Terms of reference of the Special Body on Least Developed and Landlocked Developing Countries

The special problems in respect of, and the constraints on, the economic and social development of the least developed and landlocked developing countries have been recognized by the international community, and also within the context of the Brussels Declaration¹¹ and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010¹² adopted at the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, the international development strategy and the implementation of the United Nations millennium development goals. These constraints require focused priority attention in the Asian and Pacific region in order to mainstream the least developed and landlocked developing countries into the ongoing regional integration process and associate them with the economic and social dynamism of the region. 2. Serve as a mobilizer of ideas and a catalyst for action to identify and promote new policy options at the national, subregional and regional levels that allow these countries to maximize the benefits from globalization, with emphasis on the adoption of measures for increased mobilization of domestic and foreign resources, trade and private sector development, public sector reform and provision of advisory services on relevant issues, upon request, to Governments.

6. Without duplicating work done elsewhere, review and analyse the special transit trade and transport problems of Asian landlocked developing countries, recommend suitable measures for solving those problems in accordance with international agreements, in particular article 125 of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea,¹³ and encourage the Asian landlocked developing countries and their transit neighbours to cooperate, inter alia, in order to reduce transport costs in the final costs of delivered goods.

B. Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean

2. At its twenty-ninth session, the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) approved the following draft resolution requiring action by the Council:

Draft resolution I Place and date of the next session of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind paragraph 15 of the terms of reference of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean and rules 1 and 2 of its rules of procedure,

Considering the invitation of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico to host the thirtieth session of the Commission,¹⁴

1. Expresses its gratitude to the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico for its generous invitation;

2. Accepts this invitation with pleasure;

3. Approves the holding of the thirtieth session of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean in Puerto Rico during the first half of 2004.

II. Matters brought to the attention of the Council

A. Economic Commission for Europe

3. At its fifty-seventh session, the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) adopted its annual report covering the period from 12 May 2001 to 10 May 2002. The matters set out below, taken from that report, are brought to the attention of the Council.

Economic aspects of security in Europe

4. In introducing this item, the Executive Secretary recalled that security was not a new topic for ECE, particularly since the Helsinki process had revived the idea in 1975 that economic factors as well as others are part of the "security equation". She pointed out that over the years the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) had increasingly requested ECE to provide inputs into the economic dimension of security and in 1998, at the request of OSCE, ECE had organized a brainstorming seminar on the economic dimension of security. Also in cooperation with OSCE, ECE had organized, in 2001, a colloquium on the economic dimension of conflict prevention.

5. The Executive Secretary pointed out that the United Nations Millennium Declaration and General Assembly resolution 55/162 of 14 December 2000 on the follow-up to the outcome of the Millennium Summit had stressed the importance of security and called upon all parts of the United Nations to adjust their programmes to take into account the follow-up to the Millennium Summit relating, in terms of security to, inter alia, the promotion of conflict prevention, and peace-building efforts.

6. A keynote address was delivered by the Secretary-General of OSCE who spoke about the role and experience of OSCE in security and conflict prevention as well as the implications for its mandate of the decisions taken at the Ministerial Council meeting held in Bucharest in December 2001. The Secretary-General underlined that the close cooperation between OSCE and ECE had been characterized by fruitful achievements. In particular, the cooperation had been effective in the preparation for and follow-up to the annual Economic Forum as well as in specific activities such as the promotion of the Aarhus Convention on Access to Information, Public Participation in Decision-Making and Access to Justice in Environmental Matters (ECE/CEP/43). To strengthen this collaboration, the two secretariats have decided to map out a catalogue of ongoing collaboration and activities on the basis of which future cooperation can be strengthened and extended to involve key partners in the discussions.

7. The Commission expressed its support to the endeavour of all United Nations agencies to ensure a more stable and safe environment in the region and noted the work of the secretariat to identify the appropriate contributions of ECE in this regard. It was felt that, while ECE was not a security agency, it could contribute through its ongoing work in the various sectors. However, it stressed that ECE should avoid duplicating the work of other regional and international organizations and institutions and build on its recognized areas of expertise.

8. It encouraged ECE to continue its work relating to economic aspects of security and its cooperation with OSCE while ensuring the coordination and complementarity of the work between the two organizations. It further expressed its support for the private sector's involvement as an important component of future work.

9. The chairpersons of the Commission's Principal Subsidiary Bodies (PSBs) were invited to look closely at the work programmes of PSBs in the context of security and safety. This would provide a basis for a cross-sectoral examination of the challenges and potential threats to security that pertained to ECE work. The Executive Secretary was encouraged to continue to monitor this aspect of the activities of the Commission.

Self-assessment of the ECE secretariat

10. In introducing the conference room paper that she had tabled on the above, the Executive Secretary recalled that the Secretary-General had launched an initiative to continue the process of strengthening the Organization in the light of the principles and priorities of the United Nations Millennium Declaration. Part of this initiative involved a review of the Secretariat's programme of work and each United Nations department had been asked, as a first step, to prepare self-assessments. To involve ECE member States as early as possible in the process, the Executive Secretary had presented the self-assessment document for information and comment.

11. In presenting her proposals, she stressed the importance of avoiding duplication with other organizations and of building new strengths on existing ones. In particular, she proposed that the activities of ECE include the social dimension of growth and increase policy dialogue and support to policy-making in the Commission. She was fully conscious of the fact that the overriding principle guiding the exercise must be that of focus. She emphasized that ECE could not and should not become too dispersed and that new activities must be taken on in a focused way. She also stressed the need for ECE to be able to respond efficiently to global processes, both in the preparatory phase and in implementation, bearing in mind what others were doing and what the niche of ECE should be. The Executive Secretary underlined that the Commission was not expected to take a formal decision on the proposed "reform package" at the current meeting, but to have the first in a series of many discussions on strengthening the organization. She looked forward to hearing the Commission's preliminary reactions to the proposals contained in the paper.

12. The Commission welcomed the opportunity to discuss the proposals set out in the conference room paper. Delegations' initial comments on them were very diverse. The Commission believed that further discussion was needed on important matters such as: introducing more policy dialogue, the social dimension and security issues into the Commission's work programme, reforming the ECE intergovernmental structure, and strengthening the role of the annual session and the Bureau, as well as the proposed orientation of technical assistance and operational activities.

13. Following the remarks of member States, the Executive Secretary expressed her appreciation for the Commission's support for strengthening ECE in the wider context of United Nations reform and reiterated her wish for the active involvement of the Commission in the process, requesting written comments on the paper to be submitted to facilitate future discussions.

She concluded by emphasizing that the Commission not only should build on old achievements, but must be able to respond to new challenges while exploiting its proved advantages and increasing its cooperation with others. In this connection, member States should be involved in priority-setting and establishing the programme of work for the budget so that the ECE work programme corresponded to the interests of its member States.

Progress report on ECE technical assistance

14. The Executive Secretary introduced this item by outlining the intent and directions of ECE technical assistance and operational activities, stating her agreement with the points presented in the report of the Group of Experts on the Programme of Work for strengthening the Commission's technical activities and the need to develop a mechanism to render these activities more transparent, targeted and focused on the policy work of ECE implementation of norms and standards for the benefit of countries in transition.

15. The Commission underlined the importance it accorded to ECE work on technical assistance and operational activities. It was considered that further improvements were necessary to make them more effective. These activities needed to be better targeted and more coordinated with a view to producing tangible results, at the national and subregional levels, and thus having a real impact on the development of recipient countries. It was also felt that they needed to be more transparent and that more information should be provided to clarify the understanding of the procedures involved in these activities from conception through funding and implementation and on to follow-up and evaluation.

16. The Executive Secretary thanked the Commission for its support for ECE activities under this agenda item. She concluded that strengthened coordination on technical activities should be based on both internal and external coordination with the relevant organization working in the field of technical assistance. She also strongly supported the conclusions of the Group of Experts, especially concerning the need for creating more transparency and providing regular updated information on them. She assured the Commission that the secretariat would develop its expertise to deliver on project assessment in the future.

Preparation for and follow-up to world conferences

17. In her opening remarks, the Executive Secretary underlined the importance of ECE contributions to the preparations and follow-up to global conferences and events. The conference room paper that she had tabled summarized those contributions in respect of four global events, namely, the Second World Assembly on Ageing, the World Summit on the Information Society, the International Conference on Financing for Development and the World Summit on Sustainable Development.

18. As outlined in the paper, the role of the regional commissions in contributing to both the preparation of, and follow-up to, United Nations global events has been increasingly recognized, with the awareness that inputs from the regions stimulate, and even shape, the debate at the global level prior to global events. Moreover, the follow-up to such events can be more effective at the regional level.

19. The Executive Secretary reiterated the need for a strengthened priority-setting mechanism of the Commission. She also noted that this might also require an adjustment to the Commission's mandate, as it would permit ECE to better respond to global events such as the World Summit on Sustainable Development and the Second World Assembly on Ageing.

Other business

20. A briefing was provided by the representative of Spain on Euro-Mediterranean activities, known as the Barcelona process — the only forum where Arab countries and Israel participated together. Support was expressed for the ECE Mediterranean projects and cooperation with the MEDA programme was encouraged. ECE could draw upon the work of the Barcelona process in relation to its activities in the Mediterranean.

21. The Senior Adviser on Multidisciplinary Issues of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat reported on the progress of three interregional technical cooperation projects in the Mediterranean: (a) capacity-building in trade facilitation and electronic business led by ECE; (b) sustainable management and protection of internationally shared groundwaters led by ESCWA; and (c) financing of renewable energy and energy conservation projects led by ECA. Information was provided on the issues underlying each project as well as their objectives and the modalities for their implementation.

B. Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific

22. At its fifty-eighth session, ESCAP adopted the resolution summarized below, which is brought to the attention of the Council.

Resolution 58/4. Promoting an inclusive, barrier-free and rights-based society for people with disabilities in the Asian and Pacific region in the twenty-first century

23. In the resolution, the Commission welcomed with appreciation the Organization of the High-level Intergovernmental Meeting to Conclude the Asian and Pacific Decade of Disabled Persons to be hosted by the Government of Japan and the Shiga Prefecture Government at Otsu city, Shiga, Japan, from 25 to 28 October 2002. Given that the decade was coming to an end, the Commission proclaimed its extension for another decade, 2003-2012, with a view to giving further impetus to the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons¹⁵ and the Agenda for Action for the Asian and Pacific Decade of Disabled Persons in the ESCAP region beyond 2002.

C. Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean

24. At its twenty-ninth session, ECLAC adopted the following resolution which, being of interest to the Council, is brought to its attention.

Resolution 595 (XXIX). Brasilia resolution on globalization and development

25. At its twenty-ninth session held in Brasilia from 6 to 10 May 2002, ECLAC considered the report on globalization and development (LC/G.2157(SES.29/3)), which it had requested from the secretariat at its twenty-eighth session. The report analysed the interrelationship between the development agendas of the countries of the region and the policies associated with globalization processes in the economic spheres, particularly those relating to trade, financing and capital flows as well as those in the social and environmental spheres. The report provided concrete public policy proposals for member States.

26. In the Brasilia resolution on globalization and development, the Commission welcomed the report, in particular the concepts it had developed, the information it contained and the proposals it set forth at the national, regional and international levels. In line with the report, the Commission recognized that globalization, as a multifaceted process, had brought about a globalization of values or the gradual spread of shared ethical values. This was manifested most clearly in the respect for human rights, including civil and political rights, as well as economic, social and cultural rights, which were emphasized, in particular, in the United Nations Millennium Declaration.

27. The Commission noted the growing interdependence among countries in a number of areas such as international finance and the environment, and that this stood in sharp contrast to the insufficient development of a suitable global institutional framework for addressing these issues. It also noted that the expansion of trade had not resulted in rapid worldwide economic growth and that the high degree of capital mobility had been accompanied by volatility and contagion. Knowledge and technological innovation had become further concentrated in the industrialized countries. Income disparities between and within countries continued owing to the persistence of inequalities in the world order in terms of macroeconomics and finance, production and technology, as well as to restrictions on movement of labour. The current phase of globalization had brought about a range of opportunities, some of which had been at least partially utilized by developing countries. Nonetheless, it also entailed risks that exacerbated certain long-standing problems in the region while also generating new ones.

28. The tradition and vitality of subregional integration schemes and the potential for deepening them within a framework of open regionalism, along with the wealth of regional institutions present in Latin America and the Caribbean, were stressed. Moreover, the proved capacity of the countries of the region to expand trade both within and beyond the region and to attract a large volume of resources, especially foreign direct investment (FDI), was considered to be positive. Progress had been attained by many countries in the area of macroeconomic management, especially with respect to the control of public finances and inflation. Strides had been made towards a more effective incorporation of the sustainable development agenda, and there was expansion, in many cases, of public expenditure on education, which had enabled the countries in the region to increase the coverage of basic and secondary education and to launch initiatives to give their populations access to computerized information networks and audio-visual media. Efforts were being made to make the labour market more adaptable by introducing new worker training arrangements and by developing unemployment insurance schemes. The private sector was playing a positive role in the modernization of the various infrastructure sectors and in interacting with the public sector to develop innovative approaches in the area of social security.

29. There were, however, obstacles that still impeded the process of changing production patterns with social equity and environmental sustainability in the region. Economic growth had been insufficient and volatile, and the increase in productivity had not narrowed the gap between the developed and developing worlds. The linkages of export activities and FDI with other economic activities remained insufficient. Moreover, institutions for the promotion of sustainable development had few instruments and very limited resources at their disposal. The inadequacy of quality jobs continued to impede the reduction of unemployment, inter alia, in the informal sector. The educational divide between developed and developing countries persisted in terms of coverage (secondary and higher education) as well as quality. Increased demands were being made for social security systems to cover traditional risks, namely, health care, old age and illness, as well as new ones related to the growing instability of employment and income.

30. The Commission endorsed the positive agenda proposed by the secretariat for meeting the challenges posed by globalization, particularly the importance of national strategies for consolidating democracy; and the region's possible contribution to the construction of a global institutional structure that could mitigate external vulnerability and give the countries of the region greater manoeuvrability in designing and implementing national policies, as well as the view that regional and subregional bodies were forums for cooperation. The Commission requested the ECLAC secretariat to arrange for the wide distribution of the report and encouraged its discussion in political, social, academic and business circles, as well as by its civil society organizations in the region with a view to promoting dialogue concerning the chief components of the proposed agenda. The Commission also encouraged the review and discussion of the report by international organizations dealing with the various dimensions of economic development so as to foster, in particular, an exchange of ideas regarding the proposals for correcting asymmetries and gaps in the international agenda.

31. The Commission urged the Executive Secretary to undertake a more in-depth analysis of the following issues: (a) education, science and technology, highlighting the development of national and regional innovation systems that united the efforts of the public and private sectors; (b) social protection, with the aim of achieving complementarity between public and private arrangements in order to broaden coverage and achieve greater solidarity; (c) counter-cyclical macroeconomic management, adding national, subregional and regional measures to complement the changes required at the international level; and (d) production linkages, defining policies for developing and deepening them and for forming production clusters.

32. The Commission also called upon the secretariat to continue its examination of the development strategies of the member countries of the region within the context of the globalization process, based on the need for an integrated approach to economic, social and environmental issues, and to identify related policies and measures at the national, regional and international levels.

D. Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia

33. The fourth special session of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA), held on 11 March 2002, adopted only one resolution, which is brought to the attention of the Council.

Resolution 238 (S-IV). Revised medium-term plan for the period 2002-2005 and revised programme of work and priorities for the biennium 2002-2003

34. In this resolution, the revised medium-term plan for the period 2002-2005 and the revised programme of work for the biennium 2002-2003 were adopted unanimously.

35. ESCWA had at the end of last year embarked on revising the medium-term plan and the current programme of work to take into account General Assembly resolution 55/2 containing the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the report of the Secretary-General on a road map towards the implementation of the Millennium Declaration (A/56/326) and the recommendation of the twenty-first session of the Commission calling for a more focused work programme oriented towards assisting in regional integration.

36. The resolution called upon the ESCWA secretariat to take all necessary measures required to increase the effectiveness of its activities.

37. In this respect, it may be useful to note that the revised medium-term plan is based on the overriding goal of regional integration with four thematic priorities: managing water resources and energy; responding to globalization; enhancing integrated social policies; and harnessing technological capabilities (bridging the gap known as the digital divide) to be implemented through six subprogrammes. These are: integrated policies for the management of regional resources for sustainable development; integrated social policies; economic analysis and forecasting for regional development; regional integration and responding to globalization; information and communication technology for regional integration; and comparable statistics for improved planning and decision-making.
