During the final months of the year, grave human rights violations, mostly but not only of persons belonging to minorities, persisted in Kosovo. Dozens of killings were reported. Minorities continued to face serious restrictions on freedom of movement and difficulties in obtaining employment. Access to basic services, including health and education, on an equitable basis needed improvement. On 21 September, UNMIK established the Commission on Prisoners and Detainees in the framework of the Kosovo Transitional Council, under the chairmanship of the OHCHR Chief of Mission. The Commission gathered information on the circumstances of detention to support interventions and advocacy on behalf of detainees, prisoners and their families. Commission members were drawn from all parts of Kosovo and represented a broad spectrum of social and ethnic origins. In mid-December, in the context of the Commission, OHCHR brought representatives of Kosovo Serbs and Kosovo Albanians together for the first time with KFOR and UNMIK representatives to discuss the fate and whereabouts of detainees. OHCHR regularly visited places of detention in Serbia and Montenegro and monitored trials in various court districts. According to Kosovo Albanians recently released, detainees had suffered mistreatment while in Serbian custody, especially in Kosovo during the NATO campaign, while poor health conditions and overcrowding were common in almost all detention centres. OHCHR and ICRC had not obtained access to places of detention of persons kidnapped or abducted in Kosovo. The High Commissioner welcomed the Special Representative's recommendations made in December on the establishment of a Kosovo Court that would prosecute persons suspected of having committed war crimes or serious crimes committed on the basis of a person's ethnicity, religion or political beliefs. The Kosovo Human Rights Conference (Pristina, 10 and 11 December) was marked by the participation of persons representing different ethnic groups who had the opportunity to express their views in a free and democratic context. The High Commissioner welcomed the adoption of a final declaration calling for the promotion of peaceful coexistence, tolerance, establishment of the rule of law and a strengthened judiciary in a human rights-oriented society.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.3], adopted resolution 54/183 by recorded vote (108-4-45) [agenda item 116 (c)].

Situation of human rights in Kosovo

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other human rights instruments,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 1160(1998) of 31 March 1998, 1199(1998) of 23 September 1998, 1203(1998) of 24 October 1998, 1239(1999) of 14 May 1999 and 1244(1999) of 10 June 1999, and the general principles annexed to that resolution, as well as the statement made on 24 March 1998 by the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights at the fifty-fourth session of the Commission, Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1998/79 of 22 April 1998 and 1999/2 of 13 April 1999 and the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to the Bureau of the Commission on the situation of human rights in Kosovo of 7 September 1999,

Recalling, against the background of years of repression, intolerance and violence in Kosovo, the challenge to build a multi-ethnic society on the basis of substantial autonomy, respecting the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), pending final settlement in accordance with Security Council resolution 1244 (1999),

Taking fully into account the regional dimensions of the crisis in Kosovo, in particular with regard to the human rights and humanitarian situation and the continuing problems in that regard, and noting that the return of refugees to their homes has contributed to the easing of this crisis,

Taking note with concern of the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), which describes the persistent and grave violations and abuses of human rights and international humanitarian law in Kosovo,

Condemning the grave violations of human rights in Kosovo that affected ethnic Albanians prior to the arrival of personnel of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo and troops of the international security presence, the Kosovo Force, as demonstrated in the many reports of torture, indiscriminate and widespread shelling, mass forced displacement of civilians, summary executions and illegal detention of ethnic Albanians in Kosovo by the Yugoslav police and military,

Deeply concerned, in spite of the efforts of the Mission and the Force, about the frequent instances of harassment, periodic kidnapping and murder of ethnic Serb, Roma and other minorities of Kosovo by ethnic Albanian extremists,

Expressing concern that the entire population of Kosovo has been affected by the conflict, and stressing that all of the national minorities there must benefit from their full and equal rights,

Stressing, in this context, the importance of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991,

Distressed by the lack of due process in the trials in Serbia of the ethnic Albanians who have been detained, charged or brought to trial in relation to the crisis in Kosovo in violation of international human rights standards,

Stressing the urgent need to implement effective measures to stop trafficking in women and children,

1. Underlines the obligation of the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to abide by the terms of Security Council resolution 1244(1999) and the general principles on the political solution to the Kosovo crisis adopted on 6 May 1999 and annexed to that resolution;

2. Reaffirms that the human rights and humanitarian crisis in Kosovo shall be addressed within the framework of a political solution based upon the general principles annexed to Security Council resolution 1244(1999);

3. Welcomes the establishment of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo and the Kosovo Force, and calls upon all parties in Kosovo and the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to cooperate fully with the Mission and the Force in the fulfilment of their respective mandates;

4. Also welcomes the work of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in Kosovo and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the efforts of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe;

5. Calls upon all parties in Kosovo to cooperate with the Mission in ensuring full respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms and democratic norms in Kosovo;

6. Calls upon all authorities in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), the local Serb leaders in Kosovo and the leaders of the Albanian community in Kosovo to condemn all acts of terrorism, sequestration or kidnapping and forced eviction from homes or places of work of any resident of Kosovo, whatever the ethnic background of the victim and whoever the perpetrators, to refrain from all acts of violence and to use their influence and leadership to cooperate with the Force and the Mission in stopping these incidents and in bringing the perpetrators to justice;

7. Expresses its concern about the forced division of any part of Kosovo into ethnic cantons or ethnically based divisions of any type, which is counter to Security Council resolution 1244(1999) and to the guiding principles of Rambouillet, and stresses the need for all parties in Kosovo to take all necessary measures to stop or reverse any action that de facto or de jure permits such ethnic cantonization;

8. Calls upon all parties, in particular the authorities and representatives of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Kosovar Serb and Albanian leaderships, to cooperate with the Mine Action Coordination Centre;

9. Demands that the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) provide an updated list of all persons detained and transferred from Kosovo to other parts of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), specifying the charge, if any, under which each individual is detained, and that it guarantee their families and non-governmental organizations and international observers unimpeded and regular access to those who remain in detention and release all individuals detained and transferred from Kosovo prior to July 1999 in violation of international humanitarian and human rights standards;

10. Calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to open to public observation trials or criminal prosecutions against all those charged in relation to the conflict in Kosovo;

11. Calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and ethnic Kosovar Serb and Albanian representatives to allow for and to facilitate the free and unhindered return to their homes, in safety and with dignity, of all displaced persons and refugees, of whichever ethnic background, and expresses its concern about reports of continuing harassment or other impediments in this regard;

12. Calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to return or to facilitate the fair, unbiased and accurate restoration or reconstruction of Kosovar documentation and legal records taken or destroyed during the conflict;

13. Stresses the importance of and the responsibility of all parties to create a secure environment in Kosovo that will allow refugees and displaced persons to return and allow all those who wish to remain in Kosovo a genuine possibility to do so, irrespective of their ethnic origin;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to pursue his humanitarian efforts in Kosovo through the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, other appropriate humanitarian organizations and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and to continue to take the urgent practical steps to meet the critical needs of the people in Kosovo and to assist in the voluntary return of displaced persons to their homes in conditions of safety and dignity;

15. Encourages the Office of the Prosecutor of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 to continue investigations at all levels concerning official individuals or private citizens with regard to serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in Kosovo, and reaffirms that the investigation of such crimes falls within the jurisdiction of the Office;

16. Demands that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Kosovar Serb and Albanian leaderships and all others concerned cooperate fully with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and honour all obligations towards it;

17. Reiterates its call upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to live up to their commitment to provide financial and material assistance to those residents of Kosovo whose homes have been damaged;

18. Calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to provide information on the fate and the whereabouts of the high number of missing persons from Kosovo, and encourages the International Committee of the Red Cross to pursue its clarification efforts in this regard, in cooperation with other organizations such as the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe;

19. Encourages the ongoing cooperation provided by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) regarding the visits to some two thousand prisoners, mainly of Kosovar Albanian origin, carried out by the International Committee of the Red Cross and held under the authority of the Ministry of Justice of Serbia;

20. Welcomes the efforts made by the international community, and calls for continuing support for the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other agencies engaged in the effort to provide those in need in Kosovo with proper accommodation, in particular with a view to facilitating the preparation and provision of adequate winter accommodation;

21. Urges all parties involved in Kosovo to support the efforts of the United Nations Children's Fund to ensure that all children in Kosovo return to school as soon as possible and to contribute to the rebuilding and repair of schools destroyed or damaged during the conflict in Kosovo;

22. Calls for the most rapid and full deployment of United Nations police and for the creation of a multi-ethnic local police force throughout Kosovo, as a key step towards guaranteeing respect for law and order and for creating a safe environment for all inhabitants of Kosovo;

23. Condemns any effort, on behalf of any ethnic group, to create any sort of parallel institutions for Kosovar Serb and Albanian populations, be they police, school, administrative or other institutions, and calls upon the Mission and the Force to prevent any such institutions from being formed;

24. Requests the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to continue to monitor closely the situation of human rights in Kosovo, to pay special attention to Kosovo in his reporting and to report his findings to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-sixth session and to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session.

Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and FRY

Commission action. On 23 April [res. 1999/18], by a roll-call vote of 46 to 1, with 6 abstentions, the Commission expressed grave concern at the serious human rights violations and the deteriorating human rights and humanitarian situation in FRY and condemned the continued repression of the independent media. It called on FRY authorities to comply with the Commission's resolutions and the Special Rapporteur's recommendations and to cooperate with other relevant Commission mechanisms; cooperate with ICTY (see PART FOUR, Chapter II); institutionalize democratic norms of governance; end torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment of detainees; repeal the 1989 Serbian Law on Special Conditions for Real Property Transactions and the 1998 Serbian Law on Public Information; and respect the rights of minority groups. The Commission welcomed positive developments in Montenegro regarding the democratic process and the selection by OHCHR of nine civil society organizations in the Assisting Communities Together Programme.

Taking note of Croatia's request for technical cooperation and assistance programmes and the positive response thereto by the High Commissioner, the Commission urged the Government and OHCHR to conclude an agreement (see p. 587). The Government was called on to adhere to democratic principles and to continue efforts to comply with international norms and standards of human rights and fundamental freedoms. The Commission called on the international community to support the High Commissioner's involvement in human rights monitoring in Eastern Slavonia and to continue to provide for an international presence.

Taking note of progress made in some areas of Bosnia and Herzegovina (composed of Republika Srpska and the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina) to implement the 1995 General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina (the Peace Agreement) [YUN 1995, p. 544] and improve respect for human rights, the Commission expressed serious concern about continuing human rights violations within Bosnia and Herzegovina and continuing obstruction of full implementation of the Peace Agreement's human rights provisions. It condemned the intimidation and perpetration of violence against minority refugees and internally displaced persons returning to their homes, the destruction of their homes and all other acts designed to discourage their voluntary return, and called for the authorities to determine responsibility for those acts and to ensure that perpetrators were brought to justice.

The Commission called on States to cooperate with ICTY and welcomed the decision by the Prime Minister of Republika Srpska to allow the Tribunal to open an office in Banja Luka. Noting with dismay that the large majority of those indicted still at large were known to be present in FRY, the Commission called on all indicted persons to surrender voluntarily.

Welcoming increased cooperation in the joint exhumation process in Bosnia and Herzegovina with the Office of the High Representative and the International Commission on Missing Persons in the Former Yugoslavia, the Commission urged that the cooperation continue and insisted that FRY authorities and Kosovar Albanians cooperate with international humanitarian organizations in dealing with the issue of missing persons in Kosovo.

The Commission asked the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General to develop early-warning procedures in the area of human rights to identify situations that could lead to conflict or humanitarian tragedy, and asked them to report in 2000.

The Commission decided to renew for one year the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and FRY and asked him to carry out missions to Bosnia and Herzegovina, including Republika Srpska; Croatia, including Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium; and FRY, including Kosovo, as well as Sandjak and Vojvodina. It asked him to report in 2000 and to submit interim reports about his work in support of the Kosovo initiative of the High Commissioner, and to present interim reports to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth (1999) session. The Secretary-General was asked to make his reports available to the Security Council, OSCE and other international human rights and humanitarian organizations. By decision 1999/232 of 27 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision to renew the Special Rapporteur's mandate and approved its request that he carry out missions to the designated areas. It also endorsed the Commission's decisions regarding the submission of reports and its requests to the Secretary-General.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In September [A/54/396-S/1999/1000], Special Rapporteur Jiri Dienstbier (Czech Republic) described his visits to Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and FRY. In Bosnia and Herzegovina (15-20 May), mainly in Republika Srpska, he stopped in Banja Luka, Brcko, Bijeljina and other towns to assess the impact of the Kosovo crisis on human rights. Regarding civil and political rights, he found that there were still major problems surrounding the role of the police, although some progress had been made. The police remained mono-ethnic in most areas and general effectiveness in crime detection remained low, which had led to impunity. The political will to create a multi-ethnic police continued to be lacking and the number of women police was alarmingly low. The lack of a functioning and independent judiciary remained a major concern. Judges and prosecutors, unlike police, were never subjected to a recertification process after the war. Substantial numbers of judicial personnel were either incompetent or inadequately trained, and corruption and political influence tainted the judicial system. In the Federation, several war crimes proceedings were under way. Minority returns continued, but the numbers remained insignificant compared with the number of displaced persons. Returnees were often not provided with the most basic services. While joint institutions existed at the State level, they did not work effectively. As to economic, social and cultural rights, property laws in both the Federation and Republika Srpska had been amended. A major barrier to the implementation of the laws was the non-execution of eviction orders against temporary occupants of property belonging to someone else. There were reports of discrimination in employment. The education system remained divided along ethnic lines, and it lacked material resources. Pensioners experienced major difficulties receiving and surviving on their pensions, authorities failed to adequately address the rights of persons with disabilities and women faced particular obstacles to realizing their economic rights. The Special Rapporteur concluded that minimal progress had been made regarding respect for human rights and freedoms and the development of a tolerant, multi-ethnic society. The Kosovo crisis and the NATO operations against FRY (see p. 342) had slowed progress. The Special Rapporteur emphasized the need to continue reform of the police and the judicial system; to end discriminatory practices in the areas of economic and social rights; and to better coordinate international and national human rights mechanisms.

The Special Rapporteur visited Croatia (25 July-4 August), with stops in Opatija, Istria, Rijeka, Knin, Split and Zagreb. In Eastern Slavonia, there had been a series of ethnically motivated violent incidents, with increasingly serious cases of intimidation, threat and arson against minority ethnic Serbs. In central and southern Croatia, the security situation had been generally calm, although there had been a slight increase in ethnically related incidents in Petrinja, Hrvatska Kostajnica, Karlovac and Kistanje. There was little improvement in the Government's protection of the right to return to one's place of origin. The slow implementation of the Programme for the Return and Accommodation of Displaced Persons, Refugees and Exiled Persons [YUN 1998, p. 347] seemed to be rooted in a lack of will on the part of the central and local authorities, the Government Commission on Return and local housing commissions. The Government reported that, as at 14 July, 22 per cent of the 6,613 filed claims for property repossession had been completed. The Special Rapporteur noted that reconstruction of war-damaged houses and infrastructure continued according to ethnic priorities. The administration of justice was held up by vacant posts in all branches of the judiciary. Government control of the electronic media, as well as indirect pressure on press freedom, remained major concerns. The Special Rapporteur called on the Government to continue to actively address the issue of missing persons in Croatia. He advocated the investigation and trial of all war crimes with international monitors to ensure transparency and the bringing of perpetrators to justice. Regarding gender issues, he commended the initiatives of the State Commission on Issues of Equality regarding legislative changes and supported its efforts to integrate gender issues into the country's public agenda.

The Special Rapporteur visited FRY (26-30 April, Montenegro, including part of Sandzak; 8-12 June, Vojvodina and central Serbia; 7-12 July, Kosovo). In April, he had conducted a special mission to FYROM to inquire into the situation of Kosovo refugees. He reported on the period from mid-March through mid-August, including the period of the NATO air campaign against FRY until the signing of the military agreement on 9 June (see p. 356), and subsequent developments. The scope of the human and material tragedy sparked by the Kosovo crisis, but caused by systemic failures to respect or protect human rights throughout FRY, was still being calculated. From the perspective of human rights, it was difficult to assess what 78 days of war had achieved. There had been mass expulsion and ethnic cleansing of hundreds of thousands of Kosovo Albanians; killings of civilians; arrest and arbitrary detention of several thousand Kosovo Albanians, held in prisons in Serbia; systematic destruction of villages, neighbourhoods, means of livelihood and homes of selected individuals; rape as an instrument of terror; use of landmines and depleted uranium ammunition; forced mobilization; destruction of civilian transport, communications and public utilities infrastructure; mass unemployment and impoverishment; suppression of civil freedoms, including freedom of expression; targeted killings of journalists; martial law; deliberate destruction of religious and cultural monuments; and ethnic cleansing of nearly 200,000 non-Albanians from Kosovo. As a result of his inquiries, the Special Rapporteur concluded that most of the deaths and damage inside Kosovo resulted from a systematic campaign of ethnic cleansing and terror waged by FRY and Serbian forces against Kosovo Albanians. Human rights violations were also attributed to KLA. Given the magnitude of the FRY and Serbian operations, and NATO's massive bombing of Kosovo, the number of persons killed within Kosovo during the war was unlikely ever to be accurately known. The Special Rapporteur stated that the first casualty of the war was the rule of law. Many legal protections of the accused were removed, and substituted expedited procedures allowed for searches without warrants and police investigations without prior legal requests. Other casualties of the war were freedom of expression and access to information. The NATO air campaign was especially intensive in the densely populated centres of Vojvodina, southern Serbia and Belgrade. The damage done to industrial centres in Pancevo, Kragujevac, Bor and Pristina, as well as to national parks, raised environmental concerns. Civilians were killed in Aleksinac, Nis, Novi Pazar, Surdulica and Kursumlija. Strikes on bridges and means of transportation resulted in deaths, and large convoys moving through Kosovo were attacked from the air, resulting in the deaths of 87 internally displaced persons at Korisa on 14 May. All three bridges in Novi Sad were destroyed, as well as the water pipes that supplied potable water to nearly half the city. Following NATO attacks on fuel reserves, restrictions on fuel brought civilian Serbia to a standstill, with many areas often without electricity and water. In Montenegro, the large number and pervasive presence of the Yugoslav army, army reservists and military police gave rise to internal tensions and human rights violations. The human rights violation in Kosovo most often described to the Special Rapporteur was forced expulsion. Accounts from persons who remained in Kosovo during the war agreed that the period from 24 March to 10 April saw a rampage of killing, burning, looting, forced expulsion and terror. All civilian accounts agreed that paramilitaries often accompanied police and army forces. In mid-May, the large cities of Kosovo saw sweeping mass arrests of men of military age. FRY had the largest refugee caseload in Europe, estimated before the war at 500,000 persons from Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia (see PART THREE, Chapter XII). The war slowed or completely stopped refugee returns to Croatia, halted the integration of refugees into Yugoslav society, interrupted the resettlement of refugees to third countries, and prevented the regular flow of humanitarian aid to refugees in FRY. Following the war in Kosovo, human rights violations in Kosovo occurred with virtual impunity despite UNMIK efforts to create a temporary judiciary. Killings, abductions, destruction of property and continued displacements of non-Albanians and politically suspect Kosovo Albanians reflected the failure of the international community to bring the territory under control. Many human rights violations perpetrated by non-State actors were not dissimilar to those that preceded the NATO intervention in March. UNHCR and FRY sources agreed that some 200,000 non-Albanians had left Kosovo. From 15 June to 14 August, according to KFOR statistics, 280 persons were murdered in Kosovo, at a rate of 30 to 40 murders per week. The killings of Serbs, Kosovo Albanians, Roma, Muslim Slavs and others were attributed to Kosovo Albanian paramilitaries. The issue of detainees remained unresolved at the time of the report. Groups representing detainees had called for their release or, at a minimum, their transfer to UNMIK custody in Kosovo. Although the KLA commander denied the continued existence of detention centres, KFOR located several within Kosovo, including at least two, in Prizren and Gnjilane, described as containing instruments of torture. The Special Rapporteur noted that KFOR not only had failed to locate and arrest KLA "police" and "military police" associated with detentions and abductions, but had also reportedly relied on information provided by KLA on persons whom KFOR should have arrested.

In his concluding observations, the Special Rapporteur noted that there had been no initiatives for a political settlement. He recommended that ICTY should investigate violations that had occurred in Kosovo after the signing of the Kumanovo agreement (see p. 356) and the undertaking with KLA in June; under UN agency leadership, studies should continue on the long-term consequences for public health of damage done by NATO bombing of industrial centres; the international community should launch winterization programmes for the whole of FRY, which was threatened with another humanitarian catastrophe; FRY should provide ICRC and the High Commissioner with the names, whereabouts and status of charges against persons arrested in Kosovo and detained in FRY; detainees held outside Kosovo should be guaranteed access to defence counsel of their choice, as well as visits by family and physicians; UNMIK and FRY should discuss the return of detainees to Kosovo and their release to UNMIK; KLA should release information on detainees held since March 1998, release detainees to UNMIK and shut down its detention operations; UNMIK should establish a full, permanent court system in Kosovo; UNMIK and KFOR should protect the rights of all Kosovo citizens against violence, intimidation and other unlawful acts by members of the same or other ethnic groups; and attention should be paid to the social rights of the elderly, the handicapped and children, and reports of trafficking in women or children should be investigated.

FRY, on 9 November [A/C.3/54/10], presented its comments on the Special Rapporteur's report, stating that it was highly politicized and that the Special Rapporteur was unable to fulfil his mandate impartially and independently. FRY charged that alleging that the source of all problems was systemic failure to respect or protect human rights throughout FRY, while tiptoeing around massive NATO human rights violations in Kosovo and Metohija and keeping silent about NATO violations in the rest of FRY, was morally suspect. FRY contended that the Special Rapporteur's concluding observations and recommendations had been simplified and did not correspond with the gravity of the situation in the reporting period. It claimed that, in its entirety, the report diverted attention from, or was completely silent about, the persecution and ethnic cleansing of over 330,000 Serbs, Montenegrins, Roma, Turks, Gorani, Muslims, Croats and other non-Albanians from Kosovo and Metohija, which continued unabated in the presence of KFOR and UNMIK.

The Special Rapporteur updated information as at 2 November [A/54/396/Add.1-S/1999/1000/Add.1]. In Bosnia and Herzegovina, there was a near-total absence of the rule of law regarding property rights, which had led to very few returns. Insufficient progress was made to eliminate discriminatory practices relating to social and economic rights. The Special Rapporteur called for the implementation of the Peace Agreement and individual decisions affecting property.

The Special Rapporteur expressed concern with respect to the legality of the election of judges by the Croatian Parliament to the Croatian Constitutional Court as a package of eight and not individually, as was the usual practice. He recommended that Croatian Serbs who wished to return should be enabled to do so and the authorities should establish conditions that would make their return possible. All returnees should have access to an effective legal remedy for the restitution of their property. Harassment of independent media should be stopped. The fairness of elections scheduled for December would be evaluated, among other factors, by the equality of access of all competing parties to the media.

The Special Rapporteur visited FRY (1-9 October), where he travelled to Belgrade, Nis, Kraljevo, Novi Pazar, Rozaje, Kosovska, Mitrovica, Gnjilane and Pristina. He reported that the Kosovo crisis had not ended: the spring ethnic cleansing of Albanians had been replaced by the fall ethnic cleansing of non-Albanians. As at the end of October, some 250,000 persons had been displaced since mid-June from Kosovo, a region that had lost most of its non-Albanian population. Since July, the international presence in Kosovo had grown, as had the UNMIK staff and its police forces. UNMIK institutions of civil administration had not supplanted parallel institutions, which were controlled by KLA. Regional courts had started to prosecute some common criminal cases and, in two districts, had initiated domestic war crime proceedings. New collective and individual graves continued to be discovered daily, but many victims remained unidentified. Efforts to address the situation of several thousand detainees in Kosovo moved forward with the creation by UNMIK in late September of the Commission on Prisoners and Detainees, chaired by OHCHR-FRY. KLA had created a de facto government, appointed mayors, directors of enterprises and other officials, pursued a policy of ethnic cleansing in jobs, and supported the confiscation of property of non-Albanians and even of some Albanians. The Special Rapporteur recommended that, in Kosovo, UNMIK should appoint to posts in the provisional multi-ethnic administration only persons who had demonstrated their democratic beliefs. Elections for all levels of administration should be postponed until stability had been achieved. Property rights of all citizens should be respected and violators of laws should be arrested and punished. Arms should be registered and confiscated. The borders with Albania and FYROM should be controlled to prevent free access to Kosovo by criminals, drug traffickers and other undesirable elements. Member States should send to Kosovo the necessary personnel they had promised. All sanctions and embargoes against FRY (except for the arms embargo) should be terminated and humanitarian aid should be delivered.

A further report [E/CN.4/2000/39] by the Special Rapporteur covered developments until the first week of December and was based on information gathered by OHCHR field offices. He noted that there had been little change in the human rights situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The number of minority returns was still exceedingly low, despite large numbers of refugees and displaced persons who had expressed their wish to return to their pre-war homes. The Special Rapporteur urged that combating discriminatory practices, including in the areas of economic and social rights, be accorded the highest priority. The number of refugee returns in Croatia was also small. The Special Rapporteur urged Croatia to devise a system of compensation to resolve the problem raised by the wartime law abolishing occupancy rights and to repeal or amend discriminatory property legislation. He urged the Government to undertake a more earnest campaign to foster returns of ethnic Serb refugees and to undertake reconstruction and economic revitalization projects to benefit all ethnic communities. He recommended that it increase resources allocated to the judiciary; guarantee employees their salaries or effective legal remedies through which salaries could be claimed; identify the fate of 1,668 persons officially registered as missing; and, with the participation of international representatives, undertake investigations and trials of all war crimes. In Kosovo, the ethnic cleansing of Serbs and "undesirable" non-Albanians was being followed by threats, intimidation and episodic acts of violence directed against Albanians who did not share the view of the "parallel administration" controlled by KLA. OHCHR had noted new abductions of Montenegrin citizens from parts of Montenegro that bordered Kosovo and had received several reports weekly of harassment, searches, and confiscation of goods and personal funds at police checkpoints in Serbia. The Special Rapporteur repeated recommendations made in his previous reports and added that the Government of FRY, including the authorities of the republics of Serbia and Montenegro, should: permit OHCHR and ICRC access to places of detention and allow court proceedings to be accessible to monitors; improve its performance in the administration of justice; end torture and ill-treatment of those in prison and other detention facilities and bring perpetrators to justice; expand the competence of local government bodies; ensure fair government representation of national minorities; and pay attention to the social and economic rights of the most vulnerable. Detainees, except those suspected of human rights violations, should be released; UNMIK and KFOR should investigate reports of trafficking of women and children from Kosovo; FRY should agree to the formal establishment of OHCHR sub-offices in Pristina and Podgorica; Serbia should repeal the Law on Public Information and the Law on Universities; UNMIK should adopt a "rules of the road" protocol with ICTY regarding domestic war-crimes prosecutions; and the international community should cease isolating the people of FRY.

FRY transmitted its comments on the Special Rapporteur's report [E/CN.4/2000/154], stating, among other things, that the report was selective in its subject matter, which, FRY claimed, had served to cover up the massive crimes against the Serbs in Kosovo and Metohija and the serious human rights abuses, and the plight, of internally displaced persons. Comments were also presented on freedom of the media and access to information; arrest, detention and missing persons; the rule of law and the right to a fair trial; and freedom of association.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/605/Add.3], adopted resolution 54/184 by recorded vote (123-2-34) [agenda item 116 (c)].

Situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind all relevant resolutions on this subject, in particular Commission on Human Rights resolution 1999/18 of 23 April 1999, as well as all Security Council resolutions and statements,

Bearing in mind also General Assembly resolution 54/183 of 17 December 1999 on the situation of human rights in Kosovo,

Reaffirming the obligations of all Member States under the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the obligations of States parties under the International Covenants on Human Rights and all other human rights instruments and the obligation of all to respect international humanitarian law, including the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of victims of war and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, as well as the principles and commitments undertaken by participating States of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe,

Reaffirming also the territorial integrity of all States in the region, within their internationally recognized borders, taking fully into account all relevant Security Council resolutions,

Expressing its full support for the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement"), which, inter alia, committed the parties of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to respect human rights fully, and for the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (the "Basic Agreement"),

Expressing its deep concern at the continuing evidence of violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms taking place to varying degrees in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and, in particular, the failure of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to follow the recommendations made in 1996 by the personal representative of the Chairman-in-Office of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe,

Welcoming all contributions of the Office of the High Representative, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other parts of the United Nations, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, the Council of Europe, the European Community Monitoring Mission, Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in the area in 1999,

1. Reiterates its call for the full and consistent implementation of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement") and the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (the "Basic Agreement") by all parties to those agreements;

2. Stresses the crucial role of human rights in the successful implementation of the Peace Agreement, and underlines the obligations of the parties under the Peace Agreement to secure for all persons within their jurisdiction the highest level of international norms and standards of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

3. Also stresses the need to direct international human rights efforts in the region to the core issues of the lack of full respect for the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all individuals without distinction, the rule of law and effective administration of justice at all levels of government, the freedom and independence of the media, freedom of expression, freedom of association, including with respect to political parties, freedom of religion and freedom of movement;

4. Further stresses the need for enhanced international human rights efforts to foster and effect the prompt and voluntary return of displaced persons and refugees in safety and with dignity;

5. Reiterates its call upon all parties and States in the region to ensure that the promotion and protection of human rights and effective, functioning democratic institutions will be central elements in developing civilian structures, as reaffirmed at the meetings of the

Steering Board of the Peace Implementation Council and the Peace Implementation Conference;

6. Urges all States and parties to the Peace Agreement that have not done so to meet their obligations to cooperate fully with the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, as required by Security Council resolution 827 (1993) of 25 May 1993 and all subsequent relevant resolutions, and, in particular, to comply with their obligations to arrest and transfer to the custody of the Tribunal those indicted persons present in their territories or in territories under their control;

7. Continues to call upon all parties to the Peace Agreement to take immediate steps to determine the identity, whereabouts and fate of missing persons in their territories, including through close cooperation with the United Nations as well as with humanitarian organizations and independent experts, and stresses the importance of coordination in this area;

8. Notes that varying degrees of progress have been made in the human rights situation in several areas, but that substantial efforts remain to be made;

I. Bosnia and Herzegovina

9. Notes the progress made in Bosnia and Herzegovina with regard to the increase in political pluralism and freedom of expression, through the participation of all groups and individuals, which represents another step towards democracy in Bosnia and Herzegovina, but remains concerned that freedom of speech and the media are still curtailed by political influence, notably through the selective and intimidating application of slander laws;

10. Expresses its continued serious concern about continuing human rights violations within Bosnia and Herzegovina and delays in the full implementation of the human rights provisions of the Peace Agreement, notably the delay in bringing legislation into compliance with the human rights provisions of the national Constitution of the country, and the failure of local authorities and groups to comply with the obligations of the Peace Agreement;

11. Condemns in the strongest terms the complicity by local governments in the perpetration of violence against minority refugees and internally displaced persons returning to their homes and in the destruction of their homes, including acts of intimidation and all those acts designed to discourage the voluntary return of refugees and internally displaced persons, and calls for the removal from office of implicated local government officials as well as the immediate arrest and bringing to justice of those responsible for such acts;

12. Calls upon all the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina to adjudicate claims for and implement decisions on property rights made by local authorities and/or by the Commission for Real Property Claims of Displaced Persons and Refugees without further delay;

13. Reiterates its demand that all parties in Bosnia and Herzegovina immediately create conditions conducive to the voluntary return, in safety and with dignity, of refugees and internally displaced persons to their homes, with equal emphasis on the rights of persons belonging to minorities, pass immediately and enforce legislation on property rights in conformity with recommendations made by the Office of the High Representative and end practices of discrimination on ethnic or political grounds;

14. Notes with satisfaction the decline in violence against returning refugees and displaced persons, while remaining concerned that all ethnic groups continue to report harassment;

15. Welcomes the adoption of a new criminal code and of codes of ethics by the judges and prosecutors of both entities and the increased strength of the prosecutor's office of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina as a result of laws imposed by the High Representative, but notes that the judicial processes still do not sufficiently protect the rights of the accused;

16. Notes that implementation of the decisions of the Human Rights Chamber has begun, while reminding both State- and entity-level governments to pay increased attention to decisions of the Chamber;

17. Calls upon the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina and, in particular, the authorities of the Republika Srpska to increase their cooperation with the Commission on Human Rights for Bosnia and Herzegovina, to cooperate fully with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and to intensify their efforts in this regard;

18. Notes that police standards and protection have improved, while remaining concerned about continuing indications among the police of unprofessional conduct, political influence and instances of interference with the return of refugees and the use of excessive force;

19. Urges the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in particular those of the Republika Srpska, to ensure full and free access to their territories for all institutions and organizations concerned with the implementation of the present resolution, including non-governmental organizations, and to provide for the protection of those organizations, especially those providing humanitarian assistance;

20. Stresses the importance of the implementation of the programme proposed by the High Representative in coordination with the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Council of Europe and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe for a comprehensive judicial reform;

21. Calls upon the authorities of both entities to cooperate closely with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in matters relating to the return of refugees and to ensure that local authorities and groups permit and encourage the return of displaced persons to their homes of origin;

22. Calls upon the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina urgently to consider, with a view to its early adoption and full implementation, the draft permanent election law designed by the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe to strengthen ties between constituents and representatives, strengthen democratic accountability and encourage pluralistic, multi-ethnic political parties;

23. Notes the importance of the work of the Human Rights Ombudsman in bringing to light many cases of human rights violations and in resolving several of them, and urges the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina to implement the recommendations of the Ombudsman;

24. Condemns recurrent instances of religious discrimination and violence and the denial to religious minorities of their rights to reclaim and rebuild their religious sites;

25. Expresses its concern that trafficking in women is a growing problem, and calls upon the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina to act vigorously to combat this problem;

H. Republic of Croatia

26. Notes with interest the initiatives taken by the Republic of Croatia to improve the legislative and economic framework for the return of refugees, in particular steps to eliminate discriminatory provisions of Croatian laws;

27. Notes with satisfaction the cooperation between the Police Monitoring Group of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and the local police forces in Eastern Slavonia, while also noting continued instances of ethnically based problems in Eastern Slavonia;

28. Welcomes the continuing efforts by the Republic of Croatia to train and to guarantee the professionalism and impartiality of the Croatian police and military forces, and notes, in particular, the commitment on the part of the Ministry of the Interior to maintain an ethnically diverse police force in the Danube region;

29. Also welcomes the actions of the Government of the Republic of Croatia related to the return of significant numbers of persons to their places of origin since 1995 and the steps being taken by the Government to eliminate discriminatory provisions of Croatian laws, while noting that the pace of minority returns from third countries has been disappointing, and expresses concern that protection of the rights of persons belonging to minorities has not met the level of Croatia's legal obligations;

30. Notes that the Government of the Republic of Croatia has continued its efforts to codify democratic norms, including the independence of its judiciary and freedom of association and assembly, while also noting that the application by the Government of those laws and principles has lagged behind its stated intentions;

31. Expresses deep concern about the fact that commitments by the Government to improve the freedom of the press have remained unfulfilled, and reaffirms the need for free and independent media and the need to provide to all political parties equal access to all forms of media during the forthcoming electoral campaign;

32. Notes the passage of a new telecommunications law as a positive step, but urges the Government of the Republic of Croatia to comply with international recommendations, in particular those of the mission of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe in the areas of electoral and media reform, regrets that until now those recommendations have been only partially fulfilled, and stresses the importance of the full application of the citizenship law of 1991;

33. Expresses deep concern about the reported extensive campaign of wiretapping against the independent media and opposition political figures, and calls upon the Government of the Republic of Croatia to ensure that the media and opposition political figures and parties are not harassed or hindered in their actions or intimidated by actions of the Government and are guaranteed the same protections as representatives of the media or political establishment who are favourable to the Government;

34. Welcomes the signing on 10 May 1999 by the Government of the Republic of Croatia of the programme of technical assistance of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, with a view to building national human rights capacity and human rights education, and looks forward to the implementation of the programme in December 1999;

35. Notes the efforts of the Republic of Croatia to codify and incorporate the impartial application of the law, but urges the swift and complete implementation of judicial decisions for all citizens, irrespective of ethnicity, religion or political affiliation, while noting with concern that due process, the rule of law, the treatment of ethnic minorities and press freedoms fall short of the standards of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, notably that lengthy judicial processes plague the Croatian judiciary and that cases of interest to the ruling party are processed more expeditiously than others;

36. Also notes the formal steps taken by the Republic of Croatia to guarantee the rights of persons belonging to minorities and the ratification of the Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities and the European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages, but continues to remind the Government of its primary responsibility to restore the multi-ethnic character of Croatia, in fact as well as in law, including the pledge to guarantee the representation of national minorities, including Serbs, at various levels of local, regional and national government;

37. Further notes outstanding letters from the President of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 to the Security Council, and calls upon the Republic of Croatia to cooperate fully with the Tribunal and to comply, in particular, with its obligation to arrest and transfer to the custody of the Tribunal those indicted persons known to be present in its territory and, when prosecuting war crimes, to ensure that domestic prosecution complies with international standards and the obligations of the Republic of Croatia to the Tribunal;

III. Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)

38. Condemns the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) for its gross violations of the human rights of the ethnic Albanians of Kosovo and its violent campaign to expel or deport ethnic Albanian Kosovars from their homes and communities in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro);

39. Calls upon the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and all authorities and representatives of ethnic groups in Kosovo to implement Security Council resolution 1244(1999) of 10 June 1999 and consequently to cooperate fully with and support the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo in the fulfilment of its mandate;

40. Strongly condemns the presence of indicted war criminals in the hierarchy of the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and of the Government of the Republic of Serbia or those who are fugitives in the territory of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), and calls for them to be removed from office and transferred to the custody of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia as one of the first steps towards reinstating the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) in the community of law-abiding States;

41. Demands that the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) hand over to the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia all government officials of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and of the Government of the Republic of Serbia indicted as war criminals and repudiate the leadership of anyone so indicted as a first step towards establishing a democratic government and becoming a full and respected member of the international community, and reminds the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) of its obligations to cooperate fully with the Tribunal;

42. Also demands that the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) immediately bring to justice any persons, in particular those among its personnel, who have authorized or engaged in breaches of international humanitarian law and violations of human rights, including summary executions, indiscriminate attacks on civilians, indiscriminate destruction of property, mass forced displacement of civilians, the taking of civilian hostages, torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and, in this context, reminds the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) of its obligations to cooperate fully with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights;

43. Further demands an immediate end to illegal and/or hidden detention by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), as well as by paramilitary groups in Kosovo, and requests the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to investigate any and all allegations of hidden detentions, including detentions of ethnic Serbs, Albanians and others;

44. Demands that the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) institutionalize democratic norms by holding free and fair elections at all levels of government, respecting the rule of law and the administration of justice and fully respecting human rights and fundamental freedoms;

45. Also demands that the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) promote and protect free and independent media and that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) repeal any law that hinders the full and free exercise of the democratic rights of the citizens of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), cease any harassment and hindrance of journalists, wherever within the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) they may be practising their profession, and repeal repressive laws on universities and the media which suppress any and all internal dissent or expression of independent views, and concomitantly respect the right of free speech;

46. Emphasizes that the subversion of the fundamental democratic rights of the citizens of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) extends to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) as a whole, calls upon the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to respect the rights of all persons belonging to minority groups, especially in the Sandjak and Vojvodina, and of persons belonging to the Bulgarian minority, and supports the unconditional return of the long-term missions of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, as called for by the Security Council in its resolutions;

47. Expresses its concern at the continued grave infringements upon freedom of expression in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), in particular with regard to the exploitation of the crisis in Kosovo as a means to stifle and suppress views opposing the Government in power, a violation of the basic right of free speech;

48. Denounces the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) for its legal and physical intimidation of peaceful political opposition and of individuals who express views that differ from those of the Government, and demands that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) respect the fundamental rights of individuals to free assembly and free speech;

49. Insists that the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) support the activities of the international community and the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo to rebuild and facilitate the multi-ethnic society in Kosovo that the policy of ethnic cleansing, intimidation and discrimination largely destroyed, in particular by using the influence of the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) among the local Serb representatives in Kosovo and by working in good faith with the local Albanian representatives to that end;

50. Calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to implement fully, with dispatch and in good faith, their obligations under the Peace Agreement, notably to cooperate fully with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other humanitarian organizations to alleviate the suffering of refugees and internally displaced persons and to assist in their safe and voluntary return to their homes;

51. Calls upon States to consider additional voluntary contributions to meet the pressing human rights and humanitarian needs in the area, and underlines the need for continued coordination among States, international organizations and non-governmental organizations of initiatives and programmes with the aim of avoiding duplication, overlap and working at cross-purposes;

52. Decides to continue its examination of this question at its fifty-fifth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Middle East

Lebanon

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 49 to 1, with 3 abstentions, the Commission, on 23 April [res. 1999/12], deplored continued Israeli violations of human rights in the occupied zone in southern Lebanon and Western Bekaa and called on Israel to end those practices. Israel was also called on to comply with the Geneva Conventions of 1949, particularly the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention), and to release all Lebanese who had been detained, as well as others arbitrarily detained. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to bring its resolution to Israel's attention and to invite Israel to provide information on its implementation. He was also asked to report to the General Assembly in 1999 and to the Commission in 2000.

Reports of Secretary-General. As requested by the Commission in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 767], the Secretary-General stated that he had asked Israel for information on the extent of the implementation of the Commission's resolution on the situation of human rights in southern Lebanon, but had received no response [E/CN.4/1999/26]. In July [A/54/188], the Secretary-General reported that he had asked Israel for information on the implementation of the Commission's 1999 resolution and had received no reply to his request.

Territories occupied by Israel

During the year, the question of human rights violations in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of the 1967 hostilities in the Middle East was again considered by the Commission on Human Rights. Political and other aspects were considered by the General Assembly, its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli Practices) and other bodies (see PART ONE, Chapter VI).

Reports of Secretary-General. In accordance with Commission resolution 1998/2 [YUN 1998, p. 768], the Secretary-General reported that he had brought the Commission's resolution concerning the occupied Syrian Golan to the attention of all Governments, the Committee on Israeli Practices, the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian Rights), the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations [E/CN.4/1999/22]. The UN Department of Public Information provided press coverage for all meetings of the Committee on Israeli Practices and distributed information through documents, press releases, briefings and UN information centres and services.

In response to Commission resolution 1998/1 [YUN 1998, p. 768], the Secretary-General reported that he had brought the resolution on the violation of human rights in the occupied Arab territories to the attention of Israel and all other Governments, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations, international humanitarian organizations, the Committee on Israeli Practices, the Committee on Palestinian Rights and UNRWA [E/CN.4/1999/21]. He had received no reply from Israel regarding efforts to implement the Commission's resolution.

The Secretary-General submitted to the Commission in January a list of all General Assembly and other reports issued since 24 April 1998 on the situation of the population living in the occupied Arab territories [E/CN.4/1999/23].

Report of Special Rapporteur. In January [E/CN.4/1999/24], Special Rapporteur Hannu Halinen (Finland) discussed the human rights situation in the occupied Palestinian territories. He had visited the occupied Palestinian territories, Israel and Egypt (3-12 January).

The Special Rapporteur stated that human rights violations in the occupied Palestinian territories had continued, to a large extent along the same lines as in the past. Human rights concerns among the Palestinian population had been exacerbated by the unilateral suspension by Israel in December of the implementation of the Wye River Memorandum [YUN 1998, p. 424]. Several interlocutors told the Special Rapporteur that human rights violations actually stemmed from the peace agreements and that the Palestinian population was currently living in a vacuum as far as human rights protection was concerned. He was told that Israel was violating human rights in the name of security. The expansion of Israeli settlements and the building of new ones, as well as bypass roads connecting the settlements to each other and with Israel, was the greatest concern in the occupied territories. The increased rate of demolition of Palestinian houses had given rise to serious concern. The Special Rapporteur was informed that, in addition to constituting collective punishment, house demolitions were considered by Palestinians as sources of extreme provocation and incitement. The situation of the Arab inhabitants in Jerusalem continued to be precarious. The issue of Palestinian prisoners who remained detained in Israeli prisons and detention centres continued to be a serious source of concern. The Special Rapporteur was informed that more than 2,200 Palestinians continued to be detained in Israel, in conditions not meeting international standards, especially regarding medical care and sanitation. Palestinian detainees lacked access to their lawyers and family visits owing to the travel restrictions placed on Palestinians by Israel. The number of administrative detainees had declined considerably and stood at fewer than 100 persons. Among those detainees were persons who had served their prison terms and had been transferred to administrative detention instead of being released. Administrative detentions by the Palestinian Authority continued to increase sharply at the end of 1998, with many cases related to the right to freedom of expression. Torture methods used by the Israeli General Security Service (GSS) had become less dramatic and violent, mostly consisting of hooding and position abuse. The Special Rapporteur was informed that closures of the occupied territories as a form of collective punishment were fewer than in the past. Palestinian workers required a permit to work in Israel, and permits were limited in number. Restrictions on the freedom of movement of the population of the occupied territories affected their social and economic well-being. The economic and social situation had also affected children's health. The number of violent clashes between Palestinians and Israelis declined owing to the few opportunities for direct physical contact in comparison to the intifada period.

The Special Rapporteur made a series of recommendations regarding administrative detention, the peace process and women's and children's rights.

The report contained a letter from Israel stating the Government's position regarding cooperation with the Special Rapporteur, in which Israel termed the Special Rapporteur's mandate biased and one-sided, and called for its revision. According to the 1993 mandate [YUN 1993, p. 958], the Special Rapporteur was "to investigate Israel's violations of the principles and bases of international law, international humanitarian law and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, in the Palestinian territories occupied by Israel since 1967". The Special Rapporteur believed that the mandate should not be the obstacle to cooperation and had proposed its revision.

Communication. On 12 April [E/CN.4/1999/152], Palestine stated that the Special Rapporteur had exceeded his mandate when he discussed matters relating to the peace process and allegations concerning Palestinian justice. It rejected the request made by Israel and the Special Rapporteur to change his mandate.

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 31 to 1, with 21 abstentions, the Commission, on 23 April [res. 1999/5], condemned the continued human rights violations in the occupied Palestinian territories, and called on Israel to cease those acts immediately. It also condemned the appropriation of Palestinian homes in Jerusalem and the revocation of identity cards and called on Israel to end those practices. The Commission also called on Israel to abolish the use of torture against Palestinians during interrogation; cease its policy of enforcing collective punishments; desist from all forms of human rights violations in the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories and respect the bases of international law, the principles of international humanitarian law and its international commitments and agreements; and withdraw from the Palestinian territories. The Secretary-General was asked to bring the Commission's resolution to the attention of Israel and all other Governments, competent UN organs, the specialized agencies, regional inter-governmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations, to disseminate it as widely as possible and to report in 2000 on its implementation by Israel. He was also asked to provide the Commission with all UN reports issued between its sessions that dealt with conditions in which the Palestinians were living under Israeli occupation.

Also on 23 April [res. 1999/61, by a roll-call vote of 32 to 1, with 20 abstentions, the Commission called on Israel to comply with UN resolutions on the occupied Syrian Golan and demanded that it rescind its decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on that occupied territory. It also called on Israel to desist from changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the occupied Syrian Golan and to desist from imposing Israeli citizenship and identity cards on the Syrian citizens in the Syrian Golan and from its repressive measures against them. The Secretary-General was asked to bring the Commission's resolution to the attention of all Governments, UN organs, specialized agencies, regional inter-governmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations, to give the resolution wide publicity and to report in 2000.

On the same date [res. 1999/7], by a roll-call vote of 50 to 1, with 2 abstentions, the Commission expressed grave concern at the Israeli settlement activities and their increase since the signing of the Wye River Memorandum in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 424], which were illegal and constituted a violation of the relevant provisions of the Fourth Geneva Convention. It condemned all acts of terrorism and called on all parties not to allow those acts to affect negatively the ongoing peace process. The Commission urged Israel to comply with the Commission's previous resolutions; to cease its policy of expanding the settlements and related activities in the occupied territories; and to forgo and prevent any new installation of settlers.

Chapter

Development policy and international economic cooperation

In 1999, the world economy began to show signs of recovery from the aftermath of the financial crises in Asia and the Russian Federation and the uncertainties related to Brazil. Overall, world growth expanded by 2.6 per cent, a notable improvement over the 1.8 per cent of 1998. The rate of growth in the developing countries—which had borne the brunt of the previous year's economic slowdown—increased from 1.3 per cent in 1998 to over 3 per cent in 1999. However, on a per capita basis, growth in output was marginal and considerably less than in the industrialized economies, where the strong performance of North America was a critical factor underlying the global acceleration.

In September, the General Assembly held its twenty-second special session at which it adopted a Declaration and review document on the state of progress and initiatives for the future implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States (SIDS), a comprehensive plan resulting from a Global Conference on the subject in 1994. The Commission on Sustainable Development, which served as preparatory body for the special session, held high-level discussions at its April session on issues of special concern to SIDS, focusing in particular on sustainable tourism development.

In May, the Commission on Science and Technology marked the twentieth anniversary of the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development by adopting a common vision statement on the future contribution of science and technology to development.

International economic relations

Development and international economic cooperation

A number of UN bodies addressed development and international economic cooperation issues during 1999, including the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.

The Assembly, by decision 54/428 of 9 December, deferred consideration of the launching of global negotiations on international economic cooperation for development and included the item in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth (2000) session.

On 22 December, the Assembly took note of the reports of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on its discussions of macro-economic policy questions [A/54/585] (decision 54/440) and on sustainable development and international economic cooperation [A/54/587] (decision 54/442). By decision 54/465 of 23 December, the Assembly decided that those agenda items would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session.

Economic and Social Council consideration. On 29 April, the Economic and Social Council held its second special high-level meeting with the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund) [A/54/3/Rev.1]. It had before it a note by the Secretary-General identifying issues related to the functioning of international financial markets and stability in financing for development [E/1999/42 & Corr.1] (see PART THREE, Chapter IV).

Development through partnership

High-level dialogue

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 53/181 [YUN 1998, p. 772], the Secretary-General submitted a September note on the themes for the second high-level dialogue on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership [A/54/328]. The first dialogue was held in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 772]. Based on his consultations with Governments, bodies of the UN system and intergovernmental organizations, the Secretary-General proposed that the theme for the second dialogue—scheduled for 2000—should be "Responding to the challenges of globalization: strengthening regional cooperation and building new partnerships for development". He suggested that preparations for the dialogue employ a bottom-up approach that would allow the traditional intergovernmental process to benefit from an infusion of ideas and policy advice from those directly involved in and affected by globalization.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/54/587/Add.7], adopted resolution 54/213 without vote [agenda item 99 (g)].

Renewal of the dialogue on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/165 of 21 December 1993, 49/95 of 19 December 1994, 50/122 of 20 December 1995, 51/174 of 16 December 1996, 52/186 of 18 December 1997 and 53/181 of 15 December 1998,

Recalling also the adoption of the Agenda for Development and the relevant provisions on its follow-up and implementation, and the need to give impetus to international economic cooperation for development so as to follow up on the Agenda effectively,

Reaffirming the importance of continuing the dialogue to be conducted in response to the imperative of solidarity, mutual interests and benefits, genuine interdependence, shared responsibility and the partnership in promoting international economic cooperation for development,

Recognizing, in this context, the importance of an enabling environment and sound economic policy at both the national and the international levels,

Recognizing also the role of regional cooperation in promoting complementarity and in creating synergies and partnerships at the subregional, regional, interregional and global levels in the process of globalization and thereby furthering multilateral economic cooperation,

Emphasizing the importance of recognizing and addressing the specific concerns of countries with economies in transition so as to help them to benefit from globalization, with a view to their full integration into the world economy,

Noting the need to ensure the integrated and coordinated follow-up and implementation by the United Nations system of major United Nations conferences and summits,

Noting also the past experience of the high-level dialogue on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership,

1. Reaffirms the importance of continued constructive dialogue and genuine partnership to promote further international economic cooperation for development in the twenty-first century;

2. Decides that the theme of the second high-level dialogue on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership will be "Responding to globalization: facilitating the integration of developing countries into the world economy in the twenty-first century";

3. Also decides, without changing the biennial nature of the high-level dialogue, to defer the holding of the second two-day high-level dialogue to the fifty-sixth session of the General Assembly;

4. Requests the President of the General Assembly to begin consultations with Member States so as to arrive at an early decision on the date, modalities, nature of the outcome and focus of the discussions of the second high-level dialogue, taking into account past experience and the contributions to be provided by Member States as well as regional institutions and the United Nations system, and commends the continuing use of interactive panel discussions, including with the participation of non-governmental actors, to facilitate the dialogue in accordance with relevant regulations and rules;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in close cooperation with Governments, all relevant parts of the United Nations system, relevant organizations and other development agencies, to make initial preparations for the dialogue, while also taking into account the results of major United Nations conferences and summits;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session, under the item entitled "Sustainable development and international economic cooperation", the sub-item entitled "High-level dialogue on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership", and requests the Secretary-General to submit to it at that session a consolidated report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Also on 22 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note on the themes for the second high-level dialogue (decision 54/444).

Globalization and interdependence

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/169 [YUN 1998, p. 773], the Secretary-General submitted a September report on the role of the United Nations in promoting development in the context of globalization and interdependence [A/54/358]. The report was prepared in the wake of the high-level dialogue on the social and economic impact of globalization and interdependence and their policy implications [YUN 1998, p. 727], in collaboration with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and in consultation with other organizations of the UN system. It focused on the core issues of finance and trade and explored ways to enhance the coherence of the UN system's response to the challenges of globalization and interdependence. Analysis at the global level was supplemented by a review of country-level trends based on responses to a questionnaire from a number of resident coordinators.

From a development perspective, the challenge posed by globalization was not internationalization of production, the telecommunications revolution or the emergence of "uncivil" society, but rather the cumulative impact of all those processes on policy-making and policy implementation. UN development activities needed to bring coherence to national and international policy-making in interrelated areas of trade and finance, economic, social and environmental issues, and other ramifications of globalization, such as the loss of cultural diversity, new patterns of labour migration, challenges and opportunities for health and new opportunities for criminal activity. Perhaps the most important catalyst for bringing about increasing globalization was the spread of information technology. Full and effective participation in the emerging information network was crucial for a country to benefit from globalization and to avoid being marginalized. UN operational activities for development should aim to increase national capacity to manage globalization; create an enabling environment for investment; facilitate the diversification of production, trade and technology transfer; expand capacities to deal with external debt management; and address the social dimensions in the globalization process.

UNCTAD action. The UNCTAD Trade and Development Board, at its twentieth executive session (Geneva, 5 February) [A/54/15/Rev.1], decided to include in the substantive agenda for the tenth session of the Conference (UNCTAD X), to be held in 2000, an item addressing developmental strategies in an increasingly interdependent world: applying the lessons of the past to make globalization an effective instrument for the development of all countries and all people (see PART THREE, Chapter IV).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, by decision 1999/281, the Economic and Social Council decided that the theme of the high-level segment of its 2000 substantive session would be "Development and international cooperation in the twenty-first century: the role of information technology in the context of a knowledge-based global economy".

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/54/592], adopted resolution 54/231 without vote [agenda item 104].

Role of the United Nations in promoting development in the context of globalization and interdependence

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/169 of 15 December 1998,

Recognizing the challenges and opportunities of globalization and interdependence,

Expressing its serious concern over the increasing risks of marginalization of a large number of developing countries from the globalization process, including in the finance, trade and technology sectors, and the additional vulnerability of those developing countries that are in the process of integrating into the world economy, resulting in particular from the volatility of short-term capital flows and the accentuation of income disparities within and among countries,

Recognizing that globalization and interdependence are opening new opportunities through trade, investment and capital flows, and advancements in technology, including information technology, for the growth of the world economy, for development and for the improvement of living standards around the world,

Emphasizing that the international systems dealing with development, finance, trade and transfer of technology should further address the negative impacts of globalization on developing countries,

Expressing its grave concern over the generally widening technological gap between the developed and developing countries, particularly in the area of information and communication technology, which is shaping the contours of globalization,

Mindful, in the process of trade liberalization, of the diminution of trade preferential margins for developing countries, particularly the least developed countries and small island developing States, and of the need for countries to take measures, as appropriate, in accordance with the rules of the World Trade Organization, to address that diminution with a view to offsetting it,

Underlining the need to continue to work on a wide range of reforms in order to create a strengthened international financial system,

Recognizing the importance of appropriate policy responses at the national level by all countries to the challenges of globalization, in particular by pursuing sound macroeconomic and social policies, noting the need for support from the international community for the efforts of the least developed countries, in particular, to improve their institutional and management capacities, and also recognizing that all countries should pursue policies conducive to economic growth and to promoting a favourable global economic environment,

Underlining the importance of promoting the integration of developing countries into the world economy in order to enable them to take the fullest possible advantage of the trading opportunities arising from globalization and liberalization,

Underscoring the urgent need to mitigate the negative consequences of globalization and interdependence for all developing countries, including landlocked developing countries, small island developing States and, in particular, African countries and the least developed countries,

Convinced of the need, in the context of globalization and interdependence, to develop and to implement policies to promote equity, transparency and inclusion, with the goal of promoting development, particularly of developing countries,

Reiterating that the United Nations, as a universal forum, is in a unique position to achieve international cooperation in addressing the challenges of promoting development in the context of globalization and interdependence,

Convinced that the United Nations has a key role to play in fostering greater coherence, complementarity and coordination in addressing economic and development issues at the global level,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Taking note also of the Human Development Report, 1999, which focuses on globalization with a human face,

Taking note further, in the context of globalization and interdependence, of the ongoing work of the Commonwealth Secretariat/World Bank Joint Task Force on Small States,

Noting with appreciation that the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, at its tenth session, to be held at Bangkok from 12 to 19 February 2000, will focus on "Development strategies in an increasingly interdependent world: applying the lessons of the past to make globalization an effective instrument for the development of all countries and all people",

Welcoming the decision of the Economic and Social Council to devote the high-level segment of its substantive session of 2000 to the theme "Development and international cooperation in the twenty-first century: the role of information technology in the context of a knowledge-based global economy",

1. Reaffirms that the United Nations has a central role to play in promoting international cooperation for development and in promoting greater policy coherence on global development issues, including in the context of globalization and interdependence;

2. Strongly stresses that the United Nations, the Bretton Woods institutions and the World Trade Organization should intensify their collaboration, as appropriate, in promoting policy coherence, complementarity and coordination on economic, financial, trade and development issues at the global level, which should aim at optimizing the benefits and minimizing the negative consequences of globalization, liberalization and interdependence, taking into account the specific vulnerabilities, concerns and needs of developing countries;

3. Calls for increased international cooperation to address the challenges of globalization through the enhanced participation of developing countries in the international economic policy decision-making process; integrated consideration of trade, finance, technology transfer and development issues by the relevant international institutions; and the continuation of a wide range of reforms of the international financial system;

4. Calls upon all countries, in particular the major developed economies, to enhance coherence among their financial, trade and development cooperation policies, with a view to creating an enabling international economic environment supportive of development, in particular of developing countries;

5. Stresses the importance, at the national level, of maintaining sound macroeconomic policies and developing effective institutional and regulatory frameworks and human resources, so as to realize the mutually reinforcing objectives of poverty eradication and development, including through national poverty reduction strategies and enhanced policy coherence;

6. Urges the international community to promote international development cooperation aimed at enhancing the participation of developing countries in the globalizing world economy;

7. Also urges the international community to adopt policies that promote equity in finance, trade and transfer of technology and address the problems of developing countries in the areas of external debt and transfer of resources, financial vulnerability, declining terms of trade and market access;

8. Welcomes the efforts of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the International Trade Centre and other multilateral and bilateral efforts to help developing countries, including landlocked developing countries, small island developing States and, in particular, African countries and the least developed countries, in addressing their specific concerns within the globalizing economy, in particular through technology-related assistance in the fields of trade and policy, in the improvement of trade efficiency and policies and trade in services, and in electronic commerce;

9. Emphasizes the importance of recognizing and addressing the specific concerns of countries with economies in transition so as to help them to benefit from globalization with a view to their full integration into the world economy;

10. Strongly underlines the importance of an enabling environment for investment, in particular foreign direct investment, and of market access, governance responsive to the needs of the people based on efficient, participatory, transparent and accountable public service, policy-making processes and administration, an increase in the volume and effectiveness of official development assistance, tackling unsustainable debt burdens, including debt conversion measures and flexibility in the implementation of the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative and, as recommended in the report of the Secretary-General, support for regional cooperation and integration as priority areas that need to be addressed in order to achieve sustainable development in African countries and to encourage the participation of all African countries in the global economy;

11. Emphasizes the technology-led dimension of globalization and the importance of facilitating access to and transfer of information and communication technology and corresponding knowledge, in particular to developing countries, on favourable terms, including concessional and preferential terms, as mutually agreed, taking into account the need to protect intellectual property rights, as well as the special needs of developing countries, to enable them to benefit from globalization through full and effective integration into the emerging global information network;

12. Strongly emphasizes the need for the regional and national capacity-building programmes of the United Nations system, the regional commissions, United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies to have a strong component oriented towards assisting developing countries, as well as countries with economies in transition, in the area of information and communication technology;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, in close collaboration with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and in consultation with other relevant organizations, a comprehensive report containing action-oriented recommendations on promoting further the role of the United Nations system in the transfer of information and communication technology to developing countries and also on its role in promoting policy coherence, complementarity and coordination on economic, financial, trade, technology and development issues at the global level in order to optimize the benefits of globalization;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to convene, if possible, from extrabudgetary resources, a meeting of a high-level panel of experts on information and communication technology, taking into account equitable geographical representation, and in consultation with Member States, to prepare a report, to be made available in early June 2000, containing recommendations on the role of the United Nations in enhancing the integration of developing countries in the emerging global information network, facilitating access for developing countries to information and communication technology, including access on preferential and concessional terms, where appropriate, and promoting the participation of developing countries, including through infrastructure facilities, in knowledge-intensive sectors of the global economy;

15. Invites countries, and other relevant entities in a position to do so, to provide the necessary extrabudgetary resources for the convening of the high-level panel;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Globalization and interdependence".

Implementation of the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation and the International Development Strategy

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/178 [YUN 1998, p. 775], the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/54/389] on the implementation of the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, adopted by the Assembly in resolution S-18/3 [YUN 1990, p. 337], and of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade (the 1990s), adopted by the Assembly in resolution 45/199 [ibid., p. 343]. The report was also prepared in accordance with the need for a quinquennial review of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 3281 (XXIX) [YUN 1974, p. 403], as successful implementation of the Declaration and the Strategy was considered a major contribution to the fulfilment of the Charter's provisions.

Progress was assessed in relation to six interrelated goals singled out in the Strategy: economic growth in the developing countries; international financial matters, including foreign direct investment, debt and official development assistance; world trade; science and technology, industry and agriculture; human resources development, including education and health; and the situation of the least developed countries.

The achievements of the Decade, particularly in relation to those goals, had been mixed, the report concluded. Although there had been some improvement during the 1990s from both a social and an economic perspective, there had also been major setbacks, especially as a result of recent financial crises. There was also an increasing danger for marginalization of the weaker members of the world community. Major challenges faced by the world economy at the end of the 1990s included poverty alleviation and sustainability. Because economic growth was no longer considered a sufficient indicator of development, the focus had shifted from macroeconomic challenges to a number of institutional preconditions for development, including good governance, transparency and accountability, decentralization and participation, and social security.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/54/587/Add.1], adopted resolution 54/206 without vote [agenda item 99 (a)].

Implementation of the commitments and policies agreed upon in the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, and implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance and continued validity of the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, contained in the annex to its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, and of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 45/199 of 21 December 1990,

Recalling its resolutions 45/234 of 21 December 1990, 46/144 of 17 December 1991, 47/152 of 18 December 1992, 48/185 of 21 December 1993, 49/92 of 19 December 1994, 51/173 of 16 December 1996 and 53/178 of 15 December 1998 on the implementation of the Declaration and the Strategy, and the Agenda for Development,

Recalling also the results, as agreed, of all the major United Nations conferences and summit meetings held since the beginning of the 1990s,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Recognizes the efforts made to implement the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, and the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade in the 1990s, and stresses the need to strengthen such actions in collaboration with, inter alia, efforts taken in the context of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s and its implementing arm, the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative on Africa, and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with all concerned organs and organizations of the United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, as well as other relevant international organizations, to submit to the General Assembly, for consideration at its fifty-fifth session, an update of the report of the Secretary-General;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with all concerned organs and organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the Committee for Development Policy, to submit to the General Assembly for consideration at its fifty-fifth session, through the Economic and Social Council, a draft text of an international development strategy for the first decade of the new millennium, with the aim of giving further impetus to international cooperation for development and of monitoring long-term trends in the global economy as well as the attainment of internationally agreed targets:

(a) Building on the outcomes, inter alia, of the major United Nations conferences and summit meetings held during the 1990s, the Agenda for Development and any other relevant ongoing processes related to international cooperation for development;

(b) Taking into account the dynamic changes to the world economy resulting from, inter alia, globalization, interdependence and liberalization and the rapid advances in science and technology;

5. Requests the President of the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session to initiate consultations with all Member States with a view to establishing the modalities for the consideration and conclusion of the proposal of the Secretary-General called for in paragraph 4 above at the fifty-fifth session of the General Assembly;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the sub-item entitled "Sustainable development and international cooperation: implementation of the commitments and policies agreed upon in the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, and implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade".

Business and development

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/209 [YUN1997,p.788], the Secretary-General submitted his third biennial report on business and development [A/54/451]. He provided information on UN activities in promoting an enabling environment for the business sector, as well as on the increasing efforts for a partnership with business to realize the norms and goals established in the various UN conferences in the 1990s.

The Secretary-General stated that the private sector could play a very important role in fostering economic growth and development, and the UN system was actively facilitating the private sector's involvement in the development process through a twofold approach. On the one hand, it was developing a supportive international "soft infrastructure" for the orderly interaction of business—including legal and fiscal frameworks, privatization policies and processes, liberalization of financial flows, regulation of capital markets, adoption of competition policies and laws, deregulation or simplification of regulations and processes applicable to business, and development of entrepreneurship. On the other, it was facilitating private sector participation in pursuing the goals of the global conferences, in embracing universal principles and norms, including those relating to environment, human rights and gender, as well as in promoting economic growth, fighting poverty and rebuilding nations after conflict or crisis.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/54/586], adopted resolution 54/204 without vote [agenda item 98 (b)].

Business and development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 52/209 of 18 December 1997 on business and development and 51/191 of 16 December 1996 on the United Nations Declaration against Corruption and Bribery in International Commercial Transactions,

Noting the adoption of relevant conventions by the International Labour Organization relating to labour,

Recalling the successful outcome of the World Summit for Social Development, including the commitments contained in the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit, and calling for the implementation of those commitments,

Noting the important efforts of the United Nations system to facilitate the active and constructive involvement of the private sector in the development process and the efforts of the Secretary-General to create partnerships with the private sector in this regard,

Recognizing the sovereign right of each State to decide on the development of its private and public sectors in accordance with its priorities,

Emphasizing that business and industry, including corporations engaged in international business activities, can contribute substantially to a country's economic and social development and environmental protection, and are important generators of employment and economic growth,

Reaffirming the importance, in the context of national development efforts, of promoting appropriate privatization, competition, entrepreneurship and a supportive legal and fiscal framework for business so as to increase efficiency, economic growth and sustainable development,

Recognizing the important role of small and medium-sized enterprises and micro-financing in supporting economic and social development,

Recognizing also that a dynamic business sector is essential to economic growth, job creation, trade expansion and technology development,

Recognizing further the link among effective, accountable and transparent administration of the public sector, financial transparency in the private sector, investor confidence and the stability of financial systems,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Encourages Governments, multilateral institutions and the private sector, including corporations engaged in international business activities, to strengthen partnerships so as to advance sustainable development through, inter alia, supporting the stable functioning of the international finance and trade system and investment flows, particularly in support of the development efforts of developing countries, as well as countries with economies in transition;
3. Encourages Governments to create an environment that enables businesses to conduct their activities in a humane, sustainable and socially responsible way;
4. Urges all Governments to create an enabling environment for business and investment, including through sound macroeconomic, fiscal and development policies, the rule of law, anti-corruption and anti-bribery efforts, and transparent business practices that promote efficiency, fairness and competitiveness in international commercial transactions, taking into account the needs of developing countries;
5. Urges the private sector, including corporations engaged in international business activities, to pursue orderly and fair business practices while adhering to and promoting the principles of honesty, transparency and accountability in international commercial transactions, with a view to contributing to efforts to create an enabling environment for business and investment;
6. Requests the international community, including the business community and relevant international bodies, to consider ways and means of promoting such principles and practices and respect for those practices by multinational companies in their operations in all countries;
7. Emphasizes the importance of a supportive international economic environment, including investment and trade, for the promotion of entrepreneurship and privatization;
8. Strongly stresses the need for adequate resources, including the provision of new and additional resources from all sources, and transfer of technology on favourable terms, inter alia, on concessional and preferential terms as mutually agreed, to developing countries, particularly to Africa and the least developed countries, for developing appropriate infrastructure and business services to promote entrepreneurship;
9. Recognizes the special development priorities and concerns of developing countries, and in this regard calls for international support for the realization of their development goals, inter alia, through the promotion of business and entrepreneurship;
10. Stresses the importance of micro-finance, including micro-credit, to people living in poverty, in allowing them to undertake the establishment of micro-enterprises, which in turn generate self-employment and contribute to the achievement of empowerment, particularly of women, and calls for the strengthening of institutions supportive of micro-financing, in particular micro-credit;

11. Values the promotion of entrepreneurship, inter alia, through the informal sector and micro-enterprises, in the development of small and medium-sized enterprises and industries by various actors throughout civil society, and of privatization, demopolization and the simplification of administrative procedures;

12. Stresses the importance, in the context of establishing and maintaining adequate social safety nets, including assistance to workers, of encouraging investment in human resources through programmes devoted to health, education and job training, and recognizes that such efforts are an integral part of overall poverty reduction strategies;

13. Encourages the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to continue to provide a forum for intergovernmental discussions concerning issues related to private sector development and international flows of investment, with input from representatives of the private sector;

14. Invites the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and other relevant United Nations bodies to strengthen further their activities, in particular those concerning Africa and the least developed countries, in the promotion of entrepreneurship development, especially with respect to small and medium-sized enterprises, and calls upon the international community to lend its support, where appropriate, to the United Nations Industrial Development Organization in this regard;

15. Calls upon the United Nations funds and programmes, in accordance with their mandates, to continue to strengthen support for the promotion of entrepreneurship and, in their work in implementing the present resolution, to give due consideration to the role of the business sector in development, taking into account the priorities set by each country, while ensuring a gender perspective;

16. Calls upon the relevant bodies of the United Nations system, within their respective mandates and agreed work programmes, to continue to assist Member States, at their request, in implementing national programmes to create an enabling environment for business, investment and development;

17. Stresses the need to continue to assist developing countries and countries with economies in transition, at their request, in strengthening their capacity to encourage wider participation of the private sector in their economies;

18. Invites relevant United Nations organizations, within their mandates and in consultation with Governments, to promote meaningful contributions by business, in both the public and the private sectors, in support of economic growth and sustainable development;

19. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Business and development", and requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the relevant United Nations organizations, to submit at that session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Coercive economic measures

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/181 [YUN 1997, p. 789], the Secretary-General submitted an October 1999 report on unilateral eco-economic measures as a means of political and economic coercion against developing countries [A/54/486]. The report contained summaries of information received from 13 Governments and on action on the subject taken by relevant UN bodies.

The report also contained a summary of an ad hoc expert group meeting (New York, 14-16 June), which was convened by the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs to seek the views of internationally recognized experts on the impact of coercive economic measures, particularly on trade and development in the affected countries. The expert group discussed current concepts, recent developments, available case studies and emerging policy issues pertaining to the unilateral versus multilateral application of economic sanctions. From a legal perspective, the experts agreed that unilateral measures of coercion were increasingly at odds with the evolving principles and rules of international economic and social cooperation embodied in the Charter of the United Nations and the constituent treaties of multilateral trade and financial institutions, such as the World Trade Organization (WTO).

Regarding policy options and alternatives, current approaches to minimizing the adverse effects of coercive economic measures on the general population, particularly its most vulnerable groups, were reviewed. One alternative that had recently attracted wide attention was the concept of "smart" or targeted sanctions designed to penalize directly those individuals or policy makers responsible for an objectionable action. International cooperation—including bilateral and multilateral negotiations on contentious issues, engagement strategies and positive economic measures involving adequate incentives and reward systems to induce policy changes—was considered a more rational and viable alternative to unilateral coercive economic measures.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/54/585/Add.3 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 54/200 by recorded vote (107-3-46) [agenda item 97 (c)].

Unilateral economic measures as a means of political and economic coercion against developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the relevant principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, which states, inter alia, that no State may use or encourage the use of unilateral economic, political or any other type of measures to coerce another State in order to obtain from it the subordination of the exercise of its sovereign rights,

Bearing in mind the general principles governing the international trading system and trade policies for development contained in relevant resolutions, rules and provisions of the United Nations and the World Trade Organization,

Recalling its resolutions 44/215 of 22 December 1989, 46/210 of 20 December 1991, 48/168 of 21 December 1993, 50/96 of 20 December 1995 and 52/181 of 18 December 1997,

Gravely concerned that the use of unilateral coercive economic measures adversely affects the economy and development efforts of developing countries in particular and has a general negative impact on international economic cooperation and on worldwide efforts to move towards a non-discriminatory and open multilateral trading system,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Urges the international community to adopt urgent and effective measures to eliminate the use of unilateral coercive economic measures against developing countries that are not authorized by relevant organs of the United Nations or are inconsistent with the principles of international law as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and that contravene the basic principles of the multilateral trading system;
3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to monitor the imposition of measures of this nature and to study the impact of such measures on the affected countries, including the impact on trade and development;
4. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Sustainable development

Commission on Sustainable Development

The Commission on Sustainable Development held the second part of its seventh session in New York from 19 to 30 April [E/1999/29]; it had held two organizational meetings on 1 May and 27 July 1998. The session included a multi-stakeholder dialogue on tourism (see below) and a high-level segment, which addressed tourism and a plan of action for small island developing States (see below, under "Developing countries"). Other issues considered related to oceans and seas (see PART THREE, Chapter VII), changing consumption and production patterns and challenges for the future.

The Commission adopted decisions on: education, public awareness and training; exchange of national experience; voluntary initiatives and agreements on sustainable development; the proposed programme of work in sustainable development for 2000-2001; matters related to the Commission's inter-sessional work; and preparations for the review of Agenda 21, adopted by the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) [YUN 1992, p. 672] (see below). Two draft resolutions—on preparations for the Commission's consideration at its ninth (2001) session of matters related to energy (see PART THREE, Chapter VI) and on guidelines for consumer protection (see PART THREE, Chapter IV)—were recommended for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

By a vote of 33 to 4, with 8 abstentions, the Commission adjourned debate without action on a draft resolution on sustainable development in the region of the Balkans. By that text, the Commission would have expressed grave concern at the unfolding environmental crisis in the Balkans as a result of the destruction of chemical, oil and other industries in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) (see PART ONE, Chapter V) and urged the UN system to undertake immediate measures to address the sustainable development problems of FRY and neighbouring countries.

By decision 1999/222 of 26 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's report on its seventh session [E/1999/29] and approved the provisional agenda for the eighth (2000) session.

In an April report [E/CN.17/1999/9], the Secretary-General outlined the main challenges on the agenda for future Commission sessions—including energy, land and agriculture—as well as policy options related to ocean governance. In resolution 1999/48 of 28 July, the Council decided on issues to be considered during the preparatory process for the Commission's eighth session in relation to the sectoral theme of integrated planning and management of land resources and agriculture (see PART THREE, Chapter VI).

Tourism

During the multi-stakeholder dialogue on tourism (19-21 April), the Commission met with representatives of business and industry, workers and trade unions, local authorities and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to discuss four themes related to sustainable tourism: industry initiatives for sustainable tourism; influencing consumer behaviour; promoting broad-based sustainable development while safeguarding the integrity of local cultures and protecting the environment; and the coastal impact of tourism.

The Commission had before it a January report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.17/1999/5], which discussed policy challenges for the tourism industry, national Governments and the international community in the areas of tourism and economic development, tourism and social development and tourism and environmental protection. Three addenda covering tourism and economic development [E/CN.17/1999/5/Add.1], tourism and social development [E/CN.17/1999/5/Add.2] and tourism and environmental protection [E/CN.17/1999/5/Add.3], were prepared by the World Tourism Organization, the International Labour Organization and the United Nations Environment Programme, respectively.

The session also had before it the report of the Inter-sessional Ad Hoc Working Group on Consumption and Production Patterns and on Tourism (New York, 22-26 February) [E/CN.17/1999/16], which suggested possible elements for action by the Commission in relation to those issues.

On 30 April [E/1999/29 (dec. 7/3)], the Commission adopted an international work programme on sustainable tourism development and decided that its implementation would be reviewed in 2002 at the time of the 10-year review of progress achieved since UNCED. The work programme outlined action to be taken by Governments, the tourism industry and other major groups involved in the development of tourism, including organizations of the UN system. Governments were urged to adopt policies and strategies for sustainable tourism development based on Agenda 21, which would encourage their tourism industries, assist in attracting foreign direct investment and appropriate environmentally sound technologies, and provide direction for the active participation of major groups, including national tourism councils, tourism agencies and the private sector, as well as indigenous and local communities. The tourism industry was called on to develop environmentally, socially and culturally compatible forms of tourism and to continue to develop and implement voluntary initiatives in support of sustainable tourism development.

Among other elements of the work programme were those aiming to: encourage more responsible behaviour among tourists; promote integrated planning approaches to tourism development at the local level; support preparations for the International Years of Ecotourism and of Mountains, both in 2002; develop indicators and guiding principles for sustainable tourism development; and encourage industry to implement eco-efficiency approaches to reduce environmental impacts of travel and tourism activities. The World Tourism Organization and the UN Secretariat were asked jointly to facilitate establishment of an ad hoc informal open-ended working group on tourism to assess financial leakages and determine how to maximize benefits for indigenous and local communities, as well as address other matters relevant to the work programme's implementation.

Education, public awareness and training

In a January report [E/CN.17/1999/11], the Secretary-General described progress made in implementing the international work programme on education, public awareness and training for sustainability, launched by the Commission in 1996 and expanded in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 786]. Prepared by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), as task manager for chapter 36 of Agenda 21, the progress report focused on seven long-term initiatives: clarifying and communicating the concept and key messages of education for sustainable development; reviewing national education policies and reorienting formal educational systems; incorporating education strategies and action plans for sustainable development; educating to promote sustainable consumption and production patterns; promoting investments in education; identifying and sharing innovative practices; and raising public awareness. Integrated follow-up to UN conferences and conventions, strategic issues concerning the work programme and UNESCO action to promote its implementation were also addressed.

On 30 April [dec. 7/4], the Commission called for intensified collaborative efforts by UNESCO, Governments, relevant UN bodies and NGOs in implementing the work programme. Priority was to be given to the integration of aspects of sustainable development in educational policies.

Voluntary initiatives

In an April report [E/CN.17/1999/12], the Secretary-General presented to the Commission the conclusions of a multi-stakeholder consultative meeting on voluntary initiatives and agreements (Toronto, Canada, 10-12 March), which included the participation of industry, trade unions and NGOs. The meeting examined the lessons learned about voluntary initiatives and agreements in order to come up with the key elements for a review of their effectiveness. A number of case studies were presented on different aspects of voluntary initiatives, and the elements that worked or did not work in relation to each initiative's stated goals and objectives were discussed. It was noted that voluntary initiatives and agreements increased direct action for sustainable development by business and other major groups. Those that were participatory in design and delivery helped to build partnerships and generate a renewed sense of commitment to long-term sustainability among the parties involved. There was broad agreement on the main elements for a review of voluntary initiatives and agreements, but further consultation was required on how such reviews might be structured.

The Commission, on 30 April [dec. 7/6], encouraged all relevant major groups and other stakeholders, in cooperation with UN bodies, to continue generating information about voluntary initiatives and agreements, including the most appropriate means for possible reviews, and to report periodically on steps taken or progress made in assisting developing countries in understanding and making use of the lessons learned from the use of such initiatives and agreements. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 2000 on progress and developments.

National reporting

In a March note [E/CN.17/1999/10], the Secretary-General summarized activities related to national reporting on the implementation of Agenda 21 subsequent to the Commission's sixth (1998) session [YUN 1998, p. 779]. Activities focused on: facilitating national reporting to the seventh session; preparation of an analytical report of national information on the sustainable development of oceans and seas (see PART THREE, Chapter VII); maintenance and updating of the UN system-wide sustainable development web site; and early preparations to facilitate reporting to the Commission's eighth (2000) session.

On 30 April [dec. 7/5], the Commission emphasized the need to draw more fully on the information contained in national reports and other voluntary submissions. Governments were encouraged to continue providing such reports and information with the broad involvement of all sectors of society. The efforts of developing countries in that regard were to be supported by the international community and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). The Commission secretariat was asked to invite Governments to submit proposals on improving the guidelines for elaboration of national reports and to prepare a new version of the country profiles complementing those presented during the five-year review in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 790] for submission to the General Assembly for the comprehensive review of the implementation of Agenda 21 in 2002.

Inter-Agency Committee

The Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development (IACSD) of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) met twice in 1999. At its thirteenth meeting (New York, 8-9 March) [ACC/1999/1], it discussed follow-up to meetings of ACC and matters related to the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development and the General Assembly. Regarding its work in support of the implementation of Agenda 21, IACSD considered expanding the task manager system in order to avoid multiple inter-agency mechanisms of policy coordination at the global level in any given thematic area.

In addition to reviewing the reports of the ACC Subcommittees on Water Resources and on Oceans and Coastal Areas, the Committee addressed: cooperation in the energy area, in preparation for consideration of energy issues by the Commission in 2001; strengthening of UN system coverage of waste management issues; the status of the UNDP Development Watch mechanism; and work related to guidelines for national action.

At its fourteenth meeting (Vienna, 9-10 September) [ACC/1999/12], IACSD again considered expanding the task manager system, follow-up to meetings of intergovernmental bodies, cooperation in the area of energy, and a report from the Subcommittee on Oceans and Coastal Areas. It also discussed preparations for the Commission's eighth (2000) session.

Follow-up to UNCED and to nineteenth special session

Commission on Sustainable Development. On 30 April [E/1999/29 (dec. 7/9)], the Commission asked the Secretary-General to submit in 2000 suggestions for the form, scope and nature of the preparatory process for the next comprehensive review of the implementation of Agenda 21, adopted by UNCED in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 672]. The first such review was carried out by the General Assembly at its nineteenth special session, when it adopted the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 by resolution S/19-2 [YUN 1997, p. 792].

Report of Secretary-General. In a June report [A/54/131-E/1999/75], the Secretary-General reviewed the work under way in the UN system to accelerate the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21. Constraints to their implementation included a lack of additional resources, institutional capacity and clearly defined priorities for both individual organizations and the system as a whole. Some constraints were related to inconsistent decisions in various governing bodies of UN organizations. Other difficulties were related to fostering progress in intersectoral aspects of sustainable development, such as health.

The Secretary-General recommended a more coordinated approach to the follow-up of all recent major UN conferences in order to achieve synergies for sustainable development and ensure more efficient and effective use of resources.

The Economic and Social Council on 30 July (decision 1999/286) and the General Assembly on 22 December (decision 54/447) took note of the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/54/588/Add.1], adopted resolution 54/218 without vote [agenda item 100 (a)].

Implementation of and follow-up to the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development and the nineteenth special session of the General Assembly

The General Assembly,

Recalling the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, held at Rio de Janeiro from 3 to 14 June 1992, and the nineteenth special session of the General Assembly for the purpose of an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of Agenda 21, held in New York from 23 to 28 June 1997,

Reaffirming that Agenda 21 is the fundamental programme of action for achieving sustainable development and that the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, adopted by the General Assembly at its nineteenth special session, will enhance the full implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,

Recognizing that the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 includes a statement of commitment to Agenda 21 and the goals of sustainable development, an assessment of progress made since the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in all main areas of Agenda 21 and other outcomes of the Conference, and recommendations on the future methods of work of the Commission on Sustainable Development and the programme of work of the Commission for the period 1998-2002,

Recognizing also that mutually supportive efforts at the national and international levels are needed in the pursuit of sustainable development and that the gap between developed and developing countries points to the continuing need for a dynamic and enabling national and international economic environment that is supportive of international cooperation, in particular in the fields of finance, transfer of technology, debt and trade, if the momentum for global progress towards sustainable development is to be maintained and increased,

Noting with concern that, during the assessment and review of progress made at its nineteenth special session, the General Assembly concluded that although some progress had been made, especially at the local level, the overall trends with respect to the global environment had not improved, and emphasizing that the implementation of Agenda 21 in a comprehensive manner remains vitally important and is now more urgent than ever,

Noting that the next review of the implementation of Agenda 21 is to be carried out by the General Assembly in 2002,

Noting also the need for early substantive preparations for the ten-year review of the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in order to attain meaningful results,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 53/188 of 15 December 1998 and Commission on Sustainable Development decision 7/9, on preparations for the review of the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21,

1. Stresses the need to accelerate the full implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21;

2. Recognizes that the Commission on Sustainable Development, within its mandate as specified in General Assembly resolution 47/191 of 22 December 1992 and in the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, will continue to provide the central forum for reviewing progress on and urging further implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and other commitments made at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development or as a result of it, for conducting a high-level policy debate aimed at building consensus on sustainable development and for catalysing action on and long-term commitment to sustainable development at all levels;

3. Calls upon the Commission on Sustainable Development to continue to undertake these tasks in complementing and providing interlinkages to the work of other United Nations organs, organizations and bodies active in the field of sustainable development, to play its role in assessing the opportunities and challenges of globalization as they relate to sustainable development and to perform its functions in coordination with other subsidiary bodies of the Economic and Social Council and with related organizations and institutions, including making recommendations, within its mandate, to the Council, bearing in mind the interrelated outcomes of recent United Nations conferences;

4. Emphasizes that the achievement of more substantive results by the next review of the implementation of Agenda 21 in 2002 will require concerted efforts at all levels, including by Governments, calls upon all countries to fulfil their commitments to Agenda 21, and in this context calls upon developed countries to fulfil the commitments that they have undertaken with respect to financial resources and the transfer of environmentally sound technology;

5. Reaffirms, in this context, the necessity of providing adequate and predictable financial resources, transferring environmentally sound technologies and providing capacity-building and technical assistance to developing countries for the implementation of Agenda 21 and for the achievement of the long-term goals of sustainable development, and calls for the preparations for the ten-year review of the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, without prejudice to other priority areas that may be identified during the preparatory process, to address the challenges and constraints in the implementation of the commitments of the Conference at all levels and to identify ways and means of accelerating the implementation of Agenda 21, including the development of measures to remedy the slow rate of progress of the international community in implementing Agenda 21;

6. Notes the need for assistance to be provided by the international community to countries with economies in transition in their efforts to achieve the objectives of Agenda 21 and the long-term goals of sustainable development;

7. Emphasizes the importance of the continued active and collaborative involvement of all relevant bodies of the United Nations system in the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, and requests the Secretary-General, in close collaboration with all relevant bodies of the United Nations system and taking into account the outcome of the deliberations in the Commission on Sustainable Development, to submit to the General Assembly for consideration at its fifty-fifth session, through the Economic and Social Council in view of its coordination function, an analytical report on the measures taken within the United Nations system to accelerate the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, including the identification of constraints and recommendations on how to address those constraints;

8. Recognizes the importance, for the effective implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, of a multifaceted approach at the local, national, regional and global levels, as well as of the continued involvement of major groups, as defined in Agenda 21, and calls for the preparations for the ten-year review to facilitate continued involvement and input from those various levels and from major groups;

9. Stresses, in this connection, the importance of high-quality preparations for the forthcoming ten-year review of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, requests the Secretary-General to include the views of Member States in the preliminary report requested by the Commission on Sustainable Development in its decision 7/9, and invites Member States to submit their views to the Secretariat by February 2000;

10. Renews its request to the secretariat of the Commission on Sustainable Development to invite Governments to submit proposals on how to improve the guidelines for the elaboration of national reports and, based on the information received, to prepare a report to be submitted to the Commission as part of the preparations for the comprehensive review of the implementation of Agenda 21;

11. Invites, as part of the preparations for the ten-year review:

(a) The regional commissions to provide reports, through the Economic and Social Council in view of its coordination function, on how their activities are contributing to the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, for the consideration of the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

(b) The relevant functional commissions that are implementing chapters of Agenda 21 to submit reports, through the Economic and Social Council in view of its coordination function, on how their activities are contributing to the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, for the consideration of the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

(c) The Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme to consider how the activities of the Programme are contributing to the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, and to submit its views to the General Assembly at the earliest opportunity;

(d) The Global Environment Facility, in the course of its regular work, to provide a report on how its activities are contributing to the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, for the consideration of the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

(e) The secretariats of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, the Convention on Biological Diversity and the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa, to provide reports on how their activities are contributing to the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, for the consideration of the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

12. Invites the Secretary-General, while preparing the report requested by the General Assembly in paragraph 6 of its resolution 53/188, to take into account the preliminary discussions held by the Commission on Sustainable Development at its eighth session and by the Economic and Social Council, and to include in that report proposals for the analytical reports to be prepared for the review process.

Eradication of poverty

Economic and Social Council consideration.

At the high-level segment of its 1999 substantive session (Geneva, 5-7 July) [A/54/3/Rev.1], the Economic and Social Council addressed the role of employment and work in poverty eradication, particularly in relation to the empowerment and advancement of women (see PART THREE, Chapter X). At its operational activities segment, the Council discussed poverty eradication and capacity-building (see next chapter).

Poverty eradication and capacity-building

In May [E/1999/55], the Secretary-General reported to the Council on poverty eradication and capacity-building in relation to UN operational activities for international development (see also next chapter). The report provided an assessment of the country-level role of operational activities for development in poverty eradication and recommended practical steps to help achieve the goal of poverty eradication as agreed at the World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113] and in General Assembly resolution 51/178 [YUN 1996, p. 743] on the first United Nations Decade on the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006) (see below). The evolution of the issue of capacity-building over 30 years was also reviewed, as were the relevant decisions of General Assembly resolution 53/192 on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system [YUN 1998, p. 802]. According to the report, the organizations of the UN system had translated global mandates regarding poverty eradication into operational action at the country level by strengthening national capacities to define policies, giving a pro-poor orientation to development policies and enhancing the capacities of the poor through direct assistance initiatives. The concept of capacity-building had gradually evolved from a primary focus on institution-building to a broader process involving policy and programme formulation, budgeting and financial management, development planning, programme implementation, coordination and performance monitoring and evaluation. Capacity-building efforts had come to involve larger-scale, complex, multisectoral issues—such as urban development, HIV/AIDS, poverty and environmental management—which posed new challenges for the UN system whose technical capacity was for the most part organized on a sectoral basis.

Among its recommendations, the report suggested that the Council address the sustainability and adaptability of capacity-building in a variety of development contexts and in response to a range of sectoral, cross-sectoral and technical requirements of recipient countries. In two addenda, the Secretary-General reported on progress in implementing General Assembly resolution 53/192 [E/1999/55/ Add.1] and provided detailed statistical data on operational activities for development during 1997 [E/1999/55/Add.2].

In an annual report on operational activities for development [E/1999/47], the UNDP Administrator stated that the advancement of women was an integral part of UNDP work in poverty eradication and sustainable livelihoods for the poor. Empowerment of the poor, particularly poor women, was a key dimension of the UNDP approach to poverty eradication. Future work by UNDP and its partners needed to focus on strengthening gender-aware macroeconomic planning and policy-making as well as on community efforts to address their own poverty, especially the poverty of women.

UN Decade for Eradication of Poverty

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/198 [YUN 1998, p. 783], the Secretary-General submitted a September 1999 progress report [A/54/316] on the implementation of the measures, themes, recommendations and activities related to the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006), proclaimed by the Assembly in resolution 50/107 [YUN 1995, p. 844]. The report, in addition to recommending possible actions and initiatives and proposals for better coordination of UN system action, highlighted progress made and challenges remaining in global poverty reduction. The need for poverty alleviation strategies that encompassed a comprehensive mix of policies and programmes and included all interacting development sectors impacting on the poor was stressed. Emphasis was also placed on the issues of gender inequalities and poverty, and the importance of public policy in reducing poverty and mitigating vulnerability during crisis.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/54/593], adopted resolution 54/232 without vote [agenda item 105].

Implementation of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 50/107 of 20 December 1995 and 53/198 of 15 December 1998 regarding the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006) and all of its other resolutions relating to international cooperation for the eradication of poverty in the developing countries,

Recalling also the declarations and programmes of action of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the 1990s as they relate to the eradication of poverty,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Expressing its deep concern that the number of people living in extreme poverty continues to increase, with women and children constituting the majority and the most affected group,

Expressing its deep concern also that efforts to reduce poverty have been severely constrained because of the slowing down of economic growth in developing countries, as a result of, inter alia, and, in particular, the 1997-1998 financial crisis and declining commodity prices, and noting that while some of the most visible effects of the crisis are being overcome in some regions and sectors, there is a need to sustain and to expand the momentum of recovery,

Recognizing that, while the process of globalization brings with it opportunities, it poses new challenges and risks for developing countries, in particular the least developed among them, at a time when they are intensifying their efforts to achieve sustained economic growth and directing their national policies towards the eradication of poverty through the implementation of comprehensive strategies, policies and programmes, including those with a long-term perspective,

Recognizing also that, while the rate of poverty in some countries has been reduced, some developing countries and disadvantaged groups are being marginalized, others are at risk of being marginalized and effectively excluded from the benefits of globalization, and there is increased income disparity among and within countries, thereby constraining efforts to eradicate poverty,

Recognizing further that the combined effects of natural disasters, conflicts, entrenched poverty, disease, especially malaria and the human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome epidemic, and lack of proper education affect the economic prospects of, and efforts to eradicate poverty in, the most severely affected countries, especially in Africa,

Recognizing that, while it is the primary responsibility of States to attain social development, the international community should support the efforts of the developing countries to eradicate poverty and to ensure basic social protection,

Expressing its appreciation to the developed countries that have agreed to and have reached the target of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product for overall official development assistance,

Emphasizing the need to strengthen further the efforts of international organizations, agencies, funds, programmes and bodies of the United Nations system, including the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund within their respective mandates, as well as the efforts of civil society, including non-governmental organizations, to implement measures and to take action to eradicate poverty within the framework of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty,

Noting with appreciation the debt initiative launched by the Group of Seven major industrialized countries at its meeting held at Cologne, Germany, from 18 to 20 June 1999, the decisions taken by the international community to assign priority to the eradication of poverty in the programmes and policy advice of the Bretton Woods institutions and the enhancement to the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative introduced with a view to achieving deeper, broader and faster debt relief for the heavily indebted poor countries,

1. Reiterates that the main objective of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty is to achieve the goal of eradicating absolute poverty and reducing overall poverty substantially in the world through decisive national action and international cooperation;

2. Reiterates also the call for strengthened efforts at all levels to implement fully and effectively the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations and all agreements and commitments adopted at major United Nations conferences and summits organized since 1990 as they relate to the eradication of poverty, and, in this context, calls for specific action aimed at achieving tangible results through an output-oriented approach to attaining the objectives of the Decade as soon as possible;

3. Reaffirms that, within the context of overall action for the eradication of poverty, special attention should be given to the multidimensional nature of poverty and the national and international conditions and policies that are conducive to its eradication by fostering, inter alia, the social and economic integration of people living in poverty, thus empowering them to participate in decision-making with regard to the policies that affect them, to the promotion and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, including the right to development, and to an efficient, transparent and accountable public service and administration;

4. Stresses the importance of tackling the root causes of poverty and the necessity of meeting the basic needs of all, and, in this context, emphasizes the fundamental role in the eradication of poverty of strong and sustained economic growth that favours the poor, creates substantive expansion in productive opportunities and employment, increases incomes, promotes equitable income distribution and minimizes environmental degradation;

5. Recognizes the importance of adopting appropriate policy responses to the challenges of globalization at the national level, in particular by pursuing sound and stable domestic policies, including sound macro-economic and social policies, in order to realize the objective of eradicating poverty;

6. Calls upon all Governments to incorporate, as they deem appropriate, the recommendations made by the Secretary-General for possible action and initiatives for poverty eradication towards the new millennium in the design and implementation of their national poverty alleviation strategies and to explore policies best suited to their national circumstances with a view to maximizing efforts aimed at poverty reduction and eradication;

7. Reaffirms that the causes of poverty should be addressed in the context of sectoral strategies, such as those on environment, food security, population, migration, health, shelter, the development of human resources, including education, fresh water, rural development and productive employment, and of the specific needs of disadvantaged and vulnerable groups in such a way as to increase opportunities and choices for people living in poverty and to enable them to build and to strengthen their assets so as to achieve social and economic integration;

8. Urges the strengthening of international assistance to developing countries in their efforts to alleviate poverty, including by creating an enabling environment that would facilitate the integration of developing countries into the world economy, improving their market access, facilitating the flow of financial resources and implementing fully and effectively all initiatives already launched regarding debt relief for developing countries, and emphasizes that the international community should consider further measures that would lead to effective, equitable, development-oriented and durable solutions to the external debt and debt-servicing problems of developing countries so that they can share equally in the benefits of globalization, cope with its negative effects, avoid being marginalized in the process of globalization and achieve full integration into the world economy;

9. Calls upon all countries to formulate and to implement outcome-oriented national strategies and programmes, including setting time-bound targets for poverty reduction, and, in this context, notes the efforts being made to achieve the target of reducing by one half, by 2015, the proportion of people living in extreme poverty, which requires strengthened national action and international assistance;

10. Reaffirms that all Governments and the United Nations system should promote an active and visible policy of mainstreaming a gender perspective in all policies and programmes aimed at the eradication of poverty, at both the national and international levels, and encourages the use of gender analysis as a tool for the integration of a gender dimension into planning the implementation of policies, strategies and programmes for the eradication of poverty;

11. Calls upon the developed countries to strengthen their efforts to achieve, as soon as possible, the agreed target of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product for overall official development assistance and, where agreed, within that target, to earmark 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of their gross national product for the least developed countries;

12. Emphasizes the importance of increasing the control of the poor over resources, including land, skills, knowledge, capital and social connections;

13. Emphasizes also the role of microcredit as an important anti-poverty tool that promotes the generation of productive self-employment and empowers people living in poverty, especially women, and therefore encourages Governments to adopt policies that support the development and capacity of microcredit institutions, and calls upon the international community, in particular the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and international and regional financial institutions involved in the eradication of poverty, to support and to explore the incorporation of the microcredit approach into their programmes and the further development, as appropriate, of other microfinancing instruments;

14. Calls upon the developed countries, by means of intensified and effective cooperation with developing countries, to promote capacity-building and to facilitate access to and transfer of technologies and corresponding knowledge, in particular to developing countries, on favourable terms, including concessional and preferential terms, as mutually agreed, taking into account the need to protect intellectual property rights, as well as the special needs of developing countries, by identifying and implementing practical steps to ensure the achievement of progress in this regard and to assist developing countries in their efforts to eradicate poverty in an era influenced in large measure by technology;

15. Emphasizes the critical role of both formal and non-formal education and training and basic education in the empowerment of those living in poverty, notes the importance of the world forum on education to be held at Dakar in April 2000, and invites the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund, to propose measures aimed at enhancing the role of the United Nations system, including the World Bank, in helping Member States to provide effective and equitable education for all;

16. Welcomes the efforts made by the United Nations system to assign priority to the eradication of poverty and to enhance coordination, and, in this regard, encourages those agencies of the United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, and other partners in development to continue to support all Member States in carrying forward their own strategy for the achievement of the objectives of the Decade;

17. Reaffirms the importance of agreeing on a mutual commitment of interested developed and developing country partners to allocate, on average, 20 per cent of official development assistance and 20 per cent of the national budget, respectively, to basic social programmes, and welcomes the efforts made to implement the 20/20 initiative, which emphasizes that promoting access for all to basic social services is essential for sustainable and equitable development and is an integral part of the strategy for the eradication of poverty;

18. Welcomes the Cologne debt initiative, launched in June 1999, which called for substantial additional financing, and recognizes the importance of fair burden-sharing among creditors and the recent decisions of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank on the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative, which should provide deeper, broader and faster debt relief that will contribute to the reduction of poverty in a sustainable manner in those countries;

19. Recognizes the difficulties of highly indebted middle-income developing countries and other highly indebted middle-income countries in meeting their external debt and debt-servicing obligations, and notes the worsening situation in some of them in the context, inter alia, of higher liquidity constraints, which may require debt treatment including, as appropriate, debt-reduction measures that will assist them in their efforts effectively to combat poverty;

20. Encourages the continued examination in all relevant intergovernmental forums of ways and means to integrate poverty reduction objectives and strategies into discussions on international financial and development issues;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to report to it at its fifty-fifth session on the progress made in the implementation of measures, recommendations and activities relating to the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty, including a thorough examination of the impact of globalization on the eradication of poverty, recommendations for possible action and initiatives for the eradication of poverty and proposals for better coordination of action taken by the United Nations system, as well as on the implementation of the present resolution;

22. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Implementation of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006)".

Science and technology for development

Commission on Science and Technology for Development

The Commission on Science and Technology for Development, at its fourth session (Geneva, 17-21 May) [E/1999/31], marked the twentieth anniversary of the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development [YUN 1979, p. 635], by adopting a vision statement on the future of science and technology for development, to be delivered at the UNESCO World Conference on Science (Budapest, Hungary, 26 June-1 July) (see PART SIX, Chapter IV).

The session had as its main substantive theme "Science and technology partnerships and networking for national capacity-building". Other issues considered included: the report of a panel meeting on biotechnology (see below); activities related to the coordination of science and technology for development [E/CN.16/1999/8]; promotion of a coalition of resources to support science and technology in developing countries [E/CN.16/1999/6]; technical cooperation activities by the UN system in information and communication technologies [E/CN.16/1999/Misc.3]; action arising from the Commission's third session [YUN 1997, p. 826] [E/CN.16/1999/7]; and inter-sessional and budget activities [E/CN.16/1999/5]. Two draft decisions and a draft resolution were recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption.

Partnerships and networking for capacity-building

For its main substantive theme, the Commission had before it a report on the work of the Working Group on Science and Technology Partnerships and Networking for National Capacity-Building (Sliema, Malta, 28-30 September 1998) [E/CN.16/1999/2]. The Working Group discussed whether developments in the world economy, such as globalization, had opened up new opportunities for developing countries and countries in transition to build up indigenous capacity and technological capability, especially at the enterprise level. It also considered whether the success of newly industrialized countries in forging alliances and partnerships and using them to enhance technological upgrading and improve competitiveness could be replicated in other countries. Particular attention was given to partnerships and networking in energy and biotechnology, industries considered vital to economic growth and development in developing countries. The meeting was divided into three substantive sessions, focusing on: recent trends in partnerships for capacity-building in all sectors of the global economy; energy partnerships and their contribution to the provision of energy supplies and services; and biotechnology, an issue considered to be at the forefront of new forms of strategic alliances and partnerships.

The Working Group recommended that Governments create and maintain a stable macro-economic and policy environment that included incentives and support mechanisms to encourage investment and foster technological capabilities and industrial development; prepare the ground for inter-firm cooperation by creating a forum for dialogue with private and public sector bodies; identify priority areas for developing technological capacity where international partnerships and networking could play an essential role, the major needs of local firms in terms of technology, expertise and know-how, and useful services that could be provided to foreign firms interested in forming partnerships with domestic companies; provide a stable legal and regulatory framework for business and inter-firm agreements and transactions; provide support to foster partnerships between public and private institutions; support partnerships and networking between academic institutions and provide the means and infrastructure for basic research; and increase partnerships and collaboration in energy technologies.

Panel on biotechnology

Discussions of the Panel Meeting on Biotechnology for Food Production and Its Impact on Development (Geneva, 21-22 January) [E/CN.16/1999/3], which was convened in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/62 [YUN 1997, p. 827], focused on three thematic areas: issues related to plant and animal species and their traits, as well as to some biotechnology techniques and their applications at the local level; endogenous capacity-building for biotechnology development and transfer, including mechanisms for incorporating biotechnology into mainstream agricultural research; and other critical issues related to biotechnology that had an impact on food production, particularly those that needed to be addressed at the international level.

The Panel recommended that Governments: identify, develop and disseminate balanced information on biotechnology, intellectual property rights and biosafety; undertake studies on the relationships between intellectual property rights and technology transfer; encourage networking and linkages between the public and private sectors and encourage interaction between industry, investors and the scientific community; and build endogenous capacity and strengthen research capability in biotechnology through training skilled manpower and providing incentives for research and development personnel. It recommended that the international community: support developing countries in their efforts to develop and diffuse biotechnology to provide food for their populations; encourage private sector participation by educating industry and investors on the potential benefits of biotechnology; support mechanisms encouraging private firms to adapt and apply new technologies and find new ways to finance firm development; and establish strategic alliances and networking with centres of excellence in developed countries and encourage interaction with pioneering initiatives to develop and apply genomic technologies and computational tools to the conservation, evaluation and utilization of plant genetic resources worldwide. The Commission, through UNCTAD, should identify and initiate dialogues involving the private and public sectors and NGOs with a view to fostering the exchange of information and ideas among scientists, policy makers, industry and end-users. It should also address the need for regulatory capacity-building in biosafety for all countries, disseminate the results of other efforts already under way and support initiatives that had proved useful in designing national biosafety programmes suitable to local needs and priorities.

Twentieth anniversary of Vienna Conference

On 21 May, the Commission approved the text of "A Common Vision", a statement on the future contribution of science and technology to development [E/1999/31], which was formulated in response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/4 [YUN 1995, p. 850] as a way to commemorate the twentieth anniversary of the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development [YUN 1979, p. 635]. The Commission had before it a note by the UNCTAD secretariat [E/CN.16/1999/4 & Corr.1] containing the draft vision statement, which had resulted from a series of panel and expert group meetings on the subject.

The approved text called for science and technology to be considered the common heritage of mankind and went on to outline the challenges facing science and technology if it was to serve the goal of sustainable development. They included capacity-building in developing countries; ensuring an enabling political and economic environment; more transparent, participatory and innovative government policies; close cooperation among actors at all levels to strengthen systems of innovation and ensure that their outcomes enhanced general welfare; and new policies and services to bring women into the mainstream of technological change. In the area of education, the text called for priority to be given to increased investment in engineering and science education, promotion of vocational training and improvement of the scope and methodology of scientific and technological education.

A proper balance was needed between providing an incentive to invest in knowledge creation and maintaining the tradition of openness and free exchange of scientific information. Links beyond national borders were also crucial to the acquisition of knowledge and information for development and it was important that technological innovation be assessed in terms of its economic, social and environmental impact with the participation of all those concerned. The Commission could serve as a forum in the process of finding new ways to ensure that science and technology improved, through development, the well-being of all peoples as well as of future generations.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July [meeting 46], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development [E/1999/31], adopted resolution 1999/61 without vote [agenda item 13 (b)].

Science and technology for development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing the role of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development as a forum for the examination of science and technology questions, for improving understanding of science and technology policies for development and for the formulation of recommendations and guidelines on science and technology matters within the United Nations system, all in relation to development,

Recognizing also that the Commission, in carrying out its work, should pay special attention to the needs and requirements of developing countries, in particular the least developed countries and landlocked and small island developing States, and that it should take into consideration the relevant problems of countries with economies in transition,

Taking note with appreciation of the reports of the Commission's Working Group on Science and Technology Partnerships and Networking for National Capacity-Building and its Panel Meeting on Biotechnology for Food Production and Its Impact on Development,

Recognizing that the economic potential of science and technology partnerships and networking is enormous and that those without the capabilities to form equitable partnerships and participate in networks risk being marginalized from active participation in the global economy,

Aware of the extremely precarious situation of science and technology in some countries, in particular those in Africa, and of the need for these countries to overcome the constraints that have adverse effects on the well-being of people, the development of nations and the competitiveness of their economies,

Taking note with satisfaction of the notes by the secretariat on a common vision on science and technology for development, on budget and inter-sessional activities of the Commission and on the coalition of resources, and other relevant documentation submitted to the Commission for consideration at its fourth session,

Recognizing the importance of science, technology and innovation policies, and noting with satisfaction that two such reviews, for Colombia and Jamaica, have been completed and that others are under way or awaiting financing,

Noting that the fourth session of the Commission was taking place twenty years after the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, held in Vienna from 20 to 31 August 1979, and reaffirming the increasing importance of science and technology in effectively addressing development challenges, and the role that the United Nations can play in this area,

Recalling its resolutions 1997/62 of 25 July 1997 on science and technology for development and 1998/46 and 1998/47 of 31 July 1998 concerning the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields,

Recognizing that enhanced transparency and accountability are essential for the efficient and effective functioning of the Commission,

Welcoming the initiative taken by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in holding the World Conference on Science in Budapest from 26 June to 1 July 1999,

Activities as follow-up to the earlier work of the Commission

A. Science and technology partnerships and networking for national capacity-building

1. Recommends that developing countries and countries with economies in transition identify, in cooperation with all stakeholders:

(a) Priority areas for the development of technological capacity, where international partnerships and networking could play an essential role;

(b) The major needs of domestic firms in terms of technology, expertise and know-how, in order to map out clear objectives, expected output and monitoring tools;

(c) Useful services that could be provided to foreign public and private institutions interested in forming partnerships with domestic public and private institutions and that could help in establishing more equitable and balanced partnerships;

2. Also recommends that Governments explore ways and means of fostering partnerships among public and private institutions, inter alia, by creating an enabling policy, regulatory and legal environment, and by contributing information and knowledge, financing the development of research and development activities and infrastructure, and raising public awareness of the role and benefits of partnerships and networking in science and technology, and, where such processes already exist, that they should be updated;

3. Further recommends that Governments support partnerships and networking for both basic and applied research, with a view to enhancing national capacity-building;

4. Requests the secretariat of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, using the resources it can mobilize:

(a) To identify and analyse best practices in partnering and networking;

(b) To build an inventory of opportunities for international science and technology partnerships and networking;

5. Invites Governments, the public and business sectors, academia and non-governmental organizations in industrialized countries to engage in partnerships and networking in science and technology with their counterparts in developing countries and countries with economies in transition in order to facilitate access to and the use and adaptation of new technologies, and to improve their technological capability and build national capacity;

6. Recommends that, given the extent of the burgeoning energy demand and the financial constraints in developing countries, partnerships and collaboration on renewable as well as on conventional sources of energy, such as those envisaged in the clean development mechanism and the joint implementation arrangements envisioned in the context of the Kyoto Protocol to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, should be increased in order to:

(a) Promote capacity-building in developing countries;

(b) Provide modern energy services to rural and unserved urban populations;

(c) Encourage private sector participation in the provision of electricity supplies under innovative arrangements such as build-operate-transfer or build-operate-own schemes;

7. Also recommends that the Commission collaborate more closely with United Nations bodies and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Development Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, the World Bank, the World Intellectual Property Organization and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, to promote science and technology partnerships;

8. Further recommends that the least developed countries, in particular those in Africa, support their effective integration into the global process of mobilization of scientific knowledge and available technology, especially by:

(a) Supporting all initiatives aimed at the sub-regional regrouping of resources in the area of science and technology for development;

(b) Identifying equitable partnerships and placing due value on their scientists;

(c) Creating centres of excellence in priority areas and enhancing local education in science and technology skills;

B. Biotechnology for food production

9. Recommends that the Commission, through its secretariat, initiate a dialogue that involves the private and the public sectors, non-governmental organizations and specialized biotechnology centres and networks, such as the Global Forum on Agricultural Research, with a view to fostering the exchange of information and ideas among scientists, policy makers, representatives of industry and end-users. Such a dialogue can also provide a forum in which to raise issues concerning global developments in biotechnology, such as intellectual property rights, biosafety, bioethics, "pharma-foods" and "terminator genes", and to raise public awareness and create a better understanding of the potential benefits of biotechnology and other critical issues;

10. Also recommends that Governments in developing countries and countries with economies in transition undertake, with the cooperation of the international community, the following strategies:

(a) Strengthen research capability, build national capacity in biotechnology and undertake training programmes to provide a skilled workforce;

(b) Identify and encourage the development of centres of competence in biotechnology in each country;

(c) Develop and maintain partnerships with centres of excellence and networks in all countries;

(d) Encourage linkages and interaction among the public and private sectors and research and development institutions;

(e) Encourage the participation of the scientific community in policy discussions on biotechnology, biosafety and bioethics and in increasing public understanding of the risks and benefits of this new technology;

11. Requests the secretariat of the Commission:

(a) To assist in identifying and disseminating balanced information on biotechnology, intellectual property rights and biosafety;

(b) To examine case studies of approaches to address issues related to technology, intellectual property rights and biosafety issues in a practical, understandable and concrete way;

12. Requests the Commission to collaborate with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in preparing the next issue of the Advanced Technology Assessment System Bulletin on biotechnology for food production;

13. Recommends that the Commission and its secretariat cooperate with other international and regional organizations active in biotechnology, such as the regional commissions, the United Nations Environment Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the International Centre for Genetic Engineering and Biotechnology, non-governmental organizations and other international institutions such as the Consultative Group on International Agricultural Research, in particular to build understanding and to exchange information on biosafety regulation and capacity-building, including through case studies on (a) partnerships in biotechnology, (b) biosafety, (c) bioethics and (d) approaches to biotechnology and intellectual property rights issues;

C. Coalition of resources

14. Requests the secretariat of the Commission, using the extrabudgetary resources already allocated for this purpose, to finalize the publication of the reports on the coalition of resources for the application of information and communications technologies in transmissions infrastructure, education and health, and to ensure the widest possible dissemination of the final report;

D. Science, technology and innovation policy reviews

15. Recommends that the Commission continue to liaise with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on science, technology and innovation policy reviews with interested countries in order to identify options for national action, especially those that foster technological capability and innovation and the transfer and diffusion of technology;

E. New substantive theme and other activities

16. Decides that the substantive theme for the inter-sessional period 1999-2001 shall be "National capacity-building in biotechnology", with particular attention being paid to agriculture and the agro-industry, health and the environment. The theme shall include human resource development through basic science education, research and development, as well as their interdisciplinary aspects; the transfer, commercialization and diffusion of technology; increasing public awareness and participation in science policy-making; and bioethics, biosafety, biodiversity and the legal and regulatory matters affecting these issues to ensure equitable treatment;

F. Coordination of science and technology for development in the United Nations system

Mindful of the need to continue to strengthen the functioning of the Commission in the context of its restructuring, including its role regarding the coordination of science and technology for development,

Welcoming the steps taken by the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to establish a web site for the dissemination of information regarding the activities of the Commission,

17. Urges the secretariat of the Commission to continue efforts, in collaboration with other United Nations bodies, including the regional commissions and the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Informatics, to establish an electronic network linking information on their activities in science and technology for development and to build awareness of scientific developments that are particularly important for fostering economic and social development;

18. Requests the secretariat of the Commission to continue to issue the regular newsletter updating activities in the United Nations system pertaining to science and technology for development, including information on plans for and the results of the inter-sessional activities of the Commission itself;

19. Calls upon the secretariat and Bureau of the Commission to identify and take advantage of opportunities to interact closely with bodies of the United Nations system in order to promote greater information exchange and coordination of activities in science and technology for development; such interaction should include participation by the secretariat in the relevant coordination meetings of the Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions;

20. Recommends that every other year one panel meeting should be held in Geneva, following which the Bureau shall meet the Geneva-based delegations of member States and observers for one day to discuss with the delegations the status of the inter-sessional activities of the Commission and its efforts to coordinate activities of the United Nations system pertaining to science and technology for development;

21. Agrees to include in its agenda the item entitled "Functioning of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, including its role in coordinating science and technology for development", and requests the secretariat of the Commission to prepare a succinct analytical report on relevant activities within the United Nations system, including the outcome of the World Conference on Science, for consideration under this item.

In other action, on 28 July, the Council took note of the Commission's report on its fourth session, endorsed the resolutions and decisions adopted and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the Commission's fifth (2001) session (decision 1999/274). On the same date, by decision 1999/275, the Council extended the mandate of the Gender Advisory Board (an expert group established by the Commission in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 850] to facilitate its discussions on the gender implications of science and technology for developing countries) until 30 June 2001. The Council further decided that two vacancies on the Board should be filled by Commission members, in order to ensure continued linkages between the two bodies, and that the Commission should assess the desirability of continuing the work of the Board—and the potential for obtaining external resources to do so—at its fifth session.

Report of Secretary-General. In an August report on science and technology for development [A/54/270 & Corr.1], submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 52/184 [YUN 1997, p. 829], the Secretary-General described action taken by the Commission on Science and Technology for Development on the issues before it: science and technology partnerships and networking for national capacity-building; biotechnology and its impact on development, with particular emphasis on food production; the formulation of a common vision regarding the future contribution of science and technology for development; the coalition of resources; information and communication technologies; science, technology and innovation policy reviews; gender, science and technology; and coordination of the science and technology-related activities within the UN system.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/54/585/Add.4], adopted resolution 54/201 without vote [agenda item 97 (d)].

Science and technology for development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the continuing validity of the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development, adopted in 1979, its resolution 52/184 of 18 December 1997 and all other relevant United Nations resolutions and decisions, as well as the outcomes of major United Nations conferences and their five-year reviews concerning science and technology for development,

Taking note of those outcomes, including the Science Agenda—Framework for Action, adopted by the World Conference on Science, held at Budapest from 26 June to 1 July 1999,

Noting that issues related to utilizing science and technology for development were dealt with in the "Partners for Development" summit held at Lyon, France, from 9 to 12 November 1998 under the auspices of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Reaffirming the Common Vision on the future of science and technology for development as approved by the Commission on Science and Technology for Development at its fourth session, which stated that science and technology should be considered the common heritage of mankind and should be shared,

Stressing that the pace of globalization is influenced in large measure by the development of science and technology and that developing countries should be assisted in becoming well equipped with the knowledge of science and technology as well as the practical skills associated with technology management so as to enable them to benefit from the opportunities offered by globalization and to avoid the risk of their marginalization in the process of globalization,

Recognizing the importance of establishing and strengthening partnership and networking among public and private sectors and academic institutions from the South and the North to build and strengthen the technological capabilities and skills needed for developing countries to compete in the international markets,

Recognizing also that information technologies are important requisites for research, planning, development and decision-making in science and technology and that they have far-reaching implications for society,

Noting the work being undertaken by the Commission in its work programme for Member States, especially the developing countries, and its work with some countries with economies in transition, and reaffirming its unique role as a global forum for examining science and technology questions, improving the understanding of science and technology policies and formulating recommendations and guidelines on science and technology matters within the United Nations system in relation to development,

Recognizing the need for adequate resources, including through provision of new and additional resources from all sources, to be devoted to fostering science and technology for development,

Recognizing also the need to address the obstacles faced by developing countries in accessing new technologies, while taking into account the need to protect intellectual property rights and the special needs of developing countries,

Recognizing further the need for dissemination of research knowledge and sharing of technologies and expertise in the field of biotechnology, in particular in the areas of agriculture, pharmaceuticals and health care, that could benefit mankind,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms the important role that the United Nations should play in the promotion of cooperation in science and technology, as one of its priorities, and in the enhancement of support and assistance to developing countries in their efforts to achieve sustainable development, and emphasizes the need to enhance the capability of the relevant United Nations organizations, including the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to address relevant issues in the field of science and technology;

2. Takes note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/61 of 30 July 1999 and Council decision 1999/274 of 28 July 1999 in which the Council approved the provisional agenda and substantive theme for the fifth session of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development;

3. Recognizes the role of the Commission in coordinating the activities of the United Nations system in the area of science and technology for development, emphasizes the importance of the activities that are to be pursued within the framework of the Commission, including a broad spectrum of new global challenges in science and technology, and encourages support to these undertakings;

4. Also recognizes the importance for developing countries of having access to science and technology so as to enhance their productivity and competitiveness in the world market, and stresses the need to promote, facilitate and finance, as appropriate, access to and transfer of environmentally sound technologies and the corresponding know-how, in particular to the developing countries, on concessional, preferential and favourable terms, as mutually agreed, taking into account the need to protect intellectual property rights and the special needs of developing countries;

5. Further recognizes the role of Governments in science and technology for development, in particular in providing appropriate regulatory frameworks and incentives for the development of science and technology;

6. Stresses the role of Governments and international development institutions in facilitating the transfer of privately owned technologies on concessional terms, as mutually agreed, to developing countries, especially the least developed countries;

7. Recognizes the role of partnership among the public and private sectors, academic research centres and international funding agencies in science and technology for development, in particular in the transfer, creation and development of science and technology capabilities;

8. Reaffirms that capacity-building in science and technology in developing countries should remain a priority issue in the United Nations agenda, and urges that international cooperation efforts be intensified and strengthened towards endogenous capacity-building in developing countries in science and technology, including their capacity to utilize scientific and technological developments from abroad as well as to modify and adapt them to suit local conditions;

9. Recognizes the role of the public and private sectors, industry and academia in science and technology for development, in particular in the transfer and development of science and technology capabilities;

10. Stresses the importance of facilitating the transfer of technology to developing countries, in particular in knowledge-intensive sectors, with the objective of enhancing technological capacities, capabilities and skills in developing countries;

11. Recognizes the need for Governments and regional and international bodies to take measures to ensure better access to and participation in scientific and technological areas for women, especially where they are not represented or are under-represented, bearing in mind the important role that they can play in further developing innovation and methodologies for science and technology;

12. Emphasizes the role of partnership and networking mechanisms for the integration of developing countries and countries with economies in transition into the world economy, in particular by strengthening national capacity-building, promoting market access across a large number of sectors and industries, disseminating new business and management cultures, especially among small and medium-sized enterprises, and expanding opportunities for them to leverage their own research and development activities;

13. Reaffirms the need to fulfil the commitments on the provision of financial resources and transfer of technology contained in chapter 34 of Agenda 21, the outcome of the nineteenth special session of the General Assembly and the Agenda for Development;

14. Recognizes that, while applications of agricultural biotechnology in developing countries, if associated with the capacity to ensure their compatibility with human health and ecosystems, provide viable opportunities for improving productivity and increasing production capacity in the agricultural sector, a large number of developing countries have limited access to such technologies and face a number of impediments to their development of biotechnology;

15. Also recognizes the need for studying the impact of new biotechnologies on human health, the welfare and livelihood of the farmers, and poverty in developing countries;

16. Calls for safe biotechnology that will, inter alia, foster crop reproduction and enhance the development of developing countries;

17. Reaffirms that the substantive theme for the work of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development during the inter-sessional period 1999-2001 will be "National capacity-building in biotechnology", with particular attention to agriculture and the agro-industry, health and the environment; the theme will include human resource development through basic science education, research and development, as well as their interdisciplinary aspects; the transfer, commercialization and diffusion of technology; increasing public awareness and participation in science policy-making; and bioethics, biosafety, biodiversity and the legal and regulatory matters affecting these issues to ensure equitable treatment;

18. Stresses the necessity of promoting linkages and partnership among public and private sectors and centres of excellence and networks in developed and developing countries and countries with economies in transition with the objective of strengthening national research capability and capacity in biotechnology in developing countries;

19. Also stresses the need to establish science and technology as a cross-cutting theme within the work of the United Nations, particularly through effective and better coordination, including of international cooperation in technology assessment, monitoring and forecasting, information and communication technologies, partnership and networking for innovative and new technologies, biotechnology and providing an environment conducive to the development of new environmentally sound technologies, and calls upon United Nations organizations, funds and programmes to work in a coordinated manner to develop a catalogue of proven technologies to enable developing countries to make effective choices in state-of-the-art technologies;

20. Encourages the United Nations system to ensure, where appropriate in its operational activities, the provision for the transfer of appropriate technical know-how and technological skills to developing countries;

21. Reaffirms the need for adequate financial resources on a continuous and assured basis to foster science and technology for development, in particular to promote endogenous capacity-building in developing countries in accordance with their priorities;

22. Emphasizes the need to reduce regulatory limitations on the transfer of technology, particularly to developing countries, and stresses the importance of identifying barriers to and unjustifiable restrictions on the transfer of technologies, with a view to addressing such constraints while creating specific incentives, fiscal and otherwise, for the transfer of new and innovative technologies;

23. Recognizes the importance of cooperation among developing countries in the field of science and technology, building on their complementarities, and the need to advance further such cooperation through the establishment or strengthening of national technology and information centres in developing countries and their networking on subregional, regional, interregional and global levels to promote technology research, training and dissemination as well as joint projects in developing countries, urges the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and other relevant international, regional and subregional organizations and programmes to provide continued and enhanced support through technical assistance and financing for such efforts, calls for further cooperation between centres of excellence, universities and research institutions, and urges the international community to support such initiatives, where appropriate, through financial and technical assistance;

24. Also recognizes the importance of maintaining mutually beneficial scientific and technological cooperation between and among developing countries and countries with economies in transition;

25. Invites the relevant bodies of the United Nations system to provide assistance and to promote cooperation in the areas of partnership and networking, biotechnology, and information and communication technologies, including in the design and implementation of national strategies on such technologies or mechanisms;

26. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly for consideration at its fifty-fifth session, through the Economic and Social Council, without prejudice to the periodicity of this item, proposals for strengthening the coordination of mechanisms on the Commission on Science and Technology for Development within the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in order to ensure coordination of the various efforts and activities in the area of new and innovative technologies, in particular information and communication technologies, and their applications, such as in electronic commerce, with the objective of promoting complementarity of activities within the United Nations system;

27. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a report on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and social trends

Economic surveys and trends

The World Economic and Social Survey 1999 [Sales No. E.99.II.C.1], prepared in mid-1999 by the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA), stated that, following two years of financial turbulence and a marked slowdown in global economic growth, the world economy was no longer weakening. Most of the countries affected by the financial crises of 1997 and 1998—which spread from East Asia to the Russian Federation and then Latin America—were moving towards recovery. Led by the easing of monetary policy in major developed economies, economic prospects had improved and global financial markets had stabilized. Commodity prices had also stabilized, including oil prices, which had rebounded since early 1999, and inflation was expected to remain subdued in most developing and transition economies.

Nevertheless, economic growth in 1999 was markedly lower than at mid-decade, particularly for the majority of developing and transition economies. Gross world output was expected to increase by just 2 per cent in 1999, a minor improvement over 1998 and far short of the growth necessary to improve living standards and reduce the number of people living in poverty. While 39 developing countries attained a 3 per cent growth of output per capita in 1996, only 23 did so in 1998 and just 13 were expected to meet that level in 1999.

With output per capita increasing faster in the developed economies than in the rest of the world, the gap between rich and poor countries was widening. Furthermore, without successful systemic reforms of the international financial and monetary systems, the world economy would remain highly vulnerable to future economic crises. The issue of financing for development—including a review of the major changes that had taken place in recent decades in banking and financial systems around the world—was addressed in the second half of the report (see PART THREE, Chapter IV).

All of the developed countries—apart from Japan and New Zealand—maintained or slightly increased their output in 1998, with growth in the United States exceeding expectations, making it the main engine of growth in the world economy. By 1999, the United States economy had experienced sustained expansion for more than eight years—the longest period of continuous peacetime growth—nurtured by sound macroeconomic policy, major technological innovations, and increasing global integration, in which the benefits for the United States outweighed the costs. Canada also continued to grow at a fast pace, despite weak consumption caused in part by the depreciation of the Canadian dollar at the end of 1998. In 1999, consumer confidence was rebounding. Unemployment figures and inflation levels remained low in both countries.

By contrast, Japan's economy descended into severe recession during 1998, dampening prospects throughout the East Asia region. There were signs that the Japanese economy was reviving during the first quarter of 1999, due in part to the Government's fiscal stimulus measures and restructuring of the banking sector.

In Europe, economic activity slowed in late 1998 and early 1999, particularly in Germany and Italy, both of which were harder hit than other countries by the slowdown in trade with East Asia, Latin America and the transition economies. However, growth in the Continental European economies was expected to resume in the second half of 1999 and into 2000, supported by improvement in emerging markets, subdued inflation, low interest rates and the more competitive exchange rate of the euro, as well as by policies aimed at employment stimulation and removing obstacles to full exploitation of the opportunities afforded by the single market. Despite improvements, unemployment in most European countries remained high. In the United Kingdom, growth was expected to accelerate, following interest rate cuts and increased government spending on infrastructure projects and public services.

In Australia, despite close links with Asian economies, an eight-year trend of economic expansion continued, with growth accelerating, unemployment continuing to fall and inflation remaining low. Several years of structural reforms had also strengthened the Australian economy's resilience to external events.

In 1999, the outlook for the economies in transition was discouraging. The decline was mainly the result of a financial crisis in the Russian Federation, triggered in August 1998 by a drop in commodity prices, particularly oil. The slow pace of market reforms and high public debt contributed to the crisis. By the end of the year, Russia's formal banking system had almost ceased to operate and gross domestic product (GDP) fell by more than 4 per cent.

The other countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) and the Baltic countries were affected by the Russian economic collapse. In Ukraine, GDP fell by 1.7 per cent in 1998 and was expected to decline a further 3 per cent in 1999, with inflation as high as 50 per cent. Aggregate GDP in the CIS region as a whole contracted by 3.4 per cent. Although the Baltic countries had the lowest inflation of all the transition economies, growth slowed from 4 per cent in 1998 to less than 2 per cent in 1999. Only Armenia, Azerbaijan, Tajikistan and Turkmenistan had rising growth rates. The economies of Central and Eastern Europe, including those that were doing well, such as Poland, were also expected to stagnate. Output was likely to fall in the Czech Republic and Romania; recession was possible in Croatia and Slovakia.

Economic growth in the developing countries decelerated sharply from 5.5 per cent in 1997 to 1.7 per cent in 1998, mainly due to the spillover effects of the Asian crisis. For the developing countries overall, growth was expected to recover only gradually, achieving rates of 2.5 per cent in 1999 and 4.5 per cent in 2000. In contrast, rapid growth was forecast to continue in China and India, which augured well for the large proportion of the world's poorest who lived in those countries.

Growth in African developing countries was expected to increase from a weak 2.5 per cent in 1998 to about 3 per cent in 1999 and 3.5 per cent in 2000. However, substantial per capita gains were unlikely due to relatively fast population growth. Africa's exports were expected to remain depressed in 1999, though they could sharply increase in 2000 if oil prices recovered. Many African countries still suffered under the heavy burden of debt servicing, with total external debt well over 400 per cent of GDP in some economies.

In Asia and the Pacific, the countries of East Asia experienced the worst economic performance in decades during 1998: GDP growth contracted by more than 4 per cent, after having grown by 5.2 per cent in 1997 and by an annual average of 7 per cent during the period 1980-1996. The sharpest contractions following the regional financial crisis of mid-1997 were experienced in Indonesia—where GDP declined by more than 13 per cent in 1998—Malaysia, the Republic of Korea and Thailand. Growth also decelerated markedly in Singapore and Taiwan Province of China. Output declined in the Philippines, despite impressive growth in electronics exports to countries outside the region. The Asian crisis also had severe social consequences as unemployment rates soared.

By early 1999, however, there were signs of improvement in an increasing number of Asian countries, including Malaysia, the Republic of Korea and Thailand. Recovery in Indonesia continued to lag behind because of political and social tensions, as well as delays in implementing stabilization and restructuring measures. In the region as a whole, growth was expected to recover slowly to about 2.5 per cent in 1999.

In China, GDP grew by 7.8 per cent in 1998, in marked contrast to the poor economic performance of many neighbouring countries. However, it was China's lowest rate of growth since the early 1990s, reflecting a weakening of domestic demand due to the restructuring of State-owned enterprises, a severe flood and the impact of the Asian economic crisis. The adoption of economic policies to stimulate domestic demand resulted in GDP growth of 8.3 per cent during the first quarter of 1999, with growth forecast at about 7.5 per cent for the year.

The financial crisis had limited impact on South Asia, where GDP growth exceeded or was close to 5 per cent in 1998 in all countries of the region, except Nepal. A regional growth rate of 5.6 per cent was forecast for 1999. In Western Asia, growth contracted in 7 out of 15 countries during 1998. The regional outlook for 1999 depended in large part on the demand for oil, which was forecast to be sluggish. Other significant factors for economic growth in the region included the Middle East peace process and the situation of Iraq.

Latin America as a whole was plunged into recession in 1999 due to contagion from the Asian crisis and the measures adopted to address it. Economic difficulties intensified in early 1999 with a currency crisis in Brazil—a country accounting for 40 per cent of the region's GDP—and the impact of adverse natural phenomena, including floods, drought, hurricanes and earthquakes. While several Latin American countries were expected to register a recession or no growth in GDP for 1999, growth was expected to return to the region in 2000. Economic prospects were better for 1999 in the Caribbean countries, due in part to improving agricultural production, particularly in Cuba. Mexico and the economies of Central America were expected to perform better than the South American countries.

The Trade and Development Report, 1999 [Sales No. E.99.II.D.1] observed that while the developed countries had suffered little and even derived some benefit from the aftermath of the Asian crisis, the impact on the rest of the world had been dramatic. Virtually all developing countries and transition economies were affected. For the first time in 10 years, developing countries grew at a lower rate than industrialized countries, a shift that wiped out the fruits of decades of economic growth and poverty reduction in the most seriously affected countries, and had serious repercussions for international trade (see PART THREE, Chapter IV).

Regarding the impact on the developing countries of their rapid integration into the world economy, the Report noted that in the face of deep-seated imbalances in economic power and systemic biases in international trading and financial systems, their expectations of the gains from such integration in terms of faster growth, greater employment opportunities and reduced levels of poverty had been disappointed. The vulnerability of even the strongest developing economies to the forces of globalization was revealed by the humbling of the Asian tigers, stated the Report. The downside risks of integration had been further demonstrated by the effects of the crisis on Latin America and Eastern Europe. In spite of the return to stability in the Asian economies and the apparent confinement of the impact of the Brazilian crisis to neighbouring countries, potential instability remained inherent in the dependence of so many developing countries on foreign capital inflows that were so volatile.

According to a report on the world economic situation and prospects, prepared jointly by DESA and UNCTAD, gross world product expanded by an estimated 2.6 per cent in 1999, a notable improvement over the 1.8 per cent of 1998 and 0.6 per cent higher than anticipated in mid-1999. Much of the improvement stemmed from a faster and stronger recovery than foreseen in the Asian crisis countries, particularly the Republic of Korea, and an unexpected spurt of growth in Japan. Although Brazil experienced a recession, with negative effects on neighbouring economies, the setback was less than expected. Similarly, instead of the anticipated further decline in output following the rouble devaluation in August 1998, the Russian Federation grew by 2 per cent in 1999. A critical factor underlying the global acceleration was the continued strong performance of North America, while the slower growth in Western Europe was broadly in line with expectations. The economies in transition continued to perform poorly, but at widely differing growth rates. Following a decline in output in 1998, growth for the group in 1999 was about 0.6 per cent, stemming largely from developments in the Russian Federation.

The developing economies, which bore the brunt of the slowdown in 1998, registered the largest improvement in output in 1999, with growth recovering to over 3 per cent. On a per capita basis, however, output growth was marginal and considerably less than in the developed economies. By the end of the year, the developing countries had still not returned to the growth of over 5 per cent per year that had prevailed for some years prior to the crisis, nor made up the loss in per capita output in 1998.

Human Development Report 1999

The Human Development Report 1999, prepared by UNDP, addressed human development in the context of globalization, calling for a much bolder agenda of global and national reforms to achieve globalization with a human face. While globalization offered great opportunities for human advance, stronger governance was needed, the Report stated. Seven key challenges to securing human development in an era of globalization were outlined: adapting policies to the realities of the global economy; reducing the threats and human costs of financial volatility; tackling global threats to human security; developing technologies for human development and poverty eradication; reversing the marginalization of the poor; remedying structural imbalances; and building a more coherent and democratic architecture for global governance.

The Report ranked 174 countries in its human development index by combining indicators of life expectancy, educational attainment and adjusted per capita income, among other factors. In 1999, the methodology and data used for computing the index were improved, affecting the ranking of almost all countries compared to the previous year. However, that did not necessarily reflect deterioration or improvement in their state of human development. Of the 174 countries listed, 45 were in the high human development category, 94 were in the medium category and 35 were in the low category. Sixteen countries had experienced reversals in human development since 1990 due to the HIV/AIDS pandemic (mostly in sub-Saharan Africa) or economic stagnation (in sub-Saharan Africa and Eastern Europe and CIS). Wide disparities in global human development persisted both between and within regions. The speed of human progress was also uneven, most often being determined by the policy measures taken by countries to enhance people's well-being.

Development policy and public administration

The Committee for Development Policy—formerly the Committee for Development Planning, which was renamed by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1998/46 [YUN 1998, p. 1262]—held its first session in April to discuss the theme of the role of employment and work in poverty eradication in the context of globalization: the empowerment and advancement of women (see PART THREE, Chapter X).

The Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance did not convene in 1999; the Fifteenth Meeting was scheduled for the first quarter of the year 2000.

Committee for Development Policy

In a January note [E/1999/4], the Secretary-General discussed issues for consideration by the Committee for Development Policy at its 1999 session. The Secretary-General noted that two issues had been retained for further work by the Committee: refinement of the criteria for inclusion in and graduation from the list of least developed countries (LDCs); and a vulnerability index and how a measure of vulnerability might affect the designation of LDCs. In addition, the Secretary-General proposed three further issues for consideration: the coherence of economic policy-making in the context of globalization; parameters of the global environment; and the impact, including the social dimensions, of advances in technology and the information revolution on developing countries, particularly LDCs.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 5 February [meeting 4], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1999/2 [draft: E/1999/L.8] without vote [agenda item 7].

Work programme for the Committee for Development Policy

Recalling its resolutions 1998/39 of 30 July 1998 and 1998/46 of 31 July 1998,

1. Stresses the crucial importance of the completion of the work of the Committee for Development Policy on the vulnerability index;
2. Requests the Committee to continue, and to make all possible efforts to complete, its work in this regard during its forthcoming session and to report thereon to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1999;

3. Also requests the Committee to consider the theme of the role of employment and work in poverty eradication in the context of globalization: the empowerment and advancement of women, and, in this regard, requests the Secretariat to make available to the Committee its work in preparing for the substantive session of 1999 of the Economic and Social Council.

1999 session

In accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 1999/204 of 2 February, the first session of the Committee for Development Policy was held in New York from 26 to 30 April [E/1999/33]. The Committee considered the theme of the role of employment and work in poverty eradication in the context of globalization: the empowerment and advancement of women (see PART THREE, Chapter X). The Committee concluded that if globalization was to proceed smoothly, the major imbalance between short-term adjustment and long-term development needed to be addressed. Preventive strategies should be developed and policies adopted to create employment and reduce inequalities in income, in opportunity and in capabilities at the domestic and international levels. The Committee also addressed the increased vulnerability and inequality that accompanied the globalization process. In particular, the usefulness of a vulnerability index as a criterion for designating LDCs was considered (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, by decision 1999/286, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Committee's report on its first session.

On 16 December [meeting 51], the Council adopted resolution 1999/67 [draft: E/1999/L.62] without vote [agenda item 13 (a)].

Report of the Committee for Development Policy

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling section B of annex I to its resolution 1998/46 of 31 July 1998, in which it decided that the Council should decide on an appropriate programme of work for the Committee for Development Policy,

Recalling also its resolution 1998/39 of 30 July 1998 on the status of the least developed countries and its decision 1999/290 of 26 October 1999 on consideration of the graduation of the Republic of Maldives from the list of the least developed countries,

Recalling further General Assembly resolutions 46/206 of 20 December 1991 and 52/210 of 18 December 1997 on the report of the Committee for Development Planning,

1. Welcomes the report of the Committee for Development Policy on its first session, the views contained therein regarding the criteria for the identification of the least developed countries and the recognition that vulnerability should be explicitly taken into account in the identification criteria for the least developed countries;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to facilitate an expert group meeting of members of the Committee in January/February 2000 in order to enable them to carry out the necessary diagnostic testing and simulations of the proposed criteria for the designation of least developed country status, in particular the economic vulnerability index, as contained in annex II to the report of the Committee, and to report to the Committee at its second session in April 2000;

3. Requests the expert group to review and analyse the format and content of the "vulnerability profiles" developed by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, as identified in chapter III, section F, of the report of the Committee;

4. Requests, in this context, the Committee to continue its dialogue with other international organizations working on vulnerability issues, and encourages those organizations to communicate their views on the proposed economic vulnerability index to the Committee;

5. Also requests the Committee, on the basis of the report of the expert group, to recommend, as appropriate, revised criteria for the identification of the least developed countries for the consideration of the Council as soon as possible, but no later than its substantive session of 2000, so that the review and decision on the list of the least developed countries can be completed by the end of 2000;

6. Further requests the Committee to include in its report to be submitted to the Council in 2000 its views on the theme for the high-level segment of the Council in 2000, namely "Development and international cooperation in the twenty-first century: the role of information technology in the context of a knowledge-based global economy";

7. Requests the Committee to collaborate in the preparation of a draft text of an international development strategy for the first decade of the new millennium, in accordance with the General Assembly resolution on implementation of the commitments and policies agreed upon in the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, and implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade.

Developing countries

Least developed countries

The Least Developed Countries 1999 Report [Sales No. E.99.II.D.2], issued by UNCTAD, assessed the main trends in the socio-economic development of LDCs, particularly in relation to the ongoing processes of liberalization and globalization. As an input to the preparatory process for the Third United Nations Conference on LDCs, to be held in 2001, the Report examined the relevance of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s in the light of the globalizing world economy (see below). The domestic and international policy measures required for the improvement of LDCs' productive capacities and competitiveness, taking into account the nature of their export trade and the challenges they faced, were also reviewed.

The Report noted that the average GDP growth rate for LDCs suffered its third successive decline, falling from a peak of 6 per cent in 1995 to 3.8 per cent in 1998, due in large part to the world economic deceleration resulting from the Asian financial crisis. Regionally, between 1996 and 1998, real GDP growth rates decreased from 5.8 to 4 per cent in Asian LDCs and from 4.3 to 3.6 per cent in African LDCs. The Pacific island LDCs were hardest hit, with the 3.4 per cent GDP growth of 1996 falling to -4.6 per cent in 1998. Prospects for LDC economic growth would continue to be dependent on external economic conditions and the flow of external resources, as well as domestic weather and internal conflict situations.

Trade issues. A Coordinating Workshop for Senior Advisers to Ministers of Trade in LDCs (Sun City, South Africa, 21-25 June) [UNCTAD/LDC/106] adopted proposals for a comprehensive new plan of action for integrating LDCs into the global economy in the context of the third WTO Ministerial Conference (see PART SIX, Chapter XVII). The meeting, which was jointly sponsored by South Africa, UNCTAD and UNDP, reviewed the experiences and problems faced by LDCs in implementing the agreements resulting from the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations [YUN1994, p. 1474] and the impact of the agreements on their trade and development prospects. The question of enhancing the participation of LDCs in global trade rule-making and ways of maximizing the benefits of globalization to LDCs, while minimizing the risks, were also discussed. Measures were called for to overcome the marginalization of LDCs, as reflected in their low and declining share in world trade, investment and output. The report of the workshop—including a strategy of collective bargaining to further the interests of LDCs—would be part of the formal input from LDCs to the third WTO Ministerial Conference, to be held later in 1999, and to UNCTAD X (2000) and the third United Nations Conference on LDCs (2001).

The number of officially designated LDCs remained at 48 in 1999. They were: Afghanistan, Angola, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Kiribati, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, Myanmar, Nepal, Niger, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sudan, Togo, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Yemen, Zambia.

Communication. By a 22 July letter [E/1999/118 & Corr.1], Maldives transmitted to the Economic and Social Council President a letter from its President expressing concern at the 1997 recommendation of the Committee for Development Planning that Maldives be graduated from the LDC list after a review in 2000.

On 26 October, the Council, by decision 1999/290, postponed consideration of the graduation of Maldives from the LDC list until submission of a report of the Committee for Development Policy and completion of the review of the vulnerability index (see below).

Committee for Development Policy. In accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1998/39 [YUN 1998, p. 793], at its 1999 session [E/1999/33], the Committee for Development Policy reviewed the usefulness of a vulnerability index as a criterion to designate LDCs, proposing that the existing economic diversification index be replaced by a composite economic vulnerability index, giving equal weight to five indicators: export concentration; instability of export earnings; instability of agricultural production; share of manufacturing and modern services in GDP; and population size. A document—to be called "a country vulnerability profile"—should be prepared for some countries to provide a more detailed assessment of the impact of external economic and natural shocks on their economic performance and structure. Regarding other LDC criteria, the Committee proposed replacing the three-year average of per capita GDP by per capita GDP for a benchmark year (the same year for all countries), converted to United States dollars at the country's average exchange rates over three years and taking into account inflation. It also proposed two changes to the Augmented Physical Quality of Life Index: using the average calorie intake per capita as a percentage of average calorie requirements per capita; and using data on child mortality under five years of age instead of life expectancy at birth.

The Committee, which was responsible for adding countries to or graduating them from the list, would be conducting the next triennial review of the LDC list in 2000.

Programme of Action for the 1990s

The ninth annual review of progress in implementing the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted by the Second (1990) United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries [YUN 1990, p. 369] and endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 45/206 [ibid., p. 373], was carried out by the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board (TDB) in October. The background document was The Least Developed Countries 1999 Report [Sales No. E.99.II.D.2] (see above).

On 29 October [A/54/15/Rev.1 (agreed conclusions 457(XLVI))], the Board highlighted the need for more vigorous debt relief, increased flows of official development assistance (ODA) and improved productive capacity, as well as unencumbered market access for LDCs. Immediate action was called for to improve export opportunities and to assist the integration of LDCs into the multilateral trading system, especially by improving trade-related technical cooperation.

Report of Secretary-General. In August, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly an update on the implementation of the Programme of Action, including an overview of the recent economic performance of LDCs [A/54/269 & Corr.1]. The policies and measures adopted by LDCs in line with the recommendations of the Programme of Action and those of the mid-term global review of progress towards its implementation, conducted in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 863], were also reviewed, as were the overall arrangements for implementation, follow-up and monitoring of the Programme of Action at the national, regional and global levels. In addition, the report described measures taken by the UN system and provided information on international support related to external resources, debt and trade.

The Secretary-General concluded that, in most LDCs, progress in realizing the overall objectives of the Programme of Action had not been made during the 1990s. Their precarious socio-economic situation and the structural weaknesses inherent in their economies continued unabated. At the same time, globalization and liberalization had exposed additional supply-side constraints to improving the position of LDCs in the global economy. The challenges facing LDCs were beyond their capacity to overcome on their own. Financial, technical and commercial international support measures—including reversing the decline in ODA flows—were of critical importance to their future growth and development.

On 23 December, by decision 54/453, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report. In resolution 54/235 of the same date, which dealt mainly with preparations for the Third Conference (see below), the Assembly decided that the Programme of Action would continue to provide the framework for national and international action for LDCs until the adoption of the next programme of action at that Conference.

Third UN Conference on LDCs (2001)

In July, the preparatory process for the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, scheduled for 2001, was officially launched with the convening of the first inter-agency meeting (Geneva, 20 July) [A/CONF.191/IPC/7] and the first meeting of the consultative forum (Geneva, 21-22 July) [A/CONF.191/IPC/G]. The meetings were convened in accordance with resolution 53/182 [YUN 1998, p. 794], by which the General Assembly had also designated the UNCTAD Secretary-General as Secretary-General of the Conference.

The purpose of the inter-agency meeting was to ensure the full mobilization and coordination of all relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the UN system, as well as other relevant institutions, in preparations for and follow-up to the Conference. The consultative forum served as a consensus-building medium between the UN system and other stakeholders, including NGOs and the private sector, discussing and exchanging views on the conceptual framework of the objectives of the Conference, as well as on the intergovernmental preparatory process. Both meetings considered various aspects and steps of the preparatory process based on a note by the UNCTAD secretariat [UNCLDC/III/1]. The Conference—which was to assess the results of the Programme of Action and formulate a new action plan for sustainable development of LDCs up to the year 2010—would include some 2,000 participants, including heads of State and other high-level delegates, according to the note. During the Conference, analysis of past performance would shed light on the most critical constraints on the effective realization of the goals of the previous Programmes of Action and suggest new strategies to reverse them. Domestic and external constraints, which had limited the performance of LDCs, could be useful in determining the range of issues to be addressed by the Conference.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Economic Commission for Africa [E/1999/14/Add.3], adopted resolution 1999/40 without vote [agenda item 10].

Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 52/187 of 18 December 1997 and resolution 53/182 of 15 December 1998, in which the Assembly decided to convene the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries in the first semester of the year 2001 and accepted the offer of the European Union to host the Conference,

Recognizing the important role played by the Economic Commission for Africa in the preparatory process for the First and Second United Nations Conferences on the Least Developed Countries,

Noting that the mandate of the Conference is to assess the results of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s at the country level, to review the implementation of international support measures, in particular in the areas of official development assistance, debt, investment and trade, and to consider the formulation and adoption of appropriate national and international policies and measures for the sustainable development of the least developed countries and their progressive integration into the world economy,

1. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to provide, in collaboration with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in his capacity as the Secretary-General of the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, support to African least developed countries in their preparation for the Conference at the country, regional and global levels;

2. Invites the Executive Secretary to ensure that the Commission makes substantive technical contributions to the Conference and its preparatory process;

3. Invites the bilateral, regional and multilateral development partners of the least developed countries, the host of the Conference and the United Nations Development Programme to provide adequate technical and financial assistance to the least developed countries to ensure a substantive and effective preparatory process for the Conference at the country level;

4. Requests the Secretary-General of the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries to intensify his efforts to mobilize resources for the participation of representatives of the least developed countries in the envisaged regional expert-level meetings, the meetings of the intergovernmental preparatory committee and the Conference itself.

Report of Secretary-General. In an August report [A/54/271], the Secretary-General reviewed the state of preparations for the Third Conference, describing the official launch of the preparatory process and various meetings held so far. As a result of consultations with the European Union, it had been agreed that the Conference would be held in Brussels, Belgium, at a date to be decided upon between April and June 2001. Activities at the regional and country levels, the involvement of the private sector and NGOs, and the participation of LDCs were also outlined. The General Assembly, on 23 December, took note of the report (decision 54/453).

TDB action. On 29 October [A/54/15/Rev.1 (agreed conclusions 457(XLVI))], TDB welcomed the launching of the preparatory process for the Conference and called for its linkage with other relevant upcoming global meetings and conferences, including the third WTO Ministerial Conference, UNCTAD X, reviews of major global conferences, the Millennium Assembly and the high-level international intergovernmental consideration of financing for development (see also PART THREE, Chapter IV).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/54/487/Add.6], adopted resolution 54/235 without vote [agenda item 99 (f)].

Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/187 of 18 December 1997, in which it decided to convene the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries at a high level in 2001, as well as its resolution 53/182 of 15 December 1998,

Noting the progress made in the preparatory process for the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries,

Taking note of the Ministerial Declaration and Ministerial Statement on the South Summit adopted at the twenty-third annual meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77, held in New York on 24 September 1999, and the Declaration adopted by the Ninth Annual Ministerial Meeting of the Least Developed Countries, held in New York on 29 September 1999,

1. Recalls that the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries will convene in 2001, welcomes the offer of the European Union to host the Conference in Brussels, and decides to accept the offer;

2. Decides that the meeting of the intergovernmental preparatory committee envisaged in paragraph 4 of its resolution 53/182 will be held in New York in two parts, in the third quarter of 2000 and the first quarter of 2001, each for five working days;

3. Also decides that the Secretary-General of the Conference will organize the three expert-level preparatory meetings provided for in paragraph 4 of its resolution 53/182 at the venues and for the durations deemed most appropriate in consultation with Member States;

4. Requests the Secretary-General of the Conference to organize regional-level preparatory events in collaboration with the regional commissions and other relevant regional and subregional organizations, as appropriate;

5. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General of the Conference, in consultation with Member States and in cooperation with relevant organizations and agencies, to organize well-focused sectoral, thematic and country-specific round-table meetings, as appropriate, during the Conference to contribute to its work;

6. Emphasizes the importance of country-level preparations;

7. Notes with appreciation, in this regard, the initiative of the European Union to assist the least developed countries in their preparations at the country level through the assistance of their representatives in those countries, invites the World Bank, the United Nations Development Programme and all other relevant bodies and agencies of the United Nations system to provide support to country-level preparations through their field offices in the least developed countries, and calls upon the development partners to support this preparatory process;

8. Urges the organizations involved in the implementation of the Integrated Framework for Trade-related Technical Assistance, including for Human and Institutional Capacity-building, to Support Least Developed Countries in their Trade and Trade-related Activities to intensify their support for efforts to assist those countries in enhancing their export supply capacity and trade opportunities and to integrate them into the multilateral trading system, and requests the Secretary-General of the Conference to ensure that information on progress in the implementation of the Integrated Framework is included in the reports submitted to the preparatory committee and to the Conference itself;

9. Calls upon the least developed countries, together with their development partners, in particular the United Nations Development Programme and the World Bank, as appropriate, to link the forthcoming round-table and consultative group meetings to the country-level preparatory process for the Conference and to ensure that those meetings make substantive contributions to the Conference;

10. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, in his capacity as convener of the United Nations Development Group, to ensure the full involvement of United Nations resident coordinators and country teams in the least developed countries in the preparations for the Conference, in particular at the country level;

11. Calls upon the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the Conference, to convene inter-agency meetings, as necessary, to ensure the full mobilization and coordination of all relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, as well as other relevant institutions, for the purpose of carrying out preparations for and providing follow-up to the Conference;

12. Invites the Secretary-General of the Conference to make arrangements, on the basis of consultations with Member States, to facilitate the broad-based involvement of civil society, including non-governmental organizations and the private sector, in the preparatory process and in the Conference and its follow-up;

13. Requests the Secretary-General, with the assistance of concerned organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, including the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, to take the necessary measures to intensify their public information efforts and other appropriate initiatives to enhance public awareness in favour of the Conference, including by highlighting its objectives and significance;

14. Decides to defray the cost of the participation of two government representatives from each least developed country in the meetings of the preparatory committee and the Conference itself through the use of extrabudgetary resources, and, in the event that those resources prove to be insufficient, requests the Secretary-General to consider all other options, including the use of unspent balances from the regular budget for the biennium 1996-1997 as an exceptional measure;

15. Calls upon donor countries to provide financial support for the participation of the least developed countries in both the preparatory process and the Conference itself, and welcomes efforts already made to that effect;

16. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and Member States, to make the necessary arrangements, through redeployment and the use of other resources at their disposal, for the substantial strengthening of the Office of the Special Coordinator for Least Developed, Landlocked and Island Developing Countries, through the provision of sufficient staff and resources, with a view to enabling it to organize effectively and efficiently the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries and the follow-up to its outcome, while satisfactorily carrying out its mandates relating to the least developed, landlocked and small island developing countries;

17. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the state of preparations for the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, taking into account the consideration of the matter at the forty-seventh session of the Trade and Development Board;

18. Decides that the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s will continue to provide the framework for national and international action for the least developed countries until the adoption of the next programme of action at the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, and requests the Secretary-General to continue to give high priority to the implementation of the present and future programmes of action for the least developed countries on a system-wide basis and in the context of the follow-up to all major United Nations conferences and summits as well as all forthcoming events, including the tenth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, and the high-level international intergovernmental consideration of financing for development, including the preparatory process, and the Millennium Assembly;

19. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session an item entitled "Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries".

Island developing countries

In September, the General Assembly held its twenty-second special session to review and appraise the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States (SIDS), an integrated and comprehensive framework for the sustainable development of SIDS, adopted in 1994 at a Global Conference on the subject in Barbados [YUN 1994, p. 783]. The special session culminated in the adoption of a Declaration and a text on the state of progress and initiatives for the future implementation of the Programme of Action. The Declaration called for efforts to improve financial resources, capacity-building, institutional arrangements and technology transfer for the sustainable development of SIDS. The accompanying text presented a series of broad initiatives for the further implementation of the Programme of Action, including recommendations for urgent action in six sectoral areas: climate change, natural disasters, freshwater resources, coastal and marine resources, energy and tourism.

The Commission on Sustainable Development held preparatory discussions for the special session during its seventh session in April and at a resumed preparatory meeting in September.

Twenty-second special session

A special session of the General Assembly to review and appraise the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States was held in New York on 27 and 28 September, as decided by the Assembly on 7 April in resolution 53/189 B. The special session was convened in accordance with resolution S-19/2 [YUN 1997, p. 792], adopted in 1997 at the conclusion of the nineteenth special session of the Assembly, which reviewed the implementation of Agenda 21, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 672]. The twenty-second special session concluded with the adoption of a Declaration and a document on the state of progress and initiatives for the future implementation of the Programme of Action.

In other action, the Assembly, on 27 September, approved a number of organizational arrangements for the session (decision S-22/21), adopted the agenda (decision S-22/22), elected the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole of the Twenty-second Special Session, which discussed the text of the draft declaration (decision S-22/15) and decided on the NGOs that might make statements in the debate in plenary (decision S-22/23). On 28 September, the Assembly approved the Credentials Committee's report (resolution S-22/1) and transmitted to its fifty-fourth session a draft resolution on promoting an integrated management approach to the Caribbean Sea, contained in a 24 September letter from Canada [A/S-22/6] (decision S-22/24). The Assembly took action on that draft by resolution 54/225 (see p. 995).

Among the documents before the special session were the report of the Commission on Sustainable Development acting as the preparatory body for the session [A/S-22/2 & Add.1], a Ministerial Declaration on Agriculture in SIDS, adopted by a Special Ministerial Conference (Rome, Italy, 12 March), and a Plan of Action on Agriculture in SIDS [A/S-22/3], and the report of a meeting of representatives of donors and SIDS (New York, 24-26 February) [A/S-22/4].

Preparatory meetings. Acting as preparatory body for the twenty-second special session, the Commission on Sustainable Development convened two meetings (23 and 30 April) and a number of informal working groups during its seventh session (see above) [A/S-22/2]. The provisional agenda and other organizational arrangements for the special session were approved and recommended to the General Assembly for adoption. The Commission also recommended authorization of a resumed preparatory session for two days in September. In addition, the list of speakers and accreditation of NGOs for the special session were approved.

At its seventh session [E/1999/29 (dec. 7/7)], the Commission requested that budget deliberations for the biennium 2000-2001 by the Committee for Programme and Coordination, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee take into account relevant outcomes of the special session.

As authorized in a 24 August letter from the Chairman of the Committee on Conferences to the President of the General Assembly [A/53/1043] and noted by the Assembly on 2 September (decision 53/486), the Commission held a two-day resumed preparatory session on 9 and 10 September in order to complete its work [A/S-22/2/Add.1]. On 10 September, the preparatory body transmitted a draft declaration and a draft text on the state of progress and initiatives for the future implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of SIDS to the special session for further consideration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 September [meeting 5], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole of the Twenty-second Special Session [A/S-22/9/Rev.1], adopted resolution S/22-2 without vote [agenda item 8].

Declaration and state of progress and initiatives for the future implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States

The General Assembly

Adopts the Declaration and the text entitled "State of progress and initiatives for the future implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States" contained in the annex to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Declaration and state of progress and initiatives for the future implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States

Declaration

We, the States participating in the special session of the General Assembly for the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States,

Having met at United Nations Headquarters on 27 and 28 September 1999,

Reaffirming the principles of and commitments to sustainable development embodied in the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, Agenda 21, the Declaration of Barbados and the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States,

Recalling resolution S-19/2 of 28 June 1997, adopted by the General Assembly at its nineteenth special session, as well as the decisions adopted by the Commission on Sustainable Development at its fourth, sixth and seventh sessions,

Recognizing that small island developing States share a common aspiration for economic development and improved living standards and remain strongly committed to conserving the natural and cultural heritage upon which their future depends, and considering that the review of the further implementation of the Programme of Action aims to build on agreements already reached by the small island developing States and the international community concerning sustainable development, and that it provides a measure of progress towards sustainable development among those States and their regions and identifies where special attention is required to advance further the implementation of sustainable development,

Recalling that small island developing States are recognized as a special case for both environment and development because they are ecologically fragile and economically vulnerable, they face particular constraints in their efforts to achieve sustainable development and their specific physical circumstances often make it difficult for them to benefit from global economic development and thus achieve sustainable development,

Reaffirming that the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States translated Agenda 21 into specific policies, actions and measures to be taken at the international, national and regional levels to enable small island developing States to address those constraints and achieve sustainable development,

Recognizing that communities of small island developing States are custodians of large areas of the world's oceans and have a high share of global biodiversity, that they are at the forefront in the fight against climate change and that their exposure and predicament underline the urgent need to take action to implement the Programme of Action,

Recognizing also that solutions found in this regard may provide examples beneficial to other countries around the world,

Recognizing further that considerable efforts have been made at all levels to implement the Programme of Action, and that there is a need for these efforts to be further supplemented by effective support from the international community, including financial support, by institutional strengthening and improved coordination, by targeted capacity-building and by facilitating the transfer of environmentally sound technologies in accordance with paragraph 34.14 (b) of Agenda 21,

Having considered progress reports on the implementation of the Programme of Action and the views expressed by delegations at the special session,

Convinced that the implementation of the Programme of Action must be accelerated by progress in the cross-cutting and interlinked areas of capacity-building, financing and technology transfer, and that institutional arrangements should be strengthened for its successful implementation,

1. Welcome the efforts by small island developing States to implement the commitments of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States and the support of the international community, and note that these efforts have been affected by financial and other resource constraints and by global economic and environmental factors;

2. Welcome also the continued efforts of small island developing States to formulate national sustainable development strategies;

3. Encourage the efforts of all parties to foster an enabling environment to assist small island developing States in addressing overarching issues so as to achieve sustainable development;

4. Call upon the international community to provide effective means, including adequate, predictable, new and additional financial resources, in accordance with chapter 33 of Agenda 21 and paragraphs 91 to 95 of the Programme of Action, to support efforts to achieve the full implementation of the Programme of Action, particularly in tackling complex issues, such as poverty, as highlighted in paragraph 6 of the text entitled "State of progress and initiatives for the future implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States", which appears below;

5. Also call upon the international community to provide support for capacity- and institution-building programmes and projects in small island developing States and, where appropriate, to support the establishment of training centres and other relevant capacity-building efforts;

6. Call for increased efforts to assist small island developing States in obtaining the transfer of environmentally sound technology, as set forth in the Programme of Action, needed for them to achieve sustainable development and implement the Programme of Action;

7. Call upon the Secretary-General to improve the existing institutional arrangements in the United Nations effectively to support small island developing States so that the United Nations system becomes more proactive in promoting and assisting sustainable development in those States;

8. Welcome the continued efforts of the Alliance of Small Island States in promoting the interests and concerns of small island developing States, including in the implementation of the Programme of Action;

9. Endorse the series of broad initiatives for the further implementation of the Programme of Action as outlined in the recommendations of the Commission on Sustainable Development acting as the preparatory body for the twenty-second special session, as set forth below.

State of progress and initiatives for the future implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States

I. Introduction

1. Since its adoption in 1994 at the Global Conference for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, all chapters of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, which contain an integrated and comprehensive basis for the sustainable development of small island developing States, have been reviewed by the Commission on Sustainable Development at its fourth session, in 1996, and at its sixth session, in 1998. At its seventh session, in 1999, the Commission, in preparation for the special session of the General Assembly for the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action, further reviewed the progress made in the implementation of the Programme of Action and identified the following areas for priority action, including the means for their implementation: climate change, including climate variability and sea level rise; natural disasters; freshwater resources; coastal and marine resources; energy; and tourism. The Commission recognized that the sectoral focus of its review should not detract from the need for a full and comprehensive implementation of all chapters of the Programme of Action. The Commission emphasized that the Programme of Action remained a valuable and living framework for the sustainable development efforts being undertaken by small island developing States, and noted the actions taken by Governments, regional commissions and organizations, organizations of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in support of activities relating to its implementation. The special session of the General Assembly reaffirms the commitment of the international community to the continued implementation of the Programme of Action.

2. The Commission on Sustainable Development, at its seventh session, also took note of the results of the meeting of representatives of donors and small island developing States, from 24 to 26 February 1999, which, inter alia, considered a compendium of national and regional project proposals. The meeting underscored the strong sense of commitment to and ownership of the Programme of Action by small island developing States, and was welcomed as contributing towards strengthening and enriching the partnership between small island developing States and the international community. It also noted that, in accordance with their responsibility, considerable efforts had been made by small island developing States at the national and regional levels to meet the priorities and objectives of the Programme of Action, especially the elaboration of national sustainable development strategies. Consistent with their special concerns, and bearing in mind that small island developing States are custodians of a significant portion of the world's oceans and seas and their resources, small island developing States have been actively and constructively engaged in international negotiations in pursuing integrated approaches in such areas as climate change, biodiversity, law of the sea, sustainable fisheries and marine pollution, and have undertaken efforts to meet their commitments under related international agreements.

3. At the nineteenth special session of the General Assembly, held in 1997, the international community reiterated its recognition of the specific constraints faced by small island developing States and the need for particular support in their efforts to advance sustainable development owing to their small size and remoteness, ecological fragility, vulnerability to climate change and economic vulnerabilities. Small island developing States share many concerns and constraints with regard to sustainable development and are affected by them in varying degrees. The specificity of the situation and needs of small island developing States in relation to sustainable development were acknowledged in Agenda 21 and further articulated in the Programme of Action. Constraints to the sustainable development of small island developing States include a narrow resource base, which does not allow those States to benefit from economies of scale; small domestic markets and heavy dependence on a few external and remote markets; high costs of energy, infrastructure, transportation, communication and servicing; long distances from export markets and import sources; low and irregular international traffic volumes; little resilience to natural disasters; rising populations; high volatility of economic growth; limited opportunities for the private sector and a disproportionately large reliance of their economies on the public sector; and fragile natural environments.

4. At its seventh session, the Commission on Sustainable Development also noted that since the holding of the Global Conference in 1994, the pace of globalization and trade liberalization had affected the economies of small island developing States by presenting new problems and opportunities for them and increasing the need for focused implementation of the Programme of Action. As a result of globalization, national policy frameworks and external factors, including trade impacts, have become critical in determining the success or failure of small island developing States in their national efforts. These States are particularly concerned that the specific problems and vulnerabilities confronting them exacerbate the difficulties encountered in their efforts to integrate into the world economy, particularly in the areas of trade, investment, commodities and capital markets. In order to address these challenges, small island developing States are undertaking domestic reforms in the area of macroeconomic policy to facilitate integration into the global economy. At the regional level, they have also begun to put in place appropriate policy frameworks and arrangements to integrate their economic, social and environmental approaches to sustainable development in order to maximize opportunities available to them and minimize the constraints they face. A mutually supportive balance between the international and national environment is needed so as to achieve sustainable development.

5. The General Assembly recognizes that, while it is up to small island developing States to pursue sustainable development and all partners should foster an enabling environment, the international community is committed to taking further measures to support those States in this regard. The Commission on Sustainable Development recognized that the further successful implementation of the Programme of Action would require action by all partners in the following areas: fostering of an enabling environment for investment and external assistance; resource mobilization and financing; transfer of environmentally sound technologies as set forth in the Programme of Action; and capacity-building, including education, training, awareness-raising and institutional development. The Commission assessed the progress made since the Global Conference by the international community in responding to the financial provisions of the Programme of Action, including through mobilization of resources, initiation of discussions on financing for development, work on a vulnerability index, donor coordination, strengthened and expanded partnerships, mainstreaming sustainable development activities and working to ensure a better response from institutions to efforts of small island developing States to achieve sustainable development, especially through capacity-building. The Commission reiterated the need for more focused action at all levels, including the international level, to strengthen support, including financial support from all sources, to small island developing States for programmes and projects targeted towards capacity- and institution-building, facilitating the access of those States to, and the transfer and use of, environmentally sound technology, as set forth in the Programme of Action. In order to facilitate targeted action in these areas, there is a need for Governments of small island developing States to develop or strengthen an effective policy framework along with national and regional sustainable development strategies or plans of action.

6. Poverty remains a major problem affecting the capacity of many small island developing States to achieve sustainable development. The complexity, pervasiveness and persistence of poverty has compromised the ability of States to provide basic social services, including basic education, health care, nutrition, clean water and sanitation, and to undertake effective land and coastal area management and urban planning and development. Poverty in small island developing States has been exacerbated by increasing levels of unemployment; the two problems need to be addressed in tandem in order to deal effectively with the crippling effect of poverty on sustainable development capacity. Eradication of poverty is therefore a serious issue and an objective of high priority for small island developing States, and requires the integration of economic, environmental and social components of action to achieve sustainable development.

7. At its seventh session, the Commission on Sustainable Development concluded that, among other things, the full, effective, and long-term implementation of the Programme of Action required a strong and committed partnership between small island developing States and the international community. The Commission encouraged the continuation and strengthening of the partnership between small island developing States and their private sector. It also encouraged the private sector of other countries to develop further partnerships with small island developing States.

II. Sectoral areas requiring urgent action

A. Climate change

8. Small island developing States are among those States most at risk from the adverse effects of climate change. The capacities and means to adapt to this phenomenon are an absolute necessity for them. The involvement and committed support of the international community are critical complements to small island developing States' own efforts in any response and long-term planning by those States. International support is particularly required for identifying adaptation options and linking efforts to reduce vulnerability with the best available information.

9. In the context of actions being undertaken to address these issues and on the basis of a strong and committed partnership between small island developing States and the international community, the international community and small island developing States should pursue and support the following goals, objectives and activities, including through specific modalities, to assist in the continued implementation of the Programme of Action:

(a) Improvement of the capacity of small island developing States to respond adequately and adapt to climate change and to participate in and make the necessary linkages to other international activities, such as the study of climate variability;

(b) Improvement of work on capabilities for climate prediction;

(c) Closer collaboration between the Small Island Developing States Unit of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat and the secretariat of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change so that information can be readily incorporated into the overall planning for long-term adaptation.

B. Natural and environmental disasters and climate variability

10. Small island developing States are prone to extremely damaging natural disasters, primarily in the form of cyclones, volcanic eruptions and earthquakes, and are subject to effects of climate variability. In some islands, the range of these disasters and phenomena includes storm surges, landslides, extended droughts and extensive floods. During 1997-1998, the El Niño phenomenon had its strongest impact on record on the sustainable development of many small island developing States.

11. In the context of actions being undertaken to address these issues and on the basis of a strong and committed partnership between small island developing States and the international community, the international community and small island developing States should pursue and support the following goals, objectives and activities, including through specific modalities, to assist in the continued implementation of the Programme of Action:

(a) Greater effort to improve the scientific understanding of severe weather events, such as those associated with the El Niño/Southern Oscillation phenomenon, and the development of long-term strategies for prediction and reduction of their impact;

(b) Improvement of work on capabilities for natural disaster reduction and early warning systems, including in-depth assessment and consideration of effective means of natural disaster reduction;

(c) Development of partnerships between small island developing States and the private sector consistent with responsible business practices to implement schemes that spread out risks, reduce insurance premiums, expand insurance coverage and thereby increase financing for post-disaster reconstruction and rehabilitation.

C. Freshwater resources

12. The issue of freshwater availability is crucial for small island developing States in all regions. Surface water and groundwater resources are limited by the small watershed and aquifer-recharge areas, and urban expansion has further affected the availability and quality of water resources. The geophysical characteristics of many small islands leave them vulnerable to extreme climatological, seismic and volcanic events and, more critically, to periods of drought, low recharge and adverse environmental impacts, including pollution, saline intrusion and soil erosion, among others, and they require increased attention to watershed management and land and water use planning.

13. In the context of actions being undertaken to address these issues and on the basis of a strong and committed partnership between small island developing States and the international community, the international community and small island developing States should pursue and support the following goals, objectives and activities, including through specific modalities, to assist in the continued implementation of the Programme of Action:

(a) Implementation of Commission on Sustainable Development decision 6/1, relating to its programme of work on freshwater issues in the special context of small island developing States;

(b) Improvement of assessment, planning and integrated management of freshwater resources in the special context of small island developing States;

(c) Coordination and refocusing of aid and other programmes and projects designed to assist small island developing States, as and where appropriate, in developing or implementing national policies, strategies and legal frameworks, as well as coherent plans and actions, within an integrated water resources management approach.

D. Coastal and marine resources

14. The health, protection and preservation of coastal and marine resources are fundamental to the well-being and sustainable development of small island developing States. Improved coastal and ocean management as well as conservation of the coasts, oceans and seas and the sustainable use of coastal and marine resources and arrangements and initiatives, including efforts aimed at reducing land- and sea-based pollution, are critical both in support of regional fisheries organizations and in maintaining the oceans as a source of food and a principal factor in tourism development.

15. In the context of actions being undertaken to address these issues and on the basis of a strong and committed partnership between small island developing States and the international community, the international community and small island developing States should pursue and support the following goals, objectives and activities, including through specific modalities, to assist in the continued implementation of the Programme of Action:

(a) Establishment and/or strengthening of programmes to build capacity and assess and manage the vast oceanic resources of small island developing States, and establishment and/or strengthening of specific regional or subregional arrangements for addressing issues concerning oceans and small island developing States;

(b) Establishment and/or strengthening of programmes within the framework of the Global Programme of Action for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities and the regional seas programme to assess the impact of planning and development on the coastal environment, including coastal communities, wetlands, coral reef habitats and the areas under the sovereignty or national jurisdiction of small island developing States and to implement the Programme of Action;

(c) Strengthening of national capacity for the development of a methodology or guidelines for sound practices and techniques suitable for small island developing States, for achieving the integrated management and sustainable development of the coastal and marine areas under the sovereignty or national jurisdiction of small island developing States, building on existing experience in that area;

(d) Scientific research and analysis relevant to the conservation and management of highly migratory and straddling fish stocks on the high seas and in the marine areas under the sovereignty or national jurisdiction of small island developing States;

(e) Enhancement of the conservation and sustainable management and utilization of coastal zone ecosystems and resources of the marine areas under the sovereignty or national jurisdiction of small island developing States;

(f) Ratification of or accession by States to the 1995 United Nations Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks, and the 1993 Agreement to Promote Compliance with International Conservation and Management Measures by Fishing Vessels on the High Seas, of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, and active participation by small island developing States in emerging and existing regional fisheries management organizations in order for these agreements to be fully implemented;

(g) Formulation of policies, strategies and measures to address the needs of fisheries, including the urgent need to address illegal, unregulated and unreported fishing in the marine areas under the sovereignty or national jurisdiction of small island developing States, to ensure essential sources of food supplies for island populations and economic development;

(h) Strengthening of national, regional and sub-regional capacity for negotiating fishing agreements;

(i) Strengthening of national, regional and sub-regional capacity for the promotion, assessment and monitoring of commercial investment in sustainable fisheries, including in catching, processing and marketing, as well as, where appropriate, in environmentally sound methods of aquaculture to increase ownership and improve management of commercial fisheries by communities within small island developing States and to promote national activities in the context of the Code of Conduct for Responsible Fisheries, keeping in mind the International Plan of Action on Management of Fishing Capacity adopted in 1999 by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations;

(j) Greater regional coordination in management and monitoring, control and surveillance, including vessel monitoring systems and enforcement, consistent with international agreements between coastal countries and fishing countries, in the marine areas under the sovereignty or national jurisdiction of small island developing States, including the management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks;

(k) Assistance to small island developing States in assessing the impact of land-based sources of marine pollution, in developing mechanisms to eliminate or minimize pollution sources and in participating in the implementation of the Programme of Action;

(l) Recalling the provisions of paragraph 24 C (iii) of the Programme of Action, and reaffirming that the implementation of that paragraph shall be consistent with international law, including the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea and other relevant existing international legal instruments, in particular those mentioned in paragraph 67 of the Programme of Action;

(m) Taking into account the views and concerns of small island developing States that the transboundary movement of hazardous and radioactive wastes is not adequately covered in the existing international legal regimes, in particular regarding safety measures, disclosure, liability and compensation in relation to accidents and remedial measures in relation to contamination from such wastes, calling upon States and relevant international organizations to continue to address these concerns in a specific and comprehensive manner, and calling upon the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly no later than at its fifty-sixth session on the efforts and measures undertaken and progress achieved;

(n) Continuation of efforts to implement the Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal.

16. Action is needed to sustain healthy reefs. Such action will build on the International Coral Reef Initiative and global reef assessments to ensure food security and fish stock replenishment, and will provide a focus for implementation of the Jakarta Mandate on the Conservation and Sustainable Use of Marine and Coastal Biological Diversity, including in marine-protected areas, and the Global Programme of Action for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities.

17. In the context of actions being undertaken to address these issues and on the basis of a strong and committed partnership between small island developing States and the international community, the international community and small island developing States should pursue and support the following goals, objectives and activities, including through specific modalities, to assist in the continued implementation of the Programme of Action:

- (a) Encouragement of national and regional community-based reef conservation and management;
- (b) Initiatives related to alternative livelihoods, such as aquaculture and ecotourism;
- (c) Post-harvest technology and management initiatives;
- (d) Integrated reef management initiatives;
- (e) Research, monitoring and transfer of technology, as set forth in the Programme of Action, to assess the impact of the exploration of non-living resources on the coastal and marine environments;
- (f) Further implementation of coral reef action plans as part of the International Coral Reef Initiative and its "call to action", "renewed call to action" and "framework for action".

E. Energy

18. In view of the dependency of small island developing States on conventional energy sources, there is a need for mobilization of resources from all sources, including from the private sector, for the provision of technical, financial and technological assistance, as appropriate, to small island developing States, in order to encourage energy efficiency and to accelerate and maximize the development and utilization of environmentally sound renewable energy sources.

19. In the context of actions being undertaken to address these issues and on the basis of a strong and committed partnership between small island developing States and the international community, the international community and small island developing States should pursue and support the following goals, objectives and activities, including through specific modalities, to assist in the continued implementation of the Programme of Action:

- (a) Establishment of renewable energy initiatives at the regional level so as to avoid duplication of efforts and to achieve economies of scale;
- (b) Development of human resources for the planning and sustainable management needs of a renewable energy sector;
- (c) Promotion of research and development and private sector investment in priority renewable energy projects;
- (d) Financing of renewable energy applications, including standards and guidelines for energy efficiency and conservation;
- (e) Implementation in small island developing States of the best practices to achieve clean, sustainable energy resources and encouragement of private sector involvement in the utilization of renewable energy resources and innovative financing schemes with a view to longer-term self-sufficiency in energy resources.

F. Tourism

20. The development and promotion of sustainable tourism will require efforts by small island developing States undertaken at the national and regional levels. In this regard, there is a need for continued international support and cooperation. Particular attention will be required to coordinate ecotourism ventures at the regional level and to facilitate the sharing of information and experiences and the integration of the private sector within official development assistance-supported ecotourism projects. Specific actions have been identified in the report of the United Nations Environment Programme and the World Tourism Organization on sustainable tourism development for small island developing States. In this regard, the special session took note of decision 7/3 on tourism and sustainable development adopted by the Commission on Sustainable Development at its seventh session, and called for its application, as appropriate, to small island developing States.

21. In the context of actions being undertaken to address these issues and on the basis of a strong and committed partnership between small island developing States and the international community, the international community and small island developing States should pursue and support the following goals, objectives and activities, including through specific modalities, to assist in the continued implementation of the Programme of Action:

- (a) Establishment of regional and national environmental assessment programmes to address the carrying capacity of natural resources, including the social, economic and cultural implications of tourism development;
- (b) Strengthening of institutional capacity-building in the tourism sector and promotion of environmental protection and the preservation of cultural heritage through local community awareness and participation;
- (c) Encouragement of the use of modern technologies and communications systems that effectively maximize the use of global, regional and national information in support of sustainable tourism development;
- (d) Improvement of the collection and use of tourism data as a means to facilitate the development of sustainable tourism;
- (e) Establishment of partnerships for sustainable tourism to conserve and utilize limited resources effectively, based on consumer and market demand and the development of community-based initiatives. Destination marketing should preserve local culture and a healthy environment;
- (f) Building of institutional capacity, further development of human resources at all levels of the tourism industry, with particular emphasis on small- and medium-sized enterprises, and improvement of the capacity to utilize modern technologies.

22. In the context of actions being undertaken to address these issues and on the basis of a strong and committed partnership between small island developing States and the international community, the international community and small island developing States should pursue and support the following goals, objectives and activities, including through specific modalities, to assist in the continued implementation of the Programme of Action:

- (a) Enhancement of sustainable tourism and sustainably managed tourism operations through the adoption of appropriate regulations, a voluntary code of conduct, criteria for best practices and other innovative measures;

(b) Mobilization of adequate resources from all sources to assist small island developing States in strengthening institutional capacity, human resources and environmental protection;

(c) Improvement of the capacity of small island developing States to implement treaty requirements of the International Civil Aviation Organization and the International Maritime Organization.

23. The linkages between sustainable tourism, energy and transport are of considerable importance to developing countries, in particular the least developed countries and the small island developing States among them. This should be borne in mind in preparation for the consideration of the agenda item on energy and transport at the ninth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development.

III. Means of implementation

A. Sustainable development strategies

24. National and regional sustainable development strategies allow for a more effective use of national and regional human, institutional, financial and natural resources, as well as cooperation at the regional and interregional levels. Comprehensive and collaborative strategies can also provide a solid basis for the more efficient and cost-effective implementation of donor-assisted programmes and projects. This is especially the case if these strategies are conceived as action-oriented, allowing for a process of step-by-step improvements and adjustments, and as an instrument to promote broader participation of all relevant groups and civil society.

25. In the context of actions being undertaken to address these issues and on the basis of a strong and committed partnership between small island developing States and the international community, the international community and small island developing States should pursue and support the following goals, objectives and activities, including through specific modalities, to assist in the continued implementation of the Programme of Action:

(a) Renewed commitment by small island developing States to the completion of national sustainable development strategies and, as appropriate, of regional and subregional strategies, ideally before the target date of 2002 as agreed at the nineteenth special session of the General Assembly, so as to enable the earliest possible implementation of those strategies;

(b) Exchange of experience among different island regions in the implementation of their national sustainable development strategies;

(c) Formulation of sustainable development strategies through transparent and participatory approaches and, to the extent possible, establishment of clear indicators and benchmarks of progress which, while reflecting individual country circumstances, will also reflect wider goals, including regional objectives. Such indicators should also provide a framework for measuring and evaluating the effectiveness of national implementation strategies and international cooperation in this regard;

(d) Strengthening of national and regional statistical and analytical services so that they can adequately record and measure progress, including changes in the vulnerability and fragility of the economic and environmental conditions of small island developing States. Data collection should be gender- and age-disaggregated;

(e) Consistency with the goals of the programmes and plans of action of the international sustainable development strategies, adopted at successive global conferences of the 1990s.

B. Capacity-building

26. Capacity-building remains critical to the long-term sustainable development of small island developing States. Those States are determined to continue their efforts at capacity-building. Concern remains in respect of the levels of external assistance for capacity-building. Mobilization of resources from all sources is essential to enable small island developing States to continue their commitment to sustainable development at all levels, in particular to build capacity for the implementation of the Programme of Action.

27. In the context of actions being undertaken to address these issues and on the basis of a strong and committed partnership between small island developing States and the international community, the international community and small island developing States should pursue and support the following goals, objectives and activities, including through specific modalities, to assist in the continued implementation of the Programme of Action:

(a) Continued development and implementation of sustainable development strategies to strengthen institutional capacity;

(b) Promotion of education for sustainable development, including training in demographic issues and gender balance in the delivery of all education and public-awareness programmes;

(c) Building, as appropriate, with international support to sectoral agencies, of the capacities of small island developing States for operationalizing sustainable development management concepts, including, where appropriate, the ecosystem approach;

(d) Increased use of traditional and indigenous skills-training and awareness-raising approaches, use of local languages in the development and presentation of resource material and involvement of local communities in education, training and awareness programmes;

(e) Continued development and strengthening of public-private partnerships involving the full range of potential partners to promote and support sustainable development;

(f) Strengthening of regional technical training and scientific research centres, scientific research, including the improvement of data and data collection, and centres of excellence in tourism and sustainable development.

C. Resource mobilization and finance

28. Resource mobilization is clearly one of the main challenges for small island developing States, and while their concern with resource constraints is by no means new, small island developing States believe it must be addressed with a new resolve by all partners if the special session is to provide the needed impetus to implement the Programme of Action. Adequate financial resources at all levels remain crucial to the continued implementation of the Programme of Action.

Availability of and access to appropriate and current technology and improved baseline information and environmental data to address technical issues are also crucial. The successful implementation of the Programme of Action will thus require the provision of effective means, including adequate, predictable, new and additional financial resources, in accordance with chapter 33 of Agenda 21, paragraphs 91 to 95 of the Programme of Action and paragraphs 76 to 87 of the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21. The mobilization of resources will also be necessary for the transfer of environmentally sound technology, as set forth in the Programme of Action, and for science and technology and capacity-building, including education, awareness-raising and institutional development.

29. Many small island developing States find it increasingly difficult to access concessional development finance owing to the application of criteria by some members of the international community which focus on their relatively higher per capita gross national product levels without taking full account of their actual levels of development, vulnerability or standard of living in real terms. Financial requirements and technical support remain as critical as ever if the implementation of the Programme of Action is to progress further, and will depend ultimately on the resources that small island developing States can mobilize from internal and external sources to meet the great challenges of sustainable development in general and capacity-building in particular. Recognizing that small island developing States are among the most environmentally vulnerable, the Commission on Sustainable Development urged the international community to give special priority to their situations and needs, including through access to grants and other concessional resources.

30. Statistics provided through the Commission on Sustainable Development indicate that the overall decline in official development assistance has also affected small island developing States, for which net bilateral and multilateral disbursements have decreased from US$2,366.2 million in 1994 to $1,966.2 million in 1997.

31. It is recognized that financial resources for sustainable development need to be further mobilized at the national level, in accordance with national priorities and capacity. Small island developing States must also intensify their search for new modalities for resource mobilization, particularly for regional initiatives. Donors and small island developing States should make more efficient use of existing resources, including through better coordination. Action should be initiated to optimize the role of existing regional coordinating mechanisms. Possibilities for encouraging private sector cooperation with partners in small island developing States should be an area for further attention in the follow-up to the Programme of Action. Resources could also be mobilized through the adoption of a regional approach to issues of policy, legislation and technical development.

32. The responsiveness of such international funding sources as the Global Environment Facility to issues concerning small island developing States has been welcomed, particularly in relation to the implementation of the commitments of those States under the relevant conventions, and the Facility will remain an important channel for financial resources to assist those States. Overall, access by small island developing States to multilateral financial institutions and the responsiveness of those institutions should be improved.

33. In the context of actions being undertaken to address these issues and on the basis of a strong and committed partnership between small island developing States and the international community, the international community and small island developing States should pursue and support the following goals, objectives and activities, including through specific modalities, to assist in the continued implementation of the Programme of Action:

(a) Identification of programmes and projects, with particular reference to the areas identified for urgent action which could be financed by the Global Environment Facility and other multilateral financial mechanisms;

(b) Improvement of the effectiveness of bilateral and multilateral development assistance, including by streamlining and harmonizing procedures, indicators and reporting methods, and by promoting coordination among donors;

(c) Building on the recent meeting of representatives of donors and small island developing States, with special consideration from the international community for new and additional financial commitments and disbursements of resources, as well as better and more efficient use of official development assistance and other existing external sources of finance, taking into account the specific development needs and priorities of small island developing States;

(d) Evaluation of project proposals submitted by small island developing States by competent authorities, taking into account the specific development needs and priorities of those States and paying particular attention to the areas of the Programme of Action which have not yet received adequate resources;

(e) Inviting international financial institutions to continue their commitment to sustainable development projects and programmes in small island developing States.

D. Globalization and trade liberalization

34. Small island developing States face new challenges and opportunities from globalization and have diverse capacities to adapt. Thus, the potential benefits to small island developing States from globalization and trade liberalization will be severely constrained unless their limitations and vulnerabilities are further recognized by the international community, including the relevant international organizations. There is therefore an urgent need to facilitate the integration of the economies of those States into the world economy in a sustainable manner, including through specific provisions and measures. This should be given due consideration in the ongoing work being done by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and by the World Trade Organization, taking into account, among other considerations, within the context of trade liberalization, the effects on the economies of small island developing States of the erosion of trade preferences, as well as difficulties faced with diversification and access markets.

35. In the context of actions being undertaken to address these issues and on the basis of a strong and committed partnership between small island developing States and the international community, the international community and small island developing States should pursue and support the following goals, objectives and activities, including through specific modalities, to assist in the continued implementation of the Programme of Action:

(a) Addressing, as appropriate, the disadvantages and the vulnerabilities of small island developing States in the context of international trade, including market access, taking into account the consequences, positive and negative, of globalization and trade liberalization on small island developing States, and the need to facilitate their integration into the global market;

(b) Addressing the adverse consequences and benefits, existing and potential, of globalization and trade liberalization for the economies of small island developing States, and assisting those States, as appropriate, in improving their competitiveness, including through provisions and specific measures. In this regard the multilateral trading system is encouraged to consider, as appropriate, the grant of special and differential treatment;

(c) Calling upon the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in consultation with small island developing States, to address the economic situation and trading prospects of those States in its ongoing comprehensive examination of the impact of globalization and trade liberalization on their economies during the fifty-fourth session of the General Assembly;

(d) Calling upon the international community to provide support to small island developing States, as necessary, towards the improvement and strengthening of their capabilities in trade policy, trade efficiency policies and trade in services, including in electronic commerce, to assist them in coping with the challenge posed by the globalization of markets;

(e) Calling upon the international community to provide support and technical assistance, as necessary, to small island developing States, including in capacity-building, to enhance their effective participation in multilateral trade negotiations, activities and dispute settlement, including the dispute settlement mechanism of the World Trade Organization, and formulating a positive agenda for future trade negotiations;

(f) Addressing, as appropriate, the difficulties of diversification in the economies of small island developing States.

E. Transfer of environmentally sound technology

36. Small island developing States have special characteristics and concerns in such areas as the environment. The development and application of new approaches and technologies to mitigate greenhouse gas emissions and to adapt to the effects of climate change are critical to them. In order to enhance their effectiveness, these technologies should be modified, if necessary, to take into account the special needs of small island developing States, and emphasis should be placed on technologies that are low in cost and proven in terms of environmental benefit and security, such as renewable energy and conservation technologies. Small island developing States have devoted considerable time, effort and resources to work on technologies and technology information. Continued financial and technical support from all sources is needed.

37. Small island developing States are at different stages in assessing nationally their vulnerabilities and ways of adapting to climate change. They recognize that further study, research and analysis are required to assess the effects of climate change. One particular urgency is to identify appropriate technology to meet the needs of low-lying small island developing States whose national freshwater supplies are already contaminated by saline intrusion. International efforts in studying the problems, conducting research and developing adaptation technologies could usefully complement and strengthen the work begun by small island developing States.

38. In the context of actions being undertaken to address these issues and on the basis of a strong and committed partnership between small island developing States and the international community, the international community and small island developing States should pursue and support the following goals, objectives and activities, including through specific modalities, to assist in the continued implementation of the Programme of Action:

(a) Development, with the participation of small island developing States, of clean technology initiatives, including the identification of investment opportunities in environmentally sound technologies and environmental management practices;

(b) Promotion of access by small island developing States to information on the availability of environmentally sound technologies and terms of their transfer, in particular in areas identified for priority action;

(c) Capacity-building of small island developing States for science and technology needs assessment and technology assessment;

(d) Provision of support to small island developing States in the development of networking technology-related institutional support structures, including information systems and sources, technology centres, enterprise development centres and research and development institutions;

(e) Provision of multilateral and bilateral support to small island developing States and their institutions involved in technologies and technology information;

(f) Encouragement of private sector participation, inter alia, through the use of partnership arrangements, including public-private partnerships, in developing cooperation between small island developing States and other countries in order to facilitate the transfer and use of environmentally sound technology and environmentally sound technology-related investments to those States as set forth in the Programme of Action;

(g) Encouragement of strategic alliances between research and development institutions and potential technology users to harness the creative capabilities of the scientific communities in the development of new, proven and innovative adaptation strategies and relevant technologies suitable to the particular circumstances of small island developing States, for example, in the context of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change.

F. Vulnerability index

39. At its sixth session, the Commission on Sustainable Development recalled that a vulnerability index that takes account of the constraints arising from small size and environmental fragility, as well as the incidence of natural disasters on a national scale, and the consequent relationship of those constraints to economic vulnerability, would assist in defining the vulnerability of small island developing States and in identifying the challenges to their sustainable development. It has also been recognized that a vulnerability index of environmental as well as socio-economic parameters, which takes fully into account the special circumstances and vulnerabilities of small island developing States, could be useful. The widespread use of a vulnerability index as a potential supplement to other criteria used in decision-making on cooperation with small island developing States, including concessional treatment, is strongly encouraged.

40. The need for a vulnerability index of socio-economic and environmental parameters is highlighted in the Programme of Action. Small island developing States have set a high priority on the development of the vulnerability index and support the process of defining the concept of vulnerability as it applies to small island developing States and the identification of common elements of vulnerability, which render them susceptible to economic and ecological exogenous shocks. The coordination of efforts by the United Nations and other international organizations to develop an index is essential.

41. In the context of actions being undertaken to address these issues and on the basis of a strong and committed partnership between small island developing States and the international community, the international community and small island developing States should pursue and support the following goals, objectives and activities, including through specific modalities, to assist in the continued implementation of the Programme of Action:

- (a) Completion of the quantitative and analytic work on a vulnerability index for small island developing States, preferably by the year 2000;
- (b) Capacity-building at all levels for the long-term monitoring and evaluation of vulnerability;
- (c) Welcoming of the inclusion of small island developing States in the global environment outlook process, which will provide better environmental baseline data.

G. Information management: Small Island Developing States Network

42. The Small Island Developing States Network is a tangible outcome of the Programme of Action. Along with other information technology programmes, it holds significant potential for the effective and successful implementation of the Programme of Action. In collaboration with the United Nations Development Programme, small island developing States, through their Alliance of Small Island States, have been closely involved in the development of the Network. In order to strengthen the Network concept, it is important that small island developing States enhance their ownership of it.

43. In the context of actions being undertaken to address these issues and on the basis of a strong and committed partnership between small island developing States and the international community, the international community and small island developing States should pursue and support the following goals, objectives and activities, including through specific modalities, to assist in the continued implementation of the Programme of Action:

- (a) Facilitation of the transfer, as set forth in the Programme of Action, of modern technology and communication systems in order to promote their use;
- (b) Addressing the constraints to Internet connectivity;
- (c) Improvement of information packaging in relation to sustainable development;
- (d) Encouragement of private sector opportunities and involvement;
- (e) Provision of necessary human resources support and training;
- (f) Establishment of links to existing clearing house and similar network mechanisms and to relevant conventions;
- (g) Invitation of appropriate international cooperation for the aforementioned purposes;
- (h) Strengthening of the Network as an important source of information on best practices in environmental management.

H. International cooperation and partnership

44. The effective implementation of the Programme of Action requires that the United Nations system make more effective use of existing resources, seek possibilities for mobilizing new resources and improve coordination mechanisms for the focused and harmonized delivery of support for priorities relevant to small island developing States. In this respect, ongoing efforts undertaken by the United Nations system to enhance coordination could be useful. The existing institutional arrangements within the United Nations system would also require strengthening in order for the Programme of Action to be implemented fully. The United Nations should continue to play its catalytic and supportive role, particularly through the regional commissions, which play an integral role in the overall implementation of the Programme of Action, especially in the provision of assistance for capacity-building in small island developing States. Consequently, the efforts to reform the institutional arrangements within the United Nations system must take these concerns into account for future actions.

45. Ongoing monitoring and review is an important aspect of measuring performance and needs to continue by way of reports of the Secretary-General and the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development and its agreed programme of work. United Nations bodies need to focus further on their areas of expertise and agreed mandates, as well as build upon regional or national strategies, conventions and programmes that are country-driven. Moreover, there are important linkages with the Commission's review of oceans and seas and recommendations on international coordination and cooperation.

46. In addition to improving coordination, United Nations bodies should be more proactive in seeking the views of small island developing States across the full range of sustainable development issues in order to ensure that they take due account of both national differences and local sensitivities, in particular, sensitivities in relation to such areas as traditional knowledge and the special place of local and indigenous communities.

47. Increased international support for regional monitoring and assessment will be required and the participation of small island developing States in the global environment outlook will be welcomed. It will be essential to develop benchmarks and improve performance indicators, including time-frames for measuring and assessing the implementation of the Programme of Action and decisions by governing bodies of United Nations agencies. Although periodic reviews of certain aspects of the Programme of Action are envisaged within the context of the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development, a full and comprehensive review of these decisions and the implementation of the Programme of Action will be useful and required in 2004.

48. In the context of actions being undertaken to address these issues and on the basis of a strong and committed partnership between small island developing States and the international community, the international community and small island developing States should pursue and support the following goals, objectives and activities, including through specific modalities, to assist in the continued implementation of the Programme of Action:

(a) Strengthening of the existing institutional arrangements through more efficient use of resources in the United Nations to maximize support for small island developing States and so that the United Nations, its bodies and regional commissions may become more effective in promoting and assisting sustainable development in island States;

(b) Facilitating the development of partnerships among all stakeholders, in particular local communities, non-governmental organizations and the private sector;

(c) Recognizing the role and function of the Alliance of Small Island States and encouraging and supporting the efforts of the Alliance in promoting the interests and concerns of those States and their sustainable development;

(d) Ensuring that United Nations bodies and Member States take into consideration national and regional sustainable development strategies and mechanisms, such as regional conventions, treaties and other regional agreements and/or arrangements adopted by small island developing States, as the umbrella for programme design, in close consultation with the small island developing States of the regions concerned, thereby ensuring that the activities of the United Nations bodies are increasingly aligned with the strategies, work plans and coordination mechanisms of the regional organizations of small island developing States;

(e) Support by United Nations bodies of the efforts of small island developing States to accede to and implement relevant international conventions. In the event that some small island developing States are unable, on account of financial or human resource constraints, to accede to international conventions, their partners in sustainable development should consult with them to seek their views on the issues addressed by such conventions in order that they may be able to take account of their positions during meetings of the conferences of parties to those conventions;

(f) Support to other regional and subregional organizations belonging to or operating in regions of small island developing States in continuing and strengthening their efforts to implement the Programme of Action, and support to the national implementation effort of the Governments of small island developing States.

Implementation of the Programme of Action

Commission on Sustainable Development.

The Commission, at its seventh session [E/1999/29], carried out a comprehensive review of the 1994 Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of SIDS [YUN 1994, p. 783], in accordance with Assembly resolution S-19/2 [YUN 1997, p. 792]. It had before it a February report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.17/1999/6], which contained an assessment of progress achieved, as well as the constraints encountered in implementing the Programme of Action. Recent trends in external resource flows in support of SIDS were outlined and emerging problems and issues of particular concern to SIDS were highlighted. In addition, the report set out priority issues for future action as identified by SIDS through regional and subregional expert and ministerial meetings and provided recommendations for the Commission's work programme for the next five years.

The report was complemented by 16 addenda [E/CN.17/1999/6/Add.1-16]—each focusing on a major theme of the Programme of Action—which updated reports previously submitted to the Commission. The addenda addressed the following issues in relation to SIDS: climate change and sea-level rise; waste management; fresh water; land resources; biodiversity; national institutions and administrative capacity; regional institutions and technical cooperation; science and technology; human resource development; management of coastal and marine resources; sustainable tourism development; sustainable development of energy resources; management of natural and environmental disasters; telecommunications development; sustainable development of air transport; and maritime transport. On 30 April, the Commission took note of the report [E/1999/29 (dec. 7/10)].

The Commission also considered a report of the Secretary-General providing updated information on donor activities in support of the implementation of the Programme of Action [E/CN.17/1999/7] and the report of a donor meeting (New York, 24-26 February) [E/CN.17/1999/18], which considered ways to assist SIDS in mobilizing resources to implement a range of sustainable development projects and to build momentum at the international level for the continued implementation of the Programme of Action. The Commission also had before it the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group on Oceans and Seas and on the Sustainable Development of SIDS (New York, 1-5 March) [E/CN.17/1999/17 & Corr.1] (see PART THREE, Chapter VII).

Alliance of Small Island States. By a 26 September letter [A/54/402], Samoa transmitted to the Secretary-General the communique of the Third Summit Meeting of the Heads of State and Government of the Alliance of Small Island States (New York, 25 September). The participants noted that little was being done at the international level to assist SIDS to overcome their unique problems and expressed concern about, among other things, the non-provision of financial resources to implement the Programme of Action; the decline in concessionary financial assistance to SIDS; the need for the international community to assist SIDS to advance their sustainable development strategies; the effect of the pace and terms of globalization and trade liberalization on the economies of SIDS; the protection of marine resources; climate change; the increasing incidence and magnitude of natural disasters; the transportation of hazardous and nuclear materials through the exclusive economic zones of SIDS; and the need for further capacity-building measures in support of SIDS.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/54/588/Add.6], adopted resolution 54/224 without vote [agenda item 100 (f)].

Implementation of the outcome of the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/122 of 19 December 1994 on the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States,

Recalling also its resolutions 51/183 of 16 December 1996, 52/202 of 18 December 1997 and 53/189 of 15 December 1998,

Recognizing that small island developing States face special challenges and vulnerabilities of both an environmental and an economic nature in their efforts to achieve sustainable development,

Recalling the Declaration and review document adopted at the twenty-second special session of the General Assembly,

Noting the significant efforts being made at the national and regional levels and the need for them to be supplemented by effective financial support from the international community,

Bearing in mind the over three hundred projects that were presented for financing within the context of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States at the meeting of representatives of donors and small island developing States held in New York from 24 to 26 February 1999,

1. Reiterates the significance of the effective implementation of the Declaration and review document adopted at the twenty-second special session of the General Assembly;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the Declaration and review document to the various organs of the United Nations system and the regional commissions and organizations, taking into account the areas identified in the review document for priority action, and urges them to take the action necessary for further implementation and effective follow-up;

3. Calls upon Governments, the regional commissions and organizations and other intergovernmental organizations to support the efforts of the small island developing States, taking into account those areas identified in the review document for priority action, and urges them to take the action necessary for the further implementation of and effective follow-up to the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States;

4. Calls upon all stakeholders, in particular local communities, non-governmental organizations and the private sector, to take the action necessary for the further implementation of and effective follow-up to the Programme of Action;

5. Emphasizes the need for the provision of resources for the further implementation of the Programme of Action;

6. Urges all relevant organizations to finalize, preferably before the end of 2000, the work on the development of a vulnerability index, in particular for the small island developing States, which would assist in defining the vulnerability of those States and in identifying the challenges to their sustainable development, for consideration by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly at the appropriate time;

7. Welcomes the acknowledgement by the Committee for Development Policy that the concept of vulnerability should be included explicitly in the identification criteria for the least developed countries, and notes the ongoing discussions on the new criteria proposed by the Committee;

8. Calls upon the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to give substantive consideration in its work to the Declaration and review document, including in its preparations for its tenth session;

9. Invites the Commission on Sustainable Development to consider in its work programme, as appropriate, matters relating to the further implementation of the Programme of Action, bearing in mind the outcome of the twenty-second special session of the General Assembly;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session, under the item entitled "Environment and sustainable development", a sub-item entitled "Further implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States";

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to it at its fifty-fifth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Landlocked developing countries

In response to resolution 52/183 [YUN 1997, p. 8421, the Secretary-General, in November [A/54/529], transmitted to the General Assembly a progress report by the UNCTAD secretariat on specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of landlocked developing countries.

The report presented the conclusions and recommendations of the fourth Meeting of Governmental Experts from Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Representatives of Donor Countries and Financial and Development Institutions (New York, 24-26 August), which addressed problems related to physical infrastructure and non-physical barriers in lowering transit costs. UNCTAD activities with regard to developing transport systems in the landlocked and transit developing countries—including assistance in drafting or negotiating bilateral or regional agreements and efforts to extend the computerization of transport and customs information systems—were also described. In addition, the report contained information provided by landlocked and transit developing countries and other countries, as well as by international organizations, on activities related to improvement of transit transport systems.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/54/585/Add.3 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 54/199 without vote [agenda item 97 (c)].

Specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of landlocked developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of its resolutions 44/214 of 22 December 1989, 46/212 of 20 December 1991, 48/169 of 21 December 1993, 50/97 of 20 December 1995 and 52/183 of 18 December 1997 and the Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation between Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and the Donor Community, as well as the relevant parts of the Agenda for Development,

Recognizing that the lack of territorial access to the sea, aggravated by remoteness and isolation from world markets, and prohibitive transit costs and risks impose serious constraints on the overall socio-economic development efforts of the landlocked developing countries,

Recognizing also that sixteen of the landlocked developing countries are also classified by the United Nations as least developed countries and that their geographical situation is an added constraint on their overall ability to cope with the challenges of development,

Recognizing further that most transit countries are themselves developing countries facing serious economic problems, including the lack of adequate infrastructure in the transport sector,

Noting the importance of continuing to strengthen the existing international support measures with a view to addressing further the problems of landlocked developing countries,

Emphasizing the importance of further strengthening effective and close cooperation and collaboration between landlocked developing countries and their transit neighbours, at regional, subregional and bilateral levels, inter alia, through cooperative arrangements in developing efficient transit transport systems in landlocked and transit developing countries, and noting the important role of the activities of the regional commissions in this regard,

Welcoming the holding of the fourth Meeting of Governmental Experts from Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Representatives of Donor Countries and Financial and Development Institutions, in New York from 24 to 26 August 1999,

Expressing its appreciation to donor partners for participating in the fourth Meeting of Governmental Experts and for the generous contribution that facilitated the participation of landlocked developing countries,

1. Welcomes the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the progress report of the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of landlocked developing countries;

2. Also welcomes the agreed conclusions and recommendations for future action adopted by the fourth Meeting of Governmental Experts from Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Representatives of Donor Countries and Financial and Development Institutions;

3. Reaffirms the right of access of landlocked countries, including landlocked developing countries, to and from the sea and freedom of transit through the territory of transit States by all means of transport, in accordance with international law;

4. Also reaffirms that transit countries, in the exercise of their full sovereignty over their territory, have the right to take all measures necessary to ensure that the rights and facilities provided for landlocked countries, including landlocked developing countries, in no way infringe upon their legitimate interests;

5. Calls upon the landlocked developing countries and their transit neighbours to implement measures to strengthen further their cooperative and collaborative efforts to deal with transit transport issues, including bilateral and, as appropriate, subregional cooperation, inter alia, by improving the physical infrastructure and non-physical aspects of transit transport systems, strengthening and concluding, where appropriate, bilateral and subregional agreements to govern transit transport operations, developing joint ventures in the area of transit transport and strengthening institutions and human resources dealing with transit transport, and, in this respect, notes that South-South cooperation also plays an important role in this field;

6. Appeals once again to all States, international organizations and financial institutions to implement, as a matter of urgency and priority, the specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of landlocked developing countries agreed upon in the resolutions and declarations adopted by the General Assembly, the outcomes of recent major United Nations conferences relevant to landlocked developing countries and the Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation between Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and the Donor Community and to take fully into account the agreed recommendations and conclusions of the fourth Meeting of Governmental Experts from Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Representatives of Donor Countries and Financial and Development Institutions;

7. Welcomes the continuing efforts being made by the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in collaboration with donor countries and institutions, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the regional commissions and relevant subregional institutions, to organize specific consultative groups, as appropriate, when requested by the landlocked and transit developing countries concerned, to identify priority areas for action at the national and subregional levels and draw up action programmes;

8. Invites donor countries, the United Nations Development Programme and multilateral financial and development institutions to provide landlocked and transit developing countries with appropriate financial and technical assistance in the form of grants or concessional loans for the construction, maintenance and improvement of their transport, storage and other transit-related facilities, including alternative routes and improved communications, and to promote subregional, regional and interregional projects and programmes, and, in this regard, also to consider, inter alia, improving the availability and optimal use of the different transport modes and intermodal efficiency along transport corridors;

9. Emphasizes that assistance for the improvement of transit transport facilities and services should be integrated into the overall economic development strategies of the landlocked and transit developing countries and that donor assistance should consequently take into account the requirements for the long-term restructuring of the economies of the landlocked developing countries;

10. Notes the important role that the simplification, harmonization and standardization of transit procedures and documentation as well as the application of information technologies have played in enhancing the efficiency of transit systems, and calls upon the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in cooperation with other relevant organizations of the United Nations system, to continue to assist landlocked and transit developing countries in these areas, in accordance with their mandates;

11. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to convene in 2001, within the overall level of resources for the biennium 2000-2001, another meeting of governmental experts from landlocked and transit developing countries and representatives of donor countries and financial and development institutions, including relevant regional and subregional economic organizations and commissions, to review progress in the development of transit transport systems, including sectoral aspects and transit transportation costs, with a view to exploring the possibility of formulating necessary action-oriented measures;

12. Requests the fifth Meeting of Governmental Experts from Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Representatives of Donor Countries and Financial and Development Institutions to consider a proposal made at the fourth Meeting to convene in 2003 a ministerial meeting on transit transport issues so as to give appropriate emphasis to the problems of landlocked and transit developing countries;

13. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to seek voluntary contributions to ensure the participation of representatives of landlocked and transit developing countries at the meeting referred to in paragraph 11 above;

14. Notes with appreciation the contribution of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to formulating international policies and measures dealing with the special problems of landlocked developing countries, inter alia, through technical co-operation programmes, and urges the Conference, inter alia, to keep under constant review the evolution of transit transport infrastructure facilities, institutions and services, monitor the implementation of agreed measures, inter alia, by means of a case study as necessary, promote regional and subregional cooperation, build up consensus on cooperative arrangements, mobilize international support measures, collaborate in all relevant initiatives, including those of the private sector and non-governmental organizations, and serve as a focal point for cross-regional issues of landlocked developing countries;

15. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to take appropriate measures for the effective implementation of the activities called for in the present resolution, and to provide, in accordance with resolution 52/183, the Office of the Special Coordinator for Least Developed, Landlocked and Island Developing Countries of the Conference with adequate resources so as to allow it to implement effectively its mandate to continue to support landlocked developing countries;

16. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, together with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to prepare a report on the implementation of the present resolution and submit it to the Trade and Development Board and to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session.

Chapter II

Operational activities for development

In 1999, the income of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the central United Nations funding body for technical assistance to developing countries, totalled $2,608 million, as compared with $2,704 million in 1998. The total expenditure for all programme activities plus support costs decreased slightly, from $2,713 million in 1998 to $2,681 million in 1999.

Throughout the UN system, efforts were made to implement the new policy guidelines on operational activities for development, as set out by the General Assembly in its 1998 resolution on the triennial policy review of those activities. In response to the guidelines, reforms in UN activities were made in such areas as poverty eradication and capacity-building, funding modalities of operational activities, policy coordination and programming frameworks, strengthening field representation, and cooperation between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund).

UNDP activities in 1999 concentrated on six goals: creating an enabling environment for sustainable human development; reduction of poverty; protection of the environment and use of natural resources; gender equality and advancement of women; providing support to countries in special development situations; and providing support to UN activities.

In April, the Secretary-General appointed Mark Malloch Brown as Administrator of UNDP for a four-year term beginning on 1 July. The new Administrator continued the work of his predecessor in reorganizing the UNDP programming and reporting procedures. In 1999, the first multi-year funding framework was adopted to provide a more predictable funding plan, integrating programme objectives, resources, budget and outcomes. Together with that plan, a new reporting procedure was introduced, the results-oriented annual report, which presented programme results by goal. UNDP also introduced its Business Plan for 2000-2003, which outlined a new vision and goals for UNDP to ensure that it had the capacity to deliver its services effectively.

The United Nations Office for Project Services continued to operate in accordance with the self-financing principle, without assessed budget financing. Total delivery continued to increase, reaching $764 million in 1999, compared to $713 million in 1998.

The United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme also continued to expand. The total value of UNV activities carried out in 1998-1999 was $150.8 million.

The High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries (TCDC), in June, reviewed progress in implementing the 1978 Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing TCDC. In December, the General Assembly recognized the significant role of economic and technical cooperation between developing countries and countries with economies in transition in promoting implementation of South-South programmes and projects.

System-wide activities

Operational activities segment of the Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council, at its 1999 substantive session (New York, 23 June; Geneva, 5-30 July; New York, 16 September, 26 October, 15 November, 16 December), considered the question of UN operational activities for international development cooperation at meetings on 8, 9, 12, 13 and 23 July. A high-level meeting on operational activities was held on 8 July. The Council held an informal dialogue with the heads of UN funds and programmes on 9 July, and with the UN system country teams from Indonesia and Mali on 12 July. The next day, the Council considered follow-up to policy recommendations of the General Assembly on implementation of Assembly resolution 53/192 [YUN 1998, p. 802].

Implementation of resolution 53/192

Describing action taken by the UN system to implement General Assembly resolution 53/192 on the 1998 policy review of UN operational activities, the Secretary-General's May report [E/1999/55/Add.1] focused on the common country assessment and the United Nations Development Assistance

Framework (UNDAF); the resident coordinator system; planning, programming and implementation; humanitarian assistance, peace-building and development; the regional dimension; South-South cooperation/technical cooperation and economic cooperation among developing countries (TCDC-ECDC); national execution; and monitoring and evaluation. The issues of resources and action by the executive boards of the funds and programmes were dealt with in the main report [E/1999/55], together with the themes of the 1999 operational activities segment, "Poverty eradication and capacity-building".

The Secretary-General stated that significant progress was being made with the implementation of UNDAF as a tool for promoting goal-oriented collaboration, programmatic coherence and mutual reinforcement. The UNDAF guidelines were revised and modalities were shaped for the gradual extension of the exercise to other countries. Common country assessment guidelines were also elaborated and common country assessments undertaken and/or updated by some 18 pilot countries. However, a number of challenges remained for the entire UN system, including rationalization and simplification of programming procedures, linkages with other UN core missions, the optimal interface between the common country assessment/UNDAF and World Bank instruments, and the UNDAF impact on development activities. The common country assessment and revised UNDAF provided a means of articulating support to national efforts through enhanced collaborative programming of UN system activities, and in some cases the UNDAF process provided a platform for the formulation of issue papers on the follow-up to major world conferences. The revised UNDAF guidelines were endorsed in the statement by the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) on implementation of resolution 53/192 and in the ACC guidance note on the implementation of the common country assessment and UNDAF processes, both adopted by the Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions (CCPOQ) in March [ACC/1999/7].

The resident coordinator system was strengthened, in particular through improvement of the selection process, the appraisal system and training. A priority concern was ensuring that all UN system staff in programme countries were fully aware of their responsibility for the effective functioning of the system, including support for their dual responsibility as representatives of their own organization and as members of the UN system. Also, as part of efforts to strengthen the system, guidelines on the functioning of the resident coordinator system were finalized and adopted by CCPOQ, at its fifteenth session (New York, 21-24 September) [ACC/1999/15], on behalf of ACC for inclusion in the CCPOQ operational activities reference manual.

In terms of planning, programming and implementation, the Secretary-General reported that, building on significant growth of relations among the United Nations, Governments and other development partners, CCPOQ, at its fourteenth session (Geneva, 10-12 March) [ACC/1999/7], adopted, on ACC's behalf, a guidance note on the principles underpinning the UN system's operational collaboration with civil society organizations, entitled "The partnership approach". ACC also agreed to pursue a "compact" or understanding with the private sector to stress the development dimension.

In terms of the simplification, harmonization and rationalization of programme procedures, specific measures and timetables, through country-specific action plans, had been put in place to advance the harmonization of programming cycles of UN funds and programmes. That had so far been achieved in 86 countries and the United Nations Development Group (UNDG) was working on an overall action plan to increase that number to 99 by 2003. However, programming cycles discrepancies, different degrees of decentralization and delegation of authority for decision-making at the country level and varying levels of commitment at Headquarters hindered a more effective and coordinated UN system response to national development needs and discouraged joint activities with Governments. The Secretary-General recommended that funds and programmes accord high priority to the issue of simplification and harmonization and take steps to reduce, simplify and harmonize their procedures and reporting requirements.

Concerning humanitarian assistance, peace-building and development, the UN system had taken several steps to implement resolution 53/129, including adoption of a strategic framework for Afghanistan as a basic reference for UN development activities; approval of guidelines for a strategic framework approach for response to and recovery from crisis for use in selected countries; establishment of a UNDP-led reference group to explore issues of post-conflict reintegration, with the aim of providing greater support to the field in addressing operational aspects of improving UN performance; and convening of a round table to make recommendations on institutional arrangements and financing strategies. The UNDAF and common country assessment guidelines also included references to the comprehensive approach sought by the General Assembly. Despite those efforts, the mechanisms for strategic coordination remained somewhat dis-gregated, incompletely understood and not widely known, especially outside the UN system. More attention was needed to develop a "tool kit" of responses in which country teams would be encouraged to experiment, in partnership with national authorities and with support from headquarters. Difficulties persisted in obtaining support for the transition from relief to development.

Progress towards a more coordinated and integrated follow-up to major global conferences was being facilitated by a number of ACC initiatives. Thematic groups continued to be the main UN system instruments in that regard, particularly the group on human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS). In terms of regional cooperation, CCPOQ developed common principles on how better to use the UN system's comparative advantage in bringing the regional dimension to bear on operational activities at the country level. In March [ACC/1999/7], it approved, on behalf of ACC, a guidance note on regional and subregional development cooperation, which identified responsibilities throughout the UN system.

Funds and programmes reported progress in national execution, but evaluations of the system revealed signs of possible tension between the accountability and the capacity-building aspects of national execution. As for monitoring and evaluation, the Secretary-General said that it would be necessary for the system to take further steps to strengthen aspects of the evaluation dimension of its operational activities, including those outlined in the management process. The UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs would continue to conduct impact evaluations. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) was involved in strengthening national capacity in evaluation, and steps were being initiated to promote greater collaboration on evaluation at the country level.

In the main report [E/1999/55], the Secretary-General stated that the financial stability of the UN development system continued to be of serious concern and suggested that the issue needed to be addressed in the broader framework of the UN system's presence, profile and programming at the country level. The steady decline in UNDP's core contributions carried important policy implications, for which a strategic decision was needed, not only for UNDP's future but also for the entire UN system. There were indications that the new funding strategy based on the multi-year funding framework [YUN 1998, p. 825] might help to stop the declining trend in the core resources situation (see p. 794). A review of resource trends in operational activities for development within the UN system from 1993 to 1997 was provided in an addendum to the report [E/1999/55/Add.2].

Management process. Annexed to the report on the implementation of resolution 53/192 [E/1999/55/Add.1] was the text of the management process for the implementation of that resolution and related resolutions, which identified action the UN system could take at all levels. Appended to the annex was an ACC statement, expressing its commitment to implement the provisions of that resolution in a coordinated manner as outlined in the management process.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July [meeting 38], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1999/6 [draft: E/1999/L.24] without vote [agenda item 3 (b)].

Progress on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 53/192

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 53/192 of 15 December 1998 on the triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and of the consolidated list of issues related to the coordination of operational activities, 1999;

2. Reiterates that the fundamental characteristics of the operational activities of the United Nations system should be, inter alia, their universal, voluntary and grant nature, their neutrality, impartiality and multi-lateralism and their ability to respond to the development needs of developing countries in a flexible manner, and that all operational activities must be country-driven, in response to and in accordance with the national development plans, policies and priorities of the recipient Governments concerned;

3. Stresses the primary responsibility of national Governments for their country's development, and recognizes the importance of national ownership of development programmes;

4. Reaffirms that untied core resources are the bedrock of the operational activities of the United Nations system, and, in this context, calls on Governments to take steps to address the urgent and immediate need for a substantial increase in their funding on a predictable, continuous and assured basis, reflecting the increasing needs of developing countries, taking into account the development of multi-year funding frameworks;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare documentation for its substantive session of 2000 on the subject of resources and funding, highlighting, inter alia, the following:

(a) Voluntary contributions by Governments to resources for operational activities for development of the programmes, funds and agencies of the United Nations system, including the relationship to official development assistance, over the past decade, and the relationship between core and non-core resources;

(b) Reasons for the decline in core resources to the operational activities of the United Nations system;

(c) An evaluation of the effects of such decline, including, as appropriate, on the effectiveness and impact of the operational activities of the United Nations system on the level of economic growth and sustainable development in developing and other recipient countries;

(d) Linkages between structural and managerial changes within the United Nations programmes and funds and resource mobilization, including the introduction of the multi-year funding frameworks that integrate programme objectives, resources, budgets and outcomes, with a view to improving effectiveness and increasing core resources;

6. Takes note of the progress made in the introduction of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework and the common country assessment in accordance with the provisions of General Assembly resolution 53/192, paragraphs 17 to 22, and calls for further progress on the harmonization of programming cycles as well as steps to simplify and harmonize relevant programming procedures of the United Nations programmes, funds and agencies, bearing in mind their mandates, within specified target dates for the accomplishment of these prescribed actions;

7. Takes note of the progress and challenges with the common country assessment and the Framework, as highlighted in the reports of the programmes and funds, and encourages the programmes and funds to try to achieve a Framework that promotes a country-driven, collaborative and coherent response by the United Nations system to achieve greater impact at the country level fully consistent with and in support of national priorities;

8. Calls upon the programmes, funds and agencies of the United Nations system, and the resident coordinator system in particular, to ensure continued sharing of the common country assessment and the Framework experiences and to give special attention to the involvement, in the preparation of the common country assessment and the Framework, of United Nations agencies without representation at the country level, as well as of the regional commissions, and to take into account the regional development dimension;

9. Welcomes the progress made to strengthen the resident coordinator system, to broaden the base for the recruitment of resident coordinators and to continue to increase the number of women resident coordinators;

10. Takes note of the efforts already made to strengthen field-level coordination and the role of the resident coordinator system, and encourages further steps towards greater collaboration, at the field level, by ensuring well-functioning, highly participatory and active country teams, and full consultation with the Governments concerned, while respecting the specific identities and mandates of United Nations operational activities;

11. Calls for rapid progress to improve the self-assessment process of the resident coordinator system and to measure the performance against the work plans established;

12. Requests the programmes, funds and agencies of the United Nations system to examine ways to simplify further their programming procedures and instruments, and, in this context, to accord the issue of simplification and harmonization high priority and to take concrete steps to reduce, simplify and harmonize their programming, operational and administrative procedures and the reporting requirements placed on recipient countries, particularly in regard to programme development, approval and implementation, while ensuring appropriate accountability, and to report on the progress made to the Economic and Social Council in 2000, and urges further progress towards the full harmonization of programme cycles in all countries;

13. Notes the progress made by the United Nations system to support a coordinated follow-up to major United Nations conferences, and encourages the system to continue efforts to ensure a more integrated approach;

14. Re-emphasizes the central importance of thematic or theme groups within the resident coordinator system as a tool to address the cross-cutting issues identified in the follow-up to global conferences and the need to include in the annual report of the resident coordinator feedback on United Nations operational activities relating to conference follow-up;

15. Requests the programmes and funds to submit to the Council through their executive boards information and analyses of the extent to which the cross-cutting themes and goals emerging from global conferences have been integrated into their programme priorities in a coherent manner, as well as on specific steps taken to develop complementary and collaborative approaches with other United Nations organizations in promoting the implementation of global targets;

16. Encourages States Members and the entities and agencies of the United Nations system to contribute to the effective five-year review of conferences, with special attention to promoting the linkages among them and the timely implementation of the outcomes emanating from the reviews;

17. Calls for continued promotion and support for broad-based partnerships at the national level in support of conference outcomes;

18. Encourages States Members and the entities and agencies of the United Nations system to give special attention to providing coherent support for national capacity-building in accordance with the priority needs of developing countries in the area of data collection, indicators, monitoring and evaluation, recognizing that these activities are the basis for all other aspects of development planning;

19. Notes the need for better assessment of national capacity and the development of consistent approaches to strengthening such capacity within the United Nations Development Group and the broader United Nations system in order to strengthen significantly national capacity-building in programme countries;

20. Encourages greater cooperation between the World Bank, regional development banks and all funds and programmes, with a view to increased complementarity and better division of labour as well as enhanced coherence in their sectoral activities, building on the existing arrangements and fully in accordance with the priorities of the recipient Government;

21. Welcomes the progress made in pursuing common premises and services, and requests the members of the United Nations Development Group to consult their respective governing bodies, as appropriate, on issues related to their further involvement in the development of common premises and services, bearing in mind that those arrangements should not impose additional burdens on developing countries;

22. Urges the United Nations system to use to the fullest extent possible and practicable available national expertise and indigenous technologies, and to report to the Council at its substantive session of 2000 on the use of the recently agreed guidelines of the Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions on national execution, with a view to resolving the issues identified in those guidelines;

23. Calls upon the United Nations system to make full use of national capacity in the formulation, implementation and evaluation of programmes and projects, including through the use of national execution as provided by General Assembly resolution 53/192;

24. Takes note of the lessons learned by the programmes and funds in the implementation of their gender-balance policy and calls for further efforts to retain women at mid-career and to actively promote their career advancement;

25. Calls for further efforts, based on lessons learned, to strengthen the adoption of an effective approach to gender mainstreaming for women's empowerment and gender equality, and programming for women and girls;

26. Also calls for the involvement of men and the education and sensitization of boys in the creation of an environment conducive to the realization of the rights of women and girls;

27. Requests the United Nations system to take appropriate measures to improve the effective incorporation of technical cooperation among developing countries into their programmes and projects and to intensify efforts towards mainstreaming the modality of the cooperation, including through support to the activities of the Special Unit for Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries, and encourages other relevant international institutions to take similar measures, bearing in mind the catalytic role of technical cooperation among developing countries;

28. Stresses that South-South cooperation, including technical and economic cooperation among developing countries, offers viable opportunities for the development of developing countries, and in this context requests the executive boards of the programmes and funds to review the allocation of resources for activities involving technical cooperation among developing countries, with a view to considering an increase therein;

29. Recommends that the practice of holding joint meetings of the bureau of the Economic and Social Council and the bureaux of the Executive Boards of the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Children's Fund and the World Food Programme be continued, and requests the respective bureaux to report on the meetings to their governing bodies;

30. Invites the governing bodies of the agencies of the United Nations to encourage greater and more active participation, as appropriate, in the United Nations Development Group initiatives in which they have been invited to take part, in keeping with their respective mandates;

31. Requests the United Nations entities, in their future reporting to the Council, to assess whether coordination mechanisms result in improved, timely and effective programmes and increased resource mobilization;

32. Reaffirms the importance of independent, transparent and impartial joint and periodic evaluations of operational activities at the country level, under the leadership of recipient Governments, and with the support of the resident coordinator system, to enhance the efficiency, effectiveness and impact, particularly on poverty-eradication programmes, and encourages the programmes and funds to increase collaboration in monitoring and evaluation within the framework of the United Nations Development Group and in consultation with all relevant partners, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 55 of General Assembly resolution 53/192;

33. Calls upon the United Nations entities to promote further national capacity-building for effective programme, project and financial monitoring, as well as impact evaluations, in their programme activities.

By decision 54/465 of 23 December, the General Assembly decided that the agenda item on operational activities for development remained for consideration at its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session.

In response to resolution 53/192 [YUN 1998, p. 802], the Secretary-General submitted a May report [E/1999/55], which examined poverty eradication and capacity-building, the theme chosen for the 1999 operational activities segment of the Economic and Social Council, in terms of UN operational activities.

The report, in assessing the country-level role of operational activities for development in poverty eradication, noted that poverty eradication was the principal challenge of the international community and a global objective of the UN system, which provided direct assistance to the poor in a wide range of areas: advocacy initiatives, policy dialogue, information activities, support to formulation of national policies or programmes, analytical activities and measures of direct support to the poor.

Individual organizations had evaluated poverty-focused projects to assess their effectiveness and conducted studies on the effectiveness of specific poverty reduction instruments and measures. More comprehensive assessments of poverty reduction activity were promoted by UNDP and the World Bank. However, the effectiveness of UN system initiatives to support poverty eradication could not be easily measured. Country studies focused on the assessment of poverty situations or strategies and needed to go beyond the distribution of financial resources and look instead at household welfare.

Among the recommendations contained in the report was that further progress should be made in harmonizing UN system support to national poverty eradication programmes through the UNDP country strategy notes, common country assessments and UNDAF, and that full use should be made of thematic groups and other coordination mechanisms within the resident coordinator system to provide a coordinated and collaborative response to national priorities for poverty eradication.

The Secretary-General said that capacity-building should be increasingly an explicit objective of all technical cooperation. Efforts were underway within CCPOQ to develop a shared understanding of capacity-building with the aim of combining effectively specific goals of cooperation within capacity-building objectives. Impact evaluations conducted in the context of the 1998 triennial comprehensive policy review showed that a major factor for achieving positive and sustainable results in capacity-building was the availability of financial resources. However, national capacity created successfully with UN system support remained vulnerable to resource constraints. It was clear that the notion of sustainability of capacity needed a fresh look. The UN system approach might need to move towards codifying a body of sound basic principles, reflected in solid practical guidance. One of the lessons learned from the evaluations was that capacity-building might be too broad a term to have sufficient operational significance and more attention should be paid to analysing specific types of capacity-building and codifying best practices for each kind. It was important for all relevant UN system entities, as well as Member States, to monitor their support to capacity-building much more closely to detect required changes and take appropriate measures. The Council should maintain an interest in and monitor the development of a systematic and system-wide approach.

As follow-up to resolution 53/192, the Department of Economic and Social Affairs was disseminating the six pilot impact evaluations of capacity-building, which would be used to develop a draft guidance note to the UN system to ensure that capacity-building and its sustainability were explicitly articulated as a goal of the operational activities at the country level. The Secretary-General recommended that the Council call on the UN system to ensure that all programmes had a capacity-building objective and explicit indicators of performance, as well as baseline data built into such programmes before they were approved. The Council might also point out to donors and recipients the necessity of ensuring the financial viability of capacity created in priority areas.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July [meeting 38], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1999/5 [draft: E/1999/L.23] without vote [agenda item 3 (a)].

Poverty eradication and capacity-building

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 51/178 of 16 December 1996 on the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty and 53/192 of 15 December 1998 on the triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Recognizes that investment in human resources and domestic and international policies supportive of economic and social development are essential prerequisites for the eradication of poverty;
3. Calls upon the programmes, funds and agencies of the United Nations system to continue to give priority and to further enhance support to developing countries in their efforts to eradicate poverty;
4. Recognizes that formulating, coordinating, implementing, monitoring and assessing integrated poverty eradication strategies, including through capacity-building initiatives, is the primary responsibility of the Governments of recipient countries, and calls upon the United Nations system to support these efforts upon the request of national Governments;
5. Calls upon the United Nations development system organizations to support the strengthening of the capacity of Governments to establish data banks and to carry out poverty assessments at the country level;
6. Calls upon the United Nations system, upon the request of Governments, to support policy analysis activities at the national and international levels, in particular regarding indicators relating to poverty eradication and human development strategies;
7. Requests the organizations of the United Nations system to continue to support, in a coherent and coordinated manner, national efforts to empower people living in poverty, in particular women, through, inter alia, education, sustainable livelihoods, health services, in particular health care, and employment-creation policies;
8. Reaffirms the importance of mainstreaming gender perspectives into all poverty eradication policies, including through gender-impact analyses, as women constitute the majority of persons living in poverty;
9. Stresses that national Governments have the primary responsibility for their country's development and for coordinating development assistance, as well as enhancing its effectiveness;
10. Urges, in this context, further progress in harmonizing United Nations system support to national poverty eradication programmes through mechanisms such as the common country assessment and the United Nations Development Assistance Framework, fully consistent with and in support of national priorities as expressed in the country strategy notes or relevant national development plans, as appropriate, as well as full use of thematic groups and other coordination mechanisms within the resident coordinator system, in order to provide an integrated, coordinated and collaborative response by the United Nations system to national priorities for poverty eradication;

11. Calls upon the United Nations system to strengthen cooperation with all development partners in supporting national development priorities and policies, reflecting the cross-cutting nature of poverty eradication and capacity-building, including by increased collaboration with multilateral financial institutions, particularly the World Bank, taking note of its new initiatives, the International Monetary Fund, regional banks, as well as other donors, the private sector and other civil society organizations, as appropriate;

12. Encourages the United Nations system to take further steps to enhance the efficiency, effectiveness and impact of its support to poverty eradication programmes, including by undertaking impartial, transparent and independent joint evaluations under the overall leadership and with the full and effective involvement of the Government;

13. Underlines the importance of the interdependence and the interlinkage between development assistance and national capacity-building;

14. Stresses that the United Nations system should adopt flexible responses to specific capacity-building needs as articulated by the recipient countries in accordance with their national development plans and priorities;

15. Takes note of the steps being taken to implement General Assembly resolution 53/192, paragraph 37, dealing with capacity-building, particularly the development of United Nations system guidance on capacity-building, with a view to making it an explicit objective of programmes and projects supported by the system, within the context of the 1998 triennial comprehensive policy review, including by revising, inter alia, relevant programming guidelines of the United Nations programmes and funds;

16. Encourages the Governments of recipient countries to work towards ensuring that all programmes have capacity-building components;

17. Calls upon the United Nations system to take further steps to collect and disseminate relevant information on capacity-building, including best practices;

18. Stresses the need to address the subject of sustainability and adaptability of capacity-building in different development contexts and in response to a range of sectoral, cross-sectoral and technical requirements of recipient countries, and in particular to take appropriate steps to ensure the sustainability of capacity-building created in priority areas;

19. Requests the Secretary-General, in preparing documentation on resources for the operational activities for development segment of the Council's substantive session of 2000, as stated in paragraph 5 of its resolution 1999/6 of 23 July 1999 on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 53/192, to give consideration to the effect of the decline in core resources for operational activities on the capacity of the United Nations system to implement effective development programmes that support poverty eradication and capacity-building.

Economic and Social Council oversight role

The Secretary-General, in his May report on operational activities for development [E/1999/55], drew the attention of the Economic and Social Council to issues arising from the executive boards of the UN funds and programmes where the Council might want to provide policy guidance. He suggested that the Council assess whether the division of responsibilities between it and the boards was functioning as mandated, particularly on issues in which both had roles to play, such as funding and programming. The Council had largely left the initiative to the boards and the funds and programmes to raise issues requiring the Council's attention, but it would be useful if the Council indicated the kinds of issues that the boards should consider for eventual transmission to the Council for appropriate action. Those might include funding, target setting, resource mobilization and allocation, which had policy, programmatic and development implications extending beyond a single organization. Given the interrelatedness of issues and the converging mandates of funds and programmes, the Council might consider the issue of collective coherence and how to reverse shrinking core funding and identify measures to ensure coordinated programming at the country level. The boards might identify areas of convergence, complementarity and contradictions and bring specific issues before the Council.

In 1999 [E/1999/35], the joint meetings of the Executive Boards of UNDP/United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) and UNICEF addressed major areas of concerted action for 1999: resource flows, follow-up to international conferences, the resident coordinator system, monitoring and evaluation, use of common indicators, harmonization of programme cycles, common premises and services, UNDAF and the common country assessments, and the link between development and humanitarian operations.

In April 1999, the bureaux of the Council and the UNDP/UNFPA and UNICEF Boards for the first time held joint meetings to review how the Boards took into account the work of functional commissions as regards coordinated follow-up to global conferences and on cross-cutting issues. It was agreed that one possible tool for facilitating future collaboration could be joint meetings of the bureaux, and that the Council should identify cross-cutting areas not adequately addressed and provide feedback to funds and programmes.

The General Assembly, by decision 53/474 of 8 June, deferred consideration of the Secretary-General's 1997 report [YUN 1997, p. 855] on enhancing the internal oversight mechanisms in operational funds and programmes until its fifty-fourth (1999) session.

Common premises and services

The UNDP Assistant Administrator, reporting to the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board at its April session [E/1999/35], described progress made to date in pursuit of the United Nations house programme and the required financial resources allocations. She said that the programme was progressing faster than anticipated. The Secretary-General had formally designated UN houses in 31 countries and there were a number of potential UN houses where relocation to new premises was scheduled to take place in the near future. In countries where UN houses were not an immediate prospect, separate offices were connected through a country-based intranet that facilitated the sharing of information, practices and expertise. A survey of common services at the country-level was under way and would provide a basis for a strategy to achieve more efficiency in the management of administrative and financial resources.

On 16 April [E/1999/35 (dec. 99/7)], the Executive Board took note of the report on the UN house programme.

In his May report on progress in the implementation of resolution 53/192 [E/1999/55/Add.1], the Secretary-General said that the undg Management Group on Services and Premises was developing tools and guidance on the development and implementation of common and shared services by collecting information on the current status of and experience with those services in field offices. It intended to develop prototype service agreements, standards for services provision, measures of service performance and suggested governance arrangements for common and shared services.

In September [dec. 99/23], the Executive Board, in the context of the 2000-2001 biennial budget, approved the Administrator's proposals for funding the UN house programme: the formula for sharing costs (one third from UNDP and from UNICEF, and one sixth from UNFPA and from the World Food Programme (WFP)) would apply strictly to the evaluation planning and management costs. Relocation costs would be funded through the establishment of a capital reserve from UNDP general resources in the amount of $3.8 million.

In a later report [DP/2000/11], the Administrator indicated that, as at November 1999, the number of UN houses had risen to 36. It was expected that 10 more would be designated each year.

Financing of operational activities

Expenditures by the UN system on operational activities, excluding loans and grants through the World Bank Group, reached $5.3 billion in 1998 [E/2000/46/Add.2], the most recent year for which complete figures were available, compared with $4.8 billion in 1997 and $4.3 billion in 1996. Of the total amount, $2,131 million was distributed in development grants through UNDP or UNDP-administered funds, $1,238 million by WFP, $645 million by UNICEF, $217 million by UNFPA, $297 million by specialized agencies and other organizations (mainly the World Health Organization (WHO)) from regular budgets, and $738 million by specialized agencies and other organizations from extrabudgetary sources.

In addition, concessional loans of $299 million were disbursed by the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD), and $150 million was made available for management service agreements through the United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS).

By region, 34.4 per cent of grant expenditures went to Africa, 30.4 per cent to the Americas, 24.3 per cent to Asia and the Pacific, 7.5 per cent to Western Asia and 3.4 per cent to Europe.

Contributions from Governments and other sources for operational activities, including IFAD but excluding the World Bank Group, totalled $5.8 billion in 1998, compared with $5.54 billion in 1997 and $5.5 billion in 1996.

The 1999 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities (New York, 2-3 November) [A/CONF.190/3] received pledges from Governments to UN programmes and funds concerned with development. The Conference heard the announcement of pledges by a number of Governments and took note of the fact that several Governments were not in a position to announce their contributions but proposed to communicate their announcement of such contributions to the Secretary-General as soon as they were in a position to do so.

The Secretary-General provided a statement of contributions pledged or paid at the 1998 Pledging Conference, as at 30 June 1999, to 22 funds and programmes [A/CONF.185/2]. The total came to some $1.2 billion, with an estimated $606 million designated for UNDP.

The UNDP Administrator, in his annual report covering 1999 [DP/2000/23 & Add.1,2], stated that throughout 1999 the Executive Board was engaged in intensive dialogue on restoring growth and enhanced predictability to UNDP's regular funding base, and specifically in developing and negotiating a sustainable funding strategy. The Board's decisions on the multi-year funding framework (MYFF) (see p. 806) embodied the results of those efforts. Provisional data so far indicated that total net regular (core) resources income for 1999 was $682 million, some 8.5 per cent below the 1998 figure of $750 million. Other resources (non-core resources) increased to approximately $1.5 billion, including $970 million for country cost-sharing, $244.65 million for third-party cost sharing and $329 million mobilized through trust funds.

The Administrator said that in response to the far-reaching changes taking place in the development arena, UNDP embarked on a major programme of reform and renewal focusing on articulating a new vision for the organization in the form of the Administrator's Business Plans (see p. 802), to be presented to the Board in 2000.

The first MYFF provided a more predictable core-funding framework for the organization, integrating programme objectives, resources, budget and outcomes. MYFF showed that the greatest demand for UNDP services was as an adviser and advocate, indicating that the organization could maximize its impact only by moving upstream. Policy was being realigned to make UNDP a stronger global advocate for human development, to align capacity with demand, and to make the organization more highly networked and field-based. To remain a trusted partner of programme countries in developing policies and institutions, UNDP was gearing itself to provide services in response to demand, to assist programme countries in the crafting of pro-poor policies, and to help build the institutional capacity to sustain and implement them, including in crisis and post-conflict situations. UNDP was building on its advocacy work through the Human Development Report and other publications to ensure that it stayed abreast of new development trends. It intended to be more responsive to country office needs, strengthen the offices in the thematic areas where demand was greatest and ensure that knowledge was accessible to the partners and clients. The shifting emphasis of UNDP towards upstream activities demanded a stronger presence on the ground, and key personnel and functions were being relocated to the field, with headquarters staff to be reduced by 26 per cent by the end of 2001.

As part of its commitment to strengthening partnerships, progress was made in: promoting relationships within the UN operational system, particularly with the specialized agencies; co-operation with the Bretton Woods institutions, and with civil society organizations and the private sector; and promoting aid coordination.

UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board

In 1999, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board held three regular sessions (New York, 25-29 January, 12-16 April and 13-17 September) and an annual session (New York, 14-22 June) [E/1999/35].

At the first regular session, the Board adopted three decisions, including one that gave an overview of the Board's action taken at that session [E/1999/35 (dec. 99/3)]. The other decisions dealt with MYFF and successor programming arrangements (see p. 807).

The Board, at its second regular session, adopted four decisions, including one presenting an overview of the decisions taken at that session [dec. 99/7]. The others dealt with matters relating to UNFPA (see p. 1022).

At the annual session, the Executive Board adopted seven decisions. In addition to an overview of decisions [dec. 99/14], other decisions dealt with UNFPA, an expression of thanks to the outgoing Administrator, a review of the operational reserve, UNDP corporate communication and advocacy strategy, technical cooperation among developing countries, and the annual report of UNOPS (see p. 812).

At its third regular session, the Executive Board adopted 11 decisions, one of which was an overview of action at the session [dec. 99/25]. Three decisions dealt with population matters. Others concerned the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (see PART THREE, Chapter VI), the United Nations Capital Development Fund, budget estimates for 2000-2001 and the funding structure, and UNOPS financial matters.

Appointment of Administrator

By a 21 April note [A/53/237], the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly of the resignation of James Gustave Speth as UNDP Administrator. He requested that the Assembly confirm his appointment of Mark Malloch Brown (United Kingdom) to that position for a four-year term beginning on 1 July. The Assembly confirmed the appointment on 23 April (decision 53/323). The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, on 15 June [dec. 99/8], expressed its appreciation and gratitude to Mr. Speth for his effective management of UNDP from 1993 to 1999.

UNDP/UNFPA reports

Annual report to Economic and Social Council

The Executive Board, on 16 April [dec. 99/7], took note of the annual report of the UNDP Administrator to the Economic and Social Council [DP/1999/10].

Results-oriented annual report

In 1999, UNDP initiated a new reporting procedure, the results-oriented annual report (ROAR), with the first one covering 1999 UNDP activities [DP/2000/23/Add.1]. An integral part of MYFF, ROAR, based on the intended results outlined in MYFF, was a systematic analysis of the results achieved and showed how those results related to the goals and sub-goals of the organization. In that process, the strategic results framework (SRF) was a key management tool for UNDP to report and improve on results. It represented a critical opportunity to test and streamline the application of results-based management in UNDP; by providing a comprehensive picture of the results achieved, it afforded an opportunity to identify problems and challenges in a more simplified and strategic manner that responded to the specific operational concerns of the organization, particularly those of the country offices. The 1999 ROAR was both a performance analysis and strategic document, emphasizing not only results but how to measure them.

The methodology used assessed progress in relation to intended outcomes. An overall percentage of progress was calculated based on the number of outcomes where progress was demonstrated in relation to the total number of outcomes contained in SRF. Those percentage figures were then aggregated at the levels of strategic areas of support, sub-goals and goals. As in MYFF, results covered both outcomes and outputs. SRF identified specific goals in six major areas of interest to UNDP: creating an enabling environment for sustainable human development; eliminating extreme poverty and reducing overall poverty; protecting the environment and natural resources; achieving gender equality and the advancement of women; preventing or reducing the effects of emergencies and natural disasters; and providing UNDP support to the United Nations Agenda for Development.

The performance analysis for the 1999 ROAR was presented in three main segments. The first reviewed performance and analysed trends for each of the six goals covered by MYFF; the second segment covered the three sub-goals chosen for more detailed analysis and the third segment presented an update of the integrated resource framework with some analysis of the 1999 budgetary and resources performance. In each category or goal, an analysis was made by providing: a summary quantitative picture of performance; an identification of broad trends; the highlights of key issues with reference to clusters of countries, including reasons underlying levels of performance; and some implications of the analysis for the future work of the organization. The ROAR analysis updated the UNDP profile as presented in MYFF and assessed its continuing validity by looking at 1999 expenditures and generic outcomes. The 1999 expenditures were presented in ROAR at the level of goals.

According to the analysis, the first goal, an enabling environment for sustainable human development, was the most significant in terms of overall resources, representing 52 per cent of total expenditures and 38 per cent of core resources. The second most important goal, poverty and sustainable livelihoods, accounted for 32 per cent and nearly 40 per cent of core expenditures, followed by the environment and natural resources (13 per cent), and gender equality and special development situations, less than 2 per cent each. Seven sub-goals (promoting livelihoods of the poor; efficient public sector; dialogue for equitable growth; governance institutions and social cohesion; pro-poor policies and monitoring; decentralization and local governance; equity and global and regional environment) accounted for 89.7 per cent of the total UNDP estimated expenditure for 1999 of $1,681 million. Most of the non-core expenditure was in Latin America and the Caribbean, where there was a higher proportion of higher-income countries than other regions. In terms of performance trends, there was considerable variation across goals within the same region. Sub-Saharan Africa, for example, was heavily involved in governance and poverty reduction, but less so in environment, gender and special development situations. Latin America and the Caribbean, while focusing on poverty and governance issues, was also achieving results in environment. Variations in focus and in rates of progress might reflect different country and regional circumstances.

ROAR findings confirmed that UNDP was moving upstream and was performing well at that level; however, the analysis pointed to the lack of strong links between UNDP policy work and its direct interventions. Most of the micro-interventions were focused on community interventions, especially in Africa. There was some evidence of a shift towards linking project-specific work and its results to policy frameworks; for instance, in microfinance, where UNDP worked mostly at the downstream level. Outcomes of the policy work carried out by UNDP did not have the same development value. Outcomes dealing with advocacy and awareness-building could be seen as initial outcomes, with outcomes relating to the formulation and implementation of policies being more indicative of actual development change. The ROAR analysis pointed out that the link between governance programmes and poverty reduction was not well established and it affirmed that the UNDP policy work was focused on promoting pro-poor policies across the board. In capacity-building, data collection pointed to considerable emphasis by UNDP on promoting civil society and public-private partnerships, emerging as a strong feature in its work. About 50 per cent of the governance category still went to public sector improvement activities. Data collection improved, especially with the development of the national human development reports (NHDRs) as major vehicles for developing new data frontiers, such as developing gender-disaggregated data at the provincial levels and advocating their use for policy-setting.

The integrated resource framework encapsulated the resources allocated for programmes, UN operational activities, programme support and management/administration within one framework, which allowed a clearer link with results. Overall, most of the estimates presented were in line with MYFF targets.

As follow-up to the first ROAR exercise, the Administrator said that the next challenge was to ensure that the notion of results and SRF in particular drove management decisions throughout the organization. At the country level, each management team had to make its SRF more strategic, concentrating on a limited number of key outcomes with reporting on progress backed up by relevant indicators. At the corporate level, the analysis undertaken by regional bureaux and units, such as the Bureau for Development Policy and the Evaluation Office, had to identify and promote the key lessons learned from the exercise. UNDP might need to select a limited number of key outcomes, stemming from the global conferences, in which it wished to take global leadership, and pursue a coordinated effort, jointly with key development partners, to track and evaluate progress in achieving global goals and targets.

UNDP operational activities

Country programmes

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board approved first country cooperation frameworks for Kenya, Madagascar, the Niger, Suriname and Tajikistan on 29 January [dec. 99/3], and for Aruba on 16 April [dec. 99/7]. By the latter decision, the Board took note of the report on assistance to Somalia [DP/1999/11] and authorized the Administrator to continue to approve projects for that country on a case-by-case basis. It also took note of the report on assistance to Montserrat [DP/1999/12 & Corr.1]. On 22 June [dec. 99/14], the Board took note of the Administrator's note on assistance to Myanmar [DP/1999/18]. On 17 September [dec. 99/25], it approved first country cooperation frameworks for Antigua and Barbuda, the Central African Republic, Ecuador and Haiti, and took note of the first extension of the first country cooperation framework for Eritrea. It also took note of the Administrator's note on assistance to the Democratic Republic of the Congo [DP/1999/36] and authorized the Administrator to approve assistance for that country on a project-by-project basis.

UNDP performance analysis by goal

Creating an enabling environment for sustainable human development

Of the six main goals identified by UNDP, creating an enabling environment for sustainable human development (SHD) was the most significant in terms of expenditure, accounting for 38 per cent of estimated 1999 core budget expenditures and 57 per cent of all expenditures ($790 million), including core and non-core resources. In terms of the sub-goals of that category, expenditures were: the promotion of an efficient and accountable public sector ($323 million); promoting national, regional and global dialogue on SHD ($240 million); strengthening the capacity of key governance institutions ($240 million); and the promotion of decentralization ($167 million).

From the reports of country offices, average performance appeared to be good as a whole with a 72 per cent rate of progress against intended outcomes. The results were overwhelmingly of an upstream nature, mainly in capacity-building with a focus on policy, regulatory or legal frameworks and support to institutional capacity. Advocacy on SHD matters and related policy formulation was also a key result area. Justice and human rights were growing in importance, with an emphasis on institutional development and civil society awareness, particularly in Europe, Latin America and the Caribbean, and in some conflict-stricken countries, such as Afghanistan, Angola, Burundi, the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Sudan. At the country level, UNDP was a partner in expanding participation in governance; a facilitator in consultative processes; a technical adviser on legal and institutional aspects of decentralization; and a source of assistance in empowering civil society, local governments and communities to become more active in decision-making.

At the sub-goal level, NHDRs emerged as a useful tool in raising awareness on SHD issues and as a springboard for policy advocacy. In 1999, some 75 NHDRs were produced, focusing on a wide array of development concerns. NHDRs led to innovative approaches in monitoring human development conditions in Brazil, Kyrgyzstan, Poland and the Russian Federation. In Uganda, the report led to the establishment of a human development policy-making forum, while in Senegal it contributed to the formulation of a national long-term development plan. Provincial and regional-level HDRs, and the creation of SHD centres in Argentina and Tajikistan brought about a new, broader policy dialogue on SHD concerns. In China, the 1999 NHDR focused on the transition and the role of the State in correcting market failures, including poverty and strengthening health, education and protecting the environment.

In human rights, UNDP was active in strengthening governance institutions in the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS), Europe and Latin America and the Caribbean through awareness-raising and legislative improvements.

UNDP's work was also aimed at the decentralization of government in support of local governance and empowering communities. It provided assistance in Cambodia, Samoa and Thailand for policy and legislation on decentralization and for the creation of additional funding mechanisms at the local level in Bhutan, Cambodia, Indonesia, Mongolia and Nepal. Progress in decentralization was complemented by strengthening the capacity of local authorities in Asia and the Pacific and in Africa. However, results were limited, underlining the need for more strategic intervention and expanded partnerships.

Public sector reform was a key area of UNDP support in 1999. In Africa, the results targeted were the development of plans, laws, regulations and new organizational structures to strengthen macroeconomic or public finance management. The Asia and Pacific and the Arab States regions shared a focus on administrative reform and improved human resources. Institutional strengthening in information technology was a specific dimension of results in Latin American and Caribbean countries. Promoting increased transparency levels and combating corruption were of particular significance for Asian and Pacific and Latin American and Caribbean countries. National bodies to fight corruption were established in Bolivia, Colombia and Georgia. In both African and Asian countries, results focused on improved and more transparent management systems in areas relating to national accounts, audit and revenue.

ROAR data indicated that UNDP was not yet systematically incorporating its insights on poverty reduction into its approaches to governance. UNDP support across a wide range of enabling environment issues, from decentralization to public sector reform, or support to the judicial system, needed to be connected to the needs of the poor. Decentralization did not appear to have been prioritized by the regional bureaux, other than the Regional Bureau for Asia and the Pacific. ROAR highlighted the significance of NHDRs as a powerful tool to stir development debate, particularly in countries where civil society was weak and reliable data scarce, and noted the need to have NHDRs produced by all country offices to promote focused attention on key development issues at the national and regional levels. ROAR data also suggested the need to review linkages between global, regional and country office programming, as country office ROARs often omitted to report progress realized through global or regional initiatives.

Poverty eradication and sustainable livelihoods

Over $195 million of estimated UNDP expenditures from core resources was spent on poverty eradication and supporting sustainable livelihoods. That accounted for 40 per cent of UNDP core resources or 31.6 per cent when cost-sharing contributions were taken into account.

All country offices in Latin America and the Caribbean reported on poverty eradication activities, with high levels of reporting from other regions. The Asia and Pacific region showed the highest rate of progress against intended outcomes, (74 per cent), followed closely by Europe and CIS, but with sub-Saharan Africa (64 per cent) and Latin America and the Caribbean (58 per cent) at somewhat lower levels.

ROAR data revealed good progress in capacity-building. UNDP made headway in all regions in advocacy and awareness-raising, and there was evidence of a correlation between UNDP achievements in advocacy and the development of policy and legal frameworks. UNDP helped to review existing legislation and to prepare recommendations for changes. The involvement of civil society and the promotion of a broad national dialogue were key dimensions of UNDP work that was yielding positive results. Downstream expenditures for poverty eradication were about double those for upstream, particularly in Africa. Strategic support relating to health epidemics, social services, employment, microfinance and self-organization of the poor covered UNDP results for empowerment, participatory approaches and targeted/pilot interventions at the local community level. UNDP's downstream interventions yielded positive results in terms of actual changes occurring and the number of beneficiaries. Knowledge dissemination and networking through information technology was an emerging area for UNDP. Global and regional programmes contributed to the development of networks and exchange of experience. A limited number of UNDP results included a specific gender component. Progress in terms of benefits to women was mostly reported in employment promotion and access to microfinance services.

ROARs confirmed the trends highlighted in the MYFF document. In terms of frequency of UNDP anti-poverty interventions, by number of country offices reporting, UNDP intended results focused on: national pro-poor policies and anti-poverty plans (84); entrepreneurship promotion and access of the poor to microfinance services (74); employment promotion among the poor (67); and self-organization of civil society and the poor (59). UNDP made strong advocacy efforts in countries in transition (in Europe, CIS and Mongolia) and those emerging from financial crisis (Indonesia, Thailand). Indicators demonstrated a meaningful increase in media coverage of poverty issues and more references to those issues by senior government officials. In the prevention and reduction of health epidemics, particularly HIV/AIDS, UNDP was involved in raising awareness, supporting national programmes and making community-level interventions. There was a wide discrepancy in results and frequency of interventions. Little evidence was found of positive results in direct interventions translating into change at the policy-making level. Only 15 country offices, mostly from Asia, were active in strengthening national capacity for monitoring the labour market and the development of pro-poor employment policies. In Bhutan and Sri Lanka, a skills development fund was instituted by the Government and the private sector. In the promotion of employment of the poor, reports from 53 country offices showed progress against intended outcomes at 62 per cent. UNDP provided support through direct training or advisory centres providing support to the poor. A high rate of success was registered for micro-enterprise start-up and expansion with 82 per cent of the 23 reporting country offices showing progress. A total of 76 per cent of active country offices saw improvements at the policy level for microfinance development, such as amendment of regulations, including banking regulations in Cambodia, Kazakhstan, Mongolia and the Philippines, among other countries.

Securing access of the poor to basic services, particularly health and education, was an important goal in most regions. Two thirds of the country offices reported positive results through participatory approaches and local partnership-building. However, results were strikingly modest in structural reforms in the rights of the poor to access to land and natural resources, with only 13 country offices providing reports and only one third of those reporting positive changes in that area. Interventions for food security were concentrated in Africa and Asia, with 13 countries reporting in each of the two regions, and almost all reporting progress with an emphasis on rural areas and training of farmers. Efforts to promote the self-organization of the poor were reported on from all regions and yielded positive results with progress against intended outcomes averaging 66 per cent.

Environment and natural resources

Environment was the third largest beneficiary of estimated UNDP expenditures in 1999. The category absorbed 14 per cent of total expenditures ($240 million), of which non-core resources amounted to $ 170 million, a third of which came from the UNDP/Global Environment Facility (GEF). Downstream activities absorbed more than one third of total expenditures.

Reporting by country offices was generally concentrated in the priority areas identified in MYFF. Progress reported by those offices against intended outcomes averaged 67 per cent. Performance for downstream activities was significantly lower than the average rate of progress for that category; those included micro or targeted programmes, awareness-raising and technology development. Results were more visible for upstream activities aiming at developing policy and regulatory frameworks, including the follow-up to global agreements, data collection and analysis and capacity-building. The main focus of action was on climate change, biodiversity and, to a lesser extent, desertification. GEF funding was a critical determinant in shaping UNDP activities.

Strategic support was provided in: ratification of, and national follow-up to, international conventions and agreements (67 countries); legal/regulatory frameworks and policy implementation (52 countries); management capacity of national environmental agencies (49 countries); local participation in programme design/implementation (45 countries); programmes for sustainable environmental management (43 countries); and capacity for data collection, analysis and dissemination (42 countries).

UNDP offices in all regions reported progress in the formulation, discussion and official endorsement of environmental strategies and/or action plans, for the sector as well as for goals specifically geared towards biodiversity and desertification. All regions, with the Arab States to a lesser extent, reported progress in the drafting and/or adoption of policy, legislation or regulation on a mix of environmental issues, such as authority and responsibilities in environmental management, land/water use, environmental or energy conservation, social forestry and waste management. All regions, with Africa to a lesser extent, reported progress in the compilation of national greenhouse gas inventories, formulation of action plans and legislation on climate change and preparation of national reports to the 1992 United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change [YUN 1992, p. 681], which entered into force in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 938].

Capacity development was targeted at improving capabilities in environmental management, data collection and analysis, mostly in Asia and the Pacific and Latin America and the Caribbean. The estimated rate of progress against intended outcomes was below the average for that thematic category at approximately 56 per cent and there were pockets of particularly weak performance, for example, with regard to technology development where Asia and the Pacific, Latin America and the Caribbean, and the Arab States reported rates of progress between 40 and 50 per cent. The most important strategic area of support concerned interventions for specific geographic areas and target groups, but performance was mixed. Examples of area-based rehabilitation and conservation schemes, such as adoption of sustainable farming practices and alternative energy options and the recovery of degraded or marginal land, included a management plan for a national park in Cambodia; construction of a waste-water treatment plant in Pakistan; pilot projects in Panama on the sustainable use of wild resources; and training of 400 trainers and 12,000 farmers on forest fire prevention and control in Brazil. Initiatives were made to promote the adoption of sustainable natural resources management and livelihood models by target groups at the community level, for example, in the Niger, leading to the establishment of 130 firewood stoves owned by local communities, enabling the sustainable exploitation of 400,000 hectares of savannah forest. In Bangladesh, preparatory work on the adoption of alternative livelihoods had started in 30 villages.

The ROAR analysis called for improved management of the UNDP environment and natural resources portfolio. A review of the portfolio to identify and either phase out or tackle low-performing activities was proposed so that future efforts could be concentrated on a few key areas of intervention.

Gender equality and advancement of women

At $30 million, the gender category represented the smallest portion of resources distributed by goal. It accounted for 3.4 per cent of UNDP core expenditures for 1999 and only 1 per cent of non-core expenditures. Overall reporting for the gender category was lower than for other SRF categories. However, Asia and the Pacific and Europe and CIS provided more comprehensive information on their interventions and results than the other three regions. Progress was significant in Asia and the Pacific with a rate of 75 per cent progress against intended outcomes.

Among its findings, ROAR reported that the new reporting system under-represented the emphasis UNDP placed on gender, as did MYFF. Policy and legal frameworks on gender were key types of results targeted by UNDP and an area of progress for all five regions. Results were more limited for the integration of gender concerns into development policies. UNDP was active in promoting networking for regional and cross-regional exchanges of knowledge, with a growing use of information technology. Partnerships involved non-governmental organizations (NGOs), civil society and media organizations, with support from the global and regional gender programmes. Interventions were focused chiefly on employment promotion for women. The main strategic areas of support and the number of countries offices reporting were: strengthening entrepreneurial and technical skills, knowledge and capacities (37); providing capacity-building support for gender mainstreaming in policies, plans and programmes (37); strengthening the capacity of organizations that represented women's interests and promoted advocacy, networking and partnerships for the advancement of women (35); and supporting the implementation of national action plans for the advancement of women (32).

UNDP was actively involved in the promotion of women's leadership and involvement in the decision-making process, with both Governments and parliaments, through training, international exposure and sensitization. Positive changes were measured in the form of increased media attention towards women's representation in political life, gender-based salary gaps in the economy and political commitment to increase women's participation.

Progress in policy and legislation for gender equality ranged from gender-policy frameworks in Estonia and the Gambia and an implementation strategy in Malawi to legislative changes, with a draft law on gender equality submitted in Haiti and passed in Lithuania, legislation against gender discrimination passed in the Republic of Korea and a bill of rights of spouses adopted in Samoa. In Nepal, UNDP supported the creation of a women's committee in Parliament for gender sensitivity and representation in the civil service. In Estonia, it sponsored a radio/television programme on women's representation in elections and monitored its impact. In Pakistan, the unequal portrayal of women in the media was highlighted, with progress measured through a media-watch system. In El Salvador, 400 women, including municipal counsellors, were trained in political leadership, and in Papua New Guinea, 50 women officials received UNDP training. Women candidates received training in Albania, Botswana and Viet Nam.

Support was provided to national action plans and follow-up on the Fourth World Conference on Women [YUN 1995, p. 1169]. Of 32 country offices reporting, 26 indicated progress. All regions reached tangible results, although there were fewer in Africa, in the formulation and adoption of national action plans, with notable examples in Cambodia, Eritrea, Guyana and the Sudan.

Other activities were aimed at promoting women's equal access to and control over economic and social assets and resources. A total of 37 country offices mentioned interventions in that area and 20 registered progress. Support was given to women's associations, business centres and vocational training, resulting in increased employment opportunities in Albania, Bangladesh and Mexico, which focused on indigenous women. UNDP also sought to ensure the full exercise of human rights, including security and freedom from violence. Concerning the latter goal, Latin America and the Caribbean, Europe and CIS and Asia and the Pacific reported progress. Activities included media campaigns in Jamaica, Kenya and Trinidad and Tobago, and legislative work in Haiti and the Republic of Korea. In Jamaica, 3,000 people received training on women's rights, existing legislation and skills to cope with domestic violence. Police officers were sensitized to gender issues in Kenya, and in the Sudan UNDP held workshops with local leaders and officials on harmful traditional practices for women's health. UNDP also concentrated on integrating gender concerns into development policies; of reports received from 32 country offices in all regions, only half described some progress.

Overall, under-representation highlighted the need for a strengthened effort to mainstream gender concerns into UNDP interventions, particularly those relating to an enabling environment for SHD and poverty.

Special development situations

Under the special development situations (SDS) goal, UNDP supported recovery from natural disasters and the consolidation of peace and stability. Results under SDS accounted for only a small share of 1999 core expenditures ($20 million or 4.1 per cent, and $16 million or 1.1 per cent of all cost-sharing expenditures). Those figures, however, were considered to be the result of under-reporting because SDS results were often reported under other goals. Overall performance was generally good, with country offices reporting an average rate of progress against intended outcomes of 75 per cent.

Eighty-one per cent of all outcomes for SDS related to capacity-building. UNDP's priority was on strengthening the link between development activity and disaster mitigation, planning and reduction, as well as support for sustainable livelihoods in the post-conflict phase. Its activities affected populations, such as demobilized soldiers, who were provided with new opportunities for civilian life in Angola, Guatemala, Nicaragua, the Philippines, Rwanda and Tajikistan.

As part of its activities to mainstream disaster reduction capacity-building, including policy-making, planning and investment, UNDP gave institutional support for improved disaster-management arrangements in five European countries, and helped to establish the National Disaster Management Committee in the Lao People's Democratic Republic and a national task force in Afghanistan. In Angola, the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Sierra Leone, the focus was on government knowledge on disaster management and prevention. Legislation and regulations in those Central American countries most affected by hurricane Mitch (see p. 868) were revised with UNDP assistance.

Restoring the capacity of national institutions and civil society organizations was another focus of such activities through community-level confidence-building and conflict resolution in Burundi, Colombia, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Georgia, Guatemala and Tajikistan. In Rwanda, a successful reintegration programme allowed some 10,000 child soldiers to be reunited with their families (see also p. 674). In Somalia, the rehabilitation of a centre in the north-west had allowed the training of 800 cadets and the establishment of a functional police force in both the north-west and the north-east of the country. Support for affected populations, refugees and the displaced was provided through the resettlement of distressed and/or conflict-affected populations and access to new productive activities in Angola, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Burundi, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Guinea-Bissau, Rwanda, Sierra Leone and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM). In Ukraine, where an estimated 250,000 of those who had been deported had returned to the Crimea, some 50,000 benefited from the UNDP integration and development programme. Other results concerned improved access to basic social services by communities affected by conflict through reconstruction/rehabilitation. UNDP also provided technical assistance for the formulation of national demining plans, such as in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and played a role in post-conflict assistance coordination in Albania, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Georgia, Kazakhstan and FYROM.

An area of growth potential for UNDP was supporting institutions during crisis situations, leading to faster progress from rehabilitation to sustained recovery. To meet that challenge, UNDP needed to improve its ability to intervene and strengthen its response. Finding additional resources was critical for SDS activities, particularly with regard to recovery programmes, such as re-integration and demining.

UNDP support to the United Nations

UNDP support to the United Nations was the most heavily reported of all thematic categories. Progress achieved against intended outcomes for that category was almost 80 per cent, with estimated 1999 core budget expenditures totalling $73 million.

The principal focus of UNDP direct support for the follow-up to global conferences was on the World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113], the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 670] and the Fourth World Conference on Women [YUN 1995, p. 1169]. Follow-up to the World Conference on Education for All [YUN 1990, p. 763] was also notable. Results of aid coordination efforts were mixed. UNDP was actively managing the round-table mechanism and supporting the Consultative Group process, with activities in about 40 countries, mostly in Africa, Asia and the Pacific and Latin America and the Caribbean. Country offices were raising the profile of UNDP and the UN system with good coverage through the media, as well as the Internet. At the corporate level, progress was made in developing common positions on development issues and field operations. The situation was less encouraging with regard to special development situations. Overall, ROARs indicated that a useful role was being played by UNDP in generating momentum within the UN system, especially at the country level, on a common development vision based on the global conferences to facilitate change in programme countries.

In terms of strategic support, within the resident coordinator system, UNDP's role focused on increased use of the common country assessment (CCA) and UNDAF, and adopting programming and operational modalities to improve the coherence and cost-effectiveness of UN system development operations. Progress was made in the formulation and adoption of CCA and UNDAF. A diverse group of countries reported the integration of global conference follow-up in their CCA and/or UNDAF, especially on issues of poverty, basic social services, gender and human rights. Joint initiatives, from advocacy to joint development of cross-sectoral strategies and programmes, to a co-ordinated response in special development situations, increased. Those included joint assessments with UNICEF on the 20/20 initiative in Lebanon, Morocco, the Niger, Sri Lanka, Togo and Viet Nam; reports on national follow-up to the global conferences in Bangladesh, Bulgaria, Ethiopia, Fiji, Kyrgyzstan and Pakistan; joint evaluations and review exercises in Nigeria; and collaborative planning on post-hurricane Mitch rehabilitation and recovery in Central America. Other results included the harmonization of programme cycles; needs assessment and agreement on common services and UN houses; and the formation or restructuring of thematic groups. A number of offices reported progress towards focusing on fewer thematic groups and/or using them for substantive analysis, advocacy, planning and technical support, as in Indonesia, Kenya, Malaysia, Myanmar, Pakistan and the Republic of Moldova. HIV/AIDS emerged as a key priority for thematic groups.

UNDP's work in support of aid coordination was closely related to its role as funder and manager of the resident coordinator system. Three quarters of country offices active in that area reported progress. Analysis of data by income group indicated that country offices in the net-contributor countries were doing best, followed by those in low- and middle-income countries, and country offices in the least developed countries in the bottom tier.

Country offices were making considerable efforts in communication and outreach to a wide variety of target groups on the mission and the work of the UN system, especially that of non-represented agencies, by contributing to joint information/communication strategies for the UN system; the establishment or development of UN information centres (UNICs); the organization of special events; the preparation of press releases, briefings and newspaper supplements; and the production of public relations materials. Particularly noteworthy was the development of UNDP and UN web sites in more than 30 countries.

The strong performance in that category could be seen as both a strength and a weakness for UNDP. It reflected United Nations strength in internalizing its reforms, yet it pointed to a weakness in that progress was measured by the number of UNDAFs and CCAs under way rather than by what they had achieved. That indicated the need for a substantial revision of the SRF structure and content with greater emphasis on outcomes to be pursued in collaboration with other UN organizations.

The issue of process also raised questions. The sharp rise in transaction costs (the cost of doing business with the UN) was a consequence of the lack of progress on streamlining agency-specific programming processes. Second, the uniform methodology for preparing CCA and UNDAF penalized those regions with limited capacities, either in the country offices or the host Governments. Therefore, it might not be meaningful to pursue such a standardized approach. The findings of the analysis supported a stronger role for UNDP in seeking a reduction in transaction costs with the UN system; mobilizing UN partners to achieve concrete development outcomes at the country level; and defining and pursuing its own niche in direct support to conference follow-up.

Programme planning and management

Reform measures

The UNDP Administrator, in a February report to the Executive Board [DP/1999/10], commented that the Secretary-General's reform programme (see p. 1269) had provided a strong boost to the implementation of General Assembly resolutions 50/120 [YUN 1995, p. 883] and 53/192 [YUN 1998, p. 802] on the triennial policy review of operational activities for development. The reform programme and legislation had provided for a coherent coordination structure at headquarters and the country level; where the UNDP Administrator chaired undg, UNDP managed and funded the resident coordinator system and the UNDP resident representative was normally the resident coordinator. At the same time, undg had taken the lead on a number of initiatives to enhance coordination of operational activities such as UNDAF, common premises and the resident coordinator system.

On 16 April [E/1999/35 (dec. 99/7)], the Executive Board took note of the Administrator's report.

A March report to the Executive Board on UNDP and UN reform [DP/1999/16] highlighted developments within UNDP in the context of the Secretary-General's programme of reform. It stated that the creation of undg had boosted implementation of General Assembly resolutions on operational activities, particularly resolution 53/192. undg had achieved rapid progress on specific provisions of the legislation in operational activities. The main challenge remaining was to achieve effective outreach to the UN system as a whole since operational activities coordinated under the resident coordinator system concerned the system as a whole. Annexed to the report was an update by the undg Office of overall progress on the undg initiative.

Concerning funding, the Executive Board had paved the way for a new era in UNDP core funding, with its 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 825] and 1999 [dec. 99/1] decisions on MYFF (see p. 806). UNDP was developing MYFF, integrating programme objectives, resources, budget and outcomes. The transfer to UNDP of technical cooperation support functions in natural disaster mitigation had been effected. The Emergency Response Division had already initiated new capacity-building activities in developing countries to promote comprehensive disaster reduction approaches. UNDP also supported a coordinated inter-agency approach within the UN system and with other development partners, including NGOs.

The proposal for the establishment of a UN enterprise liaison service with the private sector had been redefined. UNDP continued to strengthen its operational relations with the World Bank and both were engaged in discussions on issues that had arisen out of the change processes being undertaken by their respective organizations, particularly the issue of grant-based funding for technical cooperation.

In June [dec. 99/14], the Executive Board took note of the March report.

In a later report [DP/2000/11], the Administrator stated that, in 1999, the undg Executive Committee decided to proceed with a thorough review of undg with a view to rationalizing the number of subsidiary bodies and introducing sunset clauses in all subgroups. Where possible, standing groups would be replaced by ad hoc task-oriented meetings of limited duration.

UNDP Business Plans (2000-2003)

In December [DP/2000/8], the UNDP Administrator submitted to the Executive Board the UNDP Business Plans for 2000-2003, aimed at ensuring that UNDP responded effectively to the growing demand for upstream activities and complemented those activities with strong global advocacy and direct support to programme countries through aid coordination and resource mobilization. The Plans, which emanated from the seventh goal of MYFF, outlined a new vision and goals for UNDP. A key priority would be to ensure also that UNDP had the policy expertise, key partnerships and internal capacity to deliver its services effectively. The Administrator explained that the starting place should be the needs of the programme countries, where the unprecedented pace of global change had created tremendous demand for new kinds of support. MYFF reflected the force of those new demands by showing a clear trend towards upstream activities, such as policy and institutional support. Those kinds of activities played to UNDP strengths. They leveraged the trust it enjoyed from programme countries, and built upon its roles in advocacy, UN development coordination and country-level resource mobilization. However, helping those countries implied considerable change in UNDP operations, policies, partnerships and culture.

The Administrator said that programmes would remain country-driven but UNDP would be much more effective at policy dialogue and institution-building than at directly supporting isolated poverty-alleviation projects. Project work would continue and even increase as resources grew but would be aligned behind policies. They would be designed to sustain policy change by incorporating policy dialogue, pilot approaches and institutional support, with a special emphasis on South-South knowledge transfer.

Through the ROAR process, the areas of high priority to programme countries would be reviewed and checked against current institutional processes and expertise; the shortfalls and gaps that emerged would be signposts for where capacities needed to be built up. The new global and regional programmes that began in 2001 would be designed with a clear view to high-demand areas. By the same token, low-demand areas would point to activities that might be undertaken more effectively by others. UNDP would be rigorous in identifying partners in all areas where there was duplication, where others clearly had a comparative advantage or where it was not feasible to build in-house expertise. The discussions that had already begun with the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) were an example of that.

At the same time, the overall trend towards policy support, institution-building and other upstream activities was clear. The Administrator intended to redesign the Bureau for Development Policy to focus on applied policy support; strengthen the link between policy and operations; enhance capacity to advocate for more equitable global and national policies; re-engineer activities to provide more effective support to countries in special development situations; strengthen capacity to capture and leverage global best practices by investing in networking and knowledge management capability; and prioritize TCDC in all activities, including global and regional programmes. He intended to strengthen reforms already begun within UNDG and the resident coordinator system. At the corporate level, to increase the coherence of overall partnership activities, he intended to group a number of key activities into a new Bureau of Resources and Strategic Partnerships to increase UNDP's capacity for resource mobilization. A true culture of performance would also be created, including reducing the overall size of headquarters by 25 per cent, partly through shifts of staff to the field.

The Administrator also intended to pursue vigorously the core and non-core MYFF resource targets and believed that the successful implementation of the Business Plans would be a major step in that direction. At the same time, he was committed to maximizing resources for programming and would therefore fund the estimated $25 million short-term additional costs associated with those Plans through savings or extrabudgetary contributions. In that regard, he had instructed managers to target an additional $12 million of savings to be redeployed towards change projects. The 2000-2001 budget proposals also included implementation of a strategy relating to improvement of government contributions to local office costs performance and proposals for strengthening cost-recovery mechanisms.

Those initiatives should lead to a revitalized, dynamic UNDP that could respond effectively to the increasing demands of its programme-country clients for upstream services, playing a leading role in the struggle for human development and poverty eradication worldwide.

Change management: UNDP 2001

In January, the UNDP Administrator reported to the Executive Board on the implementation of the UNDP 2001 change management process [E/1999/35], observing that there had been progress in all the key strategic issues since the launching of the programme [YUN 1997, p. 871]. Referring to decentralization as the central theme of UNDP 2001, the Administrator cited examples of several initiatives that were contributing to that outcome, including the subregional resource facilities, new streamlined programme and finance manuals, and new guidelines on national execution, collaboration with the private sector and decentralized cost-sharing agreements. Human resource policies were having a positive impact on the effectiveness of country offices, including the national staff career management policy to enhance the professional capabilities of national staff, and a gender balance policy that was contributing to enhancing the number of women staff members at all levels; the number of women resident representatives had risen from 14 in 1996 to 30 in 1998. The Administrator reported that UNDP was using a fast-track mechanism for placing staff in country offices in countries in special development circumstances and was going to introduce competency-based approaches for staff in other offices. He assured the Board that the 2000-2001 budget strategy would include measures for managing staff growth at headquarters. The Administrator also discussed systems improvements, problems in carrying out the five-day response mandate for requests from country offices, building an accountability culture and UNDP's contribution to the overall UN reform process through UNDG and UNDAF. On 29 January [dec. 99/3], the Executive Board took note of the progress report on the implementation of change management.

In December [DP/2000/3], UNDP issued a comprehensive assessment of the UNDP 2001 change process. The assessment found that the impact of the change management process had been limited by the prevalence of restructuring over re-engineering, which should have provided the context for organizational restructuring and determined the core competencies necessary to accomplish the organization's mission. There had been much tinkering with processes and procedures to improve efficiencies without questioning whether certain activities should be done. A more systematic approach was required for the optimization of the organization. Moreover, the change management process had not fostered closer bonds between corporate spheres and operations; in fact, the traditional divide might have grown wider. There was an urgent need to redefine the headquarters structure to ensure that it was more closely knit, and to streamline decision-making functions at the highest levels of the organization.

The report also found that a culture supportive of learning had not been achieved because of a lack of leadership incentives and career rewards for results-based learning accomplishments. While evidence of learning was visible in many areas, there was no systematic means of assessing its overall organizational impact. The report suggested that UNDP elevate the Learning Advisory Board to play a central role in organizational learning, bringing together strategic organizational initiatives and resource commitments.

The idea of setting a finite date for the end of the change management process in December 1999 was unrealistic, after only two years of operation, since organizational change required continuous commitment with adequate resources. In attempting to overcome the challenges, it was necessary to recognize the deeply rooted, complacent culture of an organization based on entitlement that carried out a central coordinating and funding role within the UN system. The centrifugal tendencies or diverse power centres in headquarters became points of resistance, and negotiations on change were often defensive and parochial, protecting unit positions while trying to stave off budget cuts. It was premature to disband the Change Management Committee and the idea of building a coalition for change across the organization still merited consideration. Greater attention should be paid to re-engineering that would adapt general principles to the circumstances. The entrepreneurial spirit needed to be unleashed to take advantage of the changing environment, and the organization needed to become less risk-averse, seizing opportunities to experiment. However, despite the difficulties, UNDP was better positioned to appreciate the challenges of and opportunities for change. The positive aspects of change management would be exploited to allow the organization to overcome those challenges in the twenty-first century.

Communications and advocacy strategy

In an oral report to the Executive Board's first regular session in January [E/1999/35], the Director of the Division of Public Affairs reviewed progress in implementing UNDP's communications and advocacy strategy during the period June to December 1998 in key communications areas. He noted that substantial efforts were being made to develop a communications culture at all levels and locations of the organization. UNDP had shifted its work in public affairs to advance an active radio and television strategy in addition to its work with the print media. Advocacy and constituency-building, special events and helping to shape the media agenda were other areas of focus. A major effort was made to update key public information materials and data to reflect UNDP reform, its leadership role in UNDG and action in pursuit of its main goals, as well as monitoring the use of UNDP's information material. The Division of Public Affairs worked closely with the UN Department of Public Information in sharing information and providing guest experts for press briefings. UNDP also made special efforts to get the organization's viewpoint heard through opinion pages and interviews with its senior management by mass media.

The main challenge in implementing the strategy was the overall shrinking of development assistance in donor countries and the competition among funds and programmes for limited resources. Specifically, additional resources were needed for sharpening messages, expanding media consciousness and outreach, increasing language translation and expanding monitoring, evaluation and audience-targeting.

On 29 January [dec. 99/3], the Board took note of the oral presentation on key areas of communications needs and the comments made thereon by delegations.

In response to the Board's 1998 request [YUN 1998, p. 823], UNDP reported in May on its corporate communications and advocacy strategy [DP/1999/19], which was aimed at increasing understanding of what UNDP did and increasing support and resources for the organization. The report reviewed the 10-point strategic action plan on which the strategy was based and presented results achieved since its introduction in 1995; problems encountered in promoting a culture of communications and advocacy; and action to be taken in 2000-2001 to profile UNDP more effectively and to demonstrate the organization's distinctive value-added activities when compared to other providers of development services. The public affairs and advocacy activities of all bureaux at UNDP headquarters, including the associated funds and programmes, and UNDP country and liaison offices were taken into consideration in the report's analyses.

In his annual report covering 1999 [DP/2000/23], the Administrator said that UNDP had refined its communications strategy to target more effectively the donor country media that influenced policy and decision makers. At the same time, to support the organization's shifting emphasis towards the field, UNDP expanded its support to communications efforts at the country level through special public affairs training for resident representatives and senior managers and the preparation of a public affairs manual for media and advocacy outreach. UNDP stepped up its promotional efforts for specialized publications, such as the Poverty Report and the book Global Public Goods, and for its flagship monthly magazine Choices. Media attention on the cause of poverty eradication was generated by UNDP with the launch of netaid.org in 1999, with three simultaneous concerts in New York, London and Geneva broadcast live over the new web site, radio and television, including the youth-oriented cable television networks MTV and VH1. Other special events included trips of UNDP Goodwill Ambassadors, generating media attention.

The Board, on 22 June [dec. 99/10], noted that elaboration of the UNDP corporate communications and advocacy strategy continued as a work in progress and welcomed the emphasis of the strategy on results and progress towards a clearer demonstration of the UNDP development achievements. The Board requested further elaboration of the results-based strategy to strengthen the linkage with MYFF and to report on budgetary and staffing implications. It invited the Administrator to report in 2000 on the strategy, taking into account the results of the discussion on MYFF.

Evaluation

The Administrator, in his annual report on evaluation in UNDP for 1998 [DP/1999/17], described the work of the Evaluation Office, which was built on three strategic directions: supporting UNDP in becoming a results-oriented organization; strengthening substantive accountability; and promoting organizational learning. It reported progress in applying results-based management and the Office also provided technical leadership and support in designing and implementing the results framework, specifically SRFs, which formed part of MYFF. Concerning substantive accountability, efforts were undertaken to connect evaluations and their findings to decision-making and enhanced organizational practices, primarily through tracking and compliance systems, which revealed a rate of 71 per cent compliance at the end of 1998 for projects approved in 1988-1989. The Office emphasized the systematic sharing of the lessons learned from empirical evidence by introducing products that provided timely, relevant lessons for practitioners and decision makers.

In 1998, the Evaluation Office and UNDP-associated funds and programmes had carried out strategic and thematic evaluations. Two strategic evaluations were initiated, one on refugees and internally displaced persons and the other on the relationship between UNDP and UNOPS. Among thematic evaluations, one covered activities in governance in Latin America and the Caribbean, and in the Arab States. At the request of the Regional Bureau for Europe and CIS, the Evaluation Office provided a review on the role of NGOs and the promotion of human rights, which covered five countries in the region. The Office continued to monitor evaluations at the country level and the recommendations made as a result of them. The Office received a total of 85 reports in 1998 against 79 the previous year. Partnership development was an essential dimension of the work of the Office, which developed dialogue with its partners for evaluation co-operation.

In June [dec. 99/14], the Executive Board took note of the report on evaluation.

Funding strategy

Multi-year funding framework

As requested by the Executive Board in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 825], the UNDP Administrator submitted to the Board's first regular session in January his proposals for a multi-year funding framework [DP/1999/CRP.4]. He explained that the process would include a four-year funding framework, encompassing programme goals, sub-goals, areas for UNDP support, expected outcomes and outputs and a resource framework integrating all financial allocations; a results-oriented annual report (ROAR) (see p. 795) to provide the Board at its second regular session each year with a comprehensive assessment of results and a review of the use of resources; and the MYFF report, containing a more in-depth assessment every four years of performance relating to outcomes and outputs.

MYFF would consist of a strategic results framework and an integrated resource framework. The strategic results framework would provide a broad frame of reference of UNDP development goals in the categories of sustainable human development, poverty eradication and sustainable livelihood, environment, gender, special development situations, UNDP support to the United Nations and management. Within each category, broad goals, sub-goals and strategic areas would be identified to provide a frame of reference for operating units in the definition of outcomes and outputs. The framework would also identify outcomes and outputs at the operating unit level (country office). Each operating unit would define the expected outcomes and outputs to enable an assessment of results achieved. The strategic results framework would provide a frame of reference for the regional bureaux, country offices and other operating units.

The integrated resource framework would relate the overall framework to the allocation of programme, programme support, support to the United Nations and management and administrative costs. Resource allocations would be provided within three broad groupings, consistent with the strategic-results framework—the five programme/thematic categories, UNDP support to the United Nations, and management and administration. Within the programme/thematic category, allocations would be differentiated between least developed countries (LDCs), middle-income countries, net contributor countries and other countries.

The Administrator stated that MYFF represented a major step forward for UNDP since it would for the first time provide a comprehensive framework for assessing results together with an integrated resource framework. It would replace the overall framework provided by the current successor programming arrangements, starting in January 2000. MYFF would lead to a redefinition of budgetary expenditures and provide a mechanism for capturing "soft results", a critical dimension of UNDP's work. The Administrator also presented preliminary proposals for the overall timing and linkages between the funding system and MYFF and ROAR, the April special funding session, the required documentation and the decisions to be taken, emphasizing that MYFF would become the main vehicle for mobilizing core resources for UNDP.

In terms of reporting, ROAR would report on actual performance against expected outcomes and outputs, provide information on the use of resources in each of the seven categories in MYFF and include reference to situational indicators.

The Executive Board, on 29 January [dec. 99/1], reaffirmed the need to reverse the decline in core resources and to place UNDP core funding on a predictable and continuous basis and to reach, as soon as possible, the target of $1.1 billion, while recognizing the risk of over-dependence on a limited number of donors. It also reaffirmed the importance of developing MYFF as an integral element of the funding strategy. It took note of the development of a reporting system comprising an annual ROAR and a four-yearly assessment of MYFF and requested the Administrator to continue to develop MYFF and the reporting system. The Board decided to hold the first funding session in April 1999. It requested all UNDP member States to communicate to the secretariat their voluntary core contributions and a schedule of payments by early April, and the Administrator to provide a record of actual core contributions and payment of government contributions to local office costs. The Administrator should continue to consult with member States on the further development and implementation of MYFF, and submit in 1999 an interim report on the implications of the funding strategy for the funds and programmes associated with UNDP and, in 2000, a report on the proposed timing, format and content of MYFF, including a clear indication of how lessons learned in one MYFF cycle would be fed into the next.

In response to that decision, the Board held the first funding session during its second regular session in April at which the Administrator reported on core funding commitments to UNDP for 1999 and onwards.

On 16 April [dec. 99/7], the Board took note of the Administrator's report with the comments made thereon, including the revised tables setting out commitments/estimates of contributions to UNDP core resources for 1999-2000 and income to UNDP core resources and government local office costs for 1997-1998, as at 30 April 1999; and the schedule of payments confirmed for 1999 commitments to UNDP core resources.

Responding to the Board's January decision, the Administrator submitted in April an interim report on the implications of the funding strategy for UNDP-associated funds and programmes (the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF), the United Nations Volunteers and UNIFEM) [DP/1999/20]. He stated that UNDP had initiated dialogue with those funds and programmes to ensure that their future programme reporting and budgetary processes would be aligned with the requirement of the funding strategy. While concrete arrangements would be worked out in 1999 to ensure that their reporting of results and resource allocations were integrated in the new UNDP MYFF cycle, due regard needed to be given to the fact that those entities had their own organizational policies and priorities and that their activities were subject to their established business plans and strategies.

On 22 June [dec. 99/14], the Executive Board took note of the interim report.

In August, the Administrator submitted to the Board his proposals for the first MYFF, covering 2000-2003 [DP/1999/30], and the strategic results framework [DP/1999/CRP.12].

In September [dec. 99/23 A], the Executive Board took note of MYFF 2000-2003 and the strategic results framework. It requested the Administrator to develop and refine MYFF as a strategic management tool and to consult with the Board on its further implementation, including the development of indicators for measuring outcomes and results, the scope and content of the reporting system for reporting on results and priority areas of the UNDP mandate, such as eradication of poverty, to define the outcomes and results of UNDP programmes. The Administrator should enable full participation of programme countries in the elaboration, monitoring and reporting of the strategic results framework and submit in 2000 proposals for revising and updating MYFF, indications of how lessons learned from one MYFF would be taken into account in the subsequent cycle, and proposals for the structure and timing of the MYFF report. The Administrator should submit every year an updated resources allocation framework on the basis of a table included in the integrated resources framework presented in the 2000-2003 MYFF; and strategic results and integrated resources frameworks for the funds administered by UNDP, incorporating them into MYFF.

As called for by the Board, the Administrator issued the first ROAR covering 1999 [DP/2000/23/Add.1], which provided a comprehensive picture of where UNDP had focused its efforts and assessed progress made against intended outcomes for each of the six goals covered by MYFF (see p. 806).

Successor programming arrangements

As requested by the Executive Board in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 827], the Administrator presented in January information on successor programming arrangements [E/1999/35]. He stated that it was imperative that the Board resolve the difficulties that had arisen in applying the approved target for resource assignment from the core (TRAC) distribution model, so that countries could proceed with future programme planning. Of the various options he presented, the Administrator stated that adjusting the gross national product (GNP) per capita breakpoint between low- and middle-income countries from $750 to $900 most closely adhered to the main principles of UNDP's programme resource allocation. That option ensured enhanced focus on low-income and least developed countries where UNDP had always concentrated the bulk of its resources and safeguarded the principle of a gradual move to net contributor country (NCC) status for countries that achieved a higher GNP per capita, since it allowed floor provisions for the middle-income group to be met.

The Administrator underlined the important role that UNDP played in NCCs through the resident coordinator system and participation in self-financed development activities. He expected that involvement to lead to a more significant level of voluntary contributions from NCCs and invited the Board to provide guidance on the issue of NCC thresholds.

On 29 January [dec. 99/2], the Board reaffirmed the basic principles for the allocation of programme resources as outlined in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 895]: the focus on low-income countries and LDCs; progressivity in favour of low-income countries; and a gradual move to net contributor status and graduation for countries that achieved higher levels of GNP. It adjusted the GNP per capita breakpoint delineating low- and middle-income countries from $750 to $900. Expressing concern that unless there was early attainment of the $1.1 billion target, the focus on low-income countries and LDCs in terms of impact would not be attained, the Board asked the Administrator to propose ways to redress any shortfall in the target. It decided that UNDP should consider NCCs as a separate group of programme countries outside the TRAC distribution model and endorsed the proposal to eliminate the system of reimbursable TRAC earmarkings with effect from 2001, subject to certain provisions, among them that first-time NCCs would continue to receive, for a grace period of three years, a TRAC-1 (TRAC under line 1.1.1 of the budget) calculated at 60 per cent of the earmarking of the previous period. The Board maintained the current GNP per capita thresholds for NCCs at $4,700 and requested the Administrator to proceed with the calculation of TRAC-1 earmarkings, using 1997 or the latest available GNP and population data, and to proceed with programme planning and implementation for 2001-2003. It requested the Administrator to report in 2002 on possible improvements of the current TRAC resource distribution model, including a review of thresholds. The Board endorsed the proposed establishment in all interested NCCs of a locally reimbursed revolving TRAC.

UNDP reported in March on preliminary TRAC-1 and TRAC-2 (budget line 1.1.2) earmarkings for 2001-2003 totalling $1,738.8 million, broken down by category of country and region; preliminary TRAC-1 earmarkings by country for the same period; and TRAC-1 earmarkings for new NCCs for 2001-2003 and reimbursable TRAC-1 for 2000 [DP/1999/27].

On 16 April [dec. 99/7], the Executive Board took note of the preliminary TRAC earmarkings for 2001-2003.

Risk management

The Administrator, in a February report on UNDP financial risk management [DP/1999/5/Rev.1], reviewed the Operational Reserve, established in 1970 to guarantee the financial liquidity and integrity of UNDP [YUN 1970, p. 346], and analysed the nature of the financial risks UNDP faced. The report also defined and discussed the concepts of risk management, liquidity, working capital, the Operational Reserve and other contingency reserves and made recommendations regarding liquidity, working capital and reserve levels.

The Administrator explained that the Operational Reserve was initially established at the level of $150 million, with a shift in policy from full funding to a partial funding system. In 1980 [YUN 1980, p. 587], the then Governing Council established the Reserve for the third programming cycle (1982-1986) at 25 per cent of anticipated contributions and expenditures for each year, which was reduced to 20 per cent in 1990 under a modified formula [YUN 1990, p. 391]. If that formula were retained, the Reserve would be set at $180 million for 1998 and 1999.

By definition, the Operational Reserve was limited to providing reserves for regular resources activities. However, based on trends in the growth of "other resources", particularly cost-sharing and trust funds, which under the Financial Regulations and Rules were required to be fully funded, the Administrator believed that a contingency reserve was also needed for risks associated with those activities. The Operational Reserve should continue to be a reserve for risks associated with regular resources activities.

The most significant financial risks faced by UNDP for regular resources and other resources activities were income related, due to unpredictable fluctuations in contributions pledged from year to year, their variable value as a result of currency exchange rates, and unknown timing of payments of contributions. Other risks related to expenditures, cash and investment assets, liability and business interruption. Based on those risk elements, the Administrator recommended that the formula for the calculation of the Operational Reserve be amended.

The proposed formula would be the sum of the income component (the equivalent of 10 per cent of the average annual voluntary contributions over the most recent three years); the expenditure component (the equivalent of 2 per cent of the average total expenditure over the most recent three years); the liability and structural component (the equivalent of 25 per cent of the sum of the income and expenditure components); and the cash-flow component (the equivalent of cash needed for one month, calculated as one twelfth of total expenditure of the most recent year). Based on the amended formula, the level of the Reserve would be set at $206 million for the current biennium, an increase of $26 million over the current formula. He also recommended the establishment of a reserve for other resources activities of $49 million funded through a transfer from the extrabudgetary account.

In discussing the implication of liquidity for the Operational Reserve, the Administrator believed that UNDP should manage its liquidity to fall within the range of the equivalent of 6 to 12 months' expenditure as a prudent level.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in March [DP/1999/26], stated that the Administrator's report did not provide a satisfactory review of actual experience with the risk elements identified, nor did it address adequately the impact that the increase in the Operational Reserve might have on the resources available for programmes. ACABQ agreed with the proposal to establish a reserve for other resources activities at the level of $49 million.

In June [dec. 99/9], the Executive Board supported the establishment of a reserve for other resources activities and the mechanism for its funding. It approved the recommended formula for the calculation of the level of the Operational Reserve for regular resources, annexed to its decision, and decided to reduce the factor used to calculate the liability and structural risk component of the Reserve from 25 per cent of the sum of the income and expenditure components to 10 per cent.

Financing

In his annual review of the financial situation for 1999 [DP/2000/29 & Add.1], the Administrator presented an overview of UNDP's financial condition at the end of 1999, as well as the comparative figures for 1998.

While UNDP continued to attract other resources, the organization was greatly affected by the decline in voluntary contributions. Contributions to UNDP regular resources (i.e., core resources) in 1999 represented 28 per cent of the aggregate contributions received during the year ($2,370 million) compared to 46 per cent in 1995. The report thus emphasized the serious financial crisis that UNDP was facing in its regular resource base. Reductions in voluntary contributions since 1992 had led to continuous erosion of the amount of financial assistance that programme countries received from UNDP through the TRAC system. Tight spending controls in the interests of financial discipline were being introduced to prevent problems of liquidity. The unpredictability in voluntary contributions gave rise to stop-go programming of the kind that MYFF, as a mechanism for more predictable contributions, was designed to avoid.

Compared to 1998, total income, including those of the Special Measures Fund for the Least Developed Countries (SMF/LDC) decreased by 8.4 per cent to $719 million and total expenditure went down by 8 per cent to $811 million. Overall, there was a 49.6 per cent decline in the available resource balance. Voluntary contributions to the regular resources (inclusive of SMF/LDC) fell by 8.6 per cent ($64 million) to $681 million in 1999. Contributions received from the top 15 non-programme country donors (Austria, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, Norway, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, United Kingdom, United States) amounted to $1 billion or 96 per cent of total contributions received from non-programme countries, the same level received in the previous two years. As at 31 December 1999, some $38 million in pledges remained unpaid, compared to $21 million at the end of the previous year.

Total expenditure under regular resources declined to $811 million from $882 million in 1998, reflecting an adjustment to the lower level of contributions. Programme expenditures in 1999 decreased by 16.6 per cent to $490 million against $558 million in 1998. Expenditure for nationally executed projects also decreased. The percentage share of programme expenditure among the regions remained stable. The largest regions, Africa and Asia and the Pacific, were severely impacted by the decrease in core resources. Compared to 1998, delivery dropped in the Africa region from $244 million to $206 million and in the Asia and Pacific region from $169 million to $145 million. In the Arab States, there was a significant decrease from $53 million in 1998 to $25 million in 1999. In Europe and CIS, there was a slight decrease from $44 million in 1998 to $41 million in 1999, while in the Latin America and Caribbean region the delivery dropped from $46 million in 1998 to $23 million in 1999.

Programme support to implementing agents increased to $51 million, compared to $38.9 million in 1998, owing to claims of prior years for implementing projects under national execution.

As at 31 December 1999, the balance of unexpended resources for regular resource activities amounted to $107 million, a decline of some 50 per cent compared to $212 million a year earlier. The level of investments for regular resources decreased 77 per cent to $45.5 million from $197 million in 1998, due mainly to the drop in unexpended resources by $105.1 million.

The other resources activities, which comprised mainly government cost-sharing, third-party cost-sharing, government cash counterpart contributions, trust funds, management services agreements and the Junior Professional Officer programme, represented the bulk of all activities managed by UNDP. The overall income and expenditure in 1999 remained stable and the resource balance at the end of the year comprised 85 per cent of UNDP's aggregate resources from all sources. Contributions for government cost-sharing activities decreased by almost 8 per cent to $1.2 billion.

In September [dec. 99/24], the Executive Board noted with concern the continuing and significant decline in core contributions to UNDP, particularly resources available for programme activities, and the impact that such resource shortfalls had on UNDP's capacity to meet the needs of programme countries. The Board requested the Administrator to bring the situation to the attention of the Secretary-General with a view to mobilizing the support of world political leaders to reverse the trend of declining contributions.

In a related decision [dec. 99/25], the Board took note of the Administrator's report on the annual review of the 1998 financial situation [YUN 1998, p. 827].

Audit reports

In January, the Executive Board considered the Administrator's report [DP/1999/3] on follow-up to recommendations of the report of the Board of Auditors for the 1996-1997 biennium [YUN 1998, p. 1288], which provided a tabular summary of recommendations by area of audit, together with the status of follow-up action and target date for implementation. The Administrator said that progress was achieved in many areas and efforts were being made to address outstanding issues.

On 29 January [dec. 99/3], the Board took note of the Administrator's report. In a further report submitted in October [DP/2000/6], the Administrator updated the information provided in his earlier report.

In March [DP/1999/23], the Administrator submitted a report on UNDP internal audit and oversight activities conducted by the UNDP Office of Audit and Performance Review (OAPR) for 1998. OAPR issued 189 audit, investigation and related reports. Some of those were carried out with the UN Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) and the UNICEF internal audit group. In addition, the results of 764 national execution audit reports were evaluated and feedback was provided to country offices. OAPR provided internal audit and related services to 45 of the 134 country offices and five headquarters or functional units during the year. A total of 94 internal audit reports were issued. Of the recommendations made in those reports, 91 per cent were accepted by auditees and were being implemented. Regarding special audits and investigations, 33 new cases were initiated during 1998, ranging from allegations of fraud and serious misconduct to inadequate performance and potential conflicts of interest. Several cases were being dealt with in cooperation with OIOS, including a case involving legal action against two individuals. In the report, the Administrator also commented on six recommendations made by the Joint Inspection Unit in a 1998 report entitled "More coherence for enhanced oversight in the United Nations system" [YUN 1998, p. 1257].

On 22 June [dec. 99/14], the Board took note of the Administrator's report.

Budget estimates 2000-2001

In June [DP/1999/31], the Administrator submitted to the Executive Board the support budget estimates for the 2000-2001 biennium. He proposed a zero nominal growth budget in net terms of $518.2 million, which was $0.3 million less than the budget approved for 1998-1999 [YUN 1997, p. 879]. The Administrator's proposals resulted in a decrease of the gross budget from $590.6 million for 1998-1999 to $585.4 million for 2000-2001.

The proposals incorporated total net reductions of $24.5 million, which included $16.8 million in real reductions and $7.7 million relating to the shift of the allocation for development support services to the programme. The proposals also incorporated a net increase of $19.2 million relating to cost increases. The estimates also took into account more realistic income projections relating to contributions by host country Governments towards local costs of UNDP country presence. Those income projections resulted in a net decrease of $5 million in 2000-2001 compared to the 1998-1999 projections.

In an August report [DP/1999/33], ACABQ recommended that the Executive Board authorize the biennial support budget as proposed by the Administrator, on the understanding that a revised budget would be submitted to the Board after the new Administrator and his Transition Team had completed the review of the UNDP management processes. That review should take into account such matters as charging other resources a fair share for administrative, management and other services provided by UNDP to activities funded by other resources. If little improvement was made in core income, ACABQ believed that a hard look would have to be taken on how to curtail programmes and activities.

In September [E/1999/35 (dec. 99/23)], the Executive Board took note of the report on the support budget for 2000-2001, which was an integral part of the MYFF integrated resources framework. It approved the proposal on programme support for country offices and headquarters, as well as those on government contributions towards local office costs, including the mechanism for calculating such contributions. The Administrator was asked to consult with programme countries on other modalities of meeting local office costs obligations.

The Board approved the proposal on the UN house programme to establish common premises and common services, ensuring that there would be no additional burden on the host countries. It requested the Administrator to consult with the Board as to whether a revised 2000-2001 budget was required.

The Board approved the proposals on the separation reserve (relating to post reductions) amounting to $7 million, $1.5 million for the transitional measures reserve (support to the new Administrator in priority areas), gross appropriations in the amount of $585,371,600 for the biennial support budget, and gross appropriations for the 2000-2001 biennial support budgets of UNCDF, the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration and UNIFEM, in the amounts of $13,594,000, $740,000 and $11,612,100, respectively. It requested the Administrator to consult with the Board on cost-recovery practices in the light of the current review by UNDP and any comments provided by ACABQ.

Revision of financial regulations and rules

The Administrator, in a November report [DP/2000/4], submitted to the Executive Board for approval the revised UNDP Financial Regulations and Rules and provided information about the objectives pursued and the process followed during their revision. An annex to the report contained the text of the revised regulations and rules.

The comprehensive revision was intended to reflect the new framework of authority and accountability over financial management arising out of the UNDP 2001 change process (see p. 803), the results of the financial risk assessment completed in 1998 (see p. 808), the impact of the Secretary-General's reform proposals being implemented by UNDP and other necessary adjustments. Substantive changes included both updates incorporated to reflect past decisions made by the Executive Board and policy changes already introduced by the Administrator, as well as new policies for which no clear mandate or policies existed and for which the Administrator was seeking the Board's endorsement. They dealt with such issues as: a new mechanism for voluntary contributions to UNDP regular resources; resource planning frameworks; execution modalities; framing of the delegation of authority within UNDP management; a simplified resource-assignment process for selected countries; cost recovery; NGO execution and payment of execution fees to NGOs; expenditure control; a new procurement framework; the other resources reserve; increased dollar limits on payments; a new type of partnership through grant modality; limited authority to advance regular resources; and authority to establish credit facilities. Once approved, the revisions would be followed by the release of a revised Finance Manual and supported by learning instruments for staff.

Procurement

ices Office (IAPSO) [DP/2000/33], stated that the volume of procurement handled by IAPSO was $71.3 million in 1998 and $66.5 million in 1999, an increase of 15 per cent over the previous biennium. In 1998 and 1999, IAPSO conducted 11 regional procurement training workshops in Armenia, Bolivia, China, Cote d'Ivoire, Kazakhstan, Mozambique, Nepal, Paraguay, Switzerland, Turkey and the United Republic of Tanzania. Those courses covered both local and international procurement and were designed to strengthen local capacity, manage procurement in a cost-effective manner and identify the benefits of effective and transparent procurement. Additional courses were provided by IAPSO in New York, specifically for the staff of UNDP and other UN organizations. It also provided support to UNDP activities under the oil-for-food programme in Iraq (see p. 269) in the order of $5 million, primarily for the procurement of electric power generators, and assisted the United Nations Administration Mission in Kosovo, Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, in setting up procurement procedures and practices and advice and guidance to government ministries. The procurement volume in 1999 was some $5 million.

In 1999, IAPSO undertook a survey of clients to assess the specific needs of the various client groups, determine the quality of service it provided and identify additional requirements from its clients. The survey found that there was a considerable lack of awareness among potential clients regarding the range of services offered by IAPSO. Those clients aware of the services offered in the traditional hard-copy catalogues indicated that its services were not always available when required. To address those issues, IAPSO improved services by providing on-line access to collective price agreements. Details of all products available under those agreements were posted on the IAPSO web site and IAPSO currently had Internet catalogues available for motor vehicles, office equipment and software.

On 17 September [dec. 99/25], the Executive Board took note of the 1998 statistical report [YUN 1998, p. 829], including procurement of goods and services.

Other technical cooperation

UN activities

The UNDP Administrator provided information on UN system technical cooperation expenditure for 1999 [DP/2000/39] provided by UNDP, the executing and specialized agencies, UNFPA, UNICEF and WFP, but excluding the World Bank/International Development Association.

In 1999, technical cooperation expenditure reached $6 billion, up 5.8 per cent from $5.7 billion in 1998.

UNDP remained the largest source for technical cooperation, with its share standing at 34 per cent in 1999, slightly lower than the 37.6 per cent reached in 1998. UNDP disbursed $2,044 million in technical cooperation in 1999, a decrease of 4.1 per cent from 1998. That was the first contraction of overall expenditure from UNDP since 1993. Expenditure by WFP, after contracting from 1993 to 1997, recovered in 1998 and 1999; both years experienced growth of over 15 per cent, reaching $1,431 million in 1999. Six countries (Angola, Ethiopia, Rwanda, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY), Sudan) absorbed 55 per cent of the value of all assistance supplied by WFP in 1999. Seven other countries received over $25 million in assistance (Afghanistan, Bangladesh, China, India, Kenya, Liberia, Nicaragua).

The executing and specialized agencies' expenditure rose 5.6 per cent in 1999 to $1,525 million, providing about a quarter of total technical cooperation expenditure. Of the 23 contributing agencies, WHO and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations were jointly responsible for 30 per cent of the expenditure. Four other agencies provided significant amounts of technical cooperation expenditure: the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Labour Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements.

On 17 September [dec. 99/25], the Executive Board took note of the Administrator's report on UN system technical cooperation expenditure in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 830].

DESA activities

The Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA)—responsible for UN technical cooperation activities—had more than 1,100 technical cooperation projects under execution during 1999 in a dozen sectors, with a total project expenditure of some $67.3 million. Projects financed by UNDP represented $43.4 million; those by trust funds, $21.6 million; and those by UNFPA, $2.3 million.

On a geographical basis, the DESA-executed programme included expenditures of $25.1 million in the Middle East, $17.6 million in interregional and global programmes, $15.6 million in Africa, $5.7 million in Asia and the Pacific, $1.8 million in Europe and $1.5 million in the Americas. Project delivery in the Middle East, which included expenditures of $17.6 million for the Iraq Programme, was the largest, with a 37 per cent share of total delivery.

Distribution of expenditure by substantive sectors was as follows: energy, $21.1 million; economic policy, $14 million; Associate Expert Programme, $13.4 million; public administration, $6.2 million; water, $4.2 million; statistics, $2.5 million; social policy, $2 million; infrastructure, $1.9 million; minerals, $0.6 million; programme support, $0.5 million; public finance, $0.5 million; and advancement of women, $0.4 million. Of the total delivery of $67.3 million, energy (including the Iraq Programme) comprised 31 per cent, economic policy, 21 per cent, and the Associate Expert Programme, 20 per cent.

On a component basis, DESA delivery in 1999 included $38.8 million for project personnel, $15.4 million for equipment, $8 million for subcontracts, $3.5 million for training and $1.6 million for miscellaneous expenses.

UN Office for Project Services

The United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS) continued to respond to specific demands of the UN system for project services, ranging from the management of multidisciplinary projects to specialized services in implementation of project components. In 1999, UNOPS fulfilled its financial targets as set in the 1999-2000 UNOPS Business Plan, operating in accordance with the self-financing principle with no assessed budget funding.

The UNOPS Executive Director, in his annual report to the Executive Board for 1999 [DP/2000/25], said that the 1999-2000 Business Plan established the targets against which performance was assessed in the report.

The targets for delivery were set at $807 million for 1999, $550 million for the project portfolio and $257 million in authorized disbursements on the services only portfolio. Total delivery for the year stood at $764 million, comprising $568 million in expenditures on the project portfolio and $196 million in disbursement authorizations processed for IFAD-funded projects, under the services only portfolio. That represented an overall increase of 7 per cent in 1999 over the previous year. Projects under national execution continued an upward trend in 1999, although sharply less than in 1998. Delivery within projects under national execution reached $39.4 million in 1999, compared to $44.8 million in 1998. Projects funded from UNDP core resources decreased, by $111 million or 36 per cent as compared to the previous year. New projects funded by the UNDP trust funds and UNDP-administered funds acquired in 1999 returned close to the 1997 value. However, new acquired management services agreements, under arrangements signed by UNDP with international financial institutions, grew from $50 million in 1998 to $73 million in 1999, including a new project in Tajikistan utilizing loan resources from the Asian Development Bank. In the services only sector, the total value of new projects funded by IFAD and assigned to UNOPS supervision and loan administration in 1999 increased by 129 per cent, from $284 million in 1998 to $652 million in 1999. In total, the portfolio acquisition with clients other than UNDP more than doubled, rising from nearly $49 million in 1998 to $101 million in 1999. The value of the total UNOPS portfolio grew from $3.5 billion in 1998 to $3.7 billion in 1999, an increase of 5.7 per cent, of which $566 million was in new acquisitions for the project portfolio and $652 million for the services only portfolio.

While the target for income was set at $51.1 million, actual UNOPS income for 1999 amounted to $51.5 million distributed as follows: $43 million came from delivery of the project portfolio, $5.8 million from loan-administration and project-supervision services, and $2.7 million in other income. Income derived from sources other than UNDP rose from over $8 million in 1998, or 16 per cent of total income, to $11 million in 1999, or 21 per cent of total UNOPS income.

Recurrent administrative expenditure, projected at $48.1 million for 1999, stood at $48.6 million by the end of the year, while non-recurring expenditure stood at $16.7 million. The gap between total income and total administrative expenditure had required a drawdown from the operational reserve in the amount of $13.8 million. The amount paid by UNOPS to UNDP for all central services fell to $2.8 million in 1999.

The Executive Director reported that UNOPS financial performance in 1999 came close to the targets that had been set for the year in the 1999-2000 Business Plan. Due to the high value of the new services only portfolio acquired in 1999, the $1 billion mark for acquisition was crossed again, and the $700 million mark for delivery and the 100 per cent for the income target were surpassed again.

UNOPS activities in 1999 included the management of mine-action projects on behalf of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO), the Office of the Iraq Programme and UNDP. In Kosovo province of FRY, UNOPS used its implementation model to help to orchestrate mine action through the establishment and operation of the United Nations Mine Action Coordinating Centre. Acting on behalf of a number of clients such as UNDP, DPKO, the Department of Political Affairs, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), UNOPS provided a variety of management and other services to more than 20 countries in post-conflict situations. Specialized management services were provided to support modernization and strengthening of democratic processes, for example, in organizing elections, recruitment of experienced parliamentarians and jurists to advise legislators, and the procurement of software to track cases in the courts. UNOPS took over the supervision of 14 agricultural investment projects, at IFAD's request, in addition to 44 new projects already planned for assignment to UNOPS in 1999. The portfolio of IFAD-funded projects under UNOPS supervision and related loan administration amounted to over $2.2 billion at the end of 1999.

UNOPS provided support to UNDP-funded projects in Asia. For community-based poverty-alleviation programmes, the UNOPS approach was to improve project delivery and performance, as well as national capacity in project design and management. In other cases, such as in Bangladesh, where UNOPS implemented the nationally executed parliament- and governance-related programmes, UNOPS provided an operational management support package that ensured government substantive ownership of project processes and results. In other situations, UNOPS provided customized procurement services, particularly when complex international or national bidding processes were required.

The Executive Board, on 22 June [E/1999/35 (dec. 99/12)], took note of the 1998 annual report of the UNOPS Executive Director [YUN 1998, p. 831]. The Board took note of the ongoing evaluation by UNDP of the UNDP/UNOPS relationship to be submitted in 2000, and requested the Administrator to ensure that UNOPS was fully consulted in that process. The Board requested the UNOPS Executive Director, in collaboration with the Administrator, to present in 1999 a proposal on UNOPS's responsibility in personnel matters (see p. 815).

Comments on JIU report. The UNOPS Executive Director, in an April report [DP/1999/25], submitted his comments on the JIU review of UNOPS activities for 1997 and 1998 entitled "UNOPS: Broader engagement with UN system organizations" [YUN 1998, p. 832]. According to the Executive Director, in his comments on the JIU recommendations, UNOPS welcomed the overall focus of the report, which it found to be supportive of the intent of the Secretary-General and the Executive Board to build an effective division of labour between itself and the other organizations and agencies of the United Nations. UNOPS viewed the JIU report as a constructive addition to the dialogue on how to move forward on the objectives of offering its services to a wider range of UN system clients and endeavouring to find ways of making better use of the expertise available in other organizations, as called for in the report.

On 22 June [dec. 99/14], the Executive Board took note of the Executive Director's report.

Budget estimates

The Executive Director, in July [DP/1999/39], issued revised 1998-1999 budget estimates and 2000-2001 budget estimates for UNOPS. The revised 1998-1999 budget estimates proposed a decrease from $89.6 million to $88.5 million for recurring activities and an increase from $11.4 million to $14 million for extraordinary, non-recurring activities. The budget estimates for 2000-2001 included a total of $110.9 million for recurring activities (mainly personnel costs) and $2.9 million for non-recurring activities. The budget estimates were based on the expectation that UNOPS would continue to operate in accordance with the self-financing principle for recurring expenditures and that extraordinary, non-recurring expenditures would be funded by the UNOPS operational reserve if income generated during 1999 or the 2000-2001 biennium was insufficient.

The revised budget was based on actual delivery and income performance in 1998 and on the projections of operations divisions as put forward in the business planning process for 1999. In planning for project delivery and income, account was taken of the estimated impact on overall UNOPS performance resulting from relocation of headquarters, as well as the systems projects for implementing the Integrated Management Information System (IMIS) and upgrades to the computer system due to year 2000 computer compliance (Y2K) problems. The portfolio, delivery and income for 2000-2001 were based on the targets of the divisional business plans. The projected delivery of $620 million in 2000 was $70 million higher (13 per cent) than the projection for 1999. It would support the expansion of staff (36 additional posts) and increases in related administrative expenditures. In 2000, it was anticipated that total income would again cover all UNOPS recurring expenditures and make a significant contribution towards covering non-recurring expenditures. Projections for 2001 indicated an amount of income over expenditure, which would be the first step towards rebuilding the UNOPS reserve to its required level.

ACABQ, in an August report [DP/1999/41], recommended that the Executive Board accept the Executive Director's proposals.

In September [dec. 99/15], the Executive Board approved the 1998-1999 revised budget in the amount of $ 102.6 million and the 2000-2001 budget estimates of $113.8 million. The Board also approved the staffing level as proposed for 1998-1999, including the relocation of four posts from New York to Rome and one post from New York to Geneva, and the establishment of the post of Chief of the Division for Special Programme Development at the D-1 level.

Operational reserve

The Executive Director, as requested by the Board in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 885], reported in July [DP/1999/40] on the level of the operational reserve established at 4 per cent of the combined expenditure on administrative and project budgets of the previous year. Due to exceptional circumstances in 1998 and 1999 (headquarters relocation, Y2K compliance, implementation of IMIS), it was projected that drawdowns from the operational reserve of $9.5 million in 1999 and $1.5 million in 2000 would be necessary. The Executive Director expected that restoration of the reserve to the prescribed level would begin in 2001 and would be completed in the 2002-2003 biennium. While sharing the concern that the 4 per cent level of the reserve might be too low, he said that once the operational reserve was restored, an analysis of the appropriateness of that reserve level would be a meaningful exercise in 2003. In the meantime, he proposed that the current reserve level remain in effect through the current and next bienniums.

The Executive Director, in his revised 1998-1999 budget and proposed 2000-2001 budget estimates [DP/1999/39], stated that, in the approved budget for 1998-1999, it was anticipated that the operational reserve would be reduced to $ 11.2 million, or 2 per cent of the delivery and income of the prior year, but by July 1999 the projected balance of the reserve by the end of the year was $19.9 million, or a reserve rate of 3.25 per cent. For 2000, the reserve was expected to be reduced to $ 18.4 million, while at the end of 2001, it was forecast at $22.6 million, or 3.1 per cent.

ACABQ, in August [DP/1999/41], recommended that the Executive Board accept the Executive Director's proposal.

The Executive Board, in September [dec. 99/16], took note of the Executive Director's report on the operational reserve and decided that the level and rate of replenishment of the reserve established in 1997 remained in effect through the 1998-1999 and 2000-2001 bienniums. It requested the Executive Director to submit in 2001 a report on the appropriateness of that level.

Audit reports

In March [DP/1999/24], the Executive Director reported to the Executive Board on follow-up to recommendations by the Board of Auditors contained in the UNOPS financial report and audited financial statements for the 1996-1997 biennium [A/53/5/Add.10]. Those recommendations covered areas such as procurement procedures, receipt and inspection reports, evaluation of consultants by measurable objectives, staff appraisal, financial reporting, year 2000 compliance and a process for reporting fraud. The Executive Director described efforts to implement the recommendations and said that those efforts to address all issues continued.

In April [DP/1999/22/Add.2], the Executive Director issued his annual report on internal oversight of UNOPS activities. The oversight framework included an external audit performed by the UN Board of Auditors; an internal audit performed by the UNDP Office of Audit and Performance Review (OAPR) under an agreement between the two organizations; and internal management oversight.

OAPR conducted audits and management reviews of both headquarters and field activities. A report on UNOPS administration of the activities of limited duration contractual mechanism was also completed. Three cases relating to alleged conflict of interest and one case of attempt to defraud were reviewed. In 1998, a total of 33 audit reports were issued. Of the 289 recommendations contained in those reports, 115 were in the area of finance, 25 in personnel, 41 in administration (including contracts and procurement), 45 in programme and 63 in management. UNOPS agreed with 273 of the recommendations and provided its response on the action taken or contemplated to implement them.

Major issues identified in the audit reports included: weaknesses in the overall managerial oversight of some projects that contributed to serious shortcomings in project operations; the need to reassess procedures for reviewing and approving implementation of sub-project activities by government entities, taking into consideration the potential added value of those arrangements; shortcomings in the approval and management of micro-projects in one of the "Africa 2000 Network" projects; and the need to strengthen the guidelines on imprest account operations and the timely submission of the monthly imprest accounts to headquarters. UNOPS continued to address the issues raised.

On 22 June [dec. 99/141], the Executive Board took note of the Executive Director's report on follow-up to the recommendations of the Board of Auditors and requested him to provide in 2000 an updated overview of the implementation of those recommendations. It also took note of the UNOPS internal oversight report.

Personnel matters

In June [dec. 99/12], the Executive Board, recognizing that changes in the current UNOPS personnel regime were necessary, requested the UNOPS Executive Director, in collaboration with the UNDP Administrator and in consultation with all interested parties on all relevant legal, budgetary, staff and policy implications, to present a proposal on UNOPS responsibility in personnel matters, as envisioned in its 1994 decisions on the delegation of authority in the areas of personnel [YUN 1994, p. 806].

In response to that request, the Executive Director issued a report on the subject in July [DP/1999/38]. He recalled that in the 1994 proposals establishing UNOPS as a separate entity, the basic framework of UNOPS personnel arrangements were outlined. It provided for authority in all personnel matters, except those retained by the Secretary-General, to be vested in the Executive Director. It was also brought to the attention of the Executive Board at that time that additional proposals intended to further the UNOPS ability to respond to evolving client needs would be submitted for approval in due course. The Executive Director was, therefore, asking the Executive Board to endorse his request that the delegation of authority in personnel matters be issued by the Secretary-General to UNOPS, including the authority for UNOPS to issue its own letters of appointment.

A new delegation of authority would cover the administration of the UN Staff Regulations and Rules in respect of UNOPS staff members, and would formalize many functions already carried out by UNOPS, allocating the authority and accountability directly to the Executive Director. Specifically, the Executive Director would be authorized to appoint, promote and terminate appointments of staff members. Since approximately one third of the volume of UNOPS services related to the hiring of individuals, either as independent contractors or as staff members, it was essential for UNOPS to be able to develop a dedicated personnel regime, involving changes to the current arrangements. It was anticipated that the proposed dedicated personnel regime, established within the framework of the UN system, would provide for a single, comprehensive system of personnel authority and accountability, covering all categories of personnel. Annexed to the report were the legislative and institutional grounds on which the personnel regime would be based, as well as operational modalities under which the Executive Director would exercise his authority.

In September [dec. 99/17], the Board reaffirmed that appropriate authority and accountability for personnel matters should be vested in the Executive Director, including the authority to issue UNOPS letters of appointment. As a first step, the UNDP Administrator would delegate to the Executive Director authority to issue letters of appointment and to administer the staff in accordance with the UN Staff Regulations and Rules. The Executive Director was requested to report to the Board in 2000 on implementation of its decision.

UN Volunteers

The United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme, administered by UNDP, continued to grow, reflecting its ability to respond to the changing global environment. The number of volunteers increased from 3,643 in 1998 to 4,383 in 1999, an increase of more than 20 per cent, comprising 141 nationalities serving in 148 countries. The number of assignments carried out also increased, by 17.5 per cent to 4,755, compared to 4,047 in 1998.

The UNDP Administrator, in a report to the Executive Board [DP/2000/24], provided an overview of the key features and achievements of the programme during 1998-1999. With UNDP's introduction of the first multi-year funding framework (see p. 806), including SRF, a part of the results-based management was put in place. For UNV, the framework provided an instrument through which it could provide a clear picture of the areas, outcomes and results to which the UNV programme and the volunteers contributed.

The 1998-1999 review of programme activities was presented along the main categories of generic outcomes and related goals that were identified in the corporate SRF of UNDP (see p. 806). Thirty per cent of all UNV assignments supported activities in promoting sustainable human development, including strengthening, at the community level, key governance institutions and supporting decentralization processes, as well as assisting in electoral exercises. A total of 861 volunteers assisted in elections in Cambodia, the Central African Republic, East Timor, Haiti, Indonesia, Mozambique, Nepal, the Niger, Nigeria and South Africa. At the request of DPKO, 500

UNVs were mobilized to support the United Nations Assistance Mission in East Timor. In Kyrgyzstan, UNVs contributed to the decentralization process by strengthening local planning and project-implementation capacity, increasing access to information and improving resource allocation to communities.

UNV regional activities included strengthening institutional capacity for governance. In Central America and the Caribbean, UNV collaborated with UNICEF and local partners to implement the Convention of the Rights of the Child, adopted by General Assembly resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 561], by drafting new national legislation on the Child and Adolescent Code and, where such a code existed, assisting in its implementation. Issues of concern, such as child labour and sexual exploitation, the juvenile criminal justice system and national registry, were addressed through local, national and regional networks established with UNV involvement. In Peru, national UNVs contributed to strengthening human rights institutions by dealing with complaints and requests for intervention and mediation, acted on undue delays in court processes, set up education programmes for human rights and mounted public information campaigns.

In poverty eradication and sustainable livelihoods, some 30 per cent of UNV assignments were carried out in over 40 countries. Activities included baseline surveys of poverty levels, linking communities and institutions at intermediate and national levels, disseminating information on services, assisting in the management of natural resources, and providing access to micro-credit. Support was provided to women's agricultural centres in rural areas in Yemen, national volunteer organizations dealing with poverty eradication were strengthened in Mali, and indigenous communities in Ecuador were assisted through environmental management and the establishment of micro-enterprises. With other partners, UNV supported community efforts in responding to the HIV/AIDS epidemic. Efforts were also made to promote employment and foster skills among youth. In collaboration with UNDP, UNV initiated a project in Egypt to assist "information poor" communities by providing access to information technologies and connectivity to the Internet.

UNV support to countries in special development situations encompassed peace-building and reconciliation, and humanitarian and emergency operations, as well as relief activities linked to rehabilitation and reconstruction. During 1998-1999, 34 per cent of UNV assignments related to those areas. Specific activities in support of relief operations included assistance and protection of refugees and internally displaced persons, human rights monitoring, field coordination, food distribution and logistics. UNV was involved in humanitarian and relief operations in over 60 countries, the largest being in the Balkans, the Great Lakes region and the Horn of Africa. With UNHCR, UNVs were engaged in all aspects of refugee assistance and, with WFP, in food distribution. UNVs also supported UNICEF and WHO in emergency activities, particularly focusing on children and health. In response to hurricane Mitch, which hit Central America in late 1998 (see p. 868), UNV mobilized volunteers for emergency operations in Honduras, Nicaragua and El Salvador. UNVs in Georgia assisted in building up national capacity for conflict resolution through training representatives of civil society groups and supported local NGOs in establishing links with international bodies. In Kosovo, UNV mobilized volunteer civil administration support officers to work in such areas as rehabilitation, regional and municipal administration and civil registration.

In a report on the review of the financial situation in 1999 [DP/2000/29], the UNDP Administrator stated that direct contributions to the UNV programme, including the Special Voluntary Fund, increased slightly in 1999 ($21.3 million) compared to 1998 ($17.6 million). Programme expenditure increased significantly, $23.9 million, compared to $19.8 million in 1998.

UNV, the designated focal point for the International Year of Volunteers, 2001, as proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 52/17 [YUN 1997, p. 889], continued work to ensure that the Year was successful in terms of global coverage and impact. A team was assembled in UNV headquarters in Bonn, Germany, to assist in preparations.

The ACC Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions, at its fifteenth session (New York, 21-24 September) [ACC/1999/15], approved, on behalf of ACC, the ACC guidance note on the UN system and International Year of Volunteers, 2001. ACC recommended that UN system organizations should review the involvement of volunteers in their activities, as well as their priorities and procedures towards the use of that resource; and consider the activities they might wish to undertake in 2001 to mark the Year to enhance the involvement of volunteers in their work. The resident coordinator system in all member countries should explore ways of associating the United Nations collectively and through the sectoral perspectives of individual agencies in the work of national committees, steering groups, or whatever structure might be put in place for preparing for and implementing the Year at the country level. That should be specifically geared to determining how UN organizations and volunteer groups could enhance their partnership to mutual benefit.

Economic and technical cooperation among developing countries

The UNDP Administrator reported in April on the activities supported by the Special Unit for Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries (TCDC) [DP/1999/21] with the resources provided by the Executive Board for the 1997-1998 period. The report highlighted the Unit's role in fostering South-South exchanges of expertise and practical experiences, policy dialogue and partnership-building, the broadening of South-South channels of communication, including Internet connectivity, the sharing of best practices to achieve sustainable human development, and efforts to promote policy coherence and a coordinated approach to TCDC in the UN system.

Introducing the report to the Executive Board, the Associate Administrator noted that the Board had allocated 0.5 per cent of its core resources (approximately $15 million) for the programming period 1997-2000 to the Special Unit.

In June [E/1999/35 (dec. 99/11)], the Executive Board took note of the report and requested the Administrator to prepare a report to enable the Board to respond, in the context of the MYFF and the United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) processes when the budget was being discussed in 2000, to the General Assembly's request in resolution 53/192 [YUN 1998, p. 802] for a review of the allocation of resources for TCDC activities, taking into account the Special Unit's mandate.

High-level Committee on TCDC

The High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries, at its eleventh session (New York, 1-4 June) [A/54/39], reviewed progress in implementing the 1978 Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing TCDC [YUN 1978, p. 467], the decisions of the Committee and the recommendations of the South Commission [TCDC/11/1]. It also considered progress made in the implementation of the new directions strategy for TCDC [TCDC/11/2] and reports of the UNDP Administrator on implementation of the guidelines for the review of policies and procedures by the UN development system concerning TCDC and on organizational and supportive arrangements for TCDC [TCDC/11/3].

The Committee adopted three substantive decisions. In the first [A/54/39 (dec. 11/1 A)], the Committee urged developing countries to continue to elaborate national policies and strategies for TCDC, to establish national TCDC focal points and, where they had been established, to ensure their effective and efficient functioning. It stressed the need for UN organizations and agencies to integrate further TCDC into their programmes, policies and procedures. The Committee invited the international community to increase financial resources for increased inter-regional TCDC by both developing countries and the UN system and urged international organizations and donor countries to increase the use of the TCDC modality and financial and other support for TCDC activities. The Committee requested the UNDP Administrator to submit to the Committee's twelfth (2001) session a comprehensive biennial report on the progress made in implementing the Buenos Aires Plan of Action, as well as on the implementation of the current decision.

In the second decision [dec. 11/1 B], the Committee recognized that progress had been made by Member States and UN organizations in implementing the new directions strategy for TCDC, and commended the Special Unit for TCDC for orienting its activities in line with that strategy. It recognized that further progress could be achieved through the availability of adequate resources, strengthening participating institutions and enhancing awareness of and the commitment to the TCDC modality. It stressed the need for additional financial resources to assist the Special Unit to further implement and operationalize the strategy. The Committee requested the UN organizations to improve the incorporation of TCDC into their programmes and projects and to mainstream the TCDC modality, including through support to the Special Unit's activities. The Committee welcomed the broad criteria, highlighted in the report on progress made in implementing the new directions strategy, for identifying future pivotal countries, and requested the Special Unit to refine those criteria for wider application. The Committee urged countries to contribute to the Trust Fund for South-South Cooperation and the Perez-Guerrero Trust Fund for Economic and Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries, and requested the Special Unit to report on the management and use of the former. The Special Unit should also document and disseminate information on efforts to utilize TCDC and economic cooperation among developing countries (ECDC), as well as on triangular cooperation arrangements to encourage greater use of such cooperation modality. The Committee welcomed the launching of the TCDC home page by some developing countries, as well as the Special Unit's expansion of the Information Referral System into a multidimensional web of information for development, and, in that regard, encouraged the Special Unit to establish focal points of developing countries. The Special Unit should ensure implementation of the new directions strategy in Africa. The UNDP Administrator was asked to ensure that the Special Unit's separate identity within UNDP was maintained, and to include in his biennial report to the Committee at its twelfth session information on progress made in implementing the new directions strategy for TCDC, with emphasis on implementing the current decision.

In its decision on the overall framework for the promotion and application of TCDC [dec. 11/2], the Committee decided to review the revised Guidelines for the Review of Policies and Procedures concerning Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries, which had been applied on an experimental basis since 1993 and revised in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 891]. The Committee stressed that South-South cooperation, including TCDC/ECDC, offered viable opportunities for the development of developing countries, and recalled the General Assembly's request in resolution 53/192 for a review of, and possible increase in, allocation of resources by funds and programmes for TCDC activities. The UNDP Administrator was requested to ensure that the Special Unit, in view of its increasing responsibilities, was adequately staffed, and to report on the implementation of the decision to the Committee at its twelfth session.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1999/221 of 23 July, and the General Assembly, by decision 54/448 of 22 December, took note of the report of the High-level Committee on its eleventh session.

South-South cooperation

The Secretary-General, in response to the General Assembly's request in resolution 52/205 [YUN 1997, p. 892], reported in October on the state of South-South cooperation [A/54/425]. The report reviewed recent developments and trends in South-South cooperation, with particular attention to regional and subregional cooperation, trade, investment and finance, industry, technology and enterprise development. Multilateral system support to South-South cooperation was also examined to the extent that it had contributed to broadening global partnerships and enhancing collective capacities and knowledge networking for such cooperation.

The report noted that the new economic environment was marked by globalization and the integration of the world market fuelled by liberalization and technological advancement. Rapid international mobility of factors of production, except labour, was taking place. However, there remained enormous disparities in experiences across countries and regions.

To deal with the challenges of globalization, many developing countries had embarked on bold economic reforms, liberalized trade, eliminated or reduced price controls, cut down State interventions and brought inflation under control, thus leading to a convergence of economic policies among them. In that context, South-South cooperation, premised on the need for developing countries to strengthen collective and individual capacities to deal with the opportunities and challenges of globalization, was pursued through trade expansion, investment diversification, industrial complementation and technology transfer. South-South cooperation had gained new momentum and developing countries were increasingly exploiting special links derived from shared resources, geographic proximity and cultural and economic convergence, as well as improved transport and communication links. Regional and subregional cooperation arrangements had increased from 39 in the 1970s to 82 by 1996. New cooperation arrangements had been formed and existing cooperation arrangements had experienced an upsurge in activity, contributing to increased South-South cooperation in trade, investment and finance, and providing new scope for cooperation in industry, technology and enterprise development. South-South investment and financial flows had also increased, especially in the Asian and Latin American regions. Despite such progress, the lack of adequate funding for South-South cooperation remained a formidable challenge.

The UN development system continued to support South-South cooperation, particularly through strengthening broad-based partnerships for such cooperation, enhancing the collective capacities of developing countries, facilitating the South-South information flow, and integrating South-South cooperation into operational activities. Orienting operational activities for development towards the support of South-South cooperation constituted an important element of the UN development system strategy. While progress had been registered in recent years, more efforts were needed to increase the level of financial support for such cooperation. Senior managers at headquarters and country levels should be oriented to supporting South-South cooperation while UNDAF, the UNDP regional and country frameworks and the regular technical assistance programmes of all UN organization and agencies, including the regional commissions, should give concrete expression to the support of collaborative initiatives among developing countries.

The Secretary-General concluded that while external support remained crucial and needed to be increased, the realization of the full potential of such cooperation depended largely on the South's own efforts. In that regard, he suggested that more efforts be made to strengthen the collective self-reliance of the South. Regional and subregional economic arrangements should seek regional integration more rapidly, and develop and coordinate common positions on global economic issues and be transformed into strong platforms of common interest; their bargaining capacity through the building and consolidation of regional and global organizations and the support of Southern think tanks should be strengthened. Innovative regional mechanisms for dealing with financial and monetary matters should be explored to attract external capital flows, provide early warning of financial crisis, mobilize international rescue operations and formulate structural adjustment programmes suited to the economic and financial systems and social conditions of the countries concerned. The international community, and especially the multilateral system, should work together to develop and support more results-oriented and self-sustaining South-South initiatives.

The issue of South-South cooperation was addressed by the twenty-third annual meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the Group of 77 (New York, 24 September) in a declaration forwarded to the General Assembly on 29 September by Guyana [A/54/432].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/54/589], adopted resolution 54/226 without vote [agenda item 101 (b)].

Economic and technical cooperation among developing countries

The General Assembly,

Stressing that South-South cooperation, as an important element of international cooperation for development, offers viable opportunities for developing countries in their individual and collective pursuit of sustained economic growth and sustainable development in accordance with relevant General Assembly resolutions and recent United Nations conferences and for ensuring their effective and meaningful participation in the newly emerging global economic system,

Recognizing the fact that developing countries have the primary responsibility for promoting and implementing economic and technical cooperation among themselves, and reiterating the need for the international community to support the efforts of the developing countries to expand South-South cooperation through the modality of economic and technical cooperation among developing countries,

Reaffirming its resolutions 33/134 of 19 December 1978, in which it endorsed the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries, 46/159 of 19 December 1991 on technical cooperation among developing countries, 49/96 of 19 December 1994 on a United Nations conference on South-South cooperation and 50/119 of 20 December 1995 and 52/205 of 18 December 1997 on economic and technical cooperation among developing countries and a United Nations conference on South-South cooperation, as well as other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council on economic and technical cooperation among developing countries,

Welcoming the San Jose Declaration and Plan of Action adopted by the Group of 77 at the South-South Conference on Trade, Investment and Finance, held at San Jose from 13 to 15 January 1997, which outlined concrete modalities on sectoral issues relating to trade, finance and investment and enterprise cooperation,

Taking note of the Ministerial Declaration on the South Summit adopted by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77 at their twenty-third annual meeting, held in New York on 24 September 1999, in which the increased importance and relevance of South-South cooperation was emphasized,

Recognizing the important contribution that the forthcoming South Summit, to be held at Havana in April 2000, could provide for the strengthening of South-South cooperation,

1. Endorses the report of the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries on its eleventh session and the decisions adopted by the High-level Committee at that session;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the state of South-South cooperation;

3. Reiterates that South-South cooperation should be viewed not as a substitute for but rather as a complement to North-South cooperation, and in that connection emphasizes the need to promote effectively, inter alia, triangular approaches to facilitate South-South programmes and projects;

4. Recognizes the significant role of economic and technical cooperation between developing countries and countries with economies in transition in promoting implementation of South-South programmes and projects;

5. Welcomes the significant increase in South-South cooperation among developing countries, both in number and in sectoral coverage, reported by developing countries and the United Nations system;

6. Notes with appreciation the recent expansion in the scope of economic cooperation among developing countries, with increasing cooperation among business sectors and enterprises in different countries, including through the Trade Point Programme of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the buyers and sellers meetings of the International Trade Centre and the business forums and Enterprise Forums of the International Labour Organization, and encourages those United Nations organizations to document and to disseminate their experiences, lessons and operational methodologies for future application;

7. Also notes with appreciation the growing economic cooperation among developing countries with increasing mutual trade and investment, as well as industrial and technical cooperation, including in the context of small and medium-sized enterprises;

8. Welcomes the successful conclusion of the second round of negotiations on the Global System of Trade Preferences among Developing Countries, and invites participating countries to join in efforts towards deepening, accelerating and expanding the Global System to enhance its impact;

9. Recognizes the progress achieved in a number of developing countries in strengthening human and institutional capacities, inter alia, in such areas as education, health, biotechnology, information and communications technology, space technology, financial sector management and microfinance, the sharing of which would be beneficial to enhancing growth and development in other developing countries, and urges the international community, particularly bilateral and multilateral donors, to continue to assist the capacity-building efforts of developing countries in these areas;

10. Notes with appreciation the growing number of developed countries participating in triangular cooperation, encourages the use of such cooperation by other countries, and in this context requests the Special Unit for Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries of the United Nations Development Programme, in collaboration with the countries that have been supporting such cooperation, to seek innovative ways to document and disseminate relevant lessons learned on the basis of progress achieved and problems encountered and to identify options for the exploitation of the full potential of such cooperation;

11. Also notes with appreciation the contribution made by some countries to the Voluntary Trust Fund for the Promotion of South-South Cooperation and to the Perez-Guerrero Trust Fund for Economic and Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries, and invites all countries, in particular developed countries, to contribute to the Trust Funds;

12. Calls upon all Governments and all relevant United Nations organizations and multilateral and regional financial institutions to consider increasing allocations of financial resources for economic and technical cooperation among developing countries and to strengthen funding modalities to promote South-South cooperation, such as triangular cooperation and private sector funding;

13. Encourages developing countries and relevant organizations and agencies of the United Nations system, as well as other partners in development efforts, in the practice of technical and economic cooperation among developing countries, to develop and to support innovative mechanisms to foster South-South cooperation in science and technology, with particular emphasis on the development and the sharing of high technologies and appropriate technologies, with a view to their better utilization for the growth and the development of developing countries;

14. Stresses, in this context, that South-South cooperation in science and technology is not a replacement for but a complement to traditional North-South cooperation in science and technology, in particular appropriate North-South technology transfer;

15. Emphasizes the need for concerted action by developing countries and their development partners, including relevant international organizations, with a view to strengthening cooperation and collaboration among developing countries at the subregional, regional and interregional levels;

16. Reiterates its invitation to the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the Special Unit for Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries, as well as other relevant organizations, taking into account their agreed mandates, work programmes and priorities, to undertake jointly further work on formulating concrete recommendations on the implementation of and follow-up to the Caracas Programme of Action, adopted at the High-level Conference on Economic Cooperation among Developing Countries, held at Caracas in May 1981, as an important mechanism for economic cooperation among developing countries, and the San Jose Declaration and Plan of Action adopted by the Group of 77 at the South-South Conference on Trade, Investment and Finance, as well as on the Bali Declaration on Regional and Subregional Economic Cooperation of the Developing Countries and the Bali Plan of Action on Regional and Subregional Economic Cooperation of the Developing Countries adopted by the Group of 77 High-level Conference on Regional and Subregional Economic Cooperation of the Developing Countries, held on Bali, Indonesia, from 2 to 5 December 1998, within the context of South-South cooperation;

17. Requests the United Nations system to take appropriate measures to improve the effective incorporation of technical cooperation among developing countries into its programmes and projects and to intensify efforts towards mainstreaming the modality of technical cooperation among developing countries, including through support to the activities of the Special Unit for Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries, and encourages other relevant international institutions to take similar measures;

18. Reiterates its request to the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to ensure that the separate identity of the Special Unit for Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries is maintained and that the Unit is supported so that it may fully implement its mandate and system-wide responsibilities for promoting, monitoring and coordinating technical cooperation among developing countries;

19. Stresses the need, with reference to decision 11/3 adopted by the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries at its eleventh session and the provisional agenda for the twelfth session of the High-level Committee approved therein, to take appropriate measures to ensure the necessary level of attendance of all member States in the meeting of the High-level Committee, including through discussions of country experiences at the field level, in terms of progress achieved, problems encountered and lessons learned;

20. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the sub-item entitled "Economic and technical cooperation among developing countries", and in that context requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the Special Unit for Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to submit to it at that session a report on the state of South-South cooperation and a comprehensive report on the implementation of the present resolution.

UN Capital Development Fund

In 1999, the core contributions to the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF) totalled $27.4 million, a 10 per cent decrease from $30.5 million in 1998. A total of 13 new projects were approved, worth some $56.3 million. Programme expenditure totalled $44.1 million, representing an overall project delivery of 84 per cent, compared to $43.7 million or 78 per cent in 1998.

In July, the Administrator submitted a report on UNCDF [DP/1999/37], which referred to the 1995 challenge to donors to give it three years to deliver on the goals contained in its 1995 policy paper [YUN 1995, p. 903], after which the Executive Board would recommend closure of the entity if it was not successful. The report outlined events that had taken place since that challenge and presented the results of the 1999 donor-led evaluation of UNCDF.

The evaluation clearly showed that UNCDF had responded to the challenge of corporate change in a positive way. It had enhanced its distinctive identity by developing competence in decentralization, local governance and microfinance. The institution's capacity had improved and its new approaches had had a positive effect on field operations. The number of programme objectives had been reduced, making programmes more strategic and targeted and corporate key performance indicators were established for microfinance projects and were being finalized for local development programmes. UNCDF was well placed to become a centre of excellence in the planning and implementation of local governance and microfinance programmes. It had developed innovative participatory methods, improving its relevance, targeting and efficiency. At the corporate level, it was crucial for UNDP and UNCDF to focus on how a future UNCDF could further advance UNDP corporate goals in governance.

The evaluation team concluded that donors should continue to support UNCDF, but funding should be linked to performance targets and results performance, with arrangements for objective verification and monitoring. It recommended that UNCDF should reduce the current portfolio, which would allow staff to concentrate further on the newer projects, intensify the knowledge content of programming and free technical resources to build strategic alliances with key partners, such as UNDP and the World Bank.

UNCDF had already begun to implement many of the evaluation's recommendations. It was taking steps to improve: the quality of its programme and project documents; its ability to collect and disseminate lessons learned; and structure the organization to respond better to the technical needs of the programmes.

In his annual report for 1999 [DP/2000/23], the UNDP Administrator said that UNCDF had ensured the maximum operational impact of its investments with the poor in the poorest countries, to produce results in piloting local governance programmes and microfinance operations that could be replicated on a larger scale and provide a basis for pro-poor policy decisions. The year marked the end of an internal programme review with the publication of new UNCDF policies on local governance and microfinance. UNCDF had moved to ensure that new programming reflected those policies and had realigned ongoing programming. In September, the Special Unit on Microfinance was fully integrated into UNCDF. The Unit managed the UNCDF-funded microfinance portfolio and the UNDP-funded MicroStart programme and continued to provide UNDP with microfinance advisory services.

The Executive Board, in a September decision [E/1999/35 (dec. 99/22)], welcomed UNCDF's work in policy review and development, as well as in strengthening the focus of its programme activities, and endorsed its efforts to establish innovative microfinance and local development programmes, including in local governance. It also welcomed the positive assessment of the Fund's work summarized in the Administrator's report. The Board encouraged the Fund to implement the recommendations contained in the evaluation and to report to the Board on its performance in 2000. The Board encouraged the Fund and UNDP to intensify collaboration, particularly in local governance and microfinance, and to report in the 2000 ROAR on those efforts. It urged UNCDF to strengthen alliances with partners and invited all countries in a position to do so to make voluntary contributions to the Fund in order to secure adequate funding of its programmes. The Board requested the Administrator to carry out an independent evaluation of the impact of UNCDF programmes and projects and to report in 2003.

Chapter III

Humanitarian and special economic assistance

In 1999, the United Nations, through the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, continued to coordinate the collective efforts of the international community, in particular those of the UN system, to provide humanitarian and special economic assistance to States and population groups stricken by complex emergencies and natural disasters. Attention was devoted to reducing vulnerability, promoting solutions to root causes and strengthening the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance, especially in the context of the transition from relief to rehabilitation, reconstruction and development. Consolidated inter-agency appeals were launched or ongoing in Afghanistan, Angola, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, East Timor, the Great Lakes region and Central Africa, Guinea-Bissau, the northern Caucasus, Sierra Leone, Somalia, South-Eastern Europe, the Sudan and Tajikistan. The amount sought for the appeals totalled $2,382 million, of which $1,715 million was received, meeting 72.4 per cent of the requirements.

During the year, some of the most intractable conflicts, such as those in Afghanistan, Angola, Burundi and the Democratic Republic of the Congo, deteriorated further, and in other parts of the world, such as Kosovo and East Timor, new emergencies erupted and the fragile situation in the northern Caucasus was aggravated further. In addition to complex emergencies, the world witnessed natural disasters, especially floods and earthquakes, of unprecedented devastation.

The International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (1990-2000) came to a close in December.

Humanitarian assistance

Coordination

Humanitarian affairs segment of the Economic and Social Council

An April note of the Secretariat [E/1999/45] presented suggestions by Member States on the organization of the humanitarian affairs segment of the Economic and Social Council, established pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/12 B [YUN 1997, p. 1392]. It also contained their views on strengthening the Council's coordination and policy guidance role in humanitarian affairs. Subsequently, the Council, by decision 1999/214 of 7 May, decided on the programme of work for the humanitarian affairs segment of its 1999 substantive session.

During the segment held from 13 to 15 July (decision 1999/211) and on 23 July under the theme "International cooperation and coordinated responses to the humanitarian emergencies, in particular in the transition from relief to rehabilitation, reconstruction and development" (decision 1999/208), the Council considered special economic, humanitarian and disaster relief assistance. It had before it, in addition to reports on individual States, a June report of the Secretary-General on strengthening coordination of UN emergency humanitarian assistance [A/54/154-E/1999/94], submitted pursuant to requests by the Assembly in resolutions 46/182 [YUN 1991, p. 421] and 52/168 [YUN 1997, p. 897], and by the Council in resolution 1995/56 [YUN 1995, p. 927]. The report covered the coordination of humanitarian assistance and further progress of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee (IASC) in strengthening UN capacity in humanitarian assistance. It also documented the implementation of the Council's agreed conclusions 1998/1 [YUN 1998, p. 841] in the context of the UN programme of reform endorsed by the Assembly in resolution 52/12 A [YUN 1997, p. 1391], in particular those measures aimed at strengthening the Office of the Emergency Relief Coordinator (ERC).

The Secretary-General stated that a particularly striking phenomenon of the past year had been the extraordinary rise in the number and scale of natural disasters, and of their human and financial cost. Estimated economic losses exceeded $90 billion, compared with $30 billion in 1997. Indications were that the increase was linked to factors such as rapid population growth and urbanization, environmental degradation, global climatic changes and other causes. In many cases, man-made elements exacerbated the impact of disasters, highlighting the need for intensive disaster-reduction/prevention activities as part of relief and development strategies.

gional dimension, as in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and West Africa. In 1999, new violence broke out and attacks on civilians led to massive forced displacement and increases of internally displaced persons and refugees. In many emergency situations, humanitarian agencies were denied access to the affected areas, not only by conditions of insecurity but also by Governments and parties to conflicts. Attacks on humanitarian personnel continued, and the HIV/AIDS pandemic, especially in Africa, had major humanitarian implications. Difficulties in responding to the numerous challenges were exacerbated by uneven levels of funding to consolidated appeals. While the overall response for 1999 was 30 per cent as at 31 May, compared to 15 per cent in 1998, it was uneven in geographical and sectoral distribution and threatened to undermine the principle that aid was provided irrespective of political and other considerations.

The Secretary-General reported that ERC and IASC—the principal inter-agency policy coordination, consultation and decision-making forum for addressing humanitarian issues—had responded by trying to improve the environment for humanitarian action and strengthening coordination mechanisms. Humanitarian agencies sought to improve the environment for action through negotiation with parties to conflicts over issues of access and security; reinforcement of the principles of humanitarian action; strengthening of the legal framework; and advocacy with the Security Council and other bodies. Progress had been made in strengthening the consolidated appeal process, particularly by enhancing the capacity of country teams to manage and implement the process, and IASC, which was reinforced by the admission of the World Bank into its membership in March, planned to build on improvements in the appeal process, including through the development of monitoring systems. IASC efforts to enhance field coordination included effective preparedness and multisectoral planning for emergencies; efforts to promote follow-up through monitoring and evaluation; and efforts to improve the coordination of responses to internally displaced person situations.

As to coordination in natural disasters, the Secretary-General stated that they should be considered on a par with complex emergencies in terms of their impact and long-lasting economic consequences. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) strengthened the responsiveness of in-country coordination systems, and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) allocated priority status to response preparedness. However, evaluations drew attention to areas that needed improvement, such as response preparedness and capacity-building, access to resources for emergency relief, and bridging the gap between emergency relief and early recovery. A newly established inter-agency reference group was preparing recommendations to strengthen IASC response mechanisms. In addition, the International Emergency Response Consultative Mechanism was established to improve linkage between the donor community and disaster-prone countries.

With regard to international cooperation and coordination in response to the humanitarian emergencies, particularly in the transition from relief to rehabilitation, reconstruction and development, whether related to conflict or disaster, a number of common themes emerged in developing comprehensive approaches. They included the need for early joint planning and prioritization, the central role of capacity-building, the importance of a clearly agreed division of labour in relief efforts through inter-agency collaboration and the inflexible and discretionary nature of existing financing systems for transitional programming.

In the agreed conclusions of its humanitarian affairs segment [A/54/3/Rev.1 (agreed conclusions 1999/1)], the Council recognized that efforts were needed to ensure a coherent approach to relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction and development, as well as to enhance disaster preparedness and local capacities for disaster response. It called on all parties to conflicts to respect humanitarian and human rights law and to ensure the safety of humanitarian personnel. Noting the need to strengthen the consolidated appeal process and regretting low and uneven funding of the appeals, the Council called on the international community to increase its contributions.

Recognizing the need for a comprehensive approach to both natural disasters and complex emergencies, the Council stressed the need for early joint planning, the central role of capacity-building and the importance of an agreed division of labour through inter-agency collaboration, as well as the need for more flexible financing systems for transitional programming. It emphasized that the planning for rehabilitation should begin at a very early stage, local actors should be involved and existing local capacities integrated. A more systematic evaluation was needed. Consideration should be given to the issue of the humanitarian impact of sanctions.

As to natural disasters, the Council emphasized the need for measures to reduce the vulnerability of societies, particularly in developing countries, small island developing States and landlocked countries, and reaffirmed that disaster preparedness and early warning systems should be strengthened through better coordination among UN bodies and cooperation with Governments of affected countries and regional and other relevant organizations. At the field level, the Council called on the resident coordinator and relevant agencies to improve response preparedness and capacity-building; at the inter-agency level, it encouraged ERC, IASC and other UN system members to promote response preparedness at the international, regional and national levels. Rehabilitation funds should be released rapidly to prevent dependence on relief funding. With regard to transitions from complex humanitarian emergencies, the Council affirmed that early reconstruction and development activities could support the implementation of peace agreements, and it stressed that humanitarian agencies should integrate a development perspective in their planning. Stressing the importance of strategic frameworks to countries in crisis, the Council requested the Secretary-General to submit recommendations on their preparation, scope and applicability. It called on the Secretary-General and ERC to ensure a high degree of coherence between assistance and the political and human rights aspects of the UN response, while maintaining their separate and mutually reinforcing nature. The Council encouraged enhanced inter-linkages between the consolidated appeal process and the United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF), and requested ERC to intensify efforts in that respect. Cooperation between all actors, including UN bodies and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), should be strengthened.

With respect to the financial mechanisms available for transitional activities, donor countries were called on to ensure that their funding systems facilitated early, integrated approaches for recovery and to provide an adequacy of funding from assistance through transition activities to development cooperation. The Council urged the Secretary-General and ERC to ensure that priority was given to demobilization, reintegration and rehabilitation, which were major areas where gaps between relief and development occurred. It stressed the importance of addressing the needs of returning refugees, called on States to apply internationally recognized norms to internally displaced persons, called for inter-agency efforts on behalf of children, underlining their vulnerabilities in armed conflict, and asserted the need to integrate a gender perspective in the planning and implementation of activities.

Report of UNDP Administrator. In a report to the Economic and Social Council [DP/2000/11], the UNDP Administrator stated that the agreed conclusions adopted by the humanitarian segments of the Council in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 841] and in 1999, as well as General Assembly resolution 53/192 [ibid., p. 802], provided a legislative basis for the interaction of operational activities and humanitarian assistance. In following up on the agreed conclusions, UNDP and its UN partners ensured a coherent approach to relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction and development. As chair of the IASC Reference Group on Post-Conflict Reintegration—a body whose task was to seek solutions for a smooth transition from relief to development—UNDP took part in other efforts to ensure coherent approaches to transitional situations. The United Nations Development Group (UNDG) promoted linkages between UNDAF and the consolidated appeal process through joint meetings with the other executive committees. The crises of Kosovo and East Timor (see PART ONE, Chapters V and VIII, respectively), in particular, demonstrated to UNDP and other UNDG members the difficulties of linking development to relief, rehabilitation and recovery. The UNDP Administrator recommended that the Council take note of the efforts within the UN Secretariat to achieve a closer integration of relief, reconstruction, rehabilitation and development and to encourage progress in line with the agreed conclusions. He also recommended that the Council recognize the common country assessment as the building block for both the consolidated appeal process and UNDAF; invite the Security Council and call on the Secretariat to include a development perspective to eradicate the cause of a crisis and to promote human development; and encourage UNDP and other UNDG members to develop further their dialogue with the Bretton Woods institutions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/95 [draft: A/54/L.54 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (a)].

Strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 and the guiding principles contained in its annex, other relevant General Assembly and Economic and Social Council resolutions and agreed conclusions 1998/1 of the humanitarian affairs segment of the substantive session of 1998 of the Council,

Noting the decision by the Economic and Social Council to hold further consultations on ways and means to strengthen its role by enhancing its work in the humanitarian field,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary General,

Welcoming the progress made by the Emergency Relief Coordinator and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs in strengthening the coordination of humanitarian assistance of the United Nations,

Noting the efforts made by the Emergency Relief Coordinator and the members of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee to implement fully the recommendations set forth in agreed conclusions 1998/1,

1. Welcomes the holding of the second humanitarian affairs segment by the Economic and Social Council during its substantive session of 1999 and agreed conclusions 1999/1 adopted at that session;

2. Calls upon relevant organizations of the United Nations system, other relevant international organizations, Governments and non-governmental organizations to cooperate with the Secretary-General and the Emergency Relief Coordinator to ensure timely implementation of and follow-up to agreed conclusions 1999/1;

3. Emphasizes the importance of discussion of humanitarian policies and activities in the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council;

4. Invites the Economic and Social Council to continue to consider ways to enhance further the humanitarian affairs segment of its future sessions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, in early 2000, concrete proposals on how to enhance the functioning and utilization of the Central Emergency Revolving Fund, including, as necessary, amendments to its terms of reference;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session, through the 2000 substantive session of the Economic and Social Council, on the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations, including the implementation of and follow-up to agreed conclusions 1999/1.

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/233 [draft: A/54/L.74 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 201].

International cooperation on humanitarian assistance in the field of natural disasters from relief to development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991, which contains in its annex the guiding principles for the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations system, and its resolutions 52/12 B of 19 December 1997 and 54/219 of 22 December 1999, and recalling Economic and Social Council agreed conclusions 1999/1, which addressed the theme "International cooperation and coordinated responses to the humanitarian emergencies, in particular in the transition from relief to rehabilitation, reconstruction and development", and Council resolution 1999/63 of 30 July 1999,

Noting with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General on strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations, in particular in the context of the transition from relief to rehabilitation, reconstruction and development,

Recognizing the importance of the principles of neutrality, humanity and impartiality for the provision of humanitarian assistance,

Emphasizing that the affected State has the primary responsibility in the initiation, organization, coordination and implementation of humanitarian assistance within its territory and in the facilitation of the work of the humanitarian organizations in mitigating the consequences of natural disasters,

1. Expresses deep concern at the increasing number and scale of natural disasters, resulting in massive losses of life and property worldwide, in particular in vulnerable societies lacking adequate capacity to mitigate effectively long-term negative social, economic and environmental consequences of natural disasters;

2. Stresses that humanitarian assistance for natural disasters should be provided in accordance with and with due respect for the guiding principles contained in the annex to resolution 46/182 and should be determined on the basis of the human dimension and needs arising out of the particular natural disaster;

3. Calls upon States to adopt, where required, and to continue to implement effectively necessary legislative and other appropriate measures to mitigate the effects of natural disasters, inter alia, by disaster prevention, including building regulations, as well as disaster preparedness and capacity-building in disaster response, and requests the international community in this context to continue to assist developing countries, where appropriate;

4. Stresses the need to strengthen efforts at all levels, inter alia, at the domestic level, to improve natural disaster awareness, prevention, preparedness and early warning systems, as well as international cooperation, in response to emergencies from relief to rehabilitation, reconstruction and development, bearing in mind the overall negative impact of natural disasters, the resulting humanitarian needs and requests from affected countries, as appropriate;

5. Encourages further efforts by the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator, Inter-Agency Standing Committee members and other members of the United Nations system in promoting preparedness for response at the international, regional and national levels and strengthening the mobilization and coordination of humanitarian assistance of the United Nations system in the field of natural disasters, inter alia, through the effective deployment in all regions of the world and expansion of the United Nations Disaster Assessment and Coordination roster appropriately to include more representatives from countries of Africa, Asia and the Pacific and Latin America and the Caribbean, bearing in mind that these representatives are funded by the participating countries;

6. Also encourages further efforts by the United Nations Development Programme to strengthen operational activities and capacity-building in natural disaster mitigation, prevention and preparedness, taking due account of the evolving comprehensive strategy to maximize international cooperation in the field of natural disasters;

7. Invites the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat and concerned organizations, taking due account of the evolving comprehensive strategy to maximize international cooperation in the field of natural disasters, to strengthen their support to the United Nations disaster management teams which are dispatched upon re- quest by host Governments and steered by the United Nations resident coordinator;

8. Recalls the consideration of natural disasters contained in the report of the Third United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, held in Vienna from 19 to 30 July 1999, and encourages further use of space-based technologies for the prevention, mitigation and management of natural disasters, noting in this regard, the establishment of the Global Disaster Information Network;

9. Takes note of the Tampere Convention on the Provision of Telecommunication Resources for Disaster Mitigation and Relief Operations, adopted at Tampere, Finland, on 18 June 1998, and encourages States that have not signed the Convention to consider doing so;

10. Welcomes innovative efforts to link various phases of international assistance from relief to rehabilitation, such as the joint Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, United Nations Development Programme, United Nations Children's Fund and World Health Organization and Pan American Health Organization Disaster Response and Recovery Mission undertaken in all countries affected by hurricane Mitch, and stresses the need to ensure adequate assessment of and follow-up to these approaches with a view to further developing and applying them in other disasters;

11. Encourages Governments, in particular through their disaster response agencies, relevant organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations, to continue to cooperate appropriately with the Secretary-General and the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator to maximize the effectiveness of the international response to natural disasters, based, inter alia, on humanitarian need, from relief to development;

12. Recalls, in this regard, its request to the Secretary-General to solicit the required input further to optimize and disseminate listings of organizations of civil protection and emergency response at all levels with updated inventories of available resources to help in natural disasters, as well as information, including handbooks, that guide the international cooperation in responding to natural disasters;

13. Stresses that particular international co-operation efforts should be undertaken to enhance and broaden further the utilization of national and local capacities and, where appropriate, regional and subregional capacities of developing countries for disaster preparedness and response, which may be made available in closer proximity to the site of a disaster, more efficiently and at lower cost;

14. Notes that the transition phase after natural disasters is often excessively long and characterized by a number of gaps, and that Governments, in cooperation with relief agencies, as appropriate, when planning for meeting immediate needs, should place these needs in the perspective of sustainable development whenever such an approach is possible;

15. Stresses the need to continue to provide adequate funds and to release funds quickly for natural disasters in order to contribute to a comprehensive recovery in the shortest time possible;

16. Also stresses, in this regard, that contributions for humanitarian assistance for natural disasters should be provided in a way that is not to the detriment of resources made available for international cooperation for development or complex humanitarian emergencies;

17. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General, contained in resolution 54/95 of 8 December 1999, to submit to the General Assembly, early in 2000, concrete proposals in order to enhance the functioning and utilization of the Central Emergency Revolving Fund, and, in this regard, invites the Secretary-General to consider more active use of the Fund for timely and adequate natural disaster response;

18. Invites the Secretary-General further to consider innovative means for timely and adequate natural disaster response, inter alia, through mobilization of additional resources from the private sector;

19. Invites the Economic and Social Council, at its substantive session of 2000, in the context of the follow-up to its agreed conclusions 1999/1, to consider ways to enhance further the effectiveness of international cooperation and coordination in respect of the provision of timely and adequate humanitarian assistance in response to natural disasters;

20. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to consider innovative mechanisms to improve the international response to natural disasters and other emergencies, inter alia, through addressing any geographical and sectoral imbalances in such a response where they exist, as well as more effective use of national emergency response agencies, taking into account their comparative advantages and specialization, as well as existing arrangements, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session under the item entitled "Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance" with a view, inter alia, to contributing towards the comprehensive report on the implementation of the international strategy for disaster reduction to be submitted to the Assembly at its fifty-sixth session under the item entitled "Environment and sustainable development".

By decision 54/465 of 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item on strengthening the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance, would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session.

Humanitarian and UN personnel

In an October addendum [A/54/154/Add.1-E/1999/94/Add.1] to his report on strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations (see p. 823), the Secretary-General updated information related to the safety and security of UN and humanitarian personnel. The report stated that killings and threats against UN and humanitarian personnel were daily occurrences, which impeded the implementation of UN programmes and the freedom of humanitarian organizations to access vulnerable populations. Steps taken by the United Nations to address the problem included the establishment of training mechanisms, the adoption of resolutions by the Assembly and the entry into force of international instruments. However, those measures fell short of providing the protection intended, owing to a lack of respect by armed elements for UN personnel, but also to a lack of resources. The Secretary-General called on States that had not done so to ratify the 1994 Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 49/59 [YUN 1994, p. 1289], which entered into force in January 1999. They were also asked to contribute to the Trust Fund for Security of personnel of the UN system. It was recommended that the Assembly pursue the development of a protocol to the 1994 Convention, which would extend the scope of legal protection to all UN and associated personnel.

In December, by resolution 54/192, the General Assembly called on Governments and parties in complex humanitarian emergencies to ensure the safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel (see p. 1336).

OCHA review

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 48/218 B [YUN 1994, p. 1362], the Secretary-General, on 9 September, transmitted a report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) [A/54/334] on a review of OCHA management strategies aimed at strengthening its capacity to respond to humanitarian crises. Action taken to focus on core functions, as contained in Assembly resolution 46/182 [YUN 1991, p. 421], were assessed. OIOS concluded that the streamlining and reorganization within OCHA in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 842] had enhanced its capabilities to respond to crises and strengthened its coordination with other departments of the Secretariat, UN funds and programmes, other humanitarian agencies and NGOs. OCHA established an open dialogue with donors, displayed sensitivity to the mandates of other humanitarian agencies and took measures to reduce the incidence of duplication of responsibilities, competition and disagreement over areas of operation. The OIOS inspection also confirmed that the working of IASC and the consolidated appeal process had improved. Additional efforts were required, however, to enforce a more action-oriented approach in addressing coordination issues within the Executive Committee on Humanitarian Affairs, and there was need for a strategic management framework to enhance the appeals process. OIOS recommended that OCHA enhance the functioning of the Executive Committee, make new institutional arrangements in the elaboration and implementation of sanctions regimes regarding UN efforts to minimize the humanitarian impact of sanctions, establish more effective monitoring of the consolidated appeals process, implement a strategic management framework and strengthen its advocacy role with the general public.

On 30 September [A/54/334/Add.1], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the comments of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on the OIOS report, stating that JIU concurred with the thrust of the report. It recommended that the issue of coordination be better analysed in the case of complex emergencies where a military component was present on the ground; that more attention be devoted to the human rights component in complex emergencies and to lessons learned from humanitarian operations; and that the concern about the decreasing funds collected through the consolidated appeals process be examined in parallel with the reasons for the increasing preference of donors for bilateral interventions. JIU suggested that the Secretary-General issue a bulletin describing OCHA's functions.

Resource mobilization

Central Emergency Revolving Fund

In 1999 [A/55/649], the Central Emergency Revolving Fund, established in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 584] as a cash-flow mechanism for the initial phase of humanitarian emergencies, granted 15 advances, amounting to $22.1 million. The decline in the Fund's use was the result of the availability within operational organizations of their own emergency funds and other sources of financing for start-up requirements.

Consolidated appeals

The consolidated appeals process continued to coordinate and facilitate the capacity of the UN system to meet its emergency resource requirements. In 1999, inter-agency consolidated appeals were prepared and issued for the following countries or regions: Afghanistan, Angola, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, East Timor, the Great Lakes region and Central Africa, Guinea-Bissau, the northern Caucasus, Sierra Leone, Somalia, South-Eastern Europe, the Sudan and Tajikistan.

White Helmets

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/171 [YUN 1997, p. 899], the Secretary-General submitted an August report on the "White Helmets" initiative [A/54/217], which was established by Argentina to provide expertise on a standby team basis from various national volunteer corps to support immediate relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction and development activities. The report, which covered the period from January 1998 to June 1999, provided an overview of progress made in collaboration with various partners, particularly with the Government of Argentina, through its Secretariat for International Humanitarian Assistance, also known as the White Helmets Commission for Argentina. The report incorporated findings emanating from the United Nations Volunteers/White Helmets Commission programme review covering the period 1995-1999. During the reporting period, a total of $4.7 million was expended for assistance to countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/98 [draft: A/54/L.34/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (d)].

Participation of volunteers, "White Helmets", in activities of the United Nations in the field of humanitarian relief, rehabilitation and technical cooperation for development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 49/139 B of 20 December 1994, 50/19 of 28 November 1995 and 52/171 of 16 December 1997,

Reaffirming also its resolutions 46/182 of 19 December 1991, 47/168 of 22 December 1992, 48/57 of 14 December 1993, 49/139 A and B of 20 December 1994, 50/57 of 12 December 1995 and 51/194 of 17 December 1996 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1995/56 of 28 July 1995 and 1996/33 of 25 July 1996,

Recognizing that recent events emphasize the need for the international community, in addressing the growing magnitude and complexity of natural disasters and other humanitarian emergencies, to rely not only on the formulation of a well-coordinated global response within the framework of the United Nations but also on the promotion of a smooth transition from relief to rehabilitation, reconstruction and development,

Recalling that prevention, preparedness and contingency planning for emergencies at the global level depend, for the most part, on the strengthened local and national response capacities as well as on the availability of financial resources, both domestic and international,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, prepared in pursuance of its resolution 52/171 on the participation of volunteers, "White Helmets", in activities of the United Nations in the field of humanitarian relief, rehabilitation and technical cooperation for development;

2. Encourages voluntary national and regional actions aimed at making available to the United Nations system, through the United Nations Volunteers, national volunteer corps such as the White Helmets on a standby basis, in accordance with accepted United Nations procedures and practices, in order to provide specialized human and technical resources for emergency relief and rehabilitation;

3. Expresses its appreciation for the commendable progress of the White Helmets initiative as a singular voluntary international effort to provide the United Nations system with volunteer expertise to respond, in a quick and coordinated manner, to humanitarian relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction and development, while preserving the non-political, neutral and impartial character of humanitarian action;

4. Recognizes with appreciation that the White Helmets, in close cooperation with the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat and as an operational partner of the United Nations Volunteers, are an efficient and viable mechanism for making pre-identified and trained homogeneous teams available to the United Nations system, in support of immediate relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction and development activities, in the light of the increasing number, growing magnitude and complexity of natural disasters and other emergencies;

5. Calls upon Member States to promote the facilitation of cooperative actions between the United Nations system and the civil society, through national volunteer corps, in order to strengthen the United Nations capacities for early and effective response to humanitarian emergencies, and invites them to make the commensurate financial resources available through the special financing window of the Special Voluntary Fund of the United Nations Volunteers;

6. Encourages Member States to identify and support their respective national focal points for the White Helmets in order to continue to provide the United Nations system with an accessible global network of rapid response facilities in case of humanitarian emergencies;

7. Invites Member States, international financial institutions, regional organizations and the United Nations system to consider ways and means to ensure the integration of the White Helmets initiative into their programme activities, particularly those related to humanitarian and disaster relief assistance;

8. Invites the Secretary-General, on the basis of the experience acquired, to consider further the potential use of White Helmets as a resource for preventing and mitigating the effects of emergencies and post-conflict humanitarian emergencies and, in this context, to maintain an adequate structure for the White Helmets liaison functions, taking into account the ongoing reforms process;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to conclude his consideration of the possible strengthening and broadening of consultative mechanisms to promote further and operationalize the concept, as referred to in paragraph 14 of his report, and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session, under the item entitled "Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance", on the actions taken in conformity with the present resolution.

Mine clearance

In an October report on assistance in mine action [A/54/445], submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/26 [YUN 1998, p. 844], the Secretary-General provided information on the activities of UN organizations, as well as those of other bodies and NGOs. He reviewed mine-action programmes in Afghanistan, Angola, Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cambodia, Chad, Croatia, Iraq, Kosovo province of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Somalia and Sri Lanka.

Annexed to the report was a table listing contributions by donor, totalling $60.3 million as at 7 October, to the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Action, established by the Assembly in resolution 49/215 [YUN 1994, p. 173] as the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Clearance and renamed by the Assembly in resolution 53/26.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 84], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/191 [draft: A/54/L.71] without vote [agenda item 35].

Assistance in mine action

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/7 of 19 October 1993, 49/215 of 23 December 1994, 50/82 of 14 December 1995, 51/149 of 13 December 1996 and 52/173 of 18 December 1997 on assistance in mine clearance and its resolution 53/26 of 17 November 1998 on assistance in mine action, all adopted without a vote,

Considering mine action to be an important component of United Nations humanitarian and development activities,

Reaffirming its deep concern at the tremendous humanitarian problem caused by the presence of mines and other unexploded devices that have serious and lasting social and economic consequences for the populations of mine-infested countries and constitute an obstacle to the return of refugees and other displaced persons, to humanitarian aid operations and to reconstruction and economic development, as well as to the restoration of normal social conditions,

Bearing in mind the serious threat that mines and other unexploded devices pose to the safety, health and lives of personnel participating in humanitarian, peacekeeping and rehabilitation programmes and operations,

Reiterating its dismay at the high number of victims of mines, especially among civilian populations, particularly children, and recalling in this context Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1995/79 of 8 March 1995, 1996/85 of 24 April 1996, 1997/78 of 18 April 1997, 1998/76 of 22 April 1998 and 1999/80 of 28 April 1999 on the rights of the child and resolutions 1996/27 of 19 April 1996 and 1998/31 of 17 April 1998 and decision 1997/107 of 11 April 1997 on the human rights of persons with disabilities,

Deeply alarmed by the number of mines that continue to be laid each year, as well as the presence of a large number of mines and other unexploded devices as a result of armed conflicts, and thus convinced of the necessity and urgency of a significant increase in mine-clearance efforts by the international community with a view to eliminating the threat of landmines to civilians as soon as possible,

Noting the decisions taken at the Review Conference of the States Parties to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, particularly with respect to Protocol II to the Convention and the inclusion in the Amended Protocol of a number of provisions of importance for mine-clearance operations, notably the requirement of detectability, Noting the entry into force of the Amended Protocol II to the Convention on 3 December 1998,

Recalling that the States parties at the Review Conference declared their commitment to keep the provisions of Protocol II under review in order to ensure that the concerns regarding the weapons it covers are addressed, and that they would encourage efforts of the United Nations and other organizations to address all the problems of landmines,

Noting the entry into force on 1 March 1999 of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction and that the Convention has been signed by over one hundred and thirty-five States, that the First Meeting of the States Parties to the Convention was held at Maputo in May 1999 and that measures were taken at that meeting to, among other things, provide assistance for mine clearance and rehabilitation, the social and economic reintegration of mine victims and mine-awareness programmes,

Stressing the need to convince mine-affected States to halt new deployments of anti-personnel mines in order to ensure the effectiveness and efficiency of mine-clearance operations,

Recognizing the important role that the international community, particularly States involved in the deployment of mines, can play in assisting mine clearance in mine-affected countries through the provision of necessary maps and information and appropriate technical and material assistance to remove or otherwise render ineffective existing minefields, mines and booby traps,

Concerned about the limited availability of safe and cost-effective mine-detection and mine-clearance equipment as well as the need for effective global coordination in research and development to improve the relevant technology, and conscious of the need to promote further and more rapid progress in this field and to foster international technical cooperation to this end,

Recognizing that, in addition to the primary role of States, the United Nations has an important role in the field of assistance in mine action,

Welcoming in this regard the mine-action coordination centres already established under the auspices of the United Nations as well as the creation of international trust funds for mine clearance and mine assistance,

Noting with satisfaction the inclusion in the mandates of several peacekeeping operations of provisions relating to mine-action work carried out under the direction of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the Secretariat, in the context of such operations,

Commending the action already taken by the United Nations system, donor and recipient Governments, the International Committee of the Red Cross and non-governmental organizations to coordinate their efforts and seek solutions to the problems related to the presence of mines and other unexploded devices, as well as their assistance to victims of mines,

Also commending the role of the Secretary-General in increasing public awareness of the problem of landmines,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General concerning the activities of the United Nations in assistance in mine action, in particular the emphasis on the lessons learned, and the recommendation to improve the emergency preparedness capability of the Organization;

2. Calls, in particular, for the continuation of the efforts of the United Nations, with the assistance of States and institutions as appropriate, to foster the establishment of mine-action capacities in countries where mines constitute a serious threat to the safety, health and lives of the local population, also calls for the extension of these efforts to countries where mines are an impediment to social and economic development efforts at the national and local levels, emphasizes the importance of developing national mine-action capacities, and urges all Member States, particularly those that have the capacity to do so, to assist mine-affected countries in the establishment and development of national capacities in mine clearance, mine awareness and victim assistance;

3. Invites Member States to develop national programmes, in cooperation with the relevant bodies of the United Nations system where appropriate, to promote awareness of landmines, especially among children;

4. Expresses its appreciation to Governments, regional organizations and other donors for their financial and in-kind contributions to mine action, including contributions for emergency operations and for national capacity-building programmes;

5. Appeals to Governments, regional organizations and other donors to continue their support to mine action through further contributions, including contributions through the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Action to allow for the timely delivery of mine-action assistance in emergency situations;

6. Encourages all relevant multilateral and national programmes and bodies to include, in coordination with the United Nations, activities related to mine action in their humanitarian, rehabilitation, reconstruction and development assistance activities, where appropriate, bearing in mind the need to ensure national ownership, sustainability and capacity-building;

7. Stresses the importance of international support for emergency assistance to victims of mines and for the care and rehabilitation, and social and economic reintegration, of the victims, and also stresses that such assistance should be integrated into broader public health and socio-economic strategies;

8. Encourages Governments, relevant United Nations bodies and other donors to take further action to promote gender- and age-appropriate mine-awareness programmes, victim assistance and child-centred rehabilitation, thereby reducing the number of child victims and relieving their plight;

9. Emphasizes again the important role of the United Nations in the effective coordination of mine-action activities, including those by regional organizations, and especially the role of the Mine Action Service of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the Secretariat on the basis of the policy on mine action and effective coordination developed by the Secretary-General in annex II to his report;

10. Emphasizes in this regard the role of the Mine Action Service as the focal point for mine action within the United Nations system and its ongoing collaboration with and coordination of all the mine-related activities of the United Nations agencies, funds and programmes;

11. Encourages the Secretary-General to develop further a comprehensive mine-action strategy, taking into consideration the impact of the landmine problem on rehabilitation, reconstruction and development, with a view to ensuring the effectiveness of assistance in mine action by the United Nations, and emphasizes in this respect the importance of further multisectoral assessments and surveys;

12. Emphasizes in this respect the importance of developing a comprehensive information management system for mine action, under the overall coordination of the Mine Action Service and with the support of the Geneva International Centre for Humanitarian Demining, in order to facilitate the setting of priorities and the coordination of field activities;

13. Welcomes recent approaches with regard to the establishment of mine-action coordination centres, encourages the further establishment of such centres, especially in emergency situations, and also encourages States to support the activities of mine-action coordination centres and trust funds established to coordinate assistance in mine action under the auspices of the Mine Action Service;

14. Urges Member States, regional, governmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations to continue to extend full assistance and cooperation to the Secretary-General and, in particular, to provide him with information and data as well as other appropriate resources that could be useful in strengthening the coordination role of the United Nations in mine action, particularly in the fields of mine awareness, training, surveying, detection and clearance, scientific research on mine detection and clearance technology and information on and distribution of medical equipment and supplies;

15. Emphasizes in this regard the importance of recording the location of mines, of retaining all such records and making them available to concerned parties upon cessation of hostilities, and welcomes the strengthening of the relevant provisions in international law;

16. Calls upon Member States, especially those that have the capacity to do so, to provide the necessary information and technical and material assistance, as appropriate, and to locate, remove, destroy or otherwise render ineffective minefields, mines, booby traps and other devices in accordance with international law, as soon as possible;

17. Urges Member States and regional, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations that have the ability to do so to provide, as appropriate, technological assistance to mine-infested countries and to promote scientific research and development on humanitarian mine-action techniques and technology so that mine-action activities may be carried out more effectively at lower costs and through safer means and to promote international collaboration in this regard;

18. Encourages Member States and regional, inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations to continue to support ongoing activities to promote appropriate technology, as well as international operational and safety standards for humanitarian mine-action activities, and in this context welcomes the initiation of the revision of international mine-clearance standards and the development of guidelines for the use of mine-detection dogs and mechanical mine-clearance equipment, as well as the development of an international test and evaluation programme;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a report on the progress achieved on all relevant issues outlined both in his previous reports to the Assembly on assistance in mine clearance and mine action and in the present resolution, including progress made by the International Committee of the Red Cross and other international and regional organizations as well as national programmes, and on the operation of the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Action and other mine-action programmes;

20. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Assistance in mine action".

Humanitarian activities

Africa

Angola

The United Nations consolidated inter-agency appeal for Angola launched in 1998, which initially sought $66.7 million for programmes for the period January to December 1999, was revised to $ 106 million by July given the magnitude of the crisis in the country. The donor community covered 71.7 per cent, or $82.1 million, of the revised appeal by October.

The consequences of renewed civil war in Angola (see p. 102) exceeded the 1999 appeal's worst case scenario in terms of human suffering. The number of new internally displaced persons rose to nearly 1 million between April 1998 and September 1999; and, not including vulnerable persons from non-accessible areas, there were 2 million war-affected people who required immediate assistance. Insecurity impeded the continuous delivery of humanitarian assistance and the lack of regular secure access to farms and markets gave rise to competition for scarce resources. In November, OCHA launched a UN consolidated inter-agency appeal covering January to December 2000 for a total of $258.5 million.

Eritrea

In Eritrea, tension along the border with Ethiopia remained high (see p. 130), preventing displaced people from returning to their places of origin. Attacks on civilians drove additional waves of people from their homes to rural and urban centres. Displaced persons stretched the capacity of public services, facilities and infrastructure. Adding to the humanitarian crisis, Ethiopia started to deport people of Eritrean origin, and a severe drought in the Sahel area of Anseba region and the northern and southern Red Sea regions led to widespread crop failure.

A 1998 Flash Appeal [YUN 1998, p. 848], outlining requirements through February 1999, was followed by a UN Country Team Appeal requesting $31.4 million to cover the most urgent needs for the period April-September. To respond to humanitarian needs, UN agencies worked closely with the Eritrean Relief and Refugee Commission, which, in January, issued an appeal requesting $58.9 million for 1999 and, following the resumption of hostilities in February, issued an "Urgent Appeal for Humanitarian Assistance" for $31.4 million. As at 31 December, UN agencies had received $14.4 million or 46 per cent of the Country Team Appeal.

Great Lakes region and Central Africa

The humanitarian situation in the Great Lakes region and Central Africa (Burundi, Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), Rwanda, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania) worsened during the year. The fragility of the peace process was apparent as violence against civilians continued and the number of people forced to leave their homes increased (see p. 80). The number of affected population rose by 59 per cent since the beginning of the year, stressing the humanitarian community to meet the population's most basic needs.

In November, a UN consolidated inter-agency appeal sought $ 163 million covering the period January to December 2000 for assistance to Burundi, the Congo, the DRC, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania.

Burundi

The suffering which had plagued Burundi since 1993 remained unabated in 1999. More than half a million people continued to live in 300 sites away from their homes and nearly 300,000 remained refugees, mainly in the United Republic of Tanzania. Insecurity increased during the latter half of the year, forcibly moving some 250,000 additional people, thus raising the number of displaced to over 800,000. Although the embargo imposed in 1996 was suspended in January 1999, the economy weakened further. In October, an attack on a humanitarian mission in Rutana province caused the massacre of several members of the mission, including two UN officials (see p. 100).

In November, OCHA issued a UN consolidated inter-agency appeal, seeking $70.6 million for January to December 2000.

Congo (Republic of the)

As a result of the civil war in the Republic of the Congo, of the 810,000 persons who were displaced since December 1998, 580,000 remained internally displaced. Some 200,000 urban dwellers had returned to Brazzaville and the towns of Dolisie and Nkayi, while another 30,000 remained refugees in the DRC and Gabon. Access for the delivery of humanitarian assistance up until the second half of 1999 was mainly restricted to Brazzaville and Pointe Noire. In May, following the improvement of the security situation, President Sassou Nguesso announced that internally displaced persons could return to the southern districts of the country, and by mid-June, over 60,000 persons had already returned. In July, OCHA launched a UN consolidated inter-agency appeal covering the period from July to December, which sought $14.7 million for the implementation of 12 emergency interventions. By 30 September, the donor community had responded to the appeal with $7.8 million, or 53 per cent. The majority of pledges ($6 million) were received for food assistance.

In November, OCHA launched a UN consolidated inter-agency appeal covering January to December 2000 for a total of $17.1 million.

Uganda

In Uganda, the Allied Democratic Forces carried out violent attacks from January to July in Bundibugyo, causing massive and rapid displacement. Attacks in the Rwenzoli mountains continued. Attention focused on Karamoja, which experienced its worst insecurity in years. In July and August, violent attacks erupted amongst the Karamojong and between Karamojong and the Uganda People's Defence Force. Moreover, a prolonged drought threatened the food security in some western, central and northern (Karamoja) districts. Refugees continued to seek asylum in Uganda from neighbouring wars, with inflows largely from the Sudan and the DRC.

In November, OCHA issued a UN consolidated inter-agency appeal seeking $56.1 million for January to December 2000.

United Republic of Tanzania

The United Republic of Tanzania continued to receive substantial influxes of refugees, particularly from the DRC, but also from Burundi. The refugees went to the remote Kigoma and Kagera regions, a poverty-stricken part of the country where social services such as health and education were minimal and the physical infrastructure was poor.

In November, OCHA launched a UN consolidated inter-agency appeal covering January to December 2000 for a total of $59.7 million.

Guinea-Bissau

The outbreak of fighting in Guinea-Bissau between January and May 1999 ended with the ouster of the country's President and an alteration of the political landscape. The UN consolidated inter-agency appeal for January to December 1999, launched in 1998, was revised downward from $28.6 million to $17.3 million. The downward revision was due to sufficient in-country food to meet the requirements until year's end. In addition, some of the bilaterally funded developmental programmes which were frozen during the conflict were reactivated, responding to needs in the water/sanitation, health and education sectors.

Sierra Leone

In 1999, the civil war in Sierra Leone saw rebel forces in control of the northern province and parts of the east, and exposed all Sierra Leoneans to brutality and destruction (see p. 152). The implementation of 1999 humanitarian objectives was hampered by the combined effects of resource and security constraints. As at 12 October, response to the 1999 appeal of $25.1 million, revised downward from $27.9 million, remained low at $11.4 million or 40.7 per cent of requirements, despite a dire humanitarian situation. As a result of the periods of instability that followed the January 1999 invasion of Freetown by rebels of the Revolutionary United Front/Armed Forces Revolutionary Council, most humanitarian activities were curtailed or not undertaken. Displaced populations and refugees delayed returning to their communities due to lack of adequate security, social services and productive activities.

The humanitarian context of Sierra Leone changed with the signing on 7 July of the Lome Peace Accord (see p. 159), which ended the war, provided a framework for the resolution of hostilities and bound the parties to the principle of immediate humanitarian access. Progress made in the implementation of the Accord provided the opportunity for the international community to address the dire humanitarian situation of hundreds of thousands of war-affected Sierra Leoneans.

A UN consolidated inter-agency appeal issued in November sought $71 million to implement 34 projects in the year 2000.

Somalia

In an August report [A/54/296], submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/1 M [YUN 1998, p. 853], the Secretary-General described assistance provided to Somalia by the United Nations and its partners from August 1998 to July 1999. Although insecurity was a constant feature and an obstacle to the provision of humanitarian assistance, especially in urban areas and much of rural central and southern Somalia, the UN agencies and their humanitarian partners were able to gain intermittent access to a significant proportion of the most affected areas. Sudden humanitarian emergencies in Somalia were met by a substantial response from the donor community; however, the decline in general donor support resulted in the loss of operational capacity, the Secretary-General stated.

The UN consolidated inter-agency appeal for Somalia launched in December 1998, which initially solicited $65.7 million for the period January to December 1999, was revised to $64.1 million. As at 14 October, the appeal had received $39.2 million or 55.4 per cent of the requirements. In November, a UN consolidated inter-agency appeal was issued, seeking $124.3 million for January to December 2000.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/96 D [draft: A/54/L.57 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Assistance for humanitarian relief and the economic and social rehabilitation of Somalia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 43/206 of 20 December 1988, 44/178 of 19 December 1989, 45/229 of 21 December 1990, 46/176 of 19 December 1991, 47/160 of 18 December 1992, 48/201 of 21 December 1993, 49/21 L of 20 December 1994, 50/58 G of 20 December 1995, 51/30 G of 13 December 1996, 52/169 L of 16 December 1997 and 53/1 M of 8 December 1998 as well as the resolutions and decisions of the Economic and Social Council on emergency assistance to Somalia,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 733(1992) of 23 January 1992 and all subsequent relevant resolutions, in which the Council, inter alia, urged all parties, movements and factions in Somalia to facilitate the efforts of the United Nations, its specialized agencies and humanitarian organizations to provide urgent humanitarian assistance to the affected population in Somalia, and reiterated the call for the full respect of the security and safety of the personnel of those organizations and guarantee of their complete freedom of movement in and around Mogadishu and other parts of Somalia,

Noting the cooperation between the United Nations, the Organization of African Unity, the League of Arab States, the European Union, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the countries members of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and others in their efforts to resolve the humanitarian, security and political crisis in Somalia,

Noting with appreciation the continued efforts made by the Secretary-General to assist the Somali people in their efforts to promote peace, stability and national reconciliation,

Noting with concern that the absence of central authority and effective civil institutions that characterizes Somalia continues to impede sustained comprehensive development, and that, while the environment has become conducive to some reconstruction and development-oriented work in certain parts of the country, the humanitarian and security situation has remained fragile in other parts,

Welcoming the joint strategy for targeted assistance of the United Nations system focusing on rehabilitation and reconstruction of infrastructure and on sustainable community-based activities, and reaffirming the importance it attaches to the need for effective coordination and cooperation among the United Nations agencies and their partners,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Deeply appreciative of the humanitarian assistance and rehabilitation support rendered by a number of States to alleviate the hardship and suffering of the affected Somali population,

Recognizing that, while the humanitarian situation remains fragile in some parts of Somalia, there is a need to continue the ongoing rehabilitation and reconstruction process, in those parts of the country where peace and security prevail, alongside the national reconciliation process, without prejudice to the provision of emergency relief assistance wherever and whenever required, as security allows,

Noting with appreciation that the prospects for humanitarian, rehabilitation and development activities have been more favourable in some parts of the country, owing to the formation of stronger local administrative structures which are able to take responsibility for meeting humanitarian needs, with the presence and support of the United Nations system,

Noting also with appreciation the efforts of the United Nations system aimed at working directly with Somali communities, whenever possible, in the absence of a recognized national Government, and welcoming the continued focus of the United Nations, in partnership with Somali elders, other local leaders and skilled local counterparts at the grass-roots level and non-governmental organizations, on a programme of assistance combining humanitarian and developmental approaches, given the varying conditions in different areas,

Re-emphasizing the importance of implementing further its resolution 47/160 to rehabilitate basic social and economic services at local and regional levels throughout the country,

1. Expresses its gratitude to all States and the intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that have responded to the appeals of the Secretary-General and others by extending assistance to Somalia;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his continuing and tireless efforts to mobilize assistance to the Somali people;

3. Welcomes the ongoing efforts of the United Nations, the Organization of African Unity, the League of Arab States, the European Union, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the countries members of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and others to resolve the situation in Somalia;

4. Also welcomes the strategy of the United Nations focusing on the implementation of community-based interventions aimed at rebuilding local infrastructures and increasing the self-reliance of the local population, and the ongoing efforts by the United Nations agencies, their Somali counterparts and their partner organizations to establish and maintain close coordination and cooperation mechanisms available for the implementation of relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes;

5. Notes with appreciation the holistic and prioritized approach of the United Nations system to addressing the continuing crisis in some parts of Somalia, while making long-term commitments to rehabilitation, recovery and development activities in more stable parts;

6. Emphasizes the principle that the Somali people, in particular at the local level, have the primary responsibility for their own development and for the sustainability of rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance programmes, and reaffirms the importance it attaches to the creation of workable arrangements for collaboration between the United Nations system and its partner organizations and their Somali counterparts for the effective execution of rehabilitation and development activities in those parts of the country where peace and security prevail;

7. Urges all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned to continue to implement further its resolution 47/160 in order to assist the Somali people to embark on the rehabilitation of basic social and economic services, as well as institution building aimed at the restoration of civil administration at the local level in all those parts of the country where peace and security prevail;

8. Appeals to all the Somali parties concerned to seek peaceful means for resolving differences and to redouble their efforts to achieve national reconciliation that allows for transition from relief to reconstruction and development;

9. Calls upon all parties, movements and factions in Somalia to respect fully the security and safety of personnel of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and of non-governmental organizations, and to guarantee their complete freedom of movement throughout the country;

10. Calls upon the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize international humanitarian, rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance for Somalia;

11. Calls upon the international community to provide continuing and increased assistance in response to the United Nations Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance for Somalia covering the period from October 1999 to December 2000;

12. Requests the Secretary-General, in view of the critical situation in Somalia, to take all necessary measures for the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session.

Sudan

During 1999, conflict continued unabated in southern Sudan, the Nuba Mountains, the southern Blue Nile region and eastern Sudan along the border with Eritrea. Despite progress in food security in some areas, others remained affected by the fighting, which caused disruption of livelihood and displacement of civilians. In eastern Sudan, insecurity provoked massive displacements and relocations of civilians to Khartoum. The operational environment for humanitarian workers deteriorated, particularly in the Upper Nile area, where the shooting and detaining of aid staff made relief work unsafe and difficult.

A UN consolidated inter-agency appeal seeking $198.4 million for January to December 1999, issued in January, was revised upward to $204.2 million in June. As at 18 October, total financial resources amounted to $204.4 million, representing new contributions of $187.6 million and carry-over funding from 1998 of $16.9 million.

In November, OCHA issued a UN consolidated inter-agency appeal for the Sudan, seeking $125.6 million for 24 projects for January to December 2000.

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/10 [YUN 1998, p. 855], the Secretary-General, in an August report on emergency assistance to the Sudan [A/54/295], covering the period August 1998 to July 1999, described the situation in the country, emergency operations and the work of Operation Lifeline Sudan (OLS), and action taken by Member States. During the reporting period, OLS remained the only viable instrument for humanitarian policy with donor support and a commitment from the Government and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army (SPLM/A). OLS concentrated on expanding access to all war-affected populations and provided life-saving food and non-food emergency assistance. However, the crisis was exacerbated by a ban on OLS flights in an area marked by a resurgence of fighting. The Secretary-General emphasized that the principles and instruments defining co-operation within OLS should be respected, and that humanitarian action in areas of crisis in southern Sudan should benefit from further extensions and a geographical broadening of the ceasefire applicable in Bahr Al Ghazal. He stated that the UN humanitarian assessment mission to the SPLM-controlled areas of the Nuba Mountains had taken place in late June.

Communications. In a 5 April letter [A/54/84], the Sudan informed the Secretary-General that on that date the country's President announced a ceasefire in all the southern states effective 15 April, with a view to enabling UN humanitarian agencies to deliver relief to the affected population.

In a 21 May letter [A/54/113], the Sudan announced that, on 18 May, SPLA had carried out an attack against a boat operated under OLS authority, which resulted in the death of one person and injury to three others who worked for the World Food Programme (WFP). The Government reiterated its call to the international community to bring pressure to bear on SPLA to respect the current ceasefire so as to allow the delivery of relief supplies and achieve durable peace.

On 25 August [A/54/282], Finland transmitted to the Secretary-General a statement on the humanitarian ceasefire in the Sudan, issued on 19 August by the Presidency of the European Union (EU). The EU called on the Sudan and SPLM to implement their commitments to a ceasefire and to cover all areas of humanitarian needs and activities of OLS, as well as to agree to a permanent humanitarian ceasefire.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 84], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/96 J [draft: A/54/L.72/Rev.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Emergency assistance to the Sudan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/1 O of 17 December 1998 and its previous resolutions on emergency assistance to the Sudan,

Bearing in mind its resolution 54/192 of 17 December 1999 on the safety and security of humanitarian personnel and protection of United Nations personnel,

Welcoming agreed conclusions 1998/1 of the Economic and Social Council, adopted by the Council at the humanitarian segment of its substantive session of 1998, in which, among other things, the Council reaffirmed that international cooperation to address emergency situations should be provided in accordance with international law and national laws, and that the affected State has the primary role in the initiation, organization, coordination and implementation of humanitarian assistance within its territory,

Welcoming also agreed conclusions 1999/1 of the Economic and Social Council, in which the Council addressed the theme of "International cooperation and coordinated responses to humanitarian emergencies, in particular in the transition from relief to rehabilitation, reconstruction and development" in its second humanitarian segment,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Welcoming the decision of the Government of the Sudan to provide access to the Nuba Mountains, noting in that regard the results of the inter-agency needs assessment mission undertaken by the United Nations, and calling upon all parties to continue to cooperate with the United Nations in meeting the needs identified in that assessment,

Noting the occasional obstacles to the delivery of humanitarian assistance, welcoming the agreements reached by the parties to Operation Lifeline Sudan, among them the Rome protocol, aiming at facilitating delivery of relief assistance to affected populations, as well as the progress made by the Emergency Relief Coordinator and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat in strengthening the coordination of the Operation,

Urging United Nations agencies, non-governmental organizations and donor countries to continue channelling their humanitarian assistance to all affected populations in the Sudan through Operation Lifeline Sudan,

Expressing concern over the continued conflict in the Sudan and its negative impact on the humanitarian situation,

Taking note of the ongoing peace efforts taking place under the auspices of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development and the initiative of Egypt and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya for achieving a negotiated and lasting peace in the Sudan,

Noting with appreciation the contributions for the inter-agency appeal for Operation Lifeline Sudan and the progress made in the Operation, and noting also that considerable relief needs still remain to be addressed, including assistance to combat diseases such as malaria and assistance for logistic needs, emergency recovery, rehabilitation and development,

Expressing concern over the damaging consequences of floods that have occurred in various parts of the Sudan lately,

Calling for an early resolution to the conflict, and expressing concern that its continuation further increases the suffering of the civilian population and undermines the effectiveness of international, regional and national humanitarian assistance,

Reaffirming the need for all parties to continue to facilitate the work of humanitarian organizations in implementing emergency assistance, in particular the supply of food, medicine, shelter and health care, and to ensure safe and unhindered access to all affected populations,

Recognizing the need in emergency situations to ensure the smooth transition from relief to rehabilitation and development so as to reduce dependence on external food aid and other relief services,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the donor community, United Nations agencies and governmental and non-governmental organizations for the contributions so far made to the humanitarian needs of the Sudan, and calls upon them to continue their assistance, in particular by responding to the consolidated appeal and providing support for programmes in the Nuba Mountains;

2. Acknowledges with appreciation the cooperation by the Government of the Sudan with the United Nations, including the agreements and arrangements achieved to facilitate relief operations with a view to improving United Nations assistance to the affected areas, encourages the continuation of that cooperation, and calls upon all parties to the conflict to respect the current humanitarian ceasefire, in order to ensure the delivery of relief assistance;

3. Stresses the need for Operation Lifeline Sudan to be operated and managed with a view to ensuring its efficiency, transparency and effectiveness, with the full involvement and cooperation of the Government of the Sudan, taking cognizance of the relevant Operation Lifeline Sudan agreements reached by the parties, as well as consultations in the preparation of the consolidated annual inter-agency appeal for the Operation;

4. Recognizes the need for Operation Lifeline Sudan to be conducted in strict adherence to the principles of neutrality and impartiality and within the principles of national sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Sudan, and within the framework of international co-operation, in accordance with the relevant provisions of international law;

5. Calls upon the international community to continue to contribute generously to the emergency needs, recovery and development of the Sudan;

6. Urges the international community to give assistance for the rehabilitation of transportation means and infrastructure vital for the provision of relief supplies in the Sudan and their cost-effectiveness, and in this context stresses the importance of continued co-operation by all the parties involved so as to facilitate and improve the delivery of relief supplies;

7. Calls upon the donor community and the organizations of the United Nations system to provide financial, technical and medical assistance, guided by the actions called for by the General Assembly in its relevant resolutions, to combat such diseases as malaria and other epidemics in the Sudan;

8. Urges the international community to continue to support national programmes of rehabilitation, voluntary resettlement and reintegration of returnees and internally displaced persons, as well as assistance to refugees;

9. Stresses the imperative of ensuring the safety and security of humanitarian personnel, as well as safe and unhindered access for providing relief assistance to all affected populations, and the importance of strict observance of the principles and guidelines of Operation Lifeline Sudan, and of international humanitarian law reaffirming the necessity for humanitarian personnel to respect the national laws of the Sudan;

10. Welcomes the decision of the Government of the Sudan to extend for a further period of three months the ceasefire for all the areas of military operation in the country and the announcement by the Sudan People's Liberation Movement and Army of the continuation of the humanitarian ceasefire within the same period for Bahr al Ghazal and parts of the Upper Nile, strongly appeals for a comprehensive ceasefire and appeals to the parties and the revitalized mediation structure to work to this end as part of a negotiated solution to the conflict;

11. Urges all parties involved to continue to offer all feasible assistance, including facilitating the movement of relief supplies and personnel, so as to guarantee the success of Operation Lifeline Sudan in all affected parts of the country, with especial emphasis on national capacity-building in the humanitarian field for governmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as on meeting emergency relief needs;

12. Calls upon all parties to respect international humanitarian law on the protection of civilians during times of war and, in this connection, condemns attacks against civilians and humanitarian personnel, including the case of four Sudanese nationals who were abducted on 18 February 1999 while accompanying a humanitarian mission of an International Committee of the Red Cross team and subsequently killed while in the custody of the Sudan People's Liberation Movement and Army, and urges the Sudan People's Liberation Movement and Army to return the bodies to their families;

13. Condemns the detention of humanitarian personnel, and calls for appropriate investigations into all allegations of such incidents, including into the whereabouts of the eleven personnel of the sub-Saharan international development organizations last seen in rebel-held areas;

14. Welcomes the signing by the Government of the Sudan of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction, urges all parties to the conflict to desist from using them, calls upon the international community to refrain from supplying mines to the region, and urges the international community and United Nations agencies to provide appropriate assistance related to mine action in the Sudan;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize and coordinate resources and support for Operation Lifeline Sudan and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the emergency situation in the affected areas and the recovery, rehabilitation and development of the Sudan.

Special assistance to Central and East Africa

In September [A/54/421], the Secretary-General described the activities of the United Nations and other organizations relating to special assistance to Central and East African countries hosting refugees, returnees and displaced persons, and areas where large numbers of refugees had repatriated. Activities consisted of providing emergency relief and assistance to refugees in Burundi, the Central African Republic, the Congo, the DRC, Gabon, Kenya, Rwanda, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia. The Secretary-General concluded that lack of funding remained a great concern. In view of the continuing instability in the region, providing protection and assistance for uprooted populations would continue to be given priority by the UN system (see p. 1140).

Asia

Afghanistan

In Afghanistan, the peace process had collapsed, external support to warring parties continued unabated, and the fighting between the Taliban and opposition forces (see p. 255) brought deliberate targeting of civilians, large-scale displacement and attendant humanitarian needs. Security constraints, restricted access and inadequate funding limited the potential of the assistance community. Emergency relief interventions were undertaken, such as those for persons displaced by conflict in Kabul, the Panjshir and Hazarajat, and for the February earthquake in Logar and Wardak provinces, while work continued to support social infrastructure development at the community level. During the year, the assistance community strengthened its capacity to address the human rights concerns and, since April, the gender adviser to the UN system in Afghanistan had been engaged in working with UN agencies and the authorities to widen women's access to employment and basic social services.

As at 11 November, only $78.3 million, or 44 per cent of requirements, was available in response to a January UN consolidated inter-agency appeal for Afghanistan of $184.7 million for 1999.

A UN consolidated inter-agency appeal for $220.8 million was issued for the period January to December 2000.

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/203 B [YUN 1998, p. 857], the Secretary-General, in an August report covering the period from 4 September 1998 to 1 July 1999 [A/54/297], reviewed the major humanitarian and socio-economic developments in Afghanistan and described assistance provided by the United Nations and its partners and by Member States. He stated that the condition of the country had worsened during the first half of 1999, owing to the enduring instability, conflict and natural disasters, in particular the February earthquake in Logar and Wardak provinces that affected 16,000 families. Moreover, the combatants still denied most humanitarian agencies access to many areas, and the absence of UN international staff from August 1998 until March 1999, owing to security concerns, limited the capacity of the aid community to provide assistance. However, starting in early 1999, progress was made on security issues and towards the implementation of the 1998 Memorandum of Understanding between the Taliban and the United Nations governing humanitarian operations in Taliban-held areas [YUN 1998, p. 300].

Regarding the refugee situation, there were still 2.6 million refugees in the two main neighbouring countries (1.4 million in Iran and 1.2 million in Pakistan). During 1999, the increase in the number of refugees returning from Iran was a concern both to the Taliban authorities and the humanitarian agencies, which were faced with the challenge of supporting resettlement and ensuring that the returnees' rights were protected. Assistance programmes remained affected by the lack of access of women to health, education and employment opportunities. The country remained affected by landmines and unexploded ordnance, and the OCHA Mine Action Programme for Afghanistan undertook activities, including clearance of areas contaminated. The Secretary-General concluded that the failure of the peace talks and the resumption of fighting between the Taliban and the Northern Alliance resulted in the implementation of international assistance activities in an insecure environment, providing temporary relief until a sustained peace prevailed. A durable political settlement remained the key to resolving the crisis and securing a stable future for Afghanistan's people.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 84], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/189 B [draft: A/54/L.58] without vote [agenda items 20 (f) & 50].

Emergency international assistance for peace, normalcy and reconstruction of war-stricken Afghanistan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 50/88 A of 19 December 1995, 51/195 A of 17 December 1996, 52/211 A of 19 December 1997 and 53/203 B of 18 December 1998,

Expressing its grave concern about the continuation of the military confrontation in Afghanistan, threatening regional peace and security and causing massive loss of life and extensive human suffering, further destruction of property, serious damage to the economic and social infrastructure, refugee flows and other forcible displacements of large numbers of people,

Noting with deep concern that the people of Afghanistan continue to suffer from a serious loss of their human rights, which can be largely attributed to the effects of decades of warfare that continues to create a worsening humanitarian crisis,

Remaining deeply concerned about the problem of millions of anti-personnel landmines and unexploded ordnance as well as the continued laying of new anti-personnel landmines in Afghanistan, which continue to prevent many Afghan refugees and internally displaced persons from returning to their villages and working in their fields,

Deeply disturbed by the continuing security threat to United Nations personnel and other humanitarian personnel, including locally engaged staff, and by various impediments to their access to affected populations,

Expressing its grave concern at the serious violations of human rights and international humanitarian law, in particular by the Taliban, in Afghanistan and at the inadequacy of measures taken by the warring factions to reverse the situation,

Deeply concerned by the continuing and substantiated reports of violations of human rights, in particular of women and girls, including all forms of discrimination against them, notably in areas under the control of the Taliban,

Welcoming the ongoing work of gender and human rights advisers appointed by the United Nations, who form an integral part of the office of the United Nations resident and humanitarian coordinator in Afghanistan,

Welcoming the visit of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, its causes and consequences to Afghanistan in September 1999, and looking forward to her conclusions and recommendations,

Expressing its grave concern for the well-being of internally displaced persons, particularly in Kabul and in the Panjshir, Bamian and Kunduz regions, and the civilian population of Afghanistan living without shelter, who face a long winter possibly deprived of basic foods as a result of the recent fighting, as well as the denial by the warring factions of adequate conditions for the delivery of aid by humanitarian organizations,

Distressed by the loss of life caused by earthquakes and epidemics, and expressing its appreciation to all States, international agencies and non-governmental organizations that have provided emergency relief,

Affirming the urgent need to continue international humanitarian assistance to Afghanistan for the restoration of basic services, as well as the need for the conflicting parties to guarantee the safety and security of the personnel of all international organizations,

Welcoming the principle-centred approach towards humanitarian assistance and rehabilitation in Afghanistan as outlined in the Strategic Framework for Afghanistan and in the document entitled "Next Steps for the United Nations in Afghanistan", and the common programming mechanisms introduced by the United Nations, and also welcoming the initiative to establish an independent strategic monitoring unit,

Expressing its gratitude to all Governments that have rendered assistance to Afghan refugees, and, at the same time, calling on all parties to continue to honour their obligations for the protection of refugees and internally displaced persons and to allow international access for their protection and care,

Recognizing the need for continuing international assistance for the maintenance abroad and the voluntary repatriation and resettlement of refugees and internally displaced persons, and welcoming the voluntary return of refugees to rural districts in Afghanistan that are relatively stable and secure,

Expressing its appreciation to the United Nations system, to all States and international and non-governmental organizations that have responded positively and continue to respond, where conditions permit, to the humanitarian needs of Afghanistan, as well as to the Secretary-General for his efforts in mobilizing and coordinating the delivery of appropriate humanitarian assistance,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and endorses the observations contained therein;

2. Stresses that the responsibility for the humanitarian crisis lies with all warring parties, in particular with the Taliban;

3. Strongly condemns the recent fighting in the Shomali Plains and the forced displacement of civilian populations, the torching of residential houses, the burning of crops, the cutting of fruit trees and the deliberate destruction of infrastructure;

4. Calls upon all relevant organizations of the United Nations system to continue to coordinate closely their humanitarian assistance to Afghanistan on the basis of the Strategic Framework for Afghanistan, in particular to assure a consistent approach on matters of principle, human rights and security, and appeals to donor countries as well as other humanitarian organizations to cooperate closely with the United Nations, taking into account the inter-agency consolidated appeal for emergency humanitarian and rehabilitation assistance to Afghanistan for 2000;

5. Calls upon the leaders of all Afghan parties to place the highest priority on national reconciliation, acknowledging the desire of the Afghan people for rehabilitation, reconstruction and economic and social development;

6. Urges all Afghan parties to respect international humanitarian law and to ensure the safety, security and free movement of all United Nations and humanitarian personnel and the protection of the property of the United Nations and of humanitarian organizations, including non-governmental organizations, so as to facilitate their work;

7. Demands that all Afghan parties cooperate fully with the United Nations and associated bodies as well as with other agencies and humanitarian organizations in their efforts to respond to the humanitarian needs of the people of Afghanistan, and urges them to secure the uninterrupted supply of humanitarian aid to all in need of it;

8. Condemns all blockades or other interference in the delivery of humanitarian relief supplies to the Afghan people as a violation of international humanitarian law, and notes the recent lifting of the blockade in central Afghanistan by the Taliban;

9. Strongly condemns the recent acts of violence in Kabul, Farah, Kandahar, Mazar-e Sharif, Kunduz and Jalalabad directed against United Nations offices and personnel;

10. Urges all Afghan parties, in particular the Taliban, to ensure safe and unimpeded access for and to facilitate the delivery of humanitarian assistance, in particular the supply of food, medicine, shelter and health care, especially in the Panjshir Valley;

11. Takes note of the Supplementary Protocol to the Memorandum of Understanding of 13 May 1998, signed by the United Nations and the Taliban, on the security of United Nations personnel in Afghanistan, and urges the Taliban to take the necessary steps for its full implementation;

12. Denounces the continuing discrimination against girls and women as well as ethnic and religious groups, including minorities, and other violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in Afghanistan, notably in areas under the control of the Taliban, notes with deep concern their adverse effects on international relief and reconstruction programmes in Afghanistan, and calls upon all parties within Afghanistan to respect fully the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all, regardless of gender, ethnicity or religion, in accordance with international human rights instruments, inter alia, the International Covenant on Human Rights;

13. Strongly urges all of the Afghan parties to end discriminatory policies and to recognize, protect and promote the equal rights and dignity of women and men, including their rights to full and equal participation in the life of the country, freedom of movement, access to education and health facilities, employment outside the home, personal security and freedom from intimidation and harassment, in particular with respect to the implications of discriminatory policies for the distribution of aid, notwithstanding some progress made with respect to access to education and health care for girls and women;

14. Urges all Afghan parties to prohibit conscripting or enlisting children or using them to participate in hostilities in violation of international law;

15. Appeals to all States and to the international community to ensure that all humanitarian assistance to the people of Afghanistan integrates a gender perspective, that it actively attempts to promote the participation of both women and men and that women benefit equally with men from such assistance;

16. Expresses its appreciation to those Governments that continue to host Afghan refugees, appeals to the Governments concerned to reaffirm their commitment to international refugee law on the rights of asylum and protection, and calls upon the international community to do so and to consider providing further assistance to Afghan refugees;

17. Expresses concern over the continued laying of anti-personnel landmines, and urges all Afghan parties to put a complete halt to the use of landmines, which continues to take a heavy toll on civilians and seriously impedes the delivery of humanitarian assistance;

18. Urgently appeals to all States, the United Nations system and international and non-governmental organizations to continue to provide, when conditions on the ground permit, all possible financial, technical and material assistance for the Afghan population and the voluntary, safe and secure return of refugees and internally and forcibly displaced persons;

19. Calls upon the international community to respond to the inter-agency consolidated appeal for emergency humanitarian and rehabilitation assistance for Afghanistan, launched by the Secretary-General on 23 November 1999 for the period from 1 January to 31 December 2000, bearing in mind the availability also of the Afghanistan Emergency Trust Fund;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a report on the actions taken pursuant to the present resolution;

21. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session, under the cluster of items on coordination of humanitarian assistance, the sub-item entitled "Emergency international assistance for peace, normalcy and reconstruction of war-stricken Afghanistan".

East Timor

During the violence that followed the 30 August popular consultation in East Timor (see p. 280), more than 75 per cent of the population was displaced (see p. 1144) and 70 per cent of private residences, public buildings and utilities were destroyed. The crisis was deepened when all government functions collapsed with the departure of Indonesian authorities. The vacuum was filled by humanitarian agencies and by the deployment, on 20 September, of the International Force for East Timor, which established a security presence throughout the province. During the first month of the operation, humanitarian intervention in Dili included the creation of camps for displaced persons, a distribution of rice and non-food assistance for more than 64,000 people, the reopening of health facilities and repairs to infrastructure systems. In addition, food and non-food assistance was dispatched to displaced populations in conjunction with humanitarian and military reconnaissances and convoys. Agencies worked together to develop a programme strategy that covered the emergency and initial reconstruction needs of more than 650,000 displaced persons and returnees, and to provide basic services to people while a new civil administration was established under the auspices of the United Nations Transitional Administration for East Timor.

Some 290,000 people fled to West Timor during the violence. While voluntary repatriation remained the best option for a resolution of the situation, assistance was provided to refugees in temporary camps. However, a number of constraints prevented the Government and the aid community from organizing an effective approach, particularly the presence of hostile armed elements among the refugees, which limited access to many camps until the end of 1999. In West Timor, the United Nations provided assistance to displaced persons, and agencies worked with authorities to create an environment enabling displaced East Timorese to make a free decision regarding their future, help reintegration, enhance the coping strategies of communities in West Timor hosting East Timorese and support reconciliation.

In October, a UN consolidated inter-agency appeal covering emergency and transitional programmes sought $ 199 million for the period October 1999 to June 2000. The appeal contained 48 projects for $183.1 million for East Timor and 16 projects for $16 million for West Timor.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 80], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/96 H [draft: A/54/L.68 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Assistance for humanitarian relief, rehabilitation and development for East Timor

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions on the situation in East Timor,

Recalling also the relevant Security Council resolutions and decisions on the situation in East Timor, in particular resolution 1272(1999) of 25 October 1999,

Recalling further agreed conclusions 1998/1 and 1999/1 of the humanitarian affairs segment of the substantive session of the Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 and the guiding principles contained in the annex to that resolution,

Recalling also the agreements of 5 May 1999 between Indonesia and Portugal, and between the United Nations, Indonesia and Portugal, on modalities and security arrangements for the popular consultation, welcoming the successful conduct of the popular consultation of the East Timorese people on 30 August 1999, taking note of its outcome, which began a process of transition under the authority of the United Nations towards independence, and welcoming the decision of the Indonesian People's Consultative Assembly on 19 October 1999 concerning East Timor,

Emphasizing the urgent need for humanitarian assistance to overcome the grave humanitarian situation resulting from violence and damage to property in East Timor and the large-scale displacement of East Timorese civilians, including large numbers of women and children,

1. Welcomes the contribution of Member States, the United Nations system, international organizations and non-governmental organizations in addressing the humanitarian assistance needs of the people of East Timor;

2. Welcomes also the establishment by Security Council resolution 1272(1999) of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor, whose mandate includes the coordination and delivery of humanitarian, rehabilitation and development assistance, as well as the appointment of the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator as the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in East Timor and Transitional Administrator of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor;

3. Emphasizes the importance of close consultation and collaboration with the East Timorese people and organizations in the planning and delivery of humanitarian, rehabilitation and development assistance to East Timor;

4. Requests all Member States to respond urgently to meet fully the requirements of the United Nations consolidated inter-agency appeal for the East Timor crises, which was launched on 27 October 1999;

5. Urges Member States to respond fully to meet the identified needs of the Transitional Administration, including in such areas as the provision of civil and social services, institutions and capacity;

6. Welcomes the Joint Assessment Mission of the World Bank, United Nations agencies, the donor community, the Asian Development Bank and the East Timorese to assess the immediate and long-term rehabilitation, reconstruction and development needs of East Timor, within the United Nations arrangements for East Timor and in close cooperation with immediate relief and rehabilitation efforts, and requests all Member States to respond to meet the needs identified fully;

7. Welcomes also, in this regard, the convening of the Donors Meeting for East Timor in Tokyo on 16 and 17 December 1999;

8. Calls upon Member States, United Nations agencies, other international organizations and non-governmental organizations to continue to collaborate to ensure the safe and unhindered access and provision of humanitarian, rehabilitation and development assistance to all those in need in East Timor, including internally displaced persons;

9. Calls upon Member States, United Nations agencies and other international organizations to continue to collaborate, in full cooperation with the Indonesian Government, to ensure safe and unimpeded access for humanitarian assistance to the East Timorese in western Timor and other parts of Indonesia, including those who do not wish to return to East Timor, in accordance with national and international law;

10. Welcomes the assurances given by the Indonesian authorities regarding the activities of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other humanitarian organizations, including the security of the personnel of the Office of the High Commissioner, and assurances regarding free access to all East Timorese in western Timor;

11. Calls upon Member States to ensure the voluntary, safe and unimpeded return of refugees and displaced persons to East Timor, emphasizes the responsibility of States to ensure the civilian and humanitarian character of refugee and displaced persons camps and settlements, and, in this regard, welcomes the policy of the Indonesian Government to ensure that the East Timorese have the freedom to exercise their right to return voluntarily, to remain in western Timor or to relocate within other parts of Indonesia or other countries;

12. Welcomes, in this regard, the memorandum of technical understanding of 22 November 1999 establishing a joint border monitoring group to ensure safe conditions in the border area and to facilitate the efficient and safe flow of returning East Timorese refugees;

13. Urges the United Nations to continue to address the humanitarian, rehabilitation and development needs of East Timor;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Tajikistan

The aim of UN humanitarian operations in Tajikistan continued to be to support the country's two-year peace process (see p. 267) through a three-pronged strategy designed to meet the basic needs of at-risk populations during the critical post-conflict period. The strategy included life-saving interventions, programmes aimed at stabilizing at-risk populations and projects designed to facilitate the reintegration of demobilized combatants and civilian returnees.

The UN consolidated inter-agency appeal for Tajikistan, launched in December 1998 and requesting $24.8 million for 1999, was revised to $30.2 million, of which $17.6 million, accounting for 56 per cent of requirements, was received as at 14 October.

In November, OCHA launched a UN consolidated inter-agency appeal for January to December 2000, which sought $34.8 million.

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/1 K [YUN 1998, p. 860], the Secretary-General, in an August report [A/54/294], described the situation in Tajikistan and the humanitarian operations during the period December 1998 to mid-July 1999. Despite progress in the peace process and economic reform and improvements in security, significant humanitarian needs continued to exist. The level of need was so great that it would be premature to halt relief assistance, stated the Secretary-General. The United Nations would re-evaluate the humanitarian assistance required following parliamentary elections, scheduled for 2000. In the meantime, humanitarian programmes would continue to serve as a bridge to help at-risk populations to meet their basic needs. In stable areas, UN agencies and NGOs were engaged in rehabilitation projects aimed at revitalizing communities and promoting self-sufficiency.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/96 A [draft: A/54/L.49 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Emergency international assistance for peace, normalcy and rehabilitation in Tajikistan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 51/30 J of 25 April 1997, 52/169 I of 16 December 1997 and 53/1 K of 7 December 1998,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 1113(1997) of 12 June 1997, 1128(1997) of 12 September 1997, 1138(1997) of 14 November 1997, 1167(1998) of 14 May 1998, 1206(1998) of 12 November 1998, 1240(1999) of 15 May 1999 and 1274(1999) of 12 November 1999,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Welcoming the significant progress made by the parties in the implementation of the General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan,

Commending the efforts of the United Nations, in particular those of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Tajikistan and of the personnel of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan, in assisting the parties in the implementation of the General Agreement,

Bearing in mind the close interrelationship between ensuring peace and achieving national reconciliation in Tajikistan and the ability of the country to meet the humanitarian needs of its people and to take effective steps towards the rapid revitalization of the economy, and reaffirming the urgent need to assist Tajikistan in its efforts to restore basic services and the infrastructure of the country,

Noting that, despite progress in both the peace process and economic reform and improvements in security, significant humanitarian needs continue to exist throughout Tajikistan,

Recognizing that until the economy is able to support the Tajik population and the peace process has been fully consolidated, humanitarian operations will remain a critical factor in ensuring stability in Tajikistan,

Expressing regret that, despite the importance of humanitarian operations for contributing to peace and stability, donor response to both the 1998 and the 1999 consolidated inter-agency appeals has been disappointing,

Stressing that international funding for humanitarian operations is particularly important since such operations remain the principal means by which hundreds of thousands of Tajiks meet their basic needs,

Noting with concern the lack of support for food assistance and health programmes, which aim to save lives and must receive immediate funding if social catastrophe is to be avoided in Tajikistan,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and endorses the observations and recommendations set out therein;

2. Welcomes the efforts aimed at achieving peace and national reconciliation in Tajikistan, encourages the parties to ensure the full implementation of the General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan, and encourages the Commission on National Reconciliation to continue its efforts, in particular those aimed at the institution of a broad dialogue among the various political forces in the country in the interest of restoration and strengthening of civil accord in Tajikistan;

3. Recognizes that comprehensive international support remains essential to ensuring that Tajikistan can continue on the path of peace and national reconciliation;

4. Welcomes with appreciation the efforts undertaken by the Secretary-General in drawing the attention of the international community to the acute humanitarian problems of Tajikistan and in mobilizing assistance for the implementation of the General Agreement and the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the country;

5. Expresses its appreciation to the States, the United Nations, the World Bank and other intergovernmental organizations and all relevant humanitarian organizations, agencies and non-governmental organizations, including the International Committee of the Red Cross, that have responded and continue to respond positively to the humanitarian needs of Tajikistan;

6. Encourages Member States and others concerned to continue assistance to alleviate the urgent humanitarian needs of Tajikistan and to offer support to that country for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of its economy;

7. Warmly welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to continue the United Nations humanitarian programme in Tajikistan by issuing a consolidated inter-agency appeal for humanitarian assistance to Tajikistan for 2000 as a strategic document that will guide a gradual transition to a more development-oriented focus, and invites Member States to fund programmes included in the appeal;

8. Calls upon the Secretary-General to re-evaluate in 2000 all humanitarian assistance activities with a view to addressing longer-term developmental issues;

9. Urges the parties to ensure security and freedom of movement of humanitarian personnel and United Nations and associated personnel, as well as the safety and security of their premises, equipment and supplies;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to give special attention, in the dialogue with the multilateral lending institutions, to the humanitarian implications of their adjustment programmes in Tajikistan;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to monitor the humanitarian situation in Tajikistan and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution;

12. Decides to consider at its fifty-fifth session the question of the situation in Tajikistan under the item entitled "Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance".

Europe

Northern Caucasus (Russian Federation)

The humanitarian situation in the northern Caucasus had been aggravated since conflict erupted anew in August 1999. The economy of the region remained one of the Russian Federation's poorest. Hundreds of thousands of persons were displaced, mostly from the Republic of Chechnya into the Republic of Ingushetia, but also within Chechnya and the Republic of Dagestan. Some displaced persons moved to other regions of the Russian Federation. In October, the Russian Government and the United Nations signed a Memorandum on Consultations to establish a framework for cooperation. An assessment team went to Ingushetia and Dagestan in November to assess the possibility of conducting rehabilitation and reconstruction activities, as well as the emergency relief needs of internally displaced persons.

In November, OCHA launched a UN inter-agency flash appeal for the northern Caucasus in order to deliver relief supplies, start initial rehabilitation programmes and address protection issues. It sought $16.2 million for the period 1 December 1999 to 29 February 2000.

South-Eastern Europe (Albania and the former Yugoslavia)

In 1999, developments in South-Eastern Europe—Albania, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM)—reflected the volatility of the ongoing complex emergency in the region. Assistance on a regional basis was expanded many times following the escalation of fighting and human displacement connected with the Kosovo crisis in late March (see p. 332). Albania absorbed the bulk of the Kosovo refugee outflow from March to June. But the spontaneous repatriation of Kosovo refugees occurred earlier and much more rapidly than expected. By the end of August, all but about 6,000 out of an original 480,000 refugees in Albania had returned to Kosovo, resulting in agency budgets allocated to support refugees in Albania that exceeded requirements. Several agencies adjusted by transferring staff and resources to Kosovo. In Bosnia and Herzegovina, implementation of the 1995 General Framework Agreement for Peace (Dayton Accords) [YUN 1995, p. 544] was made more difficult by the new arrival of refugees from Kosovo and other areas of FRY from April to June, and the shifting of donor attention away from Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The agencies operating in Croatia strengthened coordination and cooperation mechanisms with the Government, its respective ministries and institutes, and other partners. Some, however, were seriously underfunded while others reported late pledges, which had a detrimental effect on the commencement of planned projects. In FRY, the Kosovo crisis mobilized a high level of donor contributions for activities within Kosovo. In other parts of FRY, slow pledging and provision of funds in the first part of 1999 gave way to a situation of donor reticence in the second half of the year. In contrast, resource needs grew faster than in other parts of the region. The humanitarian situation in FRY by late summer was worse than planned for. Additionally, humanitarian agencies needed to re-staff and replace confiscated equipment and supplies following the summer's evacuation and North Atlantic Treaty Organization military action. In that environment, and given the reduced NGO presence, some agencies were forced to scale back their programme goals. Health monitoring was lacking, urgent mental health needs had not been fully addressed, many refugees went without food rations in July and August, and concerns were rising about the achievement of necessary winterization measures for refugees, internally displaced persons and vulnerable groups. A 20 September Internet report [www.reliefweb.int], prepared by OCHA, summarized electricity and heating in FRY in winter 1999/2000: it predicted winter shortages, recommended humanitarian measures and assessed energy needs for the winter.

In FYROM, refugees were given asylum and protection, and received emergency relief as well as repatriation assistance. After the massive, spontaneous repatriation to Kosovo in summer 1999, agencies continued assistance to remaining refugees but also reoriented their programmes to new circumstances and reallocated part of the material and human resources to Kosovo operations.

The UN consolidated inter-agency appeal for South-Eastern Europe, launched in December 1998, which sought $359.4 million for the period January to December 1999, was revised to $929 million in July, following revisions necessary to meet needs related to the crisis, as well as a review of agency programmes concerning post-Dayton implementation. As at 29 October, $720.9 million, or 77.5 per cent, was received.

In November, OCHA launched a UN consolidated inter-agency appeal for South-Eastern Europe for the period January to December 2000, for a total of $660 million.

(For details of an Inter-Agency Needs Assessment Mission dispatched to Kosovo, see p. 350.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 80], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/96 F [draft: A/54/L.66 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Humanitarian assistance to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 and reaffirming that humanitarian assistance should be provided in accordance with and with due respect for the guiding principles contained in the annex to that resolution,

Recalling also agreed conclusions 1999/1 of the Economic and Social Council adopted at the humanitarian affairs segment of its substantive session of 1999, in particular the relevant paragraphs thereof,

Stressing the importance of an adequate United Nations presence in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia,

Noting the efforts by the United Nations system to assess the situation in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, starting with the Inter-Agency Needs Assessment Mission dispatched by the Secretary-General to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia from 16 to 27 May 1999,

Taking note of the report prepared by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, entitled "Electricity and heating in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia: winter 1999-2000",

Also taking note of the report entitled "The Kosovo conflict: consequences for the environment and human settlements", prepared by the joint United Nations Environment Programme and United Nations Centre for Human Settlements Balkans task force on environment and human settlements,

Taking further note of the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro),

Stressing, in this context, the need to prevent attacks on ethnic minorities which may lead to additional humanitarian needs,

Aware of the humanitarian requirements of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia,

Bearing in mind that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia has been affected by the problems caused by refugee flows from neighbouring countries and has a large number of internally displaced persons,

Deeply appreciative of the humanitarian assistance, and noting the rehabilitation support rendered by a number of States, international agencies and organizations and non-governmental organizations to alleviate the humanitarian needs of the affected population in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia,

1. Calls upon all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide humanitarian assistance to alleviate the humanitarian needs of the affected population in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, especially during winter months, in particular bearing in mind the special situation of women, children and other vulnerable groups;

2. Urges the relevant authorities and the international community to support programmes to ensure that the humanitarian needs of refugees and internally displaced persons in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia are met and to support durable solutions to their plight, in particular voluntary repatriation and reintegration, and stresses the need to create conditions conducive for their safe return;

3. Calls upon the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize international humanitarian assistance for the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to it at its fifty-fifth session, under the agenda item entitled "Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance", a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Special economic assistance

African economic recovery and development

During its coordination segment, held from 16 to 20 July (decision 1999/211) and on 28 July, the Economic and Social Council discussed coordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies and other UN bodies related to the development of Africa. It had before it a letter of 1 July from the United States [E/1999/104-S/1999/754], transmitting the text of the Blueprint for a United States-Africa Partnership for the Twenty-first Century, that emanated from a ministerial meeting (Washington, D.C., 15-18 March) and was based on an agreement between the United States and 46 sub-Saharan nations to foster economic development, trade, investment and political reform. The Council also considered a June report of the Secretary-General on development of Africa: implementation and coordinated follow-up by the UN system of initiatives on Africa [A/54/133-E/1999/79], submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/92 [YUN 1998, p. 77]. The report dealt with measures taken relating to the recommendations in the Secretary-General's 1998 report on the causes of conflict and the promotion of peace and sustainable development in Africa [ibid., p. 66] (see p. 846), priority areas under the current initiatives on Africa and possible priorities in partnership, and coordinated follow-up by the UN system of initiatives on Africa. It was based on information provided by the UN system and donor countries.

The Secretary-General stated that financing Africa's development was crucial. Improving education and infrastructure, providing adequate health care, reducing poverty, reintegrating refugees and displaced persons from conflicts and catalysing structural transformation required massive investment. However, domestic resource mobilization remained limited by low savings ratios, and Africa's external debt continued to be a drag on its potential. Beyond domestic resources, other sources of external finance, including foreign direct investment (FDI) and official development assistance (ODA), had to increase to the levels required to transform African economies. A wide range of actions had been taken to implement the recommendations of the Secretary-General's 1998 report, including strengthening good governance; enhancing social development through activities to create an enabling environment for enhancing the effectiveness of the informal sector in both rural and urban areas; intensified action by the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS and other health programmes; malaria prevention and control; by the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs, support to over 100 projects in the areas of social policy, poverty eradication and management of social change; and measures to eliminate discrimination against women. Efforts were made to improve trade flows and financial resource flows. UN organizations continued to support activities aimed at strengthening regional cooperation and integration.

Regarding priority areas, the report described various initiatives, and although they differed in specificity, they could be grouped under the broader priorities established by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) Assembly of Heads of State and Government in the 1995 Cairo Agenda for Action [YUN 1995, p. 989], namely, democracy, governance, peace, security, stability and sustainable development; food security; capacity-building and human resources development; structural transformation of African economies; mobilization and utilization of resources; and regional cooperation and integration. The Secretary-General suggested that the Council might wish to ask the UN system, multi-lateral and regional organizations and bilateral donors to collaborate with African Governments and among themselves to ensure consistency of the various coordination mechanisms. In an effort to harmonize non-UN initiatives, the United Nations could organize selected thematic consultations.

The Council, in agreed conclusions adopted at its coordination segment [A/54/3/Rev.1 (agreed conclusions 1999/2)], reaffirmed the importance of UN participation in the development of Africa and underscored its intention to ensure that all initiatives on Africa were maximized. It reiterated the importance of a stable political and economic environment for local and foreign investment, and urged the international community to improve access to markets and to continue to assist African countries in making better use of market opportunities already available while facilitating FDI, ensuring adequate flows of ODA in tandem with agreed targets, and providing deeper relief from external debt. The Council called for a more concerted effort towards faster debt relief under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative and through other means, and urged that any International Monetary Fund (IMF) gold reserve sales should be undertaken in a limited manner so as to minimize any adverse effect on African gold-producing countries. The Council stressed the need to strengthen administrative and institutional capacity and the financial systems.

Relevant components of the UN system were called on to strengthen their support in the areas of governance, poverty eradication and social development, and the creation of an enabling environment to expand trade and investment, and towards regional integration and cooperation. Recognizing the need to take note of the variety of country-specific situations and needs, the Council stated that prioritization for partnership should be based on an Africa-driven agenda and on ownership by the African countries, and should take place in cooperation with development partners and civil society.

The Council called on the international community to support the efforts of the African Governments in the implementation of national and international strategies to prevent the spread and mitigate the impact of HIV/AIDS, which threatened the economic and social development of many African countries. Continued efforts were needed to enhance market access for products of export interest to Africa and to support economies to diversify and to build supply capacity; the international community was called on to support broad-based trade liberalization and to address issues that could hinder the ability of African economies to be more competitive. The Council called for support to implement the Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1993-2002) [YUN 1993, p. 597] and the Alliance for Africa's Industrialization and to foster industrial production and development. It encouraged the strengthening of technology development and facilitating technology transfer.

The Council called for more effective coordination and harmonization of the implementation of all initiatives, better funding and stronger ownership by recipient countries. The UN system was encouraged to build coherence among initiatives aimed at increasing the effectiveness of activities at the field level and to consolidate the initiatives. Donor countries were urged to give priority to increasing their core contributions. The Council called for the strengthening of the existing coordination arrangements at the global and regional levels and for clarification of the UN system role in support of the priority areas identified in various UN-sponsored initiatives to support Africa's overall development.

Regarding regional coordination meetings, the Council recommended thematic consultations among development partners held under the chairmanship of the UN Deputy Secretary-General, with OAU involvement and African regional and subregional economic communities. It also recommended the establishment of a linkage between the conclusions on coordination and the preparatory work for its high-level segment on African development, to be scheduled before 2002, and the final review of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s (see p. 847); it requested the Secretary-General to commission an independent evaluation of the performance of the New Agenda, and to submit a report outlining the progress achieved in strengthening African capacity to coordinate international development assistance and in developing coordination mechanisms. International coordination efforts should be designed under the leadership of recipient countries, add coherence among international initiatives and utilize simple yet effective coordination mechanisms.

By decision 1999/270 of 28 July, the Council, having considered the Secretary-General's report, recommended that the agreed conclusions arising from its coordination segment become an integral part of the reports and issues to be considered by the open-ended working group to be established by the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session.

On 25 October [A/54/513], the Council President drew to the attention of the Assembly President the agreed conclusions.

Report of Secretary-General. In a September report [S/1999/1008], the Secretary-General described progress in the implementation of the recommendations contained in his 1998 report on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa [YUN 1998, p. 66]. The report contained follow-up actions taken in the areas of peace and security (see p. 78), as well as in development and related areas. With regard to humanitarian assistance, the Secretary-General stated that UN efforts focused on holding combatants financially liable to their victims under international law, ensuring adherence to humanitarian and human rights norms by all parties to a conflict, and funding special human rights missions from assessed contributions. Commitments were obtained from various Governments and insurgency groups to end the recruitment of children under age 18 (see p. 672), demobilize and reintegrate child soldiers and ensure humanitarian access to protect children. In the light of increasing difficulties in delivering assistance, the Inter-Agency Standing Committee carried out studies on strategic coordination in the Great Lakes region and made recommendations aimed at increasing system-wide accountability and ownership of humanitarian action. As to refugees and internally displaced persons, new policy tools were developed for their protection; the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) assisted several countries in relocating refugees away from the borders, and in dealing with security in refugee camps (see p. 1139). Measures were taken to ensure that the UN humanitarian coordinator in the field would operate under the authority of the representative of the Secretary-General, to coordinate humanitarian action consistent with broader UN peace and development activities, and to deliver relief efforts aimed at promoting long-term development objectives.

Security Council consideration. The Security Council, on 29 and 30 September [S/PV.4049], discussed the situation in Africa with regard to the Secretary-General's September report. The Secretary-General stated that access for humanitarian relief to victims of crises must be ensured, but should not be a substitute for the political and military engagement needed to bring stability and address the root causes of the upheavals. Each crisis situation was different, and UN and Council commitment to peacekeeping, humanitarian assistance and other such action should be applied fairly and consistently, irrespective of region or nation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/234 [draft: A/54/L.75 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 46].

The causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/151 of 18 December 1991, the annex to which contains the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, its resolutions 48/214 of 23 December 1993, 49/142 of 23 December 1994 and 51/32 of 6 December 1996, on the mid-term review of the New Agenda, as well as its resolution 53/90 of 7 December 1998 on the implementation of the New Agenda,

Recalling also its resolution 53/92 of 7 December 1998 on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace in Africa,

Mindful of agreed conclusions 1999/2 adopted by the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1999, on coordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies and other bodies of the United Nations system related to the theme "Development of Africa: implementation and coordinated follow-up by the United Nations system of initiatives on African development", and of Council decision 1999/270,

Taking note of the deliberations of the Security Council at its meeting on the situation in Africa, held on 29 and 30 September 1999, on the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations contained in the report on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa and of the work of the Security Council on the follow-up to the report of the Secretary-General,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General to the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council on the development of Africa: implementation of the recommendations in the report of the Secretary-General to the Security Council and the General Assembly, specifically the implementation and coordinated follow-up by the United Nations system of initiatives on Africa,

1. Welcomes agreed conclusions 1999/2 adopted by the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1999, on coordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies and other bodies of the United Nations system related to the theme "Development of Africa: implementation and coordinated follow-up by the United Nations system of initiatives on African development", and Council decision 1999/270;

2. Requests all Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in their respective areas and sectors to work towards the implementation of agreed conclusions 1999/2;

3. Welcomes the decision of the Economic and Social Council to hold a high-level segment on Africa in 2001;

4. Stresses the paramount importance for the final review and appraisal of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, to be held in 2002, of an independent evaluation of the New Agenda that should include a thorough review of existing initiatives on Africa;

5. Decides to consider at its fifty-sixth session the modalities for undertaking the final review and appraisal of the New Agenda, taking into account the mid-term review of the New Agenda, agreed conclusions 1999/2 and decision 1999/270,

6. Requests the President of the General Assembly to establish the open-ended ad hoc working group to monitor the implementation of the recommendations made by the Secretary-General in his report to the General Assembly and the Security Council on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa, to prepare for discussions at the fifty-fifth session of the General Assembly;

7. Requests that, in addition to monitoring the recommendations referred to in paragraph 6 above, the ad hoc working group monitor the implementation of agreed conclusions 1999/2 and of decision 1999/270, as well as poverty eradication, debt relief, the human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS) and support to countries in post-conflict situations;

8. Requests the President of the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session to establish the ad hoc working group, to serve as its ex officio chairman, to designate, in close consultation with Member States, two vice-chairpersons and to convene an organizational meeting of the ad hoc working group not later than March 2000 to decide on modalities and develop arrangements for the effective functioning of the ad hoc working group;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the ad hoc working group with all necessary assistance to ensure the accomplishment of its mandate;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

New Agenda for the Development of Africa

The United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 46/151 [YUN 1991, p. 402], continued to be implemented by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), among other UN bodies.

UNCTAD action. The twenty-first executive session of the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board (TDB) (Geneva, 1 July) [A/54/15/Rev.1] considered an April report by the UNCTAD Secretary-General [TD/B/EX(21)/2], which contained information on UNCTAD's contribution towards implementing the New Agenda. The report covered UNCTAD activities regarding policy research and analysis, post-conflict rehabilitation and development in Rwanda and Somalia and sectoral issues, including international trade; services development; debt, debt management and financial flows; international investment and enterprise development; and the UN System-wide Special Initiative on Africa (see p. 848).

At its forty-sixth session (Geneva, 18-29 October) [A/54/15/Rev.1], TDB considered an August report by the UNCTAD secretariat [TD/B/46/10], which assessed the extent to which transport problems had adverse effects on African trade and balance of payments, analysed the underlying factors which accounted for key problems, and explored policy issues to resolve them. Emphasis was given to policy options for financing transport infrastructure and the need for regional and subregional cooperation.

In its agreed conclusions of 29 October [A/54/15/Rev.1 (agreed conclusions 458(XLVI))], TDB recognized that a problem preventing Africa from achieving sustainable development was the lack of investment in infrastructure, of which the transport sector was among the most important elements. The high cost of transport undermined export competitiveness and increased prices of key imports, adversely affecting African balance-of-payments positions, which were particularly high for sub-Saharan countries. High transaction costs were also contributing factors. Poor rural transport systems had an adverse influence on specialization and market development, as well as on international tradeability of goods. Multilateral financial institutions could provide long-term finance and credit guarantees to enable countries to tap capital markets, and Governments could facilitate market forces by adopting a strategic perspective on infrastructure rehabilitation and development. There was a need to adopt principles of cost recovery, which should be enhanced by measures aiming to reduce infrastructure financing cost. There was an important role for ODA in infrastructure financing, including as a catalyst to attract foreign investment and as a means of promoting rural development. A heavy debt burden and lower export earnings from falling commodity prices limited the possibility of Governments to raise capital for investments in transport. Better access to markets for products of export interest was required to generate income for investment. Multilateral financial institutions were invited to increase their share of financing of regional and subregional projects. The Board encouraged the secretariat to continue its analysis of the development problems of African countries, as well as its technical activities aimed at reducing transaction costs.

UN System-wide Special initiative on Africa

CPC action. The Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC), at its thirty-ninth session (New York, 7 June-2 July), considered an April report of the Secretary-General updating progress on the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative for the Implementation of the

New Agenda [E/AC.51/1999/6], submitted in response to a 1998 request of the Committee [YUN 1998, p. 865]. The report described activities undertaken by the UN system from June 1998 to May 1999 to implement the priority areas of the Initiative, addressed coordination issues and described measures taken in response to CPC recommendations. Progress was achieved in the areas of governance, information technology for development, education, health, and population and gender and was emerging in poverty eradication, trade access and opportunities, diversification of African economies, regional cooperation and integration, water, environment and South-South cooperation. There was improvement in macro-economic policies, with greater emphasis on social development in many African countries, where the private sector played an increasingly greater role. A resource mobilization strategy for the implementation of the Special Initiative was under way, involving the Special Initiative secretariat and the World Bank. The UN system had taken initiatives to enhance coordination among its organizations at the country level. Feedback received from resident coordinators in 18 countries indicated that the collaboration had given momentum to implementation.

At the subregional level, the development centres of the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) aimed to foster cooperation and integration between member States and intergovernmental organizations. However, their efforts were limited because of the absence of a general coordinating mechanism that would allow agencies to interact on a periodic and sustained basis and take a long-term view of issues in the region. The case for programmatic coordination was strongest in areas where cross-border effects were significant, such as transportation, health and social issues, and trade and regional integration issues. In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1998/46 [YUN 1998, p. 1262], the first annual coordination meeting of the UN system in Africa, attended by representatives of 23 organizations, was held in March in Nairobi, Kenya, to discuss enhanced coordination of UN system activities at the regional level and ascertain whether there was adequate coordination among organizations on African issues. Annexed to the report were a note by the UNCTAD secretariat on a programme for economic diversification in Africa and a note by ECA on a programme for regional cooperation and integration.

On 10 June [A/54/16], CPC recommended expanding the number of countries covered by the Initiative. It endorsed the elaboration of the programmes annexed to the Secretary-General's report. CPC requested that a resource mobilization strategy together with the concrete action plan be submitted in 2000 and that activities be implemented on opportunities to access markets. It asked that a progress report be submitted in 2000, and that its comments be reported to the Council's July 1999 coordination segment on Africa.

ACC action. At its first regular session of 1999 (Geneva, 9-10 April) [ACC/1999/4], the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) reviewed progress achieved by the Special Initiative and agreed that reporting should capture all relevant information from the UN system on actions in Africa, to be used for other reporting requirements. At its second regular session (New York, 29-30 October) [ACC/1999/20], ACC reviewed the coordination of UN activities in Africa and endorsed the thrust of the recommendations made at the first inter-agency meeting for Africa (Nairobi, March), which concluded that other relevant UN system activities could be brought under the umbrella of the Special Initiative.

In resolution 1999/57, the Economic and Social Council welcomed the closer collaboration among UN entities in implementing the Special Initiative (see p. 1351).

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Although a ceasefire was observed across the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) following the signing of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement (see p. 81), the humanitarian conditions in the country remained appalling. Almost 14 million persons were in need of assistance. Indispensable to the peace architecture in the DRC were the return of internally displaced persons and refugees, representing over 1 million persons; reintegration schemes for the demobilized militia, including child soldiers; and the enhancement of ethnic cohabitation.

A UN consolidated inter-agency appeal, covering January to December 1999, which sought $26.1 million, was revised in July to $60.3 million. More than half of that new budget represented costs for food purchase and shipment for 500,000 vulnerable persons, including refugees. As at November, only 20 per cent of requirements was pledged for that sector. For other emergency interventions by various UN agencies, $21.4 million was requested, but only $3.3 million, or 15.5 per cent, was received. The inadequate international response and the severe underfunding diminished coverage and quality of assistance. An inter-agency appeal issued in November sought $71.4 million for January to December 2000.

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/1 L [YUN1998, p. 866], the Secretary-General presented an August report on special assistance for the economic recovery and reconstruction of the DRC [A/54/278], which described assistance provided by UNDP, WFP, UNHCR, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the World Health Organization (WHO), the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights. The Secretary-General stated that the Government and the UN system were in agreement with regard to recovery and reconstruction needs. The UN system operating in Kinshasa had agreed to harmonize its cooperation programmes, whose execution should coincide with the Government's 1997 Triennial Minimum Programme, which identified the reconstruction needs and outlined medium-term priorities. The Secretary-General concluded that to end the economic crisis, appeals should be made to the international community for assistance; the establishment of a framework of peace and reconciliation was a sine qua non for the creation of an environment conducive to rehabilitation; assistance should be provided to the Government to prepare a strategy comprising financial stabilization, reform, reconstruction and development; and an agreement should be reached to stabilize payment arrears owed to IMF.

UNDP action. In order to promote economic recovery and reconstruction in the DRC, UNDP continued to shift the focus of its activities to sustainable human development and poverty alleviation. In a July note on assistance to the DRC [DP/1999/36], the UNDP Administrator stated that, as a result of the crisis, it had not been possible for the Government to prepare a cooperation framework; he requested the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board to authorize him to continue to provide support to the country on a project-by-project basis until the situation improved. On 17 September [E/1999/35 (dec. 99/25)], the Board took note of the Administrator's note and authorized him to continue to approve assistance to the DRC on a project-by-project basis.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/96 B [draft: A/54/L.53 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Special assistance for the economic recovery and reconstruction of the Democratic Republic of the Congo

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/169 A of 16 December 1997 and 53/1 L of 7 December 1998,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 1234 (1999) of 9 April 1999, 1258 (1999) of 6 August 1999, 1273(1999) of 5 November 1999 and 1279(1999) of 30 November 1999 on the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Welcoming the signing in Lusaka of the Ceasefire Agreement on the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo by all parties involved, which represents a viable basis for a resolution of the conflict in the country,

Expressing its concern at the alleged violations of the Ceasefire Agreement, and urging all parties to refrain from any declarations or action that could jeopardize the peace process,

Alarmed at the plight of the civilian population throughout the country, and calling for its protection,

Gravely concerned at the deteriorating economic and social situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular in the eastern Congo, and at the effect of the continued fighting on the inhabitants of the country,

Reaffirming the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and all States in the region,

Urging all parties to respect and protect human rights and respect international humanitarian law, in particular the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the additional Protocols thereto, of 1977,

Deeply concerned about the continued extensive destruction of life and property as well as the severe damage to infrastructure and the environment suffered by the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Bearing in mind that the Democratic Republic of the Congo also suffers from the problems encountered by a country that has received thousands of refugees from neighbouring countries,

Recalling that the Democratic Republic of the Congo is a least developed country with severe economic and social problems arising from its weak economic infrastructure and aggravated by the ongoing conflict,

Bearing in mind the close interrelationship between ensuring peace and security and the ability of the country to meet the humanitarian needs of its people and to take effective steps towards the rapid revitalization of the economy, and reaffirming the urgent need to assist the Democratic Republic of the Congo in the rehabilitation and reconstruction of its damaged economy and in its efforts to restore basic services and the infrastructure of the country,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Calls for the full implementation of the Ceasefire Agreement on the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo by all its signatories;

3. Calls upon all parties concerned in the region to create the conditions necessary for the speedy and peaceful resolution of the crisis, and urges all parties to engage in a process of political dialogue and negotiation without delay;

4. Encourages the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to pursue sound macro-economic policies and to promote good governance and the rule of law, and urges the Government and the people of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to exert all efforts for economic recovery and reconstruction despite the ongoing armed conflict;

5. Renews its invitation to the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to cooperate with the United Nations, the specialized agencies and other organizations in addressing the need for rehabilitation and reconstruction, stresses the need for the Government to assist and protect the civilian population, including refugees and internally displaced persons within the territory of that country regardless of their origin, and reaffirms the need for respect for the provisions of international humanitarian law, in particular the safety of humanitarian personnel, and safe and unhindered access to all affected populations;

6. Renews its urgent appeal to the executive boards of the United Nations funds and programmes to continue to keep under consideration the special needs of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and in that regard welcomes, inter alia, the authorization given to the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme by the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Population Fund to continue to approve assistance to the Democratic Republic of the Congo on a project-by-project basis;

7. Invites Governments to continue to provide support to the Democratic Republic of the Congo and to respond in a timely manner to the United Nations consolidated appeal for the Great Lakes region for 2000;

8. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue to consult urgently with regional leaders, in coordination with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity, about ways to bring about a peaceful and durable solution to the conflict;

(b) To continue to consult with regional leaders in coordination with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity in order to convene, when appropriate, an international conference on peace, security and development in the Great Lakes region, under the auspices of the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, to address the problems of the region in a comprehensive manner;

(c) To keep under review the economic situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo with a view to promoting participation in and support for a programme of financial and material assistance to the country in order to enable it to address its urgent need for economic recovery and reconstruction;

(d) To submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a report on the actions taken pursuant to the present resolution.

Djibouti

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/1 J [YUN 1998, p. 868], the Secretary-General, in a June report [A/54/153-E/1999/93], described the situation in Djibouti and progress made in providing assistance for reconstruction and development. Djibouti's difficulties were related to the economic and financial crisis, which resulted from the civil strife and the change in the international and subregional situation. In addition, recurring emergency situations had increased the need for emergency and humanitarian assistance, and a large refugee population from neighbouring countries had strained the meagre resources available. The rehabilitation process already initiated needed to be strengthened. The Secretary-General proposed the rebuilding of rural infrastructure, the implementation of microcredit programmes and the promotion of income-generating activities. Assistance was needed in the areas of governance, administrative reform and economic management. Djibouti should find a way to enable refugees and displaced persons from neighbouring countries to return to their countries of origin, with the support of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development and UNHCR. The Secretary-General called on the international community to provide financial support for technical assistance to meet urgent socio-economic programmes.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/96 C [draft: A/54/L.56 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of Djibouti

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/1 J of 7 December 1998 and its previous resolutions on economic assistance to Djibouti,

Recalling also the Paris Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries on 14 September 1990, as well as the mutual commitments undertaken on that occasion and the importance attached to the follow-up to that Conference,

Recalling further agreed conclusions 1999/1 adopted by the Economic and Social Council at the humanitarian segment of its substantive session of 1999,

Conscious that Djibouti is included in the list of least developed countries and that it is ranked 157th out of the 174 countries studied in the Human Development Report 1999,

Noting that the economic and social development efforts of Djibouti are constrained by the extremes of the local climate, in particular cyclical droughts and torrential rains and floods, such as those that occurred in October and November 1997, and that the implementation of reconstruction and development programmes requires the deployment of substantial resources which exceed the capacity of the country,

Emphasizing that there is an urgent need to provide financial support in the areas of demobilization, reconstruction and rehabilitation of the regions affected by civil strife, with a view to strengthening peace and stability in the country,

Noting that the situation in Djibouti has been made worse by the deteriorating situation in the Horn of Africa, in particular in Somalia, and noting also the presence of tens of thousands of refugees and persons displaced from their countries, which has placed serious strains on the fragile economic, social and administrative infrastructure of Djibouti and caused security problems in the country, in particular in the city of Djibouti,

Noting with satisfaction that the Government of Djibouti is continuing to implement a structural adjustment programme, and convinced of the necessity to support that financial recovery programme and to take effective measures to alleviate the consequences, in particular the social consequences, of that adjustment policy, so that the country may achieve lasting economic results,

Noting with gratitude the support provided to relief and rehabilitation operations by various countries and by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Declares its solidarity with the Government and the people of Djibouti, who continue to face critical challenges owing, in particular, to the scarcity of natural resources, harsh climatic conditions and the continuing critical situation in the Horn of Africa;
3. Notes with concern the cyclical drought phenomenon in Djibouti, including the current severe drought that is wreaking a major humanitarian disaster upon tens of thousands of people, particularly those who are vulnerable, and requests the international community to respond urgently to the appeal launched by the Government;
4. Encourages the Government of Djibouti, despite difficult economic and regional situations, to continue its serious efforts towards the consolidation of democracy;
5. Notes with satisfaction the implementation of a structural adjustment programme by Djibouti and, in that context, appeals to all Governments, international financial institutions, the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to respond adequately to the financial and material needs of the country;
6. Considers that the process of demobilization, reintegration and employment of demobilized soldiers is essential not only for national rehabilitation, but also for the success of agreements with the international financial institutions and for the consolidation of peace, and that it requires substantial resources which exceed the capacity of the country;
7. Expresses its gratitude to the States and intergovernmental organizations that have already fulfilled their pledges at the round table on Djibouti, held in Geneva on 29 and 30 May 1997;
8. Also expresses its gratitude to the intergovernmental organizations and especially to the United Nations Development Programme, as well as the other funds and programmes of the United Nations system, for their contributions to the national rehabilitation of Djibouti, and invites them to continue their efforts;
9. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his continued efforts to make the international community aware of the difficulties faced by Djibouti;
10. Requests the Secretary-General to continue, in close cooperation with the Government of Djibouti, his efforts to mobilize resources necessary for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Djibouti;
11. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the progress made with regard to economic assistance to Djibouti and the implementation of the present resolution.

Other economic assistance

Central America

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/169 G [YUN 1997, p. 921], the Secretary-General, in September [A/54/350], described the activities of UNDP and other UN organs, organizations and programmes, carried out between July 1997 and July 1999 in support of the efforts of the Central American countries to implement a new sustainable development programme. He stated that two UNDP regional initiatives concluded in 1999—the state of the region project and support to processes of dialogue and consensus-building for the consolidation of peace in Central America—coupled with the regional programme for sustainable human development at the local level, constituted the backbone of UNDP support to the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America (ALIDES). The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) supported ALIDES priorities in the economic sphere and produced reports on issues related to ALIDES, including the reform of the institutional framework for Central American integration; liberalization of agricultural trade; transformation of the industrial sector; the productive use of family remittances; and social infrastructure and natural disasters. El Fondo Centroamericano para el Desarrollo Sostenible (FOCADES), a private entity created by the Governments of the region to facilitate the financing of the environmental component of ALIDES, would enable communities, private sector firms, NGOs and other interested groups to incorporate environmental aspects into their economic development activities. With estimates that between 6 and 12 per cent of the world's biodiversity was contained within the Meso-American region, which extended from Darién, Colombia, to Tehuantepec, Mexico, efforts were being made to create a system of biological corridors to link the region. The UNDP Global Environment Facility had assigned some $25 million in seed capital to build the system and to create a sustainable development fund.

Communication. On 17 November, Belize, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama transmitted the Declaration of Guatemala II, signed by the Central American Presidents (Guatemala City, 19 October) [A/54/630]. Among other things, they reaffirmed the importance of implementing ALIDES.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 80], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/96 E [draft: A/54/L.29/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

International assistance to and cooperation with the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the resolutions in which it emphasizes and acknowledges the importance of international, bilateral and multilateral economic, financial and technical support, cooperation and assistance for peacekeeping and peace-building in Central America following the armed conflicts in the region, in particular its resolutions 49/21 I of 20 December 1994, 50/58 B of 12 December 1995, 50/132 of 20 December 1995 and 52/169 G of 16 December 1997, which provide a frame of reference for international assistance to and cooperation with the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America, in support of national efforts to make the region a zone of peace, freedom, democracy and development,

Noting that, as the century draws to a close, the Central American countries have achieved significant progress towards the consolidation of democracy and good governance, the strengthening of civilian Governments, respect for human rights and the rule of law and the promotion of State and economic reforms, sustainable development and regional integration, reflecting the desire of the Central American peoples to live and prosper in a climate of peace and solidarity,

Stressing the importance and effectiveness of the commitments undertaken by the Central American Presidents at various regional presidential summits, in particular those which constitute the global framework for promoting and consolidating peace, democracy and sustainable human development in Central America,

Recognizing that hurricane Mitch, the worst disaster to strike the Central American region in this century, underscored the extreme vulnerability of the poorest sectors of the population, in particular women and children, which were the most severely affected, and the inadequacy of existing local and national institutions to deal with natural disasters,

Noting that the various natural phenomena which have affected the region are one of the factors that have put at risk the biodiversity of Central America,

Taking into consideration that, at the second Consultative Group Meeting for the Reconstruction and Transformation of Central America, co-hosted by the Inter-American Development Bank and the Government of Sweden and held in Stockholm from 25 to 28 May 1999, the Governments of the region, the principal donors and representatives of civil society renewed their commitment to democratic change and sustainable human development as the best means of reducing economic, social and ecological vulnerability to disasters, and looking forward to the next round of Consultative Group Meetings, to be held in Nicaragua and Honduras in February 2000,

Taking into account that the Governments of the region have designated the period 2000-2004 as the Quinquennium for the Reduction of Vulnerability to and the Impact of Natural Disasters in Central America and have adopted a strategic framework for the reduction of vulnerability and disasters in Central America, which contain guidelines for the elaboration, updating, improvement and development of regional plans for the reduction of vulnerability to and the impact of natural disasters, the integrated management and conservation of water resources and the prevention and control of forest fires,

Stressing that the achievement of the national priorities in the political, economic, social, cultural, environmental, public safety and regional integration fields, which are set out in the programme of the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America, is essential for reducing the region's vulnerability to natural disasters and for promoting sustainable human development,

Considering the necessity of ensuring the elimination of anti-personnel mines from Central American territory as well as the rehabilitation and reintegration of mine victims in their communities in order to restore normal conditions for the integral development of the region,

Recognizing the valuable and effective contribution made by the organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and by the various governmental and non-governmental mechanisms, the donor community and the Consultative Group for the Reconstruction and Transformation of Central America and the importance of the political dialogue and co-operation taking place between the European Union and Central America and the joint initiative of the industrialized countries of the Group of Twenty-four and the Group of Three (Colombia, Mexico and Venezuela) in the progress made towards consolidating peace, democracy and the implementation of the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America,

Reaffirming the need to continue focusing attention on the situation in Central America with a view to overcoming the underlying causes of the armed conflicts which have impeded the region's development and avoiding a reversal of the achievements,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the reports of the Secretary-General on international assistance to and cooperation with the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America and on collaborative efforts to assist Belize, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama and progress made with the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts of the affected countries, in particular their recommendations and conclusions;

2. Emphasizes the importance of supporting and strengthening the efforts of the Central American countries to implement the Strategic Framework for the Reduction of Vulnerability and Disasters in Central America, adopted by their Presidents in the Declaration of Guatemala II on 19 October 1999, and the projects and programmes of the Quinquennium for the Reduction of Vulnerability to and the Impact of Natural Disasters in Central America, in accordance with the process of transformation and sustainable development for the region for the next millennium, which contain basic guidelines for the prevention and mitigation of damage, with special emphasis on the most vulnerable groups and sectors, as identified by gender-based levels of poverty and marginality;

3. Notes the efforts and achievements relating to mine clearance in Central America, despite the negative impact of hurricane Mitch, and appeals to the organs of the United Nations system, in particular the Mine Action Service of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the Secretariat, and the Organization of American States as well as the international community to continue providing the material, technical and financial support needed by the Central American Governments to complete mine-clearance, mine-awareness and victim assistance activities in the region, in conformity with the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and with the provisions of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction that relate to international co-operation and assistance;

4. Stresses the need for the international community to maintain its cooperation and assistance, including provision of financial resources, both bilateral and multilateral, with the Central American countries, to support the promotion of sustainable development and the consolidation of peace, freedom and democracy in the region;

5. Notes with satisfaction the progress achieved towards the implementation of the subregional co-operation programme in Central America of the United Nations Development Programme focusing on peace and democratic governance, strengthening of the rule of law, economic and social development and sustainable development, which was established in 1996;

6. Recognizes the importance for the subregion of the studies being undertaken by the United Nations Development Programme, in collaboration with its national and regional partners and with donors, in particular in the preparation of the forthcoming meeting of the Inter-American Development Bank Consultative Group on the regional aspects of the reconstruction and transformation of Central America, to be hosted by the Government of Spain in Madrid in 2000, which will seek to establish new relations of cooperation in pursuit of the objectives of the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America;

7. Notes with satisfaction the initiative to introduce the new and innovative approach of a Meso-American Biological Corridor, which is being developed with assistance from the United Nations Development Programme's own funds, the World Bank, the Inter-American Development Bank, the German Agency for Technical Cooperation and the United States Agency for International Development, as an initiative with an innovative approach that seeks to conserve biodiversity, mitigate the effects of climate change and promote the sustainable development of rural communities, which will facilitate the establishment of a network of protected areas throughout Central America that will help to reduce vulnerability to natural disasters;

8. Supports the decision of the Central American Governments to concentrate their efforts on the implementation of updated programmes with strategies to achieve sustainable human development in previously determined priority areas, which help to consolidate peace and resolve social inequalities, extreme poverty and social explosion;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, the organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and all States, international financial institutions and regional and subregional organizations to continue providing the support needed to attain the objectives of the programme for the sustainable development of Central America, in particular those which are being pursued within the framework of the Quinquennium for the Reduction of Vulnerability to and the Impact of Natural Disasters in Central America;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

11. Decides to consider at its fifty-sixth session the question of international assistance to and cooperation with the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America.

El Salvador

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/169 C [YUN 1997, p. 922], the Secretary-General submitted an October report on assistance for the reconstruction and development of El Salvador [A/54/462], which described the economic and social situation of the country and the state of its democratic institutions, and examined the advances and obstacles during 1998-1999 in the efforts to make the transition from peace-building to sustainable development. Regarding the integration of outstanding issues (land transfer programme; rural settlements programme; Fund for the Protection of the Wounded and War-Disabled; transfer of lands in excess of 245 hectares) into a national development agenda, UNDP and the Secretariat had developed a strategy to ensure that the process of peace-building received support from the United Nations, the international community and El Salvador, with a view to strengthening progress in democratization and promoting the resolution of the pending issues. During the period under review, UNDP had worked on all of the outstanding issues and had achieved results in the land transfer programme and the rural settlements programme. Unfortunately, there had been a clear lack of will even to open a dialogue on the issue of lands exceeding the constitutional limit of 245 hectares. With regard to the families of fallen combatants, despite the addition of some new beneficiaries to the programmes under the Fund for the Protection of the Wounded and War-Disabled, most of those who were entitled to those benefits had not received them, owing to difficulties in obtaining the required legal documents. UNDP took steps to incorporate the themes of reintegration and human rights into its programme, and its institutional strategy provided for intervention in local development and democratic governance. From 1996 to 1998, international cooperation with El Salvador declined from $514.7 million to $308.4 million, which represented an annual reduction in cooperation resources of 22.6 per cent.

Haiti

Communications. In response to a 16 February letter addressed to him from the President of the Economic and Social Council [E/1999/7-S/1999/170], seeking advice on the interpretation of paragraph 8 of resolution 1212(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 229], the President of the Security Council, in a 7 April letter [E/1999/12-S/1999/403], confirmed that the Security Council had invited the Economic and Social Council to contribute to designing a long-term programme of support for Haiti. The Security Council would continue to follow the matter and might have suggestions as to how the two Councils could cooperate in that regard.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 7 May [meeting 9], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1999/4 [draft: E/1999/L.15] without vote [agenda item 2].

Long-term programme of support for Haiti

The Economic and Social Council

1. Recalls paragraph 17 of its agreed conclusions 1998/1 of 17 July 1998, in which the Council noted the need to develop, through a strategic framework, when appropriate, a comprehensive approach to countries in crisis, in which key aspects of durable recovery, peace-building, all human rights, sustained economic growth and sustainable development, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and recent United Nations conferences, were included. The development of such a comprehensive approach must involve national authorities as well as the United Nations system, donors and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. National authorities must take a leading role in all aspects of the recovery plan;

2. Affirms the leading role of the Government of Haiti in all aspects of the recovery plans for Haiti;

3. Takes note of paragraph 8 of Security Council resolution 1212(1998) of 25 November 1998, in which the Economic and Social Council was invited to contribute to the elaboration of a long-term programme of support for Haiti, and of the exchange of letters between the Presidents of the Economic and Social Council and the Security Council;

4. Decides to create an Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti, composed of representatives of five Economic and Social Council members, designated by the President of the Council on the basis of equitable geographical distribution and in consultation with regional groups and the Government of Haiti;

5. Also decides that the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti should submit to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1999, for its consideration, its recommendations on how to ensure that international community assistance to the efforts to support the Government of Haiti in achieving sustainable development is adequate, coherent, well coordinated and effective;

6. Requests the Group to ensure that the Government of Haiti is fully involved in its work;

7. Encourages other interested Member States, including in particular the Friends of Haiti, to contribute to the work of the Group, and requests the Group to consider ways and means to facilitate their doing so;

8. Requests the Secretary-General and his Special Representative for Haiti, relevant United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies, including the World Bank, to provide all necessary assistance to the Group;

9. Invites other relevant multilateral institutions, in particular the Inter-American Development Bank, regional organizations and bilateral donors, to cooperate fully with the Group.

Report of Ad Hoc Advisory Group. The Secretary-General, on 2 July, transmitted to the Council the report of the newly established Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti [E/1999/103]. As noted in a May report of the Secretary-General to the Security Council (see p. 210), the country had been slowly recovering from its political crisis since April 1997, and continued to be a least developed country, the only one in the western hemisphere. The UN agencies in Haiti worked with the Government and NGOs in assisting the population at the grass-roots level. Excluding the World Bank and IMF, the UN system's disbursements in support of socio-economic development stood at $127.8 million since the return of the constitutional Government. External assistance since then had sought to respond to development needs identified by the Government and the international community within the framework of the emergency recovery programme to which donors pledged funds. A factor affecting aid was the concentration of donor resources on humanitarian activities, and there was a need to shift it towards support for sustainable development, including capacity- and institution-building. Strengthening the role of the Government in aid coordination was key to making Haiti's cooperation with its partners more effective. The consultative group process facilitated by the World Bank remained the framework for inter-donor coordination and donor-government consultations on development priorities and policies, as well as on issues of funding.

The Group recommended that the Council request the Secretary-General to establish, in consultation with the Government, mechanisms to develop a long-term strategy and programme of support in areas such as education, peace-building, poverty eradication, durable recovery and sustainable development, aimed at reinforcing capacity-building in governmental and civil society institutions. It also recommended that the UN specialized agencies, funds and programmes, the World Bank, the Inter-American Development Bank, other multilateral institutions, regional organizations, bilateral donors and NGOs continue support and work in collaboration with the Government and the donor community to develop the programme. Coordination should take place through the resident coordinator mechanism. The Group proposed that the Council urge the UN system to continue to support the preparations for legislative, local and presidential elections, and invite the General Assembly to renew the mandate of the International Civilian Mission in Haiti. Recognizing the importance of a stable environment as a precondition for free and fair elections and of its link with sustainable development efforts, as well as of a functioning national police for the consolidation of democracy and the revitalization of the system of justice, the Group recommended that the Council urge the UN system to continue to work in the areas of consolidation of democracy, training and professionalization of the national police force. It also recommended that it request the Secretary-General to submit an annual report on the long-term programme of support.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 27 July [meeting 41], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1999/11 [draft: E/1999/L.35] Without vote [agenda item 7].

Long-term strategy and programme of support for Haiti

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling paragraph 17 of its agreed conclusions 1998/1 of 17 July 1998, in which the Council noted the need to develop, through a strategic framework, when appropriate, a comprehensive approach to countries in crisis, in which key aspects of durable recovery, peace-building, all human rights, sustained economic growth and sustainable development, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and recent United Nations conferences, were included,

Recalling also that the development of such a comprehensive approach must involve national authorities as well as the United Nations system, donors and inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations, and that national authorities must take a leading role in all aspects of the recovery plan,

Recalling further its resolution 1999/4 of 7 May 1999, by which it created an Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti, with the mandate of submitting to the Council, at its substantive session of 1999, for its consideration, its recommendations on how to ensure that international community assistance to the efforts to support the Government of Haiti in achieving sustainable development is adequate, coherent, well coordinated and effective,

Reaffirming the leading role of the Government of Haiti in all aspects of the recovery plans for Haiti,

Having examined the report of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti,

Emphasizing the need to develop a strategic framework and a comprehensive approach for a long-term United Nations programme of support for Haiti,

Emphasizing also that capacity-building is a key element to enable Governments and civil society to manage their affairs and effectively absorb international assistance in post-conflict situations,

Stressing the vital link between national stability and economic and social development,

Taking note of the request by the Government of Haiti for international electoral assistance for its plans to organize and hold the forthcoming legislative, local and presidential elections,

Bearing in mind the importance of the role of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights with regard to human rights issues in Haiti and of the work of the independent expert on Haiti of the Commission on Human Rights,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti, and welcomes its recommendations;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Government of Haiti and making use of the existing United Nations presence in Haiti, to take the necessary steps to develop on a priority basis a long-term strategy and programme of support for Haiti in such areas as education, peace-building, poverty eradication, social integration, productive employment, trade, durable recovery and sustainable development, aimed particularly at reinforcing capacity-building objectives in both governmental and civil society institutions;

3. Requests the programmes, funds and agencies of the United Nations system, the World Bank, the Inter-American Development Bank, other multilateral institutions and regional organizations, bilateral donors, including within the Consultative Group meetings led by the World Bank, non-governmental organizations and the rest of the donor community to continue to support and to work in close collaboration with the Government of Haiti for the purpose of elaborating and supporting the long-term strategy and programme for Haiti, including prioritizing sustainable development and capacity-building objectives;

4. Urges that the coordination of the work of the organizations of the United Nations system in Haiti continue to function through the resident coordinator mechanism, since it has proved to be an adequate means for effective coordination, and that such coordination should be further strengthened through the completion of the common country assessment and subsequent preparation of a United Nations Development Assistance Framework for Haiti, which will provide the elements to define an effective long-term United Nations development assistance programme for the country;

5. Recommends that the long-term programme of support for Haiti address the issues of capacity-building of governmental institutions, especially in areas such as governance, the promotion of human rights, the administration of justice, the electoral system, law enforcement, police training and other areas of social and economic development, which would enable the Government of Haiti to adequately and effectively coordinate, manage, absorb and utilize international assistance and development aid;

6. Also recommends that the long-term strategy and programme of support for Haiti also address the issue of capacity-building in civil society institutions, particularly community-based organizations, labour unions and professional associations;

7. Urges the United Nations system to continue to support the preparations for legislative, local and presidential elections in Haiti, including supporting financially the ongoing efforts of the Government of Haiti to organize those elections;

8. Recommends to the General Assembly to review all aspects of the mandate and operations of the International Civilian Mission in Haiti in the light of the situation in Haiti and to consider renewing the mandate of the United Nations component of the Mission;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to coordinate with the Government of Haiti other modalities under which reinforced support from the international community can be ensured for the electoral processes;

10. Urges the United Nations system to continue to work in the areas of consolidation of democracy and training and professionalization of the national police force of Haiti, and, to that end, recommends to the General Assembly to consider devising a United Nations special training and technical assistance programme for the Haitian National Police;

11. Recommends to the General Assembly to consider requesting the Secretary-General to continue his good offices in Haiti through his Representative and to maintain the existence of the office there, which would also have the responsibility of managing any new civilian mission mandated by the United Nations;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Economic and Social Council, at its substantive session of 2000, and to the appropriate United Nations inter-governmental bodies, an integrated synthesis report on the elaboration and implementation of the long-term programme of support for Haiti, including observations and recommendations on the work of the relevant United Nations bodies in their respective areas of competence.

Third States affected by sanctions

In a May note on assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions [E/1999/51], the Secretary-General, recalling General Assembly resolution 53/107 [YUN 1998, p. 1236], stated that a summary of the deliberations and main findings of the ad hoc expert group meeting on developing a methodology for assessing the consequences incurred by third States as a result of preventive or enforcement measures, and on exploring innovative measures of international assistance to the affected third States, as contained in the Secretary-General's 1998 report [ibid., p. 1235], would be made available to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1999 (see also p. 1252).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July [meeting 46], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1999/59 [draft: E/1999/L.52] without vote [agenda item 13].

Assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions

The Economic and Social Council,
Recalling General Assembly resolution 53/107 of 8 December 1998 on the implementation of the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions,

Taking note of the note by the Secretary-General,

1. Takes note of the summary of the deliberations and main findings of the ad hoc expert group meeting on developing a methodology for assessing the consequences incurred by third States as a result of preventive or enforcement measures and on exploring innovative and practical measures of international assistance to the affected third States, as contained in section IV of the report of the Secretary-General on implementation of the provisions of the Charter related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions;

2. Reaffirms the important role of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Committee for Programme and Coordination in mobilizing and monitoring, as appropriate, the economic assistance efforts of the international community and the United Nations system to States confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of preventive or enforcement measures imposed by the Security Council and, as appropriate, in identifying solutions to the special economic problems of those States;

3. Decides to continue consideration of this question, taking into account the relevant decisions of the General Assembly.

States affected in the Balkans

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/169 H [YUN 1997, p. 925], the Secretary-General submitted a November report on economic assistance to States affected by the consequences of severing their economic relations with the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia during the period when sanctions had been in force and during the period following the lifting of the sanctions [A/54/534]. The report contained information provided by Governments on action they had taken to assist the affected States. It also described UN assistance activities, regional initiatives and assistance arrangements, humanitarian assistance programmes, and procurements for UN peacekeeping missions. Regarding reconstruction and development efforts, the international community, including all countries of the region, pledged to mobilize funds or in-kind assistance. The Kosovo crisis had produced an overwhelming impact on the fragile economies of several neighbouring countries. The affected countries of South-Eastern Europe continued to face adjustment problems, which, the Secretary-General stressed, needed to be addressed in the context of the rehabilitation effort and through enhancing regional cooperation. Donor support for the reconstruction process in the former Yugoslavia and other regional cooperation programmes had already yielded a positive impact on the most seriously affected countries.

Although the UN system continued to implement financial and technical assistance programmes, new resources were needed in support of reconstruction and recovery efforts. Specific concerns in the areas of transport and infrastructure development as well as trade and investment promotion were pursued through regional initiatives and assistance arrangements under the auspices of the EU and in cooperation with other regional organizations, but additional resources were needed to support a long-term approach to the consolidation of the Balkans. Affected countries should be encouraged to participate in the international support for rehabilitation efforts. Mobilization and coordination of assistance and co-financing of projects under the auspices of multilateral agencies should facilitate regional allocation of resources and increase transparency in procurement of products and services. Moreover, in follow-up to the Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe—adopted in Cologne, Germany, on 10 June—activities of its Economic Table, aimed at reconstruction assistance, sustainable investment and structural reforms in the subregion, would help promote further intraregional cooperation and integration of South-East Europe into the European mainstream as an important contribution to stability in the Balkans and beyond.

On 15 December [meeting 80], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/96 G [draft: A/54/L.67 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Economic assistance to the Eastern European States affected by the developments in the Balkans

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 52/169 H of 16 December 1997 and the conclusions contained therein,

Recalling agreed conclusions 1999/1 of the humanitarian affairs segment of the Economic and Social Council, in particular the relevant paragraphs thereof,

Stressing the importance of the regional cooperation initiatives and assistance arrangements, such as the Process of Stability and Good-Neighbourliness in South-East Europe (Royaumont Initiative), the South-East European Cooperative Initiative, the South-East European Cooperation Process, the Central European Initiative and the Black Sea Economic Cooperation,

Welcoming the Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe, adopted in Cologne, Germany, on 10 June 1999, Taking note of issue number 2 of the Economic Survey of Europe, 1999, in particular the relevant chapters thereof,

Recalling its resolution 54/62 of 1 December 1999,

1. Expresses concern at the special economic problems confronting the Eastern European States affected by the developments in the Balkans, in particular their impact on regional trade and economic relations and on navigation along the Danube and on the Adriatic Sea;

2. Welcomes the support already provided by the international community, in particular by the European Union and other donors, to the affected States to assist them in coping with their special economic problems during the transition period following the lifting of the sanctions pursuant to Security Council resolution 1074(1996) of 1 October 1996, as well as in the process of economic adjustment following the developments in the Balkans;

3. Stresses the importance of the effective implementation of the Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe, the objective of which is to strengthen countries in South-Eastern Europe in their efforts to foster peace, democracy, respect for human rights and economic prosperity, in order to achieve stability in the whole region, and of its follow-up activities aimed, inter alia, at economic reconstruction, development and cooperation, including economic cooperation in the region and between the region and the rest of Europe;

4. Invites all States and the relevant international organizations, both within and outside the United Nations system, in particular the international financial institutions, to continue to take into account the special needs and situations of the affected States in providing support and assistance to their efforts for economic recovery, structural adjustment and development;

5. Encourages the affected States of the region to continue the process of multilateral regional cooperation in such fields as transport and infrastructure development, including the resumption of navigation on the Danube, as well as to foster conditions favourable to trade and investment in all the countries of the region;

6. Invites the relevant international organizations to take appropriate steps, consistent with the principle of efficient and effective procurement and with resolution 54/14 of 29 October 1999 on procurement reform, in order to broaden access for interested local and regional vendors and to facilitate their participation in the efforts for reconstruction, recovery and development of the region;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Disaster relief

In 1999, the world witnessed natural disasters of unprecedented devastation, causing extraordinary human and financial losses. Floods were the most frequent natural disasters, affecting hundreds of thousands of people in the Gambia, Ghana, the Sudan and Togo and some 100 million people in China. In December, unprecedented floods and mud slides hit Venezuela, killing about 30,000 people and affecting hundreds of thousands: it was Latin America's worst disaster of the century. The combined destructive forces of gale winds and high seas of the cyclone in Orissa, India, killed 9,500 people and affected 12.6 million others. Major earthquakes were also recorded. Afghanistan suffered a strong earthquake at the beginning of the year and Turkey was hit in August and November by two devastating events causing the death of 18,000 people and affecting more than 600,000. Between those two events, a severe earthquake hit Greece. In September, 2,300 people lost their lives in Taiwan after a strong earthquake hit the island.

In most cases, national efforts were complemented by assistance from the international community. During the year, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), through its Disaster Response Branch (DRB), responded to 75 natural disasters, helped to mobilize more than $200 million in contributions from the international community for disaster-affected countries and led the international response to the earthquakes in Turkey. In coordination with key regional players, DRB supported 12 United Nations Disaster Assessment and Coordination (UNDAC) missions and participated in UNDAC training in Asia and the Pacific, Latin America and Europe. It made emergency cash grants for a total of $765,000 to Governments of disaster-stricken countries so that they could meet the most pressing needs of the affected populations, and channelled $7 million in voluntary cash and in-kind contributions from donors. OCHA maintained a permanent stock of donated disaster relief items at its warehouse in Pisa, Italy. Between January and August, it shipped some 2,624 tons of relief goods to 20 countries.

International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/185 [YUN 1998, p. 873], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/54/132-E/1999/80] on the activities of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (IDNDR) (1990-2000), proclaimed by the Assembly in resolution 44/236 [YUN 1989, p. 355]. The activities focused on the implementation of the 1998-1999 action plan, presented to the Scientific and Technical Committee of IDNDR in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 926].

The report discussed the outcome of the 1994 World Conference on Natural Disaster Reduction [YUN 1994, p. 851], the substantive platform for the mid-term review of the Decade, and natural disaster reduction activities and UN reform. It summarized the Decade's achievements in the areas of advocacy, policy development and coordination, and described selected activities at the regional level, as well as those carried out by UN agencies. A two-tiered closing event for the Decade consisted of the legislative platform provided by the 1999 substantive session of the Economic and Social Council and the IDNDR programme forum (Geneva, 5-9 July). Within the forum, all partners of the IDNDR Framework had exchanged information on 10 years of achievements, as well as emerging trends and challenges for the future. They also exchanged views on how best to tackle those challenges through a concerted programme of action towards a safer world in the twenty-first century.

The report contained a summary of the results of the various thematic sessions organized within the IDNDR programme forum, which reflected the conclusions emanating from the implementation of the Decade's 10-year programme of disaster reduction. The thematic topics emphasized poverty reduction, mega-cities and urban areas, community-based actions, public awareness, improvements in warning systems, communications technology, education and training for disaster reduction, partnerships involving public and private organizations, integrating risk management into developmental and environmental planning, health consequences of natural disasters, climate variability, environmental protection, research, land-use planning, modifications to building codes and practices, ensuring reliable data on losses, and the international and regional framework provided by IDNDR. The final declaration adopted by the IDNDR programme forum focused on guaranteeing a safer world for future generations, with the 1994 Yokohama Strategy [YUN 1994, p. 851] and the strategy "A safer world in the twenty-first century: risk and disaster reduction" (1999) charting the course.

The Scientific and Technical Committee of IDNDR, at its eleventh meeting (Canberra, Australia, 15-19 February) [A/54/132/Add.1-E/1999/80/Add.1], assessed progress made during the Decade and outlined the major challenges for the twenty-first century. The Committee observed that mitigation and prevention practices were achieving a priority approaching that previously reserved for contingent emergency management activities associated with relief and recovery during the acute phase of individual disasters. There was a need to ensure UN inter-agency coordination, possibly through an intergovernmental panel or commission.

IDNDR successor arrangements

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/185, the Secretary-General, in June [A/54/136-E/1999/89], discussed an IDNDR secretariat proposal for future arrangements following the closure of the Decade. It proposed the establishment, on 1 January 2000, of an inter-agency secretariat for disaster reduction, composed of an international team of experts and funded by voluntary contributions from Member States and other sources. The secretariat recognized the need for an inter-agency task force for natural disaster reduction, composed of representatives from within and outside the UN system, to provide a platform for the realization of disaster reduction in a concerted manner. Its main functions would be to: serve as the main forum within the UN system for devising strategies and policies for the reduction of natural hazards; identify gaps in disaster reduction policies and programmes and recommend remedial action; ensure complementarity of action by agencies; provide policy guidance to the secretariat; and convene ad hoc expert meetings.

ACC action. At its first regular session (Geneva, 9-10 April) [ACC/1999/4], ACC underlined the importance of an inter-agency approach to the follow-up to IDNDR. It noted that the United Nations would prepare a proposal which would be the subject of consultations with agencies concerned prior to its submission to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July [meeting 46], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1999/63 [draft: E/1999/L.44] without vote [agenda item 13 (h)].

International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction: successor arrangements

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1995/47 B of 27 July 1995 and General Assembly resolutions 44/236 of 22 December 1989 and 49/22 A of 2 December 1994 on the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, as well as Assembly resolutions 49/22 B of 20 December 1994 on early warning capacities of the United Nations system with regard to natural disasters, 52/12 A of 12 November 1997 and 52/12 B of 19 December 1997 entitled "Renewing the United Nations: a programme for reform" and 53/185 of 15 December 1998 on international cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon,

Recalling also the programme forum on the Decade, held at Geneva from 5 to 9 July 1999, and the Geneva mandate on disaster reduction adopted by the forum, together with the strategy document entitled "A safer world in the twenty-first century: risk and disaster reduction",

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General concerning the activities of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction and on the recommendations on institutional arrangements for disaster reduction activities of the United Nations system after the conclusion of the Decade,

Expressing concern that the world is increasingly being threatened by large-scale natural disasters which will have long-term negative social, economic and environmental consequences for vulnerable societies worldwide, in particular in developing countries,

Reiterating that the promotion of economic growth and sustainable development cannot be achieved without adequate measures to prevent and reduce the impact of natural disasters and that there are close linkages between losses owing to natural disasters and environmental degradation, as emphasized in Agenda 21 and in the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, adopted by the General Assembly at its nineteenth special session,

Emphasizing the multisectoral, interdisciplinary and cross-cutting nature of natural disaster reduction, and stressing that continued interaction, cooperation and partnerships among the institutions concerned are considered essential to accomplish jointly agreed objectives and priorities,

Recognizing the necessity for the international community to demonstrate the strong political determination required to use existing scientific and technical knowledge to reduce vulnerability to natural disasters and environmental hazards, bearing in mind the particular needs of developing countries,

Reiterating in that regard that natural disasters damage the social and economic infrastructure of all countries, although the long-term consequences of natural disasters are especially severe for developing countries, including the least developed countries, and landlocked and small island developing States, as well as for countries with economies in transition, thus hampering their sustainable development processes,

Stressing the importance of developing and strengthening regional approaches dedicated to disaster reduction in order to take into account regional and local specificity and needs,

Stressing also that the United Nations has a special role as well as considerable experience in the disaster prevention and reduction fields, in view of its universal character, its broad policy agenda and its vital role as a forum for global dialogue,

Recalling the forward-looking platform for international concerted disaster reduction as developed by the World Conference on Natural Disaster Reduction, held at Yokohama, Japan, from 23 to 27 May 1994, and as expressed in the Yokohama Strategy for a Safer World: Guidelines for Natural Disaster Prevention, Preparedness and Mitigation and its Plan of Action,

Recognizing the importance of early warning as an integrated process at all levels, including hazard monitoring and impact prediction, technology development and transfer, capacity-building for the detection of hazards, as well as the issuance and communication of early warnings, education and professional training, public information and awareness-raising, and interface between the public and private sectors in order to ensure adequate action to warnings,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the reports of the Secretary-General concerning the activities of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction and on the recommendations on institutional arrangements for disaster reduction activities of the United Nations system after the conclusion of the Decade;

2. Recognizes the success achieved since 1990 in meeting the goals and objectives of the Decade, as expressed in General Assembly resolution 44/236 and in the Yokohama Strategy for a Safer World: Guidelines for Natural Disaster Prevention, Preparedness and Mitigation and its Plan of Action;

3. Also recognizes the increased emphasis being given to natural disaster prevention and the need for taking comprehensive measures with regard to natural disaster reduction as an integral part of sustainable development strategies and an essential element of government policy;

4. Reiterates the importance of fully integrating natural disaster reduction into the sustainable development strategies of the United Nations and of other international organizations;

5. Decides, therefore, that the international cooperative framework for natural disaster reduction, as recommended in the report of the Secretary-General, should draw on the success of the functional and organizational arrangements that were put in place for the implementation of the Decade;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to establish, as of January 2000, an inter-agency task force, with representation from all relevant United Nations bodies and members of the scientific and technical community, including regional representation, to serve as the main forum within the United Nations for continued and concerted emphasis on natural disaster reduction, in particular for defining strategies for international cooperation at all levels in this field, while ensuring complementarity of action with other agencies;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General, in this respect, to maintain the existing inter-agency secretariat function for natural disaster reduction as a distinct focal point for the coordination of the work of the inter-agency task force, to place the inter-agency task force and inter-agency secretariat under the direct authority of the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and to finance it from extrabudgetary resources through a specific trust fund;

8. Calls upon all Governments to maintain and strengthen established national and multisectoral platforms for natural disaster reduction in order to achieve sustainable development goals and objectives, with the full utilization of scientific and technical means;

9. Emphasizes, in this respect, the need for the international community to support appropriate initiatives and mechanisms for strengthening regional, sub-regional, national and local capabilities for natural disaster prevention and reduction, making early warning a key element within these efforts;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution, under the item entitled "Environment and sustainable development".

Report of Secretary-General. In response to the Council's resolution, the Secretary-General, in a November report [A/54/497], presented the international strategy for disaster reduction (ISDR), which would serve as a framework for UN system activities. He described the organizational measures to be taken to implement the Council's resolution, including the establishment of an inter-agency task force and a secretariat. ISDR, which would succeed the programme for the Decade, was contained in the document entitled "A safer world for the twenty-first century: risk and disaster reduction", adopted at the programme forum for the Decade held in July (see p. 859). Its main objectives were to enable communities to become resilient to the effects of natural, technological and environmental hazards, and to proceed from protection against hazards to the management of risk, by integrating risk prevention strategies into sustainable development activities. The strategy was structured around the goals of increasing public awareness of the risks to societies; obtaining commitments by public authorities to reduce risks; engaging public participation to create disaster-resistant communities; and reducing economic and social losses caused by disasters. The task force and secretariat, aimed at facilitating the implementation of the ISDR goals, would function under the authority of the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs from 1 January 2000. The provisions of Council resolution 1999/46 on international cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon (see p. 863) should be taken into account in the establishment of the task force. The successor arrangements for IDNDR should be flexible in the initial period and adapted as experience was gained. Therefore, they would be reviewed after one year in consultation with key stakeholders. The Secretary-General appealed to all Governments to increase their support to national, regional and international programmes and to establish a better balance between their expenditures on relief and those on prevention activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/54/588/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/219 without vote [agenda item 100 (b)].

International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction: successor arrangements

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/236 of 22 December 1989, 49/22 A of 2 December 1994, 49/22 B of 20 December 1994 and 53/185 of 15 December 1998, and taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/63 of 30 July 1999 on the successor arrangements for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction,

Recalling also the results of the programme forum on the International Decade, held at Geneva from 5 to 9 July 1999, and the Geneva mandate on disaster reduction adopted by the forum, together with the strategy document entitled "A safer world in the twenty-first century: risk and disaster reduction",

Recalling further the forward-looking platform for international concerted disaster reduction as developed by the World Conference on Natural Disaster Reduction and as expressed in the Yokohama Strategy for a Safer World: Guidelines for Natural Disaster Prevention, Preparedness and Mitigation and its Plan of Action,

Reiterating that natural disasters damage the social and economic infrastructure of all countries, although the long-term consequences of natural disasters are especially severe for developing countries and hamper their sustainable development,

Recognizing the need for the international community to demonstrate the firm political determination required to utilize scientific and technical knowledge to reduce vulnerability to natural disasters and environmental hazards, taking into account the particular needs of developing countries,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/63,

Noting the Declaration on Technical Cooperation for the Prevention and Relief of Natural Disasters, adopted by the Rio Group at its thirteenth summit meeting, held in Mexico on 28 and 29 May 1999, as well as the results of the first summit meeting of heads of State and Government of Latin America and the Caribbean and the European Union, held at Rio de Janeiro on 28 and 29 June 1999,^a

Taking into account the consideration of natural disasters contained in the report of the Third United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, held at Vienna from 19 to 30 July 1999,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the reports of the Secretary-General concerning the activities of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction and on the recommendations on institutional arrangements for disaster reduction activities of the United Nations system after the conclusion of the Decade;

2. Expresses deep concern at the increasing number and scale of natural disasters, which have resulted in massive losses of life and long-term negative social, economic and environmental consequences for vulnerable societies worldwide, in particular in developing countries;

3. Endorses the proposals put forward in the report of the Secretary-General to ensure the swift establishment of future arrangements for disaster reduction as well as functional continuity for the effective implementation of the international strategy for disaster reduction;

4. Also endorses the proposal of the Secretary-General to establish an inter-agency task force and inter-agency secretariat for disaster reduction, under the direct authority of the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs, in a flexible manner, for the initial period of the biennium 2000-2001, and to undertake a review of these arrangements after the first year of operations with a view to submitting proposals on adjustments;

5. Decides to maintain the observance of the International Day for Natural Disaster Reduction on the second Wednesday of October;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to establish, from voluntary contributions, a trust fund for disaster reduction to enable the funding of the inter-agency secretariat for disaster reduction and to transfer all assets of the Trust Fund for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction to the new trust fund for disaster reduction, effective 1 January 2000;

7. Calls upon Governments to continue to cooperate and coordinate their efforts with the Secretary-General and the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs, the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations and other partners, as appropriate, to implement and to develop further a comprehensive strategy to maximize international co-operation in the field of natural disasters, based upon an effective division of labour, from prevention to early warning, response, mitigation, rehabilitation and reconstruction, including through capacity-building at all levels, and the development and strengthening of global and regional approaches that take into account regional, subregional, national and local circumstances and needs, as well as the need to strengthen co-ordination of national emergency response agencies in natural disasters;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to solicit the required inputs from Governments, the relevant organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations in order to optimize further and disseminate listings of organizations of the United Nations system as well as non-governmental organizations that provide civil protection and emergency response at all levels, with updated inventories of available resources, to help during natural disasters;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to optimize further and disseminate through all available channels, including handbooks, the information necessary to guide the international community at large in the effective management of international cooperation in the fields of disaster prevention, early warning, response, mitigation, rehabilitation and reconstruction;

10. Emphasizes the urgent need to develop further and make use of the existing scientific and technical knowledge to reduce vulnerability to natural disasters, bearing in mind the particular needs of developing countries, and, in this regard, calls upon all countries to strengthen scientific research and training of experts in universities and specialized institutions and to promote the exchange of information;

11. Recognizes the importance of early warning as an essential element in the culture of prevention, and encourages renewed efforts at all levels to contribute to natural hazard monitoring and impact prediction, the development and transfer of technology, capacity-building for disaster preparedness, the detection of natural hazards and the issuance and communication of early warnings, as well as education and professional training, public information and awareness-raising activities, such as the International Conference on Early-Warning Systems for the Reduction of Natural Disasters, held at Potsdam, Germany, from 7 to 11 September 1998, to ensure adequate action warnings;

12. Reaffirms the need for strengthening an international framework for the improvement of early warning systems and disaster preparedness by developing an effective international mechanism for early warning, including the transfer of technology related to early warning to developing countries, under the auspices of the United Nations, as an integral part of future strategies and frameworks or any arrangements for natural disaster reduction;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on the implementation of the international strategy for disaster reduction, under the agenda item entitled "Environment and sustainable development".

El Niño

In response to General Assembly resolutions 52/200 [YUN 1997, p. 927] and 53/185 [YUN 1998, p. 873], the Secretary-General submitted a June report on international cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon [A/54/135-E/1999/88], a disruption of the ocean-atmosphere system in the tropical Pacific that had important consequences for weather and climate worldwide. He reported that international activity towards the reduction of El Niño-related natural disasters had intensified since the first Intergovernmental Meeting of Experts on El Niño held in 1998 in Guayaquil, Ecuador [YUN 1998, p. 873], and the Assembly decision in resolution 52/200 to intensify inter-agency collaboration. In accordance with its lead role on science and technology in the Inter-Agency Task Force on El Niño, the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) embarked on a feasibility study for an international centre for research on El Niño in Guayaquil. The proposed centre would promote and undertake research on the El Niño/Southern Oscillation (ENSO) phenomenon and mathematical modelling to permit downscaling of global climate predictions to regional and national scales; and provide outreach services to the community of users of ENSO data and predictions. A progress report on the feasibility study was annexed to the report. In parallel with the study, WMO acted as the executing agency for an Inter-American Development Bank-funded study on the prediction and amelioration of socio-economic impacts of ENSO in Latin America and the Caribbean.

El Niño concerns with regard to disaster reduction were discussed at various IDNDR conferences, including an IDNDR-Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific regional conference for Asia (Bangkok, Thailand, 13-17 February) and an IDNDR-United Nations Environment Programme conference for Africa (Nairobi, 18-21 May). A second intergovernmental meeting of experts, to be held in Lima, Peru, in September, would focus on institutional arrangements, the role of decision makers and the application of scientific and technological knowledge in prevention (see p. 863). As a further follow-up to the Guayaquil meeting, the Commission on Sustainable Development, in its segment on oceans and seas of its seventh session [E/1999/29], requested the Secretary-General to gather information on the impact of ENSO and provide it to the Task Force in order to contribute to the development of the strategy towards the assessment, prevention, mitigation and rehabilitation of the damage caused by ENSO.

The Secretary-General concluded that efforts should be made to intensify observations of climate oscillation systems in the three large ocean basins (Indian, Atlantic, Pacific) and to develop ENSO prediction skills, based on improved modelling. Underscoring the value of inter-agency collaboration among disaster reduction constituencies at the regional and national levels, both within and outside the UN system, he stressed that efforts should be made to ensure that action would continue after the conclusion of IDNDR at the end of 1999. In view of the global hazards posed by climate variability and extremes, including ENSO events, it was crucial that, within the framework of the successor arrangements for IDNDR proposed by the Secretary-General (see p. 859), the institutional connections between the Inter-Agency Committee on the Climate Agenda and the UN system-wide disaster prevention constituency were retained.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1999/46 [draft: E/1999/L.40] without vote [agenda item 13 (e)].

International cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 52/200 of 18 December 1997 and 53/185 of 15 December 1998,

Concerned about the extreme force and severe impact of the El Niño phenomenon during the period 1997-1998 and the subsequent La Nina episode in many regions of the world,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General concerning the implementation of the mandates contained in General Assembly resolution 53/185 and the report of the Commission on Sustainable Development on its seventh session,

Bearing in mind agreed conclusions 1999/1 of the Council adopted on 23 July 1999 at the humanitarian affairs segment of its substantive session of 1999,

Noting with appreciation the concerted international efforts made, in particular through the Inter-Agency Task Force on El Niño, in close cooperation with member agencies of the Inter-Agency Committee on the Climate Agenda, to reduce the impact of natural disasters related to the El Niño phenomenon through improved scientific understanding, close monitoring and the dissemination of timely forecasts to communities affected,

Recognizing the importance of regional and sub-regional cooperation for the development of effective measures to reduce the negative impacts caused by the El Niño and La Nina phenomena,

1. Welcomes the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General on international cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to assess the feasibility of establishing an international research centre on the El Niño phenomenon at Guayaquil, Ecuador;

3. Welcomes the recommendations, contained in the report of the Commission on Sustainable Development on its seventh session, concerning how to deal with the El Niño phenomenon;

4. Reiterates its coordination role of providing guidance to its functional commissions on the reduction of natural disasters within the overall context of sustainable development strategies;

5. Calls for strengthened interregional cooperation, in particular in the scientific and technical fields, inter alia, to consider existing interregional opportunities as identified at the Asia-Europe Foreign Ministers meeting, held in Berlin on 29 March 1999, and the first Summit of Heads of State and Government of Latin America and the Caribbean and the European Union, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, on 28 and 29 June 1999, and by the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation Forum;

6. Welcomes the outcome and conclusions of the first Intergovernmental Meeting of Experts on El Niño, held in Guayaquil from 9 to 13 November 1998, and the convening of a second Intergovernmental Meeting of Experts on El Niño, which will be held in Lima from 20 to 24 September 1999;

7. Calls for the continued and full implementation of General Assembly resolutions 52/200 and 53/185 as an integral function of the successor arrangements to be made following the conclusion of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General reported that, in September, the Inter-American Development Bank and WMO signed an agreement for a study on the prediction and amelioration of socio-economic impacts of ENSO in Latin American and Caribbean countries, which would begin in March 2000 and run for 18 months [A/55/99-E/2000/86].

Communication. On 4 November [A/C.2/54/7], Ecuador transmitted a study assessing the feasibility of establishing an international centre for research of the El Niño phenomenon in Guayaquil.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/54/588/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/220 without vote [agenda item 100 (b)].

International cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/200 of 18 December 1997 and 53/185 of 15 December 1998 on international cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon, and taking note of Economic and Social Council resolutions 1999/46 of 28 July 1999, on the same subject, and 1999/63 of 30 July 1999 on the successor arrangements for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction,

Recalling also paragraph 20 of the report of the Secretary-General on successor arrangements for the Decade,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on international cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon and the report of the Commission on Sustainable Development on its seventh session,

Having also considered the report on the conclusions and recommendations of the first Intergovernmental Meeting of Experts on El Niño, held at Guayaquil, Ecuador, from 9 to 13 November 1998, and the feasibility study for the establishment of an international research centre on the El Niño/Southern Oscillation,

Reaffirming the importance of developing strategies at the national, subregional, regional and international levels that aim to prevent, mitigate and rehabilitate the damage caused by natural disasters resulting from the El Niño phenomenon,

Taking into account the considerations in relation to the use of tele-observation systems on weather forecast and climate contained in the report of the Third United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, held at Vienna from 19 to 30 July 1999,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General, and endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained therein;

2. Welcomes the 1999 retrospective report on the El Niño/Southern Oscillation prepared by the World Meteorological Organization;

3. Reiterates its invitation to Member States in paragraphs 8 and 9 of resolution 52/200 in relation to the technical and financial assistance needed to strengthen the national capacity of developing countries to support observation and research systems at the global and regional levels to prevent, mitigate and repair the damage caused by the El Niño/Southern Oscillation;

4. Welcomes the recommendations of the Commission on Sustainable Development at its seventh session regarding the approach that the United Nations system and the international community should take in dealing with the El Niño/Southern Oscillation, and reiterates its invitation to Member States to cover the impact of the El Niño/Southern Oscillation in their annual national reports;

5. Calls upon the Secretary-General, the relevant United Nations organizations and the international community to take the necessary measures, as appropriate, to establish an international research centre on El Niño at Guayaquil, Ecuador, invites the international community to provide financial, technical and scientific assistance and cooperation for this purpose, and encourages the centre, once established, to strengthen its links with other relevant regional and global climate-study organizations and to focus on the practical application of information regarding El Niño in such areas as disaster preparedness, agriculture, health, tourism, water and energy;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to promote the full implementation of its resolutions 52/200 and 53/185 as an integral part of the agreed arrangements after the conclusion of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session, through the Commission on Sustainable Development at its eighth session and the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2000, a report on the implementation of the present resolution, under the agenda item entitled "Environment and sustainable development".

Disaster assistance

Asia

Democratic People's Republic of Korea

While food shortages and malnutrition in children persisted in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) in 1999, there had been improvements in the food situation since the peak of the crisis in 1996/97. However, agencies continued to report the presence of malnourished children, and the health situation remained fragile, affected by the decline in the economy, resource shortages, lack of drugs and medical supplies and a health care system in crisis. The humanitarian strategy focused on targeted food aid, improvements in health services and programmes to support water purification and improved sanitation. However, the absence of a peace accord on the Korean peninsula led to special security concerns resulting in restrictions on access and mobility of international humanitarian personnel in-country. In late July and early August, the DPRK was hit by typhoons Neil and Olga, which caused severe but localized damage along the south-west and south-east coastal areas, including damage to property and infrastructure and loss of life.

A UN consolidated inter-agency appeal covering January to December 1999, which sought $274.8 million, was revised to $292.1 million in July. As at 4 October, $186.4 million, or 51.5 per cent, was pledged or contributed.

In November, OCHA launched a UN consolidated inter-agency appeal for January to December 2000, which sought $331.7 million.

India

In October, the Indian State of Orissa, situated on the east coast, was hit by two violent cyclones, whose devastating combination resulted in physical destruction, flooding and saline inundation. About 10,000 people died during the cyclones, and those who survived were threatened with disease, epidemics and malnutrition. Fourteen of the State's 30 districts were devastated, agricultural land was destroyed and infrastructure was rendered inoperative.

The Government of India and the State Government of Orissa, the national Red Cross and NGOs implemented a massive relief operation. The UN system, bilateral donors and international NGOs supported the national response with relief and rehabilitation initiatives. The response of the in-country UN system was coordinated by the Resident Coordinator through the UN Disaster Management Team (UNDMT). An UNDAC team was dispatched by OCHA to strengthen UNDMT. A UN office consisting of staff from UNICEF, WFP, WHO and OCHA was set up to facilitate the delivery of assistance. Of the international assistance of $23 million (excluding in-kind contributions and services) reported to OCHA, UN assistance amounted to $ 15 million.

Viet Nam

Record floods devastated the central provinces of Viet Nam in early November and then four weeks later in early December. In the combined tragedy, 793 people were killed, 55,000 families were left homeless, and hundreds of thousands of others lost all their property and livestock.

On 9 November, the Vietnamese Ministry of Foreign Affairs issued an appeal for international assistance, which was disseminated by OCHA. Governments, international organizations and private enterprises responded rapidly and, by the time the December floods hit, the rescue and logistics system was working well. OCHA kept the international community informed, provided cash grants for immediate relief assistance and served as a channel for funds. Total international assistance reported to OCHA amounted to $7.6 million.

Europe

Greece

In Greece, an earthquake measuring 5.9 on the Richter scale hit the northern suburbs of Athens on 7 September. According to official figures, 138 people died, 74,053 houses were affected (homes for 209,842 people) and some 8,388 enterprises that had employed 28,116 people were completely or partially destroyed. OCHA closely monitored the situation in cooperation with the General Secretariat for Civil Protection of the Ministry of Interior and Decentralization.

On 17 September [A/54/357], Ukraine transmitted a statement of the participants attending the International Conference on "Baltic and Black Sea Cooperation: To the Integrated Europe of the 21st Century without Dividing Lines" (Yalta, 10-11 September), welcoming the humanitarian assistance provided to the victims of the earthquakes in Greece and Turkey (see below) and appealing for continued relief efforts.

Turkey

On 17 August, a major earthquake measuring 6.7 on the Richter scale hit north-western Turkey. The epicentre was located close to the city of Izmit on the Sea of Marmara. The earthquake, one of the most powerful in the last 20 years, was followed by a wave of aftershocks. On 13 and 20 September, earthquakes of magnitude 5.8 and 5.0 respectively hit the same region, and another major earthquake hit the country on 14 November. The casualties were close to 18,000 dead and 25,000 injured; over 43,500 housing units collapsed or were heavily damaged; and a fire broke out at the Tupras oil refinery, near Izmit, endangering the population.

As soon as the alert was received on 17 August, OCHA activated its Disaster Response System, including mobilization and deployment of the UNDAC team, dispatch of disaster management experts to support the UN Resident Coordinator in Ankara, activation of the International Search and Rescue Advisory Group and establishment of an On-Site Operations Coordination Centre. OCHA also coordinated information-sharing with relevant organizations. A team from the UN system in Turkey, including UNDP, UNICEF, UNFPA and FAO, conducted a needs assessment in the affected area and worked with the OCHA team. OCHA allocated a $50,000 cash grant for immediate relief needs and served as a channel for cash contributions. The international community, as at September, had provided humanitarian assistance totalling $60.7 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 November [meeting 60], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/30 [draft: A/54/L.17/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (a)].

Emergency response to disasters

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/236 of 22 December 1989 on the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction and agreed conclusions 1999/1 of the humanitarian affairs segment of the substantive session of 1999 of the Economic and Social Council,

Deeply regretting the great number of casualties and the unprecedented devastation caused by one of the most powerful earthquakes of the century, which struck the north-west region of Turkey on 17 August 1999,

Expressing its deep sorrow at the loss of lives and devastation caused by the earthquake on 7 September 1999 in the north of Athens,

Noting with appreciation the prompt response of Governments, international agencies and organizations, non-governmental organizations and individuals throughout the world in providing search and rescue and emergency relief assistance to the victims of the earthquake in Turkey,

Expressing its satisfaction for the timely assistance provided by Governments, international agencies and organizations, non-governmental organizations and individuals throughout the world to the search and rescue and relief efforts undertaken by Greece in the aftermath of the 7 September earthquake,

Welcoming the efforts of the Secretary-General as regards the urgent steps he has taken to mobilize humanitarian assistance and to coordinate activities of agencies of the United Nations system in the field for purposeful and unified assistance by the international community,

Deeply concerned about the fact that natural disasters in every corner of the globe continue to claim high numbers of casualties and cause immense material damage and that the frequency and magnitude of these catastrophes place an ever-increasing material and moral burden on nations,

Reiterating the importance of mounting prompt and effective rescue operations in the aftermath of such deadly calamities in the future, as evidenced by the exemplary response of the international community to the earthquakes in Turkey and Greece,

1. Expresses its solidarity with the Governments and the peoples of Greece and Turkey as they cope with the consequences of the disasters;

2. Expresses its appreciation to all States of the international community, international agencies and organizations and non-governmental organizations and individuals that are providing emergency relief to the affected areas;

3. Notes with satisfaction the decision taken by the Governments of Greece and Turkey to establish a joint standby disaster relief unit comprising contingents drawn from governmental and non-governmental organizations and agencies of both countries to reinforce and expand existing standby arrangements of the United Nations system with no financial implications to the programme budget of the United Nations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, through the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, to formulate the modalities for the utilization of the standby disaster relief unit by the relevant agencies of the United Nations system;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Latin America and the Caribbean

Colombia

On 25 January, an earthquake measuring 6.0 on the Richter scale struck central Colombia. More than 30 aftershocks occurred. The Government declared a state of emergency in the Quindío, Risaralda and Valle del Cauca departments; 20 municipalities were considered disaster zones. Some 425,000 people were affected and 45,000 houses were destroyed or damaged.

On 29 January, an UNDAC team was deployed by OCHA to Colombia. The team supported the UN Resident Coordinator, UNDMT and the national authorities in assessing needs and coordinating relief activities. Contributions from the international community amounted to over $32 million.

Hurricane Georges

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/1 B [YUN 1998, p. 875], the Secretary-General, in September [A/54/129/Rev.1-E/1999/73/Rev.1], reported on progress made in the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts of Antigua and Barbuda, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Haiti and Saint Kitts and Nevis following hurricane Georges in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 875].

The Secretary-General stated that, together with UN resident coordinators and disaster management teams, the Emergency Relief Coordinator/OCHA issued situation reports to highlight unmet emergency requirements in order to mobilize international assistance and sum up international response; channelled contributions for relief and immediate rehabilitation; deployed UNDAC teams to assist the resident coordinators in the Dominican Republic and Haiti; and facilitated shipments of emergency relief supplies to some of the affected countries. The resident coordinator played a key role in coordinating the international assistance and in designing the rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes. In many cases, UNDP and the country team heightened the importance of disaster preparedness, prevention and mitigation. OCHA mobilized $100,000 for relief and immediate rehabilitation. In addition, UNDP provided $100,000 for emergency response coordination for Saint Kitts and Nevis and $50,000 for Antigua and Barbuda for emergency response coordination through the Caribbean Disaster Emergency Response Agency.

In the Dominican Republic, where economic damage was estimated at $2.2 billion, the objective of the UNDP/UN programme was to support the Government in the implementation of a transition process from the initial emergency situation towards integrated and sustainable development. Programme activities, initially focused on direct emergency relief to refugees and the provision of equipment to the central governmental institutions, were subsequently directed at the rehabilitation process, emergency preparedness, housing reconstruction and access to safe water, the beneficiaries of which totalled 110,000 persons. In February, a national seminar was organized and co-financed by the programme to prepare an integrated national evaluation report of hurricane Georges, which was released within the framework of a regional seminar on disaster preparedness and mitigation in the Americas (Santo Domingo, 16-19 February).

In Haiti, where high population density, subsistence living standards, widespread soil erosion and lack of disaster management magnified the hurricane's impact, the office of the Resident Coordinator played an important coordination role during the emergency and rehabilitation phases. In order to strengthen national capacities in disaster preparedness, mitigation and management, UNDP and WHO/Pan American Health Organization launched longer-term capacity-building programmes.

Regarding Cuba, an information meeting for member States and UN system organizations was co-chaired by OCHA and UNDP (Geneva, 26 February) to update the emergency situation and the appeal. Some $15 million of the $87 million of required support identified in the consolidated appeal was mobilized. About $13 million was used for emergency supplies, and the remaining $2 million was allocated to recovery and rehabilitation programmes.

Hurricanes Jose and Lenny

In October and November, several small island developing States and territories of the eastern Caribbean were struck by hurricanes Jose and Lenny, at a time when several of the countries were still rebuilding from previous hurricane strikes. Hurricane Jose moved over the northern Leeward Islands on 20 October with wind speeds of between 90 and 100 miles per hour, striking the island of Antigua, followed by milder impacts on Barbuda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Anguilla, Dominica, Montserrat and the British Virgin Islands. The storm lost strength on 21 October. In Antigua and Barbuda, more than 500 persons were forced to seek shelter, with 2,000 severely affected, and major roads were flooded. Flooding also affected Saint Kitts and Nevis. Hurricane Lenny moved towards the northern Leeward Islands on 14 November with winds of 100 miles per hour, disrupting life in Antigua and Barbuda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Dominica, Saint Lucia, Grenada, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines and Saint Martin; other islands affected were Anguilla and Montserrat. It was downgraded to a tropical depression on 20 November, as it moved away from the Caribbean, leaving limited loss of life but extensive damage. In each case, damage was largely economic, affecting tourism infrastructure, electricity and telephones.

A rapid needs assessment team was deployed to Anguilla, Antigua and Barbuda, Dominica, Grenada, Saint Kitts and Nevis and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines on 21 and 22 November, following hurricane Lenny. However, the ability to carry out initial damage assessments was made difficult owing to the heavy toll on physical infrastructure, in particular roads, ports and bridges. Disaster planning and mitigation had been singled out as a particularly critical aspect of the UNDP strategy for the Caribbean subregion, and it would work closely with multilateral agencies, bilateral donors and the Governments of the region.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 80], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/96 I [draft: A/54/L.69 & Add.1] Without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Emergency assistance to countries affected by hurricanes Jose and Lenny

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/1 B of 5 October 1998 and other relevant resolutions under the agenda item entitled "Strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations",

Deeply distressed at the damage caused by hurricanes Jose and Lenny and the grave effects on the people, infrastructure and productive sectors of the economies of Anguilla, Antigua and Barbuda, the Bahamas, Grenada, the Netherlands Antilles, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines and several other countries and territories of the region,

Deeply concerned at the frequency and unpredictability in the recurrence of these natural disasters, which seriously undermine the capacity of these countries to achieve sustained development,

Also concerned that hurricanes and other natural disasters exacerbate the effect of sea level rise, loss of biodiversity and the destruction of land resources and marine and coastal zones,

Mindful of the vulnerability of the natural environment and infrastructure of these countries to the effects of these disasters and the new challenges which they present to the efforts of the affected countries and territories to preserve their economic viability and insurability,

Conscious of the efforts of the Governments and the peoples of Anguilla, Antigua and Barbuda, the Bahamas, Grenada, the Netherlands Antilles, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines and several other countries and territories of the region to restore infrastructure and rehabilitate productive sectors, particularly agriculture and tourism,

Also conscious of the efforts of the Governments and the peoples of the affected countries and territories of the region to save lives and alleviate the sufferings of the victims of the hurricanes,

Noting the enormous effort that will be required to rebuild the affected areas and to alleviate the grave situation caused by these natural disasters,

Recognizing that the magnitude of the disasters and the medium-term and long-term effects will require, as a complement to the efforts being made by the peoples and the Governments of the affected countries, a demonstration of international solidarity and humanitarian concern to ensure broad multilateral cooperation in order to meet the immediate emergency situation in the affected areas and to initiate the process of reconstruction and rehabilitation,

1. Notes the efforts of the Governments of Anguilla, Antigua and Barbuda, the Bahamas, Grenada, the Netherlands Antilles, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines and several other countries and territories of the region;

2. Expresses its appreciation to all States of the international community, international agencies and non-governmental organizations that are providing emergency relief to the affected countries;

3. Urges all States of the international community, as a matter of urgency, to contribute generously to the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts in the affected countries and to provide financing for the national and regional relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts being undertaken by the affected countries;

4. Urges the bodies and agencies of the United Nations system and the international financial institutions to assist Governments in their rehabilitation and redevelopment efforts, taking into account their vulnerability to natural disasters;

5. Calls upon the relevant organizations and agencies of the United Nations system and other multilateral organizations to assist in the strengthening of national and regional capacity for disaster preparedness, planning, mitigation and reconstruction, including early warning systems;

6. Calls upon the relevant agencies and bodies of the United Nations system as well as regional bodies to assist the States and territories of the Caribbean region in convening, when possible, a workshop for building national and regional capacity in disaster preparedness and disaster management;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to it at its fifty-fifth session, under the agenda item entitled "Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance", on the collaborative effort referred to in the present resolution, and on the progress made in the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts of the affected countries;

8. Also requests that the Secretary-General include in his report to the General Assembly information on the linkages between implementation of the present resolution and implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States and the outcome of the twenty-second special session of the General Assembly on the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action.

Hurricane Mitch

In response to Assembly resolution 53/1 C [YUN 1998, p. 877], the Secretary-General, in September, reported on efforts to assist Belize, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama, affected by hurricane Mitch, which struck in 1998 [ibid., p. 876], and progress made with regard to relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction [A/54/130/Rev.1-E/1999/72/Rev.1]. He stated that hurricane Mitch had aggravated pre-existing social conditions and showed how little progress had been made in factoring disaster risk considerations into development in Central America. It affected most of the population of Honduras and Nicaragua, large tracts of El Salvador and Guatemala, and to a lesser extent Belize and Costa Rica. Damage in the four most affected countries reached over $5 billion. Honduras demonstrated an unparalleled degree of damage that constituted a threat to its economic viability. Damage was concentrated in the infrastructure sector in Nicaragua and in the agricultural sector in El Salvador and Guatemala. ECLAC assessment missions were mobilized immediately after the hurricane. The UN system took advantage of its field presence and available stocks of medicines, food and materials. The availability of WFP food stocks ensured immediate food delivery. OCHA organized missions to El Salvador, Honduras and Nicaragua, while locally based assessment coordination experts supported the management team in Guatemala. As at September, response to the December 1998 consolidated appeal for relief and rehabilitation, which had requested $153 million [YUN 1998, p. 877], stood at 64 percent. The UN system supported rehabilitation efforts while focusing on the root causes of the disaster. The Secretary-General stressed the need to ensure that disaster reduction was mainstreamed into rehabilitation and reconstruction activities; to improve accessibility to early warning information; to develop multisectoral legislative and administrative systems; to ensure that information on disaster risks was available to decision makers; and to strengthen regional cooperation and increase investment in human resource development.

In a later report [A/55/125-E/2000/91], the Secretary-General provided information on specific assistance to Nicaragua. He stated that hurricane Mitch had killed more than 3,000 people, affected 800,000, and swept crops away and destroyed infrastructure, with the total destruction amounting to $1.5 billion. The work of the UN system had focused on the basic needs of the population. Several meetings were held with the donor community to coordinate assistance; the UN Resident Coordinator promoted a meeting with NGOs and established a working group of emergency focal points of the UN disaster management team to strengthen coordination mechanisms during the emergency. Under the coordination of an inter-agency working group, the coordinator and the team prepared a transitional appeal for relief and immediate rehabilitation to cover needs during the period December 1998–May 1999. In a consultative group meeting for the reconstruction and transformation of Central America (Stockholm, Sweden, 25–28 May), Nicaragua presented a five-year plan, defining needs of $2.5 billion and focusing on the social sectors, infrastructure, rural development and governance.

Venezuela

Weeks of torrential rains in Venezuela reached a record level on 15 and 16 December, causing landslides and severe flooding in the northern states that washed away thousands of homes and devastated coastal regions. Over 270,000 persons were affected, 200,000 of whom were in Vargas State, 64,500 houses were damaged and 24,500 destroyed. An in-country UNDAC team was deployed at the onset of the disaster to assist the UN Resident Coordinator, UNDMT and the national authorities. From December 1999 to March 2000, OCHA's Regional Disaster Response Advisor would carry out four missions to Caracas to support the Resident Coordinator and UNDMT in coordinating disaster response and facilitating the transition from relief to rehabilitation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/96 K [draft: A/54/L.76 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Assistance to Venezuela following the devastating floods and landslides

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned at the loss of human lives and the unprecedented destruction of property and infrastructure caused in recent days by the worst floods and landslides Venezuela has ever suffered,

Recognizing that natural disasters constitute a major problem for development whose solution requires considerable resources and calls for efforts at the national level to be supplemented by international financial and technical assistance,

Recognizing also the large-scale relief and emergency assistance efforts being made by the Government and the people of Venezuela in order to alleviate the suffering of the disaster victims,

Aware that to mitigate and prevent the consequences of this disaster, international emergency assistance is required,

Taking note of the appeal by the Secretary-General to the international community for aid and assistance to Venezuela in dealing with the effects of the floods and landslides,

Taking note also of the appeal to the international community by the Government of Venezuela to provide emergency humanitarian aid, and of the need for assistance in rehabilitation and reconstruction of the areas affected by the disastrous floods and landslides,

1. Expresses its solidarity, at this difficult time, with the Government and the people of Venezuela in their efforts to cope with the serious humanitarian and material consequences of the disaster;

2. Appeals to all Member States, the specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, as well as to international financing institutions and non-governmental organizations, to respond urgently and provide generous assistance to Venezuela in its relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts and programmes following the unprecedented calamity it has suffered;

3. Expresses its gratitude to the Member States, international organizations and non-governmental organizations and private individuals and groups that are with such great generosity providing assistance to the Government of Venezuela in the initial immediate relief work;

4. Expresses its deep gratitude to the Secretary-General for the urgent steps he has taken to mobilize emergency humanitarian assistance;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to make all necessary arrangements to continue mobilizing and coordinating humanitarian assistance from the specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system with a view to supporting the efforts of the Government of Venezuela.

Chernobyl aftermath

In an October report [A/54/449], submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 52/172 [YUN 1997, p. 931], the Secretary-General described the action undertaken in 1998–1999 by the UN system and other entities to mitigate the effects of the 1986 Chernobyl disaster [YUN 1986, p. 584]. The report provided an overview of the strategy and coordination activities, as well as the role of the UN Coordinator of International Cooperation on Chernobyl. It documented the difficulty of mobilizing resources to a disaster whose effects would span generations. Thirteen years after the catastrophe, Chernobyl remained a major environmental and humanitarian problem. The long-term consequences continued to call for international assistance, particularly regarding health effects, environmental problems, psychological impact on the population, and social and economic rehabilitation of the affected areas. Significant needs remained in the areas of health and environment in Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine, the three most affected countries. During the reporting period, the Coordinator defined a new strategy based on a better-prioritized assistance programme, increased local coordination and a more targeted approach to public information and resource mobilization.

The Coordinator carried out a mission to Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine in October 1998, when three high-priority projects were selected per country, using the criteria of acuteness of the problems, prospects for donor funding and support from the national authorities.

The nine projects, totalling $9.51 million, were the basis for the 1999 UN Appeal for International Cooperation on Chernobyl, which was circulated to the donor missions and embassies in Geneva, New York, Minsk, Moscow and Kiev in May. To coordinate the work of UN field offices, national authorities and donor representatives, the Chernobyl Coordinator promoted the establishment of UN country team core groups, supported by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, UNDP and OCHA. The office of the WHO International Thyroid Project in Minsk was also involved. Programmes and projects addressed problems in the key sectors of health, socio-psychological and environmental rehabilitation, economic recovery, nuclear safety and employment. However, limited financial support from the Chernobyl Trust Fund and the voluntary contributions to the Fund, which amounted to $600,000 during 1998-1999, did not allow the most critical needs to be addressed. Consequently, many were underfunded and lacked the resources to cope with the residual consequences of the accident.

In his concluding observations, the Secretary-General stated that the UN programmes aimed at addressing the human consequences of the disaster had been chronically underfunded for many reasons. The Chernobyl accident was difficult to classify since it was neither a traditional emergency nor a developmental issue. Subsequently, budgetary constraints were faced by some donor States as Chernobyl fell into a budgetary gap. Donors questioned whether health, environmental, social and economic hardship were the sole results of Chernobyl. Moreover, the many natural disasters and complex emergencies that had occurred over the past two years made it difficult for Chernobyl to remain perceived as a priority. The Group of Seven expected to complete the Chernobyl site rehabilitation in 2007. Member States, multilateral institutions and private donors were urged to support the highly prioritized projects presented in the 1999 Appeal for International Cooperation by contributing to the Chernobyl Trust Fund.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/97 [draft: A/54/L.22/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (c)].

Strengthening of international cooperation and coordination of efforts to study, mitigate and minimize the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster

The General Assembly,
Reaffirming its resolutions 45/190 of 21 December 1990, 46/150 of 18 December 1991, 47/165 of 18 December 1992, 48/206 of 21 December 1993, 50/134 of 20 December 1995 and 52/172 of 16 December 1997, and taking note of the decisions adopted by the organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system in the implementation of those resolutions,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolutions 1990/50 of 13 July 1990, 1991/51 of 26 July 1991 and 1992/38 of 30 July 1992 and Council decision 1993/232 of 22 July 1993,

Noting with appreciation the contribution made by States and by organizations of the United Nations system to the development of cooperation to mitigate and minimize the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster, and the activities of regional and other organizations, in particular the Commission of the European Communities, as well as bilateral activities and those of non-governmental organizations,

Welcoming the commitments made by Member States in the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 to intensify cooperation, inter alia, in the prevention and reduction of major technological and other disasters with an adverse impact on the environment and in disaster relief and post-disaster rehabilitation in order to enhance the capabilities of affected countries to cope with such situations, as well as commitments made in response to the appeal of the Secretary-General on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the Chernobyl nuclear power plant accident,

Conscious of the long-term nature of the consequences of the disaster at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant, which was a major technological catastrophe in terms of its scope and created humanitarian, environmental, social, economic and health consequences and problems of common concern, requiring for their solution wide and active international cooperation and coordination of efforts in this field at the international and national levels,

Stressing that the Governments of the affected countries have a primary role to play in facilitating efforts to mitigate the humanitarian consequences of the Chernobyl catastrophe, including the efforts of non-governmental organizations in providing humanitarian assistance,

Expressing profound concern about newly emerged signs of the effects on the lives and health of people, in particular children, in the affected areas of Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine, as well as in other countries affected by the Chernobyl disaster,

Taking into consideration the findings and outcome of the visit of the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs to the affected areas in Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine in October 1998,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General concerning the implementation of resolution 52/172,

Noting the readiness of Ukraine to close the Chernobyl nuclear power plant by 2000, in accordance with the memorandum of understanding between the Governments of the members of the Group of Seven and the Commission of the European Communities and the Government of Ukraine on the closure of the Chernobyl nuclear power plant, and bearing in mind the support already provided by a number of countries and international organizations for that purpose and the need for further support from relevant countries and international organizations,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts in the implementation of the relevant General Assembly resolutions and, through existing coordination mechanisms, in particular the United Nations Coordinator of International Cooperation on Chernobyl, to continue to maintain close cooperation with the agencies of the United Nations system, as well as with regional and other relevant organizations, with a view to encouraging the regular exchange of information, cooperation and coordination of multilateral and bilateral efforts in those areas, while implementing programmes and specific projects, inter alia, in the framework of relevant agreements and arrangements;

2. Invites States, in particular donor States, relevant multilateral financial institutions and other concerned parties of the international community, including non-governmental organizations, to continue to provide support to the ongoing efforts made by Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine to mitigate the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster and to pay special attention to the United Nations Appeal for International Cooperation on Chernobyl, launched in April 1999;

3. Emphasizes the importance of full cooperation and assistance by the authorities of the affected countries in facilitating the work of humanitarian organizations, including non-governmental organizations, to mitigate the humanitarian consequences of the Chernobyl catastrophe, notes the measures already taken by the Governments of the affected countries in this regard, and encourages them to take further measures to simplify their relevant internal procedures and to identify ways in which to make their systems of granting exemption from customs and other duties more effective with regard to goods provided free of charge as humanitarian assistance by humanitarian organizations, including non-governmental organizations;

4. Welcomes the efforts made by the United Nations, in cooperation with the Governments of Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine, to promote the Inter-Agency Programme of International Assistance to Areas Affected by the Chernobyl Disaster;

5. Welcomes also the convening by the United Nations of a number of special international meetings on Chernobyl to generate further support to the populations of Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine affected by the Chernobyl nuclear power plant disaster, and urges the international community and the Governments of the affected countries to continue to contribute towards the implementation of the projects specified in the above-mentioned inter-agency programme;

6. Expresses its appreciation for the contributions made to the shelter implementation plan aimed at securing the environmental safety of the sarcophagus covering the remains of the destroyed Chernobyl reactor, and urges further contributions to the plan;

7. Welcomes the decision of the heads of State and Government of the seven major industrial States and the European Union, adopted at Cologne, Germany, in June 1999, to help to ensure the continued financing and progress in work under the shelter implementation plan and, in this regard, welcomes the convening of the pledging conference in Germany in May 2000;

8. Takes note with satisfaction of the activities of the International Chernobyl Centre established in Ukraine, with the active participation of Belarus and the Russian Federation, as an important contribution towards enhancement of the capabilities of the international community to study, mitigate and minimize the consequences of such accidents, and invites all interested parties to take part in the activities of the Centre;

9. Urges the United Nations Coordinator of International Cooperation on Chernobyl to continue his efforts aimed at strengthening international cooperation to overcome the health, social, economic and ecological consequences of the Chernobyl disaster in the most affected areas of Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine, based on the Inter-Agency Programme of International Assistance to Areas Affected by the Chernobyl Disaster;

10. Calls upon the Secretary-General to continue the regular exchange of information with the countries concerned, relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, with a view to enhancing world public awareness of the consequences of such disasters;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session, under a separate sub-item, a report containing a comprehensive assessment of the implementation of the present resolution and proposals for innovative measures for optimizing the effectiveness of the response of the international community to the Chernobyl disaster.

Chapter IV

International trade, finance and transport

International trade grew very slowly in the first half of 1999, with significant declines in some regions as many economies, especially in Asia and Latin America but also among the economies in transition, continued their adjustment to the 1997 Asian crisis and its aftermath by cutting import demand. However, as the recovery strengthened and more economies began to move towards positive growth, trade began to rebound, rather strongly in the second half of the year.

The Trade and Development Report, 1999—produced by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD)—focused on the fragile recovery of the world economy and its downside risks, and on trade, external financing and economic growth in developing countries. The Trade and Development Board (TDB), UNCTAD's governing body, considered interdependence and global economic issues from a trade and development perspective, focusing on globalization and the global financial system. It stressed that the benefits of globalization were not shared equally, and that some countries were becoming increasingly marginalized.

With regard to developments in the multilateral trading system, the General Assembly, in December, emphasized the importance of the expansion of international trade and of continued trade liberalization. It recognized that the reduction or removal of tariff and non-tariff barriers should be a priority for multilateral trade negotiations, and stressed the need to ensure that anti-dumping and countervailing measures were subjected to multilateral surveillance and were not used for protectionist purposes. Also in December, the Assembly adopted the United Nations Guidelines for Consumer Protection, as expanded to include elements of sustainable consumption.

In action on financial issues, the Assembly stressed the importance of an enabling international environment through cooperative efforts by all countries and institutions to promote global economic development. Recognizing that equitable and development-oriented solutions to external debt and debt-service burdens of developing countries could strengthen the global economy, it encouraged the international creditor community to consider appropriate measures in the case of countries with a high level of debt overhang, and called for concerted national and international action to address debt problems of middle-income developing countries. With regard to financing for development, the Assembly decided to convene in 2001 a high-level intergovernmental event on the subject, at least at the ministerial level.

The International Trade Centre supported the national capacity of developing countries and transition economies to integrate into the global trading system; during the year, 98 countries benefited directly from its services.

In the area of transport, the International Convention on Arrest of Ships, 1999 was adopted by the United Nations/International Maritime Organization Diplomatic Conference in March.

Preparations for the tenth session of UNCTAD, to be held in February 2000, began with TDB's approval of the draft provisional agenda. The Conference, to be held in Bangkok, Thailand, was to have the unifying theme "Developmental strategies in an increasingly interdependent world: applying the lessons of the past to make globalization an effective instrument for the development of all countries and all people".

International trade

The Trade and Development Report, 1999 [Sales No. E.99.II.D.1] noted that in 1998 growth in the volume of world trade, which had begun to slow with the onset of the Asian crisis in mid-1997, decelerated abruptly, but trade performance differed widely among regions. While the developed world suffered little, and even derived some benefits from the crisis, virtually all developing countries and transition economies were affected. In the wake of the crisis, growth in the developing world slowed from almost 6 per cent in 1996 to under 2 per cent in 1998. The two largest developing countries, China and India, were the striking exceptions. Notably, both countries had resisted the temptation to pursue premature trade liberalization and rapid integration into the global financial system.

The situation in the developing countries had serious repercussions for international trade. The substantial swing in trade balances in the Asian countries through massive import cuts played an important role in the re-emergence of major trade imbalances in the world economy not experienced since the 1980s. It was also the main factor in the slowdown of world trade, which suffered in value terms its strongest decline since 1982, and in the dramatic and widespread fall in commodity prices.

A fall by one third in world oil prices was responsible for approximately 86 per cent of the overall decline in the value of world trade. Oil exporters as a whole lost more than 6 per cent of their gross national product (GNP) and non-oil developing countries also suffered terms-of-trade declines and income losses. At 12 per cent, the drop in non-oil commodity prices was unprecedented since the mid-1970s.

By contrast, industrial countries gained from the collapse in commodity prices and cheaper manufactured imports from countries that suffered currency devaluations.

The World Economic and Social Survey 1999 [Sales No. E.99.II.C.1], produced by the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA), observed that world trade grew by about 3.5 per cent in 1998, the smallest increase of the decade. The value of world trade in dollars fell, and the fact that commodity prices, particularly of oil, plunged during the year negatively affected the export earnings, and therefore the import demand, of many economies. Africa's exports declined by 15 per cent in nominal terms, while in Western Asia the value of merchandise exports shrank by about 25 per cent. The slowdown in the growth of world output, especially the contraction in South-East and East Asia, reduced the demand for imports to such an extent that the growth of world merchandise trade (in terms of export volume) was only 3.6 per cent. The setback was most pronounced for the developing countries, whose volume of trade decreased in 1998. Measured in dollars, the value of world exports of goods declined by 2.3 per cent and exports of services dropped by 2 per cent. The international crisis also changed the pattern of international trade flows, with imports of developing countries dropping by 10 per cent in value terms and 5 per cent in volume terms in 1998. In South-East and East Asia, total imports fell by more than 20 per cent in value and 13 per cent in volume; many economies in West Asia also registered a decline in imports as the drop in the oil price reduced their export revenues and capacity to import. Conversely, imports by the Latin America and the Caribbean region increased, although by substantially less than during the previous few years. Imports into Mexico and the Central American economies continued to grow strongly. Imports into Africa also grew, but at a slower rate. Except for Japan, which had a fall in import volume of 10 per cent, most developed economies maintained a strong import growth. Imports into North America grew by 10 per cent in volume and into Western Europe by 6 per cent. Economies in transition as a group maintained their 1997 import levels, but the situation varied within the group; the imports of Central and Eastern European economies grew by 10 per cent in volume, but the volume of imports into the Russian Federation and other Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) economies declined 15 per cent.

Export performance also differed across countries. In Latin America and the Caribbean, export volume grew by almost 8 per cent. However, the export growth of the Asian developing economies was almost zero. The collapse of regional markets and the recession in Japan resulted in a deceleration in the growth of Chinese exports to about 4 per cent in 1998, from 26 per cent in the previous year. A marked feature for developing economies was the decline in export revenues, largely because of the drop in commodity prices. The value of merchandise exports measured in dollars declined by 7 per cent. The worst-hit region was Western Asia, where it dropped by almost a quarter during the year. Africa also experienced a significant decline in export earnings.

Most developed economies registered moderate export growth. Western European exports grew by over 5 per cent, and although North American exports decelerated, they were expected to register a positive growth. Japan's export volume, however, shrank by 4 per cent. The export performance of economies in transition differed across two sub-groups. Central and Eastern European economies grew in both volume and value, while the value of exports of the CIS economies fell by about one sixth, even though their volume was almost unchanged.

In a joint report on the world economic situation and prospects issued at the end of 1999 by DESA and UNCTAD, it was observed that, although world trade had slackened in 1999, it embodied the beginnings of a recovery that was expected to become more visible in 2000. Over the course of 1999, prices of many commodities, especially oil and related energy products, either stabilized or started to recover. As the recovery process strengthened and more economies began to move towards positive growth, international trade began to rebound, rather strongly in the second half of 1999.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 53/170 [YUN 1998, p. 882], the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/54/304], prepared in collaboration with UNCTAD, on international trade and development. It discussed the implementation of the ministerial communique on market access adopted by the Economic and Social Council in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 881], developments in the multilateral trading system and elements of a positive trade agenda. Other issues discussed in the report that arose from resolution 53/170 included: coherence, complementarity and coordination of global economic policy-making; investment agreements; landlocked countries; small island developing States; and UNCTAD's contribution to the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s (see p. 847).

The report stated that peak tariffs barriers continued to have a substantial constraining effect on market access for both agricultural and industrial products from developing countries. In agriculture, tariffication of non-tariff barriers, under the agreement reached at the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, resulted in extremely high rates; developing countries' trade remained hampered by the massive domestic support and export subsidy programmes in developed countries, peak tariffs and difficulties in the implementation of the tariff quota system. In textiles and clothing, United States, European Union (EU) and Canadian industries continued to enjoy double protection from high tariffs and stringent quantitative restrictions on imports from developing countries. In other industrial sectors, relatively high most-favoured-nation peak tariffs were applied to major exporters of certain technologically advanced products and the major developing country exporters of those products were frequently excluded from Generalized System of Preferences schemes. Tariff escalation decreased, but nevertheless continued, after the Uruguay Round, affecting trade in sectors of export interest to developing countries, such as metals, textiles and clothing, leather, rubber and wood products and furniture.

With the entry into force in 1995 of the World Trade Organization (WTO) Agreement [YUN 1995, p. 1515], some non-tariff measures lost their importance, prompting domestic industries to seek other measures to protect domestic production, notably contingent protection measures, in particular anti-dumping duties. The majority of anti-dumping cases were directed against exporters from developing countries. Developing country exporters were also increasingly affected by scientific non-tariff measures (sanitary and phytosanitary measures). Countries required that domestically produced and imported goods conformed to regulations on quality, health and safety, and possibly adhered to standards. The number of technical regulations and standards was constantly increasing, with the risk that they might become new tools for disguised non-tariff protection. Despite considerable improvements achieved under the General Agreement on Trade in Services (GATS), one of the limitations to market access in services trade was the economic needs test, the discretionary nature of which left considerable uncertainty as to the level of market access commitment. Another area in which developing countries faced market access barriers in countries members of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) was related to the movement of business visitors, whereby delays or unreasonable criteria associated with the issuance of visas where no work permits or economic needs tests were required presented a barrier to the movement of business persons.

The Secretary-General stated that the removal of high tariff protection in industrial countries should be given priority and seen as an integral part of future liberalization measures and that duty-free access should be extended to all imports from the least developed countries (LDCs). In the area of trade in services, it was important to ensure that the GATS architecture remained intact; in most service sectors, the benefits from liberalization could only be derived by developing countries if accompanied by supportive capacity-building measures. Ways should be found to enable developing countries to participate more effectively in the formulation of international standards and gain access to mutual recognition agreements, as well as to meet sanitary and phytosanitary regulations.

With regard to developments in the multilateral trading system, the report stated that, despite the financial crisis, there were no major trade policy reversals in 1998 and the first part of 1999; protectionist tendencies gained strength, however, particularly in some major developed countries. The preparatory process pursued by WTO since September 1998 was aimed at defining the future work programme of the organization, which included further trade liberalization objectives and the preparation of recommendations to the third WTO Ministerial Conference (Seattle, United States, 30 November-3 December 1999) (see p. 1422).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/54/585/Add.3 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 54/198 without vote [agenda item 97 (c)].

International trade and development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 50/95 and 50/98 of 20 December 1995, 51/167 of 16 December 1996, 52/182 of 18 December 1997 and 53/170 of 15 December 1998, as well as relevant international agreements concerning trade, economic growth, development and interrelated issues,

Reaffirming also the outcome of the ninth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, held at Midrand, South Africa, which provides an important framework for promoting a partnership for growth and development,

Emphasizing that a favourable and conducive international economic and financial environment and a positive investment climate are necessary for the economic growth of the world economy, including the creation of employment, in particular for the growth and development of developing countries, and emphasizing also that each country is responsible for its own economic policies for sustainable development,

Noting the need for multilateral trade liberalization, and noting also that a large number of developing countries have assumed the rights and obligations of the World Trade Organization without being able to reap the full benefits of, and participate fully in, the multilateral trading system, and that there is a need for progress towards liberalization and enhanced market access, including in areas and products of particular interest to developing countries,

Noting also the importance of assisting developing countries in building their capacity to engage effectively in international trade,

Stressing that full and faithful implementation of the commitments and obligations in multilateral trade agreements is important to the equitable and sustainable development and stability of the world economy,

Strongly emphasizing the importance of providing all members of the World Trade Organization with the opportunity to engage fully and effectively in the process of multilateral trade negotiations and in other activities within the multilateral trading system, in order to facilitate the attainment of balanced results with respect to the interests of all members,

Taking note of the report of the Trade and Development Board on its forty-sixth session, and the report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of landlocked developing countries,

Noting, in the context of international trade and development, the ongoing work of the Commonwealth Secretariat/World Bank Joint Task Force on Small States,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Recognizes the importance of the expansion of international trade as an engine of growth and development and, in this context, the need for expeditious and complete integration of developing countries and countries with economies in transition into the international trading system, in full cognizance of the opportunities and challenges of globalization and liberalization and taking into account the circumstances of individual countries, in particular the trade interests and development needs of developing countries;

2. Renews its commitment to uphold and strengthen an open, rule-based, equitable, secure, non-discriminatory, transparent and predictable multilateral trade system, which contributes to the economic and social advancement of all countries and peoples by promoting the liberalization and expansion of trade, employment and stability and by providing a framework for the conduct of international trade relations;

3. Expresses concern at the declining terms of trade in primary commodities, in particular for net exporters of such commodities, as well as the lack of progress in many developing countries in diversification, and in this regard strongly emphasizes the need for actions at both the national and international levels, inter alia, through improved market access conditions and support for capacity-building;

4. Recognizes that the substantial improvement of market access for exports of goods and services from developing countries through, inter alia, the reduction or removal of tariff and non-tariff barriers should be a high priority for multilateral trade negotiations, and in this regard notes the needs and concerns of some countries with economies in transition;

5. Deplores any attempt to bypass or undermine multilaterally agreed procedures on the conduct of international trade by unilateral actions inconsistent with the multilateral trade rules and regulations, including those agreed upon in the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations;

6. Expresses concern about the proliferation of anti-dumping and countervailing measures, and stresses that they should not be used as protectionist measures;

7. Reaffirms the role of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development as the focal point within the United Nations for the integrated treatment of development and related issues in the areas of trade, finance, technology, investment and sustainable development;

8. Welcomes the progress made so far in the preparations for the tenth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to be held at Bangkok from 12 to 19 February 2000, by the Trade and Development Board and the host Government, considers that the tenth session of the Conference will provide, inter alia, an important opportunity for the United Nations system and the international community to engage in a collective reflection on development so as to reach a consensus on development strategies in an increasingly interdependent world by applying lessons of the past to making globalization an effective instrument for the development of all countries and all people, through which the international community should undertake a rigorous and balanced review of the policy and institutional framework for global trade and finance, and that, in this context, the Conference will provide member States with an opportunity to take stock of and review the major international economic initiatives and developments, in particular those that have taken place since the ninth session of the Conference, and urges the Conference to consider the strategies and policies that are most likely to ensure the successful integration of all countries concerned, particularly the developing countries, into the world economy on an equitable basis and to avoid the risk of further marginalization;

9. Reiterates the importance of continued trade liberalization in developed and developing countries, including in sectors of export interest to developing countries, through, inter alia:

(a) Substantial reductions of tariffs, the rolling back of tariff peaks and the removal of tariff escalation;

(b) The elimination of trade-distorting policies, protectionist practices and non-tariff barriers in international trade relations;

(c) Ensuring that resort to anti-dumping duties, countervailing duties, Phytosanitary regulations and technical standards is subjected to effective multilateral surveillance so that such measures respect and are consistent with multilateral rules and obligations and are not used for protectionist purposes;

(d) The improvement and renewal, by preference-giving countries, of their Generalized System of Preferences schemes with the objective of integrating developing countries, especially the least developed countries, into the international trading system and of finding ways and means to ensure more effective utilization of the Generalized System of Preferences schemes, and in this context reiterates its original principles, namely, non-discrimination, universality, burden-sharing and non-reciprocity;

10. Also reiterates that it is an ethical imperative for the international community to arrest and reverse the marginalization of the least developed countries and to promote their expeditious integration into the world economy and that all countries should work together towards further enhanced market access for exports from the least developed countries within the context of supporting their own efforts at capacity-building; welcomes the initiatives taken by the World Trade Organization in cooperation with other organizations in the implementation of the Plan of Action for the Least Developed Countries adopted at its first Ministerial Conference, held at Singapore from 9 to 13 December 1996, including through effective follow-up to the High-level Meeting on Integrated Initiatives for Least Developed Countries' Trade Development, held at Geneva on 27 and 28 October 1997, taking note of the proposals adopted by the Least Developed Countries' Coordinating Workshop held at Sun City, South Africa, from 21 to 25 June 1999; recognizes that the full implementation of the Plan of Action requires further and expeditious progress towards duty-free imports from the least developed countries; invites the relevant international organizations to provide the enhanced technical assistance required to help to strengthen the supply capacity of the least developed countries so as to help them to take the fullest possible advantage of trading opportunities arising from globalization and liberalization; and welcomes the holding of the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries at Brussels in 2001;

flict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa, and endorses the call, contained in the ministerial communique adopted by the Economic and Social Council on 8 July 1998, for continued efforts to enhance market access for products of export interest to African economies and support for their efforts at diversification and building of supply capacity, and in this context requests the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to continue to enhance its contribution to the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, taking into account the agreed conclusions of the Trade and Development Board on Africa;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the initiation by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in the areas falling within its mandate, of the preparatory process for the final review and appraisal of the implementation of the New Agenda to be held in 2002, in particular focusing on market access, diversification and supply capacity, resource flows and external debt, foreign direct and portfolio investment and access to technology, and in this context also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report, based on the recommendations of the Trade and Development Board on Africa, on measures taken in this regard, with a special emphasis on African trade issues, for the consideration of the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session under the agenda item entitled "International trade and development";

13. Stresses the need to give special attention, within the context of international cooperation on trade and development issues, to the implementation of the many international development commitments geared to meeting the special development needs and problems of small island developing States and of landlocked developing countries and to recognize that those developing countries that provide transit services need adequate support in maintaining and improving their transit infrastructure;

14. Endorses the relevant provisions adopted at the twenty-second special session of the General Assembly for the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, and in this context reiterates the need for the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to enhance its contribution to the implementation of the Programme of Action;

15. Reiterates the importance of the effective application by all members of the World Trade Organization of all provisions of the Final Act Embodying the Results of the Uruguay Round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations, taking into account the specific interests of developing countries so as to maximize economic growth and development benefits for all, and the need for the effective implementation of the special provisions in the multilateral trade agreements and related ministerial decisions in favour of developing countries, particularly making operational the previously agreed special and differential provisions, including the strengthening of these concepts, taking into account the changing realities of world trade and of globalization, and urges Governments and concerned international organizations to apply effectively the Ministerial Decisions on Measures in Favour of Least Developed Countries and on Measures Concerning the Possible

Negative Effects of the Reform Programme on Least Developed and Net Food-importing Developing Countries;

16. Recognizes that it is important that the momentum towards increased trade liberalization, particularly as regards areas and products of interest to developing countries, be maintained and that further liberalization be sufficiently broad-based to respond to the range of interests and concerns of all members, within the framework of the World Trade Organization, and in this regard welcomes the activities of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development aimed at assisting developing countries in developing a positive agenda for future multilateral trade negotiations, and invites the Conference to continue to provide analytical support and technical assistance, including capacity-building activities, to those countries for their effective participation in the negotiations;

17. Invites members of the international community to consider the interests of non-members of the World Trade Organization in the context of trade liberalization;

18. Invites the international financial institutions to ensure that, in their development cooperation activities with developing countries, the obligations of the latter with regard to their development policies, strategies and programmes in trade and trade-related areas are consistent with their commitments under the framework of rules agreed upon within the multilateral trading system;

19. Emphasizes the importance of the strengthening of, and the attainment of greater universality by, the international trading system and of accelerating the process directed towards accession to the World Trade Organization of developing countries and countries with economies in transition, and also emphasizes the necessity for Governments that are members of the World Trade Organization and relevant international organizations to assist non-members of the World Trade Organization so as to facilitate their efforts with respect to accession in an expeditious and transparent manner, on the basis of undertaking balanced World Trade Organization rights and obligations, and for the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the World Trade Organization to provide the technical assistance, within their mandates, that will contribute to the rapid and full integration of those countries into the multilateral trading system;

20. Stresses the need for improved measures to address the volatility of short-term capital flows as well as the effects of financial crisis on the international trading system and the development prospects of developing countries and the countries affected by such crisis, emphasizing that keeping all markets open and maintaining continued growth in world trade are key elements in overcoming such a crisis, and in this context rejects the use of any protectionist measures; at a broader level, there is a need for greater coherence between the development objectives agreed to by the international community and the functioning of the international trading and financial system, and in this context calls for close cooperation between the organizations of the United Nations system and the multilateral trade and financial institutions, with the participation of their secretariats and the States Members of the United Nations and observer States;

21. Requests the Secretary-General, in scheduling and organizing mandated events on trade and trade-related issues, to promote complementarity in the work of the relevant bodies of the United Nations system and with other international organizations, with the participation of their secretariats and the States Members of the United Nations and observer States, as appropriate, bearing in mind the mandate of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;

22. Recognizes the importance of open regional economic integration in the creation of new opportunities for expanding trade and investment, stresses the importance of those initiatives being in conformity with World Trade Organization rules, where applicable, and, bearing in mind the primacy of the multilateral trading system, affirms that regional trade agreements should be outward-oriented and supportive of the multilateral trading system, and in this context invites Governments and intergovernmental and multilateral institutions to continue to provide support to economic integration among developing countries as well as among countries with economies in transition;

23. Requests the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to continue to identify and analyse the implications for development of issues relevant to investment, as well as to identify ways and means to promote foreign direct and portfolio investment directed to all developing countries, taking into account their interests, in particular to those most in need, as well as to those countries with economies in transition with similar needs, and bearing in mind the work undertaken by other organizations, including the regional commissions;

24. Emphasizes that the dispute settlement mechanism of the World Trade Organization is a key element with regard to the integrity and credibility of the multilateral trading system and the full realization of the benefits anticipated from the conclusion of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations;

25. Strongly emphasizes the need for technical assistance, including legal assistance, to developing countries, through, inter alia, the newly established Advisory Centre on World Trade Organization Law and other mechanisms, to enable those countries to take the fullest possible advantage of the dispute settlement mechanism of the World Trade Organization, based on multilaterally agreed rules and regulations, and also in this context emphasizes that it is important for the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to strengthen its technical assistance to developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, landlocked developing countries and small island developing States in this area;

26. Notes the increasing importance and application of electronic commerce in international trade and the need to strengthen the capacities of developing countries to participate effectively in electronic commerce, and urges the organizations of the United Nations system, within their mandates and in cooperation with other relevant bodies, with the participation of their secretariats and the States Members of the United Nations and observer States, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the International Telecommunication Union, the International Trade Centre and the regional commissions, to continue to assist developing countries and countries with economies in transition, and, in this regard, emphasizes the need for analysis of the fiscal, legal and regulatory aspects of electronic commerce as well as its implications for the trade and development prospects of developing countries;

27. Stresses the importance of assisting developing countries and interested countries with economies in transition in improving the efficiency of trade-supporting services, inter alia, through the elimination of procedural barriers and by greater use of trade facilitating mechanisms, particularly in the areas of transport, customs, banking and insurance, and business information, especially in the case of small and medium-sized enterprises, and in this respect invites the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, within its mandate, in collaboration with other relevant bodies of the United Nations, including the regional commissions, to continue to assist these countries in these areas;

28. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to provide, in collaboration with other relevant bodies, substantive input on the role of information and communications technology in trade, finance, investment and related areas to the Economic and Social Council at the high-level segment of its substantive session of 2000;

29. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in collaboration with the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution and the developments in the multilateral trading system.

Trade policy

Trade in goods and services, and commodities

The Commission on Trade in Goods and Services, and Commodities held its fourth session in Geneva from 11 to 14 October [TD/B/46/14].

Commodities. The Commission had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report [TD/B/COM.1/27 & Add.1] on the world commodity economy: recent evolution, financial crises and changing market structures. The report provided an overview of the evolution of world commodity trade since the 1970s, emphasizing the loss of market shares by developing countries, in particular African countries and LDCs; presented information on the declining trends and current collapse of commodity prices, making reference to increasing productivity in both agriculture and metals and minerals; analysed the implications of recent crises on the supply of and demand for commodities, focusing particularly on the impact of devaluations and the links between financial and commodity markets; and reviewed the changes in distribution and market structures, emphasizing the twin trends of concentration in global markets and liberalization in producing countries, and examined the impact of those trends on commodity-exporting countries.

The report offered some policy proposals, including the elimination of agricultural support and protectionism in developed countries; measures to make international markets more competitive; filling the void in developing countries created by the withdrawal of the State from the commodity sector; improved skills in the enterprise sector of those countries; and renewed producer-consumer dialogue involving all stakeholders.

In agreed conclusions, the Commission noted that many developing countries continued to be dependent on commodities for their export earnings. Also, their share in the major segment of world commodity exports—agricultural commodities—had declined as a result of agricultural production, processing and export support policies in developed countries. Moreover, the recent financial crises had illustrated the vulnerability of commodity-dependent economies to external shocks and the need for their competitive position to be improved towards diversification and broader-based economic development. The Commission adopted a series of recommendations addressed to Governments, the international community and UNCTAD.

Services. For its analysis of certain services sectors, including successful experiences in those sectors, particularly those that enhanced the export capacity of developing countries (such as professional and business services and access to transport services), including the development implications of electronic commerce, the Commission had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report on the subject [TD/B/COM.1/28]. The report examined successful experiences in service strategies, both in strengthening the domestic services sector and in increasing exports of services; identified barriers faced by developing countries in expanding their participation in the world market for services; and described how the growth of electronic commerce had provided new challenges and opportunities for developing countries. The report stated that for developing countries, exports of services could be crucial in diversifying away from dependence on one or two primary commodities. Attracting investment to the service sectors and acquiring technologies so as to strengthen the positions of services producers in developing countries were key to success. Strategies had to address fiscal and other institutional disincentives to services exports.

The Commission adopted agreed conclusions addressed to Governments, the international community and UNCTAD.

Subsidiary bodies. The Commission had before it the reports of the following expert meetings: the Expert Meeting on Examining Trade in the Agricultural Sector, with a view to Expanding the Agricultural Exports of Developing Countries, and to Assisting Them in Better Understanding the Issues at Stake in the Upcoming Agricultural Negotiations (Geneva, 26-28 April) [TD/B/COM.1/23]; the Expert Meeting on Air Transport Services: clarifying issues to identify the elements of the positive agenda of developing countries regarding both GATS and specific sector negotiations of interest to them (Geneva, 21-23 June) [TD/B/COM.1/25]; the Expert Meeting on the Impact of Changing Supply-and-Demand Market Structures in Commodity Prices and Exports of Major Interest to Developing Countries (Geneva, 7-9 July) [TD/B/COM.1/26] (for its consideration of the item, the Expert Meeting had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report on the same subject [TD/B/COM.1/EM.10/2]); and the Ad Hoc Expert Meeting on Applications of Structured Commodity Finance Techniques for Commodity-Dependent Countries (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 19-21 May) [UNCTAD/ITCD/COM/Misc.39]. The Commission endorsed the agreed conclusions and recommendations of the expert meetings, and recommended that UNCTAD's Trade and Development Board (TDB) also endorse them.

Implementation of recommendations. The Commission had before it an UNCTAD secretariat progress report on the implementation of agreed conclusions and recommendations adopted at its third (1998) session [YUN 1998, p. 884] [TD/B/COM.1/29]. The Commission recognized that the issues in the areas of international trade in goods and services, as identified in the final document adopted at UNCTAD IX [YUN 1996, p. 845], had been addressed at its four sessions and relevant expert meetings, and that the issues of competition law and policy had been addressed within the Commission on Investment, Technology and Related Financial Issues and the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Competition Law and Policy. It also recognized that it had made a positive contribution to the integration of developing countries into the international trading system and expressed its satisfaction with the work undertaken by its expert meetings. It emphasized the need, however, for a more meaningful interface between the Commission and its expert meetings and for strengthening the work in the areas of international trade in goods and services, and commodities.

At its twenty-second executive session in October [A/54/15/Rev.1], TDB endorsed the Commission's agreed conclusions.

Interdependence and global economic issues

TDB, at its forty-sixth session (Geneva, 18-29 October) [A/54/15/Rev.1], considered interdependence and global economic issues from a trade and development perspective. Discussions focused on globalization, more specifically the multilateral trading system and, to a lesser extent, the global financial system. There was broad agreement that an equitable sharing of costs and benefits of globalization was essential for sustaining the momentum of global integration. However, it was stressed that the benefits of globalization were not shared equally and that some countries ran the risk of becoming increasingly marginalized (for information on globalization and human rights, see p. 655). The Board expressed concern over the widening income gaps between rich and poor nations and argued that integration into the world economy could not be left to markets alone: neither the State nor the market on its own was capable of creating and distributing wealth efficiently and equitably. For most developing countries, the problem was not globalization per se, but its regulation and management.

There was wide agreement that trade liberalization could bring substantial benefits to all countries; that trade should be used for development; and that market access was essential for that purpose. There was also consensus on the benefits of a rules-based multilateral trading system, particularly for developing countries. However, there was some disagreement over the future direction of the multilateral trading system.

Speakers from developing countries stressed that the trading system lacked a development component and observed that little progress had been made since the Uruguay Round in areas of export interest to developing countries. New non-tariff measures had been introduced, anti-dumping provisions had been abused, the special agreements had not been applied, and built-in biases had impeded exports and transfer of technology. Speakers from developed countries stressed the benefits to developing as well as developed countries from the Uruguay Round, and underlined the importance of appropriate policies and good governance in developing countries.

Trade promotion and facilitation

In 1999, United Nations bodies continued to assist developing countries to promote their exports and to facilitate the movement of their goods in international commerce. The International Trade Centre was the main originator of technical cooperation projects in that area.

The TDB Commission on Enterprise, Business Facilitation and Development held its fourth session in July.

International Trade Centre

During 1999, the International Trade Centre (ITC), under the joint sponsorship of WTO and UNCTAD, focused on capacity-building for trade development in partner countries [ITC/AG (XXXIII)/180 & Add.1,2]. It made headway in applying new technical assistance tools, in focusing and improving its technical cooperation activities, and in contributing to multi-agency trade development efforts. ITC's principal programme targets were: facilitating understanding of and response to the rules of the multilateral trading system; better export strategy formulation; raising the competitiveness of export enterprises and the effectiveness of their support institutions; and identifying and exploiting new export opportunities. It applied its product-potential analytical processes and its product and market expertise to contribute to export strategy formulation in various countries. For example, initial decisions on sectoral priorities in several African countries were taken as a result of high-level, public-private sector consultation and debate under the Joint ITC/UNCTAD/WTO Integrated Technical Assistance Programme in Selected Least Developed and Other African Countries (JITAP). To help businesses address the implications of WTO agreements, the Centre concentrated on developing national networks of trainers and advisers, forming a critical mass of expertise from business, academia and the public sector on multilateral trading systems rules and issues. The key to ITC's capacity-building, "product network" strategy was the country-level adaptation of generic technical assistance tools to minimize costs, cut the application lead time, and maximize reach, feedback and sustainability.

Under ITC's transaction-oriented activities, the South-South trade programme intensified within the Arab and African regions; substantial volumes of new business were reported to have resulted from several buyers-sellers meetings. The programme was extended to the regions covered by the Economic Cooperation Organization and the Inter-State Council where trade flow analyses were initiated, and to Asia where preparations were made for a buyers-sellers meeting on pharmaceuticals, to be held in 2000 on the occasion of UNCTAD X.

New programme initiatives were undertaken in all geographic areas. ITC implemented 47 national projects in 1999, in addition to 17 regional and 24 interregional projects. Altogether, 98 countries were active partners and benefited directly and substantially from ITC services. Within the Centre's evolving export-led poverty reduction strategy, export production village activities continued in India; feasibility studies of export schemes for microproducer groups were undertaken elsewhere in Asia, and in Africa and Latin America and the Caribbean; and a new programme was launched in Ghana. Implementation of projects in economies in transition also continued and a number of new projects were proposed. New activities were initiated or proposed in all other regions, for example, in Bolivia, Romania, Saudi Arabia, South Africa and Viet Nam. The ITC programme to expand trade among developing countries intensified with activities within the Arab and African regions. ITC placed special emphasis on technical cooperation activities addressing the needs of LDCs and to the pressing need to help them to integrate into the global trading system. Those countries accounted for 36 per cent of project delivery from extrabudgetary resources in 1999.

ITC's first Executive Forum on National Export Strategies (Annecy, France, 26-29 September) highlighted the theme "Redefining trade promotion—the need for a strategic response". It was attended by senior trade officials from 16 developing and transition economies and experts from the World Bank, UNCTAD, WTO, the Commonwealth Secretariat and OECD.

ITC technical meeting. The ITC technical meeting (Geneva, 3 November) [ITC/AG(XXXIII)/179] considered the report of the evaluation of the ITC programme: trade information [ITC/AG (XXXIII)/177], and discussed the ITC strategy proposed in the report on ITC strategy for trade information services [ITC/AG(XXXIII)/178]. Overall, the technical meeting expressed its support for the new trade information strategy.

JAG action. The ITC Joint Advisory Group (JAG) held its thirty-second session in Geneva from 19 to 23 April [ITC/AG(XXXII)/173]. JAG had before it the report on ITC activities in 1998 [YUN 1998, p.886] and the report of the ITC Global Trust Fund's Consultative Committee [ITC/AG(XXXII)/174].

The Group expressed appreciation for the completion of ITC's institutional reform, as a result of which the Centre was now better equipped to contribute to the development of the national export and import capacities of developing and transition economies. The Group reaffirmed the relevance of ITC's contribution to poverty reduction and gender equality, and stressed that high priority should continue to be given to LDCs. It encouraged ITC to continue to use and promote the new information technologies as a way of accessing trade-related information. JITAP and the Integrated Framework for LDCs were cited as good examples of improved coherence among participating institutions and of opportunities for optimal use of human and financial resources; and the importance of ensuring an adequate balance between interregional, regional and national programmes and projects was stressed. The Group expressed satisfaction with the Global Trust Fund, which had proved to be a useful funding mechanism enabling ITC to prepare generic technical assistance tools.

Pledges of trust fund contributions to ITC were announced by Canada, China, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, India, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland and the United Kingdom. Earlier pledges had been made by Belgium, Cote d'Ivoire, Greece, Ireland and Italy.

TDB, at its twenty-first executive session in July [A/54/15/Rev.1], took note of the JAG report and of the statements made.

ITC administrative arrangements

In accordance with the arrangements approved by the General Assembly in decision 53/411 B [YUN 1998, p. 888], the Secretary-General, in June, submitted an outline of the proposed programme budget for ITC for the 2000-2001 biennium [A/54/127]. The outline contained the ITC budget for the first year of activities for the biennium and a projection of requirements for the second year. The ITC requirements, expressed in Swiss francs at 2000-2001 rates, were estimated at SwF 29,516,000 for 2000 and SwF 29,688,600 for 2001. It was projected that an amount of SwF 405,000, representing income from various sources, would be available to ITC annually. On that basis, the annual contribution of each organization (the United Nations and WTO) was estimated at SwF 14,555,500 and SwF 14,641,800 for 2000 and 2001, respectively.

Having considered the Secretary-General's report, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in June [A/53/7/Add.15], recommended that the Assembly approve the amount of SwF 59,204,600 for the 2000-2001 biennium.

By decision 53/485 of 28 July, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on the outline of the proposed programme budget for the 2000-2001 biennium for ITC and of the report of ACABQ.

ACABQ, having considered the proposed programme budget for 2000-2001 for ITC [A/54/6/Rev.1/Add.1], submitted to the Assembly a December report [A/54/7/Add.6], in which it noted that the proposed programme budget amounted to $19,980,000 (SwF 29,170,800), representing an increase of 1.3 per cent over the 1998-1999 appropriation.

Enterprise, business facilitation and development

The Commission on Enterprise, Business Facilitation and Development held its fourth session in Geneva from 19 to 23 July [TD/B/46/II].

Small and medium-sized enterprises. The Commission had before it an UNCTAD secretariat assessment of policies and non-fiscal measures for upgrading small and medium-sized enterprise(SME)clusters[TD/B/COM.3/22]. Thereport stressed the importance for policy makers to focus on technological capability-building as an essential element for the sustained competitiveness and productivity of SMEs in an increasingly technology-intensive global economy. It noted that foreign direct investment could accelerate the process of technological upgrading, but not substitute for local technological capabilities. The increasing knowledge-intensity of production in a globalizing world economy required structural change that should be addressed by long-term policy measures. The report stated that, since the bulk of the world's technology was in the hands of transnational corporations (TNCs), creating TNC-SME linkages was a key element of innovation policy, as was building and strengthening networks between SMEs and local research institutions, including North-South networks between researchers in order to facilitate knowledge creation in the South.

The Commission recognized that SME clusters and networks were among the most effective ways of delivering technical assistance to SMEs in order to upgrade technology, increase participation in domestic and international trade, and strengthen entrepreneurship and management and marketing skills. It adopted a series of agreed conclusions addressed to Governments, the international community and UNCTAD.

Electronic commerce. For its consideration of electronic commerce and the integration of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in international trade, the Commission had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note on the subject [TD/B/COM.3/23], which observed that the Internet had evolved into a commercial mass medium of over 100 million users worldwide. However, it stressed that most rural areas in developing countries were still unconnected, and even in countries listed as "electronic-commerce enabled", the cost of access to the Internet remained beyond the means of most SMEs. The report proposed two areas of priority for future work: the production of data, analyses and scenarios relevant to electronic commerce and development; and the examination of emerging trends in the global information economy and their possible impact on developing countries' participation in electronic commerce.

The Commission adopted a series of agreed conclusions addressed to Governments, the international community and UNCTAD.

Subsidiary bodies. The Commission had before it the report of the Expert Meeting on Sustainable Financial and Non-Financial Services for SME Development (Geneva, 2-4 June) [TD/B/COM.3/26]. The Expert Meeting on Capacity-building in the Area of Electronic Commerce: Legal and Regulatory Dimensions met in Geneva from 14 to 16 July [TD/B/COM.3/28].

Other matters. The Commission considered an UNCTAD secretariat note [TD/B/COM.3/24] that provided an in-depth evaluation of the Trade Point Programme, in follow-up to a decision adopted by the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget at its thirty-third session (see p. 910). It also had before it two progress reports on the implementation of the Commission's agreed conclusions and recommendations, prepared in accordance with a 1998 TDB decision on guidelines on the efficiency and functioning of UNCTAD's intergovernmental machinery [YUN 1998, p. 913]. They reviewed the impact and relevance of electronic commerce on trade growth and development [TD/B/COM.3/25], and analysed issues related to enterprise development [TD/B/COM.3/27].

At its twenty-second executive session in October [A/54/15/Rev.1], TDB endorsed the Commission's agreed conclusions.

Commodities

The Trade and Development Report, 1999 [Sales No. E.99.II.D.1] stated that commodity markets had weakened considerably since the outbreak of the Asian financial crisis in 1997. The more than 12 per cent price decline in 1998 for non-oil commodities as a whole was the largest since the mid-1970s and embraced all major commodity groups. Declines were particularly pronounced for commodities such as coffee, sugar, maize and wheat; hides and skins, and rubber; and aluminium, copper, nickel, lead and zinc. In early 1999, the price decline continued, also affecting cocoa.

Although many of the fast-growing economies in Asia were major suppliers of commodities to world markets, it was the decline in their consumption, either directly (in the case of foodstuffs) or indirectly (in the case of industrial inputs and construction materials), that was the main channel through which the impact of the Asian crisis was felt. On the other hand, prices of natural rubber, rice and timber—commodities exported primarily by countries in South-East Asia—were hit by increases in supply associated with sharp currency devaluations and by slower demand growth in the region. Since developing countries as a whole were highly dependent on commodities for their export earnings, they suffered losses of real income on account of worsened terms of trade. Many sub-Saharan African countries nevertheless fared relatively well in 1998, since their major exports were of products such as cocoa and tea, the prices of which increased in both 1997 and 1998. The collapse in Asian demand reinforced the cyclical decline in commodity prices, reflecting a combination of supply and demand factors, including reduced raw material and energy intensity of production, substitution by other materials and the fall in production costs of commodities themselves. Technological changes in production and economies of scale brought about major productivity increases in metal mining, smelting and refining. At the same time, advances in agronomic and genetic research increased yields in agriculture. For many agricultural commodities, large price declines since mid-1997 were also a reflection more of record world production than of reduced consumption.

World supplies of metals and minerals rose in lagged response to the high prices of 1994-1996, and also as a result of substantial investments in mining and refining over the decade. Prices of most non-oil commodities continued to decline up to March 1999, due in part to the continued effects of the Brazilian devaluation on the markets for coffee, soybeans (soybean oil) and sugar. On average, metals and minerals prices stabilized in early 1999, with higher nickel and silver prices offsetting the continued decline in those of aluminium and copper.

The world oil market was highly unstable in 1998. There was a large build-up of crude oil inventories on account of low demand in Asia and an unseasonably warm winter in the northern hemisphere, combined with an abundance of supply resulting from buoyant production by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC), increased exports from Iraq and resilient net exports from the CIS countries. Prices remained depressed during much of 1998 and early 1999. In 1998, the average price of crude oil was $12.3 a barrel, or 40 per cent lower than in 1996. The one-third drop in oil price in 1998 reduced the value of international oil trade by about $86 billion and accounted for an estimated 86 per cent of the decline in the value of world trade. It also contributed to the 7 per cent fall in the total export revenue of developing countries.

The World Economic and Social Survey 1999 [Sales No. E.99.II.C.1] stated that the price of oil had begun to rebound since early 1999. The international prices of other commodities, which experienced a sharp decline in 1997-1998 and were an economic setback to many developing countries, also stabilized. However, prospects for commodity prices in 1999 were not encouraging. The plunge to record lows for the majority of commodities in 1998 stemmed from a number of developments that coincided in most markets. Weak demand in Japan and in the South-East and East Asian economies in crisis was a critical factor, exacerbated by the direct and indirect effects of the slowdown in the world economy. The speed of the decline was accelerated by oversupply in many markets: in general, producers were reluctant to cut back production, preferring to build up stocks. The purchasing power of the commodity export revenues of developing countries in terms of their imports of manufactures from industrial countries fell by almost 10 per cent, leading to a deterioration in the external and fiscal balances of the many developing countries heavily dependent on commodity-export revenues.

The collapse in prices applied to all groups of commodities except vegetable oilseeds and oils, which gained 7 per cent. Supply gluts and weak demand pushed down prices of food products by an average of 13 per cent; prices for beef and sugar fell more sharply, dropped to very low levels for the grain sub-group, and fell 17 per cent for tropical beverages. Prices of some agricultural raw materials were hit by supply shocks and declined by 11 per cent; prices of cotton, rubber, timber and wool dropped by even more; and, with some exceptions, including iron ore, phosphates, silver and tin, gold, metals and minerals suffered large declines.

Individual commodities

Natural rubber. According to the World Economic and Social Survey 1999, the falling price for natural rubber led to the virtual collapse of the International Natural Rubber Agreement, 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 964], the last remaining international commodity agreement with a price-stabilization clause. At the beginning of 1999, Thailand, the world's biggest producer of rubber, left the organization and withheld its contribution to the group's buffer stocks. That decision followed the withdrawal in 1998 by Malaysia, which was trying to create its own buffer-stock system and was encouraging Indonesia and Thailand to do likewise. The three countries together produced around 80 per cent of the world's natural rubber.

Common Fund for Commodities

The 1980 Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities [YUN 1980, p. 621], a mechanism intended to stabilize the commodities market by helping to finance buffer stocks of specific commodities, as well as commodity development activities such as research and marketing, entered into force in 1989 and the Fund became operational later that year.

As at 31 December 1999, the number of parties to it remained at 106 States, plus the European Community (EC), the Common Market for Eastern and Southern Africa and the Organization of African Unity (OAU).

Structured commodity finance

The ad hoc expert meeting on applications of structured commodity finance techniques for commodity-dependent countries was held in Rio de Janeiro from 19 to 21 May [UNCTAD/ITCD/COM/Misc.39]. The experts discussed how structured commodity finance, particularly in the agricultural sector, could enhance development and alleviate poverty, which policies and practices hindered the use of such finance and what measures could enhance it. They agreed that structured commodity finance could unlock much of the growth potential of commodity production and processing, while enabling the less powerful links in the marketing chain (farmers and small traders) to improve their bargaining power, and developing countries to compete in a global market place. The experts identified the major obstacles to the use of structured commodity finance, and addressed recommendations to the private sector (including farmers' associations and non-governmental organizations (NGOs)), Governments and the international community.

Consumer protection

Commission on Sustainable Development. The Commission on Sustainable Development, at its seventh session (19-30 April) [E/1999/29] (see PART THREE, Chapter I), had before it a report by the Secretary-General on the comprehensive review of changing consumption and production patterns [E/CN.17/1999/2]. The report discussed progress in implementing the work programme on the subject, adopted by the Commission in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 837]. It also reviewed work by the United Nations, other international organizations, Governments, business and industry, and NGOs, with a focus on activities since the nineteenth special session of the General Assembly in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 790], and proposed some refocusing of the work for the period 1999-2002 and beyond.

With regard to consumer guidelines for sustainable consumption, the report noted that the Commission had before it a draft text of extended guidelines. It recalled that the Assembly, by resolution 39/248 [YUN 1985, p. 571], had adopted the guidelines for consumer protection, which provided an internationally accepted framework for the development of national consumer protection policies. Extension of the guidelines to include elements of sustainable consumption was recommended by the Commission on Sustainable Development in 1995 and endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1995/53 [YUN 1995, p. 966]. The process of extending the guidelines began in 1998 at an interregional expert group meeting [YUN 1998, p. 893], which proposed a set of new elements for inclusion in the guidelines.

In a decision on changing consumption and production patterns [dec. 7/2], the Commission stated that developed countries should continue to take the lead in efforts to reverse unsustainable trends in consumption and production, especially those threatening the global environment. Developing countries' priorities were to eradicate poverty and improve standards of living, including meeting basic needs and lessening the burden of external debt, while taking all possible steps to avoid environmental damage and social inequity, for the furtherance of sustainable development; countries with economies in transition faced the challenge of integrating policies to make consumption and production patterns more sustainable into the reform process. Developing countries should therefore fulfil the commitments undertaken to reach the accepted UN official development assistance (ODA) target of 0.7 per cent of GNP as soon as possible. That would require a reversal in the downward trend of ODA as a percentage of GNP. The Commission considered priorities for future work and recommended action to be taken by Governments, in cooperation with relevant international organizations and in partnership with major groups, in the areas of effective policy development and implementation; natural resource management and cleaner production; and globalization and urbanization and their impacts on consumption and production patterns. Annexed to the decision was a summary of the discussions at the Inter-sessional Ad Hoc Working Group on Consumption and Production Patterns and on Tourism (New York, 22-26 February) [E/CN.17/1999/16].

The Commission recommended to the Council for adoption a draft resolution on the expansion of the UN guidelines for consumer protection to include sustainable consumption.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July [meeting 39], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Sustainable Development [E/1999/29], adopted resolution 1999/7 without vote [agenda item 13 (a)].

Expansion of the United Nations guidelines for consumer protection to include sustainable consumption

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 39/248 of 9 April 1985, in which the Assembly adopted the guidelines for consumer protection,

Noting that the Commission on Sustainable Development, at its third session, recommended that the guidelines be expanded to include guidelines for sustainable consumption,

Recalling its resolutions 1995/53 of 28 July 1995 and 1997/53 of 23 July 1997, in which it requested the Secretary-General, inter alia, to elaborate guidelines in the area of sustainable consumption patterns,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General and the recommendations of the Interregional Expert Group Meeting on Consumer Protection and Sustainable Consumption, held at Sao Paulo, Brazil, from 28 to 30 January 1998,

Noting with appreciation the organization by the Bureau of the seventh session of the Commission on Sustainable Development of open-ended consultations among member States, as requested by the Council in its decision 1998/215 of 23 July 1998,

Aware that the need remains great for assistance in the area of consumer protection, particularly in developing countries and countries with economies in transition,

Recognizing the impact that the guidelines have had in many countries in promoting just, equitable and sustainable economic and social development through their implementation by Governments,

Recognizing also the important role of civil society, in particular of non-governmental organizations, in promoting the implementation of the guidelines,

1. Decides to transmit to the General Assembly, for consideration, with a view to their adoption, the draft guidelines for consumer protection expanded to include sustainable consumption, as contained in the annex;

2. Urges Member States, other entities of the United Nations system and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue their efforts to implement effectively the United Nations guidelines for consumer protection.

[For annex, see General Assembly decision 54/449 below.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/54/594], adopted decision 54/449 without vote [agenda item 12].

United Nations Guidelines for Consumer Protection (as expanded in 1999)

At its 87th plenary meeting, on 22 December 1999, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, decided to adopt the United Nations Guidelines for Consumer Protection (as expanded in 1999), as set out in the annex to the present decision.

ANNEX United Nations Guidelines for Consumer Protection (as expanded in 1999)

I. Objectives

1. Taking into account the interests and needs of consumers in all countries, particularly those in developing countries, recognizing that consumers often face imbalances in economic terms, educational levels and bargaining power, and bearing in mind that consumers should have the right of access to non-hazardous products, as well as the right to promote just, equitable and sustainable economic and social development and environmental protection, these guidelines for consumer protection have the following objectives:

- (a) To assist countries in achieving or maintaining adequate protection for their population as consumers;
- (b) To facilitate production and distribution patterns responsive to the needs and desires of consumers;
- (c) To encourage high levels of ethical conduct for those engaged in the production and distribution of goods and services to consumers;
- (d) To assist countries in curbing abusive business practices by all enterprises at the national and international levels which adversely affect consumers;
- (e) To facilitate the development of independent consumer groups;
- (f) To further international cooperation in the field of consumer protection;
- (g) To encourage the development of market conditions which provide consumers with greater choice at lower prices;
- (h) To promote sustainable consumption.

II. General principles

2. Governments should develop or maintain a strong consumer protection policy, taking into account the guidelines set out below and relevant international agreements. In so doing, each Government should set its own priorities for the protection of consumers in accordance with the economic, social and environmental circumstances of the country and the needs of its population, bearing in mind the costs and benefits of proposed measures.

3. The legitimate needs which the guidelines are intended to meet are the following:

- (a) The protection of consumers from hazards to their health and safety;
- (b) The promotion and protection of the economic interests of consumers;
- (c) Access of consumers to adequate information to enable them to make informed choices according to individual wishes and needs;
- (d) Consumer education, including education on the environmental, social and economic impacts of consumer choice;
- (e) Availability of effective consumer redress;
- (f) Freedom to form consumer and other relevant groups or organizations and the opportunity of such organizations to present their views in decision-making processes affecting them;

(g) The promotion of sustainable consumption patterns.

4. Unsustainable patterns of production and consumption, particularly in industrialized countries, are the major cause of the continued deterioration of the global environment. All countries should strive to promote sustainable consumption patterns; developed countries should take the lead in achieving sustainable consumption patterns; developing countries should seek to achieve sustainable consumption patterns in their development process, having due regard to the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities. The special situation and needs of developing countries in this regard should be fully taken into account.

5. Policies for promoting sustainable consumption should take into account the goals of eradicating poverty, satisfying the basic human needs of all members of society and reducing inequality within and between countries.

6. Governments should provide or maintain adequate infrastructure to develop, implement and monitor consumer protection policies. Special care should be taken to ensure that measures for consumer protection are implemented for the benefit of all sectors of the population, particularly the rural population and people living in poverty.

7. All enterprises should obey the relevant laws and regulations of the countries in which they do business. They should also conform to the appropriate provisions of international standards for consumer protection to which the competent authorities of the country in question have agreed. (Hereinafter, references to international standards in the guidelines should be viewed in the context of the present paragraph.)

8. The potential positive role of universities and public and private enterprises in research should be considered when developing consumer protection policies.

III. Guidelines

9. The following guidelines should apply both to home-produced goods and services and to imports.

10. In applying any procedures or regulations for consumer protection, due regard should be given to ensuring that they do not become barriers to international trade and that they are consistent with international trade obligations.

A. Physical safety

11. Governments should adopt or encourage the adoption of appropriate measures, including legal systems, safety regulations, national or international standards, voluntary standards and the maintenance of safety records to ensure that products are safe for either intended or normally foreseeable use.

12. Appropriate policies should ensure that goods produced by manufacturers are safe for either intended or normally foreseeable use. Those responsible for bringing goods to the market, in particular suppliers, exporters, importers, retailers and the like (hereinafter referred to as "distributors"), should ensure that while in their care these goods are not rendered unsafe through improper handling or storage and that while in their care they do not become hazardous through improper handling or storage. Consumers should be instructed in the proper use of goods and should be informed of the risks involved in intended or normally foreseeable use. Vital safety information should be conveyed to consumers by internationally understandable symbols wherever possible.

13. Appropriate policies should ensure that if manufacturers or distributors become aware of unforeseen hazards after products are placed on the market, they should notify the relevant authorities and, as appropriate, the public without delay. Governments should also consider ways of ensuring that consumers are properly informed of such hazards.

14. Governments should, where appropriate, adopt policies under which, if a product is found to be seriously defective and/or to constitute a substantial and severe hazard even when properly used, manufacturers and/or distributors should recall it and replace or modify it, or substitute another product for it; if it is not possible to do this within a reasonable period of time, the consumer should be adequately compensated.

B. Promotion and protection of consumers' economic interests

15. Government policies should seek to enable consumers to obtain optimum benefit from their economic resources. They should also seek to achieve the goals of satisfactory production and performance standards, adequate distribution methods, fair business practices, informative marketing and effective protection against practices which could adversely affect the economic interests of consumers and the exercise of choice in the market place.

16. Governments should intensify their efforts to prevent practices which are damaging to the economic interests of consumers through ensuring that manufacturers, distributors and others involved in the provision of goods and services adhere to established laws and mandatory standards. Consumer organizations should be encouraged to monitor adverse practices, such as the adulteration of foods, false or misleading claims in marketing and service frauds.

17. Governments should develop, strengthen or maintain, as the case may be, measures relating to the control of restrictive and other abusive business practices which may be harmful to consumers, including means for the enforcement of such measures. In this connection, Governments should be guided by their commitment to the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 35/63 of 5 December 1980.

18. Governments should adopt or maintain policies that make clear the responsibility of the producer to ensure that goods meet reasonable demands of durability, utility and reliability, and are suited to the purpose for which they are intended, and that the seller should see that these requirements are met. Similar policies should apply to the provision of services.

19. Governments should encourage fair and effective competition in order to provide consumers with the greatest range of choice among products and services at the lowest cost.

20. Governments should, where appropriate, see to it that manufacturers and/or retailers ensure adequate availability of reliable after-sales service and spare parts.

21. Consumers should be protected from such contractual abuses as one-sided standard contracts, exclusion of essential rights in contracts and unconscionable conditions of credit by sellers.

22. Promotional marketing and sales practices should be guided by the principle of fair treatment of consumers and should meet legal requirements. This requires the provision of the information necessary to enable consumers to take informed and independent decisions, as well as measures to ensure that the information provided is accurate.

23. Governments should encourage all concerned to participate in the free flow of accurate information on all aspects of consumer products.

24. Consumer access to accurate information about the environmental impact of products and services should be encouraged through such means as product profiles, environmental reports by industry, information centres for consumers, voluntary and transparent eco-labelling programmes and product information hotlines.

25. Governments, in close collaboration with manufacturers, distributors and consumer organizations, should take measures regarding misleading environmental claims or information in advertising and other marketing activities. The development of appropriate advertising codes and standards for the regulation and verification of environmental claims should be encouraged.

26. Governments should, within their own national context, encourage the formulation and implementation by business, in cooperation with consumer organizations, of codes of marketing and other business practices to ensure adequate consumer protection. Voluntary agreements may also be established jointly by business, consumer organizations and other interested parties. These codes should receive adequate publicity.

27. Governments should regularly review legislation pertaining to weights and measures and assess the adequacy of the machinery for its enforcement.

C. Standards for the safety and quality of consumer goods and services

28. Governments should, as appropriate, formulate or promote the elaboration and implementation of standards, voluntary and other, at the national and international levels for the safety and quality of goods and services and give them appropriate publicity. National standards and regulations for product safety and quality should be reviewed from time to time, in order to ensure that they conform, where possible, to generally accepted international standards.

29. Where a standard lower than the generally accepted international standard is being applied because of local economic conditions, every effort should be made to raise that standard as soon as possible.

30. Governments should encourage and ensure the availability of facilities to test and certify the safety, quality and performance of essential consumer goods and services.

D. Distribution facilities for essential consumer goods and services

31. Governments should, where appropriate, consider:

(a) Adopting or maintaining policies to ensure the efficient distribution of goods and services to consumers; where appropriate, specific policies should be considered to ensure the distribution of essential goods and services where this distribution is endangered, as could be the case particularly in rural areas. Such policies could include assistance for the creation of adequate storage and retail facilities in rural centres, incentives for consumer self-help and better control of the conditions under which essential goods and services are provided in rural areas;

(b) Encouraging the establishment of consumer co-operatives and related trading activities, as well as information about them, especially in rural areas.

E. Measures enabling consumers to obtain redress

32. Governments should establish or maintain legal and/or administrative measures to enable consumers or, as appropriate, relevant organizations to obtain redress through formal or informal procedures that are expeditious, fair, inexpensive and accessible. Such procedures should take particular account of the needs of low-income consumers.

33. Governments should encourage all enterprises to resolve consumer disputes in a fair, expeditious and informal manner, and to establish voluntary mechanisms, including advisory services and informal complaints procedures, which can provide assistance to consumers.

34. Information on available redress and other dispute-resolving procedures should be made available to consumers.

F. Education and information programmes

35. Governments should develop or encourage the development of general consumer education and information programmes, including information on the environmental impacts of consumer choices and behaviour and the possible implications, including benefits and costs, of changes in consumption, bearing in mind the cultural traditions of the people concerned. The aim of such programmes should be to enable people to act as discriminating consumers, capable of making an informed choice of goods and services, and conscious of their rights and responsibilities. In developing such programmes, special attention should be given to the needs of disadvantaged consumers, in both rural and urban areas, including low-income consumers and those with low or non-existent literacy levels. Consumer groups, business and other relevant organizations of civil society should be involved in these educational efforts.

36. Consumer education should, where appropriate, become an integral part of the basic curriculum of the educational system, preferably as a component of existing subjects.

37. Consumer education and information programmes should cover such important aspects of consumer protection as the following:

- (a) Health, nutrition, prevention of food-borne diseases and food adulteration;
- (b) Product hazards;
- (c) Product labelling;
- (d) Relevant legislation, how to obtain redress, and agencies and organizations for consumer protection;
- (e) Information on weights and measures, prices, quality, credit conditions and availability of basic necessities;
- (f) Environmental protection;

(g) Efficient use of materials, energy and water.

38. Governments should encourage consumer organizations and other interested groups, including the media, to undertake education and information programmes, including on the environmental impacts of consumption patterns and on the possible implications, including benefits and costs, of changes in consumption, particularly for the benefit of low-income consumer groups in rural and urban areas.

39. Business should, where appropriate, undertake or participate in factual and relevant consumer education and information programmes.

40. Bearing in mind the need to reach rural consumers and illiterate consumers, Governments should, as appropriate, develop or encourage the development of consumer information programmes in the mass media.

41. Governments should organize or encourage training programmes for educators, mass media professionals and consumer advisers, to enable them to participate in carrying out consumer information and education programmes.

G. Promotion of sustainable consumption

42. Sustainable consumption includes meeting the needs of present and future generations for goods and services in ways that are economically, socially and environmentally sustainable.

43. Responsibility for sustainable consumption is shared by all members and organizations of society, with informed consumers, Government, business, labour organizations, and consumer and environmental organizations playing particularly important roles. Informed consumers have an essential role in promoting consumption that is environmentally, economically and socially sustainable, including through the effects of their choices on producers. Governments should promote the development and implementation of policies for sustainable consumption and the integration of those policies with other public policies. Government policy-making should be conducted in consultation with business, consumer and environmental organizations, and other concerned groups. Business has a responsibility for promoting sustainable consumption through the design, production and distribution of goods and services. Consumer and environmental organizations have a responsibility for promoting public participation and debate on sustainable consumption, for informing consumers, and for working with Government and business towards sustainable consumption.

44. Governments, in partnership with business and relevant organizations of civil society, should develop and implement strategies that promote sustainable consumption through a mix of policies that could include regulations; economic and social instruments; sectoral policies in such areas as land use, transport, energy and housing; information programmes to raise awareness of the impact of consumption patterns; removal of subsidies that promote unsustainable patterns of consumption and production; and promotion of sector-specific environmental-management best practices.

45. Governments should encourage the design, development and use of products and services that are safe and energy and resource efficient, considering their full life-cycle impacts. Governments should encourage recycling programmes that encourage consumers to both recycle wastes and purchase recycled products.

46. Governments should promote the development and use of national and international environmental health and safety standards for products and services; such standards should not result in disguised barriers to trade.

47. Governments should encourage impartial environmental testing of products.

48. Governments should safely manage environmentally harmful uses of substances and encourage the development of environmentally sound alternatives for such uses. New potentially hazardous substances should be evaluated on a scientific basis for their long-term environmental impact prior to distribution.

49. Governments should promote awareness of the health-related benefits of sustainable consumption and production patterns, bearing in mind both direct effects on individual health and collective effects through environmental protection.

50. Governments, in partnership with the private sector and other relevant organizations, should encourage the transformation of unsustainable consumption patterns through the development and use of new environmentally sound products and services and new technologies, including information and communication technologies, that can meet consumer needs while reducing pollution and depletion of natural resources.

51. Governments are encouraged to create or strengthen effective regulatory mechanisms for the protection of consumers, including aspects of sustainable consumption.

52. Governments should consider a range of economic instruments, such as fiscal instruments and internalization of environmental costs, to promote sustainable consumption, taking into account social needs, the need for disincentives for unsustainable practices and incentives for more sustainable practices, while avoiding potential negative effects for market access, in particular for developing countries.

53. Governments, in cooperation with business and other relevant groups, should develop indicators, methodologies and databases for measuring progress towards sustainable consumption at all levels. This information should be publicly available.

54. Governments and international agencies should take the lead in introducing sustainable practices in their own operations, in particular through their procurement policies. Government procurement, as appropriate, should encourage development and use of environmentally sound products and services.

55. Governments and other relevant organizations should promote research on consumer behaviour related to environmental damage in order to identify ways to make consumption patterns more sustainable.

H. Measures relating to specific areas

56. In advancing consumer interests, particularly in developing countries, Governments should, where appropriate, give priority to areas of essential concern for the health of the consumer, such as food, water and pharmaceuticals. Policies should be adopted or maintained for product quality control, adequate and secure distribution facilities, standardized international labelling and information, as well as education and research programmes in these areas. Government guidelines in regard to specific areas should be developed in the context of the provisions of the present document.

57. When formulating national policies and plans with regard to food, Governments should take into account the need of all consumers for food security and should support and, as far as possible, adopt standards from the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the World Health Organization Codex Alimentarius or, in their absence, other generally accepted international food standards. Governments should maintain, develop or improve food safety measures, including safety criteria, food standards and dietary requirements and effective monitoring, inspection and evaluation mechanisms.

Food

58. Governments should promote sustainable agricultural policies and practices, conservation of biodiversity and protection of soil and water, taking into account traditional knowledge.

Water

59. Governments should, within the goals and targets set for the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade, formulate, maintain or strengthen national policies to improve the supply, distribution and quality of water for drinking. Due regard should be paid to the choice of appropriate levels of service, quality and technology, the need for education programmes and the importance of community participation.

60. Governments should assign high priority to the formulation and implementation of policies and programmes concerning the multiple uses of water, taking into account the importance of water for sustainable development in general and its finite character as a resource.

Pharmaceuticals

61. Governments should develop or maintain adequate standards, provisions and appropriate regulatory systems for ensuring the quality and appropriate use of pharmaceuticals through integrated national drug policies which could address, inter alia, procurement, distribution, production, licensing arrangements, registration systems and the availability of reliable information on pharmaceuticals. In so doing, Governments should take special account of the work and recommendations of the World Health Organization on pharmaceuticals. For relevant products, the use of that organization's Certification Scheme on the Quality of Pharmaceutical Products Moving in International Commerce and other international information systems on pharmaceuticals should be encouraged. Measures should also be taken, as appropriate, to promote the use of international non-proprietary names (INNs) for drugs, drawing on the work done by the World Health Organization.

62. In addition to the priority areas indicated above, Governments should adopt appropriate measures in other areas, such as pesticides and chemicals, in regard, where relevant, to their use, production and storage, taking into account such relevant health and environmental information as Governments may require producers to provide and include in the labelling of products.

IV. International cooperation

63. Governments should, especially in a regional or subregional context:

(a) Develop, review, maintain or strengthen, as appropriate, mechanisms for the exchange of information on national policies and measures in the field of consumer protection;

(b) Cooperate or encourage cooperation in the implementation of consumer protection policies to achieve greater results within existing resources. Examples of such cooperation could be collaboration in the setting up or joint use of testing facilities, common testing procedures, exchange of consumer information and education programmes, joint training programmes and joint elaboration of regulations;

(c) Cooperate to improve the conditions under which essential goods are offered to consumers, giving due regard to both price and quality. Such cooperation could include joint procurement of essential goods, exchange of information on different procurement possibilities and agreements on regional product specifications.

64. Governments should develop or strengthen information links regarding products which have been banned, withdrawn or severely restricted in order to enable other importing countries to protect themselves adequately against the harmful effects of such products.

65. Governments should work to ensure that the quality of products, and information relating to such products, does not vary from country to country in a way that would have detrimental effects on consumers.

66. To promote sustainable consumption, Governments, international bodies and business should work together to develop, transfer and disseminate environmentally sound technologies, including through appropriate financial support from developed countries, and to devise new and innovative mechanisms for financing their transfer among all countries, in particular to and among developing countries and countries with economies in transition.

67. Governments and international organizations, as appropriate, should promote and facilitate capacity-building in the area of sustainable consumption, particularly in developing countries and countries with economies in transition. In particular, Governments should also facilitate cooperation among consumer groups and other relevant organizations of civil society, with the aim of strengthening capacity in this area.

68. Governments and international bodies, as appropriate, should promote programmes relating to consumer education and information.

69. Governments should work to ensure that policies and measures for consumer protection are implemented with due regard to their not becoming barriers to international trade, and that they are consistent with international trade obligations.

Finance

Financial policy

The depth and global ramifications of the East Asian financial crisis, which broke out in 1997, were a major cause of periods of extreme volatility in international financial markets in 1998, said the Trade and Development Report, 1999 [Sales No. E.99.II.D.1]. By the middle of the year, the crisis was reducing growth rates not only in the directly affected countries, but also in most other developing and transition economies. The political unrest in Indonesia provoked large capital outflows and focused attention on the political risks inherent in the policies introduced in a number of emerging markets in response to the crisis.

The decline in commodity prices (see p. 882) reduced not only foreign-exchange earnings, but also fiscal revenues in countries where commodity earnings constituted a source of government income through direct ownership in the commodity sector or taxation. The response was to introduce expenditure cuts for fear that failure to do so would jeopardize capital inflows and currency stability.

The problems in Indonesia touched off an outbreak of financial turbulence in mid-1998 that spread rapidly, first from Asia to the Russian Federation and then to South Africa and Latin America. The greatest impact was in Russian financial markets, where overnight interest rates were raised to 200 per cent to avoid a collapse of the currency. In August, the Russian Federation announced the first long-term bond default by a major sovereign debtor in the post-war period. The value of the Russian bonds used as the collateral for the dollar funds borrowed by investors in those bonds dropped to zero. The United States Federal Reserve organized a private sector recapitalization and lowered interest rates three times to support the international financial system. That move was followed by a similar monetary relaxation in Europe. The effects of the financial turbulence of 1998 were also evident from other indicators: in the United States, there was a more than doubling of long-term corporate debt defaults, and global stock markets went into a decline in the summer. Investors sought refuge in only the most liquid and safest securities, causing sales to be made not only in the emerging-market and high-yield sectors, but also in less liquid treasury obligations; as a result, new issues of both bonds and equity virtually ground to a halt. The Russian moratorium produced large losses for major Western financial institutions and led them to sell assets to raise funds to cover their losses; many of those sales were in emerging markets, thus creating an outflow of capital. A second impact involved the banks, which increased their collateral requirements and cut back lending to emerging markets. One of the first economies to feel the impact of the Russian crisis was Brazil. The markets for Brazilian equities and

Brady bonds were among the largest and most liquid of emerging markets, and played important roles in global arbitrage strategies. The equities were sold both to close arbitrage positions and to cover losses linked to Russian investment positions, and they fell by nearly 40 per cent. Although Brazil, unlike Russia, had large foreign-exchange reserves that were used to provide for an orderly exit of foreign investors, the country was forced to allow its currency to float in January 1999, when it became evident that foreign lenders would not return until the exchange rate had been adjusted. However, additional effects on global financial markets were more limited and emerging-market borrowers returned to international capital markets in the early spring. Thus, some two years after the outbreak of the Asian crisis, international capital markets came full circle and there were again predictions of relatively rapid recovery.

The World Economic and Social Survey 1999 [Sales No. E.99.II.C.1] stated that developments in international financial markets in 1998 had an unfavourable impact on developing countries. In particular, the South and East Asian region was faced with a massive withdrawal of funds and financial transfers to the region declined to a net outflow of over $110 billion in 1998. Until the third quarter of the year, monetary policies worldwide were restrictive and did not provide a stimulus to the global economy. Policy makers in the United States focused on the inflationary potential from stronger-than-expected growth, and most European Governments and central banks concentrated on achieving the convergence criteria, notably for inflation, interest rates and fiscal deficits, for entry of their economies into the monetary union, which was inaugurated in early 1999. Interest rates in many emerging economies surged in a fruitless attempt to retain foreign capital and thus stabilize their currencies. The exchange rates of many Asian developing economies stabilized in 1998, and countries hit by renewed turbulence in early 1999 succeeded in stabilizing their currency more quickly than anticipated. However, exchange rates for a majority of countries remained at values far below their pre-crisis levels.

Developing countries made a net transfer of $11 billion abroad in 1997, which soared to $60 billion in 1998. A counterpart to that adjustment was the increase in net financial transfer to the United States; there was also an increase in the net outward transfer by Japan.

In a joint report on the world economic situation and prospects, issued at the end of 1999 by DESA and UNCTAD, it was observed that the international financial crises of 1997-1998 led not only to a slowdown in world trade growth but also to a sharp and uneven shift in external balances across countries. Capital flows into emerging economies dropped sharply during the crises, and although investor confidence was gradually restored after the Brazilian devaluation at the beginning of 1999, net private capital flows to emerging economies remained low. Corresponding to the net transfer of financial resources out of the developing countries, the net inflows to them of investment, credit and grants were smaller in aggregate than their net payment of interest and dividends.

High-level meeting of Economic and Social Council and Bretton Woods institutions. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 53/172 [YUN 1998, p. 898] and as decided by the Economic and Social Council on 2 February (decision 1999/204), the second special high-level meeting between the Council and the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund (IMF)) took place on 29 April. The first such meeting was held in 1998 [ibid.]. An informal summary of the meeting was circulated to the Council on 14 June [E/1999/78]. The meeting had before it a note by the Secretary-General on the functioning of international financial markets and stability in financing for development [E/1999/42 & Corr.1], identifying some of the questions that the meeting might wish to address: measures to promote recovery in the developing and transition economies; financial architecture and financial flows for development; international policy on external debt; economic crisis and social policy initiatives; and opportunities for further cooperation between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions. The debate at the high-level meeting, which brought together senior policy makers in the areas of development cooperation, foreign affairs and finance, focused on six main subjects: measures to promote recovery and sustained economic growth; financial architecture and financial flows for development; increasing participation and cross-sectoral coherence; international policy on external debt; economic crisis and social policy initiatives; and further cooperation between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions.

In concluding remarks, the President of the World Bank said that the discussion had highlighted the prevalence of poverty issues and the need for unifying efforts. There was no significant distinction between the establishing of principles by the United Nations and the attempt of the World Bank to determine financial policies. What was critical was ensuring that the two institutions worked together. There was a consensus on the link among the macroeconomic, structural, social and human issues, which needed to be taken together. The Bank had set forth some ideas in that regard in its Comprehensive Development Framework (see p. 1398). The Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative (the HIPC Initiative), which was part of the development process, had made substantial progress, and reduction in debt services had been agreed upon for a total of about $6 billion. However, although the world was paying attention to debt issues, they should be viewed in context. Good governance, capacity-building and human development were critical.

The Managing Director of IMF stated that preventing crises remained an essential objective; some countries had been warned by the Fund of impending crisis in their economies, but little action had been taken before the crisis erupted. The HIPC Initiative could not deliver what it promised without reform in the beneficiary countries and efforts by some countries to open their markets to them. Also, ODA should be strengthened, and it was necessary to properly marry debt relief and social relief. While member countries supported deepening debt relief for the poorest countries, no interest or readiness had been shown to include middle-income countries in the cancellation of debt. He stated that it was important to make sure that countries adopted, in advance of crisis, minimal social safety nets; and reiterated the need for a better integration of the United Nations and Bretton Woods families [A/54/3/Rev.1].

By decision 1999/279 of 29 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretariat's informal summary of the special high-level meeting [E/1999/78].

International financial system

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 53/172 [YUN 1998, p. 898], the Secretary-General submitted an October report on the financial crisis and its impact on growth and development, especially in the developing countries [A/54/471]. The report stated that in 1998 the negative transfer of financial resources was an indicator of economic weakness, reflecting the sharp economic contractions in East Asia. Most of the swing in financial flows was accounted for by changes in private foreign lending, particularly short-term lending. The shift was concentrated in Asia, although flows to Latin America were curtailed by the end of the year. The large changes in the financial transfers of Latin America in 1998 (which continued into 1999) were the result of international financial contagion; there continued to be large financial flows into Latin America for much of the year, but there was also increasing uncertainty in the international community about some Latin American economies, especially after the Russian crisis of August. In response, the monetary authorities in several of those countries increased domestic interest rates.

The interest costs faced by developing and transition economies that were able to borrow on international markets remained high since the Russian crisis. The foreign direct investment (FDI) pace eased only slightly during the year, mainly as a result of lower foreign investment in South and East Asian countries. Flows of official financing rose, reflecting large commitments to crisis-affected countries both in 1998 and in preceding years. In 1998 alone, IMF committed almost $30 billion to developing countries and $3 billion to economies in transition for disbursement over a number of years. Commitments of concessional funds also rose. Despite the overall decline in ODA, there was a steady net inward transfer of financial resources to low-income countries in the 1990s, in particular to LDCs. However, resource transfers to them remained inadequate; moreover, the net transfer included some inflows that flowed out again as debt-servicing payments, leaving no net gain in terms of imports or investment.

In reviewing progress in strengthening global financial arrangements, the report stated that the international economic and financial environment was a central determinant of the contagion that might follow a crisis and could be instrumental in the recovery process. Action taken by national and international policy makers in response to the financial volatility of 1997-1998 included: strengthening the financial sector in developing and transition economies; improved information flows and standards and regulations; the introduction of additional means to cope with the volatility of international financial markets; increased availability of emergency external financing; more effective and equitable policy responses to financial crises; and new institutional arrangements.

The Secretary-General suggested that avenues for further action might include: attuning financial regulations to financial systems; confronting international financial volatility; meeting the need for international financing during crises; focusing the content of adjustment programmes; and democratizing governance of the international financial system.

UNCTAD note. Also in response to resolution 53/172, the Secretary-General transmitted an October note by UNCTAD on the same subject [A/54/512 & Add.1], which described trends and perspectives in external financing for developing countries, addressed financial instability and crises, and suggested possible policy responses as a defence against financial crises. It stated that IMF estimates of net flows of private capital to developing and transition economies in 1998 showed a fall of 50 to 70 per cent. The incidence and scale of the declines in 1996-1998 varied significantly among different regions: those for Asian economies were larger than elsewhere and began earliest, while those for Latin America were more moderate, but were expected to begin their recovery later. Net inflows of FDI were relatively little affected by recent financial crises; by contrast, net debt inflows fell very sharply. Since the breakdown of the Bretton Woods arrangements, increased global capital mobility was accompanied by greater frequency of financial crises in both developed and developing countries; there were, however, important differences between them in the nature and effects of financial instability and crises. In developing countries, reversal of external capital flows and sharp declines in the currency often threatened domestic financial stability, and domestic crises usually translated into currency turmoil, payments difficulties and external debt crises. By contrast, currency turmoil in industrialized countries did not usually spill into domestic financial markets, nor did domestic disruptions lead to currency and payment crises. The report stated that possible policy responses at the national level included domestic macroeconomic policies, and hedging by keeping sufficient foreign exchange reserves and credit lines. However, reliance on those policies was likely to be costly and to afford, at best, partial protection. As a result, attention had turned increasingly to structural and institutional weaknesses in the global financial architecture. The resulting debate had concentrated on five issues: transparency, disclosure and early warning systems; financial regulation and supervision; surveillance of national policies; an international lender of last resort; and orderly debt workouts.

Regional meeting. By a 20 September letter [A/54/384], Mexico transmitted to the Secretary-General the report of the High-Level Regional Meeting "Towards a stable and predictable international financial system and its relationship to social development" (Mexico City, 5-7 September), which was held under the auspices of the Government of Mexico and in collaboration with the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC), as a contribution to the discussions initiated by resolution 53/172.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/54/585/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/197 by recorded vote (155-1) [agenda item 97 (b)].

Towards a stable international financial system, responsive to the challenges of development, especially in the developing countries

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 53/172 of 15 December 1998 on the financial crisis and its impact on growth and development, especially in the developing countries,

Taking note of the high-level regional meeting on the theme "Towards a stable and predictable international financial system and its relationship to social development", held at Mexico City from 5 to 7 September 1999, in collaboration with the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, in order to contribute to the process launched by the General Assembly in its resolution 53/172,

Recognizing that the increasing globalization of financial markets and capital flows has presented Governments, the multilateral financial institutions and the international community at large with new challenges and opportunities for the mobilization of adequate and more stable resources for promoting economic development and social welfare,

Stressing the importance of the provision of adequate financial resources for the development of all countries, in particular developing countries, inter alia, through public and private financial flows, international trade, official development assistance and an adequate level of funding support for debt relief, in particular the agreement for an overall financing plan for the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative, as well as mobilization of domestic resources, and that the comprehensive and integrated consideration of those issues should continue in the framework of the dialogue and collaboration between the United Nations system and the Bretton Woods institutions,

Deeply concerned at the overall declining trend in official development assistance, which is a significant external resource for financing development and an important source of support for the efforts of developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, to create an enabling environment for eradicating poverty and tackling basic social needs, especially where private capital flows may be either inadequate or unavailable,

Emphasizing the importance of finding a durable solution to the problem of developing countries in meeting their external debt and debt-servicing obligations in order to release resources for financing their development efforts, welcoming, in this context, the Cologne debt initiative launched in June 1999 and the recent decisions of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank on the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative, which should provide deeper, broader and faster relief, and in this regard stressing the need for fair, equitable and transparent burden-sharing among the international public creditor community and other donor countries,

Noting the establishment of credit contingency lines by the International Monetary Fund and the efforts to create and to strengthen the regional reserves in some regions,

Expressing the need for future multilateral trade negotiations to result, inter alia, in increased access to markets for goods and services that are of export interest to developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, as trade is an important source of financial resources for their development efforts,

Mindful of the need for the benefits of the increasing integration of global markets to be extended to all nations and peoples, in particular to developing countries, especially the least developed among them, noting that, while a number of developing countries have been able to take advantage of globalization of finance, not all of them have benefited from such flows, as they may be unavailable, inadequate or too concentrated to satisfy their needs, especially the least developed among them, and, therefore, noting the need to expand private capital flows while reducing the risks of volatility and to broaden access by developing countries to those flows,

Noting the desirability of having financial regulatory frameworks so that capital mobility may benefit developing economies rather than undermine their development efforts, and noting in particular that short-term speculative capital flows, owing to their highly volatile nature, can often have negative impacts on the long-term goals of developing countries,

Regretting that the recent financial crises led to a significant slowdown in the economic growth of many developing countries and other affected countries and had negative impacts in terms of social development, with the gravest impact on the most vulnerable, and in this context noting that, while some of the most visible effects of the crises are being overcome in some regions and sectors, continued action on a wide range of reforms needs to be taken so as to strengthen the international financial system and to adopt as well as to implement economic and legal frameworks, while reaffirming the need for continued efforts by individual economies to avoid the repetition of those crises,

Recognizing that the recent financial crises have exposed weaknesses in the international financial system, and underlining the urgent need to continue to work on a wide range of reforms for a strengthened and more stable international financial system with a view to enabling it to deal more effectively and in a timely manner with the new challenges of development in the context of global financial integration,

Emphasizing that the United Nations, in fulfilling its role in the promotion of development, in particular of developing countries, plays an important role in the international efforts to build up the necessary international consensus on the continuation of a wide range of reforms needed for a strengthened and more stable international financial system that is responsive to the challenges of development, especially in the developing countries, and to the promotion of economic and social equity in the global economy,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General, and the note by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the financial crisis and its impact on growth and development, especially in the developing countries, the report of the Task Force of the Executive Committee on Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat entitled "Towards a new international financial architecture", the World Economic and Social Survey 1999 and the Trade and Development Report, 1999;

2. Emphasizes the need to renew national, regional and international efforts to promote international financial stability and, to this end, to improve early warning, prevention and response capabilities for dealing with the emergence and spread of financial crises in a timely manner, taking a comprehensive and long-term perspective while remaining responsive to the challenges of development and the protection of the most vulnerable countries and social groups;

3. Stresses the importance of having an enabling international environment through strong cooperative efforts by all countries and institutions to promote global economic development, and to this end calls upon all countries, in particular major industrialized countries, which have significant weight in influencing world economic growth, to adopt and pursue coordinated policies conducive to world economic growth and international financial stability and the promotion of an external economic environment favourable to a widespread economic recovery, including the full recovery of crisis-affected countries;

4. Recognizes the importance of international financial stability, and in this context invites developed countries, in particular major industrialized countries, when formulating their macroeconomic policies, to take into account the priorities of growth and development, in particular of developing countries;

5. Stresses the importance at the national level of strong domestic institutions to promote the achievement of growth and development, inter alia, through sound macroeconomic policies and policies aimed at strengthening the regulatory and supervisory systems of the financial and banking sectors, including appropriate institutional arrangements in the countries of both origin and destination of international capital flows;

6. Recognizes the importance of accelerating the growth and development prospects of the least developed countries, which remain the poorest and most vulnerable of the international community, and calls upon development partners to carry on with their efforts to increase official development assistance and their efforts aimed at strengthening debt relief, improving market access and enhancing balance-of-payments support;

7. Stresses the need for a continued and constructive dialogue, in the relevant institutions and forums, among developed and developing countries at the regional and subregional levels, among others, on the need for the international community to continue to work together in formulating approaches to promoting financial stability and on issues related to strengthening and reforming the international financial system, and in this context reiterates the need for broadening and strengthening the participation of developing countries in the international economic decision-making process in order to promote more efficient international financial institutions and arrangements in which all relevant interests can be effectively represented;

8. Encourages the deepening of the dialogue between the Economic and Social Council and the Bretton Woods institutions in order to promote the wide range of reforms needed in an international financial architecture that reflects the global interests of the international community, and in this regard recommends that their next high-level meeting give priority to the consideration of the modalities needed to achieve a strengthened and more stable international financial system responsive to the challenges of development, especially in the developing countries, and to the promotion of economic and social equity in the global economy;

9. Emphasizes that the international financial institutions, in providing policy advice and supporting adjustment programmes, should ensure that they are sensitive to the specific circumstances of concerned countries and to the special needs of developing countries and should work towards the best possible outcomes in terms of growth and development, including poverty eradication, inter alia, through the protection of effective social expenditure determined by each country in accordance with its national economic and social development strategies;

10. Stresses the need further to define the role and improve the capacities of the international, regional and subregional financial institutions with regard to the prevention, management and resolution in a timely and effective manner of international financial crises, encourages efforts to enhance the stabilizing role of regional and subregional financial institutions and arrangements in supporting the management of monetary and financial issues, in accordance with the mandate of each institution, and requests the regional commissions to provide their views on this matter to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session through their regular reports to the Economic and Social Council;

11. Emphasizes the need to develop further early warning capacities and modalities to prevent or, as the case may be, to take timely action to address the threat of financial crisis, and in this regard encourages the International Monetary Fund and other relevant international and regional institutions to continue their efforts to contribute to this process;

12. Underscores the need for the enhancement of worldwide financial stability, inter alia, through the provision to the international financial institutions, in particular the International Monetary Fund, of adequate resources to provide emergency financing in a timely manner to countries affected by financial crises;

13. Stresses that the opening of capital accounts must be carried out in an orderly, gradual and well-sequenced manner, at a pace that is in line with the strengthening of the ability of countries to cope with its consequences, underscores the crucial importance of solid domestic financial systems and of an effective prudential framework, invites the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank and relevant international regulatory bodies to contribute to this process, and in this context recognizes that all countries have autonomy in the management of capital accounts in accordance with their own national priorities and needs;

14. Reaffirms the need to strengthen international and national financial systems through more effective national, regional and international surveillance of both the public and private sectors, based, inter alia, on the improved availability and transparency of information, as appropriate, and possible additional regulatory and voluntary disclosure measures concerning financial market participants, including international institutional investors, in particular concerning highly leveraged operations, and in this context also reaffirms the importance of continuing to work in the relevant forums on questions related to surveillance, transparency and disclosure, regulation and supervision;

15. Stresses the importance of strengthened collaboration between the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund in specific areas where collaboration is needed, such as the financial sector, while recognizing the specific mandates of the two institutions, and also stresses the need for institutions dealing with financial crises to keep in mind the overall objective of facilitating long-term development;

16. Calls for the renewal of national, regional and international efforts to promote the greater involvement of the private sector in the prevention and resolution of financial crises, underscores in this context the importance of a more equitable distribution of the cost of adjustments between the public and private sectors and among debtors, creditors and investors, and requests the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to provide information to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session about the work it has undertaken on this matter;

17. Reiterates its call upon the international community to pursue national, regional and international efforts to contribute to minimizing the negative impacts of excessive volatility of global financial flows, reiterates in this context the need to consider the establishment of regulatory frameworks for short-term capital flows and trade in currencies, and invites the International Monetary Fund and the relevant regulatory bodies to contribute to this process;

18. Emphasizes that it is important for sovereign risk assessments made by private sector agencies to be based on objective and transparent parameters, and in this regard invites the relevant national, regional and international regulatory bodies to contribute to the development of appropriate standards to ensure that risk-assessment agencies provide complete and accurate information on a timely and regular basis;

19. Encourages the continuing efforts of the World Bank and regional development banks to help Governments to address the social consequences of crises, in particular through the strengthening of social safety nets in developing countries, particularly for the most vulnerable groups, without losing sight of the long-term goals of development;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to support, inter alia, through collaboration with the regional commissions and regional and subregional initiatives, the ongoing work on the identification of measures that will contribute to a more stable and predictable international financial system that is responsive to the challenges of development, in particular of developing countries, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General to make available the results of those exercises to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

21. Also requests the Secretary-General, in close cooperation with all relevant entities of the United Nations, including the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the regional commissions, within their respective mandates, and in consultation with the Bretton Woods institutions, to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution under the sub-item entitled "Financing of development, including net transfer of resources between developing and developed countries", with an analysis of the current trend in global financial flows and recommendations for an agenda for a strengthened and more stable international financial system that is responsive to the priorities of growth and development, in particular of developing countries, and to the promotion of economic and social equity in the global economy;

22. Requests the President of the General Assembly to transmit the present resolution to the Board of Executive Directors of the World Bank and the Executive Board of the International Monetary Fund, in order to bring it to their attention as an input to their discussions on the matters addressed herein.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 54/197:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

In the Second Committee, the United States said that it could not support the draft resolution because its recommendations surpassed the Assembly's mandate and prejudged the work of the international financial institutions regarding the strengthening of the international financial system.

Debt problems of developing countries

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/175 [YUN 1998, p. 902], the Secretary-General submitted a September report on recent developments in the debt situation of developing countries [A/54/370]. The report analysed new initiatives introduced by the international community to tackle the debt problems of developing countries, and stressed that the debt problems of HIPC, which were structurally rooted, remained largely unresolved. In the middle-income countries, the worst phase of the liquidity crisis had been overcome, and recovery had timidly redressed

the economies of Asian countries, which were, however, still struggling with problems of corporate sector debt.

Discussing recent trends in external debt, the Secretary-General stated that the total external debt of developing countries and countries in transition at the end of 1998 was estimated at nearly $2.5 trillion, an increase of 6 per cent over 1997. Short-term debt was reduced and represented less than 17 per cent of the total. As a result of a reduction in exports and a slowing down of gross domestic product (GDP) growth, there was an increase in the ratios of debt to exports and debt to GDP. Measures taken in the wake of the Asian crisis contributed to reducing the reliance on short-term debt, which in 1998 took about 59 per cent of the stock of foreign exchange reserves. The amount of total paid debt service remained almost unchanged, while arrears on interest and principal payments increased slightly. The distribution of debt among the different developing and transition country regions did not change: Latin America accounted for 30 per cent of the total, Asia increased its share to 35 per cent, and Africa together with the Middle East and Eastern Europe and Central Asia maintained their respective shares of 17 and 18 per cent. The group of 41 HIPC had a total amount of debt equivalent to $201 billion at the end of 1997, 28 per cent of which represented multilateral debt; the ratio of debt to exports, at 345 per cent, was the highest ever reached by any group of developing country debtor countries.

As to international debt strategies, the Secretary-General stated that between July 1998 and July 1999, important initiatives were taken by the international community to bring about changes. Most noticeable were efforts to make the HIPC Initiative more effective and efforts by the Paris Club creditors to involve the private sector in a comparable treatment of developing countries' debt. The renegotiation of official bilateral debts took place within the Paris Club framework. Activities in the second half of 1998 and the first of 1999 were marked by continued restructuring of the debts of the poorest countries in the context of the HIPC Initiative; the return of middle-income countries to reschedule their official bilateral debts; and special measures taken in support of countries affected by conflict or natural disaster. Under the HIPC Initiative, seven of those countries restructured their debt for a total amount of $4.5 billion. The Central African Republic, Honduras, Rwanda and Zambia obtained Naples terms, with a 67 per cent reduction of the flow of debt service falling due during three-year consolidation periods following new Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility (ESAF) agreements with IMF. Having reached their HIPC completion points, Bolivia, Guyana and Mozambique also concluded new agreements with the Paris Club.

The East Asian financial crisis affected the debt-servicing capacity of some middle-income debtor countries, and some of them sought new arrangements with their commercial, as well as official bilateral creditors. Thus, Indonesia met with its group of official creditors in September 1998 to reschedule principal payments following an Extended Funding Facility arrangement with IMF, and in January 1999, Pakistan rescheduled its non-concessional and ODA debts. In May, Jordan sought additional debt relief from the Paris Club and, at the end of July, the Russian Federation negotiated a rescheduling of some $8 billion of arrears and payments falling due between July 1999 and December 2000 on debts contracted by or guaranteed on behalf of the Government of the former USSR.

With regard to Paris Club support to countries affected by conflict and natural disasters, Bosnia and Herzegovina obtained a restructuring on Naples terms of its external debt service obligations, resulting from debt incurred by the former Yugoslavia; all payments by Honduras and Nicaragua were deferred following hurricane Mitch; and exceptional treatment was extended to specially affected countries—Albania and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia.

Relief on official debts for the poorest countries was complemented by buy-backs of private creditor debt undertaken since 1991 under the World Bank/International Development Association (IDA) Debt Reduction Facility for IDA-only countries. The programme involved buying back commercial debt, primarily from banks, at substantial discount. Eighteen operations were carried out under the Facility and through them $3.7 billion of principal and more than $2.7 billion of associated interest arrears were extinguished.

By mid-1999, 12 countries had had their debt sustainability reviewed under the HIPC Initiative. Only one new country, Mali, reached the decision point, and three additional countries attained the completion point: Bolivia, Guyana and Mozambique. In June 1999, the Group of Seven (G-7) major industrialized countries at their summit in Cologne, Germany, made recommendations for the enhancement of the HIPC Initiative, known as the Cologne debt initiative, making debt relief faster.

The report concluded that the Cologne debt initiative allowed a deeper debt relief through lower debt sustainability targets and larger debt reductions. Debt sustainability targets should realistically reflect HIPCs' capacity to pay, and HIPC debt relief should seek to remove the binding constraint, be it scarcity of foreign exchange or lack of budgetary resources. Debt relief for the poorest countries should not be provided at the expense of ODA funding for development programmes and projects, but it should be financed by resources additional to budgetary ODA allocations. In addition to enhancing HIPCs' external viability, reducing fiscal pressure and creating room for transferring resources to social expenditures should also be key concerns under the HIPC Initiative. Besides HIPCs, middle-income debtor countries also needed additional liquidity for economic recovery. In the cases of lower middle-income countries, some degree of debt relief might be necessary; in the framework of the Paris Club, for example, some relief to those countries was provided only through debt conversions.

With specific regard to the official debt relief for HIPCs, the World Economic and Social Survey 1999 stated that the initiative for HIPCs was the focus of international efforts to address debt problems, and emphasized the need to address the special conditions of post-conflict HIPCs. In response to the proposals for change in the Initiative, IMF and the World Bank undertook a review of the options and suggested a general approach, including: lowering key target ratios; earlier provision of relief; a tighter link between debt relief and poverty reduction and social policy in the debtor countries; increased bilateral debt relief and official bilateral assistance; and commitment by member countries to seeking prompt solutions to fund the relief.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/54/585/Add.5], adopted resolution 54/202 Without vote [agenda item 97 (e)].

Enhancing international cooperation towards a durable solution to the external debt problem of developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 51/164 of 16 December 1996, 52/185 of 18 December 1997 and 53/175 of 15 December 1998 on enhancing international cooperation towards a durable solution to the external debt problems of developing countries,

Reaffirming the urgent need for further implementation in an effective, equitable and development-oriented way of existing mechanisms for the treatment of the external debt and debt-servicing problems of developing countries in order to help them to exit from the rescheduling process and unsustainable debt burdens,

Welcoming and emphasizing the importance of the efforts of debtor countries, despite the great social cost often involved, in pursuing economic reform, stabilization and structural adjustment programmes aimed at achieving stability, raising domestic savings and investments, attaining competitiveness to take advantage of market access opportunities where available, reducing inflation, improving economic efficiency and addressing the social aspects of development, including the eradication of poverty as well as the development of social safety nets for the vulnerable and poorer strata of their populations, and encouraging them to continue in these efforts,

Welcoming the debt initiative launched by the Group of Seven major industrialized countries at its meeting held in Cologne, Germany, from 18 to 20 June 1999, and the recent decisions of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank on the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative, which should provide deeper, broader and faster debt relief,

Noting with great concern that one of the major obstacles to the speedy implementation of the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative is financial constraints, stressing the need for fair, equitable and transparent burden-sharing among the international public creditor community and other donor countries and in this regard stressing that the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Trust Fund must be adequately funded,

Welcoming the actions taken by creditor countries within the framework of the Paris Club and by some creditor countries through the cancellation and equivalent relief of bilateral debts,

Noting with concern the continuing debt and debt-servicing problems of heavily indebted developing countries as constituting an element adversely affecting their development efforts and economic growth, and stressing the importance of alleviating once and for all, where applicable, the onerous debt and debt-service burden with the aim of attaining a sustainable level of debt and debt service on the basis of an effective, equitable, development-oriented and durable approach, and, where appropriate, addressing the full stock of debt of the poorest and most indebted developing countries as a matter of priority,

Noting with great concern the continuing high debt burden borne by most African countries and least developed countries as exacerbated, inter alia, by the declining trend in many commodity prices,

Noting also with great concern that the recent financial crisis has aggravated the debt-service burdens of many developing countries, including low-income and middle-income countries, particularly in the context of meeting their international debt and debt-servicing obligations in a timely fashion despite serious external and domestic financial constraints,

Noting with concern that a growing number of highly indebted middle-income developing countries are facing difficulties in meeting their external debt-servicing obligations, owing, inter alia, to liquidity constraints,

Stressing that effective management of the debt of developing countries, including middle-income countries, is an important factor, among others, in their sustained economic growth and in the smooth functioning of the world economy,

Noting with great concern that the debt overhang of the heavily indebted poor countries still constitutes a problem hampering their development, and in this context emphasizing the importance of the full and speedy implementation of the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative,

Stressing the need for evolving debt strategies to continue to address the debt sustainability of developing countries, and in this connection stressing also the urgent need for full and swift implementation of initiatives that will further assist developing countries, in particular the poorest and most heavily indebted countries, especially in Africa, in their efforts to improve their debt situation, in view of their continued very high levels of total debt stock and debt-service burdens,

Stressing also the need for continuing global economic growth and a continuing supportive international economic environment with regard to, inter alia, terms of trade, commodity prices, improved market access, trade practices, access to technology, exchange rates and international interest rates, and noting the continued need for resources for sustained economic growth and sustainable development of the developing countries, in accordance with the relevant General Assembly resolutions and the outcomes of recent United Nations conferences,

Noting that mechanisms such as debt rescheduling and debt conversions alone are not sufficient to resolve all the problems relating to long-term debt sustainabil-

Stressing the importance of a sound enabling environment for effective debt management,

Recognizing those efforts of the international community that contribute to effective, equitable, development-oriented and durable solutions to the external debt and debt-servicing problems of developing countries, and emphasizing that the international community should consider further appropriate measures to that end,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on recent developments in the debt situation of developing countries;

2. Recognizes that effective, equitable, development-oriented and durable solutions to external debt and debt-service burdens of developing countries can contribute substantially to the strengthening of the global economy and to the efforts of developing countries to achieve sustained economic growth and sustainable development, in accordance with the relevant General Assembly resolutions and the outcomes of recent United Nations conferences;

3. Also recognizes that the Cologne debt initiative and the recent decisions of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund on the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative contribute to achieving durable solutions to the external debt and debt-service burdens of the heavily indebted poor developing countries;

4. Reiterates the call for industrialized countries that have not yet contributed to the Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility (now renamed Poverty Reduction and Growth Facility) and the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Trust Fund to come forward immediately with their contribution;

5. Notes the agreement on the elements of a financing plan for multilateral development banks, and in this regard stresses the urgency of providing new and additional resources to secure adequate funding for an overall financing plan for the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative, including in particular the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Trust Fund in the context of equitable and transparent burden-sharing that would permit the Initiative to be launched and the delivery of debt relief to begin for those countries requiring retroactive relief and those expected to reach their decision points over the near term, without compromising the financing made available through concessional windows such as the International Development Association, and in this regard stresses the importance of applying the enhanced Initiative in those eligible countries that have already reached their decision and completion points within the framework of the previous Initiative;

6. Also notes that the so-called floating completion points approach offers the opportunity to shorten the time frame for implementation of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative to countries that meet the necessary conditions so that debt relief can be provided faster than under the original heavily indebted poor countries framework, and in this regard urges speedy implementation of the approach and welcomes the flexibility that the enhanced Initiative provides in terms of interim assistance and front-loading of the delivery of debt to qualifying eligible countries;

7. Stresses the importance of implementing the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative flexibly, including shortening the interval between the decision and completion points, taking due account of the policy performance of the countries concerned in a transparent manner and with the full involvement of the debtor countries;

8. Notes that there is now a possibility of expanding eligibility under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative to thirty-six countries, and in this regard looks forward to an early review of the list of heavily indebted poor countries;

9. Stresses the importance of considering increased flexibility with regard to Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative eligibility criteria, including continuously evaluating and actively monitoring the implication of existing terms of the eligibility criteria so as to ensure sufficient coverage of heavily indebted poor countries, increased flexibility being, in this context, particularly important for known borderline cases and countries in post-conflict situations, in respect of, inter alia, avoiding delays in the establishment of a track record of economic performance caused by temporary setbacks due to external shocks in order to help them to exit from the rescheduling process and from unsustainable debt burdens;

10. Invites the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank to continue to strengthen the transparency and integrity of debt sustainability analysis, and encourages the further commissioning of relevant independent studies on the debt problem of developing countries;

11. Welcomes the proposed framework for strengthening the link between debt relief and poverty eradication, and stresses the need for its flexible implementation, recognizing that, while the poverty reduction strategy paper should be in place by the decision point, on a transitional basis the decision point could be reached without agreement on a poverty paper, but that in all cases demonstrable progress in implementing a poverty reduction strategy would be required by the completion point;

12. Emphasizes that poverty reduction programmes as linked to the implementation of the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative must be country-driven and in accordance with the priorities and programmes of countries eligible under the Initiative, and stresses the role of civil society in this regard;

13. Stresses the need for debt-relief initiatives to be guided by enhanced transparency and predictability, involving debtor countries in any review and analysis that is conducted during the adjustment period;

14. Welcomes the decision of those countries that have cancelled bilateral official debt, and urges creditor countries that have not done so to consider full cancellation of bilateral official debts of countries eligible under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative and, as appropriate, action to address the needs of post-conflict countries, in particular those with protracted arrears, developing countries affected by serious natural disasters and poor countries with very low social and human development indicators, including the possibility of debt-relief measures through, inter alia, the cancellation and equivalent relief of bilateral official debt, and stresses the importance of building coalitions with civil society organizations and non-governmental organizations in all countries to ensure in the shortest possible time the implementation of pronouncements on debt forgiveness in order that countries eligible under the Initiative may quickly benefit from such pronouncements;

15. Notes that the multilateral debt-relief funds can have a positive impact in respect of assisting Governments in safeguarding or increasing expenditures on priority social sectors, and encourages donors to continue efforts in this regard in the context of the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative;

16. Stresses the principle that funding of any debt relief should not affect adversely the support for other development activities in favour of developing countries, including the level of funding for the United Nations funds and programmes, and in this regard welcomes the decision of the Joint Ministerial Committee of the Boards of Governors of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund on the Transfer of Real Resources to Developing Countries (Development Committee) that financing of debt relief should not compromise the financing made available through concessional windows such as the International Development Association, and expresses its appreciation that certain developed countries have reached or even gone beyond the agreed target for official development assistance of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product, while at the same time calling upon other developed countries to fulfil this target for official development assistance as soon as possible;

17. Expresses its appreciation for the action taken by creditor countries of the Paris Club in December 1998 with regard to the debts of countries affected by hurricane Mitch, and in this regard reiterates the need for relief promises to come to fruition within the shortest possible time-frames in order to free the requisite resources for national reconstruction efforts, welcomes the decision of various countries to address the debt situation of Honduras and Nicaragua, including through cancellation of their bilateral official debt, and invites others to take similar action;

18. Encourages the international creditor community to consider appropriate measures in the case of countries with a very high level of debt overhang, including in particular low-income African countries, in order to make an appropriate and consistent contribution to the common objective of debt sustainability;

19. Recognizes the difficulties of highly indebted middle-income developing countries and other highly indebted middle-income countries in meeting their external debt and debt-servicing obligations, and notes the worsening situation in some of them in the context, inter alia, of higher liquidity constraints, which may require debt treatment including, as appropriate, debt-reduction measures;

20. Calls for concerted national and international action to address effectively debt problems of middle-income developing countries with a view to resolving their potential long-term debt-sustainability problems through various debt-treatment measures, including, as appropriate, orderly mechanisms for debt reduction, and encourages all creditor and debtor countries to utilize to the fullest extent possible, where appropriate, all existing mechanisms for debt reduction;

21. Recognizes the efforts made by indebted developing countries with regard to fulfilling their debt-servicing commitments despite the high social cost incurred, and in this regard encourages private creditors and, in particular, commercial banks to continue their initiatives and efforts to address the commercial debt problems of middle-income developing countries, in particular those affected by the financial crisis;

22. Also recognizes the need to continue to work with all creditors in order to facilitate continued access to international capital markets, and, in the event that extraordinary circumstances preclude a country from temporarily meeting its debt-servicing commitments, urges Governments to work with creditors in a transparent and timely fashion towards a workable resolution of the repayment problem;

23. Further recognizes the need to make the maximum use of existing debt-relief measures, including existing facilities to provide relief through various debt-conversion programmes, such as debt-equity swaps, debt-for-nature swaps, debt-for-child-development swaps and other debt-for-development efforts, as well as to support measures in favour of the most vulnerable segments of the societies of those countries and to develop techniques of debt conversion to be applied to social development programmes and projects, in conformity with the priorities of the World Summit for Social Development;

24. Stresses that debt relief should contribute to development objectives, including poverty reduction, and in this regard urges countries to direct those resources freed through debt relief, in particular through debt cancellation and reduction, towards these objectives;

25. Notes, while recognizing the benefits of the liberalization of international capital flows, the adverse impact of the volatility of short-term capital flows on exchange rates, interest rates and the debt situation of developing countries, and stresses the need for coherence in implementing policies and for the liberalization of capital accounts in an orderly, gradual and well-sequenced manner to keep pace with the strengthening of the ability of countries to sustain its consequences so as to mitigate the adverse impact of such volatility;

26. Also notes that debt relief alone will not lead to poverty reduction, and in this regard emphasizes the need for an enabling environment as well as for an efficient, transparent and accountable public service and administration, and also emphasizes the urgency of securing an adequate level of funding support for debt relief, in particular the agreement for an overall financing plan for the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative;

27. Stresses the need to strengthen the institutional capacity of developing countries in debt management, calls upon the international community to support the efforts towards this end, and in this regard stresses the importance of initiatives such as the Debt Management and Financial Analysis System and the debt-management capacity-building programme;

28. Reaffirms the Mid-term Global Review of Progress towards the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, in particular the actions required in favour of those countries concerning their official bilateral, commercial and multilateral debts;

29. Stresses the need for new financial flows to debtor developing countries from all sources, in addition to debt-relief measures that include debt and debt-service reduction, and urges creditor countries and multilateral financial institutions to continue to extend concessional financial assistance, in particular to the least developed countries, in order to support the implementation by the developing countries of economic reforms and stabilization and structural adjustment programmes that will enable them to extricate themselves from the debt overhang and attract new investment and to assist them in achieving sustained economic growth and sustainable development, in accordance with the relevant General Assembly resolutions and the outcomes of recent United Nations conferences, and the eradication of poverty;

30. Notes the importance of providing adequate resources for debt-relief measures in the light of the adverse effects of the international financial crisis on the mobilization of both domestic and external resources for the development of the developing countries, including those in Africa and the least developed countries;

31. Stresses the importance of trade to development, poverty alleviation and sustained global economic recovery, and in this regard emphasizes that multilateral trade negotiations should deliver early and substantial benefits to developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, as well as improve market access and further reduce barriers to trade;

32. Also stresses the importance for developing countries of continuing their efforts to promote a favourable environment for attracting foreign investment, thereby promoting economic growth and sustainable development, so as to favour their exit from debt and debt-servicing problems, and further stresses the need for the international community to promote a conducive external environment through, inter alia, improved market access, stabilization of exchange rates, effective stewardship of international interest rates, increased resource flows, access to international financial markets, flow of financial resources and improved access to technology for developing countries;

33. Calls upon the international community, including the United Nations system, and invites the Bretton Woods institutions, as well as the private sector, to take appropriate measures and actions for the implementation of the commitments, agreements and decisions of the major United Nations conferences and summits organized since the beginning of the 1990s on development, as well as of the outcomes of review processes, in particular those related to the question of the external debt problem of developing countries;

34. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution and to include in his report a comprehensive and substantive analysis of the external debt and debt-servicing problems of the developing countries.

Financing for development

High-level intergovernmental event (2001). In accordance with General Assembly resolutions 52/179 [YUN 1997, p. 954] and 53/173 [YUN 1998, p. 906], the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group of the General Assembly on Financing for Development was established to undertake an in-depth examination of inputs received with regard to high-level intergovernmental consideration of financing for development [A/53/470, A/53/479], which had been submitted to the Assembly in 1998 [YUN 1998, pp. 905 & 906]. The Group's mandate was to make recommendations on the form, scope and agenda of a high-level international intergovernmental forum on financing for development, to be held not later than 2001, and its preparatory process.

The Working Group held four sessions in 1998 and 1999 (17 December 1998; 9-11 February 1999; 4 May 1999; 28 May 1999). It also held two informal sessions (16-19 March; 5-8 April) [A/54/28]. The Bureau of the Second Committee hosted two panels in support of the work of the Working Group (15 March and 1 April). With regard to the scope and agenda of the high-level intergovernmental event, the Working Group stated that it would address national, international and systemic issues relating to financing for development in the context of globalization and interdependence. It recommended that the items to be discussed should include: domestic financial resources; international resources: trade, foreign direct investments and other private flows; international financial cooperation for development, including ODA and debt relief; enhancing coherence and consistency of the international monetary, financial and trading systems in support of development and avoidance of financial crisis and volatility, and enhancing participation and integration of developing and transition countries in the global economic system, including through capacity-building; and the special needs of Africa, LDCs, small island developing States, landlocked developing countries and other developing countries with special difficulties in attracting financing for development. Annexed to its report was an elaboration of ideas discussed in the following areas: mobilizing domestic resources and international private financial flows for development; international financial cooperation for development; external debt; financing for development and trade; innovative sources of financing; governance of the international monetary, financial and trade systems; and the interrelationship between major elements and other special topics.

As to the form of the event, the Working Group recommended that: it should be a high-level intergovernmental meeting of political decision makers, at least at the ministerial level; it should have a comprehensive agenda that would attract the attention of diverse national departments and ministries, for example of finance, commerce, development and foreign affairs; both the event and the preparatory process should involve participation by all relevant stakeholders, involve IMF and the World Bank as active partners, and include participation by all other relevant parts of the UN system; the final event could be self-standing, linked with the Assembly, including a high-level segment of three to four days' duration; the high-level segment should be preceded by an effective and participatory preparatory stage; and both the event and preparatory process should have a high level of public and media visibility and public awareness.

The Working Group felt that, in order to prepare for the event in 2001, it would be desirable to establish a substantive preparatory process that would draw on the successful experiences of the Group itself. It should be open to all States Members, members of specialized agencies and observers and report to the Assembly at its fifty-fifth (2000) session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/54/585/Add.1], adopted resolution 54/196 High-level international intergovernmental

consideration of financing for development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/179 of 18 December 1997 and 53/173 of 15 December 1998,

Taking note of the report of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group of the General Assembly on Financing for Development,

Taking note also of Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/51 of 29 July 1999 on the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields and cooperation between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions,

1. Endorses the report of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group of the General Assembly on Financing for Development, as an important input for the continuation of the process, as it provides the framework and reference for the scope, agenda and form of the final event of the high-level international intergovernmental consideration of financing for development, as well as for the preparatory process;

2. Decides to convene in 2001 a high-level intergovernmental event of political decision makers, at least at the ministerial level, on financing for development, in the context of paragraph 20 of the report of the Working Group;

3. Also decides that the high-level intergovernmental event in 2001 will address national, international and systemic issues relating to financing for development in a holistic manner in the context of globalization and interdependence, and, by so doing, will also address development through the perspective of finance; within this overall context, the event should also address the mobilization of financial resources for the full implementation of the outcome of major conferences and summits organized by the United Nations during the 1990s and the implementation of the Agenda for Development, in particular with regard to poverty eradication;

4. Reiterates that, as identified in the report of the Working Group, both the preparatory process and the high-level intergovernmental event should involve the participation of all relevant stakeholders;

5. Decides to establish an intergovernmental Preparatory Committee, open to all States, to carry out the substantive preparations for the high-level intergovernmental event;

6. Also decides that the Preparatory Committee, at its resumed organizational session, based on the results of consultations to be held with all relevant stakeholders in a flexible manner, should consider innovative ways and mechanisms to facilitate the active involvement of all relevant stakeholders in both the preparatory process and the high-level intergovernmental event;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with Member States and in the context of paragraphs 20 and 21 of the report of the Working Group and paragraphs 17 and 18 of Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/51, to initiate as soon as possible preliminary consultations with all relevant stakeholders, in particular the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund and the World Trade Organization, on the potential modalities for their participation in both the substantive preparatory process and the high-level intergovernmental event, and also requests the Secretary-General to provide the results of those consultations to the Preparatory Committee for consideration at the first part of its organizational session;

8. Decides to constitute a Bureau of the Preparatory Committee, which will consist of fifteen representatives of Member States to the United Nations selected according to the principle of equitable geographical representation and will be presided over by two co-chairmen;

9. Also decides that the first organizational session of the Preparatory Committee should be held as soon as possible and no later than the end of January 2000 to elect the Bureau, and in this regard requests the President of the General Assembly to begin consultations with Member States as soon as possible;

10. Requests the Bureau, inter alia, in the context of paragraphs 20 and 21 of the report of the Working Group and paragraphs 17 and 18 of Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/51 and with the further assistance of the Secretary-General, to continue consultations with all relevant stakeholders on the modalities for their participation, including the possibility of creating a joint task force, in both the substantive preparatory process and the high-level intergovernmental event, and also requests the Bureau to submit proposals to the Preparatory Committee at its resumed organizational session on the modalities of participation of all relevant stakeholders;

11. Decides that the resumed organizational session of the Preparatory Committee should be held as soon as possible and no later than March 2000, and, on the basis of the report of the Working Group and the proposals on modalities to be submitted by the Bureau, and taking into account the outcome of the consultations of the Secretary-General, will consider the following questions:

(a) The form of the final event, including a possible summit, international conference, special session of the General Assembly or other high-level international intergovernmental forum on financing for development;

(b) The venue of the final event;

(c) The timing, duration and format of the final event;

(d) Clarification of the agenda;

(e) Modalities for the participation of institutional stakeholders in both the preparatory process and the high-level intergovernmental event, notably:

(i) The World Bank, the International Monetary Fund and the World Trade Organization, including, in the last case, participation at the secretariat level and by member and observer States;

(ii) The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the regional commissions;

(f) Modalities for the participation of other stakeholders, notably non-governmental organizations and the private sector, in both the preparatory process and the high-level intergovernmental event;

(g) The programme of work of the Preparatory Committee;

12. Also decides that the first substantive session of the Preparatory Committee should be held in May 2000;

13. Invites Member States to consider sending experts to participate in the preparatory process, and encourages bilateral and multilateral donors to facilitate the participation of developing countries in both the preparatory process and the high-level intergovernmental event;

14. Calls upon the relevant entities of the United Nations system, including the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the regional commissions, as well as the regional development banks and all other relevant stakeholders, to provide inputs for consideration during the preparatory process;

15. Requests the relevant entities of the United Nations system, in accordance with their respective mandates, to take into account the schedule of the Preparatory Committee and meetings of the regional commissions in assisting countries, in particular developing countries and countries with economies in transition, in preparing for the discussion on financing for development;

16. Requests the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to take into account the schedule of the Preparatory Committee and meetings of the regional commissions in assisting developing countries and countries with economies in transition in preparing for the discussion on financing for development;

17. Requests the Secretary-General, in close consultation with all Member States, to provide the Preparatory Committee and the high-level intergovernmental event with a secretariat commensurate with the level of the event and adequate staff and other resources, further invites the Secretary-General in this context to explore, in consultation with all relevant institutional stakeholders, the possibility of utilizing, in that secretariat, staff from among the stakeholders, as appropriate, and also requests the Secretary-General to make proposals in this regard to the Preparatory Committee at its resumed organizational session in accordance with the rules and procedures of the United Nations;

18. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution and on the overall work undertaken with regard to the high-level international intergovernmental consideration of financing for development;

19. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "High-level international intergovernmental consideration of financing for development".

Investment, technology and related financial issues

The UNCTAD Commission on Investment, Technology and Related Financial Issues held its fourth session in Geneva from 4 to 8 October [TD/B/46/12]. For its consideration of FDI trends, it had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report on recent trends and ways and means of enhancing FDI flows to and among developing countries, in particular LDCs and countries receiving relatively low FDI inflows, with a view to increasing the benefits they entailed, and taking into account the factors that played a part in private sector firms' choices of investment location [TD/B/COM.2/21]. In addition to presenting an overview of trends in FDI flows, with particular emphasis on LDCs, the report contained an overview of the differences and complementarities between FDI and foreign portfolio investment flows, and an analysis of FDI determinants. It stated that in 1998 global FDI inflows increased by 39 per cent over 1997, a growth fuelled by a 70 per cent increase in flows to developed countries, which more than offset the decline of 4 per cent in flows to developing countries, with Asia and Latin America receiving $85 billion and $72 billion, respectively, and Africa $8 billion. Total 1998 FDI inflows into LDCs increased by 13.5 per cent, totalling $2.4 billion; Central and Eastern Europe received $18 billion.

The Commission also had before it the reports of two expert meetings, one on international investment agreements (IIAs): concepts allowing for a certain flexibility in the interest of promotion growth and development (Geneva, 24-26 March) [TD/B/COM.2/17], and the other on portfolio investment flows and FDI (Geneva, 28-30 June) [TD/B/COM.2/20]. The Commission also considered the World Investment Report 1999 [Sales No. E.99.II.D.3], which focused on FDI and the challenge of development.

For its consideration of investment policy and science, technology and innovation policy reviews: methodology and experiences, the Commission discussed an UNCTAD report on the subject [TD/B/COM.2/23], which introduced the UNCTAD secretariat investment policy reviews undertaken in Egypt, Peru, Uganda and Uzbekistan and science, technology and innovation policy reviews undertaken for Colombia and Jamaica. It complemented the individual country reviews by drawing common policy implications with respect to determinants of FDI, privatization, policy coherence, economic linkages, inter-firm collaboration, infrastructure and support institutions.

In agreed conclusions, the Commission recognized the contribution that FDI could make to development, the work undertaken in the area of capacity-building in developing countries to enable them to attract FDI to their economies, and the importance of the development dimension in IIAs. It agreed that adequate policies and institutions were important to attracting investment flows. Recognizing the importance of country examinations as a novel form of intergovernmental discussions at UNCTAD for understanding the diversity of development experiences and contributing to the deliberations and the dissemination of best practices in investment policy and in science, technology and innovation policy, the Commission commended the work carried out by the UNCTAD secretariat on the policy reviews; expressed appreciation to the countries that participated in the round of reviews, to the senior officials from capitals who shared valuable experience with other Governments, and to the international private sector; encouraged follow-up on the findings of the policy reviews and assistance to countries seeking to implement the recommendations contained in the reviews; and invited donor countries and institutions to support the preparation of the policy reviews.

The Commission endorsed the report of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Competition Law and Policy and took note of the report of the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting (see below). It also considered the progress report on the implementation of its agreed conclusions and recommendations [TD/B/COM.2/22], prepared in accordance with a 1998 TDB decision on guidelines on the efficiency and functioning of the UNCTAD intergovernmental machinery [YUN 1998, p. 913].

At its twenty-second executive session in October [A/54/15/Rev.1], TDB took note of the Commission's report and endorsed its agreed conclusions. It also reviewed the functioning of the Commission's subsidiary bodies, the Working Groups of Experts on Competition Law and Policy and on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting, and decided to extend the mandate of the informal consultations with a view to receiving a report on the outcome of the consultations at its forty-sixth session. At its forty-sixth session (18-29 October) [ibid.], TDB agreed that the status of the two Groups of Experts should remain unchanged; that greater participation of all member States of UNCTAD in the work of both Groups should be encouraged; and that their work programmes should be brought under the auspices of the competent Commission.

Competition law and policy

The Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Competition Law and Policy held its second session in Geneva from 7 to 9 June [TD/B/COM.2/19]. It considered the consultations on competition law and policy, including the model law and studies related to the provisions of the set of principles and rules; and the work programme, including technical assistance, advisory and training programmes and preparations for the fourth United Nations conference to review all aspects of the set of principles and rules.

In agreed conclusions, the Group of Experts, reaffirming the fundamental role of competition law and policy for sound economic development and stressing the importance of the creation of a competition culture, recommended that UNCTAD X, to be held in 2000, take into account the work carried out within the UNCTAD intergovernmental machinery on competition law and policy issues. It recognized the need for strengthened international cooperation in the area of competition law and policy and invited UNCTAD to continue cooperation with WTO and other organizations working in that area. The Group recommended that the Fourth Review Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices (known as the Set), to be held in 2000, consider the following issues related to the better implementation of the Set: experience gained with the establishment of competition laws and competition authorities and enforcement of the law and competition advocacy in developing countries, countries with economies in transition, and relevant regional organizations; organization and powers of competition authorities; treatment of confidential information in competition law and policy; the role of competition policy in economic development; competition policy issues in telecommunications; and competition policy and its implications for regulatory and legislative reforms. It requested the UNCTAD secretariat to prepare for consideration by the Fourth Review Conference a revised report on experiences gained with international cooperation on competition policy issues and the mechanisms used; an updated review of technical assistance; a report on how competition policy addressed the exercise of intellectual property rights; and an updated version of the model law, taking into account recent trends in competition legislation and its enforcement.

International standards of accounting and reporting

The Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting (ISAR) held its sixteenth session in Geneva from 17 to 19 February [TD/B/COM.2/16].

In recommendations to Governments and related organizations regarding the requirements for the qualification of professional accountants, ISAR reaffirmed the fundamental need to harmonize national requirements and adopted a guideline for national systems in that regard. The guideline contained recommendations concerning general education; professional education other than education for professional knowledge; the model curriculum for education for professional knowledge; assessment of professional competence (examinations); practical experience; a programme of continuing education; and adherence to a code of professional ethics.

Taxation

In accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 1998/218 [YUN 1998, p. 908], the ninth meeting of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters was held in New York from 3 to 7 May 1999 [E/1999/84 & Corr.1]. The Group of Experts' focus group on revising and updating the United Nations Model Double Taxation Convention between Developed and Developing Countries [YUN 1980, p. 531] met in New York in December 1998 and Amsterdam, Netherlands, in March 1999.

The Group of Experts discussed exchange of information; transfer pricing; revision and updating of the United Nations Model Convention; and technical training. It adopted in principle the United Nations Model Double Taxation Convention between Developed and Developing Countries (revised version), subject to editorial changes to be recommended by the Group via correspondence, and decided to keep it under a biennial revision process.

By decision 1999/225 of 26 July, the Economic and Social Council deferred consideration of the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General on the ninth meeting of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters [E/1999/84 & Corr.1].

Transport

Maritime transport

The Review of Maritime Transport 1999 [Sales No. E.99.II.D.21] stated that world seaborne trade recorded its thirteenth consecutive annual increase in 1998, reaching a record high of 5.064 billion tons. The annual growth rate, however, turned downwards, registering 2.2 per cent, which was the lowest since 1987. That relatively lower rate of growth was expected to continue in 1999, owing to the downward trade in the dry bulk cargo sector. World maritime activities measured in ton-miles in global trade decreased by 1.1 per cent to 21,425 billion ton-miles in 1998, compared to 21,672 billion ton-miles in the previous year.

The world merchant fleet expanded to 788.7 million deadweight tons (dwt) at the end of 1998, representing a 1.6 per cent increase over 1997. The slower rate of expansion was attributable primarily to new-building deliveries of 35.5 million dwt, while tonnage broken up and lost was registered at 23.5 million dwt, leaving a net gain of 12 million dwt. The developing countries' share of tonnage registered in major open-registry countries increased slowly, reaching nearly one third in 1998. On the other hand, the developed market-economy countries' share was on a downward trend, representing two thirds of the total tonnage registered in the major open-registry countries.

Arrest of ships

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/182 [YUN 1997, p. 935], the United Nations/International Maritime Organization Diplomatic Conference on Arrest of Ships was convened in Geneva from 1 to 12 March [A/CONF.188/5]. The Conference adopted its Final Act and established the text of the International Convention on Arrest of Ships, 1999 [A/CONF.188/6], a legal instrument establishing international uniformity in the field of arrest of ships, which took account of developments in related fields. The Convention gave definitions of the terms used therein and contained articles on: powers and exercise of right of arrest; release from arrest and right of rearrest and multiple arrest; protection of owners and demise charterers from arrested ships; jurisdiction on the merits of the case; application; non-creation of maritime liens; reservations; the depositary (Secretary-General of the United Nations); signature, ratification, acceptance, approval and accession; States with more than one system of law; entry into force; revision and amendment; denunciation; and languages.

The Convention was opened for signature in New York on 1 September. It was to remain open until 31 August 2000.

Transport of dangerous goods

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/3 [YUN 1997, p. 957], the Secretary-General submitted an April report on the work during 1997-1998 of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods [E/1999/43]. The Committee finalized step 2 in the reformatting of the Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods into model regulations; developed detailed packing instructions for the transport of individual substances and articles on the list of dangerous goods most commonly carried and guidelines for the assignment of portable tank requirements; and adopted new provisions for inclusion in the model regulations and amendments to the existing provisions. In order to give effective follow-up to chapter 19, on environmentally sound management of toxic chemicals, of Agenda 21, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 672], the Committee continued to cooperate with other organizations concerned with the development of a globally harmonized system for the classification and labelling of chemicals, in particular the International Labour Office and OECD, and almost finalized its work in the area of physical hazards. On the basis of a proposal made by the Inter-Organization Programme for the Sound Management of Chemicals Coordinating Group for the Harmonization of Chemical Classification Systems, the Committee considered possible future arrangements for the implementation of the globally harmonized classification system and agreed that its reconfiguration into a Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals, with two subcommittees, would be an appropriate solution. With respect to future policy regarding the cycle of amendments to the Recommendations, it considered that no firm decision could be taken on the model regulations during the period of alignment of the various international instruments dealing with the transport of dangerous goods and pending the implementation of the globally harmonized system for the classification and labelling of chemicals in accordance with Agenda 21 objectives. The Committee adopted a programme of work for the 1999-2000 biennium, with an item on the future evolution of the model regulations, including the rationalized development of the regulations and the periodicity of amendments thereto.

In 1999, the Committee's Subcommittee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods held its sixteenth (Geneva, 5-14 July) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.3/32 & Add.1,2] and seventeenth (Geneva, 6-15 December) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.3/34 & Add.1,2] sessions, while the Committee itself was scheduled to meet again in 2000.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July [meeting 46], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods [E/1999/43], adopted resolution 1999/62 without vote [agenda item 13 (g)].

Work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1995/6 of 19 July 1995 and 1997/3 of 18 July 1997,

Bearing in mind the increasing volume of dangerous goods in worldwide commerce and the rapid expansion of technology and innovation,

Bearing in mind also the continuing need to meet the growing concern for the protection of life, property and the environment through the safe transport of dangerous goods, while facilitating trade,

Aware that, in order to achieve internationally harmonized laws, the Economic Commission for Europe, the International Civil Aviation Organization, the International Maritime Organization and other specialized agencies and international organizations involved in activities related to the transport of dangerous goods and interested Member States have responded positively to the various resolutions adopted by the Council since 15 April 1953, and that, being committed to taking the recommendations of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods as a basis for the formulation of their requirements and regulations, including those concerning labelling and classification, those organizations therefore rely on the work of the Committee,

A. Work of the Committee of Experts during the biennium 1997-1998

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods during the biennium 1997-1998, in particular regarding:

(a) The adoption of new and amended provisions for inclusion in the Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods;

(b) The completion of the second step in the reformulating of the existing Recommendations into model regulations annexed to a basic recommendation, in particular:

- (i) The revision of provisions for the transport of dangerous goods in multimodal portable tanks;
- (ii) The inclusion of detailed packing instructions for transport in packagings, including intermediate bulk containers and large packagings;
- (iii) The inclusion, in cooperation with the International Atomic Energy Agency, of detailed provisions for the transport of radioactive material;

(c) The completion, pursuant to resolution 1995/6, of proposals for criteria for the classification of flammable, explosive and reactive materials, except for flammable aerosols, globally harmonized for various regulatory purposes, in cooperation with the International Labour Organization in the context of the implementation of chapter 19 of Agenda 21;

2. Commends the Secretary-General for the publication of the tenth revised edition of the Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods in all the official languages of the United Nations and for the publication of the second revised edition of the Manual of Tests and Criteria in Arabic and Chinese;

3. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To circulate the new and amended recommendations to the Governments of Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and other international organizations concerned;

(b) To publish an eleventh revised version of the Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods, as amended, and a third revised edition of the Manual of Tests and Criteria, in all the official languages of the United Nations, in the most cost-effective manner, no later than the end of 1999;

(c) To envisage means of publishing the Recommendations on CD-ROM, if possible as a navigable version, for example, by commercial arrangement with external contractors;

4. Invites all Governments, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the other international organizations concerned to transmit to the Secretary-General their views on the work of the Committee, together with any comments that they may wish to make on the amended recommendations;

5. Invites all interested Governments, regional commissions and specialized agencies and the international organizations concerned, when developing or updating appropriate codes and regulations, to take full account of the recommendations of the Committee, in particular those referred to in paragraph 1 (b) above, including as regards the structure and format of such codes and regulations;

B. Programme of work for the biennium 1999-2000

6. Approves the programme of work of the Committee and its Subcommittee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods for the biennium 1999-2000, as follows:

(a) Development of provisions for the transport of gases in gas cylinders and multiple-element gas containers;

(b) Review of provisions concerning documentation on the transport of dangerous goods;

(c) Follow-up to chapter 19 of Agenda 21 as regards harmonization of classification and labelling of chemicals, including development of criteria for the classification of flammable aerosols, in cooperation with the International Labour Organization, and implementation of already agreed criteria through the model regulations on the transport of dangerous goods;

(d) Miscellaneous amendments to the model regulations (listing and classification, explosives, lithium batteries, limited quantities, packaging issues, portable tank issues, consignment procedures, segregation) and to the Manual of Tests and Criteria;

(e) Development of new provisions for the transport of solid substances in bulk in tanks and freight containers;

(f) Evolution of the model regulations (rationalized development of the model regulations and periodicity of amendments);

C. Periodicity of amendments to the
Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods

7. Takes note of the advice of the Committee that:

(a) No firm decision as regards a possible future four-year periodicity of amendments should be taken during the period of alignment of the format of the various legal instruments concerning modal aspects of the transport of dangerous goods on that of the model regulations, and pending decisions regarding the implementation of the globally harmonized system of classification and labelling of chemicals in accordance with the objectives of Agenda 21;

(b) A new revised version of the Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods should be published in 2001 after the session of the Committee in 2000;

8. Notes with satisfaction that this issue has been included in the programme of work of the Committee for the next biennium, for discussion, together with the question of the evolution of the model regulations in the long term;

D. Report to the Council

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Council in 2001 on the implementation of the present resolution.

Committee membership

By a February note [E/1999/5], the Secretary-General informed the Economic and Social Council that he had received an application from the Czech Republic for full membership in the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods. He approved the application and requested the Council's endorsement.

By decision 1999/217 of 6 May, the Council endorsed the Secretary-General's approval of the application of the Czech Republic for full membership in the Committee.

Reconfiguration of Committee of Experts

By a June note [E/1999/90], the Secretary-General brought to the Economic and Social Council's attention a 12 January letter from the President of the Intergovernmental Forum on Chemical Safety on the reconfiguration of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods. The reconfiguration had been discussed in the Committee of Experts (see p. 905), which had recommended to the Council a draft resolution on the matter.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1999/286 of 30 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the June note by the Secretary-General on the reconfiguration of the Committee of Experts. On the same date, the Council, by decision 1999/289, deferred to a subsequent session consideration of the draft resolution on the reconfiguration of the Committee of Experts contained in the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Committee of Experts [E/1999/43].

On 26 October [meeting 48], the Council, on the recommendation of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods [E/1999/43], adopted resolution 1999/65 without vote [agenda item 13 (g)].

Reconfiguration of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods into a Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1995/6 of 19 July 1995 on the role of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods in the development of a harmonized system of classification and labelling of chemicals for implementing the recommendations of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development contained in chapter 19 of Agenda 21,

Recalling also section B of its resolution 1997/3 of 18 July 1997 whereby global harmonization of systems of classification and labelling of chemicals, inter alia, was given priority in the work programme of the Committee for the biennium 1997-1998,

Noting with satisfaction that the Committee, in cooperation with the International Labour Organization, has completed the elaboration of proposals for classification criteria for physical hazards, except for the flammability of aerosols, on which work will continue into the next biennium,

Aware that the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development, as focal point for health hazards and hazards to the environment, has also completed most of its tasks with respect to the classification criteria and has established a working group for criteria on mixtures, and that the International Labour Organization has established a working group for harmonization of chemical hazard communication systems,

Aware also that the Committee, the International Labour Organization and the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development, as focal points designated by the Coordinating Group for the Harmonization of Chemical Classification Systems of the Inter-Organization Programme for the Sound Management of Chemicals, are expected to make available, through their cooperative efforts, by the year 2000, a globally harmonized hazard classification and compatible labelling system, including material safety data sheets and easily understandable symbols, in accordance with the objectives of paragraph 19.27 of chapter 19 of Agenda 21,

Noting that the Coordinating Group has prepared proposals for the implementation of the globally harmonized system, consisting in reconfiguring the present Committee and extending its mandate to cover not only transport of dangerous goods but also implementation and updating of the globally harmonized system,

Noting also that those proposals were endorsed by the Inter-sessional Group of the Intergovernmental Forum on Chemical Safety at its third meeting, held at Yokohama, Japan, from 1 to 4 December 1998, at which it requested that the Coordinating Group develop draft terms of reference, in cooperation with the Committee,

Noting further that the Committee agreed to the proposals of the Coordinating Group, subject to certain conditions, and that draft terms of reference have been developed, accordingly, by the Group,

Recognizing that reconfiguring the Committee in accordance with those proposals would be the most cost-effective and efficient option for the implementation of the globally harmonized system, ensuring at the same time cooperation between various authorities and organizations concerned with the sound management of chemicals, harmonization between various regulatory systems and facilitation of trade,

1. Decides to reconfigure, as from 2001, the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and its Subcommittee into a Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals, with one Subcommittee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and a second Subcommittee of Experts on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals, with terms of reference and arrangements as described in the annex to the present resolution, and provided that the total meeting time does not exceed that currently allocated to the work of the Committee in a biennium;

2. Invites the reconfigured Committee and the Subcommittee on the Globally Harmonized System to endeavour, whenever possible, to work on a consensus basis;

3. Invites Member States interested in participating in the Subcommittee on the Globally Harmonized System to apply for membership at the latest by the end of 2000 so that the composition of the Subcommittee and of the reconfigured Committee may be decided at the organizational session for 2001 of the Council;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide, not later than 1 January 2001, adequate resources to the Transport Division of the Economic Commission for Europe and plan sessions of the Subcommittees and the reconfigured Committee for 2001 and 2002, as appropriate, in accordance with the arrangements outlined in the annex to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Draft terms of reference and working arrangements for the biennium 2001-2002 of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals and the Subcommittee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and the Subcommittee of Experts on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals

1. Draft terms of reference

1.1 Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals

The Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals shall deal with strategic issues rather than technical issues. It is not envisaged that it will review, change or revisit technical recommendations of the Subcommittee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and the Subcommittee of Experts on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals. Accordingly, its main functions shall be:

(a) To approve the programmes of work for the Subcommittees in the light of available resources;

(b) To coordinate strategic and policy directions in areas of shared interests and overlap;

(c) To give formal endorsement to the recommendations of the Subcommittees and provide the mechanism for channelling them to the Economic and Social Council;

(d) To facilitate and coordinate the smooth running of the Subcommittees.

1.2 Subcommittee of Experts on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals

The functions of the Subcommittee of Experts on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals shall be:

(a) To act as custodian of the globally harmonized system of classification and labelling of chemicals, managing and giving direction to the harmonization process;

(b) To keep the system up to date, as necessary, considering the need to introduce changes to ensure its continued relevance and practical utility, and determining the need for and timing of the updating of technical criteria, while working with existing bodies, as appropriate;

(c) To promote understanding and use of the system and encourage feedback;

(d) To make the system available for worldwide use and application;

(e) To make guidance available on the application of the system and on the interpretation and use of technical criteria to support consistency of application;

(f) To prepare programmes of work and submit recommendations to the Committee.

1.3 Subcommittee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods

The Subcommittee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods replaces the existing Committee and its Subcommittee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods with the same terms of reference.

2. Working arrangements for the biennium 2001-2002

The total number of meeting days shall not exceed that currently allocated to the Committee and its Subcommittee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods, namely, thirty-eight, with a maximum of three days for the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals and ten days for the Subcommittee of Experts on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals (to be arranged by the secretariat after consultation with the Committee and the Coordinating Group for the Harmonization of Chemical Classification Systems of the Inter-Organization Programme for the Sound Management of Chemicals).

UNCTAD institutional and organizational questions

UNCTAD programme

In 1999, the Trade and Development Board (TDB)—the executive body of UNCTAD—held five sessions, all in Geneva: the twentieth (5 February), twenty-first (1 July) and twenty-second (15 October) executive sessions and the forty-sixth regular session (18-29 October) [A/54/15/Rev.1], as well as the first part of the twenty-third executive session (17 December) [A/55/15 (Part I)]. In February, the Board discussed the draft provisional agenda for UNCTAD X (2000) (see p. 912); the report of the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget on its thirty-third session [TD/B/46/2]; and the outcome of the 1998 "Partners for Development" summit [YUN 1998, p. 882]. In July, it considered UNCTAD's contribution to the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s (NADAF): UNCTAD's activities in favour of Africa (see p. 847); preparations for UNCTAD X; and the report of the Joint Advisory Group on ITC on its thirty-second session (see p. 880). In October, TDB took note of the reports of its subsidiary bodies, and of an UNCTAD report on financing and on the participation of experts in UNCTAD expert meetings (see p. 909). It discussed the preparations for the review by UNCTAD X of the lists of States annexed to General Assembly resolution 1995(XIX) [YUN 1964, p. 210], and the designation of NGOs for the purposes of rule 77 of TDB's rules of procedure. It also reviewed the functioning of the Intergovernmental Groups of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting and on Competition Law and Policy (see p. 903).

In October, the Board discussed interdependence and global economic issues from a trade and development perspective: trade, growth and external financing in developing countries; and adopted agreed conclusions on progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action for LDCs for the 1990s and the status of the preparatory process for the Third United Nations Conference on LDCs [agreed conclusions 457(XLVI)] (see p. 770); and on UNCTAD's contribution to the implementation of NADAF: African transport infrastructure, trade and competitiveness [458(XLVI)] (see p. 848). It also took action on the preparatory process for UNCTAD X: establishment of the Committee of the Whole; on technical cooperation activities; and on other trade and development issues. In December, the Board noted that the Preparatory Committee of the Whole for UNCTAD X had not completed its work. The Board would therefore reconvene in January 2000.

By decision 54/441 of 22 December, the General Assembly took note of TDB's report on its nineteenth [YUN 1998, p. 909], twentieth, twenty-first and twenty-second executive sessions.

UNCTAD activities 1998-1999

The Report on UNCTAD Activities 1998-1999 [UNCTAD/EDM/15], the first of its kind, provided member States and other stakeholders with a comprehensive account of the organization's activities. The report covered issues relating to: UNCTAD and UN reform; working with UN partners and other multilateral agencies; working with civil society and the private sector; development strategies; international trade; investment, technology and enterprise development; assisting LDCs and weak and vulnerable economies; helping economies in transition join the global system; services infrastructure for development and trade efficiency; and international transport.

Technical cooperation activities

In an August report [TD/B/46/3 & Add.1,2], the UNCTAD Secretary-General gave an overview of technical cooperation activities in 1998, when UNCTAD's expenditures amounted to $21.8 million, a decrease of some 7 per cent from the previous year. Of that amount, $6 million was financed by UNDP, $15.2 million was from trust fund contributions and $0.6 million was from the regular programme of technical cooperation. Funding provided by UNDP and trust funds declined in 1998, in roughly similar proportions.

By region, approximately $5.9 million went to Africa, $4.2 million to Asia and the Pacific, $3.2 million to Europe and $0.9 million to Latin America and the Caribbean. Some $7.6 million went to the interregional programme. The LDCs' share of technical cooperation expenditures in 1998 was 37.6 per cent, down from about 40 per cent in 1997.

By programme, the Division for Services Infrastructure for Development and Trade Efficiency accounted for 52.1 per cent of total expenditures; the three other divisions, on International Trade in Goods and Services, and Commodities, on Globalization and Development Strategies and on Investment, Technology and Enterprise Development, represented respectively 13.6, 14.1 and 13.4 per cent of total expenditures. The balance (6.9 per cent) was represented by the Office of the Special Coordinator for Least Developed, Landlocked and Island Developing Countries (2 per cent) and by activities reported for the secretariat as a whole (4.9 per cent).

In October [A/54/15/Rev.1], TDB took note of the overview of technical cooperation activities, of the oral report of the Chairperson of the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget (see p. 910), and of the fact that technical cooperation issues not resolved by the Working Party should be taken up by the Committee of the Whole.

As requested by the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget at its thirty-third session (see p. 910), the UNCTAD secretariat, in February, submitted the revised technical cooperation plan for 1999-2001 [TD/B/EX(20)/3]. The plan was intended to implement the UNCTAD Technical Cooperation Strategy [YUN 1997, p. 959]; inform delegations, cooperating organizations and other interested parties of the UNCTAD operational activities in 1998, of those approved for 1999 and subsequent years, and of those proposed by the secretariat for 1999-2001; facilitate discussions with potential donors on the mobilization of the necessary extrabudgetary resources to implement the plan; and serve as the secretariat's monitoring tool. On 5 February [A/54/15/Rev.1], TDB took note of the revised plan.

Participation of developing country experts in UNCTAD meetings

In response to a 1998 TDB request [YUN 1998, p. 911], the UNCTAD Secretary-General submitted a September report on the financing and participation of experts in UNCTAD expert meetings [TD/B/EX(22)/2 & Corr.1]. The report stated that the main objective of the financing was to enhance the deliberations of expert meetings by increasing the participation of developing country experts, and that $1,088,000 had been allocated for that purpose from a trust fund that was partly financed from savings resulting from improved cost-effectiveness [YUN 1998, p. 911]. In its financial summary, the report stated that, against that allocation, total expenditures amounted to $511,000. It concluded that the positive impact of the increased participation of developing country experts in UNCTAD expert meetings was confirmed by the experience under the "savings" exercise, and that the secretariat had made the utmost efforts to ensure satisfactory geographical balance; however, representation of LDCs could be improved.

TDB, in October [A/54/15/Rev.1], took note of the report and requested its President to undertake consultations on financing the participation of experts in UNCTAD meetings and on the use of the unspent balance of the funds allocated for that purpose.

Savings resulting from improved cost-effectiveness

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/3 [YUN 1998, p. 912], the Secretary-General submitted an October report on the status of implementation by UNCTAD of the activities financed from the unspent balance from the regular budget for the 1996-1997 biennium, and of the extent to which those activities and the related resources contributed to strengthening UNCTAD [A/54/501]. He also provided an analysis of savings resulting from the improved overall cost-effectiveness achieved pursuant to UNCTAD IX [YUN 1996, p. 845], as requested in Assembly resolutions 51/167 [ibid., p. 847], 52/220 [YUN 1997, p. 1421] and 53/3 [YUN 1998, p. 912]. The report indicated that expenditures of $3,988,800, out of the total authorized allocation of $5,526,600, had been incurred as at 30 September. Regarding the notional reduction of $2 million in conference-servicing requirements attributable to the restructuring of the intergovernmental machinery, it stated that changes introduced by UNCTAD IX resulted in a reduction of 526 meeting units in 1998-1999, which would amount to a reduction of $2 million for that biennium compared to 1994-1995.

ACABQ, in December [A/54/7/Add.3], stated that expenditures as at 15 November totalled $4,403,135, and that further funds would be committed between 16 November and 31 December, leaving an unspent balance of approximately $1 million in the special account set up to handle those funds. The Committee recommended that, on an exceptional basis, the special account be maintained and the unspent balance retained until all the activities and programmes outlined in the Secretary-General's May 1998 report [YUN 1998, p. 911] and approved by resolution 53/3 were completed.

By resolution 54/251, section XIV, of 23 December, the Assembly took note of the information provided in the report of the Secretary-General and concurred with ACABQ's recommendations.

Publications policy

In its progress report on the implementation of UNCTAD's publication policy [TD/B/WP/114] since its first such report in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 912], the UNCTAD secretariat stated that the Publications Committee, which was charged with implementing the policy, had launched the preparatory process for the 2000-2001 programme. The draft programme had been distributed to member States in the form of a questionnaire. By making the proposed publications programme available in advance of the January 1999 session of the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget (see below), the questionnaire had facilitated the task of that body by allowing experts located in capitals to be consulted. During the preparatory process, programme managers were informed about the new UN guidelines on attribution of authorship; some progress was made in the area of electronic publishing; and the use of the Internet for dissemination of documentation was enhanced.

Medium-term plan and programme budget

The UNCTAD Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget held two sessions in 1999, both in Geneva.

At its thirty-third session (25-29 January) [TD/B/46/2], the Working Party reviewed the draft programme of work for the 2000-2001 biennium [UNCTAD/ISS/Misc.200/Rev.1] and recommended that UNCTAD strengthen the capacity to provide timely global macroeconomic analysis, if necessary through redeploying resources; ensure that the financial and human resources available to the Office of the Special Coordinator for the Least Developed, Landlocked and Island Developing Countries were identical to those in the 1998-1999 programme budget, and that LDCs had priority in UNCTAD assistance; ensure that poverty alleviation and employment generation were fully taken into account; ensure that the gender dimension of development was included; and enable the Working Party to meet in resumed session to examine section 11A (on UNCTAD) of the proposed programme budget of the Secretary-General of the United Nations for the 2000-2001 biennium (see p. 1288).

The Working Party considered the implementation of UNCTAD's publications policy and encouraged the secretariat to ensure timely dissemination of the flagship reports in all official languages; devise additional methods to ensure participation and feedback from member States; and improve the use of electronic dissemination of publications. It also stressed the need for suitable pricing of sales publications in order to ensure wide dissemination, and the monitoring of sales and requests in order to assess their usefulness.

In accordance with a 1998 TDB decision [YUN 1998, p. 910], the Working Party reviewed proposals for partial cost recovery for selected UNCTAD technical cooperation programmes (ACIS, ASYUDA and DMFAS) and adopted conclusions on their financial sustainability, which, it agreed, would be based on: programme budget resources; programme support resources; extrabudgetary resources from donors; and annual maintenance fees. It also agreed that the arrangements for annual maintenance fees required further consideration prior to their introduction and, to that end, the secretariat was asked to refine the calculations on which the level of maintenance fees would be based, by undertaking, on a pilot basis, cost accounting for each programme in order to assess the actual level and composition of central costs incurred by the secretariat, including in the provision of maintenance services. The Working Party requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to provide TDB with an evaluation of possibilities for increasing the budgetary resources allocated to those programmes, as well as information on the percentage of programme support resources to be allocated to them. It also agreed to review arrangements for annual maintenance fees three years after their introduction, and that such arrangements should not create any precedent for other technical cooperation activities. It appealed to donors that had supported the central support teams to continue and invited other potential donors to consider providing similar support.

In agreed conclusions on the in-depth evaluation of the Trade Point Programme [TD/B/WP/110 & Add.1], the Working Party invited the secretariat to prepare a strategy for its further consideration. The strategy should contain proposals on the financial and technical feasibility of the implementation of the recommendations contained in the evaluation and, in that context, the secretariat should prepare a comprehensive report detailing the activities undertaken to implement various mandates entrusted to it since the inception of the Programme. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was invited to convene a meeting of Trade Point managers and end-users on the proposals to be made by the secretariat regarding the implementation of the evaluation's recommendations, and to advise on future actions aimed at enhancing programme delivery, especially with regard to assistance to be provided to the Trade Points.

The Working Party also took note of UNCTAD's technical cooperation plan for 1999-2001 [YUN 1998, p. 910], and requested the secretariat to revise it, taking into account comments made by delegations, for transmission to TDB in February.

In February [A/54/15/Rev.1], TDB took note of the Working Party's proposals for the draft programme of work for 2000-2001 and invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to take them into account. It also endorsed the Working Party's agreed conclusions on financial sustainability of selected technical cooperation programmes and its conclusions on the in-depth evaluation of the Trade Point Programme. In July, TDB took note of the information provided on annual maintenance fees for selected UNCTAD technical cooperation programmes, and requested the Working Party to consider the matter at its thirty-fourth session.

At its thirty-fourth session (27 September-1 October) [TD/B/46/9], the Working Party had before it a review of UNCTAD technical cooperation activities [TD/B/46/3 & Add.1,2]; an evaluation of the programme of technical cooperation activities on competition law and policy [TD/B/WP/119 & Add.1]; the follow-up to the evaluation of the Trade Point Programme: Trade Point Programme strategy [TD/B/WP/120 & Add.1]; a report on activities undertaken to implement various mandates for the Trade Point Programme since its inception [TD/B/WP/121 & Corr.1]; and information on follow-up action pursuant to the recommendations in the evaluation and implementation of the agreed conclusions of its thirty-third session [TD/B/WP/122]. With regard to the evaluation of the programme of technical cooperation activities on competition law and policy, the Working Party requested the secretariat to implement the recommendations contained therein, taking into consideration the comments made by the Working Party. Regarding the follow-up to the evaluation of the Trade Point Programme, it invited the secretariat to explore options for a suitable non-profit organization to manage the Electronic Trade Opportunity system, and to implement the Trade Point Programme strategy in close cooperation with ITC, taking into consideration the comments made by the Working Party; it also agreed that the implementation of the strategy would be reviewed annually within UNCTAD's intergovernmental machinery.

OIOS investigation

In response to General Assembly resolution 48/218 B [YUN 1994, p. 1362], the Secretary-General submitted a September report by the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on its investigation into allegations concerning an electronic commerce project at UNCTAD [A/54/413]. OIOS had received reports of illegal exportation and improper retention of intellectual property by a Melbourne (Australia)-based project of UNCTAD responsible for Trade Points and related electronic commerce initiatives, known as the United Nations Trade Point Development Centre (UNTPDC). Investigators uncovered serious problems with the project, including unauthorized solicitation of funds and resources; the entering of unauthorized commercial agreements with private sector interests; private sector interests engaged in unauthorized activities for the UN-sponsored project; a failure of supervision of the project; and its expansion into commercial agreements and electronic transactions without notification of or authorization by UNCTAD senior management.

The investigation concluded that, while the aim of involving the private sector in the UNTPDC project to assist in the development of secured electronic commercial transactions for developing countries was a sound concept, it had been sabotaged by the utilization of unauthorized foundations and the involvement of non-UN staff.

It was recommended that UNCTAD management evaluate the goals and status of UNTPDC and set forth clear goals and responsibilities, and that the United Nations decide how it would interact with the private sector, mindful of competing interests.

The Secretary-General took note of the findings and concurred with the recommendations, also noting that measures were already being initiated to correct the issues addressed.

Preparations for UNCTAD X

In February [A/54/15/Rev.1], TDB approved the substantive agenda item, and the annotation to it, for UNCTAD X, to be held in Bangkok, Thailand, in February 2000: "Developmental strategies in an increasingly interdependent world: applying the lessons of the past to make globalization an effective instrument for the development of all countries and all people". It requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to complete the draft provisional agenda for UNCTAD X with the normal procedural items and issue it to all delegations. In a May note [TD/379] containing the provisional agenda and annotations, the UNCTAD secretariat stated that UNCTAD X should provide member States with an opportunity to review the major international economic initiatives and developments, particularly those that had taken place since UNCTAD IX [YUN 1996, p. 844]. UNCTAD should consider the strategies and policies that were most likely to ensure the successful integration of all countries, particularly the developing countries, into the world economy on an equitable basis and to avoid the risk of further marginalization.

At its twenty-second executive session in October [A/54/15/Rev.1], TDB, discussing the preparations for the review by UNCTAD X of the lists of States annexed to General Assembly resolution 1995(XIX) [YUN 1964, p. 210], noted that nine UNCTAD member States had not yet applied for inclusion in any of those lists. It further noted that Kiribati, Nauru and Tonga had been admitted to UN membership and therefore automatically became UNCTAD members. At its forty-sixth session, also in October, TDB established an open-ended Committee of the Whole to elaborate the substantive pre-Conference text for transmittal to UNCTAD X and to consider other relevant matters necessary as part of the preparatory process. It took note of the fact that the Committee had set a timetable of work with a view to reporting to the Board in December. In December, TDB was informed that the Preparatory Committee of the Whole had not been able to complete its work on the pre-Conference text for UNCTAD X.

The Ninth Ministerial Meeting of the Group of 77 developing countries and China convened in Marrakesh, Morocco, from 13 to 16 September [A/54/392] in preparation for UNCTAD X, and adopted the Marrakesh Declaration. In October, the UNCTAD secretariat transmitted to TDB the Plan of Action [TD(X)/PC/4] and the draft Bangkok Consensus [TD(X)/PC/5], as reviewed by the Preparatory Committee of the Group of 77 in the light of the Marrakesh ministerial decision, to be transmitted to the Preparatory Committee of the Whole for consideration as the basis for the pre-Conference text of UNCTAD X. The secretariat also circulated the guidelines for the participation of the EU in UNCTAD X [TD(X)/PC/6], which outlined the basic position to be followed by the EU at the Conference.

Among meetings held in preparation for UNCTAD X during 1999 were: the Pre-UNCTAD X Seminar on the Role of Competition Policy for Development in Globalizing World Markets (Geneva, 14-15 June) [TD(X)/PC/1]; the Pre-UNCTAD X Workshop on Exchange of Experiences among Enterprises in the Area of Electronic Commerce (Geneva, 17-18 June) [TD(X)/PC/3]; the Pre-UNCTAD X Expert Workshop on Trade, Sustainable Development and Gender (Geneva, 12-13 July) [TD(X)/PC/2]; and the Pre-UNCTAD X Seminar on Making FDI Work for Sustainable Development (Geneva, 15 November) [TD(X)/PC/7].

UNCTAD Secretary-General

By decision 53/321 of 18 February, the General Assembly, on the proposal of the Secretary-General [A/53/799], confirmed the extension of the appointment of Rubens Ricupero as Secretary-General of UNCTAD for another term of office of four years, beginning on 15 September 1999 and expiring on 14 September 2003.

Chapter V

Regional, economic and social activities

In 1999, the five UN regional commissions continued efforts to promote the economic and social development of the countries in their areas. Four of them met for regular sessions during the year at their headquarters: the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia); the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) (Bangkok, Thailand); the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) (Geneva); and the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) (Beirut, Lebanon). The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC), located in Santiago, Chile, did not meet in 1999, having held its most recent session in 1998. In observance of its twenty-fifth anniversary, ESCWA adopted the Beirut Declaration as a new vision of the Commission's role and tasks, which was endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in July.

Each regional commission held hearings in preparation for the Millennium Assembly and Summit in 2000 and made proposals for strengthening the United Nations and ensuring its continued relevance in the twenty-first century.

The Council endorsed ECA's programme of work for 2000-2001 and adopted agreed conclusions on the coordinated follow-up by the UN system of initiatives on African development. It urged the UN system, among others, to participate in the International Partnership against AIDS in Africa to achieve its goals and objectives.

The Council also endorsed the changes to ESCWA's 1998-1999 programme of work and the action taken for the transfer of its permanent headquarters to Beirut.

Regional cooperation

Efforts continued in 1999 to strengthen the regional commissions within the context of the restructuring of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields and as part of the programme of reform. On 2 February (decision 1999/203), the Economic and Social Council decided to consider at its substantive session, under the item entitled "Regional cooperation", the question of "Economic and social issues arising out of the Asian economic crisis: regional perspective".

Meeting of executive secretaries. The executive secretaries of the regional commissions, meeting in New York on 14 January and in Beirut, Lebanon, on 29 May, reviewed development issues as they related to their respective regions and that warranted cooperation among the commissions and with other bodies and programmes. They took stock of progress achieved and measures taken at the secretariat level to coordinate the work of the regional commissions with that of other parts of the Organization. The executive secretaries noted that their representation at the United Nations Development Group (UNDG) facilitated the active involvement of the commissions in the common country assessment and United Nations Development Assistance Framework process (see PART THREE, Chapter II). As to the regional commissions' relations with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the executive secretaries believed that although UNDP's role as a funder had been de-emphasized, new opportunities should be sought for a closer working relationship and cooperation on establishing regional and subregional priorities, joint initiatives on core issues at the regional level, jointly undertaking flagship projects, and interregional projects involving UNDP and two or more regional commissions with UNDP funding.

The executive secretaries suggested that the Economic and Social Council might further consider ways to improve interaction with the inter-governmental bodies of the regional commissions. They suggested the participation of chairpersons or members of the bureaux of the regional commissions at Council sessions whenever the commissions' agendas were relevant to its deliberations, and the participation of executive secretaries at the Council's organizational sessions.

On 21 July, the Council held a dialogue with the executive secretaries of the regional commissions.

Review and reform of the regional commissions

Reports of Secretary-General. In a June report [E/1999/14], the Secretary-General updated the Economic and Social Council on action taken by the regional commissions with respect to the guidance given for improving the commissions' contributions to and relevance in the UN reform process as contained in Council resolution 1998/46 [YUN 1998, p. 1262]. The report discussed the role of the regional commissions as UN outposts and as the regional expression of the United Nations, as well as measures undertaken by them to consolidate reform and achieve greater effectiveness and efficiency. It also examined trends and activities, interregional cooperation and the report of the executive secretaries (see p. 913).

In an addendum to his report [E/1999/14/Add.1], the Secretary-General reviewed cooperation between the regional commissions and other regional bodies in their respective regions. A second addendum [E/1999/14/Add.2] provided information on the work of the regional commissions in normative and operational activities and follow-up activities to global conferences. A third addendum [E/1999/14/Add.3] contained resolutions and decisions adopted at recent sessions of the regional commissions calling for action by the Council.

Communication. On 17 May [A/54/97-E/1999/52], Armenia transmitted the Yerevan Declaration on Decentralization, adopted at the international conference on the theme "Decentralization in Eastern and Central Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS): conditions of success" (Yerevan, Armenia, 26-28 April).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1999/273 of 28 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's reports on regional cooperation (see above) and the summaries of the survey of the economic and social situation in Africa, 1998 [E/1999/16]; the economic survey of Europe, 1998 [E/1999/15]; the economic survey of Latin America and the Caribbean, 1998 [E/1999/18]; the economic and social survey of Asia and the Pacific, 1999 [E/1999/17]; the survey of economic and social developments in the ESCWA region, 1998-1999 [E/1999/19]; and the Secretary-General's note on the project for a Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar [E/1999/20].

The Council also adopted resolutions on the programme of work and priorities of ECA for the 2000-2001 biennium (1999/39); change of name of Macao to Macau, China, in the terms of reference of ESCAP (1999/38); frequency of sessions of the sectoral committees of ESCWA (1999/41); redesignation of ESCWA's Technical Committee (1999/42); changes in ESCWA's programme of work and priorities for the 1998-1999 biennium (1999/43); ESCWA's relocation to its permanent headquarters in Beirut (1999/44); and the Beirut Declaration on Western Asia preparing for the twenty-first century (1999/45). (The summaries of the surveys and the resolutions are covered in the relevant sections of this chapter.)

Africa

The Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) held its thirty-third session/twenty-fourth meeting of the Conference of Ministers/Seventh Conference of African Ministers of Finance (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 6-8 May), with the theme "The challenges of financing development in Africa" [E/1999/38].

Panel discussions were held on policy reforms and aid effectiveness, and on the African debt situation. In addition, a ministerial policy debate took place on the economic and social situation and challenges of financing development in Africa, based on the Economic Report on Africa, 1999 [E/ECA/CM.24/3]. At the end of the meeting, the Joint Conference adopted a Ministerial Statement.

The Conference was preceded by the nineteenth meeting of the Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole/seventh Meeting of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts (Addis Ababa, 30 April-4 May) [E/ECA/CM.24/9], which discussed the Conference theme, the current economic and social situation in Africa, the report on the work of the Commission 1996-1998 [E/ECA/CM.24/4], coordination and collaboration among UN agencies at the regional and subregional levels in Africa, rationalization and harmonization of ECA-sponsored institutions [E/ECA/CM.24/6] and the proposed 2000-2001 work programme of ECA [E/ECA/CM.24/7].

The Conference of Ministers adopted the Technical Preparatory Committee's report [E/ECA/CM.24/8], including the resolutions contained therein.

ECA organized the African regional hearings (Addis Ababa, 24-25 June) for the Millennium Assembly of the United Nations in 2000 [A/54/281] (see p. 563). The hearings reviewed and assessed UN institutional weaknesses in order to identify challenges to the region that should form part of the overall vision of the United Nations in the twenty-first century.

Economic and social trends

Economic trends

According to the summary of the ECA survey of the economic and social situation in Africa, 1999 [E/2000/12], Africa's economy grew an estimated 3.2 per cent, barely improving the previous year's modest performance of 3.1 per cent. However, at the country level, in contrast to previous experience, no country posted negative gross domestic product (GDP) in 1999 and only one economy grew at a rate of less than 1 per cent. GDP growth rates ranged between 1 and 10 per cent, with Mozambique and Equatorial Guinea having the strongest economic performance. At the subregional level, East and Southern Africa enjoyed higher growth in 1999 than in 1998, while the other three subregions experienced lower growth rates. East Africa's aggregate growth rate rose from 2.6 per cent in 1998 to 4.1 per cent in 1999, while Southern Africa improved its performance from 1.7 to 2.2 per cent. In North Africa, average growth declined from 4.4 to 3.6 per cent and in West and Central Africa from 3.6 to 3.3 per cent and from 5 to 4.5 per cent, respectively. The five largest economies in Africa (Algeria, Egypt, Morocco, Nigeria, South Africa) posted a growth rate of 2.8 per cent, while the 11 oil-exporting economies marginally improved their 1998 performance by 0.1 per cent, reaching 3.7 per cent in 1999. The least developed African countries showed dynamic GDP growth, increasing the 1998 rate by 0.2 percentage points, to reach 4.5 per cent.

At the sectoral level, growth rates declined in agriculture (from 3.5 per cent in 1998 to 2.1 per cent in 1999) and in the industrial sector (from 3.2 per cent to 2.8 per cent). On the other hand, the growth rate in the service sector increased by 1 percentage point, to reach 4 per cent in 1999, with the financial and communications services the lead performers.

Agricultural performance was mixed across the region; growth decelerated in North Africa but increased in West Africa. In Central Africa, performance was restrained due to civil unrest, political instability and pest infestation, while output declined in East and Southern Africa as a result of erratic rainfall, war and uncontrolled crop pests. The poor performance of agriculture, aggravated by population displacements due to political instability, exposed nearly 20 million people to critical food shortages, requiring emergency food assistance.

The terms of trade declined by nearly 6 per cent in 1999, as the unit value of exports fell by more than 3 per cent and the unit price of imports rose by more than 2 per cent. The value of exports increased by 2.4 per cent, due to a 6 per cent increase in the volume of goods exported. Imports increased in value by 4 per cent and in volume by 1.4 per cent.

The balance of trade registered export earnings of $101 billion, an increase of 2.4 per cent over 1998. The current account balance deteriorated further, increasing to $21 billion, a 13 per cent increase from 1998. External resource flows rose from $16 billion in 1998 to $22 billion in 1999. Foreign direct investment amounted to about $6 billion, while $7 billion came in as transfers. Borrowing totalled $8.4 billion, an increase of nearly 45 per cent over 1998. The volume of debt rose from $351 billion in 1998 to $359 billion in 1999. Debt servicing increased from $35.7 billion in 1998 to $39.4 billion in 1999.

Policy implications

Following a long period of experimentation, the policy community seemed to be gravitating towards a consensus on development policies for Africa. The World Bank's Comprehensive Development Framework (see PART SIX, Chapter VI) exemplified the new consensus. Africa's development strategy should be based on and target a participating approach; broad-based and equitable growth; savings and investment; investment in human capital; technological development; a trade and industrialization strategy; agriculture and rural development; environmental protection; integration into the global economy; aid and external debt; institutional structure and good governance; and the role of Governments and public policy.

Social trends

According to the summary of the economic and social situation, Africa was the poorest and least developed region of the world, the most technologically backward, the most indebted and the most ravaged by civil conflicts. Half of Africa's population lived in poverty, on an average of $0.83 per person per day. Malnutrition, disease, inadequate housing and unemployment were rampant. War and conflicts had affected 61 per cent of the African population since 1963, with East, Central and West Africa showing the highest percentage of affected populations. Poorer countries showed a considerably higher risk of civil war than richer countries. African countries tended to be the least free in the world, with repressive regimes still common and democracy still fragile.

Africa's population was neither healthy nor sufficiently schooled. More than 23 million Africans lived with HIV/AIDS, and almost 14 million had died. With more than 70 per cent of the world's total number of people living with HIV/AIDS, Africa's economy was seriously threatened by the pandemic. AIDS had reduced life expectancy by as much as 20 years in some hard-hit countries. Infant mortality rates were also higher due to AIDS, reversing the progress made in infant and child survival in many countries. In East and Southern Africa, those rates were nearly 70 per cent higher than normal. Other preventable diseases were all too prevalent, such as malaria and tuberculosis, further straining already depleted health budgets. The health disadvantages of African countries had a negative impact on wages and productivity.

As for the brain drain, thousands of African doctors, engineers and scientists were leaving the continent to search for better opportunities elsewhere.

On 8 May [E/1999/38 (dec. 832(XXXIII))], the Conference of Ministers, concerned with the devastating impact of the AIDS pandemic on Africa's socio-economic development prospects, requested the ECA Executive Secretary to work closely with the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS and co-sponsors of other institutions to gather, analyse and disseminate data on the economic impact of HIV to facilitate policy development and programme planning. It called on member States to increase efforts in the fight against AIDS, to make available adequate resources and involve all concerned sectors of the economy, interested parties and governmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and to be more open and intensify efforts in educating the general public about the pandemic.

The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1999/36 of 28 July, endorsed the International Partnership against HIV/AIDS in Africa and urged Governments, the UN system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to participate in the programme's activities.

Activities in 1999

In 1999, ECA's work was carried out under five subprogrammes: facilitating economic and social analysis; ensuring food security and sustainable development; strengthening development management; harnessing information for development; and promoting regional cooperation for development. The cross-cutting themes of promoting the advancement of women and capacity-building underpinned those subprogrammes.

Development policy and regional economic cooperation

African recovery and development

ECA continued to monitor implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 46/151 [YUN 1991, p. 397], and the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative on Africa, launched in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 832] (see pp. 847 and 848, respectively). It undertook several initiatives to promote economic cooperation and integration and to strengthen Africa's position in the global economy.

The key message from the Joint Conference of African Ministers of Finance and Ministers of Economic Development and Planning (Addis Ababa, 6-8 May), which discussed "The challenges of financing development in Africa", was that African countries needed to intensify efforts to mobilize domestic resources and boost economic efficiency and productivity in the utilization of scarce resources, not just to offset possible reduction in external resource flows but also to enhance Africa's attractiveness as a destination for international financial resource flows. At the same time, development partners had to support the region's political and economic reforms and maintain adequate flows of complementary external financial resources that were necessary to sustain Africa's recovery, growth, transformation and sustainable development.

On 8 May [E/1999/38 (dec. 831(XXXIII))], the Conference of Ministers, having considered the Economic Report on Africa, 1999 [E/ECA/CM.24/3], commended the secretariat on developing a set of indicators for measuring and evaluating short- and long-term economic performance and sustainability, and requested the Executive Secretary to provide member States with an explanatory note on the methodology and technical approaches used, to enable them to study the Report's findings and the proposed economic performance indicators, as well as refine and internalize them in their assessments, analysis and policy-making. He was asked to continue to refine the indicators developed in the report, in collaboration with member countries and the region's development partners. ECA called on other development partners to collaborate with member States and ECA on furthering the development of strategies to address Africa's socio-economic challenges, including those generated by conflicts and economic integration.

The Economic and Social Council, following consideration of the item "Development of Africa: implementation and coordinated follow-up by the UN system of initiatives on African development", adopted agreed conclusions 1999/2 on the subject (see p. 845).

Third Conference on LDCs (2001)

On 8 May [E/1999/38 (dec. 834(XXXIII))], the Conference of Ministers requested the Executive Secretary, in collaboration with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), to support African LDCs in preparing for the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, to be held in 2001 (see p. 769), at the country, regional and global levels. He was asked to ensure that ECA made substantive technical contributions to the Conference and its preparatory process. LDCs' bilateral, regional and multi-lateral development partners and UNDP were requested to provide assistance to LDCs to ensure a substantive and effective preparatory process at the country level. The Conference Secretary-General was asked to intensify efforts to mobilize resources for the participation of LDC representatives in the regional expert-level meetings, as well as those of the Intergovernmental Preparatory Committee and the Conference itself.

Information technology

ECA carried out a number of activities in the area of information and communication technologies for development, including implementation of the African Information Society Initiative (AISI), adopted by ECA in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 880]. Advisory services were provided on AISI, electronic technology and, to a limited extent, on statistics, geographical information systems and database management. Through the Partnership for Information and Communication Technologies in Africa, ECA developed partnerships with other institutions to ensure effective implementation of AISI. It worked with the global telecommunications private sector in organizing the Global Connectivity for Africa Conference (Marrakech, Morocco, May). Activities undertaken in statistical development were: an ad hoc expert group meeting on measures to improve intra-African trade statistics (4-8 October), and workshops for national census personnel (1-5 November) and on environmental statistics, indicators and accounting (5-11 November), all in Addis Ababa.

The ninth meeting of the Coordinating Committee of African Statistical Development (Addis Ababa, 24-26 June) reviewed ECA secretariat activities and considered the reports of the task force on monitoring the implementation of the Addis Ababa Plan of Action for Statistical Development in Africa in the 1990s [YUN 1991, p. 304]. ECA began a major study in 1999 entitled "ICT-SCAN", on the status of information and communication technologies for Africa. It organized the first African Development Forum (Addis Ababa, 24-28 October) on the theme "The challenge to Africa of globalization and the information age". Initiatives arising out of the meeting included a plan for a regional School Net Africa and African Distance Learning Programme; a telecentre network; the formation of a business-to-business network, the Alliance for African Business; and the formation of national action groups with the aim of preparing for the Global Knowledge Information Infrastructure.

The first meeting of the Committee on Development Information (Addis Ababa, 28 June-2 July), held under the theme "Harnessing information for development", made recommendations to enhance Africa's socio-economic development.

Transportation and communications

In the area of transport, ECA organized a special regional meeting of African Ministers Responsible for Civil Aviation (Yamoussoukro, Cote d'Ivoire, 9-14 November) to review and evaluate progress in implementing the Yamoussoukro Declaration on a New African Air Transport Policy [YUN 1988, p. 273]. Several studies were undertaken to address the impact of improved rural transport on women; liberalization of air traffic rights and the development of African air services; and privatization of ports and railways in selected countries. The three subregional port management associations were assisted in establishing in November the Pan African Association for Port Cooperation, a regional organization responsible for the development of port programmes and activities in Africa. ECA collaborated with the International Maritime Organization in introducing and implementing maritime port State and flag systems in Africa.

Europe-Africa permanent link

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/48 [YUN 1997, p. 970], the Secretary-General submitted an April report from the Executive Secretaries of ECA and ECE on a Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar [E/1999/20], which reviewed studies and activities carried out during 1997 and 1998. The Executive Secretaries reported that in 1997, stage two of the feasibility phase, "F2. Feasibility 2", began, which focused on deep drilling, construction cost estimates and traffic projections. A new stage, designated "F3. Investigation", was based on clarifying the geological problems encountered and extending knowledge of the Europe-Africa traffic system related to the project, with a view to better consolidating long-term traffic projections.

Activities in 1999 included a workshop on tunnel-boring costs (Rabat, Morocco, 22-24 April).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1999/37 without vote [draft: E/1999/L.27] [agenda item 10].

Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1982/57 of 30 July 1982, 1983/62 of 29 July 1983, 1984/75 of 27 July 1984, 1985/70 of 26 July 1985, 1987/69 of 8 July 1987, 1989/119 of 28 July 1989, 1991/74 of 26 July 1991, 1993/60 of 30 July 1993, 1995/48 of 27 July 1995 and 1997/48 of 22 July 1997,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 43/179 of 20 December 1988, by which the Assembly declared the period 1991-2000 the Second Transport and Communications Decade in Africa,

Referring to resolution 912(1989) adopted on 1 February 1989 by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe regarding measures to encourage the construction of a major traffic artery in southwestern Europe and to study thoroughly the possibility of a permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar,

Referring also to the Barcelona Declaration adopted at the Euro-Mediterranean Conference, held at Barcelona, Spain, in November 1995, and to the work programme annexed thereto, aimed at connecting the Mediterranean transport networks to the trans-European transport network so as to ensure their interoperability,

Referring further to the Lisbon Declaration adopted at the Conference on Transport in the Mediterranean, held at Lisbon in January 1997, and to the conclusions of the Pan-European Transport Conference, held at Helsinki in June 1997, on corridors in the Mediterranean incorporating the permanent link,

Taking note of the follow-up report prepared jointly by the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe in accordance with resolution 1997/48,

Taking note also of the conclusions of the second and third meetings of the Western Mediterranean Transport Group, held at Rabat in September 1995 and at Madrid in January 1997, respectively, which included the permanent link among the priority corridors in the extension of the trans-European network,

1. Welcomes the cooperation on the project for the link through the Strait of Gibraltar established between the Economic Commission for Africa, the Economic Commission for Europe, the Governments of Morocco and Spain and specialized international organizations;

2. Also welcomes the organization, under the auspices of the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe, by the International Tunnelling Association, of the workshop held at Rabat in April 1999 on costs of tunnels bored with tunnel-boring machines;

3. Further welcomes the progress achieved with project studies and especially the deep-sea drilling work, which has provided a decisive impetus to geological and geotechnical knowledge of undersea formations;

4. Commends the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe on the work done in preparing the project follow-up report requested by the Council in its resolution 1997/48, even though the necessary resources were not forthcoming from the General Assembly;

5. Renews its invitation to the competent organizations of the United Nations system, and to non-governmental organizations, including in particular the International Tunnelling Association and the International Union of Railways, to participate in the studies and work on the permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar;

6. Also renews its invitation to the European Commission to consider the possibility of participating in the consolidation of the studies and the development of the project both institutionally and financially;

7. Requests the Executive Secretaries of the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe to continue to take an active part in the follow-up to the project and to report to the Council at its substantive session of 2001;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to provide formal support and, to the extent that priorities permit, the necessary resources, within the regular budget, to the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe to enable them to carry out the activities mentioned above.

Industrial development

Second Industrial Development Decade

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 52/208 [YUN 1997, p. 968], the Secretary-General submitted a September report on the implementation of the Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1993-2002) (IDDA-II) [A/54/320], endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1992/44 [YUN 1992, p. 468]. The report examined economic and industrial development trends in Africa, including the challenges of globalization for African industries, and described specific action by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) and ECA to support IDDA goals and objectives during the 1998-1999 biennium. It also examined progress in implementing the 1997 Plan of Action of the Alliance for Africa's Industrialization, which was endorsed by the Assembly in resolution 52/208 [YUN 1997, p. 968]. The Secretary-General further reported that the first meeting of the Patrons Group of Heads of State and Government of the Alliance for Africa's Industrialization (Algiers, Algeria, 13 July) had issued a communique, in which they expressed the intention to intensify implementation of the Alliance as an African strategy for ensuring the continent's industrial development and to reverse the decline of direct investment flows to Africa.

The Secretary-General said that the Africa region needed to be integrated into the global economy, and that the production and trade of products with a high value-added content was key. The region needed to shift to improving the productivity of its labour, effectively transforming its static comparative advantages to dynamic competitive advantages. Effective public and private investments in industrial infrastructure, strengthening technological capabilities through human resource development, institution-building and effective economic governance were required to close the income and technological gap between the region and the rest of the world. Poverty alleviation and employment creation required a strategic focus on enhancing manufacturing value added, promotion of rural industrialization and stronger sectoral linkages between industry and agriculture.

UNIDO's IDDA programme was refocused, emphasizing more effective country-level programming and alignment of country programmes to the United Nations Development Assistance Framework (see p. 786). UNIDO launched the new integrated approach, which promoted capacity-building, in seven countries in 1998, and by June 1999 had finalized programmes in 15 African countries, including eight LDCs, valued at $103 million. It had contributed $ 10.47 million from its programmable resources to implement those programmes, and had received significant support from UNDP, as well as $20 million in donor support. However, further financial support was urgently needed. The Secretary-General asked the donor community to support the funds mobilization effort to be launched at the Conference on Industrial Partnership and Investment (Dakar, Senegal, 20-21 October), in response to Assembly resolution 52/208.

To complement industrial development technical assistance provided by UNIDO and other UN agencies, the Secretary-General proposed: strengthening the complementarity between aid and investment to create an enabling environment for private sector-led industrial development and provide more entry points for foreign investment and industrial partnership in Africa; investment concessions for private sector venture capitalists; debt-for-industrial-development swaps as a financing mechanism for industrial projects; and enhancing investments in small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) engaged in manufacturing, including the combination of venture capital funds with technical and managerial support to enterprises to facilitate start-ups and increase the survival rate of SMEs.

Conference of African Ministers of Industry.

The fourteenth meeting of the Conference of African Ministers of Industry (Dakar, 22-23 October) [E/ECA/CAMI.14/99/10] considered the theme "Industrialization and poverty eradication". In their conclusions and recommendations, participants stated that to promote industrial development, African countries should improve the business environment, particularly by combating corruption. To manage globalization and enhance competitiveness, they should improve infrastructure to reduce transaction costs, strengthen industrial development, promote technological progress, strengthen training and skills development, create comparative and competitive advantages by means of industrial policy, strengthen the private sector, create an enabling environment for private sector development, facilitate foreign direct investment and foster public/private sector dialogue and cooperation.

Challenges facing the manufacturing sector could be met by increasing accessibility of scientific and technological information; eliminating bottlenecks due to infrastructural inadequacies; restoring links between large enterprises and SMEs; introducing new financial instruments and mechanisms more suitable for financing, in particular of SMEs; reviewing parameters for the adoption by African enterprises of the requisite environmental standards for cleaner production; and optimizing utilization of human resources through training policies and a more systematic use of modern technologies to increase the productivity of labour.

The Ministers adopted an African common position for the eighth session of the UNIDO General Conference (Vienna, November/December), which, among other things, noted that the implementation of World Trade Organization (WTO) rules might have adverse implications for Africa's economic development, particularly its industrialization in terms of capacity-building for industrial competitiveness. It invited African countries to support and reinforce current trade negotiations to ensure a favourable environment for the development of African industry; assess and review the impact of existing international rules, agreements and efforts to remove obstacles to accelerating industrial takeoff; and solicit international support for establishing conditions for successful industrialization in terms of infrastructure and services and enhancing political stability.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/54/586], adopted resolution 54/203 without vote [agenda item 98 (a)].

Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s and its resolutions 52/208 of 18 December 1997 and 53/177 of 15 December 1998, and taking note of Economic and Social Council decision 1999/270 of 28 July 1999 concerning the implementation and coordinated follow-up by the United Nations system of initiatives on African development,

Recalling also the Declaration on Africa's Industrialization, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-third ordinary session, held at Harare from 2 to 4 June 1997, and the Plan of Action for the Alliance for Africa's Industrialization, adopted by the Conference of African Ministers of Industry at its thirteenth meeting, held at Accra in May 1997, and taking note of the final communique of the first meeting of the Patrons Group of Heads of State and Government of the Alliance for Africa's Industrialization, adopted at Algiers on 13 July 1999, and the Conference on Industrial Partnerships and Investment in Africa, held at Dakar on 20 and 21 October 1999,

Taking note of the statement of the Conference of African Ministers of Trade, held at Algiers in September 1999, to the Third Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization and resolution 2(XIV) on the African common position on globalization, adopted by the fourteenth meeting of the Conference of African Ministers of Industry, held at Dakar on 22 and 23 October 1999, both of which recognize the critical need for support for African countries in addressing the supply-side constraints on their integration into the world economy,

Recognizing the importance of industrialization as a key element in promoting sustained economic growth and sustainable development in Africa, in accordance with relevant General Assembly resolutions, as well as the outcomes of major United Nations conferences, and also its role in facilitating efforts for the eradication of poverty through, inter alia, promotion of competitiveness, productive employment, capacity-building, gender-mainstreaming and effective and efficient management systems,

Recognizing also the commendable efforts of African countries to engage their respective private sectors in policy dialogue at the highest levels and to improve further the capacity of the private sector, including small and medium-sized enterprises,

Recognizing further the need for African countries to continue their efforts to create a climate favourable to private sector development and foreign direct investment and also the commitment of African countries to using both human and financial resources more efficiently in the process of industrialization, and emphasizing the continuing need for the mobilization of adequate resources through domestic initiatives and international support, inter alia, through enhanced official development assistance, investment guarantees, debt-for-industrial development swaps, as appropriate, and enhanced market access,

Welcoming the reform and revitalization of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, as well as its new approach of providing comprehensive packages of integrated services to promote sustainable industrial development in African countries and its approach to field activities through joint programming with the United Nations resident coordinator system in the United Nations Development Assistance Framework, where appropriate, and commending the United Nations Industrial Development Organization for initiating closer collaboration with the World Trade Organization, with the participation of their secretariats and the States Members of the United Nations and observer States, with a view to, inter alia, contributing to efforts towards enhancing market access, as appropriate, for African industrial products,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the programme for the Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1993-2002);

2. Reaffirms the need for the African countries that have yet to do so to integrate the objectives of the Alliance for Africa's Industrialization, as appropriate, into their national plans for the establishment of institutional capacity for monitoring programmes and related projects;

3. Invites the international community, the African Development Bank and other relevant regional institutions to support the implementation of the programme for the Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa and the Plan of Action for the Alliance for Africa's Industrialization, including the outcome of the Conference on Industrial Partnerships and Investment in Africa;

4. Appeals to the international community, the World Bank, the African Development Bank and United Nations funds and programmes, in accordance with their respective mandates, to support the efforts of the African countries to intensify and to expand industrial cooperation among themselves;

5. Calls upon the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to strengthen its close working relationship with the World Trade Organization and other relevant multilateral institutions, with the participation of their secretariats and the States Members of the United Nations and observer States, for the provision of technical assistance to African countries, particularly the least developed among them, so as to enhance their capacity to overcome technical barriers to trade in industrial and other products, including improving quality standards to alleviate supply-side constraints, and to promote industrial competitiveness within the context of the integrated framework initiative in order to enable them to integrate fully into the world economy;

6. Requests the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the Economic Commission for Africa, in accordance with their respective mandates, and in coordination with the United Nations system, to support African countries in the implementation of the relevant recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Energy and natural resources

During 1999, ECA provided secretariat support to the Inter-agency Group on Water in Africa and collaborated on various issues with member agencies of the Working Group on Water of the United Nations Special Initiative on Africa. It prepared studies on the contribution of transnational corporations in the mining and energy sectors in Africa; on modalities for accessing new sources of capital for the development of Africa's mineral resources; on assessing the adequacy of policy, legal and regulatory frameworks for sustained development of mineral resources; and on reviewing projection models for Africa's energy and power requirements.

The Committee on Natural Resources and Science and Technology met from 15 to 18 November, in Addis Ababa.

Food security and sustainable development

ECA activities to ensure food security and sustainable development were aimed at promoting a better understanding of the interrelationship among agricultural productivity, population growth and environment sustainability, as well as promoting strategies for integrating those concerns into development policies and planning. Studies were prepared on best practices; interregional trade in agriculture; the scope for joint food security schemes in Africa; sustainable food production and food security in the Sahelian countries; agricultural development in the West African sub-region; and soil erosion and destruction of land resources. The secretariat organized policy workshops, meetings and training, including the first meeting of the Advisory Board on Population, Agriculture and the Environment (Addis Ababa, 20-21 September); and a workshop on women's reproductive health and household food security in Africa (Addis Ababa, 11-13 October).

The secretariat collaborated with other UN agencies and regional and subregional organizations by exchanging data and information. It also participated in or jointly organized meetings, including the first francophone and lusophone mayors' seminar on the problems of street food in Africa (Praia, Cape Verde, 7-9 June) and a regional consultative meeting on sustainable development (Abidjan, Cote d'Ivoire, 7-9 September).

The first meeting of the Committee on Sustainable Development (Addis Ababa, 25-29 January) [ECA/FSSD/CSD/99/9], a technical and legislative body of experts on food security, population and the environment, focused on the five-year review of the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development [YUN 1994, p. 955] (see p. 1005). It also considered the population, environmental development and agriculture model and the review and appraisal of the implementation in Africa of plans of action of the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 672], the Second (1996) United Nations Conference on Human Settlements [YUN 1996, p. 993] and the 1996 World Food Summit [ibid., p. 1129].

The General Assembly, in resolution 54/214 of 22 December, encouraged the countries of Central Africa to implement the undertakings set out in the Declaration on the Conservation and Sustainable Management of Tropical Forests [A/C.2/54/5], adopted by the Summit of Central African Heads of State (Yaounde, Cameroon, 12-17 March) (see p. 992).

Development management

ECA activities in support of strengthening development management emphasized fostering public-private sector partnership; promoting public sector reforms; advancing sound public sector policies and practices; and enhancing the capacity of civil society organizations. Public sector management activities were aimed at enhancing the capacity of central and local government institutions for efficient service delivery. To that end, the secretariat undertook a study to analyse government policy on financing local development and administrative structures to support policy implementation, which recommended measures to accelerate the decentralization of financial authority to the local level and strengthen local government structures. A number of technical comparative studies were undertaken in the area of civil service reforms with the aim of promoting efficiency, accountability and transparency in African civil services.

In private sector development, ECA emphasized promoting enterprise formation, privatization, microfinancing and the development of capital markets in Africa. Other activities included the preparation of comprehensive case studies on experiences and strategies to promote privatization in Africa; the role of microfinancing in the sustainable development of SMEs in Africa; and the promotion and strengthening of capital markets in Africa.

Integration of women in development

ECA activities to promote the advancement of women focused on mainstreaming gender issues into policies and programmes of its member States and promoting the economic and social empowerment of women.

The Sixth African Regional Conference on Women (Addis Ababa, 22-26 November), organized by ECA, reviewed and evaluated progress made in formulating and implementing gender-sensitive policies and programmes in the priority areas of concern identified in the 1995 Beijing Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1171], adopted at the Fourth World Conference on Women [ibid., p. 1169]. It adopted an African Plan of Action for accelerating the implementation of the 1994 Dakar [YUN 1994, p. 696] and Beijing Platforms for Action over the period 2000-2004 at the national, subregional and regional levels. An East and Southern Africa subregional follow-up meeting on the implementation of the global and regional platforms for action was held in the Seychelles in February.

Other ECA activities to foster the economic and social empowerment of women centred on the establishment of two subregional development centres to provide training and information and enhance networking among African women entrepreneurs. Those activities were supported by a forum held in Bujumbura, Burundi, in June and field missions to West and East Africa in November.

The ECA African Centre for Women was given the mandate to build the capacity of the secretariat's substantive divisions in mainstreaming gender concerns in their programmes to ensure gender-sensitive responses. Several sensitization workshops for ECA staff were held and a capacity-building needs assessment was undertaken in August.

Social development

ECA organized subregional follow-up conferences to the 1995 World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113] for Central and West Africa (Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso, January); for East and Southern Africa (Nairobi, Kenya, March); for North Africa (Marrakech, Morocco, March); and for Central and West Africa (Ouagadougou, September). The conferences monitored progress in implementing the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit [ibid., p. 1115] in order to achieve social sector objectives in education, health and poverty. It also held an ad hoc expert group meeting on analytical and conceptual tools for poverty management (Addis Ababa, 12-13 October).

The Committee on Human Development and Civil Society held its first meeting (Addis Ababa, 21-23 June) on the theme "Popular participation for sustainable social and human development in Africa". The Committee discussed issues from the subregional follow-up conferences and capacity-building of indigenous African civil society organizations. It reviewed ECA activities on human and social development, as well as civil society, and previewed the 2000-2001 work plan.

Programme, administrative and organizational questions

The ECA Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole reviewed the proposed programme of work and ECA priorities for the 2000-2001 biennium [E/ECA/CM.24/7]. The Conference of Ministers recommended a resolution on the subject [E/1999/38 (der. 833(XXXIII))] for adoption by the Economic and Social Council (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ECA [E/1999/14/Add.3], adopted resolution 1999/39 without vote [agenda item 10].

Programme of work and priorities of the Economic Commission for Africa for the biennium 2000-2001

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 41/203 of 19 December 1986 and subsequent relevant resolutions on programme planning,

Recalling also resolution 809(XXXI) of 8 May 1996 of the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa on new directions for the Commission, and in particular the programme structure, which was characterized by congruence between substantive organizational charts and programmes to foster synergy and achieve greater efficiency and impact in the delivery of service,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 53/207 of 18 December 1998 on programme planning, by which the Assembly adopted the proposed revisions to the medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001 submitted by the Secretary-General, as amended by the Committee for Programme and Coordination,

Having taken note of the report on the work of the Commission, 1996-1998, and having examined the proposed programme of work and priorities for the biennium 2000-2001,

Convinced that the proposals contained in the proposed programme of work and priorities for the biennium 2000-2001 will enhance the role of the Commission as an important contributor in the process of Africa's economic and social rebirth,

Recognizing, however, that the economic development of Africa and the reduction of poverty are severely affected by, among other factors, the socio-economic impact of conflicts and the resulting large-scale population displacements, and realizing that the challenge of post-conflict reconciliation, rehabilitation and reconstruction require reorientation of development strategies and resource arrangements,

1. Commends the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa and the staff of the Commission for the considerable work that has been undertaken in the past three years to advance institutional reforms and renewal at the Commission to enable it to remain at the forefront of policy innovations for the socio-economic development of Africa;

2. Endorses the programme of work and priorities of the Commission for the biennium 2000-2001, taking into account the discussion and related recommendations made at the thirty-third session of the Commission;

3. Requests the Executive Secretary and member States, in collaboration with bilateral and multilateral partners, to undertake a special initiative to examine issues related to the socio-economic impact of conflicts on the region's development, based on a research project, and to organize a meeting to discuss the findings and make recommendations aimed at defining appropriate post-conflict assistance programmes and financing strategies;

4. Also requests the Executive Secretary and member States, in collaboration with development partners, to undertake the necessary studies that would provide a better appreciation of and response to the World Trade Organization agreements and of globalization on the region's economies;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in making his proposals for the programme budget for the biennium 2000-2001, to give special consideration to the development needs of the African region by providing the Commission with adequate resources to enable it to respond adequately to the new development challenges facing Africa;

6. Calls upon the General Assembly and its Second and Fifth Committees to ensure that adequate resources are made available to the Commission for the implementation of its programme of work.

Subregional Development Centres

The Subregional Development Centres (SRDCs), based in Central, Eastern, North, Southern and West Africa, played a vital role in improving ECA's capacity to support regional co-operation and integration efforts. The work of SRDCs focused on providing technical support to, and strengthening cooperation with, the regional economic communities; facilitating development networking and information exchange among governments, civil society and the private sector at the subregional level; facilitating coordination services for UN system operational programmes, in collaboration with the resident coordinator system at the national level; and strengthening ECA's outreach in the subregions.

Cooperation between SADC and the United Nations

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/204 [YUN 1997, p. 980], the Secretary-General, in August [A/54/273], summarized information received from Member States and UN organizations and bodies on measures they had taken to cooperate with the Southern African Development Community (SADC).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/54/589], adopted resolution 54/227 without vote [agenda item 101 (b)].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Community

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 37/248 of 21 December 1982 and all other relevant General Assembly resolutions on the promotion of cooperation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Community,

Commending States members of the Community for demonstrating continued commitment to deeper and more formal arrangements for cooperation among themselves towards regional integration,

Noting the signing of Community protocols on wildlife conservation, law enforcement and health and the establishment of the Association of Southern African Development Community National Chambers of Commerce, as well as the adoption of a declaration on productivity, which are further steps towards enhancing regional cooperation,

Recognizing the strengthening of democratic governance and other positive developments, including the consolidation of peace, the enhancement of democracy and the respect for the rule of law in the region, through the creation of institutions to further regional integration, such as the Parliamentary Forum, the Electoral Forum and the Lawyers Association of the Community,

Reaffirming that the successful implementation of the development programmes of the Community can be achieved only if the Community has adequate resources at its disposal,

Noting that the effects of armed conflict, resulting in the loss of life and the destruction of economic and social infrastructures in southern Africa, demand the continuation and the strengthening of rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes to regenerate the economies of the countries of the region,

Welcoming the Community's efforts to make southern Africa a landmine-free zone,

Noting with grave concern that adverse weather conditions have created a regional cereal deficit in 1999-2000, with a risk of increased poverty, in particular in rural areas,

Recognizing the valuable and effective economic and financial contribution that some organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and the international community have made to complementing national and subregional efforts to advance the process of democratization, rehabilitation and development in southern Africa,

Reiterating that the primary cause of the present situation in Angola is the failure of the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola, under the leadership of Jonas Savimbi, to comply with its obligations under the Peace Accords, the Lusaka Protocol and the relevant Security Council resolutions,

Expressing its grave concern at the serious deterioration of an already dire humanitarian situation in Angola caused by the current conditions in the country, which is also hampering efforts towards economic rehabilitation and national reconstruction as well as regional development projects,

Expressing its satisfaction over the initiatives to bring peace to the Democratic Republic of the Congo, launched by the Community under the leadership of President F. J. T. Chiluba of Zambia, in collaboration with the Organization of African Unity, the United Nations and other entities,

Welcoming with satisfaction the signing at Lusaka, on 10 July 1999, of the Ceasefire Agreement by all parties involved in the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo as a step forward towards a durable peace in that country,

Noting with concern the high prevalence in the region of human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome, which has far-reaching social and economic consequences,

Reaffirming the recognition of the important role that women play in the development of the region,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Expresses its appreciation to the international community for the financial, technical and material support given to the Southern African Development Community;
3. Appeals to the international community and to relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to continue providing, where appropriate, financial, technical and material assistance to the Community in order to enable it to implement fully its programme of action and to meet the reconstruction and rehabilitation needs of the region and to advance further the process of regional economic integration;
4. Calls upon the States Members of the United Nations and organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system that have not yet established contact and relationships with the Community to explore the possibility of so doing;
5. Appeals to the United Nations, its related bodies and the international community to assist and to support the Community in its efforts against landmines, and calls upon the States members of the Community to continue to strengthen their efforts in this regard;
6. Also appeals to the United Nations, its related bodies and the international community to assist the Community, with the appropriate resources, in implementing the programmes and decisions adopted by various United Nations world conferences, with specific emphasis on the enhancement of the role of women in the development process, and in this regard welcomes the establishment of the Southern African Development Community Women in Business Network, aimed at empowering women through, inter alia, facilitating and enhancing their access to credit and to training in business and technical skills;
7. Appeals to the international community to support the measures being taken by the Community in addressing human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome, including proposals for key future actions for the further implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development;
8. Appeals to the international community and to the United Nations system to continue to extend much-needed assistance to those countries of the Community that are engaged in the process of national reconstruction so as to enable them to consolidate democracy and to enhance the implementation of their national development programmes;
9. Appeals to the international community to comply with all relevant Security Council resolutions on Angola pertaining to sanctions imposed on the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola, which, together with other efforts, would help to bring peace and to facilitate the process of rehabilitation and reconstruction of the Angolan economy;
10. Urges the international community to take appropriate action, especially by providing humanitarian assistance, to prevent the suffering of the Angolan people, in particular children, women and the elderly, urges the Angolan authorities to continue to facilitate the assistance and the delivery of such assistance, and urges all other relevant parties to the conflict to do their utmost in this regard;

11. Calls upon the international community, in particular the United Nations, to continue to contribute to the promotion of peace and stability in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and to assist in the rehabilitation and economic reconstruction of that country;

12. Urges all parties to the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement to work towards its full implementation and to cooperate in this regard with the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity;

13. Urges the international community to continue to assist those countries receiving refugees in coping with the resulting economic, social, humanitarian and environmental challenges;

14. Appeals to the United Nations and the international community to assist in the strengthening of the region's capacity for sustainable water resource management and to respond generously with respect to the drought situation in southern Africa by supporting the region in its drought preparedness and management strategies;

15. Calls upon the international community to consider supporting the creation of special economic zones and development corridors in the Community, with the active participation of the private sector, while recognizing the responsibilities and the ongoing efforts of the countries concerned to create the necessary environment, including the appropriate legal and economic framework for such activities;

16. Also calls upon the international community to support the efforts of the Community to address the consequences, new challenges and opportunities presented to the economies of the region arising from the process of globalization and liberalization;

17. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Executive Secretary of the Southern African Development Community, to continue to intensify contacts aimed at promoting and harmonizing cooperation between the United Nations and the Community;

18. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Asia and the Pacific

The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP), at its fifty-fifth session (Bangkok, Thailand, 22-28 April) [E/1999/39], had as its theme "Asia and the Pacific into the twenty-first century: information technology, globalization, economic security and development". The Commission also reviewed the implications of recent economic and social developments and emerging issues and developments at the regional level, including regional economic cooperation; environment and natural resources development; socio-economic measures to alleviate poverty in rural and urban areas; transport, communications, tourism and infrastructure development; statistics; and least developed, landlocked and island developing countries. In addition, it considered technical cooperation activities and programme and organizational questions.

The Commission decided to hold its fifty-sixth session in April 2000 with the theme "Development through globalization and partnership in the twenty-first century: an Asia-Pacific perspective for integrating developing countries and economies in transition into the international trading system on a fair and equitable basis".

Economic trends

According to the summary of the economic and social survey of Asia and the Pacific [E/2000/13], developments in the economy of the ESCAP region in 1999 showed a resurgence of growth in an environment of substantially improved macroeconomic stability. The improved growth performance had been broad-based, cutting across all subregions, with the exception of South and South-West Asia, and pulling up the average growth rate of the developing countries of the region from nearly 0 per cent in 1998 to 5.6 per cent in 1999. The major contribution to the dramatic upturn in GDP growth came from the economies of East and South-East Asia that were hit by the financial crisis in 1997.

By early 1999, exchange rates had appreciated considerably in the countries affected by the crisis and had stabilized. Domestic supply conditions improved as a consequence of falling interest rates, easing of the credit crunch and rising imports. In several countries, better weather conditions led to higher agricultural output. However, private consumption demand remained muted, particularly in the countries that had fallen victim to the 1997 crisis. A noteworthy aspect was that the substantial reduction in inflation, averaging only 4 per cent for developing economies of the region in 1999, was shared by all subregions. Among the 25 developing economies of the region, as many as 19 recorded lower inflation rates.

Fiscal stimulus and export performance provided a significant boost to growth in many economies, helping to increase capacity utilization and containing a rise in unemployment. Several economies in the region also benefited from external capital inflows, including official flows, and a return of some private financial flows, which in the first eight months of 1999 exceeded the amount channelled to the region during the whole of 1998. Although many countries had undertaken structural reforms, the region was not free from some downside risks. Financial sectors in many countries remained plagued with serious problems, such as large volumes of non-performing loans, inadequate capital and insufficient loan loss provisions. In addition, reliance on external demand as a primary stimulus for growth was fraught with some degree of risk. In that context, enhancing export competitiveness assumed critical significance, as did improving agricultural productivity. There were also limits to the degree of reliance that could be put on fiscal stimulus for improved economic performance.

As far as social safety net mechanisms were concerned, large numbers of people, especially in the unorganized sector, remained virtually excluded from social security coverage. The design and operation of existing schemes needed to be improved in such areas as the financing modalities, the levels of benefits provided, the standards and cost-effectiveness of delivered services, and transparency and accountability in supervision and control. In addition, targeted safety nets for basic social protection needed to be introduced in favour of social groups so far excluded.

Policy issues

ESCAP, in a February report [E/ESCAP/1119 & Corr.1] on the current economic situation in Asia and the Pacific and policy issues, analysed recent economic performance and problems and the social impact of the 1997 economic crisis. According to the report, policies at the national, regional and international levels were needed to overcome the problems that the economic crisis had brought in its wake. The most immediate of those was to revive economic activity by overcoming the credit crunch, strengthening the financial sector and restructuring the corporate sector. Over the longer term, consideration needed to be given to reforming the international financial architecture so as to minimize the likelihood of a recurrence of such crises in the future. Governments had to play a critical role in ensuring social protection, including through the establishment of a "social fund".

On 28 April, the Commission, in a resolution on economic and financial monitoring and surveillance in the ESCAP region [E/1999/39 (res. 55/2)], requested the Executive Secretary to analyse the financial and economic crisis, paying particular attention to the role of financial markets, and to present options to be used as inputs in the formulation of relevant national policies for ensuring the attraction of a steady inflow of private capital. He should study the social and economic consequences of the crisis, paying particular attention to disadvantaged groups, and enhance the exchange of information on policies and measures adopted to address the impact of the crisis. The Executive Secretary should also study possible regional mechanisms for the exchange of informadon and early warning systems in relation to the financial and economic situation, with a focus on crisis prevention and reduction of the vulnerability of countries to economic and financial turmoil. The Executive Secretary should pay special attention to the implications of the financial crisis for the developing countries, particularly the least developed, landlocked and island developing countries, as well as economies in transition, by providing them with advisory services and technical assistance; and cooperate with the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund (IMF)) and other relevant international and regional institutions in undertaking those analyses and studies.

Activities in 1999

ESCAP activities in 1999 were carried out under thematic sub-programmes approved by the Commission in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 720]: regional economic cooperation; environment and sustainable development; poverty alleviation through economic and social development; transport and communications; statistics; and least developed, landlocked and island developing countries.

Development policy and regional economic cooperation

ESCAP's fifty-fifth session had before it the report of the Committee for Regional Economic Cooperation on its seventh session (Bangkok, 10-12 March) [E/ESCAP/1121]; a secretariat note that reviewed trade and investment developments [E/ESCAP/1122]; and another on the implications of the Asian economic crisis for sustained industrial and technological development in the region [E/ESCAP/1123]. The Commission noted that the meetings of the Committee for Regional Economic Cooperation and its steering group had been decisive in shaping the regional agenda in trade, investment and technology. The steering group held its eleventh meeting in Bangkok from 27 to 29 September [E/ESCAP/1160].

With regard to trade and investment, the Commission acknowledged that ESCAP had an important role to play in consensus-building around policy responses, mobilizing new forms of technical and economic assistance, and linking regional thinking to the global search for more coherent macroeconomic and microeconomic policies. It requested the secretariat to promote preventive measures to safeguard against market failures concomitant with the liberalization process, continue providing detailed analysis of the economic situation in the ESCAP region, explore ways to improve access by the developing countries to more current information on short-term private capital flows and analyse the risks associated with those flows, and examine the viability of WTO for regulating international investment and financial flows.

The economic crisis notwithstanding, the Commission accorded particular importance to maintaining open trade and investment regimes. It supported the universality of WTO membership and endorsed the requests for secretariat assistance in removing obstacles to accession to WTO, as well as in improving transparency in the whole WTO process. The Commission directed the secretariat to continue addressing trade barriers affecting the exports of the developing countries, particularly non-tariff measures, government procurement practices and the effective implementation of the rules of origin. Stressing the importance of trade in services for long-term sustainable economic development, the Commission requested the secretariat to conduct studies on the impact of liberalization of such trade. It should also conduct a study to assist developing countries in addressing impediments to "quality" investment inflows in Asia and the Pacific.

The Commission recommended that the secretariat study the impact of information technology and electronic commerce on economic activity and trade to ensure that market access and trade opportunities for developing countries were not eroded. It expressed concern over the volatility of commodity prices and the resulting adverse terms of trade for commodity-dependent developing economies. The Commission stressed the importance of access to timely and quality information on trade and investment flows, supported the secretariat's efforts to upgrade and restructure its Regional Trade and Investment Information Network, and endorsed the convening of an expert group meeting for that purpose.

Concerning the implications of the Asian economic crisis for sustained industrial and technological development in the region, the Commission endorsed the recommendations contained in the secretariat note on the subject, in particular the importance of skills development, upgrading of infrastructure, strengthening the private sector, development of SMEs, technology transfer and promotion of industrial complementarities. It recommended greater regional cooperation in human resources development and that a study on skills development in the light of emerging and new technologies especially relevant to developing countries be undertaken. The Commission also stressed the importance of the transfer, development and application of environmentally sound technology for the sustainable economic and social development of the region's economies and for the very survival of some Pacific island countries.

The Commission endorsed the findings and policy recommendations contained in a secretariat note on Asia and the Pacific into the twenty-first century: information technology, globalization, economic security and development [E/ESCAP/1120]. It recognized that the application of information technology could play an important role in promoting social development, in working towards more equitable distribution of income and of social services, particularly education and health, and in preserving the environment. However, increased use of information technology brought new and difficult risks to the economic security of countries, which became increasingly exposed to the vagaries of international market volatility. The Commission observed that Governments should be at the forefront of the new information age and develop a vision of how to harness the full potential of information technology. It noted that regional cooperation could play an important role in supporting national efforts, particularly in the development of infrastructure and in narrowing disparities between countries.

The Commission suggested that the international community should devise a code of conduct for the use of the information superhighway, including formulating modalities and policy frameworks for the regulation of the global cyberspace electronic commerce market, for Internet banking and for the trading of securities. It urged the secretariat and other international and regional organizations to continue to assist developing countries in information technology through technical assistance and policy advice, as well as by raising the awareness of businesses, including SMEs, of the modalities of the use and advantages of the applications of electronic commerce, and by providing training for related human resources development. It was recommended that an ESCAP working group should be set up to formulate a regional policy on information technology. The Commission welcomed Pakistan's offer to host an Asian-Pacific centre for information and communications technology for the ESCAP region and asked the secretariat to work out the procedures for its establishment and donors to provide technical assistance.

Least developed, landlocked and island developing countries

Special Body on Pacific Island Developing Countries

Having considered the report of the Special Body on Least Developed and Landlocked Developing Countries on its fourth session (Bangkok, 20-21 April) [E/ESCAP/1140], the Commission endorsed its recommendations on the effective utilization of development assistance, and multi-agency integrated initiatives for the development of exports. In view of the need for capital, technology and skills in the least developed, landlocked and island developing countries, the Commission urged the secretariat to explore innovative modalities for strengthening capacity in such areas as managing capital inflows, technology transfer and industrial development strategies. It welcomed the offers of economic and technical cooperation by several developing countries in such areas as agriculture, family planning, public health and urban development for the benefit of least developed, landlocked and island developing countries.

Economic and technical cooperation

In 1999, ESCAP received $15.9 million in contributions for technical cooperation activities, of which $6.02 million was received from within the UN system, $9.5 million from bilateral donors and developing and associate members, and $375,000 from other intergovernmental or non-governmental organizations [E/2000/39]. The total was a decrease of about $500,000 from the previous year. Japan remained the largest bilateral donor, followed by Germany and the Netherlands. Other contributors from developed nations included Australia, France, New Zealand, Norway and Sweden. Twenty-three developing members and associate members contributed to ESCAP's technical cooperation programme, the largest being the Republic of Korea, followed by China. In addition to cash contributions, donors and developing countries provided about 285 work-months of services by experts recruited on a non-reimbursable loan basis in 1999. During the year, 71 technical assistance projects were initiated, with a value of $6 million.

Technical cooperation among developing countries

The Commission considered a secretariat note [E/ESCAP/1145] on ESCAP's technical cooperation activities, including technical cooperation among developing countries (TCDC) and economic cooperation among developing countries (ECDC), and the constraints on those activities.

In 1999, the secretariat developed and implemented about 100 promotional TCDC/ECDC-related activities within the framework of its various subprogrammes [E/ESCAP/1189]. It also promoted and facilitated the participation of approximately 120 officials in 41 TCDC activities. Those activities included training courses, seminars, workshops and study visits. Officials, particularly from the least developed, landlocked and island developing countries, and economies in transition, enhanced their management and technical capabilities over a wide range of areas.

In order to sensitize TCDC national focal points to the benefits of TCDC, exchange experience on their important role in that regard and disseminate up-to-date information on the available opportunities within the TCDC programme of the more advanced developing countries, the secretariat, in collaboration with China, organized the Workshop on TCDC National Focal Points in Beijing in September. It also carried out in-country consultations with TCDC national focal points of the Cook Islands, Fiji, Kiribati, Samoa, Tonga and Vanuatu to advise them on assistance they could obtain from ESCAP. The secretariat continued to promote TCDC activities through third-country training programmes.

The Commission urged that sensitization workshops aimed at strengthening TCDC national focal points should be organized annually to promote opportunities for beneficiary countries and to facilitate exchange of experience and expertise on a regular basis. In that regard, it suggested that networking of TCDC national focal points through the Internet could contribute to more cost-effective virtual TCDC workshops.

Transport, communications, tourism and infrastructure development

The Commission had before it the Executive Secretary's report on progress in the implementation of resolutions and major decisions of the Commission in transport, communications, tourism and infrastructure development [E/ESCAP/1136], and the report of the first session (1998) of the Committee on Transport, Communications, Tourism and Infrastructure Development [YUN 1998, p. 934], which it endorsed.

The second session of the Committee on Transport, Communications, Tourism and Infrastructure Development (Bangkok, 24-26 November 1999) [E/ESCAP/1178] expressed strong commitment to the 1995 New Delhi Action Plan on Infrastructure Development in Asia and the Pacific, 1997-2006 [YUN 1995, p. 1012] and recommended that a review of the regional action programme for phase I (1997-2001) of the Plan should be undertaken before the third session of the Committee in 2000. The Committee recommended that further work should be carried out on assisting countries to establish a legislative and regulatory framework that was conducive to private-sector development. Concerning the development of infrastructure in the power section, the Committee called for the enhancement of co-operation in strengthening regulatory frameworks and the integration of electricity networks at the subregional level.

Infrastructure development

The Commission expressed satisfaction with progress in implementing the New Delhi Action Plan on Infrastructure Development in Asia and the Pacific [YUN 1995, p. 1012], noting that work had commenced on 27 of the Plan's 64 operational activities. It requested the secretariat to prioritize the remaining activities. The Commission noted with concern the inadequate funding for the regional action programme and urged donors, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to provide additional financial and technical support for its implementation. It endorsed the convening of a ministerial conference on infrastructure in 2001.

While appreciating the secretariat's work in developing regional transport networks and facilitating cross-border movement of vehicles, goods and passengers, the Commission expressed concern about related issues that needed to be addressed urgently, including the vulnerability of vehicle drivers and crews to HIV/AIDS, and the role of the transport sector in the spread of the virus and its potential negative impact on productivity within the industry. It requested the secretariat to hold seminars on HIV/AIDS and the transport industry and to produce publications on the issues and responses that were appropriate to the ESCAP region.

The Commission noted progress made in implementing the Asian land transport infrastructure development (ALTID) project at the national and subregional levels. It stressed that, as the formulation of the Asian Highway and Trans-Asian Railway networks covering the whole of Asia would be completed soon, more emphasis should be placed on improving the operational efficiency of the routes. It also stressed the need to give increased attention to maintenance and private-sector participation, as well as to safety and environmental protection, in the development of land transport; and the importance of the further promotion of the integrated approach to the development of the transport system in Asia, with the transport corridor from Europe through the Caucasus to Asia routes constituting an integral part of the ALTID networks.

The Commission noted the involvement of member countries in the water transport sector programmes and requested the secretariat to develop training materials and information for wide dissemination and as the basis for ongoing training activities and advisory services in freight forwarding and multimodal transport and the formulation of shipping policies. Recognizing the increasing importance of private sector involvement in the financing and management of ports, the Commission requested the secretariat to assist countries in establishing a favourable climate in which stakeholders, including Governments, the private sector and port workers, could collaborate in creating a suitable environment for attracting investment. The secretariat should also undertake a comparative study of regional port charges and tariff structures as the basis for developing guidelines to assist countries in streamlining tariff-setting and establishing key indicators for port performance and update its study on medium- and long-term demands for container shipping and port development, taking into account the impact of the regional economic crisis on capacity requirements. The Commission asked the secretariat to place high priority on establishing a consultative mechanism to discuss matters of crucial concern and mutual interest in the maritime sector.

The Commission welcomed the establishment of the maritime information network (MARINET) and urged further work in promoting usage of the standard web site software developed by the secretariat for ports and shipping companies. It reaffirmed the high priority assigned to inland water transport within the regional action programme for implementation of the New Delhi Action Plan.

By a 28 April resolution [E/1999/39 (res. 55/1)], the Commission urged concerned members and associate members to integrate inland water transport within intermodal transport systems; examine technical and administrative issues related to bringing national waterways into operation; accord priority to inland water transport in policy, planning and investment; enhance cooperation between national agencies responsible for inland water transport and water resources management; and increase the public sector resources allocated to inland water transport.

The Executive Secretary was asked to: assist riverine members and associate members to formulate policies and strategies to foster inland water transport development; promote technological advancement of the inland water transport sector; assist in increasing the awareness of policy makers and the public of the advantages of inland water transport; promote human resources development in the inland water transport sector; organize an international conference/exhibition on inland water transport; and report in 2001 on the implementation of the resolution.

Tourism

The Commission reaffirmed the important role of tourism in the socio-economic development of Asian and Pacific countries and adopted the Plan of Action for Sustainable Tourism Development in the Asian and Pacific Region [E/ESCAP/1137]. It suggested additional issues that should receive the special attention of Governments and international organizations in implementing the Plan and urged ESCAP, the World Tourism Organization and other organizations concerned to assist countries in assessing the economic and social impact of tourism, cultural preservation and facilitation of travel through improved intermodal and intramodal transport.

The Commission requested the secretariat further to strengthen activities related to the environmental management of tourism, the preservation of cultural heritage and the promotion of ecotourism, and to promote tourism in the Greater Mekong subregion and in the Bangladesh-India-Myanmar-Sri Lanka-Thailand Economic Cooperation and the Economic Cooperation Organization member countries.

Science and technology

The Governing Board of the Asian and Pacific Centre for the Transfer of Technology (APCTT) held its fourteenth session in Kish Island, Iran, on 24 and 25 November [E/ESCAP/1163 & Corr.1].

In 1999, APCTT organized a wide range of technology transfer activities, including training programmes, regional workshops, exhibitions, seminars and expert group meetings in 13 countries. Over 750 business meetings of prospective technology suppliers with technology seekers were arranged and APCTT was facilitating more than 270 technology transfer negotiations per month. Efforts were made to strengthen the Centre's institutional framework, its financial base and personnel infrastructure, with assistance from Germany, India and the Netherlands.

The Commission endorsed the report of the APCTT Governing Board's thirteenth session [YUN 1998, p. 937], urged the Centre to continue facilitating the networking of technology transfer institutions to promote intraregional cooperation and directed it to expand its technology management programme, focusing on technological capacity-building and human resources development and to strengthen its activities in community-enterprise cooperation in research and development and in specialized fields, such as innovation management, technology acquisition and pricing and technology assessment.

Environment and sustainable development

The Commission endorsed the recommendations of the first session of the Committee on Environment and Natural Resources Development

(Bangkok, 21-23 October 1998) [E/ESCAP/1126]. It called on the secretariat to continue its efforts in the four areas discussed at the session: subregional cooperation for environmental programmes; the transfer and adoption of environmentally sound technology; integrated development and management of water resources and economical use of water; and the promotion of the development of remote sensing and special information systems and other space technology applications for environmental monitoring, natural resources development and natural disaster reduction. The Commission considered it imperative to strengthen regional and subregional cooperation to cope with environmental problems in the region. It noted that the Regional Action Programme for Environmentally Sound and Sustainable Development, 1996-2000 [YUN 1996, p. 908] was beneficial as a guide for the regional implementation of Agenda 21 [YUN 1992, p. 672].

The Commission recognized the importance of assisting developing countries in building the requisite capacity to adopt, develop and transfer environmentally sound technologies and to implement environmental management systems. It felt that a separate research and development fund to support the indigenous development of environmentally sound technologies, along with a special credit line to facilitate switching from polluting technologies to environmentally sound technologies, merited further consideration. It encouraged developed countries to support developing countries in acquiring such technologies on favourable terms and emphasized the catalytic role of ESCAP and APCTT in that regard. The Commission endorsed the Committee's recommendations on the adoption of a holistic approach to water resources development and management, including surface and groundwater resources.

The Commission called on the secretariat to strengthen further the activities in the integration of environmental considerations in its overall programme of work, and requested it to develop policy guidelines for the environmental impact assessment of development projects and develop programmes on the integration of population, resources, environment and development, including the role of women in environmental management.

The second session of the Committee on Environment and Natural Resources Development (Bangkok, 13-15 October) [E/ESCAP/1165] reviewed policy issues in integrating environmental considerations into economic decision-making; efficient utilization of energy in supply-side facilities and demand-side management; and integrated assessment, development and management of land and mineral resources for sustainable economic development.

The Committee recognized the challenges faced by policy makers in the region in addressing sustainable energy development. It emphasized the importance of developing regulatory frameworks for improved energy efficiency and the need to promote market-driven policy instruments and facilitate the transfer of technology on both the supply and demand side, as well as access to low-cost international funds.

The Second Ministerial Conference on Space Applications for Sustainable Development in Asia and the Pacific (New Delhi, India, 15-20 November) [E/ESCAP/1166] endorsed the Strategy and Action Plan on Space Technology Applications for Sustainable Development in Asia and the Pacific for the New Millennium, and adopted the Delhi Declaration on Space Technology Applications in Asia and the Pacific for Improved Quality of Life in the New Millennium.

Natural resources development

Energy and mineral resources

Having considered a secretariat note on the impact of the economic crisis on the energy sector [E/ESCAP/1128], the Commission observed with concern the impact on energy prices, the demand/supply gap, reductions in energy demand, financial difficulties and the slowing down of energy infrastructure development. It noted the various national policy efforts and other measures planned or undertaken by affected countries to cope with the impact of the crisis on the energy sector and to achieve long-term sustainable energy development. The Commission encouraged regional and subregional cooperation in the utilization of natural gas and intercountry power exchange, including the exchange of national experience, as well as technical and economic advisory services and exchange visits of multidisciplinary expert teams.

It emphasized the importance of Agenda 21 [YUN 1992, p. 672] in achieving a sustainable energy future for all. In that context, the importance of the transfer of environmentally sound energy technologies was reiterated, in particular technologies related to clean coal, the harnessing of renewable sources of energy and increased levels of efficiency in energy-intensive end-use sectors.

The Forum on Urban Geology in Asia and the Pacific, which held its fourth session in January, agreed that, to promote the integration of geology in urban planning effectively, a series of ESCAP meetings on geology for urban planning should be convened in and hosted by participating countries. Countries should prepare and submit proposals to ESCAP regarding hosting such meetings.

Water resources

Mekong River basin development. In 1999, important achievements and progress were made by the Mekong River Commission (MRC), established by the 1995 Mekong Agreement [YUN 1995, p. 1017], including the adoption of its first strategic plan for 1999-2003, the streamlining of its programmes and strengthening of its technical capacity, including improved coordination of its work with other partners in the region. Particular progress was made in MRC's water utilization, environmental, fisheries, agriculture and irrigation and human resources development/capacity-building programmes and in the formulation of the Basin Development Plan. Eight studies and projects were completed in 1999, and MRC shifted its approach from projects to programmes that focused more on its core functions.

The MRC report on its 1998 activities was transmitted to the Commission by a March secretariat note [E/ESCAP/1148].

Agriculture and development

The Commission had before it the report on the Regional Coordination Centre for Research and Development of Coarse Grains, Pulses, Roots and Tuber Crops in the Humid Tropics of Asia and the Pacific [E/ESCAP/1131]. Major developments in 1998 were summarized, as were issues requiring action by the Commission. Implementation of programmes in 1998, planned activities for 1999 and the financial status of the Centre were discussed.

The Commission recommended that the Centre should continue to strengthen collaborative research and development projects, covering a broad range of issues concerning the effect of trade liberalization and agriculture, the sustainable development of upland agriculture and poverty alleviation. It urged the Centre to focus further on enhancing and stabilizing regional agricultural and rural economies in the region. The Commission expressed concern over the continuing unstable condition of institutional support resources for which a substantial increase in contributions and early allocation by member and associate members were needed. It called for the further strengthening of programme resources, their timely allocation and provision of the services of experts, so as to ensure the effective implementation of programme activities.

The Commission endorsed the report on the Regional Network for Agricultural Machinery

(RNAM) [E/ESCAP/1125] and its recommendations. It directed the secretariat to continue seeking extrabudgetary assistance for RNAM's approved activities for 1999-2001 and urged donor countries, and others in a position to do so, to provide programme support for RNAM projects.

In endorsing RNAM's work programme, the Commission welcomed the expansion of its activities in human resources development in post-harvest technologies, especially in food, fruit and vegetable processing and preservation. It recommended that RNAM promote better working conditions for rural women affected by agricultural mechanization.

At its nineteenth session (Kathmandu, Nepal, 17-19 November) [E/ESCAP/1164], the RNAM Governing Body recommended that the Network's name be changed to Regional Network for Agricultural Engineering and Machinery.

Social development

The Commission noted that poverty remained a serious challenge in the ESCAP region and the situation had deteriorated as a result of the economic crisis. It had before it the report of the Committee on Socio-economic Measures to Alleviate Poverty in Rural and Urban Areas on its first (1998) session [YUN 1998, p. 931], as well as a secretariat note on progress in implementing resolutions and decisions relating to socio-economic measures to alleviate poverty in rural and urban areas [E/ESCAP/1130].

The Commission recommended that Governments ensure that adjustment programmes in response to the crisis did not result in the worsening of the economic and social conditions of the poor, women, disabled persons, older persons and other disadvantaged groups. Policies and programmes should be designed to strengthen social safety nets, including implementation of labour-intensive public works for infrastructure maintenance, and other employment-creation programmes targeted at the poorest and the unemployed. It requested the secretariat to provide technical assistance to support national efforts, with an emphasis on organizing special safety nets for vulnerable groups, implementing community-based initiatives, strengthening decentralization and promoting partnerships among NGOs and the private and public sectors. It should also assist in implementing the people-centred development approach, self-help initiatives and the strengthening of family support.

The Senior Officials' Meeting on the Agenda for Action on Social Development in the ESCAP region (Bangkok, 1-5 November) [E/ESCAP/1173] reviewed progress made and constraints encountered in implementing the 1994 Agenda for Action on Social Development in the ESCAP region [YUN 1994, p. 714] and considered development trends and emerging challenges to the full implementation of the Agenda. It adopted a Regional Perspective and Recommendations for the Global Review of the Follow-up to the World Summit for Social Development by the General Assembly at its Special Session in 2000.

The secretariat continued to implement its technical assistance project on the establishment of national social development management information systems (SOMIS). Pilot projects were carried out to test the framework in three selected countries and a regional seminar was organized to discuss findings in order to further refine SOMIS for eventual dissemination to ESCAP members.

At its second session (Bangkok, 1-3 December) [E/ESCAP/1169], the Committee on Socio-economic Measures to Alleviate Poverty in Rural and Urban Areas focused on social safety net programmes, in particular their implementation at the community level. It recommended that the secretariat undertake a comprehensive assessment of such programmes in countries in the region affected by the recent economic crisis.

Disabled persons

ESCAP convened the regional forum on education for children and youth with disabilities into the twenty-first century (Bangkok, 15-19 November). A joint regional inter-organizational initiative, the forum focused on the need for early intervention and the largely unaddressed right of children and youth with disabilities to participate in education programmes. ESCAP also convened a major forum on meeting the targets of the Asian and Pacific Decade of Disabled Persons [YUN 1993, p. 621] and equalization of opportunities for persons with disabilities in the ESCAP region (Bangkok, 22-24 November). The forum reviewed and revised the 73 Decade targets [YUN 1995, p. 1021] into a framework of 107 strengthened targets with a common implementation time frame (January-December 2002). ESCAP also organized an exhibition on art and technology to promote equalization of opportunities by and for disabled persons.

International Year of Older Persons

In 1999, within the context of the observance of the International Year of Older Persons (see PART THREE, Chapter XI), proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 47/5 [YUN 1992, p. 889], the Commission endorsed, on 28 April [E/1999/39 (res. 55/4)], the Macau Declaration and Plan of Action on Ageing for Asia and the Pacific, adopted in 1998 by the Regional Meeting on a Plan of Action on Ageing for Asia and the Pacific [YUN 1998, p. 942]. The Commission urged ESCAP members and associate members to take early and effective action to implement the Plan; called on those who had not yet done so to set up and strengthen national mechanisms on ageing to enable them, among other things, to coordinate the observance of the International Year of Older Persons and to set specific time-bound targets on ageing and related issues; and urged them to pay attention to older persons in severe poverty and enable them to access basic health services. The Commission called on civil society, NGOs and private organizations to assist in the implementation of the Plan and their respective national plans of action on older persons.

It requested the secretariat to support and assist members and associate members in implementing the Plan; to report in 2000 on the observance of the Year and the implementation of the Plan; to recommend further action and initiatives to achieve the goal and targets contained therein; and to report on a five-year basis on the review and appraisal of the Plan.

In observance of the International Year of Older Persons in the ESCAP region, national agencies and mechanisms, as well as national focal points for the Year, were established in many countries. They initiated activities at the national and local levels to generate greater awareness of issues relating to ageing and to older persons. Co-operation between government agencies and NGOs and other organizations, and the contribution of the mass media, were distinctive features of the observance of the Year, which also provided an opportunity to review and strengthen existing policies and programmes for older persons and for adopting such measures in countries where they were not yet established. India, the Philippines and Thailand took action in 1999. The ESCAP secretariat organized seminars, workshops and consultations on preparations for the Year, including the International Symposium on Planning Attainable Targets for Societies for All Ages (Macau, China, October), which developed guidelines on the implementation of the Plan of Action, and a Regional Seminar on Support and Protection of Older Persons as Consumers (Shanghai, China, October).

Women in development

The Commission had before it a secretariat note [E/ESCAP/1133] that examined recent trends in the economic and social empowerment of women in Asia and the Pacific and some critical challenges, and described ESCAP initiatives.

The Commission observed that considerable progress had been achieved in promoting women's participation in the economic and social fields in the region, but expressed concern at the continuing disproportionate burden being borne by them during the current economic crisis. It recommended that social safety nets and projects and schemes be implemented for women at the grass-roots levels to promote community-based well-being and urged the secretariat to carry out comprehensive analyses of the impact of the current economic crisis on the poor, the vast majority of whom were women. The Commission felt that continued efforts should be directed at improving the access of women in poverty to productive resources, particularly in the rural sector.

Noting with concern that women were still being exposed to many forms of exploitation and discrimination, the Commission urged the countries of the region to make a concerted effort to remove such exploitation. It considered that overall progress in promoting the participation of women in the decision-making process was still far from satisfactory and urged the countries of the region to adopt effective measures to increase women's participation in that process.

The High-level Intergovernmental Meeting to Review Regional Implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action (Bangkok, 26-29 October) [E/ESCAP/1177] reviewed progress made and obstacles encountered in implementing the 12 critical areas of the 1995 Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170] and reiterated the region's commitment to its fundamental objectives and principles for achieving gender equality.

The Meeting urged countries to take measures to counter the effects of the slowdown in growth rates in many countries of the region, to adopt measures to protect migrant workers and to alleviate the economic plight of poor female-headed households. It recommended that countries be encouraged to ratify the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted by General Assembly resolution 34/180 [YUN 1979, p. 895], and urged that they review and amend laws to ensure that they were in line with the Convention and other human rights treaties. It urged countries to ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention, adopted by the General Assembly on 6 October in resolution 54/4 (see PART THREE, Chapter X), keeping in view national needs, priorities and other considerations.

Natural disasters

The Commission, having considered a secretariat note on emerging issues and developments related to natural and man-made disasters

[E/ESCAP/1127 & Corr.1], reiterated the importance of natural disaster reduction for economic and social development and called on Governments to attach priority to continuing national efforts in that area, particularly in the five priority areas identified in the note: realistic integrated planning for disaster prevention and mitigation; enhancement of disaster preparedness, including real-time information exchange; community participation throughout the natural disaster reduction and management process; more effective transfer of disaster reduction and management technology; and exchange of experiences and information on institutional arrangements for disaster reduction and management. The Commission endorsed the three common goals for regional cooperation in natural disaster reduction: realistic reduction of damage; increased disaster awareness; and improvement of forecasting systems. It requested the secretariat to give priority to the development of an integrated regional strategy for better coordination of national and international efforts.

The Commission also considered the report of the Typhoon Committee [E/ESCAP/1149]. It urged UNDP and other donors to support the Committee's work and the secretariat to continue to support the Committee within its own programme of work.

Statistics

The Commission took note of the major conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Committee on Statistics on its eleventh session [YUN 1998, p. 944]. It endorsed the secretariat's programme of work for 2000-2001 and the priority areas identified by the Committee, including the 1993 System of National Accounts (SNA), poverty statistics and gender statistics. The Commission also considered a report on the Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific [E/ESCAP/1139] and endorsed the decisions and recommendations of the fourth session of its Governing Board (Bangkok, 18-19 November 1998).

The Commission noted that, as a result of the Asian financial crisis, many national statistical agencies had suffered budget cuts. Cooperation from data providers, especially in the business sector, had also deteriorated. In order to meet the challenge of providing more data with limited resources, the Commission urged national statistical offices in the region to find ways to strengthen technical cooperation with each other. Also, recognizing the need to strengthen census-taking capacities in the countries of the region, the Commission urged the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) to increase its level of funding for the coming census decade.

The Commission noted that awareness about the year 2000 (Y2K) problem had grown significantly in the region and that many Governments had launched remedial efforts. It agreed that strengthening regional cooperation could contribute to the resolution of the problem.

In a resolution on cooperation and support in addressing the year 2000 problem [E/1999/39 (res. 55/3)], the Commission urged all members and associate members to take early and effective action to bring their countries to the highest possible level of Y2K readiness, enhance the sharing of information across borders and forge regional and global cooperation to ensure a timely and effective response to the challenge, expedite the remediation of their systems to guarantee continued availability of basic infrastructure services, urge the private sector to become Y2K compliant and develop contingency plans and address the possibility of large-scale failures in the public and private sectors.

The Executive Secretary was asked to report annually until the fifty-seventh (2001) session on progress achieved and difficulties encountered, monitor closely actual and potential sources of funding to support the efforts of developing countries, in particular least developed and landlocked countries and the economies in transition, continue to facilitate the exchange of national experience and to collaborate with UN bodies and specialized agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in providing support to ESCAP countries finding difficulty in addressing the Y2K problem.

Programme and organizational questions

The Commission reviewed the implementation of ESCAP's 1998-1999 programme of work [E/ESCAP/1141] and endorsed changes to that programme for 1999 [E/ESCAP/1142 & Corr.1]. It expressed satisfaction that, in spite of the reduction in both regular and extrabudgetary resources, the secretariat had managed to implement a substantial number of programmed activities.

The Commission emphasized the importance of regular monitoring and evaluation of secretariat activities and, in that connection, recommended that the advisory services and group training conducted by the secretariat be reviewed to enhance their cost-effectiveness and ensure that the specific needs of the concerned member and associate member Governments were met.

The Commission endorsed the proposed programme of work for 2000-2001 [E/ESCAP/1143 &

Corr.1]. It welcomed the anticipated shift from input-based to results-based budgeting and noted the proposal to establish a formal mechanism for identifying performance indicators and evaluation criteria for the monitoring and review of performance. The Commission urged donors and international agencies, particularly UNDP, to provide extrabudgetary resources to facilitate the implementation of the 2000-2001 programme of work.

ESCAP reform

The Commission had before it a secretariat note [E/ESCAP/1152] that reviewed reform measures undertaken in ESCAP in response to Commission resolution 53/1 [YUN 1997, p. 993] and another on the restructuring of the Commission's conference structure [E/ESCAP/1159].

The Commission welcomed the measures taken so far regarding the reform of the secretariat to bring it in line with the revised conference structure [YUN 1997, p. 993]. It stressed that the reform measures should be considered as ongoing and be pursued more vigorously to ensure that the secretariat's work was responsive to the needs of the member States. It supported the proposal to reconvene the Open-ended Informal Working Group of the Advisory Committee of Permanent Representatives and Other Representatives Designated by Members of the Commission (ACPR) to define priorities for the programme of work and advise on the strategic directions for the secretariat's future activities. It also adopted the recommendations contained in a report on ACPR activities [E/ESCAP/1151] regarding improving the mechanism within the secretariat for appraising the timely and full implementation of Commission resolutions; reviewing existing mandates to ascertain their continuing relevance; strengthening the secretariat's capacity to review ESCAP activities; and further strengthening cooperation with other UN bodies.

A regional hearing in preparation for the Millennium Assembly of the United Nations (2000) for the ESCAP region was held in Tokyo on 9 and 10 September [A/54/754]. Proposals were made for strengthening the role of the United Nations and ensuring its continued relevance in the twenty-first century.

Change of name of Macau

In an April note [E/ESCAP], the ESCAP secretariat drew to the Commission's attention China's resumption of sovereignty over Macau with effect from 20 December 1999 and its request that Macau continue its associate member status in ESCAP under the name "Macau, China". The Commission approved a draft resolution for submission to the Economic and Social Council regarding amending ESCAP's terms of reference to reflect the change.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ESCAP [E/1999/39], adopted resolution 1999/38 without vote [agenda item 10].

Change of the name of Macau to "Macau, China" in the terms of reference of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting that the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific has recommended that the name "Macau" in paragraphs 2 and 4 of the terms of reference of the Commission should be changed to "Macau, China", effective from 20 December 1999, with the objective of enabling Macau to continue thereafter as an associate member of the Commission, Decides to amend paragraphs 2 and 4 of the terms of reference of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific accordingly.

Subregional activities

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/15 [YUN 1998, p. 946], the Secretary-General reported in September [A/54/168] on cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization (ECO). The report described the cooperation activities with ECO of UNDP, UNCTAD, UNFPA, the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/100 [draft: A/54/L.55] without vote [agenda item 28].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 48/2 of 13 October 1993, by which it granted observer status to the Economic Cooperation Organization,

Recalling also its resolutions 50/1 of 12 October 1995, 51/21 of 27 November 1996, 52/19 of 21 November 1997 and 53/15 of 29 October 1998, in all of which it urged the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and invited international financial institutions to extend their assistance to the Economic Cooperation Organization in the attainment of its objectives,

Recalling further that one of the main objectives of the United Nations and of the Economic Cooperation Organization is to promote international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character,

Mindful of the role of the Economic Cooperation Organization as a regional organization, which, after having restructured itself, is now better prepared to play an enhanced role as a regional economic grouping for all-round socio-economic development of its member States,

Welcoming the recent developments concerning the increased interaction between the various entities of the United Nations system and the Economic Cooperation Organization towards promoting the economic and social development of the States members of that organization,

Taking note of the communique issued at the ninth meeting of the Council of Ministers of the Economic Cooperation Organization, held in Baku on 21 May 1999, which stressed the importance of, and the renewed resolve of the States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization with regard to, socio-economic development and enhanced trade exchanges in the Economic Cooperation Organization region,

Recognizing the risks and challenges posed as well as the opportunities offered by the process of globalization and liberalization to the economies of some States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization, and emphasizing the need to address the concerns of those States in order to mitigate the negative consequences of globalization and enable them to benefit from the process,

Expressing grave concern over the heavy human casualties caused by natural disasters and their devastating impact on the socio-economic situation of some States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 53/15, and expresses satisfaction at the enhanced pace of mutually beneficial interaction between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization;

2. Notes with satisfaction the ongoing cooperation between the Economic Cooperation Organization and the United Nations Development Programme through the project "Capacity-building of the Economic Cooperation Organization secretariat", and invites the two organizations to continue to enhance and strengthen their ongoing cooperation;

3. Notes the keen participation of the Economic Cooperation Organization in various events sponsored by the specialized agencies and programmes of the United Nations system such as the United Nations Development Programme, the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the United Nations Population Fund during the past year, and calls for further contacts and active participation, as appropriate, of the Economic Cooperation Organization and the specialized agencies in each other's meetings and activities;

4. Welcomes the ongoing cooperation between the Economic Cooperation Organization and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in- eluding the trade efficiency action programme and the development of a multimodal transport and transit transport system in the Economic Cooperation Organization region;

5. Appreciates the ongoing cooperation between the Economic Cooperation Organization and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme including, inter alia, the implementation of the Economic Cooperation Organization and United Nations International Drug Control Programme project for the establishment of a drug control coordination unit within the Economic Cooperation Organization secretariat and other activities contributing towards curtailment of the drug abuses and drug trafficking in the Economic Cooperation Organization region;

6. Welcomes the recommendations of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific at its fifty-fifth session, held in Bangkok from 22 to 28 April 1999, on promoting cooperation with the Economic Cooperation Organization in the identified areas of mutual concern, and invites the Commission to enhance the mutual collaboration with that organization, focusing on implementable projects in the priority areas of the Economic Cooperation Organization, namely, transport and communications, trade, investment, energy, environment, industry and agriculture, for the overall benefit of the entire region;

7. Also welcomes the continuation of efforts towards further consolidation of interregional consultations and exchange of views on issues of common concern through such useful forums as the fourth Consultative Meeting among Executive Heads of Subregional Organizations and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, held in Kathmandu in October 1998;

8. Further welcomes the enhanced contacts between the Economic Cooperation Organization and the World Bank pursuant to resolution 53/15, and reiterates its invitation addressed to the relevant international financial institutions to initiate, maintain and increase consultations in order to extend their assistance to the Economic Cooperation Organization and its associated institutions towards the realization of their objectives;

9. Requests the United Nations system and the international community to continue assisting in the strengthening of the capacity of the States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization as well as its secretariat to meet the challenges, and benefit from the opportunities, of globalization;

10. Invites the United Nations system, its relevant bodies and the international community to provide technical and other assistance, as appropriate, to the States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization and its secretariat in strengthening their early warning system, preparedness, timely response and reconstruction with a view to reducing human casualties and mitigating the socio-economic impact of natural disasters;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization".

Europe

The Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), at its fifty-fourth session (Geneva, 4-6 May) [E/1999/37], focused on strengthening cooperation within the ECE region and implementation of ECE reform.

As called for in the Plan of Action on strengthening economic cooperation in Europe, endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in decision 1997/224 [YUN 1997, p. 1002], the ECE secretariat organized a debate on a major economic theme, which concentrated on the consequences of the financial crisis on the ECE region. Discussions focused on the impact of the global financial and economic crisis for the ECE region, with special emphasis on western and central Europe; overcoming the crisis of the Russian economy; and threats to the transition process in other economies.

With regard to operational activities, the Commission invited the Executive Secretary to respond to requests for technical assistance in a geographically balanced manner, paying special attention to requests from those countries most in need. In view of the limited resources available, the Executive Secretary and ECE member States should explore possibilities for providing additional financing for ECE's operational activities, in close cooperation with relevant financial institutions and donor organizations, in support of various types of activities, such as advisory missions, seminars, training workshops and for developing projects within the framework of sub-regional groupings and initiatives. To maximize the impact of ECE technical assistance, each principal subsidiary body (PSB) of the Commission was requested to identify the needs for operational activities within its field of competence and financing for them. A synthesis of the conclusions should be prepared for consideration at the fifty-fifth (2000) session.

The Commission, having considered the report of the Group of Experts on the Programme of Work on the prioritization process [E/ECE/1372], endorsed the new system of prioritization of PSBs' work programmes proposed by the Group of Experts.

The Commission reviewed progress made in the integration of the two cross-sectoral concerns, namely sustainable development and gender mainstreaming, into the ECE work programme (see also below). The Commission invited the Committee on Environmental Policy to review all activities related to sustainable development and make suggestions to each PSB and to the Commission on a more systematic approach at the ECE level. It also expressed its desire to see further efforts made in gender mainstreaming. In response to a General Assembly request contained in resolution 53/120 [YUN 1998, p. 1063], the Commission endorsed the convening of an intergovernmental expert meeting to review economic issues, problems and policies relating to the situation of women in ECE countries, in order to provide a regional assessment for the 2000 review of the implementation of the 1995 Beijing Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170]. It commended recent developments in intersectoral cooperation, particularly in transport and the environment, as well as environment and health, and urged that further advances be made in that direction.

The Commission invited the ECE secretariat to continue to participate in UN management coordinating mechanisms and urged it to strengthen its cooperation with other European institutions and pan-European and subregional organizations, paying due regard to the comparative advantages of each organization and ensuring the most efficient use of resources. It endorsed the recommendation that the Meeting of Officials on Land Administration (MOLA) be granted a standing character, in recognition of its work in promoting land privatization and land registration systems in the ECE region and the need for such work to continue, in particular for the benefit of countries with economies in transition that were moving from traditional to modern systems of land administration. That endorsement was noted by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1999/272 of 28 July.

The Commission agreed that the question of the biennialization of its sessions would be reconsidered by the Group of Experts on the Programme of Work, as agreed at the fifty-third session [YUN 1998, p. 948], and that the Group would report back to an ad hoc informal meeting of the Commission.

Economic trends

According to the summary of the economic survey of Europe, 1999 [E/2000/11], the negative effects of the financial crises in Asia in 1997 and the Russian Federation in 1998 were still depressing real economic activity in much of the ECE region, including international trade, until the early months of 1999. However, by the middle of the year, the situation in most parts of the world economy had stabilized and in the second half business confidence, real activity and expectations for 2000 were all improving steadily. In Western Europe, economic growth received a strong boost from exports to the rest of the world, not least from the strong import demand of the United States economy, and by the third quarter GDP was rising at its highest annual rate since before the Asian crisis. In the transition economies of Central Europe, the worst effects of the Russian financial crisis of 1998 were receding in the second half of 1999 and they were starting to benefit from the revival of domestic demand in Western Europe. In the Russian Federation, there was a significant recovery in output for the first time in a decade, and although the extent to which underlying factors provided a basis for sustainable growth was uncertain, that had nevertheless had a positive effect on most other members of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS).

The widespread improvements in the economic situation were not reflected in the 1999 annual performance figures, which for the most part showed a marked deterioration on those for 1998, but could be seen in the quarterly and monthly indicators for late 1999.

Eastern Europe, Baltic States and CIS

Economic growth slowed very sharply in virtually all the 27 transition economies of the ECE region and the outcomes were generally much lower than the forecasts made at the start of the year. Instead of growing by some 3 per cent as forecast, Eastern Europe only managed 1.4 per cent, while the Baltic States plunged into a sharp recession. Only the CIS moved in the opposite direction, partly under the influence of the Russian Federation, where GDP increased unexpectedly by more than 3 per cent when most forecasts had been predicting another large fall in output.

The weak performance in 1999 to a large extent reflected the carry-over from the second half of 1998 of the after-effects of the general turmoil created by the Asian and Russian crises, aggravated for some economies by the crisis in Kosovo, Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) (see p. 332), and by the slowdown in West European import demand. The Russian crisis had particularly severe consequences for the Baltic economies with massive cuts in their exports to the Russian Federation, leading to a severe deterioration in output and employment. Central Europe, however, showed a marked improvement in the second half of the year and the Baltic States a more moderate one. Economic growth in three of the leading reformers (Hungary, Poland and Slovenia) was least affected by the various shocks of 1998 and 1999: all three reported GDP growth for 1999 of more than 4 per cent. The recovery of output in the Russian Federation was due to the sharp rise in oil prices, a real depreciation of the exchange rate by nearly 50 per cent since the August 1998 crisis and a fall in real wages. Recovery in the Russian economy had a favourable impact on the other CIS members, with output continuing to fall only in Ukraine and the Republic of Moldova.

The economies of South-East Europe were greatly affected by the Kosovo conflict and its aftermath for much of the year, although direct impact on neighbouring economies appeared to have been less than feared. Reconstruction work in Kosovo itself helped to raise industrial production in the region, as did the recovery in West European import demand. However, Romania remained in severe recession, with GDP falling over 3 per cent. In FRY, with its severely damaged infrastructure, GDP and industrial output were estimated to have fallen by some 20 per cent and more. There was modest growth in Bulgaria and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (some 2.5 per cent), although in the former, industry remained in severe recession.

Western Europe and North America

In the second half of 1999, Western Europe finally shook off the sluggishness of activity that had marked 1998 and early 1999, and by the third quarter GDP was growing at an annual rate of about 3.5 per cent. The improvement in output led to rising levels of employment, by some 1.5 per cent on average between the fourth quarters of 1998 and 1999. Unemployment in Western Europe fell from 9.1 per cent at the end of 1998 to 8.4 per cent in the last quarter of 1999. Nevertheless, unemployment remained the greatest blot on the West European economic landscape and the major challenge for policy makers. The rise in import prices in 1999, due to the higher oil prices and weakness of the euro, had a modest impact on West European rates of inflation. Intense competition forced absorption of higher producer prices in lower margins, but there were also offsetting price falls for other products and services. Labour cost pressures also remained mild. A major concern of analysts and policy makers in Western Europe remained the relatively weak performance of the European economies over the past decade in comparison with the United States economy; the question being asked was whether the "new economy" of the United States could be replicated in Europe. The contrast between the two sides of the Atlantic was highlighted by the fact that after eight years of sustained growth, the increase in United States GDP in 1999 was still double the West European average; at the same time, inflation was just 2.2 per cent. In addition, unemployment was 4.2 per cent, compared to 9.2 per cent in the European Union (EU). The process of convergence between the two economies had been slowing down since the early 1960s, and by 1990 real incomes in Western Europe were some 35 per cent lower than in the United States. In the 1990s, Western Europe had actually fallen behind rather than continuing to close the gap. Thus, the potential for Western Europe to "catch up" with the United States was still significant.

The underlying argument for a "new economy" in the United States was that a microeconomic combination of new information technology and market liberalization had transformed the key macroeconomic relationships between the growth of output and productivity, inflation and employment. Since the mid-1990s, there had been a sharp acceleration in United States productivity growth and a major boom in fixed investment. Thus, one reason for more labour productivity in the United States was that it had more and better capital to work with. However, the interesting feature of the more rapid growth of United States labour productivity was that it reflected to a large degree a stronger growth of total factor productivity rather than of capital intensity, which pointed to a more general and efficient use of all resources in the economy. Plus, the investment boom in the United States was largely driven by the growth of business expenditure on information and communication technology.

There were two problems, however, that Western Europe had to face that differentiated its situation from the United States experience of the 1990s. First, the massive United States investment in fixed assets and new technology was financed, despite the low domestic savings rate, by large inflows of foreign capital. Second, the long United States upswing was also assisted by the boom in stock prices, which fuelled domestic spending and lowered the cost of equity capital for enterprises. If the risks of a premature tightening of monetary policy and of a disruptive fall in stock prices could be avoided, Western Europe could be on the threshold of a period of sustained growth of 3 per cent or more.

Trade, industry and enterprise development

The Committee for Trade, Industry and Enterprise Development (third session, Geneva, 7-10 June) [ECE/TRADE/231] considered how it could contribute to post-conflict recovery in South-East Europe. It endorsed the conclusions of the May 1999 international workshop "Implementation and Use of International Standards", which contained recommendations for reducing divergencies between international, regional and national standards that could create barriers to trade, and approved the establishment of an ad hoc team of specialists to study the relationship between international standardization and regulations as a means of reducing technical barriers to trade. The Committee approved new terms of reference and changed the name of the Working Party on International Contract Practices in Industry to the Working Party on International Legal and Commercial Practice. It also approved the establishment of an advisory group on the protection and implementation of intellectual property rights for promoting investment and an expert advisory group to consider possible revisions to the 1961 European Convention on International Commercial Arbitration [YUN 1961, p. 272]. It adopted its programme of work for 1999-2001 and agreed to organize a major round table prior to its next meeting in June 2000 on "Electronic Commerce and its Implications for International Trade in the UN/ECE Region".

The Committee endorsed the report of the fourth session of the UN Centre for the Facilitation of Procedures and Practices for Administration, Commerce and Transport (CEFACT) and requested the secretariat to prepare a working document on the possibilities for closer linkages between UN/CEFACT and the Committee's other subsidiary bodies. It noted the decisions taken by the Working Party on Technical Harmonization and Standardization Policies at its ninth session (17-19 May) and approved its proposal to establish an ad hoc team of specialists to examine the relationship between international standardization and regulations. The Committee endorsed the report of the Working Party on Standardization of Perishable Produce and Quality Development.

Transport

The Inland Transport Committee (sixty-first session, Geneva, 8-11 February) [ECE/TRANS/128] discussed, among other things, the transport situation in ECE member countries, assistance to countries in transition, the status of UN/ECE transport agreements and conventions, transport trends and policy and transport economics, road transport, road traffic safety, regulations for the construction of vehicles, rail transport and inland water transport, combined transport, customs questions, transport of dangerous and perishable goods and transport statistics.

As follow-up to the 1997 Regional Conference on Transport and the Environment [YUN 1997, p. 1005], the Committee endorsed the report of the first joint meeting on Transport and the Environment (July 1998) and underlined the importance of good cooperation and coordination among international organizations in the effective implementation of the Joint Programme of Action adopted at the 1997 Conference [ibid.].

The Committee asked member Governments to become contracting parties to the legal instruments developed under its auspices and to take all necessary measures to implement them. It also underscored ECE's role in the follow-up to the third Pan-European Transport Conference (Helsinki, Finland, 1997). The Committee amended and adopted a draft resolution (No. 248) inviting ECE member Governments to seek a solution to limit overall waiting times to 60 minutes for shuttle trains at borders.

The Committee also adopted a resolution (No. 247) inviting ECE Governments to take a census of traffic on the E Roads on their national territory in line with the 2000 Combined Census of Motor Traffic and Inventory of Standards and Parameters on Main International Traffic Arteries in Europe (E Road Census and Inventory) and to supply the results before 31 March 2002. It also recommended that Governments take a census of motor traffic on other non-urban roads and inform the ECE Executive Secretary by 31 December 1999 whether they agreed to implement the resolution.

Energy

The Committee on Sustainable Energy (ninth session, Geneva, 9-11 November) [ECE/ENERGY/41] noted progress achieved in applying the UN Framework Classification for Reserves/Resources [YUN 1997, p. 1006] to the energy and mineral sectors in Europe and Asia. It recommended that the Framework Classification be extended to gas, oil and uranium reserves/resources in the evaluation of world energy reserves/resources.

It invited participants to communicate to the secretariat the situation and experience of their respective countries in the development of mining legislation and regulations and requested the secretariat to consolidate and publish that information. The Committee agreed to hold a High-level Multi-Stakeholder Forum on Sustainable Energy in a Competitive Market: Forging Partnerships, in conjunction with its tenth session in 2000. It requested the secretariat to disseminate the initial strategy for the Energy Efficiency 21 Project and incorporate additional information and guidance provided by delegations for the preparation of a draft Project Plan (2000-2002).

The Committee reviewed ECE's provision of technical assistance and support to the Southeast European Cooperative Initiative (SECI) and Special Programme for the Economies of Central Asia [YUN 1996, p. 915]. It took note of the work done, recognized the difficult economic situation confronted by many economies in transition and invited the Executive Secretary to examine the possibilities of providing additional resources to meet their needs for technical assistance.

Agriculture

The Meeting of the Specialized Section on Standardization of Dry and Dried Produce (Fruit) (forty-sixth session, Geneva, 7-10 June) [TRADE/WP.7/GE.2/1999/12] discussed a draft revision of the standard layout for UN/ECE standards and agreed to finalize it at its next session. It also recommended a revision of standards for cashew kernels and in-shell walnuts and reached a compromise on quality classes and the colour chart for walnut kernels. It decided not to elaborate a standard for pitted dates for the time being.

The Timber Committee (fifty-seventh session, Geneva, 27-30 September) [ECE/TIM/93] reviewed its operational activities and cross-sectoral concerns relating to countries in transition and participation of the business community. It endorsed the general direction of ECE/FAO activities in support of sustainable forest management and welcomed the contributions of ECE/FAO to the Lisbon Ministerial Conference on the Protection of Forests in Europe [YUN 1998, p. 952] and the follow-up to it.

The session's special topic was "trade and environment issues in the forest and forest products sector". With regard to future work in that area, the need for objective monitoring and analysis was emphasized, especially where ECE/FAO had a comparative advantage. It was also suggested that in view of ECE's special role with regard to countries in transition, the possibility should be examined of approaching trade/environment issues from their perspective.

Environment

The Committee on Environmental Policy (sixth session, Geneva, 20-24 September) [ECE/CEP/69] discussed preparations for the Fifth Ministerial Conference "Environment for Europe", to be held in Kiev, Ukraine, in 2002, and established an ad hoc preparatory group of senior officials. The Committee stressed that integrating environmental concerns into sectoral policies would play a major role in the Kiev Conference and endorsed a draft decision for submission to the Commission in 2000.

The Committee reviewed the environmental performance of Croatia and Ukraine and adopted recommendations for strengthening environmental policy and management in those countries. An open-ended informal consultation on the experience gained in countries in transition in integrating environmental considerations into sectoral policies was held on 20 September, as was a round table on environmental policy and management in Ukraine. The Committee urged countries to make further contributions to the Trust Fund for Assistance to Countries in Transition to allow activities to continue and for the participation of delegations from countries in transition. It gave the Ad Hoc ECE Expert Group on Environmental Performance Reviews (EPR Expert Group) a new mandate for a period of two years.

The Committee approved holding the second meeting of the signatories to the Convention on Access to Information, Public Participation in Decision-making and Access to Justice in Environmental Matters (Århus Convention) [YUN 1998, p. 952] in 2000 and noted that the links between the convention and other ECE conventions should be looked at in the framework of the Committee's round table on cooperation between ECE and multilateral agreements.

The Committee endorsed a two-step approach to the project on cooperation between the ECE multilateral environmental agreements to improve their effectiveness and cooperation among them; a background paper would be prepared for a round table to be held at the Committee's seventh session in 2000.

Human settlements

The Committee on Human Settlements (sixtieth session, Geneva, 13-15 September) [ECE/HBP/114] discussed the draft ECE strategy for sustainable quality of life in human settlements in the twenty-first century and agreed to adopt it at a ministerial meeting to be organized in conjunction with its 2000 session.

The Committee noted the report of the ECE focal point on land administration in the Balkan region on the effects of the conflict there and agreed that the Working Party on Land Administration should decide on further work based on a long-term strategy for the subregion at its first session in November.

The Committee agreed that the organizational set-up of the Housing and Urban Management Advisory Network was appropriate for co-operation with the business community and that guidelines on relations with the business community should be developed.

The Committee invited the Conference of European Statisticians to organize a joint meeting on housing and building statistics. It reviewed its operational activities and invited the secretariat and its Bureau to further promote expert missions on land administration and spatial planning to supplement similar operational activities on country profiles on the housing sector and sectoral case studies.

Statistics

The Conference of European Statisticians (forty-seventh session, Neuchâtel, Switzerland, 14-16 June) [ECE/CES/56] considered the implications of meetings of the Conference's parent bodies—the May session of ECE and the March session of the Statistical Commission (see PART THREE, Chapter XV). The Conference requested its Bureau to consider prioritizing the Conference's work programme for review in 2000. It noted the Bureau's initiative in establishing a task force to look into the possible role statistics could play in a wide-ranging programme of recovery and reconstruction of Southern Europe after the end of the Kosovo conflict.

The Conference agreed to review the integrated presentation of the international statistical work in the ECE region, especially labour and health statistics and the hidden economy. In labour statistics, it agreed that more attention should be given to relevant policy indicators for monitoring the effectiveness of labour programmes, structural changes in the labour market and other areas. Support was expressed for making health statistics a priority and coordination encouraged in international health work and data collection. It was agreed that a health monitoring system capable of supporting policy analysis and decision-making in health should be the long-term goal of the Conference's work.

The Conference also considered joint data collection and assistance to countries in transition and the involvement of national statistical offices in analysis and forecasting. It discussed performance indicators for statistical offices and recommended that the Bureau discuss at its next meeting how to take the issue forward and whether to constitute a small working group.

Strengthening cooperation

The Commission had before it a note by the Executive Secretary [E/ECE/1368 & Add.1] on strengthening cooperation within the ECE region, including operational activities and cooperation with regional and subregional groupings, initiatives and organizations. The Executive Secretary said that there was an increasing need for member States to explore possibilities for providing additional financing in support of various types of activities, such as advisory missions, seminars and training workshops, enabling countries in transition to implement the norms and standards adopted by ECE. Additional funding was also needed for developing projects within the framework of subregional groupings and initiatives, in particular the Southeast European Cooperative Initiative and the Special Programme for the Economies of Central Asia. ECE also recognized the specific problems of the countries of the Mediterranean area, which comprised developing countries, economies in transition and advanced market economies.

ECE had witnessed a diminishing level of resources with respect to funding and staffing for the Regional Advisory Programme in 1999. Consequently, activities of the Regional Advisers had been considerably reduced. To maximize the impact of its technical assistance, the Executive Secretary suggested that the Commission request each PSB to look at operational activities within its field of competence and mandate and provide its views on the directions they should take, including the activities of the Regional Advisers. A synthesis of the conclusions of those reviews would be submitted to the Commission in 2000 to enable it to provide guidance for the technical assistance programme and its financing.

The Executive Secretary also submitted a February note [E/ECE/1371] on cooperation with European institutions and pan-European organizations and subregional organizations. By resolution 54/5 of 8 October, the General Assembly invited the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization to participate in the sessions and work of the Assembly in the capacity of observer (see p. 1360).

The Commission also had before it a note by the Secretary-General on regional hearings in preparation for the Millennium Assembly of the United Nations [A/54/503]. The hearings were convened by the executive secretaries of the five regional commissions for a representative segment of civil society, with the participation of members of the commissions. The ECE regional hearing was held in Geneva on 7 and 8 July.

Cross-sectoral concerns

The Commission had before it a note by the secretariat on cross-sectoral concerns, including intersectoral linkages [E/ECE/1369]. It dealt with progress made in respect of two cross-sectoral issues—sustainable development and gender mainstreaming—that were identified under the Plan of Action on the Strengthening of Economic Cooperation in Europe [YUN 1997, p. 1002].

The note stated that the ECE Committee on Environmental Policy played the key policy role in furthering pan-European cooperation on the environmental component of sustainability. Its work was organized around three pillars: the "Environment for Europe" process; the environmental performance reviews; and the environmental conventions. The report outlined activities undertaken under the "Environment for Europe" process, as well as in the areas of environmental reviews, environmental conventions, transport, statistics, human settlements, timber, industry and enterprise development and sustainable energy. It described the development of intersectoral activities in transport and the environment as a follow-up to the 1997 Regional Conference on Transport and the Environment [YUN 1997, p. 1005].

Gender-mainstreaming concerns as they related to the environment were expressed within the framework of the Convention on Access to Information, Public Participation in Decision-making and Access to Justice in Environmental Matters (Århus Convention) [YUN 1998, p. 952]. The note also described gender-mainstreaming efforts in the areas of transportation; statistics; economic analysis; trade, industry and enterprise development; timber; and human settlements. The outcome of the 1998 Seminar on Implementing Economic and Social Rights of Women in Countries in Transition was summarized.

Restructuring and revitalization

As follow-up to Economic and Social Council resolution 1998/46 [YUN 1998, p. 1262] on further measures for the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields, the Executive Secretary submitted to the Commission a note [E/ECE/1370] describing actions that had been taken in response to the guidance provided by that resolution.

The first Regional Inter-agency Coordination Meeting for the ECE region (Geneva, 9 February) reviewed cooperation mechanisms and arrangements at the regional level and exchanged views on areas of cooperation to improve UN system response to the region's needs. It was agreed that dialogue at the regional level needed to be further developed for all organizations collectively to improve their common understanding of the needs, trends and challenges that would lead to a joint assessment of the economic and social situation. The meeting also underlined the rationale for developing regional consultations and activities, recognizing that there were problems inherently regional in nature that could not be solved at the country level, such as air pollution and border crossing. It further agreed that a common assessment of the regional situation should be carried out, which should lead to further defining priority areas for cooperative efforts in the region.

The report also examined cooperation with a number of UN agencies and programmes.

Latin America and the Caribbean

The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) did not meet in 1999. The Commission's twenty-eighth session was to be held in Mexico City from 3 to 7 April 2000.

Economic trends

According to the 1999 summary of the economic survey of Latin America and the Caribbean [E/2000/14], the region's economic performance was weak, with almost zero growth and downturns in investment and consumption. The slowdown in economic growth was due to a sharp decrease in capital inflows, together with the high volume of interest and dividend payments abroad; low commodity prices, except for oil; and the downturn in intraregional trade experienced by the South American countries. Regional growth stagnated at 0.3 per cent and per capita GDP declined by 1.3 per cent. The regional average, however, masked sharp differences across countries. Mexico and much of Central America and the Caribbean grew at moderate or even high rates. Costa Rica, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Nicaragua and Trinidad and Tobago were particularly notable, with GDP growth of between 6 and 8 per cent. The South American countries, by contrast, with their concentration in commodity exports and their significant level of intraregional industrial trade, fared poorly. Declines of 3 per cent or more were posted in Argentina, Colombia, Ecuador and Venezuela, while Brazil's growth was a modest 0.8 per cent.

The regional inflation rate, which, at 9.5 per cent, was the lowest in half a century, remained under control despite the depreciation of a number of currencies. Of 22 countries for which information was available, 17 had single-digit inflation rates. Brazil and Ecuador were the only countries where the inflation rate increased significantly, from 2.5 per cent in 1998 to about 8.5 per cent in 1999, and from 43 per cent to 61 per cent, respectively.

Regional exports rose by nearly 5 per cent in 1999, but that result was largely due to Mexico, as half of the countries posted lower export values. Export growth, without Mexico, would have been negative (-3 per cent). The slump in export earnings in the region was due to weak commodity prices of agricultural products and industrial commodities in the world market and the fact that the bulk of sales were made in the regional market, where they were hurt by the weakness of economic activity and demand.

The total value of the region's merchandise imports fell for the first time in 15 years, by more than 4 per cent; excluding Mexico, it fell by 15 per cent. That was brought about by slack domestic demand and currency devaluations.

The regional current account deficit narrowed from $87.5 billion in 1998 to $56.5 billion in 1999, due to the slump in imports triggered by the stagnation of income levels and the depreciation of local currencies. Nominal interest rates were lowered, and a number of countries shifted towards flexible exchange rates. The most prominent was Brazil, but similar steps were also taken in Chile, Colombia and Ecuador.

Sluggish economic growth rates led to the worsening of labour market problems. For the region as a whole, employment slipped from 53.7 per cent of the working-age population in 1998 to 52.5 per cent in 1999, while unemployment climbed from 8 to 8.7 per cent, the highest rate registered since records began to be kept for a significant number of countries. However, employment levels in Mexico and some Central American and Caribbean countries were boosted by higher growth rates. The largest increases in unemployment were in Argentina, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador and Venezuela.

External debt

In 1999, the region's total external debt expanded slightly to just under $750 billion from $700 billion the previous year, a 0.5 per cent nominal increase, the lowest rate for the 1990s. Jamaica, Peru and Venezuela saw a reduction in their external debt in nominal terms, while Argentina, Chile, Costa Rica and Uruguay saw their gross external liabilities increase by between 4 and 7 per cent. Paraguay registered a spectacular increase of nearly 40 per cent due to an unprecedented $400 million government bond issue. Indicators of the region's external debt burden remained the same as those for 1998. The ratio of interest due to exports of goods and services held steady at 17 per cent, while the ratio of external debt to exports of goods and services eased slightly to 216 per cent. Over half of the countries continued to display satisfactory debt burden indicators, while in some countries those indicators remained cause for concern. Ecuador defaulted on interest payments on its collateralized Brady bonds and on other government liabilities with private sector creditors. However, the international financial community appeared to see those events as being confined to Ecuador.

Activities in 1999

Development policy and regional economic cooperation

The biennial report on ECLAC activities covering May 1998 to April 2000 [E/2000/40] stated that the Economic Development Division continued to monitor and analyse the region's national macroeconomic policies in order to supply the regional and international communities with information on the state of the regional economy. It also assessed the effects of structural changes and institutional reforms on patterns of economic growth and social equity. Due to the disturbances of the Asian crisis in 1997, which turned into a global financial crisis in 1998, the region's economies went through economic difficulties that revealed the external fragility of their economic growth patterns, particularly international capital movements. The Economic Survey of Latin America and the Caribbean and the Preliminary Overview of the Economies of Latin America and the Caribbean analysed the state of the regional economy and fuelled a regional debate on the most appropriate monetary and exchange-rate policy and on the modalities of capital account openness. The Division focused its research programme on the linkages between the results seen in the region in terms of growth and equity, on the one hand, and the macroeconomic policies and structural and institutional reforms executed in the countries of the region and the international context, on the other. Priority issues included the study of macroeconomic and fiscal policies aimed at restoring macroeconomic stability; strengthening domestic capacity to generate financial resources for investment and facilitating the working of institutions and instruments to channel those resources toward capital accumulation; productivity trends and job creation; and social spending. The Division carried out operational activities that sought to promote a multidisciplinary approach to the evaluation of development policies in the region during the preceding 15 years. Activities were also carried out in fiscal policy and public sector decentralization and institutional requirements for market-led structures in the region. In addition to numerous technical documents and studies prepared for those projects, a number of seminars, workshops and training courses were organized, particularly in fiscal policy, decentralization, and the relation between growth, employment and equity. The Division also participated in activities supporting negotiations for the Free Trade Area of the Americas (FTAA).

The Latin American Centre for Economic and Social Documentation, which focused on the management of information and information technologies for development, directed its activities towards enhancing knowledge, reflection and dissemination of new information management and information technology standards that conditioned the performance and functioning of Latin American and Caribbean societies. Training seminars were held on the design of information projects (Santiago, Chile, 11-15 January); knowledge management with information science researchers (Medellin, Columbia, 18-21 March); and knowledge management via Internet web sites (Santiago, 23-27 August, 29 November-3 December).

The Latin American and Caribbean Institute of Economic and Social Planning worked to satisfy the concerns and priorities expressed by member Governments on the central issue of strategic management and reform of the State. It organized a high-level seminar on basic planning functions (Santiago, 7-8 October) and organized 11 international, 4 subregional and 3 national courses, involving nearly 500 participants from the region, as well as the first international distance education course supported by the Internet on local management of solid household waste and environmental impact. A cycle of conferences in Argentina was held on knowledge, globalization and territory.

The International Trade Unit, the main body responsible for integration, open regionalism and regional cooperation, continued to analyse the evolution of the main Latin American and Caribbean regional integration schemes and their prospects. An expert meeting (Santiago, 17-18 November) was held on open regionalism: evolution and outlook—comparing experiences between Latin America and the Caribbean and the Asia-Pacific region. There was also a meeting of the Integration and Cooperation Secretariats of Latin America and the Caribbean (Lima, Peru, 12 November). A workshop was held in conjunction with the Andean Community to identify measures affecting trade in services (Lima, 20-22 September).

Productive, technological and entrepreneurial development

The Division of Production, Productivity and Management continued to work with countries on analysing and implementing policies and actions to enhance the technological dimension of productive activities; increase competitiveness; overcome bottlenecks in the markets for key factors of production; and stimulate entrepreneurial development.

A project on mining clusters in Latin America, consisting of comparative studies with mining clusters in developed countries, was started, and implementation began on a project funded by the German Agency for Technical Cooperation (GTZ) on a natural reserve cluster development strategy.

ECLAC/GTZ seminars were held on education and training to meet the challenges of economic openness and company restructuring (Mexico City, 15-16 July) and land markets (La Paz, Bolivia, 10 September; Lima, 1 December). Workshops dealt with concepts and methodologies in cluster analysis (Santiago, 17-18 May) and the promotion of small and medium-sized enterprises (Santiago, 10 September). An international seminar on globalization and new business strategies in Latin America took place in Santiago on 20 and 21 December.

International trade and development finance

The International Trade Unit, the main ECLAC body in charge of linkages with the world economy, competitiveness and productive specialization, focused on changes in the international economy and their effect on the demand for the region's exports, the international organization of production and the capacity to adapt. The Fifth Meeting of Trade Policy Officials of Latin America and the Caribbean was held in Lima on 11 and 12 November to foster interchange of opinions and develop approaches to define negotiating stances among countries in the region with respect to FTAA and the World Trade Organization negotiations. A workshop was also held (Santiago, November) on the need for research and the training of negotiators on multilateral negotiation issues, and a regional meeting took place on international trade research and training needs in Latin America and the Caribbean (Santiago, 4-5 November).

Environmental and land resource sustainability

In 1999, the ECLAC Environment and Development Division was restructured into two divisions, the Environment and Human Settlements Division and the Division on Natural Resources and Infrastructure. The subprogramme organized the second meeting of the Inter-Agency Technical Committee of the Forum of Ministers of the Environment of Latin America and the Caribbean (Santiago, 7-8 April); workshops on the identification of an international agenda for research into water resources in the Altiplano (Arica, Chile, 26-28 May) and on policy, law and administration of biosafety in Latin America and the Caribbean (Santiago, 29-30 November); and seminars on the concession of public services and the protection and promotion of foreign investments (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 1-2 July), innovative cases of local management for the protection of the air and climate in Latin America (Santiago, 4-6 November), and urban management strategies and tools for sustainable development in Latin America and the Caribbean (Santiago, 6-7 December).

The subprogramme coordinated several exhibitions on different themes, including: decentralization and the environment (Valdivia, Chile, 20-22 June); openness, sustainability and FTAA (Ottawa, Canada, 4-5 October); and institutional cooperation trade and the environment (Miami, United States, 28-29 October).

In human settlements, support was provided to the fourth meeting of the Forum for Consultation and Coordination among the Ministers and High-level Authorities of the Housing and Urban Development Sector in Latin America and the Caribbean and its eighth regional meeting (Havana, Cuba, 10-17 October). Activities began under a project that assisted urban management in countries of the region, with emphasis on poverty alleviation and the pursuit of social equity, efficiency of public services and urban renewal.

In response to emergencies caused by various natural disasters, a project was launched on improving damage assessment methodology to promote natural disaster mitigation and risk-reduction awareness and preparedness in the region.

Social development and equity

ECLAC's programme of work in social development and equity was carried out in four sectors: designing and implementing social policies, programmes and projects; intensifying and keeping up to date the social diagnosis of the countries in the region; examining the effects of socio-economic development policies on welfare and social equity; and analysing the social, economic and institutional effects of the cultivation, traffic and consumption of drugs, and strategies to deal with them. Seminars, meetings, workshops and round tables were organized, in most cases co-sponsored with other organizations. Several publications were issued dealing with topics related to equity trends in education and employment, youth and rural development, comparative experiences in health care, the management of social policies and programmes, and citizen safety. The 1999 edition of Social Panorama of Latin America was also published and included a study on the living conditions of older adults, especially their family arrangements.

Integration of women in development

ECLAC activities for the integration of women in development in 1999 continued to focus on the follow-up to the Regional Programme of Action for the Women of Latin America and the Caribbean, 1995-2001 [YUN 1994, p. 739], the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women [YUN 1995, p. 1170], the Santiago Consensus [YUN 1997, p. 1012] and preparations for the eighth session of the Regional Conference on Women in Latin America and the Caribbean, to be held in Lima in February 2000.

Two meetings of the Presiding Officers of the Regional Conference were held (Curaçao, Netherlands Antilles, 3-4 June; Santiago, 11-12 November). The Third Caribbean Ministerial Conference on Women: Review and Appraisal of the Fourth World Conference on Women Platform for Action (Port of Spain, Trinidad and Tobago, 5-7 October) assessed progress achieved, decided on future action and adopted the Port of Spain Consensus. At the Central American meeting in preparation for the eighth session of the Regional Conference (San Salvador, El Salvador, 11-12 October), participants formulated a sub-regional contribution to the Conference in the form of a 19-point proposal.

Population and development

The Population Division-Latin American and Caribbean Demographic Centre (CELADE) assigned high priority to monitoring demographic trends relating to fertility, mortality and international migration in the countries of the region. It published the Demographic Bulletin, which included estimates and projections at the national level. The database on spatial distribution of the population and urbanization was updated and improved, as was the databank of the project on investigation of international migration in Latin America. Work continued on updating the RADATAM-Plus software (retrieval of data for small areas by microcomputer), developed to facilitate the management of large amounts of data from different sources in combination with geographical data systems and related tools.

Several analytical studies were made of the socio-economic situation of older persons in some countries of the region, with special emphasis on social vulnerability. They were discussed at the Latin American and Caribbean Symposium on Older Persons (Santiago, 8-10 September) in the context of the International Year of Older Persons (see p. 1124).

Regarding international migration, the Division supported the activities of the Regional Advisory Group on Migration and worked with the International Organization for Migration in supporting the Andean Community countries (Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Venezuela) in the design and application of an integrated information system on international migration. A report was prepared on the use of remittances from migrants to their place of origin.

Economic statistics and projections

The ECLAC Economic Statistics and Projections Division continued to carry out activities to expand the regional framework of statistical information; develop and disseminate statistical information; promote regional cooperation on statistical matters; and produce forward-looking studies on development. A workshop was held on the technology of electronic commerce in statistical data via the Internet (Santiago, 24-28 May). In the household survey area, the Division extensively participated in the activities of the MECOVI programme to improve surveys on living conditions in the region by providing technical assistance to countries in training local technical staff, holding regional workshops and designing databases. Improvements were made to methods for estimating income distribution and poverty and in calculating new indices of unit value for international trade. A system was put into practice for the retrieval and analysis of data from the External Trade Data Bank for Latin America and the Caribbean, from the Balance-of-Payments Data Bank and from the Regional Short-term Indicators Database.

The meeting of Directors of Statistics of the Americas (Santiago, 24-26 March) approved the establishment of a new institutional framework involving the creation of the Statistical Conference of the Americas as an ECLAC subsidiary body. Several projects were under way in relation to the formation of statistical databases, household surveys, improvements to national accounts, the production of basic statistics and social programmes and policies. A technical seminar on consumer price indices was held (Santiago, 21-23 April).

Technical cooperation and assistance

During 1999, ECLAC's Programme Planning and Operations Division completed 71 regional, subregional and national projects, financed from extrabudgetary funds. It launched 32 new projects, 15 of which were completed in 1999.

ECLAC continued to promote technical cooperation among developing countries (TCDC) through the new operational guidelines for the triennium 1997-1999, adopted by the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board [YUN 1997, p. 891], and to build TCDC elements into the execution of projects financed from extrabudgetary resources. That involved strengthening national institutions; setting up cooperation networks and supporting their operation; strengthening information systems to better communicate the demand and supply of technical cooperation between the countries; holding seminars and technical meetings to facilitate an exchange of experiences of interest to the countries; preparing studies and reports specifically aimed at identifying cooperation possibilities; and facilitating the provision of horizontal cooperation services from experts and local consultants linked to projects.

The ECLAC web site became the main information tool, producing gains in terms of coverage and in the timeliness of information relating to TCDC activities in technical cooperation projects being executed. It replaced the bulletin Cooperation and Development, which was published until mid-1997.

Subregional activities

Caribbean

The ECLAC subregional headquarters for the Caribbean—the secretariat of the Caribbean Development and Cooperation Committee (CDCC) (Port of Spain)—focused on the analysis of issues relevant to the economic and social development of the subregion. CDCC, in its capacity as provisional joint secretariat, continued its activities relating to the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States [YUN 1994, p. 783], in cooperation with the secretariat of the Caribbean Community (CARICOM). Meetings were held to assist member countries in preparing for the General Assembly's special session for an assessment and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States (see p. 771). Project proposals relating to the Programme of Action were submitted to a meeting of potential donors and representatives of small island developing States (New York, 24-26 February).

CDCC also assisted member States with preparations for the Assembly's special session for the review and appraisal of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development [YUN 1994, p. 956] (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII).

CDCC convened a Caribbean subregional meeting (Port of Spain, 2 September), which reviewed the implementation of the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1115]. To commemorate the International Year of Older Persons (see p. 1124), a special meeting (Port of Spain, 3 September) was held to consider strategies and programmes relating to ageing and older persons in the Caribbean.

As a follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women [ibid., p. 1170], several technical workshops were held to assist countries in preparing their country reports, which were included in the Caribbean report on the review and appraisal of the Platform for Action adopted by the Conference. That report was adopted at the Third Caribbean Ministerial Conference on Women (Port of Spain, 5-7 October).

CDCC supported the secretariats of CARICOM and the Association of Caribbean States on issues relating to trade agreements, new information technologies, transfer of technologies and other subjects of interest to the subregion. It also cooperated with the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States and other regional and subregional institutions.

Mexico and Central America

During 1999, the ECLAC subregional headquarters in Mexico City continued to expand its studies on regional and hemisphere-wide integration, macroeconomic policies and growth, sustainable technological development in agricultural production, industrial competitiveness, new modalities of participation on the international market, policies on social development and equity, and integration in energy.

The subregional headquarters organized a seminar on "The Fiscal Covenant" (Guatemala City, Guatemala, 22 January), as well as the Guatemalan national seminar on the same topic (Guatemala City, 12 January).

At an international symposium of economists on globalization and the problems of development (Havana, 18-22 January), ECLAC presented a paper on the myths and realities of financial modernization in Central America. It also participated in preparatory meetings organized by the General Secretariat of the Central American Integration System (San Salvador, El Salvador, 13 April and 26-27 April) for the Second Meeting of the Consultative Group for the Reconstruction and Transformation of Central America (Stockholm, Sweden, 23-29 May).

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System

In accordance with decision 53/408 [YUN 1998, p. 966], the General Assembly considered the Secretary-General's 1998 report on cooperation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System [ibid., p. 965].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 October [meeting 38], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/8 [draft: A/54/L.13 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 32].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/3 of 22 October 1997 on cooperation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System,

Bearing in mind the Agreement between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System, in which the parties agree to strengthen and expand their cooperation in matters that are of common concern in the field of their respective competence pursuant to their constitutional instruments,

Considering that the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean has intensified its ties of cooperation with the Latin American Economic System,

Bearing in mind that the Permanent Secretariat of the Latin American Economic System has carried out programmes with the support of the United Nations Development Programme in areas that are considered of priority for the economic and social development of the region,

Considering that the Latin American Economic System is developing joint activities with the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, such as the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the World Intellectual Property Organization,

Welcoming the continued monitoring of changes in the treatment of topics relating to the United Nations system, in close contact with the delegations of the Member States participating in such deliberations,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Urges the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean to continue deepening its coordination and mutual support activities with the Latin American Economic System;

3. Urges the United Nations Development Programme, within its new overall framework and high-priority development objectives in support of sustainable human development, to renew its financial and technical cooperation with the programmes that the Permanent Secretariat of the Latin American Economic System is carrying out in areas of mutual interest and concern, aimed at complementing the technical assistance activities conducted by the Latin American Economic System;

4. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations, funds and programmes of the United Nations system to continue and intensify their support for, and cooperation in the activities of, the Latin American Economic System;

5. Requests both the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Permanent Secretary of the Latin American Economic System to assess, at the appropriate time, the implementation of the Agreement between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Programme and organizational questions

Millennium Assembly

The hearings for the ECLAC region (Santiago, 1-2 September) held in preparation for the UN Millennium Assembly in 2000 were conducted under the theme "The United Nations in the twenty-first century: a view from Latin America and the Caribbean" [A/54/718].

Implementation of pilot projects on budgetary practices and procedures

In a May report [A/53/947], submitted in response to General Assembly decision 53/456 [YUN 1998, p. 1274], the Secretary-General stated that the Department of Management team had carried out an April assessment of the results of the implementation of the pilot project by which authority had been extended to ECLAC in several areas of human resources management and limited aspects of financial management. The team concluded that the project had been implemented without any impact on budgetary practices and procedures; regular monitoring had ensured the proper application of the rules and regulations and overall policies of the Organization. The Secretary-General would continue close monitoring of ECLAC's delegation of authority at the current level (see PART FIVE, Chapter II).

Western Asia

The Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) held its twentieth session in Beirut, Lebanon, on 27 and 28 May [E/1999/41/Rev.1 & Corr.1]. On 28 May, it held a special session to commemorate its twenty-fifth anniversary and adopt the Beirut Declaration. The session was preceded by the eleventh session of the Technical Committee (Beirut, 25-26 May) [E/ESCWA/20/4]. ESCWA adopted resolutions relating to: changes introduced in the programme of work and priorities for the 1998-1999 biennium; the frequency of sessions of its subsidiary bodies and summaries of their reports; the draft programme of work and priorities for the 2000-2001 biennium; the redesignation of the Technical Committee to Preparatory Committee; and the relocation of its permanent headquarters to Beirut.

Economic and social trends

Economic trends

Economic growth accelerated in the ESCWA region in 1999, according to the summary of the survey of economic and social developments in the region [E/2000/15]. Provisional estimates indicated that the combined real GDP of ESCWA members, excluding Iraq, grew by 3.12 per cent, compared with 2.31 per cent in 1998. Real GDP growth rates differed significantly between the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) countries (Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates) and the countries with more diversified economies (Egypt, Iraq, Jordan, Lebanon, Syrian Arab Republic, Yemen, the West Bank and Gaza Strip) and among countries within each group. The combined real GDP growth rate for the GCC countries was 2.63 per cent, while those countries with more diversified economies, excluding Iraq, achieved a 4.1 per cent growth rate.

Estimates indicated that among the GCC countries, the higher growth rates in 1999 were registered in the United Arab Emirates (6 per cent), Bahrain (4.5 per cent) and Oman (3.7 per cent), and the lower rates in Saudi Arabia (1.8 per cent), Qatar (1.3 per cent) and Kuwait (0.5 per cent). Important factors affecting economic growth in the GCC countries were higher oil prices and revenues, oil production cutbacks, fiscal and monetary policies and economic diversification and reform.

The United Arab Emirates real growth rate of 6 per cent was achieved because the Government was able to maintain planned expenditures, despite tumbling oil prices and revenues, by drawing on its earnings from overseas investments. Oman—not a member of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC)—reduced its oil production only marginally in 1999 and benefited from the economic and structural reforms undertaken in previous years. Bahrain, also not an OPEC member, did not curtail its oil production in 1999 and continued State expenditures on planned projects. Its tourism and banking sectors performed well. The improvement of Saudi Arabia's real GDP over 1998 was due to the considerable increase in government expenditures and investment by the private sector as a result of the sharp rise in oil prices and revenues. Real growth in the non-oil sector, which accounted for 64 per cent of GDP in 1999, was estimated to have more than offset the 4.7 per cent decline in oil production and reductions in capital spending in the energy sector. Qatar maintained its austere spending plans in 1999, which hampered growth in the non-oil sectors. Moreover, the exodus of expatriates from the country continued to depress overall market activity, particularly in the real estate, trade and services sectors. Kuwait's positive, though low, growth rate of 0.5 per cent in 1999 was a result of a cut in oil production by 12.02 per cent and the slow increase in government expenditures after oil revenues rebounded sharply from 1998 levels.

Among ESCWA members with diversified economies, estimates of real GDP growth rates differed widely. Egypt, Jordan, Yemen and the West Bank and Gaza Strip achieved rates of 2 per cent or higher, while Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic registered rates of 1 per cent or lower. Egypt's real GDP grew by 6 per cent in 1999, the highest rate not only among that group of countries but within the region as a whole. That was a result mainly of its economic reform and structural adjustment programme, the surge in foreign direct investment inflows, booming tourism and a rejuvenated private sector. Yemen's real GDP growth rose from 3.2 to 4.2 per cent due to a 5 per cent increase in oil production and a sharp rise in prices. In the West Bank and Gaza Strip, real GDP was estimated to have grown from 4.1 per cent in 1998 to 4.6 per cent in 1999. Its economy benefited from the services of the international airport and the Gaza port, surging tourism and soft loans for economic development. Estimates indicated that Jordan's real GDP grew from 1.7 per cent in 1998 to 2.1 per cent in 1999, owing to a notable increase in private investment and higher growth in the services sector, particularly tourism. Lebanon's real GDP growth declined from 3 per cent in 1998 to 0.8 per cent in 1999 and was brought about by the continued crisis in the construction sector, sustained mostly by high interest rates. The Syrian Arab Republic's real GDP grew by 7.8 per cent in 1998 but only 0.5 per cent in 1999. The reversal was due to the decline in agricultural output, a major contributor to the country's economy. Economic conditions in Iraq remained very poor, despite an increase in economic growth due to the effects of significantly higher oil revenues. The economic sanctions imposed by the United Nations (see p. 240) remained in force.

Labour market conditions remained generally unfavourable for job seekers in most of the countries with more diversified economies in 1999. However, Egypt's unemployment rate dropped from 8.3 per cent in 1998 to 7.9 per cent in 1999 due to economic reforms, gigantic development projects, surging foreign direct investment and the booming tourism sector. Labour market conditions improved in Yemen and the West Bank and Gaza in 1999, compared to the previous year. In GCC countries, the indigenization of the labour force, which had been a declared policy for many years and was enforced strictly in 1998, continued in 1999.

Estimated 1999 inflation rates were marginally higher than in the previous year in four of the six GCC countries. It was highest in the United Arab Emirates, while Qatar was the only GCC country to have witnessed a decline from the previous year's level. Except for Qatar, tight monetary policies, higher government expenditures and the partial removal of subsidies on goods and services provided by the Government were responsible for the increased inflation rates. Bahrain registered a 0.5 per cent inflation rate, the lowest among all ESCWA members. Among the countries with more diversified economies, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic had the lowest estimated inflation rate, at 1 per cent. The sharpest decline in inflation among ESCWA members was estimated to have taken place in Yemen, where it dropped from 12.2 per cent in 1998 to 2 per cent in 1999 due to the strengthening of the Yemeni rial as a result of higher oil revenues and a significant increase in foreign aid.

In 1999, budget deficits as a percentage of GDP decreased in most countries of the region to about 3 per cent or less. The largest declines were registered in the GCC countries, which based their respective 1999 budgets on the assumption that oil prices would average about $ 11 per barrel. To reduce their dependence on oil revenue, GCC countries introduced policies aimed at raising non-oil revenues and reducing expenditures. Those member countries with more diversified economies resorted increasingly to domestic resources mobilization, such as improving tax collection, introducing new taxes and raising the rates of existing ones, as well as increasing the use of financial instruments, such as bonds and treasury bills. Both groups of member countries sought to reduce budget deficits either by raising the prices and user fees of public utilities and services or by reducing subsidies and granting lower increases in public sector wages and salaries.

Oil

The region's oil production averaged 17.74 million barrels per day in 1999, a decline of some 3.3 per cent compared with the 18.35 million barrels per day in 1998. That reduction, which was a result of OPEC's March decision to cut production, was offset by the rise in prices. The annual average price of the OPEC crude-oil basket was estimated at $17.47 per barrel for 1999, which was about $5 per barrel higher than the average for the preceding year, representing an increase of over 40 per cent. The region's oil revenues totalled some $93.94 billion in 1999, a 35.8 per cent increase over the 1998 level of $69.15 billion.

Trade

Overall trade performance in the region in 1999 was largely determined by oil export levels. In the first half of the year, when oil prices were depressed, GCC exports remained almost 11 per cent below their 1998 level, but they accelerated as the full impact of increased oil prices became apparent. Total exports for GCC countries were estimated to have increased by 21 per cent and those of the more diversified economies by 12 per cent. The value of ESCWA's total exports in 1999 was estimated at $117.5 billion, compared to $98 billion in 1998. Export revenues for the GCC countries were estimated at $104.8 billion in 1999, with Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates achieving the highest levels, while the smallest were registered by Bahrain. The value of exports of the more diversified economies, excluding Iraq and the West Bank and Gaza Strip, was $12.7 billion, led by Egypt and the Syrian Arab Republic.

ESCWA's total imports in the first half of 1999 dropped by about 6 per cent compared to the same period in 1998, due mainly to a 12 per cent drop in the imports of GCC countries, which accounted for more than 65 per cent of the region's imports. In the second half of the year, as export revenues rose, imports began to increase. Overall, imports of GCC countries rose by an estimated average of 4 per cent in 1999 compared with 1998. The more diversified economies achieved import growth of nearly 4 per cent between the first half of 1998 and the first half of 1999, owing primarily to the increase in the Syrian Arab Republic's imports. For the year as a whole, the more diversified economies registered an estimated negative growth in imports of nearly 2 per cent over 1998.

In November, the GCC countries, after two decades of debate, agreed to establish a customs union by 2005. The unification of tariffs would be an important step forward for GCC countries in their negotiations to establish a free trade area with the EU.

Social trends

ESCWA's population continued to grow at an estimated rate of 2.9 per cent, and high fertility combined with low mortality had led to an imbalance in the age structure of the population, creating a population momentum phenomenon. Therefore, an early stabilization of population would make a crucial contribution to realizing the objective of sustainable economic development. Unless comprehensive macro-level measures targeting women at various micro- and household levels were taken at the regional level, the total fertility rate would remain well above the stabilization level of 2.1 children per women until 2015. High fertility rates were often associated with a low level of female participation in the labour force.

At the dawn of the new millennium, the imbalance between social and economic development, which was initially created by the sudden upsurge in oil revenues in the 1970s, had not yet been totally eliminated in the region, despite significant improvements during the past few decades. The shortfalls of social development were more pronounced, if the data were presented for each gender separately.

The ESCWA region had made a substantial increase in primary school enrolment rate for both sexes and the gender gap had been minimized, except in Yemen, where it was still significant. The primary school dropout rate was still relatively high in some member countries. In 1998, it was 28 per cent in Iraq and 53 per cent in Yemen. Despite the improvement in total enrolment rates at the regional level, especially for the GCC countries, those rates remained significantly lower than those registered in countries with similar GDP per capita. In all levels of education, the female-to-male ratio had been constantly increasing during the past few decades, and at the university level, in a few Gulf countries, more women were enrolled in university than men. However, almost all member countries had female enrolment rates that were significantly lower than those registered in countries with similar GDP per capita. Also, the quality of education, particularly higher education, in the region was cause for great concern.

To meet the challenges of globalization, the skills of labour in the region needed to be upgraded and improved. The ratio of technical training compared to formal secondary training was very low in most member countries, in particular in the GCC countries and Lebanon.

Activities in 1999

During 1999, ESCWA activities under the 1998-1999 work programme [E/ESCWA/2000/1] focused on the management of energy, natural resources and the environment; improvement of the quality of life; economic development and global changes; social development issues; coordination of policies and harmonization of norms and regulations for sectoral development; and development, coordination and harmonization of statistics and information.

Economic development and cooperation

The first session of the Technical Committee on Liberalization of Foreign Trade and Economic Globalization in the Countries of the ESCWA region, established by Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/12 [YUN 1997, p. 1021], was held in Abu Dhabi, United Arab Emirates, on 15 and 16 May. It examined current issues of trade liberalization and globalization and their possible impact on the countries of the region.

On 27 May [E/1999/41/Rev.1 (res. 219(XX))], the Commission decided that sessions of the Technical Committee would be held biennially rather than annually.

To track and assess economic and social trends, the Survey of Economic and Social Developments, 1998-1999 was published. It was a special issue covering economic and social developments in the region over the past 25 years and served to commemorate the Commission's twenty-fifth anniversary. The Preliminary Overview of Economic Developments in the ESCWA Region, 1999 provided the business community and policy makers with an early forecast of the region's economic performance and highlighted the direction of economic change.

ESCWA organized the Expert Group Meetings on the Assessment of Economic and Social Developments in the ESCWA Region during the Last Twenty-five Years and Regional Priorities for the Next Decade (2000-2009) (Beirut, 4-6 May); and an expert group meeting on Environment and Trade Issues: The Impact of WTO Environment Committee Decisions on ESCWA Member States (Beirut, 2-4 November). In the globalization area, including the WTO Agreements and their impact on the region, studies were completed on the implications of issues negotiated in the WTO Committee on Trade and Environment for ESCWA member countries: the cases of Egypt, Jordan and Lebanon; and challenges and opportunities of WTO regarding services in selected ESCWA member countries: tourism. Other studies examined developments in the economic and financial systems and the effects of globalization. They dealt with inflation in the ESCWA region: causes and effects; development of financial markets in the region; the role of foreign direct investment in economic development in ESCWA countries; Arab economic integration efforts; and consumer protection under a liberalized trade system in Egypt, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia and the Syrian Arab Republic.

Transport

The first session of the Committee on Transport (Beirut, 9-10 February) [E/ESCWA/C.1/20/7/Add.6], established by Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/11 [YUN 1997, p. 1022], adopted for approval by the Commission the Declaration on the Adoption and Development of an Integrated Transport System in the Arab Mashreq. The Declaration recommended, among other things, the numbering of road and railway network routes. The Committee recommended that the ESCWA secretariat prepare a convention on the cooperation and harmonization of maritime transport policies, the development of national fleets and the facilitation of intraregional commercial traffic.

ESCWA organized two expert group meetings to support member States' efforts to harmonize sectoral policies and globalization trends in transport: one on the WTO Agreement on Maritime and Air Transport Services in the Arab Region (Beirut, 9-11 June), and the other on Harmonization of Transport Norms and Legislative Instruments for Regional Cooperation, including UN/Electronic Data Interchange for Administration, Commerce and Transportation (EDIFACT) (Beirut, 16-18 November).

The Commission undertook a study on the harmonization of environmental standards in the transport sector in ESCWA member countries, which examined the issue of environmental pollution caused by land transport from the regional and global points of view, finalized a preliminary assessment of transport and related infrastructure in the GCC region, and organized a workshop on land transport policy in Lebanon (Beirut, 6-8 July).

Statistics

The Statistical Committee, at its third session (Beirut, 16-18 March) [E/ESCWA/C.1/20/7/Add.7], examined ways to achieve greater coordination of and support for cooperation between the countries of the region and the Statistical Division in statistical activities and programmes; reviewed the ESCWA statistical programme for 2000-2001; examined the status of the 1993 System of National Accounts; and discussed the participation of ESCWA members in the International Comparison Programme (see also PART THREE, Chapter XV). It also considered technical cooperation programmes, the Regional Household Survey Project, the impact of UN global conferences on social statistics, the general system for the publication of statistical data and the strategy of the 2000 Round of Population and Housing Censuses.

Among other action, the Committee encouraged the adoption of the General Data Dissemination System, prepared by IMF; requested ESCWA members to link that System to the basic principles of official statistics established by the UN Statistical Commission and the ESCWA Statistical Committee; and asked IMF to offer technical and financial support.

The ESCWA Statistics Division organized regional workshops on vital statistics and civil registration systems in ESCWA member States (Cairo, Egypt, 16-21 October); industrial and construction statistics (Beirut, 29 November-4 December); and gender statistics in the Arab countries (Amman, Jordan, 8-11 November).

A number of publications were issued on statistical issues, including the Statistical News Letter, Statistical Abstract of the ESCWA Region, External Trade Bulletin of the ESCWA Region, National Accounts Studies of the ESCWA Region, Bulletin on Vital Statistics in the ESCWA Region, and Bulletin of Industrial Statistics for the Arab Countries, 1990-1998. For the first time, ESCWA produced a publication on gender statistics, entitled Women and Men in the Arab Region: A Statistical Portrait.

Natural resources, energy and environment

The Committee on Water Resources, at its third session (Beirut 21-22 April) [E/ESCWA/C.1/20/7/Add.3], adopted "The Commission's View of the Future of the Field of Water Resources", in which it set out action to be taken by ESCWA to assist States in water resources development, management and conservation. It also adopted a Declaration on the water situation in the ESCWA region, in which it appealed to States to take action to ward off the danger threatened by the decline in surface water and ground-water resources.

On 27 May [E/1999/41/Rev.1 (res. 219(XX))], the Commission decided that future sessions of the Committee would be held biennially rather than annually.

To contribute to the development of sustainable sources of water and raise public awareness about the rational use and conservation of water, ESCWA convened the Expert Group Meeting on Updating the Assessment of Water Resources in the ESCWA Member Countries (Beirut, 20-23 April) to discuss the assessment, development, utilization and management of water resources at the national and regional levels. It completed studies on the development of freshwater resources in ESCWA's rural areas by using non-conventional techniques and on current water policies and practices in selected ESCWA countries.

The Committee on Energy held its second session in Beirut on 3 and 4 November. It followed up on progress made in implementing the work programme for 1998-1999; examined the planned work programme for 2000-2001; discussed the medium-term plan for 2002-2005; and reviewed the advisory services provided by ESCWA in the field of energy.

ESCWA completed a study on the promotion of new and renewable sources of energy with particular emphasis on remote areas, which presented a proposal for a regional programme on the dissemination of renewable energy services to rural communities. Three projects were identified for implementation, two on village electrification in Yemen and the third on the gasification of agricultural waste for energy production in Egypt. The Expert Group Meeting on the Privatization of the Electric Power Sector (Beirut, 1-4 November) discussed prospects for privatization of the power sector, particularly in electricity generation.

In the environment area, the Expert Group Meeting on the Adequacy of Environmental Legislation and the Promotion of Enforcement (Beirut, 7-9 June) assessed the status and adequacy of environmental laws and regulations and recommended enforcement mechanisms. ESCWA organized a study and expert group meeting on the harmonization of environmental standards in the water sector in ESCWA countries (Beirut, 28 September-1 October). A study on the harmonization of environmental standards in the energy sector of ESCWA member States was also undertaken and an expert group meeting organized on the subject (Cairo, 29 June-1 July).

Quality of life

The second session of the Committee on Social Development (Beirut, 7-8 April) [E/ESCWA/C.1/20/7/Add.4] focused on policy issues, the ESCWA subprogramme on improvement of the quality of life and the integrated follow-up to UN global conferences held in the 1990s. The Committee issued a Declaration setting out its objectives and commitments with regard to achieving sustainable human development and comprehensive development.

ESCWA continued work on developing guidelines for applying the concept of sustainable human development in four main areas: poverty alleviation; sustainable human development; the role of NGOs; and persons with disabilities. Preparatory meetings held in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 971] in follow-up to UN global conferences culminated in the Arab Conference on Integrated Regional

Follow-up to Global Conferences (Beirut, 29 November-1 December). Under the ESCWA/UNDP Flagship Project, ESCWA serviced the first meeting of the Project's Steering Committee; disseminated information on the recommendations of the global conferences; convened the Roundtable Discussion on Partnership between Government and Civil Society (Beirut, 4-5 October); created a web site on the Project; and prepared a brochure on cross-cutting issues.

Work began on the formulation of poverty alleviation policies for consideration by policy makers. Two studies on poverty alleviation were completed: "Feasibility and operationalization of microcredit finance facilities targeting poor women in urban and rural areas in selected Arab countries: theoretical perspectives and practical considerations"; and "Urban settlements and poverty".

In the context of its focus on persons with disabilities, ESCWA convened simultaneously an international seminar on environmental accessibility and a training workshop on a barrier-free environment (Beirut, 30 November-3 December). Further activities were carried out under the project on enhancing the accessibility of disabled persons in the ESCWA region.

Population issues were addressed in a study entitled "Five years after the Cairo Conference: Population policies in Arab countries" and in the Expert Group Meeting on Migration and Population Policies in the ESCWA Member Countries (Beirut, 23-24 November). A workshop on population policies and sustainable development was organized in conjunction with that meeting (Beirut, 15-17 November).

With respect to human settlements, an Expert Group Meeting on Urban Management: Follow-up of National Strategies in the ESCWA Member States was convened (Dubai, United Arab Emirates, 8-12 November).

The database on social policies was expanded to include information on human development, women and human settlements and was renamed the ESCWA Integrated Information System on Policies, Measures and Indicators.

Programme and organizational questions

Redesignation of Technical Committee

On 27 May [E/1999/41/Rev.1 (res. 223(XX))], the Commission decided to change the name of the Technical Committee to the Preparatory Committee and recommended a resolution to the Economic and Social Council for adoption.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ESCWA [E/1999/14/Add.3], adopted resolution 1999/42 without vote [agenda item 10].

Redesignation of the Technical Committee of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1982/64 of 30 July 1982, by which it established, within the Economic Commission for Western Asia, a Standing Committee for the Programme of the Commission, and its resolution 1984/80 of 27 July 1984 on the general policy-making structure of the Commission, in which it designated the Standing Committee as the Technical Committee,

Recalling also Commission resolution 114(IX) of 12 May 1982, in which the Commission entrusted to the Committee the task of reviewing programming issues and presenting recommendations in that regard, as a preparatory committee, to the sessions of the Commission held at the ministerial level,

Recalling further the successive establishment of six technical committees of the Commission during the period from 1992 to 1997,

Wishing to avoid possible confusion between the name of the present Technical Committee and the names of the sectoral technical committees,

Decides to change the name of the Technical Committee to Preparatory Committee.

Programme of work, 1998-1999

The Commission had before it a report on progress made between 1 January 1998 and 30 April 1999 in implementing the programme of work for the 1998-1999 biennium [E/ESCWA/C.1/20/4 (Part I)].

The major problems faced by programme managers in carrying out the 1998-1999 work programme included the loss of most of the local staff because of the move of ESCWA's headquarters from Amman to Beirut and the high vacancy rate, which resulted in the delivery of a number of 1998 outputs being delayed until 1999. A limited number of departures from programmed activities were effected, mainly for programmatic reasons or pursuant to legislative mandates.

On 27 May [E/1999/41/Rev.1 (res. 218(XX))], the Commission approved the changes introduced in the programme of work and recommended a resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ESCWA, [E/1999/14/Add.3], adopted resolution 1999/43 without vote [agenda item 10].

Changes introduced in the programme of work and priorities of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia for the biennium 1998-1999

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting with satisfaction the progress made in the implementation of the programme of work and priorities of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia for the biennium 1998-1999,

Cognizant of the changes introduced by the secretariat of the Commission in programme activities,

Having studied the reasons and justifications for those changes, which relate to the cancellation, reformulation, addition or postponement of activities or outputs,

Aware of the need for a certain degree of flexibility in the implementation of the programme of work of the Commission in order that it may include new issues directly related to it,

Approves the changes introduced in the programme of work of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia as they appear in the annex to the report of the Executive Secretary on progress made during 1998 in the implementation of the programme of work for the biennium 1998-1999.

Programme of work, 2000-2001

The Commission had before it the draft programme of work and priorities for the 2000-2001 biennium [E/ESCWA/C.1/20/8]. Among the main features were the maintenance of the multidisciplinary approach through the development of clusters of outputs around regional follow-up to global conferences, as well as issues relating to the environment, poverty, civil society institutions, gender, WTO and related concerns, globalization of the world economy, electronic commerce and free trade in the region, as well as gender mainstreaming and human rights.

On 27 May [E/1999/41/Rev.1 (res. 222(XX))], the Commission adopted the draft programme of work and priorities for the 2000-2001 biennium.

Draft medium-term plan, 2002-2005

The Technical Committee (eleventh session, Beirut, 25-26 May) [E/ESCWA/20/4] considered the ESCWA draft medium-term plan for 2002-2005, programme 18. Economic and social development in Western Asia [E/ESCWA/C.1/20/9]. The Committee discussed the need to grant representatives sufficient time to study the plan and consult with their Governments. A number of additions to the Plan were proposed, relating to Arab economic integration, the encouragement of investment in the region, the Arab common market, assistance and support to member countries desirous of joining WTO or entering into future multilateral trade negotiations, and postal services.

Permanent headquarters

Having considered the Executive Secretary's note on the relocation of ESCWA to its permanent headquarters in Beirut [E/ESCWA/20/7/Rev.1], the Commission on 27 May [E/1999/41/Rev.1 (res. 224(XX))] endorsed the transfer of the permanent headquarters to United Nations House in Beirut and submitted a resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ESCWA [E/1999/14/Add.3], adopted resolution 1999/44 without vote [agenda item 10].

Relocation of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia to its permanent headquarters at Beirut

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling resolution 197(XVII) of 31 May 1994 of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia, in which the Commission decided to submit a recommendation to the Economic and Social Council that the permanent headquarters of the Commission be relocated to Beirut,

Recalling also its resolution 1994/43 of 29 July 1994 on the permanent headquarters of the Commission, in which the Council requested the Secretary-General to take all steps necessary to effect the transfer of the permanent headquarters of the Commission to Beirut and to ensure that the transfer was financed within existing resources and primarily from extrabudgetary contributions,

Recalling further Commission resolution 207(XVIII) of 25 May 1995 on facilitating the relocation of the Commission to its permanent headquarters at Beirut, in which the Commission called on member States to take measures to support the Secretary-General in his efforts to secure the necessary resources for the implementation of resolution 197(XVII),

Recalling Commission resolution 215(XIX) of 7 May 1997 on progress made in facilitating the relocation of the Commission to its permanent headquarters at Beirut, in which the Commission requested the authorities concerned within the Secretariat to examine the possibility of utilizing the skills of local Commission staff at Amman in other areas within the United Nations or of finding ways to compensate them,

Cognizant of the note by the Executive Secretary of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia on the relocation of the Commission to its permanent headquarters at Beirut, which deals with all the legal, administrative, logistic and financial aspects of the transfer,

Commending the measures adopted by the Commission secretariat for the implementation of the relocation plan in accordance with a timetable that did not affect the implementation of its programmes and took into account the needs of the staff,

Commending also the measures adopted by the Secretariat to utilize the skills of the local staff at Amman in other areas within the United Nations or determine ways to compensate them,

1. Endorses the action taken by the secretariat of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia for the transfer of the permanent headquarters of the Commission to United Nations House at Beirut by 31 December 1997, in particular the conclusion of the agreement between the United Nations and the Government of Lebanon concerning the headquarters of the Commission, signed on 27 August 1997, and the supplementary agreement between the United Nations and the Government of Lebanon relating to the occupancy and use of United Nations premises at Beirut, signed on 9 October 1997;

2. Also endorses the action taken by the Commission secretariat to facilitate the transfer of other United Nations offices and agencies at Beirut to United Nations House on 1 December 1998, and to devise internal mechanisms for the sharing of common services and related costs;

3. Endorses with satisfaction the financial arrangements related to the move, made by the Commission secretariat in compliance with Council resolution 1994/43, in which the Council requested the Secretary-General to ensure that the transfer was financed within existing resources and primarily from extrabudgetary contributions;

4. Reiterates its expression of gratitude to the Government of Lebanon for its financial contributions and its efforts to provide a headquarters that satisfies the requirements and needs of the United Nations and for its cooperation in complying with the provisions of the Headquarters Agreement signed on 27 August 1997;

5. Expresses its gratitude to the Government of Kuwait for its financial contribution towards the transfer of the headquarters of the Commission, and to the Government of Saudi Arabia for the contribution which it made to supporting the activities of the Commission following its transfer to its permanent headquarters;

6. Reiterates its thanks to the Governments of Iraq and Jordan for the facilities offered to the Commission during its stay at Baghdad and Amman, respectively, and to the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic for facilitating the movement of staff and equipment through its territory.

Twenty-fifth anniversary of ESCWA

ESCWA, in considering the agenda item "Celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Commission", had before it a note by the Executive Secretary [E/ESCWA/20/8], to which were annexed summaries of studies on: peace and security in the ESCWA countries; economic developments; social developments; the development of institutions; and ESCWA (1974-1999): twenty-five years of service to the region's development.

The morning session of 28 May was devoted to the celebrations, which took the form of panel discussions of the studies mentioned above.

On 27 May [E/1999/41/Rev.1 (res. 220(XX))], the Commission adopted the Beirut Declaration as a new vision that defined its role and tasks in line with regional and world developments in the coming century. It submitted the declaration to the Economic and Social Council for adoption.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ESCWA [E/1999/14/Add.3], adopted resolution 1999/45 without vote [agenda item 10].

Beirut Declaration

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling resolution 217(XIX) of 7 May 1997 of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia concerning the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Commission, in particular paragraph 3, in which the Commission invited the Governments of member States to take the opportunity to formulate a new vision for the region in line with regional and world developments in the coming century,

Recalling also the call by the Commission for the issuance of a declaration embodying the Commission's vision of the future and its role in coordinating the policies of member States in the economic and social spheres and broadening cooperation between them,

1. Decides to take note of the Beirut Declaration, annexed hereto, as a new vision that defines the role and tasks of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia in line with regional and world developments in the coming century;

2. Invites member States to take inspiration from elements of the Declaration in formulating their national policies and programmes and in strengthening international and regional cooperation between themselves;

3. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia to ensure that in future the activities of the Commission take into account the content of the Declaration.

ANNEX

Beirut Declaration: Western Asia preparing for the twenty-first century

We, the representatives of the Governments of the member States of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia, meeting at Beirut on 27 and 28 May 1999 at the twentieth session of the Commission and gathered here today to celebrate its twenty-fifth anniversary,

Acting in accordance with the desire of our Governments to assume their responsibilities towards their peoples in their aspiration towards integrated, sustainable development, stressing their originality and their contributions to civilization, believing in the principles and purposes of the Charter of the United Nations, aware of the development of international relations and partnership, and acting on the experience and lessons of the past, understanding the present and its dimensions and looking with confidence to the future,

Taking the opportunity offered by the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia,

Present our vision of the role and tasks of the Commission in line with regional and world developments in the coming century, as set out below.

1. The growth of globalism does not diminish or detract from the extreme importance of acting at the regional level. Nor does the global nature of problems preclude area-specific solutions and policies. In the trend towards globalism, with full respect for the sovereignty of States, regionalism cannot be bypassed. Co-operative arrangements within homogeneous groups, especially of small and medium-sized countries, represent a bridge between national and global interests. Moreover, development trends and requirements do not materialize all at once throughout the world, but rather do so in the form of regional waves, in which the conditions and situations peculiar to each area must be taken into account.

2. The role and functions of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia are based primarily on development and economic and social cooperation, the objective being to raise the level of economic activity in Western Asia and to maintain and strengthen economic relations between its member countries and other countries of the world. Such development can be achieved only to the extent that it is comprehensive, integrated and sustainable in both the economic and social spheres.

3. Recognition of the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of States, non-interference in their internal affairs and settlement of disputes by peaceful means in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law constitute the basis of a sound international community. However, the State is not capable by itself of achieving comprehensive, sustainable development unless there exists international cooperation in the economic and social fields that is based, on the one hand, on a just and comprehensive peace, security on equal terms, and respect for the principles of justice and international law, and on the other hand, on international relations that are balanced in all areas and based on effective international cooperation and a genuine sense of partnership on the part of donor States and international donor institutions.

4. The increasing importance of regional cooperation in the economic and social fields places a great responsibility on the Commission. As part of the United Nations system, the Commission is the natural place for dealing with issues related to such cooperation, for it is not merely a regional arrangement for expressing the needs and particularities of the region to which it belongs, but also the embodiment, at the regional level, of the universal purposes and principles set forth in the Charter and resolutions of the United Nations.

5. The future of the region, on the threshold of the twenty-first century, requires its transformation into a zone of economic and social cooperation and mutual respect of all for the rights and interests of the peoples of the region in an atmosphere of a just and comprehensive peace, security on a basis of equality, and economic and social stability. These goals can be achieved only if cooperation is strengthened between the members of the Commission, the United Nations and international financial institutions and the following objective conditions are met:

(a) The achievement of a just and comprehensive peace, security on equal terms and stability in the region of Western Asia through the implementation of relevant United Nations resolutions, and full respect for international legitimacy and the foundations and principles of the peace process, foremost among them being the principle of land for peace and respect for the rights of peoples and their legitimate aspirations;

(b) The creation of an environment that will stimulate economic and social cooperation and development in all domains, including cooperation between the countries of the region in the areas of water, environment and energy, which calls for a comprehensive view that takes into account the balancing of national needs and global requirements and is based on integration of the various aspects of sustainable human development, with recognition of the mutually supportive roles of an effective state administration, an efficient private sector and a sound civil society;

(c) The exertion of efforts to integrate member States of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia into the international economic and trading system, by assisting them in dealing with the rules and principles on which it is based and heightening the advantages and at the same time limiting the drawbacks that might be involved, and by the establishment of a dialogue with the international organizations concerned;

(d) The promotion of democracy and respect for human rights, including the right to life, the right of self-determination and the right to development, and fundamental freedoms within a context of respect for national and regional characteristics and different religious, cultural and historical values. Achieving complementarity between freedom and responsibility at all levels in a State based on institutions and law constitutes a fundamental guarantee for enabling the region to continue its creative participation in the civilization of humankind;

(e) The development of the role of the Commission through support for its technical bodies and the obtaining of adequate support from the United Nations system, including the financial and human resources needed to enable the Commission to carry out its activities in the best possible way in order to be able to bolster the efforts of member States and become a basic forum in the economic and social fields with a view to promoting regional economic cooperation on a sound basis that will help to strengthen development and progress among the Commission's member States.

Reports of subsidiary bodies

The Executive Secretary submitted to the Commission in May summaries of the reports of its subsidiary bodies [E/ESCWA/C.1/20/7], namely, the Committees on Energy, Water Resources, Social Development, Transport, and Statistics, and the Technical Committee on Liberalization of Foreign Trade and Economic Globalization in the Countries of the ESCWA region.

On 27 May [E/1999/41/Rev.1 (res. 221 (XX))], the Commission, having examined the reports, amended the titles of the annexes to some of them to read "statements issued by the subsidiary bodies" instead of "declarations issued by the subsidiary bodies".

On the same date [res. 219 (XX)], the Commission decided that the session of the Committee on Water Resources and the Technical Committee on Liberalization of Foreign Trade and Economic Globalization in the Countries of the ESCWA region should be held biennially rather than annually. It emphasized that the sessions of all its subsidiary bodies should be held once every two years. A draft resolution on the subject was recommended to the Economic and Social Council for approval.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ESCWA [E/1999/14/Add.3], adopted resolution 1999/41 without vote [agenda item 10].

Frequency of sessions of the sectoral committees of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia

The Economic and Social Council,

Conscious of the need for uniform frequency of the sessions of all the sectoral committees of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia,

Recalling Commission resolution 212(XIX) of 7 May 1997, in which the Commission decided that the Committee on Water Resources should hold its meetings annually,

Recalling also Commission resolution 214(XIX) of 7 May 1997, in which the Commission decided to establish a technical committee on liberalization of foreign trade and economic globalization in the countries of the region of the Economic and Social Commission of Western Asia, the meetings of which would be held annually,

Recalling further that the Commission secretariat can provide support and advice to member States, on request, during years in which no sessions of the sectoral committees are held,

Realizing that the sectoral committees can hold special sessions, as needed, in accordance with the provisions of the rules of procedure of the Commission,

1. Approves the amendment of resolutions 212(XIX) and 214(XIX) of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia to the effect that the sessions of the Committee on Water Resources and of the Technical Committee on Liberalization of Foreign Trade and Economic Globalization in the Countries of the Region of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia shall be held biennially rather than annually;

2. Emphasizes that the sessions of all the sectoral committees shall be held once every two years.

Millennium Assembly

In an October note [A/54/280 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General reported on the hearings (Beirut, 23-24 May) held for ESCWA's region in preparation for the Millennium Assembly in 2000, which produced proposals aimed at strengthening the role of the United Nations and ensuring its relevance in the twenty-first century. The issues selected for discussion were peace and security, economic and social development, and human rights and governance.

Chapter VI

Natural resources, energy and cartography

The conservation, development and use of natural resources and energy were considered by several UN bodies in 1999, including the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development, which held its first session in April. The Committee, established in 1998, paid particular attention to the issue of energy in the context of sustainable development and the impact of agriculture and land management on the water resource base. The Committee drafted contributions to reports of the Secretary-General on water-related matters, on which the Economic and Social Council took action in July.

The General Assembly, in December, calling for further action to ensure that the World Solar Programme 1996-2005 was fully integrated into UN efforts towards attaining the objective of sustainable development, encouraged the Secretary-General to continue efforts to mobilize technical assistance and funding for the effective implementation of national and regional projects in renewable sources of energy.

The report of the International Atomic Energy Agency was presented to the Assembly in November by its Director General; the Assembly welcomed the Agency's measures to strengthen and fund its technical cooperation activities, which would contribute to achieving sustainable development in developing countries.

Energy and natural resources

The Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development, which was established by the Economic and Social Council by resolution 1998/46 [YUN 1998, p. 1262] through the merger of the Committee on Natural Resources and the Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development, held its first session in New York from 5 to 16 April [E/1999/32], as decided by the Council on 2 February (decision 1999/204). The Committee comprised two sub-groups—one on energy and one on water resources.

The Committee recommended to the Council for adoption draft resolutions on: its contributions to the preparation of the Secretary-

General's report on progress made in providing safe water supply and sanitation for all during the 1990s and to the preparatory process for the eighth (2000) session of the Commission on Sustainable Development (CSD) on integrated planning and management of land resources and agriculture; and the Secretary-General's report on the spatial planning of land (including minerals) and water resources (see p. 967).

It also recommended two draft decisions on procedural matters. On 28 July, the Council decided that the dates for the Committee's second session should be brought forward to 14 to 25 August 2000, after which the Committee would continue to meet biennially, with its third session to be held in 2002, and that provisions should be made for the Committee's two sub-groups to hold parallel meetings (decision 1999/276). By decision 1999/277 of the same date, the Council took note of the report on the Committee's first session and transmitted it to CSD. It also approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the second session.

In other action, the Committee brought to the Council's attention a decision on its contribution to the preparatory process for the ninth (2001) session of CSD [E/1999/32 (dec. 1/1)] and another suggesting the convening of a meeting on the environmental effects of small-scale and artisanal mining operations, including but not limited to pollution of surface water and groundwater [dec. 1/2].

Energy

At the first session of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development [E/1999/32], the Sub-group on Energy considered the Committee's contribution to the preparatory process for the ninth session of CSD; reviewed salient trends and issues of energy development and use in the context of sustainable development; and met with the Inter-Agency Task Force on Energy in a dialogue session to determine how to contribute to CSD's ninth session in a mutually supportive way.

For its review of salient trends, the Committee had before it documents prepared for the third session of the Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy Development, which had been scheduled for 1998, but did not take place due to the termination of its mandate [YUN 1998, p. 972]. Those reports covered: follow-up to the previous sessions of the Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development [E/C.13/1998/2]; environmentally sound and efficient fossil energy technologies [E/C.13/1998/3]; renewable sources of energy, with special emphasis on wind energy [E/C.13/1998/4]; development and implementation of rural energy policies [E/C.13/1998/5]; energy and transportation [E/C.13/1998/6]; and coordination of activities of the organizations of the UN system in the field of energy [E/C.13/1998/7].

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, bearing in mind the nature and purposes of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Energy and Sustainable Development, which would meet in conjunction with the inter-sessional ad hoc working groups of CSD at its eighth (2000) and ninth (2001) sessions, decided that States not members of the Commission would be allowed to nominate their nationals to the Bureau of the Group (decision 1999/285).

Contribution to CSD (ninth session). The Committee decided to submit to the ninth session of CSD, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1998/46 [YUN 1998, p. 1262], its contribution to the preparatory process for that session [dec. 1/1]. The sectoral theme of the session would be "Atmosphere/energy", while in the economic sector "Energy/transport" would be considered. The Committee identified seven critical issues requiring urgent attention during the preparatory process, particularly by the Open-ended Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Energy and Sustainable Development and by CSD: accessibility of energy; energy and atmospheric emissions; sustainable energy technology development; energy and transportation; the impact of liberalization and privatization; adequate financing; and formulation and implementation of sustainable energy policies. The Committee also identified six options that should be given special attention for a sustainable energy future: improving energy and materials efficiency; speeding up development and use of renewable energy technologies; cleaner production and use of fossil fuels; the role of nuclear power in a sustainable energy future; cleaner alternative fuels and new technologies for the transportation sector; and extension and interconnection of energy transportation grids. As to policy and measures for a sustainable energy future, the Committee found the following to be of crucial importance: development and implementation of national sustainable energy policies; a regulatory framework for the implementation of energy policies; financing and investment, including research and development funding; economic instruments to facilitate a sustainable energy future; capacity-building; and international cooperation.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July [meeting 46], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Sustainable Development [E/1999/29], adopted resolution 1999/60 without vote [agenda item 13 (a)].

Preparations for the ninth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development, on energy issues

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 adopted by the General Assembly at its nineteenth special session, in which the Assembly, inter alia, decided that preparations for the ninth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development, on energy issues, should utilize an open-ended intergovernmental group of experts on energy and sustainable development, to be convened in conjunction with inter-sessional meetings of the eighth and ninth sessions of the Commission,

Recalling also the multi-year programme of work of the Commission on Sustainable Development, 1998-2002, and paragraph 46 of the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21,

1. Decides that the first session of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Energy and Sustainable Development shall be held in New York in the first quarter of 2000 for a duration of one work week, immediately before or after the meetings of the inter-sessional ad hoc working groups of the Commission on Sustainable Development, and that the session shall have the following provisional agenda:

1. Election of officers.
2. Adoption of the agenda and other organizational matters.
3. Preparations for the ninth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development, on energy issues.
4. Provisional agenda of the second session of the Group of Experts.
5. Adoption of the report of the Group of Experts on its first session.

2. Also decides that the Bureau of the Group of Experts shall consist of five members, one from each of the five regional groups of the United Nations, and shall include two co-chairmen, one from a developed country and one from a developing country, and invites the regional groups to nominate their candidates expeditiously and to inform the Bureau of the eighth session of the Commission so that they can be involved in the preparations;

3. Requests the Group of Experts to report to the Commission at its eighth session on progress made on its work at its first session and to recommend to the Commission the agenda, timing and duration of its second session, to be held in 2001;

4. Decides to transmit the report of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development on its first session to the Commission at its eighth session, as well as to the Group of Experts at its first session, as an input to the preparatory process for the ninth session of the Commission;

5. Invites the Secretary-General, on the basis of submissions and information provided by Governments and working in close collaboration with entities within the United Nations as well as with other relevant international organizations, to prepare analytical reports and other documentation, as appropriate, for consideration at the first session of the Group of Experts;

6. Calls upon Governments to participate actively and contribute to the preparatory process;

7. Encourages the participation of civil society and other major groups, including the private sector, in particular from developing countries, in the preparatory process;

8. Decides that the participation of non-governmental organizations in the work of the Group of Experts should be in accordance with the rules of procedure of the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council;

9. Recognizes that funding to support the participation of representatives, in particular from developing countries, in the meetings of the Group of Experts is essential, and should be provided in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (d) of Council decision 1993/207 of 12 February 1993, and urges additional voluntary contributions to support the participation of representatives from developing countries that are not members of the Commission.

World Solar Programme (1996-2005)

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/7 [YUN 1998, p. 976], the Secretary-General submitted an August report on the World Solar Programme 1996-2005 [A/54/212]. With regard to international coordination and cooperation in implementing the Programme, which was endorsed by the Assembly in resolution 53/7, the Secretary-General stated that the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) had written to the heads of relevant UN organizations and programmes inviting their cooperation. Also, a letter signed by the UNESCO Director-General and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) had been sent to all UNDP resident representatives and directors/heads of UNESCO field offices instructing them to assist Member States in implementing the projects included in the Programme. Initiatives had also been taken by UNDP, the Global Environment Facility, the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs, the World Solar Commission and the United Nations Environment Programme.

The Secretary-General reported that, over the preceding two years, the World Solar Commission had mobilized some $500 million of international assistance for the execution of projects included in the Programme. In addition, a number of countries had taken legislative action favouring the development and deployment of renewable energy technologies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/54/588/Add.7], adopted resolution 54/215 without vote [agenda item 100].

World Solar Programme 1996-2005

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/7 of 16 October 1998, by which it, inter alia, endorsed the World Solar Programme 1996-2005 as a contribution to the overall sustainable development agenda and invited all States Members of the United Nations to contribute to its successful implementation,

Recalling also resolution 29 C/14 concerning the World Solar Programme 1996-2005, adopted by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in November 1997,

Reaffirming that the convening at Harare on 16 and 17 September 1996 of the World Solar Summit, at which the Harare Declaration on Solar Energy and Sustainable Development was adopted and the preparation of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005 approved, was a step in pursuance of the implementation of Agenda 21, which is a multifaceted and, at the same time, fundamental programme of action for achieving sustainable development,

Recognizing that mutually supportive efforts at the national and international levels are imperative in the pursuit of sustainable development, which includes, inter alia, the provision of financial resources and the transfer of technology for the application of cost-effective energy systems and wider use of environment-friendly, renewable energies,

Acknowledging the important role of the General Assembly in promoting the World Solar Programme 1996-2005,

Acknowledging also the role of the Commission on Sustainable Development and the Economic and Social Council as forums for the discussion of new and renewable sources of energy and sustainable development,

Expressing its appreciation of the efforts of the Secretary-General in bringing the World Solar Programme 1996-2005 to the attention of relevant sources of funding and technical assistance,

Noting the establishment of the Inter-agency Working Group on Energy with a view to ensuring the coordination of the activities of all relevant organizations of the United Nations system in the preparations for the ninth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development in 2001, and to contributing to sustainable development, taking into account the recommendations of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005,

Noting also that the Global Renewable Energy Education and Training Programme 1996-2005 constitutes one of the major programmes of universal value of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005,

Calling for further action to ensure that the World Solar Programme 1996-2005 is fully integrated into and brought into the mainstream of the efforts of the United Nations system towards attaining the objective of sustainable development,

Emphasizing that the achievement of more substantive results in the implementation of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005, as part of the promotion of new and renewable sources of energy, will require the more active and collaborative involvement of all concerned parties, including Governments, multilateral funding agencies and relevant parts of the United Nations system,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General, including measures taken by the various entities of the United Nations system for the implementation of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005;

2. Notes with appreciation the role of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in promoting, within its mandate, the implementation of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005, in particular its education and training programmes in the field of new and renewable sources of energy, and, in this context, also notes with appreciation the initiative undertaken by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization of inviting the competent organs and programmes of the United Nations system to cooperate in the implementation of the Programme;

3. Notes the role that the World Solar Commission has so far played in the mobilization of international support and assistance for the implementation of many of the national high-priority projects on renewable sources of energy included in the World Solar Programme 1996-2005, many of which are being executed with national funding;

4. Commends highly the efforts of many Member States in taking concrete national actions, including legislative measures, that have resulted in the wider use of renewable sources of energy in their countries;

5. Notes with appreciation the financial support that has been provided by some developed countries that are Members of the United Nations and some intergovernmental organizations, within and outside the United Nations system, in the implementation of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005;

6. Calls upon all relevant funding institutions and bilateral and multilateral donors, as well as regional funding institutions and non-governmental organizations, to support, as appropriate, the efforts being made for the development of the renewable energy sector in developing countries on the basis of environment-friendly, renewable sources of energy of demonstrated viability, while taking fully into account the development structure of energy-based economies of developing countries, and to assist in the attainment of the levels of investment necessary to expand energy supplies beyond urban areas;

7. Takes note of the decision of the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization regarding the strategic importance of the Global Renewable Energy Education and Training Programme 1996-2005 in attaining the objective of sustainable development, and encourages the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to make efforts to promote public awareness in all Member States in this regard, with the support of international, regional and national institutions, both public and private;

8. Invites all Governments to encourage the involvement of all relevant stakeholders, including the private sector, in the promotion of research on and the development of renewable sources of energy, in particular, within this context, in the implementation of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005, in accordance with their respective national policies;

9. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to promote the mobilization of adequate technical assistance and funding and the full utilization of existing international funds for the effective implementation of national and regional high-priority projects in the area of renewable sources of energy;

10. Invites the Inter-agency Working Group on Energy to facilitate the contribution of the work under the World Solar Programme 1996-2005 to the consideration of the theme of energy by the Commission on Sustainable Development at its ninth session, to be held in 2001;

11. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and in cooperation with the United Nations Environment Programme and other relevant organizations, to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a report on concrete action being taken for the effective implementation of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005, including promotion for mobilization of resources;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in his report on energy and sustainable development to the Commission on Sustainable Development a report on action to be taken to implement the present resolution, including further recommendations on appropriate modalities to promote new and renewable sources of energy;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session, under the item entitled "Environment and sustainable development", a sub-item entitled "Promotion of new and renewable sources of energy, including the implementation of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005".

Nuclear energy

By an August note [A/54/215], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the 1998 report of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). Presenting and updating the report in the Assembly on 4 November [A/54/PV.46], the IAEA Director General stated that nuclear power was one of the few energy options that could provide large-scale electricity generation and do so without greenhouse gas emissions. He noted that, despite its environmental advantage, nuclear power was at a standstill in Western Europe and North America, although it continued to expand in a few rapidly developing countries in Asia and in parts of Eastern Europe. In the Director General's view, a resurgence of nuclear power depended on action on three crucial fronts: further improvement in economic competitiveness, continued improvement in the global safety record, including waste management, and the restoration of public confidence. He went on to describe various areas of the Agency's work, including nuclear techniques in human health, nuclear safety, managing water resources and radioactive waste disposal (see p. 1385). He also discussed the difficulties regarding IAEA's nuclear inspection activities in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (see p. 277) and in Iraq (see p. 228).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 November [meeting 53], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/26 [draft: A/54/L.21/Rev.1 & Add.1, orally amended] by recorded vote (122-1-6) [agenda item 14].

Report of the International Atomic Energy Agency

The General Assembly,

Having received the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency for the year 1998,

Noting the statement of the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency, in which he provided additional information on the main developments in the activities of the Agency during 1999,

Recognizing the importance of the work of the Agency in promoting the further application of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes as envisaged in the statute of the Agency and in accordance with the inalienable right of States parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and other relevant internationally legally binding agreements that have concluded relevant safeguards agreements with the Agency to develop research, production and use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes without discrimination and in conformity with articles I and II and other relevant articles of the Treaty, and with the objectives and purposes thereof,

Conscious of the importance of the work of the Agency in the implementation of the safeguards provisions of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and other international treaties, conventions and agreements designed to achieve similar objectives, as well as in ensuring, as far as it is able, that the assistance provided by the Agency or at its request or under its supervision or control is not used in such a way as to further any military purpose, as stated in article II of its statute,

Reaffirming that the Agency is the competent authority responsible for verifying and assuring, in accordance with the statute and the safeguards system of the Agency, compliance with its safeguards agreements with States parties undertaken in fulfilment of their obligations under article III, paragraph 1, of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, with a view to preventing diversion of nuclear energy from peaceful uses to nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices, and also reaffirming that nothing should be done to undermine the authority of the Agency in this regard and that States parties that have concerns regarding non-compliance with the safeguards agreement of the Treaty by the States parties should direct such concerns, along with supporting evidence and information, to the Agency to consider, investigate, draw conclusions and decide on necessary actions in accordance with its mandate,

Stressing the need for the highest standards of safety in the design and operation of nuclear installations and in peaceful nuclear activities so as to minimize risks to life, health and the environment, and recognizing that a good safety record relies on good technology, good regulatory practices and well-qualified and trained staff, as well as international cooperation,

Considering that an expansion of technical cooperation activities relating to the peaceful uses of nuclear energy will contribute to the well-being of the peoples of the world, recognizing the special needs of the developing countries for technical assistance from the Agency and the importance of funding in order to benefit effectively from the transfer and application of nuclear technology for peaceful purposes as well as from the contribution of nuclear energy to their economic development, and desiring that the resources of the Agency for technical cooperation activities be assured, predictable and sufficient to meet the objectives mandated in article II of its statute,

Recognizing the importance of the work of the Agency on nuclear energy, applications of nuclear methods and techniques, nuclear safety, radiological protection and radioactive waste management, including its work directed towards assisting developing countries in all these fields,

Taking note of the report of the Director General to the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency on the implementation of Security Council resolutions relating to Iraq, of his reports to the Security Council of 15 January, 9 April, 27 July, 7 October and 14 December 1998, of 7 April 1999, and of resolution GC(43)/RES/22 of 1 October 1999 of the General Conference and of his letter to the President of the Security Council of 6 October 1999,

Welcoming the convening of the second Scientific Forum, on "Sustainable development: a role for nuclear power?", during the forty-third regular session of the General Conference of the Agency,

Taking note of resolutions GOV/2711 of 21 March 1994 and GOV/2742 of 10 June 1994 of the Board of Governors and GC(43)/RES/3 of 1 October 1999 of the General Conference of the Agency in connection with the implementation of the Agreement between the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the International Atomic Energy Agency for the application of safeguards in connection with the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, the statements by the President of the Security Council of 31 March, 30 May and 4 November 1994 and the authorization of the Board of Governors, on 11 November 1994, to the Director General, to carry out all the tasks requested of the Agency in the statement by the President of the Security Council of 4 November 1994,

Taking note also of resolutions GC(43)/RES/8 on the amendment of article XIV.A of the statute of the Agency, GC(43)/RES/10 on the safety of radiation sources and the security of radioactive materials, GC(43)/RES/11 on the safety of transport of radioactive materials, GC(43)/RES/12 on the radiological protection of patients, GC(43)/RES/13 on measures to strengthen international cooperation in nuclear, radiation and waste safety, GC(43)/RES/14 on the strengthening of the Agency's technical cooperation activities, GC(43)/RES/15 on the plan for producing potable water economically, GC(43)/RES/16 on the extensive use of isotope hydrology for water resources management, GC(43)/RES/17 on strengthening the effectiveness and improving the efficiency of the safeguards system and application of the Model Protocol, GC(43)/RES/18 on measures against illicit trafficking in nuclear materials and other radioactive sources and GC(43)/RES/23 on the application of Agency safeguards in the Middle East, adopted on 1 October 1999 by the General Conference of the Agency at its forty-third regular session,

Taking note further of resolution GC(43)/RES/20 of 1 October 1999 on the staffing of the Agency's secretariat, in which the General Conference called on developing and under-represented member States to encourage well-qualified candidates to apply for vacant posts in the Agency, and considering the related resolution GC(43)/RES/21 of 1 October 1999 on women in the secretariat, in which the General Conference called on the Director General to integrate further the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women into the Agency's relevant policies and programmes and noted the intention of the Agency's secretariat to participate in the forthcoming review at the Fifth World Conference on Women, to be held in 2000,

Recalling resolution GC(43)/RES/19 on the amendment to article VI of the statute and the statement by the President of the forty-third regular session of the General Conference of the Agency with respect to article VI, adopted on 1 October 1999 by the General Conference,

Noting the statement by the President of the forty-third regular session of the General Conference of the Agency, which was endorsed by the General Conference at its tenth plenary meeting and issued under the item concerning Israeli nuclear capabilities and threat, that:

"The General Conference recalls the statement by the President of the thirty-sixth session of the General Conference in 1992 concerning the item entitled 'Israeli nuclear capabilities and threat'. That statement considered it desirable not to consider that item at the thirty-seventh session. The General Conference also recalls the statement by the President of the forty-second session, in 1998, concerning the same agenda item. At the forty-third session, the item was, at the request of certain member States, included again in the agenda. The item was discussed. The President notes that certain member States intend to include the item in the provisional agenda of the forty-fourth regular session of the General Conference",

1. Takes note of the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency;

2. Affirms its confidence in the role of the Agency in the application of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes;

3. Takes note of the adoption by the General Conference of the Agency of resolution GC(43)/RES/19 on the amendment to article VI of the statute and the accompanying statement by the President of the forty-third regular session of the General Conference relating to the expansion of the membership of the Board of Governors of the Agency from thirty-five to forty-three following the allocation of each member State to one of the areas listed in article VI, and recalls that the report by the Board of Governors as contained in document GC(43)/12 includes criteria and indicators to be used as guidelines in designating members to the Board of Governors, after article VI, as amended, has entered into force, on the understanding that they will serve as a reference;

4. Welcomes the adoption by the General Conference of the Agency of resolution GC(43)/RES/8 on the amendment of article XIV.A of the statute, which will provide for biennial budgeting by the Agency;

5. Also welcomes the measures and decisions taken by the Agency to maintain and strengthen the effectiveness and cost-efficiency of its integrated safeguards system in conformity with the statute of the Agency, in particular, stressing the importance of the Model Additional Protocol approved on 15 May 1997, affirms that strengthening the effectiveness and improving the efficiency of the safeguards system with a view to detecting undeclared nuclear activities must be implemented rapidly and universally by all concerned States and other parties in compliance with their respective international commitments, and requests all concerned States and other parties to safeguards agreements to conclude additional protocols without delay;

6. Urges all States to strive for effective and harmonious international cooperation in carrying out the work of the Agency, pursuant to its statute, in promoting the use of nuclear energy and the application of the necessary measures to strengthen further the safety of nuclear installations and to minimize risks to life, health and the environment, in strengthening technical assistance and cooperation for developing countries and in ensuring the effectiveness and efficiency of the safeguards system of the Agency;

7. Welcomes the measures and decisions taken by the Agency to strengthen and fund its technical cooperation activities, which should contribute to achieving sustainable development in developing countries, and calls upon States to cooperate in contributing to and in implementing the measures and decisions pursuant thereto;

8. Commends the Director General and the secretariat of the Agency for their continuing, impartial efforts to implement the safeguards agreement still in force between the Agency and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, recognizes the important role of the Agency in monitoring the freeze of nuclear facilities in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea as requested by the Security Council, expresses deep concern about the continuing non-compliance of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea with the safeguards agreement, in spite of repeated calls by the international community for such compliance, calls upon the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to comply fully with that safeguards agreement and, to this end, urges it to cooperate fully with the Agency in the implementation of the safeguards agreement and to take all steps the Agency may deem necessary to preserve all information relevant to verifying the accuracy and completeness of the initial report of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea on the inventory of nuclear material subject to safeguards, until the Democratic People's Republic of Korea comes into full compliance with the safeguards agreement;

9. Also commends the Director General of the Agency and his staff for their strenuous efforts to implement Security Council resolutions 687(1991) of 3 April 1991, 707(1991) of 15 August 1991, 715(1991) of 11 October 1991, 1051(1996) of 27 March 1996, 1060(1996) of 12 June 1996, 1115(1997) of 21 June 1997, 1154(1998) of

2 March 1998, 1194(1998) of 9 September 1998 and 1205(1998) of 5 November 1998, stresses the need for full implementation by Iraq of all relevant Security Council resolutions, stresses also that the Agency's ongoing monitoring and verification activities should be resumed without delay, and stresses further that it is essential that, although the Agency is satisfied that the remaining questions which were unanswered as of mid-December 1998 do not prevent the full implementation of the ongoing monitoring and verification plan, the basis for this resumption preserve the Agency's rights specified in its ongoing monitoring and verification plan, including the full exercise of rights of access as enshrined therein and the necessary cooperation of Iraq, and that greater transparency by Iraq in its dealings with the Agency would contribute greatly to the resolution of the few remaining questions and concerns in the framework of the plan;

10. Welcomes the entry into force on 24 October 1996 of the Convention on Nuclear Safety, appeals to all States to become parties to it so that it obtains the widest possible adherence, expresses its satisfaction with the outcome of the first review meeting of the contracting parties to the Convention, held in April 1999, and looks forward to the report from the second review meeting, expecting safety improvements, in particular in all areas where the first review meeting found that there was room for such improvements;

11. Also welcomes the measures taken by the Agency in support of efforts to prevent illicit trafficking in nuclear materials and other radioactive sources and, in this context, decides to bear in mind, while drafting an international convention on the suppression of acts of nuclear terrorism, the activities of the Agency in the prevention and combating of illicit trafficking in nuclear material and other radioactive materials;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Director General of the Agency the records of the fifty-fourth session of the General Assembly relating to the activities of the Agency.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 54/26:

In favour Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belarus, Belgium, Bhutan, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Gabon, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kazakhstan, Kuwait, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Lucia, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Tajikistan, Thailand, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela, Yemen, Zambia.

Against: Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

Abstaining: Benin, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Syrian Arab Republic, United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam.

Natural resources

Water resources

The key issues in water management linked to poverty alleviation and sustainable development—

the provision of water supply and sanitation and the impact of agriculture and land management on the water resource base—were considered by the Sub-group on Water Resources of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development at its April session [E/1999/32].

By decision 54/450 of 22 December, the General Assembly took note of Economic and Social Council decision 1999/277 (see p. 958) and requested CSD to consider, at its eighth (2000) session, those parts of the Committee's report that were relevant to its agreed programme of work for that year, bearing in mind the recommendations contained in Council resolutions 1999/47, 1999/48 and 1999/49 (see below), and Assembly resolution 50/126 [YUN 1995, p. 1059], and to submit to the Assembly at its fifty-fifth (2000) session, through the Council, a report for its consideration.

Water supply and sanitation

The Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development reviewed the outline of the report of the Secretary-General on water supply and sanitation, to be prepared by the Subcommittee on Water Resources of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) (see p. 969) and submitted to the eighth session of CSD. The Committee noted that the report would provide up-to-date information on both water supply and sanitation coverage around the world; evaluate the progress made in attaining the ultimate goal of providing safe water supply and sanitation for all; and provide proposals for further action, particularly in developing countries and countries with economies in transition.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development [E/1999/32], adopted resolution 1999/47 without vote [agenda item 13 (k)].

Contribution to the preparation of the report of the Secretary-General on progress made in providing safe water supply and sanitation for all during the 1990s

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 50/126 of 20 December 1995, in which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to submit a report, through the Commission on Sustainable Development and the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session, containing an assessment of the water supply and sanitation situation in developing countries, including proposals for action for the ensuing decade at the national and international levels,

Recalling also the progress that has been made in water supply and sanitation,

Recalling further the importance given to integrated water resources management in Agenda 21,

Noting the need for progress in the alleviation of poverty and the links between poverty and the lack of drinking water and adequate sanitation;

Noting also the lack of adequate progress that has been made in providing sanitation and the negative impacts on human health and the health of ecosystems,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, in the preparation of his report:

(a) To ensure that the connections between water supply and sanitation and other sectors are explored;

(b) To focus the report on an analysis of the shortfalls in progress in providing water supply and sanitation, including an analysis of the barriers thereto;

(c) To explore how inadequate attention to an integrated approach to water and land management can exacerbate problems of water supply and sanitation and vice versa;

(d) To emphasize the analysis of issues;

(e) To explore topics where adequate progress has not been made and identify actions and examples of efforts that have been successful;

2. Requests that the following issues, as elaborated in the annex to the present resolution, be included in the analysis:

(a) Mobilization of political will;

(b) Economic sustainability and private-sector involvement in water supply and sanitation;

(c) Community participation and social mobilization;

(d) Sanitation, sewage treatment and wastewater recycling;

(e) Communication and awareness-training;

(f) Gender issues;

(g) Protection of water sources;

(h) Water conservation efforts.

ANNEX

Issues for inclusion in the report of the Secretary-General on progress made in providing safe water supply and sanitation for all during the 1990s

1. The need to mobilize political will to accomplish water supply and sanitation objectives and integrated land and water resources management, including:

(a) The need for a clear policy framework for water supply and sanitation which recognizes the fundamental role of water supply and sanitation in socio-economic development and incorporates these considerations into basic development planning, including a commitment to the mobilization of public and private funding for this effort;

(b) The need to incorporate water supply and sanitation in a broader integrated land and water resources management strategy;

(c) The need to pay attention to the most vulnerable groups in society;

(d) The need to give priority to addressing sanitation issues where they are lagging;

2. The need for economic sustainability and private-sector involvement in water supply and sanitation, including:

(a) The need for a clear and transparent policy and management framework which facilitates private-sector involvement, while protecting environmental and social concerns through transparent regulatory and administrative guidelines;

(b) The need for a commitment of public funding to assist in the provision of water supply and sanitation to the most vulnerable groups;

(c) Community participation and social mobilization, including:

(i) The need for a national policy framework which facilitates community participation in decision-making and contributions by beneficiaries;

(ii) The need for a policy framework that encourages, as appropriate, community participation in the construction, management and operations of water supply and sanitation projects;

(iii) The need to include socio-economic studies as a part of the initial planning process for water supply and sanitation projects;

(iv) The need to link the provision of water supply and sanitation service to demonstrated needs;

(v) The need to link community education and awareness-raising efforts to community participation efforts and to encourage the use of local inputs;

(vi) The need to promote public sector-private sector partnerships;

(vii) The need to strengthen local capacity and participation in monitoring and assessing water resources, including water quality;

(viii) The need to strengthen the capacity of the most vulnerable in society to participate in water supply and sanitation planning and decision-making;

(ix) The need to review various models of basin management and participation, including basin agencies and organizations, catchment councils, integrated watershed management efforts and international cooperation;

(d) Sanitation, sewage treatment and wastewater recycling, including:

(i) The chronic underfunding of these issues;

(ii) The costs, benefits and trade-offs of various treatment levels and the extent of coverage considering limited financial resources;

(iii) The problems of mixed domestic/industrial/storm-water systems;

(iv) The potential of industrial water recycling and pre-treatment before transfer to municipal systems;

(v) The potential for wastewater use for agricultural purposes;

(e) Communication and awareness-raising, including:

(i) The need to set aside support for water and hygiene education and communication efforts associated with technical and construction projects;

(ii) The need to use all appropriate existing and emerging communication channels (e.g., radio, television, newspapers, Internet and public information campaigns);

(iii) The need to use local networks (e.g., religious leaders, health and extension workers, women's groups, youth associations and sports clubs);

(iv) The need to use the education system at all levels, with special emphasis on youth and women;

- (v) The need to identify target populations to maximize the benefits of education outreach;
- (vi) The need to assess existing data-collection and information management to ensure that it meets management and decision-making requirements;
- (f) Gender issues, including:
 - (i) The need to ensure full participation by women in all aspects of land and water resources management, including decision-making;
 - (ii) The need for gender-disaggregated data in water supply and sanitation planning, monitoring and evaluation;
- (g) Protection of water sources, including:
 - (i) The need to examine the extent to which water supply programmes can be linked to protection of the catchment which is the source of the water (e.g., the Quito water supply);
 - (ii) The need for protection of headwater forests and wetlands to moderate stream flow and facilitate groundwater recharge;
 - (iii) The need for an ecosystem approach to water supply and sanitation planning;
 - (iv) The need for water quality monitoring and dissemination of information, including on manufactured and natural contaminants, such as harmful trace elements and heavy metals (e.g., arsenic in South Asia), and for the identification of sources of contaminants;
 - (v) The need to protect water sources and their catchments from pollution, examining the potential for incentives, regulation, administrative measures and intersectoral coordination;
- (vi) The need regularly to update and disseminate hydrological information;
 - (h) Water conservation efforts, including:
 - (i) The need to examine leakage in water distribution and sewage lines;
 - (ii) The need to examine demand management programmes to moderate demand and wasting of water;
 - (iii) The need to encourage the adoption of water-saving devices;
 - (iv) The need to give high priority to water conservation in national land and water policies;
 - (v) The need to develop and transfer appropriate water conservation technologies and to encourage the use of local resources in their application;
 - (vi) The need to include water conservation efforts in water balance calculations for basin management.

Land and water

Agriculture and water

The Committee considered the interrelationship between agriculture and water as a contribution to the preparatory process for CSD's eighth (2000) session, the sectoral theme of which would be integrated planning and management of land resources and agriculture. The Committee noted the dependency of agriculture on water resources for both rain-fed and irrigated agriculture, but also stressed the impact of agriculture on the water resource base through high levels of consumptive use and degradation of water quality. It stressed the scope for improving the productive use of water in agriculture through improved technologies, outreach and community participation and clear economic and environmental regulation, but noted that that would need to occur in the appropriate catchment, basin or aquifer framework.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development [E/1999/32], as amended [E/1999/L.42], adopted resolution 1999/48 without vote [agenda item 13 (k)].

Contribution to the preparatory process for the eighth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development: integrated planning and management of land resources and agriculture

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1998/46 of 31 July 1998, in the annex to which it directed the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development, in formulating its programme of work, to take into full account the multi-year programme of work of the Commission on Sustainable Development, so as to ensure that its own work would be structured to contribute to the work of the Commission,

Recalling also that, in the multi-year programme of work of the Commission, the sectoral theme for the eighth session of the Commission, to be held in 2000, is integrated planning and management of land resources and that the economic sector focus will be agriculture,

Noting the inextricable interrelationship between agriculture and water,

Recalling that the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations is the task manager for the implementation of the chapters of Agenda 21 relating to land management and agriculture,

1. Invites the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, in preparing documentation for the eighth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development, to take account of the interrelationship of agriculture and water, examine the use of water for agriculture, recognizing the scarce and vulnerable nature of water and also recognizing that agriculture is one of many users and that it is the sector that is primarily responsible for the consumptive use of water on a global basis, and also examine, as appropriate, the following issues, analyse their importance and recommend actions or alternatives, citing case studies, where possible:

(a) Overarching issues

The water crisis and the role of agriculture as water-dependent and highly vulnerable to water deficiencies, and also with regard to its impact on both water quality and water quantity;

Conciliation of water availability and agricultural planning within or without transboundary agreements between States to allocate water and guarantee availability;
Extension and promotion of technology and information on water and agriculture;
Demand management;
Integrated approaches to soil and water conservation;
Interrelationship of agriculture and water quality;
Importance of community participation in decisions affecting shared water sources;
Importance of the availability of agro-meteorological, hydrological and hydrogeological data;
Need for a re-evaluation of the concept of food security, taking into account water shortages, and consideration of meeting nutritional needs through trade and crop diversification, taking into account customs and marketing, as appropriate;
Consideration in programme planning, policy and reviews of relevant international conventions, treaties and agreements relating to water management or agriculture;

(b) Irrigation and drainage

Use of fossil water for crop production and unsustainable use of groundwater, threatening drinking-water supplies;
Agricultural drainage and long-term agricultural yield;
Soil and aquifer salinization;
River depletion problems (for example, the Yellow River and the Aral Sea);
Development of environmental guidelines for irrigation and drainage;

(c) Rain-fed agriculture

Need to emphasize the non-irrigated sub-optimal producers, who are also the most vulnerable and among the poorest producers;
Need for varieties that are drought-tolerant, flood-tolerant and more water-efficient;
Need to catalogue and disseminate new and traditional water-saving technologies and integrated soil and water conservation techniques;
Need to consider rainwater harvesting techniques and ponds or water-holding areas for dry-season agricultural production and for livestock and fish production;
Soil and water conservation;
Importance of soil and water conservation techniques, including contour ploughing, conservation tillage and buffer strips;
Consideration of the type of soil, crop and water quality in relation to the availability of land and water resources;
Protection of wetlands;
Use of an ecosystem approach to development and planning;
Control of chemical pollution;
Promotion of integrated pest and integrated nutrient management systems;
Encouragement of organic food production;
Monitoring of groundwater and surface water for nutrient loads and pesticides (for example, nitrate contamination of groundwater in Europe and persistent problems from pesticide misuse in El Salvador);

Opportunities for organic production;

2. Also invites the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to include the consideration of water in all of its preparations and discussions for the preparatory meeting that it is co-sponsoring with the Government of the Netherlands.

Spatial planning

The Committee had before it a report of the Secretary-General on issues related to the spatial planning of land (including minerals) and water resources [E/C.7/1998/5], which had been prepared for the 1998 session of the Committee on Natural Resources that did not take place because of the termination of its mandate [YUN 1998, p. 972]. Noting that CSD would focus on integrated planning and management of land resources in 2000, the Committee recognized a need to take an integrated approach to the protection and sustainable management of land and soil resources. Accordingly, it recommended revisions to the Secretary-General's report.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development [E/1999/32], as amended [E/1999/L.42], adopted resolution 1999/49 without vote [agenda item 13 (k)].

Report of the Secretary-General on issues related to the spatial planning of land (including minerals) and water resources

The Economic and Social Council

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on issues related to the spatial planning of land (including minerals) and water resources;
2. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report based on the above-mentioned report and taking into account the suggested revisions contained in the annex to the present resolution, and to make it available to the Commission on Sustainable Development at its eighth session as a background document on integrated land management.

ANNEX

Suggested revisions to the report of the Secretary-General on issues related to the spatial planning of land (including minerals) and water resources

I. Introduction

A paragraph should be added to address the concerns expressed in the inter-sessional strategy paper of the Committee on Natural Resources on future water resources management issues and appropriate strategies and policies about the serious implications for society as a whole and the life-support systems on which it is based if the looming water crisis with its four basic components—water quality, water quantity, urbanization and land degradation—is allowed to develop into a full-scale crisis. Such a crisis, owing to the close interrelationship between freshwater and land use, would be felt in many different societal sectors, including human health, food security, economic production and biological diversity.

A summary of the recommendations of major international meetings on the integration of land and water management, such as the United Nations Water Conference, the International Conference on Water and the Environment, and the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, should be included.

II. Current and emerging management issues

References to the finite nature of water and the water crisis should be included to balance paragraphs 7 to 9 on land limitations.

Land-use planning and development need to take into consideration the finite nature of water and apportion projected needs in a coherent manner; this should be discussed.

A reference to forest resources should be included.

In paragraph 7, the following could be considered: Forests in the main help to provide a balance between life-support systems within the ecosystem. Deforestation tilts this balance and exposes the ecosystem to ever-increasing degradation. The role of forestry in land use and in land management techniques should therefore not be underestimated. The interdependency of forestry and agriculture in the lives of rural people is now becoming an issue which Governments must resolve in an integrated manner.

In paragraph 9, a stronger reference to the misuse of agricultural chemicals should be considered.

Between paragraphs 10 and 11, the following text should be inserted:

"The allocation of scarce water resources among competing uses has fundamental effects on human welfare, socio-economic development and the protection of ecosystems. The provision of adequate amounts of water for basic human needs should be incorporated into the formulation and implementation of policies for water resources development and allocation. In this context, the equitable and sustainable allocation of water resources is an essential element of rural and urban development strategies aimed at poverty alleviation through generation of employment, income and productivity. Such strategies should be based as much as possible upon community participation at the lowest appropriate levels, taking into particular account the role of women in rural and urban communities as ultimate managers of water resources in both household and agricultural use. Such approaches require specific policies to improve local institutional capacity and promote human resources development.

Economic evaluations need to consider positive and negative impacts on both human and ecosystem health. To the extent that subsidies are required to maintain public health and equitable access, they should be clearly targeted to the intended beneficiaries and aligned with rural development strategies. Additional funding, targeted mainly to peri-urban and rural areas, may also be required to implement such strategies. The integration of water resources development and management with land-use planning is also essential to promote stabilization of rural populations through the alleviation of rural poverty and promotion of local employment opportunities in the productive use of water and land."

III. Actions to improve and enhance the spatial planning of land and water resources

A paragraph should be added to address the following concern:

While water moves through the landscape from the watershed to the mouth of the river according to natural laws, climate and topography, the societal sectors in the river basin depend on access to water and at the same time influence the quality and quantity of the water accessible to those downstream. As stressed at the Expert Group Meeting on Strategic Approaches to Freshwater Management, held at Harare from 27 to 30 January 1998, integrated water resources management is therefore essential for integrating and reconciling interests in the river basin—whether national or international—with regard to water quality and quantity and the aquatic ecosystems. A constructive dialogue needs to be made possible at the basin level to develop consensus between land and water users and stakeholders. Strategies should be specific about methods of pollution avoidance to ensure sequential water use downstream. The integration between management and use of land and water and waste management should be reflected in the approach to human health, nutrition, employment, poverty alleviation and ecosystem integrity.

A. Integration of land and water resources management into national socio-economic strategies

The inclusion of an additional box on the Murray-Darling basin land and water management initiative in Australia is recommended.

Greater attention should be paid, possibly in an additional paragraph, to grass-roots participatory approaches and gender issues in this section.

B. Land, water and food security

The concept of food security needs to be re-evaluated to take into account water shortages and to focus on meeting nutritional needs through crop diversification and trade, as appropriate; the concept of long-term sustainability of the food production system should incorporate soil and water conservation, and should not focus on production level only.

Traditional practices relating to agriculture need to be acknowledged and appropriately addressed.

Extension services to facilitate the adoption of water-saving practices in agriculture need to be strengthened.

Small-scale irrigation efforts (for example, the use of groundwater) need to be reviewed.

C. Land, water and health

The need for measures to encourage sustainable approaches to agricultural production, including organic agriculture, should be discussed.

An analysis of the contamination of land and water by harmful trace elements and heavy metals, such as mercury used for the amalgamation of gold in artisanal and small-scale mining, should be included.

Up-to-date information about health risks posed by contaminated land and water resources should be provided.

The disposal of solid, liquid and toxic wastes and their impacts on basin hydrology should be considered.

D. Protection of land and water ecosystems

The first half of the paragraph should be retained. The relationship between land and water development and its implications for the ecosystem may be summarized as discussed in paragraphs 60 to 66 of the report of the Harare Expert Group Meeting.

The paragraph could be divided into two paragraphs, one focusing on international agreements (several more need to be added, including the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, the Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa, and the Global Programme of Action for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities), and one dealing with an evolution of the potential need for policy and institutional re-evaluation in the light of treaty obligations.

International cooperation needs to be evaluated in the cases of shared watercourses, and cooperation between upstream and downstream countries needs to be encouraged; the relevance of Convention on the Law of the Non-Navigational Uses of International Watercourses to land use as well as to access to water and sanitation and environmental questions needs to be examined; successful cooperation examples, such as the Zambezi River Authority, might be considered.

E. Information management and monitoring systems

Hydrological and hydrogeological information needs to be made available between neighbouring countries in the same manner that meteorological information is made available through the World Meteorological Organization.

Hydrologic, meteorologic and hydrogeologic data need to be accessible to the public on a timely basis, especially for flood and drought management.

F. Institutional and legal framework and capacity-building

The section could be divided, placing paragraphs 32 to 34 in a section on capacity-building and paragraph 35 in a section on gender.

The different strategies for local participation and basin-wide integration need to be clarified in paragraphs 27 and 28.

The potential for local participation in the construction, operation, maintenance and management of waterworks should be evaluated.

Paragraph 30 is a general paragraph, and any specific reference to water, soil or minerals is unhelpful and should therefore be deleted.

In paragraph 31, the channelling of financial resources through basin management organizations should be examined.

Economic analysis of river basin management should be encouraged.

G. Mobilization of financial resources

The importance of streamlining regulatory and institutional structures and making them transparent so as to mobilize all available resources needs to be evaluated.

In paragraph 38, after the words "Developing countries", the words "and countries with economies in transition" should be added.

Inter-agency action

The ACC Subcommittee on Water Resources, at its twentieth session (Geneva, 4-8 October) [ACC/1999/18], reviewed its methods of work and discussed reports of the Secretary-General to be submitted to CSD's eighth (2000) session (on progress made in providing safe water and sanitation for all during the 1990s and on issues related to the spatial planning of land (including minerals) and water resources) and plans to produce the World Water Development Report.

The Subcommittee also discussed the briefing given to CSD's seventh (1999) session; its contribution to the development and implementation of the World Water Vision of the World Water Forum; public information, with particular reference to the World Day for Water (22 March); the water quality initiative; an international network for information management; and water supply and sanitation.

Exploration

At its first regular session of 1999, the Executive Board of UNDP and of the United Nations Population Fund considered the Administrator's report on activities of the UNDP special funds and programmes [DP/1999/4], including the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (UNRFNRE) [YUN 1998, p. 975]. The Board took note of the report on 29 January [E/1999/35 (dec. 99/3)]. During the discussion of the report, the Board asked the Administrator to provide an analysis of the Fund's usefulness and the rationale for its continuation.

In response to that request, the Administrator submitted a report on UNRFNRE [DP/1999/42] to the Board's September session. He provided background information on the Fund and its financial status and outlined UNDP plans to phase out its activities by the end of 2000. The Administrator stated that, since its establishment by Economic and Social Council resolution 1762(LIV) [YUN 1973, p. 406] and General Assembly resolution 3167(XXVIII) [ibid., p. 408], UNRFNRE had received $91 million in voluntary contributions and other income from 26 countries. The voluntary contributions declined from $3 million in 1991 to $1.6 million in 1998 (provided by China, Indonesia and Japan). It was estimated that some $2.48 million would be available for programming and administration at the end of 2000 if current commitments were fulfilled, no new initiatives were undertaken and no additional contributions were made.

In phasing out UNRFNRE activities, UNDP was ensuring that all existing project and contractual commitments were fulfilled in a responsible manner; ensuring that all usable information compiled by the Fund was archived electronically and made available to all programme countries; and addressing the issue of the utilization of the balance of funds. With regard to the last matter, UNDP planned to use the balance for capacity-building for natural resources management in programme countries in consultation with the major donor, Japan.

On 17 September [E/1999/35 (dec. 99/20)], the Board endorsed the plans to phase out UNRFNRE activities by the end of 2000.

Cartography

By a 2 March letter [E/1999/68], Germany, referring to Economic and Social Council decision 1998/221 [YUN 1998, p. 979], by which it was decided that the Eighth United Nations Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names should be held in 2002, offered to host the Conference.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July [meeting 39], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1999/9 [draft: E/1999/L.28] without vote [agenda item 13 (c)].

Eighth United Nations Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its decision 1998/221 of 23 July 1998 and General Assembly resolution 40/243 of 18 December 1985,

1. Welcomes the generous offer of the Government of Germany to host the Eighth United Nations Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names in 2002,

2. Decides that the Eighth United Nations Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names will be held in Germany from 27 August to 5 September 2002.

By decision 1999/286 of 30 July, the Council took note of the report of the Seventh United Nations Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names, held in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 978].

Chapter VII

Environment and human settlements

In 1999, the United Nations and the international community continued efforts to protect the environment through legally binding instruments and the activities of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP).

In September, UNEP presented the second report in the Global Environment Outlook series, the key finding of which was that the continued poverty of the majority of the world's inhabitants and excessive consumption by the minority were the major causes of environmental degradation. Areas of concern were the world water supply, the impact of land degradation on agricultural productivity, air pollution, the overexploitation of tropical forests and marine fisheries, and the loss of plant and animal species, as well as stretches of coral reef.

The Conference of the Parties to the 1992 United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (Bonn, October/November) took action to bring the 1997 Kyoto Protocol into force as early as possible. The Protocol aimed to reduce industrialized countries' collective emissions of carbon dioxide and five other greenhouse gases.

The combined meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the 1985 Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer and the Eleventh Meeting of the Parties to the 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer (Beijing, China, November/December) agreed on a funding package to enable developing countries to maintain the momentum of their efforts to phase out chlorofluorocarbons and other ozone-destroying chemicals. The meeting adopted a further amendment to the Protocol that banned trade in hydrochlorofluorocarbons (HCFCs) with countries that had not ratified the Protocol's 1992 Amendment, which had introduced the HCFC phase-out. Parties to the 1979 Convention on Long-Range Transboundary Air Pollution adopted an additional protocol to abate acidification, eutrophication and ground-level ozone, which opened for signature on 30 November. The Conference of the Parties to the 1994 United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa, adopted the Recife (Brazil) Initiative, which called for the drafting in 2000 of a declaration to enhance implementation of the obligations accepted by States parties. The Basel Protocol on Liability and Compensation for Damage resulting from Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal was adopted in December.

United Nations human settlements activities were guided by follow-up to the 1996 United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), which focused on shelter for all. The Commission on Human Settlements (Nairobi, Kenya, 5-14 May) adopted a number of resolutions dealing with the implementation of Habitat II. The Commission, acting as the Preparatory Committee for the Assembly's special (2001) session for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the 1996 Habitat Agenda, adopted its provisional agenda and agreed that the Committee's first session would be held in May 2000. Regarding the revitalization of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS), the Commission mandated the UNCHS Executive Director to implement a new strategic vision through subprogrammes on adequate shelter for all and through the global campaigns on secure tenure and on urban governance.

Environment

UN Environment Programme

Governing Council

The Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) held its twentieth session at UNEP headquarters in Nairobi, Kenya, from 1 to 5 February [A/54/25]. The Council, which held a high-level segment on 4 and 5 February [UNEP/GC.20/48], decided to hold its twenty-first session in Nairobi from 5 to 9 February 2001. It elected the members of the High-level Committee of Ministers and Officials. The Committee of the Whole considered the programme, the Environment Fund and administrative and other budgetary matters [UNEP/GC.20/48].

By decision 1999/286 of 30 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Council's report on its twentieth session.

Subsidiary bodies

The 36-member High-level Committee of Ministers and Officials, a subsidiary organ of the Council established in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1040], held its fourth meeting (Bonn, Germany, 1 November) [UNEP/HLC/4/4]. The Committee considered a September report [UNEP/HLC/4/INF/1] of the Executive Director summarizing UNEP activities in its five focus areas (environmental information, assessment and research; coordination of environmental conventions and development of environmental policy instruments; fresh water; technology transfer and industry; and support to Africa). In addition, the report covered communications and public information, as well as the status of the Environment Fund and other sources of funding. A further report contained UNEP's contribution to the UN medium-term plan for 2002-2005 [UNEP/HLC/4/2]; the European Union (EU) and the United States submitted separate submissions thereon. The Committee had before it a report of the Executive Director on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 53/242 (see p. 975) regarding the environment and human settlements [UNEP/HLC/4/INF/2] and a statement by the Nairobi Chapter of the Group of 77 and China thereon [UNEP/HLC/4/INF/4].

During a panel discussion on globalization, agriculture and the environment, the Executive Director drew attention to his September report on the environmental and social impacts of globalized agriculture [UNEP/HLC/4/3]. A separate submission by Japan stated that the report explained only destructive environmental impacts of government subsidies for agriculture. Japan presented a series of amendments to the report, as proposed by the EU. Separate notes of the Executive Director contained the reports of the Committee's first, second and third meetings [UNEP/GC.20/INF/14] and reviewed the status of the 1997 Governing Council decision [YUN 1997, p. 1040] that established the Committee [UNEP/GC.20/12]. On 4 February, the Council took note of the reports [A/54/25 (dec. 20/14)].

The Executive Director reported in January [UNEP/GC.20/12] that the Committee of Permanent Representatives, comprising representatives of all UN Member States and members of specialized agencies, and the European Community, established a working group that held 18 meetings to prepare the draft decisions for the Council's current session. He also presented information on strengthening the Committee, in accordance with a 1997 Council decision [YUN 1997, p. 1040]. The Council had before it a note of the Executive Director transmitting a report on the assessment of the functioning of the UNEP secretariat [UNEP/GC.20/13]. The Committee recommended that UNEP continue to strengthen, restructure and revitalize the secretariat and endorsed the UNEP reform process. Regarding the United Nations Office at Nairobi (UNON), it recommended defining its roles and tasks; enhancing the contribution of the UN regular budget to UNON; improving communication and document distribution; and strengthening the regional offices.

Welcoming the Committee's recommendations on the functioning of the secretariat, the Governing Council, on 4 February [dec. 20/15], urged the Executive Director to take them into account and asked him to keep the Committee informed of progress made.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/54/588/Add.7], adopted resolution 54/216 without vote [agenda item 100].

Report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2997(XXVII) of 15 December 1972, by which it decided to establish the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme,

Recalling also its resolutions 53/187 of 15 December 1998 on the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme and 53/242 of 28 July 1999 on the report of the Secretary-General on environment and human settlements,

Recalling further the results and decisions of the nineteenth special session of the General Assembly, convened for the purpose of the overall review and appraisal of the implementation of Agenda 21 and, in particular, paragraphs 119 and 122 to 124 of the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21,

Recalling the Nairobi Declaration on the Role and Mandate of the United Nations Environment Programme, adopted by the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme at its nineteenth session,

Having considered the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on its twentieth session,

1. Welcomes the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on its twentieth session and the decisions contained therein;

2. Takes note, in particular, of Governing Council decision 20/31 of 4 February 1999, entitled "Proposed programme budget of the United Nations Environment Programme: revised requirements for the biennium 1998-1999 and proposed requirements for the biennium 2000-2001", in which the Governing Council gives concrete support to the integrated work programme of the Programme and endorsement of its new functional organizational structure, and anticipates an increased level of funding to the Environment Fund for the biennium 2000-2001;

3. Supports the proposals for the facilitation of and support for enhancing linkages and coordination within and among environmental and environment-

related conventions, inter alia, by the United Nations Environment Programme, with full respect for the status of the respective convention secretariats and the autonomous decision-making prerogatives of the conferences of the parties to the conventions concerned;

4. Notes with appreciation the contribution of the United Nations Environment Programme to the Commission on Sustainable Development at its seventh session, and encourages the Governing Council at future sessions to provide its scientific, technical and policy information and analysis of and advice on global environmental issues to the Commission at future sessions and, in particular, to contribute to the preparation of the ten-year review of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in 2002;

5. Welcomes the progress in the negotiation of an international legally binding instrument for implementing international action on certain persistent organic pollutants with a view to its earlier conclusion;

6. Encourages the supporting role of the United Nations Environment Programme for developing countries, particularly in Africa, through the development of policy support and capacity-building for international environmental negotiation, inter alia, through the revitalization of the African Ministerial Conference on the Environment;

7. Stresses the importance of strengthening the United Nations Office at Nairobi in its capacity as the only United Nations Office located in a developing country, and encourages the increased utilization of its facilities;

8. Notes the increased cooperation and collaboration between the United Nations Environment Programme and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), within the framework of their respective mandates and separate programmatic, budgetary and organizational identities, with a view to improving the effectiveness of their work;

9. Calls upon all countries to ensure the provision of sufficient financial resources, on a stable and predictable basis, for the successful implementation of the work programme for the biennium 2000-2001;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary resources from the regular budget of the United Nations to the United Nations Environment Programme for the biennium 2000-2001, in accordance with current budgetary practices, and to consider ways to support further the revitalization of the Programme.

Policy and advisory services

Institution-building

The Governing Council reviewed a report of the Executive Director describing UNEP activities aimed at providing Governments and other institutions with policy and advisory services, particularly technical, legal and policy advice [UNEP/GC.20/6]. The institution-building activities focused on areas identified by the Governing Council in 1998 (environmental information, assessment and research; enhanced coordination of environmental conventions and development of environmental policy instruments; fresh water; technology transfer and industry; and support to Africa) [YUN1998,p.982].

On 5 February [A/54/25 (dec. 20/6)], the Council asked the Executive Director to strengthen the UNEP secretariat to provide policy and advisory services and to enhance cooperation with Governments, other relevant organizations and entities in activities related to those services.

Economics, trade and financial services

The Executive Director provided a brief account of UNEP activities in the area of economics, trade and financial services, in particular policy guidance and technical support to enhance the capacities of countries to develop and apply integrated environment and economic analysis, policies and instruments for environmental management and sustainable development [UNEP/GC.20/43].

On 4 February [dec. 20/29], the Governing Council asked the Executive Director to assist countries, particularly developing countries and countries with economies in transition, to enhance their capacities to integrate environmental considerations with development planning and decision-making. It also asked him to continue to examine policy options to address the challenges of integrating environmental considerations with trade and trade policies and to continue to assist countries, particularly developing countries and countries with economies in transition, to improve their understanding of the environmental effects of trade. He was asked to continue to carry out studies on the effectiveness of market-based incentives in achieving the objectives of environmental conventions and on the relationship between trade measures contained in the conventions and international trade policy; cooperate with other international organizations dealing with the relationship between the environment and trade, particularly the World Trade Organization (see PART SIX, Chapter XVII) and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (see PART THREE, Chapter IV); and collaborate with the private sector to enhance their contribution to sustainable development activities through the integration of environmental considerations into their operations. He was asked to strengthen the secretariat's capacities to carry out the tasks identified by the Council.

Coordination and cooperation

Environment and human settlements

A January report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.20/15] outlined the status of the consideration of recommendations contained in the Secretary-General's 1998 report on the environment and human settlements [YUN 1998, p. 981]. The report summarized the General Assembly's November 1998 debate on the item but noted that no formal action was taken. However, the Secretary-General expressed support for the recommendations requiring intergovernmental action, stating that their implementation would go a long way to enhance policy coherence and coordination.

The Governing Council provided its views on the Secretary-General's report on 5 February [dec. 20/17]. It agreed with the proposal to consider, particularly in the light of the recommendation to establish an annual ministerial-level forum, the role of the High-level Committee of Ministers and Officials, and supported the institution of an annual ministerial-level global environmental forum, with the Council's regular biennial sessions constituting the forum in the years that the Council met, and in alternate years taking the form of a special session of the Council, meeting in different regions as a ministerial-level forum. The Council welcomed proposals at the secretariat level relating to inter-agency coordination; linkages among and support to environmental and environment-related conventions; UNEP, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) and UNON; information, monitoring, assessment and early warning; involvement of major groups; future initiatives; facilitation and support by UNEP of coordination among the bureaux and secretariats of environment and environment-related conventions; and enhancing UNEP's role in providing environmental advocacy, analysis and advice in shaping the priorities and programmes of the Global Environment Facility consistent with UNEP's envisaged role in the Instrument for the Establishment of the Restructured Global Environment Facility. It also welcomed the recommendations on the Council's future action-oriented agendas and the structure and timing of its meetings to enhance coordination with the Commission on Sustainable Development and the conferences of the parties to environmental and environment-related conventions. It took note of the recommendations intended for action by intergovernmental bodies relating to linkages among and support to such conventions, intergovernmental forums and the involvement of major groups, and welcomed the call to engage non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and civil society in UN work. It took note of the proposal concerning universal membership of the Council.

Environment management group

In accordance with two 1997 Governing Council decisions [YUN 1997, p. 1041], the Executive Director updated developments on the Inter-Agency Environment Coordination Group (IAEG)—an advisory body set up to coordinate UN system activities in addressing the major challenges in the UNEP work programme—and on the UN system-wide environment strategy for 1998-2002 [UNEP/GC.20/7]. He noted that both the UN Task Force on Environment and Human Settlements and the Secretary-General, in 1998, had recommended the establishment of an inter-agency environmental management group (EMG) to improve inter-agency policy coherence and collaboration [YUN 1998, p. 981]. EMG would replace IAEG and create a process for reviewing planned activities and modification of goals regarding the environment and human settlements. The group would supersede IAEG and the need for a system-wide strategy in the area of the environment.

The most important goal of EMG would be to achieve effective coordination and joint action in key areas related to the environment and human settlements. It would assist intergovernmental bodies, particularly the Governing Council and the Commission on Human Settlements, in the preparation of coordinated inputs to intergovernmental forums, notably the Commission on Sustainable Development. It was recommended that the group report on an informational basis to the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) and bring an environmental perspective into the work of the Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development (IACSD). EMG should establish time-bound task forces or working groups covering clusters of issues and should include convention secretariats among its participants when needed. The Secretary-General would hold consultations with ACC to ensure the participation of the entire UN system and to decide on the formal establishment of EMG.

Noting the proposal to establish EMG, the Governing Council, on 5 February [A/54/25 (dec. 20/13)], asked the Executive Director to consider the need for an inter-agency coordination group and system-wide strategy for the environment and to report thereon in 2001. On the same date [dec. 20/17], the Council expressed support for the establishment of EMG.

ACC action. Following consideration of IACSD recommendations regarding the establishment of EMG, ACC, at its first regular session of 1999 (Geneva, 9-10 April) [ACC/1999/4], agreed that further consultations, to be conducted by the UNEP Executive Director with ACC members regarding the proposed group's terms of reference, criteria for membership and methods of work, should take into account the views expressed by IACSD.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 105], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/242 [draft: A/53/L.78] without vote [agenda item 30].

Report of the Secretary-General on environment and human settlements

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/12 A of 12 November 1997, entitled "Renewing the United Nations: a programme for reform",

Reaffirming its determination to strengthen the role, capacity, effectiveness and efficiency of the United Nations, including in the field of environment and human settlements, and thus improve its performance in order to realize the full potential of the Organization,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on environment and human settlements and the report of the United Nations Task Force on Environment and Human Settlements annexed thereto, which contain recommendations on reforming and strengthening the activities of the United Nations in the field of environment and human settlements, Expressing its appreciation to the Chairman and members of the Task Force for their commendable work,

Conscious of the continued deterioration of the global environment and the state of human settlements, despite some positive achievements, as well as of the need to strengthen the institutions of the United Nations charged with responsibility for environment and human settlements, to improve their performance and to promote coordination in the implementation of the environmental and human settlements dimension of sustainable development within the United Nations system,

Emphasizing the importance of strengthening the capacity of the United Nations Environment Programme and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) in their Nairobi location and of ensuring the provision of requisite support and stable, adequate and predictable financial resources necessary to both organizations for the fulfilment of their mandates, as contained in General Assembly resolutions 2997 (XXVII) of 15 December 1972 and 32/162 of 19 December 1977, as well as in the Nairobi Declaration on the Role and Mandate of the United Nations Environment Programme, adopted by the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme in its decision 19/1 of 7 February 1997, and the Istanbul Declaration on Human Settlements, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) on 14 June 1996, including by seeking additional financial resources through broadening the range of sources of funding for both organizations, in accordance with the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations,

Taking into account the views of Member States on the report of the Secretary-General on environment and human settlements,

Taking into account also the views contained in decision 20/17, adopted on 5 February 1999 by the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme, and Commission on Human Settlements resolution 17/6 of 14 May 1999, concerning the report of the Secretary-General on environment and human settlements,

1. Welcomes the efforts undertaken to strengthen the United Nations in the field of environment and human settlements, and in that context takes note of the general thrust of the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General on environment and human settlements, proposing actions to be taken by the Secretary-General, the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme and the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), and takes note also of the recommendations outlined in section IV of the report;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen the United Nations Office at Nairobi, in its capacity as the only United Nations headquarters located in a developing country, through the provision of requisite support and stable, adequate and predictable financial resources, including by proposing additional regular budget resources, as envisaged by the General Assembly in its resolution 52/220 of 22 December 1997, for the consideration of the Assembly, with due regard for proper United Nations budgetary procedures;

3. Encourages the Director-General of the United Nations Office at Nairobi to take steps to increase the level of utilization of the Office, and in this regard encourages other agencies, funds and programmes to consider increasing their utilization of its facilities for their activities;

4. Calls upon the United Nations Environment Programme and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) to increase cooperation in and strengthen coordination of their activities, within the framework of their respective mandates and separate programmatic and organizational identities, as well as their separate Executive Directors;

5. Supports the proposal of the Secretary-General regarding the establishment of an environmental management group for the purpose of enhancing inter-agency coordination in the field of environment and human settlements, and requests the Secretary-General to develop, in consultation with the Member States and members of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, the mandate, terms of reference, appropriate criteria for membership and flexible, cost-effective working methods of the proposed environmental management group and to submit them to the General Assembly for consideration at its fifty-fourth session;

6. Welcomes the proposal to institute an annual, ministerial-level, global environmental forum, with the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme constituting the forum in the years that it meets in regular session and, in alternate years, with the forum taking the form of a special session of the Governing Council, in which participants can gather to review important and emerging policy issues in the field of the environment, with due consideration for the need to ensure the effective and efficient functioning of the governance mechanisms of the United Nations Environment Programme, as well as possible financial implications, and the need to maintain the role of the Commission on Sustainable Development as the main forum for high-level policy debate on sustainable development;

7. Supports the proposals for the facilitation of and support for enhancing linkages and coordination within and among environmental and environment-related conventions, including by the United Nations Environment Programme, with full respect for the status of the respective convention secretariats and the autonomous decision-making prerogatives of the conferences of the parties to the conventions concerned, and emphasizes in this regard the need to provide the United Nations Environment Programme with adequate resources to perform this task;

8. Welcomes the proposals for the involvement, participation and constructive engagement of major groups active in the field of environment and human settlements, with due consideration for the relevant rules, regulations and procedures of the United Nations;

9. Reiterates the importance of strengthening the capacity and capability of the United Nations Environment Programme and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), within the framework of their existing mandates, in the areas of information, the monitoring and assessment of global and regional environmental and human settlements trends and early warning information on environmental threats, so as to catalyse and promote international cooperation and action, and in this context emphasizes the importance of strengthening the system-wide Earthwatch as an effective, accessible and strictly non-political science-based system;

10. Reaffirms that, in accordance with its mandate, the United Nations Environment Programme should not become involved in conflict identification, prevention or resolution;

11. Stresses the need to ensure that capacity-building and technical assistance, in particular with respect to institutional strengthening in developing countries, as well as research and scientific studies in the field of environment and human settlements, must remain important components of the work programmes of both the United Nations Environment Programme and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), within their existing mandates, and also stresses, in this regard, the need for adequate financial resources as well as the need to avoid duplication of efforts;

12. Also stresses the need to enhance further the role of the United Nations Environment Programme as an implementing agency of the Global Environment Facility, consistent with its role as defined in the Instrument for the Establishment of the Restructured Global Environment Facility;

13. Reaffirms the role of the Commission on Human Settlements in the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, emphasizes the need for it to take steps to prepare for the review of its implementation in 2001, and welcomes the proposals that the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) should strengthen its core activities and develop into a centre for excellence with regard to human settlements;

14. Welcomes the proposal to continue ongoing work in the development of indicators in the field of environment and human settlements, and in this regard stresses the importance of the need to avoid duplication of efforts;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

In a September note to the High-level Committee of Ministers and Officials [UNEP/HLC/4/INF/2], the Executive Director provided an overview of the implementation of Assembly resolution 53/242. Preliminary action had been taken regarding increasing resources to UNON; the utilization of UNON conference facilities; strengthened coordination between UNEP and Habitat; the draft terms of reference for EMG; the convening of the first ministerial-level forum in June 2000; the development of interlinkages among the conventions and the promotion of their implementation, with priority given to the revitalization of the regional seas conventions and action plans; the establishment of a Civil Society and NGO Liaison Unit within UNEP; and initiatives to develop a strategy for the UNEP information, assessment and monitoring role. The report proposed capacity-building and technical assistance activities, and stated that work on environmental indicators would be strengthened. Considerable progress had been made regarding enhancing UNEP's role as an implementing agency of the Global Environment Facility (GEF) (see next page). In an October addendum [UNEP/HLC/4/INF/2/Add.1], the Executive Director reported on plans to upgrade the conference facilities at UNON (see also p. 1366).

The High-level Committee considered an October note by the secretariat [UNEP/HLC/4/INF/4] containing a statement by the Nairobi Chapter of the Group of 77 and China calling for the effective and speedy implementation of the resolution. Annexed to the note was the Ministerial Declaration of the twenty-third annual meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77 (New York, 24 September).

Environmental emergencies

A report of the Executive Director discussed the joint project on environmental emergencies carried out by UNEP and the UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) (the Joint UNEP/OCHA Environment Unit) [UNEP/GC.20/9], which provided international assistance to countries facing environmental emergencies. The Executive Director said that the Unit, which was staffed and financed by UNEP, provided support, including development of core response services, the facilitation of initial assessment and post-emergency analysis to improve environmental emergency services to Governments upon request. The Unit had established a network of designated national focal points as conduits for information and assistance that covered more than 100 countries. Guidelines and a questionnaire for environmental assessment following chemical emergencies had been elaborated, as had guidelines for developing national environmental contingency plans.

On 5 February [A/54/25 (dec. 20/8)], the Governing Council asked the Executive Director to enhance collaboration between UNEP and OCHA by strengthening the activities of the Joint Environment Unit. It also asked him to further focus and strengthen the contribution of UNEP's environmental expertise to the coordination of UN system-wide responses to natural disasters or natural phenomena coupled with effects of human actions; to develop linkages between UNEP's work on environmental emergencies and its overall work on environmental assessment and early warning; and to report to Governments on progress made in the Unit's activities. Governments and international organizations were urged to contribute to the Trust Fund for Environmental Emergencies.

Regional cooperation

On 5 February [dec. 20/11], the Governing Council, recalling its 1995 decision requesting support of the goals of the Council of Arab Ministers Responsible for the Environment and the UNEP Regional Office for West Asia [YUN 1995, p. 1090] and expressing appreciation for the results achieved owing to the cooperation between UNEP and the Council of Arab Ministers, asked the Executive Director to support the goals of the Council and the regional offices for West Asia and Africa and to establish a mechanism to support the implementation and coordination of programmes in the Arab region.

Global Environment Facility

The Global Environment Facility (GEF), a joint programme of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), UNEP and the World Bank, was established in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 505] to help solve global environmental problems. In January [UNEP/GC.20/8], the UNEP Executive Director reported on the participation of UNEP in the Facility during 1997 and 1998 and outlined a new UNEP profile in GEF. He proposed three areas of strategic partnership between UNEP and GEF. First, the GEF-UNEP assessment programme would monitor and assess global environmental status, developments and scientific links between global environmental issues; develop early warning systems and identify global environmental hot spots and disasters; and identify progress and the contributing factors thereto. Secondly, the GEF-UNEP environment knowledge management programme, consisting of an up-to-date searchable information system, available online, could collect, disseminate and share experiences from actors and stakeholders on implementation efforts. Lastly, the GEF-UNEP outreach programme would implement elements of the GEF strategy for greater outreach and communications.

In response to a 1998 GEF Council request [YUN 1998, p. 982], the Executive Director proposed in January [UNEP/GC.20/44] an action plan on complementarity between the activities carried out by UNEP under GEF and its regular work programme. The draft plan identified three elements to achieve complementarity: ensuring that GEF activities would be additional to the UNEP work programme; ensuring synergy between UNEP's GEF activities and its work programme; and integrating GEF objectives and activities with UNEP's overall management and programming. In addition, UNEP proposed the following strategic objectives for its GEF work programme: contributing to the ability of GEF and countries to make informed strategic and operational decisions on scientific and technical issues in the GEF focal areas; relating national and regional environmental priorities to the GEF global environmental objectives; promoting regional and multi-country cooperation to achieve global environmental benefits; catalysing responses to environmental emergencies in the GEF focal areas through short-term measures; and supporting the GEF Scientific and Technical Advisory Panel, as the interface between GEF and the scientific and technical community at all levels. The Executive Director outlined measures to achieve complementarity. He concluded that implementation of the action plan would enhance UNEP's GEF work programme over the period 2000-2001.

On 5 February [dec. 20/7], the Governing Council welcomed the Executive Director's proposal to establish a strategic partnership between UNEP and GEF, as well as the suggested action plan on complementarity. It invited the GEF Council to support the Executive Director's efforts to strengthen UNEP's role in the Facility. The Executive Director was asked to submit the action plan to the GEF Council in May and to report in 2001 on the implementation of its decision.

The GEF Council, at its thirteenth meeting (Washington, D.C., 5-7 May), took note of the action plan and welcomed the recognition of additionality, synergy and integration to best contribute to promoting complementarity. It asked UNEP to report annually on progress made in its efforts to strengthen complementarity.

The first meeting of the UNEP/GEF Programme Coordination Committee (Nairobi, 24 June) on the operational modalities to implement the action plan for 2000-2001—comprising UNEP senior management—designated focal points in UNEP's regular programme for biodiversity, international waters and climate change.

UN entities

In April [UNEP/GC.21/INF/7], UNEP concluded a memorandum of understanding (MOU) with the United Nations Population Fund aimed at strengthening cooperation between the two programmes in areas of technical guidance and research; advocacy, public awareness, environment and population-related education and training; and consultation within coordination mechanisms and initiatives.

UNEP and the World Health Organization, by an MOU signed in August, agreed to strengthen their cooperation in the area of environmental health as an essential factor in achieving sustainable development.

General Assembly issues

The Executive Director provided information on issues arising from resolutions adopted by the General Assembly in 1997 and 1998 that called for action by UNEP [UNEP/GC.20/14]. The resolutions included those adopted at the nineteenth special session in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 790] to review and appraise the implementation of Agenda 21, adopted at the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 672].

On 3 February [dec. 20/16], the Governing Council took note of the report.

Issues related to information

In 1999, the Governing Council considered a report describing UNEP communications and public information services [UNEP/GC.20/INF/2]. As limited resources made it difficult to reach the general public directly, communication efforts focused on current and potential partners and identifiable target groups.

A January report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.20/45] highlighted the need for international action to promote access to information, public participation in decision-making and access to justice in environmental matters as a critical element for UNEP to discharge its mandate. Although the Convention on Access to Information, Public Participation in Decision-making and Access to Justice in Environmental Matters (Arhus Convention) [YUN 1998, p. 1000], developed under the auspices of the UN Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), covered the main issues, it pertained to only one region. Therefore, there was no truly global mechanism that provided an overall institutional setting and response to the need to involve and empower all sectors of civil society and relevant segments of Governments to discharge their rights and responsibilities to protect the environment and achieve sustainable development. Furthermore, many countries lacked the legal and institutional modalities to enhance public participation in environmental decision-making and access to justice in environmental matters. It was proposed that UNEP initiate, in consultation with Governments and in collaboration with ECE and other relevant organizations, a process to examine ways to improve access to environmental information, public participation in decision-making and access to justice in environmental matters and the need for and feasibility of legally binding instruments at the regional and global levels.

The Governing Council, on 4 February [dec. 20/4], asked the Executive Director, in consultation with Governments and relevant international organizations, to build capacity in and enhance access to environmental information, public participation in decision-making and access to justice in environmental matters; to study various models of related national legislation, policies and guidelines related thereto; and to report in 2001.

Another January report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.20/46] summarized recommendations made by the UNEP global environmental information exchange network (INFOTERRA) Advisory Committee (Washington, D.C., November 1998) [UNEP/GC.20/INF.17] on the reform of the network. The proposed reform consisted of a new network structure and a set of recommendations under four headings—political, organizational, operational and technological—to design, develop and implement the new structure globally. The Committee unanimously agreed on INFOTERRA's new role as UNEP's advocate of the public's right to know about environmental issues. It was suggested that the network should operate at the national level, the regional level and UNEP headquarters.

The Governing Council, on 4 February [dec. 20/5], taking note of those recommendations, asked the Executive Director to develop a plan to establish a restructured INFOTERRA, in cooperation with relevant partners; to consult with Governments on the launching in 2000 of the revitalized INFOTERRA at a global conference of senior government officials and representatives of relevant organizations and to seek extrabudgetary resources for it; and to report in 2001.

In response to a 1997 Governing Council request [YUN 1997, p. 1043], the Executive Director presented a review and cost-benefit analysis of the Mercure satellite communications system since April 1998 when it became fully operational [UNEP/GC.20/30]. The system was designed by the European Space Agency (ESA) in response to the call in Agenda 21 to utilize modern electronic telecommunications to improve access to, and the exchange of, environmental data and information for responsible decision-making concerning the environment. ESA handed over the system to UNEP in 1997. The cost-benefit analysis showed that the potential savings for UNEP from the use of the network of the 15 Mercure installations worldwide, which delivered data, Internet, video-conference and facsimile services, and UNEPnet (Internet mechanisms for environmental information access and exchange) were substantially greater than the costs of operating the network.

The Council, on 4 February [dec. 20/30], asked the Government of Kenya, in consultation with the Executive Director, to facilitate the implementation of voice telephony on Mercure to UNEP and other UN agencies based in Nairobi. It called on the Executive Director to examine ways to improve communications between the secretariat and permanent missions in Nairobi, with UNON assistance, and authorized him to discuss with other donors the expansion of the existing UNEPnet/Mercure infrastructure through extrabudgetary support. Noting that, despite the impression conveyed in reports of the UN Board of Auditors and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), UNEP had the authority to sign the agreement on the Mercure project with ESA on behalf of the United Nations, and that the system provided cost-effective services, the Council urged the Executive Director to bring his report to the attention of those bodies, with a view to rectifying those errors. The Executive Director was asked to ensure that a comprehensive review and cost-benefit analysis of the UNEPnet/Mercure system was presented to the Council in 2001 and was brought to the attention of ACABQ, the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) and the Board of Auditors.

Global Environment Outlook

In September, UNEP presented the second report in the Global Environment Outlook series (GEO-2), which assessed the state of the environment. The key finding was that the continued poverty of the majority of the world's inhabitants and excessive consumption by the minority were the major causes of environmental degradation; the present course was unsustainable and postponing action was not an option. Areas of concern were the world water supply, the impact of land degradation on agricultural productivity, air pollution, the overexploitation of tropical forests and marine fisheries, and the loss of plant and animal species, as well as stretches of coral reef. GEO-1 was launched in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1043].

The Governing Council considered a progress report of the Executive Director on GEO-2 [UNEP/GC.20/3] and a report summarizing its highlights [UNEP/GC.20/INF/8].

On 4 February [dec. 20/1], the Council asked the Executive Director to submit in 2001 a GEO user profile and qualitative analysis of the actual use of the GEO reports and the GEO process, with a proposal for an optimal frequency and production schedule for future GEO and related reports. It also asked him to produce a third GEO report in 2002 in the form of a "30 years after Stockholm" report, referring to the 1972 United Nations Conference on the Human Environment held in Stockholm, Sweden [YUN 1972, p. 318]; and to collaborate with UNDP, the World Bank, the World Resources Institute and other institutions in preparing the next report in the World Resources series, to be published in December 2000, which would focus on global ecosystems' conditions and trends, and to produce simultaneously an expert report on policy issues and responses to changes in the ecosystems dealt with in the 2000 report. Major actors in data compilation and in global report production were urged to collaborate in the production and use of a common data and knowledge base, comprising indicators, models, scenarios and expert systems, in order to avoid duplication, save costs and ensure that global reports were mutually supportive.

Women in environment and development

Taking note of the Executive Director's report on UNEP efforts to improve the collection, dissemination and use of gender-disaggregated data related to women and the environment [UNEP/GC.20/10] and of his decision to refocus the institutional arrangements for gender in the UNEP secretariat by hiring a Professional-level staff member to deal with action related to the role of women in environment and development, the Governing Council, on 5 February [dec. 20/9], asked him to continue to fulfil UNEP's commitments contained in its contribution to the Fourth (1995) World Conference on Women [YUN 1995, p. 1169]; to strengthen efforts to assist Governments in empowering women's participation in the decision-making process on environmental matters and in providing them with information on the environment; and to extend the network of gender focal points to cover all Governments, particularly those of developing countries and countries with economies in transition, and also relevant NGOs.

Support to Africa

The Governing Council reviewed a January report of the Executive Director that highlighted UNEP activities regarding support to Africa since 1997 and contained priority areas for UNEP action in Africa [UNEP/GC.20/34]. It also considered a report of the Secretary-General on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa [UNEP/GC.20/INF/11], as submitted to the Security Council and the General Assembly in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 66].

The Council, on 4 February [dec. 20/27], asked the Executive Director to continue to support the African Ministerial Conference on the Environment to facilitate the integration of global and African environmental agendas, and to strengthen cooperation with African regional and sub-regional organizations. It also asked him to enhance UNEP's coordinating role, particularly the Regional Office for Africa, in promoting programmatic coherence among activities regarding the implementation of environmental conventions, as well as in enhancing African countries' participation in international environmental negotiations.

The Council asked the Executive Director to assist African countries upon their request and provide them with technical, legal and policy advice to develop environmental legislation and institutions. He was also asked to explore ways to assist them in developing GEF projects, and to collaborate with GEF in strengthening their capacity through training and information so that they could better participate in developing and implementing global environmental conventions. The Executive Director was asked to give high priority to assisting African countries in implementing their commitments under the 1994 United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa [YUN 1994, p. 944]; to strengthen UNEP's role in environmental assessment and monitoring in Africa; and to take into account the Council's priorities in revising the 1999 work programme. The Council asked him to report in 2001.

Environment and sustainable development

On 5 February [dec. 20/19], the Governing Council adopted a decision on UNEP's contribution to the seventh (1999) session of the Commission on Sustainable Development (see p. 748). The Council asked the Executive Director to ensure that it had the required information to prepare UNEP's views for all Commission sessions scheduled to occur before its own next session. He was also asked to submit to the Commission, at its seventh session, decisions, recommendations and reports regarding oceans and seas, the Global Programme of Action for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities, sustainable tourism, small island developing States (SIDS) and changing production and consumption patterns (see below, under "Environmental activities").

Regarding SIDS [dec. 20/19 D], the Council asked the Executive Director to promote integrated island management programmes to improve resource protection and use of their terrestrial environment, coastline and adjacent exclusive economic zones; strengthen and expand research, monitoring and assessment activities; promote the transfer of, and facilitate access to, scientific information and advice on technologies; prepare guidelines and programmes for waste minimization, reduction, treatment and disposal; promote principles for sustainable tourism; and promote public education activities on the need for the sustainable development and use of natural resources of SIDS.

As to sustainable tourism, the Council considered a report of the Executive Director describing UNEP activities regarding tourism and containing draft principles for sustainable tourism [UNEP/GC.20/19/Add.2]. On 5 February [dec. 20/19 C], the Council asked him to further develop the draft guiding principles and, in cooperation with relevant partners, to continue the preparation of voluntary initiatives and codes of conduct for the tourism sector. The Commission on Sustainable Development was asked to call on Governments to integrate sustainable tourism in their national development strategies, as well as in relevant multilateral environment conventions. (See also p. 749.)

The Council had before it a report of the Executive Director on promoting interlinkages among global environmental issues and human needs [UNEP/GC.20/40]. An interlinkages assessment report, Protecting Our Planet: Securing Our Future [Sales No. E.99.III.D.75], a collaborative effort of UNEP and the World Bank, with additional support from the United States National Aeronautics and Space Administration, showed that environmental degradation was accelerating and the human condition deteriorating in many parts of the world, and the two were driven by population size, the level of consumption and the choice of technologies. The report pointed to the need to address global environmental issues holistically and in an integrated manner; for new institutional partnerships to achieve a sustainable world, involving Governments, the private sector, academia, NGOs and civil society; and for the adoption by decision makers of cost-effective and adaptive management approaches.

On 4 February [dec. 20/28], the Council urged Governments to consider the conclusions and recommendations of Protecting Our Planet: Securing Our Future in preparing their national environment and sustainable development strategies and plans. It asked the Executive Director to address global environmental issues within a more holistic and synergistic policy context. He was also asked to recognize that policy implementation that linked global environmental issues and sustainable development required scientific understanding of the links among environmental issues and their relationships to meeting human needs; identification of combinations of policies that were effective and cost-efficient, and that encouraged the public and private sectors to work together; political will and public commitment; and improved coordination among national and international institutions charged with developing measures to meet human needs, without undermining the environmental foundation for development. The World Bank and other organizations concerned were urged to collaborate with UNEP.

The Council, on 5 February [dec. 20/12], invited the Executive Director to intensify work on the integration of the environmental dimension of sustainable development into UN programmes and asked him to report in 2001.

By decision 54/446 of 22 December, the General Assembly took note of the report of the Second Committee on environment and sustainable development [A/54/588].

Freshwater issues

Regarding freshwater issues, the Governing Council, on 4 February [dec. 20/25], took note of the Executive Director's report containing a proposal for UNEP's freshwater strategy [UNEP/GC.20/31] and welcomed UNEP's focus on the environmental aspects of assessment and sustainable integrated management in accordance with national needs. It decided that UNEP should accord high priority to the identification of expertise and knowledge resident in countries regarding freshwater quality, the establishment of partnerships between those countries and countries in need of the expertise and knowledge, and the promotion of intergovernmental collaboration. The Council asked the Executive Director to identify key policy issues for freshwater quality and to propose policy options for debate and endorsement by the Council in 2001. It also asked him to take into account the work carried out by other UN agencies and international organizations, as well as Governments, in order to avoid duplication; to promote the transfer of environmentally sound technologies for freshwater management through the International Environmental Technology Centre; and to report in 2001.

UNEP assessment strategy

The Executive Director, in January [UNEP/GC.20/INF/18], presented a draft strategy working paper prepared by an expert team of external consultants, on the development of a UNEP-wide assessment strategy. The paper gave a general overview of the direction that UNEP might take in the area of environmental assessment and reporting, the tasks ahead and the scope of activities. UNEP considered that the paper was innovative and strategic enough to be used in consultations with major stakeholders. However, it did not cover in depth the management and dissemination of scientific and technical information or existing commitments and cooperative relationships with global assessment stakeholders, including UN partner organizations.

UNEP secretariat

In response to a 1997 Governing Council decision [YUN 1997, p. 1042], the Executive Director examined the functions of UNEP's regional offices and their common mandates and responsibilities, and proposed measures to strengthen regionalization and decentralization through the involvement of regional ministerial and other forums [UNEP/GC.20/28]. The six regional offices covered Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe, Latin America and the Caribbean, North America and West Asia. The Forum of Environment Ministers of Latin America and the Caribbean, for which the UNEP regional office in Latin America and the Caribbean served as secretariat, could be used as a model by UNEP and its other regional offices to strengthen regionalization and decentralization through the involvement of regional ministerial and other forums.

On 4 February [dec. 20/39], the Governing Council asked the Executive Director to continue to strengthen regionalization and decentralization, while maintaining the central coordinating role of UNEP headquarters in Nairobi.

The Governing Council considered the Executive Director's report describing the activities of UNEP's specialized offices, namely the Industry and Environment Programme Activity Centre (Paris) (IE/PAC) and the International Environment Technology Centre (Osaka and Shiga, Japan) (IETC) [UNEP/GC.20/29]. He stated that IE/PAC had always adopted a collaborative approach to integrating environmental criteria into industrial development, based on a broad participation of industry and government specialists, as well as NGOs, while IETC had adopted a collaborative approach with other partners and UN agencies, particularly Habitat (Sustainable Cities Programme) and the United Nations University. He concluded that the need for building synergies between the two centres and other UNEP units under one umbrella had become apparent.

On 4 February [dec. 20/40], the Governing Council endorsed the Executive Director's steps to bring greater efficiency through synergies between the main units of the UNEP secretariat addressing technology transfer, environmental issues related to industrial and urban activities, energy and the related economic and trade aspects. It asked him to give priority to issues of trade and environment and to the promotion of cleaner production and transfer of environmentally sound technologies through the specialized offices.

Management issues

The Governing Council had before it a report on the status of implementation of recommendations [UNEP/GC.20/20] made in 1997 by OIOS on the review of UNEP and the administrative practices of its secretariat [YUN 1997, p. 1044]. Among the measures taken by UNEP were the introduction of results management and performance indicators for its 1998-1999 work programme; the integration of the economics and trade subprogrammes; the establishment of the Division of Environmental Conventions; and a new organizational structure for UNEP, based on functions rather than subject areas. The report included the status of implementation of recommendations made by ACABQ on the Environment Fund.

On 4 February [dec. 20/38], the Council took note of the implementation of the OIOS and ACABQ recommendations. Regarding the Ombudsman Unit, the Council, on 4 February [dec. 20/41], endorsed a proposal by the Executive Director to increase budget allocations to the Unit in 2000-2001. It invited him to submit all annual reports on the Unit still pending and to extend the Unit's services to other UN entities if they so requested. The Executive Director was asked to prepare an evaluation report on the Unit.

UNEP Fund

Following consideration of the Executive Director's report on the proposed programme budget, revised requirements for 1998-1999 and proposed requirements for 2000-2001 [UNEP/GC.20/22 & Add.1], the related ACABQ report [UNEP/GC.20/21] and his comments on ACABQ recommendations [UNEP/GC.20/47], the Governing Council, on 4 February [dec. 20/31], approved the revised appropriations of Environment Fund resources in 1998-1999 of $25.83 million for the management and administrative support costs budget, and reconfirmed the appropriation of $75 million for Fund programme activities and $5 million for the Fund programme reserve. It also approved Fund resources in 2000-2001 of $14.23 million for the management and administrative support costs budget, $100 million for Fund programme activities and $5 million for the Fund programme reserve. The Council noted that the $14.23 million for 2000-2001 management and administrative support costs was contingent upon an increase in funding from the UN regular budget for UNON of some $2 million for administrative services provided to UNEP and Habitat. It noted with concern the large discrepancy in the funding provided from the UN regular budget to UNON, in relation to that provided to the United Nations Office at Vienna and the United Nations Office at Geneva, and appealed to the General Assembly to consider a substantial increase in the regular budget allocation to UNON. The Executive Director was authorized to approve costed work plans for implementation of specific subprogrammes and activities and to prepare a 2002-2003 work programme consisting of Fund programme activities of $120 million. It further authorized him to enter into commitments not exceeding $20 million for 2002-2003 Fund programme activities. The Council approved the programmatic restructuring set out in the proposed 2000-2001 programme of work consisting of seven subprogrammes and 26 subprogramme elements that integrated all elements previously contained in the programme activity centres, and noted the resulting dissolution of the following programme activity centres: Dryland Ecosystems and Desertification Control, Environmental Law and Institutions, Global Environment Monitoring System, Industry and Environment, International Register for Potentially Toxic Chemicals, INFOTERRA, Global Resource Information Database, and Oceans and Coastal Areas.

Noting the ACABQ recommendations on the proposed programme budget, the revised requirements for 1998-1999 and the proposed requirements for 2000-2001 [UNEP/GC.20/21] and the Executive Director's comments thereon [UNEP/GC.20/47], the Governing Council, on 4 February [dec. 20/32], asked him to address all recommendations and to report to the Committee of Permanent Representatives.

In October [A/C.5/54/20], the Secretary-General presented revisions to the narrative of the proposed 2000-2001 programme budget for the environment, in accordance with a recommendation made by the Committee for Programme and Coordination [A/54/16].

On 4 February [dec. 20/33], the Council took note of efforts to define the outline of a strategy concerning stable, adequate and predictable funding for UNEP, based on a January report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.20/23]. The Council asked him to initiate consultations with Governments and others to develop a strategy for such funding for UNEP and to report in 2001.

The Council, on 4 February [dec. 20/36], took note of ACABQ's observations on the report of the Board of Auditors on the financial report and audited financial statements of the Fund for 1996-1997 and of the Executive Director's comments on ACABQ's observations [UNEP/GC.20/24]. On the same date [dec. 20/37], the Council took note of the Executive Director's report on the revision of the Financial Rules of the Fund and of the General Procedures Governing the Operation of the Environment Fund [UNEP/GC.20/27].

Trust funds

Following consideration of the Executive Director's report on the management of trust funds [UNEP/GC.20/25], the Governing Council, on 4 February [dec. 20/34], approved the establishment of 22 trust funds and the extension of 26 others.

Taking note of the Executive Director's report on the cost of administering trust funds [UNEP/GC.20/26], the Council, on 4 February [dec. 20/35], asked him to take action to reduce the cost of programme-support services provided to trust funds and related activities, with a view to containing such costs within the programme support charges levied. He was asked to report in 2001.

International conventions and mechanisms

Implementation of conventions related to sustainable development

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/186 [YUN 1998, p. 987], the Secretary-General, in October [A/54/468], provided an overview of progress made in the scientific understanding of ecological linkages among environmental and environment-related conventions, and in the development of responses by the UN system, as well as developments at the intergovernmental level, that had given guidance to enhancing coordination among those conventions. The report concluded that considerable progress had been made, which was reflected in increased scientific understanding and the concerted action taken by various UN entities. While the work on providing hard scientific evidence of linkages continued to evolve, consideration could be given to developing coherent and planned interventions for implementation at the national level and to identifying the specific issues that each convention could address with the other conventions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second

Committee [A/54/588/Add.7], adopted resolution 54/217 without vote [agenda item 100].

Enhancing complementarities among international instruments related to environment and sustainable development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 adopted at its nineteenth special session, in particular part IV thereof, entitled "International institutional arrangements",

Recalling also its resolutions 53/186 of 15 December 1998, on international institutional arrangements related to environment and development, and 53/242 of 28 July 1999, on the report of the Secretary-General on environment and human settlements,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on international institutional arrangements related to environment and development,

Taking note of decision 20/28 on promoting inter-linkages among global environmental issues and human needs, adopted on 4 February 1999 by the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme,

Emphasizing that policy decisions under the respective conventions are taken by the conferences of the parties thereto, which are autonomous governing bodies,

Noting that various conventions related to environment and sustainable development are at different stages of implementation, and recognizing the role of the General Assembly in fostering progress in the implementation of environmental and environment-related conventions and of the commitments contained therein,

Noting with appreciation the relevant ongoing work on the implementation of environmental and environment-related conventions at the national, bilateral, regional and international levels,

Reaffirming the need, as stipulated in part IV of the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, for greater coherence in various intergovernmental organizations and processes by means of better policy coordination at the intergovernmental level, as well as for continued and more concerted efforts to enhance collaboration among the secretariats of relevant decision-making bodies,

Emphasizing the need for environmental conventions to continue to pursue sustainable development objectives that are consistent with their provisions and to be fully responsive to Agenda 21,

1. Encourages the conferences of the parties to, and the permanent secretariats of, the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, the Convention on Biological Diversity and the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa, to examine further appropriate opportunities and measures to strengthen their complementarities and to improve scientific assessments of ecological linkages among the three conventions;

2. Stresses the need for the integrated consideration of linkages, both among sectors and between sectoral and cross-sectoral aspects of Agenda 21;

3. Emphasizes the importance of facilitating and supporting the enhancement of linkages and coordination within and among environmental and environment-related conventions, inter alia, by the United Nations Environment Programme, with full respect for the status of the secretariats of the conventions and the autonomous decision-making prerogatives of the conferences of the parties to the conventions concerned, and, in this regard, supports the proposal of the Secretary-General concerning the establishment of an environmental management group for the purpose of enhancing inter-agency coordination in the areas of environment and human settlements, as stipulated in resolution 53/242;

4. Notes with appreciation all the progress made in the implementation of resolution 53/186;

5. Encourages the secretariats of the various environmental and environment-related conventions and international organizations, with full respect for the status of the secretariats of the conventions and the autonomous decision-making prerogatives of the conferences of the parties to the conventions concerned, to strengthen cooperation with a view to facilitating progress in the implementation of those conventions at the international, regional and national levels by:

(a) Identifying opportunities for complementarity of activities undertaken to facilitate the implementation of commitments made by the parties to the various conventions;

(b) Encouraging the carrying out of further scientific analyses by relevant international organizations, such as the United Nations Environment Programme, the secretariats of the conventions, their subsidiary bodies, the United Nations Secretariat and relevant international scientific bodies, in order to identify possible activities with potential multiple benefits and to bring them to the attention of the conferences of the parties;

(c) Promoting more effective and coherent support from international organizations and financial institutions and mechanisms for national action aimed at the implementation of the conventions, in particular in the area of capacity-building;

(d) Addressing practical issues, such as more effective exchange of information, enhanced awareness-raising and streamlining of national reporting;

(e) Supporting, upon request, efforts being made at the national level towards adopting an integrated and holistic approach to the implementation of environmental and environment-related conventions;

(f) Bringing relevant issues to the attention of the General Assembly and relevant intergovernmental bodies for the consideration of Member States and the formulation of agreed policy recommendations, with a view to promoting a more holistic approach;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme and the executive secretaries of the conventions, to prepare a report on the implementation of the present resolution and to submit it to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session for consideration under the item entitled "Environment and sustainable development".

UNEP and environmental conventions

Taking note of the Executive Director's report on developments in and changes to the status of international conventions and protocols related to the environment from 11 December 1996 to 10 November 1998 [UNEP/GC.20/18], the Governing Council, on 4 February [dec. 20/18 A], authorized him to transmit the report to the General Assembly, together with comments made by delegations and relevant information received by UNEP by 31 May. Additional information was transmitted to the Assembly in October [A/54/25/Add.1].

Following consideration of the Executive Director's reports on strengthening UNEP's role in promoting collaboration among environmental conventions [UNEP/GC.20/16], UNEP support to environmental conventions [UNEP/GC.20/17] and promoting interlinkages among global environmental issues and human needs [UNEP/GC.20/40] (see p. 980), the Council, on 4 February [dec. 20/18 B], called on Governments parties to multilateral environmental conventions and their conferences to consider ways to strengthen interlinkages among the conventions. It asked the Executive Director to explore with the conventions' secretariats areas of cooperation and modalities in support of the implementation of the work programmes of the respective conventions, and to make available UNEP technical, scientific and legal expertise to assist the conventions in achieving their objectives. He was also asked to assist developing countries and countries with economies in transition in strengthening their legal capacities in implementing the conventions and to report in 2001.

Climate change convention

As at 31 December, 181 States were parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, which was opened for signature in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 681] and entered into force in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 938]. During the year, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar and Sao Tome and Principe ratified the Convention, and Palau acceded to it.

Conference of Parties

The fifth session of the Conference of the Parties to the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change (Bonn, 25 October-5 November) [FCCC/CP/1999/6 & Add.1] took action to bring the 1997 Kyoto Protocol [YUN 1997, p. 1048] into force as early as possible. It decided that the sixth session of the Conference would be held in The Hague, Netherlands, from 13 to 24 November 2000, and empowered the Conference President to take steps to intensify the negotiating process on all issues. The Kyoto Protocol, which was opened for signature from 16 March 1998 to 15 March 1999 at UN Headquarters, had received 84 signatures and 21

States had become parties. The Protocol would enter into force 90 days after countries, including developed countries accounting for at least 55 per cent of the total carbon dioxide emissions for 1990 from that group, had deposited their instruments of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession.

The Conference reached agreement on how to improve the national reports from industrialized countries and strengthen the guidelines for measuring their greenhouse gas emissions, endorsed a work programme and elements of a decision-making framework to address the conclusions of land-use change and forestry adopted by the Subsidiary Body for Scientific and Technological Advice (SBSTA), and adopted reporting guidelines on global climate observing systems [FCCC/CP/1999/7]. Other decisions dealt with the development and transfer of technologies, capacity-building in developing countries and in countries with economies in transition, the pilot phase of activities implemented jointly by SBSTA and the Subsidiary Body for Implementation (SBI), continuation of the work of the Joint Working Group on Compliance on the development of procedures and mechanisms for a compliance system under the Kyoto Protocol, the relationship between protecting the stratospheric ozone layer and safeguarding the global climate system, emissions based on fuel sold to ships and aircraft engaged in international transport, and co-operation with the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change.

SBSTA held its tenth (31 May-11 June) [FCCC/SBSTA/1999/6] and eleventh (25 October-5 November) [FCCC/SBSTA/1999/14] sessions, both in Bonn, as did SBI [FCCC/SBI/1999/8, FCCC/SBI/1999/14].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/54/588/Add.4], adopted resolution 54/222 without vote [agenda item 100 (d)].

Protection of global climate for present and future generations of mankind

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 50/115 of 20 December 1995, 51/184 of 16 December 1996 and 52/199 of 18 December 1997 and other resolutions relating to the protection of global climate for present and future generations of mankind,

Noting with satisfaction that most States and one regional economic integration organization have ratified or acceded to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change,

Noting that, to date, the Kyoto Protocol to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change has attracted sixteen ratifications, and encouraging necessary action to facilitate the entry into force of the Kyoto Protocol at the earliest possible date,

Expressing its deep appreciation to the Government of Argentina for hosting the fourth session of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, held from 2 to 14 November 1998, which culminated in the adoption of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action,

Noting that the fifth session of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change was held at Bonn, Germany, from 25 October to 5 November 1999,

Taking note of decision 1/CP.5 adopted by the Conference of the Parties to the Convention at its fifth session, stressing the importance of a successful outcome to the sixth session of the Conference of the Parties, in particular in reaching decisions on the early and full implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action, and welcoming, in that decision, the agreement to an intensified negotiating process leading to the sixth session of the Conference of the Parties,

Welcoming the generous offer of the Government of the Netherlands to host the sixth session of the Conference of the Parties, and urging the Parties to undertake thorough preparations to advance progress at that session,

Taking note of the decision of the Conference of the Parties at its fifth session to approve the continuation of the institutional linkage of the Convention secretariat to the United Nations, subject to review not later than 31 December 2001, in consultation with the Secretary-General, with a view to making such modifications as may be desirable by both parties,

Taking note also of the decision of the Conference of the Parties whereby the General Assembly is invited to decide, at its fifty-fourth session, on the issue of meeting the Convention's conference-servicing expenses from its regular budget, taking into account the views expressed by Member States,

Noting the oral report of the Secretary-General and the advice on the continuation of the institutional linkage of the Convention secretariat to the United Nations,

Noting also that, by paragraph 9 of resolution 50/115, the Secretary-General was requested to make the necessary arrangements to include in the calendar of conferences and meetings for the biennium 1998-1999 those sessions of the Conference of the Parties and its subsidiary bodies that the Conference may need to convene in that period,

1. Encourages Member States that have not ratified or acceded to the Kyoto Protocol to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change to do so with a view to bringing it into force;

2. Calls upon all States parties to continue to take effective steps to implement their commitments under the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, in accordance with the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities;

3. Encourages all countries to work constructively towards advancing the work necessary for the timely entry into force of the Kyoto Protocol and its implementation;

4. Approves the continuation of the institutional linkage of the Convention secretariat to the United Nations, as advised by the Secretary-General and approved by the Conference of the Parties at its fifth session;

5. Encourages the conferences of the parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, the Convention on Biological Diversity and the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa, to examine further appropriate opportunities and measures to strengthen their complementarities and to improve scientific assessments of ecological linkages between the three conventions;

6. Encourages the secretariats of various environmental and environment-related conventions and other international organizations, with full respect for the status of the respective convention secretariats and the autonomous decision-making prerogatives of the conferences of the parties of the conventions concerned, to strengthen cooperation with a view to facilitating progress in their implementation at the international, regional and national levels;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to review the functioning of this institutional linkage not later than 31 December 2001, in consultation with the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, with a view to making such modifications as may be considered desirable by both parties, and to report thereon to the General Assembly;

8. Decides to include in the calendar of conferences and meetings for the biennium 2000-2001 the sessions of the Conference of the Parties and its subsidiary bodies envisaged for that biennium, in accordance with the decisions adopted by the Conference of the Parties;

9. Also decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the sub-item entitled "Protection of global climate for present and future generations of mankind".

Vienna Convention and Montreal Protocol

As at 31 December, 172 States and the European Community (EC) were parties to the 1985 Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer [YUN 1985, p. 804], which entered into force in 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 810]. In 1999, Albania, Armenia, Djibouti and Oman acceded to the Convention. Related to the Convention, 171 States and the EC were parties to the 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer [YUN 1987, p. 686], 137 States and the EC were parties to the 1990 Amendment to the Protocol [YUN 1990, p. 522], and 104 States and the EC were parties to the 1992 Amendment [YUN 1992, p. 684]. On 10 November 1999, the 1997 Amendment [YUN 1997, p. 1050] entered into force, having received the requisite 20 ratifications; at year's end, there were 33 parties to the Amendment. In 1999, an additional amendment was adopted (see below).

The combined fifth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Vienna Convention and the Eleventh Meeting of the Parties to the Montreal Protocol (Beijing, 29 November-3 December) [UNEP/OzL.Pro.11/10] agreed on a funding package to enable developing countries to maintain the momentum of their efforts to phase out chlorofluorocarbons and other ozone-destroying chemicals. The funding, which included $440 million in new contributions for the period 2000-2002, plus $35.7 million carried over from the previous period, constituted the fourth replenishment of the Montreal Protocol's Multilateral Fund. The funds were used to support the adoption of more ozone-friendly technologies for refrigerators, air conditioners, and other consumer products and industrial processes. The meeting adopted a further amendment to the Protocol and adjustments regarding controlled substances in annexes to the Protocol. The amendment banned trade in hydrochlorofluorocarbons (HCFCs) with countries that had not ratified the 1992 Amendment, which had provided for an HCFC phase-out. It required developed countries to freeze HCFC production in 2004 at 1989 levels and developing countries to do so in 2016 with a similar baseline of 2015. Production of 15 per cent above baseline was permitted to meet the basic domestic needs of developing countries. In addition, the production of bromochloromethane was to be phased out in all countries by 2002. The Beijing amendment was to enter into force on 1 January 2001, provided that at least 20 instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval were deposited by States or regional economic organizations that were parties to the Montreal Protocol. The meeting adopted the Beijing Declaration on Renewed Commitment to the Protection of the Ozone Layer.

The fifth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Vienna Convention [UNEP/OzL.Conv.5/6] noted the adjustments and Amendment to the Montreal Protocol, took note of the reports of the Scientific, Environmental Effects and Technology and Economic Assessment Panels and the Technical Options Committees, endorsed the recommendations of the fourth meeting of the Ozone Research Managers and decided to hold its sixth meeting in 2002, in conjunction with the Fourteenth Meeting of the Parties to the Montreal Protocol.

Convention on air pollution

As at 31 December, there were 45 parties to the 1979 Convention on Long-Range Transboundary Air Pollution [YUN 1979, p. 710], which entered into force in 1983 [YUN 1983, p. 645]. A protocol to the Convention to abate acidification, eutrophication and ground-level ozone opened for signature in Gothenburg, Sweden, on 30 November and later at UN Headquarters until 30 May 2000. As at 31 December, the protocol had 27 signatories.

Convention on Biological Diversity

In 1999, Palau and Sao Tome and Principe became parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity, bringing the total number of parties to 176. The Convention opened for signature in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 683] and entered into force in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 810].

The first extraordinary meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention (Cartagena, Colombia, 22-24 February) [UNEP/CBD/ExCOP/1/3] was convened to adopt a protocol on biosafety. The meeting was preceded by the sixth meeting of the open-ended ad hoc working group on biosafety (Cartagena, 14-22 February) [UNEP/CBD/ExCOP/1/2], which adopted a number of draft articles and annexes. As the Conference of Parties was unable to reach consensus on the draft submitted by the working group, on 24 February, at its third session, the Conference suspended its meeting and decided to hold a resumed session. The essential core issues that remained were the scope of the protocol, and the application of the advanced informed agreement procedure and its relationship with other international agreements. The resumed session was scheduled for January 2000.

The Subsidiary Body on Scientific, Technical and Technological Advice (Montreal, Canada, 21-25 June) [UNEP/CBD/SBSTTA/4/14] considered the Global Taxonomy Initiative; the conservation and sustainable use of terrestrial biological diversity (drylands, Mediterranean, arid, semi-arid, grassland and savannah ecosystems); development of guiding principles for the prevention of impacts of alien species; consequences of the new technology for the control of plant gene expression for the conservation and sustainable use of biological diversity; the incorporation of biological diversity considerations into environmental impact assessment; and the development of approaches and practices for the sustainable use of biological resources, including tourism (see also below and p. 749).

Taking note of the development and implementation on an interim basis of the 1995 UNEP International Technical Guidelines for Safety in Biotechnology [UNEP/Global Consultation/Biosafety/4] and the Executive Director's report [UNEP/GC.20/33] on the implementation of its 1997 decision on biosafety [YUN 1997, p. 1056], the Governing Council, on 4 February [dec. 20/26], asked him to assist Governments in implementing the forthcoming biosafety protocol. He was also asked to mobilize resources to support developing countries and countries with economies in transition to prepare national biosafety frameworks in the context of the proposed protocol, and to support sub-regional and regional biosafety risk-assessment capabilities in collaboration with the Convention secretariat and other relevant organizations.

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/190 [YUN 1998, p. 990], the Secretary-General transmitted, in October [A/54/428], a report of the Executive Secretary of the Convention summarizing action taken by the Conference of the Parties and the Subsidiary Body.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/54/588/Add.3], adopted resolution 54/221 without vote [agenda item 100 (c)].

Convention on Biological Diversity

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/190 of 15 December 1998 on the Convention on Biological Diversity and other relevant resolutions,

Recalling also the provisions of the Convention on Biological Diversity,

Reaffirming that the conservation of biological diversity is a common concern of humankind,

Recalling that States have, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law, the sovereign right to exploit their own resources pursuant to their own environmental policies and the responsibility to ensure that activities within their jurisdiction or control do not cause damage to the environment of other States or of areas beyond the limits of national jurisdiction,

Recalling Agenda 21, in particular its chapter 15 on the conservation of biological diversity and related chapters,

Having considered the report of the Executive Secretary of the Convention on Biological Diversity as submitted by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly,

Deeply concerned about the continued loss of the world's biological diversity, and, on the basis of the provisions of the Convention, reaffirming the commitment to the conservation of biological diversity, the sustainable use of its components and the fair and equitable sharing of benefits arising out of the utilization of genetic resources, including by appropriate access to genetic resources and appropriate transfer of relevant technologies, taking into account all rights over those resources and technologies, and by appropriate funding,

Recognizing the contribution of indigenous and local communities, and women within those communities, to the conservation and sustainable use of biological resources,

Recalling the decisions adopted by the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity at its fourth meeting relating to intellectual property rights, traditional knowledge and the relationship of the Convention with other international agreements,

Noting the continuing dialogue taking place in the Committee on Trade and Environment of the World Trade Organization on the provisions of the Agreement on Trade-related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights, Encouraged by the work carried out to date under the Convention, and satisfied that most States and one regional economic integration organization have ratified the Convention,

Taking note with appreciation of the generous offer of the Government of Kenya to host the fifth meeting of the Conference of the Parties, which will be held at Nairobi from 15 to 26 May 2000,

Recalling its invitation to the Executive Secretary of the Convention on Biological Diversity to report to the General Assembly on the results of future meetings of the Conference of the Parties,

1. Takes note of the results of the fourth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity, held at Bratislava from 4 to 15 May 1998;

2. Recognizes the importance of the inter-sessional efforts of the Conference of the Parties since its fourth meeting to improve the effectiveness of the operations of the Convention;

3. Reaffirms the importance of the decision of the fourth meeting of the Conference of the Parties on the adoption of the programmes of work and the thematic approach to guide its work in the development of the Convention for the foreseeable future, including its in-depth consideration of ecosystems;

4. Calls upon Governments, in cooperation with the Conference of the Parties, to use science-based analysis to study and monitor closely the evolution of new technologies to prevent possible adverse effects on the conservation and sustainable use of biological diversity, which might have an impact on farmers and local communities;

5. Recognizes the importance of the adoption of a protocol on biosafety at the resumed session of the first extraordinary meeting of the Conference of the Parties, to be held at Montreal, Canada, from 24 to 28 January 2000, and calls upon States participating in the negotiations on a protocol on biosafety to work constructively to bring this process to a satisfactory conclusion;

6. Welcomes decision IV/15, adopted by the Conference of the Parties at its fourth meeting, in which it stressed the need to ensure consistency in implementing the Convention and World Trade Organization agreements, including the Agreement on Trade-related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights, with a view to promoting increased mutual supportiveness and integration of biological diversity concerns and the protection of intellectual property rights;

7. Reaffirms paragraph 10 of decision IV/15, in which the Conference of the Parties emphasized that further work is required to help develop a common appreciation of the relationship between intellectual property rights and the relevant provisions of the Agreement on Trade-related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights and the Convention on Biological Diversity, in particular on issues relating to technology transfer and conservation and sustainable use of biological diversity and the fair and equitable sharing of benefits arising out of the use of genetic resources, including the protection of knowledge, innovations and practices of indigenous and local communities embodying traditional lifestyles relevant for the conservation and sustainable use of biological diversity;

8. Takes note of the fourth meeting of the Subsidiary Body on Scientific, Technical and Technological Advice of the Conference of the Parties, including its recommendation IV/5 on the consequences of the use of the new technology for the control of plant gene expression for the conservation and sustainable use of biological diversity;

9. Stresses the importance of the implementation of the Convention at all levels, including through the preparation and implementation of national strategies, plans and programmes, taking into account the need for financial resources to support the implementation activities, in particular those of developing countries, in accordance with the provisions of the Convention and the decisions of the Conference of the Parties;

10. Encourages those States that have not yet ratified the Convention to do so as soon as possible;

11. Takes note of the meeting of the Panel of Experts on Access and Benefit-sharing, established in accordance with decision IV/8, adopted by the Conference of the Parties at its fourth meeting;

12. Recognizes the importance of national action to conserve biological diversity in many habitats, including forests, wetlands and coastal areas, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Convention, in particular article 8, and the need to mobilize national and international support for such national actions;

13. Welcomes the offer of Spain to host, at Seville in March 2000, the first meeting of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Inter-sessional Working Group on article 8 (j) of the Convention regarding the traditional knowledge, innovations and practices of indigenous and local communities, and encourages Governments to include representatives of indigenous and local communities on their delegations to that meeting;

14. Recognizes the utility of information exchange, and encourages the development of biodiversity information networks at the national, regional and international levels by way of the clearing-house mechanism;

15. Encourages the conferences of the parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, the Convention on Biological Diversity and the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa, to examine further appropriate opportunities and measures to strengthen their complementarities and improve scientific assessments of ecological linkages between the three conventions;

16. Encourages the secretariats of various environmental and environment-related conventions and other international organizations, with full respect for the status of the respective convention secretariats and the autonomous decision-making prerogatives of the conferences of the parties to the conventions concerned, to strengthen cooperation with a view to facilitating progress in their implementation at the international, regional and national levels;

17. Invites all funding institutions and bilateral and multilateral donors, as well as regional funding institutions and non-governmental organizations, to cooperate with the secretariat of the Convention in the implementation of the programme of work;

18. Calls upon States parties to the Convention to settle urgently any arrears and to pay their contributions in full and in a timely manner so as to ensure continuity in the cash flows required to finance the ongoing work of the Conference of the Parties, the subsidiary bodies and the Convention secretariat;

19. Invites the Executive Secretary of the Convention on Biological Diversity to report to the General Assembly on the ongoing work regarding the Convention;

20. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the sub-item entitled "Convention on Biological Diversity".

Convention to combat desertification

In 1999, an additional 15 States became parties to the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa, which was adopted in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 944] and entered into force in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 958], bringing the number of parties to 160.

The Conference of the Parties, at its third session (Recife, Brazil, 15-26 November) [ICCD/COP(3)/20 & Add.1], adopted the Recife Initiative, which called for the drafting, in 2000, of a declaration on the commitments under the Convention to enhance implementation of the obligations accepted by States parties. The declaration would set a time frame for making progress on priority thematic and sectoral issues and focus on integrating anti-desertification activities into the development strategies of affected countries, as well as of all developed States parties and multi-lateral and other development institutions. It would also emphasize the development of benchmarks and indicators to evaluate progress against desertification.

The Conference focused on national reports submitted by 41 African countries, which represented over 75 per cent of the continent's land area. Reports were also submitted by four African subregional organizations, 11 developed country Governments and 17 UN and other international organizations. It was decided to establish an ad hoc working group to follow up on the national reports process and its evaluation. Consultations on a new annex to the Convention continued, with the aim of adopting a regional implementation annex V for Central and Eastern Europe to complement the existing annexes for Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Caribbean, and the northern Mediterranean. Other decisions dealt with the Global Mechanism, traditional knowledge, a survey of existing networks, institutions, agencies and bodies, early warning systems, a roster of independent experts, the 2000-2001 budget and the Conference work programme. The Conference decided that its fourth session would be held from 16 to 27 October 2000 in Bonn, which became the site of the Convention's permanent secretariat at the end of January.

The Committee on Science and Technology, a subsidiary body of the Conference (Recife, 16-19 November) [ICCD/COP(3)/20 & Add.1], mainly adopted decisions similar to those of the Conference. It also adopted its work programme for 2000.

Governing Council action. Following consideration of the Executive Director's report on the implementation of the Convention [UNEP/GC.20/11], the Governing Council, on 5 February [dec. 20/10], asked him to maintain UNEP's capability to respond to global land-degradation issues; accord priority to promoting action to combat desertification; assist African countries in the development and strengthening of action plans; enhance GEF support for land degradation; strengthen collaboration with relevant UN bodies and other organizations; assist affected countries in land-degradation projects; involve UNEP in the activities of the Convention's Global Mechanism; and report in 2001.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 53/191 [YUN 1998, p. 991], the Secretary-General reported, in May [A/54/96], on the headquarters agreement for the Convention's secretariat, the Global Mechanism, an additional regional implementation annex to the Convention for the countries of Eastern and Central Europe, the status of the Convention and arrangements for the third session of the Conference of the Parties.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/54/588/Add.5], adopted resolution 54/223 without vote [agenda item 100 (e)].

Implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/191 of 15 December 1998 and other resolutions relating to the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa,

Noting with satisfaction that, as indicated in paragraph 19 of its resolution 52/198 of 18 December 1997, the second session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention was held at Dakar from 30 November to 11 December 1998,

Expressing its deep appreciation to the Government of Senegal for the generous manner in which it hosted and provided facilities for the second session of the Conference of the Parties,

Expressing its deep appreciation also to the Government of Brazil for the generous offer to host the third session of the Conference of the Parties,

Welcoming the allocation of additional resources to the Global Mechanism by the Conference of the Parties at its third session,

Looking forward to the continued efforts of the Conference of the Parties and its subsidiary bodies in addressing desertification, land degradation and drought issues,

Acknowledging that desertification and drought are problems of a global dimension in that they affect all regions of the world and that joint action of the international community is needed to combat desertification and to mitigate the effects of drought,

Stressing the need, inter alia, to integrate strategies for poverty eradication into efforts to combat desertification and to mitigate the effects of drought,

Noting with satisfaction that an increasing number of countries and one regional economic integration organization have ratified or acceded to the Convention,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the outcome of the second session of the Conference of the Parties and on the implementation of resolution 53/191,

1. Welcomes the convening of the third session of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa, at Recife, Brazil, from 15 to 26 November 1999;

2. Calls upon all States and other actors to contribute effectively to the successful outcome of the third session of the Conference of the Parties;

3. Also calls upon all remaining countries that are not yet parties to the Convention to ratify or accede to the Convention as soon as possible;

4. Emphasizes the importance of implementing the provisions of the Convention at all levels, including the general provisions and obligations of affected and developed countries;

5. Notes with satisfaction that the Convention secretariat was relocated to Bonn, Germany, at the end of January 1999 and that it has begun functioning as the permanent secretariat of the Convention;

6. Notes that the Global Mechanism started its activities early in 1999, that it has not yet begun to support fully, inter alia, enabling activities under the Convention, and that resources have been made available to it, and invites the Global Mechanism to develop effectively all its activities and support under the Convention;

7. Also notes the decision of the Conference of the Parties at its third session related to the first review of policies, operational modalities and activities of the Global Mechanism, and, in this context, urges donors, international organizations and the Global Mechanism, within its mandate, to support the preparation of national reports;

8. Welcomes the steps being taken by affected developing country parties to the Convention, with the assistance of international organizations, to implement the Convention and the efforts being made to promote the participation of all actors of society in the elaboration of national, subregional and regional action programmes to combat desertification;

9. Also welcomes the efforts made by affected African country parties, developed country parties, international organizations and non-governmental organizations to produce and to submit reports for consideration by the Conference of the Parties at its third session;

10. Requests the Global Mechanism, in conformity with the provisions of the Convention and the relevant decisions taken by the Conference of the Parties at its first, second and third sessions, to carry out effectively its mandate of assisting affected developing country parties in the implementation of the Convention;

11. Calls upon the secretariat of the Convention and the Global Mechanism to cooperate fully in carrying out their activities, as provided for in their respective mandates;

12. Welcomes the financial support already provided on a voluntary basis by some countries, and urges Governments, the private sector and all relevant organizations, including non-governmental organizations, to make or to continue to make voluntary contributions to the Global Mechanism to enable it to implement effectively and fully its mandate;

13. Also welcomes the contributions paid by some country parties, and calls upon all parties that have not done so to pay promptly and in full the contributions required for the core budget of the Conference of the Parties, so as to ensure continuity in the cash flow required to finance the ongoing work of the Conference, the subsidiary bodies, the permanent secretariat and the Global Mechanism;

14. Further welcomes the initial contribution made by the International Fund for Agricultural Development to the Special Resources for the Convention to Combat Desertification Finance Account, and invites the Fund to make available as soon as possible the remaining balance to the Account, in conformity with its pledge made at the first session of the Conference of the Parties in Rome;

15. Invites all other relevant organizations and programmes, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank and other members of the Facilitation Committee of the Global Mechanism, also to make contributions to enable the Global Mechanism to support successfully the implementation of the Convention;

16. Notes with satisfaction that the Secretary-General, in conformity with paragraph 11 of resolution 52/198, closed, on 31 December 1998, the Trust Fund and the Special Voluntary Fund established under the provisions of General Assembly resolution 47/188 of 22 December 1992 and transferred the amounts remaining in the Trust Fund and in the Special Voluntary Fund, respectively, to the Supplementary Fund and the Special Fund established on 1 January 1999, in accordance with the relevant paragraphs of the financial rules of the Conference of the Parties;

17. Calls upon Governments, multilateral financial institutions, regional development banks, regional economic integration organizations and all other interested organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations and the private sector, to contribute generously to the General Fund, the Supplementary Fund and the Special Fund, in accordance with the relevant paragraphs of the financial rules of the Conference of the Parties;

18. Decides to include in the calendar of conferences and meetings for the biennium 2000-2001 the sessions of the Conference of the Parties and its subsidiary bodies, including the fourth and fifth ordinary sessions of the Conference of the Parties and the meetings of its subsidiary bodies;

19. Notes with appreciation that some affected developing countries and one region have adopted their national and regional action programmes, and therefore calls upon the international community to contribute to the implementation of those programmes through, inter alia, the conclusion of partnership agreements, relevant bilateral and multilateral cooperation programmes that are available to implement the Convention and contributions from non-governmental organizations and the private sector;

20. Invites affected developing countries that have not yet adopted their national action programmes, and, where appropriate, regional and subregional action programmes, to accelerate the process of elaboration and adoption of their action programmes with a view to finalizing them no later than the end of 2000;

21. Calls upon the international community, in particular the developed countries and the United Nations system, and invites the multilateral financial institutions, the private sector and all other interested actors to support the efforts of affected developing countries in the processes of elaborating and implementing action programmes to combat desertification, including, as appropriate, interregional programmes and platforms of cooperation, by providing them with financial resources and other forms of assistance;

22. Welcomes the progress made in producing a draft additional regional implementation annex to the Convention for the countries of Eastern and Central Europe with a view to adopting it at the fourth session of the Conference of the Parties, and invites those countries to continue their efforts towards acceding to the Convention;

23. Encourages the conferences of the parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, the Convention on Biological Diversity and the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa, to examine further appropriate opportunities and measures to strengthen the complementarities and to improve scientific assessments of ecological linkages among the three conventions;

24. Also encourages the secretariats of various environmental and environment-related conventions and other international organizations, with full respect for the statutes of the respective convention secretariats and the autonomous decision-making prerogatives of the conferences of the parties to the conventions concerned, to strengthen cooperation with a view to facilitating progress in their implementation at the international, regional, subregional and national levels;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution, as well as on the outcome of the third session of the Conference of the Parties;

26. Reminds the States parties to the Convention that, in accordance with General Assembly decision 52/445 of 18 December 1997, beginning in 2000, the conferences of the parties to the conventions signed at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development or established as a result of the Conference, as well as other conventions relating to sustainable development, shall take all appropriate measures to avoid convening their sessions and those of their subsidiary bodies during the sessions of the General Assembly;

27. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the sub-item entitled "Implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa".

Environmental activities

The atmosphere

In an effort to combat the recurring forest-fire/smog problem in South-East Asia, UNEP, in collaboration with the secretariat of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN), was helping to establish a legally binding agreement on transboundary haze pollution in the region. The eighth ASEAN Ministerial Meeting on Haze concluded on 26 August in Singapore.

On 16 September, the International Day for the Preservation of the Ozone Layer was observed.

On 17 November, UNEP cautioned that the ozone hole in the Antarctic covered an area of 22 million square kilometres, an expanse more than twice the size of mainland China. The ozone layer over different parts of the world was monitored systematically. According to the Scientific Assessment Panel of the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer, the ozone layer was projected to recover to pre-1980 levels in the year 2050, provided the Protocol was implemented and all countries completely phased out the use of ozone-depleting chemicals.

Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change

The Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, at its fifteenth session (San Jose, Costa Rica, 15-18 April), among other things, reviewed work on vulnerabilities to climate change in SIDS, Asia, Africa and Latin America, and special reports on technology transfer, emissions scenarios and land use, and land-use change and forestry.

In June, the Panel released a report, "Aviation and the global atmosphere", which assessed the impact of aircraft engine emissions on climate and atmospheric ozone.

Terrestrial ecosystems

Deforestation and forest degradation

Intergovernmental Forum on Forests

The Intergovernmental Forum on Forests (IFF), established in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1057] under the aegis of the Commission on Sustainable Development to work towards a legally binding instrument on the management, conservation and sustainable development of all types of forests, held its third session (Geneva, 3-14 May) [E/CN.17/IFF/1999/25]. IFF continued to consider promoting and facilitating the implementation of the proposals for action of the Intergovernmental Panel on Forests (IPF) [YUN 1997, p. 1057] and reporting on progress in the management, conservation and sustainable development of all types of forests; matters left pending and other issues arising from IPF programme elements; and international arrangements to promote the management, conservation and sustainable development of all types of forests.

The Forum had before it a series of communications transmitting the texts of various reports: from Austria, the report on the International Consultation on Research and Information Systems in Forestry (Gmunden, 7-10 September 1998) [E/CN.17/IFF/1999/17]; from Costa Rica, the final report of the Global Workshop on Addressing the Underlying Causes of Deforestation and Forest Degradation (San Jose, 18-22 January) [E/CN.17/IFF/1999/18] and the report of the meeting of experts of the Costa Rica-Canada Initiative on forests in support of the IFF work programme (San Jose, 22-26 February) [E/CN.17/IFF/1999/23]; from Germany, the report of the Chairman of the International Cooperation Programme on the Assessment and Monitoring of Air Pollution Effects on Forests [E/CN.17/IFF/1999/19]; from Australia, an executive summary of a report on international forest conservation: protected areas and beyond [E/CN.17/IFF/1999/20] and of a study on the global outlook for plantations [E/CN.17/IFF/1999/24]; from Chile, Denmark, India, New Zealand and Portugal, the sponsors of an international expert meeting on the role of planted forests in sustainable forest management (Santiago, Chile, 6-10 April), the final report of the meeting [E/CN.17/IFF/1999/21]; and from Brazil, the final report of the Brazil-United States international experts' meeting on protected forest areas (San Juan, Puerto Rico, 15-19 March) [E/CN.17/IFF/1999/22].

Central African forest ecosystems

On 12 October [A/C.2/54/5], Cameroon transmitted to the Secretary-General the Declaration of the Summit of Central African Heads of State on the Conservation and Sustainable Management of Tropical Forests (Yaounde, 12-17 March). By the Declaration, the heads of State of Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Chad, the Congo, Equatorial Guinea and Gabon undertook to accelerate the setting up of protected transborder zones lying between Central African States; develop a forestry tax system and attendant implementation measures; adopt harmonized national forestry policies; involve the rural population in the planning and sustainable management of ecosystems; involve economic operators in the sustainable management and conservation of forest ecosystems; make efforts to stamp out large-scale poaching and other non-sustainable exploitation; promote and increase the pace of industrialization in the sector; promote national and subregional forums; establish lasting mechanisms for financing forest development; organize summits on the conservation and sustainable management of forest ecosystems; and revive the Organization for Wildlife Conservation in Central Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/54/588/Add.7], adopted resolution 54/214 without vote [agenda item 100].

Conservation and sustainable development of Central African forest ecosystems

The General Assembly,

Recalling the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, held at Rio de Janeiro from 3 to 14 June 1992, and General Assembly resolutions 47/190 of 22 December 1992, on the report of the Conference, and 47/191 of 22 December 1992, establishing the institutional arrangements for the follow-up to the Conference,

Recalling also its resolution 53/188 of 15 December 1998 on the implementation of and follow-up to the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development and the nineteenth special session of the General Assembly,

Recalling further the work of the Intergovernmental Forum on Forests within the context of the Commission on Sustainable Development,

Noting with appreciation the Summit of Central African Heads of State on the Conservation and Sustainable Management of Tropical Forests, held at Yaounde from 12 to 17 March 1999,

Mindful of the need for the conservation and sustainable management of the forest ecosystems of Central Africa, which constitute an important natural asset for present and future generations,

Convinced that the sustainable management of forest resources can contribute significantly to the economic, social and cultural development of the States that border on forests,

Convinced also of the important role of subregional and international cooperation in the management of forest ecosystems and combating desertification, in keeping with the international commitments entered into by the international community,

Considering that a synergy of international and national efforts is essential in order to achieve sustainable development,

1. Recognizes the importance of the forests of the Central African subregion, the natural characteristics of which play an essential role in the equilibrium of the biosphere of the entire planet;

2. Welcomes the Declaration adopted by the Summit of Central African Heads of State on the Conservation and Sustainable Management of Tropical Forests, held at Yaounde from 12 to 17 March 1999, encourages the countries of Central Africa to implement to the fullest extent possible the undertakings set out in the Declaration, and recognizes the efforts made by those countries in this respect, in particular with regard to policy coherence and coordination, with a view to the sustainable management and conservation of the forest ecosystems of the Central African subregion;

3. Invites the international community to support the countries of Central Africa in these efforts, including through the provision of financial and technical assistance on a regional basis;

4. Encourages the international community, including the Global Environment Facility and the Intergovernmental Forum on Forests, when considering ways and means of achieving the conservation and sustainable management of all types of forests, to take into account, inter alia, the forests of the Central African subregion;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution, within the context of the reporting emanating from the Intergovernmental Forum on Forests and taking into account other reporting requests under the item entitled "Environment and sustainable development".

Marine ecosystems

Oceans and seas

The Commission on Sustainable Development considered February reports of the Secretary-General on the current state of the ocean and main trends of ocean matters [E/CN.17/1999/4] and on national trends and progress made towards sustainable development within oceans and seas [E/CN.17/1999/4/Add.1].

Deterioration of the coastal and marine environment had been caused by land-based activities of humans, as well as natural phenomena, such as climate change, floods and storms, which together threatened the sustainability of coastal resources. Coral reefs were particularly vulnerable to human activities, including coastal development, overexploitation and destructive fishing practices, impacts from inland pollution and erosion, and marine-based pollution. As to living marine resources, it was estimated that 35 per cent of major marine fisheries were subjected to severe overfishing, 25 per cent were fully exploited and 40 per cent still offered scope for development. With regard to the prevention and control of marine pollution from shipping and related activities, there was a reduction in pollution incidents and the near elimination of the dumping of industrial wastes and other matter at sea. However, there were serious weaknesses in the international regulatory regime, such as polluting ships that had not acceded to relevant agreements or ships that flew non-party flags of convenience. In addition, there was no international instrument to regulate offshore oil and gas exploration and production activities as a source of marine pollution. Areas requiring further attention were the Global Programme of Action for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities (see p. 996), fisheries management and international cooperation and coordination.

An analysis of general trends in national implementation indicated achievements in the improvement of decision-making, particularly the strengthening of legal and administrative frameworks; respect for the rights of indigenous and local people; improved information for decision-making and public awareness; the use of financial incentives that promoted sustainability; and increased collaboration at international, regional and bilateral levels. The report highlighted developments in integrated coastal zone management, marine environment protection, sustainable use and conservation of marine living resources and regional trends in Africa, Asia, Europe, the Mediterranean and the Americas.

In February [E/CN.17/1999/15], South Africa transmitted to the Commission the conclusions and recommendations of the regional Conference on Cooperation for Development and Protection of the Coastal and Marine Environment in Sub-Saharan Africa (Cape Town, 30 November-4 December 1998). Also in February [E/CN.17/1999/14], the United Kingdom transmitted the report of the Second London Oceans Workshop, hosted jointly by the Governments of Brazil and the United Kingdom (London, 10-12 December 1998).

The UNEP Governing Council had before it a report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.20/19/Add.1] on UNEP activities regarding oceans management, which was submitted to the Commission.

Commission action. In April, the Commission on Sustainable Development called on Governments to strengthen national, regional and international action to develop integrated approaches to oceans and coastal area management [E/1999/29 (dec. 7/1)]. It emphasized the importance of international cooperation in ensuring that the oceans and seas remained sustainable through integrated management. The Commission supported the need to strengthen the UNEP regional seas programme and to enhance cooperation with other regional seas and intergovernmental organizations. The UN system and Governments were asked to review the priority given to building capacities needed to manage regional seas organizations, intergovernmental regional fisheries organizations and arrangements and regional monitoring systems. The Commission brought to the attention of the international community areas of particular concern relating to marine resources, the effects of land-based activities, marine science and other marine activities such as navigation, pollution by dumping at sea, and off-shore oil and gas operations.

The Commission recommended that the General Assembly establish a process to promote improved cooperation and coordination on oceans and seas. It proposed that the process function under the Assembly's aegis to facilitate consideration of matters within the Assembly's mandate, as contained in its resolution 49/28 [YUN 1994, p. 1314].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 November [meeting 62], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/33 [draft: A/54/L.32 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 40 (c)].

Results of the review by the Commission on Sustainable Development of the sectoral theme of "Oceans and seas": international coordination and cooperation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/28 of 6 December 1994 on the law of the sea and 53/32 of 24 November 1998 on oceans and the law of the sea,

Mindful of the importance of the oceans and seas for the earth's ecosystem and for providing the vital resources for food security and for sustaining economic prosperity and the well-being of present and future generations,

Convinced that all aspects of oceans and seas are closely interrelated and need to be considered as a whole,

Recalling that the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea sets out the legal framework within which all activities in the oceans and seas must be carried out, and with which these activities should be consistent, as recognized also by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in chapter 17 of Agenda 21,

Recognizing the importance of maintaining the integrity of the Convention,

Convinced of the importance of the annual consideration and review of ocean affairs and the law of the sea by the General Assembly, as the global institution having the competence to undertake such a review,

Convinced also of the need, building on existing arrangements, for an integrated approach to all legal, economic, social, environmental and other relevant aspects of oceans and seas and the need to improve coordination and cooperation at both the intergovernmental and inter-agency levels,

Bearing in mind the necessity of strengthening existing structures and mandates within the United Nations system and the need to avoid duplication or overlapping of debates that take place in other forums,

Recognizing the important role that international organizations have in relation to ocean affairs and in promoting sustainable development of the oceans and seas and their resources,

Recognizing also the significant contribution that major groups, as identified in Agenda 21, can make to this goal,

Welcoming the review of the sectoral theme of "Oceans and seas" by the Commission on Sustainable Development, in particular those aspects related to international coordination and cooperation,

1. Endorses the recommendations made by the Commission on Sustainable Development through the Economic and Social Council under the sectoral theme of "Oceans and seas" regarding international coordination and cooperation;

2. Decides, consistent with the legal framework provided by the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea and the goals of chapter 17 of Agenda 21, to establish an open-ended informal consultative process in order to facilitate the annual review by the General Assembly, in an effective and constructive manner, of developments in ocean affairs by considering the Secretary-General's report on oceans and the law of the sea and by suggesting particular issues to be considered by it, with an emphasis on identifying areas where coordination and cooperation at the intergovernmental and inter-agency levels should be enhanced;

3. Also decides that the meetings within the framework of the consultative process will be organized as follows:

(a) The meetings will be open to all States Members of the United Nations, States members of the specialized agencies, all parties to the Convention, entities that have received a standing invitation to participate as observers in the work of the General Assembly pursuant to its relevant resolutions, and intergovernmental organizations with competence in ocean affairs;

(b) The meetings will take place for one week each year; in 2000 they will be held from 30 May to 2 June;

(c) The meetings will deliberate on the Secretary-General's report on oceans and the law of the sea, with due account given to any particular resolution or decision of the General Assembly, any relevant special reports of the Secretary-General and any relevant recommendations of the Commission on Sustainable Development;

(d) The meetings should, in identifying areas where coordination and cooperation are to be enhanced, bear in mind the differing characteristics and needs of the different regions of the world, and should not pursue legal or juridical coordination among the different legal instruments;

(e) The meetings will be coordinated by two co-chairpersons, who will be appointed by the President of the General Assembly in consultation with Member States and taking into account the need for representation from developed and developing countries;

(f) The co-chairpersons will elaborate, in consultation with delegations, a format for the discussions that best facilitates the work of the consultative process, in accordance with the rules of procedure and practices of the General Assembly;

(g) In accordance with the rules of procedure and practices of the General Assembly, the format of this informal consultative process should ensure the opportunity to receive input from representatives of the major groups as identified in Agenda 21, in particular through the organization of discussion panels;

(h) The meetings may propose elements for the consideration of the General Assembly, including, as appropriate, in relation to Assembly resolutions under the agenda item entitled "Oceans and the law of the sea";

4. Further decides to review the effectiveness and utility of the consultative process at its fifty-seventh session;

5. Highlights the importance of the participation of developing countries, including least developed countries and small island developing States, in the consultative process, and encourages States and international organizations to support efforts in this regard;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the consultative process with the necessary facilities for the performance of its work and to arrange for support to be provided by the Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat, in cooperation with other relevant parts of the Secretariat, including the Division for Sustainable Development of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs, as appropriate;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General, working in cooperation with the heads of relevant organizations of the United Nations, to include in his annual comprehensive report to the General Assembly on oceans and the law of the sea, suggestions on initiatives that could be undertaken to improve coordination and cooperation and achieve better integration on ocean affairs, and requests the Secretary-General to make the report available at least six weeks in advance of the meeting of the consultative process;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General, working through appropriate United Nations bodies and in cooperation with the heads of relevant organizations, funds or programmes of the United Nations, to undertake measures aimed at:

(a) Ensuring more effective collaboration and coordination between relevant parts of the Secretariat and the United Nations system as a whole on ocean affairs and the law of the sea;

(b) Improving the effectiveness, transparency and responsiveness of the Subcommittee on Oceans and Coastal Areas of the Administrative Committee on Coordination; and to include information on progress in this regard in his next report on oceans and the law of the sea;

9. Notes the importance of coordination and cooperation at the national level in order to promote an integrated approach on ocean affairs so as, inter alia, to facilitate the effective participation of States in the consultative process and other international forums;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of heads of intergovernmental organizations, the specialized agencies and funds and programmes of the United Nations engaged in activities relating to ocean affairs and the law of the sea, and the Subcommittee on Oceans and Coastal Areas of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, and underlines the importance of their participation in the consultative process and of their input to the report of the Secretary-General on oceans and the law of the sea;

11. Invites Member States, as part of their participation in relevant competent bodies of intergovernmental organizations engaged in activities relating to ocean affairs and the law of the sea, to encourage their participation in the consultative process and their contribution to the report of the Secretary-General on oceans and the law of the sea.

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/54/588/Add.6], adopted resolution 54/225 without vote [agenda item 100 (f)].

Promoting an integrated management approach to the Caribbean Sea area in the context of sustainable development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the principles and commitments enshrined in the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in 1992, and the principles embodied in the Declaration of Barbados and the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, adopted by the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States in 1994, as well as other relevant declarations and international instruments,

Recalling the Declaration and review document adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-second special session,

Recalling also the relevant work done by the International Maritime Organization,

Taking into account all other relevant resolutions adopted by the General Assembly,

Reaffirming the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea and emphasizing the fundamental character of the Convention,

Recalling the Convention for the Protection and Development of the Marine Environment of the Wider Caribbean Region, signed at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, on 24 March 1983, which contains the definition of the wider Caribbean region of which the Caribbean Sea is part,

Considering that the Caribbean Sea area includes a large number of States, countries and territories, most of which are developing countries and small island developing States which are ecologically fragile and economically vulnerable and also affected, inter alia, by their limited capacity, narrow resource base, need for financial resources, social problems, high levels of poverty and the challenges and opportunities of globalization,

Considering also that the Caribbean Sea area, nearly all of which is separated from the open ocean by either continental or insular land masses, is characterized by a unique biodiversity and highly fragile ecosystems, such as the second largest coral reef system in the world, the heavy reliance of most States, countries and territories on their coastal areas and the marine environment in general to achieve their sustainable development needs and goals, the number and interlocking character of the maritime areas under national sovereignty and jurisdiction, which present a challenge to the effective management of resources, the intensive use of the Caribbean Sea area for maritime transportation and, notwithstanding the increase in the number of regulatory measures, the threat of pollution from ship-generated waste and from the release of hazardous and noxious substances in violation of relevant international rules and standards,

Emphasizing that the Caribbean countries have a high degree of vulnerability occasioned by climate change and variability, associated phenomena, such as the rise in sea level, the El Niño/Southern Oscillation phenomenon and the increase in the frequency and intensity of natural disasters caused by hurricanes, floods and droughts and that they are also subject to natural disasters, such as those caused by volcanoes, tsunamis and earthquakes,

Mindful of the strong interaction and competition among socio-economic activities in the countries of the region for the use of the coastal areas and the marine environment and their resources,

Mindful also of the efforts made by the Caribbean countries to address, in a more holistic manner, the sectoral issues relating to the management of the Caribbean Sea and in so doing to promote an integrated management approach to the Caribbean Sea in the context of sustainable development,

Noting the efforts of Caribbean countries, within the framework of the Association of Caribbean States, to develop further and seek recognition of the concept of the Caribbean Sea as an area of special importance in the context of sustainable development,

Cognizant of the importance of the Caribbean Sea area to present and future generations and its importance to the heritage, the continuing economic well-being and the sustenance of people living in the area and the urgent need for the countries of the region to take appropriate steps for its preservation and protection, with the support of the international community,

Noting the problem of marine pollution caused, inter alia, by land-based sources in the Caribbean Sea area,

1. Recognizes the importance of adopting an integrated management approach to the Caribbean Sea area in the context of sustainable development;

2. Encourages the further development of the integrated management approach to the Caribbean Sea area in the context of sustainable development, which will include environmental, economic, social, legal and institutional elements and will take into account the experience gained, as well as the provisions of Agenda 21, the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, the outcome of the twenty-second special session of the General Assembly and the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development, in conformity with relevant international law, including the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea;

3. Calls upon the Caribbean countries to develop further an integrated management approach to the Caribbean Sea area in the context of sustainable development;

4. Also calls upon the international community and the United Nations system, in particular the relevant agencies, actively to support efforts to develop further and implement the above-mentioned approach;

5. Further calls upon Member States to give priority to improving their emergency response capabilities and to increasing their participation in existing mechanisms so as to allow for a timely, effective and coordinated response to natural disasters and for the containment of environmental damage in the Caribbean Sea area in the event of an accident or incident relating to maritime transport;

6. Invites all parties concerned to take action, as appropriate, to address land-based sources of marine pollution;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session, under a sub-item entitled "Further implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States" of the item entitled "Environment and sustainable development", on the implementation of the present resolution, taking into account the views expressed by relevant regional organizations.

Global Programme of Action

A report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.20/32 & Corr.1] discussed UNEP's progress, as secretariat of the Global Programme of Action for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities [YUN 1995, p. 1081], in support of implementation of the Programme. It described the establishment of the Global Programme of Action Coordination Office in The Hague, regional implementation, inter-agency and international cooperation, the clearing-house mechanism and Programme of Action-related assessments.

On 5 February [A/54/25 (dec. 20/19 B)], the Governing Council urged the Executive Director to complete the establishment of the Hague Coordination Office and, in cooperation with Governments, UN bodies and other relevant organizations, to explore the feasibility for UNEP to convene, by 2000, a global conference to address sewage as a major land-based source of pollution affecting human and ecosystem health. It decided to undertake the first intergovernmental review of the implementation of the Global Programme of Action in 2001, and invited the Executive Director to organize, by the end of 1999, an expert group meeting to facilitate preparations for the review, with the participation of Governments, international organizations and NGOs. The Council recommended the creation of technical working groups in regional seas programmes and that national and regional meetings be held to create implementation partnerships with donor organizations, the private sector, NGOs, local government and all other stakeholders. It called on the Executive Director to improve the functioning of the Steering Committee of the Global Programme of Action.

Coral reefs

Recalling its 1997 decision [YUN 1997, p. 1064] on the International Coral Reef Initiative [YUN 1995, p. 1084], the Governing Council, on 4 February [dec. 20/21], endorsed proposed UNEP collaborative activities with organizations both within and outside the UN system for the protection and conservation of coral reef ecosystems. It asked the Executive Director to assess UNEP experience in implementing the Initiative, to circulate to the Council in 2001 the Renewed Call to Action of the International Tropical Marine Ecosystems Management Symposium (Townsville, Australia, 23-26 November 1998), and to seek funding to implement the Initiative's activities.

The Council reviewed the Executive Director's report on UNEP activities in support of the International Coral Reef Initiative and the Global Coral Reef Monitoring Network [UNEP/GC.20/36] and, on 5 February [dec. 20/19 A], endorsed UNEP's enhanced cooperation with the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Bank, UNDP and other international organizations, and decided to assess the Initiative in 2001.

Regional seas programme

The Governing Council considered the status report of the Executive Director on the establishment of a regional seas programme for the East Central Pacific [UNEP/GC.20/35] and, on 4 February [dec. 20/20], endorsed action taken to establish the proposed programme. It noted wide support by Governments for the draft action plan and corresponding legal instrument, and invited Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua and Panama to endorse the proposed Meeting of High-level Government-designated Experts to Review the Proposals for a Convention and Plan of Action for the Protection of the Marine and Coastal Environment of the East Central Pacific Region.

Conservation of wildlife

As at 31 December, the 1994 Lusaka Agreement on Cooperative Enforcement Operations Directed at Illegal Trade in Wild Fauna and Flora [YUN 1994, p.951], which entered into force in 1996 [YUN 1996, p.970], had been ratified or acceded to by six States (Congo, Kenya, Lesotho, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia). The Agreement aimed to reduce, and ultimately eliminate, illegal trafficking in African wildlife.

Protection against harmful products and wastes

Chemical safety

As at 31 December, 73 States had signed and 2 had ratified (El Salvador and Slovenia) the 1998 Convention on the Prior Informed Consent Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade (the Rotterdam Convention) [YUN 1998, p.997]. The Convention was to enter into force following the deposit of the fiftieth instrument of ratification. The sixth session of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee (INC) for an International Legally Binding Instrument for the Application of the Prior Informed Consent (PIC) Procedure (Rome, 12-16 July) [UNEP/FAO/PIC/INC.6/7] adopted decision guidance documents for already identified chemicals, established an Interim Chemical Review Committee and adopted the interim PIC regional lists of countries for the application of the PIC procedure. It discussed preparations for the first meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention.

Following consideration of the Executive Director's report on the outcome of the 1998 Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Convention [UNEP/GC.20/39 & Corr.1], the Governing Council, on 4 February [dec. 20/22], called on States and regional economic integration organizations to become party to the Convention, and recommended that the General Assembly endorse the institutional linkage between UNEP and the Convention, through which the Executive Director provided secretariat services jointly with the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO). The Executive Director was authorized, together with the FAO Director-General, to convene further INC sessions, until the opening of the first meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention, to oversee the operation of the interim PIC procedure and to prepare for and service the Conference until the end of the fiscal year in which the first meeting took place. States and regional economic integration organizations were asked to contribute to the trust fund to support the interim arrangements and operation of the Conference, and to ensure the participation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in further INC work. States and regional economic integration organizations with more advanced programmes for regulating chemicals were asked to provide technical assistance to others in developing their infrastructure and capacities to manage chemicals. The Council requested the Executive Director to report in 2001.

Having considered the Executive Director's reports on the outcome of the 1998 Conference of Plenipotentiaries, on reducing risks from a limited number of hazardous chemicals [UNEP/GC.20/37], on reducing discharges of persistent organic pollutants [UNEP/GC.20/41] (see next page) and on enhanced coherence and efficiency among international activities related to chemicals [UNEP/GC.20/INF/20], the Council, on 4 February [dec. 20/23], invited him to consider preparing for a general policy discussion on chemicals management in 2001.

Persistent organic pollutants

The second session of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee for an International Legally Binding Instrument for Implementing International Action on Certain Persistent Organic Pollutants (POPs) took place in Nairobi from 25 to 29 January [UNEP/POPS/INC.2/6]. The 12 initially identified POPs were aldrin, chlordane, DDT, dieldrin, dioxins, endrin, furans, heptachlor, hexachlorobenzene, mirex, PCBs and toxaphene. The Committee considered a draft expanded outline of a legally binding instrument for implementing international action on certain POPs. Annexed to its report was a preliminary draft text of the instrument. The Committee, at its third session (Geneva, 6-11 September) [UNEP/POPS/INC.3/4], considered individual draft articles. At its second session (Vienna, 14-18 June), the Criteria Expert Group, established in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 999], had continued to consider information requirements and criteria for the proposal and screening of proposed POPs, and had proposed three options for the definition of the term "long-range environmental transport".

On 4 February [dec. 20/24], the Governing Council, having reviewed the Executive Director's report on international action to protect human health and the environment through measures which would reduce and/or eliminate emissions and discharges of POPs, including the development of an international legally binding instrument [UNEP/GC.20/41], invited the Committee to continue its work with a view to concluding a legally binding instrument by 2000. The Executive Director was asked to report in 2001.

Hazardous wastes

The fifth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the 1989 Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal [YUN 1989, p. 420] (Basel, Switzerland, 6-10 December) [UNEP/CHW.5/29] adopted the Basel Protocol on Liability and Compensation for Damage resulting from Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal. The text of the Protocol was annexed to the report of the Conference. The Conference also adopted the Basel Declaration on Environmentally Sound Management, as well as decisions relating to regional centres for training and technology transfer; capacity-building activities; cooperation with UNEP on POPs and with the Rotterdam Convention, the World Customs Organization, the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development, UN bodies, specialized agencies, regional systems and organizations, environmental NGOs and industry and business sectors; information management; monitoring of implementation and compliance with the Basel Convention; the dispute settlement mechanism; illegal traffic in hazardous and other wastes; the classification and hazard characterization of wastes; guidelines to identify and manage plastic waste and its disposal; hazardous waste minimization; and the dismantling of ships. The Conference decided that its sixth meeting would be held in Geneva in May 2002.

Cleaner and safer production

Following a review of a January report summarizing UNEP activities to promote sustainable production and consumption [UNEP/GC.20/42], the Governing Council, on 5 February [dec. 20/19 E], encouraged Governments, industries and institutions to promote and implement preventive strategies, such as cleaner production, green productivity and pollution prevention, as preferred options to address environmental problems, and asked those that had not already done so to sign the 1998 International Declaration on Cleaner Production [YUN 1998, p. 1000]. It encouraged UNEP and the Commission on Sustainable Development to develop, in partnership with the UNEP Youth Advisory Council, a sustainable strategy for youth. The Executive Director was encouraged to promote more sustainable production and consumption patterns in industry and the wider community, and to further develop draft guidelines to evaluate environmentally sound technologies, including guidelines for exporters of potentially hazardous or outdated technologies, and submit them in 2001.

Other matters

Environmental law

The Governing Council reviewed a report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.20/5] describing progress made in implementing the Programme for the Development and Periodic Review of Environmental Law for the 1990s (Montevideo II) [YUN 1993, p. 820], and proposing a process for the preparation of a new strategic UNEP programme on environmental law for the 2000s and the following decade. The Council also considered a report on emerging policy issues, including a study on dispute avoidance and dispute settlement in international environmental law [UNEP/GC.20/INF/16].

On 3 February [dec. 20/3], the Council asked the Executive Director to prepare a new programme for the development and periodic review of environmental law and, as part of the process, to convene in 2000 a meeting of senior government experts in environmental law. It authorized him to use the current Programme until a new one was adopted and to assist Governments and organizations in developing international environmental agreements. The Executive Director was asked to assist developing countries and countries with economies in transition in strengthening national environmental legislation and institutions and to report in 2001.

Occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories

The Governing Council, having considered the Executive Director's updates on the environmental situation in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories [UNEP/GC.20/4, UNEP/GC.20/INF/9], on 4 February [dec. 20/2], asked him to continue participating in the activities of the multi-lateral working groups of the Middle East peace process, as well as those of the United Nations Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories. Expressing concern regarding the continued environmental degradation in the territories, it asked the Executive Director to report in 2001.

Human settlements

Follow-up to 1996 UN Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II)

2001 General Assembly special session

Report of Secretary-General. In September [A/54/322], the Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 53/180 [YUN 1998, p. 1021], reported on preparations for the Assembly's special (2001) session for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, adopted by the 1996 United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) [YUN 1996, p. 992]. The Commission on Human Settlements acting as the Preparatory Committee for the special session held its organizational session in Nairobi on 13 May. The Committee adopted its provisional agenda based on the provisions of resolution 53/180 and agreed that its first session would be held in Nairobi in May 2000. It also adopted its rules of procedure.

Commission action. The Commission on Human Settlements considered a February report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS) on the Assembly's special session [HS/C/17/3/Add.1].

On 12 May [A/54/8 (res. 17/14)], the Commission called on the Preparatory Committee to devise a framework for the exchange of information and knowledge of effective policies and alternative solutions to problems for the Assembly's special session, and asked it to ensure that the session elaborated on the key items of the Habitat Agenda. The Commission recommended a number of items to the Committee for consideration at its organizational session, including the provisional agenda for the first session, the scope to be covered by the review and appraisal process, issues for consideration by the Economic and Social Council in 2000 and issues to be addressed by the Commission in 2001.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/54/587/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/207 without vote [agenda item 99 (b)].

Preparations for the special session of the General Assembly for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/180 of 15 December 1998, in which, inter alia, it decided that the special session for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) would be held in June 2001 for a period of three working days, and that the Commission on Human Settlements should serve as the Preparatory Committee for the special session,

Having considered the report of the Commission on Human Settlements acting as Preparatory Committee for the special session on its organizational session,

1. Endorses the decisions of the Commission on Human Settlements acting as the Preparatory Committee for the special session, in particular regarding its rules of procedure and the dates, venue and provisional agenda for its first substantive session;

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the sub-item entitled "Implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II)".

Implementation

A February report of the Executive Director on the implementation of the Habitat Agenda [HS/C/17/3] documented significant developments at the local, national, regional and global levels, as well as gaps and weaknesses that needed to be overcome. In other reports, the Executive Director focused on international cooperation to implement the Habitat Agenda [HS/C/17/6] and local implementation of the Habitat Agenda, with particular attention to local Agenda 21s [HS/C/17/5], referring to Agenda 21 adopted by the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 672].

On 14 May [res. 17/17], the Commission recommended that Governments and development agencies mobilize resources to promote participatory mechanisms to implement the Habitat Agenda and related national plans of action, called on them to support the revitalization of the UNCHS monitoring mandate to follow up on the progress of international assistance to the human settlements sector, and also called on them to support the global campaigns on secure tenure and on urban governance (see below), key elements of the UNCHS 2000-2001 work programme [HS/C/17/8]. The Executive Director was asked to pursue an increase in resources from the international community; to support regional and sub-regional forums; to work with the UN system to support systematic coordinated approaches addressing urban poverty; and to prepare a theme paper on international cooperation for the implementation of the Habitat Agenda for presentation at the Assembly's special session.

Considering that innovative measures needed to be adopted to accelerate the work leading to the special session, the Commission, on 14 May [res. 17/18], asked the Executive Director to establish a committee of local authorities as an advisory body to strengthen dialogue with local authorities worldwide involved in the implementation of the Habitat Agenda. It decided that the committee would be composed of not more than 20 members, selected by the Executive Director from UN Member States and members of the specialized agencies or of the International Atomic Energy Agency. He was also asked to convene the constituting meeting of the committee, if possible in 1999, and to report in 2001.

Also on 14 May [res. 17/16], the Commission called on Governments to increase awareness of the Habitat Agenda and the local Agenda 21s; to revise legal and institutional frameworks in order to facilitate partnerships at the local level; and to develop training for locally elected representatives, community leaders and local-level partners in how to establish and manage local-level partnerships within the context of the Habitat Agenda and the local Agenda 21s. The Executive Director was asked to assist countries in the local-level implementation of the Habitat Agenda and Agenda 21, and to ensure that increasing awareness of the two was an integral part of the two global campaigns, for secure tenure and for urban governance, as proposed in the UNCHS 2000-2001 work programme.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/54/587/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/208 without vote [agenda item 99 (b)].

Implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II)

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 51/177 of 16 December 1996, in which it endorsed the Istanbul Declaration on Human Settlements and the Habitat Agenda, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) at Istanbul on 14 June 1996,

Recalling also its resolutions 52/190 and 52/192 of 18 December 1997 on the follow-up to the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and the future role of the Commission on Human Settlements,

Recalling further its resolution 53/242 of 28 July 1999 concerning environment and human settlements,

Having considered the report of the Commission on Human Settlements on the work of its seventeenth session,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Commission on Human Settlements on the work of its seventeenth session;

2. Welcomes the steps taken by the Acting Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) to strengthen the capacity of the Centre, in particular the normative area, and to improve the linkages between the normative and operational activities of the Centre so as to enable it to exercise effectively its vital role as focal point for the implementation of the Habitat Agenda;

3. Also welcomes the progress made by the Acting Executive Director in the revitalization of the Centre, and encourages the Executive Director to implement fully, as a matter of urgency, all administrative and financial management reforms, as part of the ongoing revitalization process;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the staffing of the new organizational structure is completed as a matter of urgency in accordance with the principle of equitable geographical representation and gender balance, including, in particular, improving the status of women in the Secretariat, and bearing in mind the need for recruitment of qualified staff in accordance with the relevant United Nations regulations and rules;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General as a matter of urgency to appoint a full-time Executive Director for the Centre in accordance with resolution 53/242;

6. Takes note of the increased cooperation and collaboration between the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) and the United Nations Environment Programme within the framework of their respective mandates and separate programmatic, budgetary and organizational identities with a view to improving the effectiveness of their work;

7. Stresses the importance of strengthening the United Nations Office at Nairobi as the only United Nations headquarters located in a developing country;

8. Calls upon all countries to ensure the provision of sufficient financial resources, on a stable and predictable basis, for the successful implementation of the work programme for the biennium 2000-2001, and reiterates the recognition by the Commission on Human Settlements at its seventeenth session that this implementation will require substantial additional funding and its request to the Executive Director to raise more funds from all sources and to broaden the donor base;

9. Calls upon the Secretary-General to provide the necessary resources from the regular budget to the Centre for the biennium 2000-2001 in accordance with current budgetary practices and procedures;

10. Welcomes the decision by the Economic and Social Council to discuss human settlements issues at its coordination segment in 2000 and to have as its sectoral theme the coordinated implementation by the United Nations system of the Habitat Agenda, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the report submitted to the Council on the question, along with the recommendations of the Council thereon, be made available to the General Assembly for its consideration under the sub-item entitled "Implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II)";

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the sub-item entitled "Implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II)".

Also on 22 December [meeting 87], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/54/587/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/209 without vote [agenda item 99 (b)].

Follow-up to the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II)

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind its resolutions 52/192 of 18 December 1997 on the follow-up to the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and the future role of the Commission on Human Settlements and 53/180 of 15 December 1998 on the special session of the General Assembly for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda,

Noting that the work programme for the biennium 2000-2001 approved by the Commission on Human Settlements at its seventeenth session, in line with resolution 52/192, is organized according to the structure of the Habitat Agenda,

Noting also that the two subprogrammes of the work programme for the biennium 2000-2001 correspond to the goals of the Habitat Agenda of adequate shelter for all and sustainable human settlements development in an urbanizing world,

Recognizing that the overall thrust of the new strategic vision for the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) and its emphasis on two global campaigns, concerning secure tenure and urban governance, are strategic points of entry for effective implementation of the Habitat Agenda,

Reaffirming the role of the Centre as focal point for the implementation of the Habitat Agenda and the need for the Centre adequately to perform this role through the active mobilization and broadening of its network of United Nations, governmental and non-governmental partners,

Stressing the need to provide strategic support to the efforts of local authorities and partners from civil society in the global, regional and local implementation of the Habitat Agenda,

1. Calls upon all relevant United Nations organizations and specialized agencies to take initiatives and continue with their specific actions towards the implementation of the Habitat Agenda;

2. Also calls upon relevant United Nations organizations and specialized agencies that have not yet done so to identify specific initiatives and actions to be undertaken in preparation for the special session of the General Assembly for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda;

3. Invites the United Nations coordinator system to strengthen its support to the implementation of the Habitat Agenda through, inter alia, assistance in the implementation of national local plans of action based on the full involvement of local authorities and partners from civil society;

4. Calls upon all Member States to initiate preparations for reporting on in-country implementation of the Habitat Agenda, in line with the recommendations by the Commission on Human Settlements as described in its resolution 17/1 of 14 May 1999, with a view to contributing fully to the preparatory process for the special session of the General Assembly to be held in the year 2001 for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, including the strengthening and activation, wherever necessary, of national coordination mechanisms, inclusive of local authorities and civil society partners, along the models pioneered at the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II);

5. Invites all Member States in a position to do so to provide financial resources for the preparatory process for the special session, in particular to enable least developed countries and their national civil-society partners to prepare adequately for, and be fully involved in, the preparatory process and the special session itself.

Commission on Human Settlements

The Commission on Human Settlements, at its seventeenth session (Nairobi, 5-14 May) [A/54/8], adopted 23 resolutions and one decision. By the first resolution [res. 17/1], the Commission proposed a draft resolution for adoption by the General Assembly on the follow-up to Habitat II (see p. 999). It adopted a resolution on assistance for human settlements reconstruction to Latin America and the Caribbean and other regions following recent natural catastrophes and asked the Executive Director to report on the subject in 2001 [res. 17/2]. By a vote of 25 to 1, with 23 abstentions, the Commission adopted a resolution on illegal human settlements in the occupied Palestinian territory [res. 17/9], in which it called on the Executive Director to organize a meeting on the establishment of a human settlements fund for the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory. The Executive Director was requested to clarify the status of the Committee of Permanent Representatives, to explore the possibilities for its future status and role, and to report thereon in 2001 [res. 17/5]. The Commission asked that urban-rural interdependence be taken into consideration in executing the Centre's work programme for the next biennium [res. 17/10]. Other resolutions dealt with the human settlements needs of countries with economies in transition [res. 17/3] and the elimination of lead in petrol [res. 17/12].

On 14 May [res. 17/20], the Commission approved the 2000-2001 draft work programme [HS/C/17/8] and approved an allocation of $22.8 million for the revised 1998-1999 budget and $23 million for 2000-2001, as presented by the Executive Director in March [HS/C/17/9 & Corr.1], and following comments by ACABQ on the 2000-2001 budget [HS/C/17/9/Add.1].

By decision 1999/286 of 30 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's report.

Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000

The Commission on Human Settlements had before it a February report [HS/C/17/3] containing a review of the implementation during 1997-1998 of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, which was adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 43/181 [YUN 1988, p. 478].

The report stated that, despite the fact that a majority of countries adopted shelter policies in concurrence with the recommendations of the Global Strategy and the Habitat Agenda, progress in carrying out programmes to improve the shelter conditions in low-income groups, particularly in developing countries, had been slow and not facilitated in a sustainable way and on a sufficient scale. The problem was compounded by forced evictions, demolition of informally built settlements and upgrading schemes that often resulted in depriving slum and squatter dwellers of affordable accommodation.

In Africa, rapid urbanization continued to place heavy demands on shelter and services; consequently, shelter conditions continued to deteriorate. Governments in the region focused on the provision of serviced land for shelter production, as well as on upgrading existing informal settlements. In addition to establishing new institutions and improving existing ones in the shelter sector, South Africa established subsidy programmes to cater for the most vulnerable groups and initiated activities in regard to the right to housing. In other African countries (Ghana, Morocco, Namibia, Senegal, Uganda, Zambia, Zimbabwe), there were activities to promote participation and empower communities in shelter provision and upgrading. Shelter-upgrading was initiated in Egypt, Morocco and Senegal.

Provision of serviced land and upgrading activities was a priority in the South-East Asia and the Pacific region, with increased involvement of community-based and non-governmental organizations. Although China continued its extensive housing construction and improvement programmes and developed new housing financing, there was still a serious need for housing, particularly in rapidly growing urban centres. The housing shortage in India by 2000 was estimated to be some 41 million units, with more than 15 million needed in urban areas. The Government was working with UN organizations and the Asian Development Bank to implement the shelter-related recommendations of the Habitat Agenda. In Japan, improvements in residential standards were accomplished. The participation of citizens' movements and of civil-society organizations in shelter-development processes increased in Nepal and the Republic of Korea. In Pakistan, the Philippines and Thailand, communities and civil-society organizations contributed to shelter and environmental development with new initiatives. Saudi Arabia continued its massive low-income housing construction programme to settle new urban residents.

Western Europe and other highly industrialized regions focused on improving residential standards, and revitalization and modernization of inner-city housing. Facilitating reforms in the housing, building and financial sectors had been the main thrust of activities in Eastern and Central Europe. In Latin America and the Caribbean, actions related to shelter development focused on rehabilitation, the link between poverty reduction and housing programmes, and measures to address the needs of the lowest-income groups. Several countries initiated new financial and regulatory mechanisms. The regional commissions initiated a variety of activities related to human settlements and shelter development and the UN system continued activities to support Member States in improving shelter and services.

Commission action. In May [res. 17/13], the Commission reconfirmed that in 2001 it would carry out the final review of the Global Strategy and decided to report the results of the review to the General Assembly at its special session on the Habitat Agenda in June 2001. It asked Governments to prepare final reports on the Strategy. The Executive Director was requested to conduct a review of the Strategy and to incorporate the results into the Commission's report on its 2001 session.

Follow-up to Agenda 21

On 14 May [res. 17/15], the Commission on Human Settlements, following consideration of a January report of the UNCHS Executive Director on follow-up to the General Assembly's special session to review Agenda 21 [HS/C/17/4], asked him to assist Governments by intensifying research and monitoring and evaluating progress in the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 [YUN 1997, p. 792] at the local level; promoting information exchange and the transfer of expertise regarding sustainable human-settlements development; and building capacity and mobilizing support to strengthen the means of implementation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition. He was asked to report in 2001.

On the same date [res. 17/19], the Commission decided to include in the agenda of its session in 2001 the item "Role of youth in the implementation of the Habitat Agenda and Agenda 21".

UN Centre for Human Settlements

Activities

UNCHS operational activities in 1999 were focused on supporting Governments in developing policies and strategies to create and strengthen a self-reliant management capacity at the national and local levels. Technical and managerial expertise was provided to assess human settlements development, constraints and opportunities; identify and analyse policy options; design and implement housing and urban development projects; and mobilize national resources, as well as external support to improve human settlements conditions. The national capacity-building process involved not only central government institutions but also other stakeholders, such as community-based and non-governmental organizations, universities and research institutions, as well as local governments and municipalities. Emphasis was also placed on strengthening the monitoring capacities of Governments in human settlements management.

In accordance with the 1998-1999 work programme, UNCHS focused on promoting housing for all, improving urban governance, reducing urban poverty, improving the living environment and managing disaster mitigation and post-conflict rehabilitation. Acting as a catalyst in the mobilization of technical cooperation, the Centre supported the implementation of the Habitat Agenda at local, national and regional levels.

As at the fourth quarter of 1999 [HS/C/18/INF/3], UNCHS had 217 technical programmes and projects under execution in 80 countries, of which 62 were in the least developed countries. Approximately 59 per cent of the financing for those projects came from funds-in-trust with UNCHS, 25 per cent from UNDP and 14 per cent from government and third-party cost-sharing.

Cooperation with UNEP

A joint progress report of the UNEP and UNCHS Executive Directors [HS/C/17/10] highlighted cooperation between the two entities in the assessment of environmental conditions in human settlements; the environmental aspects of policies, planning and management of rural and urban human settlements; environmentally sound and appropriate human settlements technology; and research, training and information dissemination on environmentally sound human settlements planning and management. The report outlined future prospects for cooperation.

Welcoming the Secretary-General's 1998 report on environment and human settlements [YUN1998,p.981], the Commission on Human Settlements, on 14 May [res. 17/6], supported his proposal to establish an environmental management group to coordinate the environmental and human settlements activities of the UN system. It also supported proposals to strengthen the Nairobi location and welcomed the proposal that the Centre should strengthen its normative core activities consistent with the new strategic vision (see below), which would allow it to develop into a centre of excellence on adequate shelter for all and sustainable urban development. The Commission recommended that the Centre maintain its operational support within the framework of the Habitat Agenda and the Centre's strategic vision, agreed with the proposal that the Commission should devote particular attention to its own role in monitoring the Agenda's implementation, and welcomed the recommendations concerning the need to engage constructively NGOs and civil society in UN work.

Also on 14 May [res. 17/23], the Commission asked the Executive Director to explore and possibly enter into an inter-agency agreement for UNEP to extend the services of its Ombudsman Unit to UNCHS until the Commission's eighteenth (2001) session. It decided to review in 2001 the Ombudsman services and the financial implications to the Centre of continuing the services.

On the same date [res. 17/22], the Commission requested the Executive Director to expand cooperation between UNCHS and UNEP, particularly in the Sustainable Cities Programme, the project on managing water for Africa cities and the Urban Environment Forum. He was also asked to strengthen cooperation between the two organizations in media outreach on public information and awareness-building activities.

Revitalization

The Commission on Human Settlements considered reports of the Executive Director on the revitalization of UNCHS. The revitalization team, which was appointed in 1998 to assist him with UNCHS reform, established two working groups—one on a strategic vision for the Centre [HS/C/

17/27Add.2] and the second on management and administrative matters [HS/C/17/2].

Working group one proposed that the aim of the Centre should be to identify global priorities and lead campaigns that would improve the quality of life and give meaning to the notion of sustainable cities. It was recommended that UNCHS confirm its status as the UN agency for cities, adopt the style and profile of the global advocacy agency in its field of operations, and make clear that its efforts would be measured by the positive impact on the poor, their integration into city-wide policies and strategies, and its focus on reducing urban poverty. A further suggestion was that equity and social justice would be used as basic principles underpinning the work of UNCHS and that women would be the primary indicator of the success of its interventions and an explicit focus for its policy work. The working group recommended that two issues should form the basis for two global campaigns: a global campaign for secure tenure and a global campaign on urban governance.

The main recommendations of working group two were the establishment of a planning and co-ordination office; the rationalization of funding and resource mobilization; identification of potential joint synergies with UNEP and UNON; and regularization of particular contracts. In response to the recommendations, a new Planning and Coordination Office was established. An inter-agency working group was set up to address recommendations dealing with services shared jointly by UNEP and UNON, and to develop proposals for consideration by the revitalization team.

Commission action. On 14 May [res. 17/7], the Commission mandated the Executive Director to implement the new strategic vision, through the subprogrammes on adequate shelter for all and on sustainable urban development and through the global campaigns on secure tenure and on urban governance. It called on him to seek States' views on catch-phrases that could assist in the mobilization of support for the Habitat Agenda and to report in 2001. The Bureau of the Commission was asked to monitor the revitalization process and its results in implementing the prioritized UNCHS work programme and to report in 2001. On the same date [dec. 17/24], the Commission decided that it would consider the themes of security of tenure and urban governance at its eighteenth (2001) session. It also decided that the draft outlines for the proposed themes [HS/C/17/13] would be presented to it in 2001.

Taking note of the UNCHS revitalization and reform and following consideration of a report of the Executive Director [HS/C/17/2], the Commission, on 14 May [res. 17/4], asked him to develop a strategy for representation of the Centre in the regions, its decentralized functions and its offices other than in Nairobi. Noting the offer made by Turkey to host a UNCHS office in Istanbul, it asked the Executive Director to consult with the Government and to report in 2001.

In related action [res. 17/11], the Commission asked the Executive Director to develop by 2000 a gender action plan to implement General Assembly resolution 53/119 on improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat [YUN 1998, p. 1316], and urged him to use the revitalization process to implement it. He was also asked to report in 2001.

State of the world's cities

In 1999, the Commission on Human Settlements had before it a March report of the Executive Director entitled The State of the World's Cities [HS/C/17/2/Add.1], which represented a new approach to the way the UN system gathered, managed, analysed and disseminated information about the world's cities. The report summarized information on global trends, their urban impacts and policy responses.

On 14 May [res. 17/8], the Commission called on UNCHS to continue, in cooperation with capacity-building partners, the implementation of an Internet-based urban information and knowledge system to strengthen the ability of Governments, local authorities and key partners to gain access to and make use of information in order to monitor and assess urban conditions and trends. The Executive Director was asked to synthesize information and knowledge from the system in a summary report entitled The State of the World's Cities prior to the Commission's biennial sessions and to produce a report on the state of the world's cities for the Assembly to review in 2001. He was also asked to facilitate a process to establish universal urban information standards and protocols and to produce an urban classification system. The Commission invited the Executive Director to consider consolidating the report The State of the World's Cities: 2001 with the third edition of the Global Report on Human Settlements.

Chapter VIII

Population

In 1999, the General Assembly held its twenty-first special session to consider progress in implementing the Programme of Action adopted by the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development. The year of that five-year review, known as ICPD+5, also saw the day of 6 billion—12 October—when it was estimated that the 6 billionth baby was born. A third population milestone in 1999 was the thirtieth anniversary of the founding of the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), the largest internationally funded source of population assistance and the lead United Nations organization for advancing the ICPD Programme of Action.

On 2 July, the special session adopted key actions for the further implementation of the Programme of Action, which called for intensified efforts in the areas of reproductive and sexual health; maternal mortality; the reproductive health needs of adolescents; reducing abortion and addressing the health consequences of unsafe abortion; prevention of HIV/AIDS; gender issues; and education. It recommended new benchmarks in a number of areas. The Commission on Population and Development acted as the preparatory committee for the special session.

In addition to organizing round tables and technical symposiums as inputs into ICPD+5, UNFPA carried out a field inquiry of 114 developing and 18 developed countries to assess progress made since 1994. The year also saw a major effort by UNFPA to develop a multi-year funding framework. The Fund's expenditures on country and intercountry programmes in 1999 totalled $187.1 million.

At its thirty-second session, the Commission on Population and Development considered the central theme of population growth, structure and distribution, with special emphasis on sustained economic growth and sustainable development, including education. On the Commission's recommendation, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution on that subject in July. In December, the General Assembly adopted a resolution on international migration and development, in which it urged Member States and the United Nations system to strengthen international cooperation in order to address the root causes of migration, especially those related to poverty.

During the year, the United Nations Population Division continued to analyse demographic trends and population policies and to prepare and publish population estimates and projections.

Follow-up to the 1994 Conference on Population and Development

Twenty-first special session (ICPD+ 5)

The General Assembly held its twenty-first special session from 30 June to 2 July to review and appraise the implementation of the Programme of Action adopted by the International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD), which was held in Cairo, Egypt, in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 955]. The 16-chapter Programme of Action identified a range of demographic and social goals, to be achieved over a 20-year period, for population growth and sustainable development, poverty eradication, gender equality and the family, among other issues. The special session, which was held in accordance with Assembly resolution 52/188 [YUN 1997, p. 1075], culminated in the adoption of key actions for the further implementation of the Programme of Action. The key actions made a number of noteworthy advances, calling attention to population and development concerns and noting the linkages between population, economic growth and environment. The Assembly recognized the implications of changing age structure and the ageing of the population, and underscored the urgent need for policies and programmes to deal with the causes of international migration, internal migration and urbanization, and the resultant dislocations. Governments were called on to ensure that the human rights of women and girls, particularly the freedom from coercion, discrimination and violence, including harmful practices and sexual exploitation, were respected, protected and promoted through the development, implementation and effective enforcement of gender-sensitive policies and legislation. The special session called for intensified action in the following areas: reproductive and sexual health; maternal mortality; the reproductive health needs of adolescents; reducing abortion and addressing the health consequences of unsafe abortion; prevention of HIV/AIDS; gender issues; and education. It recommended new benchmarks for education, primary health care and family planning facilities, maternal mortality, contraception and HIV/AIDS prevention (see full text below).

Preparations for the session were discussed by the Commission on Population and Development in March/April and June (see below).

The twenty-first special session—known as ICPD+5—was addressed by 152 Member States, 10 observers and three non-governmental organizations (NGOs). Addressing the session, the Secretary-General emphasized the connection between population and development and praised ICPD for promoting a fuller understanding of those interactions. He underscored the linkage between sexual and reproductive health and human rights and urged that efforts be made to implement the Programme of Action fully, particularly the financial resource levels agreed to in Cairo.

In a decision on organizational arrangements for the session, the Assembly established an Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole to discuss the overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action (decision S-21/21). In other action, the Assembly appointed the members of the Credentials Committee (decision S-21/11); approved the report of the Credentials Committee (resolution S-21/1); elected the President of the Assembly (decision S-21/12); elected the Vice-Presidents of the Assembly (decision S-21/13); elected the Chairmen of the Main Committees (decision S-21/14); and elected the officers of the Ad Hoc Committee (decision S-21/15) (see APPENDIX III for details). The Assembly also adopted the agenda for the special session (decision S-21/22) and decided that three NGOs might make statements in the debate in plenary (decision S-21/23).

Preparatory meetings. The Commission on Population and Development acting as the preparatory committee for the twenty-first special session of the General Assembly met in New York from 24 March to 1 April [A/S-21/2]. As authorized by the Assembly in decision 53/482 of 8 June, the Commission held a resumed session from 24 to 29 June to finalize its work [A/S-21/2/Add.1]. The Commission took action on the accreditation of NGOs and transmitted the text on proposals for key actions for the further implementation of the Programme of Action to the special session [A/S-21/2/Add.2].

The International Forum for the Operational Review and Appraisal of the Implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development (known as the Hague Forum) (The Hague, Netherlands, 8-12 February) [E/CN.9/1999/PC/3] drew on the outcomes of the technical and regional meetings held in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1002] in preparation for ICPD+5 to formulate operational recommendations for the next phases of implementing the Programme of Action. The Forum was preceded by three meetings of partner groups, namely, the International Forum of Parliamentarians on the International Conference on Population and Development Review (The Hague, 4-6 February) [E/CN.9/1999/PC/5], the NGO Forum (6-7 February) and the Youth Forum (6-7 February).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 July [meeting 9], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole [A/S-21/5/Rev.1], adopted resolution S-21/2 without vote [agenda items 8 & 9].

Key actions for the further implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development

The General Assembly

Adopts the key actions for the further implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development annexed to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Key actions for the further implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development

I. Preamble

1. The Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, approved by consensus on 13 September 1994, as contained in the report of the Conference and as endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 49/128 of 19 December 1994, marked the beginning of a new era in population and development. The objective of the landmark agreement reached at the Conference was to raise the quality of life and the well-being of human beings and to promote human development by recognizing the interrelationships between population and development policies and programmes aiming to achieve poverty eradication, sustained economic growth in the context of sustainable development, education, especially for girls, gender equity and equality, infant, child and maternal mortality reduction, the provision of universal access to reproductive health services, including family planning and sexual health, sustainable patterns of consumption and production, food security, human resources development and the guarantee of all human rights, including the right to development as a universal and inalienable right and an integral part of fundamental human rights.

2. The Programme of Action acknowledges that the goal of the empowerment and autonomy of women and the improvement of their political, social, economic and health status is a highly important end in itself and is essential for the achievement of sustainable development. Greater investments in health and education services for all people, in particular women, to enable the full and equal participation of women in civil, cultural, economic, political and social life are essential to achieving the objectives of the Programme of Action.

3. The Programme of Action emphasizes that everyone has the right to education, which shall be directed to the full development of human resources, and human dignity and potential, with particular attention to women and the girl child, and therefore everyone should be provided with the education necessary to meet basic human needs and to exercise human rights. It calls for the elimination of all practices that discriminate against women, and affirms that advancing gender equality and equity and the empowerment of women, the elimination of all kinds of violence against women and ensuring women's ability to control their own fertility are cornerstones of population and development-related programmes. It affirms that the human rights of women and the girl child are an inalienable, integral and indivisible part of universal human rights. It further affirms that reproductive rights embrace certain human rights that are already recognized in national laws, international human rights documents, and other consensus documents. These rights rest on the recognition of the basic right of all couples and individuals to decide freely and responsibly the number, spacing and timing of their children and to have the information and means to do so, and the right to attain the highest standard of sexual and reproductive health. It also includes their right to make decisions concerning reproduction free of discrimination, coercion and violence, as expressed in human rights documents. In the exercise of this right, they should take into account the needs of their living and future children and their responsibilities towards the community. The promotion of the responsible exercise of those rights for all people should be the fundamental basis for government- and community-supported policies and programmes in the area of reproductive health, including family planning.

4. The International Conference on Population and Development and its implementation must be seen as being closely related to the outcome of and coordinated follow-up to the other major United Nations conferences held in the 1990s. Progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action should be supportive of and consistent with the integrated follow-up to all major United Nations conferences and summits.

5. The implementation of the recommendations contained in the Programme of Action and those contained in the present document is the sovereign right of each country, consistent with national laws and development priorities, with full respect for the various religious and ethical values and cultural backgrounds of its people, and in conformity with universally recognized international human rights.

6. The Programme of Action recommended a set of interdependent quantitative goals and objectives. These included universal access to primary education, with special attention to closing the gender gap in primary and secondary school education, wherever it exists; universal access to primary health care; universal access to a full range of comprehensive reproductive health-care services, including family planning, as set out in paragraph 7.6 of the Programme of Action; reductions in infant, child and maternal morbidity and mortality; and increased life expectancy. The Programme of Action also proposed a set of qualitative goals that are mutually supportive and of critical importance to achieving the quantitative goals and objectives.

7. The Programme of Action articulates a comprehensive approach to issues of population and development, identifying a range of demographic and social goals to be achieved over a 20-year period. While the Programme of Action does not quantify goals for population growth, structure and distribution, it reflects the view that an early stabilization of world population would make a crucial contribution to realizing the overarching objective of sustainable development.

8. According to the United Nations estimates and projections, the world's population will exceed 6 billion for the first time in 1999, of which nearly 80 per cent will be living in developing countries. Depending on the quality and the magnitude of the actions taken over the next five to ten years in the areas of population policy and reproductive health, including the provision of family planning services, world population will total somewhere between 6.9 billion and 7.4 billion in 2015. The majority of the world's countries are converging in a pattern of low birth and death rates, but since these countries are proceeding at different speeds, the emerging picture is that of a world facing increasingly diverse demographic situations. The world's reproductive age population continues to grow at a slightly higher rate than the world's population as a whole, reflecting the large number of young people entering their childbearing years. The Programme of Action rightly emphasizes the need to integrate population concerns fully into development strategies and planning, taking into account the interrelationship of population issues with the goals of poverty eradication, food security, adequate shelter, employment and basic social services for all, with the objective of improving the quality of life of present and future generations through appropriate population and development policies and programmes.

9. The five-year review of progress shows that the implementation of the recommendations of the Programme of Action has shown positive results. Many countries have taken steps to integrate population concerns into their development strategies. Mortality in most countries has continued to fall in the five years since the adoption of the Programme of Action. The Conference's broad-based definition of reproductive health is being accepted by an increasing number of countries and steps are being taken to provide comprehensive services in many countries, with increasing emphasis being given to quality of care. The rising use of family planning methods indicates that there is greater accessibility to family planning and that more and more couples and individuals are able to choose the number and spacing of their children. Many countries, both countries of origin and countries of destination, have taken important steps, including, inter alia, at the regional level, aimed at better managing international migration flows through bilateral and multinational agreements. In addition, many civil society organizations are contributing to the formulation and implementation of policies, programmes and projects on their own or in partnerships with governmental and intergovernmental organizations as well as the private sector.

10. However, for some countries and regions, progress has been limited and, in some cases, setbacks have occurred. Women and the girl child continue to face discrimination. The human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS) pandemic has led to rises in mortality in many countries, in particular in sub-Saharan Africa. Mortality and morbidity among adults and children from infectious, parasitic and water-borne diseases, such as tuberculosis, malaria and Schistosomiasis, continue to take their toll. Maternal mortality and morbidity remain unacceptably high. Adolescents remain particularly vulnerable to reproductive and sexual risks. Millions of couples and individuals still lack access to reproductive health information and services. An increase in adult mortality, especially among men, is a matter of special concern for countries with economies in transition and some developing countries. The impact of the financial crises in countries of Asia and elsewhere, as well as the long-term and large-scale environmental problems in Central Asia and other regions, is affecting the health and well-being of individuals and limiting progress in implementing the Programme of Action. Despite the goal of the Programme of Action of reducing pressures leading to refugee movements and displaced persons, the plight of refugees and displaced persons remains unacceptable.

11. Achieving the goals and objectives of the Programme of Action will require sufficient domestic and external resources, committed government action and effective, transparent partnerships. In order to implement further the Programme of Action, a number of financial, institutional and human-resource constraints must be overcome. Implementing the key actions of the present document and addressing the full range of recommendations of the Programme of Action will require greater political commitment, development of national capacity, increased international assistance and increased domestic resources. Effective priority-setting, within each national context, is an equally critical factor for the successful implementation of the Programme of Action.

12. In implementing and taking forward the Programme of Action, an integrated approach should be adopted towards policy design, development planning, service delivery, research and monitoring to utilize scarce resources for greater added value and to promote intersectoral coordination.

13. The present document draws on the results and findings of intergovernmental reviews under the auspices of the United Nations, including the annual and quinquennial review and appraisal by the Commission on Population and Development and meetings and reports of the United Nations regional commissions regarding progress made and constraints faced in the implementation of the Programme of Action.

14. In recommending the key actions contained in the present document, Governments affirm their renewed and sustained commitment to the principles, goals and objectives of the Programme of Action. Governments and civil society at the national level, in partnership with the international community, should join in efforts to ensure that the goals and objectives of the International Conference on Population and Development are accomplished as soon as possible, with special attention to those that should be met within the twenty-year time frame of the Programme of Action.

II. Population and development concerns

A. Population, economic development and the environment

15. Governments should:

(a) Intensify efforts to equip planners and decision makers with a better understanding of the relationships among population, poverty, gender inequity and inequality, health, education, the environment, financial and human resources, and development; and re-examine recent research concerning the relationships among reductions in fertility and economic growth and its equitable distribution;

(b) Draw attention to and promote linkages among macroeconomic, environmental and social policies through increased dialogue among finance ministries and other relevant ministries;

(c) Intensify efforts to implement legislative and administrative measures as well as to promote public education, with special attention to youth, about the need for sustainable production and consumption patterns; foster sustainable natural resource use; and work concertedly to prevent environmental degradation within their countries;

(d) Increase investments in the social sector, especially health and education, as an effective strategy for development;

(e) Develop and expand integrated community-based approaches to sustainable development.

16. Governments, in cooperation with the international community, should reaffirm their commitment to promoting an enabling environment to achieve sustained economic growth in the context of sustainable development and to eradicating poverty, with a special emphasis on gender, including by promoting an open, equitable, secure, non-discriminatory and predictable trading system; stimulating direct investment; reducing the debt burden; and ensuring that structural adjustment programmes are responsive to social, economic and environmental concerns. Population-related goals and policies outlined in the Programme of Action need to be reflected, as appropriate, in international agreements in such areas as environment and trade.

17. Governments of developing countries and countries with economies in transition, with the assistance of the international community, especially donors, including through bilateral and multilateral financial support, should ensure that social safety nets are implemented, especially in those countries most affected by the recent global financial crisis, and ensure that they are adequately funded.

18. Governments of developing countries and countries with economies in transition, with the assistance of the international community, especially donors, should:

(a) Continue to support declines in infant and child mortality rates by strengthening infant and child health programmes that emphasize improved prenatal care and nutrition, including breastfeeding, unless it is medically contraindicated, universal immunization, oral rehydration therapies, clean water sources, infectious disease prevention, reduction of exposure to toxic substances, and improvements in household sanitation; and by strengthening maternal health services, quality family-planning services to help couples to time and space births, and efforts to prevent transmission of HIV/AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases;

(b) Strengthen health-care systems to respond to priority demands on them, taking into account the financial realities of countries and the need to ensure that resources are focused on the health needs of people in poverty;

(c) Determine the causes of the stagnation or increase in mortality levels among adult populations and develop special policies and programmes on health promotion where such stagnation or increase is observed, especially among women in reproductive age groups and males in productive age groups;

(d) Ensure that poverty eradication programmes are targeted particularly at females and that priority is given to female-headed households;

(e) Develop innovative ways to provide more effective assistance to strengthen families in extreme poverty, such as providing micro-credit for poor families and individuals;

(f) Undertake policies and programmes that seek to ensure a level of consumption that meets the basic needs of the poor and disadvantaged.

19. Measures should be taken to strengthen food, nutrition and agricultural policies and programmes, and fair trade relations, with special attention to the creation and strengthening of food security at all levels.

20. Governments should promote and protect the rights of indigenous people with particular regard to their cultures, resources, belief systems, land rights and languages.

B. Changing age structure and ageing of the population

21. Governments should:

(a) Continue to examine the economic and social implications of demographic change and how they relate to development planning concerns and the needs of individuals;

(b) Meet the needs of youth, especially young women, with the active support, guidance and participation, as appropriate, of parents, families, communities, non-governmental organizations and the private sector, by investing in the development and implementation of national, regional and local plans. In this context, priority should be given to programmes such as education, income-generating opportunities, vocational training, and health services, including those related to sexual and reproductive health. Youth should be fully involved in the design, implementation and evaluation of such programmes and plans. These policies, plans and programmes should be implemented in line with the commitments made at the International Conference on Population and Development and in conformity with the relevant international conventions and agreements. Emphasis should be placed on fostering intergenerational dialogue through better communication and mutual support;

(c) Support research and develop comprehensive strategies at the national, regional and local levels to meet, where appropriate, the challenges of population ageing. Invest more resources in gender-sensitive research as well as in training and capacity-building in social policies and health care of older persons, especially the elderly poor, paying special attention to the economic and social security of older persons, in particular older women; affordable, accessible and appropriate health-care services; the human rights and dignity of older persons and the productive and useful roles that they can play in society; support systems to enhance the ability of families and communities to care for older family members; the ability of the elderly to care for family members and community victims of HIV/AIDS; and generational solidarity with the goal of maintaining and improving social cohesion.

22. Governments and civil society, including non-governmental organizations and the private sector, should create opportunities and remove barriers that hinder elderly women and men from continuing to contribute their skills to their families, to the workforce and to their communities, in order to help to foster intergenerational solidarity and enhance the well-being of society. This will require life-long education and opportunities for retraining.

23. The United Nations system should, provided that additional resources are made available, document the positive experience of policies and programmes in the area of ageing of men and women and disseminate information and recommendations about those practices. Countries should be enabled, through adequate training and capacity-building, to evolve their own policies appropriate to their cultures, traditions and socio-economic circumstances.

C. International migration

24. Governments in both countries of origin and countries of destination, including through international cooperation, are urged:

(a) To intensify efforts to protect the human rights and dignity of migrants irrespective of their legal status; provide effective protection for migrants; provide basic health and social services, including sexual and reproductive health and family-planning services; facilitate family reunification of documented migrants; monitor violations of the human rights of migrants; effectively enforce the laws applicable to the protection of human rights; and ensure the social and economic integration of documented migrants, especially of those who have acquired the right to long-term residence in the country of destination, and their equal treatment before the law. Non-governmental organizations should play a valuable role in meeting the needs of migrants;

(b) To prevent trafficking in migrants, in particular women and children subjected to forced labour or sexual or commercial exploitation; to develop clear penalties for such trafficking and migrant smuggling, backed by effective administrative procedures and laws, ensuring punishment of those who commit such crimes; and to finalize as soon as possible the trafficking and smuggling protocols which are currently being negotiated by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice;

(c) To support and ensure effective follow-up to bilateral and multilateral initiatives, including regional and subregional consultation processes, where appropriate, to develop national policies and cooperative strategies to maximize the benefits and manage the challenges posed by international migration;

(d) To conduct public information campaigns on migration in both countries of origin and countries of destination so that racist and xenophobic attitudes in countries of destination are combated and so that potential migrants fully understand the implications of the decisions to move;

(e) To consider ratifying or acceding to the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, if they have not already done so.

25. The international community should extend assistance and support to programmes in developing countries that host the majority of refugees and displaced persons. Assistance should also be extended to programmes in countries lacking the capacity to manage large flows of migrants and displaced persons.

26. All States are encouraged to become parties to the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees and put in place effective asylum procedures.

27. Governments, with the assistance of the international community, should intensify their efforts to improve data collection and analysis, including gender-based analysis, in the areas of international migration and, in this context, promote the implementation of the United Nations recommendations on statistics of international migration; encourage studies designed to assess the causes of international migration and displacement and the positive contribution that migration makes to both countries of origin and countries of destination; and improve understanding of the links between relevant factors that have an impact on international migration.

28. The international community should channel adequate support to effective programmes to address the causes of movement of refugees and displaced persons.

29. In planning and implementing refugee assistance activities, special attention should be given to the specific needs of refugee women and children and elderly refugees. Adequate and sufficient international support should be extended to meet the basic needs of refugee populations, including the provision of access to adequate accommodation, education, protection from violence, health services, including reproductive health and family planning, and other basic social services, including clean water, sanitation, and nutrition. Refugees should respect the laws and regulations of their countries of asylum. Governments are urged to abide by international law concerning refugees, inter alia, by respecting the principle of non-refoulement. In acknowledging refugees' rights to repatriation, their return and integration should be facilitated in cooperation with relevant international organizations.

D. Internal migration, population distribution and urban agglomerations

30. Governments should carry out research to strengthen the understanding of the factors, trends and characteristics of internal migration and geographical distribution of the population in order to provide grounds for the formulation of effective population distribution policy.

31. Governments should improve the management and delivery of services for the growing urban agglomerations and put in place enabling legislative and administrative instruments and adequate financial resources to meet the needs of all citizens, especially the urban poor, internal migrants, older persons and the disabled.

32. Governments should strongly reaffirm the call in the Programme of Action that population distribution policies should be consistent with such international instruments as the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, including article 49 thereof.

33. Governments should strongly reaffirm the call in the Programme of Action that countries should address the causes of internal displacement, including environmental degradation, natural disasters, armed conflict and forced resettlement, and establish the necessary mechanisms to protect and assist displaced persons, including, where possible, compensation for damages, especially for those who are not able to return to their normal place of residence in the short term and, where appropriate, facilitate their return and reintegration, with special attention to the needs of women and children.

E. Population, development and education

34. Governments and civil society, with the assistance of the international community, should, as quickly as possible, and in any case before 2015, meet the goal of the International Conference on Population and Development of achieving universal access to primary education, eliminate the gender gap in primary and secondary education by 2005 and strive to ensure that by 2010 the net primary school enrolment ratio for children of both sexes will be at least 90 per cent, compared with an estimated 85 per cent in 2000. Special efforts should be made to increase the retention rates of girls in primary and secondary school. Parents should be sensitized to the value of education of children, particularly of girls, so that the girls do achieve their full potential.

35. Governments, in particular of developing countries, with the assistance of the international community, should:

(a) Expand youth and adult education and lifelong culture- and gender-sensitive learning policies and programmes, with particular attention to migrants, indigenous people and people with disabilities;

(b) Include at all levels, as appropriate, of formal and non-formal schooling, education about population and health issues, including sexual and reproductive health issues, in order to implement further the Programme of Action in terms of promoting the well-being of adolescents, enhancing gender equality and equity as well as responsible sexual behaviour, and protecting them from early and unwanted pregnancy, sexually transmitted diseases, including HIV/AIDS, and sexual abuse, incest and violence; and ensure the active involvement and participation of parents, youth, community leaders and organizations for the sustainability, increased coverage and effectiveness of such programmes;

(c) Reduce the rate of illiteracy of women and men, at least halving it for women and girls by 2005, compared with the rate in 1990;

(d) Promote the achievement of functional literacy for adults as well as children, where schooling remains unavailable;

(e) Continue to give high priority to investments in education and training in development budgets;

(f) Provide adequately equipped facilities by rehabilitating existing schools and building new ones.

36. The Programme of Action recognized that greater public knowledge, understanding and commitment at all levels, from the individual to the international, are vital to the achievement of its goals and objectives. To this end, ensuring access to and use of modern communication technology, including satellite transmission and other communication mechanisms, should be studied and appropriate action taken as a means to address the barriers to education in developing countries, in particular, the least developed countries, with assistance from the international community.

F. Data systems, including indicators

37. Governments, in collaboration with research institutions and non-governmental organizations, as well as with the assistance of the international community, including donors, should strengthen national information systems to produce reliable statistics on a broad range of population, environment and development indicators in a timely manner. The indicators should include, inter alia, poverty rates at the community level; women's access to social and economic resources; enrolment and retention of girls and boys in schools; access to sexual and reproductive health services disaggregated by population sub-groups, including indigenous people; and gender sensitivity in sexual and reproductive health services, including family planning. In addition, in consultation with indigenous people, Governments should establish and strengthen national statistics and data collection concerning the health of indigenous people, including sexual and reproductive health and their determinants. All data systems should ensure availability of age- and sex-disaggregated data, which are crucial for translating policy into strategies that address age and gender concerns and for developing appropriate age- and gender-impact indicators for monitoring progress. Governments should also collect and disseminate the quantitative and qualitative data needed to assess the status of male and female reproductive health, including in urban areas, and to design, implement, monitor and evaluate action programmes. Special attention should be given to maternal mortality and morbidity, as this database remains inadequate. Health and reproductive health data should be disaggregated by income and poverty status to identify the specific health profile and needs of people living in poverty and as a basis for focusing resources and subsidies on those who need them most.

38. The United Nations system and donors should be specifically urged to strengthen the capacity of developing countries, particularly the least developed countries, and those with economies in transition, to undertake censuses and surveys on a regular basis so as to improve vital registration systems, and to develop innovative and cost-effective solutions for meeting data requirements, especially for regular monitoring of the implementation of the goals of the International Conference on Population and Development, including improved estimates of maternal mortality.

III. Gender equality, equity and empowerment of women

A. Promotion and protection of women's human rights

39. Governments should ensure that the human rights of women and girls are respected, protected and promoted through the development, implementation and effective enforcement of gender-sensitive policies and legislation. All Governments are encouraged to sign, ratify and implement the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and are also encouraged to promote consideration by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly of the Optional Protocol thereto, and interested States parties are encouraged to work towards removing all existing reservations that are incompatible with the objective and purpose of the Convention. In the implementation of the goals of the Programme of Action and those of other United Nations conferences, measures aimed at promoting and achieving gender equality and equity in a systematic and comprehensive manner should be coordinated and harmonized.

40. The implementation of population and development policies by Governments should continue to incorporate reproductive rights in accordance with paragraphs 1.15, 7.3 and 8.25 of the Programme of Action. Governments should take strong measures to promote the human rights of women. Governments are encouraged to strengthen, as appropriate, the reproductive and sexual health as well as the reproductive rights focus on population and development policies and programmes. The work of relevant United Nations bodies on indicators for the promotion and protection of the human rights of women should incorporate issues related to sexual and reproductive health. Governments should ensure the protection and promotion of the rights of adolescents, including married adolescent girls, to reproductive health education, information and care. Countries should establish mechanisms for consultation with all relevant groups, including women's organizations. In this context, Governments are urged to incorporate human rights into both formal and informal education processes.

41. Governments, civil society and the United Nations system should advocate for the human rights of women and the girl child. Governments, in reporting to the human rights treaty bodies, are encouraged to consult, as appropriate, with civil society on and promote civil society awareness of the reporting process, to ensure the broadest representation in the area of human rights, including reproductive rights.

42. Governments should promote and protect the human rights of the girl child and young women, which include economic and social rights as well as freedom from coercion, discrimination and violence, including harmful practices and sexual exploitation. Governments should review all legislation and amend and revoke that which discriminates against the girl child and young women.

B. The empowerment of women

43. Governments should establish mechanisms to accelerate women's equal participation and equitable representation at all levels of the political process and public life in each community and society and enable women to articulate their concerns and needs and ensure the full and equal participation of women in decision-making processes in all spheres of life. Governments and civil society should take actions to eliminate attitudes and practices that discriminate against and subordinate girls and women and that reinforce gender inequality.

44. Governments should take measures to promote the fulfilment of girls' and women's potential through education, skills development and the eradication of illiteracy for all girls and women without discrimination of any kind, giving paramount importance to the elimination of poverty and ill health. Governments, in collaboration with civil society, should take the necessary measures to ensure universal access, on the basis of equality between women and men, to appropriate, affordable and quality health care for women throughout their life cycle.

45. Governments should take every possible action to remove all gender gaps and inequalities pertaining to women's livelihoods and participation in the labour market through the creation of employment with secure incomes, which has been shown to advance women's empowerment and enhance their reproductive health. Legislation ensuring equal pay for equal work or for work of equal value should be instituted and enforced.

C. Gender perspective in programmes and policies

46. A gender perspective should be adopted in all processes of policy formulation and implementation and in the delivery of services, especially in sexual and reproductive health, including family planning. In this regard, the institutional capacity and expertise of staff in Government, civil society, including non-governmental organizations, and the United Nations system should be strengthened in order to promote gender mainstreaming. This should be done by sharing tools, methodologies and lessons learned in order to develop and strengthen their capacity and institutionalize effective strategies for gender-based analysis and gender mainstreaming. This includes the development and availability of gender-disaggregated data and appropriate indicators for monitoring progress at the national level.

47. The differential impact on women and men of globalization of the economy and the privatization of basic social services, particularly reproductive health services, should be monitored closely. Special programmes and institutional mechanisms should be put in place to promote and protect the health and well-being of young girls, older women and other vulnerable groups. The provision of services to meet men's reproductive and sexual health needs should not prejudice reproductive and sexual health services for women.

48. Governments should give priority to developing programmes and policies that foster norms and attitudes of zero tolerance for harmful and discriminatory attitudes, including son preference, which can result in harmful and unethical practices such as prenatal sex selection, discrimination and violence against the girl child and all forms of violence against women, including female genital mutilation, rape, incest, trafficking, sexual violence and exploitation. This entails developing an integrated approach that addresses the need for widespread social, cultural and economic change, in addition to legal reforms. The girl child's access to health, nutrition, education and life opportunities should be protected and promoted. The role of family members, especially parents and other legal guardians, in strengthening the self-image, self-esteem and status and in protecting the health and well-being of girls should be enhanced and supported.

D. Advocacy for gender equality and equity

49. Governments, parliamentarians, community and religious leaders, family members, media representatives, educators and other relevant groups should actively promote gender equality and equity. These groups should develop and strengthen their strategies to change negative and discriminatory attitudes and practices towards women and the girl child. All leaders at the highest levels of policy- and decision-making should speak out in support of gender equality and equity, including empowerment of women and protection of the girl child and young women.

50. All leaders at all levels, as well as parents and educators, should promote positive male role models that make it easier for boys to become gender-sensitive adults and enable men to support, promote and respect women's sexual and reproductive health and reproductive rights, recognizing the inherent dignity of all human beings. Men should take responsibility for their own reproductive and sexual behaviour and health. Research should be undertaken on men's sexuality, their masculinity and their reproductive behaviour.

51. Governments, donors and the United Nations system should encourage and support expansion and strengthening of women's grass-roots, community-based and advocacy groups.

IV. Reproductive rights and reproductive health

The present section is especially guided by the principles of the Programme of Action.

A. Reproductive health, including family planning and sexual health

52. Governments, in collaboration with civil society, including non-governmental organizations, donors and the United Nations system, should:

(a) Give high priority to reproductive and sexual health in the broader context of health-sector reform, including strengthening basic health systems, from which people living in poverty in particular can benefit;

(b) Ensure that policies, strategic plans and all aspects of the implementation of reproductive and sexual health services respect all human rights, including the right to development, and that such services meet health needs over the life cycle, including the needs of adolescents, address inequities and inequalities due to poverty, gender and other factors and ensure equity of access to information and services;

(c) Engage all relevant sectors, including non-governmental organizations, especially women's and youth organizations and professional associations, through ongoing participatory processes in the design, implementation, quality assurance, monitoring and evaluation of policies and programmes, in ensuring that sexual and reproductive health information and services meet people's needs and respect their human rights, including their right to access to good-quality services;

(d) Develop comprehensive and accessible health services and programmes, including sexual and reproductive health, for indigenous communities, with their full participation, that respond to the needs and reflect the rights of indigenous people;

(e) Increase investments designed to improve the quality and availability of sexual and reproductive health services, including establishing and monitoring clear standards of care; ensuring the competence, particularly the technical and communication skills, of service providers; ensuring free, voluntary and informed choices, respect, privacy, confidentiality and client comfort; establishing fully functioning logistical systems, including efficient procurement of necessary commodities; and ensuring effective referral mechanisms across services and levels of care, taking care that services are offered in conformity with human rights and with ethical and professional standards;

(f) Ensure that sexual and reproductive health programmes, free of any coercion, provide pre-service and in-service training and supervision for all levels of health-care providers to ensure that they maintain high technical standards, including for hygiene; respect the human rights of the people they serve; are knowledgeable and trained to serve clients who have been subjected to harmful practices, such as female genital mutilation and sexual violence; and are able to provide accurate information about the prevention and symptoms of reproductive tract diseases, as well as about personal hygiene and other factors in reproductive tract infections, in order to minimize adverse physical consequences such as pelvic inflammatory disease, infertility and ectopic pregnancy, as well as psychological consequences;

(g) Promote men's understanding of their roles and responsibilities with regard to respecting the human rights of women; protecting women's health, including supporting their partners' access to sexual and reproductive health services; preventing unwanted pregnancy; reducing maternal mortality and morbidity; reducing transmission of sexually transmitted diseases, including HIV/AIDS; sharing household and child-rearing responsibilities; and promoting the elimination of harmful practices, such as female genital mutilation, and sexual and other gender-based violence, ensuring that girls and women are free from coercion and violence;

(h) Strengthen community-based services, social marketing and new partnerships with the private sector while working to ensure that safety, ethical and other relevant standards are met; and provide subsidies from public resources and donor funds, as appropriate, to ensure availability and access for those otherwise unable to access services.

53. Governments, with assistance from the international community, should develop and use indicators that measure access to and choice of family-planning and contraceptive methods and indicators that measure trends in maternal mortality and morbidity and HIV/AIDS and use them to monitor progress towards the goal of the International Conference on Population and Development of universal access to reproductive health care. Governments should strive to ensure that by 2015 all primary health-care and family planning facilities are able to provide, directly or through referral, the widest achievable range of safe and effective family planning and contraceptive methods; essential obstetric care; prevention and management of reproductive tract infections, including sexually transmitted diseases; and barrier methods, such as male and female condoms and microbicides if available, to prevent infection. By 2005, 60 per cent of such facilities should be able to offer this range of services, and by 2010, 80 per cent of them should be able to offer such services.

54. The United Nations system and donors should support Governments in the building of national capacity to plan, manage, implement, monitor and evaluate reproductive and sexual health services, including ensuring that all refugees and all other persons in emergency humanitarian situations, particularly women and adolescents, receive appropriate health care, including sexual and reproductive health care and information, and greater protection from sexual and gender-based violence. They should also ensure that all health workers in relief and emergency situations are given basic training in sexual and reproductive health-care information and services.

55. Increased efforts are needed by the United Nations system, with support from the international community, to develop and agree upon common key indicators on reproductive health programmes, including, inter alia, family planning, maternal health, sexual health, sexually transmitted diseases, HIV/AIDS, and information, education and communication for appropriate consideration in the relevant intergovernmental process. Bearing in mind the efforts made by national Governments, the World Health Organization is invited to take the lead role in this area, in coordination with the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome, the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat and other relevant United Nations entities, drawing on other expertise and knowledge as appropriate. Indicators on maternal and neonatal mortality, maternal morbidity and maternal health programmes should be given a prominent place, in order to monitor progress effectively and ensure that priority is given to reproductive health care in the provision of general health services. The international community is encouraged to provide financial and technical assistance to developing countries to improve their capacity-building in terms of indicators, data collection, monitoring, and evaluation in this field.

B. Ensuring voluntary quality family-planning services

56. Governments, in accordance with the Programme of Action, should take effective action to ensure the basic right of all couples and individuals to decide freely and responsibly the number, spacing and timing of their children and to have the information, education and means to do so.

57. The United Nations system and donors should, upon request, support Governments in:

(a) Mobilizing and providing sufficient resources to meet the growing demand for access to information, counselling, services and follow-up on the widest possible range of safe, effective, affordable and acceptable family planning and contraceptive methods, including new options and underutilized methods;

(b) Providing quality counselling services and ensuring ethical, professional and technical standards of care, as well as voluntary, free and informed choices in an atmosphere of privacy, confidentiality and respect;

(c) Strengthening programme management capacity, including logistical systems, to make services safer, more affordable and more convenient and accessible to clients and to ensure the availability and continuous supply of safe and effective contraceptives and other sexual and reproductive health supplies and, as appropriate, the raw material for them;

(d) Adequately strengthening social safety nets using resources and funds and, in the context of primary health care, ensuring the availability of and access to reproductive health services, including family planning, particularly for people most affected by poverty, the adverse impact of structural adjustment policies and financial crises, or otherwise unable to access services.

58. Where there is a gap between contraceptive use and the proportion of individuals expressing a desire to space or limit their families, countries should attempt to close this gap by at least 50 per cent by 2005, 75 per cent by 2010 and 100 per cent by 2050. In attempting to reach this benchmark, demographic goals, while legitimately the subject of government development strategies, should not be imposed on family planning providers in the form of targets or quotas for the recruitment of clients.

59. Governments, with the increased participation of the United Nations system, civil society, donors and the private sector, are urged to pursue the research and development of new, safe, low-cost and effective family-planning and contraceptive methods, for both men and women, including female-controlled methods that both protect against sexually transmitted diseases, including HIV/AIDS, and prevent unwanted pregnancy. All actors must abide by internationally accepted ethical, technical and safety standards in all research and development as well as, where appropriate, by applicable standards in manufacturing practices, quality control and product design, production and distribution.

60. The international community and the private sector should also take the necessary measures, particularly in the transfer of technology, as appropriate, to enable countries, in particular developing countries, to produce, store and distribute safe and effective contraceptives and other supplies essential for reproductive health services in order to strengthen the self-reliance of those countries.

61. The United Nations Population Fund is urged to continue to strengthen its leadership role within the United Nations system in assisting countries to take the strategic action necessary to ensure availability of reproductive health services and choice of reproductive health products, including contraceptives.

C. Reducing maternal mortality and morbidity

62. Governments, with the increased participation of the United Nations system, civil society, including non-governmental organizations, donors and the international community, should:

(a) Recognize the linkages between high levels of maternal mortality and poverty and promote the reduction of maternal mortality and morbidity as a public health priority and reproductive rights concern;

(b) Ensure that the reduction of maternal morbidity and mortality is a health sector priority and that women have ready access to essential obstetric care, well-equipped and adequately staffed maternal health-care services, skilled attendance at delivery, emergency obstetric care, effective referral and transport to higher levels of care when necessary, post-partum care and family planning. In health sector reform, the reduction of maternal mortality and morbidity should be prominent and used as an indicator for the success of such reform;

(c) Support public health education to create awareness of the risks of pregnancy, labour and delivery and to increase the understanding of the respective roles and responsibilities of family members, including men, as well as of civil society and Governments, in promoting and protecting maternal health;

(d) Develop appropriate interventions, beginning at birth, to improve the nutritional, health and educational status of girls and young women, so that they are better able to make informed choices at maturity about childbearing and obtain access to health information and services;

(e) Implement programmes to address the negative impact of environmental degradation, in some regions, on the high levels of maternal mortality and morbidity.

63. (i) In no case should abortion be promoted as a method of family planning. All Governments and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations are urged to strengthen their commitment to women's health, to deal with the health impact of unsafe abortion as a major public-health concern and to reduce the recourse to abortion through expanded and improved family planning services. Prevention of unwanted pregnancies must always be given the highest priority and every attempt should be made to eliminate the need for abortion. Women who have unwanted pregnancies should have ready access to reliable information and compassionate counselling. Any measures or changes related to abortion within the health system can be determined only at the national or local level according to the national legislative process. In circumstances where abortion is not against the law, such abortion should be safe. In all cases, women should have access to quality services for the management of complications arising from abortion. Post-abortion counselling, education and family planning services should be offered promptly, which will also help to avoid repeat abortions;
- (ii) Governments should take appropriate steps to help women to avoid abortion, which in no case should be promoted as a method of family planning, and in all cases provide for the humane treatment and counselling of women who have had recourse to abortion;
- (iii) In recognizing and implementing the above, and in circumstances where abortion is not against the law, health systems should train and equip health-service providers and should take other measures to ensure that such abortion is safe and accessible. Additional measures should be taken to safeguard women's health.

64. In order to monitor progress towards the achievement of the goals of the International Conference on Population and Development for maternal mortality, countries should use the proportion of births assisted by skilled attendants as a benchmark indicator. By 2005, where the maternal mortality rate is very high, at least 40 per cent of all births should be assisted by skilled attendants; by 2010 this figure should be at least 50 per cent and by 2015, at least 60 per cent. All countries should continue their efforts so that globally, by 2005, 80 per cent of all births should be assisted by skilled attendants, by 2010, 85 per cent, and by 2015, 90 per cent.

65. In order to have a basis for cost-benefit analysis for interventions aimed at reducing maternal mortality, the societal costs of maternal deaths should be calculated. This should be done in cooperation with Governments, United Nations agencies and development banks, and the research community.

66. The World Health Organization, in cooperation with other relevant United Nations bodies, is urged to fulfil its leadership role within the United Nations system in assisting countries, in particular developing countries, to put in place standards for the care and treatment for women and girls that incorporate gender-sensitive approaches and promote gender equality and equity in health-care delivery and to advise on functions that health facilities should perform to help guide the development of health systems to reduce the risks associated with pregnancy, taking into consideration the level of development and the economic and social conditions of countries. At the same time, United Nations agencies, including the United Nations Population Fund and the United Nations Children's Fund, and multilateral development banks, such as the World Bank, should intensify their role in promoting, supporting, advocating for and investing in action to improve maternal health.

D. Prevention and treatment of sexually transmitted disease, including human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome

67. Governments, from the highest political levels, should take urgent action to provide education and services to prevent the transmission of all forms of sexually transmitted diseases and HIV and, with the assistance, where appropriate, of the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome, develop and implement national HIV/AIDS policies and action plans, ensure and promote respect for the human rights and dignity of persons living with HIV/AIDS, improve care and support for people living with HIV/AIDS, including support services for home-based care, and take steps to mitigate the impact of the AIDS epidemic by mobilizing all sectors and segments of society to address the social and economic factors contributing to HIV risk and vulnerability. Governments should enact legislation and adopt measures to ensure non-discrimination against people living with HIV/AIDS and vulnerable populations, including women and young people, so that they are not denied the information needed to prevent further transmission and are able to access treatment and care services without fear of stigmatization, discrimination or violence.

68. Governments should ensure that prevention of and services for sexually transmitted diseases and HIV/AIDS are an integral component of reproductive and sexual health programmes at the primary health-care level. Gender, age-based and other differences in vulnerability to HIV infection should be addressed in prevention and education programmes and services. Governments should develop guidelines for HIV treatment and care, emphasizing equitable access, and for wide provision of and access to voluntary HIV testing and counselling services, and should ensure wide provision of and access to female and male condoms, including through social marketing. Advocacy and information, education and communication campaigns developed with communities and supported from the highest levels of Government should promote informed, responsible and safer sexual behaviour and practices, mutual respect and gender equity in sexual relationships. Special attention needs to be given to preventing sexual exploitation of young women and children. Given the enhanced susceptibility to HIV/AIDS of individuals infected by conventional and treatable sexually transmitted diseases and the high prevalence of such diseases among young people, priority must be given to the prevention, detection, diagnosis and treatment of such infections. Governments should immediately develop, in full partnership with youth, parents, families, educators and health-care providers, youth-specific HIV education and treatment projects, with special emphasis on developing peer-education programmes.

69. While one of the most important interventions to reduce HIV infections in infants is primary prevention of infection, Governments should also scale up, where appropriate, education and treatment projects aimed at preventing mother-to-child transmission of HIV. Anti-retroviral drugs, where feasible, should be made available to women living with HIV/AIDS during and after pregnancy as part of their ongoing treatment of HIV/AIDS and provide infant-feeding counselling for mothers living with HIV/AIDS so that they can make free and informed decisions.

70. Governments, with assistance from the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome and donors, should, by 2005, ensure that at least 90 per cent, and by 2010 at least 95 per cent, of young men and women aged 15 to 24 have access to the information, education and services necessary to develop the life skills required to reduce their vulnerability to HIV infection. Services should include access to preventive methods such as female and male condoms, voluntary testing, counselling and follow-up. Governments should use, as a benchmark indicator, HIV infection rates in persons 15 to 24 years of age, with the goal of ensuring that by 2005 prevalence in this age group is reduced globally, and by 25 per cent in the most affected countries, and that by 2010 prevalence in this age group is reduced globally by 25 per cent.

71. The private and public sectors should increase investments in research on the development of microbicides and other female-controlled methods, simpler and less expensive diagnostic tests, single-dose treatments for sexually transmitted diseases and vaccines. Governments, in particular of developing countries, with the support of the international community, should strengthen measures to improve generally the quality, availability and affordability of care of people living with HIV/AIDS.

72. In accordance with its mandate, the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome should be provided with financial resources in order to do the utmost to ensure a well-coordinated response from the United Nations system to the HIV/AIDS pandemic and to provide support to national programmes, particularly in developing countries.

E. Adolescents

73. Governments, with the full involvement of young people and with the support of the international community, should, as a priority, make every effort to implement the Programme of Action in regard to adolescent sexual and reproductive health, in accordance with paragraphs 7.45 and 7.46 of the Programme of Action, and should:

(a) In order to protect and promote the right of adolescents to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standards of health, provide appropriate, specific, user-friendly and accessible services to address effectively their reproductive and sexual health needs, including reproductive health education, information, counselling and health promotion strategies. These services should safeguard the rights of adolescents to privacy, confidentiality and informed consent, respecting their cultural values and religious beliefs and in conformity with relevant existing international agreements and conventions;

(b) Continue to advocate for the protection and promotion of and support for programmes for adolescent health, including sexual and reproductive health; identify effective and appropriate strategies to achieve this goal; and develop gender- and age-based indicators and data systems to monitor progress;

(c) Develop at national and other levels, as appropriate, action plans for adolescents and youth, based on gender equity and equality, that cover education, professional and vocational training and income-generating opportunities. Such programmes should include support mechanisms for the education and counselling of adolescents in the areas of gender relations and equality, violence against adolescents, responsible sexual behaviour, responsible family planning practices, family life, reproductive health, sexually transmitted diseases, HIV infection and AIDS prevention, in accordance with paragraph 7.47 of the Programme of Action. Adolescents and youth themselves should be fully involved in the design and implementation of such information and services, with proper regard for parental guidance and responsibilities. Special attention should be devoted to vulnerable and disadvantaged youth;

(d) Acknowledge and promote the central role of families, parents and other legal guardians in educating their children and shaping their attitudes and ensure that parents and persons with legal responsibilities are educated about and involved in providing sexual and reproductive health information, in a manner consistent with the evolving capacities of adolescents, so that they can fulfil their rights and responsibilities towards adolescents;

(e) With due respect for the rights, duties and responsibilities of parents and in a manner consistent with the evolving capacities of the adolescent and their right to reproductive health education, information and care, and respecting their cultural values and religious beliefs, ensure that adolescents, both in and out of school, receive the necessary information, including information on prevention, education, counselling and health services to enable them to make responsible and informed choices and decisions regarding their sexual and reproductive health needs, in order, inter alia, to reduce the number of adolescent pregnancies. Sexually active adolescents will require special family planning information, counselling and health services, as well as sexually transmitted diseases and HIV/AIDS prevention and treatment. Those adolescents who become pregnant are at particular risk and will require special support from their families, health-care providers and the community during pregnancy, delivery and early childcare. This support should enable these adolescents to continue their education. Programmes should involve and train all who are in a position to provide guidance to adolescents concerning responsible sexual and reproductive behaviour, particularly parents and families, and also communities, religious institutions, schools, the mass media and peer groups. These policies and programmes must be implemented on the basis of commitments made at the International Conference on Population and Development and in conformity with relevant existing international agreements and conventions;

(f) Countries should ensure that programmes and attitudes of health-care providers do not restrict the access of adolescents to appropriate services and the information they need, including for the prevention and treatment of sexually transmitted diseases, HIV/AIDS and sexual violence and abuse. Countries should, in this context, and in the context of paragraph 73 (e) of the present document, where appropriate, remove legal, regulatory and social barriers to reproductive health information and care for adolescents.

74. Recognizing the growing and special needs of youth and adolescents, including reproductive and sexual health issues, and taking into account the special situations they face, the United Nations system and donors should complement Governments' efforts to mobilize and provide adequate resources to respond to those needs.

75. Governments, in consultation with national non-governmental organizations, including youth organizations where applicable, and with the required assistance of United Nations agencies, international non-governmental organizations and the donor community, should evaluate programmes and document experiences and develop data-collection systems to monitor progress, and widely disseminate information about the design and functioning of programmes and their impact on young people's sexual and reproductive health. United Nations agencies and donor countries should support regional and international mechanisms for sharing those experiences among all countries, especially among developing countries.

V. Partnerships and collaborations

76. Governments are encouraged, in dialogue with non-governmental organizations and local community groups, and in full respect for their autonomy, to facilitate, as appropriate, the involvement of civil society at the national level in policy discussions and in the formulation, implementation, monitoring and evaluation of strategies and programmes to achieve Programme of Action objectives. Partnerships between Governments and multilateral and donor agencies and civil society need to be based, as appropriate, on delivering agreed outcomes that bring benefits to poor people's health, including reproductive and sexual health.

77. Governments, where appropriate, should include representatives of non-governmental organizations and local community groups in country delegations to regional and international forums where issues related to population and development are discussed.

78. Governments, civil society at the national level and the United Nations system should work towards enhancing and strengthening their collaboration and cooperation, with a view to fostering an enabling environment for partnerships for the implementation of the Programme of Action. Governments and civil society organizations should develop systems for greater transparency and information-sharing, so as to improve their accountability.

79. Governments are encouraged to recognize and support the important and complementary role that civil society at the national level can play towards changing attitudes and actions for further implementation of the Programme of Action.

80. Governments are also encouraged to recognize and support the important and complementary role that civil society at the national level can play in helping communities to articulate and meet their needs for health care, including reproductive health care.

81. Governments and international organizations should create and support mechanisms to build and sustain partnerships with community-based organizations and non-governmental organizations committed to assisting women to establish and realize their rights, including those that relate to reproductive and sexual health, as well as other relevant organizations, the research community and professional organizations. Governments, civil society at the national level and the international community should together focus on human resources development and on building and strengthening national capacity to implement sustainable population and reproductive health programmes.

82. Governments and civil society organizations, where appropriate, are encouraged to design innovative approaches and build partnerships with, among others, the media, the commercial sector, religious leaders, local community groups and leaders, as well as youth, which can serve as effective advocates for the achievement of the goals and objectives of the Programme of Action.

83. With reference to paragraph 15.10 of the Programme of Action, Governments, international organizations and donors are encouraged to provide, in accordance with national laws and regulations and national development priorities, adequate financial and technical resources and information to build the human resources, institutional capacity and sustainability of civil society organizations, particularly women's and youth groups, in a manner not compromising their full autonomy, to facilitate their active involvement in the research, design, implementation, monitoring and evaluation of national population and development policies, programmes and activities. Like Governments, civil society organizations should also put in place transparency and accountability mechanisms to ensure that programme implementation is directly targeted to, and funds are used effectively for, national population and development programmes, as well as activities, services and evaluation procedures.

84. Governments, international organizations and civil society organizations at the national level, including non-governmental organizations, should encourage partnerships with the private and, where appropriate, the informal sector to strengthen their engagement and collaboration in the implementation of the Programme of Action. The private sector may assist the efforts of Governments, but it cannot substitute for the Government's responsibility to ensure and provide quality, full, safe, accessible, affordable and convenient health services, including reproductive health, family planning and sexual health services. Governments are encouraged to review relevant national laws, standards and regulations, as appropriate, to facilitate private-sector involvement and to seek to ensure that all health-care products and services, including reproductive health products and services, meet internationally accepted standards.

85. Implementation of key elements of the Programme of Action must be tied closely to a broader strengthening of health systems. The public sector plays an important role in this regard and should be encouraged to define its role and to work more closely with the private and informal sectors to monitor and improve standards and to ensure that services are available and that their delivery is of good quality and affordable.

86. Recognizing its increasing role in providing reproductive health information, education, services and commodities, the private sector should ensure that its services and commodities are of high quality and meet internationally accepted standards; that its activities are conducted in a socially responsible, culturally sensitive, acceptable and cost-effective manner; that it fully respects various religions, ethical values and cultural backgrounds of each country's people; and that it adheres to basic rights recognized by the international community and recalled in the Programme of Action.

87. Parliamentarians and members of national legislatures are invited to ensure the legislative reform and expanded awareness-raising necessary for implementing the Programme of Action. They are encouraged to be advocates for the implementation of the Programme of Action, including through the allocation, as appropriate, of financial resources. There should be regular exchanges of experiences among parliamentarians at the subregional, regional, interregional and international levels, where appropriate.

88. External funding and support, from donor countries as well as the private sector, should be provided to promote and sustain the full potential of South-South cooperation, including the South-South initiative "Partners in Population and Development", in order to bolster the sharing of relevant experiences, and the mobilization of technical expertise and other resources among developing countries. Updated information on institutions and expertise available within developing countries in the area of population and development, including reproductive health, should be compiled and disseminated.

89. All relevant bodies and entities of the United Nations system should continue to clarify, within existing mechanisms, their specific leadership roles and responsibilities and continue to strengthen their efforts to promote system-wide coordination and collaboration, especially at the country level. The intergovernmental work of the Commission on Population and Development should be reinforced, as should also the inter-agency coordination role of the United Nations Population Fund, in the field of population and reproductive health.

90. Governments, civil society organizations at the national level and the United Nations system are urged to consult youth organizations in the design, implementation and evaluation of policies and programmes for youth.

VI. Mobilizing resources

91. Increased political will from all Governments and reaffirmation of the commitment for mobilization of international assistance, as was agreed at Cairo, are urgently needed to accelerate the implementation of the Programme of Action which, in turn, will contribute to the advancement of the broad population and development agenda.

92. All developed countries are urged to strengthen their commitment to the goals and objectives of the Programme of Action, in particular its cost estimates, and to make every effort to mobilize the agreed estimated financial resources required for its implementation; in so doing, the needs of least developed countries should receive priority.

93. All developing countries and countries with economies in transition are urged to strengthen their commitment to the goals and objectives of the Programme of Action, in particular its cost estimates, and to continue to make efforts to mobilize domestic resources. Developing and developed countries and countries with economies in transition are urged to promote international cooperation and to increase technical cooperation and transfer of technology through South-South cooperation, in order to implement fully the Programme of Action.

94. Donor countries and international funding agencies are urged to support the inclusion of South-South components in development cooperation programmes and projects so as to promote cost-effectiveness and sustainability.

95. Translation of commitment to the goals of the International Conference on Population and Development into commensurate levels of donor funding has not been forthcoming, and there is an urgent need for donor countries to renew and intensify efforts to meet the need for complementary external resources required to implement the costed elements of the Programme of Action, namely, in 1993 United States dollars, $5.7 billion in 2000, $6.1 billion in 2005, $6.8 billion in 2010 and $7.2 billion in 2015. Donor countries are also urged to increase significantly official development assistance funding for other elements of the Programme of Action as contained in chapter XIII thereof, in particular, improvement in the status and empowerment of women, basic health care and education, emerging and continued health challenges, such as malaria and other diseases identified by the World Health Organization as having a major impact on health, including those having the highest mortality and morbidity rates; and to intensify efforts to help countries to eradicate poverty. Donor countries are therefore urged to take the necessary action to reverse the current decline in overall official development assistance and should strive to fulfil the agreed target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product for overall official development assistance as soon as possible.

96. With full regard to their respective jurisdiction and mandates, legislators and other decision makers are encouraged to undertake measures to increase support for achieving the goals and objectives of the Programme of Action through legislation, advocacy and expanded awareness-raising and resource mobilization. Advocacy efforts should be increased at all levels, both national and international, to ensure that the resource goals are met.

97. Since the HIV/AIDS pandemic is having a more severe impact than was originally projected, special attention should be given to providing promptly the necessary resources, as has been called for in the Programme of Action, for the prevention of sexually transmitted diseases and HIV. Particular attention should be given to vulnerable populations, especially children and young people. All countries affected by the pandemic must continue to make efforts to mobilize domestic resources from all sources in order to combat it. The international community is called upon to assist developing countries and countries with economies in transition in their efforts. Additionally, Governments and the donor community should intensify efforts to provide resources for care and support to those affected by HIV/AIDS and for specialized prevention needs.

98. The international community should provide the necessary financial and technical assistance to support developing countries and countries with economies in transition committed to implementing the goals and objectives of the Programme of Action. Special attention should be paid to the needs of Africa and the least developed countries, countries facing or suffering from emergency humanitarian situations and financial and economic crises, and those developing countries suffering from low commodity prices, as well as countries facing long-term and large-scale environmental problems.

99. Donor countries and international funding agencies, including the World Bank and the regional development banks, are urged to complement, at the request of countries, the domestic efforts made to meet the growing and urgent basic health and reproductive health needs, including reproductive health commodities, of the developing and the least developed countries, countries facing increasing demands for such commodities and a diminishing share of international assistance and countries with economies in transition.

100. Governments and the international community should encourage and promote additional ways and mechanisms to increase funding for population and development programmes, including sexual and reproductive health programmes, in order to ensure their sustainability. These could include, as appropriate: (a) advocacy for increased funding from international financial institutions and regional development banks; (b) selective use of user fees, social marketing, cost-sharing and other forms of cost recovery; and (c) increased involvement of the private sector. These modalities should facilitate access to services and should be accompanied by adequate social safety net measures to promote access to services by those living in poverty and other members of vulnerable groups. Consideration should also be given to more efficient and coordinated mechanisms to address the debt problem, including the reduction of the burden of external debt through various measures such as debt cancellation and debt swaps for population, health and other social sector investment to promote sustainable development.

101. Governments of recipient countries are encouraged to ensure that public resources, subsidies and assistance received from international donors for the implementation of the goals and objectives of the Programme of Action are invested to maximize benefits to the poor and other vulnerable population groups, including those who suffer disproportionately from reproductive ill health.

102. Utilizing existing coordinated mechanisms at the national level, as appropriate, donor countries, international agencies and recipient countries should continue to strengthen their efforts and their collaboration, so as to avoid duplication, identify funding gaps and ensure that resources are used as effectively and efficiently as possible.

103. Governments, in cooperation with the United Nations Population Fund as appropriate, should seek to ensure full and regular monitoring of resource flows, paying particular attention to transparency and accountability for the costed population and reproductive health package included in the Programme of Action. Non-governmental organizations may provide the necessary information, as appropriate, in this regard.

104. Countries, especially developed countries, are urged to increase substantially their voluntary contribution to the United Nations Population Fund, as well as to other relevant United Nations programmes and specialized agencies, so that they will be in a better position to assist countries to implement further the goals and objectives of the Programme of Action, including reproductive health programmes.

105. Governments of developed and developing countries are encouraged to give thorough consideration to the implementation of the 20/20 initiative, a voluntary compact between interested donor and recipient countries, which can provide increased resources for broader poverty eradication objectives, including population and social sector objectives.

106. Governments should implement policies that facilitate increased access to basic health services, including high-quality and affordable reproductive health and family planning services; promote effective interventions and support services, including private sector services, as appropriate; set standards for service delivery; and review legal, regulatory and import policies to identify and eliminate those policies that unnecessarily restrict or prevent the greater involvement of the private sector. Public sector resources and subsidies should have as a priority people living in poverty, underserved populations and low-income sectors of the population.

Executive Board action. On 17 September [E/1999/35 (dec. 99/18)], the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)/UNFPA Executive Board requested the UNFPA Executive Director to present in 2000 a report on UNFPA's strategic role in supporting countries' implementation of relevant key actions adopted at the special session.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 53/183 [YUN 1998, p. 1003], the Secretary-General submitted an October report on the twenty-first special session [A/54/442]. He described the review and appraisal process, in which there was close collaboration between the United Nations Population Division and UNFPA, including the technical and regional meetings held in preparation for the session, the Hague Forum and the UNFPA field inquiry [YUN 1998, p. 1006]; the action taken by the special session; and the next steps to be taken.

By decision 54/445 of 22 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Follow-up by Population Commission

The Commission on Population and Development, the principal body responsible for reviewing the follow-up to and implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action, considered as the central theme of its thirty-second session (New York, 22, 23 and 26 March) [E/1999/25] population growth, structure and distribution.

Under the item on follow-up to ICPD, the Commission considered three reports (one of which was on the 1998 Technical Symposium on International Migration and Development [YUN 1998, p. 1005]) and recommended a draft resolution to the Economic and Social Council for adoption.

Population growth, structure and distribution

The Commission on Population and Development had before it the concise report on world population monitoring, 1999: population growth, structure and distribution [E/CN.9/1999/2]. It noted that since the 1974 United Nations World Population Conference [YUN 1974, p. 550], world population size had increased from 4 billion persons to nearly 6 billion and was growing at a rate of 1.3 per cent annually (it was estimated that the population reached 6 billion on 12 October 1999).

The report noted that about 96 per cent of the total annual increase occurred in the less developed regions; the proportion of people living in the more developed regions had declined and was projected to continue to decline significantly. Although world total fertility had fallen by 39 per cent since the early 1970s, variations in fertility among the regions persisted, with fertility rates ranging from 1.4 births per woman in Europe to 5.1 in Africa. The reduction of mortality continued to progress as the level of life expectancy at birth continued to increase, from 58 years prior to 1974 to 65 years. Infant mortality had also declined, from 93 deaths per 1,000 live births to 57. However, there had been a devastating toll from AIDS in a number of countries, particularly in sub-Saharan Africa.

Due to the shift to lower fertility and mortality rates, developed countries had attained older age structures than were ever seen in the past, while developing countries were undergoing rapid shifts in respect of the share of children, youth and adults. The world child population (those under 15) had increased to 1.8 billion from 1.4 billion in 1970. Although the population of older persons was considerably smaller, it was growing at a much faster rate, with 580 million persons aged 60 or over in the world in 1998, constituting 10 per cent of the global population. The changing age structure was likely to have wide-ranging economic and social consequences through such factors as economic growth, savings and investment, labour supply and employment, pension schemes, health and long-term care, intergenerational transfers, family composition and living arrangements. While once limited to developed countries, concern for ageing's consequences had spread to developing countries.

As to population distribution, urbanization and internal migration, the report stated that the urban population was growing three times faster than its rural counterpart, with 47 per cent of the world population living in urban areas in mid-1998. In many developing countries, population distribution policies were largely synonymous with measures to reduce or even reverse rural-urban migration.

The report observed that poverty reduction, food provision and environmental maintenance were integrally linked with demographic, economic and political change. Cumulatively worsening performance in the two latter areas might be exacerbated by rapid population growth; breaking that interaction could be facilitated by government policies to promote income growth, empower the poor with education and health, and provide incentives for the prudent allocation of resources.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July [meeting 39], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Population and Development [E/1999/25], adopted resolution 1999/10 without vote [agenda item 13 (i)].

Population growth, structure and distribution

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming the commitment of Member States to the implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development,

Recalling the recommendations of the Programme of Action relating to population growth, structure and distribution,

Recalling also that the theme for the thirty-second session of the Commission on Population and Development was population growth, structure and distribution, with special emphasis on sustained economic growth and sustainable development, including education, and noting the importance of the issues related to, inter alia, youth, ageing and migration, as well as the need for data collection,

Requests the Population Division of the Secretariat to continue its research on population growth, structure and distribution, including levels, trends, determinants, consequences and policies, while giving due attention to issues related to, inter alia, youth, ageing, migration and data collection, so that Governments may benefit by comparing experiences and by understanding the factors underlying changing demographic circumstances, and calls upon Governments to continue to facilitate the work of the Population Division in this regard.

Financial resources

In response to General Assembly resolutions 49/128 [YUN 1994, p. 963] and 50/124 [YUN 1995, p. 1094], the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Population and Development a report on the flow of financial resources for assisting in the implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action [E/CN.9/1999/4]. He observed that external assistance for population activities increased 54 per cent from the immediate pre-Conference period, from $1.3 billion in 1993 to slightly over $2 billion in 1996. That figure represented roughly 35 per cent of the $5.7 billion target agreed on at ICPD as the international community's share in financing the Programme of Action by the year 2000. Preliminary indications were that in 1997 total assistance for population activities decreased to just under $1.9 billion. Difficult economic circumstances, resulting in budget cuts and declining official development assistance, had translated into stagnating or decreasing funding for population programmes. The report concluded that donors and developing countries should re-examine priorities and increase allocations for population and related sectors.

International migration

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/189 [YUN 1997, p. 1072], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/54/207], in which he presented the views of 76 Governments on convening a UN conference on international migration and development. Of the total responses, 45 were generally in favour of and 26 expressed reservations about holding such a conference. The remaining five Governments expressed only partial support for convening a conference and considered that other options should first be pursued to address the issue of international migration and development. The number of responses received was relatively small and represented only 39 per cent of the full membership of the United Nations. Although the majority of the responding Governments appeared to be in favour of holding a conference, there was a lack of consensus on its objectives, its funding and the composition of its secretariat. Furthermore, a number of Governments expressed serious reservations about convening such a conference, given the current financial constraints of the United Nations. Generally, those Governments appeared more in favour of adopting a regional or sub-regional approach in considering the issue. Taking all those elements into account, the prospects for holding an international conference on international migration and development remained uncertain.

The Secretary-General went on to describe the work carried out on issues of international migration and development by mechanisms both within the UN system (Commission on Population and Development; twenty-first special session of the General Assembly; Commission on Human Rights; Administrative Committee on Coordination; Committee for Development Policy; Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees; United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization; International Labour Organization) and outside it (International Organization for Migration; Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development).

By an 8 October letter [A/C.2/54/2], Thailand transmitted to the President of the General Assembly the text of the "Bangkok Declaration on Irregular Migration", which was adopted at the International Symposium on Migration, held in Bangkok, from 21 to 23 April.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/54/587/Add.5], adopted resolution 54/212 without vote [agenda item 99 (e)].

International migration and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development adopted at Cairo, in particular chapter X on international migration, and the key actions for the further implementation of the Programme of Action, set out in the annex to General Assembly resolution S-21/2 of 2 July 1999, in particular section ILC on international migration, as well as the relevant provisions contained in the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development and in the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women,

Recalling also its resolutions 49/127 of 19 December 1994, 50/123 of 20 December 1995 and 52/189 of 18 December 1997 on international migration and development, as well as Economic and Social Council decision 1995/313 of 27 July 1995,

Reaffirming the continuing validity of the principles set forth in the international instruments regarding the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, in particular the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Recalling that the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council should carry out their respective responsibilities as entrusted to them in the Charter of the United Nations, as well as by the relevant United Nations conferences of the 1990s, in the formulation of policies and the provision of guidance to and coordination of United Nations activities in the field of population and development, including activities on international migration,

Noting the need for the relevant United Nations organizations and other international organizations to enhance their technical support to developing countries to ensure that migration contributes to development,

Recognizing the diversity of views expressed by the respondents to the survey regarding the question of convening a United Nations conference on international migration, its scope, form and agenda, which represented 39 per cent of the full United Nations membership, and that forty-five respondents were in favour of convening a conference, five were partially in favour and twenty-six were against,

Noting in particular the need for more migration data, a coherent theory to explain international migration and a better understanding of the complex interrelationships between migration and development,

Noting the critical role of the existing forums within the United Nations system in addressing the issues of international migration and development, including through the Commission on Population and Development, the Commission on Human Rights, the Committee for Development Policy, the International Labour Organization and other relevant key organizations,

Noting with appreciation the numerous meetings and conferences convened relating to migration and development, in particular in the context of regional cooperation,

Noting the establishment of the International Migration Policy Programme in May 1998 by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, the International Organization for Migration and the United Nations Population Fund, to be implemented in partnership with the International Labour Office, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and other relevant international and regional institutions, with a view to strengthening the capacity of Governments in different regions to manage migration flows at national and regional levels and thus to foster cooperation among States towards orderly migration,

Aware that, among other factors, the process of globalization and liberalization, including the widening economic and social gap between and among many countries and the marginalization of some countries in the global economy, has contributed to large flows of peoples between and among countries and to the intensification of the complex phenomenon of international migration,

Aware also that, in spite of the existence of an already established body of principles, there is a need to make further efforts to ensure that the human rights and dignity of all migrants and their families are respected and protected and that it is desirable to improve the situation of all documented migrants and their families,

Recognizing the importance, from an analytical and operational point of view, of identifying the existing linkages among the social, economic, political and cultural factors related to international migration and development and of the need for comprehensive, coherent and effective policies on international migration based on the spirit of genuine partnership and common understanding,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Urges Member States and the United Nations system to strengthen international cooperation in the area of international migration and development in order to address the root causes of migration, especially those related to poverty, and to maximize the benefits of international migration to those concerned;
3. Encourages, where relevant, interregional, regional and subregional mechanisms to continue to address the question of migration and development;
4. Calls upon all relevant bodies, agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system and other relevant intergovernmental, regional and subregional organizations, within their continuing mandated activities, to continue to address the issue of international migration and development and to provide appropriate support for interregional, regional and subregional processes and activities on international migration and development;
5. Also calls upon the international community to seek to make the option of remaining in one's country viable for all people, to which end efforts to achieve sustainable economic and social development, ensuring a better economic balance between developed and developing countries, should be strengthened;
6. Requests the Secretary-General, whenever feasible, to solicit more views from Member States, particularly those that have not responded to the survey requested in pursuance of resolution 52/189, as well as from the International Labour Organization, the International Organization for Migration and other relevant organizations, both within and outside the United Nations system, on the report of the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session, bearing in mind various regional processes, and to recommend ways and means to address the problems related to migration and development;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to initiate appropriate action in consultation with regional commissions in order to ensure the carrying out of interregional activities, with the contribution of the relevant actors on issues relating to international migration and development, taking into account, inter alia, the report of the Secretary-General, and encourages the United Nations bodies and other appropriate international organizations to provide support to such activities;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session a report that will, inter alia, summarize the lessons learned, as well as best practices on migration management and policies, from the various activities relating to international migration and development that have been carried out at the regional and interregional levels, and recommend for the consideration of the Assembly policy actions that could be pursued at the international level, taking into account, inter alia, the following:

- (a) The report of the Committee for Development Policy on its examination of the issue of migration and development;
 - (b) The work of the relevant bodies, agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system and other international organizations in the field of international migration and development;
 - (c) The possible mechanisms within the United Nations system to examine international migration and development in a comprehensive and integrated manner;
 - (d) The need to provide, in consultation with relevant United Nations bodies, an analysis of data relating to migration within and between the various regions;
9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the sub-item entitled "International migration and development, including the question of the convening of a United Nations conference on international migration and development to address migration issues".

UN Population Fund

On 27 October, the General Assembly devoted a plenary meeting to commemorating the thirtieth anniversary of the operations of UNFPA, in accordance with decision 53/443 [YUN 1998, p. 1009]. In a message to the meeting, the Secretary-General stated that the Fund (originally the United Nations Fund for Population Activities), which began operations in 1969 [YUN 1969, p. 419] with a small amount of money provided by a few donors, was one of the leading success stories of the United Nations. The meeting was also addressed by the Assembly President, representatives of the regional groups and the United States, the host country.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 27 October [meeting 40], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/11 [draft: A/54/L.18 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 99 (h)].

Thirtieth anniversary of the operations of the United Nations Population Fund

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2211 (XXI) of 17 December 1966, in response to which a trust fund, subsequently named the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, was established in 1967 by the Secretary-General,

Noting that the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, renamed in 1987 as the United Nations Population Fund, began operations in 1969,

Recalling its resolutions 3019 (XXVII) of 18 December 1972, 31/170 of 21 December 1976 and 34/104 of 14 December 1979, in which it, inter alia, recognized the leading role and effectiveness of the Fund in the United Nations system in the population field and affirmed the Fund as a subsidiary body of the General Assembly,

Reaffirming Economic and Social Council resolutions 1763 (LIV) of 18 May 1973 and 1986/7 of 21 May 1986 stating the aims and purposes of the Fund,

1. Congratulates the United Nations Population Fund on the occasion of the thirtieth anniversary of its operations;

2. Notes with appreciation the positive contributions the Fund and its dedicated staff have made during its thirty years in promoting better understanding and awareness of population and development issues, in improving the quality of human life and in extending systematic and sustained assistance to developing countries and countries with economies in transition, at their request, in undertaking appropriate national programmes to address their population and development needs.

1999 activities

In her report for 1999 [DP/FPA/2000/8 (Part I)] to the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, the UNFPA Executive Director stated that the most significant event for UNFPA was ICPD+5, the culmination of the review of the accomplishments and constraints that had been experienced in the five years since the International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) had taken place in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 955] (see p. 1005). The Fund had organized some ICPD+5 events and worked with the secretariat of the Commission on Population and Development in its role as preparatory committee for the General Assembly's twenty-first special session.

The Executive Director focused on two of those aspects of UNFPA's work in 1999 that figured prominently in the key future actions recommended by the special session: the importance of addressing the reproductive health needs of adolescents through the provision of information and services; and the need for all organizations concerned with population and reproductive health to work together more closely if ICPD's goals were to be achieved. The other major issue addressed in the report was the Fund's effort to develop a multi-year funding framework (MYFF).

During the year, the Fund worked to document experiences in adolescent reproductive health from various countries, using a joint programme strategy developed with the World Health Organization (WHO) and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). Efforts were made, for example, to identify countries that had developed national youth policies or had integrated youth and adolescent reproductive health concerns into existing population, education, gender and other development policies. Reviews of UNFPA country programmes and other studies that were conducted as part of the ICPD+5 process revealed the serious challenges faced by developing countries in addressing adolescent sexual and reproductive health issues. The high rate of abortions among adolescents and the spread of HIV/AIDS throughout the world had highlighted the risks posed by the lack of reproductive health information and services for young people. Approximately half of all people who contracted HIV became infected before they turned 25.

In order to address those challenges, UNFPA was working in three major areas: supporting information, education and communication programmes both in and out of schools; providing greater access by young people to youth-friendly reproductive health information, counselling and services; and advocating relevant youth policies that recognized the rights of young people and promoted their reproductive health. A key factor was the prevention of HIV infection.

With regard to partnerships, the Executive Director noted that the ICPD Programme of Action had identified the expanding number and configuration of development partners in the field of population and development as a shortcoming that had to be addressed and had cited the need to clarify the reciprocal responsibilities of development partners and improve coordination of their efforts as one of its key objectives. The key actions document of the special session (see p. 1006) noted the importance of effective, transparent partnership and called on Governments and civil society at the national level, in partnership with the international community, to join in efforts to ensure that the goals and objectives of ICPD were accomplished as soon as possible. It also mentioned the role of the relevant UN bodies, including UNFPA, throughout the document.

In carrying out its coordination role within the UN system, UNFPA depended on the work of partner agencies in a number of fields. An inter-agency meeting of the Basic Social Services for All Task Force, of which UNFPA was the chair, met in October 1999 and discussed the roles of all UN partners in the follow-up to the ICPD review. As a result, the Task Force was updating and simplifying a series of guidelines and guidance notes to the field on the implementation of the goals of the major international conferences that had taken place over the last decade and of their five-year follow-ups, including ICPD+5. Among the large number of mechanisms by which UNFPA cooperated with its partner agencies and organizations within the system were: the United Nations Development Group and its Executive Committee, made up of UNICEF, UNDP, UNFPA and the World Food Programme; the resident coordinator system, both at the country and UN system levels; UNFPA's Technical Advisory Programme; the WHO/UNICEF/UNFPA Coordinating Committee on Health; and the Inter-Agency Committee on Women and Gender Equality. An important result of UNFPA's cooperation with other UN and multilateral agencies in emergency situations was the Inter-Agency Field Manual for Reproductive Health in Refugee Situations, published in 1999 by UNFPA, WHO and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. The manual provided guidance for reproductive health assistance in crisis situations, which was too often given short shrift even though the assistance focused on such vital matters as safe birth and helping women who were victims of violence. UNFPA also participated fully in the inter-agency assessments for the consolidated appeals process (see PART THREE, Chapter III) and was a co-sponsor of the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (see PART THREE, Chapter XIII).

The Executive Director went on to describe UNFPA's cooperation with the international financial institutions; civil society organizations, including NGOs; professional groups and mass organizations; South-South partnerships; parliamentarians; religious groups; foundations; and the private sector.

In its continuing efforts to improve performance, UNFPA accelerated the shift towards a results-based approach in 1999 by developing its first MYFF, for the years 2000-2003. The framework built on clearly defined organizational results and a set of indicators to track progress towards achieving them. It also included resource requirements to achieve the expected results. Noting that a three-year decline in the Fund's general resources was adversely affecting country-level efforts to achieve ICPD goals, the Executive Director said that MYFF, with its emphasis on results, on organizational effectiveness and on tracking and reporting on performance, was designed to improve programme management, performance and accountability. That should better position UNFPA to attract predictable and stable funding.

In another section of her annual report for 1999 [DP/FPA/2000/8 (Part II)], the Executive Director provided information on the Global Initiative on Reproductive Health Commodity Management (see p. 1027), the Global Contraceptive Commodity Programme (see p. 1028), and implementation of the UNFPA country programmes in Algeria, China, Egypt, Nicaragua and Paraguay, and in the Pacific subregion.

By decision 1999/219 of 23 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the annual reports of the UNDP Administrator and the UNFPA Executive Director to the Council [E/1999/47].

Sector-wide approaches

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board had before it in April a conference room paper on sector-wide approaches (SWAs) [DP/FPA/1999/CRP.1], which referred to integrated, sector-wide development programmes calling for a new type of partnership among Governments, donors, development banks, the private sector and wider civil society. The paper stated that UNFPA field offices were active partners in national dialogues around both health-sector reform and the introduction of SWAs in several countries in Africa and, in some of them, where SWAp implementation was more advanced, such as Ethiopia, Ghana and Zambia, UNFPA had developed close working partnerships with the Government and other donors. However, it had not yet contributed to common funding mechanisms. It was advisable, said the paper, for UNFPA to proceed proactively but cautiously with regard to the SWAp process, documenting and building on its own in-country experiences, as well as on the experiences shared by other donors and Governments. It would benefit from continued dialogue with other donors in order to develop joint strategies for more effective partnerships in SWAp implementation.

On 16 April [E/1999/35 (dec. 99/4)], the Executive Board encouraged UNFPA to take an active part in the policy-making and planning stages in SWAs in programme countries, with the concurrence and overall guidance of Governments, and to take an important advocacy role regarding reproductive and sexual health services and reproductive rights in such processes. The Fund was asked to strengthen the competencies needed to secure full and active participation in the policy-making and planning stages in SWAs, and to strengthen arrangements to access a full range of technical expertise. The Executive Director was asked to present a conference room paper on UNFPA's involvement in SWAs in 2000.

Reproductive health in emergency situations

The Executive Director submitted to the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board a February report on UNFPA support for reproductive health in emergency situations [DP/FPA/1999/6]. She stated that, since 1994, 52 UNFPA-supported emergency reproductive health projects had been carried out in 33 countries in collaboration with 24 executing agencies, at a cost of $6.4 million. Countries assisted included Afghanistan, Albania, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Eritrea, Guinea-Bissau, Rwanda and the United Republic of Tanzania. All activities emphasized reproductive health, including the need for particular attention to the treatment and prevention of sexual violence and sexually transmitted diseases, including the prevention of HIV/AIDS. UNFPA had developed a number of manuals, kits and training materials and had provided important support for developing demographic and other databases needed in emergency situations. However, its efforts and impact were constrained by its programming and administrative procedures and by the limited success in mobilizing outside funds for projects included in consolidated appeals. To improve its work in reproductive health in emergency/crisis situations, UNFPA would develop mechanisms and strengthen the management of emergency requests through close cooperation with the Emergency Relief Adviser in Geneva. Appropriate staff training would also be provided. UNFPA proposed making more flexible use of a limited amount of programme funds to provide immediate support for reproductive health and data provision needs in emergencies.

On 16 April [dec. 99/6], the Executive Board requested the Executive Director to submit to its third regular session in 1999 a report containing concrete proposals on UNFPA emergency programming procedures. Submission of that report was delayed until 2000.

Country and intercountry programmes

UNFPA's provisional project expenditures for country and intercountry (regional and interregional) programmes in 1999 totalled $187.1 million, compared to $216.6 million in 1998, according to the Executive Director's statistical overview report covering 1999 [DP/FPA/2000/8 (Part I, Add.1)]. The 1999 figure included $150.7 million for country programmes and $36.4 million for intercountry programmes. In accordance with criteria defined by the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 989], total expenditures in 1999 to those countries most in need amounted to $96 million, compared to $109.3 million in 1998. Country population assessments (CPAs) were completed in 12 countries—Azerbaijan, Chad, Indonesia, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Pakistan, the Philippines, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan and Zimbabwe. In the case of Viet Nam, a common country assessment, rather than a CPA, was carried out.

The overarching objective of the intercountry programme, 1996-1999, was to build country capacity to implement the ICPD Programme of Action in the Fund's three programme priority areas: reproductive health, including family planning and sexual health; population and development strategies (PDS); and advocacy, with gender concerns mainstreamed into each of those areas.

Africa. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in sub-Saharan Africa totalled $59.4 million in 1999, compared to $70.8 million in 1998. Most of the resources (65 per cent) went to reproductive health and family planning, followed by PDS (27.1 per cent) and advocacy (4.9 per cent).

Training was the predominant function in the reproductive health and PDS sectors. Of eight reproductive health initiatives, five were training projects in English, French and Portuguese dealing with information, education and communication (two), reproductive health among refugees (two) and integrated community-based delivery of services (one). Special efforts were made to attract female participants in all training projects. Four PDS training and research projects were taking place. Capacity-building for advocacy was undertaken at the Organization of African Unity; an African Population Commission was established; and projects were launched with parliamentarians, national-level networks of women ministers and youth-related organizations. The programme also began cooperation with new implementing partners and strengthened collaboration with other UN organizations and agencies. Tangible results were also evident in the advocacy sector, especially with respect to two projects dealing with African political leaders. Eleven national-level networks of women ministers and parliamentarians were established and all undertook advocacy, lobbying and sensitization activities. Some 15 regional meetings were organized, contributing significantly to moving the reproductive health agenda forward.

In January [E/1999/35 (dec. 99/3)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board approved assistance to Burundi and Madagascar; in April [dec. 99/7], it approved assistance to Benin.

Arab States and Europe. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in the Arab States and Europe totalled $21.8 million in 1999, compared to $24.4 million in 1998. Most of the resources (67 per cent) went to reproductive health and family planning, followed by PDS (26.6 per cent) and advocacy (2.8 per cent).

Reproductive health activities in the Arab States addressed the improvement of management and quality of services and supported research and information dissemination. In Europe, projects concentrated on training in service delivery and contraceptive technology and on improving data collection and analysis in family planning and reproductive health.

PDS projects in the Arab States included policy-oriented research, NGO management training and the dissemination of information on population and development. In Europe, inter-related projects supported policy-oriented research on fertility decline, ageing and migration. In the advocacy sector, assistance in the Arab States was directed to studies and information activities on women's reproductive health, the role of Arab women, empowerment of youth, and post-ICPD advocacy concerns. In Europe, projects worked to raise awareness of reproductive health among youth and to mobilize donors for the year 2000 round of population censuses.

Programmes for both subregions made some advances in broadening the numbers of dedicated partner agencies and organizations. Among the noteworthy achievements were advances in promoting the adoption of a comprehensive approach to reproductive health, broadening the scope of a new regional survey, and including advocacy and peer counselling in a major regional reproductive health project for youth. Advocacy projects surpassed their expected outcomes; that was attributed to the use of a wide range of media to reach target audiences.

Asia and the Pacific. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in Asia and the Pacific totalled $63.1 million in 1999, compared to $69.9 million in 1998. Most of the resources (67.7 per cent) went to reproductive health and family planning, followed by PDS (23.3 per cent) and advocacy (6 per cent).

The regional Asia programme comprised 32 projects in the areas of reproductive health, PDS and advocacy. Training projects in reproductive health focused on community-based service-delivery models and strengthening and promoting collaboration between the Government and NGOs. Assistance was provided for research in four countries on gender relationships among Muslim women, the development of reproductive health indicators, sexual abuse among children and an assessment of reproductive health care. Two projects supported information, education and communication. PDS projects supported research on female migration and employment, problems of ageing and support for the elderly, and the effects of the economic crisis in Asian countries. Other PDS initiatives aimed to improve the quality of population data and technologies for data collection and dissemination and to develop information networks to improve coordination among national and subregional centres. Advocacy projects promoted awareness and networking among parliamentarians.

The regional projects were executed by 15 partner agencies, including NGOs, UN agencies and academic institutions, all of which played leading roles in the areas of population and development in the region. The regional programme impact was limited because of the absence of means for transferring tools, methods, experience and technology from global to regional and from regional to national levels. It was noted that in project execution it was crucial to involve multiple agencies that could complement skills and experiences to build a multidisciplinary sense into the project implementation process.

On 17 September [E/1999/35 (dec. 99/25)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board approved country programmes for Azerbaijan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Pakistan, the Philippines, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan.

Latin America and the Caribbean. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in Latin America and the Caribbean totalled $19 million in 1999, compared to $24.7 million in 1998. Most of the resources (53.7 per cent) went to reproductive health and family planning, followed by PDS (31 per cent) and advocacy (6.8 per cent).

Reproductive health initiatives were undertaken to improve conditions for poorer women, adolescents and indigenous groups in the region, while advocacy campaigns promoted access to services and efforts to prevent violence against women. Knowledge was exchanged among NGOs and the governmental sector, and research on existing patterns of surgical contraception supported the concept of ensuring an adequate mix of contraceptives. Training in reproductive health and population in schools of health was funded, while supportive advocacy efforts brought population, reproductive health and rights and gender concerns to regional forums to influence political decision-making. PDS projects included support for the development of population databases, provision of new technologies for census activity, dissemination of socio-demographic data and demographic training.

Noticeable progress was made with respect to planned objectives, including advances in promoting reproductive health and rights. Considerable activity in the PDS sector was recorded, especially in assistance to countries in improving methodologies and technologies for upcoming census rounds. In the advocacy area, efforts focused in particular on increasing awareness of the concept of reproductive health. Regional meetings were conducted for professionals, policy makers and parliamentarians, and there was a major regional workshop for NGOs on the topic of reproductive health awareness. Much effort was also made to support the participation of key nationals to speak up for ICPD goals in regional forums on economic and social issues.

By a September decision [E/1999/35 (dec. 99/25)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board approved the extension of and additional resources for the country programme for Haiti.

Interregional programmes. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA's interregional and global programmes in 1999 totalled $23.8 million, compared to $26.8 million in 1998. Of the total, 47.9 per cent went to PDS, 38 per cent to reproductive health/family planning, 11.1 per cent to advocacy and 3.3 per cent to multisectoral activities.

The interregional reproductive health programme continued to promote the development of new methods of fertility regulation and to collect information on contraceptive safety. UNFPA strengthened its cooperation with UNDP, the World Bank and WHO, supporting the latter in providing countries with appropriate technical guidance in operationalizing reproductive health by furnishing technical orientation on specific aspects, such as adolescent reproductive health. A major focus was the Centres of Excellence Initiative that offered training within South-South co-operative settings, and the 12-country Partners in Population and Development Initiative that provided training, research and networking on ICPD Programme of Action issues. A major thrust of the intercountry programme was the Global Initiative on Contraceptive Requirements and Logistics Management Needs (see below). Through that Initiative, studies on contraceptive requirements and logistics management needs were completed in 11 countries, followed by expanded publication of the UNFPA contraceptive commodity database on donor-supported contraceptives. Technical assistance and training in logistics management and forecasting were provided through six regional workshops. The monthly injectable Cyclofem became widely available in three countries as a result of a 16-country market and needs assessment, and the Thailand-based Concept Foundation became self-sustaining through private-sector sales. Investing in adolescents was an important goal of UNFPA. In Egypt, Uganda and Zambia, efforts were made to promote the reproductive health of adolescent refugees. Another important area of the Fund's work was that of violence against women. UNFPA developed a programme advisory note on the reproductive health effects of gender-based violence to guide country-level programmatic efforts.

In the PDS sector, emphasis was placed on increasing the attention of policy makers to the links between population and development planning. The most significant undertaking was the large-scale strengthening of the Global Training Programme in Population and Sustainable Development. Five regional training centres became fully operational, meeting training demands from all regions. UNFPA continued to receive increased requests from countries to monitor their own policies, programme implementation and progress in achieving ICPD goals, as well as the goals of other major UN conferences. Among the principal research areas supported by the interregional programme were sociocultural research methodologies, which sought to provide frameworks for the study of the impact of social and cultural factors on fertility behaviour, and of the role and status of women. The information dissemination projects included the Population Information Network (POPIN), the Annual Review of Population Law, the UNFPA Inventory of Population Projects in Developing Countries Around the World, and demographic software such as DemoTables and PopMap. Special attention was given to mainstreaming gender concerns into population and development policy and programme activities.

The Fund's interregional advocacy efforts were carried out mainly through the production, distribution and dissemination of publications, computer software and audio-visual materials. The annual State of World Population report, which was central to the Fund's advocacy efforts, continued to be produced and distributed. The Fund improved the flow of information to NGOs and helped them to be more effective advocates for mobilizing resources and achieving ICPD goals. It also increased its activities with NGOs, especially in Europe and Japan, through its programme of block grants. With regard to media outreach, UNFPA sponsored many regional meetings of print and television representatives from the developing and industrialized world to create a nucleus of informed journalists. Its advocacy resources were teamed with those of the UN Department of Public Information and the specialized agencies for the production of films, radio programmes and brochures.

Global Initiative on Reproductive Health Commodity Management

The Global Initiative on Reproductive Health Commodity Management (formerly the Global Initiative on Contraceptive Requirements and Logistics Management Needs) played a crucial role in UNFPA's efforts to strengthen reproductive health commodity security and management as part of its country programmes. Its work emphasized building national capacity in order to make safe, high-quality reproductive health commodities accessible and available at affordable prices. At the headquarters level, it coordinated with donors to help countries meet shortfalls in the supply of those commodities.

During 1999, the Global Initiative conducted in-depth studies in Kazakhstan, Mongolia and Uzbekistan and organized workshops in logistics management training strategy development, involving two participants from each of five to six countries in a region. Since 1997, it had operated a pilot project, the UNFPA Private-Sector Initiative, to expand the commercial market share of contraceptive supply in selected countries. The Private-Sector Initiative sponsored studies of relevant countries that emphasized a systematic, coordinated and cohesive approach to the total contraceptive market and carried out follow-up missions in Ghana, India and Zimbabwe.

Global Contraceptive Commodity Programme

The UNFPA Global Contraceptive Commodity Programme continued to provide essential buffer stocks of contraceptives and other reproductive health supplies to developing countries. In 1999, it supplied over 20 million condoms to nine countries and 12 emergency destinations and expanded its stock holdings to include oral contraceptive pills and intrauterine devices. It also supplied 1,200 emergency reproductive health kits with a value of $1.3 million to 19 destinations.

Financial and administrative questions

UNFPA's General Fund income for 1999 totalled $254.2 million, a decrease of $24.5 million (9 per cent) from 1998 [DP/FPA/2000/15]. Expenditures totalled $279.6 million, resulting in an excess of expenditure over income of $25.4 million. After adjusting for excess expenditure in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1013] and the reduction in the level of the operational reserve of $6 million, UNFPA was required to draw down from the operational reserve to finance a regular resource deficit of $26 million. That deficit, along with a $2.4 million balance of unexpended cost-sharing resources, comprised the negative $23.6 million in unspent General Fund resources at the end of 1999. Contributions, including additions and adjustments to pledges during 1999, totalled $249.5 million, a decrease of $21.5 million from 1998. The cumulative outstanding balance of unpaid pledges for 1999 and prior years was $ 1.5 million.

In a 17 September decision [E/1999/35 (dec. 99/24)], the Executive Board noted with concern the significant decline in core contributions to UNFPA. It requested the Executive Director to bring the critical resource situation to the Secretary-General's attention with a view to mobilizing the support of world political leaders in order to reverse the declining trend.

2000-2001 budget

The UNFPA Executive Director submitted to the Executive Board a July report on estimates for the 2000-2001 biennial support budget [DP/FPA/1999/11]. She requested appropriations of $149.4 million gross ($127.4 million net) for the biennium to cover the cost of staff and support resources. The proposed net budget reflected a slight decrease of 0.1 per cent, or $0.2 million in absolute terms, from the budget for 1998-1999. The biennial support budget for 2000-2001 accounted for 18.7 per cent of total expenditure; in the 1998-1999 budget, the corresponding figure was 16.5 per cent. Although it appeared that the 2000-2001 biennial support budget was larger than the 1998-1999 budget, the increase in percentage was due to declining resources, not to an increase in the size of the support budget.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) issued an August report containing its comments on the support budget estimates [DP/FPA/1999/14], noting that it had been prepared in accordance with the common format and guidelines approved by the Executive Board in its decisions on the harmonized presentation of budgets of UNDP, UNFPA and UNICEF. The Committee welcomed the additional information submitted to it with the budget estimates. However, it believed that the report still required some further refinements.

The Executive Board, in September [E/1999/35 (dec. 99/21)], took note of the UNFPA 2000-2001 support budget estimates and of the ACABQ report and urged the Executive Director to continue to make efforts to contain both the administrative and programme support costs at headquarters, as well as in the field. It approved gross appropriations of $ 149.4 million for the support budget and resolved that income estimates of $22 million should be used to offset the gross appropriations, resulting in estimated net appropriations of $127.4 million. The Executive Director was asked to report to the Executive Board in 2000 on any significant increases or shortfalls in estimated income and to suggest proposals on how to deal with the new situation.

Audit reports

A November report [DP/FPA/2000/4] described action taken in response to the recommendations contained in the report of the United Nations

Board of Auditors for the 1996-1997 biennium [A/52/5/Add.7], including: showing the value of contributions-in-kind; establishing procedures for accurately recording non-expendable project equipment held by Governments and NGOs and disclosing the value of the inventory; amending the financial regulations to require exchange losses, other than those arising from voluntary contributions, to be charged as expenditure; taking action to recover overdue travel advances; expediting the receipt of outstanding disbursement reports in respect of Government- and NGO-executed projects; reviewing inactive projects and closing them if appropriate; negotiating with Governments the issue of cost-free premises; and undertaking a comprehensive staff review.

In an April report [DP/FPA/1999/8], the Executive Director described UNFPA internal audit and oversight activities in 1998. They included: management audits in eight field offices; compliance audits in 15 countries in the Africa region; compliance audits in seven countries in the Asia and Pacific region; and a review of one division at UNFPA headquarters. In general, the country offices in the Africa and Asia and Pacific regions were rated as satisfactory based on the audits. Of 43 reports issued in 1998 (including 1997 audits for which reports were issued during 1998), the level of internal controls and compliance with financial and administrative requirements were found to be satisfactory in most offices, with two offices receiving a good rating. However, one office was rated seriously deficient; two offices were rated deficient in at least one area of the operations; nine offices were rated marginally deficient; and five offices were rated marginally deficient in at least one area of the operations.

Policy application reviews were conducted in five countries in 1998—three in Latin America and the Caribbean region and one each in the Africa and Asia and Pacific regions.

2000-2003 work plan

In an April report [DP/FPA/1999/9], the Executive Director outlined the 2000-2003 UNFPA work plan and put forward a request for programme expenditure authority. The report reviewed UNFPA 1998 resource utilization; described the work plan for 2000-2003, including information about projected resources and the proposed utilization of programmable resources among country categories; and presented the Executive Director's proposed programme expenditure authority for 2000 from regular resources, the estimates for new programmable regular resources for 2001-2003 and the estimates of new programme resources from multi-bilateral funding.

The income from regular resources for 1998 decreased to $278 million from $289.7 million in 1997. The income assumption for 1999 was $280 million from regular resources, about the same level as the actual income of 1998. With that income assumption, the need to replenish the operational reserve by $5 million utilized in 1998 and the absence of carry-forwards from 1998, UNFPA was obliged to allocate a lower level of resources for programme areas in 1999—$220 million compared to $248 million in 1998. That would slow down programme implementation, losing the momentum gained since ICPD in 1994. In view of the decrease in regular resources, including the non-contribution of one of the major traditional donors, the importance of multi-bilateral and other resources became greater.

The UNFPA work plan was a rolling four-year plan based on income projections, prior commitments and foreseeable needs. The proposed work plan for 2000-2003 estimated programmable resources based on an income assumption of $280 million in 1999, minus the necessary support budget and additions to the operational reserve. The Executive Director, in line with the Executive Board's approval of the work plan for 1999-2002 [YUN 1998, p. 1016], assumed a constant 7 per cent income growth rate for the current work-plan period. Thus, income projections for 2000-2003 of $1,331 million from regular resources represented a decrease compared to the 1999-2002 work-plan period of $1,474 million. The estimated income from multi-bilateral resources was $35 million per year, yielding a total combined income of $1,471 million. The programmable resources from regular resources were projected to increase from $220 million for 1999 to $234 million for 2000, $250 million for 2001, $269 million for 2002 and $288 million for 2003. That yielded a total of $1,041 million for the four-year period, compared to the estimated $1,174 million for the period 1999-2002. Since multi-bilateral income was fully used for programmes, the total combined programmable resources from regular and multi-bilateral resources were estimated at $1,181 million for the period, or an annual average of $295 million, compared to $319 million estimated for the previous work-plan period. Regrettably, that would compel UNFPA to scale back future programming considerably.

While programmable resources were 11 per cent lower than the level foreseen in the previous year's work plan, the Executive Director proposed to distribute the absolute amount of $758 million for country activities, an average reduction of 10 per cent compared to what was previously foreseen. In addition, a new cycle of technical support services was estimated to require $97 million, 9 per cent less than the amount approved by the Board for the 1996-1999 cycle. Administrative and operational services costs for UN agency-executed projects and other projects were estimated at $36 million from regular resources for 2000-2003, or $4 million less than for 1999-2002.

The new work plan reflected the 1996 Board decision to use a new system of allocation of UNFPA resources [YUN 1996, p. 989] by categorizing developing countries in three groups. The share for Group A countries (those with low level of development) was expected to increase to 67 per cent for the period 2000-2003; the share for Group B countries (those with considerable progress in achieving ICPD goals) was planned to average 24 per cent; the share of resources for Group C countries (those that had met the thresholds of all seven ICPD goal indicators) to average 5 per cent; and for other countries and countries with economies in transition the share would be an average of 4 per cent for the same period.

By a June decision [E/1999/35 (dec. 99/13)], the Executive Board approved the request for 2000 programme expenditure authority for expected new programmable resources at an estimated level of $224 million and asked the Executive Director to report on any significant increases or shortfalls in estimated income for 2000. It noted the Executive Director's annual estimates of new programmable resources for 2001-2003 and asked her to reconsider them in preparing MYFF. The Board endorsed the use of new programmable resources for multi-bilateral funding at $35 million per year for 2000-2003 and asked the Executive Director to report on progress in developing MYFF in 2000.

Technical Advisory Programme

In response to a 1998 Executive Board decision [YUN 1998, p. 1016], the Executive Director submitted a July report on the UNFPA Technical Advisory Programme (TAP) (formerly the Technical Support Services (TSS) system) for 2000-2003 [DP/FPA/1999/12]. It stated that TAP was continuously evolving in response to the changing needs and priorities of countries, the availability of new technologies for supporting and delivering technical assistance, as well as in relation to changing cost structures and resource considerations. TAP maintained a multidisciplinary and inter-agency approach with its primary purpose being to improve national capacity to plan and implement population programmes that would help achieve the goals and objectives of the ICPD Programme of Action. Having considered other options for the provision of technical assistance, UNFPA proposed to retain the existing arrangements but with stronger emphasis on national capacity-building and technical backstopping of the Country Advisory Teams (CATs).

During the 2000-2003 cycle, increased development and use of national expertise would be actively pursued as a strategy to strengthen national capacity, reduce the current workload of CAT specialists and decrease overall costs. Local hiring resulted in substantial savings to programmes, and resources spent on the training of national consultants were a sound developmental investment. UNFPA would also adopt additional measures to improve the cost-effectiveness of the programme.

The Fund proposed a total of 152 Professional posts (134 CAT specialists' posts plus 18 Technical Advisory Services (TAS) specialists' posts) for 2000-2003, compared with the current 154 posts. Based on an analysis of the expected demand for the services of the CAT specialists, the Fund needed to increase the number of CAT specialists' posts to 134, as compared with 130 for 1996-1999. However, if sufficient resources were not available, the Fund proposed 113 CAT posts as a second option. Under both options in the new TAP arrangements, the Fund also proposed 18 TAS specialists' posts, as well as backstopping from NGOs.

In another report [DP/FPA/1999/4], submitted in accordance with a 1998 Executive Board request [YUN 1998, p. 1016], the Executive Director submitted a brief progress report on the effectiveness of the improvements that had been implemented in the operation of the TSS system.

By a September decision [E/1999/35 (dec. 99/19)], the Executive Board supported the increased emphasis on national capacity-building under TAP. It expressed concern that the Executive Director's report did not fully respond to its request for a detailed strategic analysis of options for ensuring that country programmes received high-quality technical and strategic support; that it did not adequately describe the value added by TAP to the overall work of UNFPA; and about the high cost of the arrangements proposed. The Executive Director was authorized to commit $56.5 million over the two-year period 2000-2001 to implement the TAP arrangements, with $47.5 million being made available from regular resources, and $9 million from multi-bilateral and/or other resources, including regular resources, should income levels increase. The Executive Director was asked to: give priority to category A countries; base the implementation on an analysis of programme country needs in terms of access to local expertise; and not interrupt ongoing programmes. She was also asked to submit a report in 2000 on progress made in implementing the TAP arrangements and to report in 2001 on further options to ensure that UNFPA country programmes received the strategic and technical assistance they needed. The Board requested the Executive Director to elaborate further on the proposal to establish a country support team of office to cover countries with economies in transition and submit the information to the Board for approval in 2000.

Funding strategy

On 16 April [dec. 99/5], the Executive Board, having considered the Executive Director's conference room paper on the multi-year planning, management and funding framework [DP/FPA/1999/CRP.2], reaffirmed its 1998 decision on the UNFPA funding strategy [YUN 1998, p. 1016], in which it decided that the Fund should develop a multi-year funding framework (MYFF) that integrated programme objectives, resources, budget and outcomes, with the objective of increasing core resources. It welcomed the steps that UNFPA had taken to implement its 1998 decision and asked the Executive Director to continue to develop the multi-year planning, management and funding framework, taking into account the Executive Board's views and fully respecting the principles contained in the 1998 decision. The Executive Director was asked to submit in 2000 the first MYFF, 2000-2003; the Board decided to hold the first funding session at its second regular session of 2000. It requested the Executive Director to ensure that in future the funding session and the annual reporting on the framework were both held at the second regular session. It also asked her to continue to hold regular open-ended informal consultations with States members of UNFPA on the further development and implementation of MYFF.

Evaluation activities

In a periodic report on evaluation [DP/FPA/2000/10], the Executive Director stated that a total of 316 projects in 103 countries were evaluated during the period 1998-1999. On average, 46 per cent of all operationally completed projects were evaluated. In addition to formal evaluations, all components of UNFPA-funded country programmes were subject to internal reviews as part of the country programme mid-term review process. The new policies and procedures introduced in 1997 required that all UNFPA-assisted country programmes be evaluated at the end of the programme cycle. Of the 29 country programmes that ended during 1998 and 1999, 9 were evaluated. UNFPA was in the process of analysing the root causes of the relatively low compliance rate of country programme evaluations and would recommend measures to address them. Unlike country programmes, end-of-cycle evaluations of intercountry programmes were not required. Nevertheless, a fair number of intercountry projects were assessed.

UN Population Award

The 1999 United Nations Population Award was presented to Dr. Seyed Alireza Marandi of Iran in the individual category and the National Committee for Population and Family Planning of Viet Nam in the institutional one. Dr. Marandi was selected for his almost single-handed change of Iranian population policy. As Deputy Minister of Health in 1983, and Minister of Health in 1985, he championed reproductive health activities and encouraged breastfeeding, longer child spacing and raising the age at which women should give birth to their first child to 20 years. The National Committee was selected for its significant contributions to achievements in the areas of population and family planning in Viet Nam. Established in 1984, the Committee played a key role in the coordination, management and monitoring of population and family planning policy, programmes and strategies. The award was established by the General Assembly in resolution 36/201 [YUN 1981, p. 792], to be presented annually to individuals or institutions for outstanding contributions to increased awareness of population problems and to their solutions.

In September, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the UNFPA Executive Director on the Population Award [A/54/407]. By decision 54/451 of 22 December, the Assembly took note of that report.

Other population activities

Commission on Population and Development

The Commission on Population and Development, at its thirty-second session (New York, 22, 23 and 26 March) [E/1999/25], considered as its central theme population growth, structure and distribution, with special emphasis on sustained economic growth and sustainable development, including education. The Commission also met in open-ended session as the preparatory committee for the General Assembly's special session for the review and appraisal of the implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action (see p. 1006). Both the central theme and the issue of the flow of financial resources for assisting in the implementation of the Programme of Action were considered as follow-up to the recommendations of ICPD (see p. 1019). The Commission also discussed a report on world demographic trends as at 1998 [E/CN.9/1999/5]; the work of the United Nations Population Division in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1018]; and the proposed programme of work in population for the 2000-2001 biennium.

The Commission reaffirmed its 1998 decision [ibid.] that the special theme for the thirty-third (2000) session should be "Gender, population and development" and that the special theme for the thirty-fourth (2001) session should be "Population, environment and development" [dec. 1999/1]. It recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption a draft resolution on population growth, structure and distribution, which was adopted by the Council as resolution 1999/10 (see p. 1020), and a draft decision on its thirty-second session report and provisional agenda for its thirty-third session. The Council took note of the report and approved the draft agenda by decision 1999/224 of 26 July.

1999 UN activities

In a report on programme implementation and progress of work of the UN Population Division in 1999 [E/CN.9/2000/6], the Secretary-General described the activities dealing with the analysis of demographic variables at the world level; world population estimates and projections; population policy and socio-economic development; monitoring, coordination and dissemination of population information; and technical cooperation.

The report entitled "Levels and Trends of Contraceptive Use as Assessed in 1998" was completed and issued as a working paper. Its findings showed that worldwide contraceptive prevalence had reached 58 per cent, up from 50 per cent in 1983. Average levels of use were higher in the more developed regions than in the less developed regions, at 70 and 55 per cent, respectively. Data for the report were compiled from national sample surveys from 142 countries representing 92 per cent of the world's population and pertained on average to the year 1993. It was estimated that, by 2025, contraceptive prevalence for the world as a whole would need to be at least 66 per cent in order to attain the projected decline in fertility to 2.2 children per woman. To achieve that goal, the number of contraceptive users among married women of reproductive age would need to be nearly 60 per cent higher in 2025 than in 1993. Globally, female sterilization was the single most-used method of contraception, accounting for one third of all contraceptive use. The intrauterine device was a distant second (22 per cent), followed by the pill (14 per cent).

The Population Division issued a wall chart on marriage patterns, "World Marriage Patterns 1999", which showed the most recent data available from censuses and surveys on patterns of marriage for 197 countries or areas. The data shown included the proportions of men and women aged 15-19, 20-24 and 45-49 who were ever married, and the average age at first marriage for men and women.

Work continued on the preparation of the manual on the estimation of adult mortality, which presented census survival methods, methods utilizing intercensal deaths (extinct generations), estimations of adult deaths derived from the survivorship of parents, and estimations derived from the survivorship of siblings. It was expected that the manual would be published in 2000. The proceedings of the Symposium on Health and Mortality (Brussels, Belgium, 19-22 November 1997) were published as Health and Mortality: Issues of Global Concern. An updated "United Nations DataBase on Mortality in Childhood" was completed, with data for 92 countries of Africa, Asia and Latin America and the Caribbean. Each country file contained estimates of infant mortality, child mortality and under-five mortality, based on all the sources of data available since 1960.

The report of the 1998 Technical Symposium on International Migration and Development [YUN 1998, p. 1005] was issued in February 1999 and the Population Division prepared the Secretary-General's report on international migration and development [A/54/207] (see p. 1020). A database on trends in migrant stock by sex, completed in June, was a revised version of a first set issued in 1994, with a considerably more comprehensive collection of census data. It presented estimates of international migrants, by sex, for each country and major region, as at early 1965, 1975, 1985 and 1990, and the annual growth rate of the stock of international migrants for 1965-1975, 1975-1985, 1985-1990 and 1965-1990.

The results of the 1998 revision of world population estimates and projections, which were officially announced in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1019], were published in two volumes: World Population Prospects: The 1998 Revision, vol. I, Comprehensive Tables; and vol. II, Sex and Age. A third volume, entitled Analytical Report, had been completed and was available in draft form. It contained a detailed analysis of levels, trends and future prospects of fertility, mortality, international migration and population size and growth in the world's major areas, regions and countries. A set of diskettes presenting the results of the 1998 revision in digital form had also been issued. A new set of population estimates and projections over the medium term (1950 to 2050) was expected to be completed by the end of 2000. Work on the 2000 revision was under way, with concentration on the updating of population estimates so that the base year for all projection variants could be set to 2000.

An updated set of estimates and projections of the urban and rural populations of all countries and of all cities with a population of 750,000 inhabitants or more in 1995 was completed and announced in December. A report on the results obtained would be issued in 2000. As the date of completion of those estimates and projections was usually one year later than that of national population estimates and projections, the series was being renamed to coincide with the year of completion. Thus, the 1998 revision was being issued under the title World Urbanization Prospects: The 1999 Revision. According to that revision, as at mid-1999, 47 per cent of the world population lived in urban areas and half of the world population was expected to live in urban centres by 2007. By 2030, over three fifths of the world population would be urban. The world urban population was growing at a rate of 2.1 per cent per year, more than three times that of the rural population (0.7 per cent per year). As a result, urban areas were absorbing 57 million persons each year, compared with the 21 million absorbed annually by rural areas. By 2025-2030, urban areas would be growing at a projected rate of 1.5 per cent per year, gaining 71 million persons annually.

A major activity of the work programme in 1999 was the completion of the report on the Eighth United Nations Inquiry among Governments on Population and Development, the first Inquiry to be carried out since the convening of ICPD. As at 1 October 1999, 90 countries had replied to the Inquiry, corresponding to an overall response rate of 47 per cent. The seventh edition of the Global Population Policy Database, 1999 (GRIPP: 1999) was completed, along with the accompanying diskette and diskette documentation. In the area of emerging issues in population policy, the ongoing project on abortion policies was significantly expanded. In addition to the wall chart entitled "World Abortion Policies, 1999", the first volume of a three-volume series—Abortion Policies: A Global Review—was completed (vol. I, Afghanistan to France) and the second and third volumes were under preparation. The publication aimed to provide objective information about the nature of abortion law and policy in all countries at the end of the twentieth century. For each country, there was a fact sheet containing information on the grounds on which abortions were performed, additional requirements and key indicators on reproductive health.

Included in the background text was information on the social and political setting of changes in abortion laws and policies, the ways in which those laws and policies had been formulated and how they had evolved over time.

As part of its ongoing work on the demographic, economic and social aspects of population ageing, the first UN wall chart on population ageing was issued in 1999 to coincide with the International Year of Older Persons and the special session of the General Assembly for the overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action. According to the 1998 revision of population estimates and projections, 1 of every 10 persons was aged 60 years or over; by 2050, 1 person of every 5 and, by 2150, 1 of every 3 would be aged 60 years or over. Although the percentage of older persons was currently much higher in the more developed than in the less developed regions, the pace of ageing in less developed regions was more rapid, and their transition from a young to an old age structure would be faster. The majority of older persons were women. Among those aged 60 years or over, 55 per cent were women. In addition, among the oldest old (aged 80 years or over), 65 per cent were women.

During 1999, the Population Division completed the fifth edition of the World Population Monitoring Report. Following the Assembly's special session, the Division prepared and issued a special publication, Review and Appraisal of the Progress Made in Achieving the Goals and Objectives of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development: 1999 report [Sales No. E.99.XIII.16], to make the Assembly's substantive review of ICPD and resulting recommendations easily available to the international community.

During the year, the Division's Global Population Information Network (POPIN) project continued to use the Internet as a tool to stimulate and facilitate global, regional and national networking for the dissemination and utilization of population information. A primary POPIN focus was on increasing access to substantive population information and data to better enable implementation of the Programme of Action and to provide information support for informed decision-making. In partnership with the UN regional commissions and specialized agencies, the Global POPIN focused on strengthening the regional POPIN networks and building interregional, regional and national population information capacities in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe and Latin America and the Caribbean. Regional capacity-building workshops combined discussion of demographic and reproductive health topics and training in the use of the Internet, including web site creation. Collaboration between the Global POPIN and the regional commissions also resulted in the creation of regional Internet web sites for the display and dissemination of information about the regional implementation of the Programme of Action and a global web site for the Assembly's special session.

Other web sites created during 1999 included one produced in collaboration with the League of Arab States Population Research Unit for the dissemination of Arabic population information and data; a bilingual (French/English) web site designed to enhance the flow of population information within the Africa region (created in collaboration with the Union for African Population Studies); a web site for POPIN-Africa, created by the Economic Commission for Africa; and a Spanish-English web site, created by the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, to encourage regional sharing of population information and data and to make information on regional events and population-related news known to a wider public. In 1999, the first two issues of Africa's Population and Development Bulletin, an electronic/hard-copy journal, which incorporated contributions from regional African population research institutes, were published. The global and regional POPIN web sites were accessed over 5 million times in 1999.

As to technical cooperation, the Interregional Adviser in Population formulated a programme to build capacity among population research centres in developing countries in the effective use of new technologies of information and communication—particularly the Internet—for population research. As part of that programme, a training workshop on "Internet for population research" was held in Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso, in October, organized in collaboration with the University of Ouagadougou. The workshop marked the launching of a subregional network of francophone population research centres in western Africa, with its own web site and electronic discussion forum. Planning for follow-up activities and similar training workshops for other groups of countries was undertaken.

Chapter IX

Social policy, crime prevention and human resource development

During 1999, the United Nations continued to promote the advancement of social, cultural and human resource development, and to strengthen its crime prevention and criminal justice programme.

In February, the Commission for Social Development, the body responsible for follow-up to the 1995 World Summit for Social Development focused on the priority themes: "Social services for all", and "Initiation of the overall review of the implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development"; and on the review of relevant United Nations plans and programmes of action pertaining to the situation of social groups.

The Preparatory Committee for the 2000 Special Session of the General Assembly on the Implementation of the Outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and Further Initiatives held its first session in May and July, and a resumed session in September. In October, the Assembly decided that the title of the special session would be: "World Summit for Social Development and beyond: achieving social development for all in a globalizing world".

Other social issues addressed by the Assembly included follow-up to the 1994 International Year of the Family and implementation of the 1982 World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons. Regarding cultural development, the Assembly took action on the questions of the return and restitution of cultural property, the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations in 2001, the Olympic truce and the Bethlehem 2000 project.

The Commission on Crime Prevention, in April/May, continued to consider preparations for the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and Treatment of Offenders (Tenth Crime Congress), scheduled for April 2000, and prepared for the Congress a preliminary draft of the Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice: Meeting the Challenges of the Twenty-first Century. In other action, the inter-governmental process for establishing a convention against transnational organized crime and three additional legal instruments was launched when the Ad Hoc Committee on its elaboration met for the first time in January. In December, the Assembly decided to convene a high-level conference in Palermo, Italy, in 2000 to finalize and adopt the Convention and its Protocols.

Human resources development remained the focus of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and the United Nations University.

Social policy and cultural issues

Social aspects of development

Commission for Social Development

The Commission for Social Development, at its thirty-seventh session (New York, 9-19 February) [E/1999/26], considered several topics in the context of the follow-up to the 1995 World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113]: the priority themes "Social services for all", and "Initiation of the overall review of the implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development"; and the review of UN plans and programmes of action pertaining to the situation of social groups (see below). It adopted agreed conclusions on action to promote the efficient and effective delivery of social services for all, and a resolution inviting Governments to provide additional input for the review of the implementation of the outcome of the 1995 World Summit in 2000. The Commission also adopted a resolution on the International Year of Older Persons (1999) (see PART THREE, Chapter XI), as well as five decisions. It recommended for adoption by the Economic and Social Council a resolution on policies and programmes involving youth (see PART THREE, Chapter XI) and a decision on the Commission's 1999 report and the provisional agenda and documentation for its 2000 session. A decision calling for action by the Council dealt with the nomination of Commission members. In other action, the Commission took note of a Secretariat note [E/CN.5/1999/L.2] containing the 2000-2001 proposed programme of work in social policy and development [dec. 37/105].

By decision 1999/259 of 28 July, the Council took note of the Commission's report on its thirty-seventh session and endorsed its resolutions and decisions. It also approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the Commission's thirty-eighth (2000) session.

Follow-up to 1995

World Summit for Social Development

In 1999, the UN system continued to carry out activities at the national and international levels to implement the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action [YUN 1995, p. 1114], adopted at the 1995 World Summit for Social Development.

In February, the Commission for Social Development considered follow-up to the 1999 World Summit and the Preparatory Committee for the Special Session of the General Assembly on the Implementation of the Outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and Further Initiatives (2000) held its first substantive session in May and July and a resumed session in September. In accordance with Assembly resolution 53/28 [YUN 1998, p. 1026], the special session was scheduled to take place from 26 to 30 June in Geneva.

On 2 February, the Council decided to invite those non-governmental organizations (NGOs) that had been accredited to the World Summit for Social Development to attend the thirty-seventh session of the Commission, provided that they had started the process of applying for consultative status in accordance with Council decision 1996/315 [YUN 1996, p. 1368] (decision 1999/206).

On 15 November, the Council adopted a similar decision with regard to NGOs attending the Commission's thirty-eighth (2000) session (decision 1999/294).

Commission action. In February, the Commission for Social Development, the body responsible for Summit follow-up and implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action, focused on the priority themes: "Social services for all" and "Initiation of the overall review of the implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development"; and the review of relevant UN plans and programmes of action pertaining to the situation of social groups.

In a January report [E/CN.5/1999/2], the Secretary-General presented recommendations with regard to meeting the Summit's target of quality basic social services for all, focusing on social service availability and coverage; establishing partnerships among providers and users; generating adequate resources to support the services; and improving access to information for all. The report suggested guidelines to ensure that external resources contributed effectively to extending and improving social services.

The Commission also had before it the reports of the Expert Workshop on Innovations in the Delivery and Financing of Social Services (New York, 13-16 October 1998) [E/CN.5/1999/7] and of the Workshop on Ensuring Access to Social Services of Under-served Populations (Bangkok, Thailand, 2-6 November 1998) [E/CN.5/1999/6]. Germany transmitted the report of the International Expert Meeting on Social Services for All (Frankfurt, Germany, 14-16 October 1998) [E/CN.5/1999/11].

On 19 February, the Commission adopted a resolution [E/1999/26 (res. 37/1)] containing agreed conclusions on social services for all, which presented recommendations for action to promote the efficient and effective delivery of social services for all, as a contribution to overall social development. The agreed conclusions set out general principles and goals, suggested priorities for delivery and provision of social services, discussed the need for partnership between Governments and other social actors, stressed the importance of information, encouraged the mobilization of resources and established parameters for international cooperation for social services. The Commission decided to transmit the agreed conclusions to the Economic and Social Council in 1999 and to the Preparatory Committee for the Assembly's special session. Also on 19 February [dec. 37/102], the Commission decided to include in its report the Chairman's summary of the expert panel discussion on social services for all, held during the session.

Regarding the initiation of the overall review of the implementation of the outcome of the 1995 World Summit, the Commission had before it a report of the Secretary-General containing proposals on further initiatives to be addressed by the special session [E/CN.5/1999/3]. The report described criteria for the selection of issues for the special session's agenda and identified issues under each of the 10 commitments for action contained in the Copenhagen Declaration. Another report of the Secretary-General, which provided a preliminary assessment of the implementation of the outcome of the Summit [E/CN.5/1999/4], stated that, although most countries had taken some steps towards fulfilling the commitments made at the Summit, much more needed to be achieved. Several of the targets specified in the Programme of Action would not be met within the period agreed, and in some instances there had been severe setbacks.

In February, the Commission adopted a resolution on the initiation of the overall review of the implementation of the outcome of the Summit [res. 37/31, by which it invited Governments to provide additional inputs, in particular proposals concerning possible further initiatives, to the Preparatory Committee to facilitate its work. It asked the Secretary-General to update the reports on further initiatives and preliminary assessments.

The Commission's review of relevant UN plans and programmes of action pertaining to the situation of social groups focused on the International Year of Older Persons (1999) (see p. 1124).

A report of the Secretary-General [A/54/220], submitted to the General Assembly in August, updated information on the implementation of the outcome of the Summit by intergovernmental bodies and on preparations for the special session.

Special session of General Assembly (2000)

The Preparatory Committee for the Special Session of the General Assembly on the Implementation of the Outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and Further Initiatives held its first session (New York, 17-29 May and 15 July) [A/54/45 & Corr.1] and a resumed session on 21 September, also in New York [A/54/45/Add.1]. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 53/28 [YUN 1998, p. 1026], the Preparatory Committee established an in-session open-ended working group to facilitate consultations on organizational matters for the special session, which met from 24 to 28 May. The Committee had before it contributions prepared by entities of the UN system [A/AC.253/9 & Add. 1-10] and Secretariat notes on the participation of NGOs [A/AC.253/10/Add.1] and the status of preparations for the special session [A/AC.253/6]. Annexed to the Committee's report was a working draft by the Chairman of the Committee on the proposed outcome of the first substantive session.

In May, the Committee recommended three decisions for adoption by the Assembly relating to arrangements for the special session, the session's title and the provisional agenda of the Preparatory Committee's second (2000) session. Decisions that were brought to the Assembly's attention dealt with the role of the UN system; further preparations for the special session; and accreditation and modalities for the participation of NGOs.

On 7 July [A/54/1015], the Preparatory Committee Chairman requested the Assembly to authorize the Committee to hold a half-day resumed session during the week beginning 12 July to conclude negotiations on proposals relating to the review and appraisal and further initiatives. The Committee had also decided to continue to examine arrangements for the participation of NGOs in informal consultations to be held between 30 August and 3 September, with a view to adopting decisions at a resumed session before year's end.

The Assembly authorized the resumed half-day session by decision 53/484 of 12 July.

At that session on 15 July, the Committee took note of two reports of the Secretary-General (see below).

By decision 54/403 C of 20 September, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Committee on Conferences [A/54/313/Add.1], decided that the Preparatory Committee should be authorized to meet in New York during the main part of the Assembly's fifty-fourth (1999) session.

At the resumed first session on 21 September [A/54/45/Add.1], the Preparatory Committee adopted decisions on arrangements regarding the participation of NGOs at the special session for adoption by the Assembly and on NGO accreditation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 October, the General Assembly adopted a series of decisions on the recommendation of the Preparatory Committee. It decided that the special session should have an ad hoc committee of the whole and agreed on arrangements for the participation of observers, States members of the specialized agencies that were non-United Nations members, associate members of the regional commissions and representatives of the UN system (decision 54/404). The Assembly decided that the special session would be entitled "World Summit for Social Development and beyond: achieving social development for all in a globalizing world" (decision 54/405), approved the provisional agenda for the Preparatory Committee's second session (3-14 April 2000) (decision 54/406) and decided on arrangements regarding the participation of NGOs (decision 54/407).

By decision 54/465 of 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item "Implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development" would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session.

Reports of Secretary-General. The Preparatory Committee considered April reports of the Secretary-General on the preliminary assessment of the implementation of the World Summit outcome [A/AC.253/7] and on further initiatives for the implementation of the World Summit outcome [A/AC.253/8]. Both reports updated his reports on the subject to the Commission (see above).

An August report to the Secretary-General summarized preparations made for the special session [A/54/220].

Meetings and symposiums. In May [A/AC.253/11], Spain transmitted the report of the second Tripartite Meeting of Representatives of Parliaments, Governments and Intergovernmental Organizations on follow-up to the World Summit for Social Development (New York, 30-31 March). The meeting was organized by the Inter-Parliamentary Union, in cooperation with the UN Division for Social Policy and Development and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).

The Secretariat organized a symposium on States, markets and social progress: roles and cooperation of the public and private sectors, in cooperation with the State Development Planning Commission of the People's Republic of China (Beijing, 11-13 October) [A/AC.253/14].

The UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs, in cooperation with UNDP and the Government of Turkmenistan, organized a regional symposium on socio-economic policies during macroeconomic stabilization in countries with economies in transition (Ashgabat, Turkmenistan, 9-11 November) [A/AC.253/15].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 November [meeting 51], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/23 [draft: A/54/L.16 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 37].

Implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/139 of 17 December 1991, 47/92 of 16 December 1992, 48/100 of 20 December 1993, 50/161 of 22 December 1995, 50/227 of 24 May 1996, 51/202 of 17 December 1996, 52/25 of 26 November 1997 and 53/28 of 19 November 1998,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council decision 1991/230 of 30 May 1991, resolutions 1992/27 of 30 July 1992, 1995/60 of 28 July 1995, 1996/7 of 22 July 1996, 1996/36 of 26 July 1996, 1997/56 of 23 July 1997, 1998/44 and 1998/46 of 31 July 1998 and 1999/55 of 30 July 1999 and agreed conclusions 1995/1 of 28 July 1995, 1996/1 of 26 July 1996 and 1997/1 of 25 July 1997,

1. Reaffirms the commitments adopted by heads of State and Government at the World Summit for Social Development, contained in the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action, and their pledge to give the highest priority to national, regional and international policies and actions for the promotion of social progress, social justice, the betterment of the human condition and social integration, based on full participation by all;

2. Emphasizes the urgency of placing the goals of social development as contained in the Copenhagen Declaration and the Programme of Action at the centre of economic policy-making, including policies influencing domestic and global market forces and the global economy;

3. Also emphasizes the need for revitalized economic and social development everywhere within a framework that places people at the centre of development and aims to meet human needs rapidly and more effectively by, inter alia, enhancing positive interaction between economic and social policies, and stresses the need for strong, sustained political will at the national, regional and international levels to invest in people and their well-being in order to achieve the objectives of social development;

Special session of the General Assembly and its preparatory process

4. Recalls its resolution 50/161, in which it decided to hold a special session in 2000 for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of the Summit and to consider further actions and initiatives;

5. Reiterates its invitation to Member States to participate in the special session at the highest political level possible and in the meantime to continue to extend support to the preparatory process;

6. Also reiterates its invitation to the regional commissions, in accordance with their mandates and in cooperation with the regional intergovernmental organizations and banks, to continue to be involved in and to support the implementation of the objectives of the Summit, and welcomes in this context the holding of regional meetings for the preparation of the special session;

7. Reiterates once again that the objectives of the special session will be to reaffirm the Declaration and the Programme of Action agreed at the Summit and not to renegotiate them, to identify progress made and constraints therein, as well as lessons learned, in the implementation of the Declaration and the Programme of Action at the national, regional and international levels and to recommend concrete actions and initiatives to further efforts towards full and effective implementation of the Declaration and the Programme of Action;

8. Reaffirms the need for effective partnership and cooperation between Governments, international organizations, the relevant actors of civil society, including the private sector, social partners and non-governmental organizations, in the implementation of and follow-up to the Declaration and the Programme of Action and in the preparatory process of the special session;

9. Takes note of the report on the first session of the Preparatory Committee for the Special Session, established by the General Assembly in its resolution 52/25;

10. Reiterates its invitation to all relevant organs, funds and programmes, as well as the specialized agencies of the United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions and the World Trade Organization, to continue to contribute to and be actively involved in the preparatory process and the special session, and in this regard takes note in particular of the decision of the Preparatory Committee on the role of the United Nations system, in which it invited all relevant organs and specialized agencies of the United Nations system and other concerned organizations, within their mandates, to elaborate and submit review reports and proposals for further action and initiatives, and of its decision on further preparations for the special session;

11. Takes note of the decision adopted by the Preparatory Committee at its resumed first session on accreditation and modalities for participation of non-governmental organizations at the special session, and recalls General Assembly decision 54/407 of 8 October 1999 on arrangements regarding participation of non-governmental organizations in the special session;

12. Recalls the provisional agenda of the second session of the Preparatory Committee as adopted by the General Assembly in its decision 54/406 of 8 October 1999;

13. Also recalls the arrangements for the special session as recommended by the Preparatory Committee and adopted by the General Assembly in its decision 54/404 of 8 October 1999;

14. Further recalls General Assembly decision 54/405 of 8 October 1999, by which the special session will be entitled "World Summit for Social Development and beyond: achieving social development for all in a globalizing world";

15. Recalls the recommendation by the Preparatory Committee at its organizational session that the Commission for Social Development be entrusted with the responsibility of acting as the forum for national reporting, benefiting from the sharing of experiences gained and thus identifying areas where further initiatives are needed for consideration by the Preparatory Committee;

16. Takes note of resolution 37/1 of the Commission for Social Development, entitled "Social services for all", and the agreed conclusions contained therein, and its resolution 37/3 entitled "Initiation of the overall review of the implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development";

17. Recalls that in accordance with the Commission's multi-year programme of work, as approved by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1996/7, the priority theme for its thirty-eighth session in February 2000 will be "Contribution of the Commission to the overall review of the implementation of the outcome of the Summit", and in this connection also recalls the invitation by the Preparatory Committee at its first session to the Commission to undertake the overall review of the implementation of the outcome of the Summit, and to transmit the results of its deliberations to the Preparatory Committee at its second session;

18. Takes note of the ministerial communique adopted by the Economic and Social Council at the high-level segment of its substantive session of 1999, entitled "The role of employment and work in poverty eradication: the empowerment and advancement of women";

19. Reaffirms in this context the decision of the Preparatory Committee at its organizational session that its substantive activities should take into account the results of other major United Nations conferences and contributions by other relevant organs and specialized agencies of the United Nations system;

20. Recalls its decision in its resolution 53/28 to hold the special session at the United Nations Office at Geneva from 26 to 30 June 2000;

21. Expresses its appreciation to the Government of Switzerland for initiating and making arrangements for the special session;

22. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a report on the special session;

24. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and of the special session of the General Assembly in this regard".

Role of cooperatives

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/58 [YUN 1996, p. 1016], the Secretary-General submitted a report on the status and role of cooperatives in the light of new economic and social trends [A/54/57]. The report contained information on legislative and administrative initiatives taken by States regarding cooperatives. The Secretary-General, in cooperation with the Committee for the Promotion and Advancement of Cooperatives, an inter-agency committee comprising an ongoing partnership between three UN agencies and four international NGOs, had sought to ascertain the positions of Governments and national cooperative organizations on the desirability and feasibility of elaborating UN guidelines aimed at creating a supportive environment for the development of cooperatives. Based on information received from 94 governmental agencies and national cooperative organizations in 65 countries, the Secretary-General concluded that no Government was explicitly opposed to such an exercise or had stated explicitly its unwillingness to participate. The cooperative organizations noted that they could not specify their Government's position, but many indicated that, based on current policy, they believed that their Governments would support and contribute to developing the guidelines. Annexed to the report were draft guidelines aimed at creating a supportive environment for the development of cooperatives submitted to the Secretary-General by the Committee.

In February, the Commission on Social Development took note of the Secretary-General's report [dec. 37/104].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/54/595], adopted resolution 54/123 without vote [agenda item 106].

Cooperatives in social development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 47/90 of 16 December 1992 and 49/155 of 23 December 1994 and its resolution 51/58 of 12 December 1996 in which it requested the Secretary-General to ascertain, in cooperation with the Committee for the Promotion and Advancement of Cooperatives, the desirability and feasibility of elaborating United Nations guidelines aimed at creating a supportive environment for the development of cooperatives,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General on the status and role of cooperatives in the light of new economic and social trends and the draft guidelines aimed at creating a supportive environment for the development of cooperatives annexed thereto,

Recognizing that cooperatives, in their various forms, are becoming a major factor of economic and social development by promoting the fullest possible participation in the development process of women and all population groups, including youth, older persons and people with disabilities, and are increasingly providing an effective and affordable mechanism for meeting people's needs for basic social services,

Recognizing also the important contribution and potential of all forms of cooperatives to the follow-up to the World Summit for Social Development, held at Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March 1995, the Fourth World Conference on Women, held at Beijing from 4 to 15 September 1995, the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), held at Istanbul, Turkey, from 3 to 14 June 1996, and the World Food Summit, held at Rome from 13 to 17 November 1996, including their five-year reviews,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the status and role of cooperatives in the light of new economic and social trends;

2. Welcomes the elaboration of the draft guidelines aimed at creating a supportive environment for the development of cooperatives;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to seek views from Governments on the draft guidelines and provide, if necessary, a revised version for adoption;

4. Urges Governments, relevant international organizations and specialized agencies, in collaboration with national and international cooperative organizations, to give due consideration to the role and contribution of cooperatives in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit for Social Development, the Fourth World Conference on Women, the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and the World Food Summit, including their five-year reviews, by, inter alia:

(a) Utilizing and developing fully the potential and contribution of cooperatives for the attainment of social development goals, in particular the eradication of poverty, the generation of full and productive employment and the enhancement of social integration;

(b) Encouraging and facilitating the establishment and development of cooperatives, including taking measures aimed at enabling people living in poverty or belonging to vulnerable groups to engage on a voluntary basis in the creation and development of cooperatives;

(c) Taking appropriate measures aimed at creating a supportive and enabling environment for the development of cooperatives by, inter alia, developing an effective partnership between Governments and the cooperative movement;

5. Invites Governments, relevant international organizations, specialized agencies and local, national and international cooperative organizations to continue to observe the International Day of Cooperatives annually, on the first Saturday of July, as proclaimed by the General Assembly in its resolution 47/90;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the relevant United Nations and other interna- tional organizations, to render support to Member States, as appropriate, in their efforts to create a supportive environment for the development of cooperatives, including through the organization of workshops and seminars at the national, subregional and regional levels;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to prepare, in consultation with Member States and the relevant United Nations organizations and international organizations, a report on the implementation of the present resolution and to submit it, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session.

UN Research Institute for Social Development

During 1999, the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (UNRISD) continued to conduct research into the social dimensions of development problems. While its main objectives continued to be the promotion of cross-country comparative research on critical problems and issues of social development, UNRISD had diversified its role in response to the changing demands of the 1990s, becoming more involved in applied research that responded directly to the concerns of policy makers and the international development community. Through workshops, seminars and conferences, the Institute promoted dialogue among policy makers, donors, scholars, NGOs and grass-roots activists. A report on the Institute's activities in 1999 [E/CN.5/2001/3] stated that UNRISD had undertaken five projects related to the special session of the General Assembly to consider implementation of the World Summit for Social Development (see p. 1037). The largest project evaluated progress towards fulfilling the first commitment of the Copenhagen Declaration: to create an enabling environment for social development. Findings were presented in the report Visible hands: Taking Responsibility for Social Development.

The Institute also contributed to preparatory work for the five-year review of the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170], adopted at the 1995 Fourth World Conference on Women [ibid., p. 1169] (see p. 1075). Papers were commissioned to assess how contemporary debates on rights and democracy had strengthened women's struggles for greater gender justice. At the same time, research continued within six UNRISD projects initiated during the previous biennium: information technologies and social development; gender, poverty and well-being; business responsibility for sustainable development; public sector reform and crises-ridden States; grass-roots initiatives for land reform; and urban governance.

As a result of a consultative meeting of 25 third world scholars (Thailand, May), the UNRISD research programme was regrouped under the areas of social policy and development; democracy, governance and human rights; identities, conflict and cohesion; civil society and social movements; and technology and society.

Although it was part of the UN system, all UNRISD activities were financed by voluntary contributions from Governments, international development agencies and foundations.

Commission action. In February [dec. 37/105], the Commission on Social Development took note of the report of the UNRISD Board covering the period 1997-1998 [YUN 1997, p. 1113; YUN 1998, p. 1029]. Following consideration of a note by the Secretary-General [E/CN.5/1999/10], the Commission renominated five members of the UNRISD Board whose terms would expire on 30 June and nominated one new replacement member for confirmation by the Economic and Social Council [dec. 37/101]. The Commission also took note of the Secretary-General's note [dec. 37/105].

By decision 1999/260 of 28 July, the Council confirmed the five renominations and one new nomination to the UNRISD Board.

Follow-up to International Year of the Family

In response to General Assembly resolution 50/142 [YUN 1995, p. 1128] and decision 53/434 [YUN 1998, p. 1333], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/54/256], in which he summarized the activities of Governments, the UN system, research centres and NGOs to follow up the International Year of the Family (1994), proclaimed by the Assembly in resolution 44/82 [YUN 1989, p. 612].

The Secretary-General observed that follow-up to the Year had been hampered by a lack of consensus on terminology and basic definitions. Also, since the Year did not result in a global instrument setting standards and a plan of action, the process of follow-up was more complex, as there was no clear set of objectives against which to assess and review progress.

The Secretary-General concluded that there was a need to improve the knowledge base through research, data collection and collaboration among Governments and research institutions. To that end, the UN system should play a supporting role, including the provision of technical cooperation to Governments. Priority should be given to building local capacity in developing countries and in countries with economies in transition and to training personnel to formulate, implement, monitor and evaluate policies and programmes related to families. Attention needed to be given to the most appropriate way of observing the tenth anniversary of the Year in 2004. In that regard, the Commission for Social Development might be invited to undertake in 2004 a comprehensive review of the global situation of families, based on information made available by the Secretary-General in collaboration with other UN system entities. In order to meet the requests from Governments for assistance in formulating and implementing family-related policies and programmes and to strengthen the family component of development projects when requested, the resources of the United Nations Trust Fund on Family Activities needed to be increased.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/595], adopted resolution 54/124 without vote [agenda item 106].

Follow-up to the International Year of the Family

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/82 of 8 December 1989, 46/92 of 16 December 1991, 47/237 of 20 September 1993, 50/142 of 21 December 1995 and 52/81 of 12 December 1997 concerning the proclamation, preparations for and observance of the International Year of the Family,

Recognizing that the basic objective of the follow-up to the International Year of the Family should be to strengthen and support families in performing their societal and developmental functions and to build upon their strengths, in particular at the national and local levels,

Noting that the family-related provisions of the outcomes of the world conferences of the 1990s continue to provide policy guidance on ways to strengthen family-centred components of policies and programmes as part of an integrated comprehensive approach to development,

Emphasizing that equality between women and men and respect for the rights of all family members is essential to family well-being and to society at large,

Noting with concern that the contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund on Family Activities have steadily decreased, reducing its resource base, and that, unless this trend is reversed and the Fund strengthened, many priority concerns relating to family issues will not be met,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the follow-up to the International Year of the Family,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and the recommendations contained therein;
2. Invites Governments to continue their actions to build family-friendly societies, inter alia, by promoting the rights of individual family members, in particular gender equality and the rights of the child;
3. Urges Governments to continue to take sustained action at all levels concerning family issues, including studies and applied research, to promote the role of families in development and to develop concrete meas- ures and approaches to address national priorities to deal with family issues;

4. Recommends that all relevant actors, including Governments, research and academic institutions and civil society, contribute to developing strategies and programmes aimed at strengthening the economic and sustainable livelihood of families;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to play an active role in facilitating international cooperation within the framework of the follow-up to the International Year of the Family, to facilitate the exchange of experiences and information among Governments on effective policies and strategies, to facilitate technical assistance, with a focus on least developed and developing countries, and to encourage the organization of subregional and interregional meetings and relevant research;

6. Invites the Commission for Social Development, when adopting its next multi-year programme of work, to consider undertaking a review of the global situation of the family in 2004, bearing in mind that, in different cultural, political and social systems, various forms of the family exist;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session, through the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council, on the appropriate ways and means to observe the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family in 2004.

Persons with disabilities

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/82 [YUN 1997, p. 1117], the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Social Development a January report [E/CN.5/1999/5] on the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 37/52 [YUN 1982, p. 981]. The report described progress to equalize opportunities for persons with disabilities in the areas of accessible information resources and environmental accessibility; social services and social safety nets; and employment and sustainable livelihoods. Within the context of the Asian and Pacific Decade of Disabled Persons (1993-2002), proclaimed in 1992 by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) [YUN 1992, p. 490], ESCAP issued eight volumes of technical material relating to assistive devices, legislation, community-based rehabilitation and self-help organizations. Topics were being developed on education and technology for disabled children and youth. The report discussed the implementation of international norms and standards relating to persons with disabilities.

In February, the Commission on Social Development took note of the Secretary-General's report [dec. 37/104].

A September report of the Secretary-General [A/54/388], submitted in response to Assembly resolution 52/82, summarized information received from 24 countries on their social and economic policies related to equalization of opportunities for persons with disabilities, particularly regarding accessibility, social services and social safety nets, and employment and sustainable livelihoods. Information provided suggested that much governmental action centred around formulation of national plans of action and the establishment and strengthening of national coordinating bodies, legislative measures and cultural activities, both to promote awareness of disability issues and to engage persons with disabilities in cultural and social life.

Within the UN system, the Department of Public Information and United Nations Information Centres organized exhibitions, lectures, seminars and special events to publicize UN activities to promote equalization of persons with disabilities. The UN Radio Service produced more than 100 radio magazines on selected disability issues. ESCAP had created a web page on the Asian and Pacific Decade of Disabled Persons (1993-2002). In May, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations launched a database to provide users with access to selected information on rural disability issues. The World Bank had identified 11 projects that benefited persons with disabilities. On 15 and 16 June, UNDP convened an inter-agency consultation in Geneva on disability.

The report also described the activities of NGOs, international norms and standards, the improvement of statistical concepts, methods and data collection by the UN Statistics Division and the accessibility of Headquarters.

An addendum to the Secretary-General's report [A/54/388/Add.1], also submitted in September, presented an analytical review of progress in equalization of opportunities by, for and with persons with disabilities.

It also provided information on the United Nations Voluntary Fund on Disability, which from 1 January 1998 to 31 August 1999 provided nearly $1 million to 35 disability-related projects, mainly grass roots-based and locally focused activities. In terms of regional distribution, Africa accounted for 40 per cent of the projects supported and received 30 per cent of the grants disbursed. Asia and the Pacific and Latin America and the Caribbean accounted for 17 per cent of the projects supported, followed by the Central and Eastern European region with 14 per cent of projects supported. The report described cooperation between the Fund and the Arab Gulf Programme for United Nations Development Organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/595], adopted resolution 54/121 without vote [agenda item 106].

Implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons: towards a society for all in the twenty-first century

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/52 of 3 December 1982, by which it adopted the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, 48/96 of 20 December 1993, by which it adopted the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities, 49/153 of 23 December 1994, 50/144 of 21 December 1995 and 52/82 of 12 December 1997,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolutions 1997/19, on equalization of opportunities for persons with disabilities, and 1997/20, on children with disabilities, of 21 July 1997 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1998/31, on the human rights of persons with disabilities, of 17 April 1998,

Recalling further the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and reaffirming the obligations contained in relevant human rights instruments, including the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Reaffirming the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits and their respective follow-up reviews, in particular as they pertain to the promotion of the rights and well-being of persons with disabilities,

Noting with appreciation the important contributions of subregional, regional and international seminars and conferences related to persons with disabilities, such as the Fifth World Assembly of Disabled Peoples' International, held at Mexico City from 1 to 7 December 1998, on the theme "Towards an inclusive twenty-first century",

Expressing grave concern that situations of armed conflict have especially devastating consequences for the human rights of persons with disabilities,

Mindful of the need to adopt and implement effective policies and strategies to promote the rights and the full and effective participation of persons with disabilities in economic, social, cultural and political life, on the basis of equality, to achieve a society for all,

Concerned that improvement of disability awareness and sensitivity to disability issues has not been significant enough to improve the quality of life of persons with disabilities worldwide,

Recognizing the importance of timely and reliable data on disability-sensitive policies, programme planning and evaluation and the need for further development of practical statistical methodology for the collection and compilation of data on populations with disabilities,

Realizing that technology, in particular information technology, provides new possibilities for improving accessibility and employment for persons with disabilities and facilitating their full participation and equality, and welcoming the initiatives of the United Nations in promoting information technology as a means of achieving the universal goal of a society for all,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons;

2. Welcomes the initiatives of Governments to enhance the rights of persons with disabilities and for the further equalization of opportunities by, for and with persons with disabilities, and also welcomes the contribution of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations, as appropriate, in this regard;

3. Notes with appreciation the valuable work undertaken by the Special Rapporteur for monitoring the implementation of the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities of the Commission for Social Development under his second mandate for the period 1997-2000;

4. Encourages Governments, non-governmental organizations and the private sector, as appropriate, to take concrete measures to promote the implementation of relevant United Nations resolutions and agreed international standards concerning persons with disabilities, in particular the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities, and for the further equalization of opportunities for persons with disabilities by focusing on accessibility, health, social services, including training and rehabilitation, safety nets, employment and sustainable livelihoods, in the design and implementation of strategies, policies and programmes to promote a more inclusive society;

5. Calls upon Governments to undertake all necessary measures to advance beyond the adoption of national plans for people with disabilities through, inter alia, the creation or reinforcement of arrangements for the promotion and awareness of disability issues and the allocation of sufficient resources for the full implementation of existing plans and initiatives, and emphasizes the importance of supporting national efforts through international cooperation in this regard;

6. Encourages Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to take practical actions, including public information campaigns, by, for and with persons with disabilities, with a view to increasing disability awareness and sensitivity to disability issues and to combating and overcoming discrimination against persons with disabilities and in order to further their full and effective participation in society;

7. Encourages Governments to continue their support to non-governmental organizations contributing to the fulfilment of the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons;

8. Also encourages Governments to involve persons with disabilities in the formulation of strategies and plans aimed at eradicating poverty, promoting education and enhancing employment;

9. Urges relevant bodies and organizations of the United Nations system, including relevant human rights treaty bodies and the regional commissions, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and institutions, to work closely with the programme on disability of the Division for Social Policy and Development of the Secretariat in the promotion of the rights of persons with disabilities, including activities at the field level, by sharing experiences, findings and recommendations on persons with disabilities;

10. Urges Governments to cooperate with the Statistics Division of the Secretariat in the continued development of global statistics and indicators on disability, and encourages them to avail themselves of the technical assistance of the Division to build national capacities for national data-collection systems, as needed;

11. Also urges Governments, in collaboration with the United Nations system, to give special attention to the rights, needs and well-being of children with disabilities and their families in the development of policies and programmes;

12. Encourages Governments, concerned non-governmental organizations and the private sector to continue to support the United Nations Voluntary Fund on Disability with a view to implementing fully the World Programme of Action and the Standard Rules, including the work of the Special Rapporteur, and to support activities to build national capacities, with emphasis on priorities identified in resolution 52/82;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to support initiatives of relevant bodies and organizations of the United Nations system, as well as those of regional, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and institutions, for the promotion of the human rights of persons with disabilities and the further implementation of the World Programme of Action and in their efforts to integrate persons with disabilities in technical cooperation activities, both as beneficiaries and as decision makers;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to include, in his assessments of the implementation of the outcome of major United Nations conferences and summits to be considered at the forthcoming special sessions of the General Assembly, the contribution of these meetings to the promotion of the rights and well-being of persons with disabilities;

15. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts in improving the accessibility of the United Nations for persons with disabilities, and urges him to continue to implement plans to provide a barrier-free environment, as well as information in an accessible format and communication services;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session, through the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-ninth session, a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Cultural development

International Year of Dialogue among Civilizations

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/22 [YUN 1998, p. 1031], the Secretary-General, in November [A/54/546], presented a provisional report of his Personal Representative for the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations (2001), proclaimed by the Assembly in resolution 53/22.

The Personal Representative, appointed by the Secretary-General in August, stated that the dialogue should be between those that perceived diversity as a threat and those that perceived it as an integral component of growth. He stated that it would be fitting if the spirit of dialogue among civilizations could open the door to a major process of reconciliation in one or more parts of the world. The Personal Representative would translate into action the conceptual underpinnings of the dialogue, the admission of reality and the goals of the Year.

Communications. During 1999, Iran submitted a series of communications describing activities it had undertaken regarding dialogue among civilizations, some of which were in accordance with General Assembly resolution 53/22.

Iran transmitted a report on the establishment of the Center for Dialogue Among Civilizations, which was set up in December 1998 to engage in in-depth analysis of the concept of dialogue among civilizations and to coordinate the activities of various government agencies [A/54/291]. It also transmitted the Teheran Declaration on Dialogue among Civilizations, adopted by the Islamic Symposium on Dialogue among Civilizations (Teheran, 3-5 May) [A/54/116]. In collaboration with Columbia University (New York), Iran sponsored a panel discussion on "Dialogue among civilizations: a new paradigm" (New York, 6 May) [A/54/263 & Corr.1]. It also transmitted a statement by its President on his conception of dialogue among civilizations, which was made at the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) in October [A/54/539].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December [meeting 78], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/113 [draft: A/54/L.60 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 34].

United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/22 of 4 November 1998 entitled "United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations",

Reaffirming the purposes and principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, which, inter alia, call for collective effort to strengthen friendly relations among nations, remove threats to peace and foster international cooperation in resolving international issues of economic, social, cultural and humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all,

Bearing in mind the valuable contribution that dialogue among civilizations can make to an improved awareness and understanding of the common values shared by all humankind,

Recognizing the diverse civilizational achievements of mankind, crystallizing cultural pluralism and creative human diversity,

Aware that positive and mutually beneficial interaction among civilizations has continued throughout human history despite impediments arising from disputes and wars,

Underlining the fact that tolerance and respect for diversity facilitate universal promotion and protection of human rights and constitute sound foundations for civil society, social harmony and peace,

Emphasizing the indispensable role of dialogue as a means to reach understanding, promote a culture of peace, remove threats to peace and strengthen interaction and exchange among and within civilizations,

Reaffirming that civilizational achievements constitute the collective heritage of mankind, providing a source of inspiration and progress for humanity at large,

Welcoming the collective endeavour of the international community to enhance understanding through constructive dialogue among civilizations on the threshold of the third millennium,

Encouraged by the positive reception of Governments, international organizations, civil society organizations and international public opinion to the proclamation of the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations, and welcoming the initiatives undertaken by governmental and non-governmental actors to promote dialogue,

Expressing its firm determination to facilitate and promote dialogue among civilizations,

1. Takes note with interest of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Welcomes the decision of the Secretary-General to appoint his personal representative for the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations;

3. Invites Governments, the United Nations system, including the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and other relevant international and non-governmental organizations, to continue and further intensify planning and organizing appropriate cultural, educational and social programmes to promote the concept of dialogue among civilizations, including through organizing conferences and seminars and disseminating information and scholarly material on the subject, and to inform the Secretary-General of their activities;

4. Calls upon Governments to encourage all members of society to take part in promoting dialogue among civilizations and to provide them with an opportunity to make contributions to the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations;

5. Notes with interest the activities undertaken and proposals made by Member States, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and international and regional organizations, including the Organization of the Islamic Conference and non-governmental organizations, for the preparation of the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a further substantive report on preparations for the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations".

Cultural property

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/24 [YUN 1997, p. 1119], the Secretary-General transmitted a report of the UNESCO Director-General on action taken by the organization on the return and restitution of cultural property to the countries of origin [A/54/436]. The report contained the recommendations of the Intergovernmental Committee for Promoting the Return of Cultural Property to its Countries of Origin or its Restitution in Case of Illicit Appropriation at its tenth session (Paris, 25-28 January).

The Committee adopted a recommendation in which member States decided to establish an international fund to facilitate the restitution of stolen or illicitly exported cultural objects to countries of origin. The Fund would be used to finance training and education projects. The Committee invited the Director-General to convene a working group of governmental experts to consider the question of the return of cultural property displaced during and after the Second World War. It endorsed "Object-ID", an international standard intended to simplify and rationalize the description of art objects and antiquities with a view to finding stolen property.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 84], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/190 [draft: A/54/L.47/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 24].

Return or restitution of cultural property to the countries of origin

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolutions 3026 A (XXVII) of 18 December 1972, 3148 (XXVIII) of 14 December 1973, 3187 (XXVIII) of 18 December 1973, 3391 (XXX) of 19 November 1975, 31/40 of 30 November 1976, 32/18 of 11 November 1977, 33/50 of 14 December 1978, 34/64 of 29 November 1979, 35/127 and 35/128 of 11 December 1980, 36/64 of 27 November 1981, 38/34 of 25 November 1983, 40/19 of 21 November 1985, 42/7 of 22 October 1987, 44/18 of 6 November 1989, 46/10 of 22 October 1991, 48/15 of 2 November 1993, 50/56 of 11 December 1995 and 52/24 of 25 November 1997,

Recalling the Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict, adopted at The Hague on 14 May 1954,

Recalling also the Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property, adopted on 14 November 1970 by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Recalling further the Convention on Stolen or Illegally Exported Cultural Objects, adopted at Rome on 24 June 1995 by the International Institute for the Unification of Private Law,

Recalling the Medellin Declaration for Cultural Diversity and Tolerance and the Plan of Action on Cultural Cooperation, adopted at the first Meeting of the Ministers of Culture of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Medellin, Colombia, on 4 and 5 September 1997,

Taking note with interest of the report of the Secretary-General submitted in cooperation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Aware of the importance attached by the countries of origin to the return of cultural property which is of fundamental spiritual and cultural value to them, so that they may constitute collections representative of their cultural heritage,

Expressing concern about the loss, destruction, damage, removal, theft, pillage or misappropriation of and any acts of vandalism directed against cultural property in areas of armed conflict and territories that are occupied,

Also expressing concern about the illicit traffic in cultural property and its damages on the cultural heritage of nations,

1. Commends the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Intergovernmental Committee for Promoting the Return of Cultural Property to its Countries of Origin or its Restitution in Case of Illicit Appropriation on the work they have accomplished, in particular through the promotion of bilateral negotiations, for the return or restitution of cultural property, the preparation of inventories of movable cultural property, the reduction of illicit traffic in cultural property and the dissemination of information to the public;

2. Reaffirms the importance of the provisions of the Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict, and invites Member States which have not already done so to become parties to the Convention and facilitate its implementation;

3. Welcomes the adoption of the Second Protocol to the Convention, adopted at The Hague on 26 March 1999, and invites all States Parties to the Convention to consider becoming parties to the Second Protocol to the Convention;

4. Reaffirms the importance of the provisions of the Convention on Stolen or Illegally Exported Cultural Objects, invites those Member States which have not already done so to consider becoming parties to the Convention;

5. Calls upon all relevant bodies, agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system and other relevant intergovernmental organizations to work in coordination with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, within their mandates and in cooperation with Member States, in order to continue to address the issue of return or restitution of cultural property to the countries of origin, and to provide appropriate support accordingly;

6. Invites Member States to continue drawing up, in cooperation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, systematic inventories of their cultural property;

7. Commends the efforts of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to encourage the linking of existing databases and identification systems, taking into account the one developed by the International Criminal Police Organization, to allow for electronic transmission of information in order to reduce illicit trafficking in cultural property, and encourages the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to make further efforts in this regard in cooperation with Member States, where appropriate;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to cooperate with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in its efforts to develop all possibilities, including any further initiatives, for bringing about the attainment of the objectives of the present resolution;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Return or restitution of cultural property to the countries of origin".

Olympic truce

On 24 November [meeting 63], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/34 [draft: A/54/L.26 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 22].

Building a peaceful and better world through sport and the Olympic ideal

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/21 of 25 November 1997, in which it decided to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Building a peaceful and better world through sport and the Olympic ideal" and to consider this item every two years in advance of each Summer and Winter Olympic Games,

Recalling also its resolution 48/11 of 25 October 1993, which, inter alia, revived the ancient Greek tradition of the ekecheiria, or "Olympic Truce", calling for all hostilities to cease during the Games, thereby mobilizing the youth of the world in the cause of peace,

Taking into account resolution CM/Res. 1608(LXII), adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its sixty-second ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 21 to 23 June 1995, and endorsed by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of that organization, which supports the appeal for an Olympic Truce,

Recognizing the valuable contribution that the appeal launched by the International Olympic Committee for an Olympic Truce, with which the National Olympic Committees of the Member States are associated, could make towards advancing the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming that the Olympic ideal promotes international understanding, particularly among the youth of the world, through sport and culture in order to advance the harmonious development of mankind,

Noting with satisfaction the flying of the United Nations flag at all competition sites of the Olympic Games and the increasing number of joint endeavours of the International Olympic Committee and the United Nations system, for example in the fields of development, humanitarian assistance, protection of the environment, health promotion, education, eradication of poverty, the fight against AIDS, drug abuse, violence and juvenile delinquency,

Noting also with satisfaction the joint organization by the International Olympic Committee and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization of the World Conference on Education and Sport for a Culture of Peace in Paris from 5 to 7 July 1999, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/13 of 20 November 1997, and their initiation of a programme of action pursuant to Assembly resolution 53/243 of 13 September 1999,

1. Urges Member States to observe the Olympic Truce during the games of the XXVII Olympiad, to be held at Sydney, Australia, from 15 September to 1 October 2000, the vision of which, at the dawn of the new millennium, is to be a highly harmonious, athlete-oriented and environmentally committed Olympic Games;

2. Also urges Member States to take the initiative to abide by the Olympic Truce, individually and collectively, and to pursue, in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the peaceful settlement of all international conflicts through diplomatic solutions;

3. Calls upon all Member States to cooperate with the International Olympic Committee in its efforts to use the Olympic Truce as an instrument to promote peace, dialogue and reconciliation in areas of conflict, beyond the Olympic Games period;

4. Reaffirms the Declaration and Programme of Action on a Culture of Peace, adopted in its resolution 53/243, and in this context welcomes the decision of the International Olympic Committee to mobilize all international sports organizations and National Olympic Committees of the Member States to undertake concrete action at the local, national, regional and world levels to promote and strengthen a culture of peace based on the spirit of the Olympic Truce;

5. Welcomes the setting up by the International Olympic Committee of an International Olympic Forum for Development, a platform for consultation between intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations on issues related to the development of physical education and sport for all, and an International Centre for the Olympic Truce to promote peace and human values through sport and the Olympic ideal;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to promote the observance of the Olympic Truce among Member States, drawing the attention of world public opinion to the contribution such a truce would make to the promotion of international understanding and the preservation of peace and goodwill, and to cooperate with the International Olympic Committee in the realization of this objective;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Building a peaceful and better world through sport and the Olympic ideal" and to consider this item before the XIX Olympic Winter Games, to be held at Salt Lake City, United States of America, in 2002.

By decision 54/465 of 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item "Building a peaceful and better world through sport and the Olympic ideal" would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session.

Bethlehem 2000

On 10 November [meeting 51], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/22 [draft: A/54/L.20 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 36].

Bethlehem 2000

The General Assembly,

Recalling the fact that the Palestinian city of Bethlehem is the birthplace of Jesus Christ and one of the most historic and significant sites on earth,

Noting that the world will celebrate in Bethlehem, a city of peace, the onset of the new millennium in a global vision of hope for all peoples,

Stressing the monumental importance of the event for the Palestinian people, for the peoples of the region and for the international community as a whole, as it comprises significant religious, historical and cultural dimensions,

Aware of the Bethlehem 2000 project as a multifaceted undertaking for commemoration of the event, which will begin at Christmas, 1999, and conclude at Easter, 2001,

Aware also of the needed assistance with regard to the above-mentioned project, and expressing appreciation for the steps taken towards increasing the engagement and participation of the international community, including donor countries, and organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Development Programme and the World Bank, as well as the European Commission, religious institutions and others,

Welcoming the convening of the Bethlehem 2000 International Conference in Rome, on 18 and 19 February 1999, and the participation of many high-level individuals and institutions from governmental, religious, inter-governmental, academic, cultural, non-governmental and private sectors in that important Conference,

Expressing the need for immediate change in the situation on the ground in the vicinity of Bethlehem, especially with regard to ensuring freedom of movement,

Stressing the need for ensuring free and unhindered access to the holy places in Bethlehem to the faithful of all religions and the citizens of all nationalities,

Expressing the hope for rapid progress in the Middle East peace process and the achievement of the final settlement between the Palestinian and Israeli sides by September 2000, as agreed by the parties, so that the millennium may be celebrated most appropriately in an atmosphere of peace and reconciliation,

1. Welcomes the impending arrival of this global, historic celebration in Bethlehem of the birth of Jesus Christ and the onset of the third millennium as a symbol of the shared hope for peace among all peoples of the world;

2. Expresses support for the Bethlehem 2000 project and commends the efforts undertaken by the Palestinian Authority in this regard;

3. Notes with appreciation the assistance given by the international community in support of the Bethlehem 2000 project, and calls for the acceleration of assistance and engagement by the international community as a whole, including private sector participation, to ensure the success of the Bethlehem 2000 project and the fruition of this monumental commemoration;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize the pertinent organizations and agencies of the United Nations system to increase their efforts to ensure the success of the Bethlehem 2000 project;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Bethlehem 2000"

so that the General Assembly may have a renewed opportunity to reaffirm its further support for the project until the commemoration comes to a close at Easter, 2001.

Crime prevention and criminal justice

Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice

The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, at its eighth session (Vienna, 27 April-6 May) [E/1999/30], recommended the adoption of four draft resolutions by the General Assembly and six draft resolutions and three draft decisions by the Economic and Social Council. Pursuant to Council decision 1997/232 [YUN 1997, p. 1121], the theme of the session was crime prevention.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1999/262 of 28 July, took note of the Commission's report on its eighth session and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the ninth (2000) session. On the same date, by decision 1999/263, the Council endorsed the Commission's appointment of three members of the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute.

Preparations for Tenth (2000) UN Crime Congress

The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice had before it a February report of the Secretary-General on preparations for the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders [E/CN.15/1999/6 & Corr.1], to be held in Vienna from 10 to 17 April 2000, with pre-Congress consultations on 9 April, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 53/110 [YUN 1998, p. 1032]. Also pursuant to that resolution, the theme of the Congress would be "Crime and justice: meeting the challenges of the twenty-first century". Since 1955, UN crime congresses had been held quinquennially.

The Secretary-General described substantive and organizational preparations for and planning aspects of the Congress and annexed to the report a draft programme of work for the Congress. Preparations had been made for four workshops scheduled to take place during the Congress on combating corruption, crimes related to the computer network, community involvement in crime prevention, and women in the criminal justice system. A regional preparatory meeting for Latin America and the Caribbean was held (San Jose, Costa Rica, 22-24 February) [A/CONF.187/RPM.4/1]. Three other regional meetings were held in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1033].

Working papers prepared for the Congress by the Secretariat dealt with promoting the rule of law and strengthening the criminal justice system [A/CONF.187/3]; international cooperation in combating transnational crime [A/CONF.187/6]; and offenders and victims: accountability and fairness in the criminal justice process [A/CONF.187/8]. Background papers were prepared for the workshops on combating corruption [A/CONF.187/9] and on community involvement in crime prevention [A/CONF.187/11]. In accordance with Assembly resolution 52/91 [YUN 1997, p. 1176], the Secretary-General prepared an overview of the state of crime and criminal justice worldwide [A/CONF.187/5] for presentation at the opening of the Congress. The report described major crime trends and developments since the Ninth (1995) Crime Congress [YUN 1995, p. 1132]. It also contained preliminary results of the sixth UN survey on crime trends and operations of criminal justice systems, as well as the global programme against corruption, the global programme against trafficking in human beings and the global study on transnational organized crime.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1999/30], adopted resolution 1999/19 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 54/125 below.]

On the same date, the Council, also on the recommendation of the Commission [E/1999/30], adopted decision 1999/261 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Preliminary draft of the Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice: Meeting the Challenges of the Twenty-first Century

At its 43rd plenary meeting on 28 July 1999, the Economic and Social Council, recalling General Assembly resolutions 52/91 of 12 December 1997 and 53/110 of 9 December 1998, decided to transmit to the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders a preliminary draft of the Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice: Meeting the Challenges of the Twenty-first Century, annexed to the present decision.

ANNEX
Preliminary draft of the Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice: Meeting the Challenges of the Twenty-first Century

We the States Members of the United Nations,

Concerned about the impact on our societies of the commission of serious crimes of a global nature, and convinced of the need for bilateral, regional and international cooperation in crime prevention and criminal justice,

Concerned in particular about transnational organized crime and the relationships between its various forms,

Stressing that a fair, responsible, ethical and efficient criminal justice system is at the very core of economic and social development and of human security,

Having assembled at the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders in Vienna from 10 to 17 April 2000 to decide to take more effective concerted action, in a spirit of co-operation, to combat the world crime problem,

Declare as follows:

1. We note with appreciation the results of the regional preparatory meetings for the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders.

2. We reaffirm the goals of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, specifically the reduction of criminality, more efficient and effective law enforcement and administration of justice, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, and promotion of the highest standards of fairness, humanity and professional conduct.

3. We emphasize the responsibility of each State to establish and maintain a fair, responsible, ethical and efficient criminal justice system in accordance with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and international law.

4. We recognize the necessity of closer coordination and cooperation among States in combating the world crime problem, bearing in mind that action against it is a common and shared responsibility. In this regard, we acknowledge the need to develop and promote technical cooperation activities to assist countries in their efforts to strengthen their domestic criminal justice systems and their capacity for international cooperation.

5. We shall accord high priority to the expeditious adoption and entry into force of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the protocols thereto. We shall undertake to take early steps for the signature of the Convention and the protocols thereto and shall endeavour to ratify those instruments within two years of their adoption.

6. We request the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention of the Secretariat to carry out, in co-operation with interested countries, regional assessments of the needs of Member States concerning legislation, capacity-building, expertise, training and resources with a view to ensuring a rapid ratification and implementation of the Convention and the protocols thereto.

7. We commit ourselves to the implementation of the Convention and the protocols thereto and undertake:

(a) To incorporate a crime prevention component into national and international development strategies;

(b) To intensify bilateral and multilateral co-operation, including technical cooperation, in the areas covered by the Convention and the protocols thereto;

(c) To enhance donor cooperation in areas with crime prevention aspects;

(d) To strengthen the capability of the Centre for International Crime Prevention, as well as the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network, to assist Member States, at their request, in building capacity in areas covered by the Convention and the protocols thereto.

8. We welcome the efforts being made by the Centre for International Crime Prevention to develop, in co-operation with the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute, a comprehensive global overview of organized crime as a reference tool and to assist Governments in policy and programme development.

9. We reaffirm our continued support for and commitment to the United Nations and to the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, especially the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice and the Centre for International Crime Prevention, the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute and the institutes of the Programme network, and resolve to strengthen the Programme further through sustained funding, as appropriate.

10. We shall undertake to incorporate a gender perspective into the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, as well as into national crime prevention and criminal justice strategies.

11. We commit ourselves to the development of action-oriented policy recommendations based on the special needs of women as criminal justice practitioners, victims, prisoners and offenders.

12. We emphasize that effective action for crime prevention and criminal justice requires the involvement, as partners and actors, of Governments, national, regional, interregional and international institutions, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and various segments of civil society, including the mass media and the private sector, as well as the recognition of their respective roles and contributions.

13. We commit ourselves to the development of more effective ways of collaborating with one another with a view to eradicating the scourge of trafficking in human beings, especially women and children, and the smuggling of migrants, in line with the provisions of the two protocols under negotiation supplementary to the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime. We shall also consider supporting the global programme against trafficking in human beings developed by the Centre for International Crime Prevention and the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute, and we establish the year 2005 as the target year for achieving a significant decrease in the incidence of those crimes worldwide.

14. We also commit ourselves to the enhancement of international cooperation to curb illicit trafficking in firearms, in line with the provisions of the protocol under negotiation against the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, supplementary to the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, and we establish the year 2005 as the target year for achieving a significant decrease in the incidence of illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms worldwide.

15. We further commit ourselves to taking enhanced international action against corruption, building on the United Nations Declaration against Corruption and Bribery in International Commercial Transactions, the International Code of Conduct for Public Officials and relevant regional conventions, and we request the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, at its tenth session, a report containing concrete proposals to this effect. We shall consider supporting the global programme against corruption developed by the Centre for International Crime Prevention and the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute.

16. We decide to develop action-oriented policy recommendations on the prevention and control of computer-related crime, and we invite the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to undertake work in this regard in an expeditious manner.

17. We note that acts of violence and terrorism are on the increase. We shall together, in conjunction with our other efforts to prevent and to combat terrorism, take effective, resolute and speedy measures with respect to preventing and combating criminal activities carried out for the purpose of furthering terrorism in all its forms and manifestations.

18. We also note that racial discrimination, xenophobia and related forms of intolerance continue and we recognize the importance of taking steps to incorporate into international crime prevention strategies and norms measures to prevent and combat crime associated with racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related forms of intolerance.

19. We affirm our determination to combat violence stemming from intolerance on the basis of ethnicity, resolve to make a strong contribution, in the area of crime prevention and criminal justice, to the planned World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, and we invite the Centre for International Crime Prevention to prepare proposals for the World Conference.

20. We recognize that the United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice contribute to efforts to deal with crime effectively, in particular transnational organized crime. We also recognize the importance of prison reform, independence of the judiciary and the International Code of Conduct for Public Officials. We commit ourselves to the promotion of the United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice, and shall make every effort to use and apply those standards and norms in national law and practice by the year 2002. To that end, we shall review relevant legislation and administrative procedures, provide the necessary education and training to the officials concerned and ensure the necessary strengthening of institutions entrusted with the administration of criminal justice.

21. We also recognize the value of the model treaties on international cooperation in criminal matters as important tools for the development of international cooperation.

22. We further recognize with great concern that juveniles in difficult circumstances are often at risk of becoming delinquent or easy candidates for recruitment by criminal groups, including groups involved in transnational organized crime, and we commit ourselves to undertaking countermeasures to prevent this growing phenomenon and to including, where necessary, provisions for juvenile justice in national development plans and international development strategies and to including the administration of juvenile justice in our funding policies for development cooperation.

23. We acknowledge the crucial importance of applying successful strategies to reduce the opportunities for the commission of crimes (situational crime prevention) as well as social development-oriented crime prevention strategies to address all forms of crime, including transnational organized crime, and we pledge to foster and support the sharing of best practices and success stories in that area.

24. We commit ourselves to according priority to containing the growth and overcrowding of pre-trial and detention prison populations, as appropriate, by promoting safe and effective alternatives to incarceration.

25. We decide to introduce, where appropriate, national, regional and international action plans in support of victims of crime, including mechanisms for mediation and restorative justice, and we establish the year 2002 as a target date for States to review their relevant practices, to develop further victim support services and awareness campaigns on victims' rights and to consider the establishment of funds for victims, in addition to developing and implementing witness protection programmes.

26. We invite the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to design specific measures for the implementation and monitoring of and follow-up to the commitments that we have undertaken in the present Declaration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/596], adopted resolution 54/125 without vote [agenda item 107].

Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/91 of 12 December 1997 and 53/110 of 9 December 1998 on preparations for the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/32 of 27 July 1993 and the rules of procedure for United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders,

Emphasizing the role of the Tenth Congress as a consultative body of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, in accordance with paragraph 29 of the statement of principles and programme of action of the Programme annexed to General Assembly resolution 46/152 of 18 December 1991,

Welcoming the recommendations made by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its seventh and eighth sessions on the organizational and substantive preparations for the Tenth Congress,

Stressing the importance of undertaking all the preparatory activities for the Tenth Congress in a timely and concerted manner,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on progress made in the preparations for the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders;

2. Also takes note of the reports of the four regional preparatory meetings for the Tenth Congress, and invites Member States and other entities involved to take into account the conclusions and recommendations contained in those reports;

3. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to ensure, in collaboration with Member States, a wide and effective programme of public information related to the preparations for the Tenth Congress, to the Congress itself and to the follow-up to and implementation of its conclusions;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to assist least developed countries and consider ways to assist developing countries in need to participate in the Tenth Congress by providing the necessary resources for the travel and per diem of delegations from least developed countries, within available resources, and by exploring the possibility of obtaining contributions for that purpose from governmental, intergovernmental and relevant non-governmental organizations and donors;

5. Calls upon the specialized agencies and other relevant United Nations bodies and institutes and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to participate effectively in the Tenth Congress and to contribute to the formulation of regional and international measures aimed at preventing crime and ensuring justice;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the substantive and organizational arrangements for the Tenth Congress are adequate in relation to its expected outcome and to provide the required resources for that purpose in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 2000-2001;

7. Approves the documentation and the draft programme of work for the Tenth Congress, as proposed by the Secretary-General in his report on progress made in the preparations for the Congress, taking into account the recommendations of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice related thereto;

8. Decides that the high-level segment of the Tenth Congress shall be held on 14 and 15 April 2000 to allow heads of State or Government or government ministers to focus on the main theme of the Congress;

9. Encourages States, other entities concerned and the Secretary-General to work together in order to ensure that the four workshops to be held during the Tenth Congress focus clearly on the respective issues and achieve practical results, and invites interested Governments to follow up with concrete technical co-operation projects or activities;

10. Invites donor countries to cooperate with developing countries to ensure their full participation in the workshops;

11. Encourages Governments to make preparations for the Tenth Congress at an early stage and by all necessary means, including, where appropriate, by establishing national preparatory committees, with a view to contributing to a focused and productive discussion of the topics and to participating actively in the organization of and follow-up to the workshops, the submission of national position papers on different agenda items and the encouragement of contributions from the academic community and relevant scientific institutions;

12. Reiterates its invitation to Member States to be represented at the Tenth Congress at a high political level, for example, by heads of State or Government, government ministers or attorneys-general;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to invite prominent personalities with acknowledged expertise in the topics of the Tenth Congress, on the basis of equitable geographical distribution, to participate in panels under each topic of the Congress at the expense of the United Nations, with a view to ensuring a more focused discussion and action-oriented conclusions;

14. Decides that the Tenth Congress, within the framework of the provisional agenda approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 53/110, should devote particular attention to ways and means of making operational the provisions of the United Nations convention against transnational organized crime, especially taking into account the needs of developing countries in the area of capacity-building;

15. Requests the Tenth Congress to submit, through the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice and the Economic and Social Council, its declaration to the Millennium Assembly for consideration and action;

16. Requests the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to give priority attention at its ninth session to the conclusions and recommendations of the Tenth Congress, with a view to recommending, through the Economic and Social Council, appropriate follow-up by the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to appoint a Secretary-General and an Executive Secretary of the Tenth Congress, in accordance with past practice, to perform their functions under the rules of procedure for United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders;

18. Decides to consider this question at its fifty-fifth session.

UN Programme on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice

An August report of the Secretary-General [A/54/289] reviewed progress made in implementing General Assembly resolutions 53/110 and 53/114 [YUN 1998, pp. 1032 & 1034] on preparations for the Tenth Crime Congress and on strengthening the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, respectively. The report updated information contained in the Secretary-General's report on preparations for the Congress (see p. 1048) and in the report of the Executive Director on the work of the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention [E/CN.15/1999/2]. Upon completion of its proposed reform [YUN 1998, p. 1035], the Centre had established co-ordinated provision of technical expertise and effective operational assistance as its core objective, reflected in its newly launched global programmes against transnational organized crime, trafficking in human beings and corruption. A gender perspective, including enabling the criminal justice system in efforts to eliminate gender-based discrimination and violence against women, was being integrated into its work. Closer operational synergy between the Centre and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP) had been enhanced through common management of both entities under the Executive Director.

The Centre was advancing substantive preparations for the Congress. A guide had been prepared containing information for Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as the professional community to assist in preparing for the Congress.

The report described progress made by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime in drafting the Convention and the three additional international legal instruments against illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition; illegal transporting of and trafficking in migrants; and trafficking in human beings, especially women and children (see p. 1057).

Regarding the Centre's technical cooperation activities, steps were being taken to formulate and implement projects under the global programme against corruption in Guatemala, Hungary, Lebanon and South Africa. In June, a memorandum of understanding was signed between Hungary, the Centre and the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute (UNICRI) regarding the launching of a joint pilot project against corruption. A scientific expert meeting was held (Budapest, Hungary, 8-9 June) to identify the methodology and tools for rapid assessment in the area of corruption. In Lebanon, the Centre was reorienting an ongoing project on support for the national anti-corruption plan to align it with the global programme. Under the global programme on trafficking in human beings, a pilot project in the Philippines sought to assess the involvement of organized crime and identify the main routes and patterns of trafficking from and to the country. Another pilot project, on inter-agency coalitions against trafficking in human beings, addressed two levels of action to harmonize law enforcement, criminal justice and social welfare responses in a number of European countries.

The Centre was finalizing a transnational organized crime assessment survey and designing a project to assess and analyse the threat posed by Nigerian organized crime groups with criminal networks in the region of the Economic Community of West African States and outside it. Another project in the pipeline aimed at establishing a database on organized crime in the Russian Federation and the Commonwealth of Independent States. In 1999, the Centre supported country projects totalling $5 million in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Lebanon, Romania, the Russian Federation, South Africa and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. New projects in 1999 were formulated for the Caribbean, on prison reform; for Senegal, on urban crime prevention; for South Africa, on organized crime, corruption, money-laundering and proliferation of firearms; and for the Russian Federation, on establishing a database and assessment of organized crime. In collaboration with UNDCP, the Centre formulated a project for Guatemala on developing a multi-sectoral programme of crime prevention and drug control. Implementation of those projects depended on funding from donors.

An outline of contributions and pledges made to the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund indicated an upward trend in resource mobilization, but the high proportion of contributions for special purposes restricted the Centre's flexibility in handling technical cooperation projects.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/596], adopted resolution 54/131 without vote [agenda item 107].

Strengthening the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, in particular its technical cooperation capacity

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/152 of 18 December 1991 on the creation of an effective United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, in which it approved the statement of principles and programme of action annexed to that resolution,

Emphasizing the role of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, specifically the reduction of criminality, more efficient and effective law enforcement and administration of justice, respect for human rights and promotion of the highest standards of fairness, humanity and professional conduct,

Convinced of the desirability of closer coordination and cooperation among States in combating crime, including drug-related crimes such as money-laundering, illicit arms trade and terrorist crimes, bearing in mind the role that could be played by both the United Nations and regional organizations in this respect,

Recognizing the urgent need to increase technical co-operation activities to assist countries, in particular developing countries and countries with economies in transition, with their efforts in translating United Nations policy guidelines into practice,

Recalling its relevant resolutions in which it requested the Secretary-General, as a matter of urgency, to provide the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme with sufficient resources for the full implementation of its mandate, in conformity with the high priority attached to the Programme,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the progress made in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 53/114 of 9 December 1998;

2. Reaffirms the importance of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme in promoting effective action to strengthen international cooperation in crime prevention and criminal justice, in responding to the needs of the international community in the face of both national and transnational criminality and in assisting Member States in achieving the goals of preventing crime within and among States and improving the response to crime;

3. Also reaffirms the role of the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention of the Secretariat in providing to Member States, upon request, technical cooperation, advisory services and other forms of assistance in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, including in the area of prevention and control of organized crime;

4. Notes the programme of work of the Centre, including the launching of three global programmes addressing, respectively, trafficking in human beings, corruption and organized crime, formulated on the basis of close consultations with Member States and review by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, and calls on the Secretary-General to strengthen further the Centre by providing it with the resources necessary for the full implementation of its mandate;

5. Supports the high priority given to technical co-operation and advisory services in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, including in the area of prevention and control of transnational organized crime, and stresses the need to enhance the operational activities of the Centre to assist, in particular, developing countries and countries with economies in transition;

6. Welcomes the increased number of technical assistance projects in the field of juvenile justice, reflecting an increased awareness among Member States of the importance of juvenile justice reform in establishing and maintaining stable societies and the rule of law;

7. Invites all States to support, through voluntary contributions to the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund, the operational activities of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme;

8. Encourages relevant programmes, funds and organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, inter- national financial institutions, in particular the World Bank, and regional and national funding agencies to support the technical operational activities of the Centre;

9. Urges States and funding agencies to review, as appropriate, their funding policies for development assistance and to include a crime prevention and criminal justice component in such assistance;

10. Welcomes the efforts undertaken by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to exercise more vigorously its mandated function of resource mobilization, and calls upon the Commission to strengthen further its activities in this direction;

11. Expresses its appreciation to non-governmental organizations and other relevant sectors of civil society for their support to the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme;

12. Welcomes the efforts of the Executive Director of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention to enhance the synergies between the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the Centre for International Crime Prevention, in conformity with the reform proposals of the Secretary-General;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to assist the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, as the principal policy-making body in this field, in performing its activities, including cooperation and coordination with other relevant bodies, such as the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the Commission on Human Rights, the Commission on the Status of Women and the Commission for Social Development;

14. Reaffirms the high priority attached to the elaboration of a comprehensive convention against transnational organized crime and additional international instruments addressing trafficking in persons, especially women and children, combating the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, and smuggling of migrants by land, air and sea, notes the progress achieved by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime in this regard, and calls upon Member States to make all possible efforts to ensure the rapid development and conclusion of the convention and the protocols thereto;

15. Welcomes the decision of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to mainstream a gender perspective into its activities and its request to the Secretariat that a gender perspective be integrated into all activities of the Centre;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session.

Programme and administrative questions

A March note of the Secretary-General [E/CN.15/1999/9] summarized the proposed 2000-2001 programme of work in crime prevention and criminal justice for consideration by the Commission. The programme's objectives included promoting international cooperation and the fundamental principles of the rule of law; improving States' capacity to prevent crime, particularly organized crime, corruption, trafficking in human beings and terrorism; enhancing the capacity of Governments to reform legislation and strengthen their criminal justice systems, establish institutions and mechanisms and upgrade the skills of crime prevention and criminal justice personnel; mobilizing resources for technical cooperation; ensuring improved coordination within the UN system and with other relevant organizations; and providing substantive support to the Commission and to the Tenth Crime Congress. Noting that the convention against transnational organized crime was expected to be finalized in 2000, the Centre would support the development of additional protocols to it or other international conventions, should the General Assembly decide to do so. The note outlined activities for 2000-2001, such as support for the final drafting of the convention; technical assistance and advisory services; monitoring the use of UN crime prevention and criminal justice legal instruments; collection and analysis of relevant data and information; and development of research to prevent terrorism. Attention would focus on transnational organized crime, terrorism and economic crime, particularly corruption.

An April note by the Secretariat contained a preliminary outline of the programme narrative on crime prevention and criminal justice for the medium-term plan for 2002-2005 [E/CN.15/1999/11]. The overall orientation of the programme was to promote effective international cooperation in crime prevention and criminal justice issues and assist Governments in addressing them.

In April [E/CN.15/1999/8 & Add.1], the Secretary-General circulated the curricula vitae of candidates to fill three vacancies on the UNICRI Board of Trustees.

Coordination

In accordance with Economic and Social Council resolutions 1992/22 [YUN 1992, p. 842] and 1994/21 [YUN 1994, p. 1174], the Secretary-General submitted a February report [E/CN.15/1999/4] highlighting activities conducted in 1997 and 1998 by the institutes comprising the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network, which included UNICRI, the affiliated regional institutes and associate institutes and centres. The report also covered activities of the International Scientific and Professional Advisory Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1999/30], adopted resolution 1999/23 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Work of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 53/114 of 9 December 1998 on strengthening the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, in particular its technical cooperation capacity,

Recalling also the statement of principles and programme of action of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, annexed to General Assembly resolution 46/152 of 18 December 1991, in which it is stated that the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice should have certain functions, including facilitating and helping to coordinate the activities of the United Nations interregional and regional institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, and that, given the important role of the institutes, their contributions to policy development and implementation and their resource requirements should be fully integrated into the overall United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 48/103 of 20 December 1993, in which the Assembly, inter alia, requested the Secretary-General to provide from existing resources adequate funds to build and maintain the institutional capacity of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme to respond to requests from Member States for assistance in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, if necessary through the reallocation of resources,

Recalling its resolution 1992/22 of 30 July 1992,

Recalling also its agreed conclusions 1997/2 on mainstreaming a gender perspective into all policies and programmes of the United Nations system, adopted at the coordination segment of its substantive session of 1997, and the need to maintain a balance between the different priority issues within the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme,

1. Notes the new structure of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme as laid out in the Secretary-General's bulletin on the organization of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention of the Secretariat;

2. Takes note of the report of the Executive Director on the work of the Centre for International Crime Prevention and the report of the Secretary-General on the activities of the institutes comprising the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network;

3. Welcomes Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice resolution 7/1 of 30 April 1998, in section I of which the Commission decided to mainstream a gender perspective into all its activities and requested the Secretariat to integrate a gender perspective into all the activities of the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention;

4. Notes the initiative of the Centre, in cooperation with the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute, in developing the global programme against trafficking in human beings, the global programme against corruption and the global studies on transnational organized crime, but stresses that the programmes promoted by the Centre should be formulated on the basis of close consultation with Member States and review by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice;

5. Calls upon the Centre to reinforce its efforts to focus its technical cooperation activities on priority issues and concerns in crime prevention and criminal justice, to pursue a comprehensive approach in carrying out its operational activities, to coordinate more fully its activities with recipient and donor countries and to interact with other relevant United Nations entities and with the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network;

6. Urges States and funding agencies to review, as appropriate, their funding policies for development assistance and to include a crime prevention and criminal justice component in such assistance;

7. Calls upon States to make every effort to contribute to the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund;

8. Encourages States to provide the Centre with information on best practices and lessons learned from technical cooperation projects executed by the Centre;

9. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Thirteenth Joint Programme Coordination Meeting of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme Network, held in Courmayeur, Italy, on 23 and 24 September 1998;

10. Welcomes the unique contribution of the institutes of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network, individually and collectively, to the implementation of the mandate of the Secretary-General in crime prevention and criminal justice, as reflected in the annex to the report of the Thirteenth Joint Programme Coordination Meeting;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the expertise and resources of the institutes of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network are utilized effectively in the implementation of the Programme;

12. Invites interested Member States to explore the possibility of cooperative projects with the institutes of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network;

13. Invites the workshop on women in the criminal justice system, to be held at the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders at Vienna in April 2000, to consider the desirability of conducting an international victimization survey on violence against women that will enable Member States and the international community to develop action-oriented policies to eliminate violence against women;

14. Requests the Secretary-General, taking into account the activities of the workshop on crimes related to the computer network, to be held at the Tenth Congress, to conduct a study on effective measures that could be taken at the national and international levels to prevent and control computer-related crime, which would include an examination of the desirability of preparing manuals, guidelines and recommendations, and to report on the conclusions of the study to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its tenth session.

On the same date [meeting 43], the Council, also on the recommendation of the Commission

[E/1999/30], adopted resolution 1999/24 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Action to promote cooperation and the functioning of the clearing house on international projects in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 46/152 of 18 December 1991, in which the Assembly decided that the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme should be devoted to providing States with practical assistance to achieve the goals of preventing crime and improving the response to crime,

Recalling also its resolution 1994/22 of 25 July 1994, in which it requested the Secretary-General to establish a database on technical assistance, integrating needs of Member States, in particular developing countries, as well as on existing collaborative arrangements and funding, taking into account regional concerns,

Recalling further its resolution 1995/12 of 24 July 1995, in which it requested the Secretary-General to initiate a pilot project to establish a regional database on international training and technical assistance projects, with a view to considering additional regional databases or a global database,

Expressing its appreciation to the European Institute for Crime Prevention and Control, affiliated with the United Nations, for the establishment, in close cooperation with the National Institute of Justice of the United States of America, of such a regional centralized clearing house for central and eastern Europe aimed at facilitating the exchange of information to assist policy makers in all Member States in better allocating resources, identifying potential partners in cooperative projects and opportunities for collaborative action and improving support for an incremental approach to preventing crime and ensuring criminal justice,

Recognizing that this clearing house is also operational and available to interested parties via the Internet and that its structure is also applicable to other regions,

Concerned about the duplication and lack of evaluation of technical assistance and training projects, which may result in wastage of scarce resources for technical cooperation,

Noting that Member States, international organizations and other entities engaged in collaborative training and technical assistance have made insufficient use of the clearing house,

Aware of the operation of other databases on cooperation in specific fields, including the database of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to collect information from Member States and relevant international organizations and other entities on their projects involving international technical assistance and training in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, in close cooperation with the institutes of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network;

2. Invites all Member States, international organizations and other entities to utilize the existing central clearing house either by submitting information to the Secretary-General or to the manager of the clearing house or by making direct use of the clearing house via the Internet;

3. Recommends that, in order to avoid duplication and to ensure transparency, entities with national or specialized clearing houses cooperate with the central clearing house by providing contact points for information or direct electronic linkages;

4. Also recommends that Member States consider the establishment of central contact points for information on their technical assistance and training projects in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, as appropriate;

5. Further recommends that the Secretary-General explore the possibility of expanding this pilot phase as a standing activity;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the functioning of the pilot phase to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its tenth session.

UN African crime prevention institute

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/113 [YUN 1998, p. 1038], the Secretary-General submitted, in September, a report on the African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (UNAFRI) [A/54/340], describing the Institute's programme activities, operations and funding, and proposals to enhance the Institute's capacity to implement its programmes and activities, thus strengthening crime prevention and criminal justice systems in Africa. The report outlined possible strategies to sustain the Institute.

During 1999, UNAFRI emphasized collaborative activities and joint action to combat crime, particularly transnational offences, and intensified efforts to make African Governments aware that crime impeded economic sustainability and poverty alleviation. It also encouraged senior officials of the criminal justice systems in African countries to use the Internet to exchange information.

UNAFRI implemented projects on developing regional legal instruments on extradition and mutual legal assistance, and on illegal trafficking in firearms and ammunition. Other activities included a proposal to address widespread corruption by public officials in Africa, studies on penal reform and strategies to assist African countries to implement UN legal instruments on juvenile justice. The Institute continued to implement a crime victimization study. UNAFRI's resources for 1999 amounted to $403,407, which came from assessed contributions from its 29 member States, a UN grant and a specific project grant, and income generated by the rental of its premises and facilities, and other sources. However, member States' outstanding balances stood at more than $2.2 million. Only 14 members had paid their contributions, while 15 had never done so.

Noting that UNAFRI's mission was becoming increasingly important as organized crime, economic crimes and crimes against the environment were committed more frequently in the region, the Secretary-General said that criminal justice systems were ill-prepared to tackle their incidence. Therefore, technical assistance in crime prevention and criminal justice should be an integral part of country programmes. The Institute's operational resources continued to decrease because of major economic transformations of African member States. In addition to conventional sources of funding, new resource mobilization strategies were needed to ensure that adequate financial requirements were met. Therefore, UNAFRI had reoriented its programmes to bring them in line with the new strategic direction of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network, as well as the development programme priorities of donor agencies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/596], adopted resolution 54/130 without vote [agenda item 107].

United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/113 of 9 December 1998 and all other relevant resolutions,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Bearing in mind the urgent need to establish effective crime prevention strategies for Africa, as well as the importance of law enforcement agencies and the judiciary at the regional and subregional levels,

Noting that the financial situation of the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders has greatly affected its capacity to deliver its services to African Member States in an effective and comprehensive manner,

1. Commends the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders for its efforts to promote and coordinate regional technical cooperation activities related to crime prevention and criminal justice systems in Africa;

2. Reiterates the need to strengthen further the capacity of the Institute to support national mechanisms for crime prevention and criminal justice in African countries;

3. Urges the States members of the Institute to make every possible effort to meet their obligations to the Institute;

4. Calls upon all Member States and non-governmental organizations to adopt concrete practical measures to support the Institute in the development of the requisite capacity and implement its programmes and activities aimed at strengthening crime prevention and criminal justice systems in Africa;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to intensify efforts to mobilize all relevant entities of the United Nations system to provide the necessary financial and technical support to the Institute to enable it to fulfil its mandate;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to deploy his efforts to mobilize the financial resources necessary to provide the Institute with the core professional staff required to enable it to function effectively in the fulfilment of its mandated obligations;

7. Calls upon the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to work closely with the Institute;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to enhance the promotion of regional cooperation, coordination and collaboration in the fight against crime, especially in its transnational dimension, which cannot be dealt with adequately by national action alone;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to make concrete proposals, including the provision of additional core professional staff, in order to strengthen the programmes and activities of the Institute and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Transnational crime

As a central element of the implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime, adopted in 1994 by the World Ministerial Conference on Organized Transnational Crime [YUN 1994, p. 1160], the intergovernmental process was launched in 1999 to elaborate a convention against transnational organized crime and three additional legal instruments. In accordance with General Assembly resolutions 53/111 and 53/114 [YUN 1998, pp.1034 & 1039], the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime began its work, holding six sessions during the year. A conference of plenipotentiaries was foreseen for 2000.

International convention

The Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Crime held six sessions in Vienna in 1999 to elaborate a convention and three additional legal instruments against illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition; illegal transporting of and trafficking in migrants; and trafficking in human beings, especially women and children: 19-29 January [A/AC.254/9]; 8-12 March [A/AC.254/11]; 28 April-3 May [A/AC.254/14]; 28 June-9 July [A/AC.254/17]; 4-15 October [A/AC.254/19 & Add.1]; 6-17 December [A/AC.254/23]. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/111 [YUN 1998, p. 1039], the Ad Hoc Committee submitted an April report [E/CN.15/1999/5] to apprise the Commission of progress achieved in the implementation of its mandate. In order to eliminate inconsistencies and to ensure specificity, a November note by the Secretariat provided an overview of provisions common to the draft convention and to its draft protocols [A/AC.254/21].

A symposium for policy makers on the convention (Rome, Italy, 26-27 February), attended by ministers of justice from around the world, raised awareness of the convention's necessity and of the UN role in its preparation and implementation. In October, an Asia-Pacific ministerial seminar on building capacities for fighting transnational organized crime was convened in Bangkok, Thailand.

Note by Secretary-General. A March note by the Secretary-General [E/CN.15/1999/3/Add.1] contained preliminary observations on the conduct of a study, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1998/17 [YUN 1998, p. 1052], on illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in explosives by criminals and on the abuse and misuse of explosives for criminal purposes.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, [E/1999/30], adopted resolution 1999/21 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Activities of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime: illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, as well as consideration of the need to develop an instrument on the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in explosives

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 54/127 below.]

On 30 July [meeting 46], the Council, on the recommendation of the Commission [E/1999/30], adopted resolution 1999/20 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Draft United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the draft protocols thereto

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 54/126 below.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/596], adopted resolution 54/127 without vote [agenda item 107].

Activities of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime: illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, as well as consideration of the need to develop an instrument on the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in explosives

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/111 of 9 December 1998 on transnational organized crime,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolutions 1998/17 on the regulation of explosives for the purpose of crime prevention and public health and safety and 1998/18 on measures to regulate firearms for the purpose of combating illicit trafficking in firearms, of 28 July 1998,

Taking into account the work of the Panel of Governmental Experts on Small Arms, established pursuant to General Assembly resolution 50/70 B of 12 December 1995,

Recognizing the need for effective coordination between the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the different United Nations bodies involved in the field of small arms,

Taking note of the United Nations International Study on Firearm Regulation and of the note by the Secretary-General on the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in explosives by criminals and the abuse and misuse of explosives for criminal purposes,

Concerned by the increase, at the international level, in the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition and by the seriousness of the problems arising from them, as well as by their links with transnational organized crime,

Aware of the urgent need to prevent, combat and eradicate the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition,

Aware also that the illicit manufacturing of, trafficking in and criminal misuse of explosives have a harmful effect on the security of States and endanger the well-being of peoples and their social and economic development,

Deeply concerned that effective action against transnational organized crime is hampered by the easy access that criminals have to explosives,

Convinced that combating the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, as well as combating the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in explosives, requires international cooperation, the exchange of information and other appropriate measures at the national, regional and global levels,

Aware of the importance of bilateral and multilateral instruments and arrangements in the furtherance of international cooperation in the matter, including guidelines and model regulations,

Stressing the need for all States, especially those States which produce, export or import arms, to take the necessary measures to prevent, curb, combat and eradicate the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, as well as explosives,

Reaffirming the principles of sovereignty, non-intervention and the sovereign equality of all States and the rights and obligations enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Welcomes the work of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, and encourages it to continue the negotiation of an international legal instrument dealing with the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition;

2. Recommends that, in negotiating the international legal instrument, the Ad Hoc Committee take into account, when appropriate and pertinent, the Inter-American Convention against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Ammunition, Explosives, and Other Related Materials, adopted by the General Assembly of the Organization of American States at its twenty-fourth special session, held in Washington, D.C., on 13 and 14 November 1997, as well as other existing international instruments and ongoing initiatives;

3. Calls upon States to consider the adoption of such legislative or other measures as may be necessary to establish as criminal offences under their domestic law the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, as well as explosives;

4. Encourages States to consider ways to enhance cooperation and the exchange of data and other information with a view to preventing, curbing, combating and eradicating the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, as well as explosives;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, from within existing or extrabudgetary resources, to convene an expert group of no more than twenty members, with equitable geographical representation, to prepare a study on the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in explosives by criminals and their use for criminal purposes, taking fully into consideration the issues listed in paragraph 2 of Economic and Social Council resolution 1998/17;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to facilitate the participation of experts from developing countries in the meeting of the expert group by providing, from within existing or extrabudgetary resources, for the travel of experts from such countries;

7. Invites Member States to make voluntary contributions in order to support the study to be prepared by the expert group and to ensure the participation of experts from developing countries;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report, as early as possible, to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice on the results of the study, and directs the Ad Hoc Committee, following the completion of the study, to consider the possible elaboration of an international instrument on the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in explosives.

Also on 17 December [meeting 83], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/596], adopted resolution 54/126 without vote [agenda item 107].

Draft United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the draft protocols thereto

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/159 of 23 December 1994, in which it approved the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime, adopted by the World Ministerial Conference on Organized Transnational Crime, held at Naples, Italy, from 21 to 23 November 1994,

Recalling also its resolution 52/85 of 12 December 1997, in which it decided to establish an inter-sessional open-ended intergovernmental group of experts for the purpose of elaborating a preliminary draft of a possible comprehensive international convention against organized transnational crime, which met at Warsaw from 2 to 6 February 1998,

Recalling further the Buenos Aires Declaration on Prevention and Control of Organized Transnational Crime, adopted by the Regional Ministerial Workshop on Follow-up to the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime, held at Buenos Aires from 27 to 30 November 1995, the Dakar Declaration on the Prevention and Control of Organized Transnational Crime and Corruption, adopted by the African Regional Ministerial Workshop on Organized Transnational Crime and Corruption, held at Dakar from 21 to 23 July 1997, and the Manila Declaration on the Prevention and Control of Transnational Crime, adopted by the Asian Regional Ministerial Workshop on Organized Transnational Crime and Corruption, held at Manila from 23 to 25 March 1998,

Recalling its resolution 53/111 of 9 December 1998, in which it decided to establish an open-ended intergovernmental ad hoc committee for the purpose of elaborating a comprehensive international convention against transnational organized crime and of discussing the elaboration, as appropriate, of international instruments addressing trafficking in women and children, combating the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, and illegal trafficking in and transporting of migrants, including by sea,

Convinced of the need to ensure the rapid development and conclusion of the convention and the protocols thereto,

Bearing in mind the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime on its second session, held at Vienna from 8 to 12 March 1999,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime submitted to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its eighth session, and expresses its appreciation of the results achieved by the Ad Hoc Committee during its first, second and third sessions, held at Vienna from 19 to 29 January, 8 to 12 March and 28 April to 3 May 1999, respectively, in the development of the draft United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the draft protocols thereto, addressing trafficking in women and children, combating the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, and smuggling of migrants by land, air and sea;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Government of Argentina for acting as host to the informal preparatory meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee, held at Buenos Aires from 31 August to 4 September 1998;

3. Decides that the additional international instrument being prepared by the Ad Hoc Committee addressing trafficking in women and children should address trafficking in all persons, but especially women and children, and requests the Ad Hoc Committee to make any corresponding changes to the draft instrument;

4. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to continue its work, in accordance with resolutions 53/111 and 53/114 of 9 December 1998, and to intensify its work in order to complete it in 2000;

5. Decides that the Ad Hoc Committee shall be convened in 2000 as required in order to complete its tasks, holding no fewer than four sessions of two weeks each, according to a schedule to be drawn up;

6. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to schedule sufficient time, subject to the availability of funds from the regular budget or extrabudgetary resources, for the negotiation of the draft protocols addressing trafficking in persons, especially women and children, the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, and smuggling of migrants by land, air and sea, in order to enhance the possibility of their completion at the same time as the draft Convention;

7. Welcomes the offer of the International Institute of Higher Studies in Criminal Sciences to host informal meetings as deemed appropriate to assist the work of the Ad Hoc Committee;

8. Encourages Member States to convene informal regional or interregional meetings to assist the work of the Ad Hoc Committee;

9. Welcomes the offer of the Government of Japan to host an international seminar on the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms;

10. Decides that the Ad Hoc Committee shall submit the final text of the Convention and the protocols thereto to the General Assembly for early adoption prior to a high-level signing conference;

11. Notes with appreciation the offer by the Government of Italy to host a high-level political signing conference at Palermo;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Ad Hoc Committee with the required facilities and resources to support its work;

13. Invites donor countries to cooperate with developing countries to ensure their full participation in the ongoing negotiating process and in the implementation of the Convention through appropriate means of technical assistance;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide to Member States, upon request, technical cooperation, advisory services and other forms of assistance in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, including in the area of prevention and control of transnational organized crime;

15. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to submit a report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its ninth session on the progress achieved in its work.

On the same date [meeting 83], the Assembly, also on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/596], adopted resolution 54/129 without vote [agenda item 107].

High-level Political Signing Conference for the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/111 of 9 December 1998, in which it decided to establish an open-ended inter-governmental ad hoc committee for the purpose of elaborating a comprehensive international convention against transnational organized crime and of discussing the elaboration, as appropriate, of international instruments addressing trafficking in women and children, combating the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, and illegal trafficking in and transporting of migrants, including by sea,

Bearing in mind that in resolution 54/126 of 17 December 1999 it requested the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime to schedule sufficient time, subject to the availability of funds from the regular budget or from extrabudgetary resources, for the negotiation of the draft protocols addressing trafficking in persons, especially women and children, the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, and smuggling of migrants by land, air and sea, in order to enhance the possibility of their completion at the same time as the draft Convention,

Acknowledging the progress made thus far by the Ad Hoc Committee towards the goal of completing negotiations in 2000,

Mindful that substantive negotiations on the Convention and the protocols thereto continue in Vienna in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 40/243 of 18 December 1985 and 53/111 and 53/114 of 9 December 1998,

Recalling that in its resolution 54/126 it decided that the Ad Hoc Committee should submit the final text of the Convention and the protocols thereto to the General Assembly for early adoption prior to a high-level signing conference,

Recalling also the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime, adopted by the World Ministerial Conference on Organized Transnational Crime, held in Naples, Italy, from 21 to 23 November 1994, in which the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice was requested to initiate the process of elaborating international instruments, such as a convention or conventions against organized transnational crime, Recognizing the initiating role and the contribution of the Government of Poland to the development of a draft convention against transnational organized crime, Recognizing also the historic and symbolic importance of associating the first international convention against transnational organized crime with the city of Palermo, Italy,

1. Accepts with appreciation the offer of the Government of Italy to host a high-level political signing conference in Palermo for the purpose of signing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime (Palermo Convention) and the protocols thereto;

2. Decides to convene the High-level Political Signing Conference in Palermo;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to schedule the Conference for a period of up to one week before the end of the Millennium Assembly in 2000, with the Conference to be organized in accordance with resolution 40/243;

4. Requests the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention of the Secretariat to work with the Government of Italy, in consultation with Member States, to propose the agenda for and the organization of the Conference, including opportunities for high-level delegates to discuss matters related to the Convention and the protocols thereto, in particular the follow-up activities, for their effective implementation and future work;

5. Invites all States to be represented at the High-level Political Signing Conference at the highest possible levels of government.

Strategies for crime prevention

Crime prevention and trends

In March [E/CN.15/1999/3], the Secretary-General stated that the level of conventional crime in most countries was still unacceptably high. Victimization by crime was highest in cities in Latin America and sub-Saharan Africa, but people in cities elsewhere also were at risk. While crime in the developed world seemed to be leveling off, in several developed countries, violent crime was on the increase. In less developed countries, more people tended to regard criminal activity as a means of economic survival and to engage in such activity. Transnational organized crime exacerbated existing crime problems. There was an enormous annual turnover in markets for illegal goods, such as drugs, protected wildlife, stolen works of art, firearms and nuclear and/or toxic waste, as well as for trafficking in human beings. A rapidly growing body of knowledge of crime prevention indicated not only that special preventive measures resulted in lower crime rates, but also that such measures were often more cost-effective than conventional punitive ones. Crime prevention implied close cooperation between police, prosecutors, courts and probation offices with other State agencies, such as those involved in education, health care, social services, housing and urban development, as well as non-governmental organizations, local communities and other elements of civil society. The report noted that the meeting of the expert group on community involvement in crime prevention (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 8-10 February) had discussed a two-pronged approach to crime prevention, comprising long-term strategies dealing with economic, social and cultural causes of crime through economic, social, health-care and educational policies, and broad comprehensive programmes with a public health perspective aimed at assisting vulnerable families.

In an addendum to his report [E/CN.15/1999/3/Add.1], the Secretary-General stated that, regarding a study on the illicit and manufacturing of and trafficking in explosives by criminals, and abuse and misuse of explosives for criminal purposes, as called for by Economic and Social Council resolution 1998/17 [YUN 1998, p. 1052], the Centre for International Crime Prevention had conducted a preliminary review of the information available concerning the issues to be covered by the study. The review indicated that there were neither globally and firmly agreed upon definitions of terms for use in the study, nor comprehensive statistics on the criminal incidents in which explosive substances were involved worldwide. Thus, an effort to carry out the study could benefit from the assistance of a group of experts, as requested by the Council. As soon as the required funds were made available, the Centre would begin to prepare the study.

The attention of the Commission was drawn to the UNDCP publication, Global Report on Crime and Justice, which contained a comprehensive presentation of global crime trends, statistics and developments, including new and emerging issues, drawn from various sources, including the periodic UN surveys of crime trends and operations of criminal justice systems.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1999/30], adopted resolution 1999/25 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Effective crime prevention

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind its resolution 1996/16 of 23 July 1996, in which the Council requested the Secretary-General to continue to promote the use and application of United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice matters,

Recalling the preliminary draft elements of responsible crime prevention annexed to its resolution 1997/33 of 21 July 1997, in particular those on community involvement in crime prevention, contained in paragraphs 14 to 23 of that annex,

Recognizing that effective crime prevention is increasingly being regarded as a development issue in the international arena and that a viable criminal justice system is at the core of economic growth and social stability,

1. Takes note of the conclusions of the Expert Group Meeting on Community Involvement in Crime Prevention, held at Buenos Aires from 8 to 10 February 1999, and of the report of that meeting to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its eighth session;

2. Requests the Commission to urge Member States to recognize that effective crime prevention is the result of mobilizing local, national and international actors, stakeholders and partners;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to convene an interregional expert group meeting, with the extrabudgetary support of interested Governments, bearing in mind the preliminary draft elements of responsible crime prevention contained in the annex to Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/33, in order to analyse possible mechanisms for applying successful crime prevention strategies that are both situational and oriented towards social development to forms of crime such as urban crime, domestic violence and juvenile crime and, where appropriate, to new and emerging forms of crime such as organized crime, trafficking in persons, especially women and children, and corruption;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General, with the extrabudgetary support of interested Governments, to conduct a study on possible cultural and institutional differences in effective crime prevention and to make the study available to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice;

5. Requests the Commission to explore the possibility of preparing guidelines on crime prevention for policy makers and a handbook on crime prevention for practitioners;

6. Requests Member States to use the occasion of the workshop on community involvement in crime prevention that will be organized at the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, to be held at Vienna from 10 to 17 April 2000, as an opportunity for Governments with technical assistance needs to form partnerships with interested donor Governments and with United Nations entities for the express purpose of developing practical technical cooperation projects aimed at addressing common problems of crime prevention;

7. Takes note with appreciation of the initiative of the Governments of Canada, France and the Netherlands to convene a conference in collaboration with the Centre for International Crime Prevention on the theme "Putting crime prevention knowledge to work", to be held at Montreal from 3 to 6 October 1999, which will assist in the preparations for the Tenth Congress workshop on community involvement in crime prevention;

8. Invites Member States to hold regional meetings of government experts on community involvement in crime prevention in order to study and develop differentiated models of crime prevention strategies that are both situational and oriented towards social development in countries with similar cultural and legal traditions;

9. Urges the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention of the Secretariat to promote projects that contribute to the exchange of information and experience in crime prevention for the purpose of encouraging new forms of collaboration between countries at the levels of government, the community and non-governmental organizations;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure broad professional and geographical participation at the workshop of, inter alia, policy advisers, law enforcement, prosecutorial and judicial authorities, academics, social workers, health workers and educators, relevant United Nations bodies, including the United Nations Development Programme, relevant non-governmental organizations, members of the private security industry, the business community, the media, local government officials and crime prevention coordinators.

Corruption and bribery

The Expert Group Meeting on Corruption and its Financial Channels (Paris, 30 March–1 April) [E/CN.15/1999/10], convened in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1998/16 [YUN 1998, p. 1045], considered issues such as improving international cooperation in combating corruption, national efforts to strengthen international cooperation, and measures to improve the detection of financial flows resulting from corruption.

The experts submitted a number of recommendations for combating and controlling the phenomenon. In that regard, they proposed that Member States consider elaborating a universal instrument on the subject, taking into account relevant international best practices, international legal instruments and the ongoing negotiations on drafting the international convention against transnational organized crime. In that context, special attention should be paid to technical cooperation and assistance for developing countries or appropriate regional organizations through implementation of the global programme against corruption developed by UNDCP.

The experts were of the opinion that the international community needed to equip itself with effective international tools to control corruption and curb its detrimental effects on economic and financial systems.

Regarding measures to be taken at the national level, the experts encouraged ratification of existing anti-corruption instruments and enactment of appropriate legislation to combat different forms of corruption and laundering of the proceeds of corruption. They also considered that international cooperation involving all States would aid in prosecuting bribe-givers and -takers worldwide.

In other action, participants at the Global Forum on Fighting Corruption (Washington, D.C., 24–26 February) called on their 90 Governments to cooperate in regional and global bodies to adopt effective anti-corruption principles and practices and to create ways to assist each other through mutual evaluation.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1999/30], adopted resolution 1999/22 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Action against corruption

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 54/128 below.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/596], adopted resolution 54/128 without vote [agenda item 107].

Action against corruption

The General Assembly,

Noting the corrosive effect that corruption has on democracy, development, the rule of law and economic activity,

Recognizing that corruption is a primary tool of organized crime in its efforts, often conducted on an international basis, to subvert Governments and legitimate commerce,

Drawing attention to the increasing number of regional conventions and other regional instruments recently developed to fight corruption, including the Convention on Combating Bribery of Foreign Public Officials in International Business Transactions of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development adopted on 21 November 1997, the Inter-American Convention against Corruption adopted by the Organization of American States on 29 March 1996, the Principles to Combat Corruption in African Countries of the Global Coalition for Africa, the Criminal Law Convention on Corruption and the Agreement Establishing the Group of States against Corruption adopted by the Council of Europe on 27 January and 1 May 1999, respectively, the conventions and related protocols on corruption of the European Union and recommendation 32 of the Senior Experts Group on Transnational Organized Crime endorsed by the Political Group of Eight at Lyon, France, on 29 June 1996, as well as to best practices, such as those compiled by the Financial Action Task Force on Money Laundering, the Basel Committee on Banking Supervision and the International Organization of Securities Commissions,

Commending the efforts in the United Nations to address corruption concerns in a global forum, including the United Nations Declaration against Corruption and Bribery in International Commercial Transactions and the International Code of Conduct for Public Officials, the ongoing development of a comprehensive international convention against transnational organized crime and protocols thereto by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, established pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/111 of 9 December 1998, and the manual prepared by the Secretariat on practical measures against corruption,

Noting the holding of the Expert Group Meeting on Corruption and its Financial Channels in Paris from 30 March to 1 April 1999, pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1998/16 of 28 July 1998,

Noting also the holding of the first Global Forum on Fighting Corruption in Washington, D.C., from 24 to 26 February 1999, at the invitation of the Vice-President of the United States of America, at which participants from ninety Governments called upon their Governments to cooperate in regional and global bodies to adopt effective anti-corruption principles and practices and to create ways to assist one another through mutual evaluation,

1. Takes note with appreciation of, and subscribes to, the conclusions and recommendations of the Expert Group Meeting on Corruption and its Financial Channels, held in Paris from 30 March to 1 April 1999, which are contained in the report of the Expert Group Meeting;

2. Also takes note with appreciation of the Declaration made by the first Global Forum on Fighting Corruption, held in Washington, D.C., from 24 to 26 February 1999, and notes that the second Global Forum is to be held in the Netherlands in 2000 as a follow-up to the first Global Forum;

3. Invites Member States to examine, at the national level, as appropriate, taking into account the above-mentioned documents, the adequacy of their domestic legal regimes in terms of guarding against corruption and providing for forfeiture of the proceeds of corruption, drawing upon international assistance available for that purpose, with a view, where necessary:

(a) To strengthening national laws and regulations in order to criminalize corruption in all its forms, amending provisions against money-laundering so that they cover bribes and the proceeds of corruption, as well as provisions concerning the prevention and detection of acts of corruption and money-laundering;

(b) To improving the transparency, vigilance and monitoring of financial transactions and limiting bank and professional secrecy in cases involving criminal investigation;

(c) To promoting both inter-agency coordination and international administrative and judicial cooperation in matters involving corruption;

(d) To enacting legislation and establishing programmes promoting the full involvement of civil society in efforts to fight corruption;

(e) To providing, in accordance with relevant international instruments and domestic legislation, for the possibility of providing extradition and mutual assistance in cases involving corruption or money-laundering;

4. Stresses the need to develop a global strategy to strengthen international cooperation aimed at the prevention and punishment of corruption, including the links of corruption with organized crime and money-laundering, by:

(a) Encouraging Member States to become parties to and to implement the terms of relevant international conventions and other instruments aimed at fighting corruption;

(b) Inviting Member States to participate in conferences and other forums for the advancement of international efforts against corruption;

(c) Also inviting Member States to explore the possibilities of developing a global system for peer review regarding the adequacy of practices aimed at combating corruption;

5. Directs the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime to incorporate into the draft Convention measures against corruption linked to organized crime, including provisions regarding the sanctioning of acts of corruption involving public officials;

6. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee, using such time as its schedule permits and with extrabudgetary resources provided for that purpose, to explore the desirability of an international instrument against corruption, either ancillary to or independent of the Convention, to be developed after the finalization of the Convention and the three additional instruments referred to in General Assembly resolution 53/111, and to present its views to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice;

7. Invites Member States to keep the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention of the Secretariat informed of progress made in the implementation of the recommendations of the Expert Group Meeting on Corruption and its Financial Channels;

8. Requests the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention:

(a) To ensure that the ongoing revision of the manual prepared by the Secretariat on practical measures against corruption incorporates the recommendations of the Expert Group Meeting on Corruption and its Financial Channels and takes note of the conclusions of the first Global Forum on Fighting Corruption;

(b) To continue to develop, in consultation with Member States, an effective global programme for providing technical assistance to fight corruption;

(c) To explore ways to convince underregulated financial centres to adopt rules enabling them to trace and take action against the proceeds of organized crime and corruption, to participate actively in international cooperation aimed at preventing and controlling related forms of financial crime and, if necessary, to consider measures to protect the international financial system from the underregulated financial centres and mechanisms for the establishment of such minimum rules;

(d) To report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice no later than at its tenth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution and the steps taken by Member States to combat corruption and its proceeds;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to undertake, within existing or extrabudgetary resources, technical cooperation activities to combat corruption, in consultation with Member States that may be able to provide assistance.

On 22 December [meeting 87], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/54/586], adopted resolution 54/205 without vote [agenda item 98 (b)].

Prevention of corrupt practices and illegal transfer of funds

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/176 of 15 December 1998 on action against corruption and bribery in international commercial transactions,

Concerned about the seriousness of problems posed by corruption, which may endanger the stability and security of societies, undermine the values of democracy and morality and jeopardize social, economic and political development,

Recognizing the importance of existing international and national laws for combating corruption in international commercial transactions,

Recognizing also the important role of the business community, in particular the private sector, in enhancing the dynamic process of the development of the agricultural, industrial and service sectors and the need to create an enabling environment for business in order to facilitate economic growth and development of developing countries, most especially African countries,

Mindful of the very important role that the private sector can play in fostering economic growth and development and of the active involvement of the United Nations system in facilitating the constructive participation and orderly interaction of the private sector in the development process by embracing universal principles and norms, such as honesty, transparency and accountability,

1. Condemns corruption, bribery, money-laundering and the illegal transfer of funds;

2. Calls for further international and national measures to combat corrupt practices and bribery in international transactions and for international co-operation in support of these measures;

3. Also calls for, while recognizing the importance of national measures, increased international co-operation, inter alia, through the United Nations system, in devising ways and means of preventing and addressing illegal transfers, as well as in repatriating illegally transferred funds to their countries of origin, and calls upon all countries and entities concerned to cooperate in this regard;

4. Requests the international community to support the efforts of all countries aimed at strengthening institutional capacity for preventing corruption, bribery, money-laundering and the illegal transfer of funds;

5. Decides to keep this matter under review, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with Member States and relevant bodies of the United Nations system, to include in the report called for in its resolution 53/176, to be submitted at its fifty-fifth session, information on progress in the implementation of the present resolution and recommendations, inter alia, with regard to repatriating illegally transferred funds to their countries of origin.

UN standards and norms

Pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/22 [YUN 1992, p. 842], the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice a March report on the use and application of UN standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice [E/CN.15/1999/7].

In accordance with Council resolution 1998/21 [YUN 1998, p. 1047], the report incorporated the views of Member States, requested by the Secretary-General, on the plan of action for implementing the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, annexed to General Assembly resolution 40/34

[YUN 1985, p. 743]; on the establishment of an international fund for those victims; and on the creation of a coordination panel or other mechanism to promote implementation of the Declaration. The Secretary-General stated that all responding countries supported the plan of action and the establishment of a coordination panel or other mechanism to ensure concerted action among organizations of the UN system and other concerned entities to promote the Declaration's implementation. A number of States, however, had reservations on establishing the international fund.

The Secretary-General described the activities of the Coordination Panel on Technical Advice and Assistance in Juvenile Justice, established pursuant to Council resolution 1997/30 [YUN 1997, p. 1158] to ensure coordinated UN response. The Centre for International Crime Prevention, in cooperation with the United Nations Children's Fund, had initiated activities in Bangladesh, Guatemala and Lebanon, which were at various stages of implementation.

In response to Council resolution 1997/37 [YUN 1997, p. 1285], the Secretary-General summarized the replies of 21 Member States regarding prison conditions under their respective jurisdictions and any alternatives they had established to imprisonment.

In accordance with Council resolution 1998/21, the Centre, based on information received from questionnaires distributed to Member States, would provide to the Commission at its ninth (2000) session an update on the use and application of the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for Non-custodial Measures (The Tokyo Rules), annexed to Assembly resolution 45/110 [YUN 1990, p. 752], and of Guidelines on the Role of Prosecutors and Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers, both adopted by the Eighth (1990) Crime Congress [ibid., p. 701]. The Centre had prepared survey instruments on the United Nations Declaration against Corruption and Bribery in International Commercial Transactions, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 51/191 [YUN 1996, p. 1038]; the United Nations Declaration on Crime and Public Security, annexed to Assembly resolution 51/60 [ibid., p. 1028]; and the International Code of Conduct for Public Officials, adopted in Assembly resolution 51/59 [ibid., p. 1036].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1999/30], adopted three resolutions. Resolution 1999/27 was adopted without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Penal reform

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1997/36 of 21 July 1997 on international cooperation for the improvement of prison conditions and the Kampala Declaration on Prison Conditions in Africa, annexed to that resolution,

Recalling also its resolution 1998/23 of 28 July 1998 on international cooperation aimed at the reduction of prison overcrowding and the promotion of alternative sentencing and the Kadoma Declaration on Community Service, contained in annex I to that resolution,

Bearing in mind the recommendations of the African Regional Preparatory Meeting for the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held at Kampala from 7 to 9 December 1998, on topics III and IV,

Bearing in mind also the relevant United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice, in particular the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, the Basic Principles for the Treatment of Prisoners, the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (The Beijing Rules) and the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for Non-custodial Measures (The Tokyo Rules),

Taking note of the Arusha Declaration on Good Prison Practice, annexed to the present resolution,

1. Urges Member States that have not yet done so, to the extent needed:

(a) To take specific action and to establish time-bound targets to address the serious problems confronting many Member States as a result of prison overcrowding, recognizing that the conditions in overcrowded prisons may affect the human rights of prisoners and that many States lack the necessary resources to alleviate prison overcrowding;

(b) In accordance with the Kampala Declaration on Prison Conditions in Africa and the Kadoma Declaration on Community Service, to devise, where necessary, and further to promote measures to reduce the number of prisoners on remand and awaiting trial;

(c) In this context, to make increased use of alternatives to imprisonment, such as pre-trial release, release on own recognizance, conditional release, restitution, community service or labour, the use of fines and payment by instalments and the introduction of conditional and suspended sentences;

2. Recommends to Member States that they consider the following, subject to the provisions of their national law:

(a) Conducting research on new approaches to penal and justice reform, including promoting alternatives to imprisonment, alternative forms of dispute resolution, new approaches to prison and traditional forms of justice, alternatives to custody, alternative ways of dealing with juveniles, restorative justice, mediation and the role of civil society in penal reform;

(b) The possible use of new modes of accessible justice for minor offences, with a view to the following:

- (i) Reviewing existing trends in and issues concerning people's access to criminal justice systems;
- (ii) Examining models of pre-trial dispute resolution;
- (iii) Assessing the use of mechanisms for expediting justice;

3. Invites international and regional financial institutions such as the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund to incorporate in their technical assistance programmes measures to promote examination of those issues;

4. Invites the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, to be held at Vienna from 10 to 17 April 2000, to consider those issues;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its tenth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

ANNEX

Arusha Declaration on Good Prison Practice

Aware of the fact that the management of prisons is a social service and that it is important to keep the public informed about the work of prison services,

Also aware of the need to promote transparency and accountability in the management of prisons and of prisoners in Africa,

Recalling the Kampala Declaration on Prison Conditions in Africa, which sets out an agenda for penal reform in Africa,

Taking note of the Kadoma Declaration on Community Service, which recommends greater use of non-custodial measures for offences committed at the lower end of the criminal scale,

Taking note also of the provisions of the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment that safeguard the right to life, to a prompt trial and to human dignity,

Bearing in mind the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, the Basic Principles for the Treatment of Prisoners, the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (The Beijing Rules), the Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment and the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials, Bearing in mind also that prison officers who comply with national and international standards for the protection of prisoners deserve the respect and the co-operation of the prison administration where they serve and the community as a whole,

Noting that conditions in most African prisons fall short of these minimum national and international standards,

The participants in the Fourth Conference of the Central, Eastern and Southern African Heads of Correctional Services, meeting in Arusha from 23 to 27 February 1999, agree with the following principles:

(a) To promote and implement good prison practice, in conformity with the international standards mentioned above, and to adjust domestic laws to those standards, if this has not yet been done;

(b) To improve management practices in individual prisons and in the penitentiary system as a whole in order to increase transparency and efficiency within the prison service;

(c) To enhance the professionalism of prison staff and to improve their working and living conditions;

(d) To respect and protect the rights and dignity of prisoners as well as to ensure compliance with national and international standards;

(e) To provide training programmes to prison staff that incorporate human rights standards in a way that is meaningful and relevant and to improve the skills base of prison officers and, for this purpose, to establish a training board of the Conference of the Central, Eastern and Southern African Heads of Correctional Services;

(f) To establish a criminal justice mechanism comprising all the components of the criminal justice system that would coordinate activities and cooperate in the solution of common problems;

(g) To invite civil society groups into the prisons to work in partnership with the prison services in order to improve the conditions of imprisonment and the working environment of prisons;

(h) To call upon Governments and national and international organizations to give full support to the present declaration.

The Council adopted resolution 1999/26 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Development and implementation of mediation and restorative justice measures in criminal justice

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1997/33 of 21 July 1997, entitled "Elements of responsible crime prevention: standards and norms", as well as its resolution 1998/23 of 28 July 1998, in which it recommended to Member States that they consider using amicable means of settlement to deal with petty offences, for example, by using mediation, acceptance of civil reparation or agreement to compensation, and to consider using non-custodial measures, such as community service, as alternatives to imprisonment,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 52/90 of 12 December 1997, in which the Assembly reaffirmed the high priority attached to technical cooperation and advisory services in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General on crime prevention and on the use and application of United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice and of the report of the Expert Group Meeting on Community Involvement in Crime Prevention, held at Buenos Aires from 8 to 10 February 1999,

Recalling the existing regional instruments, including Council of Europe recommendations No. R (85) 11 on the position of victims in criminal law and procedural criminal law and No. R (98) 1 on family mediation, adopted by the Committee of Ministers on 28 June 1985 and 21 January 1998, respectively,

Bearing in mind that crime prevention in all its aspects is a fundamental issue to be considered at the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, to be held at Vienna from 10 to 17 April 2000, and that the issue of community involvement in crime prevention will be the subject of a workshop to be organized during the Tenth Congress,

1. Recognizes that, while a significant number of minor offences jeopardize citizens' security and comfort, traditional criminal justice mechanisms do not always provide an appropriate and timely response to those phenomena, whether from the perspective of the victim or in terms of adequate and appropriate penalties;

2. Stresses that an important means of settlement of minor disputes and offences can be represented, in appropriate cases, by mediation and restorative justice measures, especially measures that, under the supervision of a judicial or other competent authority, facilitate the meeting of the offender with the victim, compensation for damages suffered or the provision of community services;

3. Emphasizes that mediation and restorative justice measures, where appropriate, can lead to satisfaction for victims as well as to the prevention of future illicit behaviour and can represent a viable alternative to short terms of imprisonment and to fines;

4. Welcomes the development in many countries of experience in mediation and restorative justice in the field of criminal justice, where appropriate, in the areas of, inter alia, minor offences, family problems, school and community problems, and problems involving children and youth;

5. Calls upon States to consider, within their legal systems, the development of procedures to serve as alternatives to formal criminal justice proceedings and to formulate mediation and restorative justice policies, with a view to promoting a culture favourable to mediation and restorative justice among law enforcement, judicial and social authorities, as well as local communities, and to consider the provision of appropriate training for those involved in the implementation of such processes;

6. Calls upon interested States, international organizations and other entities to exchange information and experience on mediation and restorative justice, including in the framework of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, and to contribute actively to the discussion and consideration of mediation and restorative justice policies in the framework of the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and in particular in its workshop on community involvement in crime prevention;

7. Requests the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to examine ways and means of facilitating an effective exchange of information concerning national experience in this area and possible ways to promote awareness among Member States of the issues of mediation and restorative justice;

8. Recommends to the Commission that it consider the desirability of formulating United Nations standards in the field of mediation and restorative justice, which are intended to ensure fairness in the resolution of minor offences;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to undertake, within existing or extrabudgetary resources, activities to assist Member States in developing mediation and restorative justice policies and to facilitate the exchange at the regional and international levels of experience on the issues of mediation and restorative justice, including dissemination of best practices;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on work in progress in this area to be submitted to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its tenth session or as soon as possible, taking into account, inter alia, relevant results of the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders.

The Council adopted resolution 1999/28 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Administration of juvenile justice

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1997/30 of 21 July 1997 on the administration of juvenile justice and the Guidelines for Action on Children in the Criminal Justice System annexed to that resolution, and its resolution 1998/21 of 28 July 1998 on United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice,

Welcoming the fact that the Committee on the Rights of the Child places considerable emphasis on juvenile justice during its review of reports by States parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child, and noting that its concluding observations often include recommendations to seek technical assistance in juvenile justice from, inter alia, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention of the Secretariat, the United Nations Children's Fund and the network of non-governmental organizations concerned with juvenile justice issues, through the Coordination Panel on Technical Advice and Assistance in Juvenile Justice, established pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/30,

Emphasizing the important preventive role of the effective use and application of existing United Nations standards and norms in juvenile justice,

Concerned about the situation of children and young people in conflict with the law and their treatment by the criminal justice system in a number of States,

Acknowledging that there are links between juvenile delinquency and drug abuse, and recognizing that there is an urgent need for adequate measures and enhanced cooperation between all relevant actors at the national and international levels,

Recognizing that young drug addicts in conflict with the law are often victims and offenders at the same time, vulnerable not only to drug-related criminal activities, but also to activities involving ordinary crime,

Taking note of the draft proposal by the Secretariat on the global programme against trafficking in human beings, taking into account the fact that children, especially the girl child, and young people are often victims of such trafficking,

Concerned about the fact that, in the view of the Committee on the Rights of the Child, there is a need to strengthen the juvenile justice system in the majority of States parties whose reports have been considered by the Committee,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the use and application of United Nations standards and norms in juvenile justice, in which the Secretary-General highlighted difficulties and deficiencies in the use and application of United Nations standards and norms in juvenile justice by Member States;

2. Welcomes the fact that the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention of the Secretariat has enhanced its cooperation with other United Nations entities and with other partners involved in assisting Member States in setting up separate juvenile justice systems or in improving existing juvenile justice systems by bringing them in line with United Nations standards and norms in juvenile justice;

3. Also welcomes the increased number of technical assistance projects in the field of juvenile justice, reflecting an increased awareness among Member States of the importance of juvenile justice reform in establishing and maintaining stable societies and the rule of law;

4. Further welcomes the establishment of the Coordination Panel on Technical Advice and Assistance in Juvenile Justice to coordinate activities in the field of juvenile justice, subject to the modalities set out in Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/30, and calls on the partners involved to increase their cooperation, share information and pool their capacities and interests in order to increase the effectiveness of programme implementation;

5. Urges States to include, where necessary, provisions for juvenile justice in their national development plans, calls upon States to include the administration of juvenile justice in their funding policies for development cooperation, and invites them to respond favourably to requests from other States seeking assistance from the Centre for International Crime Prevention, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights or the United Nations Children's Fund in developing and improving juvenile justice systems;

6. Stresses the need to give timely assistance to children and young people in difficult circumstances, especially in drug-related situations, in order to prevent them from resorting to crime;

7. Underlines the importance of establishing, where possible and as appropriate, alternatives to imprisonment for young people in conflict with the law, including young drug addicts or users, such as the provision of treatment and vocational training, counselling, rehabilitation, reintegration and aftercare services;

8. Requests States to promote re-education and rehabilitation of children and young people who are in conflict with the law by encouraging, where appropriate, the use of methods of restorative justice, mediation, conflict resolution and victim/offender conciliation, as alternatives to judicial proceedings, as well as within the framework of community-based and custodial-based sanctions;

9. Stresses the need for close cooperation between all authorities and other actors working with children and young people, especially in the field of juvenile justice, such as the police, the judiciary, lawyers, prison staff, probation officers, social workers, health professionals, teachers and parents;

10. Urges Governments to consider including in policies, legislation and programmes on juvenile justice adequate prevention and rehabilitation measures targeting young offenders who are drug addicts or users or who commit drug-related criminal offences;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure effective cooperation between the relevant United Nations entities active in the fields of juvenile justice and drug control, in particular between the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the Centre for International Crime Prevention, and the other organizations mentioned in the Guidelines for Action on Children in the Criminal Justice System;

12. Urges States parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child to ensure full implementation of their obligations under the Convention and to pursue the goals set forth in the Convention with regard to the treatment of children and young people in the administration of juvenile justice, and urges States to use and apply the United Nations standards and norms in juvenile justice and related instruments;

13. Reaffirms that juvenile justice remains a high priority in the work of the Centre for International Crime Prevention and the institutes comprising the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network, in particular as children and young people, both those in conflict with the law and those in difficult circumstances who may be potential future criminals, are easy prey for criminal organizations;

14. Calls upon States parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child to avail themselves fully of the existing programmes for technical assistance in juvenile justice;

15. Calls upon the Secretary-General to provide technical assistance in juvenile justice, in particular where States parties request assistance pursuant to recommendations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child, and to consider the provision of technical assistance in juvenile justice as a matter of high priority;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its ninth session a programme proposal, involving all United Nations entities mentioned in the Guidelines for Action on Children in the Criminal Justice System, by which the timely and in-depth assessment of the needs of States parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child regarding juvenile justice reform is ensured;

17. Underlines the need for mainstreaming a gender perspective into all policies and programmes relating to children and young people in the criminal justice system;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the administration of juvenile justice, as well as on the activities of the Coordination Panel on Technical Advice and Assistance in Juvenile Justice, to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its tenth session.

Human resources

UN research and training institutes

UN Institute for Training and Research

A September note by the Secretary-General [A/54/390] transmitted a report approved by the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) on the development and possible reformatting of the Institute. The Board noted that more than half of its members were scheduled to complete their tenure by year's end, changing the format and profile of the Board, which had participated in UNITAR's recent restructuring. The departure would mark the end of a phase at the Institute and the possible beginning of the next. The coincidence of the Board's reconstitution and the end of the century and millennium also encouraged reflection on the future of UNITAR.

The report presented a number of arguments in favour of change in the Institute, including the decline of official development assistance, UNITAR's narrow financial base and the growth of the private sector, and listed some possible avenues for initiating the change. The Board suggested that the next Board should continue deliberations on the matter.

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/195 [YUN 1998, p. 1056], the Secretary-General, in an October report [A/54/480], described progress made by UNITAR in cooperating with UN system partner organizations, and provided an assessment of a UNITAR survey on training of personnel from Member States by UN entities.

Cooperation was increasing in applying modern information and communication technologies, such as CD-ROMs and the Internet. Training and capacity-building programmes had been developed in the use of geographic information systems to facilitate the flow of institutional and scientific information among national and regional actors. Joint programmes had been introduced in developing countries, particularly in Africa, to better assess their environmental situation. UNITAR had designed and developed programmes with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the Global Environment Facility and others. The report concluded that despite progress made in strengthening cooperation between UNITAR and other programmes, more effort was required to avoid overlap and duplication.

An assessment of the UNITAR survey, which provided brief descriptions of training programmes offered to Member States by UN funds, programmes and entities concluded, among other factors, that training for governmental officials and civil society representatives constituted an important part of UN activity, with expenditures estimated at $65 million annually. It was noted that the prevalent pattern of financing training programmes was extrabudgetary; many programmes appeared to be directed at training trainers; and pragmatic cooperative links were used. It was not possible to discern from the survey the assessment and evaluation means employed. Moreover, it did not explain how the evaluation results were used to improve programmes. In addition, the survey did not offer any pedagogical quality assessment.

The report presented proposals for a broader study that could be conducted to obtain a complete and accurate picture of such training within the entire UN system. Meanwhile, the survey and the report of the Joint Inspection Unit on training institutions in the UN system [YUN 1997, p. 1178] shared the opinion that a clearing-house function within the UN system to provide governmental officials with a central reference point for information on training opportunities was desirable.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/54/590], adopted resolution 54/229 without vote [agenda item 102].

United Nations Institute for Training and Research

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/207 of 21 December 1993, 49/125 of 19 December 1994, 50/121 of 20 December 1995, 51/188 of 16 December 1996, 52/206 of 18 December 1997 and 53/195 of 15 December 1998,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and the reflections of the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research on the development and possible reorganization of the Institute,

Welcoming the efforts towards consolidation of the restructuring process of the Institute and the recent progress made by the Institute in its various programmes and activities, including the improved co-operation that has been established with other organizations of the United Nations system and with regional and national institutions,

Expressing its appreciation to the Governments and private institutions that have made or pledged financial and other contributions to the Institute,

Noting that contributions to the General Fund of the Institute have not increased along with the increased participation of the developed countries in the training programmes, and stressing the urgent need to address this discrepancy,

Reiterating that training activities should be accorded a more visible and larger role in support of the management of international affairs and in the execution of the economic and social development programmes of the United Nations system,

1. Reaffirms the importance of a coordinated United Nations system-wide approach to research and training, and underlines the need for United Nations training and research institutions to avoid duplication in their work;

2. Also reaffirms the relevance of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, in view of the growing importance of training within the United Nations and the training requirements of States, and the relevance of research activities related to training undertaken by the Institute within its mandate;

3. Stresses the need for the Institute to strengthen further its cooperation with other United Nations institutes and relevant national, regional and international institutes;

4. Welcomes the progress made in building partnerships between the Institute and other agencies and bodies of the United Nations system with respect to their training programmes, and, in this context, underlines the need to develop further and to expand the scope of these partnerships, particularly at the country level;

5. Stresses the need for continuity in the management of the Institute in order to ensure efficient and effective completion of the process of restructuring and revitalization;

6. Requests the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research to intensify its efforts to attract experts from developing countries and countries with economies in transition for the preparation of the relevant training materials for the programmes and activities of the Institute, and stresses that the Institute's courses should focus primarily on development issues;

7. Renews its appeal to all Governments, in particular those of developed countries, and to private institutions that have not yet contributed financially or otherwise to the Institute to give it their generous financial and other support, and urges the States that have interrupted their voluntary contributions to consider resuming them in view of the successful restructuring and revitalization of the Institute;

8. Encourages the Board of Trustees of the Institute to continue its efforts to address the discrepancy between the decline in contributions to the General Fund of the Institute and the increase in participation in its programmes;

9. Also encourages the Board of Trustees to consider organizing events of the Institute at additional sites, including the cities hosting regional commissions, in order to promote greater participation and to reduce costs;

10. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Institute and with United Nations funds and programmes, to continue to explore ways and means systematically to utilize the Institute in the execution of training and capacity-building programmes;

11. Notes with appreciation the services rendered by the Executive Director of the Institute in the light of the challenges emanating from the increased responsibilities encountered by his office;

12. Renews its call to the Secretary-General to continue to explore all possible ways and means to provide additional facilities to the Institute for maintaining its offices and for conducting programmes and training courses that are provided at no cost to States and to their representatives accredited to United Nations offices in New York, Nairobi, Geneva and Vienna;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

United Nations University

The report of the United Nations University (UNU) Council [A/55/31], which described activities in 1999, stated that UNU had prepared its first strategic plan covering 1999-2002 and launched pilot initiatives within its new lines of development, bringing the University closer to the UN system and forming closer partnerships with international academia and stakeholders in UNU's host countries, particularly Japan. UNU also began new activities, including projects related to integrated capacity-building in water management and the pilot phase of the UNU International Courses. In the context of strategic planning, the issues that faced the United Nations in the twenty-first century were examined and efforts were made to determine areas on which the University's work would have the greatest impact.

During the year, the University concentrated on the thematic areas of peace and governance, and environment and sustainable development, as well as on knowledge networks, capacity-building, and dissemination and public lectures. In terms of peace and governance, the report outlined the challenges faced internationally by the conflicts in Kosovo, East Timor and Chechnya, noting that the University had made proposals for developing a new global message and institutional operations due to the international circumstances. Other initiatives included the launching of a Zero Emissions Forum, which brought together representatives from business, government and the scientific community to promote a development model in which all industrial inputs could be converted into final products. The College of Research Associates was launched by the UNU Institute for Natural Resources in Africa. With regard to capacity-building, UNU International Courses completed its pilot phase and global seminars were held in additional locations in Japan. UNU also provided fellowships to 119 young scientists, mostly from developing countries, and held over 40 brief training courses on various issues. In order to assist in developing a coordinated approach to environment policy, UNU convened a major international interlinkages conference on synergies and coordination between multilateral environmental agreements in July. The University's work also led to the publication of 24 books, of which 19 were published by the UNU Press.

UNU Council

The UNU Council, at its forty-sixth session (Tokyo, Japan, 29 November-3 December) focused on: reviewing the year's activities; discussing and adopting the 1999-2002 strategic plan; and approving the programme and budget for the 2000-2001 biennium. The Council also reviewed progress made in implementing recommendations of external evaluations and in developing a number of new UNU programmes.

University for Peace

A September report of the Secretary-General presented measures taken to revitalize the University for Peace by the Secretary-General, the UNESCO Director-General and the host Government, Costa Rica [A/54/312].

The Council of the University, which was reconstituted with new members, met in Paris on 29 and 30 March. It elected its President, who assumed the additional responsibilities of Rector until a new Rector was appointed, and established an Executive Committee. The Council had not met since 1994, largely because of financial constraints. The new administration had initiated a review of all existing programmes, capacities and facilities to develop a new long-term strategy with accompanying programme proposals, budget, work and management plans. The report described the programmes currently in operation and noted that although they had provided the University with valuable experience, they had not been on a scale or had the scope necessary to enable it to fulfil its global mission. Prospective programmes under consideration related to a culture of peace (see p. 593); environment, natural resources and peace; the establishment of peace parks; economic development and peace; the media and peace; and democracy and peace. Regarding the future of the University, political and financial support from members would reinvigorate its long-term prospects.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 November [meeting 56], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/29 [draft: A/54/L.30 & Add.1, orally revised] without vote [agenda item 21].

University for Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in its resolution 34/111 of 14 December 1979 it approved the idea of establishing the University for Peace as a specialized international centre for post-graduate studies, research and the dissemination of knowledge specifically aimed at training and education for peace and its universal promotion within the United Nations system,

Recalling also that in its resolution 35/55 of 5 December 1980 it approved the establishment of the University for Peace in conformity with the International Agreement for the Establishment of the University for Peace,

Recalling further its resolutions 45/8 of 24 October 1990, 46/11 of 24 October 1991 and 48/9 of 25 October 1993,

Recalling that in its resolution 46/11 it decided to include in the agenda of its forty-eighth session and biennially thereafter an item entitled "University for Peace",

Recalling also its resolution 50/41 of 8 December 1995, in which it decided to request the Secretary-General to consider ways of strengthening cooperation between the United Nations and the University for Peace and to submit a report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session,

Recalling further its adoption on 13 September 1999 of the Declaration and Programme of Action on a Culture of Peace,

Noting that in 1991 the Secretary-General, with the assistance of the United Nations Development Programme, established a Trust Fund for Peace consisting of voluntary contributions in order to provide the University with the means necessary to extend its sphere of activity to the whole world, taking full advantage of its potential capacity for education, research and support of the United Nations and to carry out its mandate of promoting peace in the world,

Noting with appreciation that the Government of Uruguay, by agreement with the University for Peace, established in 1997 a World Centre for Research and Information on Peace as regional sub-headquarters of the University for South America,

Noting also with appreciation the vigorous actions taken by the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and with the encouragement and support of the Government of Costa Rica, to revitalize the University,

Noting that the University has placed special emphasis on the area of conflict prevention, peacekeeping, peace-building and peaceful settlement of disputes, and that it has launched programmes in the areas of democratic consensus-building and training of academic experts in the techniques of peaceful settlement of conflicts,

Noting also that the University has launched a broad programme for building a culture of peace in Central America and the Caribbean in the context of the efforts being made by the United Nations and by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for the development and promotion of a culture of peace,

Noting with appreciation that the University is organizing a symposium in celebration of the International Year of Older Persons, 1999, at which it will emphasize the valuable contribution that older persons can make to the promotion of peace, solidarity, tolerance and the culture of peace,

Recognizing the important and varied activities carried out by the University during the period 1997-1999, within its financial limitations and with the valuable assistance and contributions of Governments, foundations and non-governmental organizations,

Considering the importance of promoting education for peace that fosters respect for the values inherent in peace and universal coexistence among persons, including respect for the life, dignity and integrity of human beings, as well as friendship and solidarity among peoples irrespective of their nationality, race, sex, religion or culture,

Considering that, by its resolution 52/15 of 20 November 1997, the General Assembly proclaimed the year 2000 as the International Year for the Culture of Peace and that it should be ushered in with One Day in Peace, 1 January 2000,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to resolution 52/9 of 4 November 1997, on ways of strengthening co-operation between the United Nations and the University for Peace;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to consider using the services of the University in his conflict-resolution and peace-building efforts;

3. Invites Member States, intergovernmental bodies, non-governmental organizations and interested individuals to contribute directly to the Trust Fund for Peace or to the budget of the University;

4. Invites Member States to accede to the International Agreement for the Establishment of the University for Peace, thereby demonstrating their support for an educational institution devoted to the promotion of a universal culture of peace;

5. Invites Member States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and all the peoples of the world to celebrate One Day in Peace, 1 January 2000;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "University for Peace".

Human resources for development

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/196 [YUN 1997, p. 1180], the Secretary-General, in a September report [A/54/408], examined the challenges and constraints that beset the development of human resources, including the Asian economic and financial crisis and its global impact, and identified possible new approaches to human resources development.

The Secretary-General emphasized that the comprehensive approach to human resources for development outlined in his 1997 note [YUN 1997, p. 1180] remained an overarching priority. Continued investments should be made in all factors of human development, such as education and training, health and nutrition, to achieve universal coverage, and everyone's well-being had to be the overall goal.

The report outlined the use of information technology as a new approach to human resources development. It could be applied to enhance learning through electronic community centres (also called tele-centres or cyber-centres), which facilitated networking, social communication and access to official data, among other advantages, and enhanced awareness of entitlements and opportunities in areas such as education, health, agricultural extension and social security. In addition, the centres created new opportunities for learning, income-earning, livelihoods and jobs, and would be key in bringing the information technology revolution to remote, unconnected and under-served communities. The report summarized strategies designed to build capacity to enter the information age in Brazil, Costa Rica, Egypt, Jamaica, Malaysia, South Africa and Thailand.

The UN system was supporting the efforts of developing countries to achieve universal access to information and communication technologies learning opportunities. A symposium on jobs in the information society of the twenty-first century (Damascus, Syrian Arab Republic), supported by UNDP Arab States, identified initiatives that Arab countries could take to enter the information age. The UN system could develop a global monitoring strategy to record and promote progress in information and communication technology. People development and empowering communities with universal access to learning opportunities could become a cross-cutting theme in UN country programmes.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/54/587/Add.4], adopted resolution 54/211 without vote [agenda item 99 (d)].

Developing human resources for development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 45/191 of 21 December 1990, 46/143 of 17 December 1991, 48/205 of 21 December 1993, 50/105 of 20 December 1995 and 52/196 of 18 December 1997, as well as the relevant sections of the Agenda for Development,

Recognizing that the well-being of people is the overall goal of sustainable development,

Stressing that Governments have the primary responsibility for defining and implementing appropriate policies for human resources development and that there is a need for continued support from the international community to complement the efforts of developing countries,

Stressing also that there is a need for a supportive and favourable national and international economic environment that will enhance human resources development in developing countries and promote sustained economic growth and sustainable development, in accordance with the relevant General Assembly resolutions and the outcomes of recent United Nations conferences,

Recognizing that there is a need to integrate human resources development into comprehensive strategies that mainstream a gender perspective, taking into account the needs of all people, in particular the needs of women and the girl child,

Recognizing also the vital role of South-South co-operation in supporting national efforts at human resources development,

Expressing concern at the increasing development gap between developed and developing countries, including the gap in knowledge, information and communication technologies, and at the increasing disparity of income in and among nations and its adverse impact on the development of human resources, in particular in the developing countries,

Stressing that developing countries should be assisted so that they can be well equipped with the knowledge of information technology that would enable them to benefit from the opportunities offered by globalization and to avoid the risk of marginalization in the process of globalization,

Emphasizing the continued need for coordination and integration among the organs and organizations of the United Nations system in assisting developing countries, in particular the least developed among them, to foster the development of their human resources, especially that of the most vulnerable groups, and for the United Nations to continue to give priority to human resources development in developing countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Recognizes the importance of developing human resources as a means, inter alia, of participating more effectively in the world economic system and of benefiting from globalization;

3. Urges increased investments in all aspects of human development, such as education and training, health and nutrition, to achieve universal coverage and the well-being of all;

4. Also urges the adoption of comprehensive approaches to human resources development which combine, among other factors, economic growth, provision of basic social services, poverty eradication, sustainable livelihoods, empowerment of women, involvement of youth, the needs of vulnerable groups of society, political freedom, popular participation, respect for human rights, justice and equity, all of which are essential for enhancing human capacity to meet the challenge of development;

5. Emphasizes the need to ensure the full participation of women in the formulation and implementation of national policies to promote human resources development;

6. Encourages all countries to accord priority, in particular in national budgets, to human resources development in the context of the adoption of economic and social policies;

7. Invites international organizations, including international financial institutions, to continue to give priority to supporting the objectives of human resources development and to integrating them into their policies, programmes and operations;

8. Recognizes the need to direct concerted efforts at enhancing the technical skills and know-how of people living in rural and agricultural areas, with a view to improving their means of livelihood and material well-being, and in this regard encourages the allocation of more resources for this purpose so as to facilitate access to appropriate technology and know-how from within and from other countries, in particular the developed countries, as well as through South-South cooperation;

9. Encourages the adoption of policies, approaches and measures that serve to narrow the increasing gap between developed and developing countries in information and communication technologies in particular and in technology in general, including by:

(a) Encouraging the private sector, in collaboration with the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations, to donate voluntarily to designated centres in developing countries literary materials, information and communication technology equipment and training, in order to facilitate improved access, as well as to make funds available for these purposes;

(b) Taking advantage of the rapid turnaround in both the educational institutions and corporations in developed countries of literary material and information and communication technology equipment, through coordinated efforts involving the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations and recipients or interested developing countries;

(c) Promoting transparent, efficient regulatory regimes and other policies that encourage investment;

(d) Supporting targeted investments in infrastructure that would establish the physical foundation for the operation of Internet services and pave the way for commercial and development applications;

(e) Developing training in information technologies for users such as non-governmental organizations, universities and business service organizations, as well as key governmental agencies;

10. Calls upon developing countries, with the support of the international community, to establish information, communication and electronic community centres, where appropriate and in cooperation with the private sector, in order to provide connectivity and access to information and knowledge;

11. Calls upon the developed countries and the United Nations system to increase support to programmes and activities of developing countries for human resources development and capacity-building, in particular those geared towards harnessing information and communication technologies;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session an assessment of the efficiency and effectiveness of the contribution made by the United Nations system to advancing human resources development in developing countries through its operational activities, and to make recommendations to enhance further its impact;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session, under the item entitled "Sustainable development and international economic co-operation", the sub-item entitled "Human resources development".

Education for all

The Secretary-General, in cooperation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/84 [YUN 1997, p. 1181], issued a June report on progress towards education for all [A/54/128-E/1999/70], which was being reviewed at the time by the ongoing Education for All (EFA) 2000 Assessment (see also PART THREE, Chapter XI). The assessment exercise was launched in 1997 under the auspices of the EFA Forum [YUN 1997, p. 1181], established to follow up the 1990 World Conference on Education for All [YUN 1990, p. 763]. The report discussed the feasibility of launching a United Nations decade to eradicate illiteracy. A final report was scheduled to be submitted following the World Education Forum in 2000 (Senegal).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/595], adopted resolution 54/122 without vote [agenda item 106].

A United Nations literacy decade: education for all

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Convention on the Rights of the Child the right of every individual to education is recognized as inalienable,

Recalling also its resolutions 42/104 of 7 December 1987, by which it proclaimed 1990 as International Literacy Year, 44/127 of 15 December 1989, 46/93 of 16 December 1991, 50/143 of 21 December 1995, in which it called for continuing international efforts to promote literacy, and 52/84 of 12 December 1997, in which it requested the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and in consultation with Member States, to consider effective ways and means for achieving the goal of education for all, including the desirability and feasibility of launching a United Nations decade to eradicate illiteracy,

Deeply concerned about the persistence of the gender gap in education, which is reflected by the fact that nearly two thirds of the world's adult illiterates are women,

Convinced that literacy, especially functional literacy, and quality education represent a lifelong necessity for all and serve as an investment in human and social capital and a major tool for the empowerment of people,

Recalling its resolution 53/153 of 9 December 1998, entitled "United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education, 1995-2004, and public information activities in the field of human rights",

Confident that the International Literacy Year and the World Conference on Education for All, held at Jomtien, Thailand, in 1990, resulted in increased awareness and support for literacy efforts and became a turning point in the struggle for a literate world,

Underlining the importance of sustaining and further promoting the progress achieved since the International Literacy Year and the Jomtien Conference,

Welcoming the Amman Affirmation, adopted at the mid-decade meeting of the International Consultative Forum on Education for All, held at Amman from 16 to 19 June 1996, the report of the International Commission on Education for the Twenty-first Century to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Hamburg Declaration on Adult Learning, adopted at the Fifth International Conference on Adult Education, held at Hamburg, Germany, from 14 to 18 July 1997,

Recognizing that, despite the significant progress in basic education, especially the increase in primary school enrolment coupled with a growing emphasis on the quality of education, major problems, both emerging and continuing, still persist which require even more forceful and concerted action at the national and international levels so as to achieve the goal of education for all,

Urging Member States, in close partnership with international organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations, to promote the right to education for all and to create conditions for all for learning throughout life,

1. Takes note of the interim report of the Secretary-General and of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, entitled "Progress towards the goal of education for all: the year 2000 Assessment";

2. Reaffirms that basic education for all is essential for achieving the goals of eradicating poverty, reducing child mortality, curbing population growth, achieving gender equality and ensuring sustainable development, peace and democracy;

3. Acknowledges the efforts and the preparatory work at the national and regional levels for the year 2000 assessment of progress towards achieving the goals of education for all in identifying both continuing and emerging challenges, and stresses the need to meet those challenges and to accelerate the efforts to meet the basic needs of people of all age groups, in particular girls and women;

4. Appeals to all Governments to intensify their efforts to eradicate illiteracy and to direct education towards the full development of the human personality and to the strengthening of respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms;

5. Also appeals to all Governments to redouble their efforts to achieve their own goals of education for all by setting firm targets and timetables, where possible, including gender-specific education targets and programmes to combat the illiteracy of women and girls, and, by working in active partnership with communities, associations, the media and development agencies, to reach those targets;

6. Appeals anew to Governments and to economic and financial organizations and institutions, both national and international, to lend greater financial and material support to the efforts to increase literacy and achieve the goals of education for all, through, inter alia, the 20/20 initiative, as appropriate;

7. Invites Member States, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system as well as relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to intensify further their efforts to implement effectively the World Declaration on Education for All, the Amman Affirmation, the Hamburg Declaration on Adult Learning, adopted at the Fifth International Conference on Adult Education, and the Agenda for the Future, also adopted at the Fifth International Conference, and the relevant commitments and recommendations to promote literacy made in recent major United Nations conferences and at their five-year reviews with a view to better coordinating their activities and increasing their contribution to development;

8. Welcomes the convening of the World Education Forum, to be held in April 2000 in Senegal with a view to assessing the implementation of the goals of education for all and adopting an agenda for education in the twenty-first century;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and Member States and with other relevant organizations and bodies, to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council, a proposal for a United Nations literacy decade, with a draft plan of action and possible time frame for such a decade, on the basis of the outcomes of the World Education Forum and the special session of the General Assembly for the five-year review of the World Summit for Social Development;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all Member States as well as the relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the question of a United Nations literacy decade.

Chapter X

Women

In 1999, the United Nations continued efforts to advance the status of women and ensure their rights, particularly through implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, adopted in 1995 at the Fourth World Conference on Women (Beijing). A triumvirate of UN bodies—the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on the Status of Women—monitored Conference follow-up in the 12 critical areas of concern outlined in the Platform for Action.

During the year, preparations proceeded for the five-year review of the Platform's implementation, which was to be undertaken by a special session of the General Assembly in June 2000. The Assembly also addressed the issues of violence against women, women migrant workers, rural women, the girl child and traditional practices affecting the health of women and girls, and designated 25 November as the International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women. In October, the Assembly adopted the Optional Protocol to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women. The Protocol, which was opened for signature on 10 December, introduced an individual and group complaints procedure to the Convention.

The Economic and Social Council, in July, held a high-level segment at which it adopted a ministerial communique on the role of employment and work in poverty eradication, especially with respect to the empowerment and advancement of women. The Council also took action with respect to the situation of women and girls in Afghanistan, Palestinian women, a new system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women for the period 2002-2005, and revitalization of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women. The Council endorsed the agreed conclusions of the Commission on the Status of Women with respect to women and health and institutional mechanisms for the advancement of women.

The Commission reviewed gender mainstreaming within UN organizations, as well as emerging issues, trends and new approaches to issues affecting the situation of women or equality between women and men. It initiated a comprehensive review and appraisal of implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action and continued to serve as the preparatory committee for the Assembly's special session in 2000. Commission resolutions dealt with women and children taken hostage in armed conflicts, women and girls affected by HIV/AIDS, and the mental health of women, with emphasis on special groups.

The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women reviewed reports from 14 States parties to the 1979 Convention, which marked its twentieth anniversary.

In August, the Secretary-General issued the fourth edition of the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development. The survey examined the effect of current trends and policies on the economic and social situation of women, with particular emphasis on developing countries.

Follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women

The Commission on the Status of Women, at its forty-third session (New York, 1-12 March and 1 April) [E/1999/27], considered follow-up to the 1995 Fourth World Conference on Women, particularly the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170]. Its work was organized around the 12 critical areas of concern set forth in the Platform for Action: women and poverty; education and training of women; women and health; violence against women; women and armed conflict; women and the economy; women in power and decision-making; institutional mechanisms for the advancement of women; human rights of women; women and the media; women and the environment; and the girl child. The Commission also reviewed the conclusions of the European Conference on Follow-up to the Beijing Platform for Action (Madrid, Spain, November 1998) [E/CN.6/1999/9] and the results of an information forum on national policies in the field of equality between women and men, convened by the Council of Europe (Tallinn, Estonia, November 1997) [E/CN.6/1999/7].

Preparations for special session of the General Assembly in 2000

In 1999, in accordance with Economic and Social Council decisions 1999/213 and 1999/218, the Commission on the Status of Women, acting as the preparatory committee for the special session of the General Assembly to be held in 2000, held its second session (15-29 March and 30 June) [E/1999/60 & Add.1]. In September, the Secretary-General transmitted the Commission's report on its session [A/54/354] to the Assembly. The Commission had before it a report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.6/1999/PC/3] outlining a framework for activities relevant to, and the scope of, the comprehensive five-year review. The report identified sources of information for the Secretariat's assessment of achievements and remaining gaps in the Platform's implementation. Among the planned activities were regional preparatory meetings, national-level reporting and other reports and reviews. A third edition of The World's Women would be prepared, updating data and analysis supplied in 1995 on the situation of women worldwide.

The Commission also had before it a January report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.6/1999/PC/2] proposing a framework for further actions and initiatives that were aimed at accelerating the Platform for Action and might be considered during the special session. The report suggested comprehensive and integrated strategies under five functional categories for action: demonstrating political will to create an enabling environment for implementation of the Platform for Action; capacity-building for women's advancement and gender mainstreaming; accountability for implementing the Platform's strategies and actions; cooperation and partnership for implementing the Platform; and assistance to women and girls subject to discrimination and disadvantage. It also outlined four broad, cross-cutting issues that had emerged since 1995: globalization and the economic empowerment of women, especially poor women; women, science and technology and the new information age; women's leadership; and human security and social protection. The Secretary-General recommended that the Commission endorse those themes as the basis for developing a vision for gender equality into the next millennium.

A February report of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women [E/CN.6/1999/PC/4] on progress in the Platform's implementation, based on reports to the Commission received from States parties to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, contained in Assembly resolution 34/180 [YUN 1979, p.895], was also considered.

Inter-Agency Committee on Women. At its fourth session (New York, 23-26 February) [ACC/1999/3], the Inter-Agency Committee on Women and Gender Equality began work on a draft text to be adopted by the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) as an input to the General Assembly's special session. The draft included a policy statement presenting the UN system's outlook on gender equality in the twenty-first century and measures for translating the policy statement into practice.

The Committee invited ACC to support a survey of management commitment to gender mainstreaming, to be conducted by the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) through a questionnaire to managers in all organizations. The Committee continued to prepare a compendium of good practices in implementing the Beijing Platform for Action and gender mainstreaming, based on the work of its task force. Other Committee activities included budget codes and financial monitoring systems, methodologies for gender impact analysis, compilation of a database on gender training materials, funding for its activities, a system-wide medium-term plan and collaboration with other ACC mechanisms.

ACC, at its second regular session of 1999 (New York, 29-30 October) [ACC/1999/20], agreed that the UN system should review progress made by and within organizations in the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action prior to the Assembly's special session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1999/278 of 29 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Commission acting as the preparatory committee at its second session and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the third preparatory session. On 30 July, by resolution 1999/55 on coordinated follow-up to major UN conferences, the Council urged the preparatory committees for the reviews of the Fourth World Conference on Women and of the World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113] to consult with one another in order to avoid duplication and ensure cross-fertilization of ideas.

On 29 July [meeting 45], the Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on the Status of Women [E/1999/27], adopted resolution 1999/50 without vote [agenda item 6].

Preparations for the special session of the General Assembly entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century"

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following resolution:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 54/142 below.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/54/599 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 54/142 without vote [agenda item 110].

Preparations for the special session of the General Assembly entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century"

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/100 of 12 December 1997, 52/231 of 4 June 1998 and 53/120 of 9 December 1998 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/6 of 22 July 1996, and bearing in mind Council resolution 1999/50 of 29 July 1999,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the initiation of the comprehensive review and appraisal of the implementation of the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women, and on the framework for further actions and initiatives that might be considered during the special session of the General Assembly entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century",

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women on progress in the implementation of the Platform for Action by the States parties to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

1. Reiterates its invitation to Governments that have not yet done so to prepare national action plans and reports on the implementation of the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women, and underlines the importance of involving relevant actors of civil society, especially non-governmental organizations;

2. Invites Member States, in preparing implementation plans and reports and responding to the questionnaire on the implementation of the Platform for Action, to report on good practices, positive actions, lessons learned, the use of qualitative and quantitative indicators for measuring progress and, wherever possible, on key challenges remaining in the critical areas of concern of the Platform for Action and obstacles encountered;

3. Encourages all the regional commissions and other intergovernmental regional organizations to carry out activities in support of the preparations for the special session of the General Assembly entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century", inter alia, by holding preparatory meetings to ensure a regional perspective on implementation and on further actions and initiatives, as well as on a vision for gender equality, development and peace in the twenty-first century, and to make their reports available in 2000 to the Commission on the Status of Women acting as the preparatory committee for the special session;

4. Encourages all entities of the United Nations system, including the programmes, funds and specialized agencies, and the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, to be involved actively in preparatory activities and to participate at the highest level in the special session, including through presentations on best practices, obstacles encountered and a vision for the future to accelerate implementation of the Platform for Action and to address new and emerging trends;

5. Decides that the special session shall have a plenary and an ad hoc committee of the whole;

6. Reaffirms that the special session will be undertaken on the basis of and with full respect for the Platform for Action and that there will be no renegotiation of the existing agreements contained therein;

7. Decides that the provisional agenda shall include the following items:

(a) Review and appraisal of progress made in implementation in the twelve critical areas of concern of the Platform for Action;

(b) Further actions and initiatives for overcoming obstacles to the implementation of the Platform for Action;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, in time for the next session of the preparatory committee in 2000, comprehensive reports on progress made in the implementation of the Platform for Action nationally, regionally and internationally, taking into account all relevant information and inputs available to the United Nations system on the following:

(a) A review and appraisal of the implementation of the Platform for Action based on, inter alia, national action plans, reports submitted to the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women by the States parties under article 18 of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, replies of Member States to the questionnaire on the implementation of the Platform for Action, statements made by delegations at relevant forums of the United Nations, reports of regional commissions and other entities of the United Nations system and follow-up to recent global United Nations conferences;

(b) Good practices, positive actions, lessons learned, examples of the use of any qualitative and quantitative indicators for measuring progress, successful strategies and promising initiatives for the implementation of the Platform for Action;

(c) Obstacles encountered and strategies for overcoming them;

(d) Further actions and initiatives, within the overall goals of gender equality, development and peace, to accelerate progress in implementation in the twelve critical areas of concern of the Platform for Action beyond 2000, recognizing the need for analytical tools and strategies for implementation, taking into account inputs, as well as comments of Member States on the report of the Secretary-General on the framework for further actions and initiatives, and, in this regard, invites Member States to provide inputs and comments thereon;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to make available all necessary documentation in a timely manner for the special session, keeping in mind resolutions 52/231 and 53/120;

10. Encourages the United Nations system to continue to hold discussions with relevant actors of civil society, especially non-governmental organizations, in the exchange of views for the review and appraisal process on the implementation of the Platform for Action, including, wherever available, the use of electronic networking;

11. Urges Member States and observers to ensure their representation at the special session at a high political level;

12. Confirms that the special session will be open to the participation of all States Members of the United Nations, members of the specialized agencies and observers, in accordance with the established practice of the General Assembly;

13. Calls for the participation of associate members of the regional commissions in the special session, subject to the rules of procedure of the General Assembly, and in the preparatory process for the special session, in the same capacity of observer that applied to their participation in the Fourth World Conference on Women;

14. Encourages Member States to include relevant actors of civil society, especially non-governmental organizations and representatives of women's organizations, in their national preparatory processes as well as in their delegations to the preparatory committee and the special session;

15. Emphasizes the important role of non-governmental organizations in implementing the Platform for Action and the need for their active involvement in the preparations for the special session as well as the need to ensure appropriate arrangements for their contributions to the special session;

16. Decides that non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, as well as the non-governmental organizations that were accredited to the Fourth World Conference on Women, may participate in the special session without creating a precedent for future sessions of the General Assembly;

17. Also decides to defer consideration of all the modalities for participation of non-governmental organizations in the special session until the next session of the preparatory committee;

18. Invites the Bureau of the Commission on the Status of Women, acting as the preparatory committee for the special session, to convene informal open-ended consultations, as appropriate, to consider preparations for the special session;

19. Recommends that the major portion of the three weeks scheduled for the forty-fourth session of the Commission on the Status of Women in March 2000 be allocated to the Commission acting as the preparatory committee for the special session of the General Assembly.

Implementation of Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action

Reports of Secretary-General. At its March session, the Commission on the Status of Women had before it the report of the Secretary-General on follow-up to the Fourth World Conference and implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action [E/CN.6/1999/2]. The report emphasized efforts within the UN system in support of mainstreaming a gender perspective and follow-up activities, including activities by non-governmental organizations (NGOs) since his previous report [YUN 1998, p. 1061]. It also contained a joint work plan for the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) and the UN Division for the Advancement of Women.

In addition, the report covered the situation of Palestinian women and the release of women and children taken hostage in armed conflict and imprisoned (see below). An addendum [E/CN.6/1999/2/Add.1] presented an analysis of national action plans and implementation strategies submitted to the Secretariat since the Commission's 1998 session.

In a May report to the Economic and Social Council [E/1999/54], the Secretary-General focused on facilitating the Council's coordination function, in particular as to developments related to implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action in intergovernmental forums reporting to the Council, in the regional commissions and in the Inter-Agency Committee on Women and Gender Equality. By decision 1999/288 of 30 July, the Council took note of the report.

An August report to the General Assembly [A/54/264] provided information on follow-up to the 1995 Conference by specialized agencies, international financial institutions and other entities in the UN system, as well as on implementation activities at the national level and by NGOs and other institutions of civil society.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/599 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 54/141 without vote [agenda item 110].

Follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women and full implementation of the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/100 of 12 December 1997, 52/231 of 4 June 1998 and 53/120 of 9 December 1998, in which it decided to convene a high-level plenary review as a special session of the General Assembly, which will take place from 5 to 9 June 2000, entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century",

Recalling also its resolutions 52/93 and 52/97 of 12 December 1997, 53/116, 53/117 and 53/118 of 9 December 1998, and bearing in mind its resolution 54/4 of 6 October 1999,

Stressing the importance of the special session and the need for strong, sustained political will and commitment at the national, regional and international levels towards achieving equality between women and men, and, in this regard, reaffirming that the full implementation of the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women requires further action by all,

Reaffirming its decision that the special session will be undertaken on the basis of and with full respect for the Platform for Action and that there will be no renegotiation of the existing agreements contained therein,

Deeply convinced that the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women are important contributions to the advancement of women worldwide in the achievement of gender equality and must be translated into effective action by all States, the United Nations system and other organizations concerned, as well as by non-governmental organizations,

Recognizing that the responsibility for the implementation of the Platform for Action rests primarily at the national level and that strengthened efforts are necessary in this respect, and reiterating that enhanced international cooperation is essential for the effective implementation of the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women and full implementation of the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action;

2. Commends the work of the Commission on the Status of Women acting as the preparatory committee for the special session of the General Assembly entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century";

3. Takes note of the ministerial communique adopted by the Economic and Social Council at the high-level segment of its substantive session of 1999 on the theme "The role of employment and work in poverty eradication: the empowerment and advancement of women", as well as Council resolution 1999/55 of 30 July 1999 on integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to major United Nations conferences and summits;

4. Welcomes the initiatives and actions taken by Governments, the United Nations system and other international organizations as well as by non-governmental organizations and other actors of civil society towards the accelerated implementation of the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action, and calls upon them to implement effectively all the critical areas of concern of the Platform for Action by promoting the empowerment of women at all levels and their full participation in all spheres of society through, inter alia, an active and visible policy of mainstreaming a gender perspective at all levels;

5. Also welcomes the replies from Governments to the questionnaire on the implementation of the Platform for Action, and once again invites Governments that have not yet done so to submit national evaluations of the implementation of the Platform for Action, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/50 of 29 July 1999;

6. Recognizes the importance attached to the regional and subregional monitoring of the global and regional platforms for action by regional commissions and other subregional or regional structures, within their mandates, in consultation with Governments, and calls for the promotion of cooperation in that respect among Governments and, where appropriate, national machineries of the same region;

7. Reaffirms that, in order to implement the Platform for Action, adequate mobilization of resources at the national and international levels, as well as new and additional resources for the developing countries, in particular those in Africa and the least developed countries, from all available funding mechanisms, including multilateral, bilateral and private sources, will also be required;

8. Recognizes that implementation of the Platform for Action in the countries with economies in transition requires continued national efforts and international cooperation and assistance, as indicated in the Platform for Action;

9. Reaffirms that, in order to implement the Platform for Action, a reformulation of policies and reallocation of resources may be needed, but that some policy changes may not necessarily have financial implications;

10. Calls upon Member States to allocate adequate resources for the provision of data disaggregated by sex and age for undertaking gender impact analysis and measuring progress in order to develop successful national implementation strategies for the Platform for Action;

11. Encourages all entities of the United Nations system, including the programmes, funds and specialized agencies, and the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, to continue their active involvement in the preparations for the special session and to participate at the highest level in the special session, including through presentations on best practices, obstacles encountered and a vision for the future to accelerate implementation of the Platform for Action and address new and emerging trends;

12. Welcomes the initiatives and activities of all regional commissions and other intergovernmental organizations in support of the preparations for the special session;

13. Reiterates that participation in the special session should be at a high political level;

14. Invites Member States to include representatives of national machineries for the advancement of women in their delegations to the preparatory committee and the special session;

15. Reiterates the decision that non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, as well as the non-governmental organizations that were accredited to the Fourth World Conference on Women, may participate in the special session without creating a precedent for future sessions of the General Assembly;

16. Encourages Member States to include relevant actors of civil society, especially non-governmental organizations and representatives of women's organizations, in their national preparatory processes as well as in their delegations to the preparatory committee and the special session;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a report on the special session;

18. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session an item entitled "Implementation of the outcome of the Fourth World Conference on Women and of the special session of the General Assembly entitled 'Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century'".

By decision 54/465 of 23 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on implementation of the outcome of the Fourth World Conference on Women would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session.

Critical areas of concern

In 1999, the Commission considered as thematic issues 2 of the 12 critical areas of concern identified in the Beijing Platform for Action: women and health, and institutional mechanisms for the advancement of women [E/1999/27]. It had before it a report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.6/1999/4] presenting strategies for accelerating implementation of the Platform in relation to those issues, drawing on recommendations from expert group meetings convened by the Division for the Advancement of Women, as a basis for agreed conclusions. Following panel discussions, the Commission agreed to a set of conclusions with respect to those two areas, and recommended them to the Economic and Social Council for endorsement.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on the Status of Women [E/1999/27], adopted resolution 1999/17 without vote [agenda item 14 (a)].

Agreed conclusions of the Commission on the Status of Women on the critical areas of concern of the Beijing Platform for Action

The Economic and Social Council

Endorses the following agreed conclusions adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women with respect to the two critical areas of concern addressed by the Commission at its forty-third session:

I. Women and health

The Commission on the Status of Women

1. Reaffirms the Beijing Platform for Action, adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women, notably chapter IV.C on women and health, the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women;

2. Recalls the Constitution of the World Health Organization, which states that health is a state of complete physical, mental and social well-being and not merely the absence of disease or infirmity; that the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of health is one of the fundamental rights of every human being without distinction of race, religion, political belief, economic or social condition; and that the health of all peoples is fundamental to the attainment of peace and security and is dependent upon the fullest cooperation of individuals and States;

3. Requests States parties to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women to consider, when preparing their initial and periodic reports under the Convention, including on article 12, general recommendations of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women;

4. Acknowledges that the realization by women of their right to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health is an integral part of the full realization by them of all human rights, and that the human rights of women and of the girl child are an inalienable, integral and indivisible part of universal human rights;

5. Also acknowledges the link between the physical and mental health of women throughout the life cycle and the level of national development, including the availability of basic social services such as health services, the status and degree of empowerment of women in society, employment and work, poverty, illiteracy, ageing, race and ethnicity, and violence in all its forms, in particular harmful attitudes and traditional or customary practices affecting the health of women, as well as the importance of investing in the health of women for the well-being of women themselves and for the development of society as a whole;

6. Recognizes that lack of development is a major obstacle for women in many countries and that the international economic environment, through its impact on national economies, affects the capacity of many countries to provide and expand quality health services to women; further significant obstacles include competing governmental priorities and inadequate resources;

7. Proposes, in order to accelerate the implementation of the strategic objectives of chapter IV.C of the Beijing Platform for Action, that the following actions be taken:

Actions to be taken by Governments, the United Nations system and civil society, as appropriate

1. Universal access, on a basis of equality between women and men, to quality, comprehensive and affordable health care and health services and information by women throughout the life cycle

(a) Ensure universal access on a basis of equality between women and men to appropriate, affordable and quality health care and health services for women throughout the life cycle;

(b) Formulate policies favourable to investments in the health of women and intensify efforts to meet the targets identified in the Beijing Platform for Action, in order to bridge the gap between commitments and implementation;

(c) Ensure universal access for women throughout the life cycle, on a basis of equality between women and men, to social services related to health care, including education, clean water and safe sanitation, nutrition, food security and health education programmes;

(d) Integrate sexual, reproductive and mental health services, with emphasis on preventative measures, within the primary health-care system to respond to the broad health needs of women and men, in a life-cycle approach;

(e) Design and implement programmes, with the full involvement of young people, to educate and inform them on sexual and reproductive health issues, taking into account the rights of the child to access to information, privacy, confidentiality, respect and informed consent, and the responsibilities, rights and duties of parents and legal guardians;

(f) Allocate and reallocate, where appropriate, adequate resources to put in place the necessary measures which ensure that quality health services are accessible to those women throughout their life cycle who are living in poverty, are disadvantaged or socially excluded;

(g) Increase efforts directed towards poverty eradication by assessing the impact of broader macro-economic policies on the feminization of poverty and on the health of women and address the health needs of those vulnerable, throughout their life span;

(h) Adopt preventive and promotional health policies at an early stage where possible in order to prevent health problems and dependence of older women and enable them to lead independent and healthy lives;

(i) Ensure that special attention is given to supporting women with disabilities and empower them to lead independent and healthy lives;

(j) Address the need for appropriate screening services for women, within the context of national health priorities;

(k) Encourage women to practise regular sport and recreational activities that have a positive impact on the health, well-being and fitness of women throughout the life cycle, and ensure that women enjoy equal opportunities to practise sports, use sport facilities and take part in competitions.

2. Sexual and reproductive health

(a) Accelerate efforts for the implementation of the targets established in the Beijing Platform for Action with regard to universal access to quality and affordable health services, including reproductive and sexual health, reduction of persistently high maternal mortality and infant and child mortality and reduction of severe and moderate malnutrition and iron deficiency anaemia, as well as to provide maternal and essential obstetric care, including emergency care, and implement existing and develop new strategies to prevent maternal deaths, caused by, inter alia, infections, malnutrition, hypertension during pregnancy, unsafe abortion and post-partum haemorrhage, and child deaths, taking into account the Safe Motherhood Initiative;

(b) Promote and support breastfeeding unless it is medically contraindicated, as well as implement the International Code of Marketing of Breastmilk Substitutes and the Baby Friendly Hospital Initiative;

(c) Support scientific research into and the development of safe, affordable, effective and easily accessible female-controlled methods of family planning, including dual methods such as microbicides and female condoms that protect against both sexually transmitted diseases and human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS) and prevent pregnancy, taking into account paragraph 96 of the report of the Fourth World Conference on Women;

(d) Support the development and widespread use of male contraceptive methods;

(e) Educate women and men, particularly young people, with a view to encouraging men to accept their responsibilities in matters related to sexuality, reproduction and child-rearing and to promoting equal relationships between women and men;

(f) Enhance the ability and knowledge of women, and empower them to make informed choices, to prevent unwanted pregnancies;

(g) Work with the media and other sectors to encourage the development of positive attitudes about major transitions in the reproductive lives of women and girls, such as the onset of menstruation and menopause, and provide appropriate support, where needed, for women undergoing these transitions;

(h) Eradicate the practice of female genital mutilation and other harmful traditional and customary practices affecting the health of women and girls, since such practices constitute a definite form of violence against women and girls and a serious form of violation of their human rights, including through the development of appropriate policies and enactment and/or reinforcement of legislation, ensure development of appropriate tools of education and advocacy and adopt legislation outlawing their practice by medical personnel;

(i) Take all necessary measures to prevent all harmful practices, such as early marriages, forced marriages and threats to the right to life of women.

3. HIV/AIDS, sexually transmitted diseases and other infectious diseases

(a) Support public education and advocacy and secure the highest level of political commitment to the prevention of and research into sexually transmitted diseases and HIV/AIDS, their care, treatment and the mitigation of their impact, including through the provision of social services and support, together with poverty alleviation;

(b) Increase prevention measures to reduce the spread of the HIV/AIDS pandemic worldwide and sexually transmitted diseases among the groups most heavily at risk, in particular young people, including through education and awareness-raising campaigns and improved access to high-quality condoms and improved accessibility to anti-retroviral therapy to prevent mother-to-child transmission of HIV, and treatment, care and support for HIV/AIDS-related illnesses;

(c) Enact laws and take measures to eliminate sexual violence against women and girls, which is one of the causes of HIV/AIDS infection and other sexually transmitted diseases, and review and enact laws and combat practices, as appropriate, that may contribute to the susceptibility of women to these infections, including enacting legislation against those sociocultural practices that contribute to AIDS, and implement legislation, policies and practices to protect women, adolescents and young girls from discrimination related to HIV/AIDS;

(d) Eliminate the stigmatization and social exclusion that surround HIV/AIDS, sexually transmitted diseases and other infectious diseases such as leprosy and filariasis, and lead to under-detection, lack of treatment and violence, especially for women, so that infected women who reveal their HIV/AIDS status are protected from violence, stigmatization and other negative consequences;

(e) Increase the preventative, as well as the therapeutic, measures against tuberculosis and malaria, and accelerate the research into the development of a vaccine against malaria, which has a harmful effect, especially on pregnant women, in most parts of the world, particularly in Africa;

(f) Educate, counsel and encourage men and women infected with HIV/AIDS and sexually transmitted diseases to inform their partners to help protect them from infection, and ensure that the spread of those diseases is curtailed.

4. Mental health and substance abuse

(a) Make available gender-sensitive and age-sensitive mental health services and counselling, as necessary, with particular attention to the treatment of psychiatric illness and trauma throughout the life cycle, inter alia, by integrating them into primary health-care systems and through appropriate referral support;

(b) Develop effective preventive and remedial health services to provide appropriate counselling and treatment for mental disorders related to stress, depression, powerlessness, marginalization and trauma since women and girls may suffer more from those ailments resulting from various forms of discrimination, violence and sexual exploitation, particularly in situations of armed conflict and displacement;

(c) Support research and dissemination of information on gender differences in the causes and effects of the use and abuse of substances, including narcotic drugs and alcohol, and develop effective gender-sensitive approaches to prevention, treatment and rehabilitation, including those specifically designed for pregnant women;

(d) Design, implement and strengthen prevention programmes aimed at reducing tobacco use by women and girls; investigate the exploitation and targeting of young women by the tobacco industry; support action to prohibit tobacco advertising and access by minors to tobacco products; and support smoke-free spaces, gender-sensitive cessation programmes and product labelling to warn of the dangers of tobacco use, noting the Tobacco Free Initiative proposed by the World Health Organization in July 1998;

(e) Promote equitable sharing of household and family responsibilities between women and men, and provide social support systems, where appropriate, to help women who, as a result of their multiple roles in the family, may often suffer from fatigue and stress;

(f) Support research on the relationship between the physical and mental health and self-esteem of women and girls and the extent to which women of all ages are valued in their societies, to address issues such as substance abuse and eating disorders.

5. Occupational and environmental health

(a) Support gender-specific research on the short- and long-term effects of the occupational and environmental health risks of work, including work in the formal and informal sector, performed by both women and men, and take effective legal and other measures to reduce these risks, including risks in the workplace, in the environment and from harmful chemicals, including pesticides, radiation, toxic waste and other such hazards that affect women's health;

(b) Protect the health of women workers in all sectors, including agricultural and domestic household workers, through effective environmental and occupational health policies for gender-sensitive work environments, free from sexual harassment and discrimination, which are safe and ergonomically designed to prevent occupational hazards;

(c) Take specific measures to protect the health of women workers who are pregnant or have recently given birth or are breastfeeding from harmful environmental and occupational hazards, and their children;

(d) Provide full and accurate information about environmental health risks to the public, in particular to women, and take steps to ensure access to clean water, adequate sanitation and clean air.

6. Policy development, research, training and evaluation

(a) Advance a comprehensive interdisciplinary and collaborative research agenda on the health of women which encompasses the entire lifespan of all women, including women from special and diverse groups within populations;

(b) Establish concrete accountability mechanisms at the national level for reporting on the implementation of the health and other related critical areas of the Beijing Platform for Action;

(c) Improve the collection, use and dissemination of data disaggregated by sex and age, and research findings, and develop collection methodologies that capture the differences between the life experiences of women and men, including through the use and, where necessary, further coordinated development of gender-specific qualitative and quantitative health indicators that go beyond morbidity, mortality and social indicators, capturing quality of life, and the social as well as mental well-being of women and girls;

(d) Promote research on the interrelationship between poverty, ageing and gender;

(e) Ensure participation of women at all levels in the planning, implementation and evaluation of health programmes; also ensure a gender perspective in the health sector at all levels, including through the elaboration of gender-sensitive and age-sensitive health policies and budgets, and the creation of an enabling environment supported by a legislative framework and monitoring, follow-up and evaluation mechanisms within individual countries;

(f) Mainstream a gender perspective into the curricula as well as the training of all health-care and service providers in order to ensure high-quality health services for women that can help eliminate discriminatory attitudes and practices by certain health professionals which impede the access of women to health services; and ensure that a gender perspective is developed and applied to treatment and prevention practice in the health sector;

(g) In order to ensure that the rights of women are addressed, the curricula of health-care providers should include relevant human rights topics to strengthen medical ethics and ensure that girls and women are treated with respect and dignity;

(h) Increase education and research among health service providers and users to address the unnecessary medicalization of health conditions affecting women;

(i) Ensure, where indicated, that clinical trials of pharmaceuticals, medical devices and other medical products include women with their full knowledge and consent and ensure that the resulting data is analysed for sex and gender differences;

(j) Collect data concerning scientific and legal developments on human genome and related genetic research and their implications for the health of women and their rights in general, and disseminate such information and the results of studies conducted in accordance with accepted ethical standards.

7. Health sector reform and development

(a) Take action, in the context of health sector reform and development and growing diversification of the provision of care, to secure equal and equitable access to care for women and to ensure that health sector reform and development efforts promote the health of women; and address under-provision of health care;

(b) Take the opportunity provided by health sector reform and development systematically to integrate the process of gender analysis in the health sector and undertake gender impact assessments and monitoring of all health sector reforms and development to ensure that women benefit equally from them;

(c) Develop strategies designed to reduce occupational concentration by gender, to eliminate gender-based pay inequality, to ensure high-quality working conditions in the health workforce, and to provide appropriate skills training and development.

8. International cooperation

(a) Assure a strong political commitment by the international community to implementing strengthened international cooperation for development and to mobilizing domestic and international finance resources from all sources for development and the provision of health services for women;

(b) Promote progress in regard to external debt relief which, with improvement in the terms of trade, could help to generate resources, both public and private, to expand and upgrade health services, with special attention to the physical and mental health of women;

(c) Encourage the international community, including bilateral donors and multilateral development organizations, to assist developing countries in ensuring the provision of basic social services, including health-care services for women, in particular during periods of economic difficulty; socially and gender-sensitive approaches to structural adjustment policies are further encouraged;

(d) Encourage concerted efforts, through enhanced cooperation and coordination, to minimize the negative impacts and maximize the benefits of globalization and interdependence to enhance, inter alia, the provision of health-care services in developing countries, especially for women;

(e) Encourage sound macroeconomic policies and institutions, in the framework of international cooperation, to support, inter alia, the provision of health-care services for women.

II. Institutional mechanisms

The Commission on the Status of Women

1. Reaffirms the Beijing Platform for Action, adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women, notably chapter IV.H on institutional mechanisms for the advancement of women, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and Economic and Social Council agreed conclusions 1997/2 of 18 July 1997 on mainstreaming the gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the United Nations system;

2. Recognizes that the effectiveness and sustainability of national machineries are highly dependent on their embeddedness in the national context, the political and socio-economic system and the needs of and accountability to women, including those with the least access to resources; in addition, recognizes that sharing information at the regional and international levels is crucial for strengthening national machineries and other related institutional mechanisms, that gender equality is advanced through the promotion and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, respect for democracy, peace and development, and that the full involvement of women and men is essential;

3. Also recognizes that gender mainstreaming is a tool for effective policy-making at all levels and not a substitute for targeted, women-specific policies and programmes, equality legislation, national machineries for the advancement of women and the establishment of gender focal points;

4. Acknowledges that national machineries are necessary for the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action and that for national machineries to be effective, clear mandates, location at the highest possible level, accountability mechanisms, partnership with civil society, a transparent political process, adequate financial and human resources and continued strong political commitment are crucial;

5. Stresses the importance of international cooperation in order to assist the work of national mechanisms in all countries, especially developing countries;

6. Welcomes Economic and Social Council decision 1998/298 of 5 August 1998, by which the Council decided to devote the high-level segment of its 1999 substantive session to the advancement of women;

7. Proposes, in order to accelerate the implementation of the strategic objectives of chapter IV.H of the Beijing Platform for Action, that the following action be taken:

Actions by Governments, national machineries and other institutional mechanisms, and the international community, including the United Nations system, for the advancement of women and for gender equality

1. Actions to be taken by Governments

(a) Provide continued strong political commitment to supporting the strengthening of national machineries and the advancement of women;

(b) Ensure that national machineries are placed at the highest possible level of government and that all institutional mechanisms for the advancement of women are invested with the authority needed to fulfil their mandated roles and responsibilities;

(c) Provide adequate and sustainable financial and human resources to national machineries and other institutional mechanisms for the advancement of women through national budgets, while also granting national machineries the possibility of attracting funds from other bodies for the purpose of specific projects;

(d) Structure appropriately the functions of national machineries at all levels in order to ensure effectiveness in gender mainstreaming;

(e) Ensure that mainstreaming a gender perspective is fully understood, institutionalized and implemented. These efforts should include promoting awareness and understanding of the Beijing Platform for Action;

(f) Continue to take steps to ensure that the integration of a gender perspective in the mainstream of all government activities is part of a dual and complementary strategy to achieve gender equality. This should include a continuing need for targeted priorities, policies, programmes and positive action measures;

(g) Ensure that senior management in each ministry or agency takes responsibility for fulfilling gender equality commitments and integrating a gender perspective in all activities, and that appropriate assistance from gender experts or gender focal points is available;

(h) Promote and ensure, as appropriate, the establishment of effective gender focal points at all decision-making levels and in all ministries and other decision-making bodies, develop close collaboration among them and create follow-up mechanisms;

(i) Create and/or encourage the creation and strengthening of institutional mechanisms at all levels, including taking all measures to ensure that national machineries as well as focal points within specific institutions are not marginalized in the administrative structure but supported at the highest possible level of government and entrusted with clearly defined mandates which define their function as a policy advisory body;

(j) Promote capacity-building, including gender training for both women and men in government ministries, so as to be more responsive to the needs and interests of women and gender equality, and develop their own capacity by making use of available national and international models and methodologies in the field of gender equality;

(k) Promote, where appropriate, and ensure accountability and transparency of government through effective monitoring mechanisms and tools such as gender-disaggregated statistics, gender budgeting, gender auditing and gender impact assessment, based on established benchmarks, and other performance indicators and regular public reporting, including under international agreements;

(l) Provide assistance, as appropriate, to agencies, including those outside government, in formulating gender-sensitive performance indicators, necessary to measure and review progress made in the field of gender equality, including the advancement of women and gender mainstreaming;

(m) Continuously improve the gathering and disaggregation of data and compliance with gender equality legislation; indicators in all critical areas of the Platform for Action for use in analysis, policy development and planning;

(n) Give visibility to the relationship between remunerated and unremunerated work and its importance to gender analysis, and promote greater understanding among relevant ministries and organizations by developing methods for assessing its value in quantitative terms in order to develop appropriate policies in this respect;

(o) Recognize and acknowledge that unremunerated work by women in, for example, agriculture, food production, natural resources management, caring for dependants and household and voluntary work is a considerable contribution to society. Develop and improve mechanisms, for example time-use studies, to measure in quantitative terms unremunerated work in order to:

—Make visible the unequal distribution between women and men of remunerated and unremunerated work in order to promote changes;

—Assess the real value of unremunerated work and accurately reflect it in satellite or other official accounts that are separate from but consistent with core national accounts;

(p) Strengthen the relations among civil society, all governmental agencies and national machineries;

(q) Ensure that the needs, rights and interests of all women, including those who are not members of organizations and who live in poverty in rural and urban areas, are identified and mainstreamed into policy and programme development. This should be done in ways that value the diversity of women and recognize the barriers many women face that prohibit and prevent their participation in public policy development;

(r) Respect the involvement of non-governmental organizations in assisting Governments in the implementation of regional, national and international commitments through advocacy and raising awareness of gender equality issues. Women should be actively involved in the implementation and monitoring of the Platform for Action;

(s) Coordinate or consult with, as appropriate, non-governmental organizations and civil society in national and international activities, including the elaboration of national action plans, the preparation of reports to the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action;

(t) Ensure transparency through open and participatory dialogue and the promotion of balanced participation of women and men in all areas of decision-making;

(u) Support autonomous organizations and institutions involved in research, analysis and evaluation of activities on gender issues and use the results to influence the transformation of policies and programmes;

(v) Create clear anti-discrimination regulations with adequate mechanisms, including a proper legal framework for addressing violations;

(w) Initiate, where necessary, gender equality legislation and create or strengthen, where appropriate, independent bodies, such as the Ombudsperson and equal opportunity commission, with responsibility and authority for, inter alia, promoting and ensuring compliance with gender equality legislation;

(x) Involve parliaments and, wherever appropriate, the judiciary in monitoring progress in gender mainstreaming and strengthening gender-related aspects of all government reporting, and ensure transparency through open and participatory dialogue and the promotion of balanced participation of women and men in all areas and at all levels of decision-making.

2. Actions to be taken by national machineries and other institutional mechanisms

(a) Design, promote the implementation of, execute, monitor, evaluate and mobilize support for policies that promote the advancement of women and advocate gender equality and promote public debate;

(b) Act as catalysts for gender mainstreaming in all policies and programmes and not necessarily as agents for policy implementation. However, national machineries are partners in policy formulation and may also choose to implement and coordinate specific projects;

(c) Assist other parts of government in taking specific actions in the gathering and disaggregation of data and the development of statistics and indicators in all critical areas of the Beijing Platform for Action for use in analysis, policy development, planning and programming;

(d) Promote research and dissemination of research findings and information on women and gender equality, including disparities of income and workload between women and men and, where appropriate, among women;

(e) Take specific actions such as the establishment of documentation centres, to disseminate gender-relevant data and other information, including on the important contribution of women to society and research results in easily accessible formats and places, in order to promote more informed public dialogue, including through the media, on gender equality and issues pertinent to the advancement of women;

(f) Ensure the ongoing training on gender issues, at all levels, of the personnel of the national machineries to promote programme and policy sustainability;

(g) Develop, as appropriate, policies to recruit technical staff with expertise in gender equality issues;

(h) Create or strengthen collaborative links with other agencies at local, regional, national and international levels;

(i) Recognize civil society as an important source of support and legitimacy, and therefore create and strengthen the relationship with civil society, through regular consultations with non-governmental organizations, the research community, social partners and other concerned groups. This will create a strong basis for gender-sensitive policy and the advancement of women;

(j) Establish partnerships, liaise and consult with women's organizations, non-governmental organizations, academic institutions, the media and other agencies on national and international policies relating to women and gender and inform them of the international commitments of their Governments;

(k) Engage the media in dialogue aimed at re-examining gender stereotypes and negative portrayal of both women and men;

(l) Create and strengthen collaborative relationships with the private sector, including through initiating advocacy dialogue and advising private companies to address the issues affecting women in the paid labour force, and set up ways and means to promote equality of women and men.

3. Actions to be taken by the international community, including the United Nations system

(a) Implement Economic and Social Council agreed conclusions 1997/2;

(b) Implement fully the revised system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women, 1996-2001;

(c) Ensure that individual managers are held accountable for implementing the strategic plan of action for the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat (1995-2000) within their areas of responsibility, and that heads of departments and offices develop gender action plans which establish concrete strategies for the achievement of gender balance in individual departments and offices, with full respect for the principle of equitable geographical distribution and in conformity with Article 101 of the Charter of the United Nations, so as to ensure, as far as possible, that the appointment and promotion of women will not be less than 50 per cent, until the goal of 50/50 gender distribution is met;

(d) Request the Inter-Agency Committee on Women and Gender Equality of the Administrative Committee on Coordination to continue its work to implement the Beijing Platform for Action and to promote the integration of a gender perspective in the implementation of and follow-up to major United Nations conferences and summits;

(e) Support the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action, including through support for the important activities of the United Nations Development

Fund for Women and the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women in the fulfilment of their respective mandates;

(f) Support national Governments in their efforts to strengthen national mechanisms through official development assistance and other appropriate assistance;

(g) Encourage multilateral, bilateral, donor and development agencies to include in their programmes of assistance activities that strengthen national machineries;

(h) Encourage Governments and national machineries to undertake wide consultations with their civil societies when providing information on gender and women's issues to relevant international bodies;

(i) Document and publish "good practices", and provide logistical support and ensure equal access to information technology wherever appropriate. In this regard, the offices of United Nations resident coordinators, in particular the women in development programmes and gender units, should play a critical role;

(j) Develop and disseminate gender-disaggregated data and qualitative performance indicators to ensure effective gender-sensitive planning, monitoring, evaluation and implementation of programmes;

(k) Encourage multilateral development institutions, bilateral donors and international non-governmental organizations to make available methodology already developed on the collection and analysis of gender-disaggregated data measurement and valuation of unwaged work and to provide technical assistance and other resources, including financial resources as appropriate, to developing countries and countries with economies in transition;

(l) In order to elaborate a systematic and comprehensive approach to information on unremunerated work, the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat should prepare and circulate among all States a detailed and well-structured questionnaire. The questionnaire should seek inputs on developments in measuring and valuing unremunerated work and on policies and programmes as well as laws that recognize and address such work;

(m) Request the Division for the Advancement of Women to expand the Directory of National Machinery for the Advancement of Women, by including, for example, mandates, number of staff, e-mail addresses, fax numbers and working-level contacts, so that this comprehensive information can facilitate better communication among national machineries around the world.

Violence against women

In January, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Commission on the Status of Women a report of the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) on its activities during the previous year to eliminate violence against women [E/CN.6/1999/6]. UNIFEM launched a series of inter-agency regional campaigns in Africa, Asia and the Pacific and Latin America and the Caribbean to raise public awareness about violence against women and highlight its economic and social costs. It increased the operational activities of the Trust Fund in Support of Actions to Eliminate Violence against Women, established in 1995 by General Assembly resolution 50/166 [YUN 1995, p. 1188]. The annual income of the Trust Fund in 1998 doubled that of the previous year, to approximately $1.8 million, and 29 new projects were approved for implementation, bringing the total number of projects funded worldwide to 71. In an effort to share the experience gained from implementation of Trust Fund projects, UNIFEM had created a new learning component, which would become a global resource centre to review, analyse and extract lessons from its grant-making activities and facilitate the identification of best methods on initiatives to combat violence against women across regions.

The Commission on Human Rights, at its fifty-fifth session, considered a follow-up report of the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences (see p. 666).

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General reported in March [A/54/69-E/1999/8 & Add.1] on crime prevention and criminal justice measures to eliminate violence against women, including implementation of the Model Strategies and Practical Measures on the Elimination of Violence against Women in the Field of Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 52/86 [YUN 1997, p. 1166]. The Model Strategies, which built on measures contained in the Beijing Platform for Action, were divided into 11 sections: criminal law, criminal procedure, police, sentencing and correction, victim support and assistance, health and social services, training, research and evaluation, crime prevention measures, international cooperation and follow-up activities. (See also PART THREE, Chapter IX.) The report summarized the responses of 26 Governments to the request of the Secretary-General for information on the implementation of the Model Strategies. It concluded that national strategies and measures introduced by Governments were not nearly as systematic and comprehensive as those recommended in the Model Strategies. Advisory services, gender-segregated data, research and other efforts were recommended to assist with national implementation efforts.

On 17 December, the General Assembly, by decision 54/431, took note of the report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/54/598 & Corr.1,2], adopted resolution 54/134 without vote [agenda item 109].

International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence Against Women, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 48/104 of 20 December 1993, and its resolution 52/86 of 12 December 1997, entitled "Crime prevention and criminal justice measures to eliminate violence against women",
