facilitate a political settlement on the basis of substantial autonomy and equality for all citizens and ethnic communities in Kosovo and the recognition of the legitimate rights of the Kosovo Albanians and other communities in Kosovo. It reaffirms its commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

The Council will follow the negotiations closely and would welcome members of the Contact Group keeping it informed about the progress reached therein.

The Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Related developments

On 1 February [S/1999/107], FRY transmitted to the Security Council President a communication from its Foreign Minister regarding a 30 January letter from the NATO Secretary-General to the President of FRY. That letter attached "a final warning" from NATO, in which it expressed support for the Contact Group's negotiation strategy, which, it said, was intended to halt the violence and support completion of the negotiations on an interim political settlement for Kosovo. Steps to that end should include acceptance by both parties to begin negotiations in Rambouillet by 8 February and their completion within the specified time frame; full and immediate observance of the ceasefire by both parties and by FRY authorities of their commitments to NATO, including bringing Yugoslav Forces and Police/Special Police force levels, posture and activities into strict compliance with the NATO/FRY October 1998 agreement [YUN 1998, p. 381]; and the ending of excessive and disproportionate use of force. If those steps were not taken, NATO was ready to take whatever measures were necessary. The North Atlantic Council had therefore agreed that the NATO Secretary-General might authorize air strikes against targets in FRY. A similar letter was sent to Ibrahim Rugova of the Democratic League of Kosovo.

FRY stated that the letter represented an open and clear threat of aggression and called on the President to inform Council members and to convene an emergency session of the Council to take appropriate measures under the Charter to prevent aggression against it.

On 4 February [S/1999/118], the National Assembly of the Republic of Serbia condemned NATO's threats. It reaffirmed its principles for resolving the Kosovo crisis: political means and dialogue; full respect for FRY's and Serbia's territorial integrity and sovereignty; full equality of all citizens, national communities and ethnic groups; solutions harmonized with Serbia's and FRY's Constitutions and international standards of human and civil rights and the rights of persons belonging to national communities; that Kosovo and Metohija would not be granted the status of a republic, but self-governance in line with international standards; non-acceptance of any measure that would attempt to secede Kosovo from Serbia; and non-acceptance of the presence of foreign soldiers in its territory under any pretext of implementing the achieved agreement. Serbia accepted the Contact Group's invitation for talks in France on 6 February and authorized the Government to designate its delegation to those talks.

The OSCE Chairman-in-Office, in his February report [S/1999/214], said that, after having accepted the invitations to the talks, representatives from both sides issued statements declaring that they would not abandon their stands or submit to dictates from the international community. They also announced that they would put forward their own plans and proposals.

On 9 February [S/1999/129], FRY reported attacks on two innocent civilians at the outskirts of Djakovica and the discovery of three other bodies in Kosovo and Metohija. Those acts, it said, demonstrated the opposition of the terrorists to a peaceful solution and their desire to undermine the talks in Rambouillet (see p. 340) and prevent an agreement from being achieved. On 18 February [S/1999/177], the President of the Republic of Serbia drew the attention of the Contact Group members, in the context of the talks in Rambouillet, to requests that FRY accept a document relating to foreign military troops on FRY territory. According to FRY, neither the document nor the issue had been discussed or approved by the Contact Group. While the Rambouillet meeting was proceeding, FRY was repeatedly subjected to threats of military aggression. The President was therefore seeking protection from any such requests and threats.

Belarus and Ukraine, in statements of 20 February [A/53/845-S/1999/208] and 19 February [S/1999/194], respectively, condemned the intention to use force to solve the problem of Kosovo and Metohija. Belarus said that it was important to preserve the negotiating process and to forestall any action that might jeopardize it.

Rambouillet Accords

Under the auspices of the Contact Group on the Former Yugoslavia, and as agreed in its 29 January statement [S/1999/96] (see p. 338), representatives from the Federal Yugoslav and Serbian Governments and representatives of the Kosovo Albanians met in Rambouillet, France, on 6 February under the co-chairmanship of France and the United Kingdom. The negotiations, which were suspended on 23 February, resumed in Paris on 15 March.

On 18 March, the Kosovo Albanian representatives signed the Rambouillet Accords: Interim Agreement for Peace and Self-Government in Kosovo, which was a three-year interim agreement providing for democratic self-government, and peace and security for everyone living in Kosovo. Security would be guaranteed by international troops deployed on the ground throughout Kosovo and an international meeting would be convened after three years to determine a mechanism for a final settlement.

However, the delegation of the Republic of Serbia refused to sign the Accords, signing instead its own text, "Agreement for Self-Government in Kosmet". The talks were adjourned on 19 March. On that day, OSCE withdrew KVM.

Rambouillet talks. The Security Council President, in a 23 February press statement [A/54/2], said that the Council took note of the conclusions of the Co-Chairmen of the Rambouillet Conference at the end of two weeks of intensive efforts aimed at reaching an agreement on substantial autonomy for Kosovo that respected FRY's national sovereignty and territorial integrity. The Council noted that, with the Rambouillet agreements, a political framework for substantial autonomy had been set out. It also noted the commitment of the parties to attend a conference covering all aspects of the implementation of those agreements, in Paris, on 15 March. It encouraged the parties to work constructively to that end and underlined that it was essential for them to refrain from any action that could jeopardize the achievements of the Rambouillet negotiations.

In a letter to the Contact Group Foreign Ministers [S/1999/177], Serbia's President Milan Milutinovic stated that in Rambouillet, Serbia had been asked to accept a military annex regarding foreign troops on FRY territory. That issue had not been discussed or approved by the Contact Group.

In his March report [S/1999/315], the OSCE Chairman-in-Office said that, on 3 March, the eight Kosovo Albanian political parties, including the Democratic League of Kosovo of Mr. Rugova, represented in a shadow "Parliament of the Republic of Kosovo", called on Kosovo Albanians to support the Rambouillet Accords. On 5 March, Mr. Rugova told a press conference in Pristina that, despite difficulties on the ground, wide-ranging efforts to build support for the Accords across the whole spectrum of the Kosovo Albanian community were continuing.

In a 5 March statement [S/1999/245], the Serbian delegation, in its own review of the Rambouillet talks and preparations for their resumption on 15 March, assessed that initial success towards a peaceful settlement of the Kosovo and Metohija issue had been achieved. However, a lot still needed to be done. A political agreement had not been adopted and was far from being signed soon. Some key provisions had been put forth unilaterally, contravening the Contact Group's principles, and there was an attempt only a few hours before the close of the talks to deliver documents that had not even been discussed by the Contact Group (annexes 2 and 7 dealing with police issues and troops).

Unfortunately, the United States, as well as some other Contact Group members, was claiming that the political agreement was practically adopted and only needed to be signed on 15 March, to be followed by talks on its implementation.

Requests were being made for the signing of an agreement whose major part had not been discussed either within the Contact Group or in the Rambouillet talks, for an interim agreement, the holding of a referendum after three years, the granting of full equality to the ethnic Albanian community alone and not to all ethnic communities in Kosovo and Metohija, and accepting a quasi-State in Serbia and Yugoslavia. Ethnic Albanian separatist parties were being asked to accept something they had been asking for for years: independence with the assistance of their NATO allies. On the other hand, a theory had been advanced that if Serbia did not sign, it would be seen as the party opposing the political settlement.

Serbia had been requested to accept: the President of Kosovo, the Constitution of Kosovo and Metohija and legislative powers of the Kosovo and Metohija Assembly (Parliament); a special judicial system comprising the constitutional and supreme courts of Kosovo and Metohija; harmonization with the agreement, namely, a change of the Serbian and Yugoslav Constitutions; the need for obtaining Kosovo and Metohija's consent for changing the province's borders and declaring a state of emergency; and the entire agreement as interim and the holding of another international conference after three years to consider the will of the people, namely, a referendum, in only one part of the Serbian State. In short, it was a diktat that called for an international protectorate with a number of major requests, which the State delegation could not possibly accept.

Serbia was ready to resume talks wherever a political settlement could be reached, but would not give up Kosovo and Metohija, or allow its secession or transformation into a third republic. The Co-Chairmen of the Rambouillet meeting had given only a partial picture of the meeting, covering up the failure of the organizers and especially the behaviour and positions of the ethnic Albanian delegation.

On 6 March [S/1999/244], the Serbian Republic President said that the attention of the Foreign Ministers of the Contact Group member States had been drawn to the manipulations and campaign to have representatives of the Albanian separatists' political parties sign the non-existent "Agreement". Serbia's delegation and some members of the Contact Group had dissociated themselves from the Agreement. Serbia rejected attempts to impose a policy of fait accompli and demanded that the Contact Group member States and the international community prevent any manipulation and create appropriate conditions for the resumption of talks without pressure or blackmail.

Paris talks. The text of the Rambouillet Accords: Interim Agreement for Peace and Self-Government in Kosovo [S/1999/648], which was signed in Paris on 18 March by the Kosovo Albanian representatives, was forwarded to the Secretary-General by France on behalf of the Co-Chairmen of the Rambouillet Conference.

FRY forwarded to the Security Council President the text of the Agreement for Self-Government in Kosmet [S/1999/302] that was signed on the same day by the Serbian delegation, and a Serbian Government letter endorsing its delegation's stand at the talks. It said that the United States-ethnic Albanian agreement on separating a part of Serbian and Yugoslav territory constituted an unprecedented violation of all international rules. Also annexed to the letter was a statement by the Serbian President describing the document signed by the ethnic Albanian delegation as a fake that was never discussed, agreed or signed by the Contact Group as a whole.

FRY, in a 19 March statement on the Rambouillet talks [S/1999/301], maintained that the text signed by some Kosovo and Metohija Albanian representatives was only the draft text. The Serbia delegation could not be blamed for the failure of the talks as it had demonstrated its determination to achieve a political agreement by accepting the Contact Group's principles. FRY urged that the talks resume and supported its delegation in not accepting those provisions, bringing into question the equality of national communities and giving Kosovo and Metohija the status of a third federal unit or independent State. It also supported the position to first reach a political agreement before talking about implementation. FRY condemned the build-up of foreign troops at its borders and threats of aggression. It said that those threatening to use force against FRY had to face the responsibility for the consequences of humanitarian problems that might arise. It again called on the Security Council and the OSCE Permanent Council to rule out the use of force and military threats against FRY and to uphold a peaceful political settlement.

The Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Countries of South-Eastern Europe Cooperation, on 19 March [S/1999/319], reiterated their full support for the international community's efforts for a political settlement of the Kosovo crisis. Emphasizing that the Paris talks might represent a last opportunity for a political settlement of the crisis, they welcomed the signing of the Interim Agreement, in its entirety, by the delegation of the Kosovar Albanians and urged FRY also to sign the Agreement at the earliest stage. Belarus, on 20 March [A/53/870-S/1999/309], also expressed regret that a constructive, mutually acceptable solution was not found during the negotiations in France. However, it did not believe that there were grounds for threats of the use of military force against FRY. It called for the continuation of joint international efforts to advance the peace process.

FRY President Milosevic, on 23 March [S/1999/314], repeated the position that two documents were signed in Paris, one by the representatives of all national communities in Kosovo and the other by representatives of the Albanian separatists and terrorists, who were not the representatives of Kosovo. The latter document was not the Rambouillet Agreement.

Serbia's National Assembly, in conclusions of the same date [S/1999/318], approved the Serbian delegation's report on the Rambouillet talks and regretted that the international mediators and the Co-Chairmen of the Rambouillet and Paris talks had not succeeded in bringing the delegation of the separatist movement to sit at the same table with the Serbian State delegation. The National Assembly declared that Serbia was still committed to a peaceful solution and was ready to continue direct negotiations. It authorized the State delegation to sign a political agreement on self-governance in Kosovo and Metohija to be agreed and signed by all national communities living there and to propose solutions so that it could be implemented as soon as possible.

On 17 March [S/1999/292], FRY informed the Security Council President of a build-up by NATO countries of troops and arms, including in FYROM, and called on the Council to convene a meeting to prevail upon NATO and its members to cease its use of force and stop a further build-up of troops.

On 23 March [S/1999/317], FRY declared a state of imminent danger of war. It forwarded to the Council President its National Assembly's decisions not to accept the presence of foreign troops in Kosovo and Metohija and its readiness after the signing of the political agreement on self-government to consider the scope and character of an international presence in Kosovo and Metohija with a view to implementing the agreement.

The European Council, on 25 March [S/1999/342], expressed concern about the failure of the mediation efforts of United States Ambassador Holbrooke and the three Rambouillet negotiators, Ambassadors Hill, Majorski and Petritsch, with President Milosevic to persuade him to accept a ceasefire and a political solution to the conflict to stop a humanitarian catastrophe in Kosovo. It urged the Yugoslav leadership to change radically its own policy and stressed that it was not too late to stop the internal repression and accept the international community's mediation efforts.

NATO air campaign

On 24 March, following FRY's refusal to sign the Rambouillet Accords, NATO started its air campaign against it. The main targets were military installations, communications facilities and government buildings. Meanwhile, Serbian security force operations aimed at destroying KLA were under way across the whole of Kosovo.

FRY declared a state of war on 24 March [S/1999/327]. In a letter to the Security Council President [S/1999/322], FRY said that by carrying out air strikes against military and civilian facilities, NATO's armed forces had committed an act of aggression in violation of the UN Charter. It requested him to convene an urgent meeting of the Council to condemn and stop the aggression and to protect FRY's sovereignty and territorial integrity. The request for convening the Council was supported by Belarus [S/1999/323] and the Russian Federation [S/1999/320].

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION

The Security Council met on 24 March [meeting 3988] to consider the situation in Kosovo. The Russian Federation said that those involved in that unilateral use of force against FRY without the Council's authorization should realize the heavy responsibility they bore for subverting the Charter and international law. Attempts to justify the NATO strikes with arguments about preventing a humanitarian catastrophe in Kosovo were untenable. The decision was particularly unacceptable since the political and diplomatic methods had not been exhausted. The Russian Federation demanded the immediate cessation of the illegal military action. It added that, as a member of the Contact Group, it fully supported the document adopted in London that formed the basis of the draft political settlement. However, its partners in the Group had decided to discuss the military aspects of implementation in NATO and not within the Contact Group.

The United States said that NATO had begun military action with the greatest reluctance but it was necessary to respond to Belgrade's brutal persecution of Kosovar Albanians, violations of international law, excessive and indiscriminate use of force, refusal to negotiate and recent military build-up in Kosovo—all of which foreshadowed a humanitarian catastrophe of immense proportions. Some 40,000 Serb forces were in action in and around Kosovo, 30,000 Kosovars had left their homes since 19 March and the number of displaced persons was approaching 250,000. The continuing FRY offensive was threatening the stability of the region and had already resulted in cross-border activity in Albania, Bosnia and Herzegovina and FYROM. The United States believed that the NATO action was justified and necessary.

France observed that FRY had not respected the commitments and obligations contained in the agreements it had concluded with OSCE and NATO in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 381], and efforts to prompt the FRY Government to meet its obligations on the ground and to adhere to the Rambouillet agreements had been exhausted. Indeed, in recent weeks, the Yugoslav Army had massed a powerful offensive capacity, inspiring fears that there would be a new upsurge of massacres in a community of 2 million people. That community could not be abandoned to violent repression.

The United Kingdom stated that, in defiance of the international community, President Milosevic had refused to accept the Rambouillet agreements, observe the limits on security-force levels agreed in October 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 381], and end the excessive and disproportionate use of force in Kosovo. NATO was forced to take military action because all other means of preventing a humanitarian catastrophe had been frustrated by Serb behaviour. The action taken was to save lives and was legal and justified.

China said that the question of Kosovo, an internal FRY matter, should be resolved among the parties concerned. It opposed interference in the internal affairs of other States, under whatever pretext or in whatever form. It had always been China's position that, under the Charter, the Council bore the primary responsibility for the maintenance of peace and security and only the Council could take appropriate action. China was opposed to any act that violated that principle and that challenged the Council's authority.

Addressing the Council at the President's invitation, FRY stated that NATO had committed a unilateral act of the most brutal and unprovoked aggression against a sovereign and independent State and a founding Member of the United Nations. FRY had been attacked because it sought to solve an internal problem and used its sovereign right to fight terrorism and prevent the secession of part of its territory. NATO's blatant aggression was a flagrant violation of the basic principles of the Charter. FRY called on Council members to act swiftly and in accordance with the Charter to condemn the aggression and to take measures to stop it immediately and unambiguously so that all problems might be resolved by political means.

Albania, also addressing the Council at the President's invitation, said that the international community was intervening in Kosovo in order to stop the humanitarian catastrophe and the tragedy of a nation whose people had been tortured, killed and buried in common graves. Albania totally supported the NATO military action, considering it to be in support of peace and stability in the region. No country that committed genocide and crimes against humanity could expect to receive UN and Council protection.

Communications. In letters addressed to the Secretary-General between 24 and 26 March, several States, Parliaments and regional organizations expressed concern over NATO's recourse to the use of force without Council authorization and urged the parties to the conflict, as well as the international community, to consider urgently additional efforts to stop further escalation of the conflict. On 25 March [S/1999/353], FRY called on the OSCE Chairman-in-Office to convene a special session of the OSCE Permanent Council to consider the aggression against it and to take measures to stop it. FRY considered that OSCE's complete withdrawal of KVM was part of the orchestrated preparations for NATO's aggression, and by so doing OSCE had unilaterally broken the FRY-OSCE agreement [YUN 1998, p. 381].

On 26 March [S/1999/344], the Russian Federation protested the ban on flights by civil aviation in the airspace above Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, FRY and FYROM by NATO, saying it was a gross violation of the 1944 Chicago Convention on International Civil Aviation. Such measures called for the active intervention of the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO). The Russian Federation had contacted the ICAO Secretary-General and was confident he would take measures to restore the freedom of civil aviation over those countries.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 March [meeting 3989], the Security Council met to consider a draft resolution sponsored by Belarus, India and the Russian Federation [S/1999/328], by which the Council would have demanded an immediate cessation of the use of force against FRY and the urgent resumption of negotiations.

Canada, speaking against the draft resolution, said that those who supported it placed themselves outside the international consensus. Those countries might more usefully have directed their energies towards convincing the leaders in Belgrade to stop the violence and accept the Rambouillet Accords. Slovenia's representative argued that the text was an inadequate attempt to address the Kosovo situation, took a selective political view of it, lacked objectivity, and ignored the fact that several months earlier the Council had declared the situation in Kosovo to be one constituting a threat to peace and security in the region and had spelled out the requirements for the removal of that threat, which were flagrantly violated by FRY.

The United States said that Council resolutions 1199(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 377] and 1203(1998)

[ibid., p. 382] had laid out the steps Belgrade had to take to resolve the crisis but it had chosen to defy repeatedly the will of the international community. The current draft resolution, if adopted, could only encourage President Milosevic to continue or even intensify military repression of Kosovo's civilian population, damage prospects for a negotiated settlement and make further bloodshed more likely. It did nothing to advance the cause of peace in the Balkans.

The draft resolution received 3 votes in favour and 12 against. Since the draft resolution did not obtain the required majority, it was not adopted and the Council continued its consideration of the matter.

Speaking after the vote at the President's invitation, FRY said that the NATO aggression and massive, reckless bombing campaign were not limited to so-called military targets, but brought death to hundreds of civilians and destroyed property. The Council was in a position to prevent NATO from robbing it of its rights and duties if it strongly condemned the aggression and requested NATO to stop it immediately and unconditionally. If the Council failed to do so, it would be responsible for the breakdown of the current system of international relations. It had to decide whether it would retain its responsibility under the Charter or cede it to NATO.

Further developments

The Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC) Contact Group on Bosnia and Herzegovina and Kosovo, on 26 March [S/1999/363], noted that, due to the intransigence of the Belgrade authorities, a decisive international action was necessary to prevent humanitarian catastrophe and further violations of human rights in Kosovo. It would have preferred the Security Council to deal with the matter and regretted that the Council had been unable to discharge its responsibility.

The Russian Federation State Duma (Parliament), on 27 March [A/53/888-S/1999/358], supported the Russian President's decision to suspend all official relations with NATO until the end of NATO's military action, the recalling of the country's military representative to NATO, suspension of participation in the Partnership for Peace programme and the operation of NATO centres in the Russian Federation, and removal of the Russian contingent in the Stabilization Force in Bosnia and Herzegovina. It recommended that the Russian President put forward a peace initiative aimed at halting the attacks and resuming political negotiations and demand the holding of a special session of the General Assembly to consider the question of aggression against a UN Member State. In a 23 April statement [A/53/924-S/1999/475], the Russian Federation said that it expected NATO countries to assess the civilian casualties and damage to FRY's economy, and would like to know what measures they intended to take, and when, to stop the continuing violations of their obligations, and how they planned to compensate for the economic and other damage.

On 27 March [S/1999/360], the NATO Secretary-General informed the UN Secretary-General that in the circumstances he had directed the NATO Supreme Allied Command Europe to initiate a broader scope of operations to intensify action against FRY forces and compel them to desist from further attacks in Kosovo and to meet the demands of the international community. All allies were united in that action and in their determination to bring a halt to violence in Kosovo and to prevent a further humanitarian catastrophe.

On 29 March [S/1999/357], FRY said that NATO was increasingly targeting towns and cities, wreaking destruction primarily on civilians, which took a heavy toll in human lives. The devastation caused by the NATO air strikes throughout FRY had caused the largest humanitarian disaster in Europe since the Second World War. FRY listed the number of facilities destroyed or damaged by the air strikes. It called on the Secretary-General to use his influence to forestall serious humanitarian consequences of the aggression.

On the same day [S/1999/359], FRY appealed to international organizations, Governments, relevant political factors and the entire world to stop the senseless act of war aggression. It expressed to the Secretary-General on 31 March [S/1999/366] its disappointment that the Council had failed to act in accordance with its responsibilities under the Charter, and that the NATO aggression and air strikes continued unabated without any reaction from him. FRY called on the Secretary-General to act urgently to put an end to the aggression and the further endangerment of international peace and security. The FRY Army's Supreme Command warned of NATO plans for a land invasion from across its border and the recruitment of refugees towards that end [S/1999/412].

The OIC Contact Group on Bosnia and Herzegovina and Kosovo, in a 7 April declaration [S/1999/394], decided to establish contacts with all parties and further enhance cooperation with the Contact Group on the Former Yugoslavia and Kosovo's political leadership; urgently to mobilize humanitarian assistance for Kosovo victims; and to set up a coordination group to coordinate OIC assistance to Kosovo and interact with humanitarian agencies. The Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, on 9 April [S/1999/451], expressed concern over the deteriorating humanitarian situation in Kosovo and other parts of FRY and the displacement, both internal and to neighbouring countries, of vast numbers of the Kosovo civilian population. It urged the Secretary-General to intensify the UN role in alleviating the suffering of the displaced persons and refugees and to investigate all human rights abuses. It believed that the urgent resumption of diplomatic efforts constituted the only basis for a solution to the conflict.

The Council of Europe, on 26 April [A/54/91], declared its readiness to contribute to a peaceful settlement of the conflict and to redress human suffering and institutional damage.

The EU, on 26 April [S/1999/490], imposed on FRY a ban on the delivery of petroleum and petroleum products. It extended the existing EU sanctions regime and welcomed the European Commission's intention to introduce proposals, including a travel ban on President Milosevic, his family, and officials and persons close to the regime; extension of the freeze on funds held abroad by FRY and Serbia; prohibition of the provision of export finance by the private sector; extension of the investment ban; widening the export prohibitions; encouraging Member States and sporting organizations not to organize international sporting events with FRY participation; and a comprehensive flight ban between the EU countries and FRY. The EU agreed to start preparation of a stability pact for South-Eastern Europe (see p. 397), welcomed the international community's endorsement of the proposed pact and decided to convene a conference on the subject in Germany on 27 May. The Presidents of Central Europe also adopted a declaration supporting the elaboration of a stability pact [A/53/962- S/1999/574 & Corr.1].

OSCE report (April). The OSCE Chairman-in-Office, in an April report [S/1999/485], said that KVM had been temporarily withdrawn from Kosovo, following which the tempo of the Serbian security forces offensive began to quicken. Even during the NATO air campaign, Serbian security operations aimed at destroying KLA were under way across the whole of Kosovo. On 25 March, FRY suspended diplomatic relations with France, Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States. A number of Western countries closed their embassies in Belgrade and the Serbian Information Minister issued an order expelling all foreign journalists whose countries were taking part in the NATO air strikes. ICRC withdrew all its international personnel from Kosovo, and NGOs operating there were also withdrawn. Serbian resistance had shown no sign of weakening. Street lights in the majority of Serbian towns remained on and several thousand people gathered on 28

March for a rock concert in central Belgrade to protest the air strikes. Since then, concerts continued daily in other Serbian towns. In addition, human chains were formed on bridges to prevent NATO attacks. The Montenegrin authorities distanced themselves from a number of important decisions taken by Belgrade.

On 7 April, KLA's political director and leader of the Albanian delegation to Rambouillet, Hashim Thaci, revealed the composition of the transitional Kosovo "Government", with himself as Prime Minister and Foreign Minister, and including representatives of the United Democratic Front, led by Rexhep Qosja. The Democratic League of Kosovo, led by Ibrahim Rugova, had yet to name its representative.

The expulsion of vast numbers of Kosovo Albanian refugees was the most striking feature of the reporting period. Many thousands sought refuge in neighbouring countries, with Albania bearing the heaviest weight of numbers. By 17 April, UNHCR estimated that 340,000 refugees had fled Kosovo for Albania, 70,000 for Montenegro and 135,000 for FYROM. The exodus continued and showed no signs of abating.

The OSCE Human Rights Division had been monitoring and documenting violations committed against Kosovo's civilian population since the withdrawal of OSCE's international staff. Many people reported violations of humanitarian law committed by paramilitary groups and bands of armed civilians. The statements painted a picture of lawlessness and absence of any form of protection for ethnic Albanians. Yugoslav Army attacks targeted both civilians and their property and were most often followed by operations and raids by the Special Police, paramilitaries and armed civilians. Reports suggested that the absence of international representatives in Kosovo provided an opportunity for an increase in the frequency and intensity of violent acts.

The Kosovo crisis was dominating life in Albania, whose attention since 27 March was directed to the humanitarian dimension of the influx of refugees and the inability of its already weak economy and infrastructure to cope. Albania had welcomed the NATO air strikes and had formally approved the stationing of foreign troops on its territory. In FYROM, the crisis had put enormous burdens on the country, raising public anxiety, straining inter-ethnic relations and relations within the Government and with the international community, and greatly increasing the risk of destabilization. Following KVM's withdrawal and the emerging humanitarian crisis created by the exodus of Kosovo Albanian refugees to Albania and FYROM, two KVM task forces were established, one each in those countries, to assist

UNHCR, other international organizations and local authorities.

OSCE report (May). In a May report [S/1999/618], the OSCE Chairman-in-Office said that the refugee flow from Kosovo had remained constant. A disturbing development was the closure in early May of the FYROM border (see below). The Yugoslav Army Supreme Command announced a partial withdrawal of forces from Kosovo on 10 May. The head of the Kosovo Albanian delegation to the Rambouillet talks, Hasim Thaci, claimed that the withdrawal was a deception and the forces were regrouping to avoid NATO air strikes. KLA sources alleged that fighting continued, particularly near the towns of Junik and Djakovica, near the border with Albania, and remained a focus of conflict throughout May. On 20 April, media reports suggested that several hundred FRY soldiers entered three villages inside Montenegro close to Kosovo and fired on Kosovo Albanian refugees. New areas of conflict between Serbian security forces and KLA emerged, such as in Gnjilane, and, according to Albanian sources, fighting spread to other more central areas such as Prizren and Suva Reka, and Lipjan and Urosevac. The "interim Government" of the Kosovo Albanians reportedly issued a decree forming a National Guard.

The Kosovo Albanian leader, Ibrahim Rugova, met President Milosevic and other Serbian leaders on several occasions. A close aide to Mr. Rugova said that he was in FRY against his will and was under house arrest in Pristina. Criticism against him from across the Kosovo Albanian spectrum became more vociferous and, in a surprise move, FRY authorities allowed him to leave for Italy. Fehmi Agani, a Kosovo Albanian delegate to the Rambouillet talks, was allegedly taken into police custody and subsequently killed on his return from an unsuccessful attempt to cross the border into FYROM.

The refugee flow from Kosovo across the FRY-FYROM border maintained severe pressure on the already stretched resources of refugee camps. A new camp in Cegrane, south-west of Skopje, was filled in a matter of days. On 5 May, the number of refugees crossing the FYROM border led the Macedonian authorities to close their border with Kosovo. Following negotiations between UNHCR and Macedonian authorities, the border was re-opened on 6 May. However, the numbers crossing remained small. OSCE estimated there were some 232,000 refugees from Kosovo in Macedonian territory. The Albanian Government, NATO and other international partners initiated a plan to move large numbers of refugees from Kukes in the north of Albania, where the refugee population had grown from about 23,000 to 130,000 in nine camps and with host families. The plan had to be modified and the refugees were to be moved at a slower pace into previously planned camps nearing completion. OSCE estimated that there were 441,000 Kosovo refugees in Albania.

Communications. FRY complained of acts of aggression against it from Albanian territory [S/1999/406, S/1999/452] and accused the United States of a breach of the arms embargo established by Council resolution 1160(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 369] by maintaining contacts with, training and financing KLA via Albania [S/1999/453]. It also accused the EU of violating the Charter by imposing unilaterally a ban on the shipment of oil and oil derivatives to FRY [S/1999/497] and brought to the attention of the Council President or the Secretary-General the bombing of refugees by NATO on the Djakovica-Prizren road [S/1999/423], the destruction of the town of Surdulica [S/1999/496], and the bombing of civilian targets, including power plants and transmission lines and stations [S/1999/510]. FRY's Constitutional Court also sought to establish how NATO's action against the country violated international public law and the international legal order [S/1999/479]. Austria forwarded to the Secretary-General the Vienna Declaration on Peace and Tolerance in Kosovo, adopted at a conference in Vienna on 17 and 18 March, which brought together representatives from all major religions in Kosovo to discuss the crisis in the region [S/1999/405].

NATO bombing of diplomatic property

On 7 May [S/1999/523], China requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to discuss NATO's attack on its Embassy in Belgrade. China later expressed its indignation and condemnation of the act and lodged the strongest protest [A/53/952-S/1999/535]. It said the action was a violation of Chinese sovereignty, the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations [YUN 1961, p. 512] and the norms of international relations.

In its account of the incident [S/1999/529], FRY reported that at 11.45 p.m. on 7 May, China's Embassy was bombed by NATO. It said that the building was visibly marked and separated from other buildings in its vicinity, which indicated the clear intentions of the aggressors. FRY expected that the Council, as well as the entire international community, would strongly condemn that cruel act and demand that those who gave the orders would be appropriately punished. It also expected the Council to demand an immediate end to the aggression as the only way to eliminate those crimes.

South Africa, in an 8 May statement [S/1999/530], expressed concern about the NATO bombing raids, which it had predicted would exacerbate the humanitarian tragedy and lead to unfortunate incidents, such as the bombing of the Chinese Embassy and others. While it condemned the ethnic cleansing policies of the Milosevic Government, it believed that the only way to resolve the crisis was to support the current international diplomatic initiatives. The Sudan, on 10 May [S/1999/541], denounced the aggression against the Chinese Embassy.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 14 May [meeting 4001], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/1992/12 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council recalls the press statement by the President on 8 May 1999 and expresses its deep distress and concern over the bombing of the Embassy of the People's Republic of China in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia on 7 May 1999, which has caused serious casualties and property damage. The Council expresses its deepest sympathy and profound condolences to the Chinese Government and families of the victims.

The Council expresses profound regrets over the bombing and deep sorrow for the loss of lives, injuries and property damage caused by the bombing, and notes that regrets and apologies were expressed for this tragedy by members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. The Council, bearing in mind the Charter of the United Nations, reaffirms that the principle of the inviolability of diplomatic personnel and premises must be respected in all cases in accordance with internationally accepted norms.

The Council stresses the need for a complete and thorough investigation of the bombing by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. In this connection, it takes note of the fact that an investigation has been initiated by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and awaits the results of the investigation.

The Council will remain seized of this matter.

India informed the Council President that, on 20 May [S/1999/607], its Ambassador's residence in Belgrade was damaged by NATO. India said that it was unacceptable that diplomatic property and lives should continue to be put at risk in a war whose targets were increasingly indiscriminate and carried out without the Council's authority. FRY, in a 26 May aide-memoire [S/1999/619], reported damage to diplomatic and consular property of 18 other countries.

Humanitarian situation

On 3 April, FRY addressed letters to UNHCR [S/1999/376] and ICRC [S/1999/375] concerning the humanitarian catastrophe caused by the NATO aggression, stating that thousands of tons of NATO and United States bombs and explosives had hit towns, villages, refugee camps, cultural and historic monuments, religious shrines, schools, hospitals, bridges, factories and other civilian targets across Yugoslavia. Particularly tragic were the consequences of attacks in downtown areas of large cities, such as Belgrade, Pristina, Novi Sad, Cacak and others. Recently, NATO had destroyed a regional water system in Novi Sad supplying 600,000 people, and hit two shelters housing refugees from Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, several hospitals, over 100 schools, cultural monuments and places of worship, telephone lines and other communications, private homes, farms and pharmaceutical plants. Some 11 refugees were killed in Kursumljia, and the destruction of chemical storages and other chemical industrial facilities had endangered the environment. FRY asked for assistance for refugees and the displaced. On 4 April [S/1999/371, S/1999/377], FRY informed the Secretary-General of the civilian destruction and destruction of its national heritage.

On 7 April [S/1999/391], the Council President circulated an exchange of letters between the NATO Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. The NATO Secretary-General said that the North Atlantic Council had invited him to raise with the High Commissioner, as a matter of urgency, possible measures NATO could take to assist UNHCR in addressing the current humanitarian crisis in Albania and FYROM.

The High Commissioner informed the NATO Secretary-General that the scale of the crisis was such that UNHCR's capacity to respond had been overwhelmed, especially in Albania and FYROM, where over 270,000 people had arrived since 24 March and were continuing to arrive on an hourly basis. The High Commissioner, welcoming NATO's assistance, suggested that the operation should focus on those two countries where the need was greatest, and would welcome assistance with the management of the airlift operation to bring supplies into Tirana and Skopje airports; support in offloading and storage of aid; and logistical help in setting up refugee camps. UNHCR would provide the coordination, guidance and technical support. There was also need to relieve the pressure on FYROM, which otherwise risked destabilization. The High Commissioner requested that NATO members, particularly Greece, agree to accept some of the refugees in FYROM temporarily and welcomed offers of support from OSCE and OSCE/KVM, particularly in the processing of arrivals at critical border entry points.

In a 9 April statement [S/1999/402], the Secretary-General said that he was deeply distressed by the humanitarian tragedy in Kosovo and the region. He urgently called on the Yugoslav authorities to end immediately the campaign of intimidation and expulsion of civilians; cease all activities of military and paramilitary forces and withdraw them; accept unconditionally the return of all refugees and displaced persons; accept the deployment of an international military force to ensure a secure environment for their return and the unimpeded delivery of humanitarian aid; and permit the international community to verify compliance with those undertakings. Upon acceptance by the Yugoslav authorities of those conditions, he would urge NATO leaders to suspend immediately the air bombardments. The cessation of hostilities was a prelude to a lasting political solution to the crisis, which could only be achieved through diplomacy. He urged the resumption of talks among all parties concerned.

Responding to the Secretary-General's appeal, FRY, on 16 April [S/1999/436], denied that there was a campaign of intimidation or expulsion of the civilian population. NATO's aggression and bombing had caused enormous destruction and mass civilian casualties, resulting in an increased number of refugees and displaced persons. All FRY forces' activities against KLA had ceased on 6 April and the cessation was still in force. However, it was incomprehensible to request withdrawal of the legitimate forces of a sovereign State from its territory instead of calling for an end to foreign military aggression. The safe return of refugees and displaced persons was a Yugoslav policy priority, but it was hampered by the destruction of towns such as Pristina, Djakovica, Prizren, Decani and others. To resolve the humanitarian issues, its authorities were ready to cooperate with UNHCR and ICRC. FRY continued its efforts towards finding a peaceful solution through direct dialogue with the legitimate representatives of the national communities of Kosovo and Metohija.

On 8 April [S/1999/414], the EU Special General Council deplored the closure of FRY borders with Albania and FYROM to refugees. It supported the UNHCR regional refugee concept allowing them to return to their homes as soon as possible, but recognized the need to make the overwhelming task on the ground manageable by providing effective protection as extensively as possible. The EU would continue to assist the most affected countries to counter the destabilizing effects of the flow of deportees and urged the speedy implementation of the European Commission's assistance package for neighbouring Governments, in particular Albania and FYROM. The EU was working with international financial institutions to alleviate the exceptional burdens of the countries most affected. It welcomed FYROM's efforts to alleviate the plight of the deportees and urged it to intensify those efforts. It also welcomed Albania's stated readiness to accept, in addition to the huge numbers already admitted, additional deportees. It underlined its concern over the situation in the FRY Republic of Montenegro and reconfirmed its support for that Government and its readiness to help in coping with the flow of deportees. EU assistance would be directed to Montenegro for humanitarian and budgetary aid.

On 14 April [S/1999/417], Australia appealed to the Secretary-General to use his good offices to obtain the release of two Australians (Steve Pratt and Peter Wallace) working with the humanitarian organization CARE Australia, detained by FRY since 31 March. FRY, on 18 April [S/1999/439], confirmed the arrest of the two Australians, who, it said, had confessed to engaging in espionage. FRY said it found the Secretary-General's interest in the arrest of the two military spies completely out of step with the situation and his functions, especially since he had not condemned the aggression against FRY or the massacre of refugee convoys on 14 April on the Djakovica-Prizren road, in which NATO massacred 75 children, women and elderly people. On 19 April [S/1999/438], the Australian Special Envoy said CARE was concerned with maintaining its relationship with FRY to continue its humanitarian mission and assist in national reconstruction after the conflict. He appealed for the release of the two Australians at the earliest opportunity, with the undertaking that they would leave FRY.

FRY, in a 19 April aide-memoire [S/1999/437] on the humanitarian consequences of NATO aggression, further outlined the extent of the civilian casualties and listed the material damage caused by the bombings. It reported that both FRY and Serbia had issued a call to displaced persons and refugees to return safely to their homes. Its 6 April declaration of cessation of all anti-terrorist activities in Kosovo and Metohija was an important step for a successful solution of the humanitarian problems. It had also reached agreement with Ibrahim Rugova (one of the Kosovo Albanian leaders) on joint involvement in creating conditions for the return of refugees, as well as on the solution of other humanitarian issues, in cooperation with ICRC, UNHCR and Yugoslav humanitarian organizations. FRY and the Russian Federation complained also of the environmental consequences of NATO's aggression, particularly the bombing of environmentally hazardous targets [S/1999/458, A/53/921-S/1999/462, E/1999/46] and the destruction of FRY's agriculture [S/1999/511, A/53/941]. Both countries also drew attention to the destruction of civilian targets [S/1999/472, S/1999/592].

Iran, as Chairman of the OIC Contact Group, expressed concern on 22 April [S/1999/469] over the increasing number of Sandjak Muslims being forced to flee, mostly to Bosnia and Herzegovina. They were being victimized by an accelerated campaign of ethnic cleansing orchestrated by FRY, similar to that suffered by Albanian Kosovars. Iran urged the Council to address the situation and considered that the crimes perpetrated by regular Yugoslav Army and paramilitary forces deserved to be reviewed by ICTY.

Uruguay, on 22 April [S/1999/473], indicated its readiness to accept refugees from Kosovo. The Foreign Ministers of the G-8 group of highly industrialized countries, meeting on 6 May [S/1999/516], outlined a number of general principles designed to break the political deadlock, including the safe return of all refugees and displaced persons and unimpeded access to Kosovo by humanitarian aid organizations (see p. 352 for details).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 14 May [meeting 40031, the Security Council adopted resolution 1239(1999) by vote (13-0-2). The draft [S/1999/517] was submitted by Argentina, Bahrain, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Egypt, Gabon, the Gambia, Iran, Jordan, Kuwait, Malaysia, Morocco, Namibia, Pakistan, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Slovenia, Turkey, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1160(1998) of 31 March 1998, 1199(1998) of 23 September 1998 and 1203(1998) of 24 October 1998, and the statements by its President of 24 August 1998, 19 January 1999 and 29 January 1999,

Bearing in mind the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, and guided by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the international covenants and conventions on human rights, the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees, the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto of 1977, as well as other instruments of international humanitarian law,

Expressing grave concern at the humanitarian catastrophe in and around Kosovo, Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, as a result of the continuing crisis,

Deeply concerned by the enormous influx of Kosovo refugees into Albania, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, and other countries, as well as by the increasing numbers of displaced persons within Kosovo, the Republic of Montenegro and other parts of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia,

Stressing the importance of effective coordination of humanitarian relief activities undertaken by States, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and international organizations in alleviating the plight and suffering of refugees and internally displaced persons,

Noting with interest the intention of the Secretary-General to send a humanitarian needs assessment mission to Kosovo and other parts of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia,

Reaffirming the territorial integrity and sovereignty of all States in the region,

1. Commends the efforts that have been taken by Member States, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other international humanitarian relief organizations in providing urgently needed relief assistance to the Kosovo refugees in Albania, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Bosnia and Herzegovina, and urges them and others in a position to do so to contribute resources for humanitarian assistance to the refugees and internally displaced persons;

2. Invites the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other international humanitarian relief organizations to extend relief assistance to the internally displaced persons in Kosovo, the Republic of Montenegro and other parts of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, as well as to other civilians being affected by the ongoing crisis;

3. Calls for access for United Nations and all other humanitarian personnel operating in Kosovo and other parts of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia;

4. Reaffirms the right of all refugees and displaced persons to return to their homes in safety and in dignity;

5. Emphasizes that the humanitarian situation will continue to deteriorate in the absence of a political solution to the crisis consistent with the principles adopted by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America on 6 May 1999, and urges all concerned to work towards this aim;

6. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

VOTE ON RESOLUTION 1239(1999):

In favour Argentina, Bahrain, Brazil, Canada, France, Gabon, Gambia, Malaysia, Namibia, Netherlands, Slovenia, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: None.

Abstaining: China, Russian Federation.

In a 7 May letter concerning the draft text [S/1999/528], FRY had said that the Council's lack of readiness to condemn aggression continued to cause a humanitarian catastrophe all over Yugoslavia. FRY was ready to have humanitarian assistance distributed to all parts of the country, but those efforts had been rendered impossible by the continued NATO bombing, primarily of civilian targets. Dealing with the humanitarian issue in isolation diverted attention from the real cause, namely NATO's aggression. Speaking in the Council at the invitation of the President, FRY stated that NATO's 51-day campaign of terror and devastation was targeting civilians, infrastructure and the economy. More than 1,200 people had been killed and over 5,000 wounded. The Council's concern about the humanitarian situation was justified, but the attempt to legalize NATO's aggression by means of a so-called humanitarian resolution was not. The draft should contain a demand that the NATO aggression be stopped immediately and unconditionally.

Introducing the draft text in the Council, Bahrain said the text's goals were to draw the attention of the international community to the humanitarian catastrophe occurring in Kosovo, which had led to the displacement of 840,000 persons within FRY and more than 700,000 outside the country, and to make it possible for the Council to review the Kosovo situation from the humanitarian perspective and make humanitarian concerns fundamental to the consideration of the military and political aspects of the situation when it was ready to do so.

While expressing its sympathy for the Kosovars left homeless and separated from their loved ones, China said of equal concern was that, without the Council's authorization, NATO had launched military attacks against FRY and thus unleashed a regional war in the Balkans. China also referred to the attack on its Embassy (see p. 346). China had proposed amending the draft to include a reference to the need for an immediate cessation of all military activities. However, as that position was not accepted, China had no choice but to abstain.

The Russian Federation said that unless there was an immediate cessation to NATO's illegal military action, genuine progress would be impossible, either towards a political settlement or to overcome the humanitarian catastrophe. Since that fact was not reflected in the text, the Russian Federation could not support it.

The United States said it had contributed and would continue to contribute to humanitarian relief efforts, including building a camp in Albania to house 20,000 refugees. Also, the first of 20,000 Kosovar Albanians had recently arrived in the United States. However, it remained firm in its resolve to exert pressure on the FRY Government to stop its planned, systematic campaign of ethnic cleansing and to permit the return of all refugees and displaced persons.

On 14 May [S/1999/562], FRY informed the Council President that NATO planes had hit the refugee centre at Koriste near Suva Reka and Prizren, which accommodated refugees on their way back home from Albania, killing 79 of them, mostly women, children and the elderly. It accused NATO on 15 May [S/1999/564] of using banned military means and weapons, such as cluster bombs and depleted uranium, damaging and threatening the health and lives of the people. On 25 May [S/1999/620], it submitted a memorandum on the humanitarian consequences of the NATO aggression against it. FRY claimed that, since the onset of the aggression, over 10,000 tons of explosives were dropped with the destructive effect 10 times more than the nuclear bomb in the attack on Hiroshima, Japan. NATO had killed more than 1,700 civilians by 21 May, while over 10,000 people sustained injuries, many of whom had been crippled for life. At the same time, several thousand private homes and flats had been ruined. It had also embarked on a systematic destruction of FRY's power grid, bringing about a humanitarian catastrophe of unforeseen proportions, denying the entire population food, water and drugs and depriving its industry of power sources [S/1999/604].

FRY said on 3 June [S/1999/647] that it was open to accepting humanitarian aid from all countries, but was opposed to initiatives by some foreign Governments and NGOs to airdrop humanitarian relief to the inhabitants of Kosovo and Metohija, as that form of providing aid was fraught with great risks and could lead to undesired consequences. Furthermore, it was not necessary, since there were no obstacles to sending humanitarian dispatches over safer land routes. Humanitarian aid would have to be dispatched on the basis of cooperation with competent Yugoslav organs and institutions, with their full agreement and insight.

Inter-Agency Needs Assessment Mission

Against the background of the the grave humanitarian and human rights situation in Kosovo, the Secretary-General, with FRY's agreement, dispatched a United Nations Inter-Agency Needs Assessment Mission to FRY from 16 to 27 May [S/1999/662] to provide an initial assessment of the emergency needs of civilian populations and of the medium-term rehabilitation requirements, in the light of the approaching winter. That would be followed later by a more in-depth assessment, as well as sectoral evaluations by relevant agencies.

The Mission report stated that, in addition to immediate humanitarian needs of the refugees, internally displaced and other civilian populations, the socio-economic, environmental and physical toll of the conflict throughout FRY and beyond was immense and had created a new type of complex humanitarian emergency. The challenges presented by the emergency in a comparatively developed environment exceeded the humanitarian purview, the experience and capacity of any single agency. It would require, before and especially after a settlement of the Kosovo conflict was achieved, comprehensive action by the United Nations, the international financial institutions, regional organizations, ICRC, the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies and NGOs to address all the aspects of the crisis.

The Mission recommended a regional, integrated strategy, encompassing all south-eastern European countries and regions, and coordinated with and integrated into overall UN activities, including its peacekeeping and peacemaking efforts.

The United Nations, cooperating with inter-governmental organizations and NGOs, should urgently re-establish the necessary humanitarian and development presence in FRY, including in Belgrade, Pristina and Podgorica, to mount a comprehensive relief operation and to carry out more detailed sectoral assessments in FRY, particularly in Kosovo. In Kosovo, a clear distinction should be made between the pre-peace and post-peace scenarios. Prior to a peace settlement, the United Nations Kosovo office would be responsible for relief assistance in all accessible areas of the province, contingency planning and eventual implementation of operations to support the return and reintegration of refugees and internally displaced persons, preparations for the coming winter and other emergency and rehabilitation needs.

As part of a peace settlement, humanitarian, refugee and internally displaced person reintegration and rehabilitation activities should be given the highest priority under the leadership of a single entity as an integral component of an eventual unitary civilian implementation structure. A small operational inter-agency planning and coordination cell should be established in advance of its actual deployment, under the lead humanitarian agency and with support from the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, to be responsible for joint planning, coordination and allocation of tasks among all humanitarian organizations, as well as for coordination with other civilian components and the military contingents. The legal and administrative procedures to facilitate the work of NGOs within FRY needed to be established. An early and favourable resolution of the case of the Australian CARE staff detained by FRY authorities (see p. 348) was urgently required and the United Nations should continue to seek their release.

The report also made recommendations in relation to justice, including enabling ICTY to carry out its mandate, establishment of a substantial capacity for human rights monitoring, assistance to refugees and displaced persons, emergency assistance to civilians throughout FRY, women and children, winterization plans, budgetary support to Montenegro, a smooth transition from short-term to longer-term rehabilitation and reconstruction, preparation of reconstruction and development plans for Kosovo and ultimately FRY, employment promotion schemes, assessment of the full extent of the environmental impact of the NATO bombing, agriculture, health, mine action and small arms.

The Mission further recommended development of governance programmes for FRY and in particular Kosovo, in the context of a possible transitional administration as a priority area for the United Nations.

The General Assembly, on 15 December, adopted resolution 54/96 F on humanitarian assistance to FRY (see p. 844) and resolution 54/96 G on economic assistance to the Eastern European States affected by the developments in the Balkans (see p. 857).

Further peace proposals

On 6 April [S/1999/388], FRY and the Republic of Serbia announced that, proceeding from the joint statement signed on 1 April between FRY President Milosevic and Kosovo Albanian leader Ibrahim Rugova, and the 5 April agreement between Mr. Rugova and the FRY Vice-President to act jointly to achieve a political settlement and to work jointly on the return of refugees, all actions of the Yugoslav Army and police in Kosovo and Metohija against KLA should cease unilaterally beginning 6 April as a goodwill gesture in honour of the Easter holiday. They expected extreme elements to exercise restraint also. Government representatives should immediately, in co-operation with Mr. Rugova, prepare a political agreement, including an interim agreement to ensure the functioning of joint organs of self-government in Kosovo and Metohija of the Albanian and Serb national communities, which would eventually form the basis for lasting substantial autonomy in Kosovo and Metohija, within Serbia and FRY. They would also prepare a programme for the return of refugees and the establishment of self-government, with participation and assistance from UNHCR and ICRC.

Reacting to the FRY announcement of a unilateral ceasefire, Germany, in a 7 April statement [S/1999/413], agreed to by the Foreign Ministers of France, Italy, the United Kingdom and the United States, said that the ceasefire did not cover the activities of Serb police and paramilitaries, and was an insufficient basis for achieving the international community's objective of a peaceful, multi-ethnic, democratic Kosovo. Belgrade's proposal left unanswered questions relating to President Milosevic's preparedness for verification of combat activities; withdrawal of military, police and paramilitary forces; agreement to the deployment of an international security force; the unconditional return of all refugees and unimpeded access for humanitarian aid; and the putting in place of a political framework for Kosovo on the basis of the Rambouillet Accords. Belgrade's ceasefire proposal would be without significance unless accompanied by positive answers to those questions. The Foreign Ministers called for the release of Mr. Rugova and his family and for the international community to meet with him outside FRY under conditions free from intimidation.

The heads of State and Government of the EU (Brussels, 14 April) [S/1999/429] said they supported the Secretary-General's 9 April initiative [S/1999/402] (see p. 347). It was up to the Yugoslav authorities to accept fully the demands of the international community and begin immediately their implementation to permit a suspension of NATO military action and pave the way for a political solution. They agreed on the following elements of an interim arrangement for Kosovo, to be established directly after the end of the conflict: establishment of an international interim administration, which the EU could take over; creation of a police force reflecting the composition of the Kosovo population; holding of free and fair elections; and deployment of international military forces to guarantee protection for the whole Kosovo population. The EU would convene a Conference on South-Eastern Europe to decide further comprehensive measures for the long-term stabilization, security, democratization and economic reconstruction of the entire region.

On the same date [S/1999/428], Germany submitted to the Security Council a proposed solution to the Kosovo crisis, based on the results of a G-8 meeting of Political Directors in Dresden, Germany, setting out a list of demands to Belgrade, which should form the basis of a Council resolution (see p. 353).

Costa Rica, on 15 April [A/53/913-S/1999/435], welcomed the German and EU proposals and urged the parties to engage in effective negotiations with a view to formulating a peace accord acceptable to all involved. It appealed to the Council and the General Assembly to play a more active role in the solution of the conflict and the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts in that regard.

Ukraine President, Leonid Kuchma, in a 15 April press briefing [A/53/911-S/1999/431], revealed that he had proposed on 24 March a three-phase plan, which, in addition to providing for the cessation of FRY military action, the withdrawal of its armed forces, creation of conditions for the return of refugees and the end to NATO air strikes, envisaged the formation of a peacekeeping contingent under UN auspices, led by a Special Envoy or Representative of the Secretary-General and staffed from non-block and neutral States. The second phase would include the return of refugees under the supervision of peacekeeping forces, and the deployment of an OSCE humanitarian mission to ensure their return and housing, while the third phase could constitute the convening of a peace conference in the capital of one of the neutral States. Ukraine formally submitted its plan to the Council President and the Secretary-General on 17 April [S/1999/433]. Similar proposals were made by Yemen on 21 April [S/1999/465], Mexico on 21 April [A/53/929-S/1999/484] and the OIC Contact Group on 22 April [S/1999/468], which expressed support for the Secretary-General's initiatives and diplomatic efforts.

Special Envoys. On 6 May [S/1999/526], the Secretary-General appointed Carl Bildt (Sweden) and Eduard Kukan (Slovakia) as his Special Envoys for the Balkans to assist him in restoring peace and security and establishing conditions conducive to the voluntary return in safety of refugees and displaced persons to their homes, including maintaining contact with all parties concerned, facilitating a lasting political solution to the crisis, as well as interim arrangements, and helping to coordinate UN system efforts to ensure coherence and avoid duplication. The Council took note of his decision on 7 May [S/1999/527].

Peace agreement

On 6 May [S/1999/516], the G-8 Foreign Ministers, meeting in Bonn, Germany, adopted general principles on the political solution to the Kosovo crisis, and instructed their Political Directors to prepare elements of a UN resolution (see resolution 1244(1999), annex I, below) and draw up a roadmap of further concrete steps towards a political solution. The G-8 Presidency would inform the Government of China on the results of the meeting.

On 17 May [S/1999/589], the EU welcomed the adoption of the G-8 principles and supported Finnish President Martti Ahtisaari's willingness to work on its behalf, in cooperation with the Russian Federation and the United States, to ensure implementation of the international community's conditions to end the conflict. It also welcomed the Secretary-General's appointment of Special Envoys for the Kosovo crisis (see above). The EU stressed the need for an early Security Council resolution and confirmed its preparedness to bring such a resolution about. On 31 May [S/1999/650], the EU announced a mission to Belgrade, to be led by President Ahtisaari on its behalf, in close cooperation with the United States, the Russian Federation and the United Nations.

FRY, on 1 June [S/1999/631], indicated acceptance of the G-8 principles, including a UN presence, the mandate and other modalities which would be established by a Security Council resolution, with the precondition of an urgent cessation of the NATO aggression and the refocusing on political issues to achieve a stable and lasting political solution. It also conveyed to the Secretary-General, on 4 June [S/1999/646], its and Serbia's acceptance of the peace plan (principles) presented by President Ahtisaari and Victor Chernomyrdin, the Russian Federation President's personal envoy.

That peace plan, agreed to by the EU and brought to the Council President's attention on 7 June by Germany [S/1999/649], set out the terms and conditions and modalities to end the violence and echoed the principles established by the G-8 Foreign Ministers: withdrawal from Kosovo of military police and paramilitary forces; deployment in Kosovo, under UN auspices, of an international civil and security presence; deployment under unified command of an international security presence with substantial NATO participation; establishment of an interim administration for Kosovo; the return of a limited number of Yugoslav and Serbian personnel to perform specific identified functions; the return of refugees and displaced persons; a political process towards the establishment of an interim political framework agreement providing for substantial self-government for Kosovo; a comprehensive approach to economic development and stabilization of the crisis region; and acceptance of those principles and others previously identified. A military-technical agreement would then be concluded that would, among other things, specify additional modalities, including the roles and functions of Yugoslav/Serb personnel in Kosovo.

FRY said on 7 June [S/1999/655] that, having accepted the Ahtisaari-Chernomyrdin document on a peaceful solution for Kosovo and Metohija, it expected the Security Council to speed up the passing of its resolution. As negotiations of the military experts were being completed and the withdrawal of FRY's forces could begin immediately, FRY was of the view that the conditions had been created for a halt to the bombing. It wanted to be assured that a security vacuum would not be created between the period of its withdrawal and assumption of responsibility for the population's security by UN-sponsored forces. It expected the Council resolution to ensure respect for FRY's sovereignty and territorial integrity. However, on the same date [S/1999/658, S/1999/653], FRY complained that KLA, supported by Albanian armed forces and NATO, continued to carry out armed attacks against the Yugoslav Army defending the country's border. That followed earlier similar complaints to the Security Council President [S/1999/626, S/1999/628, S/1999/629, S/1999/637, S/1999/638].

ANNEX I

Statement by the Chairman on the conclusion of the meeting of the G-8 Foreign Ministers held at the Petersberg Centre on 6 May 1999

The G-8 Foreign Ministers adopted the following general principles on the political solution to the Kosovo crisis:

- Immediate and verifiable end of violence and repression in Kosovo;
- Withdrawal from Kosovo of military, police and paramilitary forces;
- Deployment in Kosovo of effective international civil and security presences, endorsed and adopted by the United Nations, capable of guaranteeing the achievement of the common objectives;

—Establishment of an interim administration for Kosovo to be decided by the Security Council of the United Nations to ensure conditions for a peaceful and normal life for all inhabitants in Kosovo;

—The safe and free return of all refugees and displaced persons and unimpeded access to Kosovo by humanitarian aid organizations;

—A political process towards the establishment of an interim political framework agreement providing for a substantial self-government for Kosovo, taking full account of the Rambouillet Accords and the principles of sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the other countries of the region, and the demilitarization of the Kosovo Liberation Army;

—Comprehensive approach to the economic development and stabilization of the crisis region.

ANNEX II

Agreement should be reached on the following principles to move towards a resolution of the Kosovo crisis:

1. An immediate and verifiable end of violence and repression in Kosovo.

2. A verifiable withdrawal from Kosovo of all military, police and paramilitary forces according to a rapid timetable.

3. Deployment in Kosovo under United Nations auspices of effective international civil and security presences, acting as may be decided under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, capable of guaranteeing the achievement of common objectives.

4. The international security presence with substantial North Atlantic Treaty Organization participation must be deployed under unified command and control and authorized to establish a safe environment for all people in Kosovo and to facilitate the safe return to their homes of all displaced persons and refugees.

5. The establishment of an interim administration for Kosovo as a part of the international civil presence under which the people of Kosovo can enjoy substantial autonomy within the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, to be decided by the Security Council of the United Nations. The interim administration would provide transitional administration while establishing and overseeing the development of provisional democratic self-governing institutions to ensure conditions for a peaceful and normal life for all inhabitants in Kosovo.

6. After withdrawal, an agreed number of Yugoslav and Serbian personnel will be permitted to return to perform the following functions:

- Liaising with the international civil mission and the international security presence;
- Marking/clearing minefields;
- Maintaining a presence at Serb patrimonial sites;
- Maintaining a presence at key border crossings.

7. The safe and free return of all refugees and displaced persons under the supervision of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and unimpeded access to Kosovo by humanitarian aid organizations.

8. A political process towards the establishment of an interim political framework agreement providing for substantial self-government for Kosovo, taking full account of the Rambouillet Accords and the principles of sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the other countries of the region, and the demilitarization of the Kosovo Liberation Army. Negotiations between the parties for a settlement should not delay or disrupt the establishment of democratic self-governing institutions.

9. A comprehensive approach to the economic development and stabilization of the crisis region. This will include the implementation of a stability pact for South-Eastern Europe with broad international participation in order to further the promotion of democracy, economic prosperity, stability and regional cooperation.

10. The suspension of military activity will require acceptance of the principles set forth above in addition to agreement to other, previously identified, required elements, which are specified in the note below. A military-technical agreement will then be rapidly concluded that would, among other things, specify additional modalities, including the roles and functions of Yugoslav/Serb personnel in Kosovo:

Withdrawal

- Procedures for withdrawals, including the phased, detailed schedule and delineation of a buffer area in Serbia beyond which forces will be withdrawn;

Returning personnel

- Equipment associated with returning personnel;
- Terms of reference for their functional responsibilities;
- Timetable for their return;
- Delineation of their geographical areas of operation;
- Rules governing their relationship to the international security presence and the international civil mission.

Note

Other required elements

- A rapid and precise timetable for withdrawals, meaning, for example, seven days to complete withdrawal, and air defence weapons outside a 25-kilometre mutual safety zone to be withdrawn within 48 hours;
- The return of personnel for the four functions specified above will be under the supervision of the international security presence and will be limited to a small, agreed number (hundreds, not thousands);
- The suspension of military activity will occur after the beginning of verifiable withdrawals;
- The discussion and achievement of a military-technical agreement shall not extend the previously determined time for completion of withdrawals.

VOTE ON RESOLUTION 1244(1999):

In favour Argentina, Bahrain, Brazil, Canada, France, Gabon, Gambia, Malaysia, Namibia, Netherlands, Russian Federation, Slovenia, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: None.

Abstaining: China.

China stated that it had great difficulty with the draft resolution. However, since FRY had already accepted the peace plan and NATO had suspended its bombing, China would not block the resolution's adoption.

Implementation of resolution 1244(1999)

End of NATO air operations and establishment of KFOR

On 9 June, NATO military authorities and FRY concluded the military-technical agreement (also known as the Kumanovo agreement) on the procedures and modalities for the withdrawal of FRY security forces from Kosovo [S/1999/682]. By that agreement, FRY and Serbia agreed to the deployment of the international security force (KFOR), which would operate without hindrance within Kosovo and establish and maintain a secure environment for all citizens of Kosovo. It also provided for a ceasefire and the phased withdrawal of FRY ground forces. KFOR would monitor and ensure compliance with the agreement and respond promptly to any violations, using military force if required; enforce withdrawals of FRY forces and compliance following the return of selected FRY personnel to Kosovo; assist other international entities involved in the implementation or otherwise authorized by the Security Council; establish liaison arrangements with local Kosovo authorities and FRY/Serbian civil and military authorities; and observe, monitor and inspect any and all facilities or activities in Kosovo that had or might have military or police capability.

On 10 June [S/1999/663], the NATO Secretary-General confirmed that FRY security forces had begun to withdraw from Kosovo in accordance with the military-technical agreement and NATO was monitoring its compliance closely. NATO air operations against FRY had therefore been suspended.

On the same date [S/1999/667], the Russian Federation said that NATO's decision to suspend the air strikes was a first step in the right direction, but not sufficient; the main task was to halt them completely. There was an urgent need to accelerate the process leading to a political settlement.

On 20 June [S/1999/702], the NATO Secretary-General confirmed that all uniformed FRY and Serbian security forces had withdrawn from Kosovo. As a result, NATO's limited air response and phased air campaign had been terminated.

KFOR activities

During the year, the NATO Secretary-General reported to the Security Council, in accordance with resolution 1244(1999), on the activities of KFOR, also known as Operation Joint Guardian [S/1999/692, S/1999/767, S/1999/868, S/1999/982, S/1999/1062, S/1999/1185, S/1999/1266], which began deployment in Kosovo on 12 June. By December, the force, which operated under NATO leadership, comprised 44,000 troops from 17 NATO countries, as well as from non-NATO countries. The deployment of troops from the Russian Federation in the town of Orahovac continued to be hampered by ongoing demonstrations and road-blocks set up by various groups of ethnic Albanians.

KFOR provided humanitarian assistance throughout Kosovo, focusing on transportation, distribution of food, medical support, re-establishment of support services and the protection and escorting of refugees and internally displaced persons. It also supported ICTY and guarded five detention centres for common law criminals, assisted in collecting and assessing applications for the Kosovar Police Service and helped with the construction and other preparatory work for the new Kosovo Police School. It deployed checkpoints on the main border-crossing points from Kosovo to FYROM and Albania to prevent illegal traffic in weapons and military equipment, and conducted helicopter-borne reconnaissance and quick reaction force missions in western Kosovo against smuggling and looting across the Albanian border.

KFOR strongly supported the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (see below) and was represented at all levels of civil administration and worked closely with its administrators. It also worked closely with the United Nations Mine Action Service and jointly established the United Nations Mine Action Coordination Centre to maintain visibility of mines and the unexploded ordnance threat in Kosovo.

KFOR attached the highest priority to the protection of minorities and some 50 per cent of its personnel was assigned to that task. Troops provided a permanent presence in Serb towns, villages and neighbourhoods and even in individual houses, and organized patrols and checkpoints in key areas to provide security and instil a feeling of confidence in the community. Simultaneously, KFOR followed an overall strategy to reduce the amount of ethnically motivated violence, including the establishment of joint security working groups, escorts for individuals and groups, humanitarian aid convoys, high-profile patrols and static checkpoints in and around ethnic minority pockets, and operations to find and confiscate illegal/unauthorized weapons and munitions throughout Kosovo. Its troops were also working to combat organized crime. KFOR's weapons destruction policy, which began on 15 October, resulted in the destruction of 2,053 weapons, 57 mines and explosive devices and 836 items of ammunition by mid-December.

UN Interim Administration in Kosovo

The Secretary-General, in a June report on the implementation of Security Council resolution 1244(1999) [S/1999/672], presented the preliminary operational concept for the overall organization of the civil presence in Kosovo, to be known as the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK). The Mission would be headed by the Secretary-General's Special Representative, who would have overall authority to manage and coordinate activities and to facilitate a political process to determine Kosovo's future political status. The Special Representative would be supported by units for political and legal advice, military liaison, liaison with ICTY and relations with the mass media. The Mission would comprise four components, with an agency taking the lead role in each area: interim civil administration (United Nations); humanitarian affairs (UNHCR); institution-building (OSCE); and reconstruction (EU). The Special Representative would appoint an Executive Committee to assist him in fulfilling his responsibilities. Effective arrangements would be established for regular consultations between the Special Representative and the KFOR Commander, and the Military Liaison Unit would facilitate relations with KFOR and ensure effective liaison with it for all aspects of UNMIK's work. The Mission would also establish a system of advisory mechanisms and implementation committees to fully engage the local population.

Sergio Vieira de Mello, Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator was appointed interim Special Representative on 11 June [S/1999/675, S/1999/676]. On 2 July, the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of the appointment of Bernard Kouchner (France) as Special Representative [S/1999/748, S/1999/749].

The Council on 17 June approved UNMIK's concept of operations [S/1999/689].

Communications. On 18 June [S/1999/703], the FRY Government issued a statement announcing that it had duly and fully honoured all its commitments under resolution 1244(1999) and demanding that the UN security force do likewise regarding the security and safety of all inhabitants of Kosovo and Metohija, particularly the Serbs and Montenegrins who felt endangered by KLA aggression. In a further elaboration of its position regarding implementation of the resolution, issued on 22 June [S/1999/708], FRY offered its clarification of the coordination between the military and civilian aspects of the UN Mission: demilitarization and disarmament of all armed Albanian groups, in particular KLA, was a precondition for establishing secure conditions for all residents in Kosovo and Metohija; the international forces should act within the Council's mandate and be under the Special Representative's control; humanitarian assistance should be distributed without discrimination and equally to all residents, irrespective of ethnicity; the entire international presence was obliged to respect FRY's territorial integrity and sovereignty, including respect for its political, administrative, legal, economic and monetary system and unhindered functioning of public services in accordance with Yugoslav laws and regulations; and the role and mandate of international representatives vis-à-vis local organs should be clearly defined, as well as the modalities of their cooperation. An agreement between FRY and the United Nations should be signed.

In a later communication [S/1999/743], FRY complained to the Secretary-General of attempts to reinterpret the provisions of resolution 1244 (1999) relative to its territorial integrity and sovereignty. Statements by UN representatives on the need to introduce a separate currency for Kosovo and Metohija violated FRY's sovereignty and territorial integrity and the resolution. Regarding the establishment of a provisional and interim administration in the province, all measures and solutions would have to be taken in cooperation with, and with the agreement of, the legal authorities and in full respect for its unified legal, economic and monetary systems. That included FRY's right to control its international borders and to maintain Yugoslav customs and immigration services on its border crossings.

G-8 statement (June). In a 20 June statement [S/1999/711], the G-8 countries welcomed the decisive steps already taken and under way to end violence and repression in Kosovo, establish peace and provide for the safe and free return of all refugees and displaced persons. It reaffirmed support for the international civil and security presences in accordance with resolution 1244(1999) and pledged to cooperate closely to ensure UN success in carrying out its complex mission. They also welcomed the agreement reached between NATO and the Russian Federation on the international security presence and the military-technical agreement. The G-8 countries insisted that all parties respect the ceasefire and abide by the military-technical agreement and resolution 1244(1999) concerning the withdrawal of Yugoslav and Serb military, police and paramilitary forces from Kosovo and the demilitarization of KLA and other armed Kosovo Albanian groups. They would work cooperatively with each other, the United Nations, the EU, OSCE and other international organizations to facilitate the safe return of the refugees and displaced persons, as well as with ICTY. They affirmed their commitment to a meeting of the international donor community in July to address short-term humanitarian and other needs for Kosovo and a subsequent meeting in the autumn after a full assessment of needs.

Report of Secretary-General (July). The Secretary-General, in a July report on UNMIK [S/1999/779], said that, following the deployment of KFOR on 12 June and the completion of the withdrawal of FRY forces on 20 June (see p. 356), KLA, on 21 June, signed an undertaking, which established the modalities and the schedule for its demilitarization. The general situation in Kosovo had been tense but was stabilizing. KLA had rapidly moved back into all parts of Kosovo, in particular the south-west. A large number of Serbs had left for Serbia, due in part to an increasing number of incidents committed by Kosovo Albanians against them, including high-profile killings and abductions, looting, arson and forced expropriation of apartments. Cities, such as Prizren and Pec, were practically deserted by Kosovo Serbs and the towns of Mitrovica and Orahovac were divided along ethnic lines. The security problem was largely a result of the absence of law and order institutions and agencies, and criminal gangs competing for control of scarce resources were exploiting that void.

By 8 July, more than 650,000 of the estimated 800,000 refugees had returned to Kosovo, leaving an estimated 150,000 in neighbouring regions and countries, 90,000 in third countries and an unknown number of asylum-seekers. Many of the 500,000 internally displaced were in worse health than the refugees, having spent weeks in hiding without food or shelter. Kosovo's public service structures were largely inoperative due to a combination of neglect, war damage and the departure of trained staff, and the immediate economic outlook was precarious.

The bulk of UNMIK's advance team was deployed in Kosovo shortly after 13 June. It established working relations with KFOR and various international organizations, including ICTY, ICRC and NGOs. UNMIK also maintained contacts with local FRY representatives in Pristina. The first international police were deployed on 3 July. The interim Special Representative said he would appoint international administrators at the regional and municipal levels and had taken steps to re-establish a multi-ethnic and democratic judicial system. He appointed a Joint Advisory Council for judicial appointments, four prosecutors, two investigating judges and a three-judge panel.

At the functional level, UNMIK established joint civilian commissions, for health, universities, education and culture, municipalities and governance, post and telecommunications, and power, to facilitate a controlled transition to integrated public institutions and to address such contentious issues as administration and staffing of public facilities. At the political level, consultations continued on the formation of the Kosovo Transitional Council to provide a mechanism for enhancing cooperation between UNMIK and the people, restore confidence between the communities, identify candidates for the interim administration structures, and promote democratization and institution-building. Regional administrators were deployed to all five regions and links established with local leaders to ensure continuation of basic services and the reduction of tension.

UNMIK, in cooperation with KFOR, undertook various confidence-building measures aimed at restraining Kosovo Albanians and reassuring Kosovo Serbs. On 2 July, representatives from the two sides agreed on measures to enhance security and called for the creation of a joint crisis task force.

UNMIK cooperated with ICTY and provided support for its activities. Assisted by the United Nations Mine Action Service and the United Nations Office for Project Services, UNMIK's mine action team began setting up the mine action programme for Kosovo, the first step of which was the establishment of the United Nations Mine Action Coordination Centre. Principal UN humanitarian agencies, led by UNHCR, established representative offices in Pristina and were operating in all regions, while over 45 NGOs and major bilateral donors had committed personnel and resources to meet immediate relief needs.

The Secretary-General stated that UNMIK's work would be conducted in five integrated phases. The first would focus on the establishment and consolidation of UNMIK's authority and the creation of interim UNMIK administrative structures, including a phased plan for economic recovery and development and establishment and maintenance of a viable, self-sustaining economy. The second phase would be directed towards the administration of social services and utilities and consolidation of the rule of law, while the third would emphasize the finalization of preparations for elections for the Kosovo Transitional Authority. During the fourth phase, UNMIK would oversee and assist elected Kosovo representatives to organize and establish provisional institutions for democratic and autonomous self-government. A concluding fifth phase would depend on a final settlement, during which UNMIK would oversee the transfer of authority from Kosovo's provisional institutions to those established under a political settlement.

Communications. Commenting on the Secretary-General's report, FRY, on 16 July [S/1999/797], took exception to its presentation of the overall situation in Kosovo, considering it biased and tendentious and failing to address, or diluting, the true security situation following KFOR's deployment and UNMIK's arrival. It took exception especially to the definition of UNMIK's mandate and authority, particularly the authority and competencies of the Special Representative, which, it said, suspended, de facto, FRY sovereignty in Kosovo and Metohija. The Secretary-General's report interpreted UNMIK's mandate very broadly, outside the framework of resolution 1244(1999). Those views were further expanded in another communication of the same date [S/1999/800] and in a 27 July memorandum on the implementation of resolution 1244(1999) [S/1999/828 & Corr.1,2], in which FRY declared that it would not recognize KFOR and UNMIK decisions that were not in line with that resolution or which endangered FRY's sovereignty and territorial integrity. FRY, on 16 August, outlined a number of measures it expected the Security Council to take to ensure full and consistent implementation of resolution 1244(1999) [S/1999/887].

Report of Secretary-General (September). In September [S/1999/987], the Secretary-General reported that UNMIK had made significant progress. It had established structures at various levels, particularly the Kosovo Transitional Council. To broaden the Council's inclusiveness, the Special Representative proposed the creation within it of four directorates covering housing, health, education and public utilities, to involve the people of Kosovo in decision-making on those issues.

The level and nature of the violence in Kosovo, especially against minorities, remained a major concern (see p. 366). Measures to address the problem were having a positive effect, but continued vigilance was necessary, said the Secretary-General. Senior Kosovo Albanian personalities, including the KLA leadership, had voiced public positions on tolerance and security of minorities and had denied involvement in attacks, and called on non-Albanians to remain in Kosovo. However, that seemed to have had little effect in preventing attacks against minorities. Hardening Serb attitudes towards Kosovo Albanians were helping to radicalize Albanians in Mitrovica. Tensions also continued in Oraovac, where Albanian residents were blocking the deployment of KFOR troops. Around 4,000 of the 10,000 registered KLA combatants remained in assembly areas awaiting demilitarization. KFOR was developing a concept for demobilization, offering individual members an opportunity to participate in a disciplined, professional, multi-ethnic civilian emergency corps.

Significant problems had also resulted with respect to property rights, reinforcing ethnic divisions and complicating the process of return. As at 4 September, more than 770,000 refugees had returned to Kosovo. However, many non-Albanian groups, primarily Serbs and Roma, who had been the targets of harassment, intimidation and attacks, had left Kosovo.

Housing surveys conducted in 90 per cent of the affected villages revealed that an estimated 50,000 houses were beyond repair and another 50,000 severely damaged. However, it was estimated that the vast majority of the population would be housed, albeit temporarily, during the winter months. UNHCR, the United Nations Children's Fund and international and local NGOs were implementing projects under a "Kosovo Women's Initiative", while the International Federation of Red Cross Societies and the International Organization for Migration were working with the Kosovo Red Cross to support longer-term rehabilitation of health services, agriculture, village water systems, hospital training and psychological support. The World Health Organization was also involved in the rehabilitation of the health sector.

UNMIK's civil administration component, working in cooperation with KFOR and acting largely through joint civilian commissions, had achieved considerable progress in re-establishing public services and utilities, including post and telecommunications, sanitation services and restoration of the electricity system. With EU assistance, UNMIK had established, on an emergency basis, a customs system, and would begin issuing temporary identification cards to residents by 30 October. Under UNMIK's coordination, more than 400 schools, only two of which were ethnically mixed, reopened on 1 September. Some 263 schools were under repair and most were expected to be functional in October.

UNMIK's civilian police had expanded its presence in Kosovo, concentrating first on Pristina and its surrounding region. UNMIK police officers were also deployed at the major border crossings with Albania and FYROM. The full deployment of UNMIK civilian police was to be completed by 15 October. However, the Secretary-General noted that more international police would be needed until sufficient numbers of newly trained Kosovo Police Service officers were available. The development of that Service was proceeding rapidly. Its training school in Vucitrn inducted the first multi-ethnic class of 200 cadets in September.

An Advisory Judicial Commission was created to recommend suitable candidates for appointment as judges and prosecutors, as well as a Technical Advisory Commission to advise UNMIK on the structure and administration of the judiciary and prosecution services and to make recommendations for the establishment of the Kosovo Supreme Court. Kosovo's criminal codes, criminal procedures code and the laws on internal affairs and public peace and order were being reviewed to bring them in line with international human rights standards and regulations. An emergency judicial system was initiated on 30 June, with the opening of the District Court in Pristina. Other courts were established in Prizren, Pec, Gnjilane and Mitrovica.

A new public broadcasting service, known as Radio-Television Kosovo, was being developed. In the interim, Radio Pristina was operating under international supervision and was broadcasting in Albanian, Serbian and Turkish. To encourage the development of political parties, political party support centres were being established to provide services, on a shared basis, to all political parties. Human rights monitors, working with the humanitarian component and UNHCR, were active throughout Kosovo. The human rights training unit would coordinate with the Council of Europe and NGOs in training local human rights defenders in international standards and mechanisms. Work was continuing on the establishment of an ombudsman's office. A focal point for issues related to missing persons was also established within UNMIK's institution-building component. The matter was also being addressed by the Kosovo Transitional Council, which had established a Subcommission for that purpose.

The Secretary-General observed that if the gains made were not to be eroded, the international community would have to continue to offer consistent and long-term political, material and financial support to UNMIK. Of critical importance to its success would be the provision of voluntary contributions to fund salaries of local public servants and other public activities. He appealed to Member States to contribute generously to the United Nations trust fund set up for that purpose.

In a later addendum [S/1999/987/Add.1], the Secretary-General, following a comprehensive review of UNMIK's requirements, recommended that the total number of UN civilian police officers be increased to 4,718 to ensure that the Mission had the capacity to establish and maintain civil law and order. That number would be gradually reduced as the force progressively fulfilled its parallel mandate of developing capable local police forces. The Security Council took note of the proposed increase in November [S/1999/1119].

Communications. On 22 September [S/1999/1001], FRY contested the description of the situation in Kosovo, as reflected in the Secretary-General's September report, and proposed that the Security Council dispatch a delegation there to ascertain the real situation. It claimed that KLA's disarmament had not been effected according to resolution 1244(1999), nor was KFOR determined to enforce it. Some of the measures taken by the Special Representative were instrumental in promoting Kosovo and Metohija's secession and some of the regulations (see p. 362) amounted to a flagrant violation of the resolution, as they disregarded or undermined FRY's sovereignty and territorial integrity, especially those on the establishment of customs and other related services. The report was silent on the Albanian terrorists' responsibility for acts of terrorism against Serbs and other non-Albanians following UNMIK's arrival. Of particular concern was the report's open support for the idea of creating a "Kosovo Corps" (see p. 366), which was just a change of name of the terrorist organization. FRY stated that, considering that no legal representatives of Kosovo and Metohija Serbs were on the Kosovo Transitional Council, it could not represent the interests of the Serbian population. FRY submitted a 3 November memorandum [S/1999/1124], in which it set out in further detail the systematic violations of its sovereignty and territorial integrity, of resolution 1244(1999) and of the military-technical agreement.

Report of Secretary-General (December). In December [S/1999/1250], the Secretary-General reported that UNMIK had made progress in involving the Kosovo population in the province's provisional administration through the establishment of a Kosovo-UNMIK Joint Interim Administrative Structure, agreed to on 15 December by the leaders of Kosovo's political parties. It would comprise an Interim Administrative Council, which would make recommendations for amendments to the Applicable Law and for new regulations and propose policy guidelines. At the municipal level, administration would be entrusted to an Administrative Board appointed and headed by the UNMIK Municipal Administrator. Under the 15 December agreement, the Kosovo Transitional Council would maintain its consultative role and would be enlarged to better reflect the pluralistic nature of the population. All parallel structures within Kosovo were to be transformed and progressively integrated into the Joint Administrative Structure.

Since September, the demilitarization of KLA was completed and the process of transforming former soldiers commenced. The establishment of the Kosovo Protection Corps (KPC) was instrumental in that regard (see p. 366).

At the political level, Kosovo Albanian and Kosovo Serb political parties had consolidated their representation. Two major parties dominated the political scene: the new Kosovo Democratic Progress Party, with Hasim Thaci as President; and the Democratic League of Kosovo, headed by Ibrahim Rugova. A Kosovo Serb National Council was established on 18 October.

Since September, a number of security incidents and crimes had taken place, reportedly involving former KLA members and potential KPC members (see p. 366), some of whom also attempted to exercise unauthorized and unacceptable police functions. UNMIK police arrested several of them and KFOR carried out raids on former KLA assembly areas and offices as part of a wider campaign to ensure that potential KPC leaders and members understood that there would be no tolerance for unauthorized weapons and criminal activities by Corps members.

By December, at least 810,000 refugees had returned to Kosovo. The total number of registered internally displaced persons from Kosovo in Serbia and Montenegro stood at some 243,000. The number of Kosovo Serbs returning from Serbia proper and Montenegro increased. Some visited temporarily to ascertain whether it was safe to return home, while others returned to mono-ethnic villages that were safer than their places of origin in areas of mixed ethnicity.

UNMIK administrators had been established in all 29 municipalities and five regions. The task of strengthening local administration at the municipal level was not easy owing to prevailing ethnic tensions, continued acts of violence, intimidation and extortion against minorities. UNMIK's limited presence in the regions and municipalities during the early stages of the Mission had allowed parallel local structures to take root in some areas. Those structures, mainly affiliated with the former KLA, were competing with UNMIK for interim administration authority through such illegal activities as tax collection and certification. The Special Representative made it known that UNMIK was the only legitimate authority in Kosovo. Additionally, an institutional framework common to all municipalities was established to carry out administrative tasks and execute policies, as well as a consultative body ensuring representation of as broad a spectrum of the population as possible. The objective was to incorporate individuals who participated in parallel structures into the municipal administration, as well as persons from other political parties and representatives of minorities.

UNMIK, in cooperation with the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), established a mechanism to regularize residential housing and property rights, including the establishment of an independent Housing and Property Directorate and a Housing and Property Claims Commission. At the same time, an inventory of all cadastral offices in Kosovo was being carried out to develop a new cadastral information system. Meanwhile, regional administrators were authorized temporarily to allocate vacant housing to homeless people on humanitarian grounds. The Special Representative repealed discriminatory legislation affecting housing and rights to property.

Concerning judicial matters, regulations were adopted on 12 December stating that applicable law in Kosovo would be the regulations promulgated by the Special Representative, including subsidiary rules, and the law in force on 22 March 1989. Federal law would continue to apply in any situation not governed by them, including the law of criminal procedure. Serbian law would apply only in rare cases where Federal law failed to cover a given situation.

With respect to human rights, the issue of Kosovo Albanians detained in Serbian prisons remained a major concern. An ICRC civilian prison census confirmed that 1,970 Kosovo Albanians were officially held. Some 300 Kosovo Albanian prisoners had been released by the Belgrade authorities since the summer. However, there was growing concern at reports that some prisoners were being released after paying prison officials or other intermediaries. On 6 December, the institution-building component (OSCE) released two reports documenting human rights violations in Kosovo before and after the arrival of KFOR and UNMIK, and organized on 10 and 11 December the first international human rights conference in Pristina.

A growing atmosphere of fear imperilled efforts to create the rule of law in Kosovo. Witnesses to human rights violations frequently refused to provide information to the police, or, if they did, later retracted their testimony or did not appear for court hearings. Judges and prosecutors had received threats. Impunity was emerging as a problem that undermined efforts to build an independent legal system and a police force that respected human rights.

The inaugural class of the future Kosovo Police Service graduated on 16 October. Among the 173 graduating officers were 156 Albanians, 8 Kosovo Serbs, 3 Muslim Slavs, 3 Roma and 3 Turks.

UNMIK had been studying the feasibility of holding municipal elections in Kosovo in 2000. It agreed to form a Registration Task Force, which should begin the registration process early in 2000, to be completed by June of that year. UNMIK's Department of Elections had also been addressing the procedural aspects of those elections, including residential criteria for enfranchisement. The timing of the elections would depend on a variety of factors, including the speed with which civil and voter registrations could be completed.

Radio-Television Kosovo transmitted its first television programme on 19 September. The transformation of public broadcasting was further advanced with the closing of Radio Pristina on 31 October and the opening of Radio Kosovo on 1 November. The Special Representative appointed a temporary Media Commissioner for Kosovo and the Kosovo Media Policy Advisory Board expanded its membership to seven. A Joint Consultative Committee was formed to discuss the advisability of codes of practice for the print and broadcast media and enforcement mechanisms.

UNMIK regulations

Pursuant to resolution 1244(1999), the Special Representative issued regulations relating to the functioning of the civil administration in Kosovo and establishing UNMIK's authority over all aspects of life there. Annexed to the Secretary-General's September report on UNMIK [S/1999/987] were seven regulations on: the establishment of UNMIK's authority in Kosovo; the prevention of access by individuals and their removal to secure public peace and order; the establishment of the customs and other related services in Kosovo; the currency to be used; the establishment of an ad hoc Court of Final Appeal and an ad hoc Office of the Public Prosecutor; the structure and administration of the judiciary and prosecution service; and the appointment and removal of judges and prosecutors. In December [S/1999/1250/Add.1], the Secretary-General submitted the texts of another 16 regulations issued by the Special Representative since 16 September concerning establishment of the Kosovo Protection Corps and budgetary, housing and banking matters, among others.

Communications. FRY, in a series of letters between 7 September and 15 December, protested, as being contrary to resolution 1244(1999), the introduction by UNMIK and the Special Representative of those regulations and actions [S/1999/953, S/1999/1143, S/1999/1165, S/1999/1190, S/1999/1247, S/1999/1255]. FRY also protested the opening of Pristina Airport to commercial flights and to the contracting of a number of air companies for that purpose [S/1999/1019, S/1999/1056] and UNMIK's decision to carry out a population registration in Kosovo [S/1999/1107]; permission to Albania to open a representative office in Kosovo [S/1999/1261]; and the participation of KFOR and UNMIK in staging the marking of Albania's national day in Kosovo [S/1999/1212].

On 17 December [S/1999/1262], FRY condemned the Special Representative's attitude in breach of the Charter, international law, Council resolution 1244(1999) and FRY's and Serbia's Constitutions and laws. It pointed to his systematic recourse to the policy of fait accompli and outright cooperation with ethnic Albanian separatists in the practice of ethnic cleansing, his issue of permits to foreign States to open representative offices in Kosovo and Metohija, and the establishment of the Joint Administrative Council. FRY inquired whether the Special Representative had the agreement of the Secretary-General and the Security Council for his acts.

In other communications, FRY protested the eviction of Serbian medical doctors from the medical centre in Gnjilane [S/1999/1164] and the maltreatment of Serbs by members of the United States KFOR contingent in the village of Cernica [S/1999/1090], and informed the Council President of UNMIK's practice of seizing FRY public and State property in Kosovo [S/1999/934]; it demanded restitution of the illegally seized property and its return and called on the Council to instruct UNMIK not to abuse its functions and abide by Council resolution 1244(1999).

It drew attention to the construction of military bases by the United States KFOR contingent in Urosevac, Podujevo and Pec, and urged the Council to take measures to prevent the violation of resolution 1244(1999) [S/1999/965, S/1999/1032].

In a statement of 6 July [S/1999/758] and a letter of 7 July [S/1999/766], FRY protested the joint statement signed on 2 July by Bishop Artemije of Pristina and Momcilo Trajkovic with Hasim Thaci, under the auspices of UNMIK and KFOR, on reconciliation and tolerance. FRY condemned the attempt by UN representatives to orchestrate a meeting between Serb and Kosovo Albanian representatives. The alleged representatives of the Serb people represented themselves and the Serbs had not delegated to the UN Representative the right to elect their representatives.

Concerning the contentious issue of the operation of customs facilities in Kosovo, FRY, on 6 July [S/1999/759], advised the Council that UNMIK and KFOR had shown no readiness to solve the question of the return of FRY customs authorities to the Kosovo border crossings with Albania and FYROM, and requested the Council to consider the issue urgently.

On 4 August [S/1999/850], FRY protested the manner in which UNMIK had established customs control at four border crossings on the FRY border with Albania and FYROM. It said that, despite meetings with UNMIK and KFOR at which no agreement was reached, and without the participation of competent Yugoslav authorities, UNMIK had set out to establish a separate customs service at the border crossings at Djeneral Jankovic, Globocica, Cafa Prusit and Vrbnica. On 20 August [S/1999/899], FRY drew the Council President's attention to the establishment of the customs service of Kosovo, of which the Federal Customs Administration was informed by the Customs Office in Pristina. FRY, on 3 September [S/1999/945], opposed that decision by the Special Representative, as well as the introduction of a foreign currency in Kosovo and Metohija. FRY requested that those services be disbanded, that its customs officers be allowed to return to the border crossings and that the customs service in Kosovo and Metohija be enabled to function undisturbed.

In a related communication [S/1999/1166], FRY conveyed its commiseration over the crash of a UN plane in Kosovo and Metohija. However, it pointed out that flights to the province were operated in violation of its sovereignty and territorial integrity and resolution 1244(1999), and in disregard for the air traffic norms and regulations for which FRY was responsible under relevant international agreements. It requested the UN civil and security presences to bring their flight operations into accord with FRY's international air traffic obligations and competencies.

UNMIK financing

By a 2 July note [A/53/238], the Secretary-General requested that the item "Financing of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo" be included in the agenda of the General Assembly's fifty-third (resumed) session. In an addendum [A/53/238/Add.1], he sought, following the adoption of Security Council resolution 1244(1999), authority to enter into commitments in an amount not exceeding $200 million to meet the most immediate requirements for carrying out the initial phase of UNMIK's implementation plan (see p. 357). ACABQ recommended that the Secretary-General be granted that authority, inclusive of the amount of $50 million it had already authorized [A/53/1019].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (July)

On 28 July [meeting 105], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/1025], adopted resolution 53/241 without vote [agenda item 170].

Financing of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1244(1999) of 10 June 1999 regarding the establishment of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo,

Acknowledging the complexity of the activities envisaged in the Mission,

Recognizing that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing also that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

2. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo in full and on time;

3. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

4. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

5. Deeply regrets that the report of the Secretary-General does not contain adequate and precise information to substantiate fully the request submitted;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments in an amount not exceeding 200 million United States dollars, inclusive of the amount of 50 million dollars authorized by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, for the operation of the Mission under the terms of section IV of General Assembly resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994, and requests the Secretary-General to establish a special account for the Mission;

8. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 125 million dollars among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1999, as set out in its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997;

9. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

10. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Mission;

11. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, as a matter of priority, a comprehensive report on the financing of the Mission, including full budget estimates and information on the utilization of resources until the time of the submission of the report, to enable the General Assembly to take action on it at the earliest opportunity;

13. Notes the intention of the Secretary-General to submit the full budget to the General Assembly by the end of September or early October 1999;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo".

In October [A/54/494 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General submitted a comprehensive report on UNMIK's financing, containing the proposed budget for the period 10 June 1999 to 30 June 2000, inclusive of budgeted voluntary contributions in kind, and the commitment authority already authorized in resolution 53/241. The proposed budget supported a strength of 38 military liaison officers, 4,718 civilian police, 1,269 international staff, 3,566 local staff, 18 National Officers and 203 United Nations Volunteers. ACABQ's recommendations on the proposed budget were contained in its November report to the Assembly [A/54/622].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 23 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/674], adopted resolution 54/245 A without vote [agenda item 166].

Financing of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo

Further political developments

Creation of Kosovo Protection Corps

The Secretary-General, in his December report on implementation of resolution 1244(1999) [S/1999/1250] (see p. 369), reported that the demilitarization of KLA was completed on 20 September and the process of transforming former soldiers commenced with the establishment of the Kosovo Protection Corps. Consisting of up to 3,000 active and 2,000 reserve members, KPC would not have any role in law enforcement or the maintenance of law and order but would be used exclusively for civil emergencies, search and rescue, demining projects and rebuilding infrastructure and housing. Individuals from minority groups were to make up at least 10 per cent of both active and reserve members.

On 23 September [S/1999/1012], the EU welcomed KFOR's announcement that KLA had completed its disarmament obligations and the formation of the multi-ethnic KPC to assist UNMIK in civil emergencies.

On 23 and 24 [S/1999/999, S/1999/1002] September, FRY protested the signing on 20 September of the agreement between UNMIK and KLA on the establishment of KPC as a flagrant violation of resolution 1244(1999) and the concealed attempt to legalize a terrorist organization. FRY noted that KLA had not been disarmed or demilitarized. KFOR and UNMIK's arbitrariness and illegal decision constituted a substantial step towards Albanian separatist goals in Kosovo and Metohija and were unacceptable to FRY. FRY insisted that that decision and all those taken by KFOR and UNMIK violating resolution 1244(1999) be annulled.

Resurgence of violence

Communications. On 28 June [S/1999/729], FRY informed the Security Council President of a serious deterioration in the security situation in Kosovo since KFOR assumed responsibility there, and of a massive violation of basic human rights of the non-Albanian population, primarily Serbs, whose life and property had been threatened by KLA and other Albanian criminal groups. It accused KFOR of failing to close and establish full control over the border with Albania and FYROM, thereby enabling uncontrolled inroads by armed terrorists of KLA, Albanian regular military forces and criminal marauding gangs. The number of persons abducted continued to rise, private and State properties were threatened, home and apartment owners were evicted en masse, houses and villages burned and cultural and religious monuments destroyed. The goal of the ongoing violence was to complete the ethnic cleansing of the province of Serbs and the non-Albanian population in general.

FRY called on the Council to consider urgently the situation in Kosovo and Metohija and condemn, in the strongest terms, terrorism, violence and threats to human rights by KLA and criminal Albanian gangs; demand that KFOR and UNMIK take measures to eliminate further violence and threats to the security of persons and complete the demilitarization and disarmament of KLA; order restitution and rescission of all cases of illegal usurpation of private and State properties, illegal dismissals and employment of the use of force and intimidation; emphasize respect for FRY's sovereignty and territorial integrity, particularly in respect of the establishment of the interim and transitional administrations; call for the realization of the agreement on the return of Yugoslav and Serbian personnel; and establish, in cooperation with UNHCR, the framework of cooperation and procedures for the safe return of refugees and displaced citizens.

FRY considered it necessary, for the successful implementation of Council resolution 1244 (1999), to conclude an agreement on cooperation and on the status of the international presences in Kosovo and Metohija.

Attached to FRY's communication was an overview of terrorist and other acts of violence in Kosovo and Metohija between 12 and 27 June. On 24 July [S/1999/818], FRY repeated its call for an urgent meeting of the Council to discuss the massacre on the previous day of 14 Serbian farmers, including women and children, in the village of Staro Gradsko.

The Russian Federation, in a 17 August statement [S/1999/890], said it was disturbed at the slow process of disarming the Kosovo rebels and doubted that the agreement on complete demilitarization would be fulfilled within the 90 days. The activities of the Albanian extremists were challenging the international community, in violation of resolution 1244(1999). Outbreaks of violence were continuing in Kosovo and killings were on the rise, as were incidents of arson and looting against the non-Albanian population as a result of the policy of appeasement of Albanian separatism pursued by a number of Western countries. The international forces deployed in Kosovo were not coping with the wave of terror and it was necessary to speed up UNMIK's deployment. The international community should take steps to avert the dangerous trends in the developing situation in Kosovo and divert the process towards a political settlement, while fully respecting FRY's sovereignty and territorial integrity.

On 25 August [S/1999/914], FRY reported the discovery of a mass grave of 15 civilians of Serbian nationality in the village of Ugljare, near Gnjilane, including members of the Zdravkovic family, abducted on 10 July by KLA terrorists. It demanded, among other things, that the Council have KFOR and UNMIK, effectively guarantee full personal and property security to Serbian, Montenegrin and other non-Albanian populations; put an end to the vandalism and terror; ensure the release of about 300 Serbs abducted; and allow a contingent of the Yugoslav Army and police to return to the province in accordance with resolution 1244(1999) and the military-technical agreement (see p. 356). The FRY leadership, in the light of the discovery of the 15 bodies in the United States zone of responsibility in Kosovo and Metohija, accused that country of responsibility for the massacre [S/1999/922]. On 29 August [A/53/300], FRY reported to the Secretary-General another incident involving the killing of 22 kidnapped Serbs in Klecka.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (August/September)

The Security Council met on 30 August [A/55/2] to consider the situation in Kosovo and implementation of resolution 1244(1999). Council members, while noting the recent improvements in Kosovo, condemned violence against the civilian population, in particular against ethnic minorities, as well as against KFOR personnel, and demanded that such acts cease immediately. They reaffirmed the importance of full implementation of resolution 1244(1999) and reiterated the need to comply fully with the resolution's demands and cooperate fully with KFOR and UNMIK. On 7 September, the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations reported to the Council on the investigation by ICTY of mass graves with allegedly Serbian victims in Ugljare and Metohija. The Tribunal confirmed that the victims seemed to have been Serbs.

Further communications. On 1 September [S/1999/935], FRY, while welcoming the Council's 30 August statement, expressed surprise that no mention was made of all the massacres of Serbs and the systematic terror and ethnic cleansing that they and other non-Albanians had been exposed to in the presence of KFOR and UNMIK. It said that the Council had turned a blind eye to KLA's terrorism, towards which KFOR had taken a tolerant attitude. The tragedy of the Serbs and other non-Albanians was ignored and their brutalization took place with KFOR in attendance. Bearing in mind the gravity of the situation, urgent measures and actions were needed, including sanctions.

In letters of 9 and 12 [S/1999/962, S/1999/966] September, FRY protested the shelling of five Serbian villages near Gnjilane by KLA on 8 September, which, it said, was further proof that KLA had not disarmed, and reported the attack by ethnic Albanians on the northern part of Kosovska Mitrovica on 9 September. The latter incident was further proof of the very volatile situation in Kosovo and Metohija and the systematic pressure on Serbs to force them to leave localities in which they lived. Further, FRY reported a mortar attack on 28 September [S/1999/1018] on Serbian civilians at Kosovo Polje market, which killed two and wounded 42, seven of them seriously. It reiterated its demand that the Council annul the Special Representative's decision to transform KLA into KPC (see p. 366) and to effect its immediate disbandment.

FRY, on 5 October [S/1999/1031], requested that Yugoslav Army units and Serbian police personnel return to Kosovo and Metohija, in accordance with Council resolution 1244(1999), to avert the exodus of Serbs, Montenegrins and other non-Albanians from the province, to facilitate their return and to help maintain its multi-ethnic, multi-cultural and multi-religious nature. It also brought to the Council's attention on 9 October [S/1999/1046] the dramatic situation of several thousand Serbs and a few hundred Roma in the town of Orahovac, where KLA had blocked humanitarian convoys for two months, preventing the delivery of food, while Albanian terrorists obstructed water and power supplies to the Serb-populated part of the town. In addition, over 1,000 Roma children were prevented from attending school. Instead of lifting the blockade, UN security and civil presences were organizing evacuation convoys to resettle Serbs and other non-Albanians from Orahovac. FRY accused KFOR of a double standard in doing nothing to remove the Albanian obstacles to the entry of Russian troops in Orahovac, while removing Serb roadblocks to protest various shortcomings.

On 28 October [S/1999/1103], FRY said that the situation was worsening dramatically with every passing day as Serbian villages were being shelled by KLA. The following day [S/1999/1104], it reported an attack on a convoy of Serbian refugees, protected by KFOR, by a large group of KLA on the road from Orahovac, near Pec, on 27 October. FRY placed responsibility for the latest atrocity on UN civil and security presences in Kosovo and especially on the Special Representative, who, it said, had only the previous day made statements that the situation in Kosovo and Metohija was stable and favourable for the Serbs. FRY called on the Council to exercise its authority and establish responsibility for the worsening security situation in Kosovo and Metohija.

EU statement (November). The EU, in a 4 November statement [S/1999/1157], said that it had learned with dismay of the recent acts of violence against the Serb population of Kosovo. It condemned, in particular, the 27 October incident near Pec, where a convoy of 155 Serbs, organized by UNHCR and under KFOR protection, was attacked and several people were injured, and the shooting against the President of the "Kosovo Serbian Resistance Movement" and co-chairman of the Serbian National Council, Momcilo Trajkovic, on 31 October, as well as the many other attacks against minorities and recent acts of violence. The EU expected full compliance with resolution 1244(1999) from all parties and full cooperation with UNMIK and KFOR.

The EU appealed to all the people of Kosovo to refrain from violence and to cooperate. It appealed, in particular, to the Kosovo Albanian community leaders to condemn violence and to use their influence and leadership to work with KFOR and UNMIK to stamp out violence and intimidation in Kosovo. It urged all parties to cooperate to quickly bring the perpetrators to justice, and called on all political forces in Kosovo to re-establish dialogue and stop threatening political opponents.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (November)

The Security Council was briefed by the Special Representative on developments in Kosovo on 5 November [meeting 4061]. He reported that the protection of minorities was not fully provided for, but the number of murders per week was decreasing and the police were doing their best to prevent them. He appealed for more civilian police for UNMIK. He was also of the view that the international presence on the ground should aim to prevent an exodus of Serbs from Kosovo. For the time being, it was difficult to encourage them to return to the province, since security could not be fully guaranteed. He stressed the need to start working on the agenda for coexistence that would later be followed by the revitalization of a multi-ethnic society.

Council members expressed their support for UNMIK's efforts in Kosovo and supported the need for strengthening its civilian police component.

Further communications. In letters of 22 and 25 November [S/1999/1193, S/1999/1198], FRY protested the 21 November attack near Kursumlija, in which two members of the Serbian Ministry of the Interior were killed and six wounded.

On 8 December [S/1999/1229], FRY also protested the arbitrary arrest and detention by KFOR and UNMIK of 40 Serbs who had been prevented from choosing lawyers and from receiving visits from their families and doctors.

In an overview of the situation from 12 June to 7 December [S/1999/1240], FRY stated that 485 persons had been killed, 667 kidnapped or reported missing and 264 wounded, as well as 387 cases of physical assault, maltreatment and infliction of grievous bodily harm and 345 registered cases of threat. Many cities, towns and villages had been ethnically cleansed of Serbs and other non-Albanians. According to UNHCR data, 330,000 persons, of whom 250,000 were Serbs, had been expelled from Kosovo and Metohija. Over 50,000 houses had been burned and over 1,200 apartments broken into, looted or forcibly moved into. Over 30 Serbian villages had been sacked. Gorani and Muslims and Albanians loyal to FRY were also threatened and terrorized. Most of the predominantly Catholic Croatian population had left the villages of Letinice, Vrnez, Kolo and Sasare. Public institutions and companies had been unlawfully and forcibly taken over and in the process over 20,000 Serbs and Montenegrins had been dismissed and replaced.

Seventy-seven churches, monasteries and other religious shrines had been destroyed or damaged and looted and the clergy expelled. KFOR and UNMIK were responsible. They continued to disregard the mandate established by the Council and to infringe FRY's laws, sovereignty and territorial integrity. FRY again called on the Council to address the current dramatic situation in Kosovo and Metohija. In a 17 December letter [S/1999/1263], FRY further elaborated on the destruction of the Serbian cultural heritage and the demolition of churches, monasteries and other shrines of the Serbian Orthodox Church. It also protested the most recent attack, on 17 December, on a cafe in Orahovac [S/1999/1269].

FRY condemned the press conference given by Hasim Thaci at United Nations Headquarters on 17 September [S/1999/991]. According to FRY, it was under Mr. Thaci's leadership that KLA had intensified a relentless campaign of ethnic cleansing of Serbs and other non-Albanians. In another communication [S/1999/1075], FRY protested the visit of Albania's Foreign Minister to Kosovo and Metohija on 16 October, accusing Albania of providing active support to and arming KLA. Coming after the Secretary-General's visit to the province, it encouraged Albanian separatists and terrorists and was contrary to resolution 1244(1999). FRY also protested against the Secretary-General's failure, during that visit, to meet with its representatives in Pristina [S/1999/1074].

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in his December report on the situation in Kosovo [S/1999/1250], confirmed that a number of serious incidents had heightened tension and security concerns. Both the local population and members of the international community had been targeted. The deteriorating situation was underlined by the murder on 11 October of Valentin Krumov, a newly arrived UNMIK international staff member, and the wounding of Momcilo Trajkovic, a member of the Kosovo Transitional Council on 1 November. The number of attacks on Kosovo Serbs and members of other ethnic minorities remained high and continued to be the overriding human rights issue in Kosovo. Serbs, Roma and, increasingly, Slavic Muslims were the victims of killings, abductions, illegal arrests, arbitrary detentions, beatings, threats and harassment. Ethnic Albanians were also targeted, on suspicion of collaborating with the Yugoslav authorities. The security situation of women in Kosovo also remained precarious, with an increasing number of abductions of young women. Members of ethnic minorities continued to suffer severe restrictions on their freedom of movement. In Pristina, the estimated remaining 300 to 600 Kosovo Serbs were frightened to go out and were mostly confined to their homes.

A growing number of juveniles had been suspected of committing serious crimes in Kosovo and there were signs that organized criminal elements were reinforcing their position and activities there.

To protect minorities, creative methods for increasing security were being implemented and particular attention was being paid to promoting unhindered and non-discriminatory access of minorities to food, health care, education and other public services. The humanitarian component had designed a special distribution network for needy minority groups, as well as interim systems for providing medical care to minority groups that were otherwise denied access. Other initiatives included facilitating contact between community leaders, organized "go and see" visits for displaced minorities to their home areas and the provision of satellite phones to minorities living in isolated enclaves. Freedom of movement improved with the commencement in October of a shuttle bus programme, with security provided by KFOR, between minority enclaves and to destinations outside Kosovo. The programme was temporarily suspended after the 27 October attack on a humanitarian convoy of 155 Kosovo Serbs leaving for Montenegro. UNHCR continued to evacuate minorities in life-threatening situations or particularly vulnerable circumstances to Serbia and Montenegro. Some 487 individuals had so far benefited from that protection measure. Since mid-September, Civil Affairs Minority Officers had been appointed to reside on a permanent basis in selected villages/communities in Kosovo to contribute to a further improvement of security in areas where minorities resided, to extend the provision of essential administrative services, and to facilitate access to essential public services and contacts with local and international actors in support of reconstruction and revitalization of the local economy.

The Secretary-General said that during his visit to Kosovo on 13 and 14 October, one of the most frequently raised concerns was the precarious security situation for Kosovo Serbs, Roma and other minority groups. Despite the concerted efforts of KFOR and UNMIK police, the level and nature of the violence, especially against vulnerable minorities, remained unacceptable. He had underlined that message in his meetings with political leaders and with the Kosovo Transitional Council. He urged all political leaders in Kosovo and the local population to stop the violence, intimidation and harassment. He said that the international community had to do better. KFOR and UNMIK police had redoubled their efforts, but more resources were needed. He emphasized the need to ensure the rapid deployment of international police to support the Kosovo Police Service, to have UNMIK's authority cemented and the judiciary and penal system strengthened. The involvement in criminal and unofficial law-enforcement activities of former KLA members and KPC members would not be tolerated. Unofficial law-enforcement structures had to be dismantled and authority had to rest only within legitimate bodies of the Joint Administrative Structure. All those efforts depended on the support of the Kosovo political leadership, which had to commit itself to peace, tolerance and respect for the rule of law.

The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM)

At the beginning of 1999, the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP) continued its mandate of monitoring and reporting on developments along the borders of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia that could affect its peace and stability. However, in February, a draft resolution by which the Security Council would have renewed the UNPREDEP mandate until 31 August was not adopted, owing to the negative vote of a permanent member. The mission's mandate, therefore, terminated on 28 February. UNPREDEP, which was established by Council resolution 983(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 597], was last extended by resolution 1186(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 362] when its troop strength was also increased.

Communication. In a 29 January letter to the Secretary-General [S/1999/108], FYROM presented arguments for the extension of UNPREDEP's mandate for another six months. UNPREDEP had so far functioned as a deterrent and had contributed greatly to the stabilization of the situation in the whole region. Peace in FYROM and other countries still depended on regional developments, particularly the spillover of the military conflicts from Kosovo, where the deteriorating situation suggested that, with the forthcoming spring, more open and intensive conflicts might be expected. That crisis had led also to an increase in the tensions at the Albanian-Yugoslav border and increased the sense of insecurity and distrust in the region, which burdened FYROM's efforts to prevent arms trafficking to Kosovo.

Also, the FYROM-Yugoslav border was not yet demarcated, which, in the context of the current developments in Kosovo and the fact that part of that border extended in the direction of Kosovo, complicated the political and security situation in FYROM.

Report of Secretary-General. In a February report on UNPREDEP [S/1999/161], the Secretary-General said that FYROM's bilateral relations with its neighbours had strengthened and relations with Albania had improved significantly following the 1998 parliamentary elections in FYROM [YUN 1998, p. 363] and the inclusion in the new Government of a coalition of the ethnic Albanian Party for Democratic Prosperity of Albanians and the National Democratic Party. High-level bilateral visits and agreements on mutual co-operation between the two countries, as well as efforts to improve inter-ethnic relations, had a further positive impact on relations. The steady increase in trade and collaborative ventures with Greece reflected improved relations between those two countries, despite the still unresolved name-related dispute. Relations with Bulgaria were also strengthening, with both countries expressing determination to overcome the language dispute, while increasing economic and other forms of cooperation. However, relations with FRY were strained owing to FYROM's decision to authorize NATO deployment on its territory. There had also been no progress on the issue of the demarcation of the border between the two countries.

In keeping with the new Government's policy of inter-ethnic harmony, the newly constituted Parliament adopted on 4 February the law on amnesty, paving the way for the release of ethnic Albanian mayors and chairmen of the Gostivar and Tetovo municipal councils.

During the reporting period, UNPREDEP undertook the new tasks of monitoring and reporting on illicit arms flows and other activities prohibited under resolution 1160(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 369]. It enhanced its capacity to ascertain whether arms smuggling was taking place and established mobile reaction teams to respond to sighted smuggling activities. UNPREDEP was also effectively monitoring and reporting on developments that could affect peace and stability and working to implement the Special Representative's good offices mandate. It was also involved in programmes of good governance and the rule of law, strengthening national capacity and infrastructure, institution-building and human resources development. UNPREDEP continued its close cooperation with the OSCE Spillover Monitoring Mission to Skopje and the European Commission Monitoring Mission in the country and established a working relationship with NATO.

The Secretary-General observed that peace and stability in FYROM continued to depend largely on developments in other parts of the region, in particular Kosovo. Although FYROM had not been adversely affected so far by that conflict, the potential serious repercussions could not be ignored given the large proportion of ethnic Albanians in FYROM. UNPREDEP's presence had contributed successfully to preventing the spill-over of conflicts elsewhere in the region to FYROM and continued to have a stabilizing effect, and had been useful in defusing tensions that could have arisen as a result of the continued crisis in Kosovo. The Secretary-General recommended an extension of UNPREDEP's mandate until 31 August, to be reviewed if discussions in the Contact Group on the Former Yugoslavia resulted in developments that could affect UNPREDEP's role and responsibilities.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 February [meeting 3982], the Security Council considered a draft resolution [S/1999/201], sponsored by Canada, France, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Slovenia, the United Kingdom and the United States, by which the Council would have extended UNPREDEP's mandate until 31 August. The draft resolution received 13 votes in favour to 1 against, with 1 abstention. The draft was not adopted, owing to the negative vote of a permanent Council member.

China said that it had voted against the draft resolution because it had always maintained that UN peacekeeping operations, including preventive deployment missions, should not be open-ended. The situation in FYROM had stabilized, its relations with neighbouring countries had improved and peace and stability there had not been adversely affected by developments in the region. The Secretary-General had clearly indicated that the Council's original goal in establishing UNPREDEP had already been met, in which case there was no need to extend its mandate further.

Speaking before the vote, the Russian Federation said that it believed that UNPREDEP's function regarding monitoring compliance with the arms embargo should be the main component of its activities and be more clearly highlighted in its mandate. Although it had proposed corresponding amendments to the text, they were not duly reflected. Under those circumstances, the Russian Federation could not support the draft.

Communications. On 12 March [S/1999/275], FYROM's Minister for Foreign Affairs informed the Secretary-General that the reasons outlined in his January letter (see p. 370) requesting the extension of UNPREDEP's mandate remained, and the presence of the United Nations in the region was more than a necessity owing to the current and future developments in Kosovo. FYROM would appreciate the Secretary-General's suggestions for finding an acceptable way to fill the security gap created as a result of the non-extension of UNPREDEP's mandate. It was actively considering an arrangement, possibly led by NATO, but with a clear UN connection, which could be endorsed or noted by the Council. On the same date [S/1999/271], FYROM expressed its recognition of the UN contribution in preserving peace and security in FYROM and in the surrounding areas and stated that UNPREDEP had confirmed itself in the long term as a barrier to wider destabilization and was thus a very successful mission.

Financing of UNPREDEP

In January, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly the UNPREDEP financial performance report for the period 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 [A/53/786], and the proposed budget for UNPREDEP's maintenance for the period 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 [A/53/812]. Following the termination of UNPREDEP's mandate, the Secretary-General, in May, submitted a revised budget for UNPREDEP's liquidation period from 1 July to 15 October [A/53/812/Add.1], and revised cost estimates for the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, including the liquidation of the Force during the period 1 March to 30 June 1999 [A/53/437/Add.1].

ACABQ's recommendations were contained in its May report to the Assembly [A/53/958].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 June [meeting 101], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/546/Add.1], adopted resolution 53/20 B without vote [agenda item 140].

Financing of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,
