Recalling also the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,

Taking note of the Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment and Eradication of Violence Against Women adopted by the General Assembly of the Organization of American States at its twenty-fourth regular session, held in Belem, Brazil, from 6 to 10 June 1994, and general recommendation 19 on violence against women adopted by the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women at its eleventh session,

Concerned that violence against women is an obstacle to the achievement of equality, development and peace, as recognized in the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women, which recommended a set of integral measures to prevent and eliminate violence against women, and to the full implementation of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Concerned also that some groups of women, such as women belonging to minority groups, indigenous women, refugee women, migrant women, women living in rural or remote communities, destitute women, women in institutions or in detention, the girl child, women with disabilities, elderly women and women in situations of armed conflict, are especially vulnerable to violence,

Recognizing that violence against women is a manifestation of historically unequal power relations between men and women, which have led to domination over and discrimination against women by men and to the prevention of their full advancement, and that violence against women is one of the crucial social mechanisms by which women are forced into subordinate positions, compared with men,

Recognizing also that the human rights of women and of the girl child are an inalienable, integral and indivisible part of universal human rights, and recognizing further the need to promote and protect all human rights of women and girls,

Alarmed that women do not fully enjoy their human rights and fundamental freedoms, and concerned about the long-standing failure to protect and promote those rights and freedoms in relation to violence against women,

Recognizing with satisfaction the cooperation provided by the relevant agencies, bodies, funds and organs of the United Nations system to different countries in the fight to eradicate violence against women, in fulfilment of their respective mandates,

Recognizing the efforts made by civil society and non-governmental organizations that have contributed to creating a worldwide social conscience of the negative impact, both on social and on economic life, of violence against women,

Reiterating that, according to article 1 of the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women, the term "violence against women" means any act of gender-based violence that results in, or is likely to result in, physical, sexual or psychological harm or suffering to women, including threats of such acts, coercion or arbitrary deprivation of liberty, whether occurring in public or in private life,

1. Decides to designate 25 November as the International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women;

2. Invites, as appropriate, Governments, the relevant agencies, bodies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system, and other international organizations and non-governmental organizations, to organize on that day activities designed to raise public awareness of the problem of violence against women.

Women migrant workers

In September [A/54/342], the Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 52/97 [YUN 1997, p. 1194], reported on measures introduced by Governments and actions taken by the UN system to address violence against women migrant workers. Although several States had reported on measures to address violence against women in general and on measures to assist migrants, few reported on specific measures to address the particular issue of violence against women migrant workers. Those States that had introduced such measures had concentrated on information dissemination and raising the consciousness of potential migrants and their employers. More information and data were required on the situation of women migrant workers so that concrete strategies could be introduced. (See also p. 580.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/598 & Corr.1,2], adopted resolution 54/138 without vote [agenda item 109].

Violence against women migrant workers

The General Assembly,

Recalling all previous resolutions on violence against women migrant workers adopted by the General Assembly, the Commission on the Status of Women, the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, as well as the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women,

Reaffirming the outcome of the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, and its five-year review, the International Conference on Population and Development and its five-year review and the Fourth World Conference on Women, specifically as the results pertain to women migrant workers,

Emphasizing the need for objective, comprehensive, broad-based information and a wide exchange of experiences and lessons learned by individual Member States and civil society in the formulation of policies and concrete strategies to address the problem of violence against women migrant workers,

Encouraging the participation of civil society in developing and implementing appropriate measures to support innovative partnerships among public agencies, non-governmental organizations and other members of civil society for combating violence against women migrant workers,

Taking note with appreciation of the recommendations of the Working Group of Intergovernmental Experts on the Human Rights of Migrants of the Commission on Human Rights,

Noting the large numbers of women from developing countries and some countries with economies in transition who continue to venture forth to more affluent countries in search of a living for themselves and their families as a consequence of poverty, unemployment and other socio-economic conditions, and acknowledging the duty of the countries of origin to work for conditions that provide employment and security to their citizens,

Realizing that the movement of a significant number of women migrant workers may be facilitated and made possible through fraudulent or irregular documentation and arranged marriages and that, by the nature of their status and movement, women migrant workers are more vulnerable to abuse and exploitation,

Acknowledging the economic benefits that accrue to both the country of origin and the country of destination from the employment of women migrant workers,

Recognizing the importance of joint and collaborative approaches at the bilateral, regional, interregional and international levels in protecting and promoting the rights and welfare of women migrant workers,

Encouraged by some measures adopted by some countries of destination to alleviate the plight of women migrant workers residing within their areas of jurisdiction,

Underlining the important role of relevant United Nations treaty bodies in monitoring the implementation of human rights conventions and the relevant special procedures, within their respective mandates, in addressing the problem of violence against women migrant workers and in protecting and promoting their rights and welfare, the Special Rapporteur to recommend concrete measures and actions to address the problem;

5. Also encourages Governments to give serious consideration to inviting the Special Rapporteur to visit their countries so as to enable him or her to fulfil the mandate effectively;

6. Urges concerned Governments, in particular those of the countries of origin and destination, to strengthen further their national efforts to protect and promote the rights and welfare of women migrant workers, including through sustained bilateral, regional, interregional and international cooperation, by developing strategies and joint action and taking into account the innovative approaches and experiences of individual Member States, and to establish and maintain continuing dialogues to facilitate the exchange of information;

7. Also urges concerned Governments, in particular those of the countries of origin and destination, to support and allocate appropriate resources for programmes aimed at strengthening preventive action, in particular information for relevant target groups, education and campaigns to increase public awareness of this issue at the national and grass-roots levels, in cooperation with non-governmental organizations;

8. Encourages Member States to adopt appropriate measures to inform women migrant workers of their rights and the benefits to which they are entitled;

9. Calls upon concerned Governments, in particular those of the countries of origin and destination, if they have not done so, to put in place penal and criminal sanctions to punish perpetrators of violence against women migrant workers and, to the extent possible, to provide, and to encourage non-governmental organizations to provide, victims of violence with the full range of immediate assistance and protection, such as counselling, legal and consular assistance, temporary shelter and other measures, that will allow them to be present during the judicial process, as well as to establish reintegration and rehabilitation schemes for returning women migrant workers to their countries of origin;

10. Encourages concerned Governments, in particular those of the countries of origin and destination, to support and, if they have not done so, to formulate and implement training programmes for their law enforcers, prosecutors and service providers with a view to instilling among those public sector workers the necessary skills and attitude to ensure the delivery of proper and professional interventions for women migrant workers who are subjected to abuse and violence;

11. Also encourages concerned Governments, in particular those of the countries of origin and destination, to adopt measures or strengthen existing ones to regulate the recruitment and deployment of women migrant workers, including considering the adoption of appropriate legal measures against intermediaries who deliberately encourage the clandestine movement of workers and who exploit women migrant workers;

12. Invites Governments to identify the causes of undocumented migration and its economic, social and demographic impact, as well as its implications for the formulation and application of social, economic and migration policies, including those relating to women migrant workers;

13. Encourages concerned Governments, in particular those of the countries of origin, transit and destination, to avail themselves of the expertise of the United Nations, including the Statistics Division of the Secretariat and other relevant bodies, such as the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, to develop appropriate national data-collection methodologies that will generate comparable data on violence against women migrant workers as bases for research and analyses on the subject;

14. Encourages Member States to consider ratifying and complying with International Labour Organization conventions and to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, as well as the Slavery Convention of 1926;

Women in rural areas

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 52/93 [YUN 1997, p. 1201], the Secretary-General reported in June [A/54/123-E/1999/66] on the current status of rural women and prospects for improving their situation. Issues related to rural women had been raised throughout the Beijing Platform for Action and were considered critical to the development discourse and strategy-making process because of rural women's central role in both agricultural production and caregiving. The report was prepared on the basis of a review of existing studies, in addition to the replies received from 14 Governments and 8 UN entities to a request for information from the Secretary-General. It outlined the impact of global trends and their policy implications for the situation of rural women and considered questions of access to productive resources, inputs and services. It showed that the process of globalization had direct and indirect effects on the situation of women. The changing patterns of financial flows, characterized by a decline in development assistance and increased but uneven equity capital flows to developing countries, were forcing countries to pursue policies, such as privatization of productive assets such as land, tending to exacerbate the socio-economic marginalization of rural women. There had been some benefits, particularly in providing opportunities for wage employment for rural women in new sectors, such as the non-traditional export sector in agriculture. In their replies, most Governments reported having passed laws to secure the access of rural women to productive resources, necessary inputs and services, and UN entities were engaged in supporting those national efforts. Future efforts to improve the situation of women in rural areas should be directed by research into the gender implications of globalization and rural change, the report concluded.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/598 & Corr.1,2], adopted resolution 54/135 without vote [agenda item 109].

Improvement of the situation of women in rural areas

Recalling its resolution 52/93 of 12 December 1997,

Recalling also the importance attached to the problems of rural women by the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Noting that some effects of the evolving globalization process may deepen the socio-economic marginalization of rural women,

Noting also that the globalization process has had some benefits by providing opportunities for wage employment for rural women in new sectors,

Mindful of the fact that the available data and existing tools of measurement and analysis are insufficient for a full understanding of the gender implications of the processes of globalization and rural change, and their impact on rural women,

Recognizing the urgent need to take appropriate measures aimed at further improving the situation of women in rural areas,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Invites Member States, in collaboration with United Nations organizations and civil society, to continue their efforts to implement the outcome of and to ensure an integrated and coordinated follow-up to United Nations conferences and summits, including their five-year reviews, and to attach greater importance to the improvement of the situation of rural women in their national, regional and global development strategies by, inter alia:

(a) Investing in and strengthening efforts to meet the basic needs of rural women through capacity-building and human resources development measures and the provision of a safe and reliable water supply, health services, including family planning services, and nutritional programmes as well as education and literacy programmes and social support measures;

(b) Designing and revising laws to ensure that, where private ownership of land and property exists, rural women are accorded full and equal rights to own land and other property, including through the right to inheritance, and undertaking administrative reforms and other necessary measures to give women the same right as men to credit, capital, appropriate technologies and access to markets and information;

(c) Integrating a gender perspective into the design, implementation, monitoring and evaluation of development policies and programmes;

(d) Providing microcredit and other financial and business services to a greater number of women in rural areas for generating self-employment among them and eradicating poverty;

(e) Pursuing the political and socio-economic empowerment of rural women by supporting their full and equal participation in decision-making at all levels, including in rural institutions;

(f) Placing a renewed focus on the issue of rural women within the context of the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women;

(g) Taking steps towards ensuring that women's unpaid work and contributions to on-farm and off-farm production, including income generated in the informal sector, are visible and recorded in economic surveys and statistics at the local and national levels;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the relevant international organizations, specialized agencies, funds and programmes, and in consultation with Member States, to prepare a comprehensive report on the situation of rural women and challenges faced by them, based, inter alia, on the outcome of an expert group meeting, which will draw from the contributions and case studies provided by experts from various regions, and to incorporate its findings and recommendations in his report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Women and children in armed conflict

In March [E/1999/27 (res. 43/1)], the Commission on the Status of Women condemned violent acts in contravention of international humanitarian law against civilian women and children in areas of armed conflict, including those imprisoned, and called for an effective response. All parties to armed conflicts were urged to respect the norms of international humanitarian law and provide unimpeded access to humanitarian assistance for women and children. The Commission asked the Secretary-General and relevant international organizations to facilitate the release of women and children taken hostage in armed conflicts, including those subsequently imprisoned. The Secretary-General was also asked to submit a report to the Commission at its forty-fourth (2000) session.

The girl child

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/601], adopted resolution 54/148 without vote [agenda item 112].

The girl child

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/127 of 9 December 1998 and all previous relevant resolutions, including the agreed conclusions of the Commission on the Status of Women, in particular those relevant to the girl child,

Recalling also all relevant United Nations conferences and the Declaration and Agenda for Action of the World Congress against Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children, held at Stockholm from 27 to 31 August 1996, as well as the recent five-year review of the implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development,

Deeply concerned about discrimination against the girl child and the violation of the rights of the girl child, which often result in less access for girls to education, nutrition, physical and mental health care and in girls enjoying fewer of the rights, opportunities and benefits of childhood and adolescence than boys and often being subjected to various forms of cultural, social, sexual and economic exploitation and to violence and harmful practices such as female infanticide, incest, early marriage, prenatal sex selection and female genital mutilation,

Recognizing the need to achieve gender equality so as to ensure a just and equitable world for girls,

Deeply concerned that, in situations of poverty, war and armed conflict, girl children are among the victims most affected and that thus their potential for full development is limited,

Concerned that the girl child has furthermore become a victim of sexually transmitted diseases and the human immunodeficiency virus, which affects the quality of her life and leaves her open to further discrimination,

Noting that 1999 is the tenth anniversary of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the twentieth anniversary of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Reaffirming the equal rights of women and men as enshrined, inter alia, in the Preamble to the Charter of the United Nations, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

1. Stresses the need for full and urgent implementation of the rights of the girl child as guaranteed to her under all human rights instruments, including the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, as well as the need for universal ratification of those instruments;

2. Urges all States to take all necessary measures and to institute legal reforms to ensure the full and equal enjoyment by the girl child of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, to take effective action against violations of those rights and freedoms and to base programmes and policies for the girl child on the rights of the child;

3. Urges States to enact and to enforce strictly laws to ensure that marriage is entered into only with the free and full consent of the intending spouses, to enact and to enforce strictly laws concerning the minimum legal age of consent and the minimum age for marriage and to raise the minimum age for marriage where necessary;

4. Urges all States to fulfil their obligations under the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women as well as the commitment to implement the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women;

5. Also urges all States to enact and to enforce legislation to protect girls from all forms of violence, including female infanticide and prenatal sex selection, female genital mutilation, rape, domestic violence, incest, sexual abuse, sexual exploitation, child prostitution and child pornography, and to develop age-appropriate safe and confidential programmes and medical, social and psychological support services to assist girls who are subjected to violence;

6. Calls upon all States and international and non-governmental organizations, individually and collectively, to implement further the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women, in particular the strategic objectives relating to the girl child;

7. Urges States to take special measures for the protection of children, in particular to protect girls from rape and other forms of sexual abuse and gender-based violence in situations of armed conflict, paying special attention to refugee and displaced girls and taking into account the special needs of the girl child in the delivery of humanitarian assistance;

8. Also urges States to formulate comprehensive, multidisciplinary and coordinated national plans, programmes or strategies to eliminate all forms of violence against women and girls, which should be widely disseminated and should provide targets and timetables for implementation, as well as effective domestic enforcement procedures through the establishment of monitoring mechanisms involving all parties concerned, including consultations with women's organizations, giving attention to the recommendations relating to the girl child of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, its causes and consequences;

9. Calls upon Governments, civil society, including the media, and non-governmental organizations to promote human rights education and the full respect for and enjoyment of the human rights of the girl child, inter alia, through the translation, production and dissemination of age-appropriate information materials on those rights to all sectors of society, in particular to children;

10. Requests the Secretary-General, as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, to ensure that all organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, individually and collectively, in particular the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Development Fund for Women, the World Health Organization and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, take into account the rights and the particular needs of the girl child in the country programme of cooperation in accordance with the national priorities, including through the United Nations Development Assistance Framework;

11. Requests all human rights treaty bodies, special procedures and other human rights mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights and its Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights to adopt regularly and systematically a gender perspective in the implementation of their mandates and to include in their reports information on the qualitative analysis of violations of the human rights of women and girls, and encourages the strengthening of co-operation and coordination in that regard;

12. Calls upon States and international and non-governmental organizations to mobilize all necessary resources, support and efforts to realize the goals, strategic objectives and actions set out in the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women;

13. Stresses the importance of a substantive assessment of the implementation of the Platform for Action with a life-cycle perspective so as to identify gaps and obstacles in the implementation process and to develop further actions for the achievement of the goals of the Platform for Action;

14. Calls upon Governments, the United Nations system, in particular the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Secretariat, non-governmental organizations and women's organizations to ensure that, in the preparation for the special session of the General Assembly entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century", the needs and the rights of the girl child are duly taken into account and integrated into all activities;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the needs and the rights of the girl child are specifically assessed in the five-year review of the implementation of the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, to be held in June 2000;

16. Also requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Children's Fund and the World Bank, to ensure that the needs and the rights of the girl child are given special attention in all preparatory processes at the national, regional and international levels, including the Education for All 2000 Assessment and the agenda of the World Education Forum, to be held in April 2000;

17. Further requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the needs and the rights of the girl child are integrated into the preparatory work for the special session of the General Assembly on the follow-up to the World Summit for Children in 2001, inter alia, by providing the General Assembly with a comprehensive report drawing on the experiences and outcomes of the five-year reviews of the International Conference on Population and Development, the Fourth World Conference on Women and the World Summit for Social Development, and the World Education Forum.

Women's health

In 1999, issues related to the health of women and girls were addressed by the General Assembly in resolution 54/133 (see below), the Commission on Human Rights (see p. 669) and the Commission on the Status of Women in its agreed conclusions on critical areas of concern identified in the Beijing Platform for Action, which were endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1999/17 (see p. 1080).

Traditional practices affecting the health of women

In September [A/54/341], the Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 53/117 [YUN 1998, p. 701], reported on measures taken at the national and regional levels, and within the UN system, to eliminate traditional or customary practices affecting the health of women. Based on replies received from 20 Member States to a request of the Secretary-General for information on the issue, as well as information from UN entities and civil society organizations, the report noted that specific legal measures, information campaigns and research aimed at the eradication of such practices had been introduced in several States. The elimination of female genital mutilation had been addressed by the Commission on Human Rights (see p. 669), as well as by activities of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), UNFPA and the World Health Organization (WHO).

Important regional initiatives, particularly in Africa, had also been undertaken in 1999, indicating increased political will to address such practices. The important role of community and religious leaders, as well as NGOs, in advocating eradication of those practices was emphasized. The report called for the establishment and strengthening of national monitoring and implementation mechanisms and laws against all forms of harmful traditional practices. More research, education, training and public information campaigns on the issue were also crucial.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/598 & Corr.1,2], adopted resolution 54/133 without vote [agenda item 109].

Traditional or customary practices affecting the health of women and girls

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 53/117 of 9 December 1998 and its other relevant resolutions and decisions, as well as those of the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights and the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights,

Recalling the reports of the Special Rapporteur of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights on traditional practices affecting the health of women and children and of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, its causes and consequences,

Reaffirming the obligation of all States to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms as stated in the Charter of the United Nations, and reaffirming also the obligations contained in later human rights instruments, in particular articles 5 and 12 of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, article 24 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and article 12 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Welcoming the fact that the First Ministerial Conference on Human Rights in Africa of the Organization of African Unity, in the Grand-Baie (Mauritius) Declaration and Plan of Action adopted on 16 April 1999, urged all African States to work assiduously towards the elimination of discrimination against women and the abolition of cultural practices which dehumanize or demean women and children,

Welcoming also the Ouagadougou Declaration adopted on 6 May 1999 at the Regional Workshop on the Fight against Female Genital Mutilation in the countries members of the West African Economic and Monetary Union,

Reaffirming that such traditional or customary practices constitute a definite form of violence against women and girls and a serious form of violation of their human rights,

Expressing concern at the continuing large-scale existence of these practices,

Stressing that the elimination of such practices requires greater efforts and commitment from Governments, the international community and civil society, including non-governmental and community organizations, and that fundamental changes in societal attitudes are required,

1. Welcomes:

(a) The report of the Secretary-General, which provides encouraging examples of national and international developments;

2. Emphasizes the need for technical and financial assistance to developing countries working to achieve the elimination of traditional or customary practices affecting the health of women and girls from United Nations funds and programmes, international and regional financial institutions and bilateral and multilateral donors, as well as the need for assistance to non-governmental organizations and community-based groups active in this field from the international community;

3. Calls upon all States:

(a) To ratify or accede to, if they have not yet done so, the relevant human rights treaties, in particular the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child, and to respect and implement fully their obligations under any such treaties to which they are parties;

(b) To implement their international commitments in this field, inter alia, under the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women, the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development and the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights;

4. Invites:

(a) Relevant specialized agencies, United Nations bodies and non-governmental organizations to exchange information on the subject of the present resolution, and encourages the exchange of such information between non-governmental organizations active in this field and the bodies monitoring the implementation of relevant human rights treaties;

(b) The Commission on Human Rights to address this subject at its fifty-sixth session, thus allowing a more comprehensive understanding of the impact of traditional or customary practices affecting the health of women and girls on the human rights of women;

(c) Governments, organizations and individuals in a position to do so to contribute to the trust fund that supports the work of the Special Ambassador for the Elimination of Female Genital Mutilation of the United Nations Population Fund;

5. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To make his report available to relevant meetings within the United Nations system;

(b) To report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution, with a special focus on recent national and international developments, including examples of national best practices and international cooperation.

HIV/AIDS

In March [res. 43/2], the Commission on the Status of Women, concerned that the proportion of women becoming infected with the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) was growing in every region, called for the intensification of national efforts against the disease, particularly in favour of women and girls in the worst-hit regions of Africa and where the epidemic was severely setting back national development gains. Governments were urged to protect the rights of women and girls living with HIV/AIDS, provide counselling for those vulnerable to infection, support children orphaned by AIDS, and adopt a long-range prevention policy tailored to the needs of women and girls within their sociocultural contexts. The Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS was asked to assist Governments in determining the best policies and programmes to prevent the spread of HIV/AIDS, giving priority attention to African women and girls. The Commission recommended that gender policies and programmes integrating HIV/AIDS activities be mainstreamed by organizations in the UN system.

Mental health

In a resolution on women and mental health, with emphasis on special groups [res. 43/3], the Commission called for urgent implementation of the health objectives of the Beijing Platform for Action with the integration of mental health as a priority issue. Concern was expressed for the tremendous health burdens borne by women due to, among other conditions, gender discrimination, violence, and lack of appropriate physical and mental health care. The Commission was also concerned that depression affected more women than men in many parts of the world due, in part, to their inferior social and economic status. Governments were asked to include in their national policies and action plans for women specific measures that would address mental health, especially the need for psychosocial care and counselling services. The Commission called on WHO, in partnership with other UN bodies, to develop a training manual on mental disorders resulting from trauma, all forms of discrimination, exploitation, abuse and oppression in relation to women and girls. Development of gender-sensitive psychosocial and mental health situation analyses and of women's mental health indicators was also recommended.

Situation of older women

The Commission on the Status of Women considered a January report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.6/1999/3], which outlined key global issues regarding the differential impact of population ageing on men and women as a contribution to the International Year of Older Persons, 1999 (see p. 1124). Noting that the Beijing Platform for Action referred explicitly to women at all stages of life, the report concluded that gender inequalities shaped older women's experiences, despite their majority status among the older population, and that age and gender inequalities were linked with poverty. Among its recommendations to Governments, the report called for the provision of minimal income for the elderly in need, social safety nets, housing and employment opportunities to improve the living conditions of elderly women. It recommended research on the interrelationship between poverty, gender and ageing and called for measures to empower older women, support their health and well-being and eliminate negative stereotypes. On 1 April [E/1999/27 (dec.43/101)], the Commission took note of the report.

Palestinian women

In a report to the Commission on the Status of Women on follow-up to the Beijing Platform for Action [E/CN.6/1999/2], the Secretary-General described assistance provided by organizations of the UN system to Palestinian women, whose daily life continued to be adversely affected by the Israeli occupation, in particular by security-related measures imposed by the Israeli authorities. The Secretary-General stated that the measures had a detrimental impact on the socio-economic condition of Palestinian women, which was reinforced by existing inequalities in society between men and women.

In July, on the recommendation of the Commission, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1999/15, by which it asked the Commission to continue to monitor and take action regarding the situation of Palestinian women and children (see p. 418).

Women in Afghanistan

On 28 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on the Status of Women [E/1998/27], adopted resolution 1999/14 without vote [agenda item 14 (a)].

Situation of women and girls in Afghanistan

The Economic and Social Council,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action adopted at the Fourth World Conference on Women, and other instruments of human rights and international humanitarian law,

Recalling that Afghanistan is a party to the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, and that it has signed the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Deeply concerned by the continuing deterioration of the situation of women and girls in Afghanistan, in particular in all areas under the control of the Taliban, as documented by the continued and substantiated reports of grave violations of the human rights of women and girls, including all forms of discrimination against them, such as denial of access to health care, to all levels and types of education, to employment outside the home and, in repeated instances, to humanitarian aid, as well as restrictions upon their freedom of movement,

Welcoming the ongoing work of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, in particular his special focus on violations of the human rights of women and girls, especially in territories under the control of the Taliban faction,

Noting with concern the detrimental impact of these harmful conditions on the well-being of Afghan women and the children in their care,

Welcoming the United Nations Inter-Agency Gender Mission to Afghanistan in November 1997, led by the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women, taking into account the report on the Mission, and hoping that the Mission will serve as a model for future efforts to address the gender dimension of crisis/conflict situations,

Expressing its appreciation for the international community's support of and solidarity with the women and girls of Afghanistan, being supportive of the women of Afghanistan who protest violations of their human rights, and encouraging women and men worldwide to continue efforts to draw attention to their situation and to promote the immediate restoration of their ability to enjoy their human rights,

1. Condemns the continuing grave violations of the human rights of women and girls, including all forms of discrimination and violence against them, in all areas of Afghanistan, particularly in areas under the control of the Taliban;

2. Also condemns the denial by the Taliban of the access of women to health care and the systematic violation of the human rights of women in Afghanistan, including the denial of access to education and to employment outside their home, freedom of movement, and freedom from intimidation, harassment and violence, which has a serious detrimental impact on the well-being of Afghan women and the children in their care;

3. Urges the Taliban and other Afghan parties to recognize, protect, promote and act in accordance with all human rights and fundamental freedoms, regardless of gender, ethnicity or religion, in accordance with international human rights instruments, and to respect international humanitarian law;

4. Urges all the Afghan parties, in particular the Taliban, to bring to an end without delay all violations of the human rights of women and girls and to take urgent measures to ensure:

(a) The repeal of all legislative and other measures that discriminate against women;

(b) The effective participation of women in civil, cultural, economic, political and social life;

(c) Respect for the equal right of women to work and their reintegration in employment;

(d) The equal right of women and girls to education without discrimination, the reopening of schools and the admission of women and girls to all levels of education;

(e) Respect for the right of women to security of person and that those responsible for physical attacks on women are brought to justice;

(f) Respect for freedom of movement for women;

(g) Respect for the equal access of women and girls to health care;

5. Encourages the continuing efforts of the United Nations, international and non-governmental organizations and donors to ensure that all United Nations-assisted programmes in Afghanistan are formulated and coordinated in such a way as to promote and ensure the participation of women in those programmes and that women benefit equally with men from such programmes;

6. Appeals to all States and to the international community to ensure that all humanitarian assistance to the people of Afghanistan, in conformity with the Strategic Framework for Afghanistan, is based on the principle of non-discrimination, integrates a gender perspective, and actively attempts to promote the participation of both women and men and to promote peace and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

7. Urges States to continue to give special attention to the promotion and protection of human rights of women in Afghanistan and to mainstream a gender perspective into all aspects of their policies and actions related to Afghanistan;

8. Welcomes the establishment of the positions of Gender Adviser and Human Rights Adviser at the United Nations Office of the Resident Coordinator for Afghanistan, in order to ensure more effective consideration and implementation of human rights and gender concerns into all United Nations programmes within Afghanistan, taking into account the recommendations contained in the report of the United Nations Inter-Agency Gender Mission to Afghanistan led by the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women in November 1997;

9. Urges the Secretary-General to ensure that all United Nations activities in Afghanistan are carried out according to the principle of non-discrimination against women and girls, and that a gender perspective and special attention to the human rights of women and girls are fully incorporated into the work of the Civil Affairs Unit established within the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan, including the training and selection of staff;

10. Stresses the importance of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan giving special attention to the human rights of women and girls and fully incorporating a gender perspective in his work;

11. Appeals to States and the international community to implement the recommendations of the United Nations Inter-Agency Gender Mission to Afghanistan under the leadership of the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women;

12. Urges all Afghan factions, in particular the Taliban, to ensure the safety and protection of all United Nations and humanitarian workers in Afghanistan and to allow them, regardless of gender, to carry out their work unhindered.

Women and development

The Economic and Social Council, at the high-level segment (New York, 5-7 July) of its 1999 substantive session [A/54/3/Rev.1], addressed the role of employment and work in poverty eradication, particularly in relation to the empowerment and advancement of women. The Council considered a report of the Secretary-General, prepared by the International Labour Organization (ILO) [E/1999/53], addressing the role of employment creation in poverty eradication, taking into account the processes of impoverishment, new types of vulnerability and the differential impact of those processes on women and men. Because the interrelated problems of poverty and employment differed between groups, particularly between women and men, successful poverty-reduction strategies needed to address both broad socio-economic and gender-specific policy issues, the report stated. A policy framework for employment growth and poverty reduction should include macroeconomic policies that would ensure fast, sustainable and stable growth that was employment-intensive, balanced and gender-sensitive. Public policies should provide an environment for the functioning of markets, and poverty-eradication strategies should aim at improving market outcomes for the poor. Public policies could also contribute to poverty reduction through the reallocation of public expenditure (education, health, skill formation), adoption of gender-sensitive policies for promoting employment, and extension of social protection through social safety nets. The report concluded with proposals for elements of an agenda for action, building upon previous work by the UN system, especially the 1998 ACC statement of commitment for action to eradicate poverty [YUN 1998, p. 782].

Other documents considered during the Council's high-level segment included a paper containing "A Comprehensive Employment Strategy" [A/54/171-E/1999/111], presented by the Group of Fifteen at the 1999 International Labour Conference (Geneva, 1-17 June); the report of the Committee for Development Policy on its first session (New York, 26-30 April) [E/1999/33], which considered the role of employment and work in poverty eradication in the context of globalization: the empowerment and advancement of women; and the World Economic and Social Survey 1999 [Sales No. E.99.II.C.1].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 7 July [A/54/3/Rev.1], the Economic and Social Council adopted a ministerial communique of the high-level segment submitted by the President, by which the ministers and heads of delegations affirmed their commitment to adopting effective poverty-eradication strategies that addressed employment creation and gender-specific policies. The Council recognized that women and men frequently suffered poverty for different reasons and faced different opportunities and constraints in coping with poverty and in accessing labour markets and sustainable livelihoods. The mainstreaming of a gender perspective into poverty-eradication policies was crucial as women constituted the majority of people living in poverty. Those policies had to be aimed at eliminating discrimination against women.

The Council stated that strategies to eradicate poverty, promote productive employment and achieve gender equality needed to be designed to address the conditions and needs of women and men on equal terms. Such strategies should be comprehensive in their approach while allowing for flexibility, pursued at both national and international levels, and supported by an enabling international environment. Women's empowerment was considered one of the prerequisites to effective poverty-eradication and employment-creation strategies.

In the communique, the Council suggested that an effective development strategy should target key economic sectors for employment-intensive growth, including agriculture and non-traditional sectors. It recognized the importance of small and medium-sized enterprises for creating employment, and the importance of micro-credit, non-standard forms of work, the informal employment sector, gender-sensitive labour policies, and laws protecting women who sought work in foreign countries. UN bodies were asked to translate the communique's recommendations into concrete actions and the Secretary-General was to submit a progress report to the Council at its 2000 substantive session.

On 30 July, by resolution 1999/55, the Council decided to transmit to the General Assembly the outcome of its consideration of the role of employment and work in poverty eradication as one of the inputs for the five-year reviews of the Fourth World Conference on Women and of the World Summit for Social Development.

World Survey

In August, the Secretary-General issued the 1999 World Survey on the Role of Women in Development [A/54/227], the fourth in a series begun in 1985. It examined the impact of current trends and policies on the overall economic and social situation of women, with particular emphasis on the difficult economic situation affecting women in the majority of developing countries. The World Survey examined three dimensions of economic development—reallocation of resources, adjustment costs and creation of new resources—in the context of five major new trends identified in the world of work: the casualization and informalization of employment; increased participation of women in paid work; downsizing of State and social expenditures; the growing importance of unpaid work; and increasing privatization and commercialization of agriculture. The report described the global forces and processes contributing to those trends, including globalization of trade and capital flows, the changing role of the State, new information technologies, and changing patterns of labour mobility and migration. It also presented a brief overview of women's status in relation to the 12 critical areas of concern in the Beijing Platform for Action, with the objective of assessing the progress women had made globally over recent decades.

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1999/286, took note of the executive summary of the World Survey [E/1999/44].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/54/587/Add.3], adopted resolution 54/210 without vote [agenda item 99 (c)].

Women in development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/195 of 18 December 1997 and all its other resolutions on the integration of women in development, and also the relevant resolutions and the agreed conclusions, including those on women in the economy, adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women,

Reaffirming the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcomes of recent major United Nations conferences and summits,

Taking note of the ministerial communique of the high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council on the theme "The role of employment and work in poverty eradication: the empowerment and advancement of women",

Reaffirming that gender equality is of fundamental importance for achieving sustained economic growth and sustainable development, in accordance with the relevant General Assembly resolutions and recent United Nations conferences, and that investing in the development of women and girls has a multiplier effect, in particular on productivity, efficiency and sustained economic growth,

Recognizing the significant contribution that women make to the economy and the major force that they represent for change and development in all sectors of the economy, especially in key areas such as agriculture, industry and services,

Reaffirming that women are key contributors to the economy and to combating poverty through both remunerated and unremunerated work at home, in the community and in the workplace and that the empowerment of women is a critical factor in the eradication of poverty,

Recognizing that the rapid development of information technology and other new technologies presents both opportunities and challenges to women, in particular in developing countries,

Recognizing also that population and development issues, education and training, health, nutrition, the environment, water supply, sanitation, housing, communications, science and technology and employment opportunities are important elements for effective poverty eradication and the advancement and empowerment of women,

Recognizing further in this context the importance of respect for all human rights, including the right to development, and of a national and international environment that promotes, inter alia, justice, equity, popular participation and political freedom for the advancement and empowerment of women,

Concerned that the continued discrimination against women, the denial or lack of equal rights and access to education, training and credit facilities and the lack of control over land, capital, technology and other areas of production impede their full and equal contribution to, and equal opportunity to benefit from, development,

Recognizing that the difficult socio-economic conditions that exist in many developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, have resulted in the acceleration of the feminization of poverty and that the empowerment of women is a critical factor in the eradication of poverty,

Aware that, although globalization and liberalization processes have created employment opportunities for women in many countries, they have made women, especially in developing countries and in particular the least developed countries, more vulnerable to problems caused by increased economic volatility,

Recognizing that some effects of market liberalization may deepen the socio-economic marginalization of women in the agricultural sector, including through the loss of employment among small-scale farmers who are more likely to be women than men, and emphasizing that small-scale women farmers need special support and empowerment so as to be able to meet the challenges and opportunities of agricultural market liberalization,

Recognizing also that enhanced trade opportunities for developing countries, including through trade liberalization, will improve the economic condition of those societies, including women, which is of particular importance in rural communities,

Recognizing further the continued need to review the impact of structural adjustment programmes in order to reduce any adverse impact on women, especially in terms of cutbacks in social services, education and health and the removal of subsidies on food and fuel,

Emphasizing the promotion of programmes aimed at financial intermediation with a view to ensuring the access of rural women to credit and to agricultural inputs and implements and, in particular, to easing collateral requirements for access to finance by women,

Recognizing that the informal sector is a major source of entrepreneurship and employment for women in developing countries and that data collection on its important contribution should be improved,

Expressing its concern about the under-representation of women in economic decision-making, and stressing the importance of mainstreaming a gender perspective in all policy formulation, implementation and evaluation,

Recognizing that the increase in women's participation in paid employment contributes to the empowerment of women and gender equality by promoting the status, independence, self-esteem and decision-making power of women, but also that this alone may be insufficient, since, in general, the burden of household work and primary responsibility of women for childcare can give rise to an onerous double working day for most women,

Stressing the need for a family-friendly work environment, including appropriate working hours, affordable childcare and flexible working hours, and emphasizing the principle of shared responsibility between women and men for the achievement of gender equality,

Noting the importance of the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, in particular its funds and programmes, including the United Nations Development Fund for Women and the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, in facilitating the advancement of women in development,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the 1999 World Survey on the Role of Women in Development: Globalization, Gender and Work;

2. Calls for the accelerated and effective implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action and the relevant provisions contained in the outcomes of all other major United Nations conferences and summits, and in this regard expresses the hope that the special session of the General Assembly entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century", which will be held from 5 to 9 June 2000, can take tangible and significant steps to enhance the effective participation of women in development;

3. Stresses that a favourable and conducive national and international environment in all fields of life is necessary for the effective integration of women in development;

4. Urges Governments to develop and to promote methodologies for mainstreaming a gender perspective in all aspects of policy-making, including economic policy-making;

5. Stresses the importance of developing national strategies for promoting sustainable and productive entrepreneurial activities to generate income among disadvantaged women and women living in poverty;

6. Urges all Governments to ensure women's equal rights with men and their full and equal access to education, training, employment, technology and economic and financial resources, including credit, in particular for rural women and women in the informal sector, and to facilitate, where appropriate, the transition of women from the informal to the formal sector;

7. Recognizes the role of micro-finance including micro-credit in the eradication of poverty, the empowerment of women and the generation of employment and, in this regard, notes the importance of sound national financial systems and encourages the strengthening of existing and emerging micro-credit institutions and their capacities, including through the support of international financial institutions;

8. Requests Governments to ensure that the priorities of women are included in, and that women fully participate in, decisions on public investment programmes for economic infrastructure, technology, water supply and sanitation, electrification and energy conservation, transport and road construction and to promote the greater involvement of women beneficiaries at the project planning and implementation stages to ensure their access to jobs and contracts;

9. Stresses the need for assistance to enable women in developing countries, particularly grass-roots women's groups, to have full access to and use of new technologies, including information technologies, for their empowerment;

10. Also stresses the need to ensure that women and girls have full and equal access to all levels of education, vocational training and retraining programmes in order to improve their employment opportunities;

11. Urges States to design and revise laws that ensure that women are accorded full and equal rights as men to own land and other property, including through the right to inheritance, and to undertake administrative reforms and other necessary measures to give women the same right as men to credit, capital, appropriate technologies, access to markets and information;

12. Requests Governments to ensure the full participation of women in decision-making and policy formulation and implementation at all levels so that their priorities, skills and potentials can be adequately reflected in national policy;

13. Calls upon Governments to promote, inter alia, through legislation, family-friendly and gender-sensitive work environments and also to promote the facilitation of breastfeeding for working mothers;

14. Stresses the need for Governments and employers, as appropriate, to implement policies aimed at ensuring stability and security of work and to put in place social protection measures that cover temporary, part-time, informal sector and home workers, a majority of whom are women;

15. Calls upon the international community to make efforts to mitigate the effects of excess volatility and economic disruption, which have a disproportionately negative impact on women, and to enhance trade opportunities for developing countries in order to improve the economic conditions of women;

16. Urges the international community, the United Nations system and relevant organizations to give priority to assisting the efforts of developing countries to ensure the full and effective participation of women in deciding and implementing development strategies and integrating gender concerns into national programmes, including by providing adequate resources to operational activities for development in support of the efforts of Governments to ensure, inter alia, increased access of women to health care, capital, education, training and technology and full and equal participation in all decision-making;

17. Calls upon developed countries to strengthen their efforts to achieve, as soon as possible, the agreed target of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product for overall official development assistance and, where agreed, within that target to earmark 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of gross national product for the least developed countries, so as to assist the developing countries in implementing strategies to eradicate poverty and to promote development and gender equality;

18. Urges multilateral donors, international financial institutions and regional development banks to review and implement policies to support national efforts to ensure that a higher proportion of resources reach women, in particular in rural and remote areas;

19. Calls upon the United Nations system to integrate gender mainstreaming into all its programmes and policies, including in the integrated follow-up to

United Nations conferences, in accordance with agreed conclusions 1997/2 on gender mainstreaming adopted by the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1997;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to update the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development for the consideration of the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth session; as in the past, this survey should focus on selective emerging development issues that have an impact on the role of women in the economy at the national, regional and international levels;

21. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the sub-item entitled "Women in development".

System-wide plan

In accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/34 [YUN 1996, p. 1057], a new draft system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women for the period 2002-2005 was to be prepared for review by the Commission on the Status of Women at its forty-fourth (2000) session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on the Status of Women [E/1999/27], adopted resolution 1999/16 without vote [agenda item 14 (a)].

System-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women, 2002-2005

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1996/34 of 25 July 1996 on the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women, 1996-2001, in which it called for a new draft plan to cover the period 2002-2005,

Considering that the new draft plan should take into consideration the outcome of the special session of the General Assembly on progress achieved in the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action,

1. Invites the Secretary-General, in his capacity as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, to formulate the plan for the period 2002-2005 in two phases, a first phase consisting of an assessment of activities undertaken by the United Nations system and of obstacles encountered and lessons learned from the present plan and the system-wide process of its implementation, and a second phase consisting of a new plan that reflects the growing emphasis on action and delivery;

2. Decides that the assessment should be submitted to the Economic and Social Council through the Commission on the Status of Women in 2000 and that the new plan for 2002-2005 should be submitted to the Council through the Commission in 2001.

Women in the Secretariat

The Commission on the Status of Women considered a January report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.6/1999/5], prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 53/119 [YUN 1998, p. 1316], which updated information on the status of women in the UN Secretariat. In 1998, the increase in the percentage of women on appointments subject to geographical distribution had been marginal, rising from 36.8 per cent to 37.1 per cent. The Secretary-General also provided information on measures taken for the achievement of gender equality. During 1999, priority was to be given to gender action plans in individual departments and offices. The Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly in September on the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat [A/54/405], again noting that the increase of women on appointments subject to geographical distribution had been small, rising to 38.1 per cent since the end of 1998 (see p. 1333).

On 17 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 54/139, called on the Secretary-General to implement and monitor the strategic plan of action for the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat (1995-2000) [YUN 1994, p. 1383] in order to achieve the goal of 50/50 gender distribution by 2000.

As at 31 December 1999, 165 States were parties to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 34/180 [YUN 1979, p. 895]. During the year, the Niger and Tuvalu acceded to the Convention. Also at year's end, 23 States parties had accepted the amendment to article 20, paragraph 1, of the Convention in respect of the meeting time of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), which had been adopted by the States parties in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1178]. The amendment would enter into force when accepted by a two-thirds majority of States parties.

The Optional Protocol to the Convention, adopted by the General Assembly on 6 October (see next page) and opened for signature on 10 December, had 24 signatories by the end of 1999. The Protocol would enter into force following ratification by 10 States parties to the Convention.

The Secretary-General submitted his annual report to the General Assembly on the status of the Convention as at 1 August [A/54/224 & Corr.1].

Optional Protocol

In March, the Open-ended Working Group to elaborate a draft optional protocol to the Convention finalized its negotiations and submitted the draft and its enabling resolution to the Commission on the Status of Women for consideration [E/1999/27, annex II]. The draft text, which incorporated the complaints procedures contained in several international human rights treaties, would allow individuals or groups of individuals to submit claims of alleged violations of rights protected under the Convention. The Commission recommended the draft to the Economic and Social Council for adoption by the General Assembly.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on the Status of Women [E/1999/27], adopted resolution 1999/13 without vote [agenda item 14 (a)].

Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[For full text, see General Assembly resolution 54/4 below.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 October [meeting 28], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/4 [draft: A/54/L.4] without vote [agenda item 109].

Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action and the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action,

Recalling that the Beijing Platform for Action, pursuant to the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, supported the process initiated by the Commission on the Status of Women with a view to elaborating a draft optional protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women that could enter into force as soon as possible on a right-to-petition procedure,

Noting that the Beijing Platform for Action also called on all States that have not yet ratified or acceded to the Convention to do so as soon as possible so that universal ratification of the Convention can be achieved by the year 2000,

1. Adopts and opens for signature, ratification and accession the Optional Protocol to the Convention, the text of which is annexed to the present resolution;

2. Calls upon all States that have signed, ratified or acceded to the Convention to sign and ratify or to accede to the Protocol as soon as possible;

3. Stresses that States parties to the Protocol should undertake to respect the rights and procedures provided by the Protocol and cooperate with the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women at all stages of its proceedings under the Protocol;

4. Stresses also that in the fulfilment of its mandate as well as its functions under the Protocol, the Committee should continue to be guided by the principles of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity;

5. Requests the Committee to hold meetings to exercise its functions under the Protocol after its entry into force, in addition to its meetings held under article 20 of the Convention; the duration of such meetings shall be determined and, if necessary, reviewed by a meeting of the States parties to the Protocol, subject to the approval of the General Assembly;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the staff and facilities necessary for the effective performance of the functions of the Committee under the Protocol after its entry into force;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to include information on the status of the Protocol in her or his regular reports submitted to the General Assembly on the status of the Convention.

ANNEX Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women

The States Parties to the present Protocol,

Noting that the Charter of the United Nations reaffirms faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women,

Also noting that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights proclaims that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights and that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth therein, without distinction of any kind, including distinction based on sex,

Recalling that the International Covenants on Human Rights and other international human rights instruments prohibit discrimination on the basis of sex,

Also recalling the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women ("the Convention"), in which the States Parties thereto condemn discrimination against women in all its forms and agree to pursue by all appropriate means and without delay a policy of eliminating discrimination against women,

Reaffirming their determination to ensure the full and equal enjoyment by women of all human rights and fundamental freedoms and to take effective action to prevent violations of these rights and freedoms,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

A State Party to the present Protocol ("State Party") recognizes the competence of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women ("the Committee") to receive and consider communications submitted in accordance with article 2.

Article 2

Communications may be submitted by or on behalf of individuals or groups of individuals, under the jurisdiction of a State Party, claiming to be victims of a violation of any of the rights set forth in the Convention by that State Party. Where a communication is submitted on behalf of individuals or groups of individuals, this shall be with their consent unless the author can justify acting on their behalf without such consent.

Article 3

Communications shall be in writing and shall not be anonymous. No communication shall be received by the Committee if it concerns a State Party to the Convention that is not a party to the present Protocol.

Article 4

1. The Committee shall not consider a communication unless it has ascertained that all available domestic remedies have been exhausted unless the application of such remedies is unreasonably prolonged or unlikely to bring effective relief.

2. The Committee shall declare a communication inadmissible where:

(a) The same matter has already been examined by the Committee or has been or is being examined under another procedure of international investigation or settlement;

(b) It is incompatible with the provisions of the Convention;

(c) It is manifestly ill-founded or not sufficiently substantiated;

(d) It is an abuse of the right to submit a communication;

(e) The facts that are the subject of the communication occurred prior to the entry into force of the present Protocol for the State Party concerned unless those facts continued after that date.

1. At any time after the receipt of a communication and before a determination on the merits has been reached, the Committee may transmit to the State Party concerned for its urgent consideration a request that the State Party take such interim measures as may be necessary to avoid possible irreparable damage to the victim or victims of the alleged violation.

2. Where the Committee exercises its discretion under paragraph 1 of the present article, this does not imply a determination on admissibility or on the merits of the communication.

1. Unless the Committee considers a communication inadmissible without reference to the State Party concerned, and provided that the individual or individuals consent to the disclosure of their identity to that State Party, the Committee shall bring any communication submitted to it under the present Protocol confidentially to the attention of the State Party concerned.

2. Within six months, the receiving State Party shall submit to the Committee written explanations or statements clarifying the matter and the remedy, if any, that may have been provided by that State Party.

3. After examining a communication, the Committee shall transmit its views on the communication, together with its recommendations, if any, to the parties concerned.

4. The State Party shall give due consideration to the views of the Committee, together with its recommendations, if any, and shall submit to the Committee, within six months, a written response, including information on any action taken in the light of the views and recommendations of the Committee.

5. The Committee may invite the State Party to submit further information about any measures the State Party has taken in response to its views or recommendations, if any, including as deemed appropriate by the Committee, in the State Party's subsequent reports under article 18 of the Convention.

Article 8

1. If the Committee receives reliable information indicating grave or systematic violations by a State Party of rights set forth in the Convention, the Committee shall invite that State Party to cooperate in the examination of the information and to this end to submit observations with regard to the information concerned.

2. Taking into account any observations that may have been submitted by the State Party concerned as well as any other reliable information available to it, the Committee may designate one or more of its members to conduct an inquiry and to report urgently to the Committee. Where warranted and with the consent of the State Party, the inquiry may include a visit to its territory.

3. After examining the findings of such an inquiry, the Committee shall transmit these findings to the State Party concerned together with any comments and recommendations.

4. The State Party concerned shall, within six months of receiving the findings, comments and recommendations transmitted by the Committee, submit its observations to the Committee.

5. Such an inquiry shall be conducted confidentially and the cooperation of the State Party shall be sought at all stages of the proceedings.

Article 9

1. The Committee may invite the State Party concerned to include in its report under article 18 of the Convention details of any measures taken in response to an inquiry conducted under article 8 of the present Protocol.

Article 12

The Committee shall include in its annual report under article 21 of the Convention a summary of its activities under the present Protocol.

Article 13

Each State Party undertakes to make widely known and to give publicity to the Convention and the present Protocol and to facilitate access to information about the views and recommendations of the Committee, in particular, on matters involving that State Party.

Article 14

The Committee shall develop its own rules of procedure to be followed when exercising the functions conferred on it by the present Protocol.

Article 15

1. The present Protocol shall be open for signature by any State that has signed, ratified or acceded to the Convention.

2. The present Protocol shall be subject to ratification by any State that has ratified or acceded to the Convention. Instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 16

1. The present Protocol shall enter into force three months after the date of the deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the tenth instrument of ratification or accession.

2. For each State ratifying the present Protocol or acceding to it after its entry into force, the present Protocol shall enter into force three months after the date of the deposit of its own instrument of ratification or accession.

Article 17

No reservations to the present Protocol shall be permitted.

Article 18

1. Any State Party may propose an amendment to the present Protocol and file it with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. The Secretary-General shall thereupon communicate any proposed amendments to the States Parties with a request that they notify her or him whether they favour a conference of States Parties for the purpose of considering and voting on the proposal. In the event that at least one third of the States Parties favour such a conference, the Secretary-General shall convene the conference under the auspices of the United Nations. Any amendment adopted by a majority of the States Parties present and voting at the conference shall be submitted to the General Assembly of the United Nations for approval.

2. Amendments shall come into force when they have been approved by the General Assembly of the United Nations and accepted by a two-thirds majority of the States Parties to the present Protocol in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.

3. When amendments come into force, they shall be binding on those States Parties that have accepted them, other States Parties still being bound by the provisions of the present Protocol and any earlier amendments that they have accepted.

1. Any State Party may denounce the present Protocol at any time by written notification addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations. Denunciation shall take effect six months after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General.

2. Denunciation shall be without prejudice to the continued application of the provisions of the present Protocol to any communication submitted under article 2 or any inquiry initiated under article 8 before the effective date of denunciation.

CEDAW

In 1999, the 23-member Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), established in 1982 [YUN 1982, p. 1149] to monitor compliance with the 1979 Convention, held two sessions in New York [A/54/38/Rev.1]. At its twentieth session (19 January-5 February), CEDAW reviewed the initial or periodic reports of Algeria, China, Colombia, Greece, Kyrgyzstan, Liechtenstein and Thailand on measures they had taken to implement the Convention. The Committee decided to elaborate a general recommendation on article 12, which addressed measures to eliminate discrimination against women in the field of health care. The recommendation called on States parties to implement comprehensive national strategies promoting women's health throughout their lifespan, including preventing and treating disease, responding to violence against women and ensuring universal access for all women to high-quality and affordable health care. The Committee also decided that representatives of NGOs should be invited to provide country-specific information on States parties whose reports were before the Committee.

At its twenty-first session (7-25 June), the Committee reviewed the initial or periodic reports of Belize, Chile, Georgia, Ireland, Nepal, Spain and the United Kingdom. It also adopted two decisions and a suggestion related to reporting procedural matters. On 7 June, a special ceremony was held at UN Headquarters to commemorate the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the Convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/598 & Corr.1,2], adopted resolution 54/137 without vote [agenda item 109].

Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/118 of 9 December 1998,

Bearing in mind that one of the purposes of the United Nations, as stated in Articles 1 and 55 of the Charter, is to promote universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction of any kind, including distinction as to sex,

Affirming that women and men should participate equally in social, economic and political development, should contribute equally to such development and should share equally in improved conditions of life,

Recalling the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, in which the Conference reaffirmed that the human rights of women and the girl child were an inalienable, integral and indivisible part of universal human rights,

Acknowledging the need for a comprehensive and integrated approach to the promotion and protection of the human rights of women, which includes the integration of the human rights of women into the mainstream of United Nations activities system-wide, and, in this context, calling for the implementation of agreed conclusions 1998/2 of 28 July 1998 of the Economic and Social Council,

Noting that 1999 is the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, welcoming the progress made in its implementation, but concerned about the remaining challenges,

Bearing in mind its resolution 54/4 of 6 October 1999, by which it adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Bearing in mind also the recommendation of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women that national reports include information on the implementation of the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women,

Welcoming the growing number of States parties to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, which now stands at one hundred sixty-five,

Noting the elaboration and adoption by the Committee, at its twentieth session, of general recommendation 24 on article 12 of the Convention, on women and health,

Having considered the report of the Committee on its twentieth and twenty-first sessions,

Expressing concern at the great number of reports that are overdue and that continue to be overdue, in particular initial reports, which constitutes an obstacle to the full implementation of the Convention,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women;

2. Urges all States that have not yet ratified or acceded to the Convention to do so as soon as possible, so that universal ratification of the Convention can be achieved by the year 2000;

4. Notes with appreciation the adoption by the General Assembly, by resolution 54/4, of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women;

5. Notes that some States parties have modified their reservations, expresses satisfaction that some reservations have been withdrawn, and urges States to limit the extent of any reservations they lodge to the Convention, to formulate any such reservations as precisely and as narrowly as possible, to ensure that no reservations are incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention or otherwise incompatible with international treaty law, to review their reservations regularly with a view to withdrawing them and to withdraw reservations that are contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention or that are otherwise incompatible with international treaty law;

6. Urges States parties to the Convention to make every possible effort to submit their reports on the implementation of the Convention in accordance with article 18 thereof and with the guidelines provided by the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and to cooperate fully with the Committee in the presentation of their reports;

7. Encourages the Secretariat to extend further technical assistance to States parties, upon their request, in the preparation of reports, in particular initial reports, and invites Governments to contribute to these efforts;

8. Commends the Committee on its contributions to the effective implementation of the Convention;

9. Urges States parties to the Convention to take appropriate measures so that acceptance of the amendment to article 20, paragraph 1, of the Convention by a two-thirds majority of States parties can be reached as soon as possible in order for the amendment to enter into force;

10. Expresses its appreciation for the additional meeting time allowing the Committee to hold two sessions annually, each of three weeks' duration, preceded by a pre-session working group of the Committee;

11. Emphasizes the need to ensure adequate financing and staff support for the effective functioning of the Committee, including for the dissemination of information;

12. Invites Governments, agencies and organizations of the United Nations system and intergovernmental as well as non-governmental organizations to disseminate the Convention and the Optional Protocol thereto;

13. Encourages all relevant entities of the United Nations system, within their mandates, to continue to assist States parties, upon their request, in implementing the Convention and, in this regard, to pay attention to the concluding comments as well as the general recommendations of the Committee;

14. Encourages all relevant parts of the United Nations system to continue to build women's knowledge and understanding of and capacity to utilize human rights instruments, in particular the Convention and the Optional Protocol thereto;

15. Welcomes the submission of reports by the specialized agencies at the invitation of the Committee on the implementation of the Convention in areas falling within the scope of their activities and the contribution of non-governmental organizations to the work of the Committee, and encourages those agencies to continue their submission of reports;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a report on the status of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the implementation of the present resolution.

Commission on the Status of Women

The Commission on the Status of Women, at its forty-third session (New York, 1-12 March and 1 April) [E/1999/27], adopted three resolutions related to improving the status of women and ensuring their rights and one decision by which it took note of four documents it had considered. Assessing and ensuring implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action continued to be a primary focus of the Commission's work. Panel discussions were held during the session on 2 of the 12 critical areas of concern outlined in the Platform: women and health, and institutional mechanisms for the advancement of women (see p. 1080). The Commission recommended four draft resolutions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council. In addition, the Commission finalized work on the draft optional protocol to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and recommended it to the Economic and Social Council for adoption by the General Assembly (see p. 1100). The Commission held its second session (15-19 March and 30 June) [E/1999/60 & Add.1] at which it acted as preparatory committee for the Assembly's special session in 2000 to review implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women [YUN 1985, p. 937] and the Beijing Platform for Action (see p. 1078).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 March, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1999/213, decided that the Commission should resume its forty-third session for one day on an exceptional basis, in order to complete its work.

By decision 1999/257 of 28 July, the Council decided that the Commission should continue to meet annually for a period of 10 working days. On the same date, the Council, by decision 1999/258, took note of the report of the Commission on its forty-third session and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its forty-fourth (2000) session.

Communications on the status of women

At a closed meeting on 10 March [E/1999/27], the Commission took note of the report of the Working Group on Communications on the Status of Women, established in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1050] to consider ways of making the communications procedure more transparent and efficient. The Working Group considered 13 confidential communications and two non-confidential communications received directly by the Division for the Advancement of Women and 83 confidential communications received by OHCHR. Regarding the confidential communications, the Working Group expressed deep concern for continuing grave violations of women's rights, as well as persistent and pervasive discrimination. In particular, the Working Group was concerned at the abusive treatment of women, including custodial deaths, torture, rape, abduction, disappearances, arbitrary arrests, forced abortions and sterilizations, and harassment and arson by security forces and other authorities. Concern was also expressed for the targeting of civilians, including women and children, for bombings; the mistreatment of those who were internally displaced in conflict situations; the failure of Governments to protect women and children in times of political instability and to punish those responsible for violation of their rights; the abusive treatment of wives, children and relatives of political opponents and prisoners; ongoing and large-scale trafficking in women and girls; continued discrimination against indigenous families; and the violation of the rights of women journalists, human rights defenders, migrant women workers and others. The Working Group was gravely concerned in one case by more than 35,000 communications regarding allegations of gross violations of all the basic human rights of women, particularly inhuman punishments that included women being beaten, tortured, shot, burnt alive and sprayed with acid. Regarding the non-confidential communications, the Working Group took note of the continued absence of women in decision-making processes in the context of conflict prevention and resolution. It expressed concern that women and children were the primary victims of war and poverty.

UN Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM)

During 1999 [A/55/271], the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) continued to focus on strengthening women's economic capacities, engendering governance and leadership, and promoting women's human rights and the elimination of violence against them.

UNIFEM's work on economic empowerment encompassed both global and regional issues. In Africa, the Fund emphasized links between women's products and markets, while the Asia/Pacific programme focused on engendering trade policies against the backdrop of the 1997 economic crisis. The Latin America and Caribbean programme stressed ensuring the rights of women in the informal sector. In Central and Eastern Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States, projects highlighted market opportunities, including the use of new technologies. To promote women's leadership, UNIFEM activities focused on fostering women's participation in decision-making, peace-building and conflict resolution, as well as on engendering laws and supporting implementation of global commitments to achieve gender equality.

The Fund strengthened its efforts to ensure that learning in support of gender equality was made accessible to decision makers and programme planners. New information and communication technologies were utilized for knowledge sharing. During 1999, the <End-Violence> electronic discussion list enabled 2,300 participants to share strategies for promoting legal reform and strengthening protective services and overcoming other operational challenges for ending violence against women. With other partners, UNIFEM hosted 11 global discussions on the critical areas of concern in the Beijing Platform for Action. UNIFEM led an inter-agency task force to collect examples of good practice in gender mainstreaming, created a database, and made them available on the Internet (www.un.org/womenwatch). In March, UNIFEM convened an inter-agency global videoconference called "A World Free of Violence against Women".

By the end of 1999, the Trust Fund in Support of Actions to Eliminate Violence against Women, an inter-agency fund managed by UNIFEM, had financed 87 projects, ranging from promotion of gender-sensitive media reporting on violence against women to training of judiciary and law enforcement personnel, and provision of services for female victims of violence.

Total contributions for UNIFEM increased by $0.4 million in 1999, or 1.3 per cent, to $23.1 million from $22.7 million in 1998. The actual amount received for core contributions increased by $1 million, from $15.8 million in 1998 to $16.8 million in 1999. Cost-sharing and trust fund contributions decreased by $1.9 million, from $6.9 million in 1998 to $5 million in 1999. Project expenditure for regular resources increased by $0.1 million, or 1 per cent, to $10.2 million. Expenditures, including support costs for cost-sharing and sub-trust fund projects, increased by $0.5 million, or 12 per cent, to $4.8 million.

In September, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report on UNIFEM's activities during 1998 [A/54/225]. On 22 December, the Assembly, by decision 54/448, took note of the report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/598 & Corr.1,2], adopted resolution 54/136 without vote [agenda item 109].

United Nations Development Fund for Women

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 39/125 of 14 December 1984, in which it decided to make the United Nations Development Fund for Women a separate and identifiable entity in autonomous association with the United Nations Development Programme, as well as its resolution 52/94 of 12 December 1997,

Recalling also the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women, which recognizes the special role of the Fund in the promotion of the empowerment of women,

Noting the importance of the work of the Consultative Committee on the United Nations Development Fund for Women in policy and programme directions, as stipulated in the annex to resolution 39/125,

Welcoming the contributions the Fund has made in supporting initiatives of Member States, United Nations organizations and non-governmental organizations to formulate and implement activities that promote gender equality and the empowerment of women, concentrating on three thematic areas: strengthening women's economic capacity, engendering governance and leadership and promoting women's human rights and the elimination of all forms of violence against women,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the note by the Secretary-General on the activities of the United Nations Development Fund for Women;

2. Emphasizes the important work that the Fund undertakes within the framework of the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women and in supporting the implementation of recommendations related to the empowerment of women and gender mainstreaming from other United Nations world con- ferences, such as the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, the International Conference on Population and Development, held at Cairo from 5 to 13 September 1994, and the World Summit for Social Development, held at Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March 1995;

3. Notes the progress achieved in the implementation of the Fund's strategy and business plan, 1997-1999, adopted in 1997;

4. Encourages the Fund to cooperate with other partners of the United Nations system, Governments and non-governmental organizations in assessment activities at all levels that will contribute to the five-year review of the Platform for Action, including efforts to improve capacity in the collection and dissemination of sex-disaggregated data and accountability mechanisms at the country level;

5. Commends the Fund for its leadership role in convening United Nations inter-agency campaigns to end violence against women in Latin America and the Caribbean, Africa and Asia and the Pacific throughout 1998 and continuing in 1999 and beyond, and the United Nations inter-agency global videoconference entitled "A World Free of Violence against Women", which was held on 8 March 1999;

6. Recognizes the progress achieved by the Fund in increasing the size and impact of its Trust Fund in Support of Action to Eliminate Violence against Women and the importance of incorporating a learning component to extract and share good practices in eliminating violence against women, and reiterates the call to Governments, non-governmental organizations and the public and private sectors to consider contributing or increasing contributions to the Trust Fund;

7. Encourages the Fund to continue to assist Governments in implementing the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women in order to advance gender equality at all levels, including by reinforcing the cooperation between Governments and civil society, especially women's organizations;

8. Requests the Fund, in conjunction with other relevant United Nations agencies, to continue the activities that it is undertaking to raise awareness about and strengthen the capacities of women in situations of armed conflict and to contribute to promoting the integration of a gender perspective into all peace-building activities, including through support to the full and equal participation of women at all levels, in all forums;

9. Also requests the Fund to continue its efforts to mainstream a gender perspective in United Nations operational activities, in particular through its leadership of the Sub-Group on Gender of the United Nations Development Group and its convening of United Nations inter-agency thematic groups on gender to support the resident coordinator system;

10. Commends the Fund and the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Population Fund and the United Nations Volunteers as its collaborating partners for developing innovative mechanisms to expand the gender expertise available to the United Nations resident coordinator system at the country level, and encourages other United Nations organizations to develop similar initiatives that make use of the expertise and experience of the Fund in gender mainstreaming and the empowerment of women;

11. Recognizes that the Fund has been able to secure increased contributions for its work, and expresses its appreciation to Member States and private organizations, including the United Nations Foundation, and other foundations, whose increased contributions demonstrate their commitment to the issues on which the Fund is working;

12. Urges Member States, non-governmental organizations and members of the private sector that have contributed to the Fund to continue to contribute and to consider increasing their financial contributions, and invites others to consider contributing to the Fund.

International Research and Training Institute (INSTRAW)

The Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW) held its nineteenth session in New York from 5 to 7 May [E/1999/57]. INSTRAW was an autonomous institution undertaking research and training programmes for the advancement and mobilization of women in development.

The Board recommended that Member States expedite payment of pledged contributions in order to increase the Institute's financial reserves and called for the establishment of a group entitled "Friends of INSTRAW" to bring visibility to the Institute and assist in securing financial and political support. With some modifications, the Board endorsed the INSTRAW strategic plan and work programme for 2000-2003, which provided for an early warning system and a clearing house, and for networking with other institutes on gender issues and the advancement of women. A working group was established to prepare a position paper on the future status of INSTRAW for consideration by the Economic and Social Council in 1999 (see next page).

In a September report on INSTRAW activities [A/54/352], the Secretary-General said that, within its current severe financial and staffing constraints, the Institute had been able to implement a modest but promising programme of work, demonstrating its institutional potential. INSTRAW research activities focused on engendering the political agenda, the temporary labour migration of women and women networking for conflict prevention and resolution. During the year, the Institute began a revision of its training approach based on recommendations regarding the need to link training activities to its research findings. Due to cost-reduction measures, the INSTRAW liaison office in New York was closed and the Institute's information and documentation work programme was substantially cut back. INSTRAW continued to collaborate with other UN agencies in many activities, including participation in the Inter-Agency Committee on Women and Gender Equality, and to interact with its network of focal points in countries worldwide.

INSTRAW restructuring

The Economic and Social Council considered a July report of the President of the INSTRAW Board of Trustees containing an analysis of the Institute's financial and staffing crisis and its implications [E/1999/105]. The autonomous nature of INSTRAW had placed it in a vulnerable financial position, since voluntary donations—the Institute's only source of funding—had declined steadily since 1993, according to the report. As a result, INSTRAW's 1998-1999 budget had to be reduced from over $3.8 million to under $2.2 million (42 per cent), staffing resources for the same period were cut by 82 per cent, and the post of Director, which became vacant in March 1999, had not been filled. A strategic plan and work programme for 2000-2003 was approved by the Board, subject to available funds.

Appended to the report was a position paper of the Board of Trustees on revitalizing INSTRAW.

JIU report. In July [A/54/156-E/1999/102 & Add.1], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly an evaluation of INSTRAW by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU), prepared in response to Council resolution 1998/48 [YUN 1998, p. 1089], along with his comments. The Unit made recommendations regarding the Institute's financial and staffing situations, as well as its administrative arrangements, autonomy and mandate in the context of UN programmes for the advancement of women. JIU concluded that the Institute had achieved remarkable success in spite of its scant resources. INSTRAW was experiencing a deep financial crisis that was threatening its continued operational existence, stated the Unit, noting that it would be regrettable if the only UN institution devoted entirely to research and training for the advancement of women ceased to exist as a result of financial attrition. On 22 December, the General Assembly, by decision 54/443, took note of the JIU report and the comments of the Secretary-General on the recommendations.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July [meeting 45], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1999/54 [draft: E/1999/L.41] without vote [agenda item 14 (a)].

Revitalization of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women The Economic and Social Council,

(a) The core staff of the Institute should be constituted of a small number of persons, focusing on coordination and servicing;

(b) Each training and research activity should be structured in projects that are to be financed and managed separately;

(c) New technologies should be used for training, research and communications;

(d) The web site of the Institute should be developed to include categorizing and making accessible third-party gender research projects, thereby also providing a channel to include the results of these projects in United Nations policy-making for the advancement of women;

Report of Secretary-General. In October [A/54/500], the Secretary-General submitted a report to the General Assembly in which he outlined a new structure and working method for INSTRAW, based on parameters set out by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1999/54. The revitalized INSTRAW would undertake a new strategic role and working method, whereby it would use primarily new information technologies as a means of producing, managing, disseminating and applying gender-aware knowledge and information on critical issues and trends, in order to promote the equal partnership of women and men in development. The centrepiece of the new working method would be the Gender Awareness Information and Networking System (GAINS), an integrated knowledge and information management system presented on an interactive web site. The GAINS project would aim to offer three core services: gathering, organization and dissemination of gender-aware research and information; creating networks of key users within and outside the UN system to facilitate information exchange; and using new information technologies for the development and dissemination of training materials and innovative methods of learning, targeted at a variety of audiences. To be completed in phases, the site would eventually include a database, online discussion forums, continuously updated gender-aware news on publications and research/training events, a good practices showcase and a gender-specific search service. In addition to the GAINS project, INSTRAW would continue to undertake research and training activities, which would be financed, staffed and managed as projects separate from the Institute's core operations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/598 & Corr.1,2], adopted resolution 54/140 without vote [agenda item 109].

Chapter XI

Children, youth and ageing persons

In 1999, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) continued advocacy, alliance-building and other activities to improve the situation of children worldwide and ensure special protection for the most disadvantaged, including victims of war, disasters, extreme poverty and all forms of violence. Based on estimates that about 32,000 children under the age of five continued to die daily from preventable causes, UNICEF programmes gave priority to countries with the highest child mortality rates. The Fund's activities also continued to focus on achieving the goals established at the 1990 World Summit for Children. In December, the General Assembly established a preparatory committee to outline the agenda and outcome of its high-level special session in 2001 to review progress towards World Summit goals and to consider future action.

UNICEF efforts to protect children and women in situations of armed conflict were supported by the Security Council in an August resolution (see p. 672), by which it condemned the targeting of children in armed conflict and called on all parties concerned to comply strictly with their obligations under international law, including the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child (see p. 579). The Convention, which marked its tenth anniversary in 1999, served as the basis for UNICEF's ongoing efforts to integrate a human rights-based programming approach. During the year, both the Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights took action to protect children's rights, including meeting the needs of the girl child (see pp. 1090 and 670).

United Nations activities concerning young people focused on accelerating implementation of the 1995 World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond, based on the results of two high-level global meetings convened in Portugal in 1998: the first World Conference of Ministers Responsible for Youth, which adopted the Lisbon Declaration on Youth Policies and Programmes, and the third session of the World Youth Forum of the United Nations System, which approved the Braga Youth Action Plan.

As part of United Nations efforts to support ageing persons, the International Year of Older Persons was observed in 1999. The Year, which promoted the 1991 United Nations Principles for Older Persons, culminated in the Assembly devoting four special plenary sessions to its commemoration. The Commission for Social Development considered follow-up to the Year, including options for improving implementation of the 1982 International Plan of Action on Ageing and elaboration of a long-term perspective strategy on ageing into the twenty-first century.

ChildrenUnited Nations Children's Fund

The United Nations Children's Fund continued to spearhead worldwide efforts to weave a global safety net to ensure that all children could grow up in good health in a world free from poverty and discrimination and safe from violence and exploitation. In 1999, UNICEF intensified its efforts to protect children from the impact of the HIV/AIDS pandemic and to provide all children, especially girls, with equal access to education. In accordance with the medium-term plan for 1998-2001 [YUN 1998, p. 1093], four main organizational priorities provided the focus for the Fund's activities: enhancing partnerships and promoting advocacy on children's rights; enhancing the survival, development, protection and participation of children; improving the availability and use of data in critical areas; and strengthening management and operations.

UNICEF programmes were committed to helping children obtain the best possible start in their early years, giving every child a quality basic education, and making sure that adolescents had adequate support and opportunities to develop their capabilities. Advocacy and programme development efforts continued to address the priority areas of health, nutrition, water, environment, sanitation, education, child protection, gender and programme partnerships. UNICEF partnerships, both within and beyond the UN system, aimed to mobilize broad support for programmes and policies for women and children; provide technical collaboration in support of field programmes; and develop and promote strategies for the advancement of women's and children's rights at the global, regional and national levels. The publication of two annual flagship reports provided analysis and data on key issues affecting children: The State of the World's Children 1999 stressed the value of basic education as the key to reducing poverty and preventing gender discrimination and other child rights violations; The Progress of Nations 1999 provided comparative data on advances made by countries towards achieving the goals of the 1990 World Summit for Children [YUN 1990, p. 797].

Ten years after its adoption by the General Assembly in resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 560] (see p. 579), the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child continued to provide the legal framework for establishing standards of behaviour towards children and addressing the conditions that inhibited fulfilment of their rights. During 1999, considerable progress was made in applying a human rights-based approach to UNICEF programme cooperation, within the broader context of the Convention. UNICEF's work was reoriented from a project-based response to different categories of children to a broader approach in which children were viewed as part of a wider society that had not been fully successful in protecting their rights. The General Assembly, in resolution 54/149, called for action to protect the rights of children, including implementation of the 1989 Convention (see p. 676). In addition, the Assembly, in resolution 54/148, addressed the needs and protection of the rights of the girl child (see p. 1090).

In 1999, UNICEF global advocacy efforts succeeded in increasing the prominence of children's issues on the UN agenda, including within the Security Council, which gave heightened attention to the situation of children in countries ravaged by war. In February, UNICEF presented to the Council a new "Peace and Security Agenda for Children", which included measures to end the use of child soldiers and protect children from the effects of sanctions. On 30 August, the Council adopted resolution 1261(1999), in which it condemned the targeting of children in armed conflict and called on all parties to put an end to practices such as killing and maiming, sexual violence, abduction and forced displacement, recruitment and attacks on places that usually had a significant presence of children, such as schools and hospitals (see p. 672).

UNICEF cooperated with 161 countries, areas and territories during the year: 46 in sub-Saharan Africa; 35 in Latin America and the Caribbean; 33 in Asia and the Pacific; 20 in the Middle East and North Africa; and 27 in Central and Eastern Europe, the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) and the Baltic States.

Programme expenditure totalled $971 million in 1999, of which 33 per cent was spent on child and maternal health; 22 per cent on planning, advocacy and cross-sectoral support; 16 per cent on education and early childhood development; 14 per cent on community development, women's programmes and measures for children and women in need of special protection; 9 per cent on hygiene, water and environmental sanitation; and 6 per cent on child nutrition. In addition, $93 million, or 9 per cent of total expenditure, was spent on management, administration, write-offs and other charges. UNICEF operations in 1999 were described in the 2000 UNICEF Annual Report and the report of its Executive Director [E/ICEF/2000/4 (Parts I & II)].

The UNICEF Executive Board held its first regular session of 1999 from 19 to 22 and on 25 January, the annual session from 7 to 11 June, and the second regular session from 7 to 10 September, all in New York [E/1999/34/Rev.1]. During those sessions, the Board adopted 21 decisions.

The Economic and Social Council, in decision 1999/219 of 23 July, took note of the Board's report on its first regular session and of the annual report of the Executive Director covering 1998 [E/1999/9].

In September [dec. 1999/19], the Executive Board adopted the programme of work, including the dates, for its 2000 sessions. The first regular session would be held from 17 to 21 January, the annual session from 22 to 26 May, and the second regular session from 18 to 22 September.

Programme policies

In decisions related to UNICEF's programme policies, the Executive Board asked the Executive Director to continue to advocate for and support efforts by national Governments and civil society to achieve the end-decade goals of the World Summit for Children [dec. 1999/9] and authorized a three-year extension for the International Child Development Centre, based in Florence, Italy [dec. 1999/18]. It also adopted a new resource mobilization strategy, including a multi-year funding framework that conceptually integrated its organizational priorities and major areas of action, resources, budget and outcomes [dec. 1999/8] and approved the financial medium-term plan for 1999-2002 [dec. 1999/10] (see p. 1118). The medium-term plan was a rolling four-year plan that was updated every two years [YUN 1998, p. 1093], except for the financial plan, which was updated annually.

Follow-up to 1990 World Summit for Children

In April, UNICEF submitted to the Executive Board its annual progress report [E/ICEF/1999/9] on follow-up to the 1990 World Summit for Children [YUN 1990, p. 797], covering 1998. The report provided a global overview of progress by the international community towards World Summit goals, as well as information on actions taken to prepare for the General Assembly's end-decade review in 2001. In spite of general progress made during the decade, achieving the year 2000 goals would be difficult without a major acceleration in the pace of progress through efforts at both the national and international levels, the report stated.

Based on short-term priorities and consultations with country and regional offices, UNICEF had identified seven areas where progress towards the World Summit goals should be accelerated: reducing young child mortality and preventing child disability; reducing maternal deaths; improving access to and the quality of basic education; reducing exploitation, abuse and harm of children; improving early childhood care for child growth and development; improving young people's health and development; and improving the availability and use of data in critical areas.

In June [dec. 1999/9], the Executive Board urged Governments to adopt appropriate strategies and allocate the maximum resources possible for action and encouraged them to conduct periodic national and subnational reviews of progress in achieving the World Summit goals, and in the broader context of implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child. The Executive Director was asked to continue to support the efforts of Governments and civil society to achieve end-decade goals and to work with Governments to strengthen national capacities for the collection and use of data to monitor progress towards the goals. She was also asked to support the Secretary-General in preparing for the end-decade review in 2001, and to report in 2000. Donor Governments were asked to allocate the maximum resources possible to support the achievement of Summit goals and to ensure universal access to basic social services.

By decision 1999/219 of 23 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of an extract from the Executive Board's report [E/1999/L.20] containing the June decision.

In an April report [E/ICEF/1999/10], UNICEF outlined preliminary recommendations for a future global agenda for children and the focus of its work beyond 2000. The proposals built on progress since the 1990 World Summit, drawing on lessons learned in the course of the decade and recommending actions to address remaining challenges requiring urgent collective action. The report argued that, although broad consensus existed on many of the issues that negatively influenced human development, those persistent problems were compounded by new concerns, such as the HIV/AIDS pandemic, sharply declining official development assistance (ODA), rising national debt among poor countries, a global economy that was creating both unprecedented wealth and growing disparities, and increasing instability and conflict in many countries. However, major new progress for children was possible within a single generation if the global community would commit to three key priorities: early childhood care and development; equal access to good quality basic education; and providing adolescents with the skills to develop fully their individual capacities. UNICEF proposed that the international community and Governments make a global pact to work in the next decade towards the universal realization of those outcomes. In its future work, UNICEF, while still emphasizing the importance of protecting children from various forms of preventable death, would go beyond survival to place the three priority areas at the centre of its global programme strategy.

General Assembly special session (2001)

In July [E/ICEF/1999/17], UNICEF submitted to the Executive Board a report outlining its support to the General Assembly special session to be held in 2001 on the follow-up to the World Summit. The report described UNICEF's follow-up activities since 1990, including the mid-decade reviews and the plan to ensure a successful review process for the mid-decade goals. The objectives of the special session were to review the implementation of the World Summit Declaration and the Plan of Action and agree on renewed commitments and future action for children and youth in the next decade. Additional events to mark the World Summit anniversary would unite the broadest possible alliance for children's rights, to be known as the Leadership Initiative for Children. The Initiative would mobilize a broad range of actors, including Governments, non-governmental organizations (NGOs), the private sector, and children and youth themselves, with the aim of intensifying world focus on children and enhancing responsibility for the realization of their rights. UNICEF was the secretariat for the 2001 special session and the coordinator of the Leadership Initiative.

In September [dec. 1999/12], the Executive Board, on the recommendation of the Executive Director, approved a supplementary-funded budget of $2 million for the UNICEF secretariat in the year 2000, subject to availability of specific-purpose contributions, for support to the special session and additional events.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Rights-based programming

An April report [E/ICEF/1999/11] described progress made by UNICEF in implementing a 1991 Executive Board decision [YUN 1991, p. 691] on the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 560]. The report outlined ways in which the normative framework of international human rights standards systematically guided the practical work of UNICEF in fulfilling its mission and mandate and how the Fund was working to make its programmes of cooperation contribute more effectively to the realization of children's and women's rights.

The report concluded that consensus was emerging among UN country teams on the convergence between the human rights and development mandates of the various agencies. UNICEF had a leading role to play in ensuring that children's rights were a common concern for development partners and in providing advisory support. A human rights-based programming approach was crucial to the lasting impact of initiatives for children. By emphasizing partnerships and participation, a human rights perspective could provide the basis for making the goals and commitments of international conferences such as the World Summit for Children more binding.

Gender mainstreaming

As a follow-up to agreed conclusions adopted by the Economic and Social Council in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1186] on mainstreaming a gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the UN system, UNICEF reported in March [E/ICEF/1999/13] on progress achieved in integrating gender as a cross-cutting concern in UNICEF country programmes. Noting that UNICEF had recorded significant advances in mainstreaming a gender perspective into its work, the report analysed the organization's achievements and outlined areas for further action in relation to the development and application of tools, support for capacity-building, regional and country initiatives, and partnerships to support gender mainstreaming.

A framework for evaluating UNICEF efforts in mainstreaming gender was being developed and tested in 1999, based on regional trends and experiences in monitoring the situation of women and children, the gender audits conducted on the West Bank and Gaza and the Sudan and mid-term reviews and country evaluations in Burkina Faso and other countries. Resources for gender mainstreaming were included in country programme management plans, and supplementary funds had supported special initiatives on girls' education, ending female genital mutilation and violence against women and girls, and adolescent development in the promotion of women's and girls' rights. Gender focal points constituted UNICEF's core resource in its efforts to mainstream gender but capacity-building was needed, as was strengthening of institutional mechanisms, in order to sustain, expand and monitor the gains achieved in mainstreaming gender.

Strategies in basic education

In a March report [E/ICEF/1999/14], UNICEF described progress in achieving universal basic education and challenges faced in meeting goals and discussed future strategies. Some progress had been made in achieving the goals of the World Declaration on Education for All and its Framework for Action, adopted at the 1990 World Conference on Education for All [YUN 1990, p. 763], including remarkable success in some countries, but the general trends had been disappointing. Growth in school enrolment in some regions had barely kept pace with population growth and rates had actually declined in some countries. Significant progress was seen in defining learning outcomes and improving the measurement of learning achievement. Deepening poverty and reduced government resources for education in developing countries had increased the financial burden on many communities and households.

UNICEF's strategies for education in the twenty-first century related to: getting children ready for school through early childhood care; getting all children into school and keeping them there; ensuring children learned what they needed to learn; helping adolescents get educated and involved; empowering families and communities in education planning, financing and management; increasing the impact of education on HIV/AIDS prevention; improving the provision of education in unstable and emergency situations; and promoting child-friendly learning environments. New partnerships, including closer links with the World Health Organization (WHO), the Save the Children Alliance, the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS, development agencies, NGOs and the private sector, as well as more intersectoral collaboration within UNICEF, would be crucial to implementing the new strategies. UNICEF was also working to ensure that its education programmes were developed from a rights perspective, based on nearly universal ratification of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the resulting consensus that every child, regardless of resources and circumstances, had a right to a basic education of high quality (see also below, under "UNICEF programmes by sector").

Africa

In response to a 1997 Executive Board request [YUN 1997, p. 1212], UNICEF, in a March report [E/ICEF/1999/12], reviewed progress made in efforts to ensure children's rights to survival, development and protection in Africa. Children in Africa, particularly the sub-Saharan region, remained acutely vulnerable and exposed to the combined impact of economic crisis, unserviceable international debt, armed conflicts, spreading violence and the unrelenting HIV/AIDS pandemic. Those crises had, to varying degrees, diverted attention and resources away from longer-term development efforts, including investing in children and ensuring their rights. UNICEF priorities in Africa included: strengthening basic health care systems for child and maternal survival; ensuring access for all children, especially girls, to good quality basic education; strengthening community capacities for protecting women and children; promoting non-violence, gender equity and post-conflict recovery; and identifying viable approaches to improved family and community care for the survival and development of young children, including those affected by HIV/AIDS.

In March, members of the UNICEF Executive Board visited Mozambique and the United Republic of Tanzania, where they observed that the overall situation of children was poor in both countries, but the indicators in Mozambique were significantly worse. The team evaluated the incorporation of a rights-based approach in UNICEF programmes and reviewed the medical treatment of children, especially as it related to malaria and HIV/AIDS, in both countries. They also visited two refugee camps in the United Republic of Tanzania to learn more about UNICEF's emergency programmes.

Maurice Pate Award

The Executive Director recommended that the Maurice Pate Award for 1999 be presented to kuleana, an NGO based in the United Republic of Tanzania, and that an allocation of $25,000 be allocated from general resources for that purpose. Established in 1966 [YUN 1966, p. 385], the Award was presented to the Tanzanian NGO in recognition of its significant and innovative contribution to improving the situation of children in the country and inspiring other NGOs in the region to bring a child rights perspective to their work. On 21 January [dec. 1999/5], the Executive Board endorsed the recommendation and approved the allocation.

UNICEF programmes by region

During 1999, regional UNICEF expenditure in support of cooperation programmes totalled $934 million, $339 million of which (36 per cent) was spent for programmes in sub-Saharan Africa; $280 million (30 per cent) for programmes in Asia; $98 million (11 per cent) for programmes in the Americas and the Caribbean; $83 million (9 per cent) for programmes in the Middle East and North Africa; and $81 million (9 per cent) for programmes in Central and Eastern Europe, CIS and the Baltic States. In addition, $51 million (5 per cent) was spent for interregional programmes. Overall, the total programme expenditure represented an increase of $ 150 million, or about 19 per cent, over 1998.

As in previous years, the major portion of UNICEF resources was spent in the 63 low-income countries with a per capita gross national product of $785 or less. Those countries, which had a total child population of 1.3 billion or 69 per cent of all children worldwide, received 66 per cent of programme expenditure, the same as in 1998. Some 64 per cent of UNICEF programme expenditure went to countries where the child mortality rate (under five years of age) was classified as very high or high.

Field visits

In February, members of the UNICEF Executive Board visited Colombia and Peru to evaluate how the country offices had applied a rights-based approach to cooperation programmes, including the difference it made and the possible challenges to such an approach. They also reviewed emergency response, United Nations Development Assistance Framework processes (see p. 787) and resource mobilization in the two countries. The team found that the child rights approach had become an integral part of the programmes in both countries and that, in line with the approach, UNICEF had increased its focus on the most vulnerable groups—children at risk and those who were excluded. While the rights-based approach should be more effective and sustainable in the long term, the team saw the need for further discussion and analysis regarding whether the approach affected the time needed to realize certain goals for children.

(For information on a field visit to Mozambique and the United Republic of Tanzania, see above, under "Africa".)

UNICEF programmes by sector

The major share of UNICEF programme expenditure continued to be in the area of health ($256 million or 27 per cent) and child-focused advocacy, planning, capacity-building and other cross-sectoral programmes, including social mobilization and statistics ($167 million or 18 per cent). Significant shares of expenditure also went to basic education ($119 million or 13 per cent), water and environmental sanitation ($70 million or 7 per cent), nutrition ($43 million or 5 per cent), general emergencies ($28 million or 3 per cent) and other key developmental activities ($111 million or 12 per cent). Overall, the shares of expenditure among the various programme areas were very similar to 1998, with a slight increase in the share of health.

In accordance with a 1997 Executive Board decision [YUN 1997, p. 1220], the first 7 per cent of general resources was set aside to respond flexibly to the diversity of country situations and to evolving needs and special circumstances. The distribution of funds from the global set-aside aimed to achieve a catalytic effect or breakthrough in countries where clear opportunities or needs existed for accelerated efforts. In 1999, the first such set-aside was allocated by the Executive Director in support of the 1998-2000 programme priorities and for additional special needs. Of the $21.4 million available, some 53 per cent was allocated for accelerated actions in immunization; 11 per cent was provided for measures, mainly in eastern and southern Africa and South Asia, against HIV/AIDS; 9 per cent to combat malaria; 9 per cent for safe water and sanitation; 8 per cent for early childhood care; 5 per cent towards eradication of guinea worm disease; and 4 per cent for post-crisis rehabilitation efforts for children and women in Central America. Overall, 65 per cent of the set-aside was allocated to countries in sub-Saharan Africa and 19 per cent in Asia.

Child and adolescent health

UNICEF activities to reduce childhood death and disease, improve early childhood care, reduce maternal mortality, prevent childhood disability, and improve adolescent health and development focused in 1999 on accelerating action in relation to certain goals established at the 1990 World Summit for Children [YUN 1990, p. 797], including immunization, HIV/AIDS prevention and malaria control. UNICEF continued to concentrate on countries with the highest rates of infant and child mortality, particularly in sub-Saharan Africa. As in the past, immunization provided the foundation for other health and child development activities, with UNICEF providing support for national immunization days in over 100 countries.

The challenge remained to reach all children, especially in the poorest countries, which depended substantially on UNICEF and other international partners to finance the purchase of vaccines. Substantial progress had been achieved in efforts to eradicate polio—a global cause of childhood disability—through a joint effort among UNICEF, WHO, Rotary International (United States) and others. The number of polio cases worldwide had fallen from about 350,000 in 1988 to a reported 6,000 in 1999. In conflict areas, where access to immunization was difficult, UNICEF worked with many parties to negotiate truces to allow health workers to vaccinate millions of children against polio and other child-killer diseases. UNICEF also continued to support efforts to prevent measles, reduce vitamin A deficiency and eradicate guinea worm disease, as well as prevent disabilities. Malaria control activities focused on developing community-based strategies for rapidly expanding the use and sustainable treatment of bed nets and improved access to antimalarial drugs within the global Roll-back Malaria Initiative, a partnership among UNICEF, WHO, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the World Bank.

Through the Integrated Management of Childhood Illnesses (IMCI) programme, developed in collaboration with WHO, UNICEF aimed to reduce childhood deaths by preventing and treating acute respiratory infections, diarrhoea, measles, malaria and malnutrition through coordinated strategies that included training health workers and improving the care provided by health facilities, communities and families. In 1999, IMCI was implemented in 63 countries and a dozen others were considering adopting the approach. UNICEF continued to play a major role in global advocacy and technical leadership in nutrition, particularly through efforts to strengthen the community and family dimensions of the IMCI initiative. National water and environmental sanitation programmes were supported in more than 80 countries, with the bulk of resources concentrated in South Asia and sub-Saharan Africa. In 1999, UNICEF helped some 9 million people gain access to improved water and 5 million to sanitation facilities.

Promoting the convergence of child health, nutrition and psychosocial and cognitive development within an overall approach to early childhood care was a major strategic concern. Activities in some 15 countries aimed at improving the knowledge and skills of parents and caregivers. Pilot programmes at the community level ranged from the use of volunteers to work with families in 20 provinces in the Philippines, to measures to address low birth weight in Nepal, to the use of television, radio or video to promote early childhood care in Jamaica and several other countries.

Implementation of the Baby-Friendly Hospital Initiative, a programme spearheaded by UNICEF and WHO, continued in 1999, but with slower progress, especially in sub-Saharan Africa. A total of 14,828 facilities worldwide were accredited as "baby-friendly", an increase of 2 per cent during the year, while improvements in breastfeeding rates were noted in 21 countries. UNICEF was active in efforts to reduce maternal mortality in 114 countries.

With regard to HIV/AIDS, UNICEF's goal was to address the underlying causes of the pandemic, reduce the vulnerability of children, adolescents and women and mitigate the impact of disease and death. In 1999, the Fund expanded staffing in the most-affected countries and continued to support communities in protecting the rights of children, young people and women affected by AIDS. It supported prevention programmes in more than 20 countries in eastern and southern Africa and helped to launch in 11 countries a pilot programme that offered voluntary and confidential counselling and testing for women and their partners; administered drugs that reduced HIV transmission from mother to child; and provided information about infant feeding options and improved prenatal care. During the year, UNICEF introduced 15 infant feeding pilot programmes which aimed to reduce mother-child transmission. UNICEF also worked to educate children and young people about AIDS and to provide support for children orphaned by the disease.

Basic education

In the context of meeting the goals of the 1990 World Summit on Education for All [YUN 1990, p. 763] in relation to children's rights to basic, quality education (see also above, under "Programme policies"), UNICEF worked with many partners to increase school enrolment, improve quality in the classroom and, as an increasing priority, open the doors of education to the more than 110 million school-age children who were not in school, especially girls, children in conditions of crisis, children living in remote areas, children of minorities, children in extreme poverty and those who worked. Studies were undertaken in some 35 countries to address why children were not in school or had dropped out. Other activities aimed at enabling children to enter school, including through multigrade teaching, bilingual education, school construction, social mobilization, parent education and making schools more welcoming to girls. In Nicaragua, children who were very poor, who worked or who were older than the primary school age benefited from a programme offering primary education with flexible schedules and mixed grade levels. Some 96,000 refugee children in the United Republic of Tanzania received primary schooling and nearly 30,000 Khmer and other minority children in Viet Nam enjoyed early grade instruction in their local languages in 1999. In Brazil, UNICEF joined a coalition of 42 national groups to launch a campaign to provide education to 50,000 children who survived by collecting and selling waste from garbage dumps. UNICEF supported school repairs, provided supplies and undertook training for psychosocial support and mine awareness in Kosovo province of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY). In East Timor, education supplies and construction materials were distributed and some 6,000 teachers were registered in East Timor.

Among the results of UNICEF support, some 15,000 additional children were enrolled in school in Eritrea, 27,000 in Ethiopia, 36,000 in Peru and 37,000 in Nicaragua. Almost 1.5 million more children were enrolled in Bangladesh, India and Pakistan, and over a million more in several countries of the East Asia and Pacific region. Several UNICEF programmes for increased enrolment, particularly in the Middle East, North Africa and South Asia, focused on girls. In the Gambia, one of 30 countries taking part in the Africa Girls' Education Initiative, a UNICEF-led coalition of Governments, NGOs and other organizations, girls' enrolment jumped from 41 per cent in 1991/92 to 63 per cent in 1998/99. A wide range of broad-based school improvement projects undertaken in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Ecuador, Nepal, the Philippines, Tajikistan and Turkmenistan incorporated measures for health and child protection as a support for school-based learning. Globally, more teachers were being trained with UNICEF support, both in regular curriculum subjects and on issues such as health and gender.

Protection from armed conflict, exploitation and abuse

In areas affected by armed conflict and other emergency situations, UNICEF worked to ensure that children and their families received vital humanitarian assistance, as well as to restore school systems and to help families and children to deal with trauma from exposure to violence and other atrocities. In war-torn countries, including Angola, Burundi, the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), East Timor, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka and the Sudan, UNICEF, together with WHO, negotiated and organized "days of tranquillity" to immunize children. In Afghanistan, an agreement secured access by health workers to northern provinces for the first time in a year, allowing almost 4 million children to be vaccinated against polio. In Kosovo, 97 per cent of children whose schooling was disrupted were back in class by the end of the year as a result of UNICEF-led efforts.

Adolescents required special support during crises as they were particularly vulnerable to violence and abuse, including rape and exploitation as child soldiers. In Liberia, UNICEF supported the demobilization of more than 4,000 child soldiers and continued to build the capabilities of those and other war-affected adolescents, including girls abducted and raped during the war, so that they could lead productive lives. In six refugee camps for displaced Kosovars in Albania, UNICEF helped young people set up Youth Councils that planned and managed camp services, including schooling, cleaning crews, landmine awareness and inter-camp sporting events. UNICEF continued to support prevention, rehabilitation and reintegration programmes for children affected by landmines in a dozen countries, including Angola, Cambodia, FRY, including Kosovo, and Nicaragua and among refugees in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia.

During 1999, UNICEF worked closely with the UN Department of Peacekeeping Operations and the Special Representative on Children and Armed Conflict (see PART TWO, Chapter II) on the deployment of child protection advisers for peacekeeping missions. The first advisers, whose role was to help ensure that the protection of children's rights was a priority concern throughout the peacekeeping process, were seconded by UNICEF to UN peacekeeping operations in the DRC and Sierra Leone. Assistance was also provided for the reunification of children separated during crises in a number of countries, including Angola, East Timor, Kosovo, Sierra Leone, the Sudan, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania.

UNICEF also strengthened its activities related to sexual exploitation and abuse in 1999, especially the trafficking of women and girls from countries in Central and Eastern Europe, CIS and the Baltic States region, and child prostitution and trafficking in Cambodia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam.

Poverty reduction

In 1999, with an estimated 650 million children worldwide trapped in extreme poverty, UNICEF bolstered its poverty-alleviation efforts by increasing the percentage of resources allocated to the least developed countries and improving strategies to help the poorest children not only survive their early years but also achieve their potential for physical, emotional and intellectual development. As a result of UNICEF support for national efforts to improve social services for poor children, nearly three out of four children in developing countries had gained access to clean water and a larger percentage were in school than at any time previously. In Cambodia, a village-based programme that combined health, nutrition, sanitation, women's literacy and early childhood care had, in one year, from 1998 to 1999, reduced malnutrition among women and children under five by 10 per cent. As a result of a UNICEF-supported project to improve sanitation, launched in Zimbabwe in 1999, hundreds of families in poor neighbourhoods on the outskirts of Harare received low-cost, ecologically sound latrines in or near their homes.

Given that many of the world's poorest countries continued to service debt at the expense of basic social services, UNICEF, as the lead agency within the UN system for the 20/20 Initiative, endorsed by the 1995 World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113], encouraged both developing and donor nations to allocate 20 per cent of their budgets and ODA, respectively, to basic social services. In Uganda, for example, resources freed from debt servicing were being used to ensure children's right to a quality basic education. By the end of 1999, UNICEF had participated in 40 national reviews to encourage the allocation of budgetary resources for basic social services. In addition, UNICEF collaborated in formulating the Principles of Good Social Policy, which were adopted by the World Bank's Development Committee in September.

Organizational and administrative matters

UNICEF finances

In 1999, UNICEF income amounted to $1,102 million, which was $93 million (9 per cent) higher than the $1,009 million estimated in the 1999 medium-term plan and $136 million (14 per cent) more than 1998 income. The main sources of income were contributions from Governments and intergovernmental organizations (63 per cent ($699 million) of total income); and non-governmental and private sector groups and individuals (34 per cent ($371 million)). Another 3 per cent ($32 million) came from other sources.

Budget appropriations

In January [dec. 1999/3], the Executive Board took note of a progress report on implementation of the biennial support budget for 1998-1999 [E/ICEF/1999/AB/L.1], prepared in response to the Board's 1998 request [YUN 1998, p. 1099]. In September [dec. 1999/20], the Board approved a biennial support budget totalling $545.5 million for UNICEF programme support and management and administration for 2000-2001, as recommended by the Executive Director [E/ICEF/1999/AB/L.7], and reviewed by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) [E/ICEF/1999/AB/L.10]. Income estimates of $52 million would be used to offset the gross appropriations, resulting in estimated net appropriations of $493.5 million.

Also in September [dec. 1999/13], the Board approved the Executive Director's recommendations for funding 25 country programmes, one subregional programme for Central America and one multi-country programme for Central and Eastern Europe, CIS and the Baltic States [E/ICEF/1999/P/L.16 & Corr.1], amounting to the following respective amounts for general resources and supplementary funding for each region: Africa, $129.3 million and $127.6 million; Americas and the Caribbean, $7.6 million and $37.3 million; Asia, $26.5 million and $18 million; Central and Eastern Europe, CIS and the Baltic States, $45.8 million and $58.9 million; and the Middle East and North Africa, $9.7 million and $2.5 million.

As a result of the harmonization of the budgets of UNICEF, UNDP and the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), and in line with ACABQ recommendations, UNICEF proposals relating to intercountry programmes (previously categorized as advocacy and programme development for headquarters and regional offices) were presented separately from the support budget. Based on those proposals [E/ICEF/P/L.30], the Board, on 9 September [dec. 1999/14], approved a general resources 2000-2001 programme budget for programme activities at headquarters and regional offices of $21.1 million and an Emergency Programme Fund of $25 million. In addition, a supplementary-funded programme budget of $237 million was approved for the 2000-2001 biennium, subject to the availability of specific-purpose contributions.

On 7 September [dec. 1999/10], the Board approved the 1999-2002 financial medium-term plan [E/ICEF/1999/AB/L.11] as a flexible framework of projections, including the preparation of up to $656 million in programme expenditures from regular resources for submission in 2000. The amount was subject to the availability of resources and to the condition that estimates of income and expenditure made in the medium-term plan continued to be valid.

Audits

In January [dec. 1999/4], the Executive Board took note of the UNICEF financial report and audited statements for the biennium ended 31 December 1997 and report of the Board of Auditors [A/53/5/Add.2], and the 1998 UNICEF report to the Board of Auditors and ACABQ [E/ICEF/1998/AB/L.9].

In a May report [E/ICEF/1999/AB/L.8], UNICEF described to the Board of Auditors and ACABQ the steps taken or to be taken in response to the recommendations of the Board and ACABQ on the UNICEF accounts for the 1996-1997 biennium. It also presented the status of implementation of the recommendations on the UNICEF accounts for the 1994-1995 biennium. On 8 September [dec. 1999/11], the Executive Board took note of the report.

In June, the Office of Internal Audit issued its second annual report, which considered the results of its findings based on audits completed in 1998 [E/ICEF/1999/AB/L.14]. The report noted that the audit of field locations continued to receive high priority. There was particularly strong demand from offices in 1998 for assistance in introducing self-assessment techniques. The Executive Board, on 9 September [dec. 1999/15], took note of the report.

Also in September [dec. 1999/17], the Board took note of the interim financial report and statements for the year ended 31 December 1998 [E/ICEF/1999/AB/L.12].

Harmonization of budgets

The Executive Board, in January, considered proposals for revisions to the harmonized budget format submitted by UNDP, UNFPA and UNICEF [DP/1999/6-DP/FPA/1999/1-E/ICEF/1999/AB/L.2], in accordance with the Board's 1998 request [YUN 1998, p. 1099]. ACABQ presented its comments thereon [DP/1999/7-DP/FPA/1999/3-E/ICEF/1999/AB/L.4].

Amendments to financial regulations

In July [E/ICEF/1999/AB/L.9], UNICEF proposed several limited amendments to its financial regulations. The Executive Board, on 10 September [dec. 1999/21], approved the proposed changes, as reviewed by ACABQ in August [E/ICEF/1999/AB/L.10], and requested UNICEF to amend the relevant financial regulations and rules accordingly. It decided to examine the implications of the amendments when considering the report of the Board of Auditors for 1998-1999.

Resource mobilization strategy

In response to a 1998 Executive Board request [YUN 1998, p. 1100] and in accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/227 [YUN 1996, p. 1249] and Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/59 [YUN 1997, p. 846], UNICEF presented a resource mobilization strategy [E/ICEF/1999/5], which was the culmination of a series of reports and drafts reviewed by the Executive Board in 1998 [YUN

1998, p. 1100]. The resource mobilization strategy focused on increased contributions to core resources and burden-sharing, greater predictability of contributions to core resources, supplementary funds, supporting strategies and action and other means of mobilizing resources for UNICEF and for children.

In January [dec. 1999/8], the Executive Board adopted the resource mobilization strategy and endorsed the funding target of an annual growth in income of 7 per cent, to reach $1.5 billion by 2005, as a challenge for the mobilization of general resources and supplementary funds from Governments, the private sector and all other donors. The Board decided that UNICEF would adopt and develop a multi-year funding framework, which was annexed to the Board's decision, that conceptually integrated UNICEF organizational priorities and major areas of action, resources, budget and outcomes. It also outlined measures for UNICEF to adopt concerning contributions to supplementary funds. The Executive Director was asked to submit to the Board at its first regular session in 2000 a plan for the timing of the presentation of the various elements of the multi-year funding framework, including the medium-term plan, the biennial support budget, the analytical report of the Executive Director, and the announcement by Governments of their voluntary contributions, with a view to enhancing their linkages.

Private Sector Division

In a financial report on the Private Sector Division (PSD) for the year ended 31 December 1999 [E/ICEF/2000/AB/L.6], UNICEF stated that the total net income from PSD activities for the year was $202.9 million for regular resources, compared to $180.1 million in 1998. That amount included $65.2 million from the sale of UNICEF greeting cards and other products, $156.4 million from private sector fund-raising activities, and an offset of $18.7 million for other charges and adjustments. In addition, a total of $153.5 million ($92.5 million in 1998) was raised from private sector fund-raising activities, which was earmarked for other resources. The net consolidated income, including both regular and other resources, totalled $356.4 million ($272.6 million in 1998).

The Executive Board, in January [dec. 1999/2], approved for the fiscal year 1 January to 31 December 1999 budgeted expenditures of $88.8 million as presented in the proposed budget [E/ICEF/1999/AB/L.5]. It authorized the Executive Director to incur expenditures as summarized in the proposed budget and to increase expenditures up to the maximum proposed in the report, should there be an apparent net proceeds increase from product sales and/or private sector fund-raising, and, accordingly, to reduce expenditures should the net proceeds decrease. The Executive Director was also authorized to redeploy resources between the various budget lines up to 10 per cent of the amounts approved, and to spend additional funds between sessions of the Board, when necessary, due to currency fluctuations, to implement the 1999 work plan. The Board noted that PSD net proceeds for 1999 were budgeted at $284.3 million for general resources. It approved the proposed changes in posts contained in the budget (a net decrease of four posts) and renewed the Market Development Programme with $4 million for 1999 and the Fund-raising Development Programme with $8.5 million for 1999. It also renewed the Central and Eastern European National Committees Development Programme, which included nine countries, with a budget of $0.5 million for 1999. The Executive Director was authorized to incur expenditures in 1999 related to the cost of goods delivered for 2000 up to $37.1 million. In addition, the Board approved the PSD medium-term plan contained in the budget report.

In September [dec. 1999/17], the Board took note of the PSD financial report and statements for the year ended 31 December 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1101].

Joint and coordinating committees

The seventh meeting of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)/UNICEF Joint Committee on Education (New York, 17-18 June) [E/ICEF/1999/18] approved recommendations on strengthening collaboration with State agencies and other bodies, particularly in the areas of: girls' education; early childhood care and education; the needs of children in Africa; the status, remuneration and training of teachers; education data and statistics; the assessment of the 1990 World Summit on Education for All [YUN 1990, p. 763]; further elaboration of the respective strengths and mandates of the two organizations; and reports of the Joint Committee. The Committee considered a presentation on the Framework Agreement between UNESCO and UNICEF on collaboration in the field of education, which was signed in February.

The Executive Board, on 9 September [dec. 1999/16], took note of the Committee's recommendations. In other action, the Board elected for 1999-2000 the members and alternates of the WHO/UNICEF/UNFPA Coordinating Committee on Health and of the UNESCO/UNICEF Joint Committee on Education [dec. 1999/1].

International Child Development Centre

In July [E/ICEF/1999/16], UNICEF submitted a progress report on the activities of the International Child Development Centre (ICDC), established in 1988 to strengthen the capacity of UNICEF and its cooperating institutions to respond to the evolving needs of children and to promote an emerging new global ethic for children [YUN 1988, p. 649]. The report observed that the Centre's most significant contributions had been in the areas of socio-economic policy analysis and children's rights. ICDC activities had helped to underpin UNICEF's ability to influence course corrections in global programmes of structural adjustment, debt and economic transition to market economies by demonstrating the crushing impact of fiscal measures on the poorest of children. The Centre had also undertaken efforts to increase global understanding of children's human rights and facilitated implementation of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 560]. Much of the Centre's early work had been incorporated into the future agenda of UNICEF and mainstreamed into its current work programme.

The UNICEF Executive Director recommended the extension of ICDC for the period 2000-2002 in order to strengthen UNICEF capacity to explore new dimensions of its future agenda and to document lessons learned from international experience. An allocation of $12.8 million in supplementary funding was proposed, of which the Government of Italy had pledged 10.5 billion lire (approximately $6 million) for the Centre's core activities, with the remainder to be sought from other donors for specific activities. In September, the Executive Board [dec. 1999/18] authorized a three-year extension for the Centre and approved the recommended allocation.

Communication and information

In an April report [E/ICEF/1999/AB/L.6], UNICEF outlined its information technology (IT) strategy and described progress in IT investments and projects. IT enabled UNICEF to fulfil its goals in advocacy, information-sharing and fund-raising and to achieve medium-term objectives in management and operations. It also facilitated the availability and use of data in critical areas. IT strategies addressed five critical areas: IT management, governance and organization; integrated systems for resource management; exploitation of the Internet and Intranet for knowledge management; global connectivity; and the IT infrastructure required to support those areas. IT areas requiring further development by UNICEF included communication channels; resource management systems; information management; information technology organization; and information technology infrastructure and support services.

Annual reports

In January [dec. 1999/6], the Executive Board asked the Executive Director to transmit her annual report covering 1998 [E/1999/9] to the Economic and Social Council and to ensure that future reports to the Council reflected greater analytical effort, selected focus on key issues, problem-oriented reporting and discussions of lessons learned.

Also in January [dec. 1999/7], the Board decided that, starting from 2000, information in part II of the Executive Director's annual report should be presented to the Board in a way that facilitated monitoring of progress in achieving the objectives in programmes and activities within the framework of organizational priorities in the medium-term plan. In addition, the report should be developed as an analytical report of annual global progress in the priority areas of the medium-term plan in a manner that linked planning, programming, budgeting and outcomes, including a review of objectives and results achieved, estimates of funds utilized for those purposes, main obstacles encountered and lessons learned, and other issues of special interest to the Board.

Youth

Implementation of the World Programme of Action for Youth

In 1999, United Nations policies and programmes involving youth continued to focus on implementation of the 1995 World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 50/81 [YUN 1995, p. 1211]. The Programme of Action addressed the problems faced by youth worldwide and outlined meaningful ways to enhance youth participation in national and international policy and decision-making. The 1998 Lisbon Declaration on Youth Policies and Programmes, adopted at the first World Conference of Ministers Responsible for Youth [YUN 1998, p. 1103], built on the 1995 Programme of Action by outlining further policy commitments by Governments in the areas of national youth policy, participation, development, peace, education, employment, health and drug abuse. Just prior to the World Conference, the third session of the World Youth Forum of the United Nations System adopted the Braga (Portugal) Youth Action Plan, a set of goals and actions aimed at fostering youth participation for human development [ibid.]. The Plan and the outcomes of the World Conference were submitted to the Assembly in 1999 through the Commission for Social Development.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 52/83 [YUN 1997, p. 1225], the Secretary-General submitted a January report [A/54/59] in which he described progress in implementing the 1995 World Programme of Action, based on information submitted to the 1998 World Conference and Youth Forum by Member States, the UN system, youth NGOs and intergovernmental organizations, as well as on statements by Member States during the Assembly's 1998 session. The report reviewed implementation at the national, regional and global levels in relation to three indicators: youth policy, youth coordination and youth action. Those indicators illustrated significant progress by Member States in both formulation and implementation of national youth policies and programmes. States indicating that they had implemented a national youth programme grew from just 29 per cent in 1994 to 64 per cent in 1998. By the end of 1998, 153 (83 per cent) Member States had formulated cross-sectoral national youth policies; 167 (90 per cent) had designated a national youth coordinating mechanism (such as a ministry department, council or committee); 114 (62 per cent) had implemented a national youth programme of action; and 95 (51 per cent) had taken all three types of action to implement the Programme of Action. Despite such progress, the report indicated that many of the Member States that had adopted national youth policies had not done so on a cross-sectoral, inter-ministerial or interdepartmental basis. There had been an uneven reaction by the regional commissions regarding the follow-up to Assembly resolution 50/81 [YUN 1995, p. 1211] and Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/55 [YUN 1997, p. 1224] and there was a need for more serious cooperation between the regional commissions and regional intergovernmental youth organizations, which convened regional meetings of youth ministers, and the regional youth NGOs, which convened regional meetings of youth organizations, to better strengthen the capacities for formulating and implementing integrated national youth policies and programmes in the context of the Programme of Action.

Recommendations for future action by Governments, regional organizations and global mechanisms, including UN bodies, addressed the integration of youth concerns into overall economic and social policy; the impact of globalization on the lives of young people; the linkages between democracy and young people; regional integration and youth development; country experiences in formulating, implementing, monitoring and evaluating integrated national youth policies; and experiences of training and apprenticeship programmes for youth employment.

Communications. On 5 February [E/CN.5/1999/14], Turkey expressed its desire to organize the second World Conference of Ministers Responsible for Youth, together with the fifth session of the World Youth Forum and the World Youth Festival, in Turkey. On 12 February [A/54/66-E/1999/6], Senegal proposed hosting the fourth session of the World Youth Forum.

Commission for Social Development

The Commission for Social Development, at its thirty-seventh session (9-19 February) [E/1999/26], considered policies and programmes involving youth. It had before it the Secretary-General's report on the implementation of the World Programme of Action for Youth (see above) and a note [A/54/62] drawing attention to the report of the 1998 World Conference of Ministers Responsible for Youth [YUN 1998, p. 1103].

The Commission also held a panel discussion on youth, which addressed the results of the 1998 Conference and Forum, including follow-up action by Member States, NGOs, the UN system and other intergovernmental organizations. Priority concerns reflected in the discussion included: the achievements of the Conference and the Forum by bringing youth issues to the attention of the international community; the gravity of youth problems globally and the necessity for fund-raising to address youth problems; that youth should be seen as part of the solutions and not always as the source of problems; that policy makers should be encouraged to promote youth participation in all aspects of life; that the various youth-related agencies and organizations of the UN system should strengthen inter-agency co-operation to alleviate youth problems; that the effects of globalization on youth and the strategy to deal with that problem should be reviewed at the national level; the linkages of youth issues with other social policies and problems of society; and integrating the youth agenda in national development programmes of Member States. The panel made a series of recommendations regarding youth issues.

The Commission decided to include in its report the moderator's summary of the panel on youth [dec. 37/103] and recommended a draft resolution on youth policies and programmes to the Economic and Social Council for adoption.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission for Social Development [E/1999/26], adopted resolution 1999/18 without vote [agenda item 14 (b)].

Policies and programmes involving youth

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 54/120 below.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Ageing persons

International Year of Older Persons

The International Year of Older Persons, the theme of which was "A society for all ages", ended on 30 September. In accordance with resolution 52/80 [YUN 1997, p. 1227], the General Assembly devoted four plenary meetings to follow-up to the Year on 4, 5 and 6 October [A/54/PV.23-26].

The overall objective of the Year, designated by the Assembly in a 1992 Proclamation on Ageing contained in resolution 47/5 [YUN 1992, p. 889], was the promotion of the United Nations Principles for Older Persons, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 46/91 [YUN 1991, p. 698], which provided guidance in the areas of independence, participation, care, self-fulfilment and dignity.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 53/109 [YUN 1998, p. 1104], the Secretary-General submitted an August report on the International Year of Older Persons, 1999: activities and legacies [A/54/268]. The report condensed the activities for the Year into the four facets of the policy framework for a society for all ages: the situation of older persons; lifelong individual development; multigenerational relationships; and population ageing and development. It also described initiatives with regard to women and ageing. The observance of the Year, which was launched with a multimedia information campaign on 1 October 1998, was highlighted by a special event at UN Headquarters on 30 September 1999. Activities undertaken during the Year by more than 80 national committees and numerous other entities included conferences, seminars, research studies and initiatives that explored and promoted various facets of the theme "A society for all ages". Promotional events included cultural, educational, art and social activities, as well as the launching of commemorative stamps, posters and calendars with the Year's logo.

The impact of the Year on the UN programme on ageing had already become evident said the Secretary-General. The programme had not only extended its exploration of the roles, opportunities, entitlements and contributions of older persons in fast-changing societies, but also was engaged in the ongoing formulation of a policy framework of a society for all ages, together with a research engine that could drive it. Future activities would include priority programmatic measures, meetings planned for 2000, reviews scheduled for 2001 and 2002 and mainstreaming in relation to ageing issues.

Highlights of an expert consultation on developing a policy framework for a society for all ages (Seoul, Republic of Korea, 11-16 June) were annexed to the report.

Follow-up arrangements

The Commission for Social Development (New York, 9-19 February) [E/1999/26] considered a note by the Secretary-General on follow-up arrangements to the International Year of Older Persons [E/CN.5/1999/8], prepared in response to a 1998 Commission request [YUN 1998, p. 1106]. The note included suggestions for the development of a long-term perspective strategy on ageing into the twenty-first century; streamlining the review and appraisal of the International Plan of Action on Ageing, adopted at the 1982 World Assembly on Ageing [YUN 1982, p. 1184]; and the four General Assembly plenary meetings devoted to the follow-up to the Year.

On 19 February [E/1999/26 (res. 37/2)], the Commission asked the Secretary-General to solicit the views of States, NGOs and the private sector on updating the International Plan of Action on Ageing and on the desirability and feasibility of convening in 2002 a review of the outcome of the World Assembly on Ageing, including the interrelationship of ageing and development. Governments were urged to present to the Assembly, at the four plenary meetings devoted to follow-up to the Year at its fifty-fourth (1999) session, their national reports on observances of the Year, policy approaches to ageing and best practices for a society for all ages. The Secretariat was asked to incorporate those experiences, policies and best practices into a long-term strategy on ageing for the Assembly's consideration at its fifty-sixth (2001) session. The Commission also suggested exploring the feasibility of including an ageing-related development index in the Human Development Report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 November [meeting 51], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/24 [draft: A/54/L.6/Rev.1 & Add.1, orally revised] without vote [agenda item 106].

Follow-up to the International Year of Older Persons: a society for all ages

The General Assembly,

Recalling the World Assembly on Ageing, held in Vienna in 1982, which adopted the International Plan of Action on Ageing,

Recalling also the International Conference on Ageing, which it convened on 15 and 16 October 1992 on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the International Plan of Action on Ageing, and which, inter alia, recommended the observance of the International Year of Older Persons in 1999,

Recalling further its resolution 53/109 of 9 December 1998 and previous resolutions on ageing and the International Year of Older Persons,

Reaffirming the importance of the United Nations Principles for Older Persons, as adopted by its resolution 46/91 of 16 December 1991,

Taking note of the 1998 revision of the official United Nations population estimates and projections, which show that, with the continuation of the decline in fertility and the increase in life expectancy, the population of the world will age much faster in the next half-century than previously,

Also taking note that these population estimates and projections provide, for the first time, detailed information on the oldest of the old, which shows that the proportion of those who are eighty years of age or older will increase in all countries of the world, and illustrates two phenomena: the older the age group, the faster it grows, and the higher the proportion of older women,

Reaffirming the need to integrate a gender perspective in policies on ageing,

Conscious that the ageing of the world's population represents a far-reaching challenge to Governments as well as other relevant sectors of society, including non-governmental organizations and the private sector, to ensure that the needs of older persons, including their human resource potential to society, are adequately recognized and addressed,

Aware that a revolutionary change in the demographic structure of societies, as well as the rapidity of ageing of populations in developing countries, requires a fundamental change in the way in which societies cope with those challenges,

Conscious that discrimination and stereotyping of older persons constitute and lead to violations of their human rights,

Taking note of General Comment No. 6 (1995) of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on the economic, social and cultural rights of older persons,

Acknowledging the initiatives undertaken and the momentum generated, at all levels, towards addressing the challenge of ageing and the concerns and contributions of ageing and older persons by the celebration of the International Year of Older Persons,

Convinced of the necessity to ensure an action-oriented follow-up to the International Year of Older Persons with a view to sustaining that momentum,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General, and noting with satisfaction the focus in the annex to the report on the elaboration of a policy framework for a long-term perspective strategy on ageing, including a research agenda for the twenty-first century, in the context of a society for all ages,

Recalling resolution 37/2 adopted by the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-seventh session, in which the Commission requested the Secretary-General to solicit the views of States, non-governmental organizations and the private sector on updating the International Plan of Action on Ageing and on the desirability and feasibility of convening a review of the outcome of the World Assembly on Ageing in 2002, including the interrelationship of ageing and development,

1. Notes with satisfaction the successful celebration of the International Year of Older Persons, with the theme "A society for all ages", and resolves to maintain the momentum created by the Year;

2. Emphasizes the need to address the developmental aspects of ageing with particular attention to the situation of developing countries;

3. Stresses the importance of the collection of data and population statistics disaggregated by sex and by age on all aspects of population ageing for policy formulation by all countries, and encourages the relevant entities of the United Nations to support national efforts, especially of developing countries, in capacity-building, and, in this context, takes note of the establishment by the United Nations of an Internet-accessible database on ageing, and invites States to submit, whenever possible, information for inclusion in the database;

4. Encourages the press and the media to play a central role in the creation of awareness of population ageing and related issues, in the elimination of stereotypes and discrimination of older persons in the media and in the promotion of solidarity among generations;

5. Urges the development of policies and programmes at the national, regional and international levels which respond to the rights, needs and abilities of older women;

6. Also urges Governments to take appropriate action to combat discrimination based on age;

7. Requests the Economic and Social Council and all its appropriate subsidiary bodies, in particular the Commission for Social Development, as well as the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme and the legislative and policy-making bodies of the concerned specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations, to give careful consideration to the issue of ageing;

8. Encourages States Parties to include in their reports to the Committee on Human Rights, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights information on older persons;

9. Welcomes activities in the field of ageing by United Nations funds and programmes, in particular the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Population Fund, as well as specialized agencies, including the World Health Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Labour Organization and the Bretton Woods institutions, and encourages them to continue to support activities in the field of ageing;

10. Stresses the importance of national follow-up activities to the International Year of Older Persons through involving older persons and consulting them on their needs;

11. Encourages regional initiatives to follow up on the International Year of Older Persons and to provide inputs into the process of revision of the International Plan of Action on Ageing, given the fact that different regions and countries are at different stages of population ageing and need to identify specific policy responses in order to achieve the goal of "A society for all ages";

12. Takes note with appreciation of the offer by the Government of Germany to host a regional ministerial conference on ageing under the aegis of the Economic Commission for Europe in 2002;

13. Notes that there is a need for guidelines and recommendations reflecting the current situation of societies and older persons in order to design and support adequate age-related policies;

14. Decides to entrust the Commission for Social Development with the revision of the International Plan of Action on Ageing and the elaboration of a long-term strategy on ageing, based on new developments since 1982 and on the experience of the International Year of Older Persons in 1999, with a view to the adoption of a revised plan of action and of a long-term strategy on ageing in 2002;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to consult Governments, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations in the preparation of a draft revised plan of action, including proposals on a review mechanism, to be submitted to the Commission for Social Development in 2001;

16. Endorses the request of the Commission for Social Development in its resolution 37/2, to the Secretariat, to incorporate, as feasible, the experiences, policies and best practices reported by States into a long-term strategy on ageing, encompassing periodic reviews, for the consideration of the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session in 2001;

17. Requests the Commission for Social Development, at its thirty-eighth session, to adopt a recommendation on the desirability and feasibility of convening a second World Assembly on Ageing in 2002, devoted to reviewing the outcome of the First World Assembly as well as to considering a long-term strategy on ageing in the context of a society for all ages, and to report on this issue to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session through the Economic and Social Council;

18. Takes note with appreciation of the offer by the Government of Spain to host a second World Assembly on Ageing in 2002;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution under an item entitled "Follow-up to the International Year of Older Persons".

Chapter XII

Refugees and displaced persons

In 1999, the global population of concern to, and receiving assistance from, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) totalled more than 22 million. They included almost 11.7 million refugees, 5.4 million internally displaced persons, 2.5 million repatriated refugees, 1.2 million asylum-seekers and 1.5 million affected by humanitarian and other crises.

The major challenges posed by the conflicts in Chechnya, East Timor and Kosovo, which generated new movements of refugees and displaced persons totalling almost 2 million, absorbed a large portion of UNHCR's resources.

While world attention was focused on those crises, African countries continued to host the world's largest refugee populations, internally displaced persons and other people of concern, totalling almost 6.3 million in 1999. The main refugee groups on the continent included half a million Sierra Leoneans in West Africa, 280,000 Burundians in the United Republic of Tanzania and 180,000 Congolese who had fled from the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) to various countries. More than 370,000 Sudanese were still refugees in Ethiopia and Uganda; 165,000 refugees from Western Sahara were in camps in Algeria and other countries; and 150,000 Angolan refugees were mostly based in the DRC. Guinea continued to host more than half a million refugees. The situation in the east and Horn of Africa continued to be dominated by the conflict between Ethiopia and Eritrea.

In Europe, the Kosovo crisis sparked one of the largest and most rapid refugee exoduses in modern times, with almost 850,000 Kosovar Albanians forced from their homes at the outbreak of hostilities in March. However, more than 400,000 voluntarily repatriated within two weeks following the restoration of peace. Elsewhere in Europe, the situation in Chechnya deteriorated in the second half of the year, forcing the displacement of more than 200,000 persons.

In Asia, East Timor experienced a fresh outbreak of violence, following the announcement of the results of the August referendum on independence, provoking the displacement of 75 per cent of the population, about 500,000 inside East Timor and an estimated 200,000 to West Timor and other areas of Indonesia. In October, UNHCR conducted a large-scale voluntary repatriation operation and signed a memorandum of understanding with the Government of Indonesia establishing a framework for protecting refugees and affirming the voluntary nature of the repatriation programme. In the Americas, a major displacement occurred in Colombia where 300,000 persons were forced to flee their homes because of the deteriorating conflict.

In October, the UNHCR Executive Committee considered as its annual theme "Strengthening partnership to ensure protection, also in relation to security". It recognized that all levels of partnership, including with States, other international organizations, regional organizations, local populations and other elements of civil society, including non-governmental organizations (NGOs), were important. The Committee reaffirmed that the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and its 1967 Protocol remained the foundation of the international refugee regime. It recognized, however, that complementary forms of protection might need to be developed, and encouraged UNHCR, in consultation with others, to examine all aspects of the issue.

In December, the General Assembly urged that resources be mobilized to reduce the burden borne by States, in particular developing countries, that had received large numbers of asylum-seekers and refugees, and called on UNHCR to continue playing its catalytic role in mobilizing assistance from the international community to address the economic, environmental and social impact of large-scale refugee populations, especially in developing countries.

Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

Programme policy

Executive Committee action. At its fiftieth session (Geneva, 4-8 October) [A/54/12/Add.1], the Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme recognized that the presence of massive refugee populations in developing countries was putting considerable strain on their economies and environment and called on UNHCR to mobilize assistance from the international community to address the situation. Serious breaches of internationally recognized rights of refugees, asylum-seekers and other persons of concern over the past year were strongly deplored by the Committee, which remained preoccupied that systematic violations of human rights, blatant disregard of international humanitarian law, and policies of wholesale expulsions of populations and "ethnic cleansing" had caused significant displacement around the world. The Committee called on all interested parties to concentrate on revitalizing old partnerships and building new ones to support the international refugee protection system. Noting the fiftieth anniversary of the 1949 Geneva Conventions on the law of armed conflict, it also called on States and other parties to armed conflicts scrupulously to observe international humanitarian law. The Committee also addressed issues pertaining to access to protection, special protection needs, security of refugees, durable solutions, stateless persons and internally displaced persons and protection of the refugee's family.

For consideration of its annual theme, "Strengthening partnership to ensure protection, also in relation to security", the Committee had before it a note [A/AC.96/923] that raised issues and gave examples of how partnerships with a variety of actors had contributed to improving the protection of asylum-seekers, refugees and others of concern to UNHCR. The note contained suggestions as to both the potential limits of partnership and elements of success.

In her opening statement to the Committee, the High Commissioner said that 1999 had experienced one of the highest rates of deployment of emergency staff since UNHCR's response system was established in 1992. The year had also been marked by fresh conflicts and refugee crises in which civilians had been particularly targeted. The crises in Kosovo and East Timor had particularly challenged the international community. In Kosovo, the outflow of people was staggering and the return, only 10 weeks after the outflow started, was an even faster exodus in reverse. Despite the obstacles, the response to the crisis did meet immediate needs of safety and survival. The displacement situation in both East and West Timor was of extreme concern to UNHCR. It was imperative that the Office maintain its presence in West Timor with free and secure access to East Timorese refugees. Africa and the area stretching from the Black Sea to Central Asia were two other critical regions where the refugee problem had intensified.

With regard to management changes, the High Commissioner stated that the Office had completed a reorganization that had streamlined its overall management and was continuing to develop a comprehensive operations management system. The 2000 budget had abolished the separation between General and Special Programmes and a new human resources management package was scheduled to be launched in January 2000. The High Commissioner also addressed issues of humanitarian action and international responses to crises, stressing that while regional initiatives to bring peace to troubled areas were welcome, new complex aspects of the interventions needed to be addressed, particularly the role of the military in humanitarian operations and the overcrowding of humanitarian space in high-profile emergencies.

By decision 1999/288 of 30 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the High Commissioner's report for 1998/99 [E/1999/21 & Corr.1].

Coordination of humanitarian assistance

UNHCR concluded global or country-specific agreements with several partner organizations in 1999, as outlined in the Commissioner's 1999 report [A/55/12], including one with the International Organization for Migration (IOM) in Croatia and one with the International Association of Refugee Law Judges to jointly promote and encourage national systems for the identification, treatment and protection of asylum-seekers. The annual UNHCR/IOM meeting reviewed advances made and constraints faced in implementing the memorandum of understanding between them. The framework for cooperation with the World Bank was complemented by an agreement further defining the staff exchange programme. Secondments and staffing were the subject of three other cooperation agreements signed in 1999 with international organizations, NGOs and government agencies. UNHCR signed a memorandum of understanding with the International Organization of La Francophonie, whereby the latter would fund, recruit and deploy Junior Professional Officers from francophone countries and other members of the organization. Emergency staffing and other standby arrangements were the subject of cooperation agreements signed with the Danish and Norwegian Refugee Councils and the Russian State entity for civil defence, emergency response and disaster mitigation. Although UNHCR had no global cooperation agreement with the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), annual meetings were held to review specific situations. The 1999 meeting addressed operating principles in large-scale humanitarian crises and the relationship between humanitarian, political and military actors.

UNHCR continued to strengthen cooperation and coordination with other UN agencies, funds and programmes, both bilaterally and within inter-agency forums. The annual meeting between UNHCR and the World Food Programme (WFP) addressed cooperation and implementation of programmes in the field. Guidelines to the field were issued concerning UNHCR participation in the resident coordinator system and the potential for inter-agency development management tools for strengthening humanitarian programmes and for addressing the matter of the gap from relief to development.

UNHCR continued to promote the UNHCR/NGO Partnership in Action process in 1999. Regional meetings on the process for national NGOs took place in Argentina and Sri Lanka.

In October [A/54/12/Add.1], the Executive Committee called on UNHCR to further strengthen its collaboration with ICRC, the International Federation of the Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, and national Red Cross and Red Crescent societies.

Evaluation and inspection activities

By a 19 August report [A/AC.96/918], the Executive Committee was informed that in February responsibility for evaluation was transferred to a new Evaluation and Policy Analysis Unit and the Inspection and Evaluation Service was renamed the Inspector General's Office (IGO). During the 12 months ending 31 July, inspections were carried out in 14 countries. IGO inspected the Division of Human Resources Management in the second half of 1998 and undertook management reviews in response to specific requests. A report with recommendations for restructuring headquarters was issued in February and options for the new management structure for the regional bureau for Africa were proposed.

Evaluation activities were outlined in a 20 August report [A/AC.96/919], in which it was noted that the new Evaluation and Policy Analysis Unit had reviewed the UNHCR housing programme in Bosnia and Herzegovina; problems of access to land and its ownership in repatriation operations; UNHCR's strategy in the European Union (EU); the Mali/Niger repatriation operation; UNHCR's rehabilitation activities in the Great Lakes region of Africa; compliance with UNHCR's policies on refugee women, children and the environment; and UNHCR staff training.

The Executive Committee, in a general decision on administrative, financial and programme matters [A/54/12/Add.1], took note of the reports.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee with necessary rehabilitation and development assistance in conjunction, as appropriate, with the Office of the High Commissioner and relevant development agencies, and urges the Office of the High Commissioner to strengthen its cooperation and coordination with relevant entities, including international financial institutions and non-governmental organizations;

14. Reiterates the right of all persons to return to their country of origin, emphasizes in this regard the obligation of all States to accept the return of their nationals, calls upon all States to facilitate the return of their nationals who have sought asylum and have been determined not to be in need of international protection, and affirms the need for the return of persons to be undertaken in a humane manner and with full respect for their human rights and dignity, irrespective of the status of the persons concerned;

15. Acknowledges the desirability of comprehensive approaches by the international community, including comprehensive regional approaches, to the problems of refugees and displaced persons, and notes in this regard that capacity-building in countries of origin and countries of asylum can play an important role in addressing the root causes of refugee flows, in strengthening emergency preparedness and response and in providing effective protection and achieving durable solutions;

16. Urges States, in cooperation with the Office of the High Commissioner and other relevant organizations, to explore and support fully capacity-building initiatives as part of a comprehensive approach to addressing refugee issues and to take necessary measures to promote sustainable development and to ensure the success of capacity-building activities, and reiterates that such initiatives may include those which strengthen legal and judicial institutions and civil society, those which promote the observance of human rights, the rule of law and accountability and those which enhance the capacity of States to fulfil their responsibilities with respect to persons of concern to the Office of the High Commissioner;

17. Reiterates its support for the role of the Office of the High Commissioner in providing humanitarian assistance and protection to internally displaced persons on the basis of criteria enumerated in paragraph 16 of its resolution 53/125, and underlines the continuing relevance of the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement;

18. Calls upon States to adopt an approach that is sensitive to gender-related concerns and to ensure that women whose claims to refugee status are based upon a well-founded fear of persecution for reasons enumerated in the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol, including persecution through sexual violence or other gender-related persecution, are recognized as refugees, and encourages the Office of the High Commissioner to continue and to strengthen its efforts for the protection of refugee women;

19. Urges States and relevant parties to respect and observe principles of international human rights, humanitarian and refugee law that are of particular relevance to safeguarding the rights of child and adolescent refugees, notes the particular vulnerability of refugee children to being forcibly exposed to the risks of injury, exploitation and death, in particular in the context of armed conflict, and to abduction with a view to their forced participation in military activities, and urges all States and concerned parties to take all possible measures to protect child and adolescent refugees, including, in particular, from all forms of violence, exploitation and abuse and forced military service, and to prevent their separation from their families;

20. Recognizes the special role of elderly refugees within the refugee family, and, bearing in mind that 1999 has been declared the International Year of Older Persons, calls upon States and the Office of the High Commissioner to make renewed efforts to ensure that the rights, needs and dignity of elderly refugees are fully respected and addressed through appropriate programme activities;

21. Recalls that the family is the natural and fundamental group unit of society and that it is entitled to protection by society and the State, and calls upon States, working in close collaboration with the Office of the High Commissioner and other concerned organizations, to take measures to ensure that the refugee's family is protected, including through measures aimed at reuniting family members separated as a result of refugee flight;

22. Notes that forty-eight States are now parties to the 1954 Convention relating to the Status of Stateless Persons and that twenty States are parties to the 1961 Convention on the reduction of statelessness, recalls paragraphs 14 to 16 of its resolution 50/152 of 21 December 1995, and encourages the High Commissioner to continue her activities on behalf of stateless persons;

23. Calls upon Governments and other donors to demonstrate their international solidarity and burden-sharing with countries of asylum, in particular developing countries, countries with economies in transition and countries with limited resources that, owing to their location, host large numbers of refugees and asylum-seekers, stresses the need for the Office of the High Commissioner to be given adequate resources to fulfil its mandated functions, and in this regard calls upon Governments to contribute generously to the unified annual programme budget of the Office of the High Commissioner, to support efforts to widen the donor base so as to achieve greater burden-sharing among donors and to assist the High Commissioner in securing additional and timely income from traditional governmental sources, other Governments and the private sector to ensure that the needs of refugees, returnees and displaced persons of concern to the Office of the High Commissioner are fully met.

Enlargement of the Executive Committee

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In accordance with decision 1998/302 [YUN 1998, p. 11] the Economic and Social Council considered a note verbale from Côte d'Ivoire requesting admission to membership of the UNHCR Executive Committee [E/1998/97] and a draft decision on enlargement of the Committee [E/1998/L.53]. By decision 1999/207 of 2 February, the Council took note of the request by Côte d'Ivoire and recommended that the General Assembly take a decision at its resumed fifty-third (1999) session on the question of enlarging the Committee's membership from 54 to 55.

At its substantive session in July, the Council had before it notes verbales from Chile [E/1999/112] and the Republic of Korea [E/1999/76] requesting membership of the Committee.

By decision 1999/282 of 30 July, the Council took note of the requests from Chile and the Republic of Korea and recommended that the Assembly take a decision on the question of enlarging the Committee's membership from 55 to 57 States at its fifty-fourth (1999) session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/600], adopted resolution 54/143 without vote [agenda item 111].

Enlargement of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

The General Assembly,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council decisions 1999/207 of 2 February 1999 and 1999/282 of 30 July 1999 concerning the enlargement of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Taking note also of the requests regarding the enlargement of the Executive Committee contained in the note verbale dated 13 August 1998 from the Permanent Mission of Côte d'Ivoire to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General, the note verbale dated 26 May 1999 from the Permanent Mission of the Republic of Korea to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General and the note verbale dated 20 July 1999 from the Permanent Mission of Chile to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General,

1. Decides to increase the number of members of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees from fifty-four to fifty-seven States;

2. Requests the Economic and Social Council to elect the additional members at its organizational session for 2000.

Financial and administrative questions

For 1999, UNHCR's initial budget (covering both General and Special Programmes) was $915 million [A/55/12], 10 per cent lower than that of 1998 ($1.1 billion). Of that amount, $413 million was allocated for General Programmes and $482 million for Special Programmes. The year was characterized by three successive emergencies (Kosovo, East Timor and the northern Caucasus) and by budget reductions due to funding shortfalls in several other General and Special Programmes, particularly in Africa. In the course of the year, overall requirements increased to $1,183.7 million, due mainly to the Kosovo emergency. Total contributions reached $911.6 million, an increase of $142.6 million over 1998. Despite the fact that the initial budget was $27 million lower than in 1998 and that some donors increased their contributions, General Programmes again faced a funding shortfall and UNHCR had to borrow $7.5 million from the Working Capital and Guarantee Fund to maintain the Emergency Fund at its statutory level. The Office was also forced to restrict or cancel a number of non-life-saving activities both in the field and at headquarters. Limited recourse to the Programme Reserve and the Voluntary Repatriation Fund also helped to match budgets with income.

During the year, the initial needs for Special Programmes were increased to $770.7 million, due mainly to the Kosovo debacle, and to small increased needs in Africa and in Asia. Some individual programmes began with little carry-over funds from 1998 and received only partial funding, resulting in the need to continually readjust operational budgets and programme implementation. Programmes particularly affected were the repatriation/rehabilitation programmes in West Africa, Rwanda, the Great Lakes region of Africa and Liberia. Programmes for the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS), the Horn of Africa and south-eastern Europe also received insufficient funding to cover planned activities. Against the revised target, only $584.7 million was received during the year.

UNHCR continued informal consultations on a unified budget structure and on pledging mechanisms, scheduled to begin in January 2000. It also published its first Global Report (covering the 1998 programme year), providing comprehensive documentation for donors and others on programme implementation, achievement of objectives and financial reporting. Increased contributions from private and corporate sources reached $31.8 million, nearly three times more than in 1998.

UNHCR expenditures by region in 1999 were as follows: Africa, $292.2 million; Asia and the Pacific, $78.2 million; Europe (including the countries of the former Yugoslavia), $437.3 million; the Americas, $26.4 million; Central and South-West Asia, and North Africa and the Middle East, $76.1 million.

For 2000, the Executive Committee approved budgetary requirements of $933.5 million. By 31 December, total needs had increased to $965.2 million through the addition of supplementary programmes for Sierra Leonean refugees and for the situation in East Timor.

In October [A/54/12/Add.1], the Executive Committee approved the revised 1999 General Programmes budget amounting to $413 million and noted the new revised Special Programmes budget of $741.2 million. It also approved the (unified) programmes and budgets for regional operations, global operations and headquarters for 2000 (annual programme budget) amounting to $933.6 million, including an operational reserve of $82.1 million (representing 10 per cent of programmed activities). It requested the High Commissioner, within the resources available, to respond flexibly and efficiently to needs currently indicated under the annual programme budget for 2000 and as outlined in the Global Appeal.

The audited financial statements on voluntary funds administered by UNHCR for the year ending 31 December 1998 [A/54/5/Add.5] showed total expenditures of $974.3 million and total income of $820.1 million, with a reserve balance of $190.6 million.

The Board of Auditors' main findings were: the financial statements and schedules of the voluntary funds generally conformed to UN accounting standards, except for recognition of income for trust funds and disclosure of liabilities for end-of-service benefits; of the $346.4 million advanced to implementing partners during 1998 and recorded as expenditure, financial reports had not been received for $92.8 million as at 31 March 1999, and audit certificates had not been received in respect of $97 million advanced to government partners and $234.5 million advanced to other implementing partners; projects reviewed at headquarters and in the field did not contain work plans or milestones for project implementation; of 2,565 projects implemented between 1994 and 1997, 2,123 (83 per cent) had not been closed as at November 1998; and although action in many of the key areas of Project Delphi was scheduled to have been completed by October 1997, the activity was either at the draft stage or was yet to commence as at April 1999.

The Board recommended that the Administration should: treat advances to implementing partners as accounts receivable at the time they were made and clear the advances to expenditure on receipt of satisfactory financial reports; assess the reasons for non-compliance by governmental and non-governmental implementing partners with the requirement to render audit certificates as prescribed in the sub-agreements and draw up a strategy for securing audit certificates; ensure that work plans were programme-specific and were prepared as an integral part of the project-planning and monitoring process; exercise stricter control of the progress of work of implementing partners in order to ensure achievement of stated objectives; review completed projects to ensure that they were promptly closed; and update plans still to be implemented under Project Delphi.

Reporting on measures taken or proposed to respond to the recommendations of the Board of Auditors [A/AC.96/917/Add.1], UNHCR noted that balances due from partners had been significantly reduced due to intensified efforts to obtain reports and the introduction of measures to withhold further instalments if those reports were not forthcoming. As to work plans, it was pointed out that while the requirement to prepare work plans was integral to the Office, many UNHCR projects covered recurrent activities to assist refugees and thus work plans would be repetitive. Also, in emergency situations, UNHCR needed to respond rapidly and work plans could easily become ineffectual when situations were volatile. Nevertheless, it was projected that a template would be provided for implementation, whenever applicable, in 2000. With regard to Project Delphi, it was recognized that actions foreseen in the 1996 Action Plan were overly ambitious in terms of the estimated time frame.

In an October report [A/54/441], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) noted that, although considerable progress had been made in clearing outstanding balances of cash advances to implementing partners, the problem of timely receipt of audit certificates, especially from government implementing partners, persisted. It expressed concern that UNHCR referred to its influence over government partners as limited. The certification process was an important element of accountability and before a decision was made to pay government auditors, the cost effectiveness of such an option should be determined after all others had been explored. ACABQ recommended that UNHCR formulate the criteria for and conditions under which such assistance should be granted, including guidelines to ensure delivery of services to concerned implementing government partners.

In its general decision on administrative, financial and programme matters [A/54/12/Add.1], the Executive Committee asked to be kept informed of measures taken to address the recommendations and observations raised by ACABQ and the Board of Auditors.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/54/506/Add.1], adopted resolution 54/13 B without vote [agenda item 117].

10. Also requests the Board of Auditors to monitor the implementation of the provisions of section VIII of its resolution 53/221 on consultants and individual contractors.

Standing Committee

The Standing Committee held three meetings in 1999 (9-11 February [A/AC.96/913]; 28 June-1 July [A/AC.96/924]; and 28-29 September [A/AC.96/927]). It considered a number of recurrent items and conducted in-depth reviews of UNHCR programmes and activities in different regions. Africa and Central Asia, South-West Asia, and North Africa and the Middle East were reviewed in February; the Americas, Europe and the former Yugoslavia, in June; and Asia and the Pacific, in September. Updates on overall programme and funding issues, including a proposal for a new UNHCR budget structure, were also discussed. Programme/protection policy issues were reviewed, as were UNHCR's efforts on behalf of refugee women, the Office's emergency preparedness and response capacity, the economic and social impact of massive refugee populations on host developing countries, and issues relating to detention and family protection. In September, the Standing Committee received an update on the independent evaluation of UNHCR emergency preparedness for and response to the Kosovo refugee crisis.

In October [A/54/12/Add.1], the Executive Committee requested UNHCR to include in the documentation on each item of the Standing Committee's 2000 programme of work the relevant audit and recommendations of ACABQ, as well as steps taken to implement those recommendations and related Executive Committee decisions and conclusions. It authorized the Standing Committee to add and delete items, as appropriate, to its inter-sessional programme of work. The items adopted for the 2000 programme of work were: international protection; programme/protection policy; programme and funding; governance; co-ordination; and management, financial, oversight and human resources.

Safety of staff

At its fourteenth meeting (9-11 February) [A/AC.96/913], the Standing Committee discussed the issue of staff safety, including the release of Vincent Cochetel, head of the UNHCR office in the northern Caucasus, after 11 months of captivity. In that context, it noted that training remained an important element of UNHCR's efforts to protect its staff, but the responsibility of States and authorities on the ground was also crucial. The recent entry into force of the 1994 Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 49/59 [YUN 1994, p. 1289], was welcomed.

Refugee protection and assistance

Protection issues

In her annual report covering 1999 [A/55/12], the High Commissioner said that many States, particularly in Africa, continued to honour their humanitarian obligations towards refugees and generously offered protection to those in need. Other countries provided generous financial and material support or established special admission programmes. Despite those positive trends, however, systematic violations of human rights, blatant disregard of humanitarian law, wholesale expulsions of populations and large-scale ethnic cleansing caused significant displacement both internally and across borders in many regions. Denial of access to protection, including through closure of borders, non-admission to territory or to asylum procedures, or through direct or indirect refoulement and other acts that seriously endangered the life and physical security of refugees and asylum-seekers, continued to occur. Large numbers of individuals within UNHCR's mandate were also subject to detention or similar restrictive measures in different parts of the world.

In a July note [A/AC.96/914], the High Commissioner stated that the sheer magnitude of post-cold-war problems, the levels of national and regional insecurity they generated and State reluctance to continue to meet what were seen as the rising financial, political, environmental and social costs of maintaining large refugee populations or receiving a continuous flow, had a negative impact on countries' willingness to provide asylum.

UNHCR had detected a distinct trend in an increasing number of States to move away from a law- or rights-based approach to refugee protection towards more discretionary and ad hoc arrangements that gave greater primacy to domestic concerns rather than to international responsibilities. Some States blamed the present refugee problem on conflicts rather than on persecution as defined in the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees [YUN 1951, p. 520]. Consequently, calls had been made for an alternative refugee protection regime to that Convention. However, the General Assembly and the Executive Committee had continued to emphasize the primacy of both the Convention and its 1967 Protocol [YUN 1967, p. 477] and had confirmed that they formed the international legal basis for protecting refugees.

The High Commissioner pointed out that sovereign discretion as to the granting of protection to refugees was circumscribed by a plethora of human rights and refugee law responsibilities freely entered into. In balancing States' interests against those standards, it was fundamental to define clearly which responsibilities, irrespective of financial and political costs, could not be departed from. UNHCR had organized a series of regional seminars at which proposals were made for improving asylum activities and diminishing related costs. A consistent theme emanating from the discussions was the need to revitalize old and build new partnerships in support of the international refugee protection system. To that end, during 1999, UNHCR continued to promote collaboration on refugee protection through the "Reach Out" consultative process, initiated in 1998 to engage non-State actors in dialogues on the nature and dimensions of current protection challenges. UNHCR hoped that by the end of the century, a global partnership for refugee protection would re-emerge.

The High Commissioner also outlined the situation regarding refugee groups with special protection needs, such as women, children, the elderly, those with HIV/AIDS, those caught in situations of armed conflict and internally displaced persons. Other issues addressed included voluntary repatriation, resettlement and integration, statelessness and temporary protection.

In an October conclusion [A/54/12/Add.1], the Executive Committee reaffirmed that the 1951 Convention and its 1967 Protocol remained the foundation of the international refugee regime. However, it recognized that there might be a need to develop complementary forms of protection. In that context, it encouraged UNHCR to consult with States and relevant actors to examine all aspects of the issue. The Committee called on States to promote and protect the rights of all refugees and expressed concern that refugees with special protection needs, including women and children, were increasingly targets of exploitation, forced military service and various forms of violence. The Committee reiterated that voluntary repatriation, where and when feasible, remained the preferred solution in the majority of refugee situations.

International instruments

In 1999, Georgia and Kazakhstan became parties to the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees [YUN 1951, p. 520] and its 1967 Protocol [YUN 1967, p. 477], bringing the number of States party to one or both instruments to 134. Chad, Latvia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines and Swaziland became parties to the 1954 Convention relating to the Status of Stateless Persons [YUN 1954, p. 416], bringing the number of States party to that instrument to 49. With the accession of Chad and Swaziland, the number of States party to the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness [YUN 1961, p. 533] reached 21.

UNHCR continued its two-year global campaign, launched in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1114], to promote States' accession to the 1951 Convention and its Protocol, as well as to the 1954 and 1961 Conventions.

Promotional activities

UNHCR's promotional activities in 1999 were directed at raising public awareness and strengthening knowledge and understanding of refugee issues, in addition to fostering implementation of international legal standards on behalf of refugees, returnees and other persons of concern. Activities were also undertaken to strengthen linkages between refugee law, human rights law and international humanitarian law aimed at ensuring better measures to protect refugees. Those activities also aimed to promote incorporating relevant international legal standards into national legislation and administrative procedures. UNHCR increased its regional promotional activities and engaged in dialogue with non-governmental organizations (NGOs). The publication of a Field Protection Guide for NGOs was one result of those efforts.

UNHCR continued to strengthen its relationship with human rights bodies, monitoring the work of the Commission on Human Rights, the Commission's Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights and the six UN treaty bodies. It strengthened its monitoring of and collaboration with human rights components of regional bodies such as the Council of Europe, the European Court of Human Rights, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee to reinforce understanding of international refugee protection within those groups.

Assistance measures

The global population of concern to UNHCR increased slightly during 1999, reaching 22.3 million, compared with 21.5 million in 1998. Those assisted included asylum-seekers, refugees, returning refugees in the early stages of their reintegration, internally displaced persons and other populations of concern, mainly victims of conflict. However, the global figure did not reflect the dramatic and massive humanitarian crises that arose during the year. Conflicts in Kosovo, East Timor and Chechnya dominated media reports and absorbed a large portion of UNHCR's resources, while many other humanitarian crises around the world, particularly in Africa, received less attention.

In Kosovo, some 350,000 people were displaced in the first three months of the year, and between March and June, more than 850,000 ethnic Albanians fled to other parts of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) or to neighbouring countries, mainly Albania and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM). The humanitarian challenges temporarily exceeded the capacities of UNHCR and its humanitarian partners. Following the establishment of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (see PART ONE, Chapter V), the majority of the refugees returned to Kosovo almost as swiftly as they had fled.

UNHCR quickly transformed its programme from a refugee relief operation into an equally ambitious repatriation and reintegration effort. The eruption of violence in East Timor following the 30 August referendum on independence (see PART ONE, Chapter IV), provoked the displacement of some 500,000 persons within East Timor and an estimated 200,000 fled to West Timor and other areas of Indonesia. UNHCR responded to their immediate humanitarian needs by providing emergency relief, transportation and petrol. From October, UNHCR conducted a large-scale voluntary repatriation operation. With the outbreak of conflict in October in Chechnya, over 200,000 people fled into neighbouring republics, particularly Ingushetia. UNHCR provided assistance through a UN inter-agency emergency assistance programme (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

Meanwhile, in the absence of international support for other smaller but equally urgent humanitarian disasters, situations of fragile peace often deteriorated into renewed conflict and unresolved regional wars led to the outbreak of smaller sub-conflicts, precipitating further population displacements. The persistence of those situations underscored that stabilization and post-conflict recovery were essential if the consequences of conflicts were to be adequately addressed. UNHCR encouraged the international community to adopt broader, regionally based peace-building approaches to assist regions and countries aspiring to emerge from the spiral of conflict, poverty and human displacement. However, the gap between humanitarian and reconstruction activities continued to be very wide, which UNHCR sought to narrow both within the context of the Brookings process and the Inter-Agency Standing Committee. It also reviewed its responsibility to internally displaced persons, adopting a policy of preparedness to respond to calls by the international community to assist them, for example in Angola.

In 1999, UNHCR received over $900 million in voluntary contributions towards its General and Special Programmes. Assistance included emergency preparedness, response and assistance; care and maintenance; voluntary repatriation; local settlement; and resettlement. Following the emergency phase of an operation, the basic needs of refugees were covered by care and maintenance activities, which provided essential services such as the provision of food, household goods and cooking/heating materials; shelter; construction and maintenance of drinking water sources; and construction and operation of health and education facilities, among others.

Voluntary repatriation remained the preferred solution to refugee problems, but, unless convinced that refugees could return to their countries of origin in reasonable safety, UNHCR did not actively promote return. However, the Office did organize and facilitate a number of existing spontaneous return movements after ensuring that the legal framework existed to protect the rights and interests of returnees. It also facilitated reintegration of those who returned. Resettlement to third countries was promoted when no other durable solution was feasible.

Refugees and the environment

In 1999, responding to the need for improved monitoring of its environmental activities, UNHCR launched a three-year project to develop appropriate methods for conducting environmental assessments and monitoring in different phases of refugee operations and in varying environmental situations. The project, which used a combination of practical and sophisticated tools, ranging from simple participatory appraisals to remote sensing, focused primarily on Guinea and Uganda, while preliminary outputs were scheduled to be extensively tested in other countries. Expected outputs were a tool kit for UNHCR staff and implementing agencies, functional databases and a specially designed training component. With input from training events and feedback from the field, a training manual, Environmental Management within Refugee Operations, was revised.

Tailor-made demonstration projects, patterned after the 1996 Environmental Guidelines [YUN 1996, p. 1108], were designed and supported in Afghanistan (environmental protection and management), Djibouti (gender and environment), Liberia (strengthening environmental issues), the Sudan (community integration) and Zimbabwe (permaculture). Other projects provided essential support to natural resource management initiatives, forest-related activities, promotion of energy-saving devices and practices, environmental education, data collection and analysis, and environmental mapping.

Refugee women

During 1999, UNHCR continued to implement a targeted strategy for the advancement of refugee women and gender mainstreaming. A gender equality perspective was integrated in several key training packages, field guidelines and checklists, and the new project description format that specifically required field staff to indicate how each project would address the particular needs and rights of refugee women was introduced. Four senior regional advisers for refugee women were appointed to coordinate implementation of region-specific strategies. In Africa, those activities included a project targeting five sub-Saharan countries to prevent and respond to sexual and gender-based violence, reproductive rights-awareness training campaigns to eliminate harmful traditional practices, and gender-sensitive mine-awareness training.

In Eastern Europe and Central Asia, strategic frameworks for gender mainstreaming and gender-sensitive performance indicators were developed. In addition, income-generation projects for urban refugee women and rights-awareness seminars on issues such as domestic violence and human rights were held. In Mexico, migratory documents were provided to both female and male refugees and legislative reforms regarding land ownership by women refugees were adopted. In the Middle East, health programmes for women, education for girls, rights-awareness training and microcredit schemes for women remained priorities.

Promotion of gender-sensitive asylum procedures in countries of asylum included training and support to Governments and NGOs.

In October [A/54/12/Add.1], the Executive Committee encouraged States, UNHCR and other concerned actors to promote wider acceptance and inclusion in their protection criteria of the notion that persecution could be gender-related or effected through sexual violence. It encouraged UNHCR and other actors to develop, promote and implement guidelines, codes of conduct and training programmes on gender-related issues.

Refugee children and adolescents

UNHCR's activities relating to refugee children and adolescents included an increasingly concerted follow-up to the UN study on the impact of armed conflict on children (the Machel Study) [YUN 1996, p. 663], which improved its response in particular areas of concern. The Office made progress in the Action for the Rights of Children training and capacity-building project, a collaborative effort initiated in 1997 by UNHCR and the Save the Children Alliance. In 1999, it was extended to include the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights. Child rights-based performance objectives for all phases of its operations in complex emergencies, with a fundamental requirement that girls and boys benefited equally from all programmes, were established, as were plans of action on protection and assistance measures at the country level, sexual exploitation and violence, underage military recruitment, education, and unaccompanied minors and adolescents.

Inter-agency coordination and cooperation with NGOs was actively pursued through initiatives, including the joint UNHCR and Save the Children Alliance Separated Children in Europe programme, UNHCR's participation in forums such as the Inter-Agency Group on Separated Children and through the Office's support for a study on the untapped potential of adolescents affected by armed conflict, undertaken by the Women's Commission for Refugee Women and Children. Four regional policy officers for refugee children oversaw UNHCR's protection and programming on behalf of refugee children and adolescents, and a senior regional policy officer was appointed in September to oversee the work of the Separated Children in Europe programme.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 53/122 [YUN 1998, p. 1117], the Secretary-General submitted a September report on assistance to unaccompanied refugee minors [A/54/285], defined as those who were separated from both parents and were not being cared for by a legally responsible adult. The report reviewed new developments in family tracing and reunification, the Separated Children in Europe programme, the Action for the Rights of Children project, the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 560], action on behalf of internally displaced children and child soldiers, and efforts to strengthen UNHCR's field network. It also addressed issues of concern, such as the girl child (see p. 1090) and adoption of separated children.

The Secretary-General noted that a major outstanding challenge concerned the criteria for selecting foster families and systematic follow-up, for which resources were often limited. Although community-based strategies went some way in addressing the issues, separated children, particularly girls, remained at risk for some form of exploitation. Until civilians in general were protected from the impact of warfare or from serious human rights violations, increasing numbers of children would continue to be exposed to the additional trauma and danger of separation. Member States were urged to adhere to and promote the 1989 Convention.

Successful efforts by the United Nations and other agencies and organizations to assist unaccompanied refugee minors included the reunification of 62,000 children with their families in Rwanda by UNHCR, together with UNICEF and ICRC. However, 5,000 still remained in centres, many of whom were small children unable to give any information. The joint UNHCR/UNICEF Liberian Children's Initiative had been instrumental in reuniting 78 children with their families. In 1999, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for children and armed conflict (see p. 674) proposed a "neighbourhood initiative", which aimed to obtain commitments from Governments and insurgency groups to protect children from cross-border threats and abuse. Three such neighbourhoods, in West Africa, East Africa and Kosovo, were proposed for implementation of the initiative. The Special Representative had also been active in seeking a solution to the problem of the abduction of children from northern Uganda to southern Sudan by members of an armed group, the Lord's Resistance Army. A small number of those children were released and their return to their families in Uganda was then facilitated by UNHCR, in coordination with UNICEF and local NGOs. Inter-agency cooperation involving UNHCR, ICRC and UNICEF also played an important role in tracing efforts during the Kosovo emergency. However, there were fewer child-family separations there than in other recent refugee crises. By early August, only 33 cases were pending solution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/600], adopted resolution 54/145 without vote [agenda item 111].

Assistance to unaccompanied refugee minors

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/172 of 23 December 1994, 50/150 of 21 December 1995, 51/73 of 12 December 1996, 52/105 of 12 December 1997 and 53/122 of 9 December 1998,

Aware of the fact that the majority of refugees are children and women,

Bearing in mind that unaccompanied refugee minors are among the most vulnerable refugees and the most at risk of neglect, violence, forced military recruitment, sexual assault and other abuses and therefore require special assistance and care,

Mindful of the fact that the ultimate solution to the plight of unaccompanied refugee minors is their return to and reunification with their families,

Noting the revised Guidelines on Refugee Children issued by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in May 1994 and the development of an emergency kit to facilitate coordination and enhance the quality of responses to the needs of unaccompanied minors by the Office of the High Commissioner, the United Nations Children's Fund and non-governmental organizations,

Noting with appreciation the efforts of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Children's Fund in the identification and tracing of unaccompanied refugee minors, and welcoming their efforts in reunifying families of refugees,

Welcoming the efforts exerted by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to reunite refugees with their families,

Noting the efforts of the High Commissioner to ensure the protection of and assistance to refugees, including children and unaccompanied minors, and that further enhanced efforts need to be exerted to this effect,

Recalling the provisions of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Also takes note of the report of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict;

3. Expresses its deep concern at the continued plight of unaccompanied refugee minors, and emphasizes once again the urgent need for their early identification and for timely, detailed and accurate information on their number and whereabouts;

4. Stresses the importance of providing adequate resources for programmes of identification and tracing of unaccompanied refugee minors;

5. Calls upon the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, in cooperation with other relevant United Nations bodies, to incorporate into its programmes policies that aim at preventing the separation of refugee families, conscious of the importance of family unity;

6. Calls upon all Governments, the Secretary-General, the Office of the High Commissioner, all United Nations organizations, other international organizations and non-governmental organizations concerned to exert the maximum effort to assist and protect refugee minors and to expedite the return to and reunification with their families of unaccompanied refugee minors;

7. Urges the Office of the High Commissioner, all United Nations organizations, other international organizations and non-governmental organizations concerned to take appropriate steps to mobilize resources commensurate with the needs and interests of unaccompanied refugee minors and for their reunification with their families;

8. Calls upon all States and other parties to armed conflict to respect international humanitarian law, and, in this regard, calls upon States parties to respect fully the provisions of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and related instruments, while bearing in mind resolution 2 adopted at the twenty-sixth International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, held at Geneva in December 1995, and to respect the provisions of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which accord children affected by armed conflict special protection and treatment;

9. Condemns all acts of exploitation of unaccompanied refugee minors, including their use as soldiers or human shields in armed conflict and their forced recruitment into military forces, and any other acts that endanger their safety and personal security;

10. Calls upon the Secretary-General, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, the United Nations Children's Fund, other United Nations organizations and other international organizations to mobilize adequate assistance to unaccompanied refugee minors in the areas of relief, education, health and psychological rehabilitation;

11. Encourages the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in his efforts to raise awareness worldwide and to mobilize official and public opinion for the protection of children affected by armed conflict, including refugee minors;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution and to give special attention to the girl-child refugee in his report.

Elderly refugees

With the observance of the International Year of Older Persons in 1999 (see PART THREE, Chapter XI), UNHCR was provided with an opportunity to re-examine its approaches to the mental and physical needs of elderly refugees and other older persons of concern to the Office. A range of materials featuring the situation of older refugees was published, and the Office, along with the Humanitarian Office of the European Community, jointly commissioned a study on the elderly in refugee emergencies, which covered all sectors, from health to shelter. UNHCR also formulated a policy on older refugees.

In a decision on special protection needs adopted in October [A/54/12/Add.1], the Executive Committee called on States, UNHCR and other concerned actors, taking into account that elderly refugees were particularly affected by social disintegration, chronic dependency and other adverse aspects of the refugee condition, to make renewed efforts to ensure that the rights, needs and dignity of elderly refugees were fully respected and addressed through appropriate programme activities.

Regional activities

Africa

Report of Secretary-General. In a September report on assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa [A/54/414], prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 53/126 [YUN 1998, p. 1119], the Secretary-General stated that some 15 African countries were currently embroiled in armed conflict (see PART ONE, Chapter II) and there were some 6 million persons of concern to UNHCR on the continent, namely refugees, internally displaced persons and returnees. The main refugee groups on the continent comprised over half a million Sierra Leoneans in West Africa, 280,000 Burundians in the United Republic of Tanzania and 180,000 Congolese who had fled from the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) to various countries. Movements also took place from the Republic of the Congo to the DRC and Gabon. Because of security problems in major returnee areas, the Liberian repatriation programme was interrupted and the planned repatriation of 250,000 people was put on hold.

Referring to older, unresolved conflict situations in Africa, the report noted that more than 370,000 Sudanese were still refugees in Ethiopia and Uganda; 165,000 Saharawi refugees were still in camps in Algeria and other countries; and there were 150,000 Angolan refugees, mostly in the DRC. In Angola and the Sudan, as well as in the war-torn areas on the border between Eritrea and Ethiopia, were tens of thousands of internally displaced people. In the DRC, UNHCR was providing assistance to 700,000 displaced persons in accessible areas within the country, while another 180,000 refugees were being assisted in Burundi, the Central African Republic, Rwanda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia. In Liberia, 280,000 refugees had returned home and it was hoped that the remaining quarter of a million would be repatriated by mid-2000.

The situation in the Great Lakes region in 1999 continued to be volatile, engendering new waves of population movements. Consequently, with little prospect of rapid solutions for the resulting groups of refugees, UNHCR continued to provide care and maintenance assistance. Meanwhile, return movements had dwindled in Burundi because the optimism that accompanied the lifting of sanctions in January and improved relations with the United Republic of Tanzania gave way to disappointment as insecurity spread to provinces bordering Tanzania. Following a tripartite agreement signed in April by UNHCR with the Governments of the Republic of the Congo and the DRC, repatriation of refugees who had entered the DRC from the Republic during the conflict there was underway.

During 1999, countries in West Africa were hosting 2.1 million refugees and other persons of concern to UNHCR. Political situations in some parts of the area remained unstable, notably in Liberia where an armed confrontation had a destabilizing effect, leading to additional displacements and halting returns to Lofa county. However, repatriation to other counties continued. In Cote d'Ivoire and Guinea, UNHCR continued to protect and assist large numbers of refugees from Liberia, Sierra Leone and other countries; 350,000 Sierra Leoneans were residing in two provinces of Guinea alone. In Sierra Leone, the signing of the Lome Peace Agreement (see PART ONE, Chapter II) opened prospects for the gradual return of hundreds of thousands of refugees and displaced persons. Another positive development was the improved situation in Guinea-Bissau as of May, when most of the over 350,000 internally displaced persons had returned to their homes. Elsewhere, notably in the Central African Republic, Chad and Gabon, the year witnessed new refugee influxes resulting from conflict in the Republic of the Congo, the DRC and the Sudan.

In the East and Horn of Africa, the resumption of hostilities between Eritrea and Ethiopia caused population displacements in both countries and had repercussions on internal conflicts in Somalia, leading to new hostilities there. OAU mediation efforts revived hopes of greater stability and resumption of voluntary repatriation movements. The main groups concerned were Eritreans (mainly in the Sudan) and Somalis (with the largest groups in Ethiopia and Kenya).

Nearly 300,000 refugees, returnees and asylum-seekers were living in countries in the southern Africa region. In general, they were persons of rural background residing in villages and settlements, the largest single group being Angolans located mainly in Zambia (150,000). Also in Zambia, a new refugee emergency occurred with the arrival of some 25,000 Congolese refugees as of mid-June. In Botswana, there was an influx of Namibians from the Caprivi region.

There was little change in the refugee situation in North Africa, where UNHCR continued to provide basic care and assistance to refugees in countries of the region, pending voluntary repatriation and other long-term solutions. The slow process of implementing the UN settlement plan in Western Sahara (see PART ONE, Chapter II) caused further delays in UNHCR preparatory activities for repatriating Saharawi refugees from Algeria and Mauritania.

The Secretary-General stated that inter-agency cooperation had been of particular note in the specific areas of security, sustainable return, access to populations of concern, coordination of resources and unaccompanied minors. There had also been significant UNHCR cooperation with OAU and the Southern African Development Community.

The Secretary-General concluded that the human displacement problems in Africa were a source of concern for the United Nations, requiring coordinated action by UNHCR and other agencies. That was particularly true at a time when major emergencies elsewhere had drawn the world's attention and made heavy claims on available resources. Despite the serious situation in Africa, there had been some encouraging signs in 1999, such as the ceasefire agreements in the DRC and Sierra Leone, and the Framework Agreement in the dispute between Eritrea and Ethiopia (see PART ONE, Chapter II). However, the lasting success of such agreements, as well as solutions in other conflict situations that caused population movements, would require a renewed commitment by African Governments to take their future, and the future of their peoples, more resolutely into their own hands. The determination that lasting solutions to problems, including refugee problems, would only come through negotiations rather than force, was a fundamental precondition for international support. The international community, for its part, had to do all in its power to back such efforts.

Report of High Commissioner. In her annual report covering 1999 [A/55/12], the High Commissioner stated that a number of management changes had taken place in the structure of the UNHCR Africa Bureau that had resulted in the creation of three regional directorates based in Abidjan (Cote d'Ivoire), Addis Ababa (Ethiopia) and Pretoria (South Africa). By subregion, there were: 3.2 million persons of concern to UNHCR in Central and West Africa, who received $85 million in agency expenditures (Guinea continued to host by far the largest refugee population in the area; care and assistance was provided to more than half a million refugees there); 2.5 million of concern in the East and Horn of Africa and the Great Lakes region, who received $186 million; and 311,160 of concern in southern Africa, who received $21 million.

Communication. By a 13 December letter [A/54/682], Algeria transmitted the Khartoum Declaration and the Recommendations on Refugees, Returnees and Internally Displaced Persons in Africa, adopted by OAU at its December 1998 ministerial meeting.

Central African countries

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/1 N [YUN 1998, p. 1122], the Secretary-General submitted a September report on special assistance to Central and East African countries receiving refugees, returnees and displaced persons [A/54/421]. The report made particular reference to women and children, security access to populations in need and the environment. It also focused on the activities undertaken in areas where large numbers of refugees had repatriated. Activities consisted of providing emergency relief and assistance to thousands of refugees fleeing conflicts in the region and were undertaken in Burundi, the Central African Republic, the DRC, Gabon, Kenya, the Republic of the Congo, Rwanda, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia. UNHCR, in collaboration with other UN agencies including WFP, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), UNICEF, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the United Nations Population Fund and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), together with international and local NGOs, also strove to lessen the political, economic and social impact of forced population movements.

Lack of funding remained a concern, said the Secretary-General, and the multiplication of smaller conflicts, with movements of refugees and displaced persons affecting a number of countries, posed particular challenges.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/600], adopted resolution 54/147 without vote [agenda item 111].

Assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/126 of 9 December 1998,

Recalling also the provisions of its resolution 2312(XXII) of 14 December 1967, by which it adopted the Declaration on Territorial Asylum,

Recalling further the Organization of African Unity Convention governing the specific aspects of refugee problems in Africa of 1969 and the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights,

Recalling the Khartoum Declaration and the Recommendations on Refugees, Returnees and Internally Displaced Persons in Africa adopted by the Organization of African Unity at the ministerial meeting held at Khartoum on 13 and 14 December 1998,

Welcoming decision CM/Dec.459(LXX) on the situation of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its seventieth ordinary session, held at Algiers from 8 to 10 July 1999,

Commending the First Ministerial Conference on Human Rights in Africa of the Organization of African Unity, held at Grand-Baie, Mauritius, from 12 to 16 April 1999, and welcoming the attention paid to issues relevant to refugees and displaced persons in the Declaration and Plan of Action adopted by the Conference,

Recognizing the contributions made by African States to the development of regional standards for the protection of refugees and returnees, and noting with appreciation that countries of asylum are hosting refugees in a humanitarian spirit and in a spirit of African solidarity and brotherhood,

Recognizing also the need for States to address resolutely the root causes of forced displacement and to create conditions that facilitate durable solutions for refugees and displaced persons, and stressing in this regard the need for States to foster peace, stability and prosperity throughout the African continent,

Convinced of the need to strengthen the capacity of States to provide assistance and protection for refugees, returnees and displaced persons and of the need for the international community, within the context of burden-sharing, to increase its material, financial and technical assistance to the countries affected by refugees, returnees and displaced persons,

Acknowledging with appreciation that some assistance is already rendered by the international community to refugees, returnees and displaced persons and host countries in Africa,

Noting with great concern that, despite all the efforts deployed so far by the United Nations, the Organization of African Unity and others, the situation of refugees and displaced persons in Africa, especially in the West African and Great Lakes regions and in the Horn of Africa, remains precarious,

Stressing that the provision of relief and assistance to African refugees by the international community should be on an equitable, non-discriminatory basis,

Considering that, among refugees, returnees and internally displaced persons, women and children are the majority of the population affected by conflict and bear the brunt of atrocities and other consequences of conflict,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General and of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

2. Notes with concern that the declining socio-economic situation, compounded by political instability, internal strife, human rights violations and natural disasters, has led to increased numbers of refugees and displaced persons in some countries of Africa, and remains particularly concerned about the impact of large-scale refugee populations on the security, socio-economic situation and environment of countries of asylum;

3. Notes the commemoration in 1999 of the thirtieth anniversary of the adoption of the Organization of African Unity Convention governing the specific aspects of refugee problems in Africa of 1969, appeals to African States that have not yet done so to accede to the Convention, and calls upon States parties to the Convention to reaffirm their commitment to its ideals and to respect and observe its provisions;

4. Also notes the commemoration in 1999 of the fiftieth anniversary of the signature of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and, bearing in mind that armed conflict is one of the principal causes of forced displacement in Africa, calls upon States and other parties to armed conflict to observe scrupulously the letter and spirit of international humanitarian law;

5. Notes the need for States to address the root causes of forced displacement in Africa, and calls upon African States, the international community and relevant United Nations organizations to take concrete action to meet the needs of refugees, returnees and displaced persons for protection and assistance and to contribute generously to national projects and programmes aimed at alleviating their plight;

6. Also notes the link, inter alia, between human rights violations, poverty, natural disasters and environmental degradation and population displacement, and calls for redoubled and concerted efforts by States, in collaboration with the Organization of African Unity, to promote and protect human rights for all and to address these problems;

7. Encourages the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to continue to cooperate with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights, within their respective mandates, in the promotion and protection of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa;

8. Notes with appreciation the positive outcome of all mediation and conflict resolution efforts carried out by African States, the Organization of African Unity and subregional organizations, as well as the establishment of regional mechanisms for conflict prevention and resolution, and urges all relevant parties to address the humanitarian consequences of conflicts;

9. Expresses its appreciation and strong support for those African Governments and local populations that, in spite of the general deterioration of socio-economic and environmental conditions and overstretched national resources, continue to accept the additional burden imposed upon them by increasing numbers of refugees and displaced persons, in compliance with the relevant principles of asylum;

10. Expresses its gratitude to the international community and to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for the humanitarian assistance they have continued to render to refugees and displaced persons and to countries of asylum;

11. Expresses its concern about instances in which the fundamental principle of asylum is jeopardized by unlawful expulsion or refoulement or by threats to the life, physical security, integrity, dignity and well-being of refugees;

12. Calls upon States, in cooperation with international organizations, within their mandates, to take all necessary measures to ensure respect for the principles of refugee protection and, in particular, to ensure that the civilian and humanitarian nature of refugee camps is not compromised by the presence or the activities of armed elements;

13. Urges States and all other actors to take all necessary measures to protect activities related to humanitarian assistance, to prevent attacks on and kidnapping of national and international humanitarian workers and to ensure their safety and security, and requests organizations and aid workers to abide by the national laws and regulations of the countries in which they operate;

14. Calls upon the Office of the High Commissioner, the Organization of African Unity, subregional organizations and all African States, in conjunction with United Nations agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the international community, to strengthen and revitalize existing partnerships and forge new ones in support of the international refugee protection system;

15. Calls upon the Office of the High Commissioner, the international community and other concerned entities to intensify their support to African Governments through appropriate capacity-building activities, including training of relevant officers, disseminating information about refugee instruments and principles, providing financial, technical and advisory services to accelerate the enactment or amendment and implementation of legislation relating to refugees, strengthening emergency response and enhancing capacities for the coordination of humanitarian activities;

16. Reaffirms the right of return and also the principle of voluntary repatriation, appeals to countries of origin and countries of asylum to create conditions that are conducive to voluntary repatriation, and recognizes that, while voluntary repatriation remains the pre-eminent solution, local integration and third-country resettlement, as appropriate, are also viable options for dealing with the situation of African refugees who, owing to prevailing circumstances in their respective countries of origin, are unable to return home;

17. Notes with satisfaction the voluntary return of millions of refugees to their homelands following the successful repatriation and reintegration operations carried out by the Office of the High Commissioner, with the cooperation and collaboration of countries hosting refugees and countries of origin, and looks forward to other programmes to assist the voluntary repatriation and reintegration of all refugees in Africa;

18. Reiterates that the Plan of Action adopted by the Regional Conference on Assistance to Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in the Great Lakes Region, held at Bujumbura from 15 to 17 February 1995, as endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 50/149 of 21 December 1995, continues to be a viable framework for the resolution of the refugee and humanitarian problems in that region;

19. Appeals to the international community to respond positively, in the spirit of solidarity and burden-sharing, to the third-country resettlement requests of African refugees, and notes with appreciation that some African countries have offered resettlement places for refugees;

20. Welcomes the programmes carried out by the Office of the High Commissioner with host Governments, the United Nations, non-governmental organizations and the international community to address the environmental impact of refugee populations;

21. Calls upon the international donor community to provide material and financial assistance for the implementation of programmes intended for the rehabilitation of the environment and infrastructure affected by refugees in countries of asylum;

22. Expresses its concern about the long stay of refugees in certain African countries, and calls upon the Office of the High Commissioner to keep its programmes under review, in conformity with its mandate in the host countries, taking into account the increasing needs of refugees;

23. Emphasizes the need for the Office of the High Commissioner to collate statistics, on a regular basis, on the number of refugees living outside refugee camps in certain African countries, with a view to evaluating and addressing the needs of those refugees;

24. Urges the international community, in a spirit of international solidarity and burden-sharing, to continue to fund generously the refugee programmes of the Office of the High Commissioner and, taking into account the substantially increased needs of programmes in Africa, to ensure that Africa receives a fair and equitable share of the resources designated for refugees;

25. Requests all Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to pay particular attention to meeting the special needs of refugee women and children and displaced persons, including those with special protection needs;

26. Calls upon States and the Office of the High Commissioner to make renewed efforts to ensure that the rights, needs and dignity of elderly refugees are fully respected and addressed through appropriate programme activities;

27. Expresses grave concern about the plight of internally displaced persons in Africa, calls upon States to take concrete action to pre-empt internal displacement and to meet the protection and assistance needs of internally displaced persons, takes note in this regard of the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement, and urges the international community, led by relevant United Nations organizations, to contribute generously to national projects and programmes aimed at alleviating the plight of internally displaced persons;

28. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report on the situation of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session, taking fully into account the efforts expended by countries of asylum, under the item entitled "Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, questions relating to refugees, returnees and displaced persons and humanitarian questions", and to present an oral report to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2000.

The Americas

In 1999, deterioration of the conflict in Colombia led to the massive forced displacement of almost 300,000 persons, as well as cross-border movements into Panama and Venezuela. Ecuador and Venezuela were both hosting large populations of undocumented Colombians who preferred to remain anonymous. Those influxes triggered a shift in the Office's humanitarian interventions from advocacy and promotional activities to technical advice and legal expertise for adopting or amending national legislation, capacity-building and emergency response at the national and local levels. Consequently, UNHCR established a liaison office in Ecuador and a field presence on Venezuela's common border with Colombia.

In southern South America, about 30 per cent of refugee needs were met by civil society institutions in Argentina and Brazil and, in Argentina, the foundation Argentina con ACNUR was established in December to support UNHCR activities worldwide.

The last collective return of Guatemalan refugees in July signalled the closure of UNHCR's repatriation programme there. Some 43,000 refugees had benefited from the programme since 1992. UNHCR intensified its efforts to involve returnees and their communities in government and civil society and advocated for their inclusion in national and regional plans. The migratory stabilization plan for 20,000 Guatemalan refugees in south-eastern Mexico continued to be implemented by the Government of Mexico, UNHCR and NGOs. In Chiapas, 96 per cent of the refugee population had received their migratory documents and remaining refugees in Mexico requesting naturalization were expected to benefit from UNHCR's assistance towards self-sufficiency. UNHCR facilitated acquisition of residency permits and naturalization for refugees in all countries of the sub-continent, and Belize and Costa Rica offered amnesty programmes for illegal aliens who had arrived in those countries during the Central American conflict in the 1980s.

In Canada and the United States, UNHCR continued to advocate for the application of international protection principles, promoting resettlement as a durable solution and reinforcing public awareness of and support for refugees and the Office's humanitarian programmes. In the Caribbean, UNHCR focused on building the foundation for refugee protection.

Asia and the Pacific and the Arab States

South Asia

As a result of procedural difficulties in the clearance by the Myanmar authorities of those willing to repatriate, only 1,500 Muslim refugees returned from camps in Bangladesh to Myanmar in 1999 under the voluntary repatriation programme, which had resumed in November 1998. UNHCR urged both Governments to expedite returns. Following discussions with UNHCR, Bangladesh agreed to introduce refugee self-help activities within camps for those unable or unwilling to return in the near future. UNHCR also facilitated the establishment of a five-year UN integrated development plan in Myanmar, which was expected to allow development agencies to take over UNHCR-funded activities in northern Rakhine State by the end of 2000. As a precursor, FAO, UNICEF and the United Nations Office for Project Services were engaged as implementing partners for UNHCR activities.

Bilateral talks between Bhutan and Nepal on the 97,000 refugees in camps in Nepal had made slow progress during the year. In Sri Lanka, the continuation of armed conflict between the Sri Lankan authorities and the separatist Liberation Tigers of Tamil Ealam sparked further population displacements in the northern Vanni region where an estimated 600,000 persons were displaced. UNHCR attempted to facilitate access to national protection for persons in the region affected by the conflict; an open relief centre, maintained with the Office's support, provided an area of relative safety. An estimated 70,000 Sri Lankan refugees also remained in camps in India during 1999. UNHCR's efforts to promote self-reliance among 16,000 urban refugees in India, mainly from Afghanistan, were impeded by difficulties in issuing and renewing residential permits by the Indian authorities due to security considerations.

East Asia and the Pacific

As planned, UNHCR phased out its local settlement assistance to Vietnamese refugees in China at the end of 1999, maintaining, however, a revolving credit scheme, initiated in 1994, through which refugees achieved self-reliance and which allowed them and host communities to continue to benefit from employment opportunities created under the scheme. In July and August, tripartite consultations between the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Thailand and UNHCR led to the organized return of the remaining 1,160 Lao in Thailand who did not meet internationally recognized refugee criteria, marking the end of the former Comprehensive Plan of Action for Indo-Chinese Refugees in Thailand. Returnee reintegration and monitoring assistance were scheduled to continue in Laos throughout 2000, and UNHCR was expected to seek resettlement solutions for the remaining 116 refugees in the Ban Napho camp.

In May, UNHCR completed registering almost 98,000 refugees, mainly of Karen and Karenni origin from Myanmar, located in 11 camps along the border between Thailand and Myanmar. The Office also continued to cooperate actively with the Thai Government on the admission of new arrivals to the camps. Despite several security incidents during the year, Thailand reiterated its policy of providing temporary asylum to Myanmar refugees. In addition, the repatriation of the remaining 47,000 Cambodian refugees in camps in Thailand was completed in March, and UNHCR continued to monitor protection of returnees in Cambodia and to promote their reintegration through community-based projects.

Timor

The eruption of violence in East Timor following the August referendum on independence (see PART ONE, Chapter IV) provoked the displacement of 75 per cent of the population, about 500,000 inside East Timor and an estimated 200,000 to West Timor and other areas of Indonesia. There was also large-scale destruction of private housing, public buildings and utilities. UNHCR responded to immediate humanitarian needs by providing emergency relief, transportation and petrol for the displaced persons and refugees. In October, the Office launched a large-scale voluntary repatriation operation and concluded a memorandum of understanding with Indonesia, which established a framework for protecting refugees and affirmed the voluntary nature of the repatriation programme to East Timor. Nevertheless, access to refugees in West Timor remained problematic and it was difficult to determine how many were located there.

UNHCR was neither deterred by the difficulties, nor by threats and intimidation by militias, and continued its activities in West Timor, including mass information campaigns to promote repatriation.

Central Asia, South-West Asia, North Africa and the Middle East

Despite the lack of political settlement and general peace in Afghanistan, more than 160,000 Afghan refugees returned home in 1999, but a large majority of the 2.6 million Afghan refugees remaining in Pakistan and Iran were unlikely to return to Afghanistan in the near future. UNHCR's main operation in Central Asia was the repatriation of 4,670 Tajik refugees from Turkmenistan and Kyrgyzstan. In North Africa, pending implementation of a durable solution for the Saharan refugees, UNHCR continued its protection role and provided care and maintenance assistance.

UNHCR protected and assisted some 132,000 refugees in the Middle East in 1999. Most lived in urban settings, although there were also camp-based refugee populations in Iraq, Saudi Arabia and the Syrian Arab Republic. During the year, UNHCR attempted to strengthen its refugee status determination and resettlement processing capacities in the region, which resulted in enhanced protection, more opportunities for durable solutions for eligible refugees and reduced frequency of irregular movements of asylum-seekers in the region. As a result, almost 5,500 refugees were resettled in third countries from the Middle East and 17,000 returned home.

Europe

South-Eastern Europe

The conflict in the Kosovo province of FRY led to renewed displacement and suffering on a massive scale in 1999. Some 350,000 people had already been displaced when, on 24 March, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) launched airstrikes against FRY (see PART ONE, Chapter V) and almost 1 million Kosovo Albanians fled their homes. Between March and June alone, more than 850,000 ethnic Albanians fled to other parts of FRY or to neighbouring countries, mainly to Albania and FYROM.

Despite the difficulties of one of the most complex and intensely political refugee emergencies in history, the humanitarian operation achieved its objective, namely to ensure the security and meet the immediate life-sustaining needs of the refugees. However, the humanitarian challenges posed by the size of the crisis initially overwhelmed the response capacity of the host Governments and temporarily exceeded the capacities of UNHCR and its humanitarian partners.

In addition to the relief efforts of civilian agencies, NATO's rapid logistical support proved vital to ensure refugee admission and to bring the humanitarian crisis under control. Other important factors included Albania's liberal asylum policy; the hospitality extended by host families in Albania, FYROM and Montenegro; and international burden-sharing through a humanitarian evacuation programme under which some 90,000 refugees were assisted in moving temporarily from FYROM to third countries.

Following the establishment of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo, the majority of the recently displaced refugees returned to Kosovo, almost as swiftly and dramatically as they had fled. UNHCR quickly transformed its programme from a refugee relief operation into an equally ambitious repatriation and reintegration effort, including a major emergency shelter programme for the hundreds of thousands who returned before the winter. Despite logistical difficulties, including bottlenecks at the border between FYROM and Kosovo, a humanitarian crisis during the winter was avoided.

Regrettably, the massive return of refugees to Kosovo resulted in an exodus of hundreds of thousands of non-Albanians, mainly to other parts of FRY, and there was a climate of violence and impunity, as well as widespread discrimination and intimidation directed against non-Albanians. That situation remained a major concern for all humanitarian agencies in Kosovo.

A critical protection issue for UNHCR in western Europe in 1999 was the outflow of thousands of refugees from Kosovo. In June alone, nearly 20,000 Kosovars arrived spontaneously to seek asylum. Although western European Governments generally responded positively and generously to the Kosovo crisis, UNHCR followed with concern the legislative, judicial and policy developments that had an impact on asylum possibilities. At the national level and at the level of the EU, policy directions continued to focus on restrictive practices designed to control migration.

Although 1999 was the fourth year of peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in Croatia, and despite sustained efforts to promote return and reconciliation, the number of refugees and internally displaced persons in and from the region remained high. In the second half of the year, some encouraging progress was achieved. In Bosnia and Herzegovina, there was a steady increase of minority returns to areas considered to be particularly difficult. Returns to and within Croatia numbered some 100,000. UNHCR played a catalytic role in establishing special return projects for both countries.

In resolution 1239(1999) of 14 May (see PART ONE, Chapter V), the Security Council invited UNHCR and other international humanitarian relief organizations to extend assistance to the internally displaced persons in Kosovo, the Republic of Montenegro and other parts of FRY.

Eastern Europe

The situation around Chechnya in the Russian Federation deteriorated in the second half of 1999, causing the displacement of more than 200,000 persons who fled into neighbouring republics, particularly Ingushetia. While several thousand Chechens returned home to parts of Chechnya under Russian control, many left again due to ongoing insecurity, the destruction of their homes and the poor state of the infrastructure. UNHCR provided assistance to approximately 180,000 persons in Ingushetia through a UN inter-agency emergency assistance programme.

The UNHCR assistance programme in Armenia increasingly focused on promoting naturalization of ethnic Armenian refugees, adopting relevant legislation and building local implementation capacity to reduce statelessness and facilitate integration of refugees into Armenian society. UNHCR also assisted in drafting a national refugee law, which was passed by the Armenian Parliament in March.

In Azerbaijan, UNHCR placed stronger emphasis on integration of refugees and internally displaced persons, which entailed closer inter-agency cooperation with the World Bank, UNDP and government agencies in efforts to rehabilitate territories of the country damaged by war. Azerbaijan passed a new law on refugees in May and UNHCR assisted the Government with developing implementation procedures.

The conflict in Georgia over the status of Abkhazia remained unresolved, but the situation in South Ossetia showed some signs of progress. UNHCR provided limited material assistance to 7,000 refugees who had fled to Georgia as a result of the Chechnya conflict.

Conference on refugees of CIS countries and neighbouring States

Report of Secretary-General. In an August report [A/54/286] submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 53/123 [YUN 1998, p. 1125], the Secretary-General described follow-up to the 1996 Regional Conference to Address the Problems of Refugees, Displaced Persons, Other Forms of Involuntary Displacement and Returnees in the Countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States and Relevant Neighbouring States (CIS Conference) [YUN 1996, p. 1117]. Regarding implementation of the Programme of Action adopted at the Conference, the Secretary-General, citing the mechanisms established within UNHCR and IOM, working in cooperation with concerned States, observed that perhaps the major achievement of the CIS Conference process might have been the establishment of an international forum to exchange information and pursue constructive dialogue on a broader humanitarian and migration agenda. It had served to galvanize international attention on issues relevant to refugees, forced migration and other migratory movements in the region.

In 1999, the third of the four years of the follow-up process, stakeholders had begun to concentrate on its sustainability and consolidation beyond 2000, and States in the region had recognized that refugee problems needed to be addressed by creating legislative and institutional frameworks consistent with international standards. Capacity-building and training activities intensified to assist States in implementing the Programme of Action and, with the support of IOM, national management systems were established in eight countries in the region. Headway was made in addressing the situation of formerly deported people, a group specifically identified in the CIS Conference process as requiring a durable settlement solution. States in the region also demonstrated greater readiness to tackle problems relevant to citizenship and statelessness. UNHCR and the Council of Europe actively promoted recognition of the role of NGOs in civil society, the establishment of a legal framework at the national level defining their status and the creation of an environment that would enable NGOs to play a more active role in CIS Conference follow-up. The World Bank, UNDP and OCHA were supporting follow-up efforts.

The Steering Group established to monitor follow-up to the CIS Conference met on 24 and 25 June.

UNHCR Executive Committee action. In an October conclusion [A/54/12/Add.1], the UNHCR Executive Committee, noting that a number of provisions of the Programme of Action could not be achieved by 2000, endorsed establishment of a working group to address the issue of the follow-up and hoped that the Steering Group would work out concrete proposals for the next meeting on modalities of the conference process after 2000. It called on all CIS Governments to strengthen their practical and political commitment to implementing the Programme of Action for more consistent and far-reaching progress.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/600], adopted resolution 54/144 without vote [agenda item 111].

Follow-up to the Regional Conference to Address the Problems of Refugees, Displaced Persons, Other Forms of Involuntary Displacement and Returnees in the Countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States and Relevant Neighbouring States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/113 of 20 December 1993, 49/173 of 23 December 1994, 50/151 of 21 December 1995, 51/70 of 12 December 1996, 52/102 of 12 December 1997 and, in particular, 53/123 of 9 December 1998,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General and of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Recognizing the ongoing acuteness of the migration and displacement problems in the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States and the necessity to follow up the Regional Conference to Address the Problems of Refugees, Displaced Persons, Other Forms of Involuntary Displacement and Returnees in the Countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States and Relevant Neighbouring States and the subsequent conclusions of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Reaffirming the view of the Conference that the primary responsibility for tackling population displacement problems lies with the affected countries themselves and that these issues are to be regarded as national priorities, while at the same time recognizing the need for enhancing international support for the national efforts of the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States aimed at the effective implementation of such responsibilities within the framework of the Programme of Action adopted by the Conference,

Noting with satisfaction the efforts of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Organization for Migration and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe in developing strategies and practical tools for more effective capacity-building in countries of origin and enhancing programmes to address the needs of various categories of concern to the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States,

Welcoming the contributions of those countries that responded to the 1999 appeal launched by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Organization for Migration, and appreciating this tangible encouragement to the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States and to further inter-agency cooperation,

Taking note of the positive results emanating from the implementation of the Programme of Action adopted by the Conference,

Bearing in mind that a number of the provisions of the Programme of Action are still at the stage of practical formulation and cannot be achieved by 2000,

Taking into account the decision made by the steering group of the Conference to establish a working group to address the issue of follow-up to the Conference,

Convinced of the necessity of continuing to maintain the regional approach for the achievement of effective implementation of the Programme of Action,

Recalling that the protection and promotion of human rights and the strengthening of democratic institutions are essential to prevent mass population displacement,

Mindful that the effective implementation of the recommendations contained in the Programme of Action should be facilitated and can be ensured only through cooperation and coordinated activities undertaken in this respect by all interested States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other actors,

Noting and reaffirming the importance of the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General and of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

2. Calls upon the Governments of the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States, in cooperation with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Organization for Migration and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, to strengthen their efforts and mutual cooperation relating to the follow-up to the Regional Conference to Address the Problems of Refugees, Displaced Persons, Other Forms of Involuntary Displacement and Returnees in the Countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States and Relevant Neighbouring States, and welcomes the positive results achieved by them in the implementation of the Programme of Action adopted by the Conference;

3. Endorses the broad consensus reached by the participants in the steering group of the Conference that implementation of the issues outlined in the Programme of Action should be continued and that consideration should be given to a continuation of the follow-up to the Conference after 2000;

4. Calls upon the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States and other interested States, in cooperation with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Organization for Migration and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, to elaborate concrete proposals for a mechanism for possible follow-up to the Conference after 2000;

5. Invites all States that have not yet done so to accede to and implement fully the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees, while welcoming the accession of Georgia and Kazakhstan to the Convention;

6. Calls upon States and interested international organizations, in a spirit of solidarity and burden-sharing, to provide appropriate forms and levels of support for the practical implementation of the Programme of Action;

7. Invites international financial and other institutions to contribute to the financing of projects and programmes within the framework of the implementation of the Programme of Action;

8. Invites the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States to intensify bilateral, subregional and regional cooperation in maintaining the balance of commitments and interests in the process leading up to the implementation of the Programme of Action;

9. Calls upon the Governments of the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States to continue to strengthen their commitment to the principles underpinning the Programme of Action, in particular principles of human rights and refugee protection, and to lend high-level political support to ensure progress in its implementation;

10. Invites the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Organization for Migration to enhance their mutual relationship with other key international actors, such as the Council of Europe, the European Commission and human rights, development and financial institutions, in order better to address the wide-ranging and complex issues in the Programme of Action;

11. Welcomes the progress made in building civil society, in particular through the development of the non-governmental sector and the development of cooperation between non-governmental organizations and the Governments of a number of countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States, and notes in this regard the relationship between the progress made in implementing the Programme of Action and the success in promoting civil society, especially in the field of human rights;

12. Encourages the involvement of intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in the follow-up to the Conference, and invites them to demonstrate stronger support for the process of multinational constructive dialogue among a wide range of countries concerned and further action with a view to the full implementation of the recommendations of the Conference;

13. Emphasizes the necessity of fulfilling the recommendations contained in the Programme of Action relating to ensuring respect for human rights as an important factor in the management of migration flows, the consolidation of democracy, the rule of law and stability;

14. Recognizes the importance of taking measures, on the basis of strict adherence to all of the principles of international law, including humanitarian law and international human rights standards, to prevent situations that lead to new flows of refugees, displaced persons and other forms of involuntary displacement;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the progress achieved in the follow-up to the Conference;

16. Decides to continue its consideration of the question at its fifty-fifth session.

Chapter XIII

Health, food and nutrition

In 1999, the United Nations continued to take action to promote human health, coordinate food aid and food security, and support research in nutrition.

The total number of people living with HIV/AIDS worldwide at the end of 1999 was 33.6 million, according to the Joint United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (UNAIDS) and the World Health Organization (WHO). There were 5.6 million new infections and an estimated 2.6 million deaths due to the epidemic, the highest number ever in a single year. UNAIDS was working at various levels to fight the epidemic and had effectively promoted HIV/AIDS as a priority on international agendas. Progress was achieved in expanding both the prevention and the care agendas.

Another health concern for the United Nations continued to be tobacco and its ill effects. In May, the WHO World Health Assembly adopted a resolution that mapped out the political process for negotiation of a framework convention on tobacco control and related protocols. The Inter-Agency Task Force on Tobacco Control, established in 1999, held its first session in September. The Task Force, under the leadership of WHO, was designated to intensify a joint UN response and to galvanize support for tobacco control.

The World Food Programme (WFP)—a joint undertaking of the United Nations and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)—provided food aid to 89 million people, an increase of some 17 per cent over 1998. Global food aid deliveries amounted to 14.5 million tons, up from 8.3 million in 1998. Follow-up to the 1996 World Food Summit continued under the Committee on World Food Security, which submitted its first report to the Economic and Social Council.

HealthAIDS prevention and control

The Joint United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (UNAIDS) (formerly

the Joint and Co-sponsored UN Programme), which became fully operational in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1121], continued to coordinate UN activities for AIDS prevention and control. The Programme, which served as the main advocate for global action on HIV/AIDS, had seven co-sponsors: the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the United Nations International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP), the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), the World Bank and WHO. UNDCP became a new co-sponsor in 1999. The role of UNAIDS was to lead, strengthen and support an expanded response to the epidemic, mainly through facilitation and coordination, best practice development and advocacy.

According to UNAIDS/WHO, provisional estimates indicated that 33.6 million people were living with HIV/AIDS worldwide at year's end. In 1999, some 5.6 million people were newly infected and about 2.6 million people died, the highest number ever in a single year, despite antiretroviral therapy which staved off AIDS and AIDS deaths in the richer countries. By the end of the year, the epidemic had left behind a cumulative total of 11.2 million AIDS orphans, defined as children who had lost their mother before reaching the age of 15. Many of them had also lost their father. The overwhelming majority of people with HIV—some 95 per cent of the global total—lived in developing countries. Sub-Saharan Africa continued to bear the brunt of HIV/AIDS, with close to 70 per cent of the global total of HIV-positive people. However, there was evidence that infections were on the rise in Central America and in the Caribbean basin, which had some of the worst HIV epidemics outside Africa. The world's steepest HIV curve in 1999 was in the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS), where the proportion of the population living with HIV doubled between the end of 1997 and the end of 1999, mainly due to the unsafe injection of drugs. In 1999, an estimated 570,000 children worldwide aged 14 or younger became infected. Over 90 per cent were babies born to HIV-positive women, who acquired the virus at birth or through their mother's breast milk. Of those, almost nine tenths were in sub-Saharan Africa.

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/52 [YUN 1997, p. 1253], the Secretary-General, in a June note [E/1999/64], transmitted a report of the UNAIDS Executive Director describing progress made in response to HIV/AIDS and its impact on the countries affected. Among other things, the Executive Director recommended intensifying action in sub-Saharan Africa and stepping up action in Asia; developing strategies for women and young people, especially adolescent girls, and addressing the issue of male responsibility; and improving data collection and analysis on the economic causes and consequences of HIV. In the context of the reform of the United Nations, he recommended increased and better coordinated efforts by the UNAIDS co-sponsors and the secretariat on integrated planning at the country, regional and global levels, particularly in the context of the International Partnership against HIV/AIDS in Africa, and attention to HIV/AIDS issues by the broader UN system organizations, as relevant to their mandates, in cooperation with UNAIDS.

UNAIDS had been successful in persuading the global business community to engage in a more active response to AIDS. On 6 May, Bristol-Myers Squibb launched a $100 million initiative, "Secure the Future", to support community programmes, training and clinical research in five southern African countries. An evaluation of the development, dissemination and use of UNAIDS best practice materials began in May 1999. The best practice collection comprised advocacy documents, technical updates, case studies and key materials, covering some 50 topics. The UNAIDS secretariat remained actively involved in the follow-up processes of recent UN global conferences and summits. In his conclusions, the Executive Director drew to the Council's attention the unprecedented human disaster in southern Africa; the need for increased efforts and targeted programmes to address the vulnerability of young people to HIV infection; and the need to intensify and widen UN partnerships with governmental and non-governmental entities.

By decision 1999/284 of 30 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's note.

The Programme Coordinating Board of UNAIDS, at its eighth meeting (Geneva, 28-29 June), encouraged its secretariat and co-sponsors to intensify their efforts towards developing a UN system strategic plan for HIV/AIDS for the years 2001-2005, in consultation with the UN system and other partners. It recommended that the secretariat include Central America and the Caribbean as priority regions for strategic support and approved the UNAIDS unified budget and work plan for 2000-2001. It asked the Executive Director to ask the Secretary-General to bring the HIV/AIDS crisis and the urgent need for an intensified response to the attention of the Council and the General Assembly.

The 1999 World AIDS Campaign, developed by UNAIDS and partner organizations, focused on the need to listen to children and young people in order for AIDS prevention and care efforts to be effective and on strengthening AIDS programmes with them in 10 action areas.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1999/36 [draft: E/1999/L.36] without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

Human immunodeficiency virus/ acquired immunodeficiency syndrome

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1994/24 of 26 July 1994, 1995/2 of 3 July 1995, 1996/47 of 26 July 1996 and 1997/52 of 23 July 1997,

Noting with great concern the accelerating spread of human immunodeficiency virus (HIV), which has already infected millions of people worldwide, and the resulting increase in cases of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS),

Noting with great concern also that young people, especially adolescent girls, children and women are particularly vulnerable to the infection,

Recognizing that no country in the world has been spared by the AIDS epidemic, and that 90 per cent of the people living with HIV/AIDS live in the developing world, in particular in sub-Saharan Africa, which has been very severely affected,

Mindful that the AIDS epidemic has become a development crisis in many countries, with devastating consequences for human, social and economic progress, which is already undermining the gains of many years of development efforts,

Recognizing that the needs in countries to address AIDS far outweigh both the human and the financial resources being made available and that high-level political commitment is critical to strengthen the response to the epidemic,

Recalling that a multisectoral approach is needed to reduce the transmission of HIV and to increase the quality and accessibility of treatment, care and support of people with HIV/AIDS,

Acknowledging in this regard that the Joint United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (HIV/AIDS), co-sponsored by the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization and the World Bank, has played a critical role in leading, strengthening and supporting an expanded multisectoral response to the epidemic and constitutes an important example of effective system-wide coordination in the context of the United Nations reform efforts,

Noting the end of the period of the first strategic plan, 1996-2000, and of the development of a United Nations system strategic plan for HIV/AIDS for 2001-2005,

Recognizing the critical role of the United Nations theme groups on HIV/AIDS in enhancing the United Nations response to the epidemic at the field level,

Noting the increased commitment efforts of the Secretary-General to generate strengthened support to the joint United Nations programme on HIV/AIDS,

1. Notes the change in name of the Programme from the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/ Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (HIV/AIDS) to the Joint United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (HIV/AIDS) (UNAIDS) and welcomes the admission of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme as a co-sponsor of the Programme;

2. Urges Governments worldwide, with the assistance of the co-sponsoring organizations of the Programme, the Secretariat, other relevant United Nations programmes, funds and agencies, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to intensify their efforts in combating AIDS;

3. Encourages all countries and Governments, in particular those worst affected, to intensify their efforts to develop and implement multisectoral action aimed at reducing transmission and the vulnerability of individuals and communities, diminishing the stigma, denial and discrimination associated with AIDS, ensuring equitable access to care and mitigating the wider social impact of the epidemic;

4. Recognizes that such multisectoral action will require additional human and financial resources and therefore urges Governments to foster strong national partnerships with the private sector, non-governmental organizations and people living with HIV/AIDS;

5. Urges multilateral and bilateral donors, the Programme and its co-sponsors and the wider United Nations system to adequately support and strengthen these national efforts, especially in the worst-affected countries, particularly in sub-Saharan Africa;

6. Recognizes that AIDS is a major obstacle to development which has already reversed many hard-won development gains, strongly endorses the International Partnership against AIDS in Africa, and urges Governments, the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to participate actively in the activities of the Programme and its co-sponsors aimed at achieving the goals and objectives of the Partnership;

7. Reiterates the importance of focusing AIDS-related activities on especially vulnerable people, and commends the efforts of the Programme and its co-sponsors and the larger United Nations community to address the special vulnerability of young people, especially adolescent girls, children and women;

8. Urges Governments, with the assistance of the United Nations system, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and donors, to make efforts towards assuring access to HIV/AIDS information, education and services for all people, particularly males and females aged 15 to 24, and to ensure that by 2005 HIV prevalence in this particular age group is reduced globally;

9. Re-emphasizes the importance of coordination of activities, and therefore:

(a) Commends the Programme for the development of the unified budget and work plan, 2000-2001, distinguishing (i) activities to be implemented and funded jointly by two or more co-sponsors, (ii) activities to be funded by core budgets and implemented by the co-sponsoring organizations and (iii) coordination activities to be implemented by its secretariat;

(b) Urges the co-sponsors of the Programme and other organizations of the United Nations system to complete the development of their institutional strategies, as the tool to integrate AIDS-related activities into their operational activities for the implementation of the unified budget and work plan, 2000-2001, at the global, regional and country levels;

(c) Also urges the co-sponsors of the Programme and other organizations of the United Nations system to submit to their governing bodies their proposed contribution to the United Nations system strategic plan for HIV/AIDS for 2001-2005;

(d) Requests the United Nations programmes and funds, and invites the specialized agencies, to ensure that the United Nations theme groups on HIV/AIDS follow the principles under which administrative arrangements are provided within the United Nations Resident Coordinator system and that the role of chairman rotate between co-sponsors, and complete as soon as possible their respective joint strategies at the country level, with the participation of the Government of the host country to respond effectively to its national strategies and priorities and to participate actively in its implementation;

10. Welcomes the recommendations on HIV/AIDS in the follow-up to United Nations conferences and summits, and urges Governments and the United Nations system to further enhance their response in order to reach the goals articulated therein;

11. Invites the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the Programme, to set system-wide goals to mobilize further Member States and the international community in the fight against AIDS and in the mitigation of its effects;

12. Urges Governments, civil society and bilateral and multilateral donors to increase their funding efforts for AIDS-related activities in order to ensure a level of financial and other resources that is fully commensurate with the multisectoral challenges of the epidemic, and also to provide the required assistance for capacity-building;

13. Requests the Programme to transmit the conclusions and recommendations of the meetings of the Committee of Co-sponsoring Organizations and the Programme Coordinating Board to the Economic and Social Council and to the governing bodies of the co-sponsoring organizations;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Council at its substantive session of 2001 a comprehensive report prepared by the Executive Director of the Joint United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (HIV/AIDS) (UNAIDS) in collaboration with other relevant organizations of the United Nations system, which should also include the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution in the response to the epidemic and its impact on reducing the transmission of HIV and increasing the quality and accessibility of treatment, care and support for people living with HIV or AIDS.

Tobacco or health

In 1999, total world production of tobacco leaves was 7.09 million tons. World production had increased steadily during the 1970s and 1980s and stabilized in the 1990s. World production increased from 4.7 million tons in 1970 to 7.13 million in 1990. In the early 1990s, an estimated 1.1 billion individuals used tobacco worldwide, which had increased to almost 1.25 billion by 1998. Assuming no change in global prevalence, the global number of smokers was expected to reach 1.69 billion in 2020.

Framework convention

On 24 May, the WHO World Health Assembly adopted a resolution that mapped out the political process for negotiation of a framework convention on tobacco control and related protocols. The resolution established two intergovernmental bodies as WHO subsidiary bodies, a working group on the WHO framework convention on tobacco control, and an intergovernmental negotiating body (INB). In October, the working group laid the technical foundation for formal negotiations by INB, which were scheduled to begin in 2000.

Inter-agency task force

At the request of the WHO Director-General, and following an agreement between the Director-General and the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (the body designated as focal point for multisectoral collaboration on economic and social aspects of tobacco production and consumption), the UN Secretary-General, in order to intensify a joint UN response and to galvanize global support for tobacco control, agreed to the designation of an ad hoc inter-agency task force on tobacco control, under the leadership of WHO. The establishment of the task force was endorsed by the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) in April [ACC/1999/2].

The first session of the Task Force (New York, 19-30 September), attended by 13 UN organizations, the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, sought to outline current and future actions of ACC members in respect of tobacco control and to develop an operational approach to ensure that one United Nations voice was heard throughout the framework convention on tobacco control process.

Note by Secretariat. A July note by the Secretariat [E/1999/114] stated that the report called for in an Economic and Social Council draft resolution [E/1999/L.53] would be prepared through the Inter-Agency Task Force and would be submitted by the Secretary-General in 2000.

By decision 1999/284 of 30 July, the Council took note of the Secretariat's note.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July [meeting 46], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1999/56 [draft: E/1999/L.53] without vote [agenda item 7].

Tobacco or health

Noting that, since the adoption of its first resolution on tobacco or health, resolution 1993/79 of 30 July 1993, the Council adopted two other resolutions, 1994/47 of 29 July 1994 and 1995/62 of 28 July 1995, in which the Secretary-General was requested to submit to the Council at subsequent substantive sessions reports on progress made by the United Nations focal point on tobacco or health in the implementation of the multisectoral collaboration on tobacco or health,

Noting with appreciation that so far the Secretary-General has submitted to the Council three reports on progress made in the implementation of multisectoral collaboration on tobacco or health, upon receipt of which the Council congratulated the Secretary-General for their high quality,

Recognizing the initiatives taken within the United Nations system, other international organizations and Member States to address the issue of tobacco or health,

Expressing concern that tobacco control has yet to reverse the negative trends in terms of the death toll from tobacco,

Acknowledging the recent initiatives within the United Nations system to intensify a system-wide response to tobacco control through the establishment of an Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Task Force on Tobacco Control and the support of the Secretary-General for this initiative,

Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council at its substantive session of 2000 on progress made by the Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Task Force on Tobacco Control in the implementation of multisectoral collaboration on tobacco or health, with particular emphasis on the development of appropriate strategies to address the social and economic implications of the impact of tobacco or health initiatives.

Inter-agency coordination in health policy

The WHO/UNICEF/UNFPA Coordinating Committee on Health, at its second session (Geneva, 2-3 December) [E/ICEF/2000/7], considered follow-up to the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development [YUN 1994, p. 956], particularly maternal mortality and morbidity, adolescent health and development, HIV/AIDS and coordination of the follow-up to the Conference. The three organizations gave an overview of progress in the area of immunization and plans for the eradication of poliomyelitis, the elimination of maternal and neonatal tetanus, the expansion of immunization services and improvement in the quality of immunization services. In other action, the Committee reviewed the resolutions and decisions of the WHO, UNICEF and UNFPA governing bodies, as well as its terms of reference.

World Food Programme

In July, the Economic and Social Council examined two reports pertaining to the work of the World Food Programme (WFP) in 1998: the annual report of the Executive Director [E/1999/58] and a report of the WFP Executive Board containing an overview of activities in 1998 and the decisions and recommendations of its four 1998 sessions [E/1999/36].

By decision 1999/219 of 23 July, the Council took note of the report of the WFP Executive Board and the annual report of the Executive Director for 1998.

The WFP Executive Board [E/2000/36] decided on organizational and programme matters and approved a number of projects at its 1999 sessions, all held in Rome: first regular session (20-22 January), second regular session (13-14 May), annual session (17-20 May) and third regular session (18-22 October). In May, the Board approved the preparation of a consolidated 2000-2001 budget of some $2.6 billion for activities, including programme support and administrative costs totalling not more than $195 million. In October, it approved a net programme support and administrative appropriation of $194 million.

WFP activities

During 1999 [E/2000/54], the number of people assisted by WFP increased by some 17 per cent over 1998, to 89 million. Recipients of relief assistance accounted for nearly 80 per cent of all WFP beneficiaries in 1999, including a large number of people affected by natural disasters in late 1998, who continued to receive emergency assistance in early 1999. Of those assisted by WFP, 41 million people were victims of natural disasters, 18 million were affected by man-made disasters such as wars and civil unrest, 11 million were beneficiaries in protracted relief and recovery operations, and 19 million were in development programmes. Included among the beneficiaries were 19 million internally displaced persons in 35 countries and 3 million refugees in 31 countries.

In 1999, contributions to the Programme's operations amounted to $1,555 million from 45 donor countries, plus the European Commission (EC), various intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and private donors, including $45 million received in bilateral contributions. The five largest donors (United States, EC, Japan, Canada, Netherlands) contributed 77 per cent of all resources.

Global food aid deliveries amounted to 14.5 million tons, up from 8.3 million in 1998. Nearly half of the food aid delivered during 1999 was channelled as programme food aid provided bilaterally on a government-to-government basis as balance-of-payments support, largely from the United States. Programme food aid deliveries increased by 160 per cent compared to 1998. Emergency food aid, which accounted for 32 per cent of 1999 global deliveries, reflected an increase of 57 per cent over 1998. Project food aid deliveries remained at nearly the same level as in 1998. Targeted food aid, composed of emergency and project food aid, represented 49 per cent of total food aid deliveries.

The largest proportion of WFP assistance went to sub-Saharan Africa, with 44.1 per cent of its operational expenditures spent in 45 countries in the region; Asia and the Pacific received 34.8 per cent for 20 countries; Eastern Europe and CIS States, 7.7 per cent for 11 countries; Latin America and the Caribbean, 7.7 per cent for 25 countries; and the Middle East and North Africa, 3.2 per cent for 12 countries.

Administrative and financial matters

Resources and financing

WFP operational expenditure for 1999 amounted to $1,430 million for development and relief activities in the least developed countries and in low-income, food-deficit countries. Contributions totalled $1,555 million, of which $275 million was contributed to development, $863 million to emergency operations, $382 million to protracted relief and recovery operations, and $35 million was provided as "other contributions". Total quantities of food provided amounted to 3.4 million tons, with 0.8 million tons for development projects, 2 million tons for emergency operations and 0.6 million tons for protracted relief and recovery operations.

Revisions to General Regulations

Following the Executive Board's approval in January of WFP's resource and long-term financing policies, the Board endorsed the revision of article XIII.2 of the General Regulations relating to donor contributions. Subject to the approval of that recommendation, it approved the revision of general rule XIII.4. The revised Regulations and Rules would take effect from 1 January 2000, subject to the approval of article XIII.2 by the General Assembly and the Conference of FAO, on the advice of the Economic and Social Council and the FAO Council. In a June note, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Economic and Social Council the proposed amendment to the General Regulations [E/1999/87]. The recommendation was also made available to the FAO Council. By decision 1999/219 of 23 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's note.

The amendment was endorsed by the FAO Council at its one hundred and sixteenth session in June 1999. By decision 1999/220 of 23 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the proposed amendment to the General Regulations.

Regarding the General Regulations pertaining to the distribution of seats of the WFP Executive Board, the Council, by decision 1999/209 of 5 February, decided to continue consideration of the subject at its resumed organizational session for 1999, with a view to arriving at a recommendation for submission to the General Assembly. It also decided to postpone action on a draft text on the item.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 March [meeting 5], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1999/3 [draft: E/1999/L.12] without vote [agenda item 2].

Revision of the General Regulations of the World Food Programme

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 53/223 below.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 April [meeting 97], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Economic and Social Council [A/53/899], adopted resolution 53/223 without vote [agenda items 8 & 12].

Revision of the General Regulations of the World Food Programme

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/162 of 20 December 1993 and 50/8 of 1 November 1995,

1. Decides, subject to the concurrence of the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, that the members of the Executive Board of the World Food Programme shall be elected on an interim basis for a term of three years from among the States included in the lists set out in the Basic Texts of the World Food Programme, in accordance with the following distribution of seats, it being understood that this allocation of seats creates no precedent for the composition of other United Nations bodies of limited membership:

(a) Eight members from the States included in list A, four members to be elected by the Economic and Social Council and four by the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations;

(b) Seven members from the States included in list B, four members to be elected by the Economic and Social Council and three by the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations;

(c) Five members from the States included in list C, two members to be elected by the Economic and Social Council and three by the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations;

(d) Twelve members from the States included in list D, six members to be elected by the Economic and Social Council and six by the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations;

(e) Three members from the States included in list E, two members to be elected by the Economic and Social Council and one by the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations;

(f) One additional member rotating among the States included in lists A, B and C to be elected by the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in accordance with the following pattern of rotation:

- (i) One State from list A is to be elected to occupy the additional seat every other term out of four, starting from 1 January 2000;
- (ii) One State from list B is to be elected to occupy the additional seat the second term out of four, starting from 1 January 2003;
- (iii) One State from list C is to be elected to occupy the additional seat the fourth term out of four, starting from 1 January 2009;

2. Requests the Economic and Social Council to elect one member from the States included in list E for a term of three years beginning on 1 January 2000;

3. Decides that the above-mentioned distribution of seats shall be reviewed two years before the end of one full rotation scheme of four terms, as referred to in paragraph 1 (f) of the present resolution. Such a review shall be in accordance with the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolutions 48/162 and 50/8, taking into account the relevant inputs of the Economic and Social Council and the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations; the result of the review shall enter into force on 1 January 2012;

4. Decides also, subject to the concurrence of the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, that the revised General Regulations shall enter into force on 1 January 2000.

On 13 November, the FAO Conference adopted a resolution regarding the General Regulations pertaining to the distribution of seats of the WFP Executive Board by which it concurred with Assembly resolution 53/223.

Food security

Follow-up to 1996 World Food Summit

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1999/212 of 25 March, decided to discontinue its quadrennial consideration of progress reports on the implementation of the decisions of the 1979 World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development [YUN 1979, p. 500]. It invited the FAO Director-General to transmit to the Council every four years, starting in 1999, a report prepared by the Committee on World Food Security on progress in the implementation of the Plan of Action adopted at the 1996 World Food Summit [YUN 1996, p. 1129], highlighting its linkages with the coordinated and integrated follow-up to major UN conferences and summits undertaken by the UN system. Accordingly, the Secretary-General, by a June note [E/1999/81], transmitted the Committee's report.

The report was based on information received from 68 countries and the EC, 14 UN agencies, 13 international organizations and six regional bodies, plus an additional 27 country reports that had reached the Secretariat at the time of the Committee's session. Many reporting countries provided highlights of major issues and objectives in implementing the Plan of Action. Food insecurity, affecting large shares or specific groups of the population, was underlined by many developing countries, with emphasis on the growing food deficit and/or instability of food production. Under- and malnutrition, affecting in particular children but also adults, was documented, even in cases where the general food security situation was satisfactory. Poverty was universally acknowledged as a major cause of food insecurity at the household level, and human development, mainly through education and health improvement, received much attention. Pursuing policies aimed at sound macroeconomic conditions and taking advantage of international trade were highlighted by several countries; sustainable development of agriculture and food production was widely considered an essential objective, often in connection with developing the agri-food sector. Intensification of production and diversification, particularly towards animal products and fish in certain cases, were sought. Productivity improvements benefiting the poor and environmental sustainability were emphasized. In the food chain, marketing, food quality and safety, and improved processing were frequently cited concerns. Decentralization and developing rural infrastructure were also repeatedly mentioned. The report concluded that the information received showed a universal commitment to implementing the Plan of Action.

Mechanisms had been put in place, where they had not existed, to promote, coordinate and monitor follow-up to the Summit. However, several factors had prevented the Secretariat in its first review from drawing general substantive conclusions on progress in implementing the Plan of Action. Information provided in reports on policies for pursuing food security for all showed the predominance of continuing actions already in place at the time of the Summit. New actions undertaken as a consequence of the Summit were documented as well. However, results of those could not be observed or analysed given that the reports covered the year that immediately followed the Summit. It was also observed that a broad scope of reporting could be detrimental to a fruitful concentration of reporting and analysis on the most important issues; selecting a smaller number of commitments for each monitoring session would help in overcoming that issue.

By decision 1999/283 of 30 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's note transmitting the Committee's report.

Nutrition

ACC activities

The ACC Subcommittee on Nutrition held its twenty-sixth session (Geneva, 12-15 April) [ACC/1999/9]. It kept under review working groups on such questions as life cycle consequences of fetal and infant malnutrition; vitamin A and iron deficiencies; breastfeeding and complementary feeding; nutrition, ethics and human rights; household food security; nutrition in emergencies; and iodine deficiency disorders.

The Subcommittee approved the core 2000-2001 budget in the amount of $861,000. Proposed programme activities for the biennium totalled $964,000. The Subcommittee approved the programme activities, subject to funds becoming available.

Given the changing needs of the Subcommittee on Nutrition and its secretariat, as well as the growth in professional expertise within the Subcommittee, the Subcommittee decided to hold the Advisory Group on Nutrition in abeyance and not make any appointments to it. The current two-year term of all Advisory Group members would expire at the close of the Subcommittee's twenty-sixth session. UN agencies proposed that an interim programme steering committee should be appointed with a one-year lifespan. Its terms of reference would include identifying the best way to execute tasks that had traditionally been carried out by the Advisory Group on Nutrition. The steering committee would be made up of FAO, UNDP, UNICEF, the World Bank, WHO, a representative of the non-governmental organizations, a representative of the bilaterals and the current Advisory Group Chairman.

The Commission on Nutrition Challenges of the Twenty-first Century, charged with examining nutritional problems emerging in the twenty-first century, presented its report.

The Advisory Group met (Geneva, 8-9 April) and, among other things, noted the overall approach of the Fourth Report on the World Nutrition Situation. The full draft was to be circulated in late July and published in December.

UNU activities

The United Nations University (UNU) continued its food and nutrition programme in 1999, as described in the report of the UNU Council to the General Assembly [A/55/31]. The programme, undertaken in collaboration with WHO, UNICEF and FAO, addressed major nutrition concerns in developing countries. During 1999, it maintained six major global projects and a number of minor ones, and provided 15 fellowships for various kinds of advanced training. The topics of some of the projects under the programme were: international network of food data systems; international iron nutrition; international dietary energy consultative group; multi-country growth reference study; global initiative for enhancing institutional capacity in food and nutrition: African leadership initiative (a joint project with the International Union of Nutritional Sciences); and harmonization of approaches for setting national dietary standards. The programme continued its quarterly publication of the Food and Nutrition Bulletin and the Journal of Food Composition and Analysis.

The programme's priority in 1999 was to work more effectively in strengthening capacity in Africa. A workshop in Capetown, South Africa, focused on the development of an African nutrition leadership initiative to strengthen and build up a cadre of nutrition leaders at the regional, national and local levels. Such leaders would be drawn from different fields, including health, agriculture, education and community development, and different sectors, including public, private and non-profit sectors.

Chapter XIV

International drug control

During 1999, the United Nations, through the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the International Narcotics Control Board (INCB) and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP), renewed its commitment to strengthen international cooperation and increase efforts to counter the world drug problem, in accordance with the obligations of States under the United Nations drug control conventions, and on the basis of the general framework provided by the 1990 Global Programme of Action on narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and the outcome of the General Assembly's twentieth special session, held in 1998. The Assembly urged competent authorities to implement the outcome of the special session within the agreed time frames, and adopted the Action Plan for the Implementation of the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction, which served as a guide to Member States in adopting strategies and programmes for reducing illicit drug demand in order to achieve significant results by the year 2008.

UNDCP stimulated action at the national, regional and international levels through technical cooperation programmes and supported the international community in pursuing the objectives agreed upon by the Assembly at its special session. It assisted States in complying with international treaties and supported them in establishing business plans to reduce the illicit cultivation of the opium poppy, coca bush and cannabis.

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs—the main UN policy-making body on drug control—addressed a number of issues, primarily the reduction of illicit demand for drugs, and illicit drug production and trafficking. It also considered the implementation of the Global Programme of Action and international treaties. The Subcommission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East adopted the Lucknow Accord on the Adoption of Uniform Measures to Control International Trade in Precursors and Other Chemicals Used in the Illicit Manufacture of Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances. In July, the Economic and Social Council invited Member States to promote awareness within the chemical industry concerning the Accord's provisions.

INCB continued to oversee the implementation of the three major international drug control conventions, to analyse the drug situation worldwide and to draw Governments' attention to gaps and weaknesses in national control and treaty compliance, making suggestions and recommendations for improvements at the national and international levels.

Follow-up to the twentieth special session

The Secretary-General, in an August report [A/54/186], provided an overview of the implementation of the outcome of the twentieth special session of the General Assembly on the world drug problem, held in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1135]. The report, prepared in response to resolution 53/115 [ibid., p. 1170], covered the action plans and measures adopted and presented the activities already undertaken, as well as those envisaged, by UNDCP to meet the new mandates with regard to: the revised medium-term plan for international drug control, 1998-2001; designation of the twentieth special session as a major global conference, thereby requiring review of implementation of its outcome; an action plan for the implementation of the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction; elimination of illicit cultivation of the opium poppy, coca bush and cannabis through alternative development; measures to promote judicial cooperation; the Action Plan against Illicit Manufacture, Trafficking and Abuse of Amphetamine-type Stimulants and Their Precursors; control of precursors; efforts to counter money-laundering; and mobilization of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to fulfil its mandates.

In a December report on follow-up to the twentieth special session [E/CN.7/2000/2], the UNDCP Executive Director listed the goals and targets set by the Assembly and described the role of the Commission in the implementation process, as well as action by the Assembly at its fifty-fourth (1999) session.

Action Plan

A January note by the Secretariat [E/CN.7/1999/7] on reduction of illicit demand for drugs contained the report on the meeting of the inter-governmental working group on the elaboration of the action plan for the implementation of the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction, annexed to resolution S-20/3, adopted by the General Assembly at its twentieth special session [YUN 1998, p. 1137]. The working group (Vienna, 14-16 December 1998) discussed a preliminary draft of the action plan prepared by UNDCP following the special session, and agreed that it should be used as the basis for the elaboration of the action plan. The group emphasized that the Declaration and the action plan should provide Member States with an overall framework for cooperation and a structure within which demand reduction programmes could be adapted to meet the needs of local communities. The action plan should follow closely the structure of the Declaration and translate its content into practical action; it should also respect cultural and religious affiliation, human rights, national sovereignty and territorial integrity. Following consideration of 33 objectives suggested by Member States, specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations, the working group agreed on 16 objectives to be covered by the plan.

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs, at its forty-second session [E/1999/28/Rev.1] (see p. 1187), expressed support for the action plan as a guide for Member States in developing programmes to reduce the demand for drugs.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs [E/1999/28/Rev.1], adopted resolution 1999/29 without vote [agenda item 14 (d)].

Action Plan for the Implementation of the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

"The General Assembly

Adopts the Action Plan for the Implementation of the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction annexed to the present resolution.

[For annex, see annex to General Assembly resolution 54/132 below.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee

[A/54/597], adopted resolution 54/132 without vote [agenda item 108].

International cooperation against the world drug problem

Recalling its resolutions 52/92 of 12 December 1997 and 53/115 of 9 December 1998,

Reaffirming its commitment to the outcome of the twentieth special session of the General Assembly devoted to countering the world drug problem together, held in New York from 8 to 10 June 1998, and welcoming the continued determination of Governments to overcome the world drug problem by a full and balanced application of national, regional and international strategies to reduce the demand for, production of and trafficking in illicit drugs, as reflected in the Political Declaration, the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction and the measures to enhance international cooperation to counter the world drug problem,

Gravely concerned that, despite continued increased efforts by States, relevant international organizations, civil society and non-governmental organizations, there is a global expansion of the drug problem, which constitutes a serious threat to the health, safety and well-being of all mankind, in particular young people, in all countries, undermines development, including efforts to reduce poverty, socio-economic and political stability and democratic institutions, entails an increasing economic cost for Governments, also threatens the national security and sovereignty of States, as well as the dignity and hope of millions of people and their families, and causes irreparable loss of human lives,

Concerned that the demand for, production of and trafficking in illicit drugs and psychotropic substances continue to threaten seriously the socio-economic and political systems, stability, national security and sovereignty of an increasing number of States, especially those involved in conflicts and wars, and that trafficking in drugs could make conflict resolution more difficult,

Deeply alarmed by the growing and spreading violence and economic power of criminal organizations and terrorist groups engaged in drug-trafficking activities and other criminal activities, such as money-laundering and illicit traffic in arms, precursors and essential chemicals, and by the increasing transnational links between them, and recognizing the need for international cooperation and implementation of effective strategies on the basis of the outcome of the twentieth special session of the General Assembly, which are essential to achieving results against all forms of transnational criminal activities,

Deeply convinced that the special session made a significant contribution to a new comprehensive framework for international cooperation, based on an integrated and balanced approach with strategies, measures, methods, practical activities, goals and specific targets to be met, that all States, the United Nations system and other international organizations must implement them with concrete actions and that the international financial institutions, such as the World Bank, and the regional development banks should be invited to include action against the world drug problem in their programmes, taking into account the priorities of States,

Convinced that civil society, including non-governmental organizations, can make an effective contribution to and should play an active role in addressing the world drug problem,

Emphasizing the importance of the adoption of the Action Plan for the Implementation of the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction annexed to the present resolution, which introduces a global approach, recognizing a new balance between illicit supply and demand reduction, under the principle of shared responsibility, aims at preventing the use of drugs and at reducing the adverse consequences of drug abuse, ensuring that special attention is paid to vulnerable groups, in particular youth, and constitutes one of the pillars of the new global strategy and an important initiative of the United Nations Decade against Drug Abuse, 1991-2000, and reaffirming the need for demand reduction programmes,

Emphasizing equally the importance of supply reduction as an integral part of a balanced drug control strategy under the principles enshrined in the Action Plan on International Cooperation on the Eradication of Illicit Drug Crops and on Alternative Development, reaffirming the need for alternative development programmes that are sustainable, welcoming the achievements of some States on their way to eradicating illicit drug crops, and inviting all other States to make similar efforts,

Underlining the role of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs as the principal United Nations policy-making body on drug control issues, the leadership role and commendable work of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme as the main focus for concerted multilateral action and the important role of the International Narcotics Control Board as an independent monitoring authority, as set out in the international drug control treaties,

Recognizing the efforts of all countries, in particular those that produce narcotic drugs for scientific and medical purposes, and of the International Narcotics Control Board in preventing the diversion of such substances to illicit markets and in maintaining production at a level consistent with licit demand, in line with the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 and the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971,

Acknowledging that there are links, under certain circumstances, between poverty and the increase in the illicit production of and trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and that the promotion of the economic development of countries affected by the illicit drug trade requires appropriate measures, including strengthened international cooperation in support of alternative and sustainable development activities in the affected areas of those countries, which have as their objectives the reduction and elimination of illicit drug production,

Stressing that respect for all human rights is and must be an essential component of measures taken to address the drug problem,

Ensuring that women and men benefit equally, and without any discrimination, from strategies directed against the world drug problem, through their involvement in all stages of programmes and policy-making,

Recognizing that the use of the Internet poses new opportunities and challenges to international co-operation in combating drug abuse and illicit production and trafficking, and recognizing also the need for increased cooperation among States and the exchange of information, including with reference to national experiences, on how to counteract the promotion of drug abuse and illicit drug trafficking through this instrument and on ways to use the Internet for information concerning drug demand reduction,

I

Respect for the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and international law in the fight against the world drug problem

1. Reaffirms that the fight against the world drug problem is a common and shared responsibility which must be addressed in a multilateral setting, requiring an integrated and balanced approach, and must be carried out in full conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and international law, and in particular with full respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States, the principle of non-intervention in the internal affairs of States and all human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Calls upon all States to take further action to promote effective cooperation at the international and regional levels in the efforts to combat the world drug problem so as to contribute to a climate conducive to achieving that end, on the basis of the principles of equal rights and mutual respect;

3. Urges all States to ratify or accede to and implement all the provisions of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 as amended by the 1972 Protocol, the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971 and the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988;

ANNEX

Action Plan for the Implementation of the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction

Preamble

1. In the Political Declaration adopted by the General Assembly at its twentieth special session, Member States:

(a) Recognized that demand reduction was an indispensable pillar in the global approach to countering the world drug problem and committed themselves:

- (i) To introducing into their national programmes and strategies the provisions set out in the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction;
- (ii) To working closely with the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to develop action-oriented strategies to assist in the implementation of the Declaration;
- (iii) To establishing 2003 as a target date for new or enhanced drug demand reduction strategies and programmes set up in close collaboration with public health, social welfare and law enforcement authorities;
- (iv) To achieving significant and measurable results in the field of demand reduction by 2008;

(b) Called upon all States to report biennially to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs on their efforts to meet the above-mentioned goals and targets for 2003 and 2008.

2. The present Action Plan for the Implementation of the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction is offered as guidance to Member States in implementing the above-mentioned commitments. Organizations of the United Nations system, other international organizations, regional organizations and non-governmental organizations are invited to provide support to Member States in implementing the Action Plan, according to their available resources, specific mandates and the different roles that they are to play in achieving the goals set out in the Declaration.

3. The Action Plan reflects the emphasis in the Declaration on the need for a comprehensive and balanced approach involving demand reduction and supply reduction, each reinforcing the other, together with the appropriate application of the principle of shared responsibility. It stresses the need for services responsible for prevention, including law enforcement agencies, to transmit the same message and use similar language.

4. The Action Plan is guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and international law, in particular respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States, non-interference in the internal affairs of States, human rights and fundamental freedoms and the principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. It allows for flexible approaches to reflect social, cultural, religious and political differences and it acknowledges that efforts to reduce illicit drug demand are at different levels of implementation in different countries.

5. The Action Plan recognizes that progress to reduce the demand for illicit drugs should be seen in the context of the need for programmes to reduce the demand for substances of abuse. Such programmes should be integrated to promote cooperation among all concerned, should include a wide variety of appropriate interventions, should promote health and social well-being among individuals, families and communities and should reduce the adverse consequences of drug abuse for the individual and for society as a whole.

6. The Action Plan focuses on the need to design demand reduction campaigns and programmes to meet the needs of the population in general, as well as those of specific population groups, taking into account differences in gender, culture and education and paying special attention to youth. Demand reduction efforts should be developed with the participation of target groups, giving special attention to a gender perspective.

In a December report on the follow-up to the Action Plan [E/CN.7/2000/3], prepared in response to the Assembly's request, the Executive Director reviewed the role of UNDCP in supporting Governments in the implementation process, and called on the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to provide guidance to the follow-up activities. Two principal roles for UNDCP were identified: to provide assistance to those requesting it for the establishment of national information systems and for the development of demand reduction strategies and programmes in line with the Guiding Principles; and to facilitate the sharing of information on best strategies in a number of areas. The report stated that UNDCP already provided assistance, mainly through technical projects, and that the volume of work depended on the availability of extra-budgetary contributions, crucial for the success of the global programme for assessing the magnitude of drug abuse. With regard to the sharing of information, UNDCP had taken some initiatives, funded mainly by extrabudgetary contributions, including the development of guidelines for treatment and rehabilitation programmes and for community-based prevention. The report stressed the importance of ensuring that demand reduction was funded from the regular budget and was not dependent on voluntary contributions. The Executive Director invited the Commission to indicate how to ensure the provision of assistance to enable UNDCP to fulfil the tasks entrusted to it, either by continuing to provide assistance using the limited resources from the regular budget while trying to raise extrabudgetary resources, or by requesting the inclusion, under the UN regular budget, of services for identifying, sharing and promoting best strategies for implementation of the Declaration.

Eradication of illicit crops and alternative development

The UNDCP Executive Director reported on the follow-up to the Action Plan on International Cooperation on the Eradication of Illicit Crops and on Alternative Development [E/CN.7/1999/3], adopted by the General Assembly in resolution S-20/4 E [YUN 1998, p. 1148]. The report, prepared in response to resolution 53/115 [ibid., p. 1170], stated that, following the Assembly's special session, UNDCP and Governments incorporated the provisions of the Action Plan into ongoing and new alternative development activities. Governments renewed their commitment to design time-bound strategies for the elimination or significant reduction of illicit crops, and international financial institutions showed interest in co-operating with Governments and UNDCP in the development of rural development programmes that also took into account the needs of communities affected by illicit crops.

In March [E/1999/28/Rev.1 (res. 42/3)], the Commission on Narcotic Drugs urged Governments in all areas producing coca bush, cannabis and opium poppy to design, formulate and implement national mechanisms for the monitoring and verification of illicit crops used in the production of drugs, with a view to implementing the Action Plan. It recommended that UNDCP collaborate with Governments and relevant organizations in establishing an international network for monitoring the cultivation of illicit crops. The Commission requested UNDCP to establish a central data bank on the basis of information furnished by Governments, and to report annually on the world situation regarding illicit crops. It also requested UNDCP to provide Governments with technical assistance and to mobilize international support, with a view to establishing national mechanisms for monitoring the cultivation of illicit crops used in the production of drugs and developing an international network for the control of illicit cultivation for the purpose of implementing the Action Plan.

In a December report on follow-up to the Action Plan [E/CN.7/2000/6], the Executive Director stated that UNDCP had developed a four-year global programme for alternative development, costed at $1.5 million, to develop and systematize lessons learned and best practices arising from alternative development projects carried out around the world, and to improve the analysis and dissemination of project results. In April, the programme started to monitor the progress made in areas such as gender mainstreaming in rural development; credit schemes in illicit crop areas; development of agro-industries; income diversification; the role of community organizations; and sound project monitoring and management at local and national levels. Another major development was the setting up of an illicit crops monitoring programme. That programme focused on the six countries in which the bulk of world illicit crop cultivation occurred: Afghanistan, Bolivia, Colombia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar and Peru. For each of those priority countries, UNDCP drew up a national project, described in the report. With relevant partners, UNDCP elaborated a common methodology for monitoring illicit crops, using a combination of technologies such as satellite imagery, ground surveys and aerial surveys.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs [E/1999/28/Rev.1], adopted resolution 1999/32 without vote [agenda item 14 (d)].

International regulation and control of trade in poppy seeds

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling article 22 of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, on the prohibition of the illicit cultivation of the opium poppy, and the Action Plan on International Cooperation on the Eradication of Illicit Drug Crops and on Alternative Development, contained in resolution S-20/4 E of 10 June 1998, adopted by the General Assembly at its twentieth special session,

*Recalling also that the International Narcotics Control Board, in its report for 1995, expressed its concern about trade in seeds obtained from the Papaver somniferum (opium poppy) plant in countries where cultivation of the opium poppy is prohibited, and that the Board urged Governments to be vigilant in order to ensure that poppy seeds traded for food purposes are not derived from illicitly cultivated poppy plants,*

Emphasizing the need to fight the illicit cultivation of the opium poppy by all possible means,

Noting that poppy seeds are still being exported on a large scale from countries where cultivation of the opium poppy is prohibited,

Aware that, under the terms of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, trade in poppy seeds is not subject to international control,

Recognizing that there is a need to prohibit international trade in poppy seeds from sources of illicit cultivation of the opium poppy,

Recognizing also that the poppy plant of low morphine content that is used for food purposes is unsuitable for the production of opium or illicit use by drug abusers,

Resolving to fight the international trade in illicit poppy seeds by practical measures, such as attempting to ensure that export is made only from countries authorized to cultivate the opium poppy,

1. Calls upon Member States to take the following measures to fight the international trade in poppy seeds from countries where no licit cultivation of opium poppy is permitted:

(a) Poppy seeds should only be imported if they originate from those countries where opium poppy is grown licitly in accordance with the provisions of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961;

(b) Governments should be encouraged, to the extent possible, and where national circumstances so require, to obtain an appropriate certificate from the exporting countries on the country of origin of Papaver somniferum seeds as the basis for importation, and also to give notification of export of Papaver somniferum seeds, as far as possible, to the competent authorities of the importing countries;

(c) Information on any suspicious transactions involving poppy seeds should be shared with other Governments concerned and with the International Narcotics Control Board;

2. Urges all Member States that have not already done so to prohibit the cultivation of the opium poppy in accordance with article 22 of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 or to permit the cultivation of the opium poppy for purposes other than the production of opium, taking all the necessary measures as stipulated in article 25 of the 1961 Convention;

3. Requests the International Narcotics Control Board and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to take appropriate measures to ensure the full implementation of article 22 of the 1961 Convention by concerned Member States;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the text of the present resolution to all Governments for consideration and implementation.

Conventions

In 1999, international efforts to control narcotic drugs were governed by three global conventions: the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs [YUN 1961, p. 382], which, with some exceptions of detail, replaced earlier narcotics treaties and was amended in 1972 by a Protocol [YUN 1972, p. 397] intended to strengthen the role of INCB; the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances [YUN 1971, p. 380]; and the 1988 United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances [YUN 1988, p. 690].

As at 31 December 1999, 157 States were parties to the 1961 Convention, as amended by the 1972 Protocol. During the year, Azerbaijan, Liechtenstein, Pakistan and the United Republic of Tanzania became parties.

The number of parties to the 1971 Convention stood at 161 as at 31 December 1999. Azerbaijan, Liechtenstein and Mongolia became parties during the year.

At year's end, 153 States and the European Community were parties to the 1988 Convention. Andorra and Indonesia became parties in 1999.

Commission action. At its forty-second session in March, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs reviewed implementation of the international drug control treaties. It had before it a February report by the Secretary-General [E/CN.7/1999/10 & Corr.1 & Add.1] on changes in the scope of control of substances, which contained notifications from Governments recommending the inclusion of certain substances and clarification of the scope of their control under the 1961 and 1971 Conventions. The Commission also had before it the INCB report for 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1151]. The Commission stressed the key role of the Board in monitoring the implementation of the treaties, and emphasized the need to strengthen the Board to enable it to implement fully the mandates entrusted to it by the treaties. It urged Governments that had not done so to adhere to the treaties as a matter of priority and to implement their provisions, and it requested that the Board provide technical assistance to countries where national control systems for drugs and chemicals used in illicit manufacture needed improvement. The Commission recognized the need for universal action to implement the provisions of article 12 of the 1988 Convention regarding precursor control, and for tightening drug control to prevent loopholes that could be exploited by traffickers.

On 16 March, the Commission adopted three decisions [E/1999/28/Rev.1 (dec. 42/1, 42/2, 42/3)] by which it included two new substances to be controlled under Schedule I of the 1961 Convention, clarified the scope of control of certain substances under the 1971 Convention, and requested further review by the World Health Organization (WHO) of two other substances.

By a 23 March resolution on voluntary international control of norephedrine [res. 42/1], the Commission requested Governments to recognize the danger of its diversion as a precursor and to establish or strengthen measures and codes of conduct governing its trade, in cooperation with INCB and relevant branches of trade and industry. It also urged Governments to monitor suspicious movements of norephedrine, to initiate pre-export notification of its shipments and to provide information to INCB on the extent of its licit production, trade and use. In December [E/CN.7/2000/7], the Secretariat forwarded to the Commission the INCB recommendation that norephedrine, which was frequently used in the illicit manufacture of amphetamines, be included in Table I of the 1988 Convention. The Board noted that amphetamines had created public health and social problems. It stated that the international control of norephedrine was required to limit its availability to traffickers and reduce the quantity of amphetamines manufactured illicitly, but those controls would have no adverse effect on its legitimate trade or licit medical requirements.

With regard to measures to control precursors, the Commission stated that traffickers must not be allowed to subvert legitimate chemical industries to obtain precursor chemicals required for the illicit production of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances. The Action Plan against Illicit Manufacture, Trafficking and Abuse of Amphetamine-type Stimulants and Their Precursors [YUN 1998, p. 1139] provided a framework for cooperation in controlling precursors. It was essential for INCB to continue to monitor progress and analyse trends on the basis of information on seized shipments provided by national authorities.

Also on 23 March [res. 42/2], the Commission adopted temporary measures for the control of potassium permanganate, an essential oxidizing agent in the production of cocaine. It encouraged Governments to adopt measures to prevent the diversion to illicit activities of potassium permanganate, which was included in Table II of the 1988 Convention, and requested INCB to prepare, in accordance with its mandate under the 1988 Convention, a report on the effects of those measures, to be submitted to the Commission at its next session in 2000.

INCB action. In its report covering 1999 [E/INCB/1999/1], INCB stated that the implementation of the provisions of both the 1961 and 1971 Conventions was a prerequisite for achieving the objectives of the 1988 Convention. It welcomed the fact that most of the States that were major manufacturers, exporters and importers of precursors had acceded to the 1988 Convention, and reiterated its request to those States that had not done so to take, as a matter of priority, the necessary steps to put into effect the measures required under the 1988 Convention and to accede to it as soon as possible.

International Narcotics Control Board

The 13-member International Narcotics Control Board held its sixty-sixth (10-21 May) and sixty-seventh (1-18 November) sessions, both in Vienna [E/INCB/1999/1].

In carrying out the responsibilities assigned to it under the international conventions, the Board maintained a continuous dialogue with Governments. The statistical data and other information received from them were used in analyses of the licit manufacture of and trade in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances worldwide, in order to identify whether Governments had strictly enforced treaty provisions requiring them to limit to medical and scientific purposes the licit manufacture of, trade in and distribution and use of those substances. The international drug control treaties required the Board to prepare an annual report examining the drug control situation worldwide, noting gaps and weaknesses in national control and in treaty compliance, and making recommendations for improvements.

In 1999, the Board reiterated its concern that many States, including important manufacturers, exporters and importers of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, had furnished statistical information after the deadlines. It stressed that the timely submission, comprehensiveness and reliability of the statistical reports were important indicators of the extent to which Governments had implemented the provisions of the 1961 and 1971 Conventions, and trusted that those States would ensure their timely compliance with the reporting obligations. The Board noted that several States parties to the 1988 Convention had not provided data on precursors for at least the last three years, and invited States that had not done so to submit information on the licit movement of precursors, indispensable in uncovering unusual trade trends, thereby preventing their diversion into illicit channels.

Many States had failed to submit the requisite data on estimates of the medical need for narcotic drugs, an indication of shortcomings in their national drug control systems; and some furnished a large number of supplementary estimates, indicating inadequate planning of medical needs. States were reminded that the 1961 Convention allowed for the submission of supplementary estimates only in the case of unforeseen circumstances. The Board undertook a review of the data available to identify inadequacies, in particular low consumption levels of opiate analgesics, and found a correlation between the degree of economic and human development in a country and the consumption of, for example, acute painkillers such as morphine and pethidine: the 20 countries with the highest per capita gross national product together accounted for about 75 per cent of global morphine consumption. In regard to assessments of requirements for psychotropic substances, the Board invited those Governments which had not done so to review the assessments established for their countries or territories and to submit comments to the Board.

Despite the large quantities of substances involved and the large number of transactions, no cases involving the diversion of narcotic drugs from licit international trade into illicit traffic were reported during 1999. As for the diversion of psychotropic substances from licit trade into illicit channels, an analysis by the Board of data on international trade in substances included in Schedules III and IV of the 1971 Convention indicated a significant decrease in the number of such cases, apparently as a result of Governments' implementation of treaty provisions, in combination with additional controls over international trade. The Board invited all Governments to remain vigilant with respect to orders for those psychotropic substances and to confirm with the Governments of importing countries the legitimacy of those orders prior to approving export; it also requested the Governments that did not control the import and export of psychotropic substances in those schedules to do so. The Board noted with concern that some States parties to the 1971 Convention had not reflected in their national legislation the 1995 decisions of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to add to schedules of that Convention six additional substances and to transfer one substance from Schedule IV to Schedule III [YUN 1995, p. 1285].

Reports from various countries on the abuse and seizure of psychotropic substances indicated that the diversion of pharmaceutical products containing such substances from licit domestic distribution channels became an increasingly important source for illicit drug suppliers, and that the diversion of precursors from licit trade for the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs or psychotropic substances continued on a large scale. The Board requested all Governments to report promptly important seizures of psychotropic substances, including seizures of pharmaceutical products diverted from licit distribution channels. In exercising its functions under the 1988 Convention, INCB participated fully in "Operation Purple", an international initiative undertaken by regulatory and law enforcement authorities in order to identify suspicious shipments and prevent the diversion of precursors.

In resolution 1999/32 (see p. 1166), the Economic and Social Council called on Member States to take measures to fight the international trade in poppy seeds from countries where no licit cultivation of opium poppy was permitted. The Board called on countries importing poppy seeds to pay special attention to the country of origin. It also urged Governments of exporting and importing countries of opiate raw materials and/or products to prevent international trade in such seized materials.

On 28 July, the Council, by decision 1999/265, took note of the INCB report for 1998 [Sales No. E.99.XI.1].

World drug situation

In its 1999 report [E/INCB/1999/1], INCB provided a regional analysis of world drug abuse trends and control efforts, so that Governments would be kept aware of situations that might endanger the objectives of the international drug control treaties.

Africa

In Africa, trafficking in and abuse of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances were increasingly linked to various civil conflicts (see PART ONE, Chapter II), augmenting drug problems, especially among children and youth. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Liberia, for example, child combatants were provided with drugs in order to induce them to carry out dangerous operations with impunity. Illicit drugs were also used to finance civil conflicts and the purchase of arms, as was the case in Angola and Rwanda.

The main drug trafficked and abused in Africa was cannabis, although methaqualone trafficking and abuse were serious problems in the eastern and southern parts of the region. Many countries continued to have problems in countering the illicit cultivation of, trafficking in and abuse of cannabis, the cultivation and distribution of which were used to generate supplementary income. Morocco remained a major source of cannabis resin destined for Western Europe, and cannabis cultivation continued in Egypt and in countries in Western Africa, such as Ghana and Senegal. Several Governments increased eradication efforts; Cote d'Ivoire, Egypt, Ghana, Kenya, Nigeria, Senegal and South Africa achieved good results.

Cocaine and heroin, as well as amphetamines, were becoming increasingly popular among drug abusers and traffickers. The consumption of cocaine, "crack" and heroin was principally an urban phenomenon confined to large cities. The increasing prevalence of the injection of heroin and other substances in some capital cities was believed to be a factor in the high rate of human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) infection and of cases involving acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS). In Southern and Western Africa, trafficking in and abuse of cocaine increased. In South Africa, there was an increase in trafficking in and abuse of "crack" and cocaine, and Cape Verde witnessed increasing drug abuse as a spill-over effect of drug trafficking. The increasing sophistication and flexibility of drug trafficking groups were a serious concern: in reaction to measures in Nigeria, for example, traffickers began using other African countries as transit for shipments to Europe and North America. Illicit drugs continued to be smuggled through Africa's major seaports, such as Mombasa in Kenya, Maputo in Mozambique, Durban in South Africa and Dar es Salaam in the United Republic of Tanzania, as well as through several ports in Western Africa. There were no indications that opium poppy was cultivated in Africa, but several countries, including Ghana, Kenya, Mauritius and Tanzania, were routes used by traffickers to transport heroin from Asia to Europe, North America and South Africa.

In several countries in Africa, self-medication, the sale of licit drugs through unregulated channels, the availability of fake drugs and their use by those segments of the population unable to buy from legitimate pharmacies contributed to the spread of psychotropic substance abuse. In Nigeria, more psychotropic substances were seized than in any other African country, and more depressants (benzodiazepines) were seized than in any other country in the world. The trafficking in and abuse of methaqualone remained a problem, mainly in Eastern and Southern Africa, and trafficking in and abuse of methylenedioxymethamphetamine (MDMA) ("ecstasy") increased in Western and Southern Africa.

INCB carried out missions to Cameroon, Kenya, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Mauritania in 1999. In Cameroon, national control over drugs and precursors was weak. The Board was concerned that pharmaceutical products containing controlled substances were sold without restrictions on street markets, and requested the Government to increase vigilance. Since cannabis cultivation had increased and important seizures of cannabis originating in Cameroon were made in Europe, the Government was encouraged to continue its measures against cannabis cultivation and to emphasize the dangers of its abuse. In Kenya, drug abuse and illicit trafficking had increased, and one development which caused concern was the abuse of heroin by injection. Both cannabis and khat were cultivated and abused. The Board urged the Government to enhance drug control efforts and to put in place stricter controls over precursors as required under the 1988 Convention. In the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the Board was pleased to note that neither illicit cultivation of drug crops nor illicit manufacture of drugs had been uncovered, that controls over the licit manufacture and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances were adequate, and that the Government had taken steps to improve the implementation of the 1988 Convention. After its mission to Mauritania, the Board expressed concern that the provisions of the 1961 and 1971 Conventions had not been applied, which indicated problems related to the control of psychotropic substances, and that a legal framework had never been introduced for monitoring the licit market for substances controlled by the treaties. It urged the Government to pass a bill on the control of the licit market for narcotic drugs, psychotropic substances and precursors.

As to regional cooperation, the Board welcomed the entry into force of the Southern African Development Community (SADC) protocol on combating illicit trafficking. It also welcomed the growing activities of SADC member States and of the secretariat of the Economic Community of West African States. Organizational changes were being finalized in the secretariat of the Organization of African Unity, where a drug control focal point was established. In January, Nigeria and Uganda signed a cooperation agreement on sharing information on illicit drug trafficking. Cape Verde and Senegal signed an agreement on co-operation in drug control matters and efforts to combat money-laundering. National Drug Control Coordinating Councils were established in Botswana, Malawi and Mozambique, enhancing subregional cooperation, cross-border controls, liaison and intelligence to counter drug trafficking.

Americas

Central America and the Caribbean

In Central America and the Caribbean, cannabis remained the most widely abused drug, and some countries, such as the Bahamas, reported a substantial increase in its abuse. Although it was illicitly cultivated in many parts of the region, mainly for local consumption, cannabis cultivated in Jamaica was destined for illicit markets in North America. While most countries reported either increased or stable levels of its trafficking, the Dominican Republic reported a substantial decrease.

The region was increasingly used to trans-ship substantial quantities of cocaine and cannabis from South America to the United States and Europe. The transit traffic increased the availability of cocaine in Central America and the Caribbean, and its abuse, as well as "crack" abuse, spread in a number of countries; however, it decreased in the Bahamas. Trafficking in and storage of cocaine hydrochloride and "crack", mainly from Colombia, continued unabated throughout the region. Cocaine seizures remained at the same level for the region as a whole, but the level varied from country to country. Haiti, where drug traffickers took advantage of the economic and political crisis (see p. 208), emerged as the main transit point for smuggling cocaine from Colombia into the United States. Employees of airlines and associated companies were found to be involved in drug trafficking, and regional Governments were urged to control areas, such as airports, through which illicit drug consignments often passed. Because of its proximity to cocaine producers in South America, Central America was vulnerable to the diversion of precursors, and those Governments were requested to ensure that the imported quantities were within the limits of their legitimate requirements.

Illicit cultivation of opium poppy continued only in isolated places in Guatemala, and reports of heroin abuse remained limited. Heroin originating in Colombia was seized mainly in Costa Rica and Panama, although small quantities were also seized in several Caribbean countries.

INCB sent missions to the Bahamas, Cuba and Guatemala in 1999. In the Bahamas, it called on the Government to strengthen control mechanisms to prevent misuse of the offshore banking system to launder money derived from drug trafficking, and encouraged it to maintain co-operation with neighbouring countries to combat illicit trafficking by sea. The Board encouraged Cuba to adopt comprehensive drug control legislation that would integrate all existing regulations and to focus on preventive measures. It also recommended that donor countries and relevant international organizations provide technical assistance to the Government, since traffickers took advantage of the strategic location of Cuba in the Caribbean to smuggle drugs through its waters. Guatemala, faced with problems involving transit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, had inadequate controls over those substances and precursors; therefore, the Board called on the Government to comply with the 1961 and 1971 Conventions.

The Board was concerned about the increasingly liberal approach of some Governments to the offshore banking and gambling industries in view of their potential for money-laundering. Most countries in the region had laws aimed at preventing money-laundering; the Board encouraged them to implement those laws effectively, and urged Governments that had not done so to introduce such legislation. As to regional co-operation, the Board noted the efforts of the Caribbean Governments to work together to reduce money-laundering and tax evasion in offshore banking centres. Subregional cooperation in drug control was enhanced within the framework of the Plan of Action on Drug Control Coordination and Cooperation in the Caribbean (Barbados Plan of Action).

North America

Cannabis remained the most popular drug of abuse in Canada, Mexico and the United States. The increasing popularity of hydroponically grown cannabis with a high tetrahydrocannabinol (THC) content in western Canada and in some parts of the United States was a major concern to law enforcement authorities. Seizure data indicated its movement from western Canada and Quebec to the United States, as well as from west to east in the United States. In addition, large quantities of cannabis were smuggled into Canada and the United States. The Board noted that the United States had issued new guidelines to ease the availability of cannabis for medical research, and that Canada had put forward a research plan on its use for medical purposes. INCB reiterated its position that the issue must be approached in a scientific way and that objective scientific research into medical use of cannabis should be carried out by the Governments concerned.

In Mexico, drug abuse was at a much lower level than in Canada and the United States; however, cocaine and heroin abuse increased, and the abuse of inhalants among street children and other vulnerable groups was of concern in large cities. In 1998, there was a decline in the amount of opium poppy that was destroyed and in the number of clandestine laboratories for illicit drug manufacture that were dismantled. Seizures of ephedrine and opium gum declined, as did seizures of cannabis, cocaine and heroin. Mexico strengthened its drug control efforts but it remained an important transit country for cocaine shipments bound for the United States, as well as a significant source of cannabis.

Drug abuse was at a lower level in Canada than in the United States. Cocaine abuse increased in some cities in Canada and it remained a major problem in many communities in the United States. The number of persons who abused heroin in the United States reportedly fell in 1998, and the number of emergency-room "episodes" involving heroin or morphine abuse stabilized between 1995 and 1997, after more than doubling between 1990 and 1995.

In the United States, methamphetamine was the most prevalent controlled synthetic substance clandestinely manufactured; the number of laboratory seizures almost doubled between 1996 and 1998, and its abuse and trafficking continued to increase. The consumption of methylphenidate for the treatment of attention deficit disorder remained at a very high level and the number of prescriptions for amphetamines had increased by 500 per cent since 1993. The Board reiterated its concern that vigilance should be exercised to prevent the inappropriate prescribing of methylphenidate and other stimulants. MDMA abuse, which had increased significantly from 1993 to 1997, was not as widespread as that of many other drugs. There continued to be reports in the United States of increased abuse of so-called club drugs: substances such as ketamine and flunitrazepam, as well as sodium oxybate and its precursor gamma-butyrolactone; therefore, the Board welcomed the United States decision to place ketamine in Schedule III of the Controlled Substances Act. The Board noted the slow progress made in Canada in controlling psychotropic substances and in participating in the efforts of the international community to monitor precursors.

Cooperation at the regional and international levels remained an important element of drug control strategies in the region. Mexico and the United States adopted "performance measures of effectiveness" to guide the implementation of the 1998 Bi-National Drug Strategy, and signed a joint declaration on reducing drug abuse at the Bi-National Demand Reduction Conference (Tijuana, Mexico, June). Joint cross-border operations and investigations by Canada and the United States included a project to improve the campaign against smuggling in the area of Lake Ontario. Mexico signed a bilateral agreement with Colombia aimed at improving the exchange of information and technology to combat drug trafficking.

In April, INCB sent a technical mission to Mexico to discuss the monitoring of scheduled chemicals and the measures taken by the Government against their diversion into illicit channels. The Board noted that the control of substances in Table I of the 1988 Convention functioned well; however, it urged the Government to establish a comprehensive regulatory framework to ensure implementation of the 1998 precursor control legislation.

South America

In South America as a whole, the potential production, productivity and availability of coca leaf for illicit purposes remained stable in 1999. Bolivia was on its way to achieving its goal of eradicating the cultivation of coca bush, and in Peru the total area under illicit cultivation decreased by more than 50 per cent between 1995 and 1998. In spite of those eradication efforts, the availability of coca leaf for the illicit manufacture of cocaine hydrochloride in South America and the supply of cocaine hydrochloride to illicit markets in Europe and North America were not significantly reduced. The achievements in reducing illicit coca bush cultivation in Bolivia and Peru were offset by increased production of coca leaf in Colombia. In that country, the deterioration of public safety and the fact that substantial illicit coca leaf production and cocaine manufacture took place in areas beyond government control were hampering efforts to fight illicit coca bush cultivation, coca leaf production and cocaine manufacture and trafficking. Colombia remained the world's leading cocaine producer and the country with the largest area under coca bush cultivation. Coca leaf was increasingly processed into cocaine paste in Peru and sent directly overseas, and cocaine was more widely available at low prices on illicit markets in that country. Colombia stepped up its opium poppy eradication efforts, causing sites for illicit cultivation to be abandoned in some areas, only to be replaced by new ones. Throughout South America, heroin abuse continued to be marginal, but had increased slightly.

Illicit trafficking in cocaine destined for Europe and North America continued unabated. New routes and methods were used to smuggle it out of South America as detection techniques became more sophisticated, and most international airports in the region and seaports of all countries, on both the Atlantic and the Pacific, were used. The routes used for illicit trafficking had diversified. Cocaine headed for Western Europe followed well-established paths via the Caribbean or Africa; however, countries in Central Asia, West Asia and Eastern Europe were increasingly used for trans-shipment to Western Europe. Seizures of controlled chemicals remained substantial and were increasing in South America.

In South America, cannabis remained the most common drug of abuse among young people aged 15 to 19 and was the most often reported drug of initiation. Data on the extent of its illicit cultivation were scarce. It continued to be produced mostly for local consumption, although consignments of cannabis produced in Brazil, Colombia, Guyana, Paraguay and Suriname were seized while being transported in neighbouring countries and in the Caribbean, Europe and North America. With few exceptions, authorities in South America seized increasing amounts of cannabis. South American Governments needed to remain vigilant to prevent the spread of the illicit cultivation of opium poppy and the illicit traffic in heroin. Seizures of opium poppy seeds and opium in Peru increased significantly in 1999.

One of the main concerns in South America remained the abuse of amphetamine-type stimulants in the form of anorectics manufactured by the pharmaceutical industry. Brazil was one of the countries most affected by the misuse of the prescription system for stimulants, and in Bolivia and Peru tranquillizers were the most often abused psychotropic substances, with prevalence close to that of cannabis. Stimulants and hallucinogens were abused to a considerably lesser extent.

Regional cooperation on drug abuse and illicit trafficking was developed by the members of the Andean Pact (Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Venezuela) and the Common Market of the Southern Cone (MERCOSUR) (Argentina, Brazil, Paraguay, Uruguay). Through Operation Millennium, which involved close cooperation and the exchange of information, particularly between Colombia, Ecuador and the United States, success against drug trafficking organizations was achieved, including the arrest of major organizers of drug traffic and money-laundering operations. With regard to national legislation, policy and action, Ecuador launched its National Strategy to Face Drugs, 1999-2003, and it was hoped that the economic difficulties and the social unrest in the country would not hinder its implementation, considering that drug traffickers increasingly used Ecuador as a base for their illicit operations. The Board, welcoming the results achieved by Bolivia in its programme to eradicate illicit coca bush cultivation, launched in 1998 as part of its Anti-Drug Strategy 1998-2002, called on donor countries to support Bolivia in its efforts. About 1,000 tons of coca leaf of Bolivian origin were estimated to be smuggled yearly into the northern Argentinian provinces of Jujuy and Salta, where the possession and consumption (chewing) of coca leaf in its natural form and the preparation of mate de coca (coca tea) were not considered by law as possession and consumption of a narcotic drug. The Board trusted that Argentina and Bolivia would deal with the problem of coca leaf smuggling.

Following an INCB technical mission to Bolivia in July, the Board called on the Government to avoid a situation in which coca leaf production, considered licit under its legislation, could result in coca leaf being diverted to supplement the diminishing illicit supply. The Board was of the view that the cultivation of coca leaf for chewing and drinking coca tea was contrary to the 1961 Convention. INCB also carried out a mission to Brazil in July. It encouraged the Government to continue its reform efforts by strengthening the capacity of the national sanitary surveillance agency to enforce registration requirements and prescription regulations and called on it to assume an active role in fostering cooperation among South American countries in drug-related matters, such as combating drug and chemical trafficking in the Amazon river basin. Regarding the control of precursors, Brazil seemed to have the required structure, but the financial and technical resources at its disposal remained insufficient to control the large chemical industry in the country.

Asia

East and South-East Asia

In 1999, there was a major reduction in the total area under illicit opium poppy cultivation in the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar, Thailand and Viet Nam. However, the abuse of opiates in East and South-East Asia remained prevalent in many countries, and their abuse by injection contributed to increases in the prevalence of HIV infection in Myanmar, Viet Nam and other countries. China, Malaysia and Thailand remained important illicit markets for heroin and served as transit points for heroin destined for illicit markets in other parts of the region, in North America and in Oceania. Data for 1998 showed a significant increase in the quantity of heroin seized in China, indicating a possible increase in the use of its trafficking route through that country and/or strengthened activities by the Chinese law enforcement authorities, as well as a possible increase in its abuse.

Significant illicit cultivation of cannabis continued to occur in Cambodia, Indonesia, the Philippines and Thailand. Cambodia became a major source of the cannabis found on the illicit market in countries inside the region and outside, primarily in Australia. Cannabis was also illicitly cultivated in remote, mountainous areas of the Philippines, despite efforts by law enforcement authorities to deal with the problem. Seizures of cocaine in the region increased in 1998, partly as a result of a large seizure that was made in the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region of China in December; however, the region did not appear to have a cocaine abuse problem.

The abuse of and trafficking in amphetamine-type stimulants spread quickly across the entire region. In the area of the Golden Triangle, facilities that once had been used exclusively for the refining of heroin were increasingly used for the manufacture of metamphetammine as well. China remained a major source of clandestinely manufactured amphetamine-type stimulants, which were available in urban areas and were widely abused by students. China and Myanmar remained the major sources of metamphetammine abused locally or exported to other countries in East Asia; it was also illicitly transported from the Philippines. Seizure data indicated that ephedrine, a chemical used in the manufacture of methamphetammine, continued to be smuggled out of China and India and into Myanmar. Since seizures of ephedrine of Indian origin increased on both sides of the border between India and Myanmar, the Board reiterated its call for increased cooperation between the countries in the region and those in South Asia, and welcomed the decision by China to introduce stricter controls over it. The abuse of MDMA ("ecstasy") was reported with increasing frequency; most of it was smuggled into East and South-East Asia after being illicitly manufactured in Europe, but some attempts had been made to manufacture it clandestinely in the region. China remained a source of amfepramone found on illicit markets in the Russian Federation and in various parts of Asia.

Regional cooperation and bilateral efforts continued. In February, representatives of the six countries in the Mekong area (Cambodia, China, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar, Thailand, Viet Nam) agreed to combat trafficking by strengthening border controls and training drug control officers. In June, INCB sent a technical mission to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and invited the Government to cooperate with other Governments in the region in matters involving international drug control. With regard to the abuse of and trafficking in amphetamine-type stimulants, the Board urged the Governments in the region to formulate and implement effective strategies to reduce demand for them, and to increase cooperation with each other in regulatory and law enforcement activities.

The Board carried out missions to Japan and Mongolia. Japan, where drugs were abused to a much lesser extent than in other developed countries, was not affected by heroin or cocaine abuse. However, the abuse of stimulants, especially among young people, was a matter of concern to the Government. In Mongolia, the abuse of and trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances were minimal, but the country was increasingly targeted by traffickers, particularly for the diversion and manufacture of ephedrine. Ephedra, the plant from which ephedrine was made, grew wild on the northern rim of the Gobi desert, and the Board noted with concern attempts by foreign investors to cultivate Ephedra and manufacture ephedrine without a licence.

South Asia

While cannabis and opium were traditionally the main drugs of abuse in South Asia, the abuse of heroin and synthetic drugs increased in 1999; however, the abuse of stimulants (cocaine and "ecstasy") was very limited. Because of the proximity of South Asia to the world's two main opiate-producing countries, Afghanistan and Myanmar, drug trafficking and abuse in the region were mainly transit-related; certain areas had emerged as major drug-trafficking centres and/or had witnessed a rapid deterioration of the trafficking or abuse situation.

Despite cannabis eradication campaigns in India, Nepal and Sri Lanka, illicit cultivation continued, particularly in remote and inaccessible areas. The illicit demand for cannabis resin from Nepal, which had a high THC content, rose in other countries and led to an increase in the cultivation of cannabis and trafficking in its resin and herb. It was estimated that 70 per cent of the cannabis cultivated in Nepal entered international routes. While the cannabis herb smuggled out of Nepal was mainly destined for India, the resin was shipped to Asia, Europe and North America. Sri Lanka was increasingly used as a transit point for cannabis and heroin from South Asia and South-West Asia.

Large quantities of heroin were smuggled out of Afghanistan through Pakistan and out of Myanmar and into South Asian countries, mainly to be shipped to Europe and North America but also abused in the region. Seizure data indicated an increase in trafficking in heroin from India to Africa, some of which was destined for the more profitable markets in the United States and Europe. The number of heroin abusers increased and was particularly high along the main routes and in major trafficking areas such as Mumbai in India and the south-western border area of Bangladesh with India. Because of the increasing abuse of heroin by injection, the number of HIV/AIDS cases rose in most countries. The supply of illicit opiates from South-West Asia continued, and new smuggling routes leading from Myanmar through India, mainly to markets overseas, were developed following intensified law enforcement activities in China and Thailand. The illicit cultivation of opium poppy and the production of opiates also took place in India and Nepal. Regarding licit opium production in India, there were reports of fraud involving licensed opium poppy growers.

The preparation Proxylon, containing a synthetic opioid used as an analgesic and cheaper than heroin, was increasingly abused as a substitute for heroin in north-east India. In Bangladesh, India and Nepal, the abuse of codeine-based cough medicines continued. In India, pharmaceutical preparations, used as an alternative to heroin, contained narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and were manufactured locally, readily available and cheaper than heroin.

The large-scale abuse of psychotropic substances, in particular benzodiazepines, continued in Bangladesh, India and Nepal. The pharmaceutical industry in India manufactured large amounts of psychotropic substances for medical purposes, and a number of them continued to be diverted from domestic distribution channels and were either abused in the country or smuggled outside. Methamphetamine tablets, illicitly manufactured in the Wa hill area of Myanmar, began to appear on the illicit market in India. In Sri Lanka, controls over psychotropic substances at the retail level had been lacking for a long time, resulting in their abuse as substitutes for, or in addition to, heroin.

With regard to regional cooperation, the Board welcomed the continuing bilateral cooperation efforts to prevent drug trafficking between India and its neighbouring countries, Bangladesh, Myanmar, Nepal and Pakistan.

West Asia

The abuse of opiates continued to rise in Afghanistan and Iran; in Pakistan, heroin abuse remained at a very high level and, although drug addiction was limited in most other countries in West Asia, increases were reported in a number of countries in the region (Azerbaijan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Lebanon, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, United Arab Emirates, Uzbekistan).

Approximately 75 per cent of the world production of opium took place in Afghanistan, and the large-scale illicit cultivation of opium poppy in that country spread to areas previously unaffected. The area under opium poppy cultivation exceeded 90,000 hectares in the 1998/99 growing season, increasing by over 40 per cent compared with the previous season. It was estimated that, due to expanded areas of cultivation and favourable weather conditions, the production of opium in 1999 reached a record level of about 4,600 tons. According to the latest survey, 97 per cent of the area under opium poppy cultivation was on territory controlled by the Taliban, whose commitment to ban opium poppy cultivation and heroin manufacture remained questionable, despite its decree calling for a ban on laboratories for processing heroin. Heroin manufacture had moved from Pakistan to Afghanistan. In Pakistan, the Government eradicated over 60 per cent of the opium poppy cultivation during the 1998/99 growing season; however, national law enforcement authorities encountered difficulties resulting from large-scale production of and trafficking in opiates in Afghanistan.

Trafficking in opiates in Afghanistan, Pakistan and member States of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) was organized by multinational trafficking groups based in Pakistan, as was trafficking in chemicals. Most countries in West Asia were used as transit points for opiates originating in Afghanistan and destined for Europe and, to a lesser degree, South Asia. While an increasing proportion was smuggled through Central Asia, the largest share continued to be transported through Iran to Turkey or from Pakistan to Iran and other countries in the Persian Gulf area before being sent to its final destination. Turkey remained the major transit point for heroin destined for Europe. Iran continued to intercept illicit consignments of opiates en route from Afghanistan to Turkey, CIS member States and other countries in Europe; more than 80 per cent of seizures of opium worldwide were carried out by Iranian authorities. The Caspian Sea was increasingly used to trans-ship large amounts of both opiates and cannabis from Afghanistan through Turkmenistan to the Russian Federation and other European countries.

Illicit opium poppy cultivation in countries in Central Asia (Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan) and the Caucasus (Armenia, Azerbaijan, Georgia) remained limited. However, the Board was concerned about the rapid spread of illicit crop cultivation and trafficking in and abuse of drugs, especially heroin, in both of those areas. Central Asia was used as a transit point to transport from east to west consignments of opiates and cannabis originating in Afghanistan, and chemicals used in the illicit manufacture of heroin were trafficked in the opposite direction.

Many countries in West Asia were used as transit points for the diversion of precursors, predominantly imported from or smuggled out of China, India and Europe. The quantity of seized acetic anhydride, the main precursor used in the illicit manufacture of heroin, rose substantially in Pakistan and the United Arab Emirates and remained large in Turkey. Heroin was increasingly smuggled through Turkey, where it was no longer manufactured, to Europe along the Balkan route. Seizures related to the transit traffic in heroin also increased in Israel, Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic. Drug trafficking through Pakistan and the countries in the Persian Gulf area continued unabated, and heroin abuse, in particular, sharply increased as Afghan refugees returned from Pakistan.

Cannabis remained the most frequently abused drug in West Asia. It continued to be illicitly cultivated and to grow wild on extensive areas in Afghanistan and Pakistan, where no eradication efforts were reported. Cannabis originating in Afghanistan and Pakistan was smuggled through many countries in the region, and seizures of resin from those two countries increased in Europe. The world's largest single area covered by wild-growing cannabis plants, estimated to be about 300,000 hectares, was in Kazakhstan, but limited illicit cultivation also occurred in the Palestinian Autonomous Areas and Israel, Jordan and Turkey. In Lebanon, efforts to eradicate its small-scale illicit cultivation continued.

While the extent of cocaine abuse and trafficking in the region was insignificant, in many countries seizures of cocaine increased. In Kazakhstan and Kyrgyzstan, the clandestine manufacture of methcathinone continued in small home laboratories. The principal precursor, ephedrine, was illicitly extracted from the Ephedra plant, which grew wild. There was increasing evidence of the abuse in Central Asia of MDMA that had been smuggled out of Europe. The large-scale smuggling of stimulants from Europe into the Persian Gulf area continued, as evidenced by seizures in transit countries such as Jordan, the Syrian Arab Republic and Turkey.

In April, an INCB mission visited Iran, where the situation with regard to drug abuse, in particular opiates, appeared to be deteriorating, and a lack of resources had prevented the authorities from dealing with the problem more effectively. The Board recommended that the assessment of the drug abuse situation be finalized and that the international community consider supporting appropriate projects to reduce illicit drug demand.

Regional cooperation and harmonized action on drug control was promoted by the Economic Cooperation Organization, including judicial cooperation in drug and money-laundering cases. The Board welcomed many new activities and drug control efforts among the countries in the eastern Mediterranean, as well as the first joint drug law enforcement operation involving Pakistan and Saudi Arabia and the signing by Pakistan of an extradition and judicial cooperation treaty with Egypt. Several West Asian countries signed new or revised existing memoranda of understanding or protocols on cooperation in drug control matters, or agreed with each other and other Governments and institutions outside the region to combat drug trafficking. The Board urged States in Central Asia and the Caucasus to accelerate the adoption of national drug control programmes, to make any necessary amendments to national drug control legislation and to strengthen their drug law enforcement activities. It welcomed the adoption in Uzbekistan of a comprehensive law for the control of narcotic drugs, psychotropic substances and precursors, and noted that Armenia, Azerbaijan, Tajikistan and Turkmenistan could enhance their control efforts by enacting comprehensive legislation on drug and precursor control. The Board was concerned that many countries in West Asia had not enacted legislation to identify and counter money-laundering activities, and that Lebanon was not taking steps to withdraw its reservation on the provisions against money-laundering in the 1988 Convention. It expressed concern that in many countries controls over the licit distribution of pharmaceutical products containing narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances were weak.

Europe

The availability of cannabis in Europe increased considerably in 1999. That was partly the result of intensified cannabis cultivation in Southern Europe, mainly Albania, and of soar-ing indoor cannabis cultivation in Western Europe, facilitated by the unrestricted sale of cannabis seeds and cannabis-growing accessories in so-called hemp shops and on the Internet. There were many web sites based in Europe, particularly in the Netherlands and the United Kingdom, offering to sell and deliver potent varieties of cannabis to almost any destination in the world. Its increased availability, coupled with greater tolerance towards the substance, had led to increases in abuse and an expanded market for the substance. The Board noted that it was the consensus of the international community to put cannabis under international control; its abuse should not be treated as harmless or inevitable, and Governments should emphasize its dangers in activities aimed at reducing illicit drug demand. The Board called on the Governments of all countries where indoor cultivation proliferated and where countermeasures had not been taken to deal with the problem. Albania had emerged as an important producer of cannabis, which was smuggled into Greece, Italy, Slovenia and other European countries. In Italy, seizures increased from 11 tons in 1996 to over 54 tons in 1998; it was estimated that 90 per cent of the cannabis herb trafficked in Slovenia was of Albanian origin and entered the country by sea. Belarus, Croatia and Lithuania reported increased illicit cultivation, while Slovakia and Slovenia reported a strong increase in trafficking in cannabis herb. Morocco remained a major source of the resin seized in Europe, despite the intensified activities of national law enforcement authorities. Colombia emerged as an important source of the cannabis herb sold on the illicit markets in Europe.

Heroin abuse declined in most Western European countries, but it became a growing problem in Eastern Europe, particularly along the main heroin trafficking routes. Eighty per cent of all the heroin seized in Europe passed along the Balkan route. Heroin from South-West Asia was smuggled through countries in Central Asia on its way to the Russian Federation or through countries in Eastern Europe on its way to European Union (EU) member States. Heroin seizures increased more than fivefold in 1998 in the Russian Federation. Countries in Central and Eastern Europe were increasingly used as storage points for drugs, heroin in particular, destined for sale in Western Europe. Heroin abuse in Western Europe was estimated to affect 1 million people, a figure that had stabilized during 1995-1997. Alarming trends were reported, however, including lower prices, enhanced purity and the spread of HIV in some Eastern European countries, attributable to the infection spreading among intravenous drug users.

Cocaine seizures throughout the region increased, and significant seizures, amounting to more than 1 ton each, were made in several countries in Western Europe, indicating that the illicit demand remained high. Illicit consignments were hidden on cargo ships travelling from South America to Spain, the leading point of entry. Seizures of illicit coca paste indicated that traffickers also attempted to manufacture cocaine in Europe. There was almost no information on the nature and patterns of cocaine abuse, attributable to the fact that its abusers rarely sought help in public centres for drug abuse treatment.

The abuse of synthetic drugs, in particular amphetamine and amphetamine-type stimulants, rose in almost all countries. In EU member States, the rise in the abuse of amphetamine-type stimulants was more pronounced than the rise in other substances, including cannabis, and stimulants emerged as the second most widely used illicit drug after cannabis, ahead of cocaine and heroin. A study undertaken in the United Kingdom revealed that young people considered drug abuse at dances as commonplace, the drugs most often used being MDMA ("ecstasy"), followed by amphetamine, cocaine and lysergic acid diethylamide (LSD). Europe became a major location for illicit drug manufacture, mostly amphetamine and amphetamine-type stimulants. The Netherlands remained the main country in which amphetamine and amphetamine-type stimulants were manufactured, but amphetamines were also manufactured in Belgium, France, Germany, Poland, Slovakia and the United Kingdom. Western Europe was the main supplier of MDMA for illicit markets worldwide, and the Netherlands remained an important source for MDMA and other amphetamine analogues, particularly for use in the United States. The increased abuse of "psychedelic mushrooms", containing psilocin and psilocybine, was reported in Europe, particularly in the Netherlands and Switzerland. Significant drug abuse problems had emerged in the Czech Republic, Hungary, Poland, Slovakia and Ukraine, which in the past had mainly been used by drug traffickers as transit countries.

INCB carried out missions to France, Germany, Hungary, Italy and the United Kingdom in 1999. In France, it appreciated the Government's strong stand against decriminalizing the non-medical use of drugs, and noted that the number of deaths caused by overdose had decreased since the introduction of drug substitution programmes; however, it was concerned about the diversion into illicit channels of buprenorphine, a substance used in those programmes, and its abuse by patients under treatment. In Germany, the Board was concerned by the decision to establish a legal basis for the operation of drug injection rooms, or so-called shooting galleries, where addicts could inject themselves with illicit substances. It reminded the Government that it could be in contravention of the relevant international treaties by facilitating illegal drug possession and use, as well as drug trafficking. Concern was also expressed over the possible proliferation of heroin experiments and the adoption of social policies, including heroin prescription, before projects had undergone evaluation. INCB urged Hungary, following the privatization of the manufacture of narcotic drugs, to ensure complete control over poppy straw cultivation and production, which were previously in the hands of a State-owned enterprise. In Italy, the Board welcomed the Government's rejection of measures that could lead to further decriminalization of drug abuse, and commended it for fighting organized crime and the linkage between Albanian and Italian organized crime. It remained concerned about the low level of morphine consumption for medical purposes, indicative of its insufficient availability for pain management. In the United Kingdom, the Board welcomed efforts to link the criminal justice system and treatment programmes and noted that, although for more than 70 years medical practitioners had been authorized to prescribe heroin legally, the number of addicts receiving heroin on prescription declined, which reflected the judgement of physicians that prescribing the drug to treat opioid addiction was of limited value.

The Board welcomed efforts made at the regional level to coordinate and strengthen legislation and measures to fight drug abuse and illicit trafficking, as well as national legislation and other measures adopted by many European countries. The Treaty of Amsterdam entered into force in May, enhancing the ability of the EU institutions to act in areas of drug control and providing for strengthened cooperation within the EU and at the international level. The Board took note of the draft action plan to combat drugs (2000-2004), which would improve coordination and ensure that the fight against drug abuse and trafficking would remain an EU priority. Many Governments stepped up their bilateral and sub-regional cooperation. In Eastern Europe, there were many bilateral meetings to promote joint efforts against illicit trafficking, and the network of agreements with authorities from Western Europe expanded. INCB welcomed the fact that Eastern European countries paid increased attention to the link between organized crime and drug trafficking, and appreciated the efforts of Governments and international agencies to assist Bosnia and Herzegovina in drug law enforcement. Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria, Croatia, Estonia, Latvia, Poland and Romania took action against money-laundering, and the Russian Federation and Slovakia adopted new drug control strategies. The Board was concerned over a draft law approved in Portugal, stipulating that the abuse and possession of drugs for personal use would no longer be criminal offences but only administrative offences, and over the Swiss programme and policy of heroin prescription, allowing the drug to be prescribed to opiate addicts. The Board made a technical mission to Estonia; it trusted that the Government would continue to strengthen its efforts to prevent drug abuse in response to the increasing availability of heroin on the illicit market.

Oceania

Cannabis remained the most widely abused narcotic drug in Oceania. The illicit cultivation of cannabis plants in Australia was expanding, and there was a noticeable shift from outdoor to indoor hydroponic cultivation. Australia was also a key market for cannabis cultivated in Cambodia and Papua New Guinea, where efforts to eradicate crops were hampered by the mountainous and swampy terrain.

In New Zealand, there was no significant cultivation of opium poppy for the illicit manufacture of heroin on a commercial scale; however, opium poppy was illicitly cultivated and consumed locally. Seizure data indicated that New Zealand was sometimes used as a transit point for South-East Asian heroin en route to Australia, where the purity level of the heroin available remained high, the average age of first-time use fell below 18 years and the heroin death rate increased. Heroin abuse was not a major problem in New Zealand, Papua New Guinea and the Pacific island States, but the abuse of opiate substitutes, such as morphine sulphate tablets and "homebake" derived from codeine-based tablets, was common in New Zealand.

Trafficking in and abuse of cocaine were minimal in all countries except Australia, where those trends increased. Seizures indicated that New Zealand and the Pacific island States were used as transit points for South American cocaine destined for Australia. Methamphetamine remained the principal drug manufactured in clandestine laboratories in Australia, and the Board was concerned that not all jurisdictions in Australia had enacted legislation covering the illicit use of precursor chemicals.

The Board welcomed the completion of the rapid assessment survey of drug abuse in Papua New Guinea, which confirmed that the level of cannabis abuse in the country was high. LSD was smuggled out of the United States and Europe and into New Zealand, where it was more widely abused than in many other developed countries.

Some Pacific island States were vulnerable to being exploited as offshore financial centres in money-laundering operations. The Board noted the efforts to improve cooperation among the countries in Asia and the Pacific in the fight against money-laundering and trusted that appropriate legislation and systems would soon be in place. Regarding national legislation and policy, the Board urged Australia not to permit the establishment of drug injection rooms, which would provide an outlet for illicit drug abuse and facilitate drug trafficking. It also commended New Zealand for banning drug-smoking paraphernalia, targeting doctors who excessively prescribed controlled drugs and calling for more research and information about drug problems among the Maori.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs [E/1999/28/Rev.1], adopted resolution 1999/33 without vote [agenda item 14 (d)].

Demand for and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1998/25 of 28 July 1998 and previous relevant resolutions,

Emphasizing that the need to balance the global licit supply of opiates against the legitimate demand for opiates for medical and scientific purposes is central to the international strategy and policy of drug abuse control,

Noting the fundamental need for international co-operation and solidarity with the traditional supplier countries in drug abuse control in general, and in the universal application of the provisions of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 in particular,

Having considered the Report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1998, in which the Board points out that in 1997 a balance between consumption and production of opiate raw materials was achieved, and noting that efforts were made by the two traditional supplier countries, India and Turkey, to maintain, together with other producing countries, the balance between supply and demand,

Noting the importance of opiates in pain relief therapy as advocated by the World Health Organization,

1. Urges all Governments to continue to contribute to the maintenance of a balance between the licit supply of and demand for opiate raw materials for medical and scientific needs, the achievement of which would be facilitated by maintaining, insofar as their constitutional and legal systems permit, support to the traditional supplier countries, and to cooperate in preventing the proliferation of sources of production of opiate raw materials;

2. Urges Governments of all producing countries to adhere strictly to the provisions of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 and to take effective measures to prevent illicit production or diversion of opiate raw materials to illicit channels, especially when increasing licit production;

3. Urges consumer countries to assess their licit needs for opiate raw materials realistically and to communicate those needs to the International Narcotics Control Board in order to ensure easy supply, and urges concerned producing countries and the Board to increase efforts to monitor the available supply and to ensure sufficient stocks of licit opiate raw materials;

4. Recommends that, at the request of traditional suppliers, consumer countries provide continued or new support to efforts to estimate yields and supplies of licit opiate raw materials in future years;

5. Commends the Board for its efforts in monitoring the implementation of the relevant Economic and Social Council resolutions and, in particular:

(a) In urging the Governments concerned to adjust global production of opiate raw materials to a level corresponding to actual licit needs and to avoid unforeseen imbalances between licit supply of and demand for opiates caused by the exportation of products manufactured from seized and confiscated drugs;

(b) In inviting the Governments concerned to ensure that opiates imported into their countries for medical and scientific use do not originate from countries that transform seized and confiscated drugs into licit opiates;

(c) In arranging informal meetings, during sessions of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, with the main States importing and producing opiate raw materials;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the text of the present resolution to all Governments for consideration and implementation.

UN action to combat drug abuse

UN International Drug Control Programme

The United Nations International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP), established in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 721] to promote the application of international drug control treaties and the development of drug control strategies, was a catalyst in stimulating action at the national, regional and international levels. The Executive Director described UNDCP activities in a report to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs [E/CN.7/2000/9]. Through a portfolio of technical cooperation programmes supported by a network of field offices located in key regions and countries, it promoted subregional cooperation and furthered bilateral cooperation and direct consultations between Governments. In mounting a global response to the drug problem, UNDCP mobilized specialized agencies and other UN entities, the international financial institutions, other intergovernmental organizations and civil society, particularly non-governmental organizations (NGOs). In addition to assisting States in complying with drug control treaties, it supported the international community in pursuing the objectives agreed upon by the General Assembly at its twentieth special session [YUN 1998, p. 1135], with particular attention given to assisting Governments in meeting the Assembly's objectives for improving judicial and law enforcement cooperation in countering the world drug problem. In that regard, training was provided to law enforcement personnel, national administrations, judges, magistrates, prosecutors and personnel working in the field of demand reduction.

UNDCP served as the substantive secretariat of INCB. It provided information to the Board in the preparation and release of its annual report and initiated technical assistance activities to better support INCB in monitoring the functioning of the international drug control system and the flow of precursors. In particular, greater emphasis was given to law enforcement and operational issues, such as the detection of smuggling or diversion of precursor chemicals, conducting investigations and sharing the information. UNDCP also served as the substantive secretariat to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its forty-second (1999) session and assisted it in preparing the Action Plan for the Implementation of the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 54/132 (see p. 1157). In cooperation with the UN specialized agencies and with regional organizations such as the European Monitoring Centre for Drugs and Drug Addiction and the Inter-American Drug Abuse Control Commission of the Organization of American States, UNDCP initiated a programme to assist Member States in adopting strategies for demand reduction, with a view to achieving results by 2008, as called for in the Political Declaration adopted by the Assembly in resolution S-20/2 [YUN 1998, p. 1136].

During the year, the financial situation of UNDCP continued its upward trend. The income of the UNDCP Fund increased by 35.2 per cent during 1998-1999 to reach $139.7 million. The improved financial situation enabled it to support the expansion of programmes, particularly those related to the follow-up to the Assembly's twentieth special session.

UNDCP strengthened its presence in key countries and regions, such as Iran, the Russian Federation, South Africa and the States of Central Asia. The thrust of the operational activities was to support national efforts and initiatives, giving attention to activities to reduce or eliminate illicit cultivation of narcotic crops through alternative development, to strengthening national capacities in demand reduction and to institution-building, particularly through the adoption of national drug control master plans and the establishment of coordinating and planning entities.

The Programme supported Member States in establishing a series of business plans aimed at meeting the commitment made at the Assembly's special session to eliminate or significantly reduce illicit cultivation of opium poppy, coca bush and cannabis by 2008. As a follow-up to the Action Plan on International Cooperation on the Eradication of Illicit Crops and on Alternative Development, adopted in Assembly resolution S-20/4 E [YUN 1998, p. 1148], UNDCP drew up a four-year programme for alternative development, designed to develop and systematize lessons learned and best practices arising from the alternative development projects carried out around the world. In response to the Action Plan and Commission resolution 42/3 (see p. 1165), it initiated the illicit crops monitoring programme with the support of the European Space Agency, focusing on the six countries accounting for the bulk of the illicit cultivation of opium poppy and coca bush: Afghanistan, Bolivia, Colombia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar and Peru. With regard to the Action Plan against Illicit Manufacture, Trafficking and Abuse of Amphetamine-type Stimulants and Their Precursors, adopted in resolution S-20/4 A [YUN 1998, p. 1139], the UNDCP laboratory continued its profiling and characterization of amphetamines and methamphetamines and their precursors.

UNDCP worked with the Joint United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (UNAIDS) to prevent the risk of HIV infection by preventing drug abuse. Programmes targeting drug abusers and HIV/AIDS were implemented in Brazil and Viet Nam and initiated in Central Asian States. The joint data-sharing project between UNDCP, Interpol and the World Customs Organization became operational at the beginning of the year; the established data pool would be used for preparing analyses of trafficking trends to be made available to States in order to improve their capacity to formulate, refine and evaluate law enforcement countermeasures. UNDCP continued to promote inter-agency cooperation, especially at the field level, in an effort to mobilize the agencies of the UN system to include drug control issues in their work programmes. Several initiatives were undertaken and there was a marked trend towards multi-agency joint initiatives, such as a four-year project implemented by Brazil in cooperation with UNAIDS, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) on the prevention of drug abuse and HIV/AIDS, and a project involving health promotion and drug abuse preventive education in schools in Bolivia, carried out with the cooperation of UNICEF, the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), UNESCO and the World Health Organization (WHO).

UNDCP continued its programme to improve the performance of national drug-testing laboratories in providing accurate results to support law enforcement, judicial and health authorities. In 1999, it assisted 21 drug-testing laboratories in 14 countries and organized training courses for drug analysts from 21 countries. Research activities included participation in a new initiative on a global study of illegal drug markets, which would analyse 20 illegal urban markets in different regions of the world.

The Executive Director outlined UNDCP activities in 1999 on a regional basis, as summarized below.

Africa south of the Sahara

In 1999, UNDCP developed its programme framework for Africa, which set out drug control objectives adapted to the needs of the different subregions. Two five-year programmes for West Africa and Nigeria were developed under the programme framework, to be initiated in 2000. UNDCP prepared the draft integrated drug control programme for Nigeria (for the period 1999-2003) on the basis of the national master plan drawn up by the Government with its assistance; it also participated in the high-level fact-finding expert mission undertaken by the European Commission and the United States to support Nigeria in its drug control efforts and in countering money-laundering and organized crime. During the year, UNDCP completed 10 technical assistance projects, and 15 new projects were integrated into priority programmes for East, Southern and West Africa. It also fostered close working relations between regional organizations and African Governments in implementing regional drug control action plans: in April, UNDCP and the Southern African Development Community (SADC) signed a memorandum of understanding to promote joint programming and coordination in priority sectors of drug control and support the implementation of the SADC regional drug control action plan. The UNDCP technical assistance programme for West African States, completed in 1999, contributed to the establishment of a drug control unit in the secretariat of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) and a coordinating body for drug control in each of the 16 ECOWAS member States. The new regional five-year programme for West Africa was finalized.

With regard to prevention and reduction of drug abuse, UNDCP provided advisory services and training to several regional and national NGOs and community-based organizations in 20 countries in East and Southern Africa, and new demand reduction activities with particular emphasis on prevention in schools and among youth were initiated in Kenya and Madagascar. In South Africa, it supported the establishment of 10 community centres for counselling, treatment and rehabilitation of drug abusers, the training of staff and the provision of equipment. Two other projects for creating community-based resource centres against drug and alcohol addiction in four countries in Southern Africa were finalized and submitted for funding. In West Africa, UNDCP supported the undertaking of rapid drug abuse assessment surveys in Cote d'Ivoire, Ghana, Nigeria and Senegal; rapid assessment surveys were also initiated in Angola, Chad and Gabon. To address the linkage between drug abuse, HIV and AIDS, UNDCP and UNAIDS initiated a process to enhance field-level cooperation between experts in drug control and HIV, particularly in East, Southern and West Africa.

Two regional programmes aimed at suppressing illicit trafficking were carried out by UNDCP in cooperation with the World Customs Organization in East and Southern Africa, which resulted in improved communication between law enforcement authorities within and outside the regions. UNDCP completed the implementation of a regional law enforcement training programme in East Africa that provided basic training in the identification and investigation of drugs, as well as specialized training for border, airport and seaport control, to more than 100 law enforcement officers, mainly from Kenya, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania and from Indian Ocean island States.

North Africa and the Middle East

In the Middle East, UNDCP initiated cooperation between countries and territories through technical meetings, leading to a commitment to subregional cooperation in drug control. The first phase of a subregional drug control programme was initiated following meetings with heads of State and key government ministers. UNDCP assisted the Palestinian Authority in drafting drug control legislation to comply with the international drug control treaties, and provided training to social workers in the field of demand reduction. In the areas under Palestinian jurisdiction, it supported the upgrading of the Anti-Narcotics Administration through the provision of a laboratory and equipment for use in drug searches, and through the training of law enforcement officers. In Israel, it assisted the authorities in the establishment of a comprehensive anti-money-laundering framework.

Assistance was provided to Egypt and Lebanon to conduct an assessment study of drug abuse patterns. In Lebanon, UNDCP, in cooperation with others, completed the second phase of its programme in the Bekaa valley, aimed at sustaining the eradication of illicit opium cultivation, and initiated a multisectoral drug control programme of assistance to law enforcement agencies for the suppression of illicit trafficking.

Central and Eastern Europe

In 1999, UNDCP cooperation with the Russian Federation was enhanced, with the opening of a regional office in Moscow in July to provide direct support in the implementation of a comprehensive cooperation programme. In response to requests of Governments of the region affected by illicit trafficking from Afghanistan, UNDCP prepared a programme to support the drug interdiction efforts of the Russian Border Guard on the Afghan-Tajik border and thereby stem the increasing flow of drugs. In Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania, a new subregional school-based programme to prevent drug abuse was launched. In Central Europe, over 500 health professionals in five countries were trained in modern techniques for treating drug addiction. The drug law enforcement programme for Bulgaria, Romania and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, undertaken jointly by UNDCP and the EU, provided training in drug law enforcement skills to over 250 police and customs officers; drug-scenting dogs were also supplied and trained. In Bosnia and Herzegovina, two drug law enforcement projects assisted in training and equipping anti-narcotics units.

South Asia

UNDCP co-organized a regional technical workshop in New Delhi, India, in June, on the prevention of HIV/AIDS among drug abusers. In collaboration with the International Labour Organization (ILO), it provided support to India in launching an intervention aimed at reducing and preventing drug abuse among the general population, high-risk groups and drug addicts on a nationwide scale. During the year, the capacity of 18 NGOs in 10 Indian cities was strengthened, and a total of 286 persons from NGOs were trained for improved services to 25,000 recovering drug abusers and their families. In Bangladesh and Nepal, the UNDCP technical assistance programme covering law enforcement, preventive education, treatment and rehabilitation was to be completed at the end of 1999. A new programme of assistance to Nepal covering demand and supply reduction and strengthening institutional ca-capacity was finalized, and a programme for Bangladesh, with emphasis on law enforcement and demand reduction, was developed. In Sri Lanka, activities were initiated to strengthen the collection of data on drug abuse, prevention, treatment and rehabilitation programmes. UNDCP strengthened cross-border cooperation in drug control between the different law enforcement agencies in Bangladesh, India and Myanmar. The UNDCP regional programme for precursor control in South Asia provided assistance to Governments in preventing the diversion of precursors to illicit traffic.

East Asia and the Pacific

UNDCP supported the countries of East Asia in their drug control efforts through the subregional action plan covering Cambodia, China, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar, Thailand and Viet Nam. Governments in the region benefited from UNDCP assistance in enacting and implementing drug control legislation in line with the international drug control treaties. UNDCP assisted the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Viet Nam and the South Pacific countries in adopting national drug control plans. It conducted a training workshop in Fiji on master plans for selected Pacific countries, in collaboration with the South Pacific Forum, to increase the understanding of the drug problem in the region and to assist in developing national drug control plans.

The subregional programme to develop community, national and subregional capabilities to reduce drug abuse and deal with related social problems among selected highland ethnic minority groups reached the final stage of implementation. UNDCP started another subregional programme aimed at improving the capacity of governmental and non-governmental institutions to deal with emerging drug abuse problems among high-risk groups. Programme activities in 1999 included a joint intercountry training seminar on the assessment of high-risk groups for participants from Cambodia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar and Viet Nam, and a seminar on the development of a drug abuse assessment methodology for use in schools for participants from drug control coordinating agencies. A regional training programme on addiction rehabilitation and prevention in the workplace was developed in cooperation with ILO. In the Lao People's Democratic Republic, a national project was launched to activate the Drug Demand Reduction Resource Centre as a focal point for coordinating and providing information and training on demand reduction. In Viet Nam, the demand reduction projects under the country programme were put into operation, and in Myanmar, activities to reduce drug abuse and the related risk of HIV infection were initiated in Kachin State. Training materials were provided to groups involved in teaching about drug abuse and HIV/AIDS. UNDCP supported Papua New Guinea in undertaking a drug abuse rapid assessment survey.

Alternative development programmes to follow the elimination of illicit crops were elaborated in the three opium-producing countries—the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar and Viet Nam. UNDCP provided assistance to States in implementing law enforcement projects covering precursor control, law enforcement training, gathering and exchange of information, and the development of operational procedures. During the year, UNDCP completed two sub-regional law enforcement projects to strengthen cross-border cooperation along the borders between China and Myanmar, and assisted the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam in strengthening their law enforcement capacity, especially border controls.

West and Central Asia

In 1999, UNDCP assisted countries of the region in mounting a collective response to the threat posed by illicit drugs from Afghanistan, which accounted for more than 75 per cent of world illicit opium production. It elaborated a new drug control programme for Afghanistan, incorporating ongoing pilot projects in alternative development and demand reduction, and developed a programme of assistance for countries bordering Afghanistan, to contain the flow of opiates to other countries. UNDCP maintained a dialogue with the Taliban authorities in Afghanistan, urging them to pursue a more effective drug control policy. The second meeting under the memorandum of understanding on subregional drug control cooperation in Central Asia was held in Kyrgyzstan in October. The agreement, signed by the Russian Federation, the Central Asian States, UNDCP and the Aga Khan Development Network, provided a framework for regional cooperation. In the context of the regional cooperation programme, UNDCP assisted Kyrgyzstan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan in countering illicit trafficking from Afghanistan, and two new projects were formulated to strengthen border controls in Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan. UNDCP also initiated a regional programme for the control of precursors to prevent their flow to Afghanistan for heroin production.

Within the framework of a memorandum of understanding signed with the Economic Cooperation Organization (ECO), UNDCP launched a programme aimed at coordinating drug control activities between ECO member States, including Afghanistan, Azerbaijan, Iran, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Pakistan, Tajikistan, Turkey, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan. In conjunction with UNAIDS, it launched four new drug abuse prevention programmes in Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan to complement an ongoing project in Kazakhstan. In the Caucasus region, a memorandum of understanding on cooperation in drug control and activities against money-laundering was signed in June by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Armenia, Georgia and Iran and by the UNDCP Executive Director.

A high-level UNDCP appraisal mission to Turkey, conducted from 31 October to 7 November, assessed the drug control situation in the country with a view to preparing a new drug control programme. UNDCP opened an office in Iran, where a comprehensive drug control programme was signed in June, involving UNDCP support in supply and demand reduction, in community mobilization for demand reduction and in the development of legislation. A new programme for Pakistan was launched to strengthen national law enforcement capacities, promote cooperation between Iran and Pakistan and extend cooperation with the Persian Gulf States.

Latin America and the Caribbean

In 1999, UNDCP assistance focused on the implementation, in Bolivia, Colombia and Peru, of three business plans aimed at the elimination of illicit drug crops through alternative development. Covering the period 1998-2003, they comprised 18 projects, 12 of which were initiated in 1999. UNDCP supported the implementation of the Barbados Plan of Action for Drug Control Coordination and Cooperation in the Caribbean by functioning as a source of information and technical assistance, and continued to mobilize civil society in the area of demand reduction. A memorandum of understanding was signed with the Caribbean Development Bank to support drug control initiatives in the region. Law enforcement agencies were upgraded, and Bolivia, Brazil and Colombia received specialized support in precursor control.

With few exceptions, drug control action in Latin America and the Caribbean was coordinated at the national level by commissions encompassing government entities responsible for health, education, law enforcement and development issues; UNDCP attempted to upgrade their effectiveness in elaborating drug control policies to enhance managerial, advocacy and fund-raising capacities. In Bolivia, Colombia and Ecuador, UNDCP initiated projects to strengthen national drug councils' efforts to coordinate and implement national drug control policies. In Peru, it supported a balanced programme approach focusing on the elimination of illicit crops, on drug abuse prevention and reduction and on the strengthening of the national drug control council. With regard to drug abuse prevention and reduction, in Peru, UNDCP supported school-based prevention under the integrated programme in primary education. In Bolivia, it initiated a school-based preventive education programme aimed at training teachers and parents' associations; and in Colombia, it completed four programmes aimed at preventing drug abuse, particularly among youths. The first phase of a UNDCP prevention programme with emphasis on HIV/AIDS was completed in Brazil. Over 67 governmental and non-governmental institutions were involved in producing relevant baseline data, providing training and strengthening treatment and rehabilitation capacities. Given the dimensions of the HIV/AIDS problem in Brazil, a second phase of the programme was initiated, with UNDCP support and financing by the World Bank, to control and prevent the AIDS epidemic. At the subregional level, UNDCP promoted common methods and standards for epidemiological surveillance under a project based on the memorandum of understanding on drug control co-operation signed by Argentina, Bolivia, Chile, Peru, Uruguay and UNDCP. As a result, the five countries established drug abuse information systems allowing cross-country comparisons of prevalence, incidence and trends.

The business plans developed with UNDCP assistance for Bolivia, Colombia and Peru targeted the elimination of illicit drug crops through alternative development. As a result of the combined impact of UNDCP projects, 13,800 farm families benefited from technical assistance through rural infrastructure and social services designed to create sustainable economic opportunities to earn a legal income, thereby reducing their dependence on income from illicit crops. Under the business plan for Peru, projects were initiated to cover major coca-growing areas. Improvements were introduced in growing traditional crops, product quality was upgraded and business-oriented management practices were applied in agro-industrial enterprises. Under the business plan for Bolivia, an agroforestry programme was enlarged to promote alternative development activities, and environmentally sound and sustainable agroforestry management plans and practices were introduced. UNDCP assisted Colombia in establishing a national system for monitoring illicit drugs and providing information on the illicit cultivation of narcotic crops, on eradication efforts and on progress in alternative development. It provided support to law enforcement agencies, in particular the police, customs and judiciary and forensic laboratories, in Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, Mexico, Central America and the Caribbean region.

Administrative and budgetary matters

Programme and support budgets

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs, at its March session (see p. 1187), had before it a report of the UNDCP Executive Director [E/CN.7/1999/13] on the proposed revised biennial programme budget for 1998-1999 for the UNDCP Fund, amounting to $115,004,900. The difference between the proposed revised programme budget and the initial programme budget, approved by the Commission in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1285], was $4,502,900, an increase of 4 per cent, which reflected the expanded UNDCP work programme as a result of the General Assembly's twentieth special session, as well as UNDCP experience in implementing drug control activities in the various regions since the preparation of the initial programme budget. In financial terms, the net result of the changes would be a shift of expenditure from supply reduction to demand reduction and a modest increase in intersectoral activities. The report focused on a description of those elements that had been changed, compared with the approved budget, and on the reasons for the revision.

The Commission also considered the UNDCP Executive Director's report on the proposed revised biennial support budget for 1998-1999 for the UNDCP Fund [E/CN.7/1999/12]. The Executive Director stated that the initial support budget for 1998-1999 had been revised from $34,292,200 to $34,065,700, reflecting a decrease of $226,500, which included volume increases (for controllable elements) of $3,644,800 (10.6 per cent) and cost decreases (arising from changes in costs, prices and exchange rates) of $3,871,300 (11.2 per cent). The revised biennial support budget for 1998-1999 proposed an increase for delivering new programme activities and increased implementation of technical cooperation. In parallel with the reorientation of UNDCP following the Assembly's twentieth special session, it was proposed that the organizational reforms launched in 1998 should be continued. They involved the consolidation of decentralization, including adjustments in the field offices and enhanced arrangements for accountability and executive management through strengthening the Office of the Executive Director. Both the revised biennial support budget and the revised biennial programme budget were supported by the UNDCP Fund, which experienced a positive turnaround in 1998 as the result of an increase in contributing countries and in cost-sharing contributions, providing for a diversification of the funding base. Issues of concern were the stagnation of general-purpose resources used to fund biennial support budget and programme activities, as increases were attributed primarily to special-purpose contributions, and the lack of income predictability, as donors preferred to make contributions on an annual basis.

Also before the Commission was the Executive Director's report on the proposed outline for 2000-2001 for the UNDCP Fund [E/CN.7/1999/11]. The proposed outline amounted to $213,416,400, an increase of $60,151,400 compared with the revised budget for 1998-1999. It was supported by estimates of the financial situation for 2000-2001. Income was estimated at $175,000,000 for 2000-2001, as compared with the estimate of $148,210,000 for 1998-1999. The Fund balance was expected to decline from $55,421,400, as at 31 December 1999, to $17,005,000, as at 31 December 2001, a level appropriate for the operation of UNDCP. The increase in income was anticipated on the basis of positive results achieved during 1998-1999, attributed to the momentum created by the Assembly's twentieth special session and initiatives launched by the Executive Director. The estimate of $230,421,400 in resources available in the outline for 2000-2001 reflected an increase of $21,735,000, compared with the revised estimate for 1998-1999. The increase was attributed to a higher opening balance and an estimated increase in income of $26,790,000, particularly special-purpose income.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) considered the Executive Director's reports and issued its comments thereon in March [E/CN.7/1999/14].

By a 24 March resolution [E/1999/28/Rev.1 (res. 42/8)], the Commission endorsed the revised resource allocation for programme activities amounting to $115,000,000 for 1998-1999 funded by the UNDCP Fund; it approved the amount of $34,065,700 for the revised 1998-1999 support budget for programme support to field offices and headquarters, as well as management and administration, and the amount of $4,199,300 for the revised 1998-1999 support budget for programme support to agencies. It also took note of the outline for the 2000-2001 biennium, totalling $213,416,400 for the Fund, which provided the basis for an initial budget for 2000-2001.

At its reconvened forty-second session on 30 November, the Commission considered further reports on administrative and budgetary matters.

In an October report [E/CN.7/1999/17], the UNDCP Executive Director stated that the final biennial support budget for 1998-1999 amounted to $34,843,500 as compared to the revised support budget of $34,065,700. The difference between the approved revised budget and the proposed final budget was due to a decrease in costing adjustments of $59,800 (0.1 per cent) and an increase in volume changes of $837,600 (2.4 per cent). The initial biennial support budget for 2000-2001 amounted to $36,181,200, an increase of $1,337,700 over the proposed final biennial support budget for 1998-1999. There was a volume decrease of $1,544,500 as compared to the previous biennium and a cost increase of $2,882,200. The report noted that UNDCP had adopted the harmonized budget model used by other UN funds and programmes, including the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), UNICEF and UNFPA.

In his report containing the proposed final biennial programme budget for 1998-1999 and the proposed initial biennial programme budget for 2000-2001 for the Fund [E/CN.7/1999/18], the UNDCP Executive Director stated that total estimated programme expenditure for 1998-1999 was calculated to reach $91.7 million, or 80 per cent of the originally approved budget. On that basis, UNDCP projected that total expenditure for 2000-2001 would reach $125.6 million, or 80 per cent of the proposed budget of $157 million. Compared to the previous biennium, the proposed programme budget represented an increase of 37 per cent. Programme priorities for 2000-2001 were determined on the basis of Assembly resolutions S-20/2 [YUN 1998, p. 1136] and S-20/4 A-E [ibid., p. 1139]. The Commission was urged to agree to a higher budget to maintain the momentum in programme delivery reached during 1999.

In September [E/CN.7/1999/22], the Executive Director submitted to the Commission a report on the activities funded by the UNDCP Fund during 1998-1999.

In a November report [E/CN.7/1999/20], ACABQ commented on the UNDCP budget report, as well as the report on UNDCP activities funded by the Fund during 1998-1999 and the Secretariat report on the implications of instituting a results-based budget for the Fund (see p. 1186).

By a 1 December resolution [res. 42/10], the Commission endorsed the final resource allocation for programme activities in the amount of $91,722,900 for 1998-1999 and the programme and budget strategy for 2000-2001; it further endorsed the initial resource allocation for programme activities in the amount of $157,011,500 for 2000-2001 under the Fund. It also approved an appropriation of $34,843,500 for the final 1998-1999 support budget and of $36,181,200 for the initial 2000-2001 support budget, both funded under the UNDCP Fund.

Review of UNDCP

During the general debate at the forty-second session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, representatives remarked that the General Assembly's twentieth special session had adopted a balanced approach between supply and demand reduction, established specific objectives and target dates, and given new mandates to UNDCP to assist Governments in translating their commitments into action at the national, regional and international levels.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs [E/1999/28/Rev.1], adopted resolution 1999/30 without vote [agenda item 14 (d)].

Review of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme: strengthening the United Nations machinery for international drug control within the scope of the existing international drug control treaties and in accordance with the basic principles of the Charter of the United Nations

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting that the General Assembly, at its twentieth special session, conferred additional mandates on the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and strengthened both its role as the global forum for international cooperation in combating the world drug problem and its functions as the governing body of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and as a treaty organ,

Stressing the need to enhance the functioning of the Commission to enable it to discharge its new mandates emanating from the twentieth special session of the General Assembly, at which Member States were called upon to report biennially to the Commission on their efforts to meet the goals and targets for 2003 and 2008 set out in the Political Declaration adopted by the Assembly at the special session, on 10 June 1998,

Noting that the twentieth special session of the General Assembly has been designated as a major global conference within the framework of the United Nations system and that follow-up will be reviewed in that context,

Recognizing the crucial role of the International Narcotics Control Board in monitoring the implementation of the international drug control treaties,

Noting with concern that the low level of contributions to the Fund of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme has adverse consequences for the ability of the Programme to fulfil its mandates and to respond to emerging priority needs,

Reiterating the need to strengthen inter-agency cooperation and coordination within the United Nations system to counter the world drug problem,

Recalling its resolution 1997/37 of 21 July 1997, in which the Secretary-General was requested to convene a high-level expert group to review the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and to strengthen the United Nations machinery for international drug control,

Commending the work carried out by the High-level Expert Group to Review the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and to Strengthen the United Nations Machinery for International Drug Control, and expressing appreciation for its report and comprehensive recommendations,

I. Enhancing the functioning of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs

1. Decides that the normative functions of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs should be made distinct from its role as governing body of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and that, to that end, the agenda of the Commission should be structured in two distinct segments, as follows:

(a) A normative segment, during which the Commission would discharge its treaty-based and normative functions, including mandates received from the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, and deal with emerging drug control issues;

(b) An operational segment, during which the Commission would exercise its role as the governing body of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and consider issues related to the provision of policy guidance to the Programme;

2. Recommends that the Commission convene, whenever appropriate, ministerial-level segments of its sessions to focus on specific themes related to the follow-up to the twentieth special session of the General Assembly, and requests the Commission at its forty-third session to consider the timing of and the theme for any such ministerial-level segment;

3. Decides that, with effect from the year 2000, the Commission should, at the end of its session, elect its Bureau for the subsequent session and encourage it to play an active role in the preparations for the regular as well as the informal inter-sessional meetings of the Commission, so as to enable the Commission to provide continuous and effective policy guidance to the Programme. The Chairman should, whenever appropriate, invite the chairmen of the five regional groups to participate in the meetings of the Bureau;

II. Enhancing the functioning of the International Narcotics Control Board

1. Invites the Secretary-General to provide the International Narcotics Control Board with resources commensurate with its mandates emanating from the international drug control treaties and from the twentieth special session of the General Assembly;

2. Encourages the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the President of the International Narcotics Control Board to continue their mutual efforts to develop closer cooperation in order to take full advantage of the potential synergies between the Board and the Programme;

3. Invites Member States and the World Health Organization, when selecting candidates for the International Narcotics Control Board, to ensure the necessary multidisciplinary expertise and the required independence and impartiality for the effective discharge of the responsibilities of the Board;

III. Strengthening the financing of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme

1. Recommends that a sufficient share of the regular budget of the United Nations be allocated to the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to enable it to fulfil its mandates;

2. Urges all Governments to provide the fullest possible financial support to the Programme by widening its donor base and increasing voluntary contributions, in particular general-purpose contributions;

3. Requests the Executive Director, in pursuance of Commission resolution 10(XXXIX) of 25 April 1996, to continue his efforts to widen the donor base and increase voluntary contributions to the Fund of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme;

4. Invites Member States, as beneficiaries of technical assistance provided by the Programme, to contribute through an agreed cost-sharing mechanism to the financing of that assistance;

5. Encourages the Executive Director to explore ways and means to obtain additional funds from the private sector and non-governmental organizations;

6. Requests the Executive Director to analyse the implications of instituting a results-based budget for the Fund of the Programme, including the identification of possible performance indicators, taking into account the practices of other funds and programmes of the United Nations system, and to report to the Commission at its reconvened forty-second session;

7. Recommends that the budget of the Fund of the Programme continue to be harmonized with the budgets of other funds and programmes of the United Nations system;

8. Requests the Secretary-General and the Executive Director, with the assistance of the Chairman of the High-level Expert Group to Review the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and to Strengthen the United Nations Machinery for Drug Control, to continue to explore innovative means of increasing the resources for drug control programmes, including the creation of a global drug facility, for example, along the lines of the Global Environment Facility, and to report thereon to the Commission at its forty-third session;

IV. Framework for inter-agency cooperation and coordination

1. Recommends that the Administrative Committee on Coordination ensure that the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control develops into a strategic planning tool and that drug issues are considered in the formulation of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework;

2. Also recommends that Member States report on the implementation of measures arising from the twentieth special session of the General Assembly in line with the Political Declaration adopted at the special session and consider the world drug problem as a cross-cutting issue in the context of the integrated and coordinated follow-up to major United Nations conferences and summits;

3. Further recommends that Member States ensure that drug issues—especially demand reduction—are regularly included in the agenda of the governing bodies of the Joint United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Population Fund, the International Labour Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization and other interested agencies;

4. Invites the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to increase its cooperation with United Nations agencies working in the field of development in implementing alternative development programmes;

5. Calls for a significant increase in cooperation between the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the United Nations Development Programme, in view of the special role of the latter body as a coordinator for development activities within the United Nations system, and to that effect recommends that:

(a) Drug-related indicators be jointly developed by the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the United Nations Development Programme for inclusion in the Human Development Report of the United Nations Development Programme;

(b) United Nations resident coordinators, in close consultation with Governments, give higher priority to the reduction of the demand for and supply of illicit drugs;

6. Requests the Executive Director to continue his efforts, in cooperation with Member States, to forge closer cooperation with regional and international financial institutions engaged in the field of development, in order to secure increased funding for drug-related activities as proposed by the High-level Expert Group to Review the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and to Strengthen the United Nations Machinery for Drug Control, and to encourage those institutions, in particular the World Bank, to accord higher priority to funding such activities;

V. Operations of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme

1. Encourages the Executive Director to strengthen further the information strategy of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme along the lines suggested by the High-level Expert Group to Review the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and to Strengthen the United Nations Machinery for Drug Control;

2. Requests the Programme to strengthen its evaluation capacity, as proposed by the High-level Expert Group, so as to focus more on the medium- and long-term impact of projects rather than on the completion of the project process.

In response to the Council's resolution, the Secretariat submitted to the Commission at its reconvened forty-second session an October note [E/CN.7/1999/19] that analysed the implications of instituting a results-based budget for the UNDCP Fund, including the identification of possible performance indicators and taking into account the practices of other UN funds and programmes. The note outlined a proposed course of action by the Secretariat, in which it proposed to adapt the current budget and performance reporting system to make it more effective in identifying, measuring and reporting results. The Secretariat would follow closely the work undertaken by UNICEF, UNDP and UNFPA in implementing the results-based concept, with a view to applying those aspects that yielded practical benefits.

UN Vienna Civil Society Award

By a 25 March resolution [res. 42/9], the Commission on Narcotic Drugs welcomed the joint initiative of the United Nations Office at Vienna, the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention of the United Nations Secretariat, the host Government of Austria and the city of Vienna in establishing the United Nations Vienna Civil Society Award to honour individuals, institutions and organizations for their contributions in the fight against drug abuse, crime and terrorism. It noted that the annual award would consist of a medal, a certificate and prize money to be funded from voluntary contributions raised by the co-sponsors; it also noted that the selection committee would be composed of the Executive Director of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention, a representative of Austria, the mayor and governor of the city and province of Vienna and other eminent persons representing the major geographic regions of the world, including the chairmen of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice.

Commission on Narcotic Drugs

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs held its forty-second session in Vienna from 16 to 25 March, during which it adopted nine resolutions and three decisions and recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption four draft resolutions and two draft decisions. On 30 November and 1 December, the Commission held its reconvened forty-second session, during which it adopted two resolutions.

By decision 1999/264 of 28 July, the Council took note of the Commission's report on its forty-second session [E/1999/28/Rev.1] and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the forty-third (2000) session, on the understanding that informal inter-sessional meetings would be convened in Vienna, at no additional cost, to finalize the items to be included in the provisional agenda and the documentation requirements for the forty-third session.

Demand reduction

At its forty-second session, the Commission had before it a January report by the Secretariat on youth and drugs [E/CN.7/1999/8], which gave an overview of the world situation and emerging trends. It stated that drug abuse remained a strategy among youth to cope with unemployment, neglect, violence and sexual abuse. At the same time, however, there was considerable abuse among socially integrated young people, in particular in the industrialized world, which might be attributed in part to the fact that significant portions of the world's youth population were exposed to a culture more tolerant towards the use of drugs. The data available presented a situation of concern in almost every region. Lifetime prevalence rates of abuse of cannabis was high and on the increase. Abuse of amphetamine-type stimulants was diffuse and abuse of "ecstasy", while stabilizing at a high level in some Western European countries, was rising in others and spreading to other regions. There were high variations in the prevalence of cocaine, which was reported to be increasing in the United States. Heroin injection was expanding in Eastern Europe, while there were signs of a rise in its abuse by smoking (United States and Western Europe). Abuse of inhalants remained a serious problem. The changing perception of cannabis among young people, the increasing abuse of amphetamine-type stimulants and the widespread abuse of other drugs indicated a need for innovative approaches and the adaptation of prevention strategies aimed at reducing the demand for illicit drugs. The report suggested that multiple strategies were the best way to approach the drug abuse problem; ideally a combination should include a knowledge, attitude, behaviour and health approach.

By a 23 March resolution on measures to reduce drug demand [res. 42/6], the Commission recommended that the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution S-20/3 [YUN 1998, p. 1137], should be fully implemented, as well as the Action Plan for its implementation (see p. 1157) with its new objectives, strategies and programmes for future activities. It invited Member States to pay attention to the need for thorough preventive campaigns at all levels; to include measures to raise the awareness of the public and targeted population groups of the risks of drug use, as well as measures to enhance the quality and accuracy of information circulated by the mass media; to limit and counterweigh by positive messages the damage caused by information that conflicted with those strategies; and to use the Internet to disseminate factual information in accordance with the strategies and conveying positive lifestyle messages, particularly for youth.

In a December report [E/CN.7/2000/4], the Secretariat analysed the world situation with regard to drug abuse. The report was based on data received from the 112 countries that had submitted the annual reports questionnaire for 1998. Thirty-one countries in Africa, Asia, the Americas and Europe reported increased abuse of heroin; in the United States, it rose slowly, and in both Europe and the United States, the use of non-injecting modes of administration (smoking in Europe, snorting in the United States) increased. Thirty countries reported the growing abuse of amphetamine-type stimulants. A source of concern was the rising trend in the abuse of methamphetamine in South-East Asia, particularly in Thailand; and increasing abuse of amphetamine was also reported in EU countries. The number of countries reporting the existence of injecting drug users and their infection with HIV continued to grow. Developing countries became highly vulnerable to drug abuse, and in many countries (the Russian Federation, Central and Eastern Europe and various Asian countries), there was an outbreak of HIV. Hepatitis C infections among abusers and drug-related mortality (mainly by overdose) also caused concern in some countries. While data collection systems improved in some parts of the world, there remained a need for improvements to understand the patterns and scale of, and the trends in, the global problem of drug abuse. To facilitate that task, the Secretariat suggested that standardized indicators be developed and capacity-building exercises be conducted in developing countries.

Illicit trafficking

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs had before it a Secretariat report on illicit drug traffic and supply and the impact of communication networks, such as the Internet, on the drug problem [E/CN.7/1999/9]. The report stated that worldwide supplies of heroin and cocaine had stabilized and that estimates of production of opium and coca leaf and statistics on the volume of global seizures of heroin, cocaine and cannabis reflected no further increases since the mid-1990s. However, the increased flow of heroin and cocaine into non-traditional markets (heroin in the United States, cocaine in Western Europe and both drug types in Africa, Asia and Eastern Europe) and the rising level of abuse of and trafficking in amphetamine-type stimulants worldwide had added a global dimension to drug control.

By a 23 March resolution on illicit traffic by sea [res. 42/7], the Commission urged Member States to supply to the Secretary-General details of the authority authorized to respond to requests to board vessels engaged in the illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, and requested them to notify changes of competent authorities, so that the information could be transmitted to all Member States by UNDCP. It also urged Member States to consider improving and implementing procedures to allow a timely response to requests in cases where the nationality of a vessel was in doubt or registration could not be confirmed. On 25 March [res. 42/5], the Commission requested UNDCP to pay attention to the issue of abuse of and trafficking in illicit drugs during conflicts, with a view to determining the need for assistance for soldiers and the population, especially children who were victims of drug abuse. It also requested UNDCP to assess the relationship between illicit drugs, conflicts, wars, transnational crime, terrorism, money-laundering and the illicit arms trade, and to propose measures to counter the adverse impact of illicit drugs on those involved in conflicts and wars.

A December report by the Secretariat [E/CN.7/2000/5] provided an overview of the world situation with regard to illicit drug trafficking and action taken by the Commission's subsidiary bodies. It summarized information received from Governments in the annual reports questionnaires. Reference was made to opiates, coca, cannabis and psychotropic substances, and an update was provided on cultivation and production of drugs, patterns and trends in drug trafficking, global interception rates, availability of drugs to the world market, and farm-gate and street prices. The global supply of cocaine remained stable in 1999, but that of heroin increased substantially because of the large increase in opium production in Afghanistan. Trafficking patterns and trends, as reflected in seizures provided up to 1998 in the questionnaires, indicated an increase in the interdiction of cocaine, heroin, cannabis resin and amphetamine-type stimulants. Most of the increase related to the established producer, transit and consumer areas, rather than to emerging markets for illicit substances. Following the Commission's forty-second session, two meetings of its subsidiary bodies were held in 1999—the Ninth Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies (HONLEA), Latin America and the Caribbean (Santiago, Chile, 22-26 November), and the Twenty-third Meeting of HONLEA, Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, Thailand, 7-10 December). The subsidiary bodies made recommendations on measures to combat money-laundering and to improve interdiction efforts of law enforcement agencies; on countering corrupt practices within drug law enforcement agencies and improving their effectiveness; and on illicit manufacture and distribution of stimulants, illicit traffic in heroin and illicit traffic via mail systems.

Subcommission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East

The Subcommission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East, which had held its thirty-third session in Beirut, Lebanon, in 1998, met in Lucknow, India, from 1 to 5 February 1999 for its thirty-fourth session [E/CN.7/1999/9/Add.1]. It recommended to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs the approval of a draft resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council on the Lucknow Accord on measures to control international trade in precursors used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances. The Subcommission also adopted recommendations on: means by which local or competent authorities could contribute to a balanced approach, emphasizing the reduction of the supply of and the demand for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances; links between transnational organized crime and other activities related to illicit drug trafficking; and practical measures and the exchange of information to increase the effectiveness of international cooperation, including cross-border operations and targeting trafficking in illicit drugs and precursors.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs [E/1999/28/Rev.1], adopted resolution 1999/31 without vote [agenda item 14 (d)].

Lucknow Accord on the Adoption of Uniform Measures to Control International Trade in Precursors and Other Chemicals Used in the Illicit Manufacture of Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances

The Economic and Social Council,

Convinced that the Lucknow Accord on the Adoption of Uniform Measures to Control International Trade in Precursors and Other Chemicals Used in the Illicit Manufacture of Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances, adopted by the Subcommission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East at its thirty-fourth session, held in Lucknow, India, from 1 to 5 February 1999, will contribute to the enhancement of the struggle against illicit drug trafficking in the region,

1. Takes note of the Lucknow Accord on the Adoption of Uniform Measures to Control International Trade in Precursors and Other Chemicals Used in the Illicit Manufacture of Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances, annexed to the present resolution;

2. Invites the Secretary-General to inform all Member States, relevant specialized agencies and other entities of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental organizations of the adoption of the Lucknow Accord by the Subcommission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East;

3. Invites Member States to consider the Lucknow Accord when implementing article 12 of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988, in accordance with their existing national legislation;

4. Also invites Member States to promote awareness within the chemical industry concerning the provisions of the Lucknow Accord;

5. Requests the International Narcotics Control Board to consider the necessary measures, in accordance with article 12 of the 1988 Convention, for the transfer of acetic anhydride and potassium permanganate from Table II to Table I of the Convention.

ANNEX

Lucknow Accord on the Adoption of Uniform Measures to Control International Trade in Precursors and Other Chemicals Used in the Illicit Manufacture of Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances

We, the representatives of the States members of the Subcommission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East and observers attending the thirty-fourth session of the Subcommission, held in Lucknow, India, from 1 to 5 February 1999,

Having considered the adoption of uniform measures to control international trade in precursors and other chemicals used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances,

Deeply concerned about the diversion of precursors and other chemicals from licit to illicit channels, especially in the course of international trade, for the manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances,

Deeply concerned also about the lack of uniformity in monitoring the international trade among various States parties to the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988,

Reaffirming OUT commitment to combat the diversion of precursors and other chemicals used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances,

Deciding to take practical measures to implement General Assembly resolution S-20/4 B of 10 June 1998, entitled "Control of precursors", adopted by the Assembly at its twentieth special session,

Have agreed on the following:

1. In accordance with resolution S-20/4 B, adopted by the General Assembly at its twentieth special session, and considering the problems being faced because of different control mechanisms being adopted by Member States, there should be uniformity in the control of international trade in precursors, and a minimum uniform procedure, in conformity with the domestic law of each country, should be adopted to effect such control. The following steps should be taken to achieve those objectives:

(a) International trade in all substances in Table I of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988, as well as international trade in acetic anhydride and potassium permanganate, substances in Table II, should be subject to control by the competent authorities in all States, irrespective of whether those substances are prone to being diverted;

(b) The competent authorities may require all importers and exporters to notify them about each transaction prior to shipment and to furnish the particulars of the trading party in the other country, such as the name of the trading party, the mode of payment and proof of authorization by the competent authority of that country;

(c) On receipt of such a notification, the competent authority of the exporting country should send a pre-export notification to the competent authority of the importing country;

(d) Each Government should clearly identify and make known its competent authority responsible for international trade;

(e) On receipt of the pre-export notification, the competent authority of the importing country should investigate and assure itself of the legitimacy of the transaction and should inform the competent authority of the exporting country;

(f) If, fifteen days after having sent the pre-export notification, the competent authority of the exporting country has received no reply from the competent authority of the importing country, it will be presumed that there is no objection to the proposed export. In the case of a specific request by the competent authority of the importing country related to a particular consignment, however, the time-limit of fifteen days will not apply;

(g) Each State should establish a system of penalizing companies in its territory that do not comply with the condition of notification. Timely notification will ultimately help such trade, as it will be easy for the competent authorities to verify the legitimacy of the transactions and provide timely responses to the competent authorities of other countries;

(h) For a select percentage of imports of precursors into a country, the competent authorities should verify the ultimate use of the precursors. This step is necessary to ensure that the chances of precursors being diverted to illicit channels are minimized and that the companies do not resort to recording inflated figures for precursors used for legitimate purposes. Competent authorities may consider carrying out such an investigation at levels up to and including the level of wholesale trade and, in some cases, even at levels up to and including the level of retail trade;

2. In respect of substitute chemicals, which were discussed and identified by the Subcommission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East at its thirty-fourth session using as a basis the limited international special surveillance list of substances currently not in Tables I and II of the 1988 Convention and for which substantial information exists of their use in illicit drug trafficking, established by the International Narcotics Control Board pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/29 of 24 July 1996, a procedure for monitoring the international trade of substitute chemicals and the format to be used for such monitoring should be approved by the parties to the 1988 Convention. States may also consider notifying the Secretary-General with a view to including such substances in Tables I and II of the 1988 Convention, where appropriate;

3. The International Narcotics Control Board is urged to take the immediate measures necessary to transfer acetic anhydride and potassium permanganate from Table II to Table I of the 1988 Convention.

System-wide Action Plan

The Subcommittee on Drug Control of the Administrative Committee on Coordination held its seventh session (Paris, 15-17 September) [ACC/1999/17] to develop, as recommended by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1999/30 (see p. 1185), an umbrella framework for inter-agency coordination in drug control as a strategic planning tool to replace the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control. It also reviewed the interim action plan for coordinated inter-agency support for national implementation of the outcome of the twentieth special session of the General Assembly. The Subcommittee extended the applicability of the interim action plan for another year and expanded it to include nine additional countries. The Subcommittee stressed the importance of linking inter-agency collaboration to the United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) process, which was the country-level planning tool.

Global Programme of Action

Implementation

In a January report [E/CN.7/1999/4], prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 53/115 [YUN 1998, p. 1170], the Secretariat described implementation of the Global Programme of Action on narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, adopted by the Assembly in resolution S-17/2 [YUN 1990, p. 859]. The report provided information to the Commission on those provisions of the Global Programme of Action that were not covered by the action plans adopted at the Assembly's twentieth special session and that would require separate reporting on their implementation. Those provisions included the diversion of arms and explosives, the illicit traffic by aircraft and vehicles and the illegal activities of mercenaries and subversive or terrorist groups. The Commission was invited to examine whether those provisions warranted separate reporting, on the understanding that the other provisions could be dealt with in progress reports on the goals for 2003 and 2008, as set out in the Political Declaration adopted by the Assembly in resolution S-20/2 [YUN 1998, p. 1136]. The Commission was also invited to consider whether the questionnaire used by Governments since 1990 [YUN 1990, p. 867] should be discontinued, amended or replaced by another reporting procedure.

Guidelines for reporting

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs had before it a January report by the Secretariat on guidelines for reporting on the implementation of the Global Programme of Action and on the follow-up to the special session of the General Assembly [E/CN.7/1999/2]. The report considered action plans for the implementation of the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction; on elimination of illicit cultivation of the opium poppy, coca bush and cannabis through alternative development; and on amphetamine-type stimulants and their precursors. It also discussed control of precursors, countering money-laundering, measures to promote judicial cooperation, an overall framework for follow-up, experience acquired within the western hemisphere and the EU, and possible approaches to be taken by the Commission.

Noting the overlap between the measures contained in the Global Programme of Action and the Assembly action plans and measures adopted at its special session, the Commission supported the rationalization of reporting requirements to reduce unnecessary efforts by Governments and the Secretariat, and agreed that reporting on the Global Programme of Action should be integrated with the follow-up to the action plans and measures. In a 24 March resolution [E/1999/28/Rev.1 (res. 42/4)], the Commission decided to establish an inter-sessional working group to elaborate guidelines to facilitate reporting by Governments. It requested the working group to submit unified draft guidelines to the Commission, and requested the UNDCP Executive Director to provide support to the working group, including suggestions on the guidelines. At two inter-sessional meetings (Vienna, 1-3 June and 28-30 September) [E/CN.7/1999/21], the working group elaborated guidelines for reporting and suggested a working methodology for the Commission.

On 1 December [res. 42/11], the Commission adopted the unified questionnaire, as proposed by the working group, that included the information required on all action plans. It requested Member States to transmit their replies to the first biennial questionnaire to the UNDCP Executive Director by 30 June 2000. On the basis of those replies, the Executive Director would prepare a biennial report containing information on global trends, organized by region and covering the action plans and sets of measures. The Executive Director was requested to inform the Commission on UN action to assist Member States in meeting the objectives and target dates set out in the Political Declaration and the UNDCP mandates. The Commission decided to report to the Assembly in 2003 and 2008 on the progress achieved, and to assess the reporting guidelines and questionnaires at regular intervals. It requested UNDCP to discontinue the 1990 questionnaire on the implementation of the Global Programme of Action and decided to evaluate the Executive Director's biennial report and to present recommendations on, among other things, national, regional and international action and cooperation.

Strengthening UN mechanisms

In a December report on strengthening UN machinery for drug control [E/CN.7/2000/8], the UNDCP Executive Director stated that the recommendations identified by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1999/30 (see p. 1185) to strengthen UN mechanisms had been implemented. The measures to enhance the functioning of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs were realized, and those to enhance the functioning of INCB were brought to the attention of WHO and the Council. With regard to strengthening UNDCP financing, the 2000-2001 UN regular budget had provided a substantial increase for UNDCP. To review UNDCP, strengthen UN machinery for drug control and explore innovative means of increasing resources for drug control programmes, the Executive Director initiated consultations with the World Bank, which was in favour of closer cooperation with UNDCP. With regard to inter-agency coordination and co-operation, UNDCP participated in UNDAF to ensure that drug control was recognized by Member States as a priority, thereby leading to joint multi-agency initiatives involving drug control. The Commission was invited to provide guidance on UN action to strengthen the Organization's role in drug control, particularly in supporting government efforts to implement, within the agreed time frames, the action plans and measures adopted by the General Assembly at its special session.

Chapter XV

Statistics

In 1999, the United Nations continued its international statistics work programme. In March, the Statistical Commission, the 24-member body that guided UN statistical activities, adopted a classification of expenditure according to purpose and revised recommendations for a vital statistics system. It also adopted practical guidelines for good practices in technical cooperation in statistics and decided to discontinue the Task Force on Environment Statistics. Progress was made in developing an updating mechanism for the 1993 System of National Accounts and on a proposed manual on statistics in international trade in services. The Intersecretariat Working Group on Price Statistics, responsible for the preparation of price index manuals, held its first meeting in February 1999.

On the Commission's recommendation, the Economic and Social Council decided that the Commission should meet annually instead of biennially, starting in 2000, and that the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination should cease to function.

Work of Statistical Commission

The Statistical Commission held its thirtieth session in New York from 1 to 5 March 1999 [E/1999/24]. It adopted the Classifications of Expenditure According to Purpose, and Revised Principles and Recommendations for a Vital Statistics System. It also adopted practical guidelines for good practices in technical cooperation in statistics. In addition, it recommended to the Economic and Social Council the adoption of a draft resolution by which the Council would establish annual sessions of the Commission, and the Commission's Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination would cease to function. In following up the statistical implications of recent major UN conferences and summits, the Commission commended the UN Statistics Division on the trial compilation of the Minimum National Social Data Set, which the Commission had adopted in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1299], and the initial work to take stock of indicators being produced and disseminated by the international community, while recognizing the inventory of development indicators being compiled by the Division as a tool for more in-depth analysis of duplications. It urged international agencies to work towards harmonizing and rationalizing the various sets of indicators being used at the international level, and to improve coordination in their collection in order not to overburden countries, and urged international agencies and bilateral donors to assist countries in building sufficient statistical capacity in order to produce development information.

The Commission reviewed the ongoing work that groups of countries and international organizations were undertaking in various fields of economic, social and environment statistics. In particular, it re-emphasized the need for those groups to formulate clear objectives and agendas and make them available to the Commission; in relation to the evaluation of the International Comparison Programme, requested the Chairman to appoint a group to advise on further steps to address the shortcomings that had been identified, and requested the international organizations active in the Programme to set out plans to take account of relevant recommendations; and decided that the Task Force on Environment Statistics should be discontinued, and that coordination in that field should be carried out by the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) Subcommittee on Statistical Activities, to the extent possible. Members of the Commission emphasized the need for sufficient flexibility in the Special Data Dissemination System of the International Monetary Fund (IMF), in order to allow countries to focus on specific priority areas of statistical development. The Commission requested the Statistics Division and IMF to improve the communication and consultation process.

The Commission reviewed its functioning and adopted new approaches in order to improve its operation. It endorsed the planned production of a document that would improve the understanding of the fundamental principles of official statistics adopted previously by the Commission, promote awareness and assist in their implementation. It also welcomed the establishment of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization Institute of Statistics and called on existing agencies to integrate their formal and informal collaborative arrangements. The Commission endorsed the proposed work programme of the Statistics Division, including the implementation plan and timetable for realizing the recommendations of the in-depth review of the statistical programme carried out in 1997 by the Office of Internal Oversight Services.

By decision 1999/223 of 26 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's 1999 report, decided that the thirty-first session of the Commission should be held in New York from 29 February to 3 March 2000, and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for that session.

Functioning of Statistical Commission

In response to a request made by the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination [YUN 1998, p. 1174], the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Statistical Commission's March session on options for meetings of the Commission and the Working Group [E/CN.3/1999/24]. Regarding the feasibility of holding annual instead of biennial Commission sessions, the report noted that annual sessions would allow the Commission to deal with emerging topics and urgent issues on a more timely basis. However, an additional workload would be placed on the Statistics Division and other parts of the UN Secretariat. Should it be decided to hold annual meetings of the Commission, the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination would no longer be needed. Should the Commission decide to maintain its biennial meeting cycle, the report suggested that it might wish to adopt new terms of reference for the Working Group so as to delegate authority to it. A draft of some revised terms of reference was presented.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July [meeting 39], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Statistical Commission [E/1999/24], adopted resolution 1999/8 without vote [agenda item 13 (c)].

Functioning of the Statistical Commission

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind its resolutions 8(I) of 16 February 1946 and 8(II) of 21 June 1946 concerning the establishment and terms of reference of the Statistical Commission and 1566(L) of 3 May 1971, in which the Council further refined the terms of reference, and resolution 1306(XLIV) of 31 May 1968, by which the Council established the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination and gave it its initial task,

Welcoming the series of reviews that the Statistical Commission has carried out since 1993 on its role and functioning and that of its Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination,

Taking into account General Assembly resolution 50/227 of 24 May 1996 on the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields,

Recognizing the need to provide for more continuity of the Commission's decision-making and oversight of the global statistical process,

Recognizing also the need for a more flexible and rapid response to emerging and topical developments in international statistics than is possible through the biennial meetings of the Statistical Commission,

Wishing to enable the Statistical Commission to carry out on a more continuous basis its role in following up the statistical implications of the major United Nations conferences and summits and the agreed conclusions of the high-level and coordination segments of the Economic and Social Council and of its resolutions, thus providing enhanced support to the Council in carrying out its own responsibilities in this area,

1. Decides that the Statistical Commission shall meet annually, beginning in 2000, for a period of four working days in New York, and decides that the small additional cost shall come from existing resources;

2. Also decides that, with immediate effect, the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination shall cease to function.

Economic statistics

National accounts

In March, the Statistical Commission had before it a report of the Secretary-General on the milestone assessment of the implementation of the System of National Accounts (1993 SNA) [YUN 1993, p. 1112] by member States [E/CN.3/1999/3], submitted in response to a 1997 Commission request [YUN 1997, p. 1303]. The report contained background information on the definition and measurement of the milestones for implementation of the 1993 SNA and tables of the milestone assessment for member States, covering the period 1992-1997. For comparison, the assessment for the period 1990-1995 was also included. The regional commissions presented qualifying country notes and comments on the assessment. The report also analysed changes in the assessment over the preceding two years. The purpose of the milestone assessment was to create an instrument to detect progress and/or to identify difficulties encountered by countries or groups of countries in their implementation efforts, as well as to focus technical cooperation activities.

The Commission also had before it the report of the 1998 meeting of the Task Force on National Accounts [YUN 1998, p. 1175].

The Statistical Commission, at its March session, approved the Task Force's proposal for an updating mechanism for the 1993 SNA with one change: the period within which the 24 member countries of the Statistical Commission could approve an amendment of the type "interpretation" or "change" should be extended to 60 days. It also emphasized that all the steps of the amendment process, in particular those calling for review by all national statistical offices, should be strictly observed. The Statistical Commission agreed in principle with the proposed amendment referring to the treatment of financial derivatives and asked the Intersecretariat Working Group on National Accounts (ISWGNA) to consider specific comments made by member States, and to circulate the redrafted text to all national statistical offices and thereafter to the members of the Commission. It noted the proposals for further work in gross domestic product volume measures; national accounts and employment; measurement of insurance output; financial intermediation services indirectly measured; asset transfer costs; government accounting; exhaustiveness/measurement of the non-observed economy; and dissemination standards. The Commission asked the UN Secretariat to strengthen the analytical portion of future assessment papers, highlighting why progress had or had not been made within or between regions and requested ISWGNA to determine whether there was a match between its work programme and the needs of countries.

By a December 1999 note [E/CN.3/2000/2] to the Statistical Commission, the Secretary-General submitted the report of the Task Force on National Accounts, which provided an update on the status of the two concrete processes that had been initiated so far (treatment of financial derivatives, and functional classifications), and described other topics where electronic discussion had already begun, such as the cost of transferring ownership of assets. The report described the standard integrated presentation of ISWGNA's work programme in support of SNA implementation; reports on those areas where further and/or new conceptual and methodological work was proposed by the Commission; and ISWGNA's response to the particular needs of countries currently assessed at the pre-SNA phase and phase 1.

International trade statistics

During its March discussion on international trade statistics, the Statistical Commission considered the report of the Task Force on International Trade Statistics [E/CN.3/1999/4]. The Task Force endorsed a work plan that would result in the completion in the year 2000 of a compiler's manual for international trade statistics. It also amended and endorsed a questionnaire on customs areas of the world and noted work by the Statistical Division on technical information regarding index numbers of international trade; provision by countries to the Division of international trade statistics in terms of the Harmonized System; revised concepts and definitions for international merchandise trade statistics; possible rationalization of the commodity classifications in the Commodity Trade Statistics Database; and other matters. In an addendum to the Task Force's report [E/CN.3/1999/4/Add.1], the Secretary-General submitted a note in follow-up to the Task Force's discussions on the Commodity Trade Statistics Database and the Central Product Classification (CPC).

The Commission, among other things, agreed that the treatment of electronic commerce in international trade statistics should be clarified; endorsed the proposed work on the manual for international trade statistics and requested the Statistics Division to give special attention in the manual to the measurement of adjustments to customs statistics for balance-of-payments purposes; and considered that it was important to evaluate the usefulness and applicability of trade statistics according to CPC aggregates for economic analysis and welcomed the intention of the Statistics Division to produce a data set of merchandise trade statistics according to CPC (goods part) on diskette as an input into reviewing and evaluating CPC and its use. In addition, the Commission reconfirmed its support for the work of the Statistics Division on producing the planned publication on the statistical territories of the world for use in international merchandise trade statistics and agreed that, in the short term, the Division should maintain the Commodity Trade Statistics Database and develop a strategic plan for its rationalization. It also endorsed the efforts of the Division, the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) and the Statistical Office of the European Commission (Eurostat) to rationalize their data collection, processing and storage systems to reduce duplicate processing and increase the compatibility of their databases.

Service statistics

In March, the Statistical Commission had before it the report of the Task Force on Statistics of International Trade in Services [E/CN.3/1999/5], which described action taken to produce a manual to help national statisticians compile statistics on international trade in services.

The Commission took note of the completed activities and proposed schedule put forward by the Task Force for the manual's completion.

Finance statistics

In March, the Statistical Commission considered the report of the Task Force on Finance Statistics [E/CN.3/1999/6], which held two meetings in 1998, the first meeting hosted by IMF (Washington, D.C., 13-14 July) and the second by OECD (Paris, 29-30 October). In the context of the financial crises in Asia, the Task Force launched several initiatives to improve collaboration with regard to disseminating statistics in two areas: international reserves and external debt.

The Statistical Commission recognized the concerns of countries about the complexities and high resource-intensiveness of measuring external debt, and the need to compile and publish components of external debt based on both creditor and debtor sources for improved data quality and accuracy. It took note of ongoing efforts to compare alternative methods of measuring external debt and to enable the advantages and disadvantages of the available methods to be determined. The Commission noted IMF's work in developing the Manual on Monetary and Financial Statistics and the Manual on Government Finance Statistics.

Other economic statistics

City groups

The Statistical Commission considered a report of seven city groups in the economic statistics area [E/CN.3/1999/7]; an addendum [E/CN.3/1999/7/Add.1] contained the terms of reference and functioning of the Intersecretariat Working Group on Price Statistics (ISWGPs), prepared by the International Labour Organization (ILO).

The city group report described the meetings and planned activities of the Canberra (Australia) Group on Household Income Statistics; the Delhi (India) Group on Informal Sector Statistics; the Expert Group on Capital Stock Statistics; the Expert Group on Intangibles; the Ottawa (Canada) Group on Price Indexes; the Paris Group on Labour and Compensation; and the Round Table on Business Survey Frames.

The Statistical Commission, among other things, noted the various efforts under way in Latin America, Asia, francophone West Africa and Europe to measure activities of the informal sector and encouraged the Delhi Group on Informal Sector Statistics to draw on relevant information and experiences. It also noted the establishment of ISWGPs with a mandate to prepare price index manuals, and welcomed IMF's offer to advance the work on a producer price index manual. ISWGPs was asked to communicate its needs to the Ottawa Group and to encourage the Group to make specific contributions to the manuals on leading edge thinking on theoretical and practical problems.

International Comparison Programme

The Commission had before it a consultant's report on the evaluation of the International Comparison Programme (ICP) [E/CN.3/1999/8] and an addendum [E/CN.3/1999/8/Add.1] containing the World Bank's observations on that report. The ICP evaluation recommended that, in order for the Programme to become more credible and useful, the Statistics Division should find a world coordinator to bring about required changes. The coordinator should be asked to put together a financing consortium consisting of national statistical offices and international agencies to ensure the success of a next phase of ICP; rewrite the Handbook of the International Comparison Programme; and find a way of getting the results to users in a timely fashion. The World Bank endorsed the consultant's findings.

The Commission accepted that ICP had significant timeliness and quality problems and agreed to request the Chairman to appoint a group to advise on further steps to address ICP's shortcomings; to request OECD/Eurostat to prepare a report describing future plans for their Purchasing Power Parity programme; and to rely on joint efforts by a group composed of the World Bank, IMF and the Statistics Division to prepare within three months an implementation plan setting out practical steps to be taken in order to address issues raised in the consultant's report.

ISWGPs

The Intersecretariat Working Group on Price Statistics held two meetings in 1999 (Geneva, February, November) [E/CN.3/2000/10]. A technical expert group on the consumer price index was established and also met in February and November in Geneva. The Ottawa Group on Price Indexes had a special session (Reykjavik, Iceland, 25-27 August) on the revision of the ILO Manual on Consumer Price Indices. A technical expert group on the producer price index was formed under the coordination of IMF.

Social and demographic statistics

Demographic, social and migration statistics

The Statistical Commission had before it in March a report on progress in demographic, social and migration statistics [E/CN.3/1999/9], which stated that the draft of the revised Principles and Recommendations for a Vital Statistics System had been prepared and submitted to an expert group (see below). The report noted that the Statistics Division, in partnership with the United Nations Population Fund, was undertaking interregional and regional training to assist countries in conducting a census of population and housing in the 2000 census decade. The Commission also considered the reports of the Expert Group on Draft Principles and Recommendations for a Vital Statistics System [YUN 1998, p. 1177] and of the Siena Group for Social Statistics [E/CN.3/1999/11], which highlighted the Group's planned activities.

The Statistical Commission endorsed the draft Principles and Recommendations for a Vital Statistics System, as revised by the Expert Group; requested the Secretariat to publish them as quickly as possible in all the United Nations official languages; and took note of the rescheduling of the next issue of the Compendium of Human Settlements Statistics to the 2000-2001 biennium.

Environment statistics

At its March session, the Statistical Commission considered a report on environment statistics [E/CN.3/1999/12], which listed recent recommendations on environment statistics made by the Statistical Commission, its Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination, and the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities. Annexed to the report was a paper by the Statistics Division describing the nature, source and scope of environment statistics. The paper concluded that the large variety of user needs justified the diversity of approaches in the relatively new area of environment statistics, and efforts aimed at full harmonization and standardization were therefore deemed premature.

Also before the Commission was a report of the London Group on Environmental Accounting [E/CN.3/1999/13], which described the Group's mandate and work, including the planned revision of the UN draft handbook on the system of integrated environmental-economic accounting (SEEA). The Group had established working groups to begin drafting the material that would eventually be recommended to the Statistics Division for inclusion in a revised SEEA manual.

The Statistical Commission approved the suggestion made by the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1176] that the Task Force on Environment Statistics should be discontinued and that the Subcommittee should carry out coordination in environment statistics. It welcomed the work of the London Group leading to the revision of SEEA.

Technical cooperation

In March, the Statistical Commission had before it a Secretariat report on some guiding principles for good practices in technical cooperation for statistics [E/CN.3/1999/19]. The report was a result of the 1997 Workshop on Improving Technical Cooperation in Statistics [YUN 1997, p. 1305]. It also benefited from comments by the Commission's Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination and various national statistical offices and regional statistical commissions.

The Commission endorsed the guiding principles for good practices in technical cooperation for statistics, except that it agreed to rename them "practical guidelines for good practices in technical cooperation for statistics". It agreed to the wide dissemination of the practical guidelines to national statistics offices and regional and international organizations, and agreed that the guidelines would be reviewed after two or three years, taking into account relevant experiences in the field of technical cooperation.

Other statistical activities

Coordination and integration of international statistical programmes

In March, the Statistical Commission had before it a report of the Secretary-General on the global integration presentation of the work plans of the international organizations in statistical methodology [E/CN.3/1999/25]. The report responded to matters raised by the Commission's Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1179] and comments made that year by the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities [ibid., p. 1180]. The UN Secretariat believed there should be a companion document to the global presentation, comprising an annotated list of previously adopted standards, to be prepared and maintained by the Statistics Division; it would be placed on the Division web site with hyperlinks to available sites containing detailed information about each standard. The Secretariat also believed that the global presentation would be successful only if all organizations were included. To resolve the problem of both OECD and Eurostat having indicated that they would not provide information, the Division would enter their information for them. The report also presented observations on recommendations made in 1998 by the ad hoc group established by the Statistical Commission [ibid., p. 1179].

The Commission also considered the reports of the ACC Subcommittee's 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1302] and 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1175] sessions, and the report of the Expert (Prague) Group on Some Best Practices for Official Statistics [ibid.].

The Commission requested the Statistics Division to proceed with the database and integrated presentation of the work plans in statistical methodology of the international organizations, and requested all organizations to participate in that endeavour. The Division was also asked to prepare an annotated list of previously adopted statistical standards as a companion document to the integrated presentation. The Commission welcomed the work of the Prague Group and the follow-up working session on best practices in statistics (Singapore, 12-14 January). It endorsed the planned production of a document that would improve the understanding of the fundamental principles of official statistics, promote awareness of them and assist in their implementation; endorsed the establishment by the Statistics Division of the framework for a web site that would feature that document and serve as a referral system for relevant country practices; and requested the Division to prepare a revision of its handbook on statistical organizations.

Inter-agency cooperation

The ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities, at its thirty-third session (Madrid, Spain, 14-16 September) [E/CN.3/2000/19], noted, among other things, the work of the Statistics Division in the development of a web site for the global integrated presentation of the work of the international organizations in statistical methodology; the creation of the Intersecretariat Working Group on Price Statistics; and the discontinuation of the Task Force on Environment Statistics. It agreed that coordination in environment statistics should be carried out by the ACC Subcommittee.

Statistical implications of UN conferences

For its consideration of the statistical implications of the major UN conferences held during the 1990s, the Statistical Commission had before it a report on harmonization and rationalization of development indicators in the UN system, which was considered by the Economic and Social Council Executive Committee in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1178], and the report of the Rio Group on Poverty Statistics on its 1998 meeting [ibid.].

The Statistical Commission recognized the inventory of development indicators being compiled by the Statistics Division as a tool for more in-depth analysis of duplications, overlaps and inconsistencies; noted that the large number of indicators requested by different international agencies often overtaxed the capacity of countries, particularly developing countries; urged international agencies to work towards harmonizing and rationalizing the various sets of indicators being used at the international level, including the use of common definitions and methods; affirmed that the Minimum National Social Data Set was useful and could provide guidance to countries interested in developing a basic social statistics system; and encouraged UN funds and programmes to make statistical capacity-building a priority within the United Nations Development Assistance Framework. As to the Rio Group report, the Commission noted that development indicators, especially poverty indicators, were most useful when linked directly or indirectly to policy formulation and administrative operations; and requested the Rio Group to continue its activities, paying special attention to the nature of the data required for analysing the causes of poverty, the relation between poverty and social exclusion, and the effect of public services on poverty alleviation.

The Rio Group on Poverty Statistics (Lisbon, Portugal, 22-24 November 1999) [E/CN.3/2000/16] discussed, among other things, poverty indicators and poverty statistics oriented towards policy design and monitoring; absolute and relative poverty; statistical sources used for poverty measurements; and institutional agreements towards comparability of measurements in different regions.

International economic and social classifications

In March, the Statistical Commission considered the Secretary-General's report on evaluation of progress in the implementation of the International Standard Industrial Classification of All Economic Activities (ISIC), Revision 3, and the Central Product Classification (CPC), Version 1.0 [E/CN.3/1999/16]. The report examined whether the necessary coordination mechanisms for implementation, maintenance, updating and revision of ISIC, designed to be a standard classification of productive economic activities, were in place for the development of statistics of production, consumption, expenditure and trade. The Commission also considered the Secretary-General's 1998 report on international economic and social classifications [YUN 1998, p. 1177] and the 1998 Voorburg Group on Service Statistics report [ibid.].

The Statistical Commission recommended that the future work programme of the Voorburg Group be focused on problems of service product prices. As to classifications issues, the Commission agreed in principle with the strategies laid out in the reports; recommended that the Expert Group on International Economic and Social Classifications be the central coordinating body for implementing the proposed work programme, and that its tasks should include classification revisions and practical proposals to bring about the convergence of existing international and multinational classifications; called on the Expert Group to improve the supporting materials for ISIC and the implementation, assessment and future revisions of ISIC and CPC; and noted that the Statistics Division was prepared to host Expert Group meetings and provide funds for the participation of developing countries.

In 1999, two regional training workshops on classifications were conducted: the first, on SNA and classifications, was held for Caribbean countries (Curaçao, Netherlands Antilles, 31 May-4 June); the second, on classifications, was held for the Asia-Pacific region (Canberra, 27 September-1 October).

The Expert Group on International Economic and Social Classifications established a Technical Sub-group to take action on the implementation of the proposed programme on ISIC and CPC. It held its first meeting in November.

Economic and social information system

The Statistical Commission considered in March the Secretary-General's report on draft standards of the United Nations Economic and Social Information System (UNESIS) for data structure and metadata in international data exchange and dissemination [E/CN.3/1999/27]. UNESIS was a comprehensive project of the Statistics Division, in cooperation with the regional commissions and other parts of the global statistical system, designed to re-engineer its basic statistical data system so as to respond to new user demands, using new client-server and network technologies. The report described the state of development of metadata standards, the objectives for the system over the 2000-2001 biennium, and cooperation in development undertaken with the regional commissions and national experts.

The Statistical Commission took note of the report.

UNESCO Institute for Statistics

In March, the Statistical Commission considered a report of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) on its proposed institute for statistics [E/CN.3/1999/28]. The primary reason for establishing such an institute was to enable UNESCO to provide effective responses to the ever-increasing demands that emanated from member States and the international community for more diversified, policy-oriented and reliable statistical products and services in UNESCO's fields of competence: education, science and technology, and culture and communication. Its mission was to provide statistical information to help decision-making in member States and thereby enhance policy and programme development.

The Statistical Commission welcomed the establishment of the UNESCO Institute for Statistics and the broad nature of its mandate, and emphasized that the Institute should work in full collaboration with the existing agencies doing related work.

PART FOUR

Legal questions

Chapter I

International Court of Justice

In 1999, the International Court of Justice (ICJ) delivered two Judgments and one advisory opinion and made 33 Orders. It had pending before it 25 contentious cases and one advisory case during the year.

In a 26 October address to the General Assembly, the ICJ President noted that the Court had been seized of more new contentious cases in the period under review (1 August 1998-31 July 1999) than during any prior period, a trend that continued through the latter half of 1999. He remarked that many cases before the Court concerned major international crises, such as the hostilities in the Kosovo province of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The President noted that some 53 years after its creation, the Court had more than justified the perception that a world court could fundamentally foster peace and international co-operation through the adjudicated settlement of international disputes and the development of a body of international law.

With regard to the Court's advisory function and the proliferation of other international tribunals, the President suggested that such other tribunals be encouraged to turn to the Court to minimize and resolve conflicting interpretations of international law.

Judicial work of the Court

During 1999, the Court delivered a Judgment on the Request for Interpretation of the Judgment of 14 June 1998 in the Case concerning the Land and Maritime Boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria (Cameroon v. Nigeria), Preliminary Objections (Nigeria v. Cameroon) and a Judgment on the merits in the case concerning Kasikili/Sedudu Island (Botswana/Namibia). It rendered an advisory opinion in the case concerning the Difference relating to Immunity from Legal Process of a Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights.

The Court made Orders on requests for the indication of provisional measures made by Germany in the case concerning LaGrand (Germany v. United States of America), and by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in the cases concerning the Legality of Use of Force (Yugoslavia v. Belgium) (Yugoslavia v. Canada) (Yugoslavia v. France) (Yugoslavia v. Germany) (Yugoslavia v. Italy) (Yugoslavia v. Netherlands) (Yugoslavia v. Portugal) (Yugoslavia v. Spain) (Yugoslavia v. United Kingdom) and (Yugoslavia v. United States of America). The Court or its President further made Orders on the conduct of the proceedings in the cases concerning Maritime Delimitation and Territorial Questions between Qatar and Bahrain (Qatar v. Bahrain), Questions of Interpretation and Application of the 1971 Montreal Convention arising from the Aerial Incident at Lockerbie (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United Kingdom) and (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United States of America), Land and Maritime Boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria (Cameroon v. Nigeria), Sovereignty over Pulau Litigan and Pulau Sipadan (Indonesia/Malaysia), LaGrand (Germany v. United States of America), Legality of Use of Force (Yugoslavia v. Belgium) (Yugoslavia v. Canada) (Yugoslavia v. France) (Yugoslavia v. Germany) (Yugoslavia v. Italy) (Yugoslavia v. Netherlands) (Yugoslavia v. Portugal) (Yugoslavia v. Spain) (Yugoslavia v. United Kingdom) and (Yugoslavia v. United States of America), Armed activities on the territory of the Congo (Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Burundi) (Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Uganda) and (Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Rwanda), Aerial Incident of 10 August 1999 (Pakistan v. India), Ahmadou Sadio Diallo (Republic of Guinea v. Democratic Republic of the Congo) and Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Croatia v. Yugoslavia).

The 1999 activities of ICJ were covered in two reports to the General Assembly, for the periods 1 August 1998 to 31 July 1999 [A/54/4] and 1 August 1999 to 31 July 2000 [A/55/4]. By decision 54/411 of 26 October 1999, the Assembly took note of the 1998/1999 report.

Maritime delimitation and territorial questions (Qatar v. Bahrain)

Qatar instituted proceedings in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 820] against Bahrain in respect of disputes relating to sovereignty over the Hawar islands, sovereign rights over the shoals of Dibal and Qit'at Jaradah and the delimitation of the maritime areas of the two States.

In 1992, a Memorial by Qatar and a Counter-Memorial by Bahrain were filed [YUN 1992, p. 982], as were their respective Reply and Rejoinder.

Following hearings, the Court delivered on 1 July 1994 a Judgment [YUN 1994, p. 1279].

The Court received a letter from Qatar on 30 November 1994 transmitting an "Act to comply with paragraphs (3) and (4) of the operative paragraph 41 of the Judgment of the Court dated 1 July 1994". On the same day, Bahrain transmitted a "Report of the State of Bahrain to the International Court of Justice on the Attempt by the Parties to Implement the Court's Judgment of 1 July 1994".

At a public sitting held on 15 February 1995, the Court delivered a Judgment on jurisdiction and admissibility [YUN 1995, p. 1305], by which it found that it had jurisdiction and that the Application of Qatar as formulated on 30 November 1994 was admissible.

In 1996, each Party filed a Memorial on the merits [YUN 1996, p. 1176]. Counter-Memorials of the Parties were filed on 23 December 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1312].

On 17 March 1998, the President held a meeting to ascertain the views of the Parties on a procedure concerning the authenticity of documents produced by Qatar [YUN 1997, p. 1312]. By an Order of 30 March 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1184], the Court fixed 30 September 1998 as the time limit for the filing of an interim report by Qatar on the authenticity of the documents and directed the filing of a Reply by each of the Parties within the time limit of 30 March 1999. In its interim report filed in September 1998, Qatar stated that it would not rely on the disputed documents for the purposes of the present case so as to enable the Court to address the merits of the case without further procedural complications. In December 1998, Qatar requested "a two-month extension of the time limit for the filing of a Reply by each of the Parties, to 30 May 1999" [ibid.].

By an Order dated 17 February 1999, the Court placed on record Qatar's decision to disregard the 82 documents annexed to its written pleadings, which had been challenged by Bahrain, and decided that the Replies yet to be filed by Qatar and by Bahrain would not rely on those documents. After filing their Replies within the extended time limit, Qatar and Bahrain submitted, with the approval of the Court, certain additional expert reports and historical documents.

Questions of interpretation and application of the 1971 Montreal Convention arising from the aerial incident at Lockerbie (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United Kingdom)
(Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United States)

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya instituted in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 982] separate proceedings against the United Kingdom and the United States in respect of a dispute over the interpretation and application of the 1971 Montreal Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation [YUN 1971, p. 739], which arose from its alleged involvement in the crash of Pan Am flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland, on 21 December 1988. In the Applications, Libya referred to the charging and indictment of two of its nationals by the Lord Advocate of Scotland and by a United States Grand Jury for having caused a bomb to be placed aboard Pan Am flight 103, which exploded, caused the aircraft to crash and killed all 270 persons aboard.

The United Kingdom and the United States, on 16 and on 20 June 1995, respectively [YUN 1995, p. 1306], filed preliminary objections to the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain Libya's Applications. Libya presented a written statement of its observations and submissions on the preliminary objections raised by the United Kingdom and the United States within the prescribed time limits set by the Court. Public sittings to hear the oral arguments of the Parties on the preliminary objections raised by the United Kingdom and the United States were held in October 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1313].

At public sittings held on 27 February 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1184], the Court delivered the two Judgments on the preliminary objections, by which it rejected the objection to jurisdiction raised by the United Kingdom and the United States on the basis of the alleged absence of a dispute between the Parties concerning the interpretation or application of the Montreal Convention; found that it had jurisdiction, on the basis of article 14, paragraph 1 of the Convention, to hear the disputes between Libya and the United Kingdom and Libya and the United States concerning the interpretation or application of the provisions of the Convention; rejected the objection to admissibility derived by the United Kingdom and the United States from Security Council resolutions 748(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 55] and 883(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 101]; found that the Applications filed by Libya on 3 March 1992 were admissible; and declared that the objection raised by both countries, according to which the same Council resolutions had rendered the claims of Libya without object, did not, in the circumstances of the case, have an excessively preliminary character.

The time limit of 30 December 1998 fixed by the Court [YUN 1998, p. 1185] for the filing of the Counter-Memorials of the United Kingdom and the United States was extended to 31 March 1999 following a proposal of the United Kingdom and the United States, which referred to diplomatic initiatives [ibid., p. 163], and after the views of Libya had been ascertained. The Counter-Memorials were filed within the time limit.

Taking account of the agreement of the Parties and the special circumstances of the case, the Court, by Orders of 29 June 1999, authorized the submission of a Reply by Libya and a Rejoinder by the United Kingdom and the United States, which fixed 29 June 2000 as the time limit for the filing of the Reply. The Court fixed no date for the filing of the Rejoinders; the representatives of the Respondent States had expressed the desire that no such date be fixed at that stage of the proceedings, "in view of the new circumstances consequent upon the transfer of the two accused to the Netherlands for trial by a Scottish court" (see p. 148).

Oil platforms (Iran v. United States)

Iran instituted proceedings against the United States in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 983] regarding a dispute in which Iran alleged that the destruction by United States warships, on 19 October 1987 and 18 April 1988, of three offshore oil production complexes owned and operated by the National Iranian Oil Company constituted a breach of international law and the 1955 Iran/United States Treaty of Amity, Economic Relations and Consular Rights. Iran requested the Court to rule on the matter.

Orders of the Court in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 9831 and 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1183] fixed time limits for the filing of the Memorial by Iran and for a Counter-Memorial by the United States. Iran filed its Memorial, while the United States filed certain preliminary objections to the jurisdiction of the Court. In 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1280], Iran presented a written statement of its observations and submissions on the United States objections, in accordance with an Order of the Court.

The Court delivered its Judgment in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1178], by which it rejected the preliminary objection of the United States and found that it had jurisdiction to entertain the claims made by Iran.

By an Order of 16 December 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1178], the President of the Court fixed 23 June 1997 as the time limit for the filing of the Counter-Memorial of the United States. Within that time limit, the United States filed the Counter-Memorial and a Counter-Claim [YUN 1997, p. 1313].

In November and December 1997, Iran and the United States, respectively, submitted written observations on the question of the admissibility of the United States Counter-Claim.

In 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1185], the Court found that the Counter-Claim presented by the United States in its Counter-Memorial was admissible. It further directed Iran to submit a Reply and the United States to submit a Rejoinder, fixing the time limits for those pleadings at 10 September 1998 and 23 November 1999, respectively.

By an Order of 26 May 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1185], the Vice-President of the Court, Acting President, extended, at the request of Iran and taking into account the views expressed by the United States, the time limits for Iran's Reply and the United States Rejoinder to 10 December 1998 and 23 May 2000, respectively. By an Order of 8 December 1998, the Court further extended those time limits to 10 March 1999 for Iran's Reply and 23 November 2000 for the United States Rejoinder. Iran's Reply was filed within the time limit thus extended.

Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia)

Bosnia and Herzegovina instituted proceedings in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1138] against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) (FRY) for alleged violations of the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 260 A (III) [YUN 1948-49, p. 959]. The time limits were fixed for the filing of a Memorial by Bosnia and Herzegovina and a Counter-Memorial by FRY [YUN 1993, p. 1138]. The Memorial by Bosnia and Herzegovina was filed within the prescribed time limit [YUN 1994, p. 1281].

The time limit for the filing of the Counter-Memorial by FRY was extended in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1307]. Within the time limit, FRY filed certain preliminary objections. The objections related, first, to the admissibility of the Application and, second, to the jurisdiction of the Court to deal with the case. By virtue of the Rules of Court, proceedings on the merits were suspended. Pursuant to an Order of the Court [ibid.], Bosnia and Herzegovina presented a written statement of its observations and submissions on the preliminary objections raised by FRY, within the prescribed time limit.

The Court delivered its Judgment in 1996 on the preliminary objections [YUN 1996, p. 1179], by which it rejected the objections raised by FRY. In accordance with an Order of 23 July 1996 [ibid.], FRY filed a Counter-Memorial that included Counter-Claims against Bosnia and Herzegovina [YUN 1997, p. 1315].

Both Parties accepted in 1997 that their respective Governments would submit written observations on the question of the admissibility of the FRY Counter-Claims and did so. The Court found that the Counter-Claims submitted by FRY in its Counter-Memorial were admissible and directed Bosnia and Herzegovina to submit a Reply and FRY to submit a Rejoinder, fixing the time limits for those pleadings at 23 January and 23 July 1998, respectively. By an Order of 22 January 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1186], those time limits were extended to 23 April 1998 and 22 January 1999, respectively. The Reply of Bosnia and Herzegovina was filed within the prescribed time limit. The Court, by an Order of 11 December 1998 [ibid.], extended the time limit for the filing of FRY's Rejoinder to 22 February 1999, which was filed within the time limit.

In 1999, several exchanges of letters took place concerning new procedural difficulties in the case.

Land and maritime boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria

Cameroon instituted proceedings against Nigeria in March 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1281] in a dispute concerning the question of sovereignty over the peninsula of Bakassi and requested the Court to determine the course of the maritime frontier between the two States in so far as that frontier had not already been established in 1975. The Application was amended by an Additional Application in June 1994. Cameroon's Memorial was filed in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1308]. On 13 December 1995, within the time limit for the filing of its Counter-Memorial, Nigeria filed certain preliminary objections to the jurisdiction of the Court and to the admissibility of the claims of Cameroon.

In 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1180], Cameroon presented a written statement of its observations and submissions on the preliminary objections raised by Nigeria. Following hearings in March 1996, the Court made an Order [ibid.] indicating that neither Party should take any action of any kind and that both should lend every assistance to a fact-finding mission to be sent by the United Nations Secretary-General [YUN 1996, p. 146].

On 11 June 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1187], the Court delivered its Judgment on the preliminary objections, by which it rejected seven of Nigeria's eight preliminary objections; declared that the eighth preliminary objection did not have, in the circumstances of the case, an exclusively preliminary character; and found that, on the basis of Article 36, paragraph 2, of the ICJ Statute, it had jurisdiction to adjudicate on the dispute and that the Application filed by Cameroon on 29 March 1994, as amended by the Additional Application of 6 June 1994, was admissible. The Court, having been informed of the views of the Parties, fixed 31 March 1999 as the time limit for the filing of the Counter-Memorial of Nigeria.

On 28 October 1998, Nigeria filed a request for an interpretation of the Court's Judgment on the preliminary objections [YUN 1998, p. 1187]. The request for interpretation formed a separate case, in which the Court delivered its Judgment on 25 March 1999 (see below).

On 23 February 1999, Nigeria requested an extension of the time limit for the deposit of its Counter-Memorial, as it did not know the scope of the case it had to answer on State responsibility until the outcome of its request for interpretation was known. By a letter of 27 February 1999, the Agent of Cameroon informed the Court that Cameroon was resolutely opposed to Nigeria's request, as its dispute with Nigeria called for a rapid decision.

By an Order of 3 March 1999, the Court extended to 31 May 1999 the time limit for the filing of Nigeria's Counter-Memorial, which was filed within the time limit.

The Counter-Memorial included counter-claims. At the end of each section dealing with a particular sector of the frontier, Nigeria asked the Court to declare that the incidents referred to "engage the international responsibility of Cameroon, with compensation in the form of damages, if not agreed between the parties, then to be awarded by the Court in a subsequent phase of the case".

The seventh and final submission set out by Nigeria in its Counter-Memorial read as follows: "as to Nigeria's counter-claims as specified in ... of this Counter-Memorial, [the Court is asked to] adjudge and declare that Cameroon bears responsibility to Nigeria in respect of those claims, the amount of reparation due therefor, if not agreed between the parties within six months of the date of judgment, to be determined by the Court in a further judgment". In an Order of 30 June 1999, the Court found that Nigeria's counter-claims were admissible and formed part of the proceedings; decided that Cameroon should submit a Reply and Nigeria a Rejoinder, relating to the claims of both Parties, and fixed the time limits for those pleadings at 4 April 2000 and 4 January 2001, respectively.

On 30 June 1999, Equatorial Guinea filed an Application for permission to intervene in the case, stating that the purpose was to protect its legal rights in the Gulf of Guinea and to inform the Court of Equatorial Guinea's legal rights and interests so that they might remain unaffected as the Court proceeded to address the question of the maritime boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria. Equatorial Guinea clarified that it did not seek to intervene in those aspects of the proceedings that related to the land boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria, nor to become a Party to the case. It further stated that, although it would be open to a request to the Court from the three countries not only to determine the Cameroon-Nigeria maritime boundary but also to determine Equatorial Guinea's maritime boundary with those two States, Equatorial Guinea had made no such request and wished to continue to determine its maritime boundary with its neighbours by negotiation.

The Court fixed 16 August 1999 as the time limit for the filing of written observations by Cameroon and Nigeria on Equatorial Guinea's Application, which were filed within the prescribed time limits.

By an Order of 21 October 1999, the Court handed down its decision on Equatorial Guinea's Application for permission to intervene, by which it unanimously decided that Equatorial Guinea could intervene in the case, pursuant to Article 62 of the Statute, to the extent, in the manner and for the purposes set out in its Application for permission to intervene; fixed the time limits for the filing of the written statement and the written observations at 4 April 2001 for the written statement of Equatorial Guinea and 4 July 2001 for the written observations of Cameroon and Nigeria; and reserved the subsequent procedure for further decision.

Interpretation of Judgment

In its request for an interpretation of the 11 June 1998 Judgment [YUN 1998, p. 1187], Nigeria stated that "One aspect of the case before the Court is the alleged international responsibility borne by Nigeria for certain incidents said to have occurred at various places in Bakassi and Lake Chad and along the length of the frontier between those two regions". Nigeria contended that Cameroon had made "allegations involving a number of such incidents in its Application of 29 March 1994, its Additional Application of 6 June 1994, its Observations of 30 April 1996 on Nigeria's Preliminary Objections, and during the oral hearings held from 2-11 March 1998", and that Cameroon had also said that it "would be able to provide information as to other incidents on some unspecified future occasion". In the view of Nigeria, the Court's Judgment "[did] not specify which of these alleged incidents [were] to be considered as part of the merits of the case" and, accordingly, "the meaning and scope of the Judgment require[d] interpretation".

The Senior Judge, Acting President, fixed 3 December 1998 as the time limit for Cameroon to submit its written observations on Nigeria's request for interpretation, which were filed within the time limit. In the light of the dossier thus submitted, the Court did not deem it necessary to invite the Parties to furnish further written or oral explanations.

At a public sitting held on 25 March 1999, the Court delivered its Judgment, in which it decided by 13 votes to 3, that the request for interpretation of the Judgment of 11 June 1998, presented by Nigeria, was inadmissible; and unanimously rejected Cameroon's request that Nigeria bear the additional costs caused to Cameroon by the request for interpretation.

Vice-President Weeramantry, Judge Koroma and Judge ad hoc Ajibola appended dissenting opinions to the Judgment.

Kasikili/Sedudu Island (Botswana/Namibia)

Botswana and Namibia by Special Agreement jointly submitted to the Court on 29 May 1996 a dispute concerning the boundary around Kasikili/Sedudu Island and the island's legal status [YUN 1996, p. 1181]. Each of the Parties had filed a Memorial and Counter-Memorial in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1319].

In a joint letter dated 16 February 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1188], the Parties requested further written pleadings pursuant to article II, paragraph 2 (c) of the Special Agreement, which provided, in addition to the Memorials and Counter-Memorials, for "such other pleadings as may be approved by the Court at the request of either of the Parties, or as may be directed by the Court".

By an Order of 27 February 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1188], the Court fixed 27 November 1998 as the time limit for the filing of a Reply by each of the Parties, which were filed within the prescribed time limit.

Public sittings to hear the oral arguments of the Parties were held from 15 February to 5 March 1999. At a public sitting held on 13 December 1999, the Court delivered its Judgment, in which it decided, by 11 votes to 4, that the boundary between Botswana and Namibia followed the line of deepest soundings in the northern channel of the Chobe River around Kasikili/Sedudu Island; by 11 votes to 4, found that Kasikili/Sedudu Island formed part of the territory of Botswana; and unanimously found that, in the two channels around Kasikili/Sedudu Island, the nationals of, and vessels flying the flags of, Botswana and Namibia should enjoy equal national treatment.

Judges Ranjeva, Koroma and Higgins appended declarations to the Judgment of the Court. Judges Oda and Kooijmans appended separate opinions. Vice-President Weeramantry, Judges Fleischhauer, Parra-Aranguren and Rezek appended dissenting opinions.

Sovereignty over Pulau Ligitan and Pulau Sipadan (Indonesia/Malaysia)

On 2 November 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1189], Indonesia and Malaysia jointly notified the Court of a Special Agreement between them, signed at Kuala Lumpur on 31 May 1997, which entered into force on 14 May 1998, in which they requested the Court "to determine on the basis of the treaties, agreements and any other evidence furnished by the Parties, whether sovereignty over Pulau Ligitan and Pulau Sipadan belongs to the Republic of Indonesia or to Malaysia". By an Order of 10 November 1998 [ibid.], the Court fixed 2 November 1999 and 2 March 2000 as the time limits for the filing by each of the Parties of a Memorial and a Counter-Memorial, respectively.

By an Order of 14 September 1999, the Court, at the joint request of the Parties, extended the time limit for the filing of the Counter-Memorials to 2 July 2000.

The Memorials were filed within the time limit of 2 November 1999, as fixed by the Court's Order of 10 November 1998.

Ahmadou Sadio Diallo
(Guinea v. Democratic Republic of the Congo)

On 28 December 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1190], Guinea instituted proceedings against the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) by an "Application with a view to diplomatic protection", in which it requested the Court to condemn the DRC for the grave breaches of international law perpetrated upon the person of a Guinean national, Ahmadou Sadio Diallo.

According to Guinea, Mr. Diallo, a businessman who had been a resident of the DRC for 32 years, was "unlawfully imprisoned by the authorities of that State" during two and a half months, "divested from his important investments, companies, bank accounts, movable and immovable properties, then expelled". The expulsion took place on 2 February 1996, as a result of his attempts to recover sums owed to him by the DRC (especially by Gécamines, a State enterprise and mining monopoly) and by oil companies operating in that country (Zaire Shell, Zaire Mobil and Zaire Fina) by virtue of contracts concluded with businesses owned by him, namely Africom-Zaire and Africontainers-Zaire.

As a basis of the Court's jurisdiction, Guinea invoked its own declaration of acceptance of the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court of 11 November 1998 and the declaration of the DRC of 8 February 1989.

By an Order of 25 November 1999, the Court, taking into account the agreement of the Parties, fixed 11 September 2000 as the time limit for the filing of a Memorial by Guinea and 11 September 2001 for the filing of a Counter-Memorial by the DRC.

Vienna Convention on Consular Relations
(Germany v. United States)

On 2 March 1999, Germany instituted proceedings against the United States in a dispute concerning alleged violations of the 1963 Vienna Convention on Consular Relations [YUN 1963, p. 510]. In its Application, Germany based the jurisdiction of the Court on Article 36, paragraph 1, of the Statute and on article I of the Optional Protocol concerning the Compulsory Settlement of Disputes, which accompanied the Vienna Convention and which provided that the "disputes arising out of the interpretation or application of the Convention shall be within the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice".

In the Application, Germany stated that in 1982 the authorities of Arizona (United States) detained two German nationals, Karl and Walter LaGrand; that the individuals were tried and sentenced to death without having been informed, as was required under article 36, subparagraph 1 (b), of the Vienna Convention, of their rights under that provision (which required the competent authorities of a State party to advise, without delay, a national of another State party whom such authorities arrested or detained of the national's right to consular assistance guaranteed by article 36). Germany also alleged that the failure to provide the required notification precluded it from protecting its nationals' interests in the United States, as provided for by the 1963 Convention, at both the trial and the appeal level in the United States courts.

Germany stated that it had been, until very recently, the contention of the authorities of the State of Arizona that they had been unaware of the fact that Karl and Walter LaGrand were German nationals, and that it had accepted that contention as true. However, during the proceedings before the Arizona Mercy Committee on 23 February 1999, the State Attorney admitted that the authorities of the State of Arizona had indeed been aware since 1982 that the two detainees were German nationals. Germany further stated that Karl and Walter LaGrand, finally with the assistance of German consular officers, did claim violations of the Vienna Convention before the Federal District Court (the federal court of first instance). In addition, it claimed that the Court, applying the municipal law doctrine of "procedural default", decided that, because the individuals in question had not asserted their rights under the Vienna Convention in the previous legal proceedings at the State level, they could not assert them in the Federal habeas corpus proceedings; and the intermediate federal appellate court, the last means of legal recourse in the United States available to them, had affirmed that decision.

Germany asked ICJ to adjudge and declare that: the United States, in arresting, detaining, trying, convicting and sentencing the LaGrands, had violated its international legal obligations to Germany, in its own right and in the exercise of its right of diplomatic protection of its nationals, as provided by articles 5 and 36 of the Vienna Convention; Germany was therefore entitled to reparation; the United States was under an international legal obligation not to apply the doctrine of "procedural default", or any other doctrine of its internal law, so as to preclude the exercise of the rights accorded under the Vienna Convention; and the United States was under an international obligation to carry out in conformity with the foregoing international legal obligations any future detention of or criminal proceedings against the LaGrands or any other German national in its territory, whether by a constituent, legislative, executive, judicial or other power, whether that power held a superior or subordinate position in the organization of the United States, and whether that power's functions were of an international or internal character. The foregoing international legal obligations held that: any criminal liability imposed on the LaGrands in violation of international legal obligations was void, and should be recognized as void by the United States legal authorities; the United States should provide reparation, in the form of compensation and satisfaction, for the execution of Karl LaGrand on 24 February 1999; the United States should restore the status quo ante in the case of Walter LaGrand, which meant re-establishing the situation that existed before the detention of, proceedings against and conviction and sentencing of Walter LaGrand, whose execution had been set for 3 March; and the United States should provide Germany a guarantee of the non-repetition of the illegal acts.

On 2 March, Germany also submitted an urgent request for the indication of provisional measures, asking the Court to indicate that "the United States should take all measures at its disposal to ensure that Walter LaGrand is not executed pending the final decision in these proceedings, and should inform the Court of all the measures which it has taken in implementation of that Order"; it asked the Court moreover to consider its request as a matter of the greatest urgency "in view of the extreme gravity and immediacy of the threat of execution of a German citizen".

By a letter of the same date, the Vice-President of the Court addressed the United States Government in the following terms: "Exercising the functions of the presidency in terms of Articles 13 and 32 of the Rules of Court, and acting in conformity with Article 74, paragraph 4, of the said Rules, I hereby draw the attention of [the] Government [of the United States] to the need to act in such a way as to enable any Order the Court will make on the request for provisional measures to have its appropriate effects".

At a public sitting on 3 March, the Court rendered its Order on the request for the indication of provisional measures by which it indicated that: the United States should take all measures at its disposal to ensure that Walter LaGrand was not executed pending the final decision in the proceedings, and should inform the Court of all the measures which it had taken in implementation of the Order; and the United States should transmit the Order to the Governor of the State of Arizona. It decided that, until the Court had given its final decision, it would remain seized of the matters which formed the subject matter of the Order.

Judge Oda appended a declaration to the Order and President Schwebel a separate opinion.

By an Order of 5 March, the Court, taking into account the views of the Parties, fixed 16 September 1999 and 27 March 2000 as the time limits for the filing of the Memorial of Germany and the Counter-Memorial of the United States, respectively. The Memorial was filed within the prescribed time limit.

Use of force (Yugoslavia v. Belgium)
(Yugoslavia v. Canada) (Yugoslavia v. France)
(Yugoslavia v. Germany) (Yugoslavia v. Italy)
(Yugoslavia v. Netherlands) (Yugoslavia v. Portugal)
(Yugoslavia v. Spain) (Yugoslavia v. United Kingdom) and (Yugoslavia v. United States)

FRY instituted proceedings on 29 April 1999 against Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Portugal, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States for alleged violation of the obligation not to use force. In the cases against Belgium, Canada, the Netherlands, Portugal, Spain and the United Kingdom, FRY invoked the jurisdiction of the Court based on Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute and on article IX of the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 260 A (III) [YUN 1948-49, p. 959], and, in the cases against France, Germany, Italy and the United States, on article IX of the Convention and Article 38, paragraph 5, of the Rules of Court.

In its Applications, FRY stated that the disputes involved acts of the [Respondent State concerned] "by which it has violated the international obligation banning the use of force against another State, the obligation not to intervene in the internal affairs of another State, the obligation not to violate the sovereignty of another State, the obligation to protect the civilian population and civilian objects in wartime, the obligation to protect the environment, the obligation relating to free navigation on international rivers, the obligation regarding fundamental human rights and freedoms, the obligation not to use prohibited weapons, the obligation not to deliberately inflict conditions of life calculated to cause the physical destruction of a national group".

FRY requested the Court to adjudge and declare that [the Respondent State concerned] had acted against it by taking part in the bombing of the territory of FRY, breaching its obligation not to use force against another State; by taking part in the training, arming, financing, equipping and supplying of terrorist groups, i.e. the Kosovo Liberation Army, breaching its obligation not to intervene in the affairs of another State; by taking part in attacks on civilian targets, breaching its obligation to spare the civilian population and civilian objects; by taking part in destroying or damaging monasteries and cultural monuments, breaching its obligation not to commit any act of hostility directed against historical monuments, works of art or places of worship that constituted people's cultural or spiritual heritage; by taking part in the use of cluster bombs, breaching its obligation not to use prohibited weapons, i.e. weapons calculated to cause unnecessary suffering; by taking part in the bombing of oil refineries and chemical plants, breaching its obligation not to cause considerable environmental damage; by taking part in the use of weapons containing depleted uranium, breaching its obligation not to use prohibited weapons and not to cause far-reaching health and environmental damage; by taking part in killing civilians, destroying enterprises, communications, health and cultural institutions, breaching its obligation to respect the rights to life, to work, to information, to health care as well as other basic human rights; by taking part in destroying bridges on international rivers, breaching its obligation to respect freedom of navigation on international rivers; and by taking part in activities listed above, and in particular by causing enormous environmental damage and by using depleted uranium, breaching its obligation not to deliberately inflict on a national group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction, in whole or in part. In addition, the [Respondent State concerned] was responsible for the violation of the above international obligations; was obliged to stop immediately the violation of the above obligations vis-a-vis FRY; and was obliged to provide compensation for the damage to FRY and to its citizens and juridical persons.

Also on 29 April, FRY submitted, in each of the cases, a request for the indication of provisional measures, asking the Court to indicate that "the [Respondent State concerned] shall cease immediately its acts of use of force and shall refrain from any act of threat or use of force" against FRY. Hearings on the requests for the indication of provisional measures were held between 10 and 12 May.

At a public sitting on 2 June, the Vice-President of the Court, Acting President, read the Orders, by which, in the cases (Yugoslavia v. Belgium), (Yugoslavia v. Canada), (Yugoslavia v. France), (Yugoslavia v. Germany), (Yugoslavia v. Italy), (Yugoslavia v. Netherlands), (Yugoslavia v. Portugal) and (Yugoslavia v. United Kingdom), the Court rejected the requests for the indication of provisional measures and reserved the subsequent procedure for further decision. In the cases of (Yugoslavia v. Spain) and (Yugoslavia v. United States of America), the Court—having found that it manifestly lacked jurisdiction to entertain FRY's Application; that it could not therefore indicate any provisional measure whatsoever in order to protect the rights invoked therein; and that, within a system of consensual jurisdiction, to maintain on the General List a case upon which it appeared certain that the Court would not be able to adjudicate on the merits would most assuredly not contribute to the sound administration of justice—rejected FRY's requests for the indication of provisional measures and ordered that those cases be removed from the List.

In each of the cases (Yugoslavia v. Belgium), (Yugoslavia v. Canada), (Yugoslavia v. Netherlands) and (Yugoslavia v. Portugal), Judge Koroma appended a declaration to the Order of the Court; Judges Oda, Higgins, Parra-Aranguren and Kooijmans appended separate opinions; and Vice-President Weeramantry, Acting President, Judges Shi and Vereshchetin and Judge ad hoc Kreca appended dissenting opinions.

In each of the cases (Yugoslavia v. France), (Yugoslavia v. Germany) and (Yugoslavia v. Italy), Vice-President Weeramantry, Acting President, and Judges Shi, Koroma and Vereshchetin appended declarations to the Order of the Court; Judges Oda and Parra-Aranguren appended separate opinions; and Judge ad hoc Kreca appended a dissenting opinion.

In the case (Yugoslavia v. Spain), Judges Shi, Koroma and Vereshchetin appended declarations to the Order of the Court; and Judges Oda, Higgins, Parra-Aranguren and Kooijmans and Judge ad hoc Kreca appended separate opinions.

In the case (Yugoslavia v. United Kingdom), Vice-President Weeramantry, Acting President, and Judges Shi, Koroma and Vereshchetin appended declarations to the Order of the Court; Judges Oda, Higgins, Parra-Aranguren and Kooijmans appended separate opinions; and Judge ad hoc Kreca appended a dissenting opinion.

In the case (Yugoslavia v. United States of America), Judges Shi, Koroma and Vereshchetin appended declarations to the Order of the Court; Judges Oda and Parra-Aranguren appended separate opinions; and Judge ad hoc Kreca appended a dissenting opinion.

By Orders of 30 June, the Court, having ascertained the views of the Parties, fixed the time limits for the filing of the written pleadings in each of the eight cases maintained on the List as at 5 January 2000 for the Memorial of FRY and 5 July 2000 for the Counter-Memorial of the Respondent State concerned.

Communication. On 27 May [A/53/992], Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Slovenia and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, referring to a depositary notification made by FRY on 25 April concerning the declaration under Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute, stated that the notification could have no legal effect because FRY was not a UN State Member, nor was it a State party to the Statute. Thus, there was no legal basis to accept or circulate the invalid document.

Armed activities on the territory of the Congo (Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Burundi) (Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Uganda) and (Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Rwanda)

The DRC instituted proceedings against Burundi, Uganda and Rwanda on 23 June 1999 for acts of armed aggression perpetrated in flagrant violation of the Charter of the United Nations and the Charter of the Organization of African Unity.

In its Applications, the DRC contended that "such armed aggression . . . involved inter alia violation of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the [DRC], violations of international humanitarian law and massive human rights violations". The DRC sought the cessation of the aggression against it, which constituted a serious threat to peace and security in central Africa in general and in the Great Lakes region in particular; reparation for acts of intentional destruction and looting; and restitution of national property and resources appropriated for the benefit of the respective Respondent States.

In the cases against Burundi and Rwanda, the DRC invoked the bases for the jurisdiction of the Court Article 36, paragraph 1, of the Statute, which provided that the jurisdiction of the Court comprised all cases which the parties referred to it and all matters specially provided for in the UN Charter or in treaties and conventions in force; the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the General Assembly by resolution 39/46 [YUN 1984, p. 813]; the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation [YUN 1971, p. 739]; and Article 38, paragraph 5, of the Rules of Court, which contemplated the situation where a State filed an application against another State that had not accepted the jurisdiction of the Court. In the case against Uganda, the DRC based the jurisdiction on Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute.

The DRC requested the Court to adjudge and declare that: [the Respondent State concerned] was guilty of an act of aggression as defined by article 1 of Assembly resolution 3314(XXIX) [YUN 1974, p. 847] and of the jurisprudence of the Court, contrary to Article 2, paragraph 4, of the UN Charter; [the Respondent State concerned] committed repeated violations of the Geneva Conventions for the protection of war victims of 1949 and the two Additional Protocols of 1977 [YUN 1977, p. 706], in flagrant disregard of the elementary rules of international humanitarian law in conflict zones, and was also guilty of massive human rights violations in defiance of the most basic customary law; [the Respondent State concerned], by taking forcible possession of the Inga hydroelectric dam and deliberately and regularly causing massive electrical power cuts, in violation of the provisions of article 56 of the Additional Protocol of 1977, was responsible for very heavy loss of life in the city of Kinshasa (5 million inhabitants) and the surrounding area; and [the Respondent State concerned] had violated the Convention on International Civil Aviation signed in Chicago on 7 December 1944, the 1970 Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft and the 1971 Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation by shooting down, on 9 October 1998 at Kindu, a Boeing 727, the property of Congo Airlines, thereby killing 40 civilians.

The DRC requested the Court to adjudge and declare that: all armed forces [of the Respondent State concerned] participating in acts of aggression should forthwith vacate its territory; [the Respondent State concerned] should secure the immediate and unconditional withdrawal from Congolese territory of its nationals, both natural and legal persons; and the DRC was entitled to compensation from [the Respondent State concerned] in respect of all acts of looting, destruction, removal of property and persons and other unlawful acts attributable to [the Respondent State concerned], in respect of which the DRC reserved the right to determine at a later date the precise amount of the damage suffered, in addition to its claim for the restitution of all property removed.

In each of the cases against Burundi and Rwanda, the Court, by an Order of 21 October, taking into account the agreement of the Parties, as expressed at a meeting between the President and the Agents of the Parties on 19 October, decided that the written proceedings should first address the questions of the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the Application and of its admissibility and fixed 21 April 2000 as the time limit for the filing of a Memorial on those questions by Burundi and Rwanda, and 23 October 2000 for the filing of a Counter-Memorial by the DRC.

In the case against Uganda, the Court, taking into account the agreement of the Parties, as expressed at a meeting held with them by the President of the Court on 19 October, fixed, by an Order of 21 October, 21 July 2000 as the time limit for the filing of a Memorial by the DRC and 21 April 2001 for the filing of a Counter-Memorial by Uganda.

Application of the genocide convention (Croatia v. Yugoslavia)

Croatia instituted proceedings against FRY on 2 July for alleged violations of the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 260 A (III) [YUN 1948-49, p. 959], said to have been committed between 1991 and 1995.

In its Application, Croatia contended that by "directly controlling the activity of its armed forces, intelligence agents, and various paramilitary detachments, on the territory of... Croatia, in the Knin region, eastern and western Slovenia, and Dalmatia, [Yugoslavia] is liable [for] the 'ethnic cleansing' of Croatian citizens from these areas... and is required to provide reparation for the resulting damage". It further alleged that, "by directing, encouraging, and urging Croatian citizens of Serb ethnicity in the Knin region to evacuate the area in 1995, as... Croatia reasserted its legitimate governmental authority... [Yugoslavia] engaged in conduct amounting to a second round of 'ethnic cleansing'". Croatia invoked the jurisdiction of the Court based on Article 36, paragraph 1, of the Statute and on article IX of the Convention.

Croatia requested the Court to adjudge and declare that FRY breached its legal obligations towards Croatia under articles I, II (a, b, c, d), III (a, b, c, d, e), IV and V of the 1948 Convention; and that FRY had an obligation to pay to Croatia, in its own right and as parens patriae for its citizens, reparations for damages to persons and property, as well as to the Croatian economy and environment caused by the foregoing violations of international law in a sum to be determined by the Court. Croatia reserved the right to introduce to the Court at a future date a precise evaluation of the damages.

By an Order of 14 September, the Court took account of an agreement of the Parties expressed on 13 September and fixed 14 March 2000 as the time limit for the filing of the Memorial of Croatia and 14 September 2000 for the filing of the Counter-Memorial of FRY.

Aerial incident (Pakistan v. India)

Pakistan instituted proceedings against India on 21 September regarding a dispute in which Pakistan alleged that, on 10 August, India destroyed a Pakistani aircraft. Pakistan founded the jurisdiction of the Court on Article 36, paragraphs 1 and 2, of the Statute and the declarations whereby the two Parties had recognized the Court's compulsory jurisdiction.

In a letter of 2 November, the Agent of India filed preliminary objections to the assumption of jurisdiction by the Court on the basis of Pakistan's Application.

At a meeting between the President of the Court and representatives of the Parties on 10 November, pursuant to Article 31 of the Rules of Court, the Parties provisionally agreed to request the Court to determine separately the question of its jurisdiction. The agreement was subsequently confirmed in writing by both Parties.

By an Order of 19 November, the Court, taking into account the agreement, decided that the written pleadings should first be addressed to the question of the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the Application and fixed 10 January 2000 and 28 February 2000 as the time limits for the filing of a Memorial by Pakistan and a Counter-Memorial by India, respectively.

Maritime delimitation (Nicaragua v. Honduras)

On 8 December, Nicaragua instituted proceedings against Honduras in respect of a dispute concerning the delimitation of the maritime zones appertaining to each of those States in the Caribbean Sea.

In its Application, Nicaragua stated that it had maintained for decades the position that its maritime Caribbean border with Honduras had not been determined, while the position of Honduras, allegedly, was that a delimitation line was fixed by the King of Spain in an Arbitral Award of 23 December 1906, which was found valid and binding by ICJ on 18 November 1960 [YUN 1960, p. 536]. According to Nicaragua, the position adopted by Honduras had brought repeated confrontations and mutual capture of vessels of both nations in and around the general border area, and that diplomatic negotiations had failed. Nicaragua founded jurisdiction of the Court on declarations under Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Court's Statute, by which both States accepted the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court, and also article XXXI of the American Treaty on Pacific Settlement (officially known as the "Pact of Bogota"), signed on 30 April 1948, to which both Nicaragua and Honduras were parties.

Nicaragua requested the Court to determine the course of the single maritime boundary between areas of territorial sea, continental shelf and exclusive economic zone appertaining to Nicaragua and Honduras.

Difference relating to immunity from legal process of a Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights

In April, the Court delivered an advisory opinion on the privileges and immunities of a Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights, Dato' Param Cumaraswamy (Malaysia).

In a 1995 interview with the publication International Commercial Litigation, Mr. Cumaraswamy, the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, had commented on certain litigations that had taken place in Malaysian courts. Subsequently, commercial companies in Malaysia filed suit against him for damages. The UN Legal Counsel and the Secretary-General in 1997 informed Malaysia of the Special Rapporteur's immunity from legal process with respect to the complaint. However, the judge for the case was unable to maintain that the defendant was protected by the immunity he claimed to have.

The Economic and Social Council, in decision 1998/297 [YUN 1998, p. 1191], requested ICJ to give an advisory opinion on a difference that had arisen between the United Nations and Malaysia on the interpretation or application of the 1946 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, adopted by the General Assembly by resolution 22 A (I) [YUN 1946-47, p. 100]. The Secretary-General officially communicated the Council's decision to the Court [YUN 1998, p. 1190].

At a public sitting held on 29 April 1999, the Court delivered its advisory opinion, the final paragraph of which read as follows:

"For these reasons,
The Court

(4) By thirteen votes to two,

That the Government of Malaysia has the obligation to communicate this advisory opinion to the Malaysian courts, in order that Malaysia's international obligations be given effect and Dato' Param Cumaraswamy's immunity be respected;

In Favour: President Schwebel; Vice-President Weeramantry; Judges Bedjaoui, Guillaume, Ranjeva, Herczegh, Shi, Fleischhauer, Vereshchetin, Higgins, Parra-Aranguren, Kooijmans, Rezek;

Against: Judges Oda, Koroma."

Vice-President Weeramantry, Judges Oda and Rezek appended separate opinions to the advisory opinion; Judge Koroma appended a dissenting opinion.

Communications. Further to his letter of 5 May transmitting to the President of the Economic and Social Council the Court's advisory opinion [E/1999/49], the Secretary-General, on 21 July, informed the Council President that the Legal Counsel officially had transmitted a copy of the advisory opinion to Malaysia [E/1999/49/Add.1]. He stated that the Government of Malaysia had conveyed the advisory opinion to the competent judicial authorities. In the absence of a reply from Malaysia, the Legal Counsel, in July, requested further information as to the manner in which the Government would give effect to its obligations and to the Special Rapporteur's immunity from legal process. Notwithstanding the Legal Counsel's efforts and Mr. Cumaraswamy's motions to dismiss the four lawsuits pending against him, the competent judicial authorities fixed the first suit for case management on 6 August. It fixed the application to strike the second and third suits for hearing on 5 August, and postponed the application to strike the fourth suit.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July [meeting 46], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1999/64 [draft: E/1999/L.45] without vote [agenda item 14 (h)].

Applicability of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations in the case of Dato' Param Cumaraswamy as Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the independence of judges and lawyers

The Economic and Social Council,

Considering that a difference has arisen between the United Nations and the Government of Malaysia, within the meaning of article VIII, section 30, of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, with respect to the immunity from legal process of Dato' Param Cumaraswamy, the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the independence of judges and lawyers,

Considering also that Malaysia has acknowledged its obligations under article VIII, section 30, of the Convention, according to which the advisory opinion given by the International Court of Justice shall be accepted as decisive by the parties to the dispute,

Having requested, on a priority basis, in its decision 1998/297 of 5 August 1998, an advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the legal question of the applicability of article VI, section 22, of the Convention in the case of Dato' Param Cumaraswamy as Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the independence of judges and lawyers, taking into account the circumstances set out in paragraphs 1 to 15 of the note by the Secretary-General, and on the legal obligations of Malaysia in that case,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the International Court of Justice for having given the advisory opinion on 29 April 1999, which is contained in the annex to the letter dated 5 May 1999 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Economic and Social Council, and which states, inter alia:

"That article VI, section 22, of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations is applicable in the case of Dato' Param Cumaraswamy as Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the independence of judges and lawyers;

"That Dato' Param Cumaraswamy is entitled to immunity from legal process of every kind for the words spoken by him during an interview as published in an article in the November 1995 issue of International Commercial Litigation;

"That the Government of Malaysia had the obligation to inform the Malaysian courts of the finding of the Secretary-General that Dato' Param Cumaraswamy was entitled to immunity from legal process;

"That the Malaysian courts had the obligation to deal with the question of immunity from legal process as a preliminary issue to be expeditiously decided in limine litis;

"That Dato' Param Cumaraswamy shall be held financially harmless for any costs imposed upon him by the Malaysian courts, in particular taxed costs,

"That the Government of Malaysia has the obligation to communicate this advisory opinion to the Malaysian courts, in order that Malaysia's international obligations be given effect and Dato' Param Cumaraswamy's immunity be respected;"

2. Takes note of the stated commitment by the Government of Malaysia to abide by the advisory opinion, and notes in this regard that the Government has conveyed the advisory opinion to the competent judicial authorities;

3. Also takes note of the letter dated 21 July 1999 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council;

4. Stresses the obligation of Malaysia as a State party to the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations to make further efforts, in order that its international obligations thereunder be given effect and Dato' Param Cumaraswamy's immunity be respected, in accordance with the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice.

Communications. On 19 October [E/1999/121], the Secretary-General informed the Council President that proceedings in the four civil suits had continued. Moreover, on the issue whether the courts of Malaysia should follow the advisory opinion, a competent judicial authority of the Malaysian courts ruled on 18 October that the 1946 Convention was not a final and binding authority and dismissed Mr. Cumaraswamy's application to set aside one of the suits and ordered him to file a defence for purposes of a full trial on the merits of the case. The Secretary-General stated that, as a party to the Convention, Malaysia had an obligation to give effect to its terms. Pursuant to section 30 of the Convention, the advisory opinion should be accepted as decisive by the parties.

In a 15 December letter to the Council President [E/1999/124], the Secretary-General, referring to the legal expenses incurred by Mr. Cumaraswamy, stated that since the Special Rapporteur was acting in the course of the performance of his mission when he spoke the words that gave rise to the subject proceedings, the United Nations was obliged to indemnify him for any costs, expenses or damages arising out of the proceedings. The United Nations had maintained that the Government of Malaysia was ultimately responsible for those costs, expenses or damages and the advisory opinion confirmed that fact. Therefore, the United Nations had submitted a claim to the Government of Malaysia for reimbursement for legal expenses it had paid on behalf of Mr. Kumaraswamy, which amounted to $110,886.91.

Composition of the Court

On 24 November [S/1999/1197], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that Judge Stephen Schwebel, the President of the Court, whose term was to expire on 5 February 2000, intended to resign effective 29 February 2000. In accordance with the Statute, the Secretary-General asked the Council to fix the date of the election of a replacement.

Also in November, the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly of the vacancy [A/54/624].

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 November [meeting 4075], the Security Council adopted resolution 1278(1999) without vote. The draft [S/1999/1205] was prepared during Council consultations.

The Security Council,

Noting with regret the resignation of Judge Stephen Schwebel, taking effect on 29 February 2000,

Noting that a vacancy in the International Court of Justice for the remainder of the term of office of Judge Stephen Schwebel will thus occur and must be filled in accordance with the terms of the Statute of the Court,

Noting also that, in accordance with Article 14 of the Statute, the date of the election to fill the vacancy shall be fixed by the Security Council, Decides that the election to fill the vacancy shall take place on 2 March 2000 at a meeting of the Security Council and at a meeting of the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session.

Election of judges

In September, the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly and the Security Council that the terms of five judges would expire on 5 February 2000 [A/54/305-S/1999/939]. Thus, the Assembly and the Council would elect five judges for a term of office of nine years, beginning on 6 February 2000. The Secretary-General described the procedure in the Assembly and in the Council for the election. Nominations from the national groups of States parties to the Statute of the Court were circulated in September [A/54/307-S/1999/941] and in October [A/54/306-S/1999/940/Rev.1 & Add.1].

Chapter II

International tribunals

In 1999, the judicial activities of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 (ICTY) reached an unprecedented level, with events in the Kosovo province of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) dominating the work of the Office of the Prosecutor. On 22 May, Slobodan Milosevic, the President of FRY, and four others were indicted for crimes against humanity in Kosovo. A third Trial Chamber became operational during the year, and all three Trial Chambers and the Appeals Chamber were seized of cases.

At the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994 (ICTR), a third Trial Chamber became operational in February. During the year, the Office of the Prosecutor continued to pursue its activities based on the theory of conspiracy to commit genocide by consolidating cases in joint indictments, grouping them by theme or by region.

International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia

In August, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly and the Security Council the sixth annual report of ICTY [A/54/187-S/1999/846], which was established by Council resolution 827(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 440]. By decision 54/413 of 8 November, the Assembly took note of the report, which covered the period from 28 July 1998 to 31 July 1999.

In 1999, ICTY's judicial activities increased significantly, and the Tribunal provided fair trials for the accused while maintaining a high degree of protection for victims and witnesses. Nevertheless, events in the Kosovo province of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) (see PARTS ONE and THREE, Chapters V and III, respectively) and non-compliance by several States in the region continued to pose barriers to the Tribunal's operations.

The Chambers

The judicial activities of the Chambers of the Tribunal comprised trials, appellate proceedings and proceedings pertaining to the exercise of the primacy of the Tribunal, as well as contempt proceedings. Furthermore, the judicial activities of the Chambers involved reviewing indictments submitted by the Prosecutor, issuing arrest warrants and conducting hearings. The Chambers also engaged in regulatory activities to improve procedures for ensuring that trials were fair and expeditious.

In 1999, a third Trial Chamber, established by Security Council resolution 1166(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 1196], became operational. All three Trial Chambers and the Appeals Chamber were seized of cases.

New trials and cases

On 24 May, an indictment was confirmed against Slobodan Milosevic, President of FRY, Milan Milutinovic, President of Serbia, Nikola Sainovic, Deputy Prime Minister of FRY, Dragoljub Ojdanic, Chief of Staff of the Yugoslav Army, and Vlatko Stojiljkovic, Minister of Internal Affairs of Serbia, charging them with crimes against humanity with respect to criminal conduct in Kosovo. Consequently, arrest warrants were issued for each accused and ordered to be transmitted by the ICTY Registrar to FRY, Member States of the United Nations and Switzerland. Further orders were issued to those States requesting them to inquire whether any of the accused's assets were located in their territories and, if so, to freeze such assets provisionally until the accused were taken into custody. The last measure was taken in the light of the non-cooperation of FRY with the Tribunal and the possibility that such assets could be used to evade arrest.

The existence of an indictment against Zeljko Raznjatovic (also known as Arkan) was made public on 31 March, although the indictment itself was not made public.

The trial of Dario Kordic and Mario Cerkez began on 12 April. The two were charged with crimes against humanity, grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions for the protection of war victims of 12 August 1949 (Geneva Conventions) and violations of the laws and customs of war against the Bosnian Muslims in the Lasva Valley region of central Bosnia.

An indictment against Gojko Jankovic, Janko Janjic, Zoran Vukovic, Dragan Zelenovic and Radovan Stankovic was confirmed on 7 October. Mr. Vukovic appeared together with the accused Dragoljub Kunarac and Radomir Kovac (see below), all charged with crimes against humanity and violations of the laws or customs of war.

Dragan Kolundzija, Damir Dosen and Dusko Sikirica were charged with grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions, violations of the laws or customs of war and crimes against humanity in the Keraterm camp in the municipality of Prijedor. Mr. Kolundzija was arrested in June by the multinational Stabilization Force (SFOR) and on 29 September pleaded not guilty to all counts against him in an amended indictment that was confirmed on 30 August. Mr. Dosen, who was detained by SFOR in October, pleaded not guilty on 8 November at his initial appearance to all counts against him. Mr. Sikirica, who was still at large, was also charged with genocide.

An amended indictment of 17 December charged Radoslav Brdjanin and Momir Talic with their alleged participation in the ethnic cleansing of non-Serbs from the autonomous region of Krajina between April and December 1992. Mr. Brdjanin, who was arrested by SFOR in July, pleaded not guilty to all charges at his initial appearance on 12 July before the Trial Chamber. Mr. Talic, who was arrested on 25 August, pleaded not guilty to the charges at his initial appearance on 31 August. The amended indictment charged the accused with two counts of genocide, five counts of crimes against humanity, two counts of violations of the laws or customs of war and three counts of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions.

The three accused in the case of Kunarac and Others were charged in connection with their alleged participation in the detention, degrading treatment and rape of women and girls in Foca and surrounding municipalities. Radomir Kovac was arrested on 2 August and pleaded not guilty to all counts of the indictment. On 3 September, a second amended indictment was confirmed, joining him with Dragoljub Kunarac and adding two new counts against him. Both pleaded not guilty to all counts. On 23 December, Zoran Vukovic was arrested and transferred to the Tribunal. At his initial appearance on 29 December, he pleaded not guilty to all charges.

General Stanislav Galic was accused of committing crimes against humanity and violations of the laws or customs of war between September 1992 and August 1994 during a campaign against civilians in Sarajevo. Arrested by SFOR, he was transferred to ICTY on 21 December. At his initial appearance on 29 December, he pleaded not guilty to the charges against him. The Trial Chamber designated its presiding judge to conduct pre-trial proceedings.

Communications. On 27 May [S/1999/625], FRY issued a statement asserting that the indictment of its President and four senior officials represented another manipulation by North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) aggressors against FRY and an attempt to mislead the world public in order to cover up responsibility for the crime of genocide against the people of Yugoslavia. On the same date [S/1999/617], the Foreign Ministry of the Russian Federation stated that the indictment was motivated by strictly political considerations.

Ongoing trials

The Trial Chamber, on 7 May, found Zlatko Aleksovski, whose trial began in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1193], guilty of one count of a violation of the laws or customs of war and not guilty of two other charges. He was sentenced to two years' and six months' imprisonment. Considering that Mr. Aleksovski was entitled to credit for his time served in the UN Detention Unit (2 years, 10 months and 29 days), the Trial Chamber ordered his immediate release, notwithstanding any appeal. Both the accused and the prosecution appealed against the judgement.

On 7 July, the Trial Chamber began contempt proceedings against Milan Simic, one of the accused in the case of Simic and Others [YUN 1998, p. 1192], and his then lead counsel Branislav Avramovic, based on allegations of witness interference, intimidation and bribery. The Chamber suspended trial preparations pending the outcome of the contempt proceedings, including vacating the trial date, originally set for 22 June. Another of the accused, Stevan Todorovic, had filed a number of motions challenging the legality of his arrest, as well as ancillary motions seeking to obtain evidence from both the prosecution and SFOR as to the manner of his transfer to SFOR authority. In November, the Trial Chamber heard evidence from the accused as to the circumstances of his arrest. Yet another of the accused, Miroslav Tadic, on 28 July, was granted leave to appeal against a decision of the Trial Chamber denying his application for provisional release.

During the trial of General Tihomir Blaskic, who was charged with grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions, violations of the laws or customs of war and crimes against humanity, 158 witnesses testified, including the accused. The proceedings ended on 30 July with judgement reserved to a later date. On 11 June [A/53/1001], the Secretary-General sought the concurrence of the General Assembly with respect to a two-month extension of the services of a remaining individual brought in as gratis personnel, who had been the leading prosecution co-counsel in Mr. Blaskic's trial. On 23 June [A/53/PV.102], the Assembly approved the extension until the end of August.

In the case of Martinovic and Naletilic, Vinko Martinovic, who was being held in respect of a different case in Croatia, was transferred to ICTY custody on 9 August on the basis of an indictment dated 21 December 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1194]. The accused pleaded not guilty to crimes against humanity, war crimes and grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions. His co-accused, Mladen Naletilic, however, remained in detention in Croatia for another case. On 25 August, the President of the Tribunal reported to the Security Council that the Croatian authorities had failed to transfer Mr. Naletilic (see below, under "State non-compliance").

In November, the Trial Chamber heard closing arguments in the 1993 case of Kupreskic and Others [YUN 1998, p. 1194] who were charged in connection with their alleged role in the 1993 attack on the Bosnian town of Ahmici.

In the case of Kvocka and Others [YUN 1998, p. 1192], four persons were charged with crimes alleged to have occurred in the Omarska camp in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Trial Chamber dealt with many related questions, and in particular dismissed the Prosecutor's motion to join the case to the Kolundzija case (see p. 1215). In November, the Chamber decided that depositions taken by a legal officer could be accepted.

In the case of Dusko Tadic, who appealed his 1997 conviction and sentencing [YUN 1997, p. 1321], the Appeals Chamber rendered its judgement on the appeal against the Trial Chamber's judgement. Reversing the judgement in certain respects, the Appeals Chamber found him guilty on a number of additional counts. On 11 November, the designated Trial Chamber issued its sentencing judgement on the additional counts, imposing sentences ranging from 6 to 25 years. It stipulated that the new sentences were to run concurrently both inter se and in relation to each of the sentences imposed by the 1997 sentencing judgement. Mr. Tadic appealed against the second sentencing judgement and, on 3 December, the Appeals Chamber joined his two appeals; thus, the sentencing appeal judgement would relate to the appeals against both the 1997 and the 1999 sentencing judgements.

In December, the Trial Chamber completed the trial of Goran Jelusic [YUN 1998, p. 1192], who had pleaded guilty to war crimes and crimes against humanity, but not guilty to the count of genocide. The Trial Chamber, in October, had orally acquitted him of genocide because the mens rea required for constitution of the offence had not been proved, a decision appealed by the Prosecutor. On 14 December, the Trial Chamber rendered its reasoned written judgement on all the crimes ascribed to the accused, sentencing him to 40 years in prison for war crimes and crimes against humanity. Mr. Jelusic appealed against that judgement.

At an initial appearance on 14 September, Milorad Krnojelac, who was arrested in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1193], pleaded not guilty to charges of breaches of the Geneva Conventions, violations of the laws or customs of war and crimes against humanity contained in an amended indictment alleging that the accused, as camp commander at a detention centre in Foca, Bosnia and Herzegovina, in 1992 and 1993, had subjected both Muslim and non-Serb males to prolonged and routine imprisonment, confinement, torture and countless killings.

Upon a Prosecution request, the Trial Chamber on 12 March issued a binding order to the Republika Srpska for the production of documents in the case of General Radislav Krstic [YUN 1998, p. 1193]. Furthermore, on 6 May, the Trial Chamber granted, in part, a defence motion challenging the form of the indictment, thereby ordering the Prosecution to clarify the indictment in respect of the responsibility of the accused and his co-accused. Further to defence motions and discussions, an amended indictment was filed on 27 October, to which the accused pleaded not guilty.

State request for review

The Trial Chamber, on 4 February, granted, in substantial part, an application by the Prosecution by issuing an order to Croatia for the production of documents. Following Croatia's request for a review of the order, the Appeals Chamber, on 26 March, held that Croatia was directly affected by the order, which concerned issues relating to the Tribunal's powers. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber found Croatia's request for review admissible and suspended the order pending the outcome of the review. On 9 September, the Appeals Chamber confirmed the validity of the binding order on the basis that it conformed to the criteria established by the Appeals Chamber in the case of General Tihomir Blaskic (see p. 1216).

State non-compliance

The President of the Tribunal, in a letter of 2 November [S/1999/1117], requested the Security Council to take steps to address the issue of State non-compliance with the Tribunal's statute. Areas of non-compliance involved failure to arrest and transfer individuals indicted by the Tribunal; failure to recognize the Tribunal's jurisdiction over certain operations; and failure to permit ICTY investigators access to Kosovo sites where criminal activity allegedly occurred. Recently, the latter category had been largely resolved, and the Prosecutor herself had been in Kosovo. The first two categories, however, remained unresolved. The Prosecutor noted that the Tribunal lacked coercive mechanisms and had to rely on the international community to give effect to its arrest warrants and other orders. Annexed to the letter was a list of previous reports of non-compliance.

Bosnia and Herzegovina

In Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republika Srpska had continued its policy of refusing to execute arrest warrants against the approximately 25 indictees believed to be residing in its territory.

Croatia

On 19 July, Croatia's Minister of Justice advised the Prosecutor that his Government would not consider the transfer to the Tribunal of Vinko Martinovic and Mladen Naletilic (see p. 1216), indicted in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1194], until they had completed sentences in Croatia relating to previous convictions. That position was contrary to the principle that the Tribunal enjoyed primacy over national courts. Subsequently, Croatia indicated that it was prepared to transfer the individuals following the completion of court proceedings in Croatia.

As a result of Croatia's persistent failure to comply with Prosecution requests, the Prosecutor requested the Tribunal President on 28 July to find that Croatia had failed to comply with its obligations towards the Tribunal and to report the matter to the Security Council. On 25 August [S/1999/912], the President of the Tribunal, in a letter to the Council, said that Croatia had refused to recognize the jurisdiction of the Tribunal over alleged criminal activity that occurred during the 1995 military offensive launched by the Croatian Army on Western Slavonia (Operation Flash)

[YUN 1995, p. 571] and on Krajina (Operation Storm) [ibid., p. 580]. In addition, Croatia refused to surrender and to transfer Mr. Naletilic to the Tribunal. It transferred Mr. Martinovic to ICTY custody on 9 August.

In reply, Croatia transmitted to the Council a Government statement of 26 August [S/1999/923], which asserted that the Tribunal's claim of Croatia's alleged non-cooperation was unfounded. A further letter of 1 September [S/1999/936] from Croatia's Minister for Foreign Affairs stated that the problems encountered in Croatia's cooperation with ICTY were mostly of a legal and procedural nature, and easy to overcome.

On 22 September, the Minister of Justice of Croatia sent a letter of justification to the Council President. To clarify the record, the President of the Tribunal sent a letter on 27 September.

Federal Republic of Yugoslavia

On 2 February, the Prosecutor requested the President of the Tribunal to find non-compliance by FRY and to report such non-compliance to the Security Council. The request was based on a pattern of non-compliance, including the failure to defer to the competence of the Tribunal, failure to execute warrants, failure to provide evidence and information, and refusal to permit the Prosecutor and her investigators into Kosovo in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1195]. On 12 February, the President invited FRY to respond to the Prosecutor's request. No response was received. On 16 March, the President made a determination that FRY was in non-compliance with its obligations under the Tribunal's statute, and informed the Council accordingly [S/1999/383].

Composition of the Chambers

By a letter of 21 June [S/1999/727], the Secretary-General informed the President of the Security Council that Judge Gabrielle Kirk McDonald (United States) had resigned as a judge of the Chambers, effective 17 November 1999. The United States had presented as a replacement the candidacy of Patricia McGowan Wald, who, in the Secretary-General's view, had met the qualifications prescribed in the Tribunal's statute. The curriculum vitae of Ms. Wald was annexed to the Secretary-General's letter. Following consultations with Council members, the Council President, on 28 June [S/1999/728], stated that he supported the Secretary-General's intention to appoint Ms. Wald. In a letter of 29 June to the Council President [S/1999/739], the Secretary-General stated that he had received a corresponding letter from the General Assembly President [A/53/1042] and had appointed Ms. Wald, effective 17 November 1999, for the remainder of the term of office of Judge McDonald, to expire on 16 November 2001.

In a letter of 20 December [S/1999/1304], the Secretary-General informed the Council President that Italy had presented the candidacy of Fausto Pocar to replace Judge Antonio Cassese, who had resigned as a judge, effective 1 February 2000. In the Secretary-General's view, Mr. Pocar met the qualifications prescribed in the statute of the Tribunal. The Secretary-General wished to proceed to consultation with the Council President on Mr. Pocar's appointment. Annexed to the letter was the curriculum vitae of Mr. Pocar. On 29 December [S/1999/1305], the Council President stated that following consultations with Council members, he concurred with the Secretary-General's intention to appoint Mr. Pocar. On 30 December [S/1999/1306], the Secretary-General informed the Council President that he had received a corresponding letter from the General Assembly President [A/INF/54/7]. Accordingly, he had appointed Mr. Pocar, effective 1 February 2000, for the remainder of the term of office of Judge Cassese, to expire on 16 November 2001.

Regulatory activity

A series of amendments to the ICTY Rules of Procedure and Evidence and several new rules were adopted in 1999. Many of the amendments were intended to speed up trials and the pre-trial process and to minimize delays, while others were required to promote internal efficiency and linguistic consistency. Amendments were also made with regard to the powers and role of the pre-trial judge and to improve pre-trial management.

On 1 October, the Tribunal President issued a Practice Direction on the procedure for filing written submissions in appeal proceedings before the Tribunal. The President also adopted two Practice Directions relating to enforcement of sentences.

Office of the Prosecutor

The Office of the Prosecutor was engaged in intensive investigative work in Kosovo, once access to the territory became possible following the end of the NATO air campaign. On 12 June, Tribunal investigators entered Kosovo with NATO international security force (KFOR) troops. The focus of the work was to support the existing charges in the indictment of Slobodan Milosevic (see above, under "The Chambers") through additional witness interviews and examination of crime scenes, including mass graves, and to bring additional indictments against others. A few days later, forensic teams seconded to the Tribunal by Member States arrived in Kosovo to carry out exhumations from mass graves and crime scenes. Initial results were made public by the Prosecutor, who informed the Security Council in November that work had been completed at 195 of 529 identified grave sites and that 2,108 bodies had been exhumed.

In Bosnia and Herzegovina, investigative work continued, including forensic programmes. The Office of the Prosecutor continued to locate and exhume bodies in mass graves associated with the fall of Srebrenica [YUN 1995, p. 529] and deaths in the detention camps in Prijedor. In addition to the field team exhuming mass graves, a separate mortuary team carried out post-mortem examinations on the bodies recovered. In all, 838 bodies and partial remains were recovered from Kozluk, Nova Kasaba, Konjevic Polje and Glogova. An additional site in Bosnia and Herzegovina was exhumed in Kevljani where 172 bodies and partial remains were recovered.

Trial work and appellate work increased significantly, with the Office of the Prosecutor actively engaged in prosecuting and preparing trials.

On 15 September, Carla Del Ponte (Switzerland) assumed the position of Prosecutor of both ICTY and ICTR, after Justice Louise Arbour (Canada) resigned.

Communication. On 9 June [S/1999/665], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council President that the Prosecutor had requested some 300 experts to form forensic investigation teams for a period of six months to conduct on-site crime scene investigations in Kosovo. The Secretary-General stated that it was his intention to proceed with issuing invitations to all Member States to offer gratis personnel, and to accept experts for specialized functions identified by the Prosecutor, for a period of six months.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 11 August [meeting 4033], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1259(1999). The draft [S/1999/863] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 808(1993) of 22 February 1993, 827(1993) of 25 May 1993, 936(1994) of 8 July 1994, 955(1994) of 8 November 1994, and 1047(1996) of 29 February 1996,

Noting with regret the resignation of Mrs. Louise Arbour taking effect on 15 September 1999,

Having regard to article 16, paragraph 4, of the statute of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 and article 15 of the statute of the International Tribunal for Rwanda,

Having considered the nomination by the Secretary-General of Ms. Carla Del Ponte for the position of Prosecutor of the above-mentioned Tribunals, Appoints Ms. Carla Del Ponte as Prosecutor of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia and the International Tribunal for Rwanda with effect from the date on which the resignation of Mrs. Louise Arbour takes effect.

The Registry

The Registry of the Tribunal continued to exercise court management functions and provide administration and service to the Chambers and the Office of the Prosecutor. In addition, it provided information to the media and the public, administered the legal aid system under which it assigned defence counsel to indigent accused, supervised the UN Detention Unit and maintained diplomatic contacts with States and their representatives. The Registry was also responsible for budgetary matters.

Sweden and Austria, in February and July, respectively, signed the Agreement with the United Nations on the Enforcement of Sentences imposed by the Tribunal, allowing convicted persons to serve their sentences in those countries. Finland, Italy and Norway had previously signed the Agreement. On 16 September [S/1999/1014], Austria informed the Security Council that it was willing to carry out imprisonment sentences imposed by the Tribunal on a case-by-case basis in accordance with its laws and the Agreement with the United Nations.

In September, an outreach programme was established to improve understanding of the Tribunal's work and its relevance in the former Yugoslavia. The programme, with offices in The Hague, Netherlands, and the region, sought to ensure that the Tribunal's activities were transparent and accessible to the communities of the former Yugoslavia through such activities as conferences, seminars, workshops, transmission of court proceedings and Internet access.

Functioning of the Tribunal

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/212 [YUN 1998, p. 1199], the Secretary-General transmitted, in November [A/54/634], the report of the Expert Group to Conduct a Review of the Effective Operation and Functioning of ICTY and ICTR. The Expert Group identified obstacles to the effective functioning of the Tribunals and made a series of recommendations to overcome them, focusing in particular on expediting pre-trial, trial and appeal proceedings.

The Judicial Practices Working Group, created in September, was the first multidisciplinary group established at ICTY. The Working Group was responsible for reviewing the Expert Group report. It also focused on possible changes to the practices of the different Chambers.

The Working Group on the Appeals Chamber was mandated to evaluate the structure and operation of the ICTY and ICTR Appeals Chambers. It was also responsible for resolving problems encountered by the Appeals Chambers regarding translation and transmission of documents between the two Tribunals.

Financing ICTY

1998 budget performance/ revised 1999 estimates/2000 requirements

Reports of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/217 [YUN 1997, p. 1326], the Secretary-General, in September [A/54/395], presented the fourth annual budget performance report of the Tribunal for the year ended 31 December 1998, including actual performance indicators. Of the total net appropriation of $61,941,400, actual expenditures recorded for 1998 totalled $59,363,300, reflecting an unencumbered balance of $2,578,100, or some 4 per cent of the appropriation. The balance was due to an unutilized amount in mission subsistence allowance and decreases in spending for other staff costs, travel, contractual services, general operating expenses, supplies and materials, and furniture and equipment.

On 1 November [A/54/518 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General submitted the proposed 2000 resource requirements of the Tribunal, amounting to $110,670,900 gross ($100,251,100 net) and reflecting an increase of $6,147,300 net and an additional 98 posts over the 1999 appropriation and authorized staffing level.

Also in November [A/C.5/54/30], the Secretary-General, in a report on judges' conditions of service, presented options for establishing a survivors' benefit for the survivors of ICTY and ICTR judges.

ACABQ action. In December [A/54/645], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) recommended that the General Assembly approve an appropriation of $106,149,400 gross ($95,942,600 net) for the operation of the Tribunal in 2000.

Regarding the survivors' benefit for the survivors of judges of both Tribunals, ACABQ, also in December [A/54/646 & Add.1], recommended the option of a lump-sum payment equivalent to one month of base salary for each year of service, subject to a minimum of one month and a maximum of four months. It recommended that the financial implications be worked out and provided to the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/678], adopted resolution 54/239 A without vote [agenda item 142].

Board of Auditors

The Secretary-General submitted his financial report on the ICTY accounts for the 1998-1999 biennium, including the report of the Board of Auditors for the same period [A/55/57Add.12].

The budget for the biennium totalled $171.7 million, with actual expenditures amounting to $151.4 million, leaving an unencumbered balance of $20.3 million. The actual expenditures for 1998-1999 represented an increase of 107 per cent of the total expenditures for 1996-1997.

Following an audit of the financial statements and a management audit of courtroom resources and defence expenditure, the Board of Auditors found that the Tribunal did not disclose the liabilities for end-of-service benefits, post-retirement benefits and annual leave. It also found that as at 31 December, after six years of operation and expenditure of $225 million, the Tribunal had convicted six accused, acquitted one and released seven. In addition, the Tribunal did not use its three courtrooms for 58 per cent of the available 1,614 sessions between July 1998 and August 1999, and between 1997 and 1999, defence expenditure increased by 364 per cent (from $3.3 million to $12 million), while prosecution costs increased by 100 per cent (from $12.5 million to $25 million). The Board recommended that the Tribunal disclose the liabilities for those benefits, review procedures for using courtrooms, and review its legal aid system to establish tighter controls over defence costs.

International Tribunal for Rwanda

In September [A/54/315-S/1999/943], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly and the Security Council the fourth annual report of ICTR, covering the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999. By decision 54/414 of 8 November, the Assembly took note of the report.

The Chambers

Trials and cases

On 5 February, the Trial Chamber sentenced Omar Serushago, who was found guilty in 1998 of the crime of genocide and of crimes against humanity (murder, extermination and torture) [YUN 1998, p. 1202], to a single term of 15 years' imprisonment. The accused lodged an appeal against the sentence.

A judgement and sentence were rendered on 21 May in the case against Clement Kayishema and Obed Ruzindana [YUN 1998, p. 1202]. Both were found guilty of genocide and not guilty of crimes against humanity (murder, extermination and other inhumane acts) and of violations of the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II thereto [YUN 1977, p. 706]. Mr. Kayishema was sentenced to life imprisonment and Mr. Ruzindana to a term of 25 years' imprisonment. Both accused and the Prosecutor lodged appeals against the judgement and the sentences.

The trial of Georges Anderson Rutaganda, the second Vice-President of the Interahamwe in Rwanda in 1994, was completed and deliberations on the judgement commenced on 17 June. He was charged with one count of genocide, four counts of crimes against humanity and four counts of violations of the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II. On 6 December, the accused was convicted of genocide and two counts of crimes against humanity (murder and extermination), and sentenced to life imprisonment. He appealed the judgement.

In the case of Bernard Ntuyahaga, charged in 1998 with a single count, crimes against humanity for the murder of Agathe Uwilingiyimana, former Prime Minister of Rwanda, and 10 Belgian peacekeepers of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda [YUN 1998, p. 1202], the Prosecutor, on 23 February, sought to withdraw the indictment against the accused. The Prosecutor made the request on the basis that prosecution of a single count would not serve her objective of exposing the totality of crimes committed in Rwanda in 1994, and she wished to withdraw the indictment to facilitate prosecution by national courts. She requested that the accused be transferred to the Government of the United Republic of Tanzania. The Government of Belgium, authorized by the Trial Chamber to appear before it as amicus curiae, requested that Mr. Ntuyahaga be handed over to Belgium to be tried before its courts, should the indictment be withdrawn. On 18 March, the Trial Chamber authorized the Prosecutor to withdraw the indictment and that Mr. Ntuyahaga be released, as it was not within its powers to hand over a released person to the authorities of any State. Thus, he was released on 29 March. Mr. Ntuyahaga appealed the withdrawal of his indictment, arguing that he should have been acquitted. The Appeals Chamber dismissed the appeal on the grounds that it was not an appeal against a conviction and that it had not been raised on the basis of a challenge to the Trial Chamber's jurisdiction. Mr. Ntuyahaga was later arrested by the authorities of the United Republic of Tanzania, who had received applications for his extradition from Belgium and Rwanda.

On 3 June, the Appeals Chamber delivered its decisions on two interlocutory appeals in the Nsengiyumva and Kanyabashi cases. The appeals stemmed from the composition of Trial Chambers that had been reconstituted by the Tribunal President for the purpose of hearing Prosecution motions for amendment of the indictments and Prosecution motions for joinder of the indictments. The President had acted because several of the judges who had confirmed the indictments against the accused were, in terms of the rules, disqualified from sitting in their trials. In a majority decision, the Appeals Chamber affirmed the President's powers to temporarily assign or rotate a member of one Trial Chamber to another, but ruled that motions for amendment of the indictment on a textual reading might be heard only by the Chamber before which the initial appearance of the accused had been held.

Following the Trial Chamber's denial of a motion to nullify the arrest in April 1996 and detention of Jean-Bosco Barayagwiza in Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, in November 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1328], the accused appealed the latter decision. On 3 November 1999, the Appeals Chamber dismissed the indictment against the accused on the grounds that his fundamental rights had been violated by his prolonged detention without a trial, and directed his release. The Prosecutor filed for a motion for review of the decision on the grounds of new facts. On 8 November [S/1999/1148], Rwanda transmitted a statement by its Minister of Foreign Affairs and Regional Cooperation on the release of the accused, registering the Government's strong protest against the action, which it said was not commensurate with the seriousness of the crime of genocide.

The Office of the Prosecutor continued to pursue the strategy of joint trials of multi-defendant cases by filing joint indictments, or by filing motions for joinder of accused to consolidate several indictments in a single proceeding for trial, in order to expedite the proceedings. Joint indictments were thematically based upon the accused's spheres of intervention, or regionally specific, on the basis of the accused's sphere of influence. In mid-August, the Trial Chambers organized a marathon session of pre-trial motions for all pending indictments, specifically calling for the disposition of pending and anticipated motions for amendments of indictments and motions for joinder of accused. The cases were consolidated as follows. In the Butare cases the following four indictments were amended and consolidated for trial: Sylvain Nsabimana [YUN 1997, p. 1328] and Alphonse Nteziryayo; Pauline Nyiramasuhuko [ibid.] and Arsène Shalom Ntahobali [ibid.]; Joseph Kanyabashi; and Elie Ndayambaje. The Cyanugu cases consolidated the indictment against André Ntagerura with the joint indictment of Immanuel Bagambiki and Samuel Imanishimwe [ibid.]. The military cases consolidated the indictments against Théoneste Bagosora [YUN 1998, p. 1202]; Gratien Kabiligi and Aloys Ntabakuze [YUN 1997, p. 1328]; and Anatole Nsengiyumva. Several indictments against Jean-Bosco Barayagwiza [YUN 1998, p. 1202], Ferdinand Nahimana and Hassan Ngeze were consolidated for trial of the media cases. The motion to consolidate four separate indictments of the Government cases was denied. However, the Government cases already consisted of three joint indictments: Augustin Bizimana, Edouard Karemera, Callixte Ntabonimana, André Rwamakuba, Mathieu Ngirumpatse, Joseph Nzirorera and Felicien Kabuga; Casimir Bizimungu, Justin Mugenzi, Jérôme Bicaumpaka and Prosper Mugiraneza; Jean de Dieu Kamuhanda and one other; and the single indictment against Eliezer Niyitegeka. Despite a plethora of defence motions for severance, the Trial Chamber only granted the motion to sever filed by Juvenal Kajelijeli. (For details of the charges related to some of the cases, see below, under "New arrests and cases".)

New arrests and cases

The trial of Alfred Musema, which began on 25 January, was completed on 28 June. The accused was charged with genocide, conspiracy to commit genocide, crimes against humanity and serious violations of the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II. Judgement and sentencing were scheduled for 2000.

In February 1999, Eliezer Niyitegeka, Minister of Information of the interim Government, Casimir Bizimungu, Minister of Health of the interim Government and Ignace Bagilishema, Bourgmestre (Mabanza Commune, Kibuye), were arrested and transferred to the Tribunal's Detention Facility in Arusha. Mr. Bagilishema, on 1 April, pleaded not guilty to 13 counts charging him with genocide, crimes against humanity and violations of the Geneva Conventions. On 15 April, Mr. Niyitegeka pleaded not guilty to six counts of genocide, crimes against humanity and violations of the Geneva Conventions. On 3 September, Mr. Bizimungu pleaded not guilty to eight counts of genocide and crimes against humanity.

On 6 April, the investigators of the Office of the Prosecutor, with the assistance of the Cameroon police, arrested three members of the interim Government: Jerome Bicamumpaka, former Minister of Foreign Affairs; Mugenzi Justin, former Minister of Trade; and Prosper Mugiraneza, former Minister for Civic Activities. The three were transferred to the Detention Facility on 31 July, and on 17 August pleaded not guilty to charges of genocide and crimes against humanity.

Five senior officials of the 1994 interim government of Rwanda—former Minister of Interior, Edouard Karemera; former Minister of Primary and Secondary Education, Andre Rwamakuba; former Speaker of Parliament, Joseph Nzirorera; former Director General of Foreign Affairs in the President's Office, Mathieu Ndirumpatse; and former Bourgmestre of Mukingo, Juvenal Kajelijeli—pleaded not guilty to 11 counts jointly charging them with genocide, crimes against humanity and violations of the Geneva Conventions.

On 19 April, former Prefect of Cyangugu, Emmanuel Bagambiki, pleaded not guilty to seven counts charging him with genocide, crimes against humanity and violations of the Geneva Conventions.

Laurent Semanza, former Bourgmestre of Bicumbi, on 24 June, pleaded not guilty to seven new counts of alleged rapes of Tutsi women and other outrages upon their personal dignity.

On 11 August, Pauline Nyiramasuhuko, former Rwandan Minister for the Family and Women's Affairs, pleaded not guilty to fresh charges of encouraging sexual violence, including rape.

Following the arrest in November in the United Republic of Tanzania of Mikaeli Muhimana, Councillor in Gishyita commune (Kibuye Prefecture), the Trial Chamber entered a plea of not guilty on his behalf. The accused, charged with genocide, crimes against humanity and violations of the Geneva Conventions, had refused to enter a plea on his own.

On 25 November, Ferdinand Nahimana, former Director of Radio Television Libre des Mille Collines, a radio station in Rwanda, entered a plea of not guilty to three new counts charging him with genocide and crimes against humanity.

Jean de Dieu Kamuhanda, former Minister of Culture and Higher Education in the interim Government, was arrested in France on 26 November. The process to transfer him to the Detention Facility was in progress by year's end.

Trial Chamber I ruled on 16 pre-trial motions in the case of Ignace Bagilishema, of which six were filed by the Prosecutor and 10 by the defence. The accused, who was arrested in South Africa on 20 February and transferred to the Detention Facility on the same date, pleaded not guilty to seven counts in an amended indictment on 18 September. The trial began on 27 October.

Election of judges

The establishment of a third Trial Chamber by Security Council resolution 1165(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 1203] increased the number of judges from six to nine. Of the nine judges elected for a four-year term by the General Assembly on 3 November 1998 [ibid., p. 1204], four were re-elected. Three of the five new judges took their oath of office on 22 February 1999, while the remaining two did so on 31 May. One of the new judges, Dionysios Kondylis (Greece), resigned on 22 March and his replacement, Asoka de Zoysa Gunawardena (Sri Lanka), appointed by the Secretary-General [S/1999/448, S/1999/449, A/53/1003], took the oath of office on 31 May.

In other action, in identical letters of 17 May addressed to the President of the Council and the President of the Assembly [A/53/960-S/1999/566], the Secretary-General transmitted a request of the Tribunal President for an extension beyond 24 May of the term of office of a non-elected judge, Judge Lennert Aspegren, in order to allow him to dispose of two ongoing cases (Rutaganda and Musema). The Secretary-General stated that to restart both trials with a new panel of judges and order the rehearings of witnesses and testimonies would unnecessarily prolong the trials and violate the rights of the accused to due process of law. He estimated the cost of the proposed extension at $261,800. A 19 May note [A/53/963] by the Secretary-General stated that in order to enable the Assembly to consider the extension, it would be necessary to reopen consideration of agenda item 47.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 May [meeting 4006], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1241(1999). The draft [S/1999/576] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Taking note of the letter dated 17 May 1999 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council, to which he attached a letter to him dated 14 May 1999 from the President of the International Tribunal for Rwanda, Endorses the recommendation of the Secretary-General that Judge Aspegren, once replaced as a member of the Tribunal, finish the Rutaganda and Musema cases which he has begun before expiry of his term of office, and takes note of the intention of the Tribunal to finish these cases if possible before 31 January 2000.

On 19 May [A/53/964], the Council President transmitted the text of resolution 1241(1999) to the Assembly President.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 53/309 B of 24 May, the General Assembly endorsed the Secretary-General's recommendation to extend the term of Judge Aspegren.

Organizational activities

On 4 June, Judge Navanethem Pillay (South Africa) was elected President of the Tribunal, replacing Judge Laïty Kama (Senegal). Judge Erik Møse (Norway) was elected Vice-President, replacing Judge Yakov Ostrovsky (Russian Federation).

The Tribunal adopted several amendments to the Rules of Procedure and Evidence and the Directive on assignment of Defence Counsel.

In November, the newly established Working Group on the Appeals Chamber, tasked with reviewing the situation of the ICTY and ICTR Appeals Chambers, focused on amendment of the Rules and structural changes.

Office of the Prosecutor

The Office of the Prosecutor placed priority on investigations into the conspiracy to commit genocide. It conducted investigations into the preparation and execution of the conspiracy and formed new investigation teams, on the basis of the political, administrative, military and other institutions that operated in Rwanda at the time of those acts, since certain officials of those institutions were implicated in crimes.

Pending the conclusion of an agreement that would regulate the establishment and functioning of the Tribunal in Rwanda, the United Nations and the Government of Rwanda, on 3 June, signed a Memorandum of Understanding to regulate matters of concern relating to the ICTR office in Rwanda. The privileges and immunities provided for in the 1946 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 22 A (I) [YUN 1946-47, p. 100], would be extended to the Office of the Prosecutor and its staff. The Memorandum facilitated the work of the Office of the Prosecutor by allowing its key members to circulate freely throughout Rwanda, to have access to all prisoners and necessary documents, to have direct contact with national and local authorities and to question victims and witnesses.

On 11 August, the Security Council unanimously appointed Carla Del Ponte as Prosecutor of ICTR and ICTY (see p. 1218).

The Registry

The Registry administered and serviced the Chambers and the Prosecutor in the performance of their respective functions.

The Unit for Gender Issues and Assistance to Victims, which aimed to improve gender sensitivity in protecting and supporting witnesses in trials, carried out a mission assessment in January during a visit to women who had come to testify in the case of Jean-Paul Akayesu [YUN 1998, p. 1201].

Financing ICTR

1998 budget performance/ revised 1999 and 2000 estimates/ 2000 requirements

Reports of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 49/251 [YUN 1995, p. 1324], the Secretary-General, in October [A/54/496 & Corr.1], presented the fourth annual budget performance report of the Tribunal covering 1998. Actual expenditures amounted to $50,430,000 net, resulting in an overexpenditure of $2,386,600. The overexpenditure consisted of increases of $2,781,000 under the Registry, partly offset by decreases under the Chambers and the Office of the Prosecutor. The report contained performance indicator statistics for 1998.

In a report of 3 November on ICTR financing [A/54/521], the Secretary-General stated that the resource requirements requested for 2000 amounted to $87,819,400 gross ($79,753,900 net), which reflected an increase of $12,558,800 gross ($11,222,000 net) over the 1999 appropriation and 60 additional posts.

ACABQ action. In December [A/54/646 & Add.1], ACABQ recommended that the General Assembly appropriate the amount of $86,154,900 gross ($78,170,200 net) for ICTR in 2000, representing a reduction of $1,664,500 gross ($1,583,700 net) of the requested amount. The report contained a summary of post reductions recommended by the Committee.

(For information on the report of the expert group to review the operation of ICTY and ICTR, and on the conditions of service for ICTY and ICTR judges, see above, under "Functioning of the Tribunal" and "Financing ICTY", respectively.)

Board of Auditors

The Secretary-General transmitted the financial report on ICTR accounts for the 1998-1999 biennium [A/55/5/Add.11], which contained the report of the Board of Auditors for that period.

The budget for the biennium totalled $127.6 million, with actual expenditures amounting to $124.6 million, leaving an unencumbered balance of $3 million. The 1998-1999 expenditures represented an increase of 91.7 per cent of the total expenditures for the 1996-1997 biennium.

Following an audit of the operations of the Tribunal and validation of its financial statements for 1998-1999, the Board made recommendations to improve the submission of financial reports and consolidated accounts, to tighten control over the reservation of credits in the accounts for travel and purchase of goods and services, to strengthen the imprest accounting of the Prosecutor's Office and to tighten internal control over procurement and contract management.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/679], adopted resolution 54/240 A without vote [agenda item 143].

Financing of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994 and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling its resolution 49/251 of 20 July 1995 on the financing of the International Tribunal for Rwanda and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 53/213 of 18 December 1998,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the budget performance of the International Tribunal for Rwanda for 1998 and the comments of the Advisory Committee thereon,

1. Deeply regrets the delay in the submission of the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994, as well as the failure to submit to the General Assembly the report of the expert review group on the effective operation and functioning of that Tribunal and the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, as requested in its resolution 53/213;

2. Notes with concern that, owing to the late submission of the report on the financing of the International Tribunal for Rwanda, the General Assembly did not have adequate time to consider it properly;

Chapter III

Legal aspects of international political relations

The International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism was adopted by the General Assembly in December 1999; Assembly committees had been working on the text since 1996. Parties to the Convention, when ratified, would, among other things, take steps to identify, detect, freeze or seize any funds used or allocated for the purpose of carrying out terrorist acts. The Convention was to open for signature in January 2000.

In October, the Security Council adopted a resolution condemning all acts of terrorism as criminal and unjustifiable and called on States to cooperate with each other to prevent such acts and protect their nationals and other persons against them. The Assembly also condemned all terrorism as criminal in December and invited States to provide the Secretary-General with information on their national laws and regulations regarding its prevention and suppression.

Throughout 1999, the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, adopted in 1998, remained open for signature. By the end of the year, the Statute, which would enter into force when 60 States had become parties to it, had received six ratifications.

At its fifty-first session, the International Law Commission (ILC) adopted a draft preamble and 26 draft articles on nationality in relation to succession of States and recommended to the Assembly their adoption in the form of a declaration. In December, the Assembly, which decided to consider that recommendation at its 2000 session, invited Governments to submit comments on the question of a convention on the subject. Other topics considered by ILC included State responsibility, reservation to treaties, jurisdictional immunities of States and their property and unilateral acts of States.

Establishment of the International Criminal Court

Throughout 1999, the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, which in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1209] established the Court as a permanent institution with the power to exercise jurisdiction over persons for the most serious crimes of international concern—genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and the crime of aggression—remained open for signature at United Nations Headquarters in New York.

The Statute would enter into force after 60 States had become parties to it. As at 31 December, 92 States had signed and six had become parties.

Preparatory Commission. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 53/105 [YUN 1998, p. 1210], the Preparatory Commission for the International Criminal Court was established. During 1999, the Preparatory Commission held three sessions in New York (16-26 February, 26 July-13 August, 29 November-17 December) [PCNICC/2000/1]. In February [PCNICC/1999/L.3/Rev.1], the Commission agreed that its work plan would focus on two essential instruments necessary for the functioning of the Court: the Rules of Procedure and Evidence; and the Elements of Crimes. It established several working groups to consider those issues. In July/August [PCNICC/1999/L.4/Rev.1], the Commission continued its consideration of those two matters and agreed on arrangements concerning the question of the crime of aggression. In November/December [PCNICC/1999/L.5/Rev.1], the Commission noted that it had completed the first reading of the Elements of Crimes [PCNICC/1999/L.5/Rev.1/Add.2] and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence [PCNICC/1999/L.5/Rev.1/Add.1]. The Working Group on the Crime of Aggression met during the third session.

Recalling, with regard to the future work of the Preparatory Commission and related working groups, the specific arrangements agreed upon by the Commission and referred to in paragraph 8 of the summary of the proceedings of its second session,

Recognizing the continuing need for making available adequate resources and secretariat services to the Preparatory Commission in order to enable it to discharge its functions efficiently and expeditiously,

Emphasizing the need to make the necessary arrangements for the commencement of the functions of the International Criminal Court in order to ensure its effective operation,

Noting that a number of States have deposited their instruments of ratification and that a significant and growing number of States have signed the Rome Statute,

1. Reiterates the historic significance of the adoption of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to make available to the Preparatory Commission secretariat services, including the preparation of working documents if so requested by the Commission, to enable it to perform its functions;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to invite, as observers to the Preparatory Commission, representatives of organizations and other entities that have received a standing invitation from the General Assembly, pursuant to its relevant resolutions, to participate in the capacity of observers in its sessions and work, and also to invite as observers to the Commission representatives of interested regional intergovernmental organizations and other interested international bodies, including the international tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda;

6. Notes that non-governmental organizations may participate in the work of the Preparatory Commission by attending its plenary and other open meetings, in accordance with the rules of procedure of the Commission, receiving copies of the official documents and making available their materials to delegates;

7. Encourages States to make voluntary contributions to the trust funds established pursuant to General Assembly resolutions 51/207 and 52/160, the mandates of which were expanded pursuant to Assembly resolution 53/105, towards meeting the costs of the participation in the work of the Preparatory Commission of the least developed countries and of those developing countries not covered by the trust fund established pursuant to resolution 51/207;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

International Law Commission

The International Law Commission (ILC) held its fifty-first session in Geneva from 3 May to 23 July [A/54/10 & Corr.1,2]. The thirty-fifth session of the International Law Seminar (14 June-2 July) was held during the session. It was attended by 23 participants, mostly from developing countries, who observed Commission meetings, attended specially arranged lectures and participated in working groups on specific topics.

Under the topic nationality in relation to the succession of States, the Commission adopted the draft preamble and a set of 26 draft articles on second reading and recommended that the General Assembly adopt them in the form of a declaration.

The Commission also considered the topics of State responsibility, reservations to treaties, jurisdictional immunities of States and their property, unilateral acts of States, and international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law (prevention of transboundary damage from hazardous activities). It also discussed its long-term programme of work, procedures to improve relations with the Sixth Committee and cooperation with scientific institutions, individual experts and international and national organizations concerned with international law. ILC continued traditional exchanges of information with the International Court of Justice, the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee, the Inter-American Juridical Committee and the Committee of Legal Advisers on Public International Law of the Council of Europe.

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/102 [YUN 1998, p. 1212], ILC examined advantages and disadvantages of holding split sessions as of 2000. The Commission recommended split sessions as it believed they would be more efficient and effective and allow the uninterrupted attendance of more members. It agreed that its next session should be held in Geneva from 1 May to 9 June and from 10 July to 18 August 2000.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 76], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/54/610], adopted resolution 54/111 without vote [agenda item 155].

8. Also takes note of the consideration by the International Law Commission of its long-term programme of work, and encourages the Commission to proceed with the selection of new topics for its next quinquennium corresponding to the wishes and preoccupations of States and to present possible outlines for new topics and information related thereto in order to facilitate decision thereon by the General Assembly;

State succession

ILC had before it a memorandum by the Secretariat on nationality in relation to the succession of States [A/CN.4/497], which contained an overview of the comments and observations of Governments, made either orally in the Sixth Committee or in writing, on the draft preamble and set of draft articles, with commentaries, on nationality of natural persons in relation to the succession of States, which had been adopted on first reading at the Commission's forty-ninth session [YUN 1997, p. 1333].

The Commission re-established the Working Group on nationality in relation to the succession of States [A/54/10 & Corr.1,2], considered its report and referred the draft articles to the Drafting Committee. The draft preamble and draft articles, which addressed, among other things, the right to nationality, prevention of statelessness, legislation on nationality and other connected issues, non-discrimination, and attribution of the nationality of the successor State and withdrawal of nationality of the predecessor State, were adopted by the Commission along with the commentaries. The Commission recommended that the General Assembly adopt the draft articles in the form of a declaration.

Having concluded that States were not interested in the study of the second part of the topic—the nationality of legal persons in relation to the succession of States—given the absence of positive comments from them, the Commission recommended that with the adoption of the draft articles, its work on the topic be considered concluded.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 76], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/54/610], adopted resolution 54/112 without vote [agenda item 155].

Nationality of natural persons in relation to the succession of States

The General Assembly,

Having considered chapter IV of the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its fifty-first session, which contains final draft articles on nationality of natural persons in relation to the succession of States,

Noting that the International Law Commission decided to recommend the draft articles to the General Assembly for their adoption in the form of a declaration,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the International Law Commission for its valuable work on nationality of natural persons in relation to the succession of States and to the Special Rapporteur and the Chairman of the Working Group of the Commission for their contribution to that work;

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session an item entitled "Nationality of natural persons in relation to the succession of States", with a view to the consideration of the draft articles and their adoption as a declaration at that session;

3. Invites Governments to submit comments and observations on the question of a convention on nationality of natural persons in relation to the succession of States, with a view to the General Assembly considering the elaboration of such a convention at a future session.

State responsibility

During its 1999 session, ILC considered comments and observations received from two Governments [A/CN.4/492], additional to those received in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1213], on the draft articles on State responsibility, which had been provisionally adopted on first reading in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1207]. ILC also had before it the second report of the Special Rapporteur, James Crawford (Australia) [A/CN.4/498 & Add.1-4], which dealt with draft articles in the light of Governments' comments and developments in State practice, judicial decisions and in the literature. The five-part report dealt with the breach of an international obligation; the implication of a State in the internationally wrongful act of another State; a range of extremely important questions relating to circumstances precluding wrongfulness; an annex containing a brief comparative review of the unexplored question of interference with contractual rights; and certain questions of principle concerning countermeasures.

The Commission referred some draft articles in the report to the Drafting Committee and later took note of that Committee's report on chapters III, IV and V. It also noted the deletion of several articles.

International liability

At its fifty-first session, ILC had before it the second report by Special Rapporteur Pemmaraju Sreenivasa Rao (India) on prevention of transboundary damage from hazardous activities [A/CN.4/501]. Among other things, the report reviewed the status of ongoing negotiations on liability. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Commission suspend its work on international liability, at least for the time being, until the regime of prevention was finalized in its second reading, and await developments in the negotiation of some of the protocols on liability.

Having considered his recommendation and on the basis of discussion, ILC deferred consideration of the question of international liability, pending completion of the second reading of the draft articles on the prevention of transboundary damage from hazardous activities [A/54/10 & Corr.1,2].

Unilateral acts of States

At its 1999 session, ILC considered the second report on unilateral acts of States [A/CN.4/500 & Add.1] by Special Rapporteur Victor Rodríguez Cedeño (Venezuela). The report contained the texts of seven draft articles: the scope of the draft articles; definition of unilateral legal acts (declarations) of States; capacity to formulate unilateral legal acts; representatives of a State who could engage a State by formulating unilateral legal acts; subsequent confirmation of acts formulated without authorization; expression of consent; and formulation of reservations and conditional unilateral acts. The Commission reconvened the Working Group, which submitted a report to the Commission which was then amended and adopted. It was agreed that the Secretariat, in consultation with the Special Rapporteur, should elaborate and send to Governments, by October 1999, a questionnaire for possible reply within a reasonable deadline, requesting material and inquiring about their practice in the area of unilateral acts, as well as their position on certain aspects of the Commission's study of the topic. The questionnaire was circulated on 30 September.

International State relations and international law

Jurisdictional immunities of States and their property

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/151 [YUN 1997, p. 1344], the Secretary-General requested States to submit comments on a convention on jurisdictional immunities of States and their property, for which ILC had drafted articles in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 829]. Replies received from two States were submitted to the Assembly in an August report [A/54/266].

ILC action. In May, the Commission established the Working Group on Jurisdictional Immunities of States and Their Property to prepare preliminary comments, as requested in Assembly resolution 53/98 [YUN 1998, p. 1215]. The Commission took note of the Working Group's report and adopted its suggestions, as amended in the course of discussions, and annexed it to the report on its fifty-first session [A/54/10 & Corr.1,2].

Sixth Committee consideration. In accordance with Assembly resolution 53/98, the Sixth Committee established an open-ended working group to consider outstanding substantive issues related to the draft articles on jurisdictional immunities of States and their property, which met in November 1999. In his report to the Committee [A/C.6/54/L.12], the Working Group's Chairman stated that progress seemed feasible towards achieving an instrument on the topic and it seemed advisable to continue attempts towards elaborating an instrument in order to maintain and intensify the momentum obtained in the Working Group's discussions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 76], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/54/607], adopted resolution 54/101 without vote [agenda item 152].

Convention on jurisdictional immunities of States and their property

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/98 of 8 December 1998,

Having considered the report of the Working Group on Jurisdictional Immunities of States and Their Property of the International Law Commission, set forth in the annex to the report of the Commission on the work of its fifty-first session,

Having considered also the report presented to the Sixth Committee by the Chairman of the open-ended working group of the Committee established under resolution 53/98,

Having considered further the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Working Group on Jurisdictional Immunities of States and Their Property of the International Law Commission, set forth in the annex to the report of the Commission on the work of its fifty-first session;

2. Urges States, if they have not yet done so, to submit their comments to the Secretary-General in accordance with General Assembly resolution 49/61 of 9 December 1994, and also invites States to submit in writing to the Secretary-General, by 1 August 2000, their comments on the report of the Working Group;

3. Decides that the open-ended working group of the Sixth Committee established under resolution 53/98 will continue its work at the fifty-fifth session of the General Assembly to consider the future form of, and outstanding substantive issues related to, the draft articles on jurisdictional immunities of States and their property adopted by the International Law Commission at its forty-third session;

4. Also decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Convention on jurisdictional immunities of States and their property".

International terrorism

Convention on financing of terrorism

On 9 December, the General Assembly adopted the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism (see below), the draft text of which was prepared by the Ad Hoc Committee established by Assembly resolution 51/210 [YUN 1996, p. 1208] and the Working Group of the Sixth Committee. The Convention was to be open for signature from 10 January 2000 to 31 December 2001.

The Ad Hoc Committee, which was established to elaborate an international convention for the suppression of terrorist bombings and, subsequently, an international convention for the suppression of acts of nuclear terrorism, as well as to address means of further developing a comprehensive legal framework of conventions dealing with international terrorism, held its third session in New York from 15 to 26 March [A/54/37]. The Assembly had adopted the International Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombings by resolution 52/164 [YUN 1997, p. 1347].

In March, the Ad Hoc Committee completed the first and second readings of the main provisions of the draft convention for the suppression of the financing of terrorism and a number of articles were revised.

Work on the draft convention continued in the Working Group of the Sixth Committee, as decided by the Assembly in resolution 53/108 [YUN 1998, p. 1217], which met between 27 September and 8 October. It annexed the draft text of the convention to its report [A/C.6/54/L.2] and submitted it to the Sixth Committee for consideration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 76], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/54/615], adopted resolution 54/109 without vote [agenda item 160].

International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, including resolution 46/51 of 9 December 1991, resolution 49/60 of 9 December 1994, by which it adopted the Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism, and resolutions 51/210 of 17 December 1996 and 53/108 of 8 December 1998,

Having considered the text of the draft international convention for the suppression of the financing of terrorism prepared by the Ad Hoc Committee established by General Assembly resolution 51/210 of 17 December 1996 and the Working Group of the Sixth Committee,

1. Adopts the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism annexed to the present resolution, and requests the Secretary-General to open it for signature at United Nations Headquarters in New York from 10 January 2000 to 31 December 2001;

2. Urges all States to sign and ratify, accept, approve or accede to the Convention.

ANNEX
International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism

Preamble

The States Parties to this Convention,

Bearing in mind the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations concerning the maintenance of international peace and security and the promotion of good-neighbourliness and friendly relations and cooperation among States,

Deeply concerned about the worldwide escalation of acts of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations,

Recalling the Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations, contained in General Assembly resolution 50/6 of 24 October 1995,

Recalling also all the relevant General Assembly resolutions on the matter, including resolution 49/60 of 9 December 1994 and the annex thereto on the Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism, in which the States Members of the United Nations solemnly reaffirmed their unequivocal condemnation of all acts, methods and practices of terrorism as criminal and unjustifiable, wherever and by whomever committed, including those which jeopardize the friendly relations among States and peoples and threaten the territorial integrity and security of States,

Noting that the Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism also encouraged States to review urgently the scope of the existing international legal provisions on the prevention, repression and elimination of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, with the aim of ensuring that there is a comprehensive legal framework covering all aspects of the matter,

Recalling paragraph 3 (f) of General Assembly resolution 51/210 of 17 December 1996, in which the Assembly called upon all States to take steps to prevent and counteract, through appropriate domestic measures, the financing of terrorists and terrorist organizations, whether such financing is direct or indirect through organizations which also have or claim to have charitable, social or cultural goals or which are also engaged in unlawful activities such as illicit arms trafficking, drug dealing and racketeering, including the exploitation of persons for purposes of funding terrorist activities, and in particular to consider, where appropriate, adopting regulatory measures to prevent and counteract movements of funds suspected to be intended for terrorist purposes without impeding in any way the freedom of legitimate capital movements and to intensify the exchange of information concerning international movements of such funds,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 52/165 of 15 December 1997, in which the Assembly called upon States to consider, in particular, the implementation of the measures set out in paragraphs 3 (a) to (f) of its resolution 51/210,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 53/108 of 8 December 1998, in which the Assembly decided that the Ad Hoc Committee established by General Assembly resolution 51/210 of 17 December 1996 should elaborate a draft international convention for the suppression of terrorist financing to supplement related existing international instruments,

Considering that the financing of terrorism is a matter of grave concern to the international community as a whole,

Noting that the number and seriousness of acts of international terrorism depend on the financing that terrorists may obtain,

Noting also that existing multilateral legal instruments do not expressly address such financing,

Being convinced of the urgent need to enhance international cooperation among States in devising and adopting effective measures for the prevention of the financing of terrorism, as well as for its suppression through the prosecution and punishment of its perpetrators,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

For the purposes of this Convention:

1. "Funds" means assets of every kind, whether tangible or intangible, movable or immovable, however acquired, and legal documents or instruments in any form, including electronic or digital, evidencing title to, or interest in, such assets, including, but not limited to, bank credits, travellers cheques, bank cheques, money orders, shares, securities, bonds, drafts and letters of credit.

2. "State or government facility" means any permanent or temporary facility or conveyance that is used or occupied by representatives of a State, members of Government, the legislature or the judiciary or by officials or employees of a State or any other public authority or entity or by employees or officials of an intergovernmental organization in connection with their official duties.

3. "Proceeds" means any funds derived from or obtained, directly or indirectly, through the commission of an offence set forth in article 2.

Article 2

1. Any person commits an offence within the meaning of this Convention if that person by any means, directly or indirectly, unlawfully and wilfully, provides or collects funds with the intention that they should be used or in the knowledge that they are to be used, in full or in part, in order to carry out:

(a) An act which constitutes an offence within the scope of and as defined in one of the treaties listed in the annex; or

(b) Any other act intended to cause death or serious bodily injury to a civilian, or to any other person not taking an active part in the hostilities in a situation of armed conflict, when the purpose of such act, by its nature or context, is to intimidate a population, or to compel a Government or an international organization to do or to abstain from doing any act.

2. (a) On depositing its instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession, a State Party which is not a party to a treaty listed in the annex may declare that, in the application of this Convention to the State Party, the treaty shall be deemed not to be included in the annex referred to in paragraph 1, subparagraph (a). The declaration shall cease to have effect as soon as the treaty enters into force for the State Party, which shall notify the depositary of this fact;

(b) When a State Party ceases to be a party to a treaty listed in the annex, it may make a declaration as provided for in this article, with respect to that treaty.

3. For an act to constitute an offence set forth in paragraph 1, it shall not be necessary that the funds were actually used to carry out an offence referred to in paragraph 1, subparagraph (a) or (b).

4. Any person also commits an offence if that person attempts to commit an offence as set forth in paragraph 1 of this article.

5. Any person also commits an offence if that person:

(a) Participates as an accomplice in an offence as set forth in paragraph 1 or 4 of this article;

(b) Organizes or directs others to commit an offence as set forth in paragraph 1 or 4 of this article;

(c) Contributes to the commission of one or more offences as set forth in paragraph 1 or 4 of this article by a group of persons acting with a common purpose. Such contribution shall be intentional and shall either:

(i) Be made with the aim of furthering the criminal activity or criminal purpose of the group, where such activity or purpose involves the commission of an offence as set forth in paragraph 1 of this article; or

(ii) Be made in the knowledge of the intention of the group to commit an offence as set forth in paragraph 1 of this article.

Article 3

This Convention shall not apply where the offence is committed within a single State, the alleged offender is a national of that State and is present in the territory of that State and no other State has a basis under article 7, paragraph 1 or 2, to exercise jurisdiction, except that the provisions of articles 12 to 18 shall, as appropriate, apply in those cases.

Article 4

Each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary:

(a) To establish as criminal offences under its domestic law the offences as set forth in article 2;

(b) To make those offences punishable by appropriate penalties which take into account the grave nature of the offences.

Article 5

1. Each State Party, in accordance with its domestic legal principles, shall take the necessary measures to enable a legal entity located in its territory or organized under its laws to be held liable when a person responsible for the management or control of that legal entity has, in that capacity, committed an offence as set forth in article 2. Such liability may be criminal, civil or administrative.

2. Such liability is incurred without prejudice to the criminal liability of individuals who have committed the offences.

3. Each State Party shall ensure, in particular, that legal entities liable in accordance with paragraph 1 above are subject to effective, proportionate and dissuasive criminal, civil or administrative sanctions. Such sanctions may include monetary sanctions.

Article 6

Each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

Article 7

1. Each State Party shall take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the offences set forth in article 2 when:

(a) The offence is committed in the territory of that State;

(b) The offence is committed on board a vessel flying the flag of that State or an aircraft registered under the laws of that State at the time the offence is committed;

(c) The offence is committed by a national of that State.

2. A State Party may also establish its jurisdiction over any such offence when:

(a) The offence was directed towards or resulted in the carrying out of an offence referred to in article 2, paragraph 1, subparagraph (a) or (b), in the territory of or against a national of that State;

(b) The offence was directed towards or resulted in the carrying out of an offence referred to in article 2, paragraph 1, subparagraph (a) or (b), against a State or government facility of that State abroad, including diplomatic or consular premises of that State;

(c) The offence was directed towards or resulted in an offence referred to in article 2, paragraph 1, subparagraph (a) or (b), committed in an attempt to compel that State to do or abstain from doing any act;

(d) The offence is committed by a stateless person who has his or her habitual residence in the territory of that State;

(e) The offence is committed on board an aircraft which is operated by the Government of that State.

3. Upon ratifying, accepting, approving or acceding to this Convention, each State Party shall notify the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the jurisdiction it has established in accordance with paragraph 2. Should any change take place, the State Party concerned shall immediately notify the Secretary-General.

4. Each State Party shall likewise take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the offences set forth in article 2 in cases where the alleged offender is present in its territory and it does not extradite that person to any of the States Parties that have established their jurisdiction in accordance with paragraphs 1 or 2.

5. When more than one State Party claims jurisdiction over the offences set forth in article 2, the relevant States Parties shall strive to coordinate their actions appropriately, in particular concerning the conditions for prosecution and the modalities for mutual legal assistance.

6. Without prejudice to the norms of general international law, this Convention does not exclude the exercise of any criminal jurisdiction established by a State Party in accordance with its domestic law.

Article 8

1. Each State Party shall take appropriate measures, in accordance with its domestic legal principles, for the identification, detection and freezing or seizure of any funds used or allocated for the purpose of committing the offences set forth in article 2 as well as the proceeds derived from such offences, for purposes of possible forfeiture.

2. Each State Party shall take appropriate measures, in accordance with its domestic legal principles, for the forfeiture of funds used or allocated for the purpose of committing the offences set forth in article 2 and the proceeds derived from such offences.

3. Each State Party concerned may give consideration to concluding agreements on the sharing with other States Parties, on a regular or case-by-case basis, of the funds derived from the forfeitures referred to in this article.

4. Each State Party shall consider establishing mechanisms whereby the funds derived from the forfeitures referred to in this article are utilized to compensate the victims of offences referred to in article 2, paragraph 1, subparagraph (a) or (b), or their families.

5. The provisions of this article shall be implemented without prejudice to the rights of third parties acting in good faith.

Article 9

1. Upon receiving information that a person who has committed or who is alleged to have committed an offence set forth in article 2 may be present in its territory, the State Party concerned shall take such measures as may be necessary under its domestic law to investigate the facts contained in the information.

2. Upon being satisfied that the circumstances so warrant, the State Party in whose territory the offender or alleged offender is present shall take the appropriate measures under its domestic law so as to ensure that person's presence for the purpose of prosecution or extradition.

3. Any person regarding whom the measures referred to in paragraph 2 are being taken shall be entitled:

(a) To communicate without delay with the nearest appropriate representative of the State of which that person is a national or which is otherwise entitled to protect that person's rights or, if that person is a stateless person, the State in the territory of which that person habitually resides;

(b) To be visited by a representative of that State;

(c) To be informed of that person's rights under subparagraphs (a) and (b).

4. The rights referred to in paragraph 3 shall be exercised in conformity with the laws and regulations of the State in the territory of which the offender or alleged offender is present, subject to the provision that the said laws and regulations must enable full effect to be given to the purposes for which the rights accorded under paragraph 3 are intended.

5. The provisions of paragraphs 3 and 4 shall be without prejudice to the right of any State Party having a claim to jurisdiction in accordance with article 7, paragraph 1, subparagraph (b), or paragraph 2, subparagraph (b), to invite the International Committee of the Red Cross to communicate with and visit the alleged offender.

6. When a State Party, pursuant to the present article, has taken a person into custody, it shall immediately notify, directly or through the Secretary-General of the United Nations, the States Parties which have established jurisdiction in accordance with article 7, paragraph 1 or 2, and, if it considers it advisable, any other interested States Parties, of the fact that such person is in custody and of the circumstances which warrant that person's detention. The State which makes the investigation contemplated in paragraph 1 shall promptly inform the said States Parties of its findings and shall indicate whether it intends to exercise jurisdiction.

Article 10

1. The State Party in the territory of which the alleged offender is present shall, in cases to which article 7 applies, if it does not extradite that person, be obliged, without exception whatsoever and whether or not the offence was committed in its territory, to submit the case without undue delay to its competent authorities for the purpose of prosecution, through proceedings in accordance with the laws of that State. Those authorities shall take their decision in the same manner as in the case of any other offence of a grave nature under the law of that State.

2. Whenever a State Party is permitted under its domestic law to extradite or otherwise surrender one of its nationals only upon the condition that the person will be returned to that State to serve the sentence imposed as a result of the trial or proceeding for which the extradition or surrender of the person was sought, and this State and the State seeking the extradition of the person agree with this option and other terms they may deem appropriate, such a conditional extradition or surrender shall be sufficient to discharge the obligation set forth in paragraph 1.

1. The offences set forth in article 2 shall be deemed to be included as extraditable offences in any extradition treaty existing between any of the States Parties before the entry into force of this Convention. States Parties undertake to include such offences as extraditable offences in every extradition treaty to be subsequently concluded between them.

2. When a State Party which makes extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty receives a request for extradition from another State Party with which it has no extradition treaty, the requested State Party may, at its option, consider this Convention as a legal basis for extradition in respect of the offences set forth in article 2. Extradition shall be subject to the other conditions provided by the law of the requested State.

3. States Parties which do not make extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty shall recognize the offences set forth in article 2 as extraditable offences between themselves, subject to the conditions provided by the law of the requested State.

4. If necessary, the offences set forth in article 2 shall be treated, for the purposes of extradition between States Parties, as if they had been committed not only in the place in which they occurred but also in the territory of the States that have established jurisdiction in accordance with article 7, paragraphs 1 and 2.

5. The provisions of all extradition treaties and arrangements between States Parties with regard to offences set forth in article 2 shall be deemed to be modified as between States Parties to the extent that they are incompatible with this Convention.

Article 12

1. States Parties shall afford one another the greatest measure of assistance in connection with criminal investigations or criminal or extradition proceedings in respect of the offences set forth in article 2, including assistance in obtaining evidence in their possession necessary for the proceedings.

2. States Parties may not refuse a request for mutual legal assistance on the ground of bank secrecy.

3. The requesting Party shall not transmit or use information or evidence furnished by the requested Party for investigations, prosecutions or proceedings other than those stated in the request without the prior consent of the requested Party.

4. Each State Party may give consideration to establishing mechanisms to share with other States Parties information or evidence needed to establish criminal, civil or administrative liability pursuant to article 5.

5. States Parties shall carry out their obligations under paragraphs 1 and 2 in conformity with any treaties or other arrangements on mutual legal assistance or information exchange that may exist between them. In the absence of such treaties or arrangements, States Parties shall afford one another assistance in accordance with their domestic law.

Article 13

None of the offences set forth in article 2 shall be regarded, for the purposes of extradition or mutual legal assistance, as a fiscal offence. Accordingly, States Parties may not refuse a request for extradition or for mutual legal assistance on the sole ground that it concerns a fiscal offence.

Article 14

None of the offences set forth in article 2 shall be regarded for the purposes of extradition or mutual legal assistance as a political offence or as an offence connected with a political offence or as an offence inspired by political motives. Accordingly, a request for extradition or for mutual legal assistance based on such an offence may not be refused on the sole ground that it concerns a political offence or an offence connected with a political offence or an offence inspired by political motives.

Article 15

Nothing in this Convention shall be interpreted as imposing an obligation to extradite or to afford mutual legal assistance, if the requested State Party has substantial grounds for believing that the request for extradition for offences set forth in article 2 or for mutual legal assistance with respect to such offences has been made for the purpose of prosecuting or punishing a person on account of that person's race, religion, nationality, ethnic origin or political opinion or that compliance with the request would cause prejudice to that person's position for any of these reasons.

Article 16

1. A person who is being detained or is serving a sentence in the territory of one State Party whose presence in another State Party is requested for purposes of identification, testimony or otherwise providing assistance in obtaining evidence for the investigation or prosecution of offences set forth in article 2 may be transferred if the following conditions are met:

(a) The person freely gives his or her informed consent;

(b) The competent authorities of both States agree, subject to such conditions as those States may deem appropriate.

2. For the purposes of the present article:

(a) The State to which the person is transferred shall have the authority and obligation to keep the person transferred in custody, unless otherwise requested or authorized by the State from which the person was transferred;

(b) The State to which the person is transferred shall without delay implement its obligation to return the person to the custody of the State from which the person was transferred as agreed beforehand, or as otherwise agreed, by the competent authorities of both States;

(c) The State to which the person is transferred shall not require the State from which the person was transferred to initiate extradition proceedings for the return of the person;

(d) The person transferred shall receive credit for service of the sentence being served in the State from which he or she was transferred for time spent in the custody of the State to which he or she was transferred.

3. Unless the State Party from which a person is to be transferred in accordance with the present article so agrees, that person, whatever his or her nationality, shall not be prosecuted or detained or subjected to any other restriction of his or her personal liberty in the territory of the State to which that person is transferred in respect of acts or convictions anterior to his or her departure from the territory of the State from which such person was transferred.

Article 17

Any person who is taken into custody or regarding whom any other measures are taken or proceedings are carried out pursuant to this Convention shall be guaranteed fair treatment, including enjoyment of all rights and guarantees in conformity with the law of the State in the territory of which that person is present and applicable provisions of international law, including international human rights law.

Article 18

1. States Parties shall cooperate in the prevention of the offences set forth in article 2 by taking all practicable measures, inter alia, by adapting their domestic legislation, if necessary, to prevent and counter preparations in their respective territories for the commission of those offences within or outside their territories, including:

(a) Measures to prohibit in their territories illegal activities of persons and organizations that knowingly encourage, instigate, organize or engage in the commission of offences set forth in article 2;

(b) Measures requiring financial institutions and other professions involved in financial transactions to utilize the most efficient measures available for the identification of their usual or occasional customers, as well as customers in whose interest accounts are opened, and to pay special attention to unusual or suspicious transactions and report transactions suspected of stemming from a criminal activity. For this purpose, States Parties shall consider:

- (i) Adopting regulations prohibiting the opening of accounts, the holders or beneficiaries of which are unidentified or unidentifiable, and measures to ensure that such institutions verify the identity of the real owners of such transactions;
 - (ii) With respect to the identification of legal entities, requiring financial institutions, when necessary, to take measures to verify the legal existence and the structure of the customer by obtaining, either from a public register or from the customer or both, proof of incorporation, including information concerning the customer's name, legal form, address, directors and provisions regulating the power to bind the entity;
 - (iii) Adopting regulations imposing on financial institutions the obligation to report promptly to the competent authorities all complex, unusual large transactions and unusual patterns of transactions, which have no apparent economic or obviously lawful purpose, without fear of assuming criminal or civil liability for breach of any restriction on disclosure of information if they report their suspicions in good faith;
 - (iv) Requiring financial institutions to maintain, for at least five years, all necessary records on transactions, both domestic and international.
2. States Parties shall further cooperate in the prevention of offences set forth in article 2 by considering:
- (a) Measures for the supervision, including, for example, the licensing, of all money-transmission agencies;
 - (b) Feasible measures to detect or monitor the physical cross-border transportation of cash and bearer negotiable instruments, subject to strict safeguards to ensure proper use of information and without impeding in any way the freedom of capital movements.
3. States Parties shall further cooperate in the prevention of the offences set forth in article 2 by exchanging accurate and verified information in accordance with their domestic law and coordinating administrative and other measures taken, as appropriate, to prevent the commission of offences set forth in article 2, in particular by:
- (a) Establishing and maintaining channels of communication between their competent agencies and services to facilitate the secure and rapid exchange of information concerning all aspects of offences set forth in article 2;
 - (b) Cooperating with one another in conducting inquiries, with respect to the offences set forth in article 2, concerning:
 - (i) The identity, whereabouts and activities of persons in respect of whom reasonable suspicion exists that they are involved in such offences;
 - (ii) The movement of funds relating to the commission of such offences.
4. States Parties may exchange information through the International Criminal Police Organization (Interpol).

Article 19

The State Party where the alleged offender is prosecuted shall, in accordance with its domestic law or applicable procedures, communicate the final outcome of the proceedings to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit the information to the other States Parties.

Article 20

The States Parties shall carry out their obligations under this Convention in a manner consistent with the principles of sovereign equality and territorial integrity of States and that of non-intervention in the domestic affairs of other States.

Article 21

Nothing in this Convention shall affect other rights, obligations and responsibilities of States and individuals under international law, in particular the purposes of the Charter of the United Nations, international humanitarian law and other relevant conventions.

Article 22

Nothing in this Convention entitles a State Party to undertake in the territory of another State Party the exercise of jurisdiction or performance of functions which are exclusively reserved for the authorities of that other State Party by its domestic law.

Article 23

1. The annex may be amended by the addition of relevant treaties:

- (a) That are open to the participation of all States;
- (b) That have entered into force;
- (c) That have been ratified, accepted, approved or acceded to by at least twenty-two States Parties to the present Convention.

2. After the entry into force of this Convention, any State Party may propose such an amendment. Any proposal for an amendment shall be communicated to the depositary in written form. The depositary shall notify proposals that meet the requirements of paragraph 1 to all States Parties and seek their views on whether the proposed amendment should be adopted.

3. The proposed amendment shall be deemed adopted unless one third of the States Parties object to it by a written notification not later than 180 days after its circulation.

4. The adopted amendment to the annex shall enter into force 30 days after the deposit of the twenty-second instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval of such amendment for all those States Parties that have deposited such an instrument. For each State Party ratifying, accepting or approving the amendment after the deposit of the twenty-second instrument, the amendment shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after deposit by such State Party of its instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval.

Article 24

1. Any dispute between two or more States Parties concerning the interpretation or application of this Convention which cannot be settled through negotiation within a reasonable time shall, at the request of one of them, be submitted to arbitration. If, within six months from the date of the request for arbitration, the parties are unable to agree on the organization of the arbitration, any one of those parties may refer the dispute to the International Court of Justice, by application, in conformity with the Statute of the Court.

2. Each State may at the time of signature, ratification, acceptance or approval of this Convention or accession thereto declare that it does not consider itself bound by paragraph 1. The other States Parties shall not be bound by paragraph 1 with respect to any State Party which has made such a reservation.

3. Any State which has made a reservation in accordance with paragraph 2 may at any time withdraw that reservation by notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 25

1. This Convention shall be open for signature by all States from 10 January 2000 to 31 December 2001 at United Nations Headquarters in New York.

2. This Convention is subject to ratification, acceptance or approval. The instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 26

1. This Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day following the date of the deposit of the twenty-second instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

2. For each State ratifying, accepting, approving or acceding to the Convention after the deposit of the twenty-second instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession, the Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after deposit by such State of its instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession.

Article 27

1. Any State Party may denounce this Convention by written notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

2. Denunciation shall take effect one year following the date on which notification is received by the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 28

The original of this Convention, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations who shall send certified copies thereof to all States.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the undersigned, being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed this Convention, opened for signature at United Nations Headquarters in New York on 10 January 2000.

Measures to eliminate terrorism

In response to General Assembly resolution 50/53 [YUN 1995, p. 1330], the Secretary-General submitted a report, with later addendum [A/54/301 & Corr.1 & Add.1], containing responses from States and international organizations to his request for information on their implementation of the Declaration on Measures to Eliminate Terrorism, contained in resolution 49/60 [YUN 1994, p. 1293]. As at 28 October, replies had been received from 22 States and seven international organizations, as well as from the United Nations Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 76], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/54/615], adopted resolution 54/110 by recorded vote (149-0-2) [agenda item 160].

Measures to eliminate international terrorism

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, including resolution 49/60 of 9 December 1994, by which it adopted the Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism, and resolutions 50/53 of 11 December 1995, 51/210 of 17 December 1996, 52/165 of 15 December 1997 and 53/108 of 8 December 1998, as well as Security Council resolution 1269(1999) of 19 October 1999,

Recalling also the Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations,

Deeply disturbed by the persistence of terrorist acts, which have been carried out worldwide,

Stressing the need to strengthen further international cooperation between States and between international organizations and agencies, regional organizations and arrangements and the United Nations in order to prevent, combat and eliminate terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, wherever and by whomsoever committed,

Mindful of the need to enhance the role of the United Nations and the relevant specialized agencies in combating international terrorism, and of the proposals of the Secretary-General to enhance the role of the Organization in this respect,

Convinced of the importance of the consideration of measures to eliminate international terrorism by the General Assembly as the universal organ having competence to do so,

Recalling the Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism, contained in the annex to resolution 49/60, wherein the General Assembly encouraged States to review urgently the scope of the existing international legal provisions on the prevention, repression and elimination of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, with the aim of ensuring that there was a comprehensive legal framework covering all aspects of the matter,

Taking note of the final communique of the meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, held in New York on 23 September 1999, which reiterated the collective position of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries on terrorism and reaffirmed the previous initiative of the Twelfth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Durban, South Africa, from 29 August to 3 September 1998, calling for an international summit conference under the auspices of the United Nations to formulate a joint organized response of the international community to terrorism in all its forms and manifestations,

Recalling its decision in resolution 53/108 to address at its fifty-fourth session the question of convening a high-level conference in 2000 under the auspices of the United Nations to formulate a joint organized response of the international community to terrorism in all its forms and manifestations,

Noting regional efforts to prevent, combat and eliminate terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, wherever and by whomsoever committed, including through the elaboration of and adherence to regional conventions,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Strongly condemns all acts, methods and practices of terrorism as criminal and unjustifiable, wherever and by whomsoever committed;

6. Reaffirms that international cooperation as well as actions by States to combat terrorism should be conducted in conformity with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, international law and relevant international conventions;

7. Urges all States that have not yet done so to consider, as a matter of priority, becoming parties to relevant conventions and protocols as referred to in paragraph 6 of resolution 51/210, as well as the International Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombings, and calls upon all States to enact, as appropriate, domestic legislation necessary to implement the provisions of those conventions and protocols, to ensure that the jurisdiction of their courts enables them to bring to trial the perpetrators of terrorist acts, and to cooperate with and provide support and assistance to other States and relevant international and regional organizations to that end;

8. Reaffirms the Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism contained in the annex to resolution 49/60 and the Declaration to Supplement the 1994 Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism contained in the annex to resolution 51/210, and calls upon all States to implement them;

Security Council condemnation of terrorism

On 19 October, the Security Council met, at the initiative of the Russian Federation, to discuss the question of international terrorism and the threat it presented to international peace and security. Several Council members spoke before voting on a draft resolution on the subject. A number of members referred to terrorist attacks on their territory or nationals, including the recent attacks in Russia in which apartment buildings were destroyed and hundreds of their inhabitants killed. Argentina and Brazil referred to the increasing link between terrorism and drug trafficking and other forms of organized crime. Most members expressed the hope that the General Assembly would continue to draw up new instruments and conventions in the area of international terrorism.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 October [meeting 4053], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1269 (1999). The draft [S/1999/1071] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Deeply concerned by the increase in acts of international terrorism which endangers the lives and well-being of individuals worldwide as well as the peace and security of all States,

Condemning all acts of terrorism, irrespective of motive, wherever and by whomever committed,

Mindful of all relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, including resolution 49/60 of 9 December 1994, by which it adopted the Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism,

Determined to contribute, in accordance with the Charter, to the efforts to combat terrorism in all its forms,

Reaffirming that the suppression of acts of international terrorism, including those in which States are involved, is an essential contribution to the maintenance of international peace and security,

2. Calls upon all States to implement fully the international anti-terrorist conventions to which they are parties, encourages all States to consider as a matter of priority adhering to those to which they are not parties, and encourages also the speedy adoption of the pending conventions;

3. Stresses the vital role of the United Nations in strengthening international cooperation in combating terrorism, and emphasizes the importance of enhanced coordination among States, international and regional organizations;

4. Calls upon all States to take, inter alia, in the context of such cooperation and coordination, appropriate steps:

—To cooperate with each other, particularly through bilateral and multilateral agreements and arrangements, to prevent and suppress terrorist acts, protect their nationals and other persons against terrorist attacks and bring to justice the perpetrators of such acts;

—To prevent and suppress in their territories through all lawful means the preparation and financing of any acts of terrorism;

—To deny those who plan, finance or commit terrorist acts safe havens by ensuring their apprehension and prosecution or extradition;

—To take appropriate measures in conformity with the relevant provisions of national and international law, including international standards of human rights, before granting refugee status, for the purpose of ensuring that the asylum-seeker has not participated in terrorist acts;

6. Expresses its readiness to consider relevant provisions of the reports mentioned in paragraph 5 above and to take necessary steps in accordance with its responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations in order to counter terrorist threats to international peace and security;

7. Decides to remain seized of this matter.

Communications. By a 27 October letter [A/54/547], Germany forwarded to the Secretary-General a statement against terrorism, adopted at the Ministerial Conference of the Group of Eight industrialized countries (Moscow, 19-20 October). It emphasized that all States should prevent and suppress in their territories the preparation for and financing of terrorist actions and included a communique on combating transnational organized crime.

On 29 October [A/54/519-S/1999/1114], Ukraine forwarded to the Secretary-General the text of a statement by Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Commonwealth of Independent States on joint actions in connection with the increase of the threat of terrorism.

Burkina Faso, in its capacity as Chairman of the Islamic Group, transmitted a 19 November letter to the Secretary-General [A/54/637-S/1999/1204] enclosing the text of the Convention of the Organization of the Islamic Conference on Combating International Terrorism, adopted by the Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers at its twenty-sixth session (Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso, 28 June-1 July).

Diplomatic relations

Protection of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives

As at 31 December 1999, the number of parties to the various international conventions relating to the protection of diplomats and diplomatic and consular relations was as follows: 179 States were parties to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations [YUN 1961, p. 512], 48 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning acquisition of nationality [ibid., p. 516] and 62 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the compulsory settlement of disputes [ibid.].

The 1963 Vienna Convention on Consular Relations [YUN 1963, p. 510] had 163 parties, 38 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning acquisition of nationality [ibid., p. 512] and 45 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the compulsory settlement of disputes [ibid.].

The 1973 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, including Diplomatic Agents [YUN 1973, p. 775] had 102 States parties.

Report of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 53/97 [YUN 1998, p. 1222], the Secretary-General invited Member States to communicate their views on measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives as provided for in Assembly resolution 42/154 [YUN 1987, p. 1068] and to report to him serious violations. In an October report [A/INF/54/5], the Secretary-General presented the texts and analytical summary of information received. Austria, Denmark, Estonia, Sweden and Switzerland provided information on incidents involving offences against other States committed by groups in their countries. Most incidents involved occupation of embassies or attacks on them. Israel reported on violations in connection with its embassies in Brussels and Oslo and an attack on the Israeli Consulate General in Berlin. The Secretary-General sent four reminders to States that had not responded to a case reported by another State.

Treaties and agreements

Reservations to treaties

In 1999, ILC considered the fourth report of Special Rapporteur Alain Pellet (France) on the law and practice relating to reservations to treaties [A/CN.4/499], as well as part of his third report which it could not consider at its fiftieth session [YUN 1998, p. 1223]. The Commission, having referred a number of draft guidelines to the Drafting Committee, considered its report and provisionally adopted on first reading 18 draft guidelines and new versions of two draft guidelines. The texts of the draft guidelines and related commentaries were included in ILC's report [A/54/10 & Corr.1,2]. The Special Rapporteur also submitted to ILC the revised bibliography on reservations to treaties [A/CN.4/478/Rev.1], which he first submitted in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1213].

Treaties involving international organizations

The 1986 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations [YUN 1986, p. 1006], which had not yet entered into force, had 26 parties as at 31 December 1999.

Registration and publication of treaties by the United Nations

During 1999, 1,194 international agreements and 1,097 subsequent actions were received by the Secretariat for registration or filing and recording. In addition, there were 1,204 registrations of formalities concerning agreements for which the Secretary-General performed depositary functions.

The texts of international agreements registered or filed and recorded were published in the United Nations Treaty Series in the original languages, with translations into English and French where necessary. In 1999, 132 volumes of the Treaty Series covering treaties registered or filed and recorded from 1990 through 1997 were issued.

Volumes 24 and 25 of the Cumulative Index to the UN Treaty Series were published in English and French in 1999.

Multilateral treaties

The UN Treaty Series (approximately 1,850 printed volumes) and the regularly updated status of multilateral treaties deposited with the Secretary-General were available on the Internet at the UN Treaty Collection web site (<http://untreaty.un.org>).

Chapter IV

Law of the sea

During 1999, the United Nations continued to promote the universal acceptance of the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea and the two related Agreements. The three institutions created by the Convention—the International Seabed Authority, the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea and the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf—held sessions in 1999. The Council of the Authority completed the first reading of a draft seabed mining code; the Tribunal was concerned with two cases; and the Commission considered data and other material submitted by coastal States concerning the outer limits of the continental shelf where those limits extended beyond 200 nautical miles.

UN Convention on the Law of the Sea

Signatures and ratifications

In 1999, Ukraine and Vanuatu ratified the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, bringing the number of parties to 132.

The Convention, which was adopted by the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea in 1982 [YUN 1982, p. 178], entered into force on 16 November 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1301]. It was closed for signature in 1984, having received 159 signatures [YUN 1984, p. 108].

Meeting of States Parties. The ninth Meeting of States Parties to the Convention (New York, 19-28 May) [SPLOS/48] dealt primarily with budgetary matters of the International Tribunal, the rules of procedure of the Meeting and the Meeting's role in reviewing ocean and law of the sea issues. Elections to replace seven members of the Tribunal whose terms had expired on 30 September took place during the Meeting. Several items submitted by the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf were considered.

Agreement relating to the implementation of Part XI of the Convention

During the year, the number of States parties to the Agreement relating to the Implementation of Part XI of the Convention, which was adopted in 1994 by the General Assembly in resolution 48/263 [YUN 1994, p. 1301], reached 96. The Agreement was to be interpreted and applied together with the Convention as a single instrument, and in the event of any inconsistency between the Agreement and Part XI of the Convention, the provisions of the Agreement would prevail. Any ratification or accession to the Convention made after 28 July 1994 represented consent to be bound by the Agreement as well. States that were parties to the Convention prior to the adoption of the Agreement had to establish their consent to be bound by the Agreement separately, by depositing an instrument of ratification or accession.

Agreement on conservation and management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory stocks

As at 31 December 1999, the 1995 Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks [YUN 1995, p. 1334] had been ratified or acceded to by 26 States. It would enter into force 30 days after the date of deposit of the thirtieth instrument of ratification or accession.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 52/28 [YUN 1997, p. 1356], the Secretary-General presented, in October, information provided by States, specialized agencies and other UN bodies, and non-governmental organizations relating to the conservation and management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks [A/54/461].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 November [meeting 62], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/32 [draft: A/54/L.28 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 40 (b)].

Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks

The General Assembly,

Recalling the relevant provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, including Part VII, section 2,

Recognizing that the Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks ("the Agreement") sets forth the rights and obligations of States in authorizing the use of vessels flying their flags for fishing on the high seas,

Noting that while twenty-four States or entities have ratified or acceded to the Agreement, the Agreement has not yet entered into force,

Conscious of the need to promote and facilitate international cooperation, especially at the regional and subregional levels, in order to ensure the sustainable development and use of the living marine resources of the world's oceans and seas, consistent with the present resolution,

Noting that the stock situation for some species of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks is of great concern owing to the fact that those stocks have not been subject to adequate regulatory measures,

Recognizing the importance of actions States and other entities should take in order to share responsibly in the use of high seas fishery resources, including straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks, as outlined in Parts III and IV of the Agreement,

Recognizing also the duty provided in the Agreement and reiterated as a principle in the Code of Conduct for Responsible Fisheries of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations for flag States to exercise effective control over fishing vessels flying their flag and vessels flying their flag which provide support to such vessels, and to ensure that the activities of such vessels do not undermine the effectiveness of conservation and management measures taken in accordance with international law and adopted at the national, subregional, regional or global levels,

Recognizing further that a number of regional fishing organizations and arrangements with competence to establish conservation and management measures regarding straddling fish stocks and/or highly migratory fish stocks are already taking significant conservation measures to promote the recovery and long-term sustainable use of fish stocks worldwide, and that in order for those efforts to succeed it is important that all States and entities, including those which are not members of these organizations or party to these arrangements, cooperate and observe these conservation and management measures,

Taking note of the obligation of States and other entities and regional and subregional fishery management organizations and arrangements to take measures to prevent or eliminate overfishing, and encouraging all States to participate in the work of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations on the subject,

Noting that some regional fisheries organizations and arrangements, including those mentioned in the report of the Secretary-General, have recently taken measures to ensure that fishing vessels flying the flags of non-members of those organizations or non-parties to those arrangements do not undermine the regionally adopted conservation and management measures,

Recognizing that the Agreement to Promote Compliance with International Conservation and Management Measures by Fishing Vessels on the High Seas builds upon the legal framework established by the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, and also recognizing the importance of that Agreement and noting that it also has not yet entered into force,

Taking note with concern that straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks in some parts of the world have been subject to heavy and little-regulated fishing efforts, and that some stocks continue to be overfished, mainly as a result of unauthorized fishing,

Concerned that illegal, unregulated and unreported fishing, including that noted in the report of the Secretary-General, threatens serious depletion of populations of certain fish species, and in that regard urging States and entities to collaborate in efforts to address these types of fishing activities,

Noting the importance of the wide application of the precautionary approach to the conservation, management and exploitation of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks, in accordance with the Agreement,

Reaffirming the importance it attaches to compliance with its resolution 46/215 of 20 December 1991, in particular those provisions calling for full implementation of a global moratorium on all large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing on the high seas of the world's oceans and seas, including enclosed seas and semi-enclosed seas,

Reaffirming also its resolution 49/116 of 19 December 1994 on unauthorized fishing in zones of national jurisdiction and its impact on the living marine resources of the world's oceans and seas, as well as its resolution 52/28 of 26 November 1997 and other relevant resolutions,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on recent developments and current status of the Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks;

2. Calls upon all States and other entities referred to in article 1, paragraph 2 (b), of the Agreement that have not done so to ratify or accede to it and to consider applying it provisionally;

3. Emphasizes the importance of the early entry into force and effective implementation of the Agreement;

4. Reaffirms the importance it attaches to compliance with its resolutions 46/215, 49/116, 49/118 of 19 December 1994 and 52/28, and urges States and other entities to enforce such measures fully;

5. Calls upon all States and other entities referred to in article X, paragraph 1, of the Agreement to Promote Compliance with International Conservation and Management Measures by Fishing Vessels on the High Seas that have not done so to accept that instrument;

6. Calls upon all States to ensure that their vessels comply with the conservation and management measures in accordance with the Agreement that have been adopted by subregional and regional fisheries management organizations and arrangements;

7. Calls upon States not to permit vessels flying their flag to engage in fishing on the high seas without having effective control over their activities and to take specific measures to control fishing operations by vessels flying their flag;

8. Calls upon the International Maritime Organization, in cooperation with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, regional fisheries management organizations and arrangements and other relevant international organizations, and in consultation with States and entities, to define the concept of the genuine link between the fishing vessel and the State in order to assist in the implementation of the Agreement;

9. Urges all States to participate in the efforts of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to develop an international plan of action to address illegal, unregulated and unreported fishing, in particular the Meeting of Experts and Technical Consultation in the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations scheduled for 2000, and in all efforts to coordinate all the work of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations with other international organizations, including the International Maritime Organization;

10. Encourages all States and entities concerned to work with flag States and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in developing and implementing measures to combat or curb illegal, unregulated and unreported fishing;

11. Calls upon States to provide assistance to developing States as outlined in the Agreement, and notes the importance of participation by representatives of developing States in forums in which fisheries issues are discussed;

12. Encourages States and other entities to integrate in an appropriate manner the requirements for the protection of the environment, notably those resulting from multilateral environmental agreements, in the management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all members of the international community, relevant intergovernmental organizations, the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, regional and subregional fisheries management organizations or arrangements and relevant non-governmental organizations, and invites them to provide the Secretary-General with information relevant to the implementation of the present resolution;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session a report on further developments relating to the implementation of the present resolution;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session, under the item entitled "Oceans and the law of the sea", the sub-item entitled "Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks".

Other developments related to the Convention

Report of Secretary-General. In October, the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 53/32 [YUN 1998, p. 1230], submitted his annual report on developments pertaining to the status of the Convention and the related Agreements, the activities of institutions created under the Convention and issues relating to ocean affairs and the law of the sea [A/54/429 & Corr.1].

On a regional basis, the Secretary-General reviewed developments in legislation, delimitation treaties and State practice. He emphasized that, despite the positive trend of States adapting their legal practice to the provisions of the Convention, several examples existed where national legislation departed from the rules set out in it, and many States, both parties and non-parties, still had legislation in force that had not been harmonized with the Convention. He pointed out that delimitation of maritime boundaries was becoming increasingly important in the practice of States since it promoted peace and stability at the regional level and helped create the legal and political certainties required to attract investment in such fields as oil and gas exploitation and fisheries. In order to assist States, the Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea was preparing a handbook providing basic legal, technical and practical information on maritime boundary delimitation. The Secretary-General presented information concerning the deposit and due publicity of charts and lists of geographical coordinates relating to baselines and various maritime areas. He highlighted developments in the dispute settlement mechanism, including choice of procedures, and additions to the lists of conciliators, arbitrators and experts for special arbitration.

The report dealt with issues concerning States with special geographical characteristics, such as small island States and landlocked States. Other parts of the report were devoted to issues related to combating crimes at sea, including illicit traffic in narcotic drugs, illegal trafficking in and transporting of migrants, and piracy and armed robbery; navigation, including safety and seaworthiness of ships, seafarers' condition, safety of navigation, maritime transport and carriage of dangerous goods. The Secretary-General described activities that had taken place in the development and management of marine resources and the protection and preservation of the marine environment, including pollution from land-based sources, vessels, the atmosphere and dumping. He provided a comprehensive review of marine fisheries in all regions, and information on ecosystems, habitats and species. He also reviewed regional sea programmes and action plans. The report focused on issues of marine science and technology and on cooperative mechanisms within the UN system, including capacity-building and information dissemination. The report highlighted the review of the sectoral theme of oceans and seas by the Commission on Sustainable Development (see p. 993).

International Seabed Authority

Through the International Seabed Authority, established by the Convention on the Law of the Sea and the 1994 Implementing Agreement, States organized and conducted exploration and exploitation of the resources of the seabed and ocean floor and subsoil beyond the limits of national jurisdiction. As at 31 December, the Authority had 132 members.

In 1999, the Authority held its fifth session (Kingston, Jamaica, 9-27 August). The session emphasized early approval of the draft Regulations on Prospecting and Exploration for Polymetallic Nodules in the Area (seabed mining code). The Council of the Authority completed the first reading of the draft code. Following discussions, a revised draft was prepared. Early approval was stressed so that the Authority might enter into contracts for exploration with the seven pioneer investors whose work plans had been approved in 1997 [YUN 1997, p.1357]. The session also considered draft guidelines to assess the possible environmental impact arising from the exploration for polymetallic nodules in the Area. In other action, the Council adopted the draft financial regulations of the Authority, which applied provisionally until approved by the General Assembly. The Headquarters Agreement between the Government of Jamaica and the International Seabed Authority was formally signed by the parties.

The Protocol on the Privileges and Immunities of the International Seabed Authority, adopted in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1226], had 23 signatories as at 31 December. The Protocol would remain open for signature until 16 August 2000. It would enter into force 30 days after the date of deposit of the tenth instrument of ratification or accession.

International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea

The International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea held its seventh (25 February-16 April) and eighth (28 September-8 October) sessions in Hamburg, Germany [SPLOS/50].

In May, the ninth Meeting of States Parties to the Convention approved the budget of the Tribunal for 2000, which totalled $7,657,019. The Tribunal requested the Meeting to approve an adjustment in the remuneration of the members of the Tribunal in the light of General Assembly resolution 53/214 [YUN 1998, p. 1301], whereby the annual salary of the judges of the International Court of Justice (ICJ) was set at $160,000. The Meeting upheld the principle of equivalence of remuneration of the judges of ICJ and the Tribunal and set the level of approved remuneration of members of the Tribunal at a maximum of $160,000, effective 1 January 2000. The Meeting also considered the draft financial regulations of the Tribunal and agreed that the draft would be taken up at its tenth session with a view to its adoption.

On 1 July 1999, the 1997 Agreement on the Privileges and Immunities of the Tribunal [YUN 1997, p. 1361] closed for signature, having been signed by 21 States. The Agreement, which required ratification by 10 States to enter into force, had been ratified by the Netherlands and Norway at year's end.

Regarding the judicial work of the Tribunal, it was seized of a case between Saint Vincent and the Grenadines and Guinea concerning the arrest and detention off the coast of Sierra Leone by Guinean authorities of the oil tanker M/V Saiga, including its crew, which flew the flag of Saint Vincent and the Grenadines. A further case involved Australia and New Zealand on the one side and Japan on the other concerning the conservation of the southern bluefin tuna, a highly migratory fish species that traversed the territorial sea and the exclusive economic zone of several countries and the high seas.

At the request of Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Tribunal, acting in its judicial capacity, nominated the seventh member of a Commission established by the two States to supervise, monitor, interpret and arbitrate the 1998 Agreement on Free Transit through the Territory of the Republic of Croatia to and from the Port of Ploce and through the Territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina at Neum [A/53/702-S/1998/1118].

Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf

During 1999, the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf, established in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1362], held its fifth (3-14 May) and sixth (30 August-3 September) sessions in New York [A/54/429 & Corr.1]. The 21-member Commission, composed of experts in geology, geophysics or hydrography, made recommendations to coastal States on matters related to the establishment of the outer limits of their continental shelf beyond 200 nautical miles.

At those sessions, the Commission adopted the Scientific and Technical Guidelines [CLCS/11], which were intended to provide assistance to coastal States in their submission of technical data to the Commission, as well as annexes to the Guidelines [CLCS/11/Add.1], which included flow charts providing a simplified outline of the procedures described in the relevant parts of the Guidelines. The Commission considered the issue of training to develop knowledge and skills for preparation of submissions on the outer limits of the continental shelves, as required by the Convention. Among other matters, the Commission studied the issue of establishing a trust fund to assist in financing the participation of its members from developing countries. The Commission elected its officers for the remaining period of its current membership.

Assistance to third States affected by Chapter VII sanctions

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 53/107 [YUN 1998, p. 1236], the Secretary-General submitted a September report with later addendum on implementation of the provisions of the UN Charter related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions [A/54/383 & Add.1]. The report contained measures to further improve procedures and working methods of the Security Council and its sanctions committees, and presented information on Secretariat arrangements to provide better information and early assessments regarding the effects of sanctions on third States and international assistance available to them. Views communicated by Governments, the specialized agencies, UN bodies and other international and regional organizations regarding the report of the ad hoc expert group meeting on assistance to third States affected by sanctions [YUN 1998, p. 1235] were summarized in the report (see also PART THREE, Chapter III).

Security Council consideration. In a January note on the work of the sanctions committees [S/1999/92], the Security Council President made proposals to improve the work of those committees.

The President suggested that the sanctions committees should establish arrangements and channels of communication within the UN system, as well as with other intergovernmental and regional organizations, neighbouring countries and other countries and parties concerned, to improve the monitoring of the implementation of the sanctions regimes and the assessment of their humanitarian consequences on the target State population and their economic consequences on neighbouring and other States. The chairpersons of sanctions committees should visit the regions concerned to obtain first-hand accounts of the impact of sanctions regimes and the results of and difficulties in their implementation. The technical effectiveness of the mandatory measures should also be periodically assessed by the sanctions committees on the basis of inputs from Member States, reports prepared by the Secretariat and other available sources of information. The Secretariat should provide, whenever necessary, its assessment of the humanitarian and economic impact of sanctions.

Other proposals dealt with the committees' guidelines; the practice of hearing technical presentations of information by organizations assisting the Council; the impact of sanctions on diplomatic efforts towards implementing Council resolutions; humanitarian exemptions for humanitarian agencies; the exemption of foodstuffs, pharmaceuticals, medical supplies and equipment, educational items and agricultural equipment; and increased transparency of the committees' work, including the availability of summary records and public information on the Internet.

The Council President stated that all Council members had indicated their agreement that the proposals would be used to improve the work of the committees in accordance with the relevant resolutions.

By a 25 February note [S/1999/204], the Secretary-General drew the attention of Council members to General Assembly resolution 53/107 [YUN 1998, p. 1236] on assistance to third States affected by sanctions.

Concerned about the special economic problems confronting certain States arising from the carrying out of preventive or enforcement measures taken by the Security Council against other States, and taking into account the obligation of Members of the United Nations under Article 49 of the Charter of the United Nations to join in affording mutual assistance in carrying out the measures decided upon by the Security Council,

Recalling the right of third States confronted with special economic problems of that nature to consult the Security Council with regard to a solution of those problems, in accordance with Article 50 of the Charter,

Recognizing the desirability of the consideration of further appropriate procedures for consultations to deal in a more effective manner with the problems referred to in Article 50 of the Charter,

Recalling:

(a) The report of the Secretary-General entitled "An Agenda for Peace", in particular paragraph 41 thereof,

(b) Its resolution 47/120 A of 18 December 1992, entitled "An Agenda for Peace: preventive diplomacy and related matters", its resolution 47/120 B of 20 September 1993, entitled "An Agenda for Peace", in particular section IV thereof, entitled "Special economic problems arising from the implementation of preventive or enforcement measures", and its resolution 51/242 of 15 September 1997, entitled "Supplement to an Agenda for Peace", in particular annex II thereof, entitled "Question of sanctions imposed by the United Nations",

(c) The position paper of the Secretary-General entitled "Supplement to an Agenda for Peace",

(d) The statement by the President of the Security Council of 22 February 1995,

(f) The reports of the Secretary-General on economic assistance to States affected by the implementation of the Security Council resolutions imposing sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and General Assembly resolutions 48/210 of 21 December 1993, 49/21 A of 2 December 1994, 50/58 E of 12 December 1995, 51/30 A of 5 December 1996 and 52/169 H of 16 December 1997,

(h) The reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the provisions of the Charter related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter,

Taking note of the most recent report of the Secretary-General, submitted in accordance with General Assembly resolution 53/107 of 8 December 1998,

Recalling that the question of assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions has been addressed recently in several forums, including the General Assembly and its subsidiary organs and the Security Council,

Recalling also the measures taken by the Security Council in accordance with the statement by the President of the Security Council of 16 December 1994 that, as part of the effort of the Council to improve the flow of information and the exchange of ideas between members of the Council and other States Members of the United Nations, there should be increased recourse to open meetings, in particular at an early stage in its consideration of a subject,

Stressing that, in the formulation of sanctions regimes, due account should be taken of the potential effects of sanctions on third States,

Stressing also, in this context, the powers of the Security Council under Chapter VII of the Charter and the primary responsibility of the Council under Article 24 of the Charter for the maintenance of international peace and security in order to ensure prompt and effective action by the United Nations,

Recalling that, under Article 31 of the Charter, any Member of the United Nations that is not a member of the Security Council may participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Council whenever the latter considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected,

Recognizing that the imposition of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter has been causing special economic problems in third States and that it is necessary to intensify efforts to address those problems effectively,

Taking into consideration the views of third States which could be affected by the imposition of sanctions,

Recognizing that assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions would further contribute to an effective and comprehensive approach by the international community to sanctions imposed by the Security Council,

Recognizing also that the international community at large and, in particular, international institutions involved in providing economic and financial assistance should continue to take into account and address in a more effective manner the special economic problems of affected third States arising from the carrying out of preventive or enforcement measures taken by the Security Council under Chapter VII of the Charter, in view of their magnitude and of the adverse impact on the economy of those States,

Recalling the provisions of its resolutions 50/51 of 11 December 1995, 51/208 of 17 December 1996, 52/162 of 15 December 1997 and 53/107 of 8 December 1998,

1. Renews its invitation to the Security Council to consider the establishment of further mechanisms or procedures, as appropriate, for consultations as early as possible under Article 50 of the Charter of the United Nations with third States which are or may be confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of preventive or enforcement measures imposed by the Council under Chapter VII of the Charter, with regard to a solution of those problems, including appropriate ways and means for increasing the effectiveness of its methods and procedures applied in the consideration of requests by the affected States for assistance;

2. Welcomes once again the further measures taken by the Security Council since the adoption of General Assembly resolution 50/51, most recently the note by the President of the Security Council of 29 January 1999 aimed at improving the work of the sanctions committees, including increasing the effectiveness and transparency of the sanctions committees, invites the Council to implement those measures, and strongly recommends that the Council continue its efforts to further enhance the functioning of the sanctions committees, to streamline their working procedures and to facilitate access to them by representatives of States that find themselves confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of sanctions;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to pursue the implementation of General Assembly resolutions 50/51, 51/208, 52/162 and 53/107 and to ensure that the competent units within the Secretariat develop the adequate capacity and appropriate modalities, technical procedures and guidelines to continue, on a regular basis, to collate and coordinate information about international assistance available to third States affected by the implementation of sanctions, to continue developing a possible methodology for assessing the adverse consequences actually incurred by third States and to explore innovative and practical measures of assistance to the affected third States;

4. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General containing a summary of the deliberations and main findings of the ad hoc expert group meeting on developing a methodology for assessing the consequences incurred by third States as a result of preventive or enforcement measures and on exploring innovative and practical measures of international assistance to the affected third States, and invites States and relevant international organizations within and outside the United Nations system which have not yet done so to provide their views regarding the report of the ad hoc expert group meeting;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to present to the General Assembly his views on the deliberations and main findings, including the recommendations, of the ad hoc expert group on the implementation of the provisions of the Charter related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions, taking into account the views of States, the organizations of the United Nations system, international financial institutions and other international organizations, and to provide the relevant information, where appropriate, on other developments in this context, particularly on the work of the sanctions committees as referred to in the note by the President of the Security Council;

6. Reaffirms the important role of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Committee for Programme and Coordination in mobilizing and monitoring, as appropriate, the economic assistance efforts by the international community and the United Nations system to States confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of preventive or enforcement measures imposed by the Security Council and, as appropriate, in identifying solutions to the special economic problems of those States;

7. Takes note of the decision of the Economic and Social Council, in its resolution 1999/59 of 30 July 1999, to continue consideration of the question of assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions, and decides to transmit the most recent report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the provisions of the Charter related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions to the Council at its substantive session of 2000;

8. Invites the organizations of the United Nations system, international financial institutions, other international organizations, regional organizations and Member States to address more specifically and directly, where appropriate, special economic problems of third States affected by sanctions imposed under Chapter VII of the Charter and, for this purpose, to consider improving procedures for consultations to maintain a constructive dialogue with such States, including through regular and frequent meetings as well as, where appropriate, special meetings between the affected third States and the donor community, with the participation of United Nations agencies and other international organizations;

9. Requests the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, at its session in 2000, to continue to consider on a priority basis the question of the implementation of the provisions of the Charter related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter, taking into consideration all the related reports of the Secretary-General, in particular the 1998 report containing a summary of the deliberations and main findings of the ad hoc expert group meeting convened pursuant to paragraph 4 of General Assembly resolution 52/162, together with the most recent report of the Secretary-General on this question, the proposals submitted on the question, the debate on the question in the Sixth Committee during the fifty-fourth session of the Assembly and the text on the question of sanctions imposed by the United Nations contained in annex II to Assembly resolution 51/242, as well as the implementation of the provisions of Assembly resolutions 50/51, 51/208, 52/162 and 53/107 and the present resolution;

10. Decides to consider, within the Sixth Committee, or if necessary within a working group of the Committee, at the fifty-fifth session of the General Assembly, further progress in the elaboration of effective measures aimed at the implementation of the provisions of the Charter related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session, under the agenda item entitled "Report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization".

First International Peace Conference centennial and end of Decade

In September, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/99 [YUN 1998, p. 1240], the Netherlands and the Russian Federation submitted to the Secretary-General a report [A/54/381] on the conclusions of the centennial of the first International Peace Conference, which emerged from an expert meeting (The Hague, 18-19 May), and of the international conference "Centennial of the Russian Initiative: from the First Peace Conference, 1899—to the Third, 1999" (Saint Petersburg, 22-25 June). The report reflected the outcome of and discussions on the themes of the 1899 first International Peace Conference and its 1999 centennial celebrations—disarmament questions (regional security organizations, nuclear disarmament/non-proliferation, missiles, biological and chemical weapons, anti-personnel landmines, conventional arms/small arms, Conference on Disarmament, control/verification mechanisms, the role of civil society); humanitarian law and laws of war (ius in bello, ius ad bellum, neutrality, naval warfare, belligerent occupation, UN military operations, internal armed conflicts, compliance); and peaceful settlement of disputes (prevention and resolution, negotiations and consultations, Permanent Court of Arbitration, ICJ, role of Security Council and Secretary-General, regional courts, international court of appeals, international constitutional court, specialized methods and procedures, permanent conciliation committee, codification of international law, world school of international law, mediation and role of technical bodies). Those activities were undertaken within the framework of the United Nations Decade of International Law, with a view to serving as a useful basis for carrying the results of the Decade of International Law into the next millennium.

Communication. On 17 May [A/54/98], Bangladesh transmitted the text of the Hague Agenda for Peace and Justice for the Twenty-first Century, which emerged from the Hague Appeal for Peace Conference (The Hague, 12-15 May). The Agenda reflected the four major strands of the Hague Appeal: root causes of war/culture of peace; international humanitarian and human rights law and institutions; prevention, resolution and transformation of violent conflict; and disarmament and human security.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 November [meeting 55], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/54/609], adopted resolution 54/27 without vote [agenda item 154 (b)].

Outcome of the action dedicated to the 1999 centennial of the first International Peace Conference

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the commitment of the United Nations and its Member States to the adherence to and the development of international law as a basis for conducting international relations,

Recognizing the historical importance of the first International Peace Conference, held at the Hague in 1899, for the rule of international law, the peaceful settlement of disputes, the development and codification of international law and the practice of multilateral diplomacy,

Recalling that, in accordance with its previous resolutions, the centennial of the first International Peace Conference coincides with the closing of the United Nations Decade of International Law and could be considered as a third international peace conference,

Recalling also that the Decade was closed by the General Assembly in plenary meeting on 17 November 1999,

Recalling with gratitude the initiatives for the celebration of the centennial of the first International Peace Conference by the Governments of the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Russian Federation with regard to the themes of the Conference: development of international law relating to disarmament and arms control, humanitarian law and laws of war, and peaceful settlement of disputes,

Recalling that those initiatives called for, inter alia, discussions on the themes on the basis of in-depth reports at the global, regional and national levels by intergovernmental, governmental, diplomatic, academic and civil society experts at conferences, seminars and other meetings, as well as through the Internet, to be reported on to the General Assembly for consideration at its fifty-fourth session,

Noting that the general outcome of those discussions was that, while progressive development and codification of international law remains important, the furtherance of the rule of international law would best be served by the faithful compliance of States with existing international obligations, focusing more on the timely implementation of these obligations,

Noting also that the year 1999 marks the fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of the four Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949,

Noting further that the Permanent Court of Arbitration was established in 1899 as a result of the first International Peace Conference,

Convinced that the legacies of the first International Peace Conference have been enhanced by the centennial initiatives and by the discussions in the General Assembly in plenary meeting at the closing of the Decade,

1. Takes note with interest of the outcome of the action dedicated to the centennial of the first International Peace Conference, reported by the co-hosts, the Governments of the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Russian Federation;

2. Commends all who, through their efforts, wisdom and expertise, contributed to the success of the celebration of the centennial of the first International Peace Conference;

3. Also commends the International Committee of the Red Cross for its work in promoting adherence to and compliance with the four Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and other instruments of international humanitarian law;

4. Congratulates the Permanent Court of Arbitration on its one hundredth anniversary;

5. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for bringing the outcome of the action dedicated to the centennial of the first International Peace Conference to the attention of the relevant international forums;

6. Invites States, organs of the United Nations, international organizations and other relevant international forums to take note of the outcome of the action dedicated to the centennial of the first International Peace Conference and to consider, where appropriate:

(a) Giving attention to the outcome of the thematic discussions within the sphere of their respective competencies or mandates;

(b) Making use in the future of the format of the discussions of the centennial of the first International Peace Conference in accordance with any relevant rules and procedures;

7. Invites:

(a) The Governments of the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Russian Federation to file the records of the centennial of the first International Peace Conference in their archives and to provide access to those records to interested parties;

(b) All who contributed to the centennial of the first International Peace Conference to file their records in this respect with either of these Governments.

UN Programme for the teaching and study of international law

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/152 [YUN 1997, p. 1373], the Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/54/515] on the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law during 1998-1999. The report gave an account of the activities undertaken by the United Nations and described contributions made by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO). The Advisory Committee on the Programme held its thirty-third and thirty-fourth sessions on 10 December 1998 and 20 October 1999, respectively.

During the biennium, staff of the UN Office of Legal Affairs (OLA) continued to perform various functions connected with the Programme's goals. Pursuant to resolution 52/152, the Assembly approved the establishment of the United Nations Audio-visual Library in International Law. In the interim, OLA's Codification Division continued to catalogue the tapes received and to assist in disseminating information regarding UN work on codification and the progressive development of international law, as well as aspects regarding its application via the Internet. OLA issued publications covering issues such as treaties and the law of the sea.

UN fellowship programmes for the study of international law included the Fellowship Programme in International Law, provided by OLA in cooperation with UNITAR. The Office made various arrangements relating to the general orientation of the Programme, such as the selection of fellows and lecturers. Other programmes included the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship on the Law of the Sea, awarded by OLA; and the UNITAR/International Peace Academy fellowship programme in peace-making and preventive diplomacy.

The International Law Commission (ILC) organized the annual International Law Seminar for advanced students and young professors or government officers. The Seminar, held in Geneva, was funded by voluntary contributions from Member States and through national fellowships. The activities of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) were aimed at acquainting lawyers, government officials and scholars, particularly from developing countries, with the Commission's work and legal texts. UNCITRAL organized seminars and symposia in developing countries to assist them in adapting and implementing UNCITRAL texts. UNESCO continued to disseminate human-rights standard-setting instruments and UNESCO declarations. The number of Chairs in UNESCO's network of Chairs on human rights, democracy, peace and tolerance rose to 41.

The report also contained guidelines and recommendations for the execution of the Programme during the 2000-2001 biennium, as requested by Assembly resolution 52/152.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 76], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/54/608], adopted resolution 54/102 without vote [agenda item 153].

United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law

The General Assembly,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law and the guidelines and recommendations on future implementation of the Programme which were adopted by the Advisory Committee on the Programme and are contained in section III of that report,

Considering that international law should occupy an appropriate place in the teaching of legal disciplines at all universities,

Noting with appreciation the efforts made by States at the bilateral level to provide assistance in the teaching and study of international law,

Convinced, nevertheless, that States and international organizations and institutions should be encouraged to give further support to the Programme and increase their activities to promote the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law, in particular those activities which are of special benefit to persons from developing countries,

Reaffirming its resolutions 2464(XXIII) of 20 December 1968, 2550(XXIV) of 12 December 1969, 2838(XXVI) of 18 December 1971, 3106(XXVIII) of 12 December 1973, 3502(XXX) of 15 December 1975, 32/146 of 16 December 1977, 36/108 of 10 December 1981 and 38/129 of 19 December 1983, in which it stated or recalled that in the conduct of the Programme it was desirable to use as far as possible the resources and facilities made available by Member States, international organizations and others, as well as its resolutions 34/144 of 17 December 1979, 40/66 of 11 December 1985, 42/148 of 7 December 1987, 44/28 of 4

December 1989, 46/50 of 9 December 1991 and 48/29 of 9 December 1993, in which, in addition, it expressed or reaffirmed the hope that, in appointing lecturers for the seminars to be held within the framework of the fellowship programme in international law, account would be taken of the need to secure the representation of major legal systems and balance among various geographical regions,

Welcoming the establishment of the United Nations Audiovisual Library in International Law,

1. Approves the guidelines and recommendations contained in section III of the report of the Secretary-General and adopted by the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law, in particular those designed to achieve the best possible results in the administration of the Programme within a policy of maximum financial restraint;

2. Authorizes the Secretary-General to carry out in 2000 and 2001 the activities specified in his report, including the provision of:

(a) A number of international law fellowships in both 2000 and 2001, to be determined in the light of the overall resources for the Programme and to be awarded at the request of Governments of developing countries;

(b) A minimum of one scholarship in both 2000 and 2001 under the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship on the Law of the Sea, subject to the availability of new voluntary contributions made specifically to the fellowship fund;

(c) Subject to the overall resources for the Programme, assistance in the form of a travel grant for one participant from each developing country, who would be invited to possible regional courses to be organized in 2000 and 2001;

and to finance the above activities from provisions in the regular budget, when appropriate, as well as from voluntary financial contributions earmarked for each of the activities concerned, which would be received as a result of the requests set out in paragraphs 13 to 15 below;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his constructive efforts to promote training and assistance in international law within the framework of the Programme in 1998 and 1999, in particular for the organization of the thirty-fourth and thirty-fifth sessions of the International Law Seminar, held at Geneva in 1998 and 1999, respectively, and for the activities of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat related to the fellowship programme in international law and to the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship on the Law of the Sea, carried out, respectively, through its Codification Division and its Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to consider the possibility of admitting, for participation in the various components of the Programme, candidates from countries willing to bear the entire cost of such participation;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to consider the relative advantages of using available resources and voluntary contributions for regional, subregional or national courses, as against courses organized within the United Nations system;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the necessary resources to the programme budget for the Programme for the next and the future bienniums with a view to maintaining the effectiveness of the Programme;

7. Welcomes the efforts undertaken by the Office of Legal Affairs to bring up to date the United Nations Treaty Series and the United Nations Juridical Yearbook, as well as efforts made to place on the Internet the Treaty Series and other legal information;

8. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Institute for Training and Research for its participation in the Programme through the activities described in the report of the Secretary-General;

9. Also expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for its participation in the Programme through the activities described in the report of the Secretary-General;

10. Further expresses its appreciation to the Hague Academy of International Law for the valuable contribution it continues to make to the Programme, which has enabled candidates under the fellowship programme in international law to attend and participate in the Programme in conjunction with the Academy courses;

11. Notes with appreciation the contributions of the Hague Academy of International Law to the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law, and calls upon Member States and interested organizations to give favourable consideration to the appeal of the Academy for a continuation of support and a possible increase in their financial contributions, to enable the Academy to carry out its activities, particularly those relating to the summer courses, regional courses and programmes of the Centre for Studies and Research in International Law and International Relations;

12. Urges all States and relevant international organizations, whether regional or universal, to make all possible efforts to implement the goals and carry out the activities contemplated in section IV of the programme of activities for the final term (1997-1999) of the United Nations Decade of International Law, dealing with the encouragement of the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law and contained in the annex to resolution 51/157 of 16 December 1996;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to publicize the Programme and periodically to invite Member States, universities, philanthropic foundations and other interested national and international institutions and organizations, as well as individuals, to make voluntary contributions towards the financing of the Programme or otherwise to assist in its implementation and possible expansion;

14. Reiterates its request to Member States and to interested organizations and individuals to make voluntary contributions, inter alia, for the International Law Seminar, the fellowship programme in international law, the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship on the Law of the Sea and the United Nations Audiovisual Library in International Law, and expresses its appreciation to those Member States, institutions and individuals which have made voluntary contributions for this purpose;

15. Urges in particular all Governments to make voluntary contributions for the organization of regional refresher courses in international law by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, especially with a view to covering the amount needed for the financing of the daily subsistence allowance for up to twenty-five participants in each regional course, thus alleviating the burden on prospective host countries and making it possible for the Institute to continue to organize the regional courses;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the implementation of the Programme during 2000 and 2001 and, following consultations with the Advisory Committee on the Programme, to submit recommendations regarding the execution of the Programme in subsequent years;

17. Decides to appoint twenty-five Member States, six from Africa, five from Asia, three from Eastern Europe, five from Latin America and the Caribbean and six from Western Europe and other States, as members of the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law, for a period of four years beginning on 1 January 2000;

18. Also decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law".

Host country relations

In 1999, the Committee on Relations with the Host Country continued to consider aspects of relations between the UN diplomatic community and the United States—the host country. At six meetings held between 18 November 1998 and 5 November 1999 [A/54/26], the Committee considered its membership and composition; the security of UN permanent missions and safety of their personnel; acceleration of immigration and customs procedures; security arrangements for the fifty-fourth (1999) session of the General Assembly; and claims of financial indebtedness and procedures to be followed with a view to resolving related issues. Since there were no new developments with regard to the use of diplomatic motor vehicles, parking and related matters, the Working Group established in 1997 to consider those issues [YUN 1997, p. 1376] held no meetings during the reporting period. The Working Group on indebtedness also did not meet during the reporting period.

Committee membership and composition

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/104 [YUN 1998, p. 1243], the Committee's membership increased in 1999 by four members, one each from African, Asian, Latin American and Caribbean, and Eastern European States. The four new members were Cuba, Hungary, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Malaysia. In 1999, the Committee's membership was as follows: Bulgaria, Canada, China, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, France, Honduras, Hungary, Iraq, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Mali, Russian Federation, Senegal, Spain, United Kingdom and United States. The Bureau of the Committee held two meetings and, among other things, considered the composition and membership of the Committee and organizational issues related to its work.

Security of missions and safety of their personnel

Costa Rica remarked in November 1998 that security measures adopted during the general debate at the fifty-third (1998) session of the General Assembly had been excessive and at times insulting to certain dignitaries. The Russian Federation stated that lack of coordination between the UN Security and Safety Service and host country security authorities was manifested in the frequent and unwarranted checks of diplomats and other delegation members. It suggested that the Committee consider measures aimed at improving cooperation with the host country authorities and make appropriate recommendations. The United States maintained that the security arrangements were not excessive. Decisions relating to security at Headquarters were made by the Secretary-General and handed down through the Chief of the Security and Safety Service. With regard to the alleged indignities, the United States would not respond to generalities but required specific information. The Chief of the Security and Safety Service said that, in order to ensure all delegations proper protection and to make sure that the Headquarters district remained a safe venue, a security plan had been implemented by the host country law-enforcement authorities. There had been some delays in permitting access by pedestrians and vehicles and the Security and Safety Service had brought those concerns to the attention of the competent authorities.

Implementation of the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding Headquarters of the United Nations

On 15 September, the Committee discussed security arrangements undertaken by the host country in connection with the fifty-fourth (1999) session of the General Assembly. The United States said that the Secretariat had specifically requested, pursuant to the United Nations Headquarters Agreement, the assistance of host country law enforcement agencies. The Chief of the UN Security and Safety Service said another briefing on security arrangements would be arranged prior to the session's opening and every effort would be made to ensure that all missions received information about it.

Travel regulations

In October, Cuba drew the Committee's attention to the imposition of restrictions by the host country on movement of the personnel of its Permanent Mission to the United Nations in New York [A/AC.154/326]. In November, the United States responded that it did not impose any such impediments on members of the Mission [A/AC.154/327]. It had, however, for reasons of national security, denied requests for travel to attend events that were non-UN related. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, in November, noted that, despite the many General Assembly resolutions that called for lifting travel restrictions imposed by the host country on officials of certain missions and on officials of the UN Secretariat who were of certain nationalities, the host country continued to accord discriminatory treatment to some diplomatic missions, including the Libyan Mission [A/AC.154/328]. The letter also mentioned that the Libyan Mission, as a member of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country, would like to receive formal notification from the Secretariat of any Committee meetings.

Belarus stated that the host country had refused to grant visas to its officials to attend UN-related meetings, which constituted a serious violation of the Headquarters Agreement. The United States replied that the invitation to the meeting in question had been extended by the Secretary-General of the Inter-Parliamentary Union, rather than by the United Nations; thus, the Headquarters Agreement did not apply.

Financial indebtedness

In March, the United States expressed appreciation of the fact that the United Nations would now voluntarily deduct funds from salaries and emoluments of staff members who were under a court order to provide support for spouses and children and had failed to do so.

Other matters

Malaysia raised the question of housing problems faced by diplomats in New York. There had been cases where diplomats had been requested to sign a letter revoking their immunity as a condition for renting an apartment. The United States said that the reason for those demands was the indebtedness of some members of the diplomatic community, and that the problem should be studied by the Bureau of the Committee and its working group on indebtedness.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 76], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/54/612], adopted resolution 54/104 without vote [agenda item 157].

Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country,

Recalling Article 105 of the Charter of the United Nations, the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations and the responsibilities of the host country,

Recognizing that effective measures should continue to be taken by the competent authorities of the host country, in particular to prevent any acts violating the security of missions and the safety of their personnel,

Noting the spirit of cooperation and mutual understanding that has guided the deliberations of the Committee on issues affecting the United Nations community and the host country,

Noting also that the membership of the Committee has been increased by four additional Member States, and welcoming their participation in the work of the Committee,

1. Endorses the recommendations and conclusions of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country contained in paragraph 43 of its report;

2. Considers that the maintenance of appropriate conditions for the normal work of the delegations and the missions accredited to the United Nations is in the interest of the United Nations and all Member States, and requests the host country to continue to take all measures necessary to prevent any interference with the functioning of missions;

3. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts made by the host country, and hopes that the issues raised at the meetings of the Committee will continue to be resolved in a spirit of cooperation and in accordance with international law;

4. Notes that during the reporting period the travel controls previously imposed by the host country on staff of certain missions and staff members of the Secretariat of certain nationalities remained in effect, and requests the host country to consider removing such travel controls, and in this regard notes the positions of affected States, of the Secretary-General and of the host country;

5. Requests the host country to continue to take steps to resolve the problem relating to the parking of diplomatic vehicles in a fair, balanced and non-discriminatory way, with a view to responding to the growing needs of the diplomatic community, and to continue to consult with the Committee on this important issue;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to remain actively engaged in all aspects of the relations of the United Nations with the host country;

7. Requests the Committee to continue its work in conformity with General Assembly resolution 2819(XXVI) of 15 December 1971;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country".

International economic law

In 1999, legal aspects of international economic law continued to be considered by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) and by the Sixth Committee of the General Assembly.

International trade law

At its thirty-second session (Vienna, 17 May-4 June) [A/54/17], UNCITRAL considered privately financed infrastructure projects; electronic commerce; assignment in receivables financing; implementation of the 1958 Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards (New York Convention) [YUN 1958, p. 390]; case law on UNCITRAL texts; training and technical assistance; status and promotion of UNCITRAL texts; and relevant General Assembly resolutions on the Commission's work.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 76], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/54/611], adopted resolution 54/103 without vote [agenda item 156].

Report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its thirty-second session

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2205(XXI) of 17 December 1966, by which it created the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law with a mandate to further the progressive harmonization and unification of the law of international trade and in that respect to bear in mind the interests of all peoples, in particular those of developing countries, in the extensive development of international trade,

Reaffirming its conviction that the progressive harmonization and unification of international trade law, in reducing or removing legal obstacles to the flow of international trade, especially those affecting the developing countries, would contribute significantly to universal economic cooperation among all States on a basis of equality, equity and common interest and to the elimination of discrimination in international trade and, thereby, to the well-being of all peoples,

Emphasizing the need for higher priority to be given to the work of the Commission in view of the increasing value of the modernization of international trade law for global economic development and thus for the maintenance of friendly relations among States,

Stressing the value of participation by States at all levels of economic development and from different legal systems in the process of harmonizing and unifying international trade law,

Having considered the report of the Commission on the work of its thirty-second session,

Mindful of the valuable contribution to be rendered by the Commission within the framework of the United Nations Decade of International Law, in particular as regards the dissemination of international trade law,

Concerned that activities undertaken by other bodies of the United Nations system in the field of international trade law without coordination with the Commission might lead to undesirable duplication of efforts and would not be in keeping with the aim of promoting efficiency, consistency and coherence in the unification and harmonization of international trade law, as stated in its resolution 37/106 of 16 December 1982,

Stressing the importance of the further development of the Case Law on United Nations Commission on International Trade Law Texts in promoting the uniform application of the legal texts of the Commission and its value for government officials, practitioners and academics,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its thirty-second session;

2. Commends the Commission for the progress made in its work on receivables financing, electronic commerce, privately financed infrastructure projects and the legislative implementation of the Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards, done at New York on 10 June 1958;

3. Appeals to Governments that have not yet done so to reply to the questionnaire circulated by the Secretariat in relation to the legal regime governing the recognition and enforcement of foreign arbitral awards;

4. Invites States to nominate persons to work with the private foundation established to encourage assistance to the Commission from the private sector;

5. Reaffirms the mandate of the Commission, as the core legal body within the United Nations system in the field of international trade law, to coordinate legal activities in this field, and in this connection:

(a) Calls upon all bodies of the United Nations system and invites other international organizations to bear in mind the mandate of the Commission and the need to avoid duplication of effort and to promote efficiency, consistency and coherence in the unification and harmonization of international trade law;

(b) Recommends that the Commission, through its secretariat, continue to maintain close cooperation with the other international organs and organizations, including regional organizations, active in the field of international trade law;

6. Also reaffirms the importance, in particular for developing countries, of the work of the Commission concerned with training and technical assistance in the field of international trade law, such as assistance in the preparation of national legislation based on legal texts of the Commission;

7. Expresses the desirability for increased efforts by the Commission, in sponsoring seminars and symposia, to provide such training and technical assistance, and in this connection:

(a) Expresses its appreciation to the Commission for organizing seminars and briefing missions in Argentina, Azerbaijan, Bahrain, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cameroon, China, Guatemala, Mexico, Mongolia, Peru, Romania, Venezuela and Zambia;

(b) Expresses its appreciation to the Governments whose contributions allowed the seminars and briefing missions to be organized, and appeals to Governments, the relevant United Nations organs, organizations, institutions and individuals to make voluntary contributions to the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law Trust Fund for Symposia and, where appropriate, to the financing of special projects, and otherwise to assist the secretariat of the Commission in financing and organizing seminars and symposia, in particular in developing countries, and in the award of fellowships to candidates from developing countries to enable them to participate in such seminars and symposia;

8. Appeals to the United Nations Development Programme and other bodies responsible for development assistance, such as the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development, as well as to Governments in their bilateral aid programmes, to support the training and technical assistance programme of the Commission and to cooperate and coordinate their activities with those of the Commission;

9. Appeals to Governments, the relevant United Nations organs, organizations, institutions and individuals, in order to ensure full participation by all Member States in the sessions of the Commission and its working groups, to make voluntary contributions to the trust fund for travel assistance to developing countries that are members of the Commission, at their request and in consultation with the Secretary-General;

10. Decides, in order to ensure full participation by all Member States in the sessions of the Commission and its working groups, to continue, in the competent Main Committee during the fifty-fourth session of the General Assembly, its consideration of granting travel assistance to the least developed countries that are members of the Commission, at their request and in consultation with the Secretary-General;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure and enhance the effective implementation of the programme of the Commission;

12. Stresses the importance of bringing into effect the conventions emanating from the work of the Commission for the global unification and harmonization of international trade law, and to this end urges States that have not yet done so to consider signing, ratifying or acceding to those conventions.

Model law on corporate insolvency

In 1999, UNCITRAL had before it a proposal by Australia on possible future work in the area of insolvency law [A/CN.9/462/Add.1], which referred to recent regional and global financial crises and the work undertaken in international forums in response to those crises. Reports from those forums stressed the need to strengthen the international financial system in three areas—transparency, accountability and the management of international financial crises by domestic legal systems. The proposal before the Commission recommended that, in view of its universal membership, its work on cross-border insolvency and its working relations with international organizations that had expertise and interest in the law of insolvency, the Commission was an appropriate forum to consider insolvency law. The proposal urged the Commission to entrust a working group with the development of a model law on corporate insolvency to foster the adoption of national corporate insolvency regimes.

The Commission was invited by the Secretariat [A/CN.9/WG.V/WP.50] to consider devoting one session of a working group to ascertain what would be an appropriate product. The prevailing view in the Commission was that an exploratory session of a working group should be convened to prepare a feasibility proposal for consideration by the Commission at its thirty-third session. Subsequently, it was decided that the Working Group on Insolvency Law would hold that exploratory session.

The Working Group on Insolvency Law, composed of all the States members of the Commission, held its twenty-second session (Vienna, 6-17 December) and submitted its report [A/CN.9/469] to the Commission. The Group recommended that the Commission give it the mandate to prepare: a comprehensive statement of key objectives and core features for a strong insolvency, debtor-creditor regime, including consideration of out-of-court restructuring; and a legislative guide containing flexible approaches to the implementation of such objectives and features, including alternative approaches and the benefits and detriments of such approaches. A legislative guide similar to the one being prepared by the Commission for privately financed infrastructure projects would be useful and could contain model legislative provisions, where appropriate.

International commercial arbitration

Privately financed infrastructure projects

The Commission considered a March report [A/CN.9/458 & Add.1-9] by the Secretary-General containing draft chapters of the UNCITRAL legislative guide on privately financed infrastructure projects. In response to the Commission's 1998 request [YUN 1998, p. 1245], the Secretariat changed the overall structure of the guide, combined some of its chapters, revised the documents considered by UNCITRAL in 1998 and prepared initial drafts of the remaining chapters, with the assistance of outside experts and in consultation with other international organizations.

The Commission generally approved the structure of the legislative guide. Following discussion of model legislative provisions on privately financed infrastructure projects, it was felt that the Commission should continue to consider the desirability of formulating the provisions when discussing the legislative recommendations contained in the draft chapters, and in that connection identify issues for which the formulation of the provisions would increase the guide's value. It was agreed that the legislative recommendations contained in each chapter needed to be reformulated for greater uniformity. The Commission was of the view that the Secretariat, with the assistance of experts, should review recommendations in their entirety, so as to make them more coherent and consistent with one another.

Electronic commerce

The Commission considered the report of the Working Group on Electronic Commerce on the work of its thirty-third (New York, 29 June-10 July 1998) [A/CN.9/454] and thirty-fourth (Vienna, 8-19 February 1999) [A/CN.9/457] sessions. It expressed appreciation for the efforts of the Working Group in preparing draft uniform rules on electronic signatures. While it was generally agreed that significant progress was made in understanding the legal issues of electronic signatures, it was also felt that the Working Group had been faced with difficulties in building a consensus as to the legislative policy on which the uniform rules should be based. Following discussions on the Working Group's approach, the need for the uniform rules and the Group's focus on public key infrastructure models, the Commission urged the Working Group to proceed expeditiously with the completion of the draft rules.

The Commission decided that, upon completing that task, the Working Group would be expected, in the context of its general advisory function regarding electronic commerce, to examine: electronic transactional and contract law; electronic transfer of rights in tangible goods; electronic transfer of intangible rights; rights in electronic data and software; standard terms for electronic contracting; applicable law and jurisdiction; and on-line dispute settlement, as well as additional items.

Assignment in receivables financing

The Commission discussed the report of the Working Group on International Contract Practices on the work of its twenty-ninth (Vienna, 5-16 October 1998) [A/CN.9/455] and thirtieth (New York, 1-12 March 1999) [A/CN.9/456] sessions. The Working Group continued its work on preparing a uniform law on assignment in receivables financing, tentatively entitled the draft Convention on Assignment in Receivables Financing. In October 1998, the Working Group adopted the substance of the preamble and draft articles on scope of application, definitions, debtor's discharge, priority and private international law rules and final provisions. In March 1999, it adopted the title, preamble and draft articles 1 to 24. As a result, the whole text of the draft convention was adopted, with the exception of the optional substantive law priority rules.

The Commission noted that a number of specific questions remained to be addressed by the Working Group, including: whether the draft convention would apply only to assignments in a financing context or to other assignments as well; and whether certain assignments, such as those involved in securities and clearing-house transactions, should be excluded or simply dealt with differently.

The Commission expressed appreciation for the work accomplished by the Working Group and requested it to make possible the draft's circulation, along with the Group's report on its next session, to Governments for comments in time for the draft to be considered for adoption in 2000.

Implementation of the 1958 New York Convention

The Commission noted that the secretariat had received 59 replies to the questionnaire it had sent relating to the legal regime governing the recognition and enforcement of foreign awards in States parties to the 1958 Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards (New York Convention) [YUN 1958, p. 390]. The Commission called on the remaining States parties to submit their replies and requested the secretariat to prepare an analysis of the information gathered. The Commission considered a March note of the secretariat [A/CN.9/460], which presented possible topics for future work in the area of international commercial arbitration, with reference to the discussions at the fortieth commemoration of New York Convention Day, held in 1998. Other international conferences of arbitration practitioners were taken into account. The Commission, after exchanging views on its future work in the area of international commercial arbitration, decided to entrust the work to a working group and requested the secretariat to prepare the necessary studies. It was agreed that the priority items for the working group should be conciliation, requirement of written form for the arbitration agreement, enforceability of interim measures of protection and possible enforceability of an award that had been set aside in the State of origin.

Case law on UNCITRAL texts (CLOUT)

The Commission noted the work of national correspondents in collecting relevant decisions and arbitral awards and preparing case abstracts for compilation and distribution by the secretariat. However, whereas 58 jurisdictions had appointed national correspondents, another 30 had not yet done so. It was further noted that the number of States adhering to conventions or enacting legislation based on model laws enacted by the Commission had increased significantly. Strong concern was expressed as to the resultant increase of workload for the secretariat.

Training and technical assistance

UNCITRAL had before it a secretariat note [A/CN.9/461] on training and technical assistance activities that had taken place since its 1998 session. It reported that 21 seminars and briefing missions were held to explain the salient features of UNCITRAL texts and the benefits derived from their adoption by States. The Commission appealed to all States, international organizations and other interested entities to contribute to the UNCITRAL trust funds. It decided to recommend that the General Assembly request the Secretary-General to increase substantially the resources available to its secretariat.

PART FIVE

Institutional, administrative and budgetary questions

Chapter I

United Nations reform

In 1999, further progress was made in implementing the Secretary-General's programme of reform of the Organization. The streamlining of procedures in the context of his new vision of management advanced, including implementation of productivity measures, realization of efficiency savings to be deposited in the new Development Account and the adoption of a results-based approach to financial budgeting. Preparations continued for the holding of the Millennium Summit and Forum as part of the Millennium Assembly to begin on 6 September 2000. The Secretary-General proposed that the overall theme should be "The United Nations in the twenty-first century".

The General Assembly, in October, adopted further measures to make UN procurement procedures more transparent, effective and efficient and a set of procedures to assist the Secretary-General in fulfilling his oversight responsibilities in respect of the Organization's resources and staff.

Discussions continued on increasing the membership of the Security Council within the Open-ended High-level Working Group on the Question of the Equitable Representation on and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council and Other Matters Related to the Security Council. The Economic and Social Council continued its efforts to restructure and revitalize the United Nations in the economic and social fields by harmonizing and coordinating the agendas and work programmes of its functional commissions and providing them with clear policy direction in that regard. It also recommended ways to improve cooperation with the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund).

Programme of reformGeneral aspects

The Secretary-General's reform programme, first introduced in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1389], continued in 1999. In his annual report on the work of the Organization (see p. 3), he said that a new vision of management was central to his programme of reform and steady progress was being made towards the goals of streamlining procedures across a range of areas. The Management Policy Office had established an ongoing dialogue with programme managers regarding implementation of productivity measures, and efficiency savings would be deposited in a new Development Account and made available for additional projects. Advanced information technologies had improved communication with staff and encouraged discussion on reform throughout the Organization, and the establishment of a Human Resources Cyber Forum had allowed an on-line exchange of views on reform issues. Implementation of the human resources management strategy was progressing steadily, with managerial delegation, empowerment and accountability being pursued on an incremental basis. An electronically accessible performance assessment system had been put in place and the Secretariat's managerial resources were being built through an integrated series of staff development and career support programmes. The development of the results-based approach to financial budgeting continued. Upgrades to the Secretariat's information technology infrastructure had improved the Organization's ability to disseminate information internally, and the development and installation of an up-to-date integrated management information system at all duty stations was advancing. To meet the challenges of the twenty-first century, the Department of Public Information was implementing a new outreach strategy to find new ways to publicize the Organization's activities and highlight its successes.

Millennium Assembly

The Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 53/202 [YUN 1998, p. 598], by which the Assembly designated its fifty-fifth (2000) session as "The Millennium Assembly of the United Nations" and convened as part of that Assembly session a Millennium Summit, submitted a May report with later addendum [A/53/948 & Add.1] containing his proposals for the Summit's thematic framework. He reported that the Assembly President had held informal consultations to discuss the Millennium Assembly, including the Summit's thematic content. The Secretary-General benefited from those consultations to obtain the views of Member States, members of specialized agencies and observers on the overall theme and sub-topics. The views of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and the Senior Management Group at Headquarters were also sought. During informal consultations, a number of overarching themes and sub-topics were suggested. It was felt that the selected theme or themes should emphasize the relationship between development on the one hand and peace and security on the other, and thus reflect a common aspiration for the promotion of development and peace and the establishment of a new international political and economic order.

Although the intergovernmental process with respect to the thematic content of the Millennium Summit was ongoing, the Secretary-General proposed as the overall theme "The United Nations in the twenty-first century" and as sub-topics: peace and security, including disarmament; development, including poverty eradication; human rights; and strengthening the United Nations.

He concluded that the third millennium presented a timely opportunity for the only global organization, in terms of its membership and work, to identify future challenges and engage in an imaginative exercise to enhance and strengthen a unique institution. The Millennium Summit would prove to be more than a celebratory event; it would provide an opportunity for a moral recommitment to the purposes and principles laid down in the UN Charter and spur new political momentum for the international cooperation and solidarity that the peoples of the world increasingly demanded.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 June [meeting 101], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/239 [draft: A/53/L.77] without vote [agenda items 30 & 58].

United Nations reform: measures and proposals; and strengthening of the United Nations system

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/202 of 17 December 1998, by which it decided, inter alia, to designate the fifty-fifth session of the General Assembly "The Millennium Assembly of the United Nations" and to convene, as an integral part of the Millennium Assembly of the United Nations, a Millennium Summit of the United Nations for a limited number of days on dates to be decided by the General Assembly at its resumed fifty-third session,

Recalling also its resolution 53/224 of 7 April 1999, by which it decided, inter alia, that the fifty-fourth session of the General Assembly would open on Tuesday, 14 September 1999,

Mindful that a decision on the duration of the Millennium Summit is predicated on its format and contents,

1. Decides that the fifty-fourth session of the General Assembly shall close on Tuesday, 5 September 2000, in the morning, and that the fifty-fifth session of the General Assembly shall open on Tuesday, 5 September 2000, in the afternoon;

2. Also decides that the Millennium Summit shall begin on Wednesday, 6 September 2000.

Follow-up to specific measures

Implementation of pilot projects on budgetary practices and procedures

The Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly decision 53/456 [YUN 1998, p. 1251], reported in a February note [A/C.5/53/53 & Corr.1] on the impact of the implementation of pilot projects on budgetary practices and procedures, one of the elements of the UN programme of reform that called for more managerial accountability through greater delegation of authority. He said that the first pilot project on delegation of authority was initiated in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1250] at the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC). A Department of Management evaluation mission to ECLAC was scheduled for March/April and its report would be issued in May, allowing it to benefit from the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee's discussion on human resources management.

The Assembly, by decision 53/468 of 7 April, took note of the Secretary-General's note and expressed regret that the information it had requested had not been submitted. It deferred consideration of the issue until the second part of its resumed fifty-third (1999) session.

In May, the Secretary-General submitted the mission's report [A/53/947], annexed to which was a list of actions taken by ECLAC with regard to delegation of authority and their results. The team had examined implementation of the pilot project in relation to human and financial resources management and concluded that the extended delegation to ECLAC had been satisfactory and beneficial to ECLAC and the Office of Human Resources Management (OHRM). The scope of the delegation should be maintained at its current level and OHRM should continue to provide full support to maintain the efficiency of the recruitment process and strengthen the capacity of ECLAC's human resources management functions.

ECLAC management had decided not to pursue the delegation of authority regarding the application of revenues for the sale of goods/services to its accounts, as the necessary revolving fund had not yet been established and ECLAC member States continued to discuss reform issues. The requested increase of procurement authority from $200,000 to $1,000,000 was never given since it was felt that the $200,000 ceiling was adequate and the team found no instance of cases over that amount.

The Secretary-General concluded that the pilot project had been implemented without any impact on budgetary practices and procedures and within the existing regulations and rules. Close monitoring of the delegation of authority at the current level would continue.

By decision 53/474 of 8 June, the Assembly deferred consideration of the Secretary-General's report, his February note and his March 1998 note [YUN 1998, p. 1250] until its fifty-fourth session.

Managerial reform and oversight

Administrative and financial functioning

In response to resolution 45/254 A [YUN 1990, p. 1010], by which the General Assembly invited the Secretary-General to report annually on the administrative, structural and other aspects of the improvement of the efficiency of the Organization, the Secretary-General, in a February report [A/54/67], recalled that his reform programme covered those issues, as well as follow-up action under specific agenda items, such as procurement and human resources management reform, the Development Account, results-based budgeting and the Revolving Credit Fund. He therefore suggested that the Assembly discontinue the submission of the report mandated in Assembly resolution 45/254 A and agree that the issues related to the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations would be considered under specific agenda items.

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session (decision 54/465) and that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the item at that session (decision 54/462 A).

Procurement reform

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, at its resumed fifty-third session, continued consideration of the item on procurement reform. It had before it the Secretary-General's 1998 reports on procurement [YUN 1998, pp. 1255 & 1256] and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) [ibid., p. 1257].

On 7 April, the Assembly decided to resume consideration of the question of procurement reform at the second part of its resumed fifty-third (1999) session (decision 53/467 A) and, on 8 June, it deferred consideration of the item to the main part of its fifty-fourth (1999) session, with a view to concluding it (decision 53/467 B).

On 29 October [meeting 43], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/511], adopted resolution 54/14 without vote [agenda item 118].

6. Endorses the observations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions regarding the need to take steps to ensure that specifications are not deliberately tailored to predetermine the choice of supplier and that the principle of separation of responsibilities of the requisitioning and approving officers is maintained;

Exigency

(c) Procurement Division officials may undertake visits to developing countries and countries with economies in transition with a view to identifying potential vendors from those countries;

22. Notes with concern the observations of the Advisory Committee in paragraph 9 of its report that, out of the eleven countries visited by the procurement officials pursuant to paragraph 13 (c) of its resolution 52/226 A, only four were from the developing world and none were countries with economies in transition;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to make all possible efforts to facilitate the identification of vendors in developing countries and countries with economies in transition, including through the expeditious dissemination of information relating to procurement to those countries and the organization of seminars at the country and regional levels between the business community and United Nations offices in those countries;

24. Also requests the Secretary-General to direct field offices to encourage interested local vendors to apply for registration on the Procurement Division vendor roster with a view to broadening its geographical base;

VIII

Question of preferential treatment

26. Reaffirms its request to the Secretary-General to examine ways to increase opportunities for developing countries in the awarding of procurement contracts, in particular for least developed countries, African countries and countries with economies in transition, taking

XIII

Method of determining the basis of statistical reports

38. Endorses the observations of the Advisory Committee in paragraph 8 of its report, and requests the Secretary-General to indicate on what basis the country of procurement is determined and how this methodology compares with recognized international practice.

In December, the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/54/650] in response to the request in resolution 54/14 for a sharper definition of the term "exigency needs" as it pertained to procurement reform. According to the revised definition, exigency was "an urgent and compelling need, not resulting from poor planning or from concerns over the availability of funds, that would lead to serious damage, loss or injury to property or persons or to considerable additional expenditure if not addressed immediately". The Secretary-General also set out the specific circumstances under which waiver from formal procurement procedures would be permitted and identified situations in which exigency would not be an accepted rationale.

Oversight

Internal oversight

Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS)

The Secretary-General, in transmitting the report on the 1998/99 activities of the Office of Internal Oversight Services to the General Assembly (see p. 1275), noted ongoing OIOS efforts to coordinate its programme with other oversight bodies, including the Board of External Auditors and the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU). He concurred with the observations of the Under-Secretary-General for Internal Oversight Services that the independence of the Office had never been compromised during his tenure and he enjoyed the Secretary-General's complete support.

On 8 June (decision 53/474), the Assembly deferred to its fifty-fourth session consideration of the Secretary-General's 1997 report on enhancing the internal oversight mechanism in operational funds and programmes [YUN 1997, p. 855] and his notes transmitting OIOS reports for the periods 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1268], 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1398] and 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1258].

On 13 September (decision 53/496), the Assembly included the item "Report of the Secretary-General on the activities of OIOS" in the draft agenda of its fifty-fourth (1999) session.

Appointment of Under-Secretary-General. By decision 53/489 of 13 September, the Assembly included the item on the appointment of the Under-Secretary-General for Internal Oversight Services in the draft agenda of its fifty-fourth session.

In November [A/54/531], the Secretary-General informed the Assembly President that, as the term of office of the current Under-Secretary-General for OIOS was due to expire on 14 November and pending the completion of consultations regarding a possible successor, he had decided to request Hans Corell, Under-Secretary-General for Legal Affairs, the Legal Counsel, to oversee the Office. He would soon submit the name of a new appointee to the Assembly for its consideration and approval.

The Assembly, by decision 54/415 of 10 November, took note of the Secretary-General's letter.

Implementation of resolution 48/218 B. On 7 April, the Assembly decided to defer consideration of the item entitled "Review of the implementation of General Assembly resolution 48/218 B" [YUN 1994, p. 1362], by which OIOS was established, to the second part of its resumed fifty-third session (decision 53/471 A). On 8 June, it deferred consideration of the item to its fifty-fourth (1999) session (decision 53/471 B).

On 23 December [meeting 88], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/673], adopted resolution 54/244 without vote [agenda item 163].

8. Emphasizes that the approval, change and discontinuation of legislative mandates are the exclusive prerogatives of intergovernmental legislative bodies;

20. Decides to evaluate and review at its fifty-ninth session the functions and reporting procedures of the Office of Internal Oversight Services and any other matter which it deems appropriate, and to that end to include in the provisional agenda of that session an item entitled "Review of the implementation of General Assembly resolutions 48/218 B and 54/244".

Report of Secretary-General. In September, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the fifth annual report of OIOS covering its activities from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 [A/54/393].

The report stated that the number of reports issued by OIOS had steadily increased to 20 in 1998 and a similar number was envisaged for 1999. Emphasis on full implementation of its recommendations continued to be a strong focus of the Office and resulted in a continuous dialogue with its clients. More effort was being spent before recommendations were finalized to ensure their quality and usefulness to management. The implementation rate for the 6,675 recommendations issued between 1 October 1994 and 30 June 1999 was as follows: in the audit area, 6,201 recommendations were issued with a 72 per cent implementation rate; the Investigations Section had an 85 per cent implementation rate for its 324 recommendations; and of the Central Evaluation Unit's 159 recommendations, 82 per cent were implemented. During the current reporting period, the Audit and Management Consulting Division issued 744 recommendations, of which 37 per cent were implemented, while the Investigations Section issued 97 recommendations, of which 57 were implemented.

The report gave an overview of activities in the three oversight priority areas: peacekeeping; humanitarian and related activities; and procurement. It also reviewed the problem of establishing new bodies; human resources management; and information technology management, including UN efforts to prepare for the year 2000 computer problem.

In addition to expanding the audit coverage of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, OIOS conducted audits at eight field missions. Audits of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) focused on programme implementation by field offices and their implementing partners and on the UNHCR field office administration. OIOS also conducted three audits at UNHCR headquarters. In response to UNHCR's efforts to decentralize, OIOS established auditor positions in Abidjan, Cote d'Ivoire, and Nairobi, Kenya, and decided to assign a resident auditor for UNHCR operations in Kosovo, Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

As to procurement, OIOS audits confirmed that continued progress had been made in addressing the major systemic issues identified by the High-level Expert Group on Procurement Reform [YUN 1995, p. 1457]. The Office had reviewed procurement-related arbitration cases (see p. 1315), management of service and ration contracts and the use of aviation services.

Regarding the problems in establishing new bodies, OIOS reviewed the International Tribunals for the Former Yugoslavia and Rwanda and the secretariat for the Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movement of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal and made recommendations regarding their administrative and financial functioning.

In the area of human resources management, OIOS found that inefficient administrative procedures continued to impede the accomplishment of the Organization's substantive and operational objectives. It noted that future success of key reform issues related to managerial empowerment and accountability would depend largely on specific elements of the OHRM implementation plan. OIOS conducted audits of the employment of retirees, resulting in the issuance of a new administrative instruction in that regard. It also conducted audits of the United Nations Field Service, the personnel administration of the United Nations Compensation Fund and management consulting activities.

With regard to managing information technology, OIOS found that not all clients were aware of the full scope of the year 2000 computer problem or fully compliant with best practices recommended by experts to deal with the problem. It had provided the International Computing Centre with suggestions to accelerate the preparation process and minimize the impact of the problem. OIOS also recommended ways to strengthen management and accountability of the Integrated Management Information System.

As part of its oversight function, the OIOS Audit and Management Consulting Division audited assets of $308 million, income of $75 million and total expenditures of $726 million, identifying some $33.8 million in potential savings and actual savings and recoveries of $23.2 million. The 100 audit assignments opened during the reporting period resulted in 83 audit reports addressed to senior management, with 744 key recommendations on cash management; payroll/personnel; travel and transportation; accounting/budgeting/financial reporting; procurement; property management; programme/project management; information technology systems; and general administration and management.

The Investigations Section devoted its resources to the principle of accountability through recommendations aimed at holding responsible those who violated UN regulations and rules or national laws. Its activities also included proactive investigations in areas of probable risk of fraud, such as education and personnel security grants. The Section received 247 reports and suggestions, compared to 173 in the previous reporting period, a 43 per cent increase. Of the caseload, 95 were in the Americas; 54 in Europe; 41 in Africa; 11 in Asia; and 46 in the Middle East.

OIOS conducted a new inspection review of the common services of the United Nations [A/54/157] (see p. 1376). Follow-up monitoring of implementation of OIOS recommendations was carried out in the International Trade Centre and the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division [YUN 1998, p. 1035]. In-depth evaluations were undertaken of the disarmament programme [E/AC.51/1999/2] and of the electoral assistance programme [E/AC.51/1999/3 & Corr.1].

In two notes dated 30 September, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly JIU's comments on the OIOS reports on the review of common services in the United Nations

[A/54/157/Add.1] and on the review of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs [A/54/334/Add.1].

OIOS also conducted triennial reviews of the in-depth evaluations of the Departments of Peacekeeping Operations and of Public Information.

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item on the report of OIOS would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session (decision 54/465). On the same date, it decided that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the item at that session (decision 54/462 A).

External oversight mechanisms

JIU activities

The Joint Inspection Unit, in its thirty-first report to the General Assembly [A/55/34], gave an overview of its activities between 1 January and 31 December 1999, thus reverting to its previous reporting cycle. During that period, it issued reports on the following topics: review of the Administrative Committee on Coordination and its machinery [A/55/288]; an evaluation of the United Nations International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women [A/54/156-E/1999/102]; results-based budgeting: the experience of UN system organizations [A/54/287]; review of management and administration in the International Labour Office [A/54/635]; use of contractual services to support established staff resources in the International Civil Aviation Organization [JIU/REP/99/5]; private sector involvement and cooperation with the UN system [A/54/700]; policies and practices in the use of the services of private management consulting firms in the organizations of the United Nations [A/53/702].

JIU continued to pursue measures to enhance further its functioning and impact. It stated that its impact could come only from the implementation of approved recommendations; improvement in the handling of its reports by participating organizations was also important. In that regard, the Unit issued 10 notes on the subject. In addition, serious consideration should be given to providing JIU with more adequate resources so as to allow it better to discharge its mandate.

In a February note [A/53/841], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the JIU work programme for 1999 and the preliminary listing of potential reports for 2000 and beyond.

The Assembly, by decision 53/481 of 8 June, deferred consideration of the item "Joint Inspection Unit" until the main part of its fifty-fourth session.

In a 16 August report [A/54/223], the Secretary-General transmitted information on the status of implementation of recommendations contained in JIU reports on involvement of the UN system in providing and coordinating humanitarian assistance; advancement of the status of women in the UN Secretariat in an era of "human resources management" and "accountability"; advancement of women in and through the programmes of the UN system with a focus on the aftermath of the Fourth World Conference on Women; staffing of the UN peacekeeping and related missions (civilian component); investigation of the relationship between humanitarian assistance and peacekeeping operations; the military component of UN peacekeeping operations; requirements for successful implementation of the system of performance appraisal in the UN Secretariat; inspection of the application of UN recruitment, placement and promotion policies; comparison of methods of calculating equitable geographical distribution within the UN common system; communication for development programmes in the UN system; national execution of projects; UN system support for science and technology in Asia and the Pacific; and managing works of art in the United Nations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 October [meeting 43], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/507], adopted resolution 54/16 without vote [agenda item 123].

Joint Inspection Unit

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions on the Joint Inspection Unit, hereafter referred to as the Unit, in particular resolution 50/233 of 7 June 1996,

Having considered the annual reports of the Unit for the periods 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996 and 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, its programme of work for 1996-1997 and for 1997-1998, the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the note by the Unit regarding the cycle for its programme of work and the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Unit,

Reaffirming the statute of the Unit, the only independent system-wide inspection, evaluation and investigation body,

Stressing again that the impact of the Unit on the cost-effectiveness of activities within the United Nations system is a shared responsibility of the Member States, the Unit and the secretariats of the participating organizations,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the annual reports of the Unit for the periods from 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996 and 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, of its programme of work for 1996-1997, for 1997-1998, and for 1999, of the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the note by the Unit regarding the cycle for its programme of work and of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Unit;

2. Invites the Unit, while preparing its annual programme of work, to give priority to the reports requested by the participating organizations;

3. Recognizes the improvements made in the functioning of the Unit, encourages the Unit to continue its efforts in this respect, and decides to revert to the issue of the functioning of the Unit at its fifty-sixth session;

4. Endorses the system of follow-up to the reports of the Unit, as contained in annex I to the annual report of the Unit for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, and, in this connection, invites the Unit:

(a) To send reminders/notices for the implementation of recommendations to the executive heads of the participating organizations;

(b) To include in its annual reports approved recommendations that have not been implemented;

5. Requests that the system be implemented expeditiously;

6. Requests the Unit to report on experience with the system, including action taken and comments made by participating organizations, to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session.

In other action, the Assembly, by decision 54/454 of 23 December, took note of the report of JIU for the period 1 July 1997 to 31 December 1998 [A/54/34], the Unit's programme of work for 1999 and the listing of potential reports for 2000 and beyond, as well as the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Unit's recommendations, and requested the Secretary-General to further improve the quality, conciseness and clarity of the reports on implementation of the Unit's recommendations.

In resolution 54/251, section II, the Assembly, on the same date, approved the gross budget for JIU for the 2000-2001 biennium in the amount of $7,334,400. Also on the same date, in resolution 54/249, the Assembly stressed the need to ensure that JIU's independence, as the only system-wide external oversight body, was not compromised through the budgetary process and reaffirmed the Unit's statute, in particular article 20, paragraph 1. By decision 54/465 of 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item on JIU would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session.

Intergovernmental machinery

Strengthening of the UN system

Revitalization of the work of the General Assembly

In 1999, the General Assembly again took up the item on follow-up to resolution 51/241 [YUN

1997, p. 1402], by which it had adopted the recommendations of the Open-ended High-level Working Group on the Strengthening of the UN System, and considered the Secretary-General's 1998 report on the implementation of that resolution [YUN 1998, p. 1260].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 April [meeting 97], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/224 [draft: A/53/L.74] without vote [agenda item 58].

Strengthening of the United Nations system

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 51/241 of 31 July 1997, by which it adopted the recommendations of the Open-ended High-level Working Group on the Strengthening of the United Nations System as contained in the annex to the resolution,

Recalling also the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 51/241,

Recalling further its resolution 52/232 of 4 June 1998, by which it decided that the fifty-second session of the General Assembly would close on Tuesday, 8 September 1998, and that the fifty-third session of the General Assembly would open on Wednesday, 9 September 1998, and by which it decided that the International Day of Peace would continue to be observed on the opening day of the regular sessions,

Mindful that, for practical reasons, the closing of the regular sessions of the General Assembly should be on a Monday, which should not be a holiday, and the opening of the regular sessions should be on the following day, that is, on a Tuesday,

1. Decides that the fifty-third session of the General Assembly shall close on Monday, 13 September 1999, and that the fifty-fourth session of the General Assembly shall open on Tuesday, 14 September 1999;

2. Also decides to consider further during its fifty-third session the question of the opening and closing dates of future regular sessions of the General Assembly.

On 13 September, the Assembly decided to include in the draft agenda of its fifty-fourth (1999) session the item entitled "Revitalization of the work of the General Assembly" (decision 53/491).

On 23 December, by decision 54/465, the Assembly decided that the item should remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session.

Review of Security Council membership and related matters

Open-ended Working Group. The Open-ended Working Group on the Question of the Equitable Representation on and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council and Other Matters Related to the Security Council submitted a report on its work during the General Assembly's fifty-third session [A/53/47]. Between 8 February and 30 July, the Group held 53 meetings at six substantive sessions.

At the first session (8-19 February), the Working Group adopted its programme of work and began in-depth discussions on the item "Working methods of the Security Council and transparency of its work", also referred to as cluster II, and on "Expansion of the Security Council", referred to as cluster I. It had before it a conference room paper prepared by the Bureau on the relationship between the Council and other principal organs of the United Nations.

At the second session (8-12 and 22-24 March), the Working Group focused on cluster II issues and took up two additional items "Decision-making in the Security Council, including the veto" and "Periodic review of the enlarged Security Council". At the third (12-23 April) and fourth (10-14 May) sessions, the Working Group considered revised working papers on the expansion of the Council and its decision-making, including the veto, and on the working methods of the Council and transparency of its work. At its fifth session (16-25 June), in addition to the papers submitted by the Bureau, the Working Group had before it a paper submitted by Colombia on behalf of 17 other Member States. Discussions on cluster I and II items continued. The question of institutionalization, namely the form in which provisions would be finally recorded, was also considered. At the sixth session (19-30 July), the Working Group continued its deliberations on both clusters and received working papers from: the Permanent Representative of Egypt, in his capacity as Chairman of the Working Group of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries on the reform and restructuring of the Council; Algeria, transmitting the African position on equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Council; and the Republic of Korea, transmitting a letter from the 10 elected members of the Council.

Concerning cluster II issues, provisional agreement was recorded on a number of subparagraphs in the conference room paper dealing with the working methods of the Council and transparency of its work. A revised version of that paper was issued indicating areas where provisional agreement was reached and those where no agreement was reached and listing all proposed amendments.

The Working Group also considered its report to the General Assembly and recommended that consideration of the agenda item should continue at the fifty-fourth session, building upon the work of all previous sessions.

The Assembly, by decision 53/487 of 13 September, took note of the Working Group's report and decided that the Group should continue its work, taking into account the progress achieved during the Assembly's forty-eighth through fifty-third sessions, as well as views expressed during the fifty-fourth session, and submit a report, including any agreed recommendations, before the end of the fifty-fourth session.

On 23 December, by decision 54/465, the Assembly decided that the item should remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session.

Revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields

In 1999, the Economic and Social Council continued consideration of the process of restructuring and revitalization in the economic, social and related fields of the United Nations, which began in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 749], in particular the review of the functioning of its subsidiary bodies.

Implementation of General Assembly resolutions 50/227 and 52/12 B

The Secretariat, in a January note [E/1999/3], submitted to the Economic and Social Council, in response to Assembly resolution 50/227 [YUN 1996, p. 1249], a consolidated report on the outcomes of the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council in 1998. The report identified and highlighted linkages between those outcomes to assist the Council in harmonizing and coordinating agendas and work programmes of functional commissions by promoting a clear division of labour among them and by providing clear policy guidance. The report also aimed to provide a means of communication among functional commissions themselves so that they could be more aware of each other's work and to overcome the isolation in which they operated. The report noted that there was no formal mechanism by which the functional commissions communicated among themselves; whatever communication existed took place largely in an ad hoc manner, often dependent on personal initiatives by chairpersons. The report contained several recommendations for the Council's consideration.

The Council also had before it in February the Secretary-General's 1998 reports on the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields and on the joint exploratory review of cooperation between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund) [YUN 1998, p. 1269].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 2 February [meeting 2], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1999/1 [draft: E/1999/L.6 & Corr.1] without vote [agenda item 4].

Restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1996/43 of 26 July 1996, 1998/46 and 1998/47 of 31 July 1998 and 1998/49 of 16 December 1998, and General Assembly resolutions 50/227 of 24 May 1996 and 52/12 B of 19 December 1997,

4. Takes note of the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General on restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields related to the work of the Council which include elements for continued deliberations of the Council on the further implementation of General Assembly resolutions 50/227 and 52/12 B;

5. Looks forward to the annual progress report of the Secretary-General on the further implementation of General Assembly resolutions 50/227 and 52/12 B and resolution 1998/46, to be submitted to the Council at its substantive session of 1999;

II. Joint exploratory review of cooperation between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions

6. Welcomes the joint exploratory review of cooperation between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions as the first such joint review, and reaffirms that cooperation between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions should cover cooperation at all levels, including intergovernmental, country and secretariat levels, as mandated by the Assembly in resolution 50/227;

7. Also welcomes the progress made in strengthening cooperation between the United Nations and the Bret-ton Woods institutions at the intergovernmental, country and secretariat levels, and encourages further cooperation in that regard;

8. Encourages the organizations that participated in the joint exploratory review of cooperation between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions collectively to undertake a renewed effort to concert policy approaches and give new impetus to collaborative actions by the organizations and agencies of the United Nations system, in particular in the area of poverty eradication;

9. Welcomes the increased dialogue and cooperation between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions at the intergovernmental level, and decides to make further efforts to promote an open dialogue with a view to building a strategic partnership and integrated development approaches;

10. Takes note of the recommendations of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions contained in his report, and encourages the organizations to continue to pursue cooperation at the country and Secretariat levels, bearing in mind those recommendations;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a progress report on cooperation between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions at all levels;

III. Outcomes of the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council in 1998

12. Recognizes that a consolidated report on the outcomes of the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council is a useful tool with respect to supporting its coordination function;

13. Requests the functional commissions that have not yet done so to implement Assembly resolution 50/227 with regard to the provision of summaries of their resolutions or decisions for action by, and for the attention of, the Economic and Social Council;

14. Welcomes recommendations 1, 3, 4, 5 and 6 of section 1, recommendation 1 of section 2 and the recommendations contained in sections 3 to 9 of the consolidated report on the outcomes of the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council in 1998, decides to transmit the recommendations to the appropriate functional commissions for their implementation, and requests the functional commissions to report to the Council at its substantive session of 1999 on the follow-up actions taken;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a further consolidated report on the work of the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council in 1999 for consideration at its substantive session.

As requested in resolution 1999/1, a May progress report [E/1999/56] reflected the ongoing cooperation between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions (see p. 890).

Reports of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council's substantive session a June report [A/54/115-E/1999/59] on progress in the implementation of General Assembly resolutions 50/227 [YUN 1996, p. 1249] and 52/12 B [YUN 1997, p. 1392] and Council resolution 1998/46 [YUN 1998, p. 1262].

The Secretary-General made a number of recommendations for the Council's consideration concerning the Assembly; documentation; the Council and its functional commissions; inter-agency coordination; and the relationship between the United Nations and international finance and trade institutions.

In response to Council resolution 1999/1, the Secretary-General issued in June another consolidated report on the work of the functional commissions [E/1999/101 & Corr.1]. The report focused on a limited number of activities, chosen with a view to facilitating the Council's coordinating and guiding role, primarily regarding the major cross-cutting themes.

The report provided an overview of the work of the commissions in 1999, identified the main focus of their work programmes and relationship to priority topics and major system-wide events, identified thematic linkages and complementarities among the activities of the functional commissions on the basis of sessional documents and outcomes of the commissions' sessions, and described the existing modalities of addressing those linkages, such as coordination and consultation mechanisms that were established between some functional commissions, and attempted to identify remaining weaknesses of the existing coordination arrangements. The Secretary-General made a number of recommendations for the harmonization and coordination of the work programmes of the functional commissions.

The Secretary-General also noted that, following the consolidation of the economic departments of the United Nations, five of the nine functional commissions were serviced by the Department of Economic and Social Affairs, which greatly facilitated and improved communication, coordination and collaboration within the Secretariat in terms of servicing the functional commissions.

In July, the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/1999/108] on the joint meetings between the Council's Bureau and the bureaux of its functional commissions. It provided recommendations for improving not only the working methods of the functional commissions but also the coordination and collaboration among them. He suggested that the Council might wish to: reiterate that the adoption of multi-year thematic programmes for the functional commissions responsible for follow-up to major conferences could be helpful to ensure greater collaboration; and invite the commissions to re-elect one member of the outgoing bureau to the incoming bureau to allow for continuity. As to better collaboration between functional commissions, he suggested that the Council might wish to: review the modalities of participation of NGOs; encourage the commissions to enhance cooperation on cross-cutting issues; invite the commissions to hold regular bilateral meetings on issues addressed by two or more commissions; invite them to ensure that resolutions and agreed conclusions contained clear guidance on how to operationalize the Council's guidance; and request the commissions to include an item on each agenda specifically devoted to follow-up to the guidance of the Council and coordination and collaboration with other functional commissions.

11. Welcomes the holding of open and informal dialogue sessions, including by the Council, on cross-cutting themes of various functional commissions, and encourages the further development of this practice, bearing in mind the importance of providing adequate time for intergovernmental debate, as well as the need to focus on issues within their mandates;

12. Stresses the importance of ensuring continuity on the bureaux of the functional commissions, and, therefore, invites the functional commissions to consider re-electing at least one member of the outgoing bureau to the incoming bureau, without prejudice to the rules of procedure of the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council regarding the election of the bureau;

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session (decision 54/465).

Chapter II

United Nations financing and programming

In 1999, the United Nations financial outlook improved appreciably, with higher end-of-year balances and lower unpaid assessments, as well as reduced debt to Member States for troops and contingent-owned equipment. Unpaid assessments at the end of 1999 stood at $1,758 million, compared to $2,031 million a year earlier. For the first time since 1995, no cross-borrowing of funds from peacekeeping accounts at the end of the year was required. The improved situation was due to consistent payment in full of regular budget assessment and substantially higher payments from the largest contributor. A record 126 Member States had paid their budget assessments for 1999 and all previous years in full. However, the Secretary-General warned that the overall improvement in the financial situation might be upset by new special missions launched during the year.

The General Assembly, in December, adopted revised budget appropriations of $2.5 billion, or a decrease of $42 million, compared to the initial appropriations approved for the 1998-1999 biennium, and approved appropriations of $2,535,689,200 for the 2000-2001 biennium, including $1,267,844,600 for 2000. The Assembly considered the experience gained by UN agencies and organizations with results-based budgeting and the Secretary-General's proposals to improve the current format. It established the Development Account—a special multi-year account for supplementary development activities—and decided that saving to be achieved as a result of efficiency measures should be transferred to that account, with the Assembly's approval. The United Nations International Partnership Trust Fund, established in 1998, had so far programmed $190 million for development projects, with the majority of grants going to children's health.

The Committee on Contributions continued to review the methodology for preparing the scale of assessments of Member States' contributions to the UN budget, in particular the procedural aspects for considering requests for exemption under Article 19 of the Charter, as well as new proposals for arriving at the rates of assessment for non-member States. On the Committee's recommendation, the Assembly granted a number of exemptions under Article 19 and agreed to consider the issues further in 2000.

The Assembly accepted the financial reports and audited financial statements and audit opinions of the Board of Auditors for peacekeeping operations for the 1998-1999 biennium and those on the voluntary funds administered by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for the period 1 January to 31 December 1998. It reviewed the Secretary-General's reports on the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors, and the Board's report on the implementation of its recommendations by UN entities and organizations.

Financial situation

In March [A/53/514 & Add.1,2], the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly that, as at 28 February, a total of 49 Member States had paid in full their regular budget estimates for 1999, 10 more than at the comparable date in 1998, and only 37 Member States remained under the provision of Article 19 of the Charter to lose their vote in the Assembly. As at that date, $405 million in regular budget assessments had been paid, $88 million more than in 1998. However, the Secretary-General noted that, despite the positive improvements in regular budget cash balance and unpaid assessments, numerous unstable conditions still held the Organization's financial future hostage.

By decision 53/494 of 13 September, the Assembly deferred consideration of the item entitled "Improving the financial situation of the United Nations" and included it in the draft agenda of its fifty-fourth (1999) session.

As at 30 September [A/54/454], the Secretary-General reported that unpaid assessments aggregated $2,510 million, slightly more than a year earlier. Of that amount, $644 million was for the regular budget, $1,831 million for peacekeeping and $35 million for the international tribunals. The situation was due largely to the growth of peacekeeping arrears, the fact that payments by the major contributor would begin in October at the start of the Member State's new budget year and significant amounts owed by two of the next 14 principal contributors.

The regular budget contributions of $857 million received were actually lower than at the same time the previous year, or 79 per cent of the $1,084 million assessed for 1999. As at 30 September, 104 Member States had paid their regular budget contributions in full for 1999 and all prior years, showing continued improvement over previous years. In September, the Organization was in a positive cash balance position due to the payment by Japan of the $155 million balance of its regular budget contribution.

In an end-of-year review of the financial situation [A/54/454/Add.1], the Secretary-General noted that 1999 was a year of financial turnaround with higher end-of-year balances and lower unpaid assessments, as well as lower debt to Member States for troops and contingent-owned equipment. The aggregate cash balances for the regular budget, peacekeeping and the tribunals combined increased to a high of $1,093 million from $736 million in 1998. Unpaid assessments stood at $1,758 million, down from $2,031 million a year earlier. At the end of the year, 126 Member States had paid their regular budget assessment for 1999 and all earlier years in full, 9 more than in 1998. The consistent payment in full of regular budget assessment was the prime measure of the Organization's financial stability. The largest contributor also made substantially higher payments totalling $452 million. As a result, for the first time since 1995, no cross-borrowing of funds from peacekeeping accounts was needed at year's end.

Amounts due to Member States for troops and contingent-owned equipment totalled $800 million, significantly lower than during the previous three years. Unpaid peacekeeping assessments aggregated $1,482 million, a decrease of $112 million from 1998, while those of the international tribunals were over $32 million or 20 per cent of the 1999 assessment level.

The Secretary-General said that there was a danger that the overall improvement in the financial situation might be upset by the new special challenges, such as missions to the Kosovo province of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) (see p. 363) and East Timor (see p. 295). However, for 1999 as a whole, after a period of several years, a degree of financial stability had returned for activities funded from the regular budget, though that stability was less for activities funded by peacekeeping assessments.

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item on improving the financial situation of the United Nations would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session (decision 54/465), and that the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee should continue to consider it at that session (decision 54/462 A).

UN budget

Results-based budgeting

JIU report. As requested in General Assembly resolution 53/205 [YUN 1998, p. 1273], the Secretary-General transmitted in August [A/54/287] the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) report entitled "Results-based budgeting: the experience of United Nations system organizations".

JIU found that the experience of other UN system organizations with results-based budgeting was mixed and indicated problems or difficulties that required special attention in considering the Secretary-General's proposal to apply it to the United Nations. However, overall, there was a growing common understanding among UN system organizations of, and support for, results-based budgeting techniques as a tool for achieving increased budget transparency and accountability.

JIU recommended that the Glossary of financial and budgetary terms should be reviewed and commented on by UN system organizations to resolve the problem of the lack of agreed definitions of key results-based budgeting terms; an open-ended working group of the Fifth Committee should be established; the United Nations Institute for Training and Research should conduct seminars and workshops to help familiarize staff and Member States' representatives with results-based budgeting; the Secretary-General's reports should include a comprehensive assessment of changes required to ensure UN readiness in areas such as regulations, procedures, a management information system and training; and the Secretary-General should submit recommendations on the matter along with the comments of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) and the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC).

The Secretary-General's comments on the JIU report were transmitted to the Assembly in a November note [A/54/287/Add.1].

Reports of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, also in response to Assembly resolution 53/205, submitted an October report on results-based budgeting [A/54/456], which further described the proposed format by highlighting the expected improvements over the current format and providing further justification for the proposals.

According to the report, results-based budgeting would build on existing processes and consolidate various elements of the programming, planning, budgeting, monitoring and evaluation cycle that had hitherto been applied in relative isolation from each other. A results-based budget format differed from the current format in its emphasis on expected accomplishments and would serve as a policy tool for Member States and as a basis for determining the effectiveness and continuing relevance of UN work. The accountability of programme managers would increase by focusing on objectives, expected accomplishments and performance indicators at the beginning of the programme cycle and during budget formulation. The programme budget could be used to its full potential to serve as a medium of communication between Member States and the Secretariat on the purpose and direction of the Organization.

The Secretary-General recommended further development of the performance indicators for use in all substantive and support programmes and that they be included in all sections of the 2002-2003 proposed programme budget, in addition to statements of objectives and expected accomplishments in a single coherent framework. He also recommended the preparation of a prototype report on accomplishments based on the prototype fascicles (see below) for consideration in 2001, and the further development of mechanisms and skills to successfully implement performance measurement as a basis for improved programme monitoring and evaluation within the existing programme budget cycle.

The Secretary-General also submitted in subsequent addenda, for illustrative purposes only, prototype fascicles in results-based budget format in five sections of the 2000-2001 budget: section 3, Political affairs [A/54/456/Add.1]; section 11A, Trade and development [A/54/456/Add.2]; section 15, International drug control [A/54/456/Add.3]; section 18, Economic development in Europe [A/54/456/Add.4]; and section 27B, Office of Programme Planning, Budget and Accounts [A/54/456/Add.5].

The report of the Secretary-General sought the endorsement of the Assembly to a gradual approach to the introduction of results-based budgeting in the programme planning, budgeting, monitoring and evaluation cycle. The Secretary-General proposed the inclusion of performance indicators in the programme budget for 2002-2003, in addition to statements of objectives and expected accomplishments, while maintaining the current level of detail on post and non-post requirements.

Further steps envisaged were: measurement of the performance of the five budget sections covered in the prototype fascicles against a limited number of expected accomplishments, using selected performance indicators at the end of the 2000-2001 biennium; and other internal measures designed to increase the knowledge of staff and the development of mechanisms and procedures that would support a gradual implementation of performance measurement as a basis for improved programme monitoring and evaluation.

Budget for 1998-1999

Final appropriations

In 1999, the General Assembly adopted final budget appropriations for the 1998-1999 biennium, decreasing the amount of $2,488.3 million approved in 1998 by resolution 53/215 [YUN 1998, p. 1275] by $41.6 million. It reduced approved income estimates by $6.3 million to $356.4 million.

Report of Secretary-General. In the second performance report [A/54/631 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General provided estimates of the anticipated final levels of expenditure and income for the 1998-1999 biennium, based on actual expenditures for the first 20 months and projected requirements for the last four months, as well as changes in inflation and exchange rates and cost-of-living adjustments. The estimates proposed represented a decrease of $35.3 million, or 1.6 per cent, compared with the revised appropriations and estimates of income approved in 1998. The net reduced requirement reflected an increase of $4.8 million for commitments entered into under the provisions of resolution 52/223 [YUN 1997, p. 1438] on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses, and commitments arising from Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/293 on the situation of human rights in East Timor (see p. 709). That was offset by a decrease of $40.1 million, attributable to changes in exchange rate assumptions ($17.2 million), changes in inflation ($2 million), variations in posts and common staff costs ($12.3 million) and adjustments to non-post expenditures, based on actual anticipated requirements ($14.9 million) and a decrease in income of $6.3 million. Proposed expenditure amounted to $2,488.3 million, or a decrease of $41.6 million or 1.6 per cent, compared with the revised appropriations and estimates of income approved in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1275]. Income was estimated at $2,131.9 million, or a decrease of $6.3 million.

In view of the Organization's chronic cash shortage, the Secretary-General sought the Assembly's concurrence to suspend financial regulations 4.3, 4.4 and 5.2 (d) in respect of surpluses arising at the end of the financial period.

ACABQ report. In its comments on the Secretary-General's report [A/54/7/Add.7], ACABQ observed that the net reduced requirement of $35.3 million for the biennium represented only a theoretical surplus and requested the Secretary-

General to deliver a clear statement of the current cash flow situation to the Fifth Committee, as well as a complete analysis of the impact of the suspension of provisions of the financial regulations in respect of surpluses on all Member States, particularly on those that had paid their assessments in full and on time.

Regarding additional requirements for commitments relating to the maintenance of peace and security, the Committee recommended that the Secretary-General's authority to commit without its prior concurrence be increased from $5 million to $8 million (see p. 1308). ACABQ also reiterated its recommendation that future performance reports indicate the amount of unliquidated obligations included in estimated expenditures for the biennium.

ACABQ requested that information on the reasons for the persistent high vacancy rate, including the impact of recruitment freezes, be provided to the Fifth Committee and sought assurances that vacancies were not being used to achieve budgetary savings. It pointed out that, with proper planning and streamlining of personnel practices and procedures, the vacancy situation could be improved. Concerning the lower than anticipated vacancy rate as a result of reductions in requirements for temporary assistance in some budget sections, ACABQ requested the Secretariat to provide a more detailed analysis to the Fifth Committee of the $7 million savings under section 1B, General Assembly affairs, to allow it to determine whether the savings had affected the delivery of conference services.

It noted that additional requirements of $4.3 million at the UN Office at Vienna were related to reduced reimbursement from translation and associated reproduction and distribution requirements of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). It was concerned about the underutilization of the conference-servicing capacity and requested that the issue be analysed with a view to increasing efficiency and the results reported to the Assembly as soon as possible (see p. 1364).

Noting that the report did not identify any savings from efficiency measures that could be transferred to the Development Account (see p. 1305), ACABQ requested the Secretary-General to provide clarification to the Fifth Committee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/508/Add.1], adopted resolutions 54/247 A and B without vote [agenda item 119].

On 23 December, by decision 54/465, the Assembly decided that the item would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session.

Budget for 2000-2001

The programme budget for the 2000-2001 biennium [A/54/6/Rev.1 & Add.1] was the second to fall within the medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001. Introducing the programme budget before the Fifth Committee, the Secretary-General said that the level of the budget he was proposing, at $2,535 million, was virtually the same, in real terms, as the one for the preceding biennium. It contained small but important increases in certain priority areas, including increases for internal oversight and capital expenditures, as well as for special political missions. To accommodate the increases, savings would be achieved in administration and common support services and through efficiency measures. In response to the priorities established by Member States, he was also proposing that 500 posts should be deployed among the various programmes and subprogrammes. The budget also reflected the ongoing reform effort, including the first set of projects from the 1998-1999 biennium financed under the Development Account. The proposed budget represented the first step in the shift towards results-based budgeting (see p. 1284) and included statements of expected accomplishments for all substantive areas and a separate proposal to build on that approach and complete the shift. In formulating his proposals, the Secretary-General said that he had taken into account that the United Nations had had absolutely no increase in its budget for five years, even in nominal terms, and had cut spending by $350 million since 1994. However, there came a point at which further cuts would severely compromise its ability to deliver the services Member States had mandated. The Organization's agenda was long and demands continued to rise; therefore, the proposed budget was a reasonable and rational one.

CPC considered the proposed programme budget at its 1999 session [A/54/16] and noted the Secretary-General's efforts to meet the new requirements of the revised Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation. CPC recommended that all sections of future proposed programme budgets be presented in the same standard format, in accordance with the Regulations and Rules and relevant resolutions. It also recommended that the Assembly approve the narratives of the majority of the budget sections and review the programme narrative for section 4, Disarmament. CPC was not in a position to comment on the programme narratives of section 11B, International Trade Centre UNCTAD/ World Trade Organization, as a result of the new administrative arrangements approved by the General Assembly in decision 53/411 B [YUN 1998, p. 888]. With regard to the programme narratives for section 12, Environment; section 13, Human settlements; and section 27C, Office of Human Resources Management, the Committee recommended that the Assembly request the Secretary-General to reformulate the narratives to conform with the standard presentation of the other sections of the proposed programme budget and resubmit them at its fifty-fourth (1999) session. Regarding section 33, Development Account, the Committee noted that the programme narrative for the utilization of the amount approved for the Account had not been submitted, and recommended that the Assembly request the Secretary-General to submit proposals for utilization of the Account to the fifty-fourth session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/691], adopted resolution 54/249 without vote [agenda item 121].

Questions relating to the proposed programme budget for the biennium 2000-2001

I

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 41/213 of 19 December 1986 and 42/211 of 21 December 1987,

Recalling its resolution 53/206 of 18 December 1998, in which it invited the Secretary-General to prepare the budget outline for the biennium 2000-2001 on the basis of 2,545 million United States dollars,

Recalling also its resolution 52/220 of 22 December 1997,

Recalling further its resolutions 51/219 of 18 December 1996 and 53/207 of 18 December 1998,

Recalling the relevant paragraphs of resolutions 52/12 A and 52/12 B of 12 November and 19 December 1997, respectively, as well as resolutions 52/235 of 26 June 1998, 53/220 A of 7 April 1999, 53/220 B of 8 June 1999 and 54/15 of 29 October 1999, relating to the Development Account,

Recalling also paragraph 2 (a) of its resolution 1798(XVII) of 11 December 1962,

Reaffirming the respective mandates of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the Committee for Programme and Coordination in the consideration of the proposed programme budget,

Reaffirming also the requirement of all Member States to fulfil their financial obligations as set out in the Charter of the United Nations in full, on time and without conditions,

Recognizing the detrimental effect of the withholding of assessed contributions on the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations,

Recognizing also that late payments of assessed contributions adversely affect the financial situation of the Organization,

Stressing that the established procedures for the formulation, implementation and approval of the programme budget must be strictly followed,

Having considered the proposed programme budget for the biennium 2000-2001 and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the report of the Committee for Programme and Coordination on the work of the thirty-ninth session,

1. Reaffirms that the Fifth Committee is the appropriate Main Committee of the General Assembly entrusted with responsibilities for administrative and budgetary matters;

2. Reaffirms also rule 153 of its rules of procedure;

3. Reaffirms further the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation, and the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations;

4. Decides that no changes to the budget methodology, to established budgetary procedures and practices or to the financial regulations may be implemented without prior review and approval by the General Assembly, in accordance with established budgetary procedures;

5. Reaffirms the role of the General Assembly in carrying out a thorough analysis and approval of posts and financial resources, as well as of human resources policies, with a view to ensuring full implementation of all mandated programmes and activities and the implementation of policies in this regard;

6. Welcomes the timely submission of the proposed programme budget and the continued efforts made by the Secretary-General to improve the format of the proposed programme budget;

7. Notes with concern the late submissions on section 11B, International Trade Centre (UNCTAD/WTO), and section 33, Development Account;

8. Commends the efforts and initiatives of the Secretary-General aimed at reforming the United Nations;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that, in the implementation of approved reform proposals, there should be no adverse impact on the fulfilment of legislative mandates;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the proposals contained in the individual sections of future proposed programme budgets include more precise information on the outputs, activities, objectives and expected accomplishments of the various departments, on the basis of which the General Assembly may later evaluate budget performance;

11. Recognizes that the General Assembly has not yet approved the proposal of the Secretary-General on results-based budgeting;

12. Takes note of the fact that the concepts of "expected accomplishments", "outputs", "objectives" and "activities" are not exclusively related to and should not be confused with the concept of "results-based budgeting";

13. Decides that any development related to results-based budgeting should be undertaken only with the prior approval of the General Assembly;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to present the budget outline and the proposed programme budget to the General Assembly strictly in accordance with existing budgetary procedure;

15. Emphasizes that resources proposed by the Secretary-General should be commensurate with all mandated programmes and activities in order to ensure their full and effective implementation;

16. Renews its appeal to Member States to demonstrate their commitment to the United Nations by, inter alia, meeting their financial obligations in full, on time and without conditions, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations;

17. Reiterates that core functions of the United Nations, as a principle, should be financed through the regular budget and apportioned among Member States, and notes with concern the excessive reliance on extrabudgetary resources in some sections;

18. Notes with concern the current and projected decreasing trend in extrabudgetary resources, particularly for the United Nations funds and programmes;

19. Expresses concern that the decrease in extrabudgetary resources in some sections of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 2000-2001 could have an adverse impact on the effective implementation of programmes and activities, especially those programmes that are still heavily funded primarily through such resources;

It was also decided that the role of the Office of Human Resources Management and its responsibilities and authority in establishing human resources policies, in the monitoring and approval of the recruitment and placement of staff, as well as in ensuring the full implementation of human resources mandates set by the General Assembly, among its other functions, should be retained and reinforced."

Appropriations

In his proposed programme budget for the 2000-2001 biennium [A/54/6/Rev.1], the Secretary-General proposed expenditures amounting to $2,655 million and income totalling $43.5 million, as well as staff assessment income of $326.9 million, an increase of $7.7 million over estimates for 1998-1999, resulting in a net estimate of $2,284 million. The proposed budget represented a 0.2 per cent real growth before recosting from the revised 1998-1999 budget.

Extrabudgetary resources for the 2000-2001 biennium were estimated at $3,659,782,700, comprising $217,001,100 for support services, $175,887,900 for substantive services and $3,266,893,700 for operational activities.

ACABQ, in its first report on the 2000-2001 proposed programme budget [A/54/7], concluded that there was no basis to change the overall level of resources proposed by the Secretary-General. It pointed out that the last two bienniums had been ones of budget stringency and restraint, with the cost of additional activities having to be absorbed and with reductions in posts. Fortuitous gains in currency and low inflation had helped offset the effects of those developments, but that might not always be the case, and steps were being taken to significantly reduce vacancies. ACABQ cautioned that continued deviations from the full application of Assembly resolution 41/213 [YUN 1996, p. 1024] in all its aspects would call into serious question the validity of the budgetary process.

In November [A/54/623], the Secretary-General recommended revised estimates to reflect the latest data on actual inflation experience, the outcome of salary surveys and the movement of post adjustment, and the effect of the evolution of operational rates of exchange on the proposed programme budget for the 2000-2001 biennium. The recosted level of expenditures amounted to $2,584.6 million and income of $365.7 million. The figures were revised again in December [A/54/623/Add.1 & Corr.1], due to the significant change in the performance of a number of currencies against the United States dollar. Revised proposed expenditure amounted to $2,561.9 million and income to $363.8 million.

ACABQ, in its tenth report on the programme budget [A/54/7/Add.9], found no technical basis for objecting to the Secretary-General's revised estimates and transmitted them to the Fifth Committee.

The Fifth Committee recommended approval of a gross appropriation of $2,535,689,200 and income estimate (other than income derived from staff assessment) of $361,298,900. The net expenditure for the 2000-2001 biennium was estimated at $2,174,390,300 [A/54/691].

On 23 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Com-

Other questions related to the 2000-2001 programme budget

Working Capital Fund

In December, the General Assembly established the Working Capital Fund for the 2000-2001 biennium at $100 million, the same level as during 1998-1999. As in the past, the Fund was to be used to finance appropriations pending the receipt of assessed contributions, to pay for unforeseen and extraordinary expenses, as well as for miscellaneous and self-liquidating purchases and advance insurance premiums, and to enable the Tax Equalization Fund to meet current commitments pending the accumulation of credits.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/691], adopted resolution 54/253 without vote [agenda item 121].

Working Capital Fund for the biennium 2000-2001

The General Assembly

Resolves that:

1. The Working Capital Fund shall be established for the biennium 2000-2001 in the amount of 100 million United States dollars;

2. Member States shall make advances to the Working Capital Fund in accordance with the scale adopted by the General Assembly for contributions of Member States to the budget for the year 2000;

3. There shall be set off against this allocation of advances:

(a) Credits to Member States resulting from transfers made in 1959 and 1960 from the surplus account to the Working Capital Fund in an adjusted amount of 1,025,092 dollars;

(b) Cash advances paid by Member States to the Working Capital Fund for the biennium 1998-1999 in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/224 of 22 December 1997;

4. Should the credits and advances paid by any Member State to the Working Capital Fund for the biennium 1998-1999 exceed the amount of that Member State's advance under the provisions of paragraph 2 above, the excess shall be set off against the amount of the contributions payable by the Member State in respect of the biennium 2000-2001;

5. The Secretary-General is authorized to advance from the Working Capital Fund:

(a) Such sums as may be necessary to finance budgetary appropriations pending the receipt of contributions; sums so advanced shall be reimbursed as soon as receipts from contributions are available for the purpose;

(b) Such sums as may be necessary to finance commitments that may be duly authorized under the provisions of the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly, in particular resolution 54/252 of 23 December 1999 relating to unforeseen and extraordinary expenses; the Secretary-General shall make provision in the budget estimates for reimbursing the Working Capital Fund;

(c) Such sums as may be necessary to continue the revolving fund to finance miscellaneous self-liquidating purchases and activities which, together with net sums outstanding for the same purpose, do not exceed 200,000 dollars; advances in excess of the total of 200,000 dollars may be made with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

(d) With the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee, such sums as may be required to finance payments of advance insurance premiums where the period of insurance extends beyond the end of the biennium in which payment is made; the Secretary-General shall make provision in the budget estimates of each biennium, during the life of the related policies, to cover the charges applicable to each biennium;

(e) Such sums as may be necessary to enable the Tax Equalization Fund to meet current commitments pending the accumulation of credits; such advances shall be repaid as soon as credits are available in the Tax Equalization Fund;

6. Should the provision in paragraph 1 above prove inadequate to meet the purposes normally related to the Working Capital Fund, the Secretary-General is authorized to utilize, in the biennium 2000-2001, cash from special funds and accounts in his custody, under the conditions approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 1341 (XIII) of 13 December 1958, or the proceeds of loans authorized by the Assembly.

Contingency fund

The contingency fund, created to accommodate additional expenditures relating to each biennium that were derived from legislative mandates not provided for in the proposed programme budget, was established by General Assembly resolution 41/213 [YUN 1986, p. 1024].

The Fifth Committee considered the Secretary-General's December report [A/C.5/54/46] containing a consolidated statement of all programme budget implications and revised estimates subject to the criteria for the use of the contingency fund, as set out in Assembly resolution 42/211 [YUN 1987, p. 1098]. The amount of $2,737,300 was within the available balance of the fund, which, as at December 1998, stood at $15,307,800.

On 23 December, the Assembly, in resolution 54/251, section VI, noted that a balance of $16,362,700 remained in the contingency fund.

Follow-up to General Assembly resolutions 50/227 and 52/12 B

Development Account

The Fifth Committee and the General Assembly continued their review of the Secretary-General's proposals for the utilization of the development dividend [YUN 1998, p. 1278], by which savings from budget efficiencies in the regular programme budget would be transferred to an account for development activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (April)

On 7 April [meetings 97], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/485/Add.2], adopted resolution 53/220 A without vote [agenda item 113].

Development Account

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/12 B of 19 December 1997, 52/220 and 52/221 A of 22 December 1997 and 52/235 of 26 June 1998,

Reaffirming its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986,

Reaffirming also the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations and the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation,

Noting the proposals made by the Secretary-General for the utilization of the development dividend,

Stressing the need to use the Development Account for projects related to the development priorities of the medium-term plan,

1. Approves, from the eight proposals made in the report of the Secretary-General, proposals A, B, D and E below:

- A. Promotion of electronic commerce (United Nations Conference on Trade and Development);
- B. Capacity-building in economic and social policy analysis in Africa through the networking of expertise (Economic Commission for Africa);
- D. Computer and telecommunication system for international and national drug control (United Nations International Drug Control Programme);
- E. Capacity-building and networking for the implementation of the Habitat Agenda in least developed countries (United Nations Centre for Human Settlements), on an ad hoc and one-time basis only, without setting a precedent and without prejudicing the outcome of its consideration of the sustainability and establishment of the mechanism and modalities of the Development Account;

2. Emphasizes that, in the implementation of those proposals, emphasis should be placed on the promotion of development activities, and that the implementation should demonstrate the benefits accruing in building national capacities, particularly in developing countries and also in countries with economies in transition;

3. Stresses that, in the implementation of the proposals, particular attention should be given to the utilization of technical, human and other resources available in the developing countries;

4. Decides that the proposals should be reformulated and implemented in accordance with the relevant Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations and the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation, as revised by the General Assembly in its resolution 53/207 of 18 December 1998;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to reformulate the other proposals contained in his report following criteria according to which projects should:

- (a) Have multiplier effects and promote capacity-building primarily in developing countries;
- (b) Promote regional and interregional economic and technical cooperation among the developing countries;
- (c) Use available human and technical resources from the developing regions; and to submit those reformulated proposals to the General Assembly at the second part of its resumed fifty-third session;

6. Decides to keep the implementation of the proposals under review, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly on the utilization of the development dividend, in accordance with relevant regulations and rules;

7. Also decides to continue consideration of the sustainability and establishment of the mechanism and modalities of the Development Account during the resumed fifty-third session.

Report of Secretary-General (April). As requested in resolution 53/220 A, the Secretary-General, in an April report [A/53/374/Add.1], submitted his reformulated proposals for the utilization of the Development Account. With the exception of the project relating to access by developing countries and countries with economies in transition to the Mercure satellite telecommunications system for interconnectivity in environmental information and data, which was being reconsidered by the United Nations Environment Programme (see p. 979), the other reformulated projects focused on helping to transmit data, information and learned experiences back to programme countries through a network of developing country experts in various areas. The proposal would also bring together policy makers and provide the basis for long-term interaction through the use of information networks, training, enhancement of skills and pooling of national and regional expertise. Resources required for the seven reformulated projects totalled $12,945,000.

Report of Secretary-General (May). In a May report [A/53/945], the Secretary-General clarified the modalities for operating the Development Account. The modalities comprised three distinct elements: the identification and transfer of resources released due to productivity gains to the Development Account budget section; the operation of the Development Account budget section; and operation of the special account for supplementary development activities. Recommendations for transfers of verifiable and sustainable gains achieved in any biennium would be reviewed and approved by the Assembly, and the section transfers would be reflected in the final appropriations for the biennium concerned.

During the biennium, transfers would be made at two points: after the initial appropriation of the programme budget, which would contain approved funds for supplementary development activities, and after the Assembly's approval, following consideration of the second performance report. At that time, additional charges to the Development Account budget section would be made as transfers to the multi-year special account.

A key element of the arrangement would be the special account for supplementary development activities established by the Assembly. During the second year of the biennium, the Secretary-General would prepare proposals for the subsequent biennium. The proposals would be considered by CPC, ACABQ and the Fifth Committee, prior to submission to the Assembly.

Annexed to the report were the proposed time-tables for approving expenditure from the special account for supplementary development, estimated at $13.065 million for the 2000-2001 budget and an initial estimate of $40 million for 2002-2003; and the presentation format for the consideration of projects to be funded from that account.

ACABQ consideration (May). ACABQ, in its comments on the Secretary-General's report [A/53/7/Add.12], recommended that the Assembly approve the Secretary-General's proposals. It indicated that the amount of $40 million projected for 2002-2003 should be $53 million, to include the $13 million already appropriated for the 2001-2002 biennium. ACABQ believed that an interim report should be provided at the end of the first biennium on the status of projected productivity gains.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (June)

On 8 June [meeting 101], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/485/Add.4], adopted resolution 53/220 B without vote [agenda item 113].

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the utilization of the development dividend and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Noting the reformulations made by the Secretary-General for proposals A, B, D, E, F, G and H,

Noting also that proposal C is being reconsidered for subsequent submission to the General Assembly,

1. Decides that the title of proposal H should be changed to "Activities for capacity-building in developing countries in pursuance of the objectives of Agenda 21, the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, and the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action";

2. Approves the following reformulated proposals contained in the report of the Secretary-General, on an ad hoc and one-time basis only, without setting a precedent and without prejudicing the outcome of its consideration of the sustainability and establishment of the mechanism and modalities of the Development Account:

- F. On-line network of regional institutions for capacity-building in public administration and finance (Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat);
 - G. Research network for economic policy analysis (Department of Economic and Social Affairs);

Activities for capacity-building in developing countries in pursuance of the objectives of Agenda 21, the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, and the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action (Department of Economic and Social Affairs);
3. Reiterates that all projects shall be fully implemented in accordance with the provisions of paragraphs 2 and 3 of General Assembly resolution 53/220 A and the relevant Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations and the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation, as revised by the Assembly in its resolution 53/207 of 18 December 1998;
4. Decides that the anticipated duration of the approved projects contained in the report of the Secretary-General shall not be used as a precedent for setting time limits for the programmes of the regular budget;
5. Decides also to keep the implementation of the projects under review, and requests the Secretary-General to submit reports to the General Assembly in accordance with relevant regulations and rules.

On the same date, the Assembly, by decision 53/476, deferred consideration of the question of modalities for operating the Development Account until the main part of its fifty-fourth (1999) session, with a view to finalizing it prior to its consideration of the proposed programme budget for the 2000-2001 biennium.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (October)

On 29 October [meeting 43], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/508], adopted resolution 54/15 without vote [agenda item 119].

Reaffirming its resolutions 52/235 of 26 June 1998, 53/220 A of 7 April 1999 and 53/220 B of 8 June 1999,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the Development Account and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Reaffirming its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986,

1. Decides to establish a special multi-year account for supplementary development activities based on the priority objectives of the programmes of the approved medium-term plan;

2. Emphasizes that the efficiency measures and the transfer of savings therefrom should not lead to a process of budgetary reduction and should not result in the involuntary separation of staff;

3. Also emphasizes that the efficiency measures and the redeployment of savings to the Development Account should not adversely affect the full implementation of all mandated programmes and activities;

4. Decides that savings to be achieved as a result of the efficiency measures can be identified in the context of budget performance reports and shall be transferred to the Development Account section with the prior approval of the General Assembly;

5. Also decides that the savings transferred to the Development Account section in accordance with paragraph 4 above shall form the maintenance base for that section in future proposed programme budgets;

6. Reaffirms that the Development Account should be operated strictly in accordance with the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations and the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that all budget proposals are fully commensurate with the related mandates in order to ensure their full and effective implementation;

8. Decides to keep the implementation of the Development Account under review, and requests the Secretary-General to submit reports in accordance with the relevant regulations and rules.

Report of Secretary-General (November). In November [A/C.5/54/37], the Secretary-General submitted 16 new projects at an estimated cost of $13,185,000. The Secretary-General proposed financing those projects from the balance of $120,000 remaining from the amount appropriated under section 34 (Development Account) of the 1998-1999 programme budget and included under section 33 of the proposed programme budget for 2000-2001.

ACABQ consideration (December). ACABQ, in December [A/54/7/Add.8], recommended that the Assembly approve the Secretary-General's proposals and that, in future, a summary of project proposals should be submitted to CPC for comment on their programmatic aspects, to ACABQ for its comments on the financial aspects and to the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee for its comments on the substance of the projects.

Revised estimates resulting from Economic and Social Council decisions

In November [A/54/443], the Secretary-General submitted a request for an additional appropriation totalling $440,300 above the resources proposed under section 11A (Trade and development) and section 22 (Human rights) of the proposed 2000-2001 programme budget, resulting from action taken by the Economic and Social Council during its 1999 sessions. That provision would represent a charge against the contingency fund (see p. 1305).

ACABQ in October [A/54/7/Add.2], recommended that the Fifth Committee take note of the estimate of $440,300, on the understanding that such appropriations as might be necessary would be requested by the Secretary-General in the context of a consolidated statement of programme budget implications and revised estimates to be submitted to the General Assembly.

In a December addendum [A/54/443/Add.1], the Secretary-General proposed an additional provision of $149,800 under section 18 (Economic development in Europe) of the proposed 2000-2001 programme budget to be charged against the contingency fund.

The Assembly, in resolution 54/251, section IV, of 23 December, took note of the revised estimates resulting from Economic and Social Council resolutions and decisions.

Estimates relating to special political missions

On 7 December [A/C.5/54/39], the Secretary-General submitted estimated requirements of $9,964,500 for eight political missions, resulting from action taken by the Security Council. That amount would be charged against a provision of $86,200,000 for special political missions included in section 3 (Political affairs) of the 2000-2001 proposed programme budget by the General Assembly in resolution 53/206 [YUN 1998, p. 1284].

ACABQ, in a 13 December report [A/54/7/Add.10], recommended that the Assembly approve the Secretary-General's proposal. It requested that future reports should include a consolidated table of requirements by object of expenditure, including an indication of the decrease or increase with relation to the previous biennium, and information on those missions previously in place and those terminated since the last report. The Secretary-General should monitor the continuation of special missions and, if a mission was likely to go beyond the biennium, requirements should be included in the initial estimates for the next biennium.

The Secretary-General, on 16 December [A/C.5/54/45], reported that, after recosting, the provision of $86,200,000 proposed in the 2000-2001 programme budget for special political missions was equivalent to $90,387,200. Charges against that sum, approved by the Assembly and the Council in 1999, totalled $55,363,100, leaving an unallocated balance of $35,024,100. Annexed to the Secretary-General's note was a breakdown of the utilization of the provision, including the $9,964,500 resulting from estimates in respect of matters of which the Council was seized.

The Assembly, in resolution 54/251, section VIII, noted that the current utilization of the provision for special political missions amounted to $55,363,100, with an unallocated balance of $35,024,100 remaining against the provision of $90,387,200 for special political missions.

Subvention for UNIDIR

In October [A/C.5/54/26], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly for approval the recommendation of the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR) for a subvention of $213,000 from the UN regular budget to the Institute's 2000 work programme.

The Assembly approved the subvention on 23 December in resolution 54/251, section I.

Unforeseen and extraordinary expenses

Under very specific circumstances, the Secretary-General was authorized by the General Assembly to enter into commitments for activities of an urgent nature, without reverting to the Assembly for approval.

ACABQ in its first report on the programme budget for the 2000-2001 biennium [A/54/7], said that it was time to review the levels specified in Assembly resolutions on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses and requested the Secretary-General to submit to the Assembly's fifty-fourth (1999) session an analysis of those levels, together with proposals for their adjustment.

In response to that request, the Secretary-General, in November [A/C.5/54/29], recommended that the authority to commit without prior concurrence of ACABQ be increased from $5 million to $10 million for activities relating to peace and security. Furthermore, if a decision of the Security Council resulted in the need for the Secretary-General to enter into commitments relating to the maintenance of peace and security, the Secretary-General should be authorized to enter into commitments, with ACABQ's prior concurrence, up to $25 million, in excess of which the Assembly would be convened to consider the matter. He also recommended a revision of commitments certified by the President of the International Court of Justice relating to: the designation of ad hoc judges from $300,000 to $330,000; payment of pensions and travel and removal expenses of retiring judges, and travel and removal expenses and installation grant of members of the Court from $180,000 to $410,000; and holding of sessions away from The Hague from $50,000 to $25,000.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/691], adopted resolution 54/252 without vote [agenda item 121].

Unforeseen and extraordinary expenses for the biennium 2000-2001

The General Assembly

1. Authorizes the Secretary-General, with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and subject to the Financial Regulations of the United Nations and the provisions of paragraph 3 below, to enter into commitments in the biennium 2000-2001 to meet unforeseen and extraordinary expenses arising either during or subsequent to the biennium, provided that the concurrence of the Advisory Committee shall not be necessary for:

(a) Such commitments, not exceeding a total of 8 million United States dollars in any one year of the biennium 2000-2001, as the Secretary-General certifies relate to the maintenance of peace and security;

(b) Such commitments as the President of the International Court of Justice certifies relate to expenses occasioned by:

(i) The designation of ad hoc judges (Statute of the International Court of Justice, Article 31), not exceeding a total of 330,000 dollars;

(ii) The calling of witnesses and the appointment of experts (Statute, Article 50) and the appointment of assessors (Statute, Article 30), not exceeding a total of 50,000 dollars;

(iii) The maintenance in office for the completion of cases of judges who have not been re-elected (Statute, Article 13, paragraph 3), not exceeding a total of 40,000 dollars;

(iv) The payment of pensions and travel and removal expenses of retiring judges, and travel and removal expenses and installation grant of members of the Court (Statute, Article 32, paragraph 7), not exceeding a total of 410,000 dollars;

(v) The work of the Court or its Chambers away from The Hague (Statute, Article 22), not exceeding a total of 25,000 dollars;

(c) Such commitments, in an amount not exceeding 500,000 dollars, in the biennium 2000-2001, as the Secretary-General certifies are required for inter-organizational security measures pursuant to section IV of General Assembly resolution 36/235 of 18 December 1981;

2. Resolves that the Secretary-General shall report to the Advisory Committee and to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth and fifty-sixth sessions all commitments made under the provisions of the present resolution, together with the circumstances relating thereto, and shall submit supplementary estimates to the Assembly in respect of such commitments;

3. Decides that, for the biennium 2000-2001, if a decision of the Security Council results in the need for the Secretary-General to enter into commitments relating to the maintenance of peace and security in an amount exceeding 10 million dollars in respect of the decision, that matter shall be brought to the General Assembly, or, if the Assembly is suspended or not in session, a resumed or special session of the Assembly shall be convened by the Secretary-General to consider the matter.

Contributions

Unpaid assessed contributions from Member States to the UN budget totalled $1,758 million at the end of 1999, down from $2 billion at the end of 1998. Unpaid regular budget assessments totalled $244 million, a reduction of $ 173 million compared with the end of 1998.

The number of Member States paying their regular budget assessment in full continued to climb. As at the end of 1999, 126 Member States, 9 more than the previous year, had done so.

Aggregate peacekeeping assessments outstanding at the end of 1999 was $ 1.4 billion, a decrease of $112 million from 1998, and unpaid assessments for the international tribunals were over $32 million.

Assessments

Committee on Contributions. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/36A [YUN 1998, p. 1286], a special session of the Committee on Contributions was convened (New York, 8-12 February) [A/53/11/Add.1 & Corr.1] to consider representations from Member States with respect to the application of Article 19 of the Charter, whereby a Member would lose its vote in the Assembly if the amount of its arrears should equal or exceed the amount of contributions due from it for the preceding two full years.

The Committee considered a number of issues relating to the application of Article 19 and decided that more general policy considerations should be examined further during its fifty-ninth session (see next page), including the issue of those Member States that regularly paid only enough to retain or regain their votes and the possibility of submitting payment schedules for their arrears in UN contributions. The Committee discussed the date of expiration of a waiver in the context of traditional dates for its regular session, and decided to explore the advantages and disadvantages of setting the two dates roughly at the same time.

The Committee took up the cases of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cambodia, the Republic of the Congo, Georgia, Guinea-Bissau, Honduras, Iraq and Nicaragua. Having heard oral representations from those Member States and received statistical and other information from the Secretariat, the Committee determined that the failure to pay the amount necessary to avoid the application of Article 19 was due to conditions beyond their control, and recommended that Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cambodia and Georgia be permitted to vote in the Assembly until 30 June 1999, and that the Congo, Guinea-Bissau, Honduras and Nicaragua be permitted to vote until 30 June 2000.

With respect to Iraq, the Committee concluded that the political aspects of the issues raised in that context went beyond its technical advisory role.

By decision 53/406 C of 7 April, the Assembly approved the Committee's recommendations.

At its fifty-ninth session (New York 7-25 June) [A/54/11], the Committee continued to discuss elements of the methodology for the preparation of future scales of assessment: income measures; base period; conversion rates; debt-burden adjustment; low per capita income adjustment; floor; ceiling; schemes of limits; and annual recalculations. Concerning income measures, the Committee emphasized that it was in the interest of the Member States to provide the most complete, reliable and comparable statistics possible to the UN Statistics Division for use by the Committee at its sixtieth session in 2000 when it would consider the scale of assessments for 2001-2003. It reaffirmed its earlier recommendation that future scales should be based on estimates of gross domestic product (GDP).

The Committee considered the further reduction from six to three years of the base period for calculating the scale of assessments. It reaffirmed that the base period should be a multiple of the scale period so that data from some years would not be used more frequently than data from others and should be kept constant in successive scale periods.

The Committee emphasized the importance of realistic conversion rates in considering the relative capacity of Member States to pay. It also noted an analytical study by the Statistics Division on possible approaches to improving the methodology for computing price-adjusted rates of exchange (PAREs), which was at a preliminary theoretical stage.

Doubts were expressed concerning the rationale for inclusion of the debt burden in the scale methodology. The Committee reaffirmed its earlier recommendation that, should the Assembly decide to retain the debt-burden adjustment in calculations for the scale, it should be based on debt flow data. It reaffirmed the continuing relevance and importance of the principle of an adjustment for low per capita income, a basic element of the scale from the beginning.

Also considered by the Committee were the effects of the discontinuity experienced by Member States moving up through the low per capita income threshold between scale periods and by those States just above the threshold. It concluded that the situation was inequitable and that remedial measures should be considered, and suggested that the Assembly consider whether the scale methodology should be changed to eliminate or mitigate the effects of discontinuity. The Committee recommended that the minimum assessment rate for 2001-2003 should be maintained at 0.001 per cent. It agreed to consider the annual recalculations of the scale of assessments in the light of any guidance received from the Assembly.

The Committee reviewed the procedural aspects for considering requests for exemption of Article 19 of the Charter, as requested by the Assembly in resolution 52/215 B [YUN 1997, p. 1444]. In that regard, it discussed the problem of timing of meetings of the Committee as they related to the application of Article 19, recalling that Member States in danger of falling under Article 19 in the coming year were so advised by the Secretariat before the end of the current year and that the Committee's regular session was normally held in June. Therefore, the Committee recommended that the Assembly encourage Member States that wished to avail themselves of the procedure to do so early enough before the Committee's regular session.

As to the question of tightening the application of Article 19, it decided to consider the matter at a forthcoming session in the light of any policy guidelines from the Assembly.

Other elements considered by the Committee included the use of budgetary surpluses, incentive payments and credits, interest on or indexation of arrears, ineligibility for election and recruitment and procurement issues. The Committee noted the proposal for the establishment of a new assessed fund in which the contributions of each Member State would depend on its recent payment record: the greater its passed due assessed contribution, the greater its contribution to the fund, and agreed to consider it further.

The Committee considered requests for exemptions under Article 19 from Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Comoros, Georgia, the Republic of Moldova and Tajikistan. Four of them requested an extension of an exemption; two of them had received exemptions in 1996. The Committee emphasized that exemptions should be regarded as exceptional measures and expressed concern at the evident tendency to extend them for long periods.

The Committee determined that Bosnia and Herzegovina's failure to pay the amount necessary to avoid application of Article 19 was beyond its control and recommended that it be permitted to vote until 30 June 2000, in the expectation that it would be the final extension.

The Committee noted that the Comoros had benefited from exemptions since 1996 and no payments had been received since October 1996. It expected that the Comoros would make serious efforts to make payments as soon as possible, but agreed that its failure to pay the necessary amounts was due to conditions beyond its control and recommended to the Assembly that the Comoros be permitted to vote until 30 June 2000.

The Committee was not in a position to consider Georgia's request for an exemption due to its late receipt. However, in December the Assembly took action on the matter (see p. 1313).

The Committee agreed that the failure of the Republic of Moldova to pay the amount necessary to avoid the application of Article 19 was due to conditions beyond its control and recommended that it be permitted to vote until 31 December.

The Committee, having recognized the continuing and severe economic and political problems facing Tajikistan, noted that it had granted waivers since 1996. The extension it sought would be the fourth such exemption. The Committee also noted Tajikistan's continuing efforts to make payments towards its outstanding assessed contributions and that it had reduced its arrears in both 1998 and 1999. The Committee concluded that failure to pay was due to conditions beyond the country's control and recommended to the Assembly that Tajikistan be permitted to vote until 30 June 2000, on the expectation that it would be the final extension of its exemption under Article 19.

At the conclusion of the Committee's session, 24 Member States were in arrears in the payment of their assessed contributions under Article 19 and had no vote in the Assembly: Burundi, Central African Republic, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Dominica, Equatorial Guinea, Gambia, Grenada, Guinea, Iraq, Kyrgyzstan, Liberia, Mauritania, Mongolia, Niger, Republic of Moldova, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Togo, Turkmenistan, Vanuatu, Yugoslavia. The Committee also noted that Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cambodia and Georgia were permitted to vote until 30 June 1999, and the Republic of the Congo, Guinea-Bissau and Nicaragua until 30 June 2000, pursuant to Assembly decision 53/406 C (see previous page). The Committee noted that eight Member States had availed themselves, under resolution 52/215 B, of the opportunity of paying the equivalent of $2.2 million in contributions in currencies other than United States dollars.

The Committee, pursuant to resolution 53/36 E [YUN 1998, p. 1287], reviewed the rates of assessment for non-member States and the issue of whether those States should be assessed at a somewhat higher rate. It was suggested that a flat percentage should be applied to the notional assessment rates of non-member States, with rates varying from 50 and 75 per cent, without reference to participation in UN activities. However, it was felt that there was no technical rationale for a flat percentage rate and that the last revision of rates had been the subject of consultations with the States concerned. Although the next quinquennial review would not take place until 2003, the Committee decided that it would consider the matter further in 2001. Information had been received from the Holy See following the Committee's review of the issue at its fifty-eighth session, when it had recommended that the flat annual fee applied for the Holy See should be 10 per cent. However, the information indicated a significant increase in the participation by the Holy See in UN activities. The Committee recommended that the flat annual fee should be increased to 25 per cent beginning in 2000.

On 1 July [A/C.5/53/64], the Assembly President transmitted to the Fifth Committee Chairman a 28 June letter of the Committee on Contributions Chairman containing sections of the Committee's report on its fifty-ninth session dealing with requests for exemption under Article 19 of the Charter from Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Comoros, Georgia, the Republic of Moldova and Tajikistan.

On 12 July [A/C.5/53/65], the Acting Assembly President transmitted to the Fifth Committee Chairman an 8 July letter from Georgia containing its request for Article 19 consideration in view of its economic problems.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 105], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/464/Add.5], adopted resolutions 53/36 F and G without vote [agenda item 118].

Scale of assessments for the apportionment of the expenses of the United Nations

F

The General Assembly,

Having considered the recommendations of the Committee on Contributions on a number of requests for exemption under Article 19 of the Charter of the United Nations, transmitted by a letter dated 28 June 1999 from the Chairman of the Committee on Contributions to the President of the General Assembly through a letter dated 1 July 1999 from the President of the Assembly to the Chairman of the Fifth Committee,

1. Decides that:

(a) The failure of the Republic of Moldova to pay the amount necessary to avoid the application of Article 19 of the Charter of the United Nations is attributable to conditions beyond its control and that, accordingly, it is permitted to vote until 31 December 1999;

(b) The failure of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Comoros and Tajikistan to pay the amount necessary to avoid the application of Article 19 of the Charter is attributable to conditions beyond their control and that, accordingly, they are permitted to vote until 30 June 2000;

2. Reaffirms its role in accordance with the provisions of Article 19 of the Charter and the advisory role of the Committee on Contributions in accordance with rule 160 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly;

3. Decides to revert to the procedural aspects of the consideration of requests for exemption under Article 19 of the Charter at the fifty-fourth session of the General Assembly.

G

The General Assembly,

Having considered the letter dated 12 July 1999 from the Acting President of the General Assembly addressed to the Chairman of the Fifth Committee,

1. Reaffirms its role in accordance with the provisions of Article 19 of the Charter of the United Nations and the advisory role of the Committee on Contributions in accordance with rule 160 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly;

2. Requests the Committee on Contributions to consider the request of Georgia, under Article 19 of the Charter, on the subject of the country's arrears, as a matter of priority, taking into account the views expressed by Member States, and to transmit its views, also as a matter of priority, to the General Assembly, to the extent possible before the end of its fifty-third session;

3. Decides to grant Georgia temporary exemption under Article 19 of the Charter so that it may be permitted to vote until a final decision on the matter is taken by the General Assembly;

4. Decides also that the procedural arrangements in the present resolution will not set a precedent for the future.

In August [A/53/1046], the Chairman of the Committee on Contributions informed the Assembly President that the Committee would consider, as a matter of priority, Georgia's request as mandated by the Assembly.

By decision 53/406 D of 2 September, the Assembly took note of the letter from the Chairman of the Committee on Contributions to the Assembly President.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 23 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/685], adopted resolutions 54/237 A-C without vote [agenda item 125].

Scale of assessments for the apportionment of the expenses of the United Nations

A

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 54/1, 54/2 and 54/3 of 14 September 1999,

Recalling also the recommendations of the Committee on Contributions with respect to the assessment of the Republic of Kiribati, the Republic of Nauru and the Kingdom of Tonga as non-member States,

Recalling further its resolutions 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 and 53/36 E of 18 December 1998 and its decision 47/456 of 23 December 1992,

1. Decides that the rate of assessment for the Republic of Kiribati, the Republic of Nauru and the Kingdom of Tonga, admitted to membership of the United Nations on 14 September 1999, should be 0.001 per cent for the years 1999 and 2000;

2. Also decides that the contributions of the Republic of Kiribati, the Republic of Nauru and the Kingdom of Tonga for the year 1999 should be calculated on the basis of one twelfth of their rate of assessment for the year 1999 per full calendar month of membership and that a corresponding adjustment should be made in their assessments for the year 1999 as non-member States;

3. Further decides that the contributions of the Republic of Kiribati, the Republic of Nauru and the Kingdom of Tonga for the years 1999 and 2000 should otherwise be applied to the same basis of assessment as for other Member States, except that, in the case of appropriations or apportionments approved by the General Assembly for the financing of peacekeeping operations, the contributions of the Republic of Kiribati, the Republic of Nauru and the Kingdom of Tonga, as determined by the group of Member States to which they may be assigned by the Assembly, should be calculated in proportion to the calendar year;

4. Decides that the 1999 assessments of the Republic of Kiribati, the Republic of Nauru and the Kingdom of Tonga should be taken into account as miscellaneous income in accordance with regulation 5.2 (c) of the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations;

5. Also decides that, for the year 2000, the rate of assessment for the Republic of Kiribati, the Republic of Nauru and the Kingdom of Tonga should be added to the scale of assessments established by the General Assembly in its resolution 52/215 A;

6. Further decides that, in accordance with financial regulation 5.8, the advances of the Republic of Kiribati, the Republic of Nauru and the Kingdom of Tonga to the Working Capital Fund should be calculated by the application of their rate of assessment of 0.001 per cent to the authorized level of the Fund and should be added to the Fund pending the incorporation of their rate of assessment in a 100 per cent scale.

B

The General Assembly,

Having considered the relevant part of the report of the Committee on Contributions on its fifty-ninth session,

Recalling its resolution 53/36 C of 18 December 1998,

1. Decides that the Committee on Contributions should not consider further the questions covered in paragraphs 69 and 70 as well as 73 and 74 of its report;

2. Requests the Committee further to consider measures to encourage the timely, full and unconditional payment of assessed contributions and to make appropriate recommendations, pursuant to its general mandate under paragraph 3 of General Assembly resolution 14 A (I) of 13 February 1946.

C

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 50/207 B of 11 April 1996, 52/215 B of 22 December 1997 and 53/36 B to D of 18 December 1998,

Having considered the relevant parts of the report of the Committee on Contributions on its fifty-ninth session,

Reaffirming the obligation of all Member States to bear the expenses of the United Nations, as apportioned by the General Assembly, in conformity with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming also the fundamental principle that the expenses of the Organization should be apportioned among Member States broadly according to their capacity to pay, as specified in rule 160 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly,

1. Urges all Member States to pay their assessed contributions in full, on time and without imposing conditions, to prevent financial difficulties for the United Nations;

2. Reaffirms its role in accordance with the provisions of Article 19 of the Charter of the United Nations and the advisory role of the Committee on Contributions in accordance with rule 160 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly;

3. Urges all Member States in arrears requesting exemption under Article 19 of the Charter to provide the fullest possible supporting information, including information on economic aggregates, government revenues and expenditure, foreign exchange resources, indebtedness, difficulties in meeting domestic or international financial obligations and any other information that might support the claim that failure to make necessary payments had been attributable to conditions beyond the control of the Member States;

4. Decides that requests for exemption under Article 19 of the Charter must be submitted by Member States to the President of the General Assembly at least two weeks before the session of the Committee, so as to ensure a complete review of the requests.

On the same date, the Assembly, by decision 54/455 A, decided that Georgia should be permitted to vote in the Assembly until 30 June 2000, and if it were to request further exemptions under Article 19, it should do so at least two weeks before the session of the Committee on Contributions.

The Assembly, by decision 54/455 B of 23 December, decided to continue consideration of the item on the scale of assessments for the apportionment of expenses as a matter of priority at its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session, and to approve, no later than the last day of the first part of that session, the methodology that would instruct the Committee on Contributions to recommend to the Assembly at its fifty-fifth (2000) session a scale of assessments for the period 2001-2003. On the same date, the Assembly decided that the item would remain for consideration during the resumed fifty-fourth session (decision 54/465) and that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the item at that session (decision 54/462 A).

Accounts and auditing

The General Assembly, at its resumed fifty third (1999) session, considered the report of the Board of Auditors on UN peacekeeping operations for the period 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 [A/53/5, vol. II], the Secretary-General's April report on implementation of the Board's recommendations thereon [A/53/932] and ACABQ's comments and recommendations [A/53/940].

By decision 53/473 of 8 June, the Assembly deferred consideration of those reports until the main part of its fifty-fourth (1999) session.

On 29 October, the Assembly, in resolution 54/13 A, endorsed the Board of Auditors' report (see p. 64).

In September [A/54/140/Add.2], the Secretary-General updated his earlier report (see above) on the implementation of Board's recommendation concerning peacekeeping operations.

Report of Board of Auditors. The Assembly had before it the report of the Board of Auditors and audited financial statements of the voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) for the period 1 January to 31 December 1998 [A/54/5/Add.5].

Also before the Assembly were the Secretary-General's annual reports, pursuant to resolution 52/212 B [YUN 1998, p. 1288], updating information on the implementation of the Board's recommendations [A/54/140]; replies of the executive heads of organizations and programmes relating to the Board's recommendations in its reports for the period ending 31 December 1997 and covering those organizational activities that had hitherto been reported on biennially [A/54/140/Add.1]; the Board's report on implementation of its recommendations [A/54/159 & Corr.1]; the Board's comments on the hiring and use of consultants in the Secretariat, pursuant to section VIII of Assembly resolution 53/221 [A/54/165] (see p. 1333); measures taken or proposed in response to the Board's recommendations on the accounts of the voluntary funds administered by UNHCR for the period ended 31 December 1998 [A/AC.96/917/Add.1]; and the Secretary-General's report on the year 2000 computer compliance issue [A/C.5/54/3] (see p. 1373).

ACABQ's comments and recommendations on those reports were contained in an October report to the Assembly [A/54/441]. With respect to UNHCR's voluntary funds, ACABQ noted that the problem of the timely receipt of audit certificates persisted and stressed the importance of implementing fully the Board's recommendation that the Administration assess reasons for non-compliance and draw up a strategy for dealing with the question. It recommended that UNHCR formulate the criteria for and the conditions under which UNHCR's assistance should be granted to implementing partners, including guidelines to ensure delivery of services. The Assembly took action on the Board of Auditors' report and ACABQ's comments in resolution 54/13 B (see p. 1133).

ACABQ noted that the bulk of the Board of Auditors' recommendations, 100 of 156, had been partially implemented. It requested that in its next report, the Board further analyse the recommendations being implemented and those partially implemented, but for which no further action was contemplated. Information on the time taken to implement recommendations would also be useful in demonstrating the efficiency and priority attention of the administrations concerned. It noted that the report on the year 2000 computer problem contained little information on measures taken to maintain the logistical and operational readiness of the UN Department of Peacekeeping Operations in the field, and that there was no system-wide picture of the state of preparedness of the UN system with regard to the year 2000 compliance issue. It requested the Secretary-General to draw the attention of the members of the Administrative Committee on Coordination to that need.

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item entitled "Financial reports and audited financial statements, and reports of the Board of Auditors" would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session (deci- sion 54/465) and that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the item at that session (decision 54/462 A).

Common accounting standards

In response to General Assembly decision 53/455 [YUN 1998, p. 1291], the Secretary-General submitted an October report on the Guidelines for Internal Control Standards [A/54/427], approved by the International Organization of Supreme Audit Institutions [YUN 1998, p. 1291]. The Secretary-General stated that, as recommended by ACABQ [ibid.], the UN administration would publicize the Guidelines as widely as possible, including on the UN Intranet.

Internal control and accountability

Management irregularities causing financial losses

The General Assembly, at its resumed fifty-third session, considered the Secretary-General's March report on management irregularities causing financial losses to the Organization [A/53/849], submitted in response to General Assembly decision 51/469 B [YUN 1997, p. 1415]. The report examined the meaning of "management irregularities"; outlined applicable statutory provisions under the staff rules and regulations for recovering such losses and disciplinary measures taken in cases of staff misconduct; distinguished between the different categories of such irregularities; and summarized applicable disciplinary, recovery and reporting procedures.

By decision 53/466 of 7 April, the Assembly decided to resume consideration of the issue during the second part of its resumed fifty-third (1999) session, pending receipt of information from the Secretariat and ACABQ.

In May [A/53/954], ACABQ, in its comments on the report, noted that procedures had not yet been established for determining gross negligence in a specific instance and what financial responsibility, if any, should be incurred by those responsible. It recommended that the Secretariat prepare a more detailed report for submission to the Assembly through ACABQ, which should include procedures for determining gross negligence and the financial responsibility to be incurred by those committing the negligence. It noted that in cases where amounts recovered from accrued salary and other emoluments were insufficient to compensate the UN fully for staff wrongdoing, the Organization had no other means of obtaining a full recovery and that limitations existed to referring those matters to national authorities. It requested the Secretary-General to provide detailed information on steps taken in that connection. He should also take further preventive measures to identify risk factors that exposed the United Nations to management irregularities so that improvements in internal control and accountability could be instituted.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 June [meeting 101], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/533/Add.2], adopted resolution 53/225 without vote [agenda item 113].

Management irregularities causing financial losses to the Organization

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a detailed report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session, through the Advisory Committee, on management irregularities causing financial losses to the Organization, taking into account the reports mentioned in paragraph 4 of the report of the Committee, including procedures for determining gross negligence and the financial and other responsibilities to be incurred by those who have committed such negligence, and preventive measures to identify the risk factors that expose the Organization to management irregularities and measures to improve internal control and accountability.

Arbitration of contract disputes

In March, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly an Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) report on a comprehensive review of procurement-related arbitration cases [A/53/843], conducted in response to Assembly resolution 52/226 A [YUN 1998, p. 1254].

OIOS reviewed five cases involving claims totaling $52.6 million, of which $ 11.9 million was settled through negotiations. However, the Organization incurred interest costs of $4.8 million, as well as $2.3 million in legal and staff costs. The cases related to peacekeeping operations established in the early 1990s.

OIOS considered arbitration to be a costly method of dispute resolution and recommended that it be prevented to the extent possible through improved contract preparation and administration. It identified a number of shortcomings both at Headquarters and in the field that contributed to the situation. OIOS recommended that peacekeeping missions, especially in the early stages, be staffed with qualified, experienced procurement and contract administration personnel and legal advisers; administration in the field and at Headquarters ensure that material deviations from contracts were documented and brought to the attention of the relevant Headquarters officials; vendor performance be routinely evaluated; and all aspects of arbitration and settlement cases be reviewed to ensure that possible claims against third parties were considered and lessons learned identified and disseminated.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 April [meeting 97], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/521/Add.2], adopted resolution 53/217 without vote [agenda item 112].

Procurement-related arbitration

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on the review of procurement-related arbitration cases,

1. Expresses deep concern about the increase of pending procurement-related arbitration claims instituted against the United Nations, which total 56 million United States dollars as at 19 March 1999;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to it, for consideration at an early stage during its fifty-fourth session, a comprehensive report, taking into account the recommendations of the Office of Internal Oversight Services and the views expressed by Member States on the issue of arbitration, which should cover, inter alia:

- (a) The reasons for arbitration cases;
- (b) The roles and mandates of various Secretariat structures and negotiating teams in arbitration and settlement processes;
- (c) The sources of funding for arbitration awards and settlement payments;
- (d) The selection of outside legal counsels and provisions to preclude conflict of interest;
- (e) Disciplinary action taken against staff members responsible for wrongdoing that resulted in arbitration;
- (f) Pending arbitration cases;
- (g) Measures taken or proposed to prevent or reduce contract disputes which might lead to arbitration in the future;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General, without prejudice to the obligations of the United Nations under the Arbitration Rules of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law, to keep Member States duly informed of all arbitration and settlement cases, inter alia, by clearly identifying such cases as separate items in corresponding financial performance reports and indicating corrective and disciplinary measures taken in this regard.

Report of the Secretary General. In response to the Assembly's request, the Secretary-General, in October [A/54/458], reported that the arbitration cases identified by OIOS were largely the consequence of the sudden exponential growth in peacekeeping activities in the late 1980s and early 1990s and the use of commercial vendors rather than reliance on Member States for support services. Most disputes did not arise from contractual or other legal issues, but rather were of an operational nature. To date, contractor claims were handled in an ad hoc manner and settlement discussions undertaken to reach amicable settlements. The amount of award or settlement, as well as arbitration costs, including legal fees, was charged to the budget of the peacekeeping mission concerned.

Outside legal counsel was selected through a transparent and competitive process and the Office of Legal Affairs closely supervised all law firms engaged to avoid conflict of interest and to protect the Organization's interests.

Procedures for the preparation of clear and sound contracts were implemented and training for field staff in contract administration and claim negotiation was being prepared. A system for contractor evaluation was also introduced. A means for contractors to raise complaints was included in the web page of the Procurement Division, reviews of arbitration cases for lessons learned regularly took place and alternate methods of dispute resolution, such as conciliation, were being explored.

Programme planning

Medium-term plan

The Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 53/207 [YUN 1998, p. 1294], submitted in June [A/54/125] further revisions to the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and Methods of Evaluation, originally adopted in resolution 37/234 [YUN 1982, p. 1430] and most recently revised in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1291]. The proposed revisions related mainly to the revised format of the medium-term plan and programme budget; the numbering of the Regulations; and a new rule that took into account Regulation 3.2 on the budget process, which referred to the deadline of 15 August in the off-budget year for submission by the Secretary-General of the budget outline. The Rules were also changed to incorporate gender-sensitive language.

CPC, in June [A/54/16], amended the proposed revisions and recommended their approval by the Assembly, and that the Secretary-General bring to the Assembly's attention, along with the revised Rules, a rule giving guidance to programme managers for better implementation of regulation 5.4. In response, the Secretary-General, in an October note [A/C.5/54/12], submitted the text of an additional paragraph in rule 105.4 that aimed to provide better guidance on the formulation of expected accomplishments by clarifying the relation of the element of expected accomplishments to objectives and outputs.

Proposed medium-term plan 2000-2005

In April [A/54/89], the Secretary-General, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 51/219 [YUN 1996, p. 1306], reported on measures for sectoral, functional and regional bodies to review the proposed medium-term plan for 2002-2005. The report described the measures taken by the Secretary-General to submit proposals to the relevant intergovernmental bodies and contained the schedule of reviews by sectoral, functional and regional intergovernmental bodies of the programmes and subprogrammes of the proposed plan prior to submission to the Assembly through CPC, the Economic and Social Council and ACABQ.

CPC, in June [A/54/16], recommended that the Fifth Committee should receive all comments prior to its consideration of the proposed medium-term plan and revisions, and that CPC should receive at its 2000 session the reviews by intergovernmental bodies of the Secretary-General's proposed plan.

Programme performance 1996-1997

The General Assembly, at its resumed fifty-third (1999) session, by decision 53/469 of 7 April, transmitted to CPC for consideration a Secretariat note on UN programme performance for the 1996-1997 biennium [A/C.5/53/CRP.1/Rev.1].

In an April note to CPC [E/AC.52/1999/7], the Secretariat, pursuant to Assembly resolution 53/207 [YUN 1998, p. 1294], provided information on the reasons for the further postponement of the delivery of outputs from the 1996-1997 biennium to 1998-1999 and on the Secretary-General's proposal to delete 57 outputs carried over from the 1994-1995 biennium. The report noted that, of those 57 outputs, 14 had been implemented in 1997-1998, 12 would be implemented in 1999, and 2 had been further postponed to 2000. Twenty outputs were considered ongoing, of which six were pending decisions by intergovernmental mechanisms. Nine outputs had been recommended for termination.

CPC, in June [A/54/16], regretted that the opinion of relevant intergovernmental bodies on the Secretary-General's proposal to delete some outputs had not been submitted, as requested in resolution 53/207, and asked the Secretariat to ensure that future programme performance reports provided clear justification and criteria for termination.

Evaluation and programme planning

In June [A/54/117], the Secretary-General submitted a report, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/207, on ways in which the full implementation and the quality of mandated programmes and activities could be ensured and better assessed by and reported to Member States. The report proposed three options to improve the methodology through which full implementation and quality of mandated programmes and activities could be ensured and better assessed: mandate specialized intergovernmental bodies that oversaw each programme with the responsibility for making judgements about the quality of programme performance; address the utility of the programme performance report, and change its timing to present it as part of the review of the programme budget proposals by both the specialized intergovernmental body and CPC; and relate outputs to outcomes in the programme performance report. The Secretary-General concluded that the three options were not mutually exclusive and that any or all of them could be adopted.

CPC, in June [A/54/16], recommended that the Secretary-General be requested to further explore ways in which the full implementation of mandates could be ensured and better assessed, taking into account the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation, and budgetary procedures, and giving due consideration to the views of Member States, and report thereon to the Committee in 2000.

The Secretary-General transmitted to CPC, in a series of notes, OIOS reports on: the in-depth evaluation of the programme on disarmament [E/AC.51/1999/2]; the in-depth evaluation of the electoral assistance programme [E/AC.51/1999/3 & Corr.1]; the triennial review of the implementation of CPC recommendations at its thirty-sixth session in 1996 on the evaluation of the Department of Public Information [E/AC.51/1999/4]; and the triennial review of the implementation of CPC recommendations at its 1996 session on the evaluation of peacekeeping operations: termination phase [E/AC.51/1999/5].

CPC's comments and recommendations on those reports were contained in the report on its thirty-ninth (1999) session [A/54/16].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/676], adopted resolution 54/236 without vote [agenda item 120].

Programme planning

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee for Programme and Coordination on the work of its thirty-ninth session,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Committee for Programme and Coordination on the work of its thirty-ninth session;

2. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Committee regarding the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations, programme planning and the provisional agenda for the fortieth session of the Committee;

3. Also endorses the conclusions and recommendations on coordination questions contained in paragraphs 560 to 565, 567 and 568, and 587 to 596 of the report of the Committee;

4. Notes that, in the context of coordination questions, the proposals relating to performance indicators requested by the Committee and contained in the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative for the Implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s have not been approved by the General Assembly;

5. Also notes that the matter addressed in paragraph 566 of the report of the Committee is being considered by the General Assembly under a separate agenda item;

6. Urges the Secretary-General to issue, as soon as possible, the revisions to the relevant rules of the revised Regulations Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation adopted by the General Assembly at its fifty-third session, taking fully into account the recommendations of the Committee contained in paragraph 47 of its report;

7. Decides to continue its consideration of the item entitled "Programme planning" during its resumed fifty-fourth session.

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item on programme planning would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session (decision 54/465) and that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the item at that session (decision 54/462 A).

UN International Partnership Trust Fund

The Secretary-General reported in March on the United Nations Fund for International Partnership (UNFIP) [A/53/700/Add.1], established in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1297] to manage the process of grant allocations through the United Nations Foundation (UNF), a public charity founded by Robert Edward Turner to manage his gift to the United Nations of 18 million shares of Time Warner stock valued at some $1 billion. On 2 February, UNF announced approval of its third round of grants, the last funding cycle of the first year of UNFIP/UNF operations, totalling some $31.7 million for 25 projects involving 14 UN organizations. Annexed to the report was a list of approved projects, showing the breakdown by theme, region and executing agency. As at February 1999, UNF had awarded a total of approximately $87 million for UN projects, with 35 per cent earmarked for population and women; 20 per cent for the environment; 25 per cent for children's health; and 19 per cent for other areas.

Based on the first year's experience, the United Nations and UNF reached agreement on a revised and more streamlined process of programme development for funding by UNF. The goal of the revised programming approach was to work more closely with UNF in defining priorities and focus within the broad areas of programmatic concentration already identified, and to promote greater inter-agency consultation in defining opportunities to be pursued by the UN system with UNF funding. The new approach entailed the establishment of Programme Framework Groups (PFGs) to provide guidance for the preparation of specific projects, identify programmatic opportunities and propose the most effective use of UNF support. PFGs on population and women and on children's health had been established and had commenced work by mid-February.

ACABQ, in May [A/53/7/Add.11], indicated its intention to review the UNFIP Assistant Secretary-General-level post of the Executive Director after 31 December in the context of its examination of UNFIP's administrative budget for 2000. It would also provide additional comments on the report in the context of its consideration of the 2000-2001 programme budget.

By decision 53/475 of 8 June, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report and of ACABQ's observations, and requested the Secretary-General to continue to keep the Assembly informed on a regular basis.

In response to that request, the Secretary-General provided additional information on UNFIP activities in December [A/54/664 & Add.1]. Data was provided on the outcome of the two funding cycles for 1999, as was information on progress in respect of PFGs on children's health, population and women, and the environment. A total of $108 million was programmed for the year, with the majority of grants ($59 million) awarded for projects concerning children's health; over $15 million was granted for population and women's projects; $25 million, for projects on the environment; and $8 million, for humanitarian and other areas. Since UNFIP's inception, over $190 million had been programmed.

The UNFIP secretariat continued to play a facilitating role within the UN system. It supported the Secretary-General's reform initiatives, particularly in terms of development activities at the country level, and developed a solid collaboration with the Office of the United Nations Development Group and with resident coordinators and UN country teams.

Chapter III

United Nations staff

A number of issues concerning the conditions of service of United Nations staff members were considered by the General Assembly during 1999. Some arose from recommendations of the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC) and others resulted from the Secretary-General's programme for reform.

ICSC action included proposals regarding the base/floor salary scale, staff assessment, performance management and education grant, and the establishment of working groups on the framework of human resources management and on the draft standards of conduct for the international civil service. The Administrative Committee on Coordination proposed an amendment to the ICSC statute regarding its establishment of advisory panels.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to phase out the acceptance of certain types of gratis personnel.

The United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund reported that its reserves had increased to more than $25.8 billion.

Conditions of serviceInternational Civil Service Commission

In 1999, ICSC, a 15-member body established in 1974 by General Assembly resolution 3357(XXIX) [YUN 1974, p. 875], continued to regulate and coordinate the conditions of service of the UN common system of salaries and allowances. Thirteen organizations had accepted the ICSC statute: the United Nations; the International Labour Organization (ILO); the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations; the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO); the World Health Organization; the International Civil Aviation Organization; the Universal Postal Union; the International Telecommunication Union; the World Meteorological Organization; the International Maritime Organization; the World Intellectual Property Organization; the United Nations Industrial Development Organization; and the International Atomic Energy Agency. One other organization, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, had not formally accepted the statute but participated fully in ICSC work.

The Commission held its forty-ninth (Geneva, 12-30 April) and fiftieth (New York, 19-30 July) sessions in 1999, examining issues that derived from decisions and resolutions of the General Assembly, as well as from its own statute. A summary of the Commission's deliberations, recommendations and decisions was provided in its twenty-fifth annual report [A/54/30], on which the Assembly acted in December (see resolution 54/238 on p. 1321).

In a 4 October statement on the administrative and financial implications of ICSC decisions and recommendations [A/54/434], the Secretary-General said that there would be an increase of $1,725,300, net of staff assessment, in the regular budget for the 22-month period from 1 March 2000 to 31 December 2001.

Functioning of ICSC*Review of ICSC*

As follow-up to the 1998 endorsement by the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) of his proposal to establish a group to examine the mandate, membership and functioning of ICSC [YUN 1998, p. 1300], the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly in October his recommendations concerning the composition of and terms of reference for the group [A/54/483].

The Assembly, in section V of resolution 54/238 (see p. 1322), decided to revert to the consideration of the modalities of the review of ICSC at its fifty-fifth (2000) session.

Proposed amendment to ICSC statute

At its first regular session of 1999 (Geneva, 9-10 April) [ACC/1999/4], ACC endorsed a draft amendment to the ICSC statute, proposed by the legal advisers of the UN system. The amendment would allow ICSC to request advisory opinions on the legality of ICSC decisions or recommendations, before they were implemented, from an ad hoc panel, composed of judges of the Administrative Tribunals of the United Nations and ILO, designated by the Presidents of the Tribunals, and a third person chosen by them. ACC requested ICSC to place the draft amendment before the General Assembly for consideration.

At its July session [A/54/30], ICSC noted that neither it nor its secretariat had been consulted by ACC or the legal advisers on the proposed amendment to the statute. Most Commission members opposed the creation of advisory panels, noting that there was no need for such a review mechanism since so few ICSC decisions and recommendations had been successfully challenged before the Administrative Tribunals. Also, the panels would result in adding a step in an already long and complex judicial process and their usefulness was doubtful since their opinions would not be binding on the Tribunals, the organizations and the staff representatives. The Presidents and members of the Tribunals favoured the option of having the organizations consult the legal advisers of the UN system, an approach that was also favoured by most ICSC members.

The Commission decided to submit its observations on the ACC proposal to the Assembly and to request its Chairman to forward them to the UN Legal Counsel.

In October [A/C.5/54/24], the Secretary-General, on behalf of ACC, transmitted to the Assembly the text of the draft amendment to the ICSC statute and ICSC's comments on it.

In section IV of resolution 54/238 (see p. 1322), the Assembly reaffirmed the ICSC statute.

Remuneration issues

Noblemaire principle

Under a standing mandate from the General Assembly [YUN 1992, p. 1055], ICSC continued to review the relationship between the net remuneration of UN staff in the Professional and higher categories in New York and that of the current comparator, United States federal civil service employees in comparable positions in Washington, D.C. ICSC reported to the Assembly that the margin forecast between United Nations and the United States employees' net remuneration would be 114.1 for 1999. It informed the Assembly that the comparator had not fully implemented recommended pay reforms, but there were indications that future adjustments to the salaries of the comparator employees could be higher than those in the past. ICSC requested its secretariat, the ACC Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions and representatives of the staff to discuss the imbalance in the margin levels with a view to formulating alternative proposals that would be available to the Commission before it made a recommendation on a real salary increase.

Effective 1 January 1999, the salary scale for the comparator civil service increased by 3.68 per cent gross (3.42 per cent net), calling for an upward adjustment of the common system salary scale by 3.42 per cent. The Commission recommended to the Assembly revised procedures for determining the base/floor salary scale and the single rate of staff assessment, and the consolidation of 3.42 per cent of post adjustment on a no-loss/no-gain basis with effect from 1 March 2000.

With regard to the remuneration of the General Service and other locally recruited categories of staff, ICSC reviewed the basis for the dependent children's allowance, recalling that in 1982 it had established a floor amount for the allowance at 3 per cent of the mid-point of net salary [YUN 1982, p. 1477]. The Commission decided that the social benefit approach for the payment of the allowance should continue to be maintained and that the floor formula should be reviewed, to the extent possible, in 2000 and not later than 2001.

On the basis of the revised methodology for surveys of best prevailing conditions of employment at headquarters and non-headquarters duty stations, adopted in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1453], ICSC conducted a survey of best prevailing conditions of service for the General Service and other locally recruited categories of staff of the common system in Paris, with a reference date of April 1999. ICSC attached to its report [A/54/30] the General Service salary scale that it had recommended to the Director-General of UNESCO. The Commission also recommended revised amounts of spouse and children's allowances, determined on the basis of tax abatement, social benefit provided by the French Government and additional amounts paid by outside employers. The Assembly took action on the remuneration of those categories of staff in section II of resolution 54/238 (see p. 1322).

Post adjustment

In the context of a renewed General Assembly request in resolution 53/209 [YUN 1998, p. 1304] for ICSC to conduct a comprehensive review of the post adjustment system as a whole, the Commission informed the Assembly that it had carried out several such reviews, most recently in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1316]. It was the Commission's view that if the post adjustment system was to continue to be responsive to developments in the world economy and the changing needs in the common system, it should, as a system dealing with remuneration, be transparent, stable and predictable. ICSC therefore believed that the post adjustment system should be allowed to function for a meaningful period of time so that any future review would take place on the basis of experience with its operation.

At the request of the Assembly, ICSC had examined the issue of the post adjustment in Geneva in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1409], 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1317], 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1453] and 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1303]. On each occasion, it had concluded that any change to the methodology had attendant legal, technical and administrative difficulties that militated against the changes envisaged by the Assembly. As those difficulties were beyond the Commission's mandate, it requested the Assembly, in consultation with the governing bodies of the organizations of the common system, to take action in that regard.

The Assembly took action on the Geneva post adjustment and on the question of separation of housing from post adjustment in section I of resolution 54/238 (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/54/677], adopted resolution 54/238 without vote [agenda item 126].

United Nations common system: report of the International Civil Service Commission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the International Civil Service Commission for the year 1999 and other related reports,

Reaffirming its commitment to a single, unified United Nations common system as the cornerstone for the regulation and coordination of the conditions of service of the United Nations common system,

Convinced that the common system constitutes the best instrument to secure staff of the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity for the international civil service, as stipulated under the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the central role of the Commission in the regulation and coordination of the conditions of service of the United Nations common system,

Reaffirming also the statute of the Commission,

I

Conditions of service of staff in the Professional and higher categories

A. Noblemaire principle and its application

Recalling its resolution 44/198 of 21 December 1989 and other relevant resolutions,

1. Reaffirms the continued application of the Noblemaire principle;

2. Also reaffirms the need to continue to ensure the competitiveness of the conditions of service of the common system;

B. Evolution of the margin

Recalling section I.B of its resolution 52/216 of 22 December 1997 and the standing mandate from the General Assembly, in which the Commission is requested to continue its review of the relationship between the net remuneration of the United Nations staff in the Professional and higher categories in New York and that of the comparator civil service (the United States federal civil service) employees in comparable positions in Washington, D.C. (referred to as "the margin"),

Recalling also section IX, paragraph 3, of its resolution 46/191 A of 20 December 1991, in which it requested the Commission to include in its work a review of the differences between the United Nations and the United States net remuneration at individual grade levels,

Recalling further section II.B, paragraph 3, of its resolution 48/224 of 23 December 1993, wherein it considered that the Commission should address the imbalance in the United Nations/United States remuneration ratios in the context of overall margin considerations,

1. Notes the view of the Commission that, bearing in mind the imbalance in the margin levels, a recommendation for a differentiated salary increase by grades would need to be submitted to the General Assembly at the time of any future recommendation for a real salary increase;

2. Also notes that the margin between the net remuneration of United Nations staff in grades P-1 to D-2 in New York and that of officials in comparable positions in the United States federal civil service for 1999 is 114.1;

C. Base/floor salary scale

Recalling section I.H of its resolution 44/198, by which it established a floor net salary level for staff in the Professional and higher categories by reference to the corresponding base net salary levels of officials in comparable positions serving at the base city of the comparator civil service (the United States federal civil service),

1. Approves, with effect from 1 March 2000, the revised base scale of gross and net salaries for staff in the Professional and higher categories, contained in annex I to the present resolution, and the consequential amendment to the Staff Regulations of the United Nations, as reflected in section A of annex II to the present resolution;

2. Decides that, with effect from 1 March 2000, the staff assessment amounts at various grades and steps for those receiving remuneration at the single rate will be determined in accordance with the procedure outlined in section B of annex II to the present resolution;

D. Post adjustment at Geneva

Recalling section I.B of its resolution 50/208 of 23 December 1995, section LE of its resolution 51/216 of 18 December 1996, section I.D of its resolution 52/216 and section I.G of its resolution 53/209 of 18 December 1998, related to the establishment of a single post adjustment index in respect of staff members whose duty station is Geneva,

1. Takes note of the views and conclusions of the Commission contained in paragraphs 36 and 37 of its report;

2. Reiterates its request to the Commission to prepare a comprehensive review of the post adjustment system

Recognizing that career development is an indispensable part of effective personnel management,

Noting the objectives of the Secretary-General with regard to staff development, performance management and career support,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the performance appraisal system is applicable to all staff within the meaning of Article 97 of the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts for the consistent application of the performance appraisal system throughout the Secretariat;

3. Approves the step-by-step approach to performance recognition as set forth in paragraphs 24 to 34 of the report of the Secretary-General on performance management;

4. Takes note of the proposals on the need to address the issue of underperformance in paragraphs 35 to 43 of the report referred to in paragraph 3 above, and requests the Secretary-General to submit revised policy proposals to deal systematically and effectively with underperformance;

5. Notes with concern that no comprehensive and systematic career development policy has yet been developed by the Secretary-General, and reiterates its request that such a policy be developed on a priority basis in the interest of maintaining a strong and efficient international civil service, in accordance with the principles enshrined in Article 101 of the Charter;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in the further enhancement of the career development system of the Organization, to implement a transparent promotion policy, augmented by the effective use of a simplified and appropriate performance appraisal system, adequate training and competitive examinations, in order to provide for the recognition of competence and outstanding performance and to facilitate the continuous professional growth of staff at all levels;

7. Notes the initiatives undertaken so far by the Secretary-General with regard to staff training;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to consider opening staff training courses, as appropriate, to members of permanent missions, within the framework of the approved budget, and without prejudice to meeting the staff training needs of the Organization;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to streamline the personnel manual;

VII

Employment of retirees

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations on the employment of retirees, contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to have recourse to the employment of retirees only if the operational requirements of the Organization cannot be met by existing staff;

VIII

Consultants and individual contractors

1. Endorses the new definitions of consultants and individual contractors as contained in the report of the Secretary-General on comprehensive guidelines for the use of consultants in the Secretariat;

2. Notes with concern the observation of the Board of Auditors that the inadequacies earlier identified by the Board in the hiring of consultants persist;

3. Reiterates its request that the recommendations of the Board of Auditors as endorsed in General Assembly resolution 51/226 and its resolution 53/204 of 18 December 1998 be fully implemented, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report through the Board to the Assembly at the main part of its fifty-fourth session;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to submit an annual report to the General Assembly on consultants hired by the United Nations during the preceding year, with an indication of their functions;

5. Takes note of the comments on consultants made by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in paragraph 15 of its report, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure full compliance with the provisions of section VI, paragraph 7, of its resolution 51/226;

6. Reiterates that the Secretary-General should refrain from using consultants to carry out functions assigned to established posts and that consultants should be hired only in accordance with the existing rules and relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and where in-house expertise is not available in the Organization;

7. Emphasizes that, in areas where consultants are frequently hired for a period of more than one year, the Secretary-General should submit proposals, where necessary, for the establishment of posts;

8. Stresses that consultants should generally not receive training at the expense of the United Nations;

9. Notes with concern that 31 per cent of contractors were hired from only four Member States and were paid 38 per cent of total fees during the biennium 1996-1997, and requests the Secretary-General to take remedial measures in this regard;

10. Reaffirms the principle contained in a recommendation of the Board of Auditors and endorsed in General Assembly resolution 51/226 that the objective of attracting consultants on a wider geographical basis should be achieved, inter alia, by fixing appropriate norms and by closer interaction with substantive offices and requesting units at all duty stations;

11. Takes note of the guidelines contained in the report of the Secretary-General subject to the following provisions:

(a) There should be a separation of functions between the requesting officers and the officer who processes the contract;

(b) The approved terms of reference should form part of the contract;

(c) The selection of consultants and individual contractors should be on a wider geographical basis and the question of travel expenses should not distort the geographical balance in the awarding of contracts;

(d) In the awarding of contracts, gender balance should be achieved without prejudice to wide geographical distribution;

(e) The Office of Human Resources Management of the Secretariat should have authority to take a final decision on whether further contracts should be awarded to contractors in the case of an unsatisfactory performance evaluation by a programme manager;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to circulate the revised guidelines as a matter of priority, throughout the Secretariat, with a view to ensuring full compliance;

IX

Composition of the Secretariat

1. Notes with concern that twenty-four Member States were unrepresented and ten under-represented in the Secretariat as at 30 June 1998;

2. Also notes with concern the significant reduction in the number of posts subject to geographical distribution at the P-2 and P-3 levels, as well as the increase in such posts at the D-2 and Assistant Secretary-General levels;

3. Urges the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures, as a matter of priority, to address the imbalance in the post structure of the Secretariat in the context of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 2000-2001, bearing in mind that more than one hundred posts subject to geographical distribution at the director level will be vacated by 2002 owing to the retirement of the present incumbents;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, when submitting future reports on the composition of the Secretariat, to discontinue the established practice of showing the representation of staff according to major geographical groupings as referred to in annex II to his report, and to list countries in alphabetical order;

5. Recalls that, in accordance with Article 97 of the Charter of the United Nations, the Secretariat shall comprise a Secretary-General and such staff as the Organization may require;

6. Reaffirms that no post should be considered the exclusive preserve of any Member State or group of States, including at the highest levels, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure that, as a general rule, no national of a Member State succeeds a national of that State in a senior post and that there is no monopoly on senior posts by nationals of any State or group of States;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to take all the necessary measures to ensure, at the senior and policy-making levels of the Secretariat, the equitable representation of Member States, especially those unrepresented and under-represented, in particular developing countries, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and to include relevant information thereon in all future reports on the composition of the Secretariat;

8. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to increase further his efforts to improve the composition of the Secretariat by ensuring a wide and equitable geographical distribution of staff in all departments;

9. Takes note of the observation in the report of the Secretary-General on the composition of the Secretariat with regard to the anticipated vacancies in posts subject to geographical distribution, and requests the Secretary-General, when filling those vacancies, to take into account the continuing inequitable representation among the Member States;

10. Urges all Member States, in particular those with inadequate representation in the Secretariat, to make every effort to identify qualified candidates for consideration for appointment in the Secretariat, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General to ensure that, among equally qualified candidates, preference is given to candidates from under-represented Member States;

X

Status of women in the Secretariat

Reaffirming section VI of its resolution 45/248 B of 21 December 1990,

Reaffirming also that the Fifth Committee is the appropriate Main Committee of the General Assembly entrusted with responsibility for the administrative and budgetary matters relating to the question of the status of women in the Secretariat,

1. Decides that all reports dealing with administrative and budgetary aspects of the status of women in the Secretariat shall be considered by the Fifth Committee;

2. Notes that, while there has been improvement in the status of women in the Secretariat, the rate of progress in the representation of women from developing countries, particularly at the senior level, has been very slow, and in this context urges the Secretary-General to make greater efforts to redress this situation in accordance with Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

3. Recalls its resolution 53/119 of 9 December 1998, including the reaffirmation of the goal of 50/50 gender distribution by the year 2000 in all categories of posts within the United Nations system, especially at the D-1 level and above, with full respect for the principle of equitable geographical distribution, in conformity with Article 101 of the Charter, and taking into account the continuing lack of representation or underrepresentation of women from certain countries, in particular from developing countries as well as countries with economies in transition;

4. Notes with concern the imbalance in the representation of women from different regions, and requests the Secretary-General to take appropriate remedial action when pursuing the goal of 50/50 gender distribution;

5. Decides that the objective of 50/50 gender distribution by the year 2000 should be pursued in compliance with the provisions of Articles 8 and 101 of the Charter and staff regulation 4.3 in order to ensure equal opportunities for qualified women and men in recruitment and promotion;

XI

Staff-management consultations

1. Takes note of the views of the staff representatives;

2. Emphasizes the need further to improve the staff-management consultative process in all issues relating to human resources management;

3. Reaffirms the need for the Secretary-General to use, to the fullest extent, the staff-management consultative mechanisms set out in staff rule 108.2;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to take into account the views of staff representatives, in accordance with article VIII of the Staff Regulations and Rules of the United Nations and its resolution 35/213;

XII

Amendments to the Staff Regulations and Rules

Recalling its resolution 52/252,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to expedite the issuance of the report requested in paragraph 10 of its resolution 52/252;

2. Decides that staff rule 101.3 (c) should read:

"(c) Performance reports shall be prepared regularly for all staff members, including at the Assistant Secretary-General level and above, in accordance with procedures promulgated by the Secretary-General.";

3. Requests the Secretariat to publish an index to the Staff Regulations and Rules of the United Nations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that revised staff regulations and rules, or amendments thereto, are issued in a timely manner after their approval by the General Assembly.

On 23 December, the Assembly decided to continue consideration of the agenda item on human resources management, as a matter of priority, at its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session (decision 54/460 A). On the same date, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of that agenda item at the resumed fifty-fourth session (deci- sion 54/462 A). Also on the same date, the Assembly decided that the agenda item would remain for consideration at the resumed session (decision 54/465).

Framework for human resources management

The working group on the framework for human resources management, established by ICSC in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1309], met four times in 1999 (24-26 February, 19 April, 22-28 June, 19-20 July).

The Commission requested the working group to meet a final time to complete work on the integrated framework for human resources management, including the drafting of guiding principles. The complete framework would be presented to the General Assembly in 2000. The Commission reviewed the topics discussed by the working group and grouped the priority items in a work programme, together with delivery dates as follows: ethics/standards of conduct and the pay and benefits system (2000); contractual arrangements/types of appointment and mobility (2001); staff well-being and information policy (date to be determined); and administration of justice (date to be determined).

Draft standards of conduct for the international civil service

In accordance with its 1998 decision to place on its work programme the updating of the 1954 Standards of Conduct in the International Civil Service of the International Civil Service Advisory Board, ICSC forwarded a questionnaire to all organizations and staff associations in the common system.

On the basis of the responses received, the ICSC secretariat prepared a note containing proposed standards, which, although they largely reproduced the 1954 Standards, reflected changes in several areas. New sections dealt with gender equality, harassment, conflict of interest and protection of confidential information, and provisions of the 1954 Standards that were dated or did not reflect current realities were omitted. The proposed standards were forwarded to the organizations of the common system and the comments received were considered by the Commission.

ICSC felt that a balance had to be maintained between the obligations of staff and their rights. It agreed that the purpose of updating and modernizing the Standards was to promote ethical behaviour, and the proposed standards should therefore take a less punitive approach and focus more on encouraging proper behaviour. Fair and open management, characterized by transparent procedures, was increasingly the basis of public service ethics. It was evident from the views expressed by the representatives of organizations and staff that consensus-building with the two parties was necessary; the Commission therefore formed a two-tier working group to that end.

The Commission decided that it would report to the General Assembly in 2000.

Post structure

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/220 [YUN 1997, p. 1421], the Secretary-General submitted a May report [A/53/955] on developments in the post structure of the Secretariat over the preceding 10 years, on the forward-looking human resources management policy that he intended to develop, for both the short and the medium term, with a view to rejuvenating the Organization, and on the impact that such a policy should have on developments in post structure in the future.

The Secretary-General pointed out that the post structure was an integral part of the review and approval process for the biennial programme budget and directly linked to the functions to be discharged by each organizational entity responsible for programme delivery. From 1988 to 1999, the total number of authorized posts declined by 1,155 or 11.7 per cent; Professional posts declined by 216 and those in the General Service and related categories by 939. Although posts at the Under-Secretary-General level remained relatively constant, those at the Assistant Secretary-General level declined by 18 per cent, those at the D-2 level by 12 per cent, D-1 posts by 5 per cent, P-4 posts by 4 per cent, P-3 posts by 1.5 per cent and P-2/1 posts by 23 per cent. The number of P-5 posts increased by 0.6 per cent. The ratio between posts in the Professional and higher categories and the General Service and related categories had not altered significantly over the decade.

With regard to a forward-looking human resources management policy, the Secretary-General cited the overall vision contained in his 1997 report "Renewing the United Nations: a programme for reform" [YUN 1997, p. 1390], in which he called for a simplified structure that avoided duplication and achieved greater impact; empowered and responsible staff and managers; a leaner and more efficient Secretariat; and an organization that fostered management excellence and was accountable for achieving results determined by the Member States. He also pointed to his 1998 report on human resources management reform [YUN 1998, p. 1309], in which he outlined the overall strategic direction, work in progress and future actions that he intended to take to develop further a modern human resources management capability within the Organization. Each of the components were inter-related and, taken together, represented his policy for revitalizing the Organization.

The Secretary-General noted that the Department of Management would monitor changes in the post structure of each department/office and would work with programme managers to ensure that proposals for posts took into account not only programmatic needs but the need for career development of staff.

By decision 53/474 of 8 June, the Assembly deferred consideration of the Secretary-General's report on the post structure of the Secretariat until its fifty-fourth session later in the year.

On 23 December, the Assembly decided to continue its consideration of human resources management, as a matter of priority, at its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session (decision 54/460 A).

Staff composition

In August, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly his annual report on staff composition of the UN Secretariat, by nationality, gender, grade and contractual status [A/54/279 & Corr.1]. The report also updated information on changes in the desirable ranges of Member States and described measures taken to ensure the equitable representation of Member States at the senior and policy-making levels.

As at 30 June 1999, the staff totalled 14,319, of whom 7,394 were paid from the regular budget and 6,925 from extrabudgetary sources. There were 4,304 in the Professional category and above, 9,256 in the General Service and related categories and 759 project personnel.

Staff in posts subject to geographical distribution numbered 2,410. As at 30 June, there were 24 unrepresented Member States, the same as at 30 June 1998, and 13 underrepresented Member States, compared to 10 the year before. Changes in representation derived not only from staff appointments and separations from service, but also from such factors as adjustments in desirable ranges resulting from an increase or decrease in the number of posts subject to geographical distribution, changes in the number of Member States, variations in assessed contributions or population of individual Member States, and changes in the status of some staff members. The report also provided information on groupings of Member States, representation of developing and other countries among staff at the senior levels, representation of women and recruitment activities.

Between 1 July 1998 and 30 June 1999, 123 appointments were made to posts subject to geographical distribution. Of those, 1 (0.9 per cent) was a national of a non-member State, 20 (16.1 per cent) of underrepresented Member States, 97 (78.9 per cent) of within-range Member States and 5 (4.1 per cent) of overrepresented Member States.

Gratis personnel

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/243 [YUN 1997, p. 1469], the Secretary-General submitted in February the first quarterly report of 1999 on the use of gratis personnel covering the period from 1 October to 31 December 1998 [A/C.5/53/54], during which time type II gratis personnel decreased from 134 to 94. The report also contained information on the specific cases pertaining to the UN Office at Nairobi and the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY).

In accordance with resolution 51/243, which requested the phase-out of gratis personnel throughout the Secretariat, and resolution 53/11 [YUN 1998, p. 1313], which requested the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the phase-out of type II gratis personnel at its resumed fifty-third session, the Secretary-General, in a March report [A/53/847], noting that all such personnel were to be replaced by staff members by 28 February 1999, stated that, with the exception of one individual who had been involved in a major trial at ICTY, all type II gratis personnel were phased out by that date.

ACABQ, in a March report [A/53/417/Add.1], again expressed the view that the hiring of gratis personnel had not been consistent with Assembly resolutions and reiterated that the functions being carried out by gratis personnel should have been performed by staff members as they did not require specialized expertise. As to the one remaining type II gratis personnel, the Committee believed that, whether or not the extension was justified, the Assembly's concurrence should have been sought. ACABQ also found that 17 gratis personnel were considered as an exception in the recruitment for ICTY, in contravention of the provisions of resolution 51/226 [YUN 1997, p. 1459].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 April [meeting 97], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/533/Add.1], adopted resolution 53/218 without vote [agenda items 112 & 119].

Gratis personnel provided by Governments

The General Assembly,

Recalling Articles 97, 100 and 101 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming its resolutions 51/243 of 15 September 1997, 52/234 of 26 June 1998 and 53/11 of 26 October 1998,

Recalling its resolutions 51/226 of 3 April 1997 and 52/219 of 22 December 1997,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Notes that, with the exception of one type II gratis personnel, all type II gratis personnel were phased out by 28 February 1999;

2. Notes with concern that its resolutions on gratis personnel have not been fully implemented, and reiterates the need for full compliance in future;

3. Also notes with concern the observations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in paragraphs 2, 4 and 5 of its report;

4. Decides to consider, under the item entitled "Human resources management", the question of the recruitment of seventeen gratis personnel in the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 as the recruitment was in contravention of General Assembly resolution 51/226;

5. Endorses the observation of the Advisory Committee in paragraph 6 of its report that, at the end of June 1999, confirmation should be given that, without exception, all type II gratis personnel have been phased out;

6. Decides to continue, at the main part of its fifty-fourth session, its consideration of the question of gratis personnel provided by Governments.

In May [A/C.5/53/59], the Secretary-General provided information on the use of gratis personnel for the period from 1 January to 31 March. He stated that 93 type II gratis personnel had left the Organization during the period and one remained at ICTY.

By a 9 June letter to the Assembly President [A/53/1000], the Secretary-General forwarded a copy of a letter received from the Prosecutor of ICTY, Justice Louise Arbour. It outlined the need to carry out forensic investigations as soon as international forces were permitted to enter Kosovo province of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. Following a determination of the scale of required operations and the need to act immediately, the Prosecutor concluded that the only way to allow immediate investigations was through the use of gratis personnel and sought approval to seek and accept a number of gratis personnel from Member States. The Prosecutor, after detailing the requirements, indicated the need for 12 teams, or up to 300 personnel. The level and quantity of expertise was not available within the United Nations in the time frame required. The Secretary-General informed the Assembly of his intention to approve the request.

On 11 June [A/53/1001], the Secretary-General sought the Assembly's concurrence for a two-month extension of the services of the remaining individual brought in as gratis personnel at ICTY. The extension was necessary because of various delays in the presentation of the case, in which the individual was the leading prosecution co-counsel. The Prosecutor stressed that it would be impossible to replace the individual at such a critical stage of the case.

By decision 53/483 of 23 June, the Assembly, on the proposal of the Secretary-General, extended until 31 August the services of the one remaining gratis personnel in ICTY.

In July [A/53/1028], the Secretary-General provided information on the use of gratis personnel for the period from 1 April to 30 June. He noted that one type II gratis personnel remained at ICTY and drew attention to his 9 June letter regarding the request for 300 gratis personnel for ICTY.

In October [A/54/470], ACABQ pointed to deficiencies in the Secretary-General's July report, specifically with regard to provisions of Assembly resolution 52/234 [YUN 1998, p. 1312] that called for accurate, comprehensive, complete and integrated reports on the subject. With regard to the 300 gratis personnel requested by ICTY, ACABQ was of the view that information should have been provided on the procedure for selecting such personnel, the involvement of the Office of Human Resources Management, the list of Member States invited to offer the personnel, the dates of requests, functions performed, duration of service and specific expertise of the gratis personnel.

In November [A/54/533], the Secretary-General submitted both his quarterly and annual reports on the use of gratis personnel. The quarterly report covered the period from 1 July to 30 September, while the annual report described the situation between 1 October 1998 and 30 September 1999. The absence of figures for type I gratis personnel was due to the suspension of the activities of the United Nations Special Commission on the disarmament of Iraq [YUN 1998, p. 251]. The total of 98 type II gratis personnel represented a decrease of 27 per cent from a year earlier. In compliance with resolution 53/11 [YUN 1998, p. 1313], all such personnel but one serving with ICTY were phased out in February. In June, 105 forensic investigators were accepted by ICTY, followed by 83 in July, 112 in August and 63 in September. Six experts in civil affairs were accepted in August for Kosovo. Compared to a year earlier, the number of nationalities represented decreased from 27 to 10.

Consultants and individual contractors

In accordance with section VIII of resolution 53/221 (see p. 1328), the Secretary-General submitted two reports on the hiring of consultants.

In his July report [A/54/164], which dealt with the hiring and use of consultants in the Secretariat, the Secretary-General described action taken to implement recommendations made by the Board of Auditors. As recommended, the Administration had issued in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1311] detailed guidelines regarding terms of reference for consultants. The guidelines, which were circulated in April 1999, stipulated that heads of departments would be responsible for their implementation. The report also addressed questions of identification of candidates, maintenance of rosters, selection from a wider geographical base, lead time for selection, level of remuneration, management of consultants and evaluation of performance. In conclusion, it was stated that the development of the Integrated Management Information System (IMIS) to accommodate enhanced data and roster facilities would enable improved monitoring of the implementation of the guidelines.

In August [A/C.5/54/4], the Secretary-General provided information on consultants hired during 1998. While acknowledging the deficiencies noted by the Board of Auditors and OIOS in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1311], the Secretary-General stated that it would not be possible to rectify the presentation of information until IMIS was fully deployed at all duty stations in 2000. The report provided statistics on all consultancy engagements that began in 1998, covering the number of consultants engaged, the number of contracts by type and their duration, the number of women, educational level, fees, nationality, purpose of engagement by occupational groups and the aggregate data for each duty station.

Reports of Board of Auditors and ACABQ. In July, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the comments of the Board of Auditors [A/54/165] on his report on the hiring and use of consultants in the Secretariat [A/54/164]. The Board welcomed the issuance of the comprehensive guidelines, which substantially addressed its concerns. The Board expressed its intention to monitor the application of the guidelines and looked forward to the system-wide introduction of IMIS.

In an October report [A/54/450], ACABQ recognized that the issuance of the guidelines and the establishment of a roster and arrangements for reporting to the Assembly had addressed the issues raised by the Board of Auditors. With the development of IMIS, there would be improved monitoring of their implementation. However, ACABQ recommended that, to the extent possible, there should be a monitoring mechanism in place to ensure impartial evaluation of the performance of consultants. In addition, it welcomed the Secretary-General's August report [A/C.5/54/4] and noted the valuable assistance in collecting data rendered by IMIS.

Status of women in the Secretariat

In a January report [E/CN.6/1999/5] to the Commission on the Status of Women (see p. 1104), the Secretary-General provided a statistical update of the gender distribution of staff at the Professional and higher levels in the UN Secretariat, described special measures being taken for the achievement of gender equality and outlined the work programme for developing and implementing gender action plans during 1999.

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/119 [YUN 1998, p. 1316], the Secretary-General submitted a September report on improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat [A/54/405]. As at 30 June 1999, the percentage of women in Professional and higher-level posts subject to geographical distribution stood at 38.1 per cent, compared to 36.9 per cent in 1998. The percentage of women at the D-1 level and above had increased since the last report [YUN 1998, p. 1316] from 25.2 to 29.1 per cent. However, while visible progress was made in improving the representation of women at the senior and policy-making levels, progress in improving women's representation overall in the Professional and higher categories was slow. The goal of 50/50 gender distribution had nearly been met at the P-2 level (48.2 per cent) but the percentage increase in women's representation at the P-3 to P-5 levels was very small, ranging from 0.1 per cent at the P-3 level to 1.4 per cent at the P-4 level. The highest concentration of women was at the P-3 level, whereas that of men was at the P-4 level.

Work had begun on developing action plans on human resources management for individual departments and offices. One of the objectives set in those plans related to improving gender balance; the performance of departments under the plans with respect to gender would be monitored by the Special Adviser on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women. Other elements of the Secretary-General's strategy to achieve gender balance in the Secretariat included the review of the pool of women candidates within the Secretariat for projected vacancies by departments and occupations and the identification of external sources of women candidates, particularly in Member States that were unrepresented or underrepresented, in developing countries and in countries with economies in transition and in occupations in which women were underrepresented. Attention would also be paid to the further development of policies and practices to support the reconciliation of staff members' work and family responsibilities with the aim of attracting and retaining the best-qualified staff and enhancing their morale and productivity.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/54/598 & Corr.1.2], adopted resolution 54/139 without vote [agenda item 109].

Improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat

The General Assembly,

Recalling Articles 1 and 101 of the Charter of the United Nations, as well as Article 8, which provides that the United Nations shall place no restrictions on the eligibility of men and women to participate in any capacity and under conditions of equality in its principal and subsidiary organs,

Recalling also the goal, contained in the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women, of the achievement of overall gender equality, particularly at the Professional level and above, by the year 2000,

Taking into account the continuing lack of representation or underrepresentation of women from certain countries, in particular developing countries, including least developed countries and small island developing States, and countries with economies in transition,

Recalling its resolutions 53/119 of 9 December 1998 on the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat and 53/221 of 7 April 1999 on human resources management,

Welcoming the progress made in improving the representation of women at the D-1 level, but concerned that the representation of women at the senior and policy-making levels remains significantly below the goal of 50/50 gender distribution at these levels,

Welcoming also the fact that the percentage of women appointed at the D-2 level and promoted to the D-1 level exceeded the goal of 50 per cent,

Concerned that the appointment of women at all other levels, with the exception of the P-2 level, falls significantly below the goal of 50 per cent, and concerned at the incremental pace at which the overall representation of women in the Secretariat has increased,

Concerned also that some existing arrangements with Member States may impede the employment of spouses of United Nations staff members,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General and the framework for action contained therein;

2. Reaffirms the urgent goal of achieving 50/50 gender distribution in all categories of posts within the United Nations system, especially at the D-1 level and above, with full respect for the principle of equitable geographical distribution, in conformity with Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations, and also taking into account the continuing lack of representation or underrepresentation of women from certain countries, in particular developing countries and countries with economies in transition;

3. Regrets that the goal of 50/50 gender distribution will not be met by the year 2000, and urges the

Secretary-General to intensify his efforts to realize significant progress towards this goal by the end of 2000;

4. Requests the General Assembly, at its special session entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century", to be held in June 2000, to consider further forward-looking strategies for achieving 50/50 gender distribution in all categories of posts within the United Nations system, especially at the D-1 level and above, with full respect for the principle of equitable geographical distribution, in conformity with Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter, and also taking into account the continuing lack of representation or underrepresentation of women from certain countries, in particular developing countries and countries with economies in transition;

5. Welcomes the ongoing personal commitment of the Secretary-General to meeting the goal of gender equality and his assurance that gender balance will be given the highest priority in his continuing efforts to bring about a new management culture in the Organization, including full implementation of the special measures for the achievement of gender equality;

6. Also welcomes the continued provision of specific training programmes on gender mainstreaming and gender issues in the workplace, tailored to meet the special needs of individual departments, and commends those heads of departments and offices who have launched gender training for their managers and staff;

7. Strongly encourages heads of departments and offices who have not yet organized such training to do so by the end of the next biennium;

8. Calls upon the Secretary-General to implement fully and to monitor the strategic plan of action for the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat (1995-2000) in order to make notable progress towards the goal of 50/50 gender distribution by the end of the year 2000, especially at the D-1 level and above;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that individual managers are held accountable for implementing the strategic plan within their areas of responsibility;

10. Encourages the Secretary-General to appoint more women as special representatives and envoys and to pursue good offices on his behalf, especially in matters related to peacekeeping, peace-building, preventive diplomacy and economic and social development, and in operational activities, including as resident coordinators, as well as to appoint more women to other high-level positions;

11. Welcomes the inclusion of the objective of improving gender balance in action plans on human resources management for individual departments and offices, and encourages cooperation between the Special Adviser on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women and the Office of Human Resources Management of the Secretariat in the further elaboration and monitoring of these plans, which will include concrete strategies and specific targets for improving women's representation in each department and office;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to monitor closely the progress made by departments and offices in meeting the goal of gender balance and to ensure that the appointment and promotion of suitably qualified women will be no less than 50 per cent of all appointments and promotions until the goal of 50/50 gender distribution is met, including through full implementation of the special measures for women and the development of mechanisms to encourage, monitor and assess effectively the performance of programme managers in meeting targets for improving women's representation;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to develop innovative recruitment strategies to identify and attract suitably qualified women candidates, in particular in developing countries and countries with economies in transition, in other Member States that are unrepresented or underrepresented in the Secretariat and in occupations in which women are underrepresented;

15. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue his work to create within existing resources a gender-sensitive work environment supportive of the needs of his staff, both women and men, including through the development of policies for flexible working time, flexible workplace arrangements and child-care and elder-care needs, as well as through the provision of more comprehensive information to prospective candidates and new recruits on spouse-employment opportunities and the expansion of gender-sensitivity training in all departments and offices;

16. Further requests the Secretary-General to develop further the policy against harassment, including sexual harassment, and to issue clear, detailed guidelines for its application at Headquarters and in the field;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to enable the Office of the Special Adviser on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women to monitor effectively and facilitate progress in the implementation of the strategic plan and the special measures for women, including by ensuring access to the information required to carry out that work;

18. Strongly encourages Member States to support the efforts of the United Nations and the specialized agencies to achieve the goal of 50/50 gender distribution, especially at the D-1 level and above, by identifying and regularly submitting more women candidates for appointment to intergovernmental, judicial and expert bodies, identifying and proposing national recruitment sources that will assist the organizations of the United Nations system in identifying suitable women candidates, in particular from developing countries and countries with economies in transition, and encouraging more women to apply for positions within the Secretariat, the specialized agencies, funds and programmes and the regional commissions, including in areas in which women are underrepresented, such as peacekeeping, peace-building and other non-traditional areas;

19. Also strongly encourages Member States to identify women candidates for assignment to peacekeeping missions and to improve the representation of women in military and civilian police contingents;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission on the Status of Women at its forty-fourth session and to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution, including by providing statistics on the number and percentage of women in all organizational units and at all levels throughout the United Nations system and on the implementation of departmental action plans for the achievement of gender balance.

Multilingualism

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/23 [YUN 1997, p. 1472], the Secretary-General submitted an October report on efforts to promote multilingualism in the Secretariat [A/54/478]. He described the types of language programmes provided at major duty stations, language incentives offered, the use of working languages, translation of documents, recruitment and promotion, and the simultaneous distribution of language versions of documents. The Department of Public Information produced and disseminated a broad range of information materials in all mediums in both the working languages (English and French) and to the extent possible the other official languages of the Organization (Arabic, Chinese, Russian and Spanish).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/64 [draft: A/54/L.37 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 23].

Multilingualism

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 50/11 of 2 November 1995 and 52/23 of 25 November 1997,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Requests the Secretary-General to appoint a senior Secretariat official as coordinator of questions relating to multilingualism throughout the Secretariat;
3. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to it at its fifty-sixth session a comprehensive report on the implementation of resolution 50/11 and of the present resolution;
4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Multilingualism".

Staff rules and regulations

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/252 [YUN 1998, p. 1318], the Secretary-General submitted an August report containing the text of the Staff Regulations [A/54/276], which had been drafted in gender-neutral terms. The Regulations had also been amended to reflect the fact that the basis for calculation of termination indemnity and repatriation grant for all staff members was "gross salary less staff assessment"; "gross salary" would replace the term "pensionable remuneration".

In another August report [A/54/272], the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly amendments to the Staff Rules under the 100 series, covering salary advances, special leave, maternity leave, travel expenses, excess baggage and unaccompanied shipments, insurance, termination indemnity, repatriation grant and last day for pay purposes; under the 200 series, covering hours of work and official holidays, travel expenses, excess baggage and unaccompanied shipments, insurance, repatriation grant and conditions governing payment of that grant and last day for pay purposes; and under the 300 series, covering hours of work and official holidays, subsistence allowance, excess baggage and unaccompanied shipments and insurance.

By decision 54/460 A of 23 December, the Assembly approved the Secretary-General's proposed amendments to the Staff Regulations and took note of the amendments to the Staff Rules as set out in his report.

Safety and security

The Economic and Social Council and the Security Council both took action with regard to the safety and security of UN personnel in 1999. On 15 January, the 1994 Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, adopted by the General Assembly by resolution 49/59 [YUN 1994, p. 1289], entered into force, 30 days after the receipt of its twenty-second instrument of ratification.

The Economic and Social Council, in agreed conclusions of 23 July [A/54/3/Rev.1 (agreed conclusions 1999/1)], adopted at the humanitarian affairs segment of its substantive session (see p. 824), called on all parties to conflicts to respect international humanitarian and human rights law and to take measures to ensure the safety and security of international and local humanitarian personnel.

In resolution 1265(1999) of 17 September on the protection of civilians in armed conflict (see p. 649), the Security Council took note of the entry into force of the 1994 Convention and condemned attacks and the use of force against UN and associated personnel, as well as personnel of international humanitarian organizations, and affirmed the need to hold accountable those who committed such acts.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 84], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/192 [draft: A/54/L.70] without vote [agenda item 20].

Safety and security of humanitarian personnel and protection of United Nations personnel

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 on strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian emergency assistance of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolutions 53/87 of 7 December 1998 on safety and security of humanitarian personnel and protection of United Nations personnel, 52/167 of 16 December 1997 on safety and security of humanitarian personnel and 52/126 of 12 December 1997 on protection of United Nations personnel,

Welcoming agreed conclusions 1999/1 adopted by the Economic and Social Council at the humanitarian affairs segment of its substantive session of 1999,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on protection of civilians in armed conflicts, Security Council resolution 1265(1999) of 17 September 1999 and the recommendations made therein, the statement of the President of the Security Council of 12 February 1999 and the range of views expressed during the open debates of the Security Council on 12 February 1999 and 16 and 17 September 1999, on protection of civilians in armed conflicts, and bearing in mind the statements made by the President of the Council on 19 June 1997 and 29 September 1998, on protection for humanitarian assistance to refugees and others in conflict situations, as well as the statement made by the President of the Council on 8 July 1999 on maintenance of peace and security and post-conflict peace-building,

Recalling the fiftieth anniversary on 12 August 1999 of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, which reaffirmed the need to promote and ensure respect for the principles and rules of international humanitarian law,

Noting with satisfaction the entry into force on 15 January 1999 of the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel of 9 December 1994,

Deeply concerned by the growing number of complex humanitarian emergencies in the last few years, in particular in armed conflicts and in post-conflict situations, which have dramatically increased the loss of human lives, in particular of civilians, the suffering of victims, flows of refugees and internally displaced persons, as well as material destruction, which disrupt the development efforts of countries affected, in particular those of developing countries,

Concerned by the increasingly difficult context in which humanitarian assistance takes place in some areas, in particular the continuous erosion, in many cases, of respect for the principles and rules of international humanitarian law,

Strongly deploring the rising toll of casualties among national and international humanitarian personnel and United Nations and its associated personnel in complex humanitarian emergencies, in particular in armed conflicts and in post-conflict situations, and strongly condemning the acts of murder and other forms of physical violence, abduction, hostage-taking, kidnapping, harassment and illegal arrest and detention to which those participating in humanitarian operations are increasingly exposed, as well as acts of destruction and looting of their property,

Recalling that primary responsibility under international law for the security and protection of humanitarian personnel and United Nations and its associated personnel lies with the Government hosting a United Nations operation conducted under the Charter of the United Nations or its agreements with relevant organizations,

Urging all other parties involved in armed conflicts, in compliance with their obligations under the 1949

Geneva Conventions and the Additional Protocols thereto, to ensure the security and protection of all humanitarian personnel and United Nations and its associated personnel,

Expressing concern that the occurrence of attacks and threats against humanitarian personnel and United Nations and its associated personnel is a factor that increasingly restricts the ability of the Organization to provide assistance and protection to civilians in fulfilment of its mandate and Charter,

Recognizing the fundamental requirement that consideration be given to incorporating into all new and ongoing United Nations field operations appropriate modalities for the safety and security of humanitarian personnel and United Nations and its associated personnel,

Emphasizing the need to give further consideration to the safety and security of locally recruited humanitarian personnel and United Nations and its associated personnel, who count for the majority of casualties,

Welcoming the inclusion of attacks intentionally directed against personnel involved in a humanitarian assistance or peacekeeping mission in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations as a war crime in the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, adopted on 17 July 1998, and noting the role that the Court could play in bringing to justice those responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law,

Commending the courage and commitment of those who take part in humanitarian operations, often at great personal risk,

Guided by the relevant provisions on protection contained in the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies, the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, the Fourth Geneva Convention of 12 August 1949 and Additional Protocols of 8 June 1977 and Protocol II to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects of 10 October 1980,

1. Urges all States to take the necessary measures to ensure the full and effective implementation of the relevant principles and rules of international humanitarian law, as well as relevant provisions of human rights law related to the safety and security of humanitarian personnel and United Nations personnel;

2. Also urges all States to take the necessary measures to ensure the safety and security of humanitarian personnel and United Nations and its associated personnel and to respect and ensure respect for the inviolability of United Nations premises, which are essential to the continuation and successful implementation of United Nations operations;

3. Calls upon all Governments and parties in complex humanitarian emergencies, in particular in armed conflicts and in post-conflict situations, in countries where humanitarian personnel are operating, in conformity with the relevant provisions of international law and national laws, to cooperate fully with the United Nations and other humanitarian agencies and organizations and to ensure the safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel in order to allow them to perform efficiently their task of assisting the affected civilian population, including refugees and internally displaced persons;

4. Strongly condemns any act or failure to act which obstructs or prevents humanitarian personnel and United Nations personnel from discharging their humanitarian functions, or which entails their being subjected to threats, the use of force or physical attack frequently resulting in injury or death, and affirms the need to hold accountable those who commit such acts;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to ensure full respect for the human rights, privileges and immunities of United Nations and other personnel carrying out activities in fulfilment of the mandate of a United Nations operation and to continue to consider ways and means to strengthen the protection of United Nations and other personnel carrying out activities in fulfilment of the mandate of a United Nations operation, notably by seeking the inclusion, in negotiations of headquarters and other mission agreements concerning United Nations and its associated personnel, of the applicable conditions contained in the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies and the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel;

6. Urges all States to ensure that any threat or act of violence committed against humanitarian personnel on their territory is fully investigated and to take all appropriate measures, in accordance with international law and national legislation, to ensure that the perpetrators of such acts are prosecuted;

7. Also urges all States to provide adequate and prompt information in the event of arrest or detention of humanitarian personnel or United Nations personnel, to afford them the necessary medical assistance and to allow independent medical teams to visit and examine the health of those detained, and further urges all States to take the necessary measures to ensure the speedy release of United Nations and other personnel carrying out activities in fulfilment of the mandate of a United Nations operation who have been arrested or detained in violation of their immunity, in accordance with the relevant conventions referred to in the present resolution and applicable international humanitarian law;

8. Calls upon all States to consider signing and ratifying the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court;

9. Reaffirms the obligation of all humanitarian personnel and United Nations and its associated personnel to observe and respect the national laws of the country in which they are operating, in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures, falling within his responsibilities, to ensure that security matters are an integral part of the planning for existing and newly mandated United Nations operations and that such precautions extend to all United Nations and its associated personnel;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with United Nations agencies and other relevant international organizations, to compile examples of best practices, obstacles encountered and lessons learned with regard to the safety and security of humanitarian personnel and United Nations personnel, to ensure that this information is widely disseminated in the field and to include in his comprehensive report to it at its fifty-fifth session on the subject of the present resolution detailed information in this regard;

12. Further requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to ensure that United Nations and other personnel carrying out activities in fulfilment of the mandate of a United Nations operation are properly informed about the conditions under which they are called to operate, including relevant customs and traditions in the host country, and the standards that they are required to meet, including those contained in relevant domestic and international law, and that adequate training in security, human rights and humanitarian law, as well as stress counselling, are provided so as to enhance their security and effectiveness in accomplishing their functions, and reaffirms the necessity for all other humanitarian organizations to provide their personnel with similar support;

13. Encourages all States to contribute to the Trust Fund for Security of personnel of the United Nations system, and welcomes the inclusion of security components in the consolidated appeals to advance the cause of inter-agency security coordination;

14. Recognizes the need to strengthen the Office of United Nations Security Coordinator and the need for a full-time Security Coordinator to enable the Office to enhance its capacity in the discharge of its duties, in consultation with the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat and appropriate agencies within the Inter-Agency Standing Committee;

15. Encourages all States to become parties to and respect fully their obligations under the relevant international instruments, including the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel;

16. Welcomes the addendum on the safety and security of United Nations and humanitarian personnel to the Secretary-General's report on strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations, and requests the Secretary-General to submit to it at its fifty-fifth session a comprehensive report on the safety and security situation of humanitarian personnel and protection of United Nations personnel, including an account of the measures taken by Governments and the United Nations in prevention of and in response to all individual security incidents involving the arrest, hostage-taking or death of United Nations and its associated personnel;

17. Recognizes the urgency to consult further to address the recommendations contained in the above-mentioned addendum, to that end requests the Secretary-General to submit by May 2000, for its consideration during its fifty-fourth session, a report containing a detailed analysis and recommendations addressing the scope of legal protection under the 1994 Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, and in this regard takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on protection of civilians in armed conflicts and the range of views expressed during the open debates of the Security Council on 12 February 1999 and 16 and 17 September 1999, on protection of civilians in armed conflicts.

Personnel practices

Pursuant to a request made by ACABQ in its first report on the proposed programme budget for the 2000-2001 biennium [A/54/7], the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a note on personnel practices and policies [A/C.5/54/21]. ACABQ noted that, although the Secretary-General was frequently assisted by decisions of the Assembly in carrying forward the human resources management reform effort, in certain cases problems were encountered in implementing the Assembly resolutions, which had affected his efforts to move forward.

The Secretary-General observed that the Secretariat would require more experience with implementation of the most recent resolution on human resources management (resolution 53/221, p. 1324), before presenting an analysis. With respect to the major problems identified by ACABQ, the Secretariat was working on simplification of the complex personnel regulations, development of a new recruitment and placement procedure and mechanisms to expedite the mobility of staff.

The Secretary-General's intention was to review the implementation of resolution 53/221 and, in the light of that experience, submit his views in detail to the Assembly at its fifty-fifth (2000) session within the context of his comprehensive report on human resources management reform.

Delegation of authority

In response to a request contained in General Assembly resolution 53/221 (see p. 1324), the Secretary-General submitted, through ACABQ, a note containing a compendium of all administrative circulars issued on the delegation of authority in the context of human resources management [A/54/257]. The note focused on the delegation of the authority exercised by the Secretary-General as chief administrative officer of the Organization under Article 97 of the Charter.

Commenting on the Secretary-General's note in its report on human resources management [A/54/450], ACABQ stated that procedures should be in place to monitor the implementation of the delegation of authority throughout the Organization and that there was an urgent need to carry out an exercise to simplify and streamline the rules on delegation of authority.

Competitive examination

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/221 (see p. 1324), the Secretary-General transmitted a note [A/C.5/54/2] on the realignment of the competitive examinations for promotion to the Professional category of staff members from other categories (G to P) with the national competitive examinations, in particular regarding academic qualifications, equitable geographical distribution and equal treatment with regard to probationary appointments. The Secretary-General drew attention to the fundamental difference between the two examinations: the former was a promotion exercise and the latter a recruitment exercise. In response to earlier resolutions, the two had been brought into broad alignment in that the same examination was offered to all candidates and all needed to possess a university degree in the subject matter of the examination. However, as the objective of the external examination was recruitment, there was an upper age limit for candidates (32), while there was none for the G to P. On the other hand, G-to-P candidates had to possess five years of experience within the Organization.

Following the inclusion of the new element of "equitable geographical distribution" for the G-to-P examination in resolution 53/221, staff members expressed grave concern about the negative impact on career development if the application of that principle took effect. The Assistant Secretary-General for Human Resources Management had informed the staff that, although the examination would take place, the marking of the papers of candidates from over-represented countries would be subject to the outcome of a review of the issue by the Assembly at its fifty-fourth session.

The Secretary-General was particularly concerned about the potential for inequitable treatment of staff, which might not be consistent with the Charter. Any treatment of serving staff members based solely on nationality would be of questionable legality and very damaging to staff morale. In addition, it would be contrary to the Assembly's repeated requests to promote the career development of staff at all levels and the implementation of the new provision would deny specific staff members any possibility of promotion because of their nationality. Lastly, it would have a negative effect on the Secretary-General's efforts to increase the number of women in the Professional category since nearly two thirds of those sitting for and succeeding in the examination were women.

The Secretary-General requested the Assembly to reconsider the issue with a view to removing the concept of equitable geographical distribution as a factor for the alignment of the examinations.

In its October report on human resources management [A/54/450], ACABQ stated that the issue that needed to be addressed was whether the G-to-P examination was a promotion exercise or a means of recruitment. It noted the discrepancies in the initial Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) recommendation and Assembly resolutions 33/143 [YUN 1978, p. 988] and 35/210 [YUN 1980, p. 1164] related to the introduction of the examination. ACABQ recommended that the Assembly should decide whether the examination was a promotion or recruitment exercise, which in turn would determine how the necessity for equitable geographical distribution would be recognized. If the examination was determined to be a recruitment exercise, that would be a decision determining that there were two entirely separate and distinct categories of staff and career tracks and that there could be no internal movement between them. Under those circumstances, the Assembly might wish to consider discontinuing the G-to-P examination and limiting recruitment to the national competitive examination. If, on the other hand, the Assembly confirmed that the G-to-P examination was a promotion exercise, then other considerations would apply, primarily the question of equitable geographical distribution. ACABQ was of the view that JIU took that element into consideration when it limited the movement of staff through the G-to-P examination to 30 per cent of posts available at the P-1 and P-2 levels. In not considering equitable geographical distribution solely, the Organization could make full use of the capabilities and acquired knowledge and skills of its staff by encouraging career development, as well as fostering gender equality.

Staff College

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1999/271 of 28 July, noting the importance of specific training and upgrading of the skills of UN personnel, with a view to increasing the effectiveness of UN programme activities in the area of development and improving the implementation of follow-up action to major UN conferences, invited the General Assembly to discuss the activities of the United Nations Staff College (Turin, Italy) during its fifty-fourth session, with a view to further considering the question at its fifty-fifth (2000) session, on the basis of recommendations of the Secretary-General on the future status and operations of the College at the conclusion of its pilot phase in December 2000.

In October [A/54/481], the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly a progress report by the Director of the College. He recalled that the rationale for the College, which was established in 1996 for an initial period of five years [YUN 1996, p. 1050] to train international civil servants throughout the UN system, was to strengthen collaboration within the system in areas that cut across traditional lines of organizational responsibility. The College, entrusted for implementation to the ILO International Training Centre in Turin, was conceived as a global network of training centres and academic and professional institutions. It collaborated closely with the United Nations University and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research. The main training areas to be covered were: international peace and security, human rights and humanitarian emergency management; economic and social development; coordination training; and management development and organizational change in the UN system.

Voluntarily funded by UN Member States and UN organizations, the College's total income was $4 million in 1998 and an estimated $7 million in 1999. The goal for 2000 was $10 million. In the three and a half years of its existence, 3,500 middle and senior UN staff participated in its programmes, with special attention paid to key positions of inter-agency concern in development support and related areas, such as resident coordinators and UN country teams. In October 1998, the College undertook a major review and needs analysis and developed a new future strategy for the design and implementation of training and learning activities, focusing on the change and reform process of the United Nations, especially at the field level. It redefined its strategic direction into four product areas: executive/learning forums on issues of global concern; learning and training workshops; expert services; and networking/clearing house providing specific support services.

The Secretary-General stated in his transmittal note that, pursuant to Economic and Social Council decision 1999/271 and taking into account the outcome of discussions in the Assembly, he intended, in consultation with ACC, to elaborate arrangements that would enable the Staff College to be placed on a more secure and stable footing, beyond the initial project phase, and to report thereon to the Assembly at its fifty-fifth session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/54/590], adopted resolution 54/228 without vote [agenda item 102].

United Nations Staff College in Turin, Italy

The General Assembly,

Recalling the decision taken by the Secretary-General in January 1996 to establish, in Turin, Italy, the United Nations Staff College project for an initial period of five years,

Reaffirming the importance of a coordinated United Nations system-wide approach to research and to training based on an effective division of labour among the relevant institutions and bodies,

Noting, in this respect, the pertinent recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council decision 1999/271 of 28 July 1999,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the progress report submitted by the Director of the United Nations Staff College on the activities undertaken so far by the College, in particular those aimed at strengthening the performance of the United Nations in the areas of economic and social development and international peace and security and promoting a common United Nations management culture;

2. Notes with appreciation the relevant technical, logistic and administrative contributions provided by the International Training Centre of the International Labour Organization;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to consult with the Administrative Committee on Coordination and the relevant United Nations organizations and to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a report on the College, based on a full and independent evaluation of the implementation and the completion of the activities undertaken by the College, incorporating the College's corporate plan and programme of action, and including recommendations on the future status, funding and operations of the College after the conclusion of its pilot phase in December 2000.

General temporary assistance

ACABQ, in its first report on the proposed programme budget for the 2000-2001 biennium [A/54/7], indicated that general temporary assistance (GTA) should not be used to compensate for reductions in established posts and noted a number of instances where staff requirements of a continuing nature had been met or were proposed to be met through GTA rather than by requesting temporary or established posts. It requested the Secretary-General to provide information to the General Assembly on the disposition of resources for the specific GTA positions reflected in the proposed programme budget for the 2000-2001 biennium [A/54/6/Rev.1], with proposals for either temporary or established posts or an explanation of why continued use of GTA would be necessary.

In response to that request, the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly a November note on the use of GTA for specific positions [A/C.5/54/33]. He stated that the GTA positions proposed for 2000-2001 ranged from relatively long-term arrangements to new proposals. Generally, such positions had been associated with some degree of uncertainty as to the need for them to be retained in the definite future, either at their existing level or pattern of grades and categories. The Secretary-General gave reasons for the requests for specific positions related to the Integrated Management Information System (IMIS), the United Nations Office of the Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories, human rights, subregional development centres of the Economic Commission for Africa and the United Nations Office at Nairobi (UNON). With regard to the posts for IMIS and UNON, he stated that the issue would be addressed in the context of the proposed programme budget for the 2002-2003 biennium, based on the experience gained in 2000-2001.

In its sixth report on the proposed programme budget for 2000-2001 [A/54/7/Add.5], ACABQ noted that, in many cases, the requested GTA positions were not converted to temporary posts because of the need for flexibility. ACABQ was of the opinion that ample flexibility was afforded through the use of short-term or fixed-term contracts. It stressed that the Secretary-General should be guided solely by Assembly resolutions in the area of administrative and budgetary practice and pointed out that the funding of positions of a continuing nature under GTA was a departure from approved budgetary practice.

The Assembly, in resolution 54/251, section XIII, of 23 December, took note of the Secretary-General's note and endorsed the recommendations in ACABQ's sixth report.

UN Joint Staff Pension Fund

During the biennium ended 31 December 1999, the number of participants in the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund (UNJSPF) increased from 67,740 to 68,935, or by 1.8 per cent; the number of periodic benefits in award increased from 43,149 to 46,199, or by 7.1 per cent. On 31 December, the breakdown of the periodic benefits in award was as follows: 14,599 retirement benefits, 9,499 early retirement benefits, 6,501 deferred retirement benefits, 6,957 widows' and widowers' benefits, 7,796 children's benefits, 803 disability benefits and 44 secondary dependants' benefits. In the course of the year, 4,762 lump sum withdrawal and other settlements were paid.

With the withdrawal of the World Trade Organization, effective 31 December 1998, the number of member organizations of the Fund stood at 19.

The Fund was administered by the 33-member United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, which did not meet in 1999 due to the biennialization of the work of the Fifth Committee. Instead, its Standing Committee met on its behalf (New York, 13-16 July) [A/54/206]. It discussed matters related to the administration and operation of the Fund, revised budget estimates for the 1998-1999 biennium, budget estimates for the 2000-2001 biennium and the authorization for contributions to the Emergency Fund for 2000-2001.

In October [A/54/7/Add.1], ACABQ, commenting on the Standing Committee's report, concurred with the recommendation for revised appropriations for administrative expenses amounting to $57,514,000 for the 1998-1999 biennium and $62,301,100 for the 2000-2001 biennium. It also agreed with the proposal to supplement the voluntary contributions to the Emergency Fund by an amount not exceeding $200,000 for 2000-2001.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 88], on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/691], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/251, section V, without vote [agenda item 121].

Pension Fund investments

The market value of UNJSPF assets as at 31 December 1999 was $25.9 billion, an increase of $4 billion over the previous year. The total investment return for the year was 19.9 per cent, which, after adjusting for inflation, represented a "real" rate of return of 16.9 per cent. Investment income from interest and dividends amounted to $682 million. New funds that became available for investment (contributions plus investment income, less benefit payment and administrative expenses) totalled $1.1 billion. The Fund's investment income during the 1998-1999 biennium amounted to $2.2 billion, comprising $1.4 billion in interest and dividends and $839 million in net profit on sales of investments. After deductions of investment management costs amounting to $37 million, net investment income was $2.2 billion.

The Fund remained one of the most diversified pension funds in the world, with 56.8 per cent of its assets exposed to currencies other than the United States dollar, which was the Fund's unit of account.

Administration of justice

In its annual note to the General Assembly [A/INF/54/6], the United Nations Administrative Tribunal reported in December that it had delivered 32 judgements during 1999, its fiftieth anniversary year. They related to cases brought by staff against the Secretary-General or the executive heads of other UN bodies to resolve disputes involving terms of appointment and related issues and regulations.

The Tribunal met in plenary session in New York on 23 November and held two panel sessions (Geneva, 28 June-30 July; New York, 25 October-24 November).

Review of statute

In accordance with decision 53/430 [YUN 1998, p. 1329], the General Assembly had on the agenda of its fifty-fourth session an item on the review of the statute of the Administrative Tribunal, which was discussed in the Sixth (Legal) Committee. France, Ireland and the United Kingdom sponsored a draft resolution [A/C.6/54/L.13/Rev.1], which, among other things, proposed various amendments to the Tribunal's statute. The Committee took no action on the draft.

On 9 December, the Assembly decided to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth (2000) session the item "Review of the statute of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal" (decision 54/429).

Chapter IV

Institutional and administrative matters

A number of institutional and administrative matters were reviewed by the United Nations in 1999. The General Assembly held its fifty-fourth session and resumed fifty-third session. It also convened its twenty-first and twenty-second special sessions and resumed its tenth emergency special session. The Assembly granted observer status to the Customs Cooperation Council, the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization, the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries and the International Union for the Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources. Three States were admitted to United Nations membership, bringing the total number to 188.

During the year, the Security Council held 124 formal meetings to deal with regional conflicts, peacekeeping operations and a wide variety of other issues related to the maintenance of international peace and security.

The Economic and Social Council held its 1999 organizational session in January, February, March, May and June and its substantive session in July, September, October, November and December. The Council adopted resolutions on a wide range of economic, social and related issues. It also granted consultative status in various categories to a number of non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

UN bodies concerned with administrative and coordination matters, including the Administrative Committee on Coordination, the Committee for Programme and Coordination and the Joint Inspection Unit, also continued their work in 1999.

The Committee on Conferences examined requests for changes to the calendar of conferences and meetings for 1999. It recommended measures to improve utilization of conference-servicing resources, including the introduction of new technologies, and to improve career prospects for language staff. The Economic and Social Council continued its review of timely and effective responses to the year 2000 computer challenge. Progress was reported in the implementation of the Integrated Management Information System, implementation of the Secretary-General's common services strategy and on the harmonization of UN informatic systems. Efforts to enhance the safety and security of UN staff at all duty stations were also reviewed.

Institutional machinery

Admission to UN membership

During 1999, three States—Kiribati, Nauru and Tonga—were admitted to the United Nations, bringing the total membership of the Organization to 188.

The Security Council recommended the Republic of Kiribati and the Republic of Nauru for membership on 25 June and the Kingdom of Tonga on 28 July. On 14 September, the General Assembly admitted them to UN membership.

Admission of Kiribati

On 25 June [meeting 4016], the Security Council, acting on the application of the Republic of Kiribati [A/53/426-S/1999/477], adopted resolution 1248(1999) without vote. The draft [S/1999/715] was prepared by the Committee on the Admission of New Members.

The Security Council,

Having examined the application of the Republic of Kiribati for admission to the United Nations, Recommends to the General Assembly that the Republic of Kiribati be admitted to membership in the United Nations.

Following the adoption of the resolution, the Council President made statement S/PRST/1999/18 congratulating Kiribati on behalf of the Council members, who had taken note of Kiribati's commitment to uphold the UN Charter and fulfil all of its obligations.

The General Assembly, in resolution 54/1 of 14 September, admitted the Republic of Kiribati to membership in the United Nations.

Admission of Nauru

On 25 June, the Security Council considered the application of the Republic of Nauru for UN membership [A/53/927-S/1999/478]. China, speaking before the vote, stated that it was most essential that the purposes and principles of the Charter be fully complied with, that General Assembly resolution 2758(XXVI) [YUN 1971, p. 136] be implemented and that all new Members comply with Assembly resolutions. On the basis of that principled position, China could not support the Council's recommendation to the Assembly, but would not block it. It hoped that after joining the United Nations, Nauru would strictly comply with UN resolutions, including resolution 2758(XXVI).

On 25 June [meeting 4017], the Council adopted resolution 1249(1999) by vote (14-0-1). The draft [S/1999/716] was prepared by the Committee on the Admission of New Members.

The Security Council,

Having examined the application of the Republic of Nauru for admission to the United Nations, Recommends to the General Assembly that the Republic of Nauru be admitted to membership in the United Nations.

VOTE ON RESOLUTION 1249(1999):

In favour: Argentina, Bahrain, Brazil, Canada, France, Gabon, Gambia, Malaysia, Namibia, Netherlands, Russian Federation, Slovenia, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: None.

Abstaining: China.

Following the adoption of the resolution, the Council President made statement S/PRST/1999/19 congratulating Nauru on behalf of the Council members, who had taken note of Nauru's commitment to uphold the UN Charter and fulfil all of its obligations.

The Assembly, in resolution 54/2 of 14 September, admitted the Republic of Nauru to UN membership.

Admission of the Kingdom of Tonga

On 28 July [meeting 4026], acting on the application of the Kingdom of Tonga [A/53/1022-S/1999/793], the Security Council adopted resolution 1253(1999) without vote. The draft [S/1999/823] was prepared by the Committee on the Admission of New Members.

The Security Council,

Having examined the application of the Kingdom of Tonga for admission to the United Nations, Recommends to the General Assembly that the Kingdom of Tonga be admitted to membership in the United Nations.

Following the adoption of the resolution, the Council President made statement S/PRST/1999/23 congratulating Tonga on behalf of the Council members, who had taken note of Tonga's commitment to uphold the UN Charter and fulfil all of its obligations.

The General Assembly, in resolution 54/3 of 14 September, admitted the Kingdom of Tonga to UN membership.

General Assembly

The General Assembly met throughout 1999; it resumed and concluded its fifty-third session and held the major part of its fifty-fourth session. The fifty-third session was resumed in plenary meetings on 18 February, 23 and 24 March, 7 and 23 April, 24 and 25 May, 8, 23 and 29 June, 12 and 28 July and 2 and 13 September. The fifty-fourth session opened on 14 September and continued until its suspension on 23 December.

The Assembly also held its twenty-first special session on the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development from 30 June to 2 July (see p. 1005); its twenty-second special session to review and appraise the implementation of the Barbados Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States on 27 and 28 September (see p. 771); and resumed the tenth emergency special session to discuss "Illegal Israeli actions in Occupied East Jerusalem and the rest of the Occupied Territory" from 5 to 9 February (see p. 402).

Organization of Assembly sessions

1999 sessions

On 17 September, by decision 54/401, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee [A/54/250 & Corr.1], adopted a number of provisions concerning the organization of the fifty-fourth session.

The Committee's recommendations concerned rationalization of the Assembly's work; closing date of the session; schedule of meetings; general debate; explanations of vote, right of reply, points of order and length of statements; resolutions; documentation; questions related to the programme budget; observances and commemorative meetings; special conferences; and meetings of subsidiary organs. The Committee made observations and proposals on the organization of future Assembly sessions and recommendations concerning the agenda.

On 7 April, the Assembly, in resolution 53/224, decided that the fifty-third session should close on Monday, 13 September, and that the fifty-fourth session should open on Tuesday, 14 September.

By decision 54/401 of 11 October, the Assembly decided to hold the commemoration of the tenth anniversary of the Convention on the Rights of the Child in the morning of Thursday, 11 November (see p. 579).

The Assembly authorized a number of bodies to meet during its fifty-fourth session: the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)/United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) and the Committee on Relations with the Host Country (decision 54/403 A of 14 September); the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People and the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (decision 54/403 B of 17 September); the Preparatory Committee for the Twenty-fourth Special Session of the General Assembly (decision 54/403 C of 20 September); and the Committee on Information (decision 54/403 D of the same date).

Credentials

The Credentials Committee, at its first meeting on 15 October [A/54/475], had before it a memorandum from the Secretary-General indicating that, as at 14 October, 133 Member States had submitted the formal credentials of their representatives. The Legal Counsel stated that information concerning representatives of other Member States whose formal credentials had not yet been received would be reported on later by the Secretary-General.

The Committee also examined the credentials of Afghanistan, from which it had received two separate sets of credentials: a communication signed by Burhanuddin Rabbani, "President of the Islamic State of Afghanistan", presenting a delegation whose head was identified as the "Vice-Minister for Foreign Affairs"; and the other signed by Mullah Mohammad Rabbani, "President of the Acting Council of the Islamic Emirate of Afghanistan", presenting a delegation whose head was identified as the "Deputy Foreign Minister". The Committee deferred a decision on those credentials on the understanding that the current representatives accredited to the United Nations would continue to participate in the work of the Assembly.

The Committee adopted a resolution accepting the credentials received and recommended to the Assembly a draft resolution for adoption. On 25 October, the Assembly, by resolution 54/6 A, approved the report of the Credentials Committee.

At its second meeting on 3 December [A/54/475/Add.1], the Committee considered a memorandum from the Secretary-General of 2 December, which was updated by the Assistant Secretary-General for Legal Affairs, indicating that formal credentials had been received from an additional 20 Member States. Information concerning representatives of 33 other Member States had been communicated also.

The Committee adopted a resolution accepting the credentials received and recommended to the Assembly a draft resolution for adoption. On 9 December, the Assembly, by resolution 54/6 B, approved the second report of the Credentials Committee.

Agenda

During its resumed fifty-third session, the General Assembly took a number of actions relating to its agenda, which were listed in decision 53/402 B: it included an additional item on observer status for the Customs Cooperation Council in the Assembly (18 February); reopened consideration of the items on human rights questions (23 March) and on the report of the Economic and Social Council (7 April); included an additional sub-item on the confirmation of the appointment of the UNDP Administrator (23 April); reopened consideration of the election of judges of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (24 May); decided to consider the agenda items on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations and on human resources management in order to consider the request contained in the Secretary-General's letter to the Assembly President [A/53/1001] (23 June); included an additional item on the financing of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo and reopened consideration of the item on implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development to consider the request contained in the letter addressed to the Assembly President from the Chairman of the Preparatory Committee for the Special Session of the General Assembly on the Implementation of the Outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and Further Initiatives [A/53/1015] (12 July); and decided to consider the sub-item on appointment of members of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) so as to consider the Secretary-General's note [A/53/101/Add.1] and the item on the scale of assessments for the apportionment of the expenses of the United Nations in plenary to consider the letter from the Chairman of the Committee on Contributions to the Assembly President [A/53/1046] (2 September).

On 13 September, the Assembly decided to include in the draft agenda of the fifty-fourth session the following items: armed aggression against the Democratic Republic of the Congo (decision 53/488); appointment of the Under-Secretary-General for Internal Oversight Services (decision 53/489); question of the Comorian island of Mayotte (decision 53/490); revitalization of the work of the General Assembly (deci- sion 53/491); restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields (decision 53/492); question of Cyprus (decision 53/493); improving the financial situation of the United Nations (decision 53/494); financing of the United Nations Operation in Mozambique (decision 53/495); and report of the Secretary-General on the activities of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (decision 53/496).

On 17 September, by decision 54/402 A, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee [A/54/250 & Corr.1], adopted the agenda [A/54/251] and the allocation of agenda items for the fifty-fourth session to the plenary or appropriate Main Committee [A/54/252 & Corr.1]. It deferred consideration of the item on the question of the Malagasy islands of Glorieuses, Juan de Nova, Europa and Bassas da India and included it in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth (2000) session.

On 11 October, by the same decision, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee [A/54/250/Add.1], included an additional item on its agenda, observer status for the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries in the Assembly, and an additional sub-item on relocation of South Africa to the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (c) of Assembly resolution 43/232 (see p. 62). At the same meeting, the Assembly, recalling its decision to allocate consideration of the sub-item on operational activities for development of the UN system to the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, decided to consider only the topic of follow-up to the World Summit for Children directly in plenary.

On 1 November, the Assembly, by the same decision, included an additional item on financing of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone.

On 6 December, the Assembly, also by the same decision, on the recommendation of the General Committee [A/54/250/Add.2], included an additional item on international recognition of the Day of Vesak and, on the Secretary-General's proposal, included an additional item on financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor and reopened consideration of the sub-item on election of five members of the International Court of Justice.

The Assembly, on 9 December, deferred consideration of the item entitled "Implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations" and included it in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session (decision 54/427).

On 23 December, the Assembly decided to retain 71 items for consideration during its resumed fifty-fourth session in 2000 (decision 54/465).

Second, Third and Fifth Committees

The General Assembly, by decision 54/452 of 22 December, approved the biennial programme of work of the Second Committee for 2000-2001.

On 17 December, by decision 54/437, the Assembly approved the organization of work of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee and its 2000-2001 programme of work.

On 23 December, the Assembly, by decision 54/463, approved the biennial programme of work of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee for 2000-2001.

Security Council

The Security Council held 124 formal meetings in 1999, adopted 65 resolutions and issued 34 presidential statements. It considered 42 agenda items (see APPENDIX IV). In September [A/54/398], the Secretary-General, in accordance with Article 12, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations and with the consent of the Council, notified the General Assembly of 35 matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security that the Council had discussed since his previous annual notification [YUN 1998, p. 1333] and listed 36 matters that the Council had not discussed since then. On 25 October, the Assembly, by decision 54/410, took note of the Secretary-General's note.

Documentation

Working methods and procedures

The Security Council President, in a January note on the work of the sanctions committees [S/1999/92], issued a set of practical proposals for improving their work, agreed to by all Council members. In a February note [S/1999/165], he stated that all Council members should be allowed to participate fully in the preparation of Council resolutions and statements of the President. Contributions by members of groups of friends and other similar arrangements were welcome and sufficient time should be allowed for consultation among all Council members and their consideration of the drafts prior to action by the Council.

In December [S/1999/1291], the President reported that the Council had agreed that every effort should be made to determine which matters, including situations involving specific countries, could usefully be considered in public meetings of the Council, in particular in the early stage in its consideration of a subject. The President should make draft resolutions and presidential statements available to non-Council members as soon as they were introduced within informal consultations of the whole. Briefings of non-Council members by the presidency should cover elements presented by the President to the press, and should take place shortly after informal consultations of the whole. The Council President should make available to non-Council members copies of statements provided to the media following informal consultations, as well as briefing notes on peacekeeping field operations distributed to Council members.

The Council also agreed, in an effort to advance the resolution of a matter under consideration, to use a range of meeting options. The President also set out the formats for meetings to be held in public and private.

Membership

The General Assembly continued to examine the issue of expanding the membership of the Security Council, and received the report [A/53/47] of its Open-ended Working Group on the Question of Equitable Representation on and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council and Other Matters related to the Security Council, established by Assembly resolution 48/26 [YUN 1993, p. 212] (see p. 1278).

On 13 September, the Assembly, by decision 53/487, took note of the Working Group's report and decided that it should continue its work and report before the end of the Assembly's fifty-fourth session.

Economic and Social Council

In 1999, the Economic and Social Council held its organizational session on 20 January and on 2, 3 and 5 February, a resumed organizational session on 25 March, 6 and 7 May and 23 June and a special high-level meeting with the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund) on 29 April, all in New York. The Council held its substantive session on 23 June in New York and from 5 to 30 July in Geneva. The resumed substantive session was held in New York on 16 September, 26 October, 15 November and 16 December.

On 20 January and 2 February, the Council elected five members to its Bureau—the President for 1999 and four Vice-Presidents (see APPENDIX III). On 20 January, it adopted the agenda of its organizational session [E/1999/2 & Add.1]. On 2 February, by decision 1999/201, it approved the provisional agenda for the 1999 substantive session. By decision 1999/211 of 25 March, it approved the working arrangements for the substantive session.

On 23 June, the Council adopted the agenda of its 1999 substantive session [E/1999/100 & Add.1] and approved the programme of work of the session [E/1999/L.16]. On 7 July, it approved requests by NGOs to be heard [E/1999/95 & Add.1].

(For agenda lists, see APPENDIX IV.)

Sessions and segments

During 1999, the Economic and Social Council adopted 67 resolutions and 100 decisions. By decision 1999/204 of 2 February, the Council decided that: the informal meeting of the Council to consider work carried out by the UN system on basic indicators measuring progress on implementation and follow-up to major UN conferences and summits should be held in New York on 10 and 11 May; and the 1999 session of the Committee on NGOs should be held in New York from 1 to 18 June. By decision 1999/211 of 25 March, the Council decided that the high-level segment of its substantive session would be held from 5 to 7 July, the ceremony for the commemoration of the tenth anniversary of the Convention on the Rights of the Child should be held on 8 July, the operational activities segment should be held from 8 to 13 July, the humanitarian affairs segment from 13 to 15 July, the coordination segment from 16 to 20 July, the general segment from 21 to 28 July, and 30 July should be devoted to the adoption of proposals and the conclusion of the session.

The 1999 work of the Council was summarized in its report to the Assembly [A/54/3/Rev.1]. On 17 (decision 54/438), 22 (decision 54/451) and 23 (decisions 54/461 and 54/464) December, the Assembly took note of various chapters of that report.

On 29 July, by decision 1999/280, the Economic and Social Council approved the calendar of conferences and meetings for 2000 and 2001 in the economic, social and related fields [E/1999/L.18 & Add.1,2].

By decision 1999/281 of 30 July, the Council decided on the following themes for its substantive session in 2000: the high-level segment would be devoted to "Development and international cooperation in the twenty-first century: the role of information technology in the context of a knowledge-based global economy"; the coordination segment would be devoted to "Assessment of the progress made within the United Nations system, through the conference reviews, in the promotion of an integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields"; and the sectoral theme would be "Coordinated implementation by the United Nations system of the Habitat Agenda".

By decision 1999/291 of 26 October, the Council decided that the election of the President of the Council for the year 2000 would take place on 27 January.

Work programme

On 2 February, the Economic and Social Council considered its basic programme of work for 1999 and 2000 [E/1999/1]. By decision 1999/202, the Council took note of the list of questions for inclusion in the programme of work for 2000.

On 16 December, by decision 1999/295, the Council further postponed consideration of the Secretary-General's report on the ninth meeting of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters to its 2000 substantive session.

Restructuring issues

The Economic and Social Council continued consideration of General Assembly resolutions 50/227 [YUN 1996, p. 1249] and 52/12 B [YUN 1997, p. 1392] on further measures for the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields. By resolution 1999/1 of 2 February, the Council noted: the Secretary-General's report on restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields (see p. 1279); the joint exploratory review of cooperation between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions (see p. 890); and the Secretariat's consolidated report on the outcomes of the functional commissions of the Council in 1998 (see p. 1279).

Coordination, monitoring and cooperation

Institutional mechanisms

ACC activities

During 1999, the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) elaborated efforts to strengthen the dialogue between ACC and the central intergovernmental machinery, particularly the Economic and Social Council, as well as inter-agency coordination efforts to meet the challenges of the twenty-first century. In its annual overview report for 1999 [E/2000/53], ACC stated that, as the UN system entered a new century and addressed the challenges of globalization, the content and purpose of inter-agency coordination were taking on a new policy significance and a new, central place in the policy concerns and initiatives of the organizations of the system. ACC examined the interactions with the private sector and the UN system's institutional and programmatic capacity to respond to the challenges of the twenty-first century. ACC agreed that, in pursuing a "compact" or understanding with the private sector, the development dimension should be stressed and drawn particularly from the programmes of action agreed by the international community at the series of global conferences. It endorsed the common strands emerging from the retreat held in April 1999 and subsequent contributions from executive heads as guidance for further inter-agency work, including providing a common agenda for the future work of the system, addressing the mobilization of resources to overcome the major constraint to promoting the global agenda, and the need to build new and broader partnerships to achieve regional and global objectives.

Other issues receiving attention were follow-up to UN conferences and summits in the 1990s, peace and sustainable development in Africa and HIV/AIDS. ACC agreed to address a statement to the General Assembly's special session in 2000 entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century", which would present a compelling vision stressing the link between poverty reduction and gender issues (see p. 1075). ACC endorsed the conclusions of the first inter-agency meeting for the Africa region (Nairobi, Kenya, March) (see p. 849). It expressed strong support for the decisions of the Joint UN Programme on HIV/AIDS and its co-sponsors to intensify action in Africa, through the International Partnership against AIDS in Africa (see p. 1148).

ACC also discussed the functioning of the International Civil Service Commission (see p. 1319), UN staff security and safety (see p. 1336) and elements of its programme of work for 2000.

During the year, ACC held two regular sessions (Geneva, 9-10 April, and New York, 29-30 October). Its principal subsidiary bodies met as follows:

Report for 1998

ACC's annual overview report for 1998 [E/1999/48] was considered on 11 June by the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) [A/54/16]. CPC noted improvements in the report, stating that it was more comprehensive, analytical and focused on specific issues. It recommended that future reports should contain more information on levels of aid flows and provide details on follow-up action taken on past ACC decisions. It requested information on implementation by the UN system of Economic and Social Council legislative mandates, those mandates not implemented and the reasons why. The Committee supported the priority attention given to Africa by ACC and the latter's agreement that there should be no lessening of support for African development. Support for ACC's conclusions on poverty eradication was also expressed and CPC indicated that it was important for ACC to continue to deal with the issue of globalization and monitor the impact of the financial crisis and other negative consequences of globalization. CPC recommended that priority be given to follow-up on outcomes of UN conferences and summits, as well as assurance of adequate financial resources. The Committee took note of ACC's treatment of Article 50 of the Charter and strongly indicated that action was required to assist those countries affected by the impact of sanctions on third-party States. It supported ACC's attention to the safety and security of UN staff and encouraged universal ratification of the 1994 Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, adopted by General Assembly resolution 49/59 [YUN 1994, p. 1289].

The Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1999/57 of 30 July, took note of the ACC report.

Review of ACC

In an August note [A/54/288], the Secretary-General transmitted a Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) report on the review of ACC and its machinery. The review was conducted in the context of ongoing initiatives aimed at strengthening ACC's effectiveness and impact and improving its interaction with intergovernmental bodies.

JIU found that, as the only forum that brought together the executive heads of all UN organizations, recent initiatives in line with ACC's agreed guiding principles had brought a better sense of leadership and ownership among its members, and it should strive to remain relevant in a constantly evolving international environment.

JIU recommended that to enhance further the coherence of UN system-wide plans and activities, executive heads should reinforce the Secretary-General's leadership role as ACC Chairman, and the lead role of other executive heads and their respective organizations in their specific mandates and competencies. ACC should continue to demonstrate the relevance and impact of its work by addressing issues that lent themselves to system-wide scrutiny, developing policy-oriented and forward-looking agendas and ensuring that the outcomes of its meetings and those of its subsidiary bodies were more action-oriented. Executive heads should propose to the Economic and Social Council a new name for ACC that would better reflect the changes in its scope and functions.

JIU also made a number of recommendations regarding ACC machinery and interaction between ACC and intergovernmental bodies.

In a November note [A/54/288/Add.1], the Secretary-General transmitted his comments and those of ACC on the JIU report. In their general comments, ACC members welcomed the objectives of the report and its timeliness, in the context of UN reforms and ACC's own efforts for transformation and change to meet effectively the new challenges ahead. They said the report gave a balanced assessment of the evolution of the Committee and highlighted the new culture of consultation and cooperation within which ACC was currently operating.

The Secretary-General also transmitted the JIU report and the related comments on it to the Economic and Social Council [E/1999/123 & Add.1].

Joint Inspection Unit

The Joint Inspection Unit, in its thirtieth annual report to the General Assembly [A/54/34], gave an overview of its activities from 1 July 1997 to 31 December 1998, pursuant to its decision [YUN 1998, p. 1336] to revert to a January-December reporting cycle. The report examined measures to further enhance JIU's functioning and impact, and relations and cooperation with Member States, participating organizations and other oversight bodies. In terms of its staff, JIU concluded that serious consideration should be given in the future to more appropriate resources requirements to allow the Unit to better discharge its mandate. It said that implementation by the Secretariat of article 20.1 of its statute, which described the procedure for consideration of its budget, compromised its operational independence, and suggested that the Assembly might wish to clarify the provision of that article. JIU reported that no action had so far been taken on its proposal entitled "Towards a more effective system of follow-up on reports of the Joint Inspection Unit" [YUN 1997, p. 1488]. Its endorsement by the Assembly would give the Unit an important tool to enhance its functioning and better assess its impact. In August [A/54/223], the Secretary-General submitted a report on the implementation of JIU recommendations.

The Assembly, in resolution 54/16 of 29 October, endorsed the system of follow-up to the Unit's reports (see p. 1277).

Other coordination matters

Follow-up to international conferences

Economic and Social Council consideration. In accordance with its decision 1998/290 [YUN 1998, p. 1339], the Economic and Social Council held a two-day informal meeting on 10 and 11 May on basic indicators for the integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to the major UN conferences and summits. It considered an April report of the Secretary-General [E/1999/11], containing a critical review of the development of indicators in the context of conference follow-up. According to the report, accurate, timely and unbiased information was crucial to sound policy decisions, particularly in the context of conference follow-up. Objective assessments of the achievement of goals were possible only if benchmark data and reliable indicators were available. At the international level, the coordination of data collection suffered from inconsistencies between data disseminated, as well as in definitions and methodologies. However, the major problems were the serious gaps in the international databases. There was an enormous mismatch between the demand for information, which had increased as a result of global conferences, and the ability of most countries to supply the required information.

To correct the situation, the Secretary-General proposed improving partnerships at the international level and strengthening statistical capacity at the national level. Coordination of data collection at the international level and the development of concepts and methods would address problems related to inconsistencies, as well as a common development indicator platform on the Internet. Coordination was also necessary to focus the information demands placed on countries. In terms of strengthening national capacity, the report recommended the formation of a high-level working group consisting of major donor agencies and the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs to coordinate data-collection and statistical capacity-building programmes in countries, as well as a targeted international programme to build national capacity in the areas of censuses and sample surveys.

The Council President, in a June summary of the informal meeting [E/1999/77], stated that the main issues raised in the debate centred on the importance of indicators, strengthening national statistical capacity, coordination at the international level, developing a core set of common indicators, means of implementation, and the Council's role. The Council stressed that national capacity-building should be done at all stages of the information process and called for a collaborative effort by the UN system, including the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund (IMF), as well as the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development. There was a need to establish effective coordination mechanisms among all information-producing units at the national level, strengthen the status and independence of statistical offices, intensify the national dialogue between producers and users of information, establish clear priorities to address the problem of data gaps, improve data quality in terms of timeliness, reliability and relevance, and encourage regional or subregional collaborative networks to share experiences and develop common methodologies and practices, with the support of donors. International agencies should better coordinate their data requests to countries, avoid duplicative requests and share data collected. The Council could provide stronger guidance in that endeavour. However, the proposal for a high-level working group on coordination required further clarification. The common country assessment indicator was a good starting point for working towards a core set of indicators.

By decision 1999/283 of 30 July, the Council took note of its President's summary of the informal meeting.

The Council also had before it a June report of the Secretary-General on integrated follow-up to major UN conferences and summits [E/1999/65], which examined developments related to cross-cutting conference themes, progress in the Council's coordination and management roles at the intergovernmental level, inter-agency coordination, integrating and coordinating conference implementation at the country level and evaluating integrated conference implementation. The report contained a number of recommendations for adoption by the Council.

In response to resolution 1998/44 [YUN 1998, p. 1337], the Council also considered a June report of the Secretary-General [E/1999/63] on possible modalities for a review by the Council in 2000 of progress within the UN system in promoting an integrated and coordinated implementation of major UN conferences and summits. The Secretary-General suggested that, since the Council had undertaken reviews of specific cross-cutting themes over the past five years, it should undertake, at its high-level segment in 2000, an overall review of progress on common and cross-cutting themes emerging from conferences. Moreover, there was a solid basis and effective avenues for better integrating efforts in guiding and coordinating system-wide efforts related to conference goals at national, regional, headquarters and intergovernmental levels. The Council should also review progress of major themes common to all conferences to enable it to further integrate the implementation of major conferences and summits within the UN system. It should also undertake in 2000 a review of conference implementation, as a special contribution to the Millennium Assembly, and decide on the scope and content of the review and the modalities for concluding it.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July [meeting 46], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1999/55 [draft: E/1999/L.57] without vote [agenda item 6].

Integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to major United Nations conferences and summits

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its agreed conclusions 1995/1 of 28 July 1995, its resolutions 1996/36 of 26 July 1996, 1997/61 of 25 July 1997 and 1998/44 of 31 July 1998 and its decision 1998/290 of 31 July 1998,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General on an integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to major United Nations conferences and summits, on a critical review of the development of indicators in the context of conference follow-up and on the possible modalities of a review by the Economic and Social Council in 2000 of progress made within the United Nations system in promoting an integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to major United Nations conferences and summits,

I. Ways to enhance an integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to major United Nations conferences and summits

2. Decides to transmit to the General Assembly, as inputs for the five-year reviews of the Fourth World Conference on Women and of the World Summit for Social Development, the outcomes of the Council on (a) the role of employment and work in poverty eradication: the empowerment and advancement of women, (b) operational activities, in particular poverty eradication and capacity-building, and (c) coordination of implementation and coordinated follow-up by the United Nations system of initiatives on African development;

3. Urges its functional commissions and other relevant bodies of the United Nations system to enhance coordination and complementarity among the five-

4. Recommends that the end-of-decade assessment of progress towards the goals of the World Conference on Education for All be taken into account in the five-year reviews of other conferences;

5. Reaffirms the importance of ensuring the policy guidance of the General Assembly and the coordination role of the Economic and Social Council in the follow-up to major United Nations conferences and summits, calls for further cooperation between the functional commissions of the Council and the rest of the United Nations system in order to complement major United Nations conferences and summits in a coherent way, and recalls in this context that the adoption of multi-year thematic programmes for the functional commissions responsible for follow-up to major conferences can be helpful;

6. Encourages the functional commissions, in their outcomes, to identify more clearly actions that require a coordinated United Nations system-wide response as well as to highlight recommendations specifically addressed to organizations of the United Nations system and to identify areas in which the Council could provide guidance to the programmes, funds and agencies regarding the decisions and recommendations of the functional commissions addressed to them;

7. Invites the regional commissions to strengthen further their active participation relating to the implementation at the regional level of the results of major United Nations conferences and summits and the five-year reviews;

8. Welcomes the efforts made by some of the governing bodies of the programmes, funds and agencies to address relevant aspects of themes from conferences to ensure greater coherence and complementarity in their work, including at the country level, and requests that further efforts be made in this regard and that the results of their deliberation be brought to the attention of the Council;

12. Invites the functional commissions, in accordance with their rules and regulations, to consider innovative modalities for further engaging non-governmental organizations and other actors, as appropriate, in conference follow-up;

II. Basic indicators for the integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to major United Nations conferences and summits at all levels

13. Requests the Secretariat, in particular the Statistics Division, to serve as a focal point to promote networking among national and international institutions in the area of statistics and indicators relating to the follow-up to major United Nations conferences and summits so as to facilitate the exchange of relevant information and metadata;

14. Recognizes the importance of relevant, accurate and timely statistics and indicators for evaluating the implementation of the outcomes of major United Nations conferences and summits at all levels;

15. Also recognizes the progress made in the development of basic indicators in developing countries which require international support for national efforts to build national statistical capacity in data collection, analysis and dissemination;

16. Stresses the need further to develop indicators on means of implementation to evaluate progress towards conference goals in creating an enabling environment for development;

17. Welcomes the efforts already undertaken by the various bodies of the United Nations system, including the Administrative Committee on Coordination, to harmonize and rationalize the basic indicators used in the context of follow-up to major United Nations conferences, and encourages them to continue their efforts in order to lessen the burden on Member States;

18. Invites the Statistical Commission, with the assistance of the Statistics Division and in close cooperation with other relevant bodies of the United Nations system, including the Administrative Committee on Coordination, and, as appropriate, other relevant international organizations, to review, with a view to facilitating future consideration by the Council, the work undertaken in harmonizing and rationalizing basic indicators in the context of follow-up to major United Nations conferences and summits, taking fully into account the decisions taken in other functional and regional commissions and, in that process, to identify a limited number of common indicators from among those currently accepted and widely used by the States Members of the United Nations, in order to lessen the data provision burden on Member States, bearing in mind the work done so far in this area;

19. Reaffirms the important role that the functional commissions have to play in the integrated and coordinated follow-up and the evaluation of the implementation of the outcome of major United Nations conferences and summits;

20. Urges countries, United Nations programmes and funds, the Secretariat, bilateral funding agencies, the Bretton Woods institutions and regional funding agencies to work together closely in order to mobilize the required resources to support national statistical capacity-building in developing countries and coordinate their statistical capacity-building programmes;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a progress report on the implementation of this section of the present resolution for consideration by the Council at its substantive session of 2000;

III. Modalities for a review by the Council in 2000 of progress made in the promotion of an integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to major United Nations conferences and summits

22. Decides to assess, at the coordination segment of its substantive session of 2000, the progress made within the United Nations system, through the conference reviews, in the promotion of an integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields as a possible contribution to the Millennium Assembly;

Other areas of cooperation included the promotion of peace and security and of democracy, and follow-up to major UN conferences. The United Nations received increasing support from IPU in providing technical assistance and advisory services to parliamentarians, sometimes in the context of peacekeeping operations. In 1999, IPU implemented projects or supported national parliaments in Fiji, Gabon, the Gambia, Kyrgyzstan, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Yemen. UNDP provided funding and support to IPU projects to assist parliamentarians as part of its promotion of good governance.

Observer status

Customs Cooperation Council

By a 25 January letter to the General Assembly President [A/53/236], Chile requested the inclusion in the agenda of the Assembly's fifty-third (resumed) session of an item entitled "Observer status for the Customs Cooperation Council in the General Assembly". In an explanatory memorandum, it noted that the Council, also known as the World Customs Organization, was an independent intergovernmental organization, comprising 147 States, with headquarters in Brussels, Belgium. Its mission was to enhance the effectiveness and efficiency of customs administrations in their compliance with trade regulations, protection of society and revenue collection. It had already concluded eight memoranda of understanding with UN bodies. Observer status in the Assembly would enable both organizations to promote and strengthen the integration of their social, economic and law enforcement efforts and to establish joint policies, thus avoiding contradiction in their definition and duplication.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 March [meeting 95], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/216 [draft: A/53/L.75] without vote [agenda item 169].

Greece, in a 9 August letter to the Secretary-General [A/54/192], requested the inclusion of a supplementary item in the agenda of the General Assembly's fifty-fourth session entitled "Granting of observer status in the General Assembly for the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization". It was a regional organization comprising eleven members: Albania, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bulgaria, Georgia, Greece, the Republic of Moldova, Romania, the Russian Federation, Turkey and Ukraine. The basic purpose of the organization was to facilitate economic cooperation. The heads of State or Government, at their summit in Yalta, Ukraine (4-5 June 1998), expressed the conviction that obtaining observer status in the Assembly would greatly assist future cooperation and achieve more effective results.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 October [meeting 31], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/5 [draft: A/54/L.8 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 168].

Observer status for the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization in the General Assembly

The General Assembly,

Considering the importance of the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization, an intergovernmental organization dedicated to enhancing mutual respect and confidence, dialogue and cooperation, and economic collaboration among its member States,

Considering also the need, frequently noted by the United Nations, to promote and support every effort towards the development of bilateral and multilateral cooperation on the basis of international law,

Taking into account that the Charter of the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization stresses regional cooperation as part of the process of integration in Europe, based on human rights and fundamental freedoms, promoting social justice and stability,

Wishing to promote cooperation between the United Nations and the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization,

1. Decides to invite the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization to participate in the sessions and work of the General Assembly in the capacity of observer;

Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries

By a 10 September letter to the Secretary-General [A/54/232], Angola, Brazil, Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique, Portugal and Sao Tome and Principe requested the inclusion in the agenda of the General Assembly's fifty-fourth session of an item entitled "Observer status for the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries in the General Assembly". They stated that the general objectives of the Community, created in 1996, were aimed at concerted action to assert their presence in international forums; cooperation, particularly in the economic, social, cultural, legal and scientific spheres; and implementation of projects to promote and disseminate the Portuguese language. It already had relations with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), UNDP and the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO). Observer status would enhance cooperation between the two organizations, as well as with the various UN agencies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 October [meeting 39], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/10 [draft: A/54/L.15 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 171].

Observer status for the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries in the General Assembly

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that the purposes of the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries, as enunciated in its constitutive declaration, are consistent with those of the United Nations,

Considering that, accordingly, it is mutually advantageous to provide for cooperation between the United Nations and the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries,

Taking note of the desire of the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries for the establishment of that cooperation,

1. Decides to invite the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries to participate in the sessions and the work of the General Assembly in the capacity of observer;

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 84], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/195 [draft: A/54/L.7/Rev.2] without vote [agenda item 162].

Observer status for the International Union for the Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources in the General Assembly

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision 49/426 of 9 December 1994,

Considering the importance of the International Union for the Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources,

Considering also the need, frequently noted by the United Nations, to promote and support every effort towards the conservation of nature,

Taking into account that the main objective of the International Union for the Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources is to encourage and assist the international community in conserving the integrity and diversity of nature,

Wishing to promote cooperation between the United Nations and the International Union for the Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources,

1. Decides to invite the International Union for the Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources to participate in the sessions and work of the General Assembly in the capacity of observer;

2. Decides also that, in future, any request by an organization for the granting of observer status in the General Assembly will be considered in plenary session after the consideration of the issue by the Sixth Committee of the General Assembly;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to take appropriate measures to bring to the attention of all the States Members of the General Committee and General Assembly the criteria and procedures laid down by the General Assembly whenever a request is made by an organization seeking observer status in the General Assembly;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary action to implement the present resolution.

Participation of organizations in UN work

Non-governmental organizations

In accordance with General Assembly decision 53/452 [YUN 1998, p. 1345], the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/54/329] containing the views of Member States, members of specialized agencies, observers, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations on the Secretary-General's report on arrangements and practices for the interaction of NGOs in all activities of the UN system [YUN 1998, p. 1344].

The Secretary-General stated that nearly all Member States recognized the important contribution of NGOs to UN activities, especially in the conceptualization and implementation of decisions taken at major UN conferences. Some States suggested that more consideration should be given to legal issues governing the interaction of NGOs in UN activities, the financial implications of the relationship between the United Nations and NGOs, the participation of NGOs from developing countries and performance review. The specialized agencies said that the report was useful in underlining the commonalities and differences in practices within the UN system, in line with particular mandates, needs and NGO constituencies. Almost all NGOs welcomed the Secretary-General's report, but some were concerned that it created the perception that the increasing number of NGOs represented a threat to the system or a problem that needed to be dealt with. They stressed that the growth of NGOs was very positive for the UN system, providing an opportunity for making the United Nations a more relevant, vibrant and forceful institution. Others felt that the report did not sufficiently address the NGO role in shaping UN decisions and did not offer suggestions with respect to building support for NGOs among Governments and within the Secretariat. In their view, the report should have attempted to build that support and provide examples of NGO best practices at all levels. Views and recommendations were presented on specific issues, such as institutional arrangements, participation of NGOs from all regions and establishment of a trust fund, appointment of NGO liaison officers and focal points, access to information, participation in the work of the Assembly and access to UN Headquarters.

Committee on NGOs

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1999/205 of 2 February, approved the 1999 provisional agenda and documentation for the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations.

On 7 May (decision 1999/215), the Council granted general consultative status to two NGOs, special consultative status to 80 NGOs and Roster status to three. It reclassified two NGOs from special to general consultative status. It approved the participation of two organizations of indigenous peoples not in consultative status with the Council in the open-ended inter-sessional Working Group of the Commission on Human Rights (decision 1999/216).

The Committee on NGOs, at its 1999 session (New York, 1-18 June) [E/1999/109], considered a number of applications for consultative status with the Council that had been deferred from its 1998 session, as well as new applications. It also considered 1988 and 1999 quadrennial reports submitted by NGOs in general and special consultative status with the Council. The Committee reviewed its methods of work relating to implementation of resolution 1996/31 [YUN 1996, p. 1360], including the process of accreditation of NGO representatives, and decision 1995/304 [YUN 1995, p. 1445] on arrangements for consultation with NGOs. It considered in particular a complaint filed by the Sudan regarding the accreditation of Christian Solidarity International (CSI), an NGO with Roster status, according to which "the commander of the terrorist separatist group of southern Sudan" was allowed to speak at the fifty-fifth session of the Commission on Human Rights in Geneva under the umbrella of CSI. During consideration of the complaint, a number of procedural issues were raised. The Committee recommended withdrawal of CSI's consultative status.

The Committee recommended one draft resolution and three draft decisions for adoption by the Council.

On 28 July (decision 1999/266), the Council granted general consultative status to four NGOs, special consultative status to 95 NGOs and Roster status to seven NGOs. It also authorized the Committee to hold a resumed session for two weeks to complete its work for 1999 (decision 1999/267).

On 30 July (decision 1999/268), the Council considered that the complaint filed by the Sudan presented concerns warranting a review of CSI's status, in accordance with resolution 1996/31, and decided that the Committee on NGOs should complete consideration of the matter as expeditiously as possible. To that end, CSI should be given until 31 August to submit a response to the Committee, which should make a recommendation to the Council at its resumed substantive session on 16 September. In the interim, CSI's consultative status should be temporarily suspended.

Also on 30 July, the Council took note of the Committee's report on its 1999 session (decision 1999/269).

At the second part of its 1999 session (7 September) [E/1999/109/Add.1], the Committee on NGOs further considered the Sudan's complaint and recommended that the Council adopt its previous recommendation that CSI's consultative status with the Council be withdrawn.

By decision 1999/292 of 26 October, the Council so decided.

Requests for hearings

The Committee on NGOs met in New York on 18 June to hear requests from NGOs in consultative status to address the Economic and Social Council in connection with items on its agenda [E/1999/95]. The Committee recommended that three NGOs be heard by the Council at its 1999 substantive session and that, on an exceptional basis, three coalitions of NGOs that had concrete action-oriented proposals on the theme of the high-level segment of the Council be heard during that segment. Five additional requests for hearings by NGOs were received by the Bureau of the Council [E/1999/95/Add.1] after the Committee's meeting. The Bureau requested the Council to decide on those requests.

Strengthening the Secretariat NGO Section

The Committee on NGOs, at its 1999 session [E/1999/109], discussed strengthening the NGO Section of the Secretariat. It recognized that its efficient functioning was dependent upon the work of the Section.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Committee on NGOs [E/1999/109], adopted resolution 1999/34 without vote [agenda item 12].

Strengthening the Non-Governmental Organizations Section of the Secretariat

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the provisions of its resolution 1996/31 of 25 July 1996 which update the procedure on the consultative relationship between the United Nations and non-governmental organizations,

Aware of the evolving relationship between the United Nations and the non-governmental organizations community resulting from the broader and more substantive involvement of non-governmental organizations with the Economic and Social Council and the United Nations at large, and appreciative of the breadth of expertise of non-governmental organizations and their unique capacity to support the work of the Council and its subsidiary bodies,

Appreciative of the need to encourage greater participation of non-governmental organizations from developing countries and countries with economies in transition in the work of the Council and its subsidiary bodies,

Mindful of the significant increase in the number of non-governmental organizations in consultative status that has taken place in recent years, and conscious of the fact that the number will continue to increase in the foreseeable future,

Mindful also of the demand that the expansion of the participation of non-governmental organizations has on the workload and resources of the Non-Governmental Organizations Section of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat,

Recalling paragraph 68 of its resolution 1996/31 regarding the requirement for adequate Secretariat support to fulfil the mandate defined for the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations with respect to carrying out the wider range of activities in which the enhanced involvement of non-governmental organizations is envisaged,

Reaffirming the vital role of the Non-Governmental Organizations Section, as described in the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Non-Governmental Organizations Section of the Secretariat, in accordance with resolution 1996/31, and emphasizing the need to ensure that the Section is able to operate efficiently in carrying out its mandate as well as in initiating new activities, as required, at the optimal level of performance,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at the main part of its fifty-fourth session containing a comprehensive analysis of the organizational structure and technical, personnel and financial resources of the Non-Governmental Organizations Section, commensurate with the increased workload and the level of responsibility necessary to implement the mandate of the Secretariat, as contained in Council resolution 1996/31, parts X and XI;

2. Urges the Secretary-General, in view of the increased workload and responsibilities of the Section, as an interim measure, to provide to the Section the resources necessary, from within existing resources, without diverting resources from development programmes, to enable it to carry out its responsibilities efficiently, effectively and expeditiously.

Pursuant to the Council's request, the Secretary-General submitted a November report [A/54/520] that provided an analysis of the organizational structure and technical, personnel and financial resources of the NGO Section of the Secretariat.

The Secretary-General noted that, since his last report [YUN 1998, p. 1346], the number of NGOs granted consultative status with the Council had risen by 582, bringing the total to 1,938. That had led to an increase in the volume of the work of the NGO Section. The Committee on NGOs also had to extend the length of its resumed sessions to accommodate its increased workload, and the number of meetings originally forecast in the 2000-2001 programme budget had already doubled. The Secretary-General observed that CPC, at its thirty-ninth session (7 June-2 July) [A/54/16], had noted that the increasing workload and responsibilities had prevented the Section from carrying out its activities effectively and expeditiously and welcomed the proposal to strengthen it by allocating adequate resources in the 2000-2001 programme budget.

The report analysed the Section's activities, including key tasks, with an estimate of work-months required to perform them in the 2000-2001 biennium. It also described special projects undertaken in 1999, those proposed for 2000-2001 to increase the Section's effectiveness and the Section's outreach and liaison activities, and provided details of its organizational structure.

ACABQ, in its first report on the 2000-2001 programme budget [A/54/7], said that the Secretariat had not addressed the question of the total level of resources proposed for the 1998-1999 biennium and reiterated its view that the time had come to appraise the impact on the programme budget of the large increase in NGOs involved in UN work. It recommended that that information be included in future budgets both as to programmatic and financial aspects.

In a December report [A/54/657], ACABQ stated that the Secretariat had procedurally mishandled the matter, making full consideration of it at the fifty-fourth session impracticable. No proposals had been put forward to address the issues raised in the report, in particular with regard to the number and level of posts in the Section. ACABQ recommended that the Secretary-General address its concerns without further delay, together with the administrative and financial issues raised in his November report for consideration at the resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session.

Conferences and meetings

The Committee on Conferences held organizational meetings on 21 April and on 23 and 24 June and its substantive session from 30 August to 2 September [A/54/32]. It examined requests for additions and changes to the approved calendar of conferences and meetings for 1999 [A/AC.172/1999/2] and adopted a draft biennial plan for 2000-2001. It considered improved use of conference-servicing resources, reviewed the proposed programme budget for 2000-2001 for the Department of General Assembly Affairs and Conference Services, as well as the draft medium-term plan for the period 2000-2005 related to conference services, and discussed the participation of observers in its sessions.

The Committee approved requests from the Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters to convene its thirty-third session (20-22 January), the International Civil Service Commission to convene its forty-ninth session (12-30 April) and the expert group on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Central Asia to convene (April), all in Geneva rather than in New York; from the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development meeting of governmental experts of landlocked and transit developing countries, representatives of donor countries and financial development institutions to convene in New York (23-26 August) rather than in Geneva; and from the United Nations Environment Programme/High-level Committee of Ministers and Officials to convene in Bonn (1 November) rather than Nairobi. It recommended that the General Assembly authorize a number of bodies to meet in New York during the fifty-fourth session (see above, under "Organization of Assembly sessions").

The Committee recommended that the Assembly adopt the biennial calendar of conferences and meetings for 2000-2001 and authorize the Committee to make adjustments to that calendar as a result of Assembly action. It noted that the Secretariat had taken into account the arrangements referred to in Assembly resolution 53/208 A [YUN 1998, p. 1348] regarding the inclusion of Id al-Fitr and Id al-Adha in the list of official holidays and that no UN meetings would be held on those days, and concerning Orthodox Good Friday. The Committee also noted that the Secretariat had merged into one section the draft list of meetings of treaty bodies established under UN auspices, including the meetings of the Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization, and the draft calendar of conferences and meetings of the principal organs of the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency. The Committee recommended that, when planning the calendar of conferences and meetings, every effort should be made to avoid simultaneous peak periods at the various duty stations.

Intergovernmental meetings

At the request of the host Governments of several intergovernmental conferences held in 1999, the main documents of those meetings were transmitted to the Secretary-General for circulation to the General Assembly, the Security Council or both, as follows:

Seventieth ordinary session of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) Council of Ministers (Algiers, Algeria, 8-10 July) [S/1999/829]; thirty-fifth session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU (Algiers, 12-14 July) [A/54/424], fourth extraordinary session (Sirte, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, 8-9 September) [A/54/621]; one hundred and first Inter-Parliamentary Conference (Brussels, 10-16 April) [A/54/126], one hundred and second Inter-Parliamentary Conference (Berlin, 10-16 October) [A/54/617]; Annual Coordination Meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC) (New York, 1 October) [A/54/632-S/1999/1194]; twenty-sixth session of the Conference of Foreign Ministers of OIC (Ouagadougou, Burkino Faso, 28 June-1 July) [A/53/1044-S/1999/924]; Ministerial Council of the Gulf Cooperation Council, twenty-third special session (Abu Dhabi, United Arab Emirates, 4 March) [S/1999/236], seventieth session (Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, 14-15 March) [A/53/869-S/1999/308], seventy-first session (Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, 3 July) [A/53/1014-S/1999/761], seventy-second session (Jeddah, 10-11 September) [S/1999/974]; twentieth session of the Supreme Council of the Gulf Cooperation Council (Riyadh, 27-29 November) [A/54/649-S/1999/1216]; eighth summit of la Francophonie (Moncton, Canada, 3-5 September) [A/54/453]; Ministerial Meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (New York, 23 September) [A/54/469-S/1999/1063]; twenty-third annual meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77 (New York, 24 September) [A/54/432]; and first Summit of Heads of State and Government of Latin America and the Caribbean and the European Union (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 28-29 June) [A/54/448].

Use of conference services

The Secretary-General submitted to the Committee on Conferences a July report on improved utilization of conference-servicing resources, including meeting statistics of UN organs for 1998 [A/AC.172/1999/3].

The Committee noted that the overall utilization factor for 1998 exceeded the benchmark of 80 per cent and those for Geneva and Vienna were 87 and 88 per cent, respectively. It noted with concern that the utilization factor for New York had dropped to 77 per cent and that only 56 per cent of bodies in the sample utilized 80 per cent or more of their available conference-servicing resources. The Committee requested its Chairperson to continue to consult with the chairpersons of those bodies that had consistently utilized less than the applicable benchmark figure (80 per cent) of their allocated resources for the past three years, and to make recommendations to achieve optimum use of conference-servicing resources. It noted the oral report on improved coordination of conference services and requested the Secretariat, when preparing the agenda for its next substantive session, to take into account the proposals regarding the inclusion and timing of the videoconference. It encouraged the Secretariat to continue the dialogue between Conferences Services and the secretariats of intergovernmental bodies and looked forward to the issuance of a revision of the relative administrative instruction with regard to conference-servicing responsibility to include the UN Offices at Vienna and Nairobi. The Committee encouraged expanded efforts towards a co-ordinated approach within Conference Services to provide services efficiently and effectively from all duty stations.

Impact of economy measures on conference services

The Secretary-General, as requested in resolution 53/208 B [YUN 1998, p. 1353], submitted a February report on the impact of economy measures on the delivery of mandated conference services [A/53/833]. The report showed that between the 1994-1995 and 1998-1999 bienniums, the net appropriated resources for conference services had decreased by $14,053,400. At the same time, some 203 posts had been abolished (55 in the Professional category and above and 148 in the General Service and Trades and Crafts categories).

In the light of that reduction, improvements in productivity resulting from investments in technology, adjustments in work flow management and priority setting, and a decline in the demand for services, particularly in the volume of material submitted for translation, allowed Conference Services to cope with the overall workload in 1996-1997, albeit at a certain cost in quality and timeliness. Efficiency gains were achieved through savings in overtime, keeping document print runs under tight control and the introduction of off-site reporting in the production of verbatim records using advanced technology.

However, some inadequacies remained. There was insufficient excess interpretation capacity to attend to meetings of regional groups and other major groupings of Member States, and Conference Services could no longer compensate for late submission of documents by using overtime work and abundant staff resources for rapid turnover. Although the recent extensive delays in the issuance of summary records had been largely corrected, almost all of those had to be translated contractually, making it harder to ensure consistency and quality. Verbatim records still became backlogged during peak periods. Issuance was thus delayed and simultaneous circulation in all languages could not be strictly implemented. Conference Services hoped to address those situations through further use of technology and adjustments to resource allocations.

By decision 53/470 of 7 April, the General Assembly decided to transmit the Secretary-General's report to ACABQ for consideration in the context of the proposed 2000-2001 programme budget, taking into account the views of Member States in the Fifth Committee.

ACABQ, in its first report on the 2000-2001 programme budget [A/54/7], said that it did not appear that the programme budget had taken into account its observations concerning resource reductions for conference services in Geneva and Vienna.

Temporary assistance for meetings

ACABQ noted reductions in the 2000-2001 programme budget, relating to temporary assistance for meetings [A/54/7]. Those reductions reflected the impact of measures applied in the control of resources and capacity utilization, the expanded use of remote translation for meetings held away from Headquarters and anticipated savings resulting from the implementation of cost-saving measures, better planning of resources and control over the issuance of documentation. ACABQ bearing in mind the level and quality of services to be provided, requested the Secretary-General to provide further justification to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session.

In response to that request, the Secretary-General submitted an October note on requirements in 2000-2001 for temporary assistance for meetings [A/C.5/54/19]. He said that the overall proposed decrease in temporary assistance amounted to $5,426,200 (New York, $2,110,400; Geneva, $1,832,700; and Vienna, $1,483,100). The estimated conference-servicing workloads for 2000-2001 projected a level of demand broadly equivalent to the servicing requirements in 1998-1999. He therefore proposed that the staffing of conference services at Headquarters, Geneva and Vienna, both permanent and temporary, be maintained through the next biennium at its current levels. Consequently, actual expenditure for temporary assistance for meetings in 1998-1999 was considered a sound basis to estimate requirements for 2000-2001.

The Secretary-General further pointed out that perceived problems in the delivery of Conference Services were being addressed through managerial efforts to enhance quality control and utilization of capacity, and some shortcomings had causes outside the responsibility of Conference Services. While increased levels of temporary assistance could help overcome those problems, it would have to be considered in relation to relevant provisions of Assembly resolutions and to concerns about cost-efficiency.

ACABQ, in its December report on the 2000-2001 programme budget [A/54/7/Add.5], said that the Secretary-General's note did not address the concerns raised in its earlier report (see above), nor did it reflect the specific problems faced by the Department of General Assembly Affairs and Conference Services with regard to the impact of resources on the effective delivery of services. It believed that the estimates of requirements for conference services should be based, in addition to past experience, on meetings scheduled in the calendar of conferences, conferences and meetings arising from new legislative mandates and meetings of regional and other major groupings.

Regional and other major groupings

In February [A/53/826], the Secretary-General, pursuant to resolution 53/208 A [YUN 1998, p. 1348], reported on the provision of interpretation services to meetings of regional and other major groupings of Member States. For the period July 1998 to January 1999, almost 100 per cent of requests for conference facilities were met, including 151 out of 169 requests for interpretation services, or 89 per cent.

By decision 53/470 of 7 April, the General Assembly noted the Secretary-General's report.

In an August update [A/54/208], the Secretary-General reported, for the period February to June 1999, that the figure had increased to 96 per cent in Geneva, with New York meeting all of its 510 requests. The report also showed that over the past three years, the percentage of meetings held by regional and other major groupings provided with interpretation services had risen from 68 per cent to 83 per cent. The Secretary-General concluded that further improvements could be realized if bodies planned their work programmes well in advance and more flexibility was exercised by regional groupings in rescheduling meetings, which would increase the likelihood of interpretation services being made available to them.

The Committee on Conferences regretted that 17 per cent of the requests for interpretation services by regional and other major groupings of Member States had not been met. It urged intergovernmental bodies to spare no effort at the planning stage to take into account meetings of regional and other major groupings of Member States, to make provision for such meetings in their programmes of work and to notify Conference Services well in advance of any cancellations so that unutilized conference-servicing resources might be reassigned to meetings of regional and other major groupings of States.

Improving conference facilities at Nairobi

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/214 A [YUN 1997, p. 1501], the Secretary-General reported in February on improved utilization of conference facilities at the UN Office at Nairobi (UNON) [A/53/827]. He stated that UNON had an efficient and up-to-date conference centre, which was constantly being modernized and upgraded. Interpretation services were provided whenever needed, even in the absence of a permanent interpretation capacity. However, the utilization of conference facilities at Nairobi could increase only if intergovernmental and expert bodies took the decision to meet there. In that regard, efforts were being made to attract to UNON meetings of treaty bodies and other environment-related bodies, as well as bodies that currently did not meet regularly or occasionally away from their established headquarters. In addition, the Secretariat would explore the possibility of establishing a permanent interpretation service at UNON, including the provision of remote interpretation services from permanent interpretation structures (see next page for details).

By decision 53/470 of 7 April, the Assembly noted the Secretary-General's report.

In August [A/54/221], in a further elaboration of his February report, the Secretary-General indicated that the number of meetings generated in 1999 by the sessions of the Nairobi-based bodies—the Commission on Human Settlements and the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme—was relatively low compared to 1997, 20 as opposed to 84. He estimated that some 300 meetings would have been held in Nairobi in 1999, with 280 comprising meetings of intergovernmental or expert groups. Of those meetings, 200 would have been provided with interpretation services in two or more languages.

The total figure represented an increase of 108 per cent in the level of meeting activity compared to 1998 when 144 meetings were held there.

The Secretary-General concluded that, despite the increased activity, the meeting capacity in Nairobi remained underutilized to a considerable degree, and, given the current circumstances, it was unlikely that the utilization rate of conference facilities would increase dramatically. That led inevitably to a policy question as to whether the satisfactory utilization rate of a UN conference centre should be made contingent upon its use by non-UN entities.

The Secretary-General, in another August report [A/54/262], explored the possibility of establishing a permanent interpretation service in Nairobi. He said that, to establish such a service, 20 Professional posts would have to be provided, at a cost of $3.2 million per biennium. He concluded that the current programme of meetings in Nairobi did not justify the cost of establishing a permanent team, and the current practice of providing interpretation services by staff deployed from New York, Geneva and Vienna or by freelance staff was the most cost-effective.

The Committee on Conferences noted the Secretary-General's reports and urged the Secretariat to continue to encourage increased utilization of UNON conference facilities. It expressed concern at the low number of meetings held at UNON and encouraged all bodies concerned to make better use of those facilities. The Committee requested the Secretariat to prepare detailed proposals on the utilization of UNON conference facilities, including by non-UN entities, and a comprehensive report on the possible establishment of a permanent interpretation service at UNON, taking into account the Committee's views. It considered that holding its sessions in Nairobi or other duty stations could provide an excellent opportunity for further evaluation of the provision of conference services.

Documents control

The Committee on Conferences took note of a conference room paper on the late issuance of documentation, as well as the Secretariat's observation that, when all the documents were issued by the opening of the session, an organ was three times more likely to have a high utilization factor of conference services than to have one below the benchmark rating. The Committee recommended that the General Assembly reaffirm that if a report was submitted late, the reasons should be included in a footnote to the document. The Committee reviewed the provision of written meeting records to the Assembly's subsidiary organs and reiterated its request to them to consider the use of unedited verbatim transcripts of their proceedings. It took note of the very limited number of subsidiary organs that had resorted to the use of unedited transcripts.

UN web sites

The Secretary-General submitted a March report [A/AC.198/1999/6] on the continuous development, maintenance and enrichment of UN web sites, which contained recommendations addressing the issue of the equitable treatment of all official languages, with a view to achieving full parity among them on those web sites (see p. 550).

Interpretation and translation-related matters

Remote interpretation

The Secretary-General submitted a July report on the provision of interpretation services to other locations from permanent interpretation structures in New York, Geneva and Nairobi [A/54/176]. He noted that recent interest in remote simultaneous interpretation of intergovernmental meetings had been prompted by several factors, including the need to ascertain whether more cost-effective alternatives to current methods of work existed, the attempt to improve the utilization of conference centres in certain locations, the use of remote servicing techniques in related conference-servicing activities, including videoconferencing, and the advent of new low-cost communications links. However, experience and knowledge in the field were still limited and did not allow for estimations of its relative cost advantages. The United Nations had conducted an experiment in early 1999 on remote simultaneous interpretation, the results of which were very promising in some aspects but revealed deficiencies in others. The Secretary-General recommended that another experiment be conducted in early 2000, involving a full-scale intergovernmental meeting, with six languages.

The Committee on Conferences noted the Secretary-General's report and requested the Secretariat to refine further the cost considerations of remote interpretation, taking into account technological possibilities, as well as the cost benefits, including the relative cost advantages of the different conference centres likely to provide remote interpretation services.

Career development in language services

The Secretary-General, as requested in resolution 53/208 B [YUN 1998, p. 1353], reported in April on career development in language services [A/53/919], which provided an analysis of the current staffing table situation and grade structure. The analysis revealed that the promotion possibilities for language staff at the P-3 and P-4 levels varied according to their function and the size of the organizational unit to which they were assigned. While opportunities for reaching the P-5 level in language services also varied, they were, overall, limited. The Secretary-General therefore proposed a comprehensive review of post gradings in the context of the preparation of the 2002-2003 programme budget; further efforts to facilitate increased mobility of staff between functions and duty stations, including common examinations for English and French editors, translators and verbatim reporters in 2000; continued consultations on the modalities for a limited system of managed reassignment to duty stations away from Headquarters; promoting greater flexibility and coordination in the administration of staffing tables for language services among conference services in New York, Geneva and Vienna; and paying increased attention to career development in line with the Assembly's concerns for the enhancement of the quality of conference services.

In a May addendum [A/53/919/Add.1], the Secretary-General reported on the the post of reviser. He said that staffing tables of translation services at all conference centres provided for a revision capacity that allowed for the revision of translations effected by junior staff and the revision of important or sensitive material. Out of a total of 521 language posts in New York, Geneva, Vienna and Nairobi, 83 were senior reviser (P-5) and 232 reviser/self-revising translator (P-4) posts, or 60.4 per cent. No curtailment of the revision capacity was reflected in the proposed programme budget for 2000-2001 and not for the foreseeable future.

The Committee on Conferences noted the Secretary-General's report and expressed concern that the rate of self-revision had exceeded the established benchmark and was increasing at all duty stations. The Committee requested the Department of General Assembly Affairs and Conference Services to continue to utilize new technologies, such as computer-assisted translation, terminology databases and speech recognition, to enhance further the productivity of language staff. It recommended that efforts continue to ensure that training opportunities were available to all UN language staff and to improve quality control at all duty stations.

In another May addendum [A/53/919/Add.2], the Secretary-General, in reporting on the possibility of introducing a system of managed assignments as a means of reducing the excessive vacancy rates in language services at some duty stations (Vienna and most regional commissions), stated that direct assignment of newly recruited staff and calls for experienced staff at Headquarters to volunteer for assignments of several years in the field had not proved very effective in resolving that problem. However, radical measures, such as establishing a system of managed assignments, might not be well suited to the nature and the magnitude of the issue. He suggested making assignments away from Headquarters more attractive, through enhanced career prospects as one alternative.

The Committee on Conferences took note of the Secretary-General's report and asked him to finalize proposals on a system of managed assignments based on career incentives. Information should also be provided on the cost elements in the employment of local and international freelance staff. UNON should be included in any arrangement to address the problem.

Responding to that request, the Secretary-General reported in November [A/C.5/54/28] that, as from 1 January 2000, a managed assignment system based on incentives would be put in place to alleviate the vacancy problem of language services at the duty stations concerned. The system would involve measures to fill vacancies at the entry level. Information on all successful candidates having passed a competitive examination would be systematically sent to those duty stations, which would be given priority for the selection of candidates on the roster. Contracts of all new recruits would provide that staff members could be assigned to any duty station at the discretion of the Organization. In addition, rather than relying almost exclusively on volunteers, management would select individuals to fill vacancies at duty stations away from Headquarters. The report outlined the incentives to be put in place in connection with those assignments.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/690], adopted resolution 54/248 without vote [agenda item 124].

B

Utilization of conference-servicing resources and facilities

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the provision of interpretation services to meetings of regional and other major groupings of Member States, the report of the Secretary-General on the improved utilization of conference facilities at the United Nations Office at Nairobi, the report of the Secretary-General on the possibility of establishing a permanent interpretation service at the United Nations Office at Nairobi, the report of the Secretary-General on the impact of economy measures on the delivery of mandated conference services, the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions on these issues and the report of the Secretary-General on career development in language services,

1. Notes with concern the proposed reduction of resources for conference services for the biennium 2000-2001, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure that efficiency measures are carefully analysed to avoid any negative impact on conference services, in the light of the level and quality of services provided to Member States;

2. Emphasizes the importance of providing adequate conference-servicing resources to all United Nations conference centres;

3. Notes with appreciation that the overall utilization factor for 1998 exceeded the benchmark of 80 per cent, in particular at Geneva and Vienna;

4. Encourages the optimum utilization of conference services in New York, taking into full consideration issues of efficiency and effectiveness, including the limitations of small delegations;

5. Emphasizes, therefore, the need to ensure equal opportunity for all Member States to participate fully in meeting their obligations under the Charter of the United Nations, and in this connection urges intergovernmental bodies when adopting their programmes of work to avoid as much as possible, inter alia, the scheduling of simultaneous, parallel and/or late night meetings;

6. Reiterates its request to the Committee on Conferences to continue to consult with those bodies that consistently utilized less than the applicable benchmark figure of their allocated resources for the past three sessions, with a view to making appropriate recommendations in order to achieve the optimum utilization of conference-servicing resources;

7. Requests the Chairperson of the Committee on Conferences to transmit a letter to the chairpersons of all bodies that utilized less than the applicable benchmark figure (80 per cent) of their allocated conference resources in the previous year, informing them of the problem and drawing their attention to the significant loss of meeting time, with a view to encouraging appropriate action on their part so as to improve the utilization of conference-servicing resources;

8. Notes the importance of meetings of regional and other major groupings of Member States for the smooth functioning of sessional bodies, in view of the increased requests for meetings of regional and other major groups, and welcomes the fact that 83 per cent of the requests for interpretation services for such meetings were met, while 100 per cent of the requests for facilities only were met;

9. Notes with concern the difficulties experienced by some Member States owing to the lack of conference services for some meetings of regional and other major groupings of Member States;

10. Regrets that 17 per cent of the requests for interpretation services made by regional and other major groupings of Member States were not met, while recognizing that meetings of Charter and mandated bodies must be serviced as a priority;

11. Decides to include all necessary resources in the budget for the biennium 2000-2001 to provide interpretation services for meetings of regional and other major groupings of Member States upon request by those groupings, on an ad hoc basis, in accordance with established practice, and requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session, through the Committee on Conferences, a report on the implementation of this decision;

12. Urges intergovernmental bodies to spare no effort at the planning stage to take into account meetings of regional and other major groupings of Member States, to make provision for such meetings in their programme of work and to notify conference services, well in advance, of any cancellations so that unutilized conference-servicing resources may, to the extent possible, be reassigned to meetings of regional and other major groupings of States;

13. Decides that full interpretation services, in the six official languages, must be ensured for the meetings of intergovernmental bodies for the full duration of those meetings;

14. Expresses concern that the conference facilities at the United Nations Office at Nairobi are still underutilized, as recorded during the last reporting period;

15. Reiterates its call for better utilization of the conference facilities at Nairobi;

21. Reaffirms the general principle established in the headquarters rule, and in particular, that all meetings related to environment and human settlements that are organized by the United Nations Environment Programme and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), respectively, should be held at Nairobi, being the headquarters of the Programme and Habitat;

22. Discourages strongly any invitation for hosting meetings which would violate the headquarters rule, in particular for United Nations centres with a low utilization level;

23. Requests the Committee on Conferences to consider the possibility of holding its 2000 substantive session at the United Nations Office at Nairobi;

24. Decides to establish a permanent interpretation service at the United Nations Office at Nairobi no later than January 2001;

Documentation and publication-related matters

1. Reiterates its decision that, if a report is submitted late to the conference services, the reasons therefor should be included in a footnote to the document;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the texts of the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly are communicated to Member States within fifteen days after the close of the session;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Official Records of resolutions adopted by the General Assembly include information on the adoption of the resolutions, such as voting records and sponsors, before the text of each resolution, in the six official languages of the Organization;

4. Notes with deep concern the low rate of compliance with the six-week rule for the issuance of documentation;

5. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to ensure that documentation is available in accordance with the six-week rule for the distribution of documents simultaneously in the six official languages of the General Assembly;

6. Notes with deep concern that the provisions of paragraphs 24 and 25 of section B of its resolution 52/214 and paragraphs 11 and 12 of its resolution 53/208 B are not being fully implemented;

7. Reiterates its request that the Secretary-General direct all departments to include, where appropriate, the following elements in reports originating in the Secretariat:

8. Reiterates that all documents submitted to legislative organs by the Secretariat and expert bodies for consideration and action should have conclusions and recommendations in bold print;

9. Reiterates its request to the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions to submit its reports in accordance with paragraph 12 of General Assembly resolution 53/208 B;

10. Recalls its decision in paragraph 2 (b) of section II of its resolution 41/213, and emphasizes that, in future, proposed programme budgets should be considered by the General Assembly in fascicle form, together with recommendations on them by the Committee for Programme and Coordination and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and that the programme budgets should be issued in their final form after approval by the Assembly with the changes to the resource level annexed to the approved programme budget;

D

Translation- and interpretation-related matters

1. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the efforts to utilize new technologies, such as computer-assisted translation, remote translation, terminology databases and speech recognition, in the six official languages so as to enhance further the productivity of conference services, and to keep the General Assembly informed of the introduction and use of any other new technology;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue the efforts to ensure that training opportunities in the six official languages are equally available to all language staff, including those at duty stations away from Headquarters;

3. Decides that, in the absence of a General Assembly decision to the contrary, the use of remote interpretation shall not constitute an alternative to the current institutionalized system of interpretation;

4. Also decides that the use of remote interpretation should not affect the quality of interpretation or in itself lead to any further reduction in language posts, nor will it affect the equal treatment of the six official languages;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to keep under review the introduction and use of any new technology, in particular remote interpretation, and to report thereon to the General Assembly on a regular basis;

6. Requests that efforts continue to be made to improve the quality control of language services at all duty stations;

7. Takes note with appreciation of the note by the Secretary-General entitled "Career development in language services—Measures aimed at reducing excessive vacancy rates at some duty stations: elements of a system of managed assignments", and requests the Secretary-General to keep the General Assembly informed of developments in this area;

8. Notes with concern that the rate of self-revision exceeded the established benchmark and even tended to increase at all duty stations;

9. Recognizes that an increase in the use of temporary assistance and contractual translation services could increase the need for revision at the senior levels;

10. Notes with concern that some documents issued in Arabic tend to follow a consistent pattern of excessively literal translation, by focusing more on the vocabulary and not on the content of the original language, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure that this situation is rectified;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that translation, in principle, reflects the specificity of each language;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to improve further the quality of translation of documents issued in the six official languages, to ensure continuous dialogue between translation staff and interpretation staff, among United Nations headquarters at New York, Geneva, Vienna and Nairobi, and between translation divisions and Member States with regard to the standardization of the terminology used;

13. Further requests the Secretary-General to ensure that Member States, which are the main users of United Nations documents, are briefed periodically on the terminology used;

E

Information technology

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the continuous development, maintenance and enrichment of United Nations web sites, tion, to ensure that the six official languages are treated equally;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take necessary measures to improve access to the web page of the Procurement Division;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to report on the measures taken by the end of April 2000, pursuant to requests made under this section, and decides to revert to this matter during its resumed fifty-fourth session;

F

Recalling its decision 38/401, section E of its resolution 52/214 and its resolution 53/208 E concerning the prohibition of smoking in small conference rooms and the discouragement of smoking in large conference rooms,

1. Calls upon representatives of Member States to abide by its decision 38/401, section E of its resolution 52/214 and its resolution 53/208 E;

2. Encourages all users of United Nations conference facilities, in order to avoid involuntary exposure to passive smoking, to refrain from smoking, in particular in conference rooms.

The Assembly, in resolution 54/249 of 23 December, requested the Secretary-General to submit at its fifty-fifth (2000) session a strategic plan for the full use of conference facilities at Nairobi, so as to ensure that interpretation capacity would be fully utilized. On the same date, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the pattern of conferences at the resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session (decision 54/462 A).

UN information systems

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1998/29 [YUN 1998, p. 1356], the Secretary-General submitted a June report on international cooperation in the field of informatics [E/1999/74], in which he summarized activities of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Informatics on the need to harmonize UN information systems for optimal utilization and accessibility by all States. The Group focused at its 1999 meetings on the year 2000 computer problem and issues related to providing Member States with better electronic access. The report also addressed action taken by the Secretariat and UNDP in response to issues raised in the Working Group.

The Secretary-General stated that the Working Group, in cooperation with the Information Technology Services Division, the Department of Public Information and UNDP, would continue to improve and expand electronic information services provided to Member States and permanent missions and assure that the technologies employed were abreast of technological development. At the country level, UNDP would intensify efforts to promote the use of information technology in the pursuit of sustainable development. The Working Group would reinforce efforts to promote year 2000 awareness and contingency planning at the regional, national and international levels. By decision 1999/284 of 30 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

The ACC Information Systems Coordination Committee (ISCC) held its seventh session in New York from 15 to 17 September and on 21 October [ACC/1999/19]. It recommended to ACC for endorsement the work planned for 2000-2001 to support ACC and its sub-organizations in information technology. It noted the increased interest in coordination of information technology and the management of information throughout the UN system. ISCC believed that it was important to recommend strategies, concepts, architectures, recognized standards and guidelines to help harmonize solutions across different organizations in the UN system. Annexed to the report were a number of high-priority projects approved by ISCC.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July [meeting 46], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1999/58 [draft: E/1999/L.54] without vote [agenda item 7 (d)].

Welcoming the report presented by the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Informatics on the progress achieved so far in fulfilling the mandate of the Working Group,

1. Reiterates once again the high priority that it attaches to easy, economical, uncomplicated and unhindered access for States Members of the United Nations, observers and non-governmental organizations accredited to the United Nations to the computerized databases and information systems and services of the United Nations, provided that the unhindered access of non-governmental organizations shall not prejudice the access of Member States and that it shall not impose an additional financial burden for the use of databases and other systems;

2. Requests the President of the Economic and Social Council to convene the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Informatics for one more year to carry out its work from within existing resources, for the due fulfilment of the provisions of Council resolutions on this item, for facilitating the successful implementation of the initiatives being taken by the Secretary-General with regard to the use of information technology and for continuing the implementation of measures required to achieve its objectives, through, inter alia, the continuation of the following activities:

(a) Improving electronic connectivity via the Internet for all Member States in their capitals and at major United Nations locations, inter alia, through the enhanced connectivity of permanent missions to the Internet and the United Nations databases;

(b) Intensifying efforts to provide electronic connectivity to those Member States that do not currently have this service;

(c) Improving the access of Member States to a wider range of United Nations information on economic and social issues, development, political issues and other substantive programming areas, and having all official documents available via the Internet;

(d) Improving electronic mail links between Member States and the United Nations, the specialized agencies and each other;

(e) Providing specialized training for the staff of missions to enable them to take advantage of the facilities being developed for Member States, in particular electronic mail and Internet web pages;

(f) Enhancing the capacity of Member States to access United Nations data online, using low-cost telecommunications links or providing other modalities, for example, CD-ROM, whereby Member States can have access to specialized databases not available on the Internet;

(g) Making arrangements, as appropriate, to provide permanent missions of developing countries with the hardware platform to utilize Internet technology;

(h) Intensifying the use of videoconferencing to further communication and interaction between the United Nations, permanent missions and academic institutions;

(j) Building awareness of the year 2000 problem among Member States and, if necessary, providing a platform for Governments to address the issue at the global and regional levels;

(k) Promoting the active support of relevant international organizations for national efforts to deal with emergency situations which may arise from disruption related to the year 2000, in particular in the aviation, telecommunications, maritime and health sectors;

(l) Encouraging greater information-sharing on year 2000 preparedness in order to help countries and organizations to take the necessary remedial actions and contingency planning and to share detailed year 2000 readiness information with the public;

(m) Broadening access to information about the United Nations at the country level, especially in developing countries;

(n) Developing an information management strategy;

3. Commends the Working Group for the success of the two global meetings of national year 2000 coordinators, held at United Nations Headquarters on 11 December 1998 and on 22 June 1999, which respectively raised the awareness of Member States, especially the developing countries, of the gravity of the year 2000 problem, reviewed the state of preparedness of Member States for meeting the challenge of the problem and enabled them to share experiences on remedial action and contingency planning;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America for the financial assistance they provided for the organization of the meetings and the participation of national coordinators;

5. Notes with appreciation the efforts made to bring the Economic and Social Council in line with new information technologies, through a more user-friendly Council web page and the broadcasting on the Internet of the work of the high-level segment of the current substantive session;

6. Reaffirms the continuing need for representatives of States to be consulted closely and associated actively with the respective executive and governing bodies of United Nations institutions dealing with informatics within the United Nations system, so that specific needs of States as end-users can be given priority;

7. Urges the Working Group to intensify its contacts with the private sector so as to bring its wealth of expertise and experience to bear on the work of the Group;

8. Welcomes the efforts of the Information Systems Users' Group in Geneva to ensure connectivity to all Geneva-based permanent missions, and notes with appreciation that extensive work has been done, with the assistance of the various United Nations agencies, in particular the International Telecommunication Union, the World Intellectual Property Organization and the United Nations Office at Geneva, to provide training and equipment to permanent missions in Geneva;

9. Expresses its gratitude to the International Telecommunication Union and private sector sponsors for the contribution they have made to the Geneva Diplomatic Community Network, and hopes that this project will be extended to all permanent missions and to those of developing countries on concessional terms;

10. Suggests that one possibility for the theme of its high-level segment in 2001 could be "Information and communications technology for social and economic development" in order to underscore the importance of modern information technology for the development activities of the United Nations and the need for international cooperation in this field;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to extend full cooperation to the Working Group and to give priority to implementing its recommendations;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council at its substantive session of 2000 on the follow-up action taken on the present resolution, including the findings of the Working Group.

Year 2000 computer problem

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/86 [YUN 1998, p. 1359], the Secretary-General submitted a November report [A/54/525] on action taken by UN funds, programmes and specialized agencies, as well as by Member States, to resolve the year 2000 date conversion of computers. It updated the Secretary-General's August report [A/C.5/54/3], submitted in response to the ACABQ request that the Secretariat coordinate the preparation of a report by the UN system on the issue.

ACC, at its first regular session (Geneva, 9-10 April) [ACC/1999/4], adopted a note on the year 2000 issue, in which it recognized that UN system organizations were working diligently to ensure that they were prepared to meet potential problems arising out of possible worldwide computer system malfunctions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 79], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/114 [draft: A/54/L.61 & Add.1, orally revised] without vote [agenda item 45].

Global implications of the year 2000 date conversion problem of computers

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/233 of 26 June 1998 and 53/86 of 7 December 1998, entitled "Global implications of the year 2000 date conversion problem of computers",

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Steps taken within the United Nations system and with Member States to resolve the year 2000 date conversion of computers",

Recognizing that the effective operation of Governments, companies and other organizations is threatened by the year 2000 date conversion problem of computers, or "millennium bug",

Underlining the need for effective action to address the problem to be intensified as the inflexible date of 31 December 1999 draws nearer and nearer, beyond which important systems might cease to function,

Recognizing the potentially serious impact that the year 2000 problem could have in all countries whose economies are increasingly interdependent,

Emphasizing that the year 2000 problem could affect both computer systems and much electronic control equipment containing embedded chips and internal clocks, with wide-ranging effects on such important areas as power supplies, telecommunications, financial systems, transport, public health, building and factory systems, food supplies, emergency services and government services, including the organization of social welfare,

Emphasizing also that continued coordinated efforts by Governments and private, public and international organizations are required to address the year 2000 problem,

Noting that year 2000 effects are not limited to 1 January 2000, but may continue throughout the year as systems continue to use date-based information for monthly calculations and operations,

Appreciating also the establishment of a trust fund by the World Bank to assist in the efforts to resolve the year 2000 problem and the voluntary contributions made to it by the Member States,

Appreciating also the efforts of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Informatics of the Economic and Social Council in raising the level of awareness of the year 2000 problem,

1. Requests all Member States to continue their efforts to solve the year 2000 problem before the rollover date of 31 December 1999, including by working to ensure that the private sector is fully engaged in addressing the problem and by tackling it in those systems under their own control;

2. Urges Member States to take "best practices" measures, such as virus scanning, against the additional potential risk of malicious software which could be injected into systems with the intent of causing malfunctions or facilitating illegal access to information and which are meant to be mistaken for lack of year 2000 compliance;

3. Urges all Member States to emphasize the importance of contingency planning and to finalize such plans in order to address the potential for possible large-scale failures in the public and private sectors;

4. Urges Member States to set up and participate in national and regional mechanisms for service restoration in the event of service outages after 1 January 2000 attributable to the year 2000 problem;

5. Appeals to all Member States to forge global co-operation to ensure a timely and effective response to the year 2000 challenge and to work together to address the threats the problem poses globally and, in this regard, to cooperate with each other in the event of some Member States not having the capacity to correct service outages, through sharing information on significant events and on countermeasures taken, as well as causes, results and prospects of restoration of services, sharing resources in terms of knowledge, skills, products and solutions to offset the significant events and, where feasible, sending sector-specific experts and/or consultants to neighbouring countries;

6. Calls upon Governments, public and private sector organizations and civil society generally to share, locally, regionally and globally, information about their experiences in addressing the year 2000 problem;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the United Nations system closely monitors actual and potential sources of funding to support the efforts of the developing countries and countries with economies in transition to address the year 2000 problem and to facilitate the dissemination of relevant information on those funding possibilities to the Member States;

8. Urges the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat to be ready to respond to any humanitarian emergencies that could be caused by serious year 2000 failures;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a final report on the evaluation of the outcome of the steps taken within the United Nations system and with Member States to resolve the year 2000 problem.

Integrated Management Information System

The Secretary-General, in February [A/53/829], transmitted the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the increased costs of the Integrated Management Information System (IMIS) development contract, as requested in General Assembly resolutions 48/218 B [YUN 1994, p. 1362] and 52/227 [YUN 1998, p. 1360].

OIOS noted that the original price of the contract, awarded in 1991 for an amount of $17 million, had increased, following contract amendments for out-of-scope work, to $45.7 million, or 169 per cent of the original cost. The underlying reasons for the cost increase included underestimation of the level of effort required to develop, implement and maintain the project, lack of prior experience, contracting on the basis of inadequate and/or incomplete specifications, inadequate participation by main user departments in the development process and delays in addressing deficiencies.

OIOS recommended that to reduce the risk of delays and cost escalation in the implementation of the remaining IMIS releases and to ensure that IMIS was effectively institutionalized, the Administration should establish and communicate strategies and plans for the smooth implementation of revised Release 3 and Releases 4 and 5 and enforce management accountability for their implementation; and ensure that training in the use and operation of IMIS was strengthened and adequate funds were made available. Strategies, plans, organizational structures and resources for effective systems maintenance and support should be established, and heads of departments should identify further opportunities for streamlining administrative processes through the effective use of IMIS.

In a February addendum [A/53/573/Add.1] to his tenth progress report on the IMIS project [YUN 1998, p. 1361], the Secretary-General said that he concurred with the OIOS recommendations. They were in line with those made earlier by OIOS itself, the UN Board of Auditors and the independent experts [ibid., p. 1362]. He said that the Administration had reviewed, in the light of the comments and concerns expressed by OIOS, the estimated resource requirements contained in the tenth progress report and had concluded that they appeared adequate for completing the tasks related to the final stages of the development and implementation of the project. He therefore requested approval of the amount of $3.2 million for the 1998-1999 biennium and $9.5 million for the completion of the project at a total cost of $77.6 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 April [meeting 97], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/485/Add.2], adopted resolution 53/219 without vote [agenda item 113].

Integrated Management Information System

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/212 B of 31 March 1998,

Reaffirming its resolution 52/227 of 31 March 1998 and section VII of its resolution 53/214 of 18 December 1998,

Having considered the tenth progress report of the Secretary-General and the addendum thereto, the study of the Integrated Management Information System conducted by independent experts, the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on the increase in costs of the Integrated Management Information System development contract,

1. Takes note with concern of the findings contained in the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on the increase in costs of the Integrated Management Information System development contract, in particular that:

(a) With careful planning, proper identification of needs and more adequate preparations, the cost increase could have been reduced;

(b) Delays in promptly addressing deficiencies through concerted action in each phase of the development and implementation process have led the Organization to place undue reliance on the contractor;

(c) Insufficient progress has been made with respect to long-term operational support, software maintenance and staff training functions and, consequently, the reliance on the Integrated Management Information System project team and perhaps even the contractor is unlikely to diminish in the near future;

(d) There is no assurance that implementation problems similar to those experienced in previous years will not recur in the case of remaining releases, resulting in the possibility of further cost escalations;

2. Notes the observations of the Office of Internal Oversight Services that in large and complex software development contracts some out-of-scope work is a common occurrence;

3. Regrets the lack of adequate participation of the main user departments in the development and implementation phases of the system, which led to increased costs;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the institutionalization of the Integrated Management Information System by the main user departments is completed as soon as possible;

5. Reiterates its deep concern about the time and cost overruns for the completion of the project;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that problems similar to those experienced previously do not recur;

7. Notes that the services required from the main contractor will be completed by the end of 1999, with the exception of warranty-related activities;

8. Encourages the Secretary-General to make use of any potential for improving efficiency by streamlining existing work flows and processes through more effective use of the Integrated Management Information System;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to take all corrective measures required to make the system fully operational and avoid further delays and unnecessary cost increases in the implementation of the project, taking into account the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services and the study conducted by independent experts;

10. Decides that the resources required to conclude the development of the Integrated Management Information System by August 2000 shall not exceed 77.6 million United States dollars;

11. Reiterates the need for a comprehensive programme for Integrated Management Information System training to be included as part of the ongoing training programme offered to staff at all duty stations concerned;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to include information on the implementation of paragraphs 3 and 4 of its resolution 52/212 B in future progress reports on the Integrated Management Information System;

13. Also requests the Secretary-General clearly to establish roles, responsibilities and accountability of all offices and staff concerned in the implementation of the remaining releases and to report thereon in his next progress report;

14. Further requests the Secretary-General to maintain an effective monitoring system to ensure that implementation problems are addressed properly as they arise;

15. Decides to approve an additional appropriation of 3.2 million dollars under section 27D, Support services, of the programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999, to be charged to the contingency fund and to be reflected in the assessment to be determined on the basis of the final appropriation for the biennium 1998-1999.

In October, the Secretary-General submitted the eleventh progress report on the IMIS project [A/54/474]. Since the last report, IMIS had been fully institutionalized and was implemented at all major duty stations. Its maintenance was fully assumed by UN staff and the costs for completion of the project remained within the projections given in the tenth report.

Over the past year, the new version of Release 2 (staff entitlements) was implemented in Nairobi, Kenya, two new versions of Release 3 (finance and support services) were implemented in New York, Release 3 was successfully implemented in Vienna and Beirut, Lebanon, and the "time and attendance" component was implemented at Headquarters. Progress had been achieved in the development of Releases 4 (payroll and related functionalities) and 5 (operational applications); the reporting facility continued to be enhanced and new human resources functionalities were introduced. Globally, the usage of the system had increased.

The next steps for the completion of the system would be the implementation of Release 3 at all offices away from Headquarters by November 2000, and the implementation of Releases 4 and 5 in New York by the first quarter of 2000 and at all major duty stations by December 2000. Although major progress had been achieved, the implementation of Release 3 at five duty stations and the implementation of payroll at all duty stations would continue to require a very high level of effort on the part of staff at Headquarters and at the offices concerned.

In December, ACABQ, in its fifth report on the project [A/54/7/Add.4], requested the Secretary-General to provide information on the development of the system for field missions and for the tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda in his next progress report, including resources to overcome technical and personnel constraints. He should implement IMIS expeditiously in the peacekeeping operations and the tribunals and a pilot project should be established in a peacekeeping mission, with the implementation costs included in that mission's budget. ACABQ recommended that the Secretary-General submit a comprehensive final report on the implementation of the system, including a full analysis of lessons learned and experience gained and addressing the issue of a long-term strategy for the further development of the system. ACABQ was concerned about the gap between the stated intention of the Secretary-General to create an "electronic United Nations" and the relatively low level of financial and human resources allocated to achieve that goal. It noted from the additional information provided on various information systems used in the UN system for financial and administrative applications that each agency continued to develop its own system, with little coordination, leading to unnecessary expenditures and duplication.

Other matters

Common services

JIU report. The Secretary-General, in January, transmitted a JIU report entitled "United Nations system common services at Geneva, part I, Overview of administrative cooperation and coordination" [A/53/787]. JIU found that, despite their close physical proximity and institutional commonalities, the Geneva-based secretariats operated very few services in common. No services were shared by the five specialized agencies located in the city and parallel support services existed among UN entities governed by the same Charter. That led to fragmentation and duplication of overhead structures and costs, aggravated by the absence of an intergovernmental consultative or review body and the lack of effective and cohesive institutional leadership of the UN Office at Geneva (UNOG).

The Inspectors recommended a basic framework for common services for Geneva-based organizations and that the Secretary-General refine and implement the revitalization measures proposed in the report, including the establishment of a UNOG common services committee and the possible appointment of a high-level official to foster common services objectives. JIU also recommended a more active role for the Geneva Diplomatic Committee, as well as meetings of ACABQ in Geneva focused specifically on issues of administrative and budgetary coordination among Geneva-based secretariats and entities. By decision 53/474 of 8 June, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the JIU report until its fifty-fourth session.

OIOS reports. In June [A/54/157], the Secretary-General transmitted an OIOS report on the review of common services in the United Nations. The OIOS review, conducted at UN Headquarters in New York and at UN offices in Geneva and Vienna, examined progress achieved in strengthening common services in the areas identified in the Secretary-General's common services strategy, which was part of the new vision of management set out in his programme of reform [YUN 1997, p. 1389]. It also assessed efforts to improve the effectiveness and efficiency of UN support services in those areas. The review confirmed that the Secretary-General's reform measures gave new impetus to the need to seek cost-effectiveness through possible expansion of common services. Specific action was taken to implement those measures in New York, including the establishment of a Task Force on Common Services, which created working groups for specific areas, adopted plans of action and implemented them. OIOS said that it was important to ensure that the UN offices in Geneva and Vienna were included in the overall implementation strategy and that other duty stations were kept informed of lessons learned and best practices identified. It found that common services arrangements had led to the development of differing cost-sharing formulas and monitoring mechanisms. However, while common arrangements involving direct provision of services, such as payroll and pouch services, were more easily acceptable, there was reluctance to share processes requiring managerial decision-making, such as procurement or recruitment procedures. The perceived inefficiency of some central support services was cited as a deterrent to expanding common services. Some of the difficulties identified by departments/offices at all three duty stations included the need for each organization to control its own resources and staff, distrust of other entities' ability to prioritize services equitably, individual mandates from governing bodies and lack of interaction and communication among heads of organizations.

OIOS made a number of recommendations aimed at enhancing central support services and removing some of the barriers to their expansion. Among those recommendations were proposals for the Department of Management to expedite the delegation of authority and responsibility to line managers, and to UNOG and the UN Office at Vienna (UNOV) for human resources and financial and general support servicing. The Task Force on Common Services and UNOG should assess how common services might be expanded in Geneva, and the latter should streamline administrative processes to avoid duplication. UNOV should analyse the costs of maintaining administrative support structures and identify areas for reducing costs through shared procurement. The Department of Management should also promote common services within the UN system, working with ACC. Clear criteria and transparency of cost accounting to users should be developed for expanding common services.

In September [A/54/157/Add.1], the Secretary-General transmitted JIU's comments on the OIOS review of common services. JIU recommended that the General Assembly should encourage the Secretary-General and ACC to take steps to enhance common services and report to the Assembly's fifty-sixth (2001) session.

The Assembly, in resolution 54/249 of 23 December, requested the Secretary-General to report at its fifty-fifth (2000) session on progress made by the UN Common Services Task Force on the existing common services and to expand and develop new ones as appropriate. It noted the advanced level of arrangements for common services and related cost indicators at UNOV.

Outsourcing practices

The Secretary-General, as requested in General Assembly resolution 52/226 B [YUN 1998, p. 1364], submitted a February report [A/53/818] setting out the basic policy and guidelines to be followed in considering the use of outsourcing, which took into account the JIU [YUN 1997, p. 1511] and OIOS [YUN 1998, p. 1253] reports on the subject. The report committed the United Nations to viewing outsourcing as one of the options to be considered by programme managers in providing or upgrading the quality and cost-effectiveness of the Organization's non-core activities and services. It did not mandate that specific non-core activities be outsourced, only that outsourcing be considered in a meaningful manner as part of the Organization's regular management decision-making process.

ACABQ, in a May report [A/53/942], concluded that the identification of functions that could be contracted out, as set out in the report, was not specific as to what could and could not be contracted out. The report did not analyse experience within the UN Secretariat and the statistical data provided was insufficient and inconclusive. The Committee recommended that the classification of activities as "core" and "non-core" should be dispensed with, since it had no utility value and had the potential for endless debate and disagreement as to those activities that should or should not be contracted out.

The Assembly, by decision 53/474 of 8 June, deferred consideration of the 1997 JIU report and the 1998 ACC report [YUN 1998, p. 1364] on outsourcing and that of ACABQ until its fifty-fourth session.

Internal and external printing

In its first report on the proposed programme budget for the biennium 2000-2001 [A/54/7], ACABQ expressed concern about the need for a rational basis for determining the mix of external and "in-house" printing, and repeated its request that comparative data for all UN headquarters on in-house versus outsourcing of printing be provided at the General Assembly's fifty-fourth session. It also requested a comprehensive report for its review, including information on the total cost of operating all printing facilities in Geneva and New York and the capacity of all the plants and the printing workload of all organizations concerned. Additionally, information should be provided on the external printing programme and comparative costs for in-house and external printing. The report was to be submitted in time for the Committee to submit its recommendations to the Assembly at its fifty-fifth (2000) session.

In October, the Secretary-General submitted a provisional report on internal and external printing practices of the Organization [A/C.5/54/18]. He stated that the United Nations had traditionally used a mix of internal and external printing services. Improved technology had progressively reduced the range of services and materials that needed to be outsourced and the introduction of electronic pre-press equipment had shortened reproduction deadlines further. ACABQ had encouraged the trend towards increased use of internal capacity. System-wide expenditure on printing decreased from some $8 million in 1988-1989 to $6 million in 1996-1997, mainly at Headquarters where expenditure fell from $5.6 million to $3.4 million. However, the 2000-2001 proposed programme budget provided for an increase in external printing resources in some areas. While in-house facilities offered the advantages of an integrated production process not subject to outside controls, external services provided even greater product diversification than did the recently expanded internal plants. External printing was also an effective means of eliminating backlogs and meeting demand during specific periods.

As to costs, only limited ad hoc cost comparisons could be made between the two options. The Reproduction Section in New York had written a computer program to estimate the cost of individual jobs, but that did not include capital costs or items like power, maintenance and overheads. It was used selectively to provide indicative information as to whether a job should be done internally or outsourced and did not cover parliamentary documents. Geneva intended to develop a somewhat similar system. Using that costing system analysis, the Secretariat intended to submit a comprehensive report to the Assembly's fifty-fifth (2000) session.

In its sixth report on the proposed programme budget for 2000-2001 [A/54/7/Add.5], ACABQ noted the considerable improvement in efficiency in the printing programme in New York through the introduction of new technologies. It encouraged the further development of the computer program in the Reproduction Section, which should be coordinated with the development of a similar system in Geneva. The Committee was of the opinion that a method to figure in maintenance and overhead should also be developed and reported on in the context of the next proposed programme budget. However, the Committee felt that the Secretary-General's report only partially addressed its concerns; it requested a comprehensive report to the Assembly's fifty-fifth session to address the issues raised, in particular the situation in Geneva, and to assess the implementation of the conclusions and recommendations of the 1994 comprehensive study on conference services [YUN 1994, p. 1403]. That report should also include information on measures taken to ensure coordination between printing facilities at different duty stations, to achieve economies of scale, including through the development of common services among all UN entities at a duty station, and to ensure that the measurement of outputs was consistent. The Committee further requested information on the potential for further reducing the printing budget, given the 25 per cent reduction in hard-copy output since 1992-1993 and the productivity gains achieved.

By resolution 54/251, section X, of 23 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on internal and external printing practices and ACABQ's recommendations and requested the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report on the printing practices of the Organization to its fifty-fifth (2000) session.

Measures to increase profitability of UN commercial activities

The Secretary-General, responding to a General Assembly request in resolution 52/220 [YUN 1997, p. 1421], submitted a January report on proposed measures to improve the profitability of UN commercial activities [A/53/794]. He indicated that a comprehensive review of the use of public spaces at Headquarters was currently in progress, including an examination of the commercial activities available to visitors to determine the extent to which they were in harmony with the goal of making the United Nations a safe and welcoming environment, and to what extent they would lend themselves to off-site application. In view of the comprehensive nature of the review, the Secretary-General planned to report on those issues and other related questions in the context of the proposed programme budget for the 2000-2001 biennium.

In the interim, the Secretary-General observed that, over the last two bienniums, the Geneva and New York Sales and Marketing Sections had increased income to the Organization through the sale of publications. In addition, electronic publications were expected to generate an increasingly larger share of revenue, saving the Organization mailing costs and expediting deliveries. With respect to the sale of publications in Geneva, he proposed a number of measures, including the diversification of sales, privatization of the UN Bookstore, active promotion of sales in Arabic and Russian, and the creation of new souvenir/gift items, extension of successful lines and the formation of joint ventures.

In the proposed 2000-2001 programme budget [A/54/6/Rev.1, vol. III], the Secretary-General projected, under income section 3, Services to the public, an increase in anticipated net revenue for the biennium of $1,282,900 compared with the revised estimates of $4,307,600 for the 1998-1999 biennium. The increase was largely attributable to the sale of UN publications and the gift shop and garage operations, partly offset by a projected reduction in income under the philatelic items.

ACABQ, in its first report on the 2000-2001 programme budget [A/54/7], noted the information concerning developments related to the sale of publications in Geneva.

UN premises and property

Facilities management

As requested in General Assembly resolution 52/220 [YUN 1997, p. 1421], the Secretary-General submitted a November update [A/54/628] on the principal properties of the United Nations worldwide, focusing on their replacement value. It discussed the implications for long-range major maintenance and the modernization of existing buildings.

Total gross floor area in use by the United Nations at locations surveyed was 1,252,621 square metres. The estimated total value of all land and buildings (owned or rented at nominal cost) was approximately $5,186,950,291. By the middle of the 2000-2001 biennium, 46 per cent of the total gross floor area of owned buildings would be over 40 years old. The Headquarters building had already passed the threshold for obsolescence and deterioration, having reached 50 years of age, and some 76 per cent of building space leased at nominal or no cost was 10 years old or more. Those buildings would require large increases in major maintenance expenditures and there was a need to clarify the relative responsibilities of the United Nations and the building owners for such costs.

The Secretary-General suggested that a more focused, integrated approach be adopted for facilities management. The activities of that sub-programme would be further elaborated in the capital master plan of the proposed programme budget for the 2000-2003 biennium. During the current medium-term plan period (1998-2001), technical support for and consultation with the administrations at principal locations would be increased in administration, programme identification and implementation. The implementation of projects for the modernization of existing facilities would include the continued introduction of building automation systems, energy conservation, modern electronic communications and planned improvements in the use of space.

The Secretary-General concluded that the physical condition of UN buildings had an important impact on the efficiency of the Secretariat and conference activities of the Organization. Owing to budgetary constraints, the amount of funding available was consistently below the industry benchmark standard. In collaboration with an Organization-wide team and a focal point from each duty station, the Headquarters' Office of Central Support Services would provide a coordinating role for monitoring, information exchange and policy dissemination with respect to locations outside of Headquarters. The United Nations had already taken additional Organization-wide initiatives to improve the efficiency and services of Headquarters and overseas facilities, including the creation of working groups on facilities management and a Joint Advisory Standing Committee on Environmental and Occupational Health and Safety Issues and the development of a capital master plan and a database of all office and conference spaces.

Rental premises

In response to an ACABQ request [A/54/1] that he survey the terms of agreements under which the press and other entities occupied space in buildings owned and rented by the United Nations free of charge or at less than commercial rates, the Secretary-General submitted an October report on the subject [A/C.5/54/25].

A review of the current UN practice of charging rent to outside entities occupying space on its premises indicated that, while rents were generally based on local commercial rates, the rates varied by group of tenants and were affected by specific factors and conditions prevailing at each duty station. Rents were set according to the type of tenants housed and on the level of their contribution to the Organization's work. Thus, several different rates might apply at a particular location. Press and other media entities, as well as staff-affiliated bodies and entities, were exempt from paying rent, while other tenants were charged rent at commercial or concessional/reduced rates.

The Secretary-General was of the opinion that the agreements were based on established policies and took into account both tenant and local conditions, and he intended to continue to apply those practices.

In its sixth report on the programme budget for 2000-2001 [A/54/7/Add.5], ACABQ stated that the criteria for charging rent were too general and could be open to different interpretations, and the current practice, as set out in the Secretary-General's report, led to several inconsistencies. It requested a complete listing of UN tenants, including those occupying rent-free space, as well as information on the square footage of space occupied by each organization or tenant, rent paid per square foot, maintenance and overhead charges, the actual percentage formula applied in relation to market rates, and the type of contract or agreement.

By resolution 54/251, section XI, of 23 December, the General Assembly took note of the reports of the Secretary-General and ACABQ and requested the Secretary-General to provide the outstanding information requested by ACABQ. It decided to revert to the subject at its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session.

Addis Ababa conference facilities

The Secretary-General submitted a February report [A/53/347/Add.1], in response to General Assembly resolution 53/214, section VI [YUN 1998, p. 1365], in which he was requested to take urgent measures to find a solution to the dispute concerning the telecommunications system installed at the new conference facilities in Addis Ababa. The Secretary-General reported that discussions were held with the host Government, leading to a satisfactory resolution of the problem and the release of the requested items from customs on 16 December 1998. As a result, the contractor commenced work to correct the identified deficiencies within the warranty period, which expired on 24 February 1999. The Secretary-General reported that the 10 per cent retention ($302,549) of the contract amount would not be released until the contractor had corrected the identified deficiencies. Claims for additional compensation would not be discussed until the completion of the contract. However, the Secretary-General did not request any additional resources beyond the amount ($115,228,494) already approved.

By decision 53/474 of 8 June, the Assembly deferred consideration of the report until its fifty-fourth session.

In October [A/54/431], the Secretary-General reported that the deficiencies that had been identified had been resolved. Regarding claims for additional compensation, it was agreed that the United Nations would pay $34,756.53 for work performed out of the scope of the contract. The contractor agreed not to make any further claims either for extra work or for compensation for work-time loss. As at 30 June, total disbursements for the project amounted to $114,084,919, leaving a balance of $1,143,575. It was anticipated that all remaining accounts would be finalized within the 1998-1999 biennium to enable the construction-in-progress account to be closed and the project capitalized.

In its sixth report on the proposed programme budget for 2000-2001 [A/54/7/Add.5], ACABQ recommended that the Assembly take note of the Secretary-General's report, which it did in resolution 54/251, section IX, of 23 December.

Management audit of ECA and ESCAP conference centres

In September [A/54/410], the Secretary-General transmitted an OIOS report on the management audit of the conference centres at the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP), in response to General Assembly resolution 48/218 B [YUN 1994, p. 1362].

OIOS believed that the decision to construct two facilities of that magnitude was flawed. Their physical capacity requirements were vastly overestimated and the ongoing financial implications were not properly assessed. To date, the proper use and management of the two centres had not been a priority, despite their increasing financial burden to the Organization. Their current estimated annual operating costs were $1.16 million for ECA and $1.53 million for ESCAP, and revenue from external users covered no more than one eighth of either centre's annual operating costs.

The five major meeting rooms at both centres were empty between 60 and 85 per cent of the time. The ECA system of debt recovery from external users was inadequate and Secretariat offices and common system agencies rarely selected those two facilities for large conferences and meetings. Neither centre was established as a legitimate revenue-producing operation for the Organization, and no resources were earmarked for the marketing and promotion of the centres within or outside the UN system.

OIOS recommended that the ESCAP Executive Secretary should develop a comprehensive proposal for the management and promotion of the Bangkok centre, comprising a cost-benefit and market analysis, a detailed cost plan and a discussion of options, which might include outsourcing; the new ECA Conference Centre Chief should finalize a marketing cost plan and determine the feasibility of implementing additional service and facility enhancements; and the executive secretaries of the two commissions, in conjunction with the Department of General Assembly Affairs and Conference Services, should formulate a plan for using the two centres for major UN events and meetings.

Other recommendations dealt with management and customer service improvements. Both commissions had since addressed most of them. Specifically, the ECA secretariat had set up the Business Centre within the conference facility and was developing the Technology Centre for Africa, which would include both permanent and temporary exhibitions and a training centre. It was also working to streamline financial procedures and controls. The ESCAP secretariat had also initiated discussions to promote the centre.

Staff security

ACC, at its first regular session (Geneva, 9-10 April) [ACC/1999/4], agreed that all UN organizations should systematically report incidents involving the safety of UN staff to the Security Coordinator, who would examine them from a legal perspective to identify the need for enhanced legal protection.

The Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Security (Washington, D.C., 11-13 May) made a number of recommendations to ACC on issues related to residential security measures, funding of security, security implications of the year 2000 computer problem for UN staff, inter-agency training, communications, revision of the field security handbook, field security officers and other related matters [ACC/1999/10].

In a decision on UN staff security, adopted at its second regular session (New York, 29-30 October) [ACC/1999/20], ACC decided that: a comprehensive approach needed to be fully and urgently implemented and concerted action taken by Member States and the secretariats at Headquarters and in the field to ensure the security of staff, including local staff, in all duty stations; every effort would be made to raise with Member States and parties to conflict their responsibility and accountability for the safety of staff and the full investigation of security incidents; steps would be taken to ensure that adequate funds and staff were available for security measures, including dedicated funding, preferably from programme budgets; and the adequacy and timeliness of the compensation to families of all staff members killed in the line of duty would be reviewed.

International recognition of Day of Vesak

On 15 December [meeting 79], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/115 [draft: A/54/L.59 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 174].

International recognition of the Day of Vesak at United Nations Headquarters and other United Nations offices

The General Assembly,

Acknowledging the hope expressed by the International Buddhist Conference, held in Sri Lanka in November 1998, that the Day of Vesak, the Day of the Full Moon in the month of May each year, be recognized internationally and, in particular, at United Nations Headquarters and other United Nations offices,

Recognizing that the Day of the Full Moon in the month of May each year is the day most sacred to Buddhists, who commemorate on that day the birth of the Buddha, his attainment of enlightenment and his passing away,

Considering that international recognition at United Nations Headquarters and other United Nations offices would constitute acknowledgement of the contribution that Buddhism, one of the oldest religions in the world, has made for over two and a half millennia and continues to make to the spirituality of humanity,

Resolves that, without cost to the United Nations, appropriate arrangements shall be made for international observances of the Day of Vesak at United Nations Headquarters and other United Nations offices, in consultation with the relevant United Nations offices and with permanent missions that also wish to be consulted.

Chapter I

International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)

The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), continued its activities in 1999 under what its medium term strategy (2001-2005) identified as the pillars of the IAEA programme: technology, safety and verification.

At its forty-third session (Vienna, 27 September-1 October), the IAEA General Conference adopted a series of resolutions on: strengthening of international cooperation in nuclear safety, radiological protection and waste management, and of IAEA's technical cooperation activities; improving the safeguards system and the application of the 1997 Model Protocol Additional to Safeguards Agreements [YUN 1997, p. 1519]; the early application of full-scope safeguards to all nuclear activities in the Middle East; and the full implementation of IAEA's safeguards agreement with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and of UN Security Council resolutions on Iraq. Other resolutions concerned the safety of radiation sources and the security of radioactive materials, the safe transport of those materials, the radiological protection of patients, measures against illicit trafficking in nuclear and other radioactive materials, the development of nuclear technologies for producing potable water economically and the extensive use of isotope hydrology for water resources management.

During the year, IAEA's membership rose to 130 with the admission of Angola and Benin.

Activities

Nuclear safety

IAEA continued to foster a global nuclear safety culture, comprising legally binding conventions, internationally agreed safety standards and measures to apply those conventions and standards. Activities centred on developing standards on siting, design and operation of nuclear power plants and research reactors, providing a variety of expert services, promoting information exchange on safety issues and supporting coordinated research in member States. Operational safety review services emphasized safety management, safety culture and self-assessment.

Safety missions were undertaken during the year by the Operational Safety Review Team to Bulgaria, France, Pakistan and Switzerland, and by the Assessment of Safety Significant Events

Team to Armenia, India, Slovakia and Ukraine. The International Nuclear Event Scale facilitated the communication and understanding of nuclear and other radiation incidents to the public. Fifty-nine countries provided information on 24 such incidents, among them the September accident at the nuclear fuel-processing facility in Tokaimura, Japan. To assist member States in preparing for possible Y2K computer problems at nuclear power plants, IAEA issued a guidance document, held three workshops and conducted 20 missions to nine member States.

In 1999, three States (Cyprus, Sri Lanka, United States) adhered to the 1994 Convention on Nuclear Safety [YUN 1994, pp. 925 & 1417], bringing the number of parties to 52.

Radiation safety

IAEA's radiation safety programme had two complementary objectives: development of a unified set of safety standards based on consensus and application of those standards in member States and through other international organizations. The programme emphasized research, development of requirements-level consensus documents and supporting guides, and preparation of manuals to assist in standards implementation. Technical cooperation projects included the Model Project on strengthening radiation and waste-safety infrastructures in over 50 member States. Considerable effort was devoted to emergency response activities, to support which a number of research programmes, training courses, conferences and other meetings were organized. A new service, the Transport Safety Appraisal Service, was introduced to provide reviews of national implementation of IAEA's Regulations for the Safe Transport of Radioactive Material.

Nuclear power

The nuclear power programme, as reformulated in 1999, emphasized the use of small and medium-sized reactors in developing countries. Work in nuclear power planning, implementation and performance sought to facilitate the exchange of experience and provide assistance to member States, including cost-benefit analysis of upgrades to nuclear plants. Assistance was provided to Bangladesh, Egypt, Morocco, Turkey and Viet Nam in nuclear power planning, feasibility studies and infrastructure development. The International Nuclear Desalination Advisory Group, in June, reviewed member States' national programmes and projects, stressing the importance of international cooperation in nuclear desalination demonstration activities.

Nuclear fuel cycle

Activities in the nuclear fuel cycle area focused on: uranium supply and demand and environmental issues related to uranium mining and milling; immediate challenges in reactor materials and fuel technology, such as those associated with increased burn-up; spent fuel management; and nuclear fuel cycle issues and databases. A symposium was held (Vienna, 17-21 May) on mixed-oxide fuel cycle technologies for medium- and long-term deployment. A report on the adverse environmental effects from uranium mining and milling operations and mitigation thereof was prepared jointly by IAEA and the Nuclear Energy Agency of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

Radioactive waste management

The radioactive waste technology programme covered: sources of radioactive waste, with emphasis on inventories, minimization and decommissioning of facilities; implementation of waste management activities, focusing on disposal issues; and technology transfer and exchange. An international symposium (Taejon, Republic of Korea, 30 August-3 September) reviewed worldwide experience in implementing technologies to manage radioactive wastes in ways that were safe, economical and environmentally sound. Regional demonstrations of pre-disposal waste management methods and procedures were held in operating waste processing and storage facilities in Chile, the Philippines, the Russian Federation and Turkey. IAEA also assisted China, Costa Rica, Jamaica, Pakistan, Peru and the United Republic of Tanzania in the safe management of spent, sealed radiation sources, particularly unused radium sources.

Marine environment and water resources

Activities in the marine environment continued to focus on the protection of the oceans and coastal seas through radioactivity monitoring and assessment, and the use of nuclear and isotopic techniques to understand pollutant behaviour. Capacity-building, quality assurance, provision of reference materials and methods, training and participation in the collection of marine samples in the Southern Ocean and along the coast of Morocco were among IAEA's most important contributions in 1999. In addition, it developed an isotope methodology to assess groundwater renewal where water was scarce. The IAEA Marine Environment Laboratory in Monaco also developed an innovative system for monitoring marine radioactivity using stationary gamma monitors with satellite data transmission.

The tenth symposium on isotope techniques in water resources development and management (Vienna, 10-14 May) discussed isotope applications in surface-water hydrology, groundwater resource management, climate change phenomena and environmental management.

Food and agriculture

Progress was made in developing technologies and formulating environmentally sound practices for enhancing food security. Isotope and radiation techniques provided new scientific information on nitrogen fertilizer and water use in wheat cultivation, leading to practices that improved or maintained yields, while saving on nitrogen fertilizer applications and reducing nitrate pollution of groundwater. Mutation techniques combined with modern biotechnology led to the generation of economically useful traits in crop plants. The use of radioimmunoassay and related methods provided member States with recommendations for improving artificial insemination, increasing milk production and controlling important livestock diseases. The sterile insect technique continued to play a major role in the control and eradication of pests of both crops and livestock, while the role of irradiation as a sanitary phytosanitary treatment of food and agricultural commodities continued to gain recognition. The latter was highlighted by an international conference (Antalya, Turkey, 19-22 October) on ensuring the safety and quality of food through radiation processing.

Human health

The main thrust of IAEA's human health programme continued to be cancer control and combating infection and malnutrition through preventive measures. In nuclear medicine, cost efficacy studies of inexpensive radiopharmaceuticals and the application of isotopes in molecular biology and new radioimmunoassay-related procedures were emphasized. In radiation therapy and radiobiology, development of quality assurance was the main topic and included the development of patient immobilization devices and protocols for HIV-infected cancer patients. In health-related environmental studies, new strategies for nutrition intervention schemes were identified and the global network of analytical laboratories was strengthened.

Technical cooperation

During the year, IAEA began implementing its 1999-2000 technical cooperation programme and planning for the 2001-2002 programme.

To ensure the programme's relevance and impact, regional meetings were organized to discuss priorities, to train in project design and to plan specific projects; the programme's objectives were also aligned with those of other UN agencies, and links were forged with the private sector. In South Africa, where the main effort of the World Health Organization was combating communicable diseases, among them tuberculosis, IAEA began working with that country to develop isotope-based molecular techniques for the rapid and accurate detection of multi-drug-resistant strains of the disease. In West Asia, planning of water resources management was harmonized with the work of other UN bodies and intergovernmental organizations. The East Asia and Pacific region sponsored a seminar to assist project counterparts in marketing their capabilities to end-users.

Safeguards responsibilities

All information available to IAEA in 1999 supported the conclusion that nuclear material and related items placed under safeguards remained in peaceful nuclear activities or were otherwise adequately accounted for. As at 31 December, 224 safeguards agreements with 140 States (and with Taiwan, Province of China) were in force. Safeguards agreements that satisfied the requirements of the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2373(XXII) [YUN 1968, p. 17], were in force in 128 States. Protocols Additional to Safeguards Agreements [YUN 1997, p. 1519] for 46 States were approved by the Board of Governors. Eight such Protocols were in force in Australia, the Holy See, Indonesia, Japan, Jordan, Monaco, New Zealand and Uzbekistan.

During 1999, 2,495 safeguards inspections were performed in 70 States, covering 196 nuclear power reactors, 156 research reactors and critical assemblies, 13 conversion plants, 43 fuel fabrication plants, 6 nuclear reprocessing plants, 14 uranium enrichment plants, 69 separate storage facilities and 86 other facilities.

IAEA was unable to fulfil its safeguards mandates in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and Iraq (see PART ONE, Chapter IV).

Nuclear information

During the year, IAEA's WorldAtom Internet site was redesigned to improve its ability to handle an expanding number of external inquiries.

The Internet site of the journal Nuclear Fusion was enhanced, and work on an IAEA e-commerce site for sales publications began. Publishing activities included the production of a total of 142 books, reports, journal issues and booklets in English, plus two publications each in Chinese and French and one each in Russian and Spanish.

Participating members of the International Nuclear Information System (INIS) numbered 122, including 103 countries and 19 international organizations. A distance-learning project through the Internet was launched to provide training to INIS users, with the first phase completed in 1999.

Secretariat

At the end of 1999, IAEA secretariat staff totalled 2,212, including 944 in the Professional and higher categories and 1,286 in the General Service category. Ninety-two nationalities were represented in posts subject to geographical distribution.

Budget

The 1999 regular budget amounted to $221.8 million, of which $210.8 million was financed from assessed contributions by member States on the basis of the 1999 assessment scale and $4.9 million from income from reimbursable work for others. Actual expenditure from the budget amounted to $221.6 million. A total of $26.1 million in extrabudgetary funds was provided by member States, the United Nations, international organizations and other sources.

Chapter II

International Labour Organization (ILO)

In 1999, the International Labour Organization (ILO) continued to promote social justice and economic stability and improve labour conditions. Its four strategic objectives were: to promote and realize fundamental principles and rights at work; to create greater opportunities for women and men to secure decent employment and income; to enhance the coverage and effectiveness of social protection for all; and to strengthen tripartism and social dialogue.

In 1999, ILO membership remained at 174.

Meetings

The eighty-seventh session of the International Labour Conference (ILC) (Geneva, 1-17 June) unanimously adopted the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999, which applied to all persons under the age of 18 and called for immediate and effective measures to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. ILC also adopted an unprecedented resolution against Myanmar for consistent violations of the Forced Labour Convention and failure to respond to repeated rulings by supervisory bodies to put an end to forced labour, a practice that an ILO Commission of Inquiry found to be widespread in the country. The Committee on Maternity Protection agreed to revise the Maternity Protection Convention (No. 103) and its accompanying Recommendation No. 95 to take account of developments since the latest provisions for maternity protection were adopted in 1952.

Sectoral and other meetings convened in Geneva during 1999 included: Meeting of Experts on Ambient Factors at the Workplace (27 January-2 February); Tripartite Meeting on Voluntary Initiatives Affecting Training and Education on Safety, Health and Environment in the Chemical Industries (22-26 February); Tripartite Meeting on Managing the Privatization and Restructuring of Public Utilities (12-16 April); International Symposium on the Future of Employers' Organizations (19-21 April); Tripartite Meeting on Social and Labour Issues in Small-scale Mines (17-21 May); Symposium on the Social and Labour Consequences of Technological Developments, Deregulation and Privatization of Transport (20-24 September); Meeting of Experts on Labour Inspection and Child Labour (27 September-1 October); International Symposium on Trade Unions and the Informal Sector (18-22 October); Tripartite Meeting on the Human Resource Implications of Globalization and Restructuring in Commerce (25-29 October); International Consultation concerning Follow-up on the World Summit for Social Development (2-4 November); Second ILO Enterprise Forum (5-6 November); and the Tripartite Meeting on Safety and Health in the Fishing Industry (13-17 December). The Fourteenth American Regional Meeting was held in Lima, Peru, from 24 to 27 August.

International standards

ILO activities with regard to conventions and recommendations during 1999 included standard-setting and the supervision and promotion of the application of standards. Supervisory bodies reviewed existing procedures and standard-setting policy.

Standard-setting

In June, ILC adopted an eighth fundamental convention, the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182).

During the biennium 1998-1999, 83 ratifications of the eight fundamental conventions were registered: 6 for the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29); 6 for the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize Convention, 1948 (No. 87); 8 for the Right to Organize and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98); 8 for the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100); 15 for the Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105); 12 for the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111); 26 for the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138); and 5 for the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182).

Supervision of standards

The Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, at its seventieth session (Geneva, 25 November-10 December), noted 27 instances in which Governments had changed their law and practice to conform with ratified conventions. The total number of cases in which the Committee had been led to express satisfaction with the progress achieved had risen to 2,230 since 1964.

The Governing Body Committee on Freedom of Association met three times during the year to examine complaints of violations of freedom of association received from employers' and workers' organizations.

Employment and development

ILO continued in 1999 to help constituents combat unemployment and poverty through the creation of employment opportunities and improvement of existing jobs. It also provided advice and guidance on employment, labour market policies and information and statistical systems, and supported the development of entrepreneurship through the creation of cooperatives and small and micro-enterprises, particularly by vulnerable groups, such as women, migrant workers, indigenous and tribal peoples and persons with disabilities.

Working environment

In April, ILO informed the Fifteenth World Congress on Occupational Safety and Health (Sao Paulo, Brazil) that 1 million work-related deaths occurred every year; 250 million work-related accidents caused absences from work every year; and 3,000 people were killed every work day. ILO activities in the field of occupational safety and health included creating alliances and partnerships by launching activities to be used by Governments, social partners, non-governmental organizations and human rights groups in advocacy campaigns and supporting, through technical assistance, national action regarding hazardous occupations.

Field activities

In 1999, expenditure on operational activities, under all sources of funding, totalled $97.1 million compared with $93.7 million in 1998. The three leading programmes in terms of annual expenditure (representing 52 per cent of total expenditure) were in employment and training ($17.1 million), enterprise and cooperative development ($16.2 million) and development policies ($15.8 million). Other programmes dealt with working conditions and environment ($13.7 million), including the International Programme for the Elimination of Child Labour ($10.5 million). Interregional and global activities accounted for some $18.8 million. In terms of regional distribution, Africa accounted for 35 per cent of total expenditure ($33.8 million), Asia and the Pacific for 20 per cent ($19.5 million) and Latin America and the Caribbean for 14 per cent ($13.8 million). Expenditure in Europe increased from $5.2 million in 1998 to $6.85 million in 1999, and the Arab States programme almost doubled from $2.3 million in 1998 to $4.3 million in 1999.

Educational activities

In 1999, the Turin Centre continued to carry out training and related activities in a wide range of technical areas as an integral part of ILO technical cooperation activities. The International Institute for Labour Studies conducted research and encouraged networking related to emerging labour policy issues, and acted as a catalyst for future ILO programme development.

The United Nations Staff College, by the end of October 1999, had trained a total of 145 UN staff members from 21 departments, agencies, programmes and offices.

The objectives of the Interactive Conference on Organized Labour in the Twenty-first Century, launched in September and scheduled to run for a year, were to establish an international forum in which a wide range of people could share ideas and strategies for strengthening and broadening the role of organized labour in 2000 and beyond, and to foster debate, build links and support research in relevant areas.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1999, ILO employed a total of 2,219 full-time staff at its Geneva headquarters and in 40 field offices around the world. Of those, 925 were in the Professional and higher categories and 1,284 were in the General Service category.

Budget

In June 1999, ILC adopted a budget of $467 million for the 2000-2001 biennium.

Chapter III

Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)

The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) continued to work towards the achievement of sustainable global food security by raising nutrition levels and living standards, improving agricultural productivity and advancing the condition of rural populations. It expanded the operational reach of its Special Programme for Food Security (SPFS) and established a secretariat for the inter-agency initiative Food Insecurity and Vulnerability Information and Mapping Systems. It brought early warning of potential food shortages to the world's attention through conferences, meetings and information campaigns and, in 1999, began publication of a new series of reports, The State of Food Insecurity in the World.

In 1999, FAO's membership rose to 180 countries, plus the European Community, with the admission of Kiribati, the Marshall Islands, Niue, Palau and San Marino.

The FAO Conference, the agency's governing body, held its thirtieth biennial session (Rome, Italy, 12-23 November). It approved the FAO Strategic Framework for 2000-2015, reviewed the follow-up activities to the 1996 World Food Summit [YUN 1996, p. 1129], examined the global state of food and agriculture and discussed issues on gender mainstreaming, the International Undertaking on Plant Genetic Resources for Food and Agriculture, the outcome of several international conferences related to agricultural issues, as well as several cooperation agreements with organizations dealing with food-related matters.

FAO's activities, carried out within the context of its mandate and the Strategic Framework, were in the areas of crops and livestock, forestry, fisheries, food standards and nutrition, commodities and trade, environment and natural resources management, plant and animal genetic resources, agricultural services, ethics in food and agriculture, rural development and gender in development.

In June, major donors approved the new Food Aid Convention (FAC) for an initial period of three years, from July 1999. FAC called for a more flexible approach to food aid by expanding the list of eligible commodities and methods of distribution. As expanded, the list included products that were part of the traditional diet of vulnerable groups or components of supplementary feed programmes, and micronutrients and fortified food products.

World food situation

World cereal production in 1999 reached 1,865 million tonnes (including rice in milled terms), slightly below the previous year's level but above the average of the preceding five years. The decline was mostly a result of lower wheat and coarse grain production. Severe drought in the Near East and parts of North Africa and excessive rainfall at planting time in northern Europe were the main causes of decline in wheat production, partially offset, however, by favourable weather and high yields in a number of other countries, including Argentina, Australia, Bangladesh, Canada, China, India and the Russian Federation. Global output of coarse grains in 1999, estimated at 876 million tonnes, was about 4 per cent below that of the previous year due to smaller harvests and declines among some major producers. In 1998/99, total cereal utilization rose slightly above the level of the previous season, to 1,875 tonnes, all of which occurred in the developing countries. Overall, the growth in world food consumption slightly exceeded the rise in population, resulting in a small increase in per capita food consumption of cereals in 1998/99.

FAO's Global Information and Early Warning System (GIEWS) continued to provide early warnings of imminent food crises in an environment of dramatic increases in natural and/or man-made emergencies worldwide, including, in 1999, drought, floods and civil strife. In cooperation with the World Food Programme, GIEWS fielded a number of crop and food-supply assessment missions to affected countries and issued Special Alerts to the international community. To manage vast amounts of information from many different sources, GIEWS developed an integrated information system, the GIEWS Workstation, and maintained a reference database for crop monitoring and early warning, with information pertaining to food security at global, regional, national and sub-national levels.

Activities

Emergency assistance

FAO's Special Relief Operations Service (TCOR) continued to respond to requests for emergency assistance in the agricultural, livestock, fisheries and forestry sectors, submitted by developing countries affected by exceptional natural or human-induced calamities. During the year, TCOR obtained funding of $45 million for a total of 120 projects from donor countries ($26 million), FAO's Technical Cooperation Programme ($16 million) and other UN system organizations ($3 million). In addition, $139 million was allocated to TCOR for the execution of the agricultural component of the "oil-for-food" programme in Iraq (see p. 269).

Field programmes

Through its field programmes, FAO continued to provide technical advice and support in all areas of food and agriculture, fisheries, forestry and rural development. Related expenditures during 1998-1999 totalled $588.4 million, provided by the Technical Cooperation Programme ($73 million) and SPFS ($7.4 million) under the FAO regular budget; by the United Nations Development Programme ($58 million); and by the Trust Fund Programme ($450 million). FAO's Investment Centre assisted 134 developing and transition countries in identifying and assessing investment opportunities, as well as member countries in formulating 79 agricultural and rural development projects for an approved total investment of some $4.7 billion. Participation in the South-South Cooperation initiative, launched by SPFS in 1997, increased as it gained momentum. Under that initiative, more advanced developing (cooperating) countries provided technicians and experts to work for two to three years with farmers in rural communities of other developing (host) countries. The associated costs were borne by the cooperating and host countries and donors, with FAO facilitating the process.

Crops and livestock

FAO continued in 1999 to participate in activities related to the conservation and use of plant biological diversity, crop management and diversification, seed production and improvement, crop protection, agricultural engineering, prevention of food losses, and food and agricultural industries. Specifically, it contributed to the development of programmes and strategies for livestock production and health; and to the support of smallholder, specialized and mixed livestock farming through better resource utilization, improved processing and commercialization, and better control of animal diseases. Through its Emergency Prevention System for Transboundary Animal and Plant Pests and Diseases, FAO continued to promote cooperation among countries on early warning, control and research on the desert locust, in the prevention and control of significant transboundary diseases, and in the global eradication of rinderpest by 2010.

Fisheries

FAO continued efforts to secure the long-term sustainable development and utilization of the world's fisheries and aquaculture. Its priorities included the implementation of the FAO Code of Conduct for Responsible Fisheries, with particular attention to the problem of excess fishing capacity and strengthening of regional fisheries bodies; and the promotion of increased contribution of responsible fisheries and aquaculture to world food supplies and food security, with a focus on the reduction of waste in fisheries, safety and quality of food fish, economic and social policy analysis, fish trade and responsible aquaculture development. Databases and information systems were developed for improved dissemination of fishery statistics and information.

Food standards and nutrition

In 1999, the Codex Alimentarius Commission, responsible for implementing the Joint FAO/World Health Organization Food Standards Programme, significantly expanded its work programme to include the development of guidelines governing animal feeding and foods derived from biotechnology. The Commission agreed to strengthen in general its work on food microbiology and on other aspects of food safety. With 165 member countries, it developed international food standards, guidelines and other recommendations for the protection of consumer health and for ensuring fair practices in food trade. To promote better nutrition, FAO continued to provide member countries with information and technical assistance in the formulation and implementation of national food policies and nutrition programmes, technical and legal advice on measures to ensure the quality and safety of food, and assessment and monitoring of the effects on nutrition of food and agricultural policies and development activities.

Commodities and trade

FAO continued to implement the Plan of Action of the 1996 World Food Summit [YUN 1996, p. 1129]. In addition, it engaged in a wide range of activities to enhance the capacity of developing countries to analyse the implications of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade agreements [YUN 1994, p. 1474] in agriculture, forestry and fisheries, and to take advantage of new trading opportunities. Several regional workshops, global seminars, training courses, expert meetings and analytical studies were conducted on issues of concern to developing countries at the Uruguay Round.

Environment and natural resources

FAO continued its wide-ranging activities aimed at achieving more productive and efficient utilization of the earth's natural resources to meet current and future food and agricultural needs in a sustainable manner. To facilitate natural resources assessment and planning, it maintained over 30 land and water resource databases, available electronically on CD-ROM or over the World Wide Web. It also continued to develop AQUASTAT, its information system on water in agriculture, as well as an environmental database and decision-support tools.

Plant and animal genetic resources

FAO continued to provide technical assistance in plant breeding and safe movement of germ plasm and associated systems. Its Commission on Genetic Resources for Food and Agriculture continued negotiations on the revision of the International Undertaking on Plant Genetic Resources, in harmony with the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity [YUN 1992, p. 683], to regulate access to and benefit-sharing of plant genetic resources in food and agriculture. FAO's Global Strategy for the Management of Farm Animal Genetic Resources supported projects in Asia, sub-Saharan Africa and Europe, with 91 national coordinators to facilitate preparation of the first report on the state of the world's genetic resources. FAO assisted member countries in complying with the World Trade Organization Agreement on Trade-Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights, specifically those relating to plant varieties, animal breeds, related technology and germ plasm.

Information

FAO continued to function as an information centre, collecting, analysing, interpreting and disseminating information through various media, including publishing, radio, television, video, film and photographic displays and exhibitions.

Major regular periodicals included the annual The State of Food and Agriculture, the FAO Quarterly Bulletin of Statistics, the annual Food and Agricultural Legislation, the forestry quarterly Unasylva and the quarterlies World Animal Review and Plant Protection Bulletin.

FAO increasingly disseminated information electronically through the World Agricultural Information Centre (WAICENT), its corporate strategic programme for the management and dissemination of information. WAICENT included statistical databases, among them FAOSTAT, containing international statistics on food, agriculture, fisheries, forestry and nutrition, dating back to 1961, as well as over 1 million time-series records for 210 countries and Territories.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1999, staff at FAO headquarters numbered 2,242, of whom 938 were in the Professional or higher categories and 1,304 in the General Service category. Field project personnel and those in regional and country offices totalled 1,830, with 637 in the Professional or higher categories and 1,193 in the General Service category.

Budget

The regular programme budget for the 1998-1999 biennium was $650 million, the same as for the previous biennium.

Chapter IV

United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) continued in 1999 to promote cooperation in education, science, culture and communication among its member States.

The General Conference convened its thirtieth session (Paris, 26 October-17 November). In addition to electing Koichiro Matsuura as Director-General for a six-year term, it adopted a number of resolutions, among them one on the 2000-2001 programme budget, covering major programme appropriations for basic education for all, sciences in the service of development, the preservation and revitalization of the cultural and natural heritage, and the free flow of ideas and access to information and communication technologies. The 58-member Executive Board held its one hundred and fifty-sixth (25 May-11 June), one hundred and fifty-seventh (5-22 October) and one hundred and fifty-eighth (18-19 November) sessions, all in Paris.

The membership of UNESCO increased to 188 in 1999, with the admission of Micronesia and Palau.

Activities

Education

UNESCO continued to promote international cooperation in the enhancement of education and to bolster national capacities for expanding and extending education as a vital tool for development and for building a culture of peace. It sought to strengthen the commitment of its members and the international community at large to give absolute priority to basic education for all as a fundamental human right, and to the renewal of education systems, formal and non-formal, taking account of the current contradictions and future challenges identified by major UN and UNESCO international conferences.

Activities in preventive education against HIV/AIDS and drug abuse focused on mobilizing education ministries to formulate national action plans for the implementation of school-based programmes and teacher-training seminars. UNESCO launched the international campaign on "Youth Mobilizing Youth on Drug Abuse Prevention", which led more than 4 million young people to sign the Youth Charter for a Twenty-first Century Free of Drugs. It continued to collaborate with the European Commission in implementing the Prevention Education Drugs network, aimed at fostering exchange of knowledge and experience among professionals in the field.

As a follow-up to the Second International Congress on Technical and Vocational Education (Seoul, Republic of Korea, 26-30 April), UNESCO launched a new programme on technical and vocational education and created an international centre in Bonn, Germany, to serve as a global clearing house for technical information. Following a series of regional conferences in Africa, Asia and the Arab States, organized within the framework of the Plan of Action for the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education, 1995-2004 [YUN 1994, p. 1038], UNESCO, as the focal point for the International Year for the Culture of Peace, 2000 [YUN 1998, p. 638], provided assistance for the elaboration of strategies aimed at further strengthening the teaching of human rights. It collaborated with the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and played an active role in implementing article 13, on the right to education in international human rights law, of the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by General Assembly resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 419].

The network of Associated Schools continued to expand, promoting such activities as the distribution to 130 countries of the educational resource kit "World Heritage in Young Hands".

Sciences

Under its programme of sciences in the service of development, UNESCO continued to promote the advancement, sharing and transfer of knowledge. It emphasized the fostering of synergies between the exact and natural sciences and the social and human sciences.

Natural sciences

UNESCO, jointly with the International Council for Science (ICSU), convened the World Conference on Science for the Twenty-first Century: a New Commitment (Budapest, Hungary, 26 June–1 July), which provided a forum for scientists, political decision makers and representatives of society at large to discuss future services that science could provide to society. The Conference adopted two principal documents that ICSU and UNESCO endorsed: the Declaration on Science and the Use of Scientific Knowledge, underscoring the political commitment to the scientific endeavour and to finding solutions to problems between science and society; and the Science Agenda—Framework for Action, containing specific commitments and recommendations on capacity-building in science and the use of science for sustainable development.

Activities in the exact and natural sciences were dedicated towards the advancement, sharing and transfer of scientific and technological knowledge. UNESCO continued to enhance human resources development and capacity-building through fellowships, grants, workshops, seminars and production of training tools. Other activities aimed at modernizing university curricula and training teachers nationally and regionally in the basic and engineering sciences.

Through the International Geological Correlation Programme, UNESCO contributed to the understanding of Earth's history, pressing environmental problems and humankind's vulnerability to natural hazards. The Man and the Biosphere Programme, in partnership with the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity [YUN 1992, p. 683], helped to develop a joint initiative on biodiversity education and to promote the ecosystem approach. UNESCO hosted the secretariat of a major global initiative: the development of a Vision for Water, the Environment and Life for the Twenty-first Century.

Within the framework of the environment and development in coastal regions and in small islands platform, 23 pilot projects were established involving some 60 countries, uniting decision makers, local communities, cultural heritage experts and scientists.

Social and human sciences

Activities in the social and human sciences included strengthening research and training capacities, mainly through the establishment of UNESCO chairs, networks and mechanisms for inter-university cooperation; building bridges between social scientists and decision makers under the programme called Management of Social Transformations; and publication of the first issue of World Social Science Report. As a follow-up to the Plan of Action for the UN Year of Tolerance (1995) [YUN 1995, p. 1126], UNESCO undertook a number of initiatives to promote tolerance and non-violence and awarded the UNESCO Prize for Peace Education to the Association of the Mothers of the Plaza de Mayo, Argentina.

UNESCO also continued to promote a culture of peace at the national, regional and international levels through mobilization campaigns, pilot projects and international meetings, and member States' initiatives aimed at the fuller development of that culture.

Culture

Cultural development activities concentrated on follow-up action to the 1998 Conference on Cultural Policies for Development [YUN 1998, p. 1382]. The 1999 General Conference approved a new programme designed to collect and disseminate policy-relevant knowledge and information, to build national and local capacities in the management and administration of cultural institutions, and to foster recognition among decision makers of the growing significance of culture as a dimension of public policy.

A worldwide evaluation of the application of the UNESCO 1989 Recommendation on the Safeguarding of Traditional Culture and Folklore was completed, for which three regional seminars, an international conference and two international training workshops had been held. With the World Intellectual Property Organization, UNESCO organized five regional consultation meetings in search of legal means for the international protection of the expression of folklore. Within the framework of the "Proclamation by UNESCO of Masterpieces of the Oral and Intangible Heritage of Humanity", a nine-member international jury was established and an implementation guide for the Proclamation was drafted.

Efforts to promote international and national standards for the better protection of movable and immovable cultural heritage continued. A second protocol to the 1954 Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict was adopted by the March 1999 Hague Diplomatic Conference. As at 31 December, the signatories to the second protocol numbered 39. Inscribed on the World Heritage List were 48 new sites. Currently protected under the Convention for the Protection of the World Cultural and Natural Heritage were 630 sites (in 118 States), comprising 480 cultural, 128 natural and 22 cultural/natural sites.

The General Conference proclaimed 21 March as World Poetry Day.

Communications

UNESCO promoted activities in favour of press freedom, notably the worldwide celebration of World Press Freedom Day on 3 May, highlighted by a seminar on unpunished crimes against journalists (Bogota, Colombia).

UNESCO organized a meeting on ways to combat paedophilia and child pornography on the Internet (Paris, 18-19 January), attended by more than 300 specialists in child care and child protection, Internet specialists and service providers, media practitioners, Interpol, law enforcement agencies and government representatives.

UNESCO's International Programme for the Development of Communication funded 56 new projects totalling $2,258,000. To confront the problem of the digital divide, UNESCO continued its efforts to encourage cultural diversity and endogenous production of digital content through pilot projects on public service telematics consortia and multi-purpose community telecentres in Africa.

UNESCO published 105 titles and produced five CD-ROMS, among them Blue Gold Interactive Encyclopaedia of Water, which won the Möbius Prize for the best science CD-ROM and was nominated for Prince's Award, a European prize for the best multimedia on the environment.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1999, UNESCO had a full-time staff of 2,348, of whom 1,090 were in the Professional or higher categories, drawn from 153 nationalities, and 1,258 were in the General Service category.

Budget

The UNESCO General Conference, at its 1999 session, approved a budget of $544,367,250 for the 2000-2001 biennium.

Chapter V

World Health Organization (WHO)

The World Health Organization (WHO) moved forward in 1999 with its new corporate strategy of health for all, comprising four interrelated priorities: reducing excess mortality, morbidity and disability, especially in poor countries; promoting healthy lifestyles and reducing factors of risk to human health arising from environmental, economic, social and behavioural causes; developing more equitable and financially fair health systems; and developing an enabling policy and institutional environment in the health sector.

The World Health Assembly, WHO's governing body, held its fifty-second session (Geneva, 17-25 May) and adopted resolutions on a range of subjects, including active ageing, smallpox eradication through the destruction of variola virus stocks, the roll-back-malaria approach, a WHO framework convention on tobacco control, a revised drug strategy, reforming the Health Assembly, poliomyelitis eradication, strengthening health systems in developing countries and prevention and control of iodine deficiency disorders.

The one hundred and third session of the WHO Executive Board (Geneva, 25 January-3 February) discussed shaping a clear strategy to put health at the core of the international development agenda, with concomitant headquarters structural changes and streamlining of working relations with regions and countries; the essential goals of health systems for a better understanding of world health trends and challenges; and engagement of high-level policy makers in the Health Assembly's work. The Board's one hundred and fourth session (Geneva, 26-27 May) took up the question of a research strategy and mechanisms for cooperation, in addition to institutional matters.

The World Health Report 1999-Making a Difference reviewed the accomplishments and challenges in world health and highlighted their implications for WHO's future approach, priorities and work. It explained how lessons learned from past successes and failures could guide a more targeted and pragmatic approach to current and emerging health challenges, offering strategic directions for tackling them in the next decade.

In 1999, WHO membership remained at 191, with two associate members and four observers.

Health policy

WHO laid emphasis on policy based on hard evidence, such as clear positive or negative trends in health. Priorities took into consideration four key drivers of health change: ageing, the HIV and the tobacco epidemics, and childhood mortality due to communicable diseases. To advance programmes towards their goals, WHO reached out to old partners and decided to conclude a larger number of influential partnerships with various entities, including Governments, other UN bodies, financial institutions and foundations, research institutes, professional associations, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and private firms. For example, in 1999, a Global Alliance for the Elimination of Leprosy was established, whose core members consisted of a dozen endemic countries, a private Japanese foundation, the pharmaceutical company Novartis, and a federation of some 20 NGOs.

Health and development

WHO was being strengthened to ensure that its support for health systems development was effective. A new Global Programme on Evidence for Health Policy was established to improve and expand the knowledge base in key areas of epidemiology and disease burden measurement, assessment of service quality and cost-effectiveness and comparative analysis of financing, organizational, regulatory and legislative options. A re-grouping of headquarters programmes in the cluster on Health Systems and Community Health ensured that priority interventions, such as the Integrated Management of Childhood Illness, and strengthening of health systems worked together in WHO's technical support to countries. A time-limited project, entitled Partnerships for Health Sector Development, was created to change the way that WHO worked on health sector-wide development with national and international development agencies, within and beyond the UN system.

In the light of its comparative analysis of health systems in a number of countries, WHO advocated a "new universalism" that recognized the limits of Governments but retained their responsibility for the leadership and finance of health systems. The new universalism welcomed diversity and, subject to appropriate guidelines, competition in the provision of services. It recognized private providers as important sources of care in many countries; welcomed private sector involvement in supplying service providers with drugs and equipment; and encouraged increased public and private investment in generating new drugs, equipment and vaccines to underpin long-term improvement in health.

A concerted effort was made to anchor health on the global political agenda for development, since poor health was intrinsically linked to poverty. Mounting evidence showed that health measures aimed at improving the health of the poor could reap real development gains. WHO was thus strengthening its focus on the poor, with Africa as a key priority. Its target was halving the number of people living in poverty by 2015.

Disease trends and control efforts

A priority for intensive work was the control of tobacco and malaria because of the high morbidity and mortality rates associated with them. Accordingly, the World Health Assembly, in May, unanimously supported a resolution calling for work to begin on a framework convention on tobacco control, which would constitute the first multilaterally negotiated set of rules focusing on global tobacco control. A working group subsequently met (Geneva, 25-29 October) to outline the basic parameters of the proposed framework convention and related protocols. WHO also developed a strategy to roll back the resurgence of malaria. The goal was to halve the burden from the disease by 2010, by raising awareness; providing anti-malaria treatments, from drugs to insecticide-treated bed nets; identifying malaria incubation areas; promoting proper management of the environment; and strengthening the health systems of affected countries.

Secretariat

At the end of 1999, WHO had a staff of 3,452, including 1,259 in the Professional and higher categories and 2,193 in the General Service category-

Budget

The fifty-second (1999) World Health Assembly adopted a budget of $1,800,854,000 for the 2000-2001 biennium.

Chapter VI

World Bank (IBRD and IDA)

The World Bank consisted of the International Bank For Reconstruction and Development (IBRD) and the International Development Association (IDA). Collectively, the following five institutions were known as the World Bank Group: IBRD, IDA, the International Finance Corporation, the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency and the International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes.

In fiscal 1999 (1 July 1998-30 June 1999), IBRD, together with IDA (see below), continued to promote economic and social progress in developing countries and to assist them towards stable, sustainable and equitable growth. The challenges of fiscal 1999, brought about by the consequences of the East Asian financial crisis and compounded by failing investor confidence in Brazil and the Russian Federation, as well as by falling commodity prices in Africa and the crisis in Kosovo, forced the Bank to stretch itself into new boundaries in order to respond rapidly and in a manner commensurate with the wide-ranging emergency and long-term needs.

Through the Comprehensive Development Framework (CDF), launched in fiscal 1999, the Bank established mechanisms to bring people together and build consensus, forged stronger partnerships, reduced wasteful competition and emphasized the achievement of concrete results. In addition, CDF enhanced development effectiveness and contributed towards the central goal of poverty reduction.

The Bank strengthened its fight against poverty through the Country Assistance Strategies; new lending and non-lending services; IDA replenishment; debt relief; and aid coordination.

At the end of fiscal 1999, IBRD membership remained at 181.

Lending operations

Gross disbursements by IBRD totalled $18.2 billion, a decrease of nearly 5 per cent over fiscal 1998. The Bank's new loan commitments totalled $22.1 billion, a slight increase over the previous fiscal year. For the first time in the Bank's history, adjustment lending accounted for more than half of total commitments in fiscal 1999, reflecting the continued focus on responding to the financial crisis that started in East Asia and spread to other parts of the world. Adjustment lending had been in many instances accompanied by technical assistance.

Total IBRD lending commitments in the fiscal year amounted to $22.2 billion for 131 new operations in 39 countries. The five largest borrowers were Argentina ($3.2 billion), Indonesia ($2.7 billion), China ($2.1 billion), the Republic of Korea ($2 billion) and the Russian Federation ($1.9 billion). Lending for multisector projects ($8.8 billion) led all sectors by volume, followed by finance ($2.6 billion) and the social sector ($2.3 billion).

The Bank approved the introduction of new loans and hedging products, including the fixed-spread London Inter Bank Offered Rate-based (LIBOR-based) loan, in order to give borrowers greater flexibility with debt management. The Bank also considered guidelines and financial terms for two new instruments: the Programmatic Structural Adjustment Loan and the Special Structural Adjustment Loan, designed to enhance the effectiveness of Bank support for structural and social reforms for sustainable growth.

International Development Association

Established in 1960 as the Bank's concessional lending arm, the International Development Association provided concessionary assistance to low-income developing countries to reduce poverty and improve the quality of life. In 1999, IDA assistance continued to those with an annual per capita gross national product of $925 or less (in 1997 United States dollars), for which 81 countries were eligible. IDA credits to those countries totalled $6.8 billion.

At the end of fiscal 1999, IDA membership remained at 160.

Fiscal year 1999 was the third year of the eleventh replenishment of IDA (IDA-11), which was designed to provide IDA with resources to fund credits committed during the period 1 July 1996-30 June 1999. The total expected commitment authority for IDA-11 was $14.5 billion, including the Interim Trust Fund (ITF) administered by IDA. ITF was established by all IDA donors, except the United States, to fund operations while the United States became current on IDA-10. The commitment authority for IDA-11 comprised 4.6 billion special drawing rights (SDR) from IDA-11 donor contributions, SDR 2.1 billion from ITF donor contributions, SDR 1.3 billion from the unreleased portion of contributions carried over from the IDA-10 period, SDR 0.1 billion from special contributions from Brazil, Denmark and the Republic of Korea, and SDR 6.4 billion from advanced commitment authority from expected repayments of past IDA credits and IBRD net income transfers. As at 30 June, available IDA-11 resources totalled SDR 5.7 billion.

In fiscal 1999, total IDA lending commitments reached $6.8 billion for 145 new operations in 53 countries. The largest commitment was made to Bangladesh ($1,012 million), followed by India ($654.8 million) and Honduras ($283.7 million). The majority of lending went for multisector projects ($1,457.9 million), agriculture ($1,020 million) and transportation ($981.3 million).

Although IDA was legally and financially distinct from IBRD, it shared the same staff, and the projects it supported had to meet the same criteria as IBRD.

International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes

The International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes (ICSID), established in 1966 to help promote international investment, continued to provide facilities for the settlement, by conciliation or arbitration, of investment disputes between member countries and nationals of other member countries. Provisions referring to arbitration under the auspices of ICSID were a common feature of international investment contracts, investment laws and bilateral and multilateral investment treaties.

In 1999, ICSID's membership totalled 131.

Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency

The Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency (MIGA), established in 1988, continued to encourage the flow of foreign direct investment to its developing member countries by providing investment guarantees against non-commercial risks. MIGA had its own operating and legal staff, but drew on the Bank for administrative and other services. In 1999, MIGA had a total of 149 members.

In fiscal 1999, MIGA issued $1.3 billion in guarantee coverage in 72 guarantee contracts to ensure investment projects in 29 developing member countries. MIGA also broadened its portfolio in fiscal 1999 by issuing its first guarantee contracts covering investments in Cote d'Ivoire, Malaysia and Zambia.

World Bank Institute

In March, the Economic Development Institute became the World Bank Institute (WBI), as the Bank merged its client and staff learning activities to maximize synergies from external and internal learning. WBI stressed the Bank's priority areas: training and seminars focused on poverty, crisis response, governance and corruption. WBI's contributions in fiscal 1999 included support for building anticorruption strategies; training for financial sector supervision; and promoting learning on clean air issues. It was also leading the process of consultations with civil society and researchers worldwide on the 2000/01 poverty issue of the World Development Report. In East Asia, WBI aimed to encourage knowledge and experience-sharing across client countries, build understanding on corruption and facilitate civic participation in national debate. In learning efforts oriented to Africa, WBI worked with the African Development Bank (ADB) and the International Monetary Fund to establish the Joint Africa Institute; developed pilot on-line Internet courses with the African Economic Research Consortium and 13 partner universities; and advanced the African Virtual University.

In fiscal 1999, the Bank launched the World Bank Learning Network, a distance learning programme that offered interactive video- and web-based courses, linking participants across the globe.

Scholarships

The Joint Japan/World Bank Graduate Scholarship Programme awarded 198 new scholarships to individuals applying for advanced studies in fields related to public policy-making.

In 1999, the Robert S. McNamara Fellowships Programme awarded 16 postgraduate fellowships for the study of globalization and poverty, and social inclusion, social capital and poverty reduction.

Co-financing

In fiscal 1999, co-financing amounted to $11.3 billion in 103 operations, an increase of 17 per cent over the previous year. Official bilateral and multilateral partners continued to be the largest source of co-financing, accounting for 89 per cent of the total share. The largest co-financing partners included the Inter-American Development Bank ($4.6 billion); Japan ($2 billion); European Union institutions ($491 million); ADB ($473 million); and the United Kingdom ($323 million). By sector, co-financing was concentrated in macroeconomic and financial sector reform and social protection operations, generally involving official partners, and in electric power, which attracted private co-financing partners as well. The Bank collaborated with donors to deal with the Asian financial crisis, most notably with Japan in the context of the New Miyazawa Initiative, whereby the Government would provide support measures totalling $30 billion, of which $15 billion would be made available for medium- to long-term financial needs for economic recovery in Asia.

Financing activities

During fiscal year 1999, IBRD raised $22.4 billion in medium- and long-term debt, compared to $28 billion the previous year. The majority of new funding continued to be initially swapped into floating rate United States dollars, with conversion to other currencies or fixed-rate funding being carried out subsequently in accordance with funding requirements. The currency composition continued to be concentrated in United States dollars, with its share at 30 June 1999 rising to 79 per cent of the borrowing portfolio, compared to 66 per cent at 30 June 1998. Borrowing was carried out in 12 currencies, resulting in 185 transactions during the fiscal year.

As at 30 June 1999, outstanding borrowing stood at $118.6 billion, after swaps. The average cost of all borrowing, after swaps, was 5.92 per cent. The borrowers continued to prefer single-currency loans, as they selected LIBOR-based single-currency loan terms for $15.8 billion and fixed-rate single-currency loan terms for $5.9 billion.

Capitalization

As at 30 June 1999, the total subscribed capital of IBRD was $188.2 billion, or 98.7 per cent of authorized capital of $190.8 billion. The outstanding loans and callable guarantees totalled $114 billion, or 56 per cent of IBRD's statutory lending limit.

Income, expenditures and reserves

IBRD'S gross revenues totalled $9.6 billion in fiscal 1999, an increase of $1.1 billion over 1998. Net income was $1.5 billion, up from $1.24 billion in fiscal 1998. Expenses increased to $7.9 billion from $7.3 billion a year earlier. Administrative costs rose to $849 million from $763 million in 1998, a 10 per cent increase. At the end of fiscal 1999, the Bank's liquidity totalled $30 billion, and the reserves-to-loan ratio fell to 13.69 per cent from 14.06 per cent in 1998 due to IBRD's increased emphasis on the equity-to-loans measure and de-emphasis of the reserves-to-loans measures it had used in the past.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1999, IBRD's regular, fixed-term, long-term consultants, and long-term temporary staff in Washington, D.C., and local offices numbered 9,245.

Chapter VII

International Finance Corporation (IFC)

The International Finance Corporation (IFC), part of the World Bank Group, continued in 1999 to promote growth in developing countries by financing private sector investments and providing technical assistance and advice to Governments and businesses. In fiscal 1999 (1 July 1998-30 June 1999), IFC faced formidable challenges as recovery began from the global financial crises in many of its developing member countries. Despite those challenges, IFC delivered increases in net income, investment commitments and new project approvals. It also sought out new investment, especially in reformed and high-development-impact sectors, such as financial and physical infrastructure; preserved the viability of companies in its existing portfolio through restructuring and recapitalization support; developed trade finance products that matched the needs of struggling companies; and strengthened its operational focus on those developing countries and sectors that had attracted comparatively less foreign investment flows.

During fiscal 1999, IFC membership remained at 174.

Financial and advisory services

In fiscal 1999, IFC's Board of Directors approved a total of $5.3 billion in financing for 255 projects in 77 countries, compared with $5.9 billion for 304 projects in 83 countries in fiscal 1998. The project cost of fiscal 1999 approvals was $15.6 billion; the ratio of IFC funding to costs was 1 to 3.7. IFC approved an investment in one new country, Saint Kitts and Nevis.

The "Extending IFC's Reach" initiative, begun in 1997 as a pilot programme to promote investment in selected countries where difficult conditions had constrained IFC activity, was expanded to cover 20 countries and regions where IFC previously had only limited activity. Under the initiative, the Corporation approved 160 projects totalling $1 billion. Of those, 67 investments totalling $68.3 million were through the Small Enterprise Fund. In addition, IFC mobilized $446.2 million from participants and provided $12.2 million through its Technical Assistance Trust Funds Programme for 108 projects.

During fiscal 1999, IFC approved eight risk management projects, including projects for clients from Bangladesh, Cote d'Ivoire, Ecuador, Mozambique, Panama, Peru and the Republic of Korea, and undertook more than 100 financial market advisory projects in some 50 countries and regions.

Demand for technical assistance and advisory services continued throughout the fiscal year. IFC provided a broad range of services, including capital markets technical assistance; advisory work in the infrastructure area; privatization and corporate restructuring; project development facilities; investment and project-specific advisory services; and the Foreign Investment Advisory Service.

Regional projects

IFC approved 255 projects in 77 countries and regions in fiscal 1999.

In sub-Saharan Africa, IFC's development priorities included strengthening the financial sector through direct investment in financial institutions; support for indigenous entrepreneurship; and the development of a sound physical infrastructure. It approved 80 projects in 26 countries in fiscal 1999, compared to 80 projects in 23 countries in fiscal 1998. As at 30 June 1999, IFC's committed portfolio, including loans and investments, totalled $1.33 billion, up from $1.18 billion in fiscal 1998.

In Asia and the Pacific, IFC's strategy was directed at rehabilitating and consolidating the financial and corporate sectors of those economies hardest hit by the East Asian financial crisis. IFC played a pivotal role in the establishment of the Asia Opportunity Fund. With $100 million in equity, IFC joined Chase Capital Partners and several Asian investors in one of the largest emerging-markets restructuring funds ever. Up to $750 million in investments was expected to be placed over a three- to five-year period. In addition, IFC established the Asian Debt Facility to provide loans and guarantees directly to companies about to be restructured. The Corporation approved 33 projects in 8 countries in fiscal 1999, compared to 50 projects in 14 countries in fiscal 1998. Its committed portfolio of loans and investments totalled $5.96 billion, down from $6.18 billion in fiscal 1998.

In the Middle East and North Africa, IFC focused on financial sector development, infrastructure and industries that created jobs and generated foreign exchange, while in Central Asia it supported natural resource development, small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs), financial sector growth and the rehabilitation and modernization of selected post-privatization companies. IFC approved 34 projects in fiscal 1999 in 11 countries, compared to 32 projects in 11 countries in fiscal 1998. IFC's committed portfolio of loans and investments totalled $2.08 billion, compared to $1.96 billion in fiscal 1998.

In Europe, IFC worked closely with project owners and managers to develop joint responses and advised on possible protective measures as the financial turmoil unfolded in the Russian Federation, causing varying degrees of economic decline in Central, Southern and Eastern Europe. IFC supported institution-building throughout the region to strengthen the banking sectors, financial infrastructure and capital market efficiency. It placed increased emphasis on restructuring banks and improving the regulatory framework and its enforcement; provided technical assistance and financing for privatization; and supported SMEs. IFC approved 49 projects in 16 countries in fiscal 1999, compared to 74 projects in 18 countries in fiscal 1998. Its committed portfolio of loans and investments totalled $3.44 billion, compared with $2.78 billion in fiscal 1998.

In Latin America and the Caribbean, IFC deployed its resources to ensure the health of its portfolio companies; continued assisting high-development-impact sectors, such as financial and physical infrastructure; and concentrated on middle-market firms and SMEs. It approved 58 projects in 16 countries, compared to 67 projects in 17 countries in fiscal 1998. Its committed portfolio totalled $8.23 billion in fiscal 1999 compared to $8.32 billion in fiscal 1998.

Foreign Investment Advisory Service

The Foreign Investment Advisory Service (FIAS), jointly operated by IFC and the World Bank, continued to advise Governments on policies, law, regulations and procedures needed to increase inflows of productive foreign direct investment. Of particular importance in fiscal 1999 were projects in Central and Eastern Europe, where FIAS provided recommendations to 10 countries. FIAS teams also examined ways to improve the legal and institutional framework in Costa Rica, Nepal and Zambia to facilitate large-scale infrastructure investments on a project finance basis. In other assignments, FIAS identified bureaucratic impediments to private investments and recommended ways to address them in Bolivia, Indonesia, Jordan, Latvia, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritania and the Philippines.

Financial performance

In fiscal 1999, IFC's net income totalled $249 million, up from $246 million in fiscal 1998. The loan portfolio showed a small profit of $10 million in fiscal 1999, while net income from the equity/quasi-equity portfolio declined to $76 million from $94 million in fiscal 1998, mainly because of sizeable loss provisions taken early in the fiscal year. Net income from IFC's invested net worth and treasury activities totalled $155 million.

IFC's committed portfolio at the end of the fiscal year was $12.9 billion, up from $11.5 billion in fiscal 1998. The portfolio consisted of loans and equity investments in 1,280 companies in 112 countries.

Capital and retained earnings

As at 30 June 1999, IFC's net worth reached $5.3 billion, compared to $5.1 billion at the end of fiscal 1998.

Secretariat

As at 30 June 1999, IFC employed 1,818 staff, including consultants and temporary staff.

Chapter VIII

International Monetary Fund (IMF)

During 1999, the International Monetary Fund (IMF) promoted international monetary cooperation, exchange stability and orderly exchange arrangements; fostered economic growth and high levels of employment; and provided temporary financial assistance to countries to help ease balance-of-payments adjustment. The continued repercussions of the 1997 Asian financial crisis and the spread of the financial stress to Brazil and the Russian Federation in 1998 posed challenges for IMF and the international community. Strong macroeconomic stabilization measures coupled with important structural reforms helped abate the crisis by the end of the fiscal year (1 May 1998-30 April 1999). The financial crises gave the Fund a powerful impetus to focus on proposals to strengthen the structure and transparency of the international financial system. IMF continued to help its members strengthen their financial sectors and worked towards identifying ways to involve the private sector in preventing and managing crises and in improving the functioning of international capital markets. IMF enhanced assistance to countries in post-conflict situations and, in collaboration with the World Bank, considered ways to reduce further the debt of low-income countries, undertaking strong adjustment programmes under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative (HIPC Initiative).

During fiscal 1999, IMF membership remained at 182.

IMF facilities and policies

IMF provided financial assistance to its members through several facilities and policies to help them achieve sustainable economic growth, balance-of-payments viability and establish normal relations with their creditors. Credit for short-term balance of payments for deficits of a temporary or cyclical nature was made available under standby arrangements. Credit for longer periods was made available under the extended funding facility (EFF).

The Fund provided concessional financial support to low-income countries under the enhanced structural adjustment facility (ESAF), which in 1999 was renamed the poverty reduction and growth facility. The HIPC Initiative, a joint IMF-World Bank project, provided debt-servicing relief to heavily indebted poor countries. During fiscal 1999, the IMF Executive Board reviewed the operation and financing of ESAF and the HIPC Initiative in order to improve their effectiveness in helping poor countries attain growth and reduce poverty.

Other IMF facilities consisted of the compensatory and contingency financing facility (CCFF) and the supplemental reserve facility, established in April.

Financial assistance

During fiscal 1999, the Fund approved 19 new standby, extended and ESAF arrangements, totaling 29.4 billion special drawing rights (SDR) in new commitments (SDR 14.32 billion in standby arrangements for five countries; SDR 14.09 billion for four EFF arrangements; and SDR 1 billion for 10 ESAF arrangements), compared with commitments of SDR 32.1 billion in fiscal 1998. The Fund also committed SDR 2.6 billion under CCFF. The largest credit commitments were for Brazil (SDR 13 billion), Indonesia (SDR 6.4 billion) and the Russian Federation (SDR 8.5 billion, including under CCFF).

As at 30 April, nine standby arrangements, 12 extended arrangements and 35 ESAF arrangements were in effect with members. Net of repayment of previous drawings, outstanding IMF credit reached a record SDR 67.2 billion, up from SDR 56 billion in fiscal 1998.

In April, the IMF Executive Board established contingent credit lines, a crisis-prevention mechanism intended for member countries with strong policies, as a precautionary line of defence against potential balance-of-payments problems arising from financial contagion.

Liquidity

In the aftermath of the financial crisis that began in Asia in 1997, heavy demand for the use of IMF resources continued in fiscal 1999, heightened by the emergence of crises in the Russian Federation in mid-1998 and in Brazil in December 1998. During December 1998, IMF's liquidity ratio fell to below 30 per cent, about the minimum needed for IMF to maintain operational manoeuvrability. Prior to the quota increase under the Eleventh General Review—which took effect on 22 January 1999—IMF had to resort to borrowing: first in July 1998 in connection with the augmentation of the extended arrangement for Russia, and subsequently in December 1998 in connection with the standby arrangement for Brazil. Following the quota increase, IMF repaid the amount borrowed. IMF's usable resources increased sharply towards the end of the financial year as a result of quota payments amounting to SDR 46 billion in usable currencies and SDRs. Also, the inclusion of three additional members in the list of sufficiently strong countries during the fiscal year added SDR 1.7 billion to usable resources. Consequently, uncommitted and adjusted resources totalled SDR 56.7 billion at the end of fiscal 1999, compared with SDR 22.6 billion in fiscal 1998.

At the end of April 1999, the Fund's liquid liabilities totalled SDR 63.6 billion, consisting entirely of reserve tranche positions (as all borrowing undertaken during the year had been repaid), compared with SDR 50.3 billion a year earlier. The ratio of the Fund's net uncommitted usable resources to its liquid liabilities increased to 89.2 per cent at the end of April 1999 from 44.8 per cent a year earlier.

SDR activity

In fiscal 1999, total transactions of SDRs reached a record SDR 49.1 billion, from SDR 20.3 billion in fiscal 1998. The increase was due to flows associated with the quota increase under the Eleventh General Review, as well as to steep increases in purchases and repurchases under IMF arrangements, and the repayment of borrowings by the Fund. The dominant cause, however, was that of the quota increase, which led to a large rise in IMF holdings of SDRs in the general resources account (GRA), only partially offset during the year by transfers from the GRA to participants.

Transfers of SDRs from participants to the GRA increased dramatically to SDR 16.2 billion in 1998/99 from SDR 4.8 billion in 1997/98. Those transfers were boosted, in part, by exceptional flows associated with quota payments. IMF attempted during 1998/99 to reduce rapidly the SDR holdings of the GRA to more normal levels (SDR 1-1.5 billion). Accordingly, SDR transfers from the GRA to participants and prescribed holders more than doubled, to SDR 13.4 billion in 1998/99 from SDR 5.6 billion in 1997/98, reflecting the substantial use of SDRs by the GRA to finance purchases and to repay IMF borrowing under general arrangements and new arrangements to borrow. Purchases in SDRs in 1998/99 reached a record SDR 9.5 billion, including some SDR 2.3

billion in reserve tranche drawings by members availing themselves of the same-day loan facility to make quota payments.

Transfers of SDRs among participants and prescribed holders nearly doubled to SDR 19.4 billion in 1998/99, owing mainly to the substantial increase in transactions by agreement and to the use of the same-day SDR loan facility by members paying the reserve asset portion of their quota subscriptions. The SDR holdings of non-industrial countries declined to 52.5 per cent from 69.4 per cent during fiscal 1999, and those of industrial countries to 94.6 per cent from 107 per cent. The SDR holdings of prescribed holders increased to SDR 0.6 billion in fiscal 1999 from SDR 0.4 billion a year earlier.

Policy on arrears

Total overdue financial obligations to IMF increased slightly to SDR 2.3 billion during fiscal 1999, from SDR 2.26 billion a year earlier. All of the overdue obligations were protracted (overdue by six months or more). No new cases of protracted arrears emerged during the fiscal year, nor were any of the existing cases cleared, leaving the number of members in protracted arrears to IMF at seven. Overdue financial obligations continued to be concentrated among four members (Democratic Republic of the Congo, Liberia, Somalia, Sudan), whose arrears accounted for 94 per cent of total overdue obligations. As at 30 April, those four members were ineligible to use the Fund's general resources.

Technical assistance and training

In fiscal 1999, technical assistance activity represented about 15 per cent of IMF's total administrative expenditures. Demand for such assistance remained strong and continued to focus on the monetary and fiscal aspects of macroeconomic management, statistics, financial law, social security reform, IMF financial organization and operations and information technology.

The IMF Institute, faced with expanded demand and limited capacities, increased its collaborative arrangements with partners to provide overseas training to strengthen the institutional capacity of member countries in economic management. In 1999, the Joint Africa Institute was established in Cote d'Ivoire, in equal partnership with the African Development Bank and the World Bank. Also in 1999, the Institute, in partnership with the Arab Monetary Fund, established in the United Arab Emirates the Regional Training Programme to meet the training needs of the region by allowing both organizations to mobilize their human and financial training resources.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1999, IMF employed 2,297 staff members, of whom 1,604 were Professional staff and 693 assistant staff.

Budget

The Fund's administrative budget for fiscal 1999 was $519.5 million. For the capital budget, $14.4 million was approved for projects beginning in fiscal 1999. Actual administrative expenses during the fiscal year totalled $520.6 million and capital project disbursements totalled $43.9 million, including $25.3 million for major building projects.

Chapter IX

International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO)

The International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) continued to promote the safety and efficiency of civil air transport by prescribing standards and recommending procedures for facilitating civil aviation operations. Its objectives were set forth in annexes to the Convention on International Civil Aviation, adopted in Chicago, United States, in 1944, known as the Chicago Convention.

In 1999, domestic and international scheduled traffic carried by the airlines of ICAO's Contracting States increased to some 369 billion tonne-kilometres. The airlines carried a total of about 1.56 billion passengers and some 28 million tonnes of freight. The passenger load factor on total scheduled services remained at 69 per cent, and the overall weight load factor at 60 per cent. Air freight increased some 6 per cent to 108 billion tonne-kilometres, and airmail traffic totalled 5.7 billion tonne-kilometres. During the year, both the overall and international passenger/ freight/mail tonne-kilometres increased by some 6 per cent.

The Council of ICAO held three regular sessions (22 February-19 March, 31 May-25 June, 28 October-19 December), during which, among other things, it adopted a declaration urging all States to refrain from the use of weapons against civil aircraft in flight.

In January, ICAO launched its Universal Safety Oversight Audit Programme, which aimed at assessing the degree to which Contracting States had implemented the safety-related Standards and Recommended Practices (SARPs) contained in the 1944 Chicago Convention and its annexes. At year's end, 49 States had been audited.

Following the entry into force in 1998 of the Convention on the Marking of Plastic Explosives for the Purpose of Detection, the International Explosive Technical Commission was appointed to evaluate technical developments relating to the manufacture, marking and detection of explosives and to make recommendations to the ICAO Council for amendments. The Commission held its first meeting in Montreal, Canada, from 13 to 15 December.

In 1999, ICAO membership remained at 185 countries.

Activities

Air navigation

ICAO continued to update and implement international specifications and regional plans, emphasizing the introduction of communications, navigation, and surveillance/air traffic management (CNS/ATM) systems. The specifications consisted of SARPs contained in 18 technical annexes to the 1944 Chicago Convention and Procedures for Air Navigation Services (PANS). Regional plans covered air navigation facilities and services required for implementation of CNS/ATM systems and other international air navigation elements in ICAO regions.

Six navigation meetings, convened in Montreal in 1999, made recommendations to amend ICAO specifications. The Accident Investigation and Prevention Divisional Meeting (14-24 September) developed 14 recommendations for SARPs. Among other things, it formulated new provisions for medical examinations in investigations and for voluntary incident reporting systems. The remaining five air navigation panel meetings developed SARPs and guidance material for the aeronautical mobile satellite services; an initial package of SARPs for the global navigation satellite system; provisions relating to various subjects for the amendment of the Procedures for Air Navigation Services—Aircraft Operations, provisions to facilitate the implementation of available technology in relation to a number of data link applications; and provisions regarding the safe transport of dangerous goods by air.

The Council of ICAO adopted amendments to seven technical annexes to the 1944 Chicago Convention and approved amendments to two PANS documents.

Other projects that were given special attention in 1999 included accident investigation; accident and incident data reporting; accident prevention; aerodromes; aerodrome rescue and fire fighting; aeronautical electromagnetic spectrum; aeronautical information services; assistance to civil aviation accident victims and their families; audio-visual aids; aviation environmental matters; aviation medicine; bird strikes to aircraft; CNS/ATM systems; controlled flight into terrain; flight safety and human factors; licensing/certification of aerodromes; meteorology; personnel licensing and training; safety oversight audits; the TRAINAIR programme; and year 2000 (Y2K) planning.

Air transport

ICAO's air transport programmes were directed towards economic analysis, economic policy, forecasting and economic planning, collection and publication of air transport statistics, airport and route facility management, economic and organizational aspects of CNS/ATM systems, economic and coordination aspects of environmental protection and the promotion of greater facilitation in international air transport.

The Council of ICAO adopted a resolution on the organization's policy on the taxation of international air transport.

The Technical Advisory Group on Machine Readable Travel Documents (Montreal, 1-3 September) finalized work on machine readable official travel documents. Six workshops in air transport regulatory policy, forecasting and economic planning, statistics, and airport and route facility management, a seminar on airport and route facility management and a Facilitation Area Meeting were held during the year.

ICAO continued to provide secretariat services to three independent regional civil aviation bodies—the African Civil Aviation Commission, the European Civil Aviation Conference and the Latin American Civil Aviation Commission.

The organization maintained its responsibilities for the administration of the Danish and Icelandic Joint Financing Agreements, to which 23 Governments were contracting parties in 1999. The two agreements, which were signed in 1956 and amended in 1982, concerned the provision in Greenland and Iceland of air traffic control, communications and meteorology facilities and services to North Atlantic flights.

Legal matters

The International Conference on Air Law (Montreal, 10-18 May) adopted the Convention for the Unification of Certain Rules for International Carriage by Air, which provided new compensation levels for victims of air accidents.

The Protocol relating to an amendment to the Convention on International Civil Aviation (Final Clause/Russian text) entered into force on 17 August. Accordingly, the Protocol on the Authentic Quadrilingual Text of the Convention on International Civil Aviation entered into force on 16 September.

Additional conventions and protocols on international air law concluded under ICAO auspices registered new ratifications, adherences or successions in 1999.

Technical cooperation

In 1999, ICAO undertook 126 technical cooperation projects in 72 countries. The technical cooperation programmes, financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), trust funds, management service agreements and the Civil Aviation Purchasing Service, had total expenditures of $54.3 million. Some 95 per cent of that amount was provided by Governments to fund their own projects on the basis of trust funds and cost sharing with UNDP.

ICAO had resident missions in 39 countries, and 92 others received assistance through fellowships and visits from experts assigned to inter-country and sub-contractual arrangements. A total of 581 fellowships were awarded in 1999, of which 540 were implemented. ICAO employed 371 experts from 41 countries, of whom 135 were on assignment under UNDP and 236 worked on trust fund projects. Registered with ICAO under its Civil Aviation Purchasing Service were 85 Governments and organizations. Equipment purchases during the year totalled $21.23 million.

Secretariat

In 1999, ICAO employed a total of 778 staff members, including 336 in the Professional and higher categories and 442 in the General Service and related categories. Of the total, 84 were technical cooperation funded posts.

Budget

Appropriations for the ICAO budget in 1999 were $52,578,000.

Chapter X

Universal Postal Union (UPU)

The Universal Postal Union (UPU) continued to promote a fast and reliable universal postal service at affordable prices through international collaboration among its member countries. In 1999, the Universal Postal Congress, UPU's supreme legislative body, adopted the Beijing Postal Strategy, the Union's strategic document for 2000-2004. The year marked the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of UPU.

UPU's 189 member countries remained the largest physical distribution network in the world, with some 6 million postal employees working in more than 700,000 post offices worldwide.

Activities of UPU organs

Universal Postal Congress

The Universal Postal Congress, which met every five years and was composed of all member States, held its twenty-second session in 1999 (Beijing, China, 23 August-15 September). It adopted the Beijing Postal Strategy, a blueprint for action by Governments, postal administrations and UPU bodies. The Congress laid out action plans to help member countries improve postal service in areas such as mail security, quality of service and the development of markets, including letter-mail, parcels, postal financial services and philately. The Congress reiterated its support of postal reform and cooperation as a means of reducing the operational and financial performance gap between developed and developing countries. To that end, it authorized the establishment of a Quality Service Fund, whereby special assessments on developed countries would be paid out to developing countries in the form of specific quality of service improvement projects. Recommendations concerning the future role and structure of UPU were debated, and a 25-member high-level group was formed to propose changes in UPU within two years. In order to increase stakeholder participation in the Union's work, an Advisory Group, open to regional postal unions and non-governmental organizations, as well as a selected number of postal administrations, was set up.

Council of Administration

The Council of Administration, which ensured the continuity of the Union's work between Congresses and studied regulatory, administrative, legislative and legal issues of concern to the Union, held two sessions in 1999. The first session (Berne, Switzerland, 15-18 February) focused on the recommendations to be presented to the twenty-second UPU Congress, while the second (Beijing, 10-15 September) assigned tasks to be undertaken during the five-year period leading to the next Congress.

Postal Operations Council

The Postal Operations Council, which dealt with the operations, economic and commercial aspects of international postal services, assisted those services to modernize and upgrade their postal products, including letter post, express mail service, postal parcels and postal financial services. The Council met twice in Berne in 1999. The first session (8-12 February) approved proposals for submission to the UPU Congress, and the second (22 November-1 December), in addition to setting up new committees and work plans, approved the Union's Letter Post Regulations, the Parcel Post Regulations and the Regulations of the Postal Payment Services Agreement, as well as the respective Final Protocols.

The Council, after four years of study of costs, tariffs, the regulatory environment and market behaviour, formulated its proposal for a new terminal dues system in February 1999. Terminal dues were the payment postal services made to each other for the delivery of inland foreign letter post. Country-specific rates for terminal dues would come into effect in developed countries at the beginning of 2001 as part of a new terminal dues system adopted during the UPU Congress.

International Bureau

The International Bureau, under the supervision of the Council of Administration, was the area of the UPU secretariat that provided support, liaison, information and consultation to the postal administrations of member countries. It continued to act as a clearing house for the settlement of various inter-administration charges related to the exchange of postal items and international reply coupons. The Bureau undertook studies on developments in the postal environment, monitored the quality of postal service on a global scale and published information and statistics on international postal services. Its Postal Technology Centre managed the postal application of the electronic data interchange.

As at 31 December 1999, the number of permanent staff members employed by the Bureau was 151, of whom 63 were in the Professional or higher categories and 88 were in the General Service category.

Budget

Under the Union's self-financing system, contributions were payable in advance by member States based on the following year's budget. Since the early 1990s, UPU had adopted the principle of zero real growth, and for the last two years it had followed zero nominal growth. Therefore, the budget approved for 2000 was 35.7 million Swiss francs, the same amount as in 1999. The twenty-second Congress authorized the introduction of a biennial budget cycle starting from the year 2001.

Chapter XI

International Telecommunication Union (ITU)

The International Telecommunication Union (ITU) continued to promote development and efficient operation of telecommunication systems and to provide technical assistance.

At its annual session, the ITU Council (Geneva, 14-25 June) focused on strengthening ITU's policy-making role, the ongoing ITU reform process and new cost-recovery strategies to help fund the Union's growing areas of responsibility, while minimizing the financial impact on its members. The Council approved the establishment of an annual strategic planning workshop to focus on topics of interest to regulators and policy makers, and moved to set up a working group on ITU reform. Also approved was the establishment of a group of experts to study the impact of changes in the regulation and operation of international telecommunication services. The Council endorsed a schedule of charges for processing satellite filings; agreed to ITU's participation in the Protocol Supporting Organization of the Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers; and, in regard to Internet names, endorsed the Union's management of the .int top-level domain, intended primarily for use by intergovernmental organizations. A new strategy for providing assistance to least developed countries was approved.

During the year, ITU membership increased to 189 with the admission of Seychelles.

A major event in 1999 was World TELECOM 99 + INTERACTIVE99 (Geneva, 10-17 October), a forum and exhibition organized by ITU every four years on new technological developments in the telecommunication sector. The event attracted more than 4,000 delegates, who participated in five summits covering topics from industry convergence, technology and interactivity to policy and regulatory issues and telecommunication development.

Radiocommunication Sector

ITU's Radiocommunication Sector (ITU-R) coordinated the development of timely standards for new and evolving wireless communication systems and established the global framework for management of the radio frequency spectrum and the procedures for coordinating the use of frequencies and the orbits used by communication satellites. Preparations for the World Radiocommunication Conference in 2000 continued, while the ITU-R study groups prepared new and updated recommendations on spectrum issues, including standards for next-generation cellular mobile systems. The Radiocommunication Bureau continued to provide services to administrations and users in the application of regulatory, administrative and operational procedures. It also processed notifications for frequency assignments to new or modified terrestrial radiocommunication systems.

Telecommunication Standardization Sector

In 1999, the Telecommunication Standardization Sector (ITU-T) adopted 362 new or revised global standards, on which the world's telecommunication networks were based, including standards for advanced technologies such as optical switching and wave division multiplexing. It developed key standards for systems from digital television and audio broadcasting to cable television and digital image formats. The Telecommunication Standardization Bureau assigned an additional 3,100 universal international freephone numbers (UIFNs). At the end of 1999, 18,485 UIFNs had been assigned.

ITU-T became a founding member of the Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (ICANN) Protocol Supporting Organization. Through a Memorandum of Understanding signed in July between ICANN and a number of standard development organizations (SDOs), ITU would work in partnership with international and regional SDOs to facilitate the growth of the Internet.

Telecommunication Development Sector

Through the Electronic Commerce for Developing Countries Initiative, the Telecommunication Development Bureau, the executive arm of the Telecommunication Development Sector, helped extend the power of emerging electronic commerce networks to local merchants in developing countries. Workshops and seminars held in 1999 covered a diverse range of technologies, from digital sound and television broadcasting and global mobile personal communication satellite services to new telemedicine systems.

The Bureau assisted developing countries with their training needs through a wide range of initiatives. One of the most important was the establishment of four new Centres of Excellence in East and West Africa, the Americas, and Asia and the Pacific. The Centres would train public officials in policy and regulatory issues, while serving as a resource for telecommunication companies and service providers throughout the three regions. All four Centres delivered their first pilot courses during 1999, in partnership with leading vendors and operators. The Bureau continued to develop a special tele-education programme under the auspices of its Global Telecom University/Global Telecom Training Institute project, and undertook a range of ad hoc activities, which included convening the Second World Telemedicine Symposium (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 22-25 March) and the implementation of regional workshops.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1999, ITU had 770 staff members.

Budget

The budget for ITU in 1998-1999 amounted to 327,644,000 Swiss francs (SwF). The ITU Council set the 2000-2001 budget at SwF 332,621,000.

Chapter XII

World Meteorological Organization (WMO)

The World Meteorological Organization (WMO) continued in 1999 to facilitate cooperation related to meteorological and hydrological information and the application of meteorology to aviation, shipping, water problems, agriculture and other activities. WMO also promoted operational hydrology and encouraged research and training in meteorology.

The Thirteenth World Meteorological Congress (Geneva, 4-26 May), WMO's governing body, which met every four years, approved the Fifth Long-term Plan (2000-2009), and the programme and budget for 2000-2003. The Congress adopted the Geneva Declaration, which reaffirmed the importance of the National Meteorological and Hydrological Services (NMHSs) for sustainable development, and urged Governments to uphold the free and unrestricted international exchange of meteorological data and products. It established a Joint WMO/Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission (IOC) Technical Commission for Oceanography and Marine Meteorology (JCOMM) to serve WMO and IOC of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO).

WMO membership remained at 179 States and six Territories in 1999. Members were grouped in six regional associations (RAs)—Africa (RA I), Asia (RA II), South America (RA III), North and Central America (RA IV), South-West Pacific (RA V) and Europe (RA VI).

World Weather Watch Programme

The World Weather Watch Programme (WWW), the backbone of WMO scientific and technical programmes, through its Commission for Basic Systems (CBS), collected, analysed and disseminated meteorological data and products needed by member States to run their meteorological services efficiently. WWW offered up-to-the-minute worldwide weather information through its Global Observing System (GOS), Global Telecommunications System (GTS), Global Data-processing System (GDPS), and data management and system support activities, collectively known as the basic systems. It also included the Tropical Cyclone Programme, the Instruments and Methods of Observation Programme and WMO satellite and environmental emergency response activities.

World Weather Watch implementation

During the year, WWW's main activities focused on the implementation of the new working structure of CBS; a review of the impact of observing systems, particularly radiosondes, on numerical weather predictions (NWP); a survey on the use of the Internet on national meteorological services; the international exchange of meteorological data and products; and the further implementation of advanced telecommunication technology for the collection and distribution of data. Procedures for the provision of forecast model guidance on the occurrence of severe weather, pollution transport model products and extended/monthly and long range/seasonal forecasts were established. Expert meetings were held to re-design and establish a new composite GOS.

The implementation of the Regional Meteorological Telecommunications Networks of all regions made steady progress through the upgrading of circuits and centres. Special efforts were made to support and assist member countries in ensuring year-2000 compliance of the GTS services and systems. Activities also focused on enhancing and developing members' facilities at advanced GDPS centres and National Meteorological Centres.

Instruments and methods of observation

In 1999, activities were carried out to better meet users' needs regarding observations. A joint CBS/Commission for Instruments and Methods of Observation Expert Meeting on Requirements and Representation of Data from Automatic Weather Stations (AWS) (De Bilt, Netherlands, 19-23 April) developed users' requirements related to AWS and conventional surface observations with a view to broadening instrument standardization. An Expert Meeting on Capacity-Building (Beijing, China, 23-25 September) developed proposals on capacity-building related to the activities of Regional Instrument Centres, and guidance material on the choice of instruments for developing countries and for the preparation of an instrument catalogue.

A third Expert Meeting on Operational Issues for Radiosonde Applications in the Tropics and Sub-tropics (Geneva, 18-22 October) dealt with the performance of operationally used upper-air sounding systems.

Tropical Cyclone Programme

During the year, all five regional tropical cyclone centres in Miami, Florida (United States), Nadi (Fiji), New Delhi (India), Reunion and Tokyo (Japan) accelerated the implementation of their regional cooperation programmes, including the regionally coordinated plan for future development of services by NMHSs and agencies involved in disaster prevention and preparedness. Tropical cyclone forecasters were trained to promote capacity-building.

World Climate Programme

In 1999, overall coordination of the World Climate Programme was carried out by the Inter-Agency Coordinating Committee for the Climate Agenda (IACCA). At its third session (Paris, 11-12 March), IACCA discussed, among other things, the possibility of convening a Third World Climate Conference; actions required to improve inter-agency cooperation; priorities and strategies of international funding organizations; and the future of the Climate Agenda and role of IACCA.

During 1999, emphasis was placed on identifying overall priorities for WMO under the framework of the Climate Agenda. Particular attention was given to the Climate Information and Prediction Services project and to the Global Climate Observing System activities that were critical to obligations emerging under the environmental conventions related to climate change, desertification and biodiversity. Another major activity was the completion of the scientific and technical review of the 1997/98 El Niño event, which would serve as the basis for further studies on the social and economic impacts of El Niño.

Under the World Climate Applications and Services Programme, the International Conference on Urban Climatology was held jointly with the International Congress on Biometeorology (Sydney, Australia, 8-12 November). The joint conferences provided platforms for examining a broad spectrum of climate-related issues and their impacts on human activities.

Regional climate outlook forums were held in many parts of the world and plans were in place to examine their long-term sustainability as an effective mechanism for ensuring dialogue between seasonal forecast providers and users.

World Climate Research Programme

The World Climate Research Programme, undertaken jointly by WMO, the International Council of Scientific Unions and IOC, continued studies to provide the scientific basis for predictions of global and regional climate variations on all time-scales and made projections of the magnitude and rate of human-induced climate change. One of its principal projects was the climate variability and predictability study, which included specific regionally focused investigations of the variability of the American monsoon system, the Asian-American monsoon systems and the African climate variability. The Global Energy and Water Cycle Experiment continued the collection of global climatological datasets of key climate parameters, including cloudiness, surface radiation budget, water vapour and aerosols.

Atmospheric Research and Environment Programme

The Atmospheric Research and Environment Programme continued to coordinate and encourage research in atmospheric and related sciences. The Seventh WMO Scientific Conference on Weather Modification (Chiang Mai, Thailand, 17-22 February) reviewed the latest developments in weather modification techniques, including inadvertent weather modification. The Sixth Regional Workshop on Asian/African Monsoon Emphasizing Training Aspects (Nairobi, Kenya, January) updated meteorologists from monsoon-affected countries on the latest developments in Asian/African monsoon research.

The Global Atmosphere Watch held numerous scientific advisory group meetings that considered programme components, such as greenhouse gases, ultraviolet monitoring and instrumentation, ozone, aerosols, precipitation chemistry and observations. The WMO/United Nations Environment Programme Fourth Meeting of Ozone Research Managers of the Parties to the Vienna Convention and Meeting of the Bureau of the Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer (Geneva, 28-30 April) reviewed the current state of ozone monitoring and research activities.

Applications of meteorology

Agricultural meteorology

The International Workshop on Agrometeorology in the Twenty-first Century (Accra, Ghana, 15-17 February) discussed important issues facing agrometeorology in the next millennium, including initiatives to strengthen services for agricultural production. Roving seminars on crop-yield weather modelling were held in Pune, India (19-30 July), and Ljubljana, Slovenia (6-17 September). Roving seminars on instrumentation and operation of AWS for applications in agrometeorology were held in Casablanca, Morocco (28 June-9 July), and Tehran, Iran (27 November-8 December). Roving seminars were held on data management for applications to agriculture (Tashkent, Uzbekistan, 8-19 November) and on the application of climatic data for drought preparedness and management of sustainable agriculture (Accra, 1-12 November).

Aeronautical meteorology

In 1999, the Aeronautical Meteorology Programme held five training events related to the application of NWP products to aviation and to the recovery of costs for the provision of meteorological service to aviation. The second Aircraft Meteorological Data Relay Panel Meeting (Geneva, 19-22 October) reviewed coordination of national and regional programmes and improvements of data exchange and quality control.

Marine meteorology

In 1999, the first transition planning meeting for JCOMM, established to provide the institutional umbrella and coordinating/integrating mechanism for all existing and future operational marine-related activities of WMO and IOC/UNESCO, was held in Saint Petersburg, Russian Federation, in July.

Public weather services

During 1999, the Public Weather Services (PWS) Programme continued to assist WMO members in the observation, monitoring and prediction of weather patterns. The Programme's work was carried out through three expert teams and an implementation and coordination team. Several training seminars and workshops were organized in different regions with the objective of improving participants' national public weather services. PWS also ensured the provision of meteorological information in support of UN humanitarian missions related to natural disasters and other crises.

Hydrology and water resources

A major achievement in 1999 was the launch of the regional Hydrological Cycle Observing System project for Western and Central Africa, with the aim of securing a regional information system.

The Thirteenth World Meteorological Congress adopted a resolution on the free exchange of hydrological data and products, in consonance with the requirements of WMO's scientific and technical programmes. The Fifth UNESCO/WMO International Conference on Hydrology (Geneva, 8-12 February) reviewed the results achieved within the framework of both organizations' programmes in freshwater and considered their respective plans for future work.

Technical cooperation

In 1999, WMO technical assistance, valued at $16.53 million, was financed by trust funds (28.6 per cent), the WMO Voluntary Cooperation Programme (51.7 per cent), the United Nations Development Programme (13.7 per cent) and the WMO regular budget (6 per cent). Regional offices continued to implement WMO programmes.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1999, the number of full-time staff employed by WMO totalled 264. Of those, 121 were in the Professional and higher categories and 143 were in the General Service and related categories.

Budget

The WMO Executive Council, in 1997, approved a regular budget of 125,100,000 Swiss francs (SwF) for the 1998-1999 biennium. Unspent balances remaining from the budget of the prior biennium (1996-1997), amounting to SwF 9,110,758, were reappropriated to the 1998-1999 biennium. Thus, the approved budget for the biennium amounted to SwF 134,210,758.

In 1999, the Council approved a regular budget of SwF 126,100,000 for the 2000-2001 biennium. The Thirteenth World Meteorological Congress approved a maximum expenditure of SwF 252,300,000 for the thirteenth financial period (2000-2003).

Chapter XIII

International Maritime Organization (IMO)

In 1999, the International Maritime Organization (IMO) continued to improve the safety of international shipping and prevent marine pollution from ships.

The IMO Assembly, the organization's governing body, at its twenty-first session (London, 15-26 November), elected a new Council for the 2000-2001 biennium, approved budget appropriations and a work programme for the biennium and adopted technical resolutions relating to IMO's work. The Assembly adopted 28 resolutions, including several submitted by the Maritime Safety Committee (MSC), IMO's senior technical body, the Marine Environment Protection Committee (MEPC) and other subsidiary bodies.

In 1999, IMO membership remained at 157.

Activities in 1999

The IMO Council awarded the International Maritime Prize for 1998 to the International Lifeboat Federation, which included both voluntary and government-supported sea rescue organizations, with 57 members in 44 countries. The Prize was awarded annually to the person, organization or other entity judged to have done the most to advance IMO objectives.

The Council was informed that some $1.5 million had been contributed or pledged to the Seafarers Memorial Trust Fund, established in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1405].

Prevention of pollution

At its forty-third session (28 June-2 July), MEPC decided to propose to the IMO Council the holding of a conference in the next biennium to adopt a legal instrument to effect the phasing out of organotins acting as biocides in anti-fouling systems on ships. An MEPC Working Group proposed new regulations intended to address the environmental damage caused by the introduction of harmful aquatic organisms in ballast water, used to stabilize vessels at sea. The Committee adopted regulations to ensure that certain sized tankers carrying persistent oils (such as heavy fuel oil) as cargo were subject to the same stringent requirements as crude-oil tankers. Amendments to the International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships, 1973 [YUN 1973, p. 964], as modified by the 1978 Protocol relating thereto (MARPOL 73/78), would make existing oil tankers between 20,000 and 30,000 tons deadweight carrying persistent product oil, including heavy diesel and fuel oil, subject to the same construction requirements as crude-oil tankers. The amendments, expected to enter into force on 1 January 2001, related to Regulations for the Prevention of Pollution by Oil and the control of noxious liquid substances. MEPC approved new procedures for the designation of a "particularly sensitive sea area" (PSSA). In an area approved as a PSSA, measures could be used to control maritime activities, such as routing measures, strict application of MARPOL discharge and equipment requirements for ships, such as oil tankers, and installation of Vessel Traffic Services. There were currently two designated PSSAs: the Great Barrier Reef (Australia) and the Sabana-Camagüey Archipelago (Cuba). The Committee adopted a resolution on Guidelines for Monitoring the Worldwide Average Sulphur Content of Residual Fuel Oils Supplied for Use on Board Ships, intended to establish an agreed method of monitoring.

Ship security and safety at sea

At its seventy-first meeting (19-28 May), MSC adopted amendments to the International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea (SOLAS), 1974 [YUN 1974, p. 1030], aimed at making mandatory the International Code for the Safe Carriage of Packaged Irradiated Nuclear Fuel, Plutonium and High-Level Radioactive Wastes on Board Ships (INF Code). The amendments were expected to enter into force on 1 January 2001. The Code applied to all ships, regardless of the date of construction and size, engaged in the carriage of INF cargo, but was not applicable to warships, naval auxiliary or other ships used only on government non-commercial service, although administrations were expected to ensure that such ships were in compliance with the Code. Specific regulations in the Code covered damage stability, fire protection, temperature control of cargo spaces, structural consideration, cargo securing arrangements, electrical supplies, radiological protection equipment and management, training and ship-board emergency plans. The Committee reviewed progress in implementing the 1995 amendments to the 1978 International Convention on Standards of Training, Certification and Watchkeeping for Seafarers [YUN 1978, p. 1161], which required parties to communicate to IMO information on compliance with the 1995 amendments. As at 21 May, 95 of the 133 parties had communicated information and 15 panels had completed their work and reported to the Secretary-General, 40 panels had completed initial evaluations and clarifications, and, of those, 20 panels were considering clarifications provided by the parties. The Committee agreed to a draft IMO Assembly resolution on the issue of fraudulent certificates of competency to highlight the problem and encourage member States to eliminate the circulation of fraudulent certificates. MSC established a Working Group on Bulk Carrier Safety to review relevant submissions. It also reviewed progress in carrying out a formal safety assessment study of bulk carriers to aid future IMO decision-making on bulk carrier safety and agreed to a framework setting out project objectives, scope and application. MSC established a Correspondence Group to prepare a preliminary draft text of an instrument for the investigation and prosecution of the crime of piracy and armed robbery against ships. It also agreed to a definition of fatigue, which had been recognized as a contributor to many accidents involving means of transport, and developed guidance on dealing with the problem.

Secretariat

As at 31 December, IMO had 271 staff members, of whom 114 were in the Professional and higher categories and 157 in the General Service category.

Budget

The IMO Assembly, at its twentieth biennial session in 1997, approved budgetary appropriations of 36,612,200 pounds sterling for the 1998-1999 biennium, of which 18,666,100 pounds sterling was for 1999. At its twenty-first session in 1999, the Assembly approved budgetary appropriations of 36,612,200 pounds sterling for the 2000-2001 biennium, of which 18,155,000 pounds sterling was for 2000 and 18,457,200 pounds sterling was for 2001.

Chapter XIV

World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO)

In 1999, the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) continued development cooperation, norm-setting and registration activities to promote respect for the protection and use of intellectual property. The organization's main areas of work continued to focus on strengthening the intellectual property systems of developing countries; promoting new or revised norms for the protection of intellectual property at the national, regional and multilateral levels; and facilitating the acquisition of intellectual property protection through international registration systems.

The governing bodies of WIPO and the Unions administered by the organization held their thirty-fourth series of meetings (Geneva, 20-29 September).

During 1999, WIPO membership increased to 173 States, with the accession of Antigua and Barbuda and Seychelles to the 1967 Convention establishing WIPO, amended in 1979. The number of States adhering to treaties administered by WIPO also increased: as at 31 December 1999, there were 157 States parties to the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property; 142 to the Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works; and 106 to the Patent Cooperation Treaty (PCT).

Activities in 1999

Development cooperation

Much of the work of WIPO's regional cooperation programme continued to be shaped by the 1 January 2000 deadline for developing countries that were members of the World Trade Organization (WTO) to make their national legislation and administrative structures compatible with the provisions of the WTO Agreement on Trade-Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights. Towards that end, WIPO prepared 61 draft laws for 33 developing countries and regional organizations and provided written comments on another 66 draft laws received from 31 countries or secretariats of regional organizations.

The Nationally Focused Action Plans (NFAPs), which were established jointly between individual Governments and WIPO and were aimed at helping developing countries to reach a significantly higher level of efficient management and use of the national intellectual property system, continued to be implemented. In 1999, 13 new NFAPs were launched and a total of 69 were being implemented.

Several national and regional projects aimed at capacity-building in the area of collective management were introduced, ranging from software development, legal advice and guidelines on model statutes to human resources development. In parallel, the evolution of the digital environment and its impact on collective management systems was monitored closely, in order to meet the challenges posed and to ensure that copyright protection would not be adversely affected by those changes. Besides formal training, many regional and national symposia and meetings were held to create a greater awareness of the role of intellectual property.

The WIPO Worldwide Academy, an Internet-based nine-module course on intellectual property in English, French and Spanish, was launched in 1999 with a total of some 480 registered students in the three languages. To consolidate the foundations of the Academy, cooperation agreements were concluded with a number of universities for the participation of their students in the Academy's on-line courses.

Intellectual property law

By year's end, 12 countries had ratified the WIPO Copyright Treaty and 11 countries had ratified the WIPO Performances and Phonogram Treaty (WPPT). For each treaty to enter into force, at least 30 States were required to adhere to it. The treaties, both adopted in 1996, updated the legal principles underpinning international protection of copyright and the rights of performers and phonogram producers in the digital age, particularly regarding the Internet.

Regarding the harmonization of patent laws, the Standing Committee on the Law of Patents adopted the draft Patent Law Treaty (PLT), which covered formal administrative requirements for the filing of patent applications in patent offices. The Committee agreed that a diplomatic conference would be held in 2000, to which the draft text of PLT would be submitted for negotiation.

In June, the Standing Committee on the Law of Trademarks, Industrial Designs and Geographical Indications (SCT) reached agreement on a set of new guidelines to improve protection for well-known marks. SCT continued discussions on the protection of well-known marks, trademark licences, use of marks on the Internet, geographical indications and international non-proprietary names.

The Standing Committee on Copyright and Related Rights, at meetings in May and November, discussed the protection of audio-visual performances, databases and the rights of broadcasting organizations. It recommended that a preparatory committee and an extraordinary session of the WIPO Assembly be convened in April 2000 to consider holding a diplomatic conference on a new treaty on audio-visual performances, as WPPT only covered audio performers.

WIPO Arbitration and Mediation Centre

The Arbitration and Mediation Centre continued to provide less expensive and speedier alternatives to costly court proceedings in commercial disputes involving intellectual property rights. In 1999, the Centre finalized development of its on-line dispute resolution service, which would allow involved parties to communicate via the Internet, thus greatly reducing the time and cost of reaching a solution. The service was especially helpful for parties exploiting their intellectual property rights across borders, which needed an international facility for resolving disputes. Following the adoption by the Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (ICANN) of the Uniform Dispute Resolution Policy applicable to top-level domain names, the Centre was accredited by ICANN to administer cases filed under the Uniform Policy.

International registration activities

PCT. In 1999, over 74,000 international applications were filed, representing an increase of 10.5 per cent over the total for 1998 and the equivalent of 5.82 million national patent applications.

Madrid Agreement. In the trademark system under the Madrid Agreement concerning the International Registration of Marks and its 1989 Protocol, the number of international registrations was just over 20,000, maintaining the figure reached in 1998.

Hague Agreement. A Geneva Act of the Hague Agreement concerning the International Deposit of Industrial Designs was adopted at a diplomatic conference (Geneva, July). The new treaty was expected to result in a much-expanded coverage of countries of the Hague system, which offered users from business and industry a more practical and cost-effective way to obtain international protection for their designs. In 1999, the number of international deposits of industrial designs under the Hague Agreement rose to 4,093, a 3 per cent increase over 1998. Renewals of deposited designs also rose by 7 per cent compared to 1998.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1999, WIPO employed 752 staff members representing 82 countries; 276 were in the Professional or higher categories and 476 were in the General Service category.

Budget

WIPO's principal sources of income in 1998-1999 were fees paid by private sector users of the international registration services (85 per cent), contributions paid by the member States (9 per cent) and the sale of WIPO publications and interest earnings (6 per cent). In September, member States approved the results-based programme and budget for the 2000-2001 biennium. The approved expenditure of 410 million Swiss francs (SwF) was an increase of 8 per cent over that of the 1998-1999 biennium. Projected income for the same period was estimated at SwF 410 million. Thus, the surplus for the period was expected to be negligible. In 1999, the organization's budgeted income was SwF 218,686,000 and budgeted expenditure was SwF 221,807,000.

Chapter XV

International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD)

In 1999, the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) continued to promote the economic advancement of the rural poor, mainly by improving the productivity of on- and off-farm activities, and by designing and implementing innovative, cost-effective and replicable programmes that had a sustainable impact.

IFAD's Governing Council, at its twenty-second session (Rome, 17-18 February), established the Consultation to Review the Adequacy of the Resources Available to the Fund to consider IFAD's mandate and proposed work programme. The Executive Board held three regular sessions (April, September, December), during which it approved loans for 30 projects and programmes; one project and two programmes were for direct supervision by IFAD. The Board approved a contribution to Mali to help reduce its debt to IFAD within the framework of IFAD's participation in the World Bank's Heavily-Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative. It approved a programme of work for the year 2000 of $482.2 million for loans and grants under the Regular Programme and endorsed a budget of $55.4 million, including a contingency of $400,000 and $ 141,000 to fund meetings of the Consultation in 2000.

IFAD membership remained at 161 in 1999. As at 31 December 1999, of its member countries, 22 were in List A (developed countries), 12 in List B (oil-exporting developing countries), and 127 in List C (other developing countries), 49 in Sub-List C1 (Africa), 47 in Sub-List C2 (Europe, Asia and the Pacific) and 31 in Sub-List C3 (Latin America and the Caribbean).

Resources

The fourth replenishment of IFAD's resources, totalling $460 million, allowed IFAD to make commitments worth over $1,350 million for new projects and grant financing during 1997-1999. The Consultation to Review the Adequacy of the Resources Available to IFAD focused on the need for a fifth replenishment of the Fund to cover the next three years of operation.

Activities in 1999

Loans approved in 1999 under IFAD's Regular Programme totalled $432.7 million for 30 projects and $30.2 million, which financed 124 technical assistance grants.

Regular Programme lending was distributed by region as follows: eastern and southern Africa, $112.7 million for 7 projects in 20 countries (26.1 per cent); Asia and the Pacific, $104.2 million for 6 projects in 21 countries (24.1 per cent); western and central Africa, $85.7 million for 7 projects in 24 countries (19.8 per cent); Latin America and the Caribbean, $76 million for 5 projects in 28 countries (17.6 per cent); the Near East and North Africa region (included Djibouti, Somalia and the Sudan), $54.1 million for 5 projects in 21 countries (12.5 per cent).

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1999, the IFAD secretariat comprised 290 staff, including 132 staff in the Professional and higher categories and 158 in the General Service category.

Income and expenditure

Total revenue under the Regular Programme in 1999 was $240 million, consisting of $196.5 million of investment income and $43.5 million from interest and service charges on loans. The excess of revenue over expenses for the year was $62.8 million, compared to $363 million in 1998.

Chapter XVI

United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO)

In 1999, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) completed its reform programme and embarked on a new and more direct path towards the industrialization of developing countries and economies in transition. Throughout the year, UNIDO focused on adjusting and refining its programming and implementation methods, and on introducing quality control for its programmes and activities.

The Industrial Development Board, at its twenty-first session (Vienna, 23-25 June), adopted decisions relating to the implementation of the Business Plan in Latin America and the Caribbean; the Industrial Development Fund; and administrative matters.

The eighth session of the General Conference (Vienna, 29 November-3 December) adopted the programme and budget for 2000-2001 and set the agenda for industrial development in the new millennium. The adoption of resolutions on sustainable industrial development and on the Global Environment Facility (GEF) strengthened UNIDO's mandate as a knowledge-based specialized agency in environment and energy.

UNIDO membership remained at 168.

New integrated programmes

At the end of 1999, UNIDO's new system of integrated programmes, which represented a holistic approach to industrial development, had completed a full year of operation. The programmes provided a series of interlinked activities within a given country based on the accumulated expertise and experience of the organization as a whole rather than individual organizational units. As at 31 December, a total of 29 programmes were in place, of which 5 had been under implementation for almost a year. Although coverage was for all regions, the focus remained on Africa, where 15 programmes were in place. The 29 ongoing programmes had a total budget of $212,415,000.

Service modules

An important component of UNIDO's transformation was the grouping of services into 16 modules, thus aligning the programmatic focus of activities with the organization's long-term goals of sustainable industrial development—the so-called "3 Es": competitive economy, productive employment and sound environment. The integrated programmes developed and launched in 1999 combined those service modules to meet the initial industrial development requirements of countries assisted by UNIDO.

The service modules under competitive economy included: industrial policy formulation and implementation; statistics and information networks; metrology, standardization, certification and accreditation; continuous improvement and quality management; and investment and technology promotion. Industrial policy and research efforts were spearheading the convergence of technical cooperation with the organization's global forum function. The new orientation was reflected by integrating global forum activities, such as information assessment, analysis and diffusion, with technical cooperation provided through the service module. The overall objective was to encourage good industrial governance by providing policy advice, facilitating public-private consultations, policy implementation, monitoring and auditing, and institutional capacity-building. Innovation in investment and technology promotion was further strengthened by the new Investment and Technology Promotion Network, which embraced a broad cross-section of industrial stakeholders. The service module on statistics and information networks defined much of UNIDO's activities in delivering industrial information to client countries and assisted countries to improve their own capacity to collect, process and provide information. Progress was achieved in programmes featuring standardization, metrology, certification and accreditation as keys to competitiveness and efficiency in the global market. Within the continuous improvement and quality management service module, UNIDO assistance to Albania, Algeria, Romania and Sri Lanka helped local services to restructure and upgrade industries for enhanced competitiveness.

Under productive employment, the service modules were: small and medium enterprise (SME) policy framework; women entrepreneurship development; industrial business development services; and upgrading agro-industries and related technical skills. The need to establish an effective policy and institutional environment for promoting SMEs was reflected in integrated programmes such as those for Bolivia, Cuba, Eritrea, Ghana, Guinea, Rwanda, the Sudan, the United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam and Yemen. To promote productive employment and gender equality within small and micro industries, UNIDO provided capacity-building services and policy support to address the needs of women entrepreneurs. Programmes in Central America and in Tanzania were producing substantial results in improving women's entrepreneurial skills in agro-based food processing to enable them to manage their own businesses. UNIDO addressed the needs of entrepreneurs in developing countries and in economies in transition by providing them with specialized support. In addition, UNIDO assisted rural economies through the upgrading of agro-industries and related technical skills module, which included services in food, leather, textiles and wood-processing technologies and skill upgrading.

Service modules under the environment comprised: environmental policy framework; the 1992 United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change [YUN 1992, p. 681] and the 1997 Kyoto Protocol thereto [YUN 1997, p. 1048]; energy efficiency; rural energy development; cleaner production; pollution control and waste management; and the 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer [YUN 1987, p. 686]. The first UNIDO-executed GEF-financed programme on water pollution control and biodiversity conservation of the Gulf of Guinea marine ecosystem was completed in 1999. Policies for sustainable environmental growth were launched in Benin, Cameroon, China, Cote d'Ivoire, Ghana, India, Nigeria, Togo and Viet Nam. Under the service module of the 1992 Climate Convention and 1997 Kyoto Protocol thereto, UNIDO assisted countries with capacity-building and technical assessment for the Kyoto mechanisms. Regarding energy in general and industrial energy efficiency in particular, UNIDO cooperated with the United Nations Development Programme in formulating and implementing a number of GEF-financed large-scale projects. The national cleaner production centres programme, a centrepiece of the cleaner production service module, was expanded in 1999 with the inauguration of new centres in Guatemala, Morocco and the Russian Federation. The pollution control and waste management service module provided advice on waste management technology to enterprises and helped increase awareness of the value of pollution control services. During the year, the Multilateral Fund for the Implementation of the Montreal Protocol approved for implementation by UNIDO 132 projects valued at $36.6 million in 37 countries to eliminate 4,230 ozone depletion potential tonnes.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1999, UNIDO employed a total of 669 staff members; 247 were in the Professional or higher categories and 422 were in the General Service category.

Budget

The seventh (1997) session of the UNIDO General Conference approved the organization's 1999 regular budget of $68.5 million. In addition, UNIDO received $83.5 million in voluntary contributions for technical cooperation activities. In 1999, new project approvals, including net changes to ongoing projects, amounted to $81.6 million, compared with $57.1 million in 1998.

In December 1999, the General Conference approved UNIDO's 2000-2001 regular budget in the amount of $167.7 million, which represented a 22.7 per cent increase over the budget of the previous biennium.

Chapter XVII

World Trade Organization (WTO)

The World Trade Organization (WTO), which was the legal and institutional foundation of the multilateral trading system, continued in 1999 to oversee the rules of international trade, settle trade disputes between Governments and organize trade negotiations.

The third WTO Ministerial Conference, which was WTO's highest authority and comprised all of its members, was held in Seattle, United States, from 30 November to 3 December. The Conference failed to reach agreement either on the launch of a new round of trade negotiations or on the other important points that had emerged in the course of the preparatory process. Furthermore, WTO found itself at the centre of a wave of resentment against many aspects of the global economy, for which the Ministerial Conference became a focus.

WTO's General Council, the body entrusted with carrying out the functions of the organization in the interval between Conferences, continued to monitor the implementation and operation of the multilateral trading system embodied in the WTO Agreement. In addition to making preparations for the Ministerial Conference, it continued to oversee the implementation of the Work Programme on Electronic Commerce, followed the review of the Dispute Settlement Understanding and granted waivers from obligations under the WTO Agreement.

During the year, WTO membership increased to 135 with the admission of Estonia and Latvia.

General activities

The three working groups set up by the 1996 Ministerial Conference [YUN 1996, p. 1441] met during 1999. The Working Group on the Relationship between Trade and Investment, at meetings in March, June and September, continued to examine implications of the relationship between trade and investment for development and economic growth; the economic relationship between trade and investment; and stocktaking and analysis of existing international instruments and activities regarding trade and investment. The Working Group on Transparency in Government Procurement, which met in February, June and October, discussed the definition and scope of government procurement; procurement methods; publication of information on national legislation and procedures; information on procurement opportunities, tendering and qualification procedures; time periods; transparency of decisions on qualification; contract awards; domestic review procedures; maintenance of records; information technology, language, and the fight against bribery and corruption; notification to other Governments; dispute settlement procedures; technical cooperation; and special and differential treatment for developing countries. The Working Group on the Interaction between Trade and Competition Policy, which met in April, June and September, continued to discuss the relevance of fundamental WTO principles of national treatment, transparency and most-favoured-nation treatment to competition policy and vice versa; approaches to promoting cooperation and communication in technical cooperation; and the contribution of competition policy in achieving WTO objectives, including the promotion of international trade.

During the year, the Trade Policy Review Body carried out reviews of Argentina, Bolivia, Egypt, Guinea, Israel, Nicaragua, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Romania, Thailand, Togo and the United States.

WTO continued to provide technical cooperation and training to developing countries and economies in transition through courses, seminars and symposia to widen participants' understanding of trade policy matters, the multilateral trading system, international trade law and other relevant trade and development issues.

Trade in goods

The Council for Trade in Goods continued to monitor the implementation of agreements and examined and approved requests for waivers and waiver extensions from members in connection with the transposition of their Schedules into the Harmonized Systems. It also reviewed the operation of the Trade-related Investment Measures Agreement; took note of the situation with respect to the compliance of notification obligations; and adopted the draft status report on exploratory work undertaken on trade facilitation. Discussions continued on the best way to implement the provisions of the Agreement on Textiles and Clothing for the integration of textile and clothing products into the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade rules by 2005.

The Committee on Agriculture reviewed the implementation of commitments to the WTO Agreement on Agriculture in market access, domestic support and export subsidies and export restrictions. Since 1995, the Committee had received 834 notifications submitted by member States. In the area of market access, the Committee reviewed the administration of tariff quotas, imports and the application of the special agricultural safeguard.

The Committee on Sanitary and Phytosanitary Measures reviewed the implementation of the Agreement on the Application of Sanitary and Phytosanitary Measures (the "SPS Agreement"), which set out the rights and obligations of members to ensure food safety, protect human health from plant- or animal-spread diseases, or protect plant and animal health from pests and diseases. In November, the Committee discussed specific trade concerns and the need for a more focused approach on the discussion of developing countries' implementation of the Agreement and the transparency of the Agreement.

The Committee on the Agreement on Safeguards completed its review of national safeguard legislation; monitored the notifications of WTO members on the timetables for the phase-out of their "grey area" measures (voluntary export restraints); and reviewed notifications of findings of serious injury due to increased exports.

The following groups continued to review relevant legislation and regulations of members: the Committee on Subsidies and Countervailing Measures; the Committee on Anti-Dumping Practices; the Committee on Technical Barriers to Trade; the Committee on Import Licensing; the Committee on Rules of Origin; the Committee on Customs Valuation; the Working Party on Pre-shipment Inspection; the Working Party on State Trading Enterprises; and the Committee on Trade-related Investment Measures.

Trade in services

The Council for Trade in Services held substantive discussions on the negotiating guidelines and procedures of the General Agreement on Trade in Services (GATS), which called on member States to enter into successive rounds of negotiations, beginning not later than 2000, with a view to achieving a progressively higher level of liberalization. The Working Party on GATS rules continued to negotiate new rules on safeguards, government procurement and subsidies.

Intellectual property

The WTO Agreement on Trade-related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights (TRIPS) provided for minimum international standards of protection in copyright, trademarks, geographic indications, industrial designs, patents, layout designs of integrated circuits and undisclosed information. During the year, the Council for TRIPS considered notifications concerning the implementation of the so-called "mail-box" and exclusive marketing rights for countries that did not yet provide product patent protection for pharmaceuticals and/or agricultural chemicals. It also discussed implementation of the Agreement, which required developed-country members to provide incentives to enterprises in their territories to promote and encourage technology transfer to least developed country members. In addition, discussions continued regarding geographic indications and intellectual property issues connected with electronic commerce.

Regional trade agreements

The Committee on Regional Trade Agreements continued to examine regional trade agreements (RTAs). By the end of 1999, it had concluded the factual examination of 52 of the 77 RTAs under its purview.

Trade and development

The Committee on Trade and Development discussed the funding of technical assistance activities; examined the secretariat's plan for technical cooperation for the period 2000-2002; and held preliminary discussions on its 2000 work programme.

Trade and environment

In 1999, the Committee on Trade and Environment discussed, among other things, trade in services and the environment; the linkages between the multilateral environment and trade agendas; market access; the environmental effects of removing trade restrictions and distortions in the agriculture, fisheries, forestry and environmental services sectors; the export of domestically prohibited goods; and the relationship between the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity [YUN 1992, p. 683] and the TRIPS Agreement.

Plurilateral agreements

The Agreement on Government Procurement called on parties, not later than three years from its entry into force on 1 January 1996, to undertake further negotiations to improve the Agreement in order to achieve the greatest possible extension of its coverage among the parties and eliminate any remaining discriminatory measures and practices. In October, the parties considered the timetable for the completion of the negotiations and the overall work programme.

The Agreement on Trade in Civil Aircraft eliminated all customs duties and other charges on imports of civil aircraft products and repairs, bound them at zero level, and required the adoption or adaptation of end-use customs administration. Although the Agreement was part of the WTO Agreement, it remained outside the WTO framework. In 1999, signatories discussed a draft protocol rectifying the Agreement.

International Trade Centre

The International Trade Centre (ITC), operated jointly by WTO and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (see p. 880), continued to undertake technical cooperation activities as a follow-up to the Uruguay Round Agreements. In 1999, ITC agreed to assume day-to-day management of the Integrated Technical Assistance Programme in Selected Least Developed Countries and Other African Countries.

Budget

The WTO budget for 1999 amounted to 120.2 million Swiss francs. Beginning in 1996, WTO members' contributions were determined according to their share in total trade in goods, services and intellectual property rights.

Secretariat

At the end of 1999, WTO staff numbered 533, of whom 291 were in the Professional and higher categories and 242 in the General Service category.

Charter of the United Nations and Statute of the International Court of Justice

Charter of the United Nations

NOTE: The Charter of the United Nations was signed on 26 June 1945, in San Francisco, at the conclusion of the United Nations Conference on International Organization, and came into force on 24 October 1945. The Statute of the International Court of Justice is an integral part of the Charter.

Amendments to Articles 23, 27 and 61 of the Charter were adopted by the General Assembly on 17 December 1963 and came into force on 31 August 1965. A further amendment to Article 61 was adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1971 and came into force on 24 September 1973. An amendment to Article 109, adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1965, came into force on 12 June 1968.

The amendment to Article 23 enlarges the membership of the Security Council from 11 to 15. The amended Article 27 provides that decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven) and on all other matters by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven), including the concurring votes of the five permanent members of the Security Council.

The amendment to Article 61, which entered into force on 31 August 1965, enlarged the membership of the Economic and Social Council from 18 to 27. The subsequent amendment to that Article, which entered into force on 24 September 1973, further increased the membership of the Council from 27 to 54.

The amendment to Article 109, which relates to the first paragraph of that Article, provides that a General Conference of Member States for the purpose of reviewing the Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any nine members (formerly seven) of the Security Council. Paragraph 3 of Article 109, which deals with the consideration of a possible review conference during the tenth regular session of the General Assembly, has been retained in its original form in its reference to a "vote of any seven members of the Security Council", the paragraph having been acted upon in 1955 by the General Assembly, at its tenth regular session, and by the Security Council.

WE THE PEOPLES OF THE UNITED NATIONS DETERMINED to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind, and to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained, and to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

AND FOR THESE ENDS

to practice tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours, and to unite our strength to maintain international peace and security, and to ensure, by the acceptance of principles and the institution of methods, that armed force shall not be used, save in the common interest, and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

HAVE RESOLVED TO COMBINE OUR EFFORTS TO ACCOMPLISH THESE AIMS

Accordingly, our respective Governments, through representatives assembled in the city of San Francisco, who have exhibited their full powers found to be in good and due form, have agreed to the present Charter of the United Nations and do hereby establish an international organization to be known as the United Nations.

Chapter I PURPOSES AND PRINCIPLES

Article 1

The Purposes of the United Nations are:

1. To maintain international peace and security, and to that end: to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace, and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, and to bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace;
2. To develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace;
3. To achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion; and
4. To be a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of these common ends.

Article 2

The Organization and its Members, in pursuit of the Purposes stated in Article 1, shall act in accordance with the following Principles:

1. The Organization is based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all its Members.
2. All Members, in order to ensure to all of them the rights and benefits resulting from membership, shall fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the present Charter.

3. All Members shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered.

4. All Members shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state, or in any other manner inconsistent with the Purposes of the United Nations.

5. All Members shall give the United Nations every assistance in any action it takes in accordance with the present Charter, and shall refrain from giving assistance to any state against which the United Nations is taking preventive or enforcement action.

6. The Organization shall ensure that states which are not Members of the United Nations act in accordance with these Principles so far as may be necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security.

7. Nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the present Charter; but this principle shall not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under Chapter VII.

Chapter II MEMBERSHIP

Article 3

Statute of the International Court of Justice

Article 1

The International Court of Justice established by the Charter of the United Nations as the principal judicial organ of the United Nations shall be constituted and shall function in accordance with the provisions of the present Statute.

Chapter I

ORGANIZATION OF THE COURT

Article 2

The Court shall be composed of a body of independent judges, elected regardless of their nationality from among persons of high moral character, who possess the qualifications required in their respective countries for appointment to the highest judicial offices, or are jurisconsults of recognized competence in international law.

Article 3

1. The Court shall consist of fifteen members, no two of whom may be nationals of the same state.

2. A person who for the purposes of membership in the Court could be regarded as a national of more than one state shall be deemed to be a national of the one in which he ordinarily exercises civil and political rights.

Article 4

1. The members of the Court shall be elected by the General Assembly and by the Security Council from a list of persons nominated by the national groups in the Permanent Court of Arbitration, in accordance with the following provisions.

2. In the case of Members of the United Nations not represented in the Permanent Court of Arbitration, candidates shall be nominated by national groups appointed for this purpose by their governments under the same conditions as those prescribed for members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration by Article 44 of the Convention of The Hague of 1907 for the pacific settlement of international disputes.

3. The conditions under which a state which is a party to the present Statute but is not a Member of the United Nations may participate in electing the members of the Court shall, in the absence of a special agreement, be laid down by the General Assembly upon recommendation of the Security Council.

Article 5

1. At least three months before the date of the election, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall address a written request to the members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration belonging to the states which are parties to the present Statute, and to the members of the national groups appointed under Article 4, paragraph 2, inviting them to undertake, within a given time, by national groups, the nomination of persons in a position to accept the duties of a member of the Court.

2. No group may nominate more than four persons, not more than two of whom shall be of their own nationality. In no case may the number of candidates nominated by a group be more than double the number of seats to be filled.

Article 6

Before making these nominations, each national group is recommended to consult its highest court of justice, its legal faculties and schools of law, and its national academies and national sections of international academies devoted to the study of law.

Article 7

1. The Secretary-General shall prepare a list in alphabetical order of all the persons thus nominated. Save as provided in Article 12, paragraph 2, these shall be the only persons eligible.

2. The Secretary-General shall submit this list to the General Assembly and to the Security Council.

Article 8

The General Assembly and the Security Council shall proceed independently of one another to elect the members of the Court.

Article 9

At every election, the electors shall bear in mind not only that the persons to be elected should individually possess the qualifications required, but also that in the body as a whole the representation of the main forms of civilization and of the principal legal systems of the world should be assured.

Article 10

1. Those candidates who obtain an absolute majority of votes in the General Assembly and in the Security Council shall be considered as elected.

2. Any vote of the Security Council, whether for the election of judges or for the appointment of members of the conference envisaged in Article 12, shall be taken without any distinction between permanent and non-permanent members of the Security Council.

3. In the event of more than one national of the same state obtaining an absolute majority of the votes both of the General Assembly and of the Security Council, the eldest of these only shall be considered as elected.

Article 11

If, after the first meeting held for the purpose of the election, one or more seats remain to be filled, a second and, if necessary, a third meeting shall take place.

Article 12

1. If, after the third meeting, one or more seats still remain unfilled, a joint conference consisting of six members, three appointed by the General Assembly and three by the Security Council, may be formed at any time at the request of either the General Assembly or the Security Council, for the purpose of choosing by the vote of an absolute majority one name for each seat still vacant, to submit to the General Assembly and the Security Council for their respective acceptance.

2. If the joint conference is unanimously agreed upon any person who fulfils the required conditions, he may be included in its list, even though he was not included in the list of nominations referred to in Article 7.

3. If the joint conference is satisfied that it will not be successful in procuring an election, those members of the Court who have already been elected shall, within a period to be fixed by the Security Council, proceed to fill the vacant seats by selection from among those candidates who have obtained votes either in the General Assembly or in the Security Council.

4. In the event of an equality of votes among the judges, the eldest judge shall have a casting vote.

Article 13

1. The members of the Court shall be elected for nine years and may be re-elected; provided, however, that of the judges elected at the first election, the terms of five judges shall expire at the end of three years and the terms of five more judges shall expire at the end of six years.

2. The judges whose terms are to expire at the end of the above-mentioned initial periods of three and six years shall be chosen by lot to be drawn by the Secretary-General immediately after the first election has been completed.

3. The members of the Court shall continue to discharge their duties until their places have been filled. Though replaced, they shall finish any cases which they may have begun.

4. In the case of the resignation of a member of the Court, the resignation shall be addressed to the President of the Court for transmission to the Secretary-General. This last notification makes the place vacant.

Article 14

Vacancies shall be filled by the same method as that laid down for the first election, subject to the following provision: the Secretary-General shall, within one month of the occurrence of the vacancy, proceed to issue the invitations provided for in Article 5 and the date of the election shall be fixed by the Security Council.

Article 15

A member of the Court elected to replace a member whose term of office has not expired shall hold office for the remainder of his predecessor's term.

Article 16

1. No member of the Court may exercise any political or administrative function, or engage in any other occupation of a professional nature.

2. Any doubt on this point shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 17

1. No member of the Court may act as agent, counsel, or advocate in any case.

Article 19

The members of the Court, when engaged on the business of the Court, shall enjoy diplomatic privileges and immunities.

Article 20

Every member of the Court shall, before taking up his duties, make a solemn declaration in open court that he will exercise his powers impartially and conscientiously.

Article 21

1. The Court shall elect its President and Vice-President for three years; they may be re-elected.

2. The Court shall appoint its Registrar and may provide for the appointment of such other officers as may be necessary.

Article 22

1. The seat of the Court shall be established at The Hague. This, however, shall not prevent the Court from sitting and exercising its functions elsewhere whenever the Court considers it desirable.

2. The President and the Registrar shall reside at the seat of the Court.

Article 23

1. The Court shall remain permanently in session, except during the judicial vacations, the dates and duration of which shall be fixed by the Court.

2. Members of the Court are entitled to periodic leave, the dates and duration of which shall be fixed by the Court, having in mind the distance between The Hague and the home of each judge.

3. Members of the Court shall be bound, unless they are on leave or prevented from attending by illness or other serious reasons duly explained to the President, to hold themselves permanently at the disposal of the Court.

Article 24

1. If, for some special reason, a member of the Court considers that he should not take part in the decision of a particular case, he shall so inform the President.

2. If the President considers that for some special reason one of the members of the Court should not sit in a particular case, he shall give him notice accordingly.

3. If in any such case the member of the Court and the President disagree, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 25

1. The full Court shall sit except when it is expressly provided otherwise in the present Statute.

2. Subject to the condition that the number of judges available to constitute the Court is not thereby reduced below eleven, the Rules of the Court may provide for allowing one or more judges, according to circumstances and in rotation, to be dispensed from sitting.

3. A quorum of nine judges shall suffice to constitute the Court.

Article 26

1. The Court may from time to time form one or more chambers, composed of three or more judges as the Court may determine, for dealing with particular categories of cases; for example, labour cases and cases relating to transit and communications.

2. The Court may at any time form a chamber for dealing with a particular case. The number of judges to constitute such a chamber shall be determined by the Court with the approval of the parties.

3. Cases shall be heard and determined by the chambers provided for in this Article if the parties so request.

Article 27

A judgment given by any of the chambers provided for in Articles 26 and 29 shall be considered as rendered by the Court.

Article 28

The chambers provided for in Articles 26 and 29 may, with the consent of the parties, sit and exercise their functions elsewhere than at The Hague.

Article 29

With a view to the speedy dispatch of business, the Court shall form annually a chamber composed of five judges which, at the request of the parties, may hear and determine cases by summary procedure. In addition, two judges shall be selected for the purpose of replacing judges who find it impossible to sit.

Article 30

1. The Court shall frame rules for carrying out its functions. In particular, it shall lay down rules of procedure.

2. The Rules of the Court may provide for assessors to sit with the Court or with any of its chambers, without the right to vote.

Article 31

1. Judges of the nationality of each of the parties shall retain their right to sit in the case before the Court.

2. If the Court includes upon the Bench a judge of the nationality of one of the parties, any other party may choose a person to sit as judge. Such person shall be chosen preferably from among those persons who have been nominated as candidates as provided in Articles 4 and 5.

3. If the Court includes upon the Bench no judge of the nationality of the parties, each of these parties may proceed to choose a judge as provided in paragraph 2 of this Article.

4. The provisions of this Article shall apply to the case of Articles 26 and 29. In such cases, the President shall request one or, if necessary, two of the members of the Court forming the chamber to give place to the members of the Court of the nationality of the parties concerned, and, failing such, or if they are unable to be present, to the judges specially chosen by the parties.

5. Should there be several parties in the same interest, they shall, for the purpose of the preceding provisions, be reckoned as one party only. Any doubt upon this point shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

6. Judges chosen as laid down in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 of this Article shall fulfil the conditions required by Articles 2, 17 (paragraph 2), 20, and 24 of the present Statute. They shall take part in the decision on terms of complete equality with their colleagues.

6. The salary of the Registrar shall be fixed by the General Assembly on the proposal of the Court.

7. Regulations made by the General Assembly shall fix the conditions under which retirement pensions may be given to members of the Court and to the Registrar, and the conditions under which members of the Court and the Registrar shall have their travelling expenses refunded.

8. The above salaries, allowances, and compensation shall be free of all taxation.

3. Whenever the construction of the constituent instrument of a public international organization or of an international convention adopted thereunder is in question in a case before the Court, the Registrar shall so notify the public international organization concerned and shall communicate to it copies of all the written proceedings.

Article 35

1. The Court shall be open to the states parties to the present Statute.

2. The conditions under which the Court shall be open to other states shall, subject to the special provisions contained in treaties in force, be laid down by the Security Council, but in no case shall such conditions place the parties in a position of inequality before the Court.

3. When a state which is not a Member of the United Nations is a party to a case, the Court shall fix the amount which that party is to contribute towards the expenses of the Court. This provision shall not apply if such state is bearing a share of the expenses of the Court.

Article 36

1. The jurisdiction of the Court comprises all cases which the parties refer to it and all matters specially provided for in the Charter of the United Nations or in treaties and conventions in force.

2. The states parties to the present Statute may at any time declare that they recognize as compulsory ipso facto and without special agreement, in relation to any other state accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the Court in all legal disputes concerning:

- a. the interpretation of a treaty;
- b. any question of international law;
- c. the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation;
- d. the nature or extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation.

3. The declarations referred to above may be made unconditionally or on condition of reciprocity on the part of several or certain states, or for a certain time.

4. Such declarations shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the parties to the Statute and to the Registrar of the Court.

5. Declarations made under Article 36 of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and which are still in force shall be deemed, as between the parties to the present Statute, to be acceptances of the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice for the period which they still have to run and in accordance with their terms.

6. In the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.
